CANADA

HOUSE OF COMMONS DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

THIRD SESSION—TWENTY-EIGHTH PARLIAMENT

19 Elizabeth II

VOLUME I, 1970

COMPRISING THE PERIOD FROM THE EIGHTH DAY OF OCTOBER, 1970, TO THE TWELFTH DAY OF NOVEMBER, 1970, INCLUSIVE

INDEX ISSUED IN A SEPARATE VOLUME

Published under the authority of the Speaker of the House of Commons by the Queen's Printer for Canada

Available from Information Canada, Ottawa, Canada

23226—1½

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, October 8, 1970

THIRD SESSION—TWENTY-EIGHTH PARLIAMENT—OPENING

The Parliament which had been prorogued on the seventh day of October, 1970, met this day at Ottawa for the dispatch of business.

The House met at ten-thirty o'clock, the Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Speaker read a communication from the Secretary to the Governor General, announcing that His Excellency the Governor General would proceed to the Senate chamber at 10.30 a.m. on this day, for the purpose of formally opening the third session of the twenty-eighth Parliament of Canada.

• (10:50 a.m.)

A message was delivered by Lieutenant Colonel A. Fortier, Assistant Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, His Excellency the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

• (11:40 a.m.)

And the House being returned to the Commons chamber:

* * *

[Translation]

OATHS OF OFFICE

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 1, respecting the administration of oaths of office.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

* * *

[English]

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that when the House did attend His Excellency the Governor General this day in the Senate chamber, His Excellency was pleased to make a speech to both Houses of Parliament. To prevent mistakes, I have obtained a copy, which is as follows:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

I have the honour to welcome you to the Third Session of the 28th Parliament of Canada and to present, on behalf of my Government, various matters which it wishes to lay before you.

Before proceeding, I should like to recall to your minds a few events of the year which have been of special significance in our national life.

The Northwest Territories, which comprise 40 per cent of our land and water, and the "Keystone" Province of Manitoba, have each celebrated the one hundredth anniversary of their entry into Canada.

They were greatly encouraged in these exercises, and Canada as a whole was delighted by the presence of our gracious Queen and The Duke of Edinburgh, accompanied for the first time by The Prince of Wales and Princess Anne. The Royal Family travelled extensively in the Northwest Territories and visited a great many Manitoba communities, ending with an enthusiastic send-off from Winnipeg. In Ottawa we were all pleased to play host for two days to Prince Charles, a friendly and interested guest.

The interest of Canada as a whole in these centennials was shown in many ways, including a Session of the Cabinet in Winnipeg, individual visits by the Prime Minister and other Canadians in public life, and by the participation of my wife and myself.

Our own travels in the Western Arctic and in the Yukon Territory enabled us to round out our tours of all the Provinces and Territories.

Next year British Columbia, which extended the Canadian Federation to the Pacific Coast in 1871, will mark the centennial of this historic event. It will give Canadians much satisfaction to know that Her Majesty and The Duke of Edinburgh, accompanied by Princess Anne, will visit the Province in early May and join in the centennial celebration.

We gather here today within a few hours of the conclusion of the Second Session of this Parliament. In a real sense, the interval between the second and third sessions cannot be measured in terms of hours or days. The Third Session of the 28th Parliament commences in the decade of the seventies, a decade which we dare not assume will be a continuation of the past. The passing of the sixties and the beginning of the seventies reminds us that Canada faces a new age; an age which will be subject to forces not all of which are yet comprehended or understood, forces which will proceed from external as well as internal origins. It is a new age not so much because of changed circumstances, but new because of changed values and attitudes.

Because of the clash between these new values and the old, because of the quest by the young and the disillusioned for some resolution of attitudes, we live in a period of tenseness and unease. It is an age frequented by violence as desperate men seek ill-defined goals; an age of frustration as gentle men question impatiently old assumptions. It is an age in which the life-support systems of the biosphere may collapse unless man reverses his present course and begins again to live in harmony, rather than in competition, with his environment. It is an age in which the forces of science and technology now in motion are so massive, so swift, and so comprehensive that man may be facing his last opportunity to control his own destiny rather than be subject to it.

The decade of the seventies extends beyond our present vision, yet the momentum of change is already so overwhelming that man can no longer afford the luxury of reacting to events. He must anticipate and plan. He must accept that contentment and indifference are illusory; that the most dramatic reality is change; that there is more need than ever before to preserve as constant values truth, honesty, excellence and relevance; that a society which is not inspired by love and compassion is not worthy of the name.

We are entering an age of tension, an age of challenge, an age of excitement. At the threshold of the seventies a choice is open to Canadians as it is open to few persons in few countries. With foresight and stamina and enterprise, ours may be, if we wish it;

—a society in which human differences are regarded as assets, not liabilities;

—a society in which individual freedom and equality of opportunity remain as our most cherished possessions;

—a society in which the enjoyment of life is measured in qualitative, not quantitative terms;

—a society which encourages imagination and daring, ingenuity and initiative, not coldly and impersonally for the sake of efficiency, but with warmth and from the heart as between friends.

As Canada moves into the seventies, we are all invited to join in this bold enterprise—to share the excitement, to face the challenge, to pursue the distant ideal of a just society.

The Canada of the seventies must continue to be a land for people; a country in which freedom and individualism are cherished and nurtured; a society in which the Government lends its strength to withstand, rather than support the pressures for conformity.

One of the greatest of the challenges to individuality comes from the increasing pressures of urban living. It is estimated that eighty per cent of the population of Canada will be resident in a few large cities by the end of this century. By comparison with the recent past, this is a new face of Canada bringing with it a new accumulation of problems. One of those problems is the need for adequate housing, another the provision of the many services necessary in an urban environment. Much progress has already been attained in these areas, but much more remains to be done. To solve the problems will require an ever-increasing share of the nation's financial resources; not to solve them, to permit unmanaged growth, would result in an unacceptable drain of the nation's human resources. To foster coordination of the activities of all levels of government, and to contribute to sound urban growth and development, the Government proposes the re-organization of its urban activities under the direction of a Minister of State for Urban Affairs and Housing. The Government seeks, by making rational its efforts in these fields, and through consultation with those most directly concerned, to help Canadians reach and implement the decisions that will determine their urban future.

There exists in Canada a great wealth of untapped and uncoordinated scientific talent and experience not now adequately utilized in the quest for solutions to our modern problems. In order to serve better the industrial and technological sectors of our economy, as well as Canada at large, a programme will be introduced to gather and focus these sometimes divergent and competitive scientific resources. In this respect the Government will consider with care measures recommended by the Senate Committee on Science Policy and the Science Council of Canada.

A society is said to be judged best by the compassion and the fairness with which it treats those of its members who breach or are accused of breaching the norms of conduct which it establishes for itself. The Canadian record in this respect is of a high standard, but not so high that it can withstand all criticism. You will be asked, therefore, to consider further measures intended to continue the reform of the law in these areas. Legislation has been prepared which deals with bail and pretrial detention, and with the treatment of young offenders.

Norms of conduct are never static, however, and certainly not at present. A society which cherishes the concept of freedom of individual rights must be prepared constantly to assess the effect and extent of changing attitudes, no matter how distressing or disturbing the re-evaluation may be to some persons. Previously accepted postures are under attack in Canada and require study in several areas. The Government accepts its responsibility in this process. The report of the Commission of Inquiry into the Non-Medical Use of Drugs, expected within the next few months, will require careful study and discussion. The Government proposes to make time available during this session for discussion of still another controversial issue. It proposes a special debate on abortion.

To ignore the undoubted widespread challenges to present laws in these fields would be dishonest. You will be invited, therefore, to participate, in the examination of these important questions. You will be asked as well to give consideration to the report of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women when once this is received.

Fortunately, not all aspects of Canadian life are subject to such differences of opinion, and the need for legislation in certain sectors is widely recognized. Two such sectors, immense in size and largely overlapping, are those of the consumer and the employee. Every Canadian is a consumer of goods and services, millions of Canadians are employees. To face today's competitive marketing system, the consumer requires protection in a number of respects. Measures will be introduced, therefore, to protect Canadians more adequately from the results of combines, mergers and unfair trade practices, to regulate the labelling and packaging of consumer goods, and to protect further the users of consumer credit.

Because the Canadian work force is growing in size and sophistication, and operating within an increasingly integrated industrial environment, present measures must be amended to meet changing social requirements. You will be asked, therefore, to approve a revised legal framework for labour-management relations and a new set of labour standards for industries within federal jurisdiction. Sweeping changes in the field of unemployment insurance will be proposed in a bill designed to widen considerably both the benefits offered and the persons who are qualified to take advantage of them. These measures will make more rational and more fair the assistance available to those temporarily without employment. The legislation is a product of the careful study of this subject tabled in Parliament last session in the form of a white paper.

A number of other studies of this same nature have been underway in past months as well. These reflect Government planning for the Canada of the seventies. Parliament will be invited to examine in this session a number of white papers in such diverse fields as communications, citizenship, immigration, national defence, and income security policy.

The Government is pleased at the widespread and largely constructive public response to its invitation to comment upon the proposals contained in its white paper on tax reform. The views of those who have participated in this exercise are being examined and carefully considered, as will those of the two Parliamentary Committees. Thereafter, legislation will be introduced incorporating policies designed to make more equitable the economic burden shared by our fellow dwellers in this complex and varied land. These taxation measures are part of the Government's pledge to utilize the wealth of Canada for the good of all Canadians and not just for those fortunate enough to be shielded by the protective apparatus of giant corporations, alert professional organizations or powerful labour unions.

It remains the goal of the Government to be concerned with the production of wealth. It also remains the goal of the Government that Canadians be given the opportunity to enjoy that wealth. Income security programmes offer one means by which this latter goal can be attained. To this end legislation will be introduced.

All our efforts for a stable prosperity and for a humane community will be of little value to us, however, if we do not quickly and determinedly grapple with the threat to our well-being and the well-being of future generations of Canadians which is represented by environmental pollution. Pollution is a many-headed hydra and requires action in many forms. You will be asked to consider bills intended to deal with pollution in two of its aspects: in the ocean and in the atmosphere. More pressing than any single step or steps, however, is the need to co-ordinate and consolidate our efforts in an effective fashion. There will be proposed the establishment of a department to be concerned with the environment and the husbanding of those renewable resources that are a part of and dependent upon it, with a mandate for the protection of the biosphere.

However worthy our goals, and however strong our will to attain them, they will nevertheless be denied to us in whole or in part should our economy be malfunctioning. It would be irresponsible to suggest that the economy is now in a satisfactory condition. When costs rise more rapidly than productivity, when men and women are unable to gain employment, when a reasonable distribution of the wealth of Canada is denied to certain sectors or regions, then these are matters for deep concern. Fortunately, our population, the number of Canadians engaged in productive employment, the total volume of goods and services which they produce, and Canadian exports all continue to grow.

Export sales of grains, so important to Canada's economic well-being, are exhibiting a steadily rising trend in marked contrast to the very stagnant situation a year ago. The LIFT program has removed a substantial portion of the accumulated wheat surplus which was inhibiting the international wheat market, and has encouraged a healthy diversification of agricultural activities. The unanimous support accorded the Goverment's initiative in the development of national marketing agencies by the First Ministers at their recent meeting assures continued cooperation between both levels of government. That cooperation will provide a basis for improved marketing structures for agricultural commodities, which will benefit both producers and consumers in almost all segments of agricultural endeavour. The Government will continue to introduce programmes designed to improve the market potential for agricultural produce and to assist in the adjustment to changes in this vital sector of our economy.

Canadian industry is responding to the challenges of growth and of adaptation to a changing world environment. Our exports in past months have achieved record heights. In an attempt to place the textile industry on a competitive footing, legislation to facilitate adjustment of that industry will be introduced this session.

We are not yet free of inflationary pressures but there has been real progress and price increases have abated to the extent that the Canadian record in the battle against inflation is superior to that so far attained in any other western country. In the result it has been possible for the past several months to moderate certain monetary and fiscal restraints. Unemployment remains distressingly high in some parts of Canada although the rate has not increased significantly in recent months, and measures to encourage regional economic expansion in areas of slower development are beginning to show results. Soundly based growth, which is prerequisite for increased permanent employment opportunities, will continue to be encouraged and will reflect success to the extent that restraint is exercised by all Canadians in the cost area, and that improved productivity strengthens the position of Canada in external trade.

In sum, the vitality of the economy, coupled with present governmental policies, is countering slowly but effectively the pressures of inflation and unemployment. So long, however, as Canadians who desire work are unable to find it; so long as persons on fixed incomes are unable to provide adequately for themselves and their dependents; then so long must the Government strive to assist them.

It must do so even as it acknowledges and weighs the concern expressed increasingly by Canadians about the extent and the nature of foreign ownership in the Canadian economy. Legislation dealing with one aspect of this complex problem, the uranium industry, will be introduced for your consideration.

All these matters require your earnest consideration even as the events of the world beyond our borders demand our constant attention. Canadians have long realized that they represent but a single segment of a larger world community. The political, economic and social health of Canada cannot be maintained should infection of either a primary or secondary nature be rampant in the world at large. The Government continues, therefore, to direct its efforts in increasing measures to those tasks where Canadian initiative and Canadian competence may prove to be as effective as has other Canadian enterprise in the past. Much of this effort is expended within the framework of the United Nations, celebrating this year a quarter century as the conscience and the hope of mankind. In such diverse but important fields as disarmament, environmental protection, economic development planning, the creation of new international legal structures for the deep oceans and outer space, and international security, we work and remain committed to a world in which peace, social progress and the dignity of man will be the norm and not the exception as is now too often the case.

An economy that is in need of adjustment; a society beset by a variety of tensions; an environment that has been abused and degraded; an international community that is under intense pressures—these are the problems that demand our urgent attention. But of those that are basically Canadian, none is insoluble. None takes the form of those dilemmas or irreconcilable issues which elsewhere fire the violence of despair. Notwithstanding its difficulties, Canada continues to enjoy social stability to an exceptional degree.

This stability is not simply a matter of luck. Good fortune is a factor, but we should accept gracefully the fact that we are also more amenable to reason and, perhaps, more capable of wise decision than we are normally willing to admit. The burden of our European inheritance and our fascination with our American neighbour tend often to distract us and cause us to be unaware of that reasonableness and that wisdom. We forget to our own disadvantage, for these are traits that have made Canada a land of freedom. Canadians should pause on occasions such as this to reflect that their country is regarded by others with envy. It is a high place of liberty in the world. It is held in esteem because in Canada respect is paid to the individual; privacy and freedom of thought are honoured. Among us, each citizen, each community, finds its roots in liberty. Our national entity does not depend upon a melting pot, but is a concerted exercise of free will.

It is in this sense of liberty as a supreme value, and of tolerance as its social and political expression, that we find our foundation and strength as a people. Let us recognize with pride and with modesty what so many strangers admire and see in us: that we have achieved greatly, that in the future even greater achievements are within our reach. We have the capacity, if we retain the will, to adjust our society to reflect the values of our peoples, to benefit from a rich cultural life, to create viable political and social structures, and to strike an equilibrium with nature without which all the rest may be undone.

The conviction is growing throughout the world that if man is to survive he must strive without delay to regulate his future. This is a task which presupposes a fullness of freedom and an extensive field of human experience. Now, as we enter the decade of the seventies, Canada is free enough, vast enough, and diversified enough to undertake this task which is so vital and which will have such world-wide effects. Should we not lose our will or our nerve, this task can be accomplished and could prove to be the principal element of the Canadian fact. We stand on the threshold of greatness.

Members of the House of Commons:

During this Session, you will be asked to grant the necessary funds for the services and expenditures authorized by Parliament.

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

The Prime Minister will lay before you today a list of bills that will be submitted to you during the Session.

May Divine Providence guide you in your deliberations.

[Translation]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister) moved:

That the speech of His Excellency the Governor General, delivered this day from the Throne to both Houses of Parliament, be taken into consideration later this day.

Bills in Speech from the Throne

[English]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I just say a word on this motion. In view of the fact that Your Honour has just reported to the House that you have a copy of the Speech from the Throne, and as I believe this matter has been raised in previous sessions, I should like to make the request that once we come back from the other place and Your Honour has received a copy of the Speech from the Throne a copy should be on the desk of each member.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I think it is unfair for us to have to wait to see it in today's Hansard, which we shall not get until tomorrow.

An hon. Member: It isn't worth it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Someone says, "It isn't worth it", but that is not the point. I suggest that copies be made available to all of us before we meet this afternoon and that at the opening of future sessions a copy be placed on each member's desk so that it will be available when we return from the Senate chamber.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The suggestion made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is obviously an excellent one which appears to have the support of all members of the House. I am sure that arrangements can be made, with the excellent facilities of the House of Commons, to have copies of the Speech available for the benefit of all hon. members before two o'clock this afternoon. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

• (11:50 a.m.)

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I request leave of the House to table a list of the titles of the several bills which were referred to in His Excellency's speech. I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that this list be printed in today's Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. the Prime Minister requests leave to table a list of the titles of the several bills which were referred to in His Excellency's speech and to have it printed in this day's Hansard. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

(Editor's Note: The list referred to above follows:)

1. A bill to amend the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act.
2. A bill to amend the Established Programs (Interim Arrangements) Act.
3. A bill to amend the Small Business Loans Act.
4. A bill to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act.
5. A bill to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act.
6. Pilotage Legislation.
7. A bill to amend the Judges Act.
8. A bill respecting Investment Companies.
9. A bill to amend the Criminal Code (Bail Reform).
10. A bill respecting the Tax Review Board.
11. A bill respecting the Canada Development Corporation.
12. A bill respecting the Maritime Code.
13. A bill to amend the Statistics Act.
14. A bill to amend the Atomic Energy Control Act.
15. A bill respecting Young Offenders.
16. A bill to amend the Canada Shipping Act (Pollution).
17. Legislation relating to Income Security.
18. A bill respecting Canada Co-operative Associations.
19. A bill to amend New Zealand Trade Agreement Act.
20. A bill to amend the Export Development Act.
21. A bill to amend Canada Elections Act (Election Expenses).
22. Veterans Pension Legislation.
23. Textile Legislation.
24. A bill to amend the Combines Investigation Act.
25. Resource Administration Lines Legislation.
26. A bill respecting the C.N.R. Financing and Guarantee, 1970.
27. A bill respecting Statutory Instruments.
28. A bill to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act.
29. A bill to amend section 51 of the British North America Act.
30. Computer Facilities Ownership Legislation.
31. A bill to amend the Immigration Appeal Board Act.
32. A bill to amend the Criminal Code (Right to Privacy).
33. A bill respecting the Security Review Board.
34. A bill respecting Government Organization 1970.
35. Budget Bills.
36. Air Pollution Legislation.
37. A bill to amend the Anti Dumping Act.
38. A bill respecting the Auditor General.
39. A bill to amend the Citizenship Act.
40. A bill to amend the Canada Labour (Standards) Code.
41. A bill to amend the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act.
42. A bill respecting Consumer Packaging and Labelling.
43. A bill amending the Interest Act and the Small Loans Act.
44. A bill to amend and consolidate the Weight and Measures Act and the Units of Measurement Act.

45. A bill to amend the Bankruptcy Act.

46. A bill respecting the Federal Court.

47. A bill amending the Canada Grain Act.

48. A bill respecting assistance to Deuterium of Canada.

49. A bill respecting Farm Products Marketing Agencies.

50. A bill to amend the National Parks Act.

51. A bill respecting the Yukon Minerals.

52. A bill to amend the Prairie Farm Assistance Act.

53. A bill to amend the Livestock Feed Assistance Act.

54. Agriculture Adjustment Legislation.

55. A bill to amend the Buffalo-Fort Erie Public Bridge Company Act.

56. A bill to amend the Canada-Finland Income Tax Convention Act, 1959.

57. A bill respecting the Canada-Jamaica Income Tax Agreement.

58. A bill amending the Criminal Code, Omnibus Bill, (Highjacking, etc.).

59. A bill respecting Cigarette Advertising.

60. Weather Modification Legislation.

61. A bill amending Crop Insurance Act.

62. A bill amending the Australia Trade Agreement Act.

63. A bill respecting Co-operative Credit Associations.

64. A bill amending the Northern Canada Power Commission Act.

65. Grain Legislation.

66. A bill amending the Food and Drugs Act and the Narcotics Act.

67. A bill to amend the Representation Commission Act.

68. Ports Legislation.

* * *

INTERNAL ECONOMY COMMISSION

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister) presented the following message from His Excellency the Governor General:

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons a certified copy of an Order in Council appointing the Honourable Allan Joseph MacEachen, President of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, the Honourable Charles Mills Drury, President of the Treasury Board, the Honourable Jean Chrétien, Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the Honourable Donald Stovel Macdonald, Minister of National Defence, to act with the Speaker of the House of Commons as commissioners for the purposes and under the provisions of the one hundred and forty-third chapter of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952, intituled: An Act respecting the House of Commons.

* * *

[Translation]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

APPOINTMENT OF DEPUTY CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEES OF THE WHOLE

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale), that Mr. Gérald Laniel, member for the electoral district of Beauharnois, be appointed acting chairman of the committees of the whole.

Motion agreed to.

[English]

PROVISION FOR EXTENSION OF SITTING, OCTOBER 9, 1970

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I move:

That, notwithstanding the provisions of Standing Order 2(2), the House shall meet at 11 o'clock a.m. on Friday, October 9, 1970, and that such sitting shall not be adjourned until the leaders of all parties have spoken in the Address Debate.

Motion agreed to.

SITTING SUSPENDED

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the sitting be suspended until two o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the suggestion of the Right Hon. the Prime Minister. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: This sitting stands suspended until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 11.55 a.m. the sitting of the House was suspended until 2 p.m.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

* * *

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

ADDRESS IN REPLY, MOVED BY MR. JACQUES-L. TRUDEL AND SECONDED BY MR. A. B. DOUGLAS

The House proceeded to the consideration of the speech delivered by His Excellency the Governor General at the opening of the session.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, some moments in life take on a very special meaning, I believe the present moment to be such a one, not only for myself, but also for my family and for all my fellow-citizens of the riding of Bourassa, whatever their political affiliation.

The honour conferred upon me by the Prime Minister and his colleagues by selecting me to move the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne is reflected on my constituency, on the urban community of Greater Montreal, and on the whole province of Quebec.

I must also point out, Mr. Speaker, the especially warm welcome of my colleagues.

In the past, it was more or less understood, that this was a wonderful opportunity for the mover of the Address to describe the beauties and natural resources of his constituency. I can hardly fail to go along with that tradition.

This new constituency created in 1968 includes part of Ahuntsic and the whole of the city of Montreal North. To the north, it is bound by the Black River which circumscribes the riding from east to west.

In this area of the island of Montreal the population has increased from 30,000 to 130,000 inhabitants in a few years. It is made up mostly of French Canadians, but English, Italian, German, Dutch, Russian, Scandinavian, Ukranian, Polish and other citizens are to be found also. It is a young population.

The diversity of the national structures described this morning as far as bilingualism, the various standards of living and the evolution which is leading toward national unity are concerned, can surely be found in our area. As we heard in the Speech from the Throne this morning, Canada is still in the process of discovering and developing itself.

This is a reality in our area.

These first years of the seventies mark the beginning of a new era, and we must realize all the advantages we have. Our first duty, therefore, is to ensure human development and we must detect and analyze any trend that could impede the progress which is the objective of the whole society.

If I had to describe the current period in a few words, I would mention the tension, the challenge and the agitation, characteristics about which we cannot help worrying.

Aware that diversity may be our strength, and anxious to see the establishment of a just society, we must eliminate all obstacles against individual freedom, thus allowing inventiveness, initiative and creativity to bring about with warmth and cordiality the new society we are all seeking.

In my opinion, the greatest asset of the riding of Bourassa is its cosmopolitan population. This demands much from everyone because of the sudden transformation which took place in a city the geographical boundaries of which do not always coincide with the political divisions.

The common problem to most of my fellow-citizens is therefore their own adjustment to this urban society in perpetual development and this leads us to contemplate short term solutions in order to prevent the possible disruption of a society which is growing too fast.

Each level of government has offered solutions to the daily problems. May I point out some of them regarding the urban community and my own riding in particular.

Expo 67 opened, for Quebec and for Canada, a window on the world.

The international airport at Sainte-Scholastique will allow us to receive travellers and businessmen from the world over while a part of our population will be able to do the same and it will create new job opportunities for a number of our fellow-citizens.

The basic structures and services offered the general public by the municipalities and governments, provincial and federal, have also helped on the whole.

The Central Housing and Mortgage Corporation has enabled many individuals to find suitable lodging through building loans for single or multiple-unit dwellings as designed by certain companies.

In spite of tremendous efforts by all those governments, may I point out again the alienation of certain individuals in a society often at grips with endless jurisdictional quarrels to which solutions are not forthcoming.

While listening closely to the list of bills proposed in the Speech from the Throne, I noted that the same formula will be kept for discussions, consultations, and the enumeration of matters of principle, methods used with success in the case of the white paper on tax reform.

It would take too long to enumerate all the subjects proposed, but still I must point out a few, and more specifically, the amendments to the Criminal Code with regard to detention of the accused, the attitude of our society towards young delinquents, the report on the royal commission of inquiry on the status of women and the nonmedical use of drugs.

Other topics will also be of interest to us: reform of the Unemployment Insurance Act, new labour standards, fairer distribution of wealth and new legislation respecting Indians.

The speech dealt also with communications, citizenship, immigration, national defence and social policy, all of which well deserve very special attention.

Mr. Speaker, the efforts made in my riding should not be overlooked. The generation gap seems to be a general topic of conversation. Many of those who discuss that problem seem to overlook a whole group of citizens, namely those who, having reached the golden age, no longer have their place in the sun. I should like to mention at this point the solution found in the constituency of Bourassa, where 558 citizens now live in the Angelica home. I am sure that this home could serve as a model in the rest of Canada. It is located in a picturesque area, along the Back River, but close enough to all the services required by older people. It is a place where those who built in the past the buoyant society we enjoy today are given a hearty welcome.

I am sure this group of citizens will be highly pleased to hear about the increase in benefits for older people and veterans provided for in new legislative measures.

It seems that the problem facing the world in the past few years has been the fight against inflation. The constituency of Bourassa has been no exception in that matter. This dreadful calamity affects small wage earners and retired people much more than other citizens. In order to cure that inflationary psychosis, new ways had to be found which required the co-operation of all: municipalities, contractors, unions and governments, in order to give a new start. Many of those who attempted at the outset to solve that problem seemed quite pessimistic.

The last of those projects, launched by the Société Claude Legault, in Montreal North, provides the kind of new start I have mentioned. People were so enthusiastic about those new homes that there are already far from enough of them. Such low-priced houses seem to have aroused in all those involved in housing an awareness that was necessary to allow another segment of our people to fulfil themselves and to raise their family in decent surroundings.

The setting up of a special secretariat entrusted to a minister without portfolio responsible for urban affairs and housing, will enable us to break new ground.

The increasing student population has also found another solution during the summer of 1970 by setting up a co-ordination bureau for summer employment applications and opportunities. Staffed by students, it has permitted a much more successful contact with those in need.

At the end of September, a public transportation project was announced for the island of Montreal, including an extension of the subway. This is undoubtedly an urgent necessity which should be met by the proposed department of municipal affairs should do it.

But I must here, Mr. Speaker, underline another feature of our society which gives rise to great problems. I mentioned the Back River which delineates the natural borders of my constituency. I cannot go on without mentioning factors which contributed to the pollution of that waterway. The urban community has already announced a major development to be implemented over a five-year period.

By setting up a department of the environment which would be responsible for the management of natural resources and which should consider introducing legislation on pollution of environment, waters and atmosphere, we would have the proper agency to deal with problems created by that river flowing through several Greater Montreal constituencies. I hope these issues will be given special priority without unduly glossing over yesterday's excuses, namely jurisdictional conflicts.

The textile industry must be given special attention. That is an area of industry which particularly affects a great number of persons who are now employed there.

The White Paper in social security, Mr. Speaker, will certainly spur further exchanges with the people so that legislation can be implemented in order to bring about concrete solutions.

These revamped social measures will enable all our fellow-citizens to forge ahead, giving better treatment to a great many and promoting the national unity which we all desire.

There is a solution to every problem.

The enactment of the pieces of legislation proposed in the Speech from the Throne will establish an atmosphere of peace and social progress, and will enhance the dignity of man by giving him full freedom, by allowing him to live new and gratifying human experiences, while taking into account the Canadian heritage in the North American context.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas):

That an Address the text of which follows, be presented to His Excellency the Governor General of Canada:

To His Excellency the Right Hon. Roland Michener, Chancellor and Principal Companion of the Order of Canada, upon whom has been conferred the Canadian Forces' Decoration, Governor General and Comander-in-Chief of Canada.

May it please Your Excellency: We, Her Majesty's most loyal and dutiful subjects, the House of Commons of Canada, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Excellency for the gracious speech which Your Excellency has addressed to both Houses of Parliament.

• (2:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, it is a great honour to be selected to second the motion for the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne at the opening of the third session of Canada's twenty-eighth parliament. I am particularly pleased because the motion for the address has just been moved by the hon. member for Bourassa (Mr. Trudel), who is one of the most capable, likeable, respected and fluently bilingual members of this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Assiniboia): I have a great admiration for people who speak more than one language, and indeed I have a certain amount of envy of them. Although I have taken some French lessons I will not try to demonstrate the results of that effort here today.

As has often been said before in like circumstances, the honour that has been given to me today by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and the government, is far from being mine alone. It is mainly a tribute to the constituency I represent, recognition of the importance of the great Canadian prairies, and an acknowledgement of the eminent position our area holds in the minds and hearts of our Prime Minister and his government, and indeed in the thoughts of Canadians everywhere.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, you will permit me to follow the usual custom of placing on the record a few remarks about the constituency of Assiniboia which it is my privilege to represent. It is one of those ridings which increased in size in the latest revision of electoral district boundaries. It is some 180 miles from east to west, and from 90 to 96 miles north to south. There are three constituencies in southern Saskatchewan bordering on the United States, and Assiniboia is the central one.

The southern boundary of Assiniboia constituency is the famous forty-ninth parallel, which forms the international line between the Canadian provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia, and the United States. With the exception of some ridings along the Great Lakes and the constituency of Yukon, the Assiniboia constituency has more miles of international boundary, 180, than any other federal electoral district. We have a close and cordial relationship with the residents of North Dakota and Montana, and I believe that the overwhelming majority of our residents would reject the doctrine of socialism—pardon me, of isolationism.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

• (2:20 p.m.)

Mr. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, most of us are extremely thankful that we have such a strong and friendly neighbour, and we are happy that we still have this long, undefended boundary which is unmatched anywhere else in the world. We hope that wise counsel will continue to prevail on both sides of that boundary so that we can continue to set this remarkable example of peaceful coexistence to the rest of the world.

My area is predominantly rural, with rich farm land and ranching country prevailing in most parts. We do have some unique areas which may soon be incorporated into a prairie grasslands national park. Such a park would preserve for posterity some of the great expanse of our prairie landscape in its original state, and I hope that further progress toward the establishment of such a park, in co-operation with the Saskatchewan government, will be made this year.

Agricultural production includes wheat, barley, oats, flax and many other field crops. There is increasing interest in an already thriving cattle industry, and more land is being seeded each year for pasture and forage. Large numbers of hogs, sheep and poultry are produced, and there are some fine dairy herds as well. I was pleased to note in the Speech from the Throne references to programs to improve market potential for farm products. As you know, Mr. Speaker, and as we were reminded in the Throne Speech this morning, the market for grain has improved greatly, and the outlook is for a continuation of a good demand for grain for the next year or two at least.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas (Assiniboia): While this happy development may be partially due to world conditions, much of the credit must go to the government for the sincere interest they have demonstrated in the welfare of the grain industry. The wheat board, with the very valuable addition of Mr. Charles Gibbings as a commissioner on July 1, 1969, with the encouragement of many members of Parliament, and under the direction of Saskatchewan's cabinet minister, has done an outstanding job of seeking out and developing grain markets. As time goes on I think we will be able to appreciate even more the tremendous effort that was expended in so successfully reviving Canada's grain industry by the present Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang), who still retains his responsibility for the Canadian Wheat Board. It was a stroke of genius when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) gave a prairie cabinet minister the task of building up our great grain industry to the exclusion of any other duties for nearly a year. He has really done a remarkable piece of work, and this has been recognized, and perhaps rewarded, by the addition of more responsibilities.

While prairie people are pleased to see this recognition, there is a widespread feeling that the grain industry is of sufficient importance to merit the undivided interest of a cabinet minister, and I express the hope that this will be taken into account in the course of some future re-organization in the government.

Other important factors contributing to the improved grain markets are the granting of even more generous credit terms to our customers by the government, and by a continuous expansion of our food aid programs. We hope that the foreign policy review referred to in the Speech from the Throne will include further development of these forward-looking policies.

Mention was made in the Throne Speech of measures to assist in the adjustment to changes which have been going on and will continue to take place in Canadian agriculture. I hope that such plans will be advanced by the second Canadian congress on agriculture which will be held here in Ottawa late next month. The first Canadian congress on agriculture was convened by the government in March, 1969, and it was the first time in history that a national meeting sponsored by a federal government had ever been called to discuss national agricultural problems and to attempt to define long term policy. The November congress could mark the beginning of a bright new era for the farming industry.

With regard to assistance to farmers in the adjustments that face us, we need programs to assist small farmers to attain economic units, or to retrain for other work if that is what they wish. For older farmers who are on small units there should be a plan to permit them to retire with dignity, and to continue to live on the farm if they prefer. The average realized net farm income in Canada, which is the actual take home pay, was less than $3,400 per farm last year, which means that most small operators had an even smaller income. Far less than half of the farmers in Canada earn enough to make them subject to income tax. Therefore most small operators will not have had sufficient income in recent years to make the Canada Pension Plan meaningful to them.

Because of the hardships and uncertainties in farming, especially on the Prairies, relatively few young people have entered the industry in the past 20 or 30 years. As a result, the average age of farmers in the west is well over 50 years. I hope that farm policies will be such as to make agriculture more attractive to young people.

We have in Canada one of the most efficient farm industries in the world. Agricultural output per person engaged in the industry increased 11 per cent in 1969. Each year Canadians have been spending a declining portion of their incomes on food, and each year the farmer's share of the food dollar goes down as a greater share is taken by the food processors and handlers. If we in this country wish to have a plentiful supply of good food at reasonable prices, we must adopt farm policies that will keep agriculture healthy and in the hands of capable owner-operators, a system which has amply demonstrated its efficiency.

One of the disadvantages under which farmers operate, especially in the grain growing areas, is extreme variability in income. For instance, the total realized net farm income in Saskatchewan in 1966 was $465 million. In 1967 it was $484 million, in 1968 it was $367 million, and last year at was $199 million. I hope that the programs to assist in adjustments to change in the industry mentioned in the Speech from the Throne will include a farm income maintenance plan to help smooth out these income swings which are causing so much hardship and worry to grain producers.

It appears that we may be approaching another period of expansion, and now would be a very appropriate time to initiate a plan to stabilize and maintain farm incomes at an acceptable level. Prices for agricultural products have gone up very little in the past 20 years. In the case of grain, some prices are lower now than they were in 1949. The industry has survived because of a phenomenal increase in efficiency, unmatched by any other segment of our economy. However, we cannot count on that rate of efficiency improvement being sustained; further steps must be taken to ensure that agriculture remains viable and progressive. The very commendable action taken recently in this regard is certainly appreciated, and we look forward to favourable developments this session.

Although the new Canada Grain Act was not enacted into law earlier this week, as many of us had hoped, I trust that arrangements can be made to move it forward into this new session without losing much of the progress already made. One of the main features in that legislation is the provision which would authorize the use of protein content as an important new factor in our wheat grading system. This change is imperative so that our wheat can be fully competitive in all our grain export markets, many of which require certain standards and uniformity in protein content.

The Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act is also urgently needed by some segments of Canadian agriculture. The standing committee has not yet had sufficient time to deal fully with this bill and the many amendments that may be put forward by committee members.

I hope that all members will agree to transfer these two bills to this new session without loss of status, and that the government will do everything in its power to see that these two important pieces of legislation receive early consideration.

The government has demonstrated a sympathetic understanding of the serious problems besetting the prairie grains industry. Contributing to that understanding have been the frequent visits to Saskatchewan by many cabinet ministers. I wish to thank those who have come to our province and to the constituency of Assiniboia. We are especially grateful to the Prime Minister, who made a special effort some 15 months ago to visit farms in my area and to talk to representative farm operators and their families. I am sure that his contacts then have helped him appreciate the situation there and enabled him to support present and future plans in the field of farm policy. An invitation is hereby extended to all cabinet ministers to visit our part of the country. You will be made very welcome, whether or not it is your first visit. This invitation is always out to all parliamentarians and all residents of every province. If you come in the summer or the fall you will marvel at our open landscape, our large fields of growing or ripening grain, our ranching country and our tidy towns and cities. You will enjoy meeting the friendly people, too, I am sure.

• (2:30 p.m.)

We do have some other industries in Assiniboia constituency. There are two very productive sodium sulphate mines at Ormiston and Gladmar, and there are a considerable number of oil wells in various locations. There are some very important secondary industries in the city of Weyburn, as well as at some of the other progressive urban centres. Although some people have reservations about it, most are pleased to see construction under way on a distillery in Weyburn.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas (Assiniboia): This will provide employment for a significant number of people and a market for hundreds of thousands of bushels of grain each year, with prospects of expansion in the future.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas (Assiniboia): This particular industry was developed under the federal industrial incentive plan shortly after our part of Saskatchewan was designated as an eligible area. Saskatchewan is definitely an area of slow industrial growth, and I hope that all concerned will see to it that more industries will be established under this imaginative program in the future than there have been to date. Our economy is in great need of diversification and, comparatively speaking, Saskatchewan has received a very small share of the industrial incentive grants to date. I note with approval that this regional development incentive plan will be continued.

The Speech from the Throne indicated that action on tax reform will be taken in this session. People all over Canada have taken a great interest in this matter and have responded strongly to the invitation to comment on the white paper on the subject which was issued 11 months ago. This has been an exercise in democracy which is different from previous approaches by government to tax reform. As a result many people have been unable to understand or accept the government's stated intention of giving full consideration to points of view and suggestions for change which might be brought to their attention. I trust that when the legislation forecast in the Throne Speech is introduced, it will show that the government has taken into account the earnest and well documented proposals of many organizations and private citizens. In this regard, I take the liberty of quoting two sentences from the eighteenth report of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. Two of their principle conclusions as a result of their extensive study and hearings are, "That the tax load now borne by lower income Canadians be reduced", and "that preservation of an economic climate favourable to growth must be a central consideration of Canadian tax policy".

Both of these principles are important in western Canada, especially the one about growth. The development of the economy in the west is not nearly as far advanced as in central Canada, and we are particularly concerned about this matter. I commend those two principles to the government, as tax reform measures are being prepared for legislative action.

There has been mounting concern across our nation about the sorry state of labour-management relations. In the Prairies we are heavily dependent on the continuity of such services as grain handling and transportation. With these facilities being required to operate at full capacity in the foreseeable future, we are apprehensive about the possibility of strikes or lockouts. The indication in the Speech from the Throne that there will be action in this session to amend the labour code and to find better methods of achieving industrial peace is very encouraging. Surely, we can devise a system which will settle disputes without resorting to the almost barbaric use of force, as epitomized in strikes and lockouts. These almost always cause more damage to third parties and to the national economy than they inflict on those who are directly involved. We must devise a more civilized approach to this serious national problem.

The Throne Speech referred to inflation. It is encouraging to note that Canada's efforts to control inflation have met with some success, indeed more success than attained in other western nations. Mention was made of a moderation of fiscal and monetary restraints. This is good news, but I hope that great care is taken to prevent another round of inflation. This economic scourge is felt more by primary producers and disadvantaged people who live on low fixed incomes than by others. It is the duty of the government to guard such people against further inflationary inroads on their already meagre incomes. I was glad that the Throne Speech indicated that all Canadians will continue to be urged to exercise restraint in the area of prices and costs.

Reference was made in the speech to the review of our national welfare and income maintenance programs. I hope that this will culminate in some action in this session to provide more assistance to those in unfortunate circumstances. I have particularly in mind those who are living on small pensions and those who are unemployed.

Since we are all consumers, we welcome the forecast that there will be legislation to give added protection to Canadians against unfair trade practices and against deceptive or confusing labelling and packaging of consumer products. Consumer credit and interest rates are to receive attention as well, and this will be appreciated by many people.

Even on the wide expanses of the Prairies, we are concerned about pollution. It is a national problem of mounting proportions which is disturbing most Canadians. Although the danger is not as imminent and pervasive in the west, we have instances of pollution that have served to make many of us acutely aware of this threat to our environment. I therefore welcome the news that a new department of government will be established to co-ordinate our national effort to cope with pollution in its many forms. Economic issues have little significance if we lose our heritage of clean water, fresh air, and pure food by neglecting to deal with the multitude of threats that beset us. Canada owes a debt of gratitude to those citizens, to those Members of Parliament, and to those government officials who have taken an interest in this serious matter. The government is to be commended for taking such prompt action to do an effective job in organizing, in order to control or prevent the pollution of our environment.

Another important subject alluded to in the Throne Speech was the creation of a branch of government to deal with urban affairs and housing. This will fill a genuine and widely felt need as our nation becomes more and more urbanized. We cannot, as a nation, afford to ignore the very real problems with which our cities are struggling.

The government has shown great initiative and flexibility, as well as awareness of public opinion, in making these significant new moves in administering our national affairs, which I am sure will be approved by a majority of Canadians.

The Throne Speech made reference to plans for greater co-ordination of our scientific and technical resources. Some of us have been concerned that research and development in Canada has lacked impetus and direction. We have felt that there have been gaps and overlaps in our research work. It is gratifying to learn that steps will be taken soon to ensure that improvements will be made in this field which is vital to our future. May I introduce a suggestion for early investigation? It is the possible conversion of farm products, a renewable resource, into motor fuel. Some authorities state that the world's petroleum resources may not last very long, so we should be concerned about searching for another source of fuel for our ever-growing number of motors.

The government's concern for the rights of individuals is again evident in the announcement that there will be further reform in the criminal law in this session. Improvements in our system of pre-trial detention and bail, and our treatment of young offenders will be proposed. This will be applauded by all who are concerned about the proper and fair administration of justice.

The speech dealt with the work of the United Nations, and Canada's support of that institution. World peace is the outstanding issue of our times. We in Canada must do everything in our power to strengthen this instrument of international negotiation and international law. The United Nations has been in existence for 25 years, and during that time it has been successful in preventing a third world war. With the genuine support of people of all nations, it can grow in power and influence and it can keep our civilization from destroying itself. We pray that, God willing, it will succeed.

There were references in the Speech from the Throne to the Manitoba centennial this year, which was marked by visits from the Queen and the Royal Family and by the Governor General. May I take this opportunity to congratulate my neighbouring province on the very successful and impressive celebrations that were held.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (2:40 p.m.)

Mr. Douglas (Assiniboia): We were also informed that British Columbia would be celebrating 100 years in Confederation in 1971, and that The Queen and The Duke of Edinburgh will visit that fine province in May. I know that B.C. people will have a great year, and I congratulate them in advance.

Saskatchewan is staging a special celebration next year as well. It is called "Homecoming '71". All former Saskatchewan residents are invited to return some time in 1971 for a visit. A similar event was very popular in 1955 when Saskatchewan had its 50th anniversary as a province, and it was felt that there should be another homecoming in 1971. Whether you are a former Saskatchewanite or not, you are invited to come to Saskatchewan in 1971, even if it is just on the way to or from British Columbia.

Canada is a great country, and we Canadians are the most fortunate people in the world. The Speech from the Throne challenged us to work together to create an even greater country, where we can continue to enjoy, and enhance, our heritage of individual freedom, equality of opportunity, and the scope we have to exercise our initiative, our ingenuity, and our imagination.

Let us get on with the tasks which lie ahead with energy and optimism, rather than gloom and foreboding. A former Governor General, that devoted and highly respected Canadian, the late Mr. Georges Vanier, is credited with the following statement:

> People do not age by living a number of years. I am convinced we grow old only by deserting our ideals. We are in fact, as old as our doubts and despairs, but we are as young as our faith and our hope, especially faith and hope in our youth, which is after all, the same as saying our faith and our hope in our country's future.

I conclude, Mr. Speaker, by again expressing my gratitude at having been given this privilege today and I now take pleasure in seconding the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne which was so ably moved by the hon. member for Bourassa (Mr. Trudel).

On motion of Mr. Stanfield, the debate was adjourned.

On motion of the Right Hon. Mr. Trudeau, the House adjourned at 2.47 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, October 9, 1970

The House met at 11 a.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REFERENCE OF WHITE PAPER AND EVIDENCE ADDUCED TO STANDING COMMITTEE ON LABOUR, MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, there have been some discussions about continuing the work of certain committees and in particular the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration with regard to unemployment insurance. If there is general consent, I wonder whether the following could be made an order of the House:

That the White Paper entitled "Unemployment Insurance in the 70's" laid before the House, June 17, 1970, and the evidence adduced by the committee in its study of the aforementioned matter during the second session of the 28th parliament be referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the acting House leader is correct in assuming that there is general agreement that this be made an order of the House. In fact, it is in keeping with the request of the standing committee in the last session. I would just like to express the hope that if there is any delay in dealing with the white paper and the legislation to follow on the subject the government will consider bringing in interim legislation regarding unemployment insurance benefits so that in the intervening time adequate benefits will be available to meet the situation that may obtain this winter. Perhaps some time soon the government might indicate whether the bill listed by the Prime Minister yesterday, specified as a bill to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, is such an interim bill or whether it is the major bill to be introduced later.

Mr. Baldwin: Maybe he will put out a white paper on that.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the suggestion made by the acting House leader. Is it the pleasure of the House to agree to this proposal?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

---

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ABDUCTION OF SENIOR BRITISH TRADE COMMISSIONER—PRESENT SITUATION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to direct a question on another subject to the Minister of Finance, but first of all I wonder whether the right hon. Prime Minister has anything further he can tell the House in connection with the Cross case.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON MEASURES TO COMBAT UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he has in mind proposing any concrete measures to combat the threat of rising unemployment this winter? If so, could he indicate very briefly what these measures are, because none were mentioned in the Speech from the Throne?

Mr. Speaker: The statement to be made by the minister should be very brief. I appreciate the form in which the statement is suggested because normally if it were to be an extended statement it would have to be made on motions.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I will be saying something about this matter in a statement to be made during the throne speech debate.

Mr. Stanfield: When he makes his statement, will the minister be prepared to detail the measures that the government intends to propose, and would he also undertake to indicate clearly the direction in which the government intends to guide the economy?

Mr. Benson: My hon. friend will have to wait for my statement.

* * *

FINANCE

LOWERING OF INTEREST RATES—SUGGESTED MEETING WITH BANKS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, as the minister has now had an opportunity to consider the suggestion I made the other day—he said he would consider it—of approaching the chartered banks and suggesting to them that there is no justifiable excuse for not starting to lower interest rates as the Bank of Canada and United States chartered banks have done, would he answer my question now and advise us whether he has considered calling a meeting of chartered banks to tell them that they should get on with the job of lowering interest rates in Canada without further delay?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I have considered the matter and decided against it.

* * *

MANPOWER

DEPARTMENTAL FORECASTS OF WINTER UNEMPLOYMENT LEVELS

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration if I can get his attention. Can the minister in his new role inform the House whether or not his department has conducted any studies involving the forecasting of unemployment levels this winter and, if so, would he consider tabling such studies?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the department, of course, is constantly reviewing the situation. I shall have to look into the question of whether there is anything that would be suitable for tabling at this time.

ALLEGED CURTAILMENT OF ADULT TRAINING COURSES

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Has a directive gone out to the Manpower offices asking them to curtail applications from unemployed people to take adult training courses in view of the great pressure on the budget because of the high unemployment rate?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I doubt very much whether any such directive has gone out, but I shall check.

* * *

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO FOREIGN CONSORTIUM TO RE-OPEN BAFFIN ISLAND IRON MINES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Are any plans being considered by his department for the granting of financial assistance to a consortium of South African and American corporations to re-open the iron mines on Baffin Island?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, we are studying the Merry River project undertaken on Baffin Island. We have not yet defined any final policy. The interested companies are in contact with the experts of my department, and if they submit a definite plan, we shall see what the government can do to help them.

[Mr. Hees.]

As far as I am concerned, I would like to see this important iron ore deposit developed one day. This would allow for the creation of many permanent jobs for the native population of the area.

[English]

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In view of the fact that seven out of the eleven companies now undertaking development in the Northwest Territories are foreign-owned, would the minister undertake to make a statement to the House on motions before this agreement is finally entered into, giving the House such information as the total amount of government assistance and the companies to which this assistance will be granted?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Naturally, if the government comes to a decision, we shall make a statement in the House of Commons, but I do not think we can reach a concrete proposal for several months and perhaps a year.

* * *

POLLUTION

MEASURES TO ELIMINATE MERCURY CONTENT IN JAMES AND HUDSON BAYS

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Is the minister taking concrete measures to check pollution in James and Hudson Bays, which is actually threatening our natural resources?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Here are the facts, Mr. Speaker. The plants polluting James Bay are not located in the Northwest Territories. They are rather to be found in Ontario or Quebec.

We are now conducting studies to determine what the sources of pollution are and we will immediately get in touch with the provincial authorities concerned, in order to make them aware of that problem and ask them to act accordingly.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

Is the minister aware that the Domtar plant at Lebel-sur-Quevillon is a source of pollution of the James Bay waters?

Mr. Chrétien: I do not know if it is exactly that plant. It is possible and should that be the case we will advise the proper authorities to take the necessary steps to protect James Bay and its natural resources on which the Eskimos and the Indians of the area depend a great deal for their livelihood.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question.

Could the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development tell the House whether the companies concerned have been informed of the study conducted by the department and whether they have been requested to co-operate in the matter?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I could not give a definite answer to this question. I will make inquiries and will then be pleased to pass the information on to the hon. member.

[English]

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. Has his department been checking this particular pulp mill for effluent containing mercury in the James Bay area?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

PUBLIC SERVICE

ALLEGED DEMOTION OF K. A. STEAD BECAUSE OF INABILITY TO SPEAK SECOND LANGUAGE

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. I gave him notice yesterday and I feel sure he has looked into it. Has the Prime Minister investigated the charge made by the Public Service Alliance that Mr. K. A. Stead, a civil servant of 30 years standing, has been demoted from his position as chief of the education and extension services branch of the National Museum to a clerical job because of his inability to speak a second language even though he is at present taking a second language course and, I am told, doing very well at it? If the charge is correct, would the Prime Minister advise the House what action the government is planning to take to correct this injustice?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member did inform me that he would be asking the question. He would perhaps get a more lengthy answer if he could wait until the minister in charge of the department is on duty in the House but, as best I am able, perhaps I can deal with the question.

I did discuss the matter with the Secretary of State who told me he asked for a report on the complaints to which the hon. member refers. He has had no report as of the moment I am speaking. I might say that it remains the government's policy that supervisors are expected to communicate with their subordinates in the language of the subordinate. In the matter of establishing French or English-speaking units within the Public Service, our policy remains the same. I did write to all deputy ministers quite some time ago suggesting that they come up with a list of possibilities for the establishment of unilingual services. It is only after I have had that list and after I have had their recommendations as to the possibilities of implementing them that such units will be established.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, the right hon. Prime Minister has not advised the House whether or not this charge of demotion is correct, and has not said what the government intends to do about it. Will he ask the minister to report to the House on his first appearance here next week on this specific matter and answer the specific question? In view of the fact that this sort of thing appears to be occurring fairly regularly at the present time, would the Prime Minister give serious consideration to making amendments to the Public Service Employment Act to guarantee by law the kind of protection to civil servants who speak only one language that was promised to the House and the country by Prime Minister Pearson when he introduced the legislation?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, on the first question I repeat that the minister has asked for a report and, as I said, the report has not been received yet, so obviously I cannot comment on this case at the moment. The hon. member should know that the minister does not administer the National Museum. It is administered independently and he is only answerable for it. It is not something that happened within his department. Therefore he has to ask the museum for a report, which has not come in. In answer to the second question, I do not admit the premise.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary to the Prime Minister.

Does he not think that the hon. member who is so touchy regarding unilingualism and bilingualism should be reminded that people speaking French only have been bearing for over 50 years what he now fears suffering?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to hon. members that we appear to be entering the field of debate at this point. This is not really the time to enter on a debate and the Chair is now prepared to recognize the hon. member for Peace River.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. What I said was attacked by an hon. member. I say that my objective in all of this is to protect French-speaking civil servants in exactly the same way as I hope to be able to protect English-speaking civil servants.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

INTERPROVINCIAL MARKETING—REQUEST FOR REFERENCE TO SUPREME COURT—INTERVENTION IN CASE BEFORE QUEBEC COURT

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Minister of Justice. Now that the province of Alberta has become the sixth province to let down the iron curtain against the importation of agricultural products, a situation which means that more than half the country is involved, will the minister give serious consideration to preparing terms of reference under the appropriate section of the Supreme Court Act so that this illegal procedure on the part of so many provinces can be challenged at the earliest possible date?

Mr. Trudeau: Indecision and delay.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad to take that question as notice.

Mr. Baldwin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to respond to the proved master of indecision and delay who sits opposite me.

Mr. Trudeau: Not quite, yet. The hon. member will have to move over one seat. He is not leader yet.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I trust that I may now be permitted to ask my question. Will the minister give consideration to the proposal which I advanced to the Minister of Agriculture a few days ago that the government appoint counsel to appear in the constitutional case now taking place in the province of Quebec involving the extent to which the regulations of that province contravene section 121 of the British North America Act?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, as to the premise preceding the formal part of the question, I want to make it very clear that I not only cannot accept it but that I deplore such language being used in these circumstances—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McIlraith: —by an official spokesman for the official opposition in the House. As to the question itself, I will be very glad to look into the matter.

Mr. Baldwin: What does the minister deplore? What have I done?

* * *

INDIAN AFFAIRS

STERILIZATION OF ESKIMO WOMEN

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development on a rather serious matter. Is the minister aware that a program of sterilization of native Eskimo women was apparently introduced in the Holman Island community on Victoria Island, that five women have been so sterilized and that some others are being considered? If he is aware, will he inform the House who authorized this unnecessary and inhuman program, in view of the availability of birth control methods?

[Mr. Baldwin.]

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have no information on this problem. The hon. member was kind enough to give me notice of his question, so I have had an investigation made but I have not yet received any report.

I am not aware that any authorization was given by my department. Health services in the Northwest Territories are under the jurisdiction of the Department of National Health and Welfare. I therefore asked one of my department's officers this morning to get in touch immediately with the representatives of the Department of National Health in order to determine whether any authorization had actually been given or whether the facts alleged by my hon. friend were correct.

As soon as I obtain further information, I shall be happy to inform the House, but, at this time, I do not believe that such an authorization was given. If such action took place it must have been because of some local or individual initiative, rather than under a government policy.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I want to put a supplementary question to the minister and express my appreciation for his announcement.

It is not possible that such a program should be implemented without any authorization. I should like to ask the minister to draw the attention of the Minister of National Health and Social Welfare to this question and the program I just mentioned.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, it was done this morning.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Malpeque.

* * *

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

LACK OF PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY TO MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is the indication in Hansard that the services of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence have been terminated in that capacity and that as yet no replacement has been appointed correct? Second, when will this omission be rectified?

Mr. Stanfield: Can they not find anybody to work with him?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is provision in the law for the appointment of only 16 Parliamentary Secretaries. I recognize the matter alluded to by the hon. member and hope we shall have his support when we ask the House to increase the number of Parliamentary Secretaries.

Mr. Baldwin: What about appointing a backbencher?

Mr. MacLean: In the interval, can the Prime Minister assure the House that this omission to appoint a Parliamentary Secretary to a minister who is in great need of one—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacLean: —is not an indication of a further downgrading of the government's estimation of the importance of national defence?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, I can give that assurance, Mr. Speaker. Able though the minister is, I am anxious to have him assisted by a Parliamentary Secretary, and I hope the House will perhaps give unanimous consent so that we can increase the numbers very soon.

* * *

[Translation]

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

PUBLICATION OF CARR REPORT ON TOLLS

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister and ask him whether the Carr report respecting tolls on the St. Lawrence Seaway has already been published or will soon be?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I must say, Mr. Speaker, that I did not understand the question very well. I think it has to do with tolls, but it is not a matter that comes within the purview of my duties. I shall take it as notice and bring it to the attention of the minister concerned.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might direct a supplementary to the Minister of Transport who may be in a position to tell me if the Carr report on tolls on the St. Lawrence Seaway has been published or will soon be?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the first report of Carr and Associates has been received. It is only a partial report and we are waiting for the final document. At that point we will assess it. There is an obligation on our part to consult with the United States in terms of the operations of the St. Lawrence Seaway. Subsequent to that we will make a decision whether the document or parts of it can be made public.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport.

Inquiries of the Ministry

May I ask the Minister to assure the House that reports on the Carr survey will also be submitted to the House for study?

[English]

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I feel quite certain it will be possible for the House to study the whole question of the future of the St. Lawrence Seaway and its operations in, for example, the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications when the estimates or some other matter dealing with the Authority are before the committee. In addition, it is possible that we could have discussions on the basis of the Carr report or at least the findings which emerge from that report. I will be glad to consider it.

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

DESTROYER CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM DELAY—RELATIONSHIP TO ANTI-SUBMARINE ROLE

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. It is in connection with questions that have been asked with regard to the destroyer construction program. Will the minister give every assurance that the delay is not due to a complete change of policy with regard to the anti-submarine role?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will give that assurance.

Mr. Bell: Will the minister also give an indication of the definite date when a decision will be made, because the slippage of time and money continues at an alarming rate each day in the absence of a definite decision?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. member took the words right out of my mouth, Mr. Speaker.

INQUIRY AS TO TABLING OF WHITE PAPER

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Can the Minister of National Defence say when the government intends to table the white paper on defence referred to in the Speech from the Throne?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): I expect some time after the turn of the year, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanfield: Turn of what year?

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

BRAZIL—DETENTION IN JAIL OF CANADIAN CITIZEN

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I intended to direct this question to the Minister of Justice or the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Possibly the Prime Minister or the Acting Minister of Justice could answer it. A Canadian citizen by the name of Mrs. Chao has apparently been held in jail, without charge, in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, for a number of weeks. Will the Prime Minister or the Acting Minister of Justice investigate this matter and make a report to the House? Mrs. Chao is a Canadian citizen from Vancouver, British Columbia.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will take the question as notice and direct it to the minister who is responsible.

* * *

IMMIGRATION

INQUIRY AS TO TABLING OF WHITE PAPER

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): My question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Before asking my question I wish to congratulate him on his appointment to that important post. Is the white paper on immigration mentioned in the Speech from the Throne ready? If not, will it be ready soon so it can be examined by the appropriate committee of the House in order that the urgently needed legislation and changes in the regulations can be introduced at an early date?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the white paper is not ready. Certainly we consider it an important matter and therefore we will attempt to bring it forward as expeditiously as possible.

APPEAL BOARD CASE BACKLOG—AVAILABILITY OF STUDY

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): In view of the many cases being referred to the Immigration Appeal Board, the number having reached serious proportions with the backlog increasing at the rate of 300 per month, can the minister advise when the study of this serious problem undertaken by Mr. Joseph Sedgwick, Q.C., will be available?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): It is expected that this report will be available within a month.

Mr. Alexander: Will the minister at his earliest convenience make a statement on motions as to the steps his department has taken in the meantime to reduce this serious backlog?

Mr. Lang: I will certainly give consideration to that suggestion. I am not sure that a statement on motions would be the most appropriate method of conveying the information, but I will certainly look into the matter.

* * *

[Translation]

TAXATION

WHITE PAPER ON REFORM—CAMPAIGN AGAINST CAPITAL GAINS TAX

Mr. Pierre De Bané (Matane): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he is aware of a campaign being carried on by province of Quebec radio stations jointly with Chambers of Commerce against taxation of capital gains? Are the Minister or the Government conscious of this violation of the Broadcasting Act, and of the injustice being perpetrated against those who would benefit by the measure, i.e. the silent majority? What steps does his department intend to take in this regard?

[English]

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I cannot answer that question—I do not believe the translation came through in English—but I will be most pleased to look into it.

Mr. Speaker: My suggestion is that the minister take notice of the question asked by the hon. member and answer it in due course.

* * *

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ACTION TO PREVENT SALE OF TEXTBOOK PUBLISHING COMPANIES TO FOREIGN CORPORATIONS

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that only three publishing houses in the English textbook field are in Canadian hands, does the government intend to introduce legislation to protect our publishing houses from being sold to foreign corporations?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): This matter was dealt with a few days ago at some length by the Minister of National Revenue who is looking into the question of foreign ownership on behalf of the government. I have nothing to add to what he said at that time, though I would remind the hon. member that my colleague did say he would be taking up the particular subject of textbooks with the relevant provincial authority. As the hon. member knows, the provincial authority, in the field of education, can take action in this area.

Mr. Ryan: Of course they can, Mr. Speaker, but so can the federal government. This is a publishing matter, it is an elementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has been given the floor for the purpose of answering a supplementary question, not to make a speech.

Mr. Ryan: Is the government aware that another publishing house, Ryerson Press, is being looked over by a foreign buyer, an American buyer?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I take the liberty of reminding hon. members that it is not in order to ask whether the government is aware that something is being done, not being done, or might be done.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON MEASURES TO OFFSET DECLINE IN STARTS

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): My question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the serious decline in housing starts in the first nine months of this year, what immediate steps does the right hon. gentleman intend taking to help solve this serious problem other than setting up a ministry of housing and urban affairs?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the hon. member that he is inviting a general statement which should not be made during the question period.

Mr. Gilbert: I wonder if I might ask a supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member cannot ask a supplementary to a question which has been disallowed, but the Chair will permit him to ask another question.

Mr. Gilbert: Would the Minister without Portfolio responsible for housing make a statement on motions with regard to the serious problem arising from the decline in housing starts and tell us what immediate steps he proposes to take to deal with it?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): I shall be glad to refer to the matter during the remarks I hope to make in the course of the debate on the address. I shall probably allude to the fact that housing starts are taking an upward turn and that September starts were at the rate of 185,000—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

POST OFFICE

TERMINATION OF LEGAL ROLE OF MINISTER OF COMMUNICATIONS AS HEAD OF DEPARTMENT

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the Minister of Communications is still the Postmaster General of Canada and that the hon. member for Longueuil has the problems but not the portfolio, can the Prime Minister advise us whether we may soon expect the introduction of legislation to correct this seemingly imperfect situation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I thank the hon. member for being so helpful. We did announce yesterday through the mouth of the Governor General that we would be asking the House to approve a minister of state system, and it would be my intention to ensure that my hon. friend from Longueuil shall at that time be a minister of state in charge of the Post Office. I hope the opposition will co-operate with us in expediting this arrangement.

Mr. Hees: Don't you worry about us.

Inquiries of the Ministry

RURAL CLOSURES—AMELIORATION OF POLICY

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): My question is for the Minister without Portfolio with responsibility for the postal services. Under the new and more humane approach he announced, will he be reversing government policy on the closure of rural post offices which has had such a devastating impact on the stability of rural communities?

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure that the question has been asked in the proper terms. But the minister, I am sure, is anxious that he be given an opportunity to reply.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I cannot quite accept the assertion of the hon. member that the closing down of some post offices has had such disastrous consequences. But as I took over the department I decided that no more post offices would be closed until that matter has been reviewed.

[English]

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): My supplementary question is directed to the minister in charge of the Post Office. Will the present criteria continue to be used in considering the closure of rural post offices?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me that the minister's reply covered the question now being asked by the hon. member.

* * *

[Translation]

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

In Hull, not very far from Parliament hill, there is a federal wharf where boats can be put afloat. However, as the "Escale" is anchored there, nobody can use it.

Is the minister taking steps now to get the old "Escale" out of the way?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has made a representation and he must take it for granted that the minister will consider the matter.

* * *

[English]

URBAN AFFAIRS

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. In keeping with the new thinking which the government has now adopted in relation to urban problems—a change which I suggest, with all respect, has come about as a result of the prompting of the opposition—I ask the Prime Minister whether he will say now that the government intends to implement a procedure under which a standing committee on housing and urban affairs can be set up?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I would prefer that this matter, if it is to be dealt with at all, be touched upon by the minister responsible. I can say at this stage that there is no intention in my mind of recommending the establishment of such a committee. However, as the hon. member knows, I have an open mind on all these things.

Mr. Alexander: I am glad to learn that the Prime Minister has an open mind on this question. He will understand that in the absence of a standing committee on housing and urban affairs the new portfolio he is developing will have no credibility whatsoever in terms of participatory democracy.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

RETIRED EMPLOYEES' PENSIONS—ACTION TO IMPLEMENT COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATION FOR INCREASE

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Will the government take steps, or has it already done so, to bring to the attention of the Canadian National Railways the recommendation of this House set out in the fourteenth report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, tabled and concurred in a few days ago, concerning an increase in the pensions of Canadian National employees, in the hope that action on this matter might be taken at an early date?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will undertake to do that formally, but the slight tremor noted in Montreal on Tuesday seems to be pretty clear evidence that the CNR already knows of the action taken by this House.

FAILURE OF CHATEAU LAURIER HOTEL TO COMPLY WITH MINIMUM WAGE LAW

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question along the same lines. Has the Minister of Transport told the president of the CNR to have the Chateau Laurier and other CNR hotels pay the minimum wage in effect of $1.65 an hour and to stop trying to cut down on the payment of its employees?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me that that question has already been asked.

[Mr. Alexander.]

POLLUTION

OTTAWA AREA RIVERS—ESTABLISHMENT OF WATER QUALITY MANAGEMENT AREA

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Would the minister advise the House whether any steps have been taken toward establishing a water quality management area under the jurisdiction of the Canada Water Act to facilitate the cleaning up of rivers in the Ottawa area?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, discussions are going on with the province of Ontario and the province of Quebec under the aegis of the consultative committees appointed pursuant to the philosophy of the Canada Water Act, both provincially and federally. I am very hopeful that we can achieve an agreement in the not too distant future which will embrace the two provinces and the federal government.

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PURPOSE OF TROOP MOVEMENT FROM QUEBEC TO MONTREAL

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to inquire whether the Prime Minister or the Minister of National Defence is in a position to enlighten the House as to the purpose of moving 30 truck loads of troops to Montreal in the middle of last night, I believe it was. Was this just an exercise, or since it is alleged that most of the vehicles were of a medical services nature has the government of Quebec asked the federal government for assistance in connection with the provision of medical services in that province?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, this was a night training exercise between Canadian Forces Base Valcartier and Canadian Forces Base Camp Bouchard, and was not at all in relation to the situation referred to by the hon. member.

Mr. MacLean: I thank the minister.

* * *

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF NEW CHIEF COMMISSIONER

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. How soon does he or the government expect to announce the appointment of the new chief commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board? In addition, can he assure the House that whoever is appointed will not be someone who was either formerly or is at present in the private grain trade?

An hon. Member: How about me?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it seems that we have volunteers right here. We will certainly try to see that the best possible candidates are examined for the position of additional commissioner, but I have no prediction to make at the moment as to when the appointment will be made.

* * *

GRAIN

BARLEY—ACTION TO TAKE ADVANTAGE OF EXPORT OPPORTUNITIES AND STIMULATE DELIVERIES BY FARMERS

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, in view of persistent reports that the Wheat Board is not offering barley for sale on the export market because of uncertainty as to how much barley farmers will deliver, can the minister responsible for the Wheat Board inform the House what action is being undertaken to take advantage of export opportunities so that farmers will be encouraged to bring the grain forward?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Wheat Board, of course, has this question very much on its mind in deciding what in fact will be available for sale. I know the commissioners are reviewing the situation daily, and I am sure we can be confident in their ability to handle the question.

[Later:]

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. May I ask the minister in charge of the Wheat Board whether he will consider increasing the initial price of barley so as to assure that there is a sufficient supply of barley to the Wheat Board for our customers?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I do not think it would be appropriate to consider a change at this stage for this year. It is far too early, of course, to think about the situation for next year.

REQUEST FOR BREAKDOWN OF EXPECTED SALES

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Would the minister responsible for the Wheat Board make an early statement on motions giving a breakdown of the 700 million bushels of grain grown in the crop year that is expected to be sold as stated, and showing for the information of the House how much of the grain is wheat and how much is barley and other grains?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that this would be a subject matter suitable for a statement on motions. When it is possible to provide additional detailed information on sales, the information will of course be supplied, though as I have indicated to the House on previous occasions there is some limitation as to what can in fact be made known because of commercial considerations.

[Translation]

AIRPORTS

STE SCHOLASTIQUE—AGREEMENT BETWEEN FEDERAL GOVERNMENT AND QUEBEC RESPECTING ACCESS ROADS

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

In view of the fact that the construction of a roads network is of basic importance to the development of the Ste Scholastique airport, can the Prime Minister tell the House whether a program has been prepared jointly with the province of Quebec in connection with this project or whether Ottawa intends to disclose shortly the contents of the agreement reached with that Province about this roads network?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in my opinion this question should be put to the Minister of Transport. I am aware that ministers and officials have met many times in this connection while I have not been involved myself except at the very beginning.

* * *

[English]

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILES—STEPS TO ACHIEVE PARITY BETWEEN CANADIAN AND UNITED STATES PRICES

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Following a record year for the export of automobiles from Canada to the United States, can the minister inform the House what steps he is taking to ensure that during the coming year there will be price parity in the sale of automobiles as between the two countries?

Mr. Speaker: I think this information should be given to the House in the form of a statement. I would not think it could be replied to by way of an answer during the question period.

Mr. Broadbent: Then may I rephrase my question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister assure the House that such a statement will be forthcoming in the early future?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am sure there will be many occasions to talk about this particular question, but there is already an indication that the differential, the gap, is closing. I know my hon. friend will not agree with me on these matters, but I expect that and am not surprised. The rise in the suggested list prices in Canada is up by about 3 to 5 per cent over last year. In the United States it is up by about 5 to 6 per cent. In other words, costs are rising faster in the United States than they are in Canada—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Pepin: —and as a result the gap is diminishing.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CLOSING OF RIVERS AND GIMLI AIR BASES—MEETING WITH MANITOBA GOVERNMENT

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister tell the House whether a meeting between himself and the Manitoba government concerning the closing of the air bases at Rivers and Gimli has been requested and, if so, when the meeting will take place?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there has been some correspondence between the premier of Manitoba and myself on the question of base closures, but I do not believe a meeting with me has been scheduled. There have been a considerable number of meetings at the official level, and also the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and the Minister of Supply and Services have been involved in the question.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

* * *

[Translation]

AIRPORTS

STE SCHOLASTIQUE—AGREEMENT BETWEEN FEDERAL GOVERNMENT AND QUEBEC RESPECTING ACCESS ROADS

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, in view of the invitation of the Prime Minister to direct my question to the Minister of Transport and the urgency of this question.

We all know that there was a meeting between the Minister of Transport and the Quebec authorities about the development of the Ste Scholastique international airport. Could the minister tell us if, following this meeting, agreements were reached?

Mr. Speaker: At this stage there is no need for a point of order. Besides, if the House allows the minister to answer now the question asked by the hon. member for Joliette, I have no objection.

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think that the short answer is that the province of Quebec and the government of Canada have agreed to co-operate in the general planning for the area surrounding the airport and for access to the airport.

Studies are under way to determine what is the best means of achieving better access. It may be better highways or a better rapid transit system or a combination of these. These studies are continuing but at the moment in any event no agreement has been reached in the specific sense my hon. friend, I suggest, is implying.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

[Mr. Speaker.]

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed, from Thursday, October 8, consideration of the motion of Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin by congratulating the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. The hon. member for Bourassa (Mr. Trudel) spoke very well and very briefly. That is always meritorious and I think particularly meritorious in respect of anyone speaking in support of the Speech from the Throne that was read yesterday. I must say I would like to follow this example, but since I am speaking from a somewhat different point of view it might not be possible for me to be quite as brief today, Mr. Speaker.

In respect of the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas), who seconded the motion, may I say that I enjoyed his remarks. I appreciate the praise he had for his own constituency and I appreciate the praise he had for his government. I sympathized with him somewhat when he was attempting to pay due respect to his government and at the same time give the proper emphasis to the difficulties related to agriculture in his constituency.

Certainly, both members discharged their responsibility very well indeed. As to the Speech from the Throne, I might say it reminds one of the style of the government; words take the place of substance. There is certainly a very stark contrast between the high-flown language in the speech and the actual proposals made which, for the most part, were flat, repetitious and vague. In fact, there seemed to be very little relationship between the high-flown phrases and the proposals.

We were exhorted, we were praised, we were told of a new age, of a world-wide crisis and of the need for bold enterprise. These are fine words. At one place we were told:

> The Government continues, therefore, to direct its efforts in increasing measures to those tasks where Canadian initiative and Canadian competence may prove to be as effective as has other Canadian enterprise in the past.

I do not know what that means, but I consider it to be a reference to the Post Office.

The Throne Speech comes out flatly and unequivocally for such things as human differences and freedom—sometimes called liberty—equality of opportunity, tolerance, and in one never-to-be-forgotten phrase, pride and modesty at the same time. It also mentions favourably in passing, imagination, daring, initiative, ingenuity and warmth. Just in case after all that we might not quite realize what it is all about, the speech tells us that we Canadians are reasonable and wise.

I should like again, Mr. Speaker, to quote a sparkling remark:

—we—

That is Canadians.

—should accept gracefully the fact that we are also more amenable to reason and, perhaps, more capable of wise decision than we are normally willing to admit.

There is a corker, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Yes; reasonable and wise, I suppose to have chosen such a government—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: —which in its turn is reasonable and wise in its handling of the administration of this country under its terms of office. I suppose that is the message we are supposed to draw. Its wisdom and rationality, presumably, are demonstrated by the fact that the government seems to find so little to do. There are actually fewer concrete proposals in this year's Throne Speech than in last year's, despite the fact that this was to be the year of big things, big activity.

This year we are treated to vague promises and declarations that the present government believes in tolerance, in freedom, in equality and in several other things.

An hon. Member: Don't you?

Mr. Stanfield: So do we all. But what does that have to do with the serious practical problems this country faces! Mr. Speaker, I have not been able to go back through all the Speeches from the Throne, but I think this one must be the most stupefyingly complacent Speech from the Throne the government of Canada has ever imposed upon the people of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: If I did not have such a high opinion of the personal standards and conduct of members of the government, I would think they must have been "hopped-up" when they advised His Excellency the Governor General with regard to this speech.

[Translation]

Yes, Mr. Speaker, the language used in the Speech from the Throne is so pompous that I am wondering if it was not an attempt to conceal the sad truth behind verbose oratory. The speech was designed to drown us in words, slogans and platitudes.

There were surely worthwhile efforts made in this regard, but if this time the rhetoric is fascinating, we will nevertheless look into the substance of the speech and what we find there is incredible self-indulgence.

[English]

For example, Mr. Speaker, I shall quote again:

Let us recognize with pride and with modesty what so many strangers admire and see in us:

I think, Mr. Speaker, some of those fellows opposite must have been spending too much time watching the "Forsyte Saga".

I shall not go on and take the time to speculate concerning what these gawking strangers admire. I am sure there are many things, including the patience of the Canadian people confronted with such fatuity, such pomposity and such foolishness. But I must admit, Mr. Speaker, that the government did, quite unintentionally no doubt, liven up the speech quite a bit with such sparks of unintended humour and unpremeditated wit. But, when a government has aged as quickly as this one has, it is rather cruel to laugh.

The first reaction I had on reading the Speech from the Throne was that it must have been written by somebody who had received a Canada Council grant, but I very quickly came to the conclusion that the scale of asininity far surpassed anything that a Canada Council grant could possibly produce. Only an organization operating on the scale of the Prime Ministers' office could produce asininity on such a massive scale. I do not wish to sound ungrateful, sir, because this Speech from the Throne will long be treasured by those who appreciate absurdity on a grand scale. I am sure it surpasses anything in the past, and I am reasonably confident that we shall never see its like again.

• (12 noon)

Mr. Trudeau: Barring one.

Mr. Stanfield: Obviously, it was the work of a superlatively organized team, the greatest collection of fatuous, pompous and sententious writers ever assembled in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Of course, no personal offence is meant.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Stanfield: They seem to be getting stirred up a little. We have not really started yet.

Complacent in its language, the Speech is also complacent as to substance. It brushes off most contemptuously not only unemployment but the very thing the government is claiming to be fighting, inflation. The fight is virtually won in the latter case, it suggests, and as for unemployment, it does not seem to matter very much because as long as people are out of work this kindly government suggests it will look after them. Personally, I find this attitude worse than unacceptable; it is arrogant and it is cold. The complacency does not stop here, it runs through the speech like a thread.

I suggest that probably nowhere is there greater complacency expressed than with regard to agriculture. So far as fisheries are concerned, no doubt some of my colleagues will have something to say on the matter, but I doubt the subject is even mentioned. So far as agriculture is concerned the government says that the problem has been largely solved. There has been some improvement in the west; enough, I think to give some confidence in the future, confidence that certainly the government was lacking last spring and last winter. There has been some progress through diversification, and farmers in the west deserve a great deal of credit for the way in which they have diversified. Recently, I was able to stay on a large grain farm—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Stanfield: A substantial number of farmers are not growing any wheat other than durum and great efforts are being made to diversify, but the situation on farms throughout the west in general is very difficult. The problems are far from over and the cash position is most unsatisfactory. For the government to create the impression in the country at large that the western agricultural problems are largely solved, I suggest, is irresponsible.

As to the speech itself, it proposes some legislation, largely legislation we had in the last session. I hope it is vastly improved, and if it is sensible and positive it will certainly receive full co-operation from this side of the House.

Certainly the government made at least one serious slip in the Speech from the Throne. At one point, in a moment of honesty or perhaps forgetfulness, the speech referred to "the distant ideal of a just society".

Mr. Hees: It is getting more distant every day.

Mr. Stanfield: That is what the government says it has been giving. I thought during the last couple of years that was the slogan. It seems that by its own admission the further the government moves in its chosen direction, assuming it has one, the farther the goal recedes from view.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: This is an indication of the achievements of this government. It marches boldly ahead to the sound of its own slogans in no particular direction. But that does not matter. As long as the slogans, of which the just society is the main one, and the pretentious declarations are still there to roll off the tongue, then all is well. It is not a battle against real problems; it is the sententious verbalizing, the glorious preparations, the bands, the parades, the cheers of the faithful, those are the things that count. The government accepts the task in its own style.

We were supposed to get a couple of years of housecleaning, of thinking and of white papers, and then a lot of action. A science policy is pretty important in a modern nation. Here we are, more than two years since the election, with no science policy. We heard the declaration that the government will consider carefully the recommendations of the Senate Committee on science policy and the Science Council of Canada. That certainly shows some profound thinking and some courage.

As to the use of drugs, which is a growing problem, again the government says that we will have to consider carefully the recommendations in the report of the LeDain Commission. Obviously, nothing has been done in this area. As to the abortion, we are going to have a day's debate on it.

We are still being promised white papers, and we cannot even get those in time. Last year we got a couple of dillies: one on tax reform and one on foreign policy. Can you imagine any government spending two years on producing a white paper on foreign policy? Now, when we are supposed to be past the era of white papers and entering the era of action we are promised white papers on communications, citizenship, immigration, national defence, and income security. Last year we were promised seven white papers and we got three. This year the same old white papers are promised, but, ones on immigration and communications have been added. Does communication mean the Post Office? If it does, we were promised a white paper on the Post Office last year. But I can readily understand that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) might ask the Minister of Communications (Mr. Kierans) to produce a white paper on communications. It will be a relatively harmless occupation in which to indulge I think.

Here we are more than two years after the election during which the Prime Minister of Canada invited Canadians to come with him. Where has he led them? He has led them further away from the just society. I say that in the past two years this government has dissipated the spirit of 1967. Constitutional reform is not even mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, although last year it was emphasized and so was the importance which the government attached to it. This was the big appeal in 1968. We would have an entrenched bill of rights. Since then we have had failure. I think it is fair to say that in the area of constitutional discussion no progress has been made, with the exception of some assurance with regard to regional disparity. You would think from the speech we heard yesterday that no constitutional problems existed in this country and that no tensions existed. Is this the view of the government? After the Quebec provincial election many Canadians felt that the problem of the relationship between Quebec and the rest of Canada was settled, and that it could be forgotten. Is that the view the government of Canada is encouraging, in spite of an election in which 23 per cent of those who voted supported a party dedicated to the cause of separatism?

• (12:10 p.m.)

Mr. Trudeau: They could not vote for the Conservative party.

Mr. Stanfield: No, they could not vote for the Conservatives, and I hope those people don't start voting Conservative.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Since then we have had another federal-provincial conference with no visible progress, at least no progress visible to the naked eye. Recently, the Prime Minister of Quebec, Mr. Bourassa, who had previously been emphasizing the importance of creating jobs, and I am sure is still emphasizing this, nevertheless gave up his portfolio as minister of finance, or provincial treasurer, in order to be able to devote more time to constitutional questions. To me this indicates he attaches an increasing urgency to this matter. But does the Prime Minister of Canada, and do the members of his government? After yesterday I get the impression that the Prime Minister wants to drop the constitutional question.

In terms of tension, we have gone through a period of turbulence. Are we now in the eye of the storm? Have we been in the eye of the storm for the last two or three months? Mr. Speaker, I suggest—and I know I have heard the Prime Minister of Quebec say this—that we have a limited amount of time. But there is no new approach suggested in this Speech from the Throne. The question is not even mentioned.

I was interested to see the Prime Minister of Quebec raise a question that was discussed a number of years ago, one that used to be actively sponsored by my predecessor in Nova Scotia, a famous Liberal, the late Angus L. MacDonald. I refer to the question of delegation of powers. Mr. Bourassa said:

> Within the range of discussions pertaining to a new distribution of legislative competence I further suggest that we examine most attentively the possibility of including in the revised constitution a clause to allow delegation of legislative powers between the two orders of government.

He went on to mention the advantages that this might have, allowing flexibility in rigid distribution of powers, correction of judicial interpretation, the elaboration of programs on a regional basis, and the fact that provisions like this exist in other federal constitutions.

I think this proposal should be considered, Mr. Speaker. I would like to know whether it is the intention of the Prime Minister to pursue this kind of course that might lead to some flexibility. I think it ought to be examined.

[Translation]

Yes, Mr. Speaker, we believe that the constitution can be amended, and we are of the opinion that this should be done in a climate of mutual understanding between the provinces and their peoples. We cannot forecast with any accuracy what the final solutions will be. In the meantime, we owe it to ourselves and we owe it to the whole country to pursue our effort in order to find pragmatic solutions in the special fields with which we are concerned: pollution, urban problems and others. We have no wish to interfere with provincial jurisdiction, but, we feel that, at all levels of government, co-operation is possible.

[English]

I mentioned, Mr. Speaker, that in constitutional terms regional disparity is one of the few areas of progress. But in terms of the just society what has happened? The minister concerned has introduced some new concepts, such as growth centres. I think the government is not applying them too rigidly, but the Speech from the Throne said yesterday that we now see signs of results. I say, Sir, that regional disparity has deepened, deepened because of the general slowdown in the country, which is always particularly hard on areas of slow growth.

You cannot effectively fight against regional disparity while at the same time there exists an economic slowdown and substantial unemployment across the country. This cannot be done.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: The situation, unfortunately, is worse than it was two years ago. In this respect again we are further away from the just society than we were.

Unemployment figures do not show the whole story because strikingly enough, Sir, during last winter and spring when the population of those over 14 years had very substantially increased in the Atlantic provinces the number in the working force had actually decreased, indicating that a very substantial number of people were not even thinking it worthwhile to apply for work.

We need a fully co-ordinated attack on regional disparity in a context of national growth. We have not got it, and there does not seem to have been any recognition by the government that the two are related.

As to the economy generally, after two years of this government again we are further away than ever from the just society. May I quote the Speech from the Throne:

> It would be irresponsible to suggest that the economy is now in a satisfactory condition.

Mr. Hees: That is the understatement of the year.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, consider the kind of strange, twisted minds that would believe it necessary to make a remark like that, with nearly 7 per cent of the work force of the country, seasonally adjusted, out of work. Further, The Economic Council of Canada has told us time after time that we need an annual rate of growth of something like 5 per cent in order to provide a satisfactory level of employment in the country, yet we know the economy of the country is virtually stagnant.

Growth is important. It is essential in the first place to maintain satisfactory employment and to provide opportunities to an expanding work force. But now, for the second year in a row, our rate of growth has fallen away below the rate of growth recommended by the Economic Council of Canada as essential for any satisfactory employment position. What is the government's attitude? As far as we can tell from the Speech from the Throne it does not matter much. The speech says something to the effect that "we will take care of it."

Secondly, dealing with poverty, Mr. Speaker, we are further away from the just society than we were two years ago. Poverty is wasteful economically. It has been deepened by the increasing number of hard core unemployed. We will have to see what the government means by income security when we see its measures.

Thirdly, consider the position of youth, of young Canadians, in relation to a just society. They are far worse off than two years ago. Think of their difficulties, the difficulties they face in securing employment when they leave school or college, or even when they are trying to stay in school or college. Think of the cost of this to the individuals concerned, and think of the loss to the nation.

Then, there is the cost to government treasuries involved in a long period of slow growth such as this government has encouraged. Think of governments trying to meet the increasing costs of programs in areas of education, health and welfare, with their revenues levelling off as a result of stagnation in the economy.

There has been a lot of concern expressed about the rising costs of these programs. We ought to be equally concerned because the level of revenues is falling off, creating further pressures upon these governments to increase their taxes, or to provide inferior service in important areas such as education. The longer this shortfall continues, the longer we have this relative stagnation in our economy with its affect on unemployment and with its affect on government revenues, the more serious the difficulties become, and yet we have no recognition on the part of the government, in the Speech from the Throne, of these difficulties. This is irresponsible, Sir. Our present situation is the result of deliberate government policies. Relative economic stagnation with unemployment at nearly 7 per cent is the result of deliberately adopted government policies.

• (12:20 p.m.)

In 1968 the Prime Minister said to the people "Come with me". Where has he led them? He has led a lot of them into misery, yet the Speech from the Throne says that in recent months the unemployment rate has not increased significantly. That is not true. That is as complacent a statement as it would have been if it had been true. All this is being done in the name of fighting inflation, yet we have the highest rate of unemployment in the developed world.

The government seems to be happy because international bankers tell them to keep it up. The government is going around saying this is all the fault of the unions and business. The Prime Minister says he is a friend of the little man; some friend, Mr. Speaker. He is some friend to young Canadians looking for work and some friend to older Canadians trying to live on fixed incomes.

This is the modern outlook. This is the outlook of this modern, sophisticated, computerized government. We have 7 per cent unemployment. Is this to continue?

Does the government intend to maintain this slack in the economy? There is no real indication in the Speech from the Throne as to what its plans are. I said in 1967, when I entered this House, that to fight inflation by the deliberate creation of unemployment is inhuman and unacceptable. I say it again and I emphasize it. I deplore the cold-blooded acceptance of the situation by the government of the day. I say that unemployment insurance and income maintenance programs are no substitution for an adequate policy of employment. The government created this situation and the government can undo it. The government can correct it if it only has the will and the intention to do so.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

No country in western Europe accepts the creation of unemployment as an acceptable method of fighting inflation. In Germany, for example, they have something like 4 per cent inflation but they have 700,000 unfilled jobs. The amount of unemployment that exists in Canada today is not necessary, and it certainly is not the view of the Organization for Economic Development that this is the appropriate approach. The Economist has repeated time and time again that a policy of deliberately running the economy for a long period of time below its potential just will not work. This unemployment cannot be justified. What is the policy today? Are restraints to continue? I want to make it very clear that I think an economic policy of some sort is necessary in support of monetary and fiscal policy. I have said this for several years. It is clear that it is difficult to work it out, and I admit that. It is very clear that such a policy cannot be imposed on the economy. It has to be worked out in co-operation. Consequently a persistent policy of taxation by the government upon the unions and business is making the adoption of an incomes policy in this country virtually impossible because the government continues to poison the atmosphere.

The importance of growth, of course, suggests debate on tax policy. I will not take the House through this. Again, the Prime Minister invited Canadian people to come with him in this area but fortunately few have been prepared to come. After nearly a full year of debate, at considerable cost and with a good deal of uncertainty, the House of Commons committee has in fact torn up the government's White Paper and thrown it back in the government's face. The report of the committee is, in effect, a new white paper adopting, I would say, some 80 per cent of the views we in this group have been expressing in the House.

The question now is, what does the government propose to do? The language of the committee is polite but there is no question about the review. Will the government listen and will the government heed? I ask again, will the government proceed immediately to give some income tax relief to Canadians with low incomes?

Speaking of the just society, what has been done for the quality of life in Canada? I have spoken about unemployment; I have spoken about poverty and I have spoken about youth. In all these areas, we are further away from the just society than we were two years ago. Housing is well below the need. The government's objective was one million homes in five years. We are running well below that at this time, yet what is the policy? We have seen it reported that the minister responsible is pleading with financial institutions in this country to put more money into housing. What sort of a policy is that? That is merely pleading. The government has used housing, as the Economic Council of Canada warned it should not do, to serve as an economic balance wheel. It has slowed things down and now the people are paying the price. The increasing shortage has increased the price of homes, and pushed up the cost of loans and made student accommodation scarce.

We need some new approaches, none of which were hinted at in the Speech from the Throne. We need a removal of the 11 per cent tax on building materials for housing. We need active programs in conjunction with the provinces and cities to make more serviced lots available in order to bring down the price of lots. We need inducements, not pleas to lenders to put their money into housing. We need an active program.

Let me refer to urban problems. Here again, the best that one can say is that we have lost two years. I think the problem is worse than it was two years ago in terms of urban renewal and assistance to transportation. Again, we have had nothing much except talk as far as the government is concerned. I welcome the appointment of a minister in this area. If the government had been prepared to do this a couple of years ago, the minister who was then in charge might have been prepared to serve the government and push forward a policy. This approach has simply lapsed for the last two years, yet I cannot help but ask—as perhaps that same Member of Parliament is still asking—how much this statement in the Speech from the Throne really means.

One must go back to the statement made by the Prime Minister in this House in a debate on February 14, 1969, when he said:

> Until the constitution is brought into the 20th century, governments are, to a large degree, powerless to solve the problems either by activity alone or in co-operation—

This statement was made during a debate in the House of Commons on urban affairs. To what extent, then, has the Prime Minister's mind really been opened, and to what extent will he really allow the new minister to tackle this problem of the cities with earnestness? We shall have to see.

As to environment generally, we still have no body in this country that is responsible for examining the effects of our total environment. To date, there has been no adequate co-ordination of antipollution efforts within federal services. I welcome the new department. We and many others have been advocating this new department and we hope it will enable the federal government to co-ordinate its own activities within this area of fighting pollution. There is still no suggestion of any adequate authority or mechanism to co-ordinate antipollution efforts throughout the country. There is no suggestion of any body which would have the overriding responsibility for surveying and advising on the protection of our total environment. The department is fine as far as it goes, but we also need an environmental council.

I realize that there are many who are very concerned about the deterioration of our environment but who would also consider the preservation of our environment inconsistent with our economic growth.

I certainly agree that we must not worship the gross national product and that we must have a higher objective than that. But I want to make it very clear that I believe we shall need continued economic growth for some time to come, at least if we are to tackle our problems of unemployment and poverty and if we are to finance the social plans we have adopted, the measures such as educational programs in which we are involved. This does not mean for a moment that we ought not to be examining the environmental effects of certain forms of economic development and growth or, on the other hand, conducting certain forms of examination. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, there is no sign in the Speech from the Throne of any awareness of these problems. We need more than a department. We also need an organ to guarantee the preservation of the total environment in our country.

Sir, there are many other areas I could touch on, areas such as external affairs. Because of the white paper that was produced, probably the less said about that the better. Yet there is a question of great importance, of great concern to many Canadians, that I should like to touch on before sitting down. It is the question of Canadian sovereignty, the question of economic autonomy. What do Canadians want? I think Canadians want to have pride in themselves and in their country. They want to be sure that we have a government that is looking after the national interest, a government that is concerned with the interests of all Canadians taken as individuals and as Canadian citizens. I think we want a Canada that is friendly to the United States while keeping its distance. We want a country that intends to preserve its autonomy. What has the government done?

It has jumped from one position to another—at least, its ministers have. It has gone from insipid continentalism to insulting attacks on the United States, and back again.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: It has gone from an apparently abject fear of the United States adverse reaction on declarations concerning Arctic sovereignty to rather petty squabbling in other spheres. This is a sign of weakness, not of strength. The government has floundered out of its depth on the question of the control of our economy. There are times when it seems to be saying that the question is not really important; but there are other times when one seems to be able to detect some concern on the part of the government. Once again we have a climate of uncertainty. We owe it to our respective investors, we owe it to our economy and, above all, we owe it to the Canadian people to dissipate this uncertainty.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I will not go through all the perambulations of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene). They are pretty well known. As for the Prime Minister, let me say this. When he took over the leadership of his party, it was generally understood that he had a very poor opinion of nationalism. The subject may be of no interest to him. I think it would interest the Canadian people to know what his views are on this question today. Certainly, there is very little in the Speech from the Throne which can give any indication.

What do we propose? I propose an approach based on realism and on the survival of all Canada. We need foreign investment, foreign technology and initiative in order to maintain our prosperity. Yet, surely we can reach a policy which protects the interests of our own country. What I am suggesting is that we need a flexible approach, one that is sensible, one that is efficient and one that will preserve our autonomy.

Mr. Trudeau: I will go for that.

Mr. Stanfield: It must be an essential priority for the Canadian government and this Parliament, after advice based on careful and continuing study—

Mr. Trudeau: Good.

Mr. Stanfield: —to decide—

Mr. Trudeau: Yes.

Mr. Stanfield: —which are the industries—

Mr. Trudeau: Right.

Mr. Stanfield: —and which are the sectors of our economy—

Mr. Trudeau: Sure.

Mr. Stanfield: —where Canadian ownership is vital—

Mr. Trudeau: Name them.

Mr. Stanfield: —and where it is less so.

Mr. Trudeau: Good.

Mr. Stanfield: The Prime Minister asks me to name them.

Mr. Trudeau: Yes.

Mr. Stanfield: He may be quite content to talk off the top of his head. I am saying that this is a process that we should enter into carefully.

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member has not done that yet.

Mr. Stanfield: And the decision should be made on the basis of careful and continuing study.

Mr. Trudeau: Good, good. Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: It is the only way we can escape from the present pattern of confusion—

Mr. Trudeau: There is no confusion.

Mr. Stanfield: —and of potential injustice. It is not an easy task, but it must be done; otherwise, we shall continue to go blindly down the path to nowhere.

Mr. Trudeau: Hurray.

Mr. Stanfield: I am suggesting that we must adopt an approach based on the principle of the danger point. There are some areas of business enterprise in this country where I think the importance of Canadian control would be very limited indeed. There are others where, in all aspects, Canadian control would be regarded as vital as in, for example, the control of television and certain areas which have already been designated. There may be other such areas.

Mr. Trudeau: But the hon. member does not know what they are.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Mr. Stanfield: I am suggesting a pattern we should follow. It is a procedure we must follow if we are to obtain a sensible result.

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member is suggesting a white paper.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I am suggesting that there are areas in which we need not be much concerned at all and that there are other areas in which we have to insist upon Canadian control.

Mr. Trudeau: But where are they?

Mr. Stanfield: There is a third category, clearly—

Mr. Trudeau: Go on.

Mr. Stanfield: —where, without being exclusively Canadian, a strong Canadian presence is important. Examples of this, presumably, would be in the insurance business and financing business. The main thing is that we should move ahead. I suggest that this is an approach that would work. It would be a positive approach that would not discriminate. Certainly, it would not discriminate against the different regions of the country. There must be consultation and co-operation with the provinces. We must have an approach that allows us to indicate clearly what the policy is in the various sectors of our economy and we must avoid as much as we can in future the kind of retroactive decision we saw in the case of uranium.

The Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, asked me to name various industries. I would deplore it if anybody tried to stand up and categorize, on the basis of limited individual knowledge, what these industries are. What I am saying is that we should start the process. We should establish the mechanism to recommend carefully, after study and continuing study, what our attitude should be.

An hon. Member: That means a white paper.

Mr. Stanfield: It does not mean a white paper. It means that we shall be moving in a tangible and concrete way towards this process.

An hon. Member: No doubt a concrete paper is meant.

Mr. Stanfield: Surely, that is the only sensible way in which to proceed. The fact that the Throne Speech mentions uranium and nothing else in the matter of foreign ownership is illuminating. So far, the government has been reacting to existing situations. It is less than a poor excuse for policy; it is no policy at all.

Mr. Baldwin: That is dishonest.

Mr. Stanfield: I say that it is time the Prime Minister indicated to us what his general attitude is. It is time that we establish in an orderly way a continuing process of categorizing the various industries in this country. There is no other sensible way of proceeding. There is no sense in proceeding in terms of sweeping generalities. We must proceed pragmatically, and I think our approach would work.

In addition to the question of control in Canada, there is the question of the diversity of our trade which I think is just as important to our autonomy as the question of foreign ownership. If the great bulk of our foreign trade is with one customer, then our dependence on that customer, of course, has to be very substantial. The United States is an obvious market for many of our products, not only gas and oil from the west but many refinery and other products from the Atlantic provinces.

• (12:40 p.m.)

In terms of diversification, have we really been trying? At the moment I think we are doing pretty well with the European Common Market. However, in recent years our exports to that market have been growing at about half the rate of growth of imports into the European Common Market. Despite the importance of this, the biggest importing market of the western world, we have had no ambassador in Brussells since February. There has been no ambassador to the Common Market since February.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Stanfield: The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) has been to Europe. I get the impression, from reading dispatches, that the significance of the Common Market, particularly the enlarged Common Market, is now becoming somewhat apparent to him. He is becoming aware of what this means to the traditional concept of multilateralism, namely that if the countries of the outer seven enter the Common Market the developed world will consist of two or three large trading blocs. Outside of these blocs, there will be a few relatively small countries such as Canada and Australia. The world might look quite different with regard to trading.

The minister indicated he would be making a proposal before some international gathering of some concept of agreement between Britain and the European Common Market. The minister has not disclosed any details. I hope he will give us his conception of this in the near future because, in my opinion, time is running out. It is time that we established on the record where we stand with regard to the European Common Market and the methods we are going to use to protect our interests.

During the last two years we have moved farther away from the just society. The slogan of the travel agent is that half the fun is getting there. In this instance, most Canadians would have preferred to stay home. We have had the constitution, regional disparity, growing unemployment, deepening poverty, no science policy and a housing failure. Two years have been lost with regard to the urban problem. We are now getting started on the problem of pollution. As far as Canadian autonomy is concerned, the government has just been messing around. It is time the Prime Minister indicated which decision of "Jumping Joe" is really the position of the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: What we have been given in the Speech from the Throne is a grab-bag of thin proposals, ones left over from last year, plucked from other sources or areas and which have been laying around waiting to be picked up. It is important to note there is no hint of a general philosophy or a general pattern. If the government really did mean anything by its slogan of a just society, there should have been a precise, recognizable pattern. The government, if it has a direction, should tell the Canadian people what it is. It should fit its acts and decisions into that pattern, because surely that is what a just society means.

I think the just society slogan has now become, justice if necessary, but not necessarily justice.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: We must recognize that the just society is just a slogan.

This was the year that the government had promised to reveal itself after two years of housecleaning and thinking. It has revealed itself. It has revealed itself as largely devoid of constructive ideas. The just society slogan is revealed in its emptiness. As a Canadian citizen I am rather sorry, but at least the position of the government is now clear.

There was one quite unpremeditated touch of realism at the end of the Speech from the Throne and I quote:

> We stand on the threshold of greatness.

At first, I thought that was just another pretentious statement but now I consider it was really a reference to the Progressive Conservative victory in the next election.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: In the Speech from the Throne the government has shown itself to be a fellowship of tinkerers who believe that the basic things have been done and that it must merely adjust a screw here, tighten a nut there, or something like that. I do not think we have yet reached that stage. I do not think the Canadian people believe that either.

We realize, even if the government does not, that there is a great deal to be done. There is a challenge for the Canadian people to build the kind of country that they want. To do so, the first challenge is to rid ourselves of this government. Canadians must get rid of the government so we can really get to work, not just on slogans but on changing the reality of Canada. I therefore, move that the following be added to the Address:

> —but we respectfully regret that because of the indecision and failures of Your Excellency's advisers, the Just Society is now a "distant ideal".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I had a hunch the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) would not be completely enthusiastic with the Speech from the Throne. That hunch was justified this morning. He has spoken according to a traditional pattern, a feeling of being under obligation to disagree with everything in the Speech from the Throne, except perhaps with the Throne itself. I do not suspect him of downgrading the Monarchy or anything like that.

In his reply to the Speech from the Throne, the Leader of the Opposition was not entirely consistent and not funny throughout. It was better at the beginning than at the end. The contradictions, Mr. Speaker, were about the only thing consistent in his speech.

First, we heard from the Leader of the Opposition that there was too much philosophy in the Speech from the Throne. Before he resumed his seat he complained that in the speech there was and I quote, "no general philosophy or recognizable pattern". The Leader of the Opposition does not want to see philosophy, then he would like to see philosophy, in the Speech from the Throne.

If we repeat anything that appeared in the last Speech from the Throne it is repetition, left-overs, and the Leader of the Opposition cannot agree with that. If we do not repeat things, for instance, our position on the constitution, then it is because we have lost interest in those things that we do not repeat them. If we do repeat them, we are guilty of repetition. It is a little difficult, Mr. Speaker, to completely satisfy a leader of the opposition. I realize that this is part of the rules of the game. The Leader of the Opposition is playing that game to the best of his ability. I am sure, with a certain amount of years of experience, he will learn to be quite a good Leader of the Opposition.

• (12:50 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Trudeau: I am told some of the opposition members do not agree with the statement I have just made. But there may be further meetings across the country, in secret or otherwise, to discuss the question. The place is not here.

I was scorned because, it was said, I am not a friend of the little man, as the Leader of the Opposition put it, but rather a friend of big business. A very few phrases later I was scorned because I was poisoning the atmosphere by attacking big business and big unions. So, on the one hand, I am too friendly toward big business while, on the other, I am not friendly enough and ruining the chances of having an incomes policy.

Mr. Baldwin: Shows how inconsistent you are.

Mr. Trudeau: These inconsistencies are really not very important because no one expects a leader of the opposition to agree with what is said in a Speech from the Throne. But it is sometimes expected that there will be constructive advice in some areas and that the hon. gentleman will use this important occasion to state some of the policies of his own party. I listened attentively to the scorn heaped on us for not solving the problem of foreign ownership, expecting this would be followed up by concrete proposals. But it was a disappointing performance. We on this side have said, through the offices of a minister reporting to cabinet, that we are in the process of trying to enunciate government policy in this important area in order to avoid a pragmatic or ad hoc approach. But we knew we did not have the support of the opposition on this. They have heaped scorn on our policy of using white papers or policy documents; they have always chided us for our studied approach and the long lead-time taken before we enunciate policy on any precise matters. We have confessed we cannot speak off the top of our head on such important subjects and that we do not intend to lead the country to and fro according to the whims of the day. We want to have as good an enunciation as we can of our policy in this and other areas. So when the Leader of the Opposition chided us for our studied approach to this question of foreign ownership, I thought perhaps he would have finished his own studies and be in a position to say: We no longer need to study this matter; here is our solution.

We did get a number of phrases at that point, though, and no doubt they do represent good advice. I have some of the hon. gentleman's words here in quotes. After hearing him say that the government had no policy I expected that the Leader of the Opposition would tell us what he himself proposed. What he did propose was "a study", a "continuing study", certainly "nothing off the top of the head"; it would be "thought about in an orderly way"; it would be "a continuing process".

Mr. Broadbent: Sounds like the Liberal government.

Mr. Trudeau: Indeed. It sounds like what we are saying we are doing—following an orderly process. There are certainly no grounds here for chiding the government for doing what the opposition says it is in the process of doing.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Trudeau: I am glad I have the agreement of the members of New Democratic party. I know they have some difficulty themselves in arriving at a policy on this question of foreign ownership. I understand they have an advantage of the Leader of the Opposition and ourselves inasmuch as they do not need to do any thinking about it. Mr. Watkins has done all the thinking. The trouble, of course, is that the party does not agree with Mr. Watkins and they are therefore in a dilemma which I do not envy them.

An hon. Member: They must miss you.

Mr. Trudeau: Either they reject Mr. Watkins, in which case it appears they, too, will have to embark on a series of studies and continuing studies, or they accept Mr. Watkins and not only the party falls apart but the union leadership ceases to support them. They are in a terrible jam.

Mr. Bell: They are in the Senate, now.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Trudeau: A member opposite suggests that some of them are in the Senate. I cannot promise that I shall be able to put all the friends of the New Democratic party into the Senate but if the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is interested I shall perhaps save a place there for him.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Absolutely no. I decline, absolutely.

Mr. Trudeau: May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, before the luncheon adjournment I was able to disagree with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) on a certain number of points on which he had disagreed with us. However, I do want to say now that there is one point on which I wish to join him, and that is in his congratulatory comments to the two hon. members who distinguished themselves yesterday when they moved and seconded the resolution adopting His Excellency's address.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: Each brought to the task the experience and outlook of his own region of the country. As well, however, they placed those views and points of opinion in the wider perspective of all Canada, a task which is required of each of us in this chamber.

The two hon. members bring to this debate a happy combination of backgrounds. Both took their seats in this House for the first time following the general election of 1968 and so bring a freshness of opinon to this debate. One is from a rural constituency in the Prairies, the other from a large metropolitan community in eastern Canada. One has pursued an agricultural life, the other has engaged in business. One is English-speaking, the mother tongue of the other is French. Between them, they represent and reflect much of what is Canada.

The hon. member for Bourassa (Mr. Trudel) has shown his competence in this House through his active work and contributions to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs and through his membership in the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) has been a very active member of the Standing Committee on Agriculture, a subject with which he acquainted me in delightful fashion when I had the opportunity to visit his farm a year ago.

I listened with interest to the speech earlier this morning of the Leader of the Opposition, and I should like to make a few comments on his participation. First, I most sincerely want to congratulate him on the very statesmanlike attitude which he displayed throughout his European tour this past summer. It was clear from the things he said last July in Europe that the hon. gentleman felt the same pride in Canada and its accomplishments as do all Canadians when they have the opportunity to look back upon their country from abroad.

Indeed, I had assumed, it appears now prematurely, that the hon. gentleman had gained some perspective in his outlook. It was clear, however, from his remarks this morning that all he gained this summer was a good dictionary.

Mr. Stanfield: I need another trip.

Mr. Trudeau: I think the hon. member might feel that I am unfair. I really tend to forget that the Leader of the Opposition has been involved in politics for so long—I choose the word "involved" deliberately; I would not want to use the word "active" because it does not seem quite appropriate—that he can continue to talk in 1970 in Ottawa in the same terms and in the same tone as he employed 10 years ago in Halifax.

I wonder whether he will continue to display this magnificent stolidity throughout the next few years. If so, I am sure that the disappearance of the Progressive Conservative party as a relevant element in Canadian life will then be guaranteed. He may find that his party's platform is replaced by the well-known Dr. Marcuses, because the sum total of his speech this morning and his concluding words were really marcusian in nature: he concluded that the only thing that mattered was to throw out the government.

Mr. Lundrigan: Pretty smart, I would say.

Mr. Trudeau: That shows the readings you have.

Mr. Lundrigan: Your readings are reflected in your writing.

Mr. Trudeau: I think one point is certain, and it is that Canada appears when looked at from abroad—I admit I sometimes have occasion to do this myself—to be not so much a magnificent expanse of geography or a cluster of surging cities; rather it appears as people. Canada is Canadians. The great strength of this country lies in the good nature, the good sense and the goodwill of her men and women. Often, when we see this country from far away, we realize this. We see Canada as others see us.

One of the most touching tributes which was given to our country in this respect was paid by Queen Juliana of the Netherlands, when she told her children that they would like Canadians because they smiled easily. I think that is a beautiful description of Canadians, and I am sure that if her children had been in the gallery this morning they would have smiled very easily.

If Canada's strength is in her people, her vigour is in the future toward which Canadians have turned instinctively for centuries. I personally do not share with any acuteness the sense of regret expressed by some commentators that Canadians pay insufficient heed to their past. The past we must understand and respect, but it is not to be worshipped. It is in the future that we shall find our greatness.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: Canada is a young country, and it is in the youth of our country that we seek our future. To the youth the past is of relatively little consequence: their lives are still to be lived.

A poet once wrote that "a land without ruins is a land without memories". Our lack of ruins is in some ways a tribute to our ability in the past to adapt to change.

An hon. Member: As long as it is not the Tories.

Mr. Trudeau: The challenge today is not simply change; it is more the pace and the scale of that change.

Mr. Lundrigan: You are changing our traditions.

Mr. Trudeau: I can understand that the hon. member does not like being described as a ruin.

Mr. Lundrigan: That is correct.

Mr. Trudeau: He may escape that fate, but I cannot guarantee that he will not become a wreck if he stays where he is. I believe strongly that no country is better able to adapt to the present and to the future than is Canada, for no country is more fortunate in its basic attributes.

[Translation]

Space on a continental scale; a population which commands immense and near-empty territories, and to which is still unknown the almost universal anguish of overcrowding; natural resources so vast that their inventory is constantly swelling; an enormous economic potential; a very high standard of living; an invaluable asset linked to ethnic diversity and cultural pluralism; two official languages corresponding to two principal mentalities which are among the supreme expressions of western civilization; as the principal of national identity—federalism, the most evolved of political forms; a democratic regime guaranteed by a parliamentary system closely derived from a most admirable model; and peace and freedom. Because of all these goods, because of all these blessings, Canada stands as one of the most happy and enviable facts of the times. Because of all this, our country can be looked upon as a global environment, as an environment exceptionally favourable to the fullness of human development.

This has often been said. Nevertheless it is all the more seasonable to repeat it as too many among us are prone to consider such utterances as a litany of commonplaces unworthy of one's attention. On this solemn occasion, may all Canadians be incited to a renewed awareness of the riches and privileges by the virtue of which they have become such a fortunate people, and which constitute the living scene and the vital implements of their destiny. From either a collective or an individual point of view, no awareness of this kind can be decisive or final. In that connection, we must then have the courage and even the heroism to repeat ourselves. For our commitment to our country is the very style of our commitment to life. Let us all understand that Canada is not made up of a complaisant mass of data, but, rather, results from a priceless and demanding combination of providential gifts.

If Canada is a privileged fact, never has our country recognized itself as an accomplished fact. Knowledge of our national deficiencies and the obvious difficulties of the times protect us against such a dangerous illusion.

We are too young a nation and too enterprising a people to fall into the illusion of final accomplishment. Besides, our history, our very short history tells us that ever since its adventurous beginnings our country is in constant and rapid evolution. And today, vast regions of the Canadian territory are going through an accelerated humanization process, are beginning to acquire a political structure and are preparing themselves for a full identification with the national entity. Canada is in a continuous process of invention and it is as a steady and permanent enterprise that it must be understood.

The foundations and the elements of our country, and its prospects confer to the Canadian project a quality that is extremely stimulating and exciting. In accordance with the contemporary tendency to participation and collective action, all our fellow citizens should espouse eagerly the Canadian design, and get involved as fully as possible in its formulation and in its realization. This can be accomplished through the constant exercise of their right to criticize and demand through the free expression of their feelings and of their thinking to the legislators. A country is truly meaningful if it is the joint undertaking of the legislator and the citizen. Only then does a country become a fatherland.

[English]

To be vigorous and forward-looking is not enough to guarantee our future, however. We will be called upon to look upon it with imagination, to approach it with spirit, to plan for it with boldness. Daily problems will always be with us, but the government is not permitted the false luxury of concentrating only on the moment at hand. That opportunity, as was shown this morning, belongs to the Opposition. Governments must deal as best they can with current difficulties; they must discharge as well the responsibility of preparing for the future. This government accepts that responsibility. We shall continue to lay before Parliament the product of our planning. We seek a future over which Canadians will exercise some control, not a series of events by happenstance. Canadians have demonstrated in the past their disenchantment with governments which careened with uncertainty from one crisis to the next.

Mr. Woolliams: They cannot even get a crisis going in this government.

Mr. Trudeau: Exciting as that erraticism might seem to those who are stimulated by the froth and foam of uncertainty, it is not the choice of Canadians. We are called upon to work toward a secure and independent Canada within a peaceful world; a Canada in which social justice and economic growth are norms which apply to the lives of men and women in all parts of this country; a Canada situated within a harmonious natural environment; a Canada in which all Canadians take pride because of the opportunities available to them to participate in its governance and to contribute to its unity. That kind of Canada, that kind of future, we believe in, Mr. Speaker, and we believe the Canadian people find it truly exciting.

The program of this government, Mr. Speaker, is designed to contribute to that kind of Canada. It is a program which is operative in all sectors of Canadian life—political, economic, social and cultural. Through a combination of white papers, of legislation, and of administrative acts, we are seeking to deal with the problems of the present at the same time that we anticipate and minimize those of the future. A good number of those activities have been revealed in the Speech from the Throne, others are contained in the list of legislation which has been tabled in this House. A few examples will reveal the breadth and the depth of our concern:

To improve and strengthen the climate of liberty and the tradition of a fair and just administration of the laws of this land, we shall introduce provisions respecting bail and pre-trial detention, electronic eavesdropping, statutory instruments and the treatment of young offenders.

To assist the millions of Canadians who are consumers of goods, of services, of credit, there will be introduced measures which will permit them to know more accurately what they are getting for their money and to protect them against unfair and unscrupulous practices.

To enhance the position of members of the work force, we plan legislation which will raise the standards governing terms and conditions of employment in industries within federal jurisdiction, and to improve the quality of the collective bargaining process for the benefit of both labour and management there is legislation providing for a modern, legal framework for relations between them.

To reflect the growing belief within Canada that a rational program of income security is required, a white paper will be tabled shortly which will have a wide and, it is expected, profound impact on Canadians. Complementary to that paper and to the government's thesis that all Canadians should be assisted if need be to help themselves, that they should not be made responsible for economic difficulties over which they have no control, there will be introduced legislation to provide more and better benefits to those persons temporarily without employment. This legislation will place emphasis on assisting persons to become re-employed.

These are among the measures which we propose in order to create within Canada a better society for all Canadians, a society whose strength is derived from the individuals who live within it. For the well-being of those individuals—the men, the women, the youth—government must be concerned constantly and actively. The dignity and self-respect of every Canadian are necessary elements in the kind of Canada of which I speak. Should any of the ingredients of human dignity be absent, we must act. Fortunately, most of them are present in Canada—individual liberty, the several rights and freedoms spelled out in the Canadian Bill of Rights, equality of opportunity. Another ingredient, one that ranks with these but is more elusive of attainment, is the ability to maintain an adequate standard of living for oneself and one's dependants. Some are unable to maintain such a standard because of a lack of education or an absence of the skills necessary in today's world; others are unable to stretch their fixed incomes to meet the increased costs of necessities; still others are temporarily without employment through no fault of their own.

• (2:20 p.m.)

We must understand the needs, and attempt to assist, persons in each of these categories. There is a personal tragedy whenever a person who seeks gainful employment is unable to find it. There is equal personal tragedy whenever the cost of living overtakes and passes the total income of any person. The tragedy in each case becomes the more keen if a contributing factor to the absence of work or the advance of inflation is the greed and over indulgence of other members of the community.

The government took the position a year ago, and was supported by the vast majority of Canadians, that inflation was harmful both to our present well being and to our future economic growth. Reasonable price stability was a key economic goal. Everyone suffers, no one gains, from uncontrollable rise in the cost of living. Pensioners suffer, unorganized wage earners suffer, and by their own admission even the minority of Canadians suffer who form the membership of professional groups and labour unions. These latter are concerned about inflation, they say, yet they express their concern by raising their fees and by demanding higher wages. They are entitled to do so, they claim, so long as corporate profits remain high. This is their belief. They can claim higher wages and fees so long as corporate profits remain high. Since early 1969, however, profits have been falling markedly, and there are obvious limits to this process if we are not to damage the economy's ability to create new jobs in the future through productive investment. Consequently, we say that no one is entitled to take advantage of his fellow citizen. We saw that inflation must be attached with determination by all Canadians for the good of all Canadians.

To this, the Opposition replied with ridicule throughout the last session. At every increase in the cost of living index they trumpeted in this House and outside it as if this increase represented a triumph for their side. I doubt that it was a triumph for them; I know that it was no triumph for millions of Canadians. What do we hear from the Opposition now? What we hear is rather strange. What do we hear from them now that government policies have taken the wind out of the sails of inflation, now that the cost of living index has levelled off? What have they to say in reply to the fact that official OECD figures show that the Canadian struggle against inflation has been more effective than that of any other major industrialized country in the world?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: What do they say? They say that we have devoted too much attention to inflation. They say that the price we pay for fighting it is worse than the evil of inflation, and they charge that the government favours unemployment. The kindest thing I can say about these comments is that they are stuff and nonsense.

This apparent readiness to sacrifice our newly achieved and still precarious price stability is surely a very short-sighted prescription for our present problem of unemployment. True, a linkage has been established by economists between the behaviour of prices and wages and the rate of unemployment. But it has also been shown that this trade-off is a short run phenomenon and that sacrificing price stability will not by itself aid in improving a country's long run employment situation. For this reason, the government rejects the argument that only by allowing inflation to run rampant can we reduce the rate of unemployment.

Instead, another less simplistic route must be followed. We on this side claim no magic formula, but we do promise honest attempts to meet the pressing problem of generating a sufficient number of new jobs, not only to absorb the record number of new entrants into the labour market but also to reduce gradually the distressingly high level of unemployment in many parts of the country. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) will have more to say on this subject when he participates in this debate.

Mr. Bell: We can hardly wait.

[Translation]

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, any government is responsible for a society and it assumes and exercises that responsibility according to certain principles, to a certain ideal that it has set for itself.

Now, if the ideal sought by the government is to establish a just society, it is because it believes that this should be the objective of any real democracy. Universal franchise, the equality of everyone before the law, which are the attributes of a democratic system, are obviously imbued with a spirit of justice. But those rights, however valuable they may be, are only illusive if they are not embodied in a still more basic right, which is, for the individual, the right to his vital self-development, according to his talents and capacities.

So when we talk about a "just society", we refer to a justice applied to the reality of every day life, embodied in the life of everyone. There is justice when everyone's essential needs are satisfied. This implies a reasonable access for all to the goods owned and produced by the country. Now, work is the normal mode of access to the goods on which life depends; it therefore cannot be disassociated from the right to live.

But since the state of the economy determines work possibilities, one of the primary expressions of the social philosophy of the government must be its economic policy.

Because of the rate of unemployment, the present economic situation can hardly be accepted; this we all know, Mr. Speaker. The difficult times we are going through exist throughout North America and, frankly, will probably persist for several more months. However, the steps we have already taken allow us to foresee increasing improvement during 1971.

As I have said, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) will have the opportunity to outline what other measures the government is taking and intends to take to strengthen our economy. But that field is so vast and complex that there is no single solution or remedy. Above all, there are no quick and immediate solutions. At first sight, some solutions may seem annoying, when they are always intended to ensure in the nearest reasonable future the economic stability and expansion of the country, for the greatest benefit of all its citizens. May I repeat at this point, Mr. Speaker, that the first step that was imposed to us was the fight against an inflation which had become a threat to the whole economy. Courage was needed to take that step. But it has not prevented the government from being concerned all the time about the problem of unemployment, particularly in the less developed areas of the country. And this government did not remain indifferent to the daily distress of all of our fellow citizens who have been its victims.

We can rejoice today at seeing that the situation, far from deteriorating further, as it would undoubtedly have had we not acted as we did, is beginning to be restored. So much so that owing to our incentive programmes to productivity, owing to our assistance programmes to industry in under-developed areas, the commercial situation being favourable, our exports this year reached an unprecedented volume and, next year, we shall experience a new prosperity leading to a marked decrease in unemployment.

The only true prosperity is that which is equitably shared. However elaborate the distribution, it could not be completed or maintained without the help of a tax reform.

In political economy, taxation is the immediate means for equity, the pre-eminent way of serving justice. For, owing to its taxation power, the state is basically a righter of wrongs. In fact, property spontaneously tends toward concentration and not distribution; in ordinary circumstances, the distribution never happens unless compulsion is exercised by public authority and endorsed by a majority of citizens. But prejudice due to uneven distribution of the national wealth changes in the course of time. Therefore, fiscal means should be modified accordingly, so that the balance of contributions might be adjusted as much as possible.

Public reaction to the proposals of the White Paper on tax reform was strong indeed. The purpose of that paper was precisely to prompt public opinion to express itself. On the other hand, a Senate committee and a House of Commons committee, appointed to study the White Paper proposals, have just turned in their reports. These reports, as well as the criticism voiced by the public, will be seriously considered. We are willing to amend certain proposals, those, for instance, that might, after consideration, prove detrimental to our industrial growth. This is what we did in the case of the mining industry.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, the purpose of our action should be kept in mind. During a long debate which answered very well our expectations of an active democracy, several groups and many citizens defended their interests intelligently and vigorously. That is gratifying. It is now up to the government, bearing in mind the general interest of the citizens, to bring before the House some amendments to our tax system, which we feel would achieve the two-fold objective of ensuring a more equitable distribution of the tax burden and a high rate of economic growth, without which our society cannot develop.

• (2:30 p.m.)

[English]

A number of ministers will be speaking in this debate, Mr. Speaker, and they will deal in some detail with those areas within their responsibility. For my part this afternoon I should like to touch on only a few further matters. I do so because of the emphasis that the Leader of the Opposition has quite properly given to them. These areas of which I speak are of concern to Canadians and are, to a degree, products of the rapid changes which have been visited upon us in recent years. Some changes are wonderful in their promise; others bring bitterness in their wake. We should not assume, however, the results of change to be preordained. To guarantee beneficial consequences, it is necessary that we plan and work; to prevent unwanted consequences, it is necessary that we plan and work.

I shall deal first with the environment. How many members of this House, I wonder, Mr. Speaker, have walked through the main entrance of this building over the years either accepting without question, or failing to notice, the words carved in the stone above the doorway? How many today could agree with the language employed there? The inscription reads:

The wholesome sea is at her gates; her gates both East and West.

Wholesome though those seas may have been when the sculptor was at work, the excesses of shipowners and operators, combined over the years with the complacency of public and government, have led to foul water, unfit in places for any but the lowest forms of life.

These are the kind of changes that must be resisted. Today, when we look to the seas at our gates, we gaze not in two but in three directions. Our third, northern, sea must not be permitted to lose its present wholesome state, and to that end legislation was introduced into this House last session. Hon. members on all sides accepted the necessity for and the wisdom of this legislation and passed it through the House in a rare display of unanimity. I am grateful to them for doing so. Steps are now necessary to contain and remove the conditions of pollution on our western and eastern gates, and legislation to that end will soon be introduced. The battle against pollution elsewhere than in our coastal waters is to be waged with increasing vigour and efficiency. The waging of that battle will be intensified by the new departmental structure mentioned in the Speech from the Throne.

The government will shortly be taking steps towards the establishment of a new department by assigning to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis) the responsibilities and related elements of the public service which would permit him to take a broad ecological perspective in the discharge of his responsibilities, and in particular to take the lead in the enhancement of the quality of our environment.

A bill relating to the organization of the government will also be introduced shortly, proposing the establishment of a department concerned with renewable resources and environmental affairs which would have as its core the Department of Fisheries and Forestry, whose functions will be expanded to bring under the direction of a single minister the principal governmental activities relating to environmental quality in general, and pollution in particular.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: By transferring to the Department of Fisheries and Forestry elements of the meteorological branch of the Department of Transport and the general responsibilities related to air pollution of the Department of National Health and Welfare, the principal governmental activities relating to the fight against atmospheric pollution will be brought together within one department. The transfer of the bulk of the water sector of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, and the transfer of the responsibility for the Canada Water Act from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry will combine under the direction of one minister and his department general responsibility for the development of our water resources and the more particular responsibility of the protection of the water habitat of our marine life.

Finally, the transfer of the Canadian Wildlife Service from the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to the Department of Fisheries and Forestry will bring together in one department responsibility for our renewable resources including, notably, the related research activities required for the effective discharge of these responsibilities.

The establishment of the new department that Parliament will be asked to approve through the enactment of a government organization act will not result in the creation of a super agency to be responsible for all matters relating to the environment. The fight against the pollution of our environment is far beyond the capacity of one minister and his department. Indeed, it cannot be waged effectively by the federal government alone, or the provinces individually, or even just by Canada. It is a fight that must be waged by all ministers, all governments and all people.

There are many departments in the government which have and will continue to have important responsibilities for the preservation of the quality of our environment. These departments will co-operate with the proposed Department of the Environment which will have the principal tools to lead the fight against pollution and to help co-ordinate the efforts of others.

These transfers are not to be regarded simply as a re-tuning of the present apparatus. They are part of a carefully balanced, freshly designed effort for environmental protection.

It should be clear, however, Mr. Speaker, that when the Leader of the Opposition says, as he has, that the government hasn't done much in the way of the environmental control, that such statements do little more than contribute to pollution—noise pollution.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Perhaps the hon. gentleman was elsewhere when the several statutes relating to the environment passed through this House last session.

Mr. Woolliams: What about the million and a half tourists pouring raw sewage into the river at Banff?

Mr. Trudeau: Indeed, what about it!

A complementary aspect of environmental management is resource conservation. Both the present and future growth of our economy, as well as the preservation of our environment, emphasize the increasing importance to Canada of our energy and mineral resources. The responsibilities of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources for the development of co-ordinated and comprehensive policies in these areas have become substantially greater in the last year or so. Indeed, the burden of the work which led to the presentation in the House last session of the Canada Water Act was borne by that department. There is an inherent conflict of interests, however, Mr. Speaker, between those who are seeking the exploitation of non-renewable resources and those who are charged with the responsibility of protecting the environment. This conflict is not irreconcilable, nor is there anything evil in it. Nevertheless, the government is of the opinion that these differences are better debated and resolved by ministers in council and not by officials within a single department. For that reason, certain responsibilities have been transferred from the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, as I mentioned a few moments ago.

• (2:40 p.m.)

The transfer will permit that department, which has been increasingly engaged in recent years in the formulation and administration of energy policies, to concentrate even more on this important work. Should additional strength and resources be required for it to meet the increasing challenge of this work, they will be provided as a matter of high priority. Our goal must be a national policy which will balance adequately our economic objectives and our environmental values.

I wish now to say something about the cities. Let me make crystal clear at the outset, Mr. Speaker, that the government is deeply conscious and aware of the constitutional responsibility and role of the provincial and municipal governments. Proposals of the federal government in the area of urban affairs should not be interpreted by the other levels of government as a desire or an intention to act other than within clearly defined federal jurisdiction.

Let me say as well that it is false to suggest that the federal government has not been active and welcome in the cities of this country for many years. More than 20 departments of the federal government are now present and engaged in the cities. And some of them are very active. In the field of low income housing, for example, 44 per cent of all the activity undertaken in Canada since 1950 has been achieved in the past two years.

The cities, Mr. Speaker, are as much a part of Canada, and as much a concern of the federal government, as is the countryside. The federal government is a partner with the provincial governments in this respect, and can in many instances perform in a catalytic role to assist in the attainment of agreed goals. The constitution gives to the provinces the responsibility for municipal government; it does not deny that city dwellers are as qualified to seek the assistance of the federal government in the solution of their problems as are rural dwellers.

This government has not been unaware of the need to offer more assistance to the cities, Mr. Speaker, as the housing statistics I mentioned a moment ago prove. Nor has it rushed into the cities like a bull into a china shop, as the opposition has urged us to do.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Trudeau: Do you want to say something about it?

An hon. Member: I have never heard anything like it. It's a lot of bull.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Mostly static.

Mr. Woolliams: You need a new scriptwriter.

Mr. Trudeau: No, I don't need a new scriptwriter, I need a better memory. I wish I could give the date when the Leader of the Opposition spoke so firmly of the need for this government to rush forth into the cities and do more. The next day he was disowned by the Premier of Ontario.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Didn't Ivan Head put that in the speech for you?

Mr. Trudeau: Of course, the NDP doesn't have this problem because they do not have to worry about getting elected.

An hon. Member: That's just whistling in the dark.

Mr. Trudeau: The reorganization of our urban activities is the result of detailed consultation and planning with other levels of government. They will be directed by a minister whom we propose to designate as a minister of state, who intends to participate in this debate.

Ministers of state are a new concept, Mr. Speaker, and are intended to permit government more effectively to deal with modern conditions. The proposed legislation regarding governmental organization will contain provision for the creation by order in council of offices of ministers of state for designated purposes; they will have a status and a salary equal to a minister with a department. These ministers of state generally will be responsible for developing new and comprehensive federal policies in areas where the development of such policies is of particular urgency and importance. The mandates of these ministers will be of a temporary nature, of such a duration as to enable them to come to grips with the policy problems assigned to them. They will not generally have departments, but only relatively small secretariats with no program responsibilities. The new system will give to the Prime Minister more flexibility in assigning senior ministers to tackle important problems that require policy development.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, the legislation planned for this session flows naturally from the programs of the government in the past two years. Part of the legislation is an extension of our earnest belief in the need for rational, relevant criminal laws; part of it is a product of our affirmation of the need for a humane and sensitive, but stimulating and enterprising, social system, part of it is a desire for a burgeoning, well-distributed economy. All of it is a consequence of careful examination and preparation. Through the medium of white papers, we shall continue to reveal, to a degree unmatched by any previous Canadian government, our analysis of problems and our proposed solutions. We shall continue to offer legislation based upon those white papers. We shall do so in the belief that the people of Canada desire to participate in the preparation of sound policies; we shall do so undeterred by a Don Quixote racing across the land from luncheon table to luncheon table vainly seeking confirmation that he has sighted a dragon.

We have been reminded in recent days that the violence which is now so familiar to so many countries is no stranger to Canada. We have seen evidence in Canada this past summer of challenges to some of our most cherished concepts. We have been told by some that the air that we have so long believed to be as free as any in the world, that the equality which we thought was so widespread in practice, that the simple tolerance and goodwill of one Canadian to another—that these beliefs and these criteria are misleading or false. We are challenged and we must respond. The response cannot be a forfeiture of our values, but it must include a sincere attempt to ensure that all Canadians have available to them effective avenues for social change and political action. It must include as well, however, an expression of our strong belief that liberty and anarchy are contradictory, that democracy and violence cannot co-exist, that our freedom is dependent upon wise restraints.

If Canadians are unable to pursue a system of peaceful resolution of problems, then what persons are? If we, who associate one with the other within a framework as flexible as is federalism, who are predisposed to tolerance, and who enjoy the benefits of linguistic and cultural differences—if we still depart from reason, then surely we are in no position to criticize other countries for their social difficulties.

I believe that we can profit from the knowledge that violence begets violence, that the experience of man demonstrates with blinding clarity that in a jungle all are not equal, but all are vulnerable.

Freedom and liberty are neither gained nor retained without cost. The cost takes the form of a burden which demands of us all the human elements of responsibility, trust and common sense—responsibility, because every Canadian is a participant in the democratic process; trust to promote reasonable, reasoned argument; common sense to enable us to see what is, and what is not possible and desirable.

In these respects, we here in this House have both the opportunity and the responsibility to demonstrate to all Canadians that in our common commitment to Canada and to the democratic process we are capable of producing enlightened debate and wise decisions. I look forward, Mr. Speaker, as I know do all hon. members, to a session which will bring distinction to this Parliament and to those who have the honour to sit within it, and which will contribute to a better Canada in a better world.

• (2:50 p.m.)

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted, at the outset, to extend my congratulations to the mover and seconder, and to say that we all enjoyed the speeches made by the hon. member for Bourassa (Mr. Trudel) and the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas). I assure the hon. member for Assiniboia that I, and I hope many hon. Members of Parliament, will accept his invitation to return to Saskatchewan next year. The hon. member said that we might see the fields of waving grain. I was in the hon. member's constituency this fall, and mostly I saw waving fields of summerfallow, some of which had been summerfallowed two years in succession because that is the only way those farmers could obtain the quotas which would enable them to sell the grain they had on hand. I must say that I could not find the same satisfaction with the government's policies or the same optimism for agriculture which the hon. member described in his speech yesterday.

I listened with interest to the Prime Minister's speech which, I thought, could have been entitled, "Canada as seen from the Caribbean, British Guiana and the Mediterranean." It was the usual elitest speech on Canada seen from the seats of affluence. That speech, Mr. Speaker, like the Speech from the Throne which I imagine came from the same author, was long on platitudes and short on policies.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The people in this country want programs and they are being given clichés and purple prose. In this Speech from the Throne, the government poses all the right questions but does not supply any of the answers.

An hon. Member: Let us have them.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The speech, for instance, says, "...a society which is not inspired by love and compassion is not worthy of the name." I suggest that love and compassion are meaningless sentiments unless they are expressed in social action based on social justice.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The Speech from the Throne states a great many problems but it offers very few solutions. For instance, it says, "It would be irresponsible to suggest that the economy is now in a satisfactory condition." Mr. Speaker, that can go down as the understatement of the year. The speech goes on to say, "When costs rise more rapidly than productivity, when men and women are unable to gain employment, when a reasonable distribution of the wealth of Canada is denied to certain sectors or regions, then these are matters for deep concern." Mr. Speaker, they are not only matters for deep concern; they are matters which call for immediate remedial action. There is nothing in the Speech from the Throne to indicate that some remedial action will be forthcoming.

The stagnant state of the economy and the consequences which flow from it is the No. 1 issue facing the Canadian people and there is nothing in this Speech from the Throne which even indicates that the government has any intention of taking steps to activate the economy and get it moving again. This document is full of perfumed rhetoric that speaks glowingly of desirable goals without delineating any plan for achieving them or any commitment for their realization. This is cheap soap opera psychology which dangles the vision of a just society before the eyes of the public and, at the same time, the government is pursuing policies that will make our society less just, less equitable and less free.

The just society has now been reduced, in the Speech from the Throne, to "a distant ideal". The fact is, of course, that this government cannot build a just society because it is committed to operate within the framework of an economic system that is the antithesis of social justice and economic equity. This government is trapped in one of the glaring contradictions of our corporate controlled society. Never has this contradiction been so apparent as it is at the present time. There is a high level of economic activity throughout the western world. Canadian exports have reached an all-time high. Our balance of payments is favourable and our trade position with the United States shows the largest surplus in our history.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): According to the economic theories propounded by the Liberal party for decades, these conditions should produce prosperity, economic growth and full employment.

Mr. Trudeau: And inflation.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Instead, we find that unemployment in Canada is the highest in the western world. Unemployment in this country is at 6.7 per cent, seasonally adjusted. That only tells part of the story, because there are thousands of students who did not register and there are many people who got tired of going back to the manpower offices. Unemployment is even higher than statistics produced by the government would indicate. Moreover, our economic growth has now been reduced to almost zero and Canadian businessmen are experiencing a period of economic recession. Data for the last two months which is available, the months of June and July, shows that industrial production in this country has not only not increased, but that it has actually declined.

How does a Liberal government explain the anomaly of high exports and the favourable balance of trade with the unemployment and economic slowdown which is blighting the Canadian scene.

I suggest that there are two major reasons for this contradiction. First, the economic slump is due in part to the government's policies of fiscal and monetary restraint. The government has deliberately fostered an economic slowdown, under the euphemistic phrase "cooling off the economy" in its effort to check rising prices. Mr. Speaker, creating a recession in order to stop inflation is like cutting off your head to get rid of dandruff. Is the government telling the people of this country that Canadians must choose either unemployment or inflation? The Prime Minister this afternoon boasted that, according to the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, we have done better with the problem of inflation than any other country has.

Mr. Stanfield: They do not say that.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): But, did he tell the House at the same time that the OECD has pointed out that we have the highest rate of unemployment of any country in the western world? Is this the choice we have to face? Does this mean when the economy begins to move again we can once more anticipate a renewal of price increases and rising living costs? Does this mean that the government has forsaken the objectives set out in the Green Book Proposals at the end of World War II, when all Canadian governments committed themselves to a program of full employment and a high level of national income with attendant price stability?

• (3:00 p.m.)

Five years ago the Economic Council of Canada outlined the targets which they thought were both realistic and essential. They were an economic growth rate of between 5½ per cent and 6 per cent in constant dollar terms, unemployment at a rate not higher than 3 per cent per annum of the labour force, and price increases not greater than 2 per cent per annum. Has the government decided that these targets are unattainable? Are they reconciled to the proposition that when we have full employment we must have galloping inflation, and that when we have price stability we must go through the agonies of a recession?

The New Democratic Party has repeatedly requested the government to adopt measures to stimulate Canada's wealth production as the best means of raising living standards, creating jobs and providing adequate social security for all Canadians. We have discussed our proposals many times in the House and I will not go into them now. I will just enumerate them lest anyone should suggest we have not put them before the House. The five points are as follows:

1. An expansionist program which would involve large scale investment in housing, urban renewal and other socially desirable projects such as construction of hospitals, recreational facilities and a major attack on pollution.

2. Investment controls designed to direct our available capital into socially essential projects while postponing investment on the more prestigious and less essential undertakings.

3. A redistribution of income by tax reforms which would transfer some of the tax burden from the lower and middle income groups to those corporations and individuals who, with the connivance of successive governments, have been able to evade their just responsibilities.

4. If necessary, we are prepared to support price and income controls provided these measures apply to all forms of income such as prices, profits, interest rates and rents, and not merely to wages and salaries.

5. Make our economy less susceptible to the inflationary pressures of the United States by using our very considerable natural resources to develop a viable industrial complex.

However, there is another major reason for the contradiction of employment and economic stagnation existing side by side with increased exports. The present economic slowdown is largely due to the unbalanced structure of our economy. More and more Canada is becoming an exporter of raw materials and an importer of finished products. We ship out our raw materials such as lumber, iron ore, lead, copper, zinc, aluminum and pulp to be processed in other countries and then sold back to us in the form of manufactured goods. The effect of this is twofold. First of all, we are exporting jobs. The extraction industries have a high capital content but a low labour content. These industries are highly automated and are becoming more so. They will not provide enough jobs for the thousands of young Canadians with academic and technical training who are entering the labour market each year.

The second effect of our structural imbalance is the price differential between raw materials and finished products. Since the end of World War II the price of manufactured goods has risen much more sharply than the price of primary products. This explains the widening gap between the "have" and "have not" nations. Primary producing nations like Canada find themselves having to export more and more raw materials in order to pay for the manufactured goods they import. It follows that if Canada is to have full employment and a high level of national income, we must process more of our raw materials into finished or semi-finished goods rather than being content to be a nation composed of "hewers of wood and drawers of water".

The effect is that Canada is rapidly becoming an economic hinterland for the American industrial complex. According to the figures given in the House by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), United States corporations have secured almost complete control of our extraction industries. At the present time they own and control 82.6 per cent of the oil and gas-wells industry, 84.9 per cent of primary metal smelting and refining and 99.9 per cent of oil refining.

Mr. Pepin: You were Premier of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I will discuss the province of Saskatchewan any time my hon. friend wishes. It is the only province in Canada that took its proven oil reserves and turned them over to the co-operatives so that the people could own the source of their own oil supply.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): That is something no Liberal government in Canada has ever done. If every other government in Canada had followed the same course, we would not now be completely at the mercy of the giant oil corporations of the United States. It should be remembered that these United States corporations did not invest in Canada as an act of Christian charity, but rather to assure a guaranteed supply of raw materials to feed the voracious appetite of American industry. I do not blame the Americans for seeking to guarantee their sources of supply, but I am concerned about what it is doing to Canada. These extraction industries provide less jobs per dollar invested and pay less taxes per dollar earned. The result is that we have to sell more and more raw materials to buy back the finished products. The government glories in the abundance of our exports, but the unbalanced structure of our economy has left half a million Canadians without jobs and five million Canadians living on or below the poverty line.

Canadians will have to decide whether Canada is to be relegated to the same role as some of the Latin-American countries which exist almost solely as a source of raw material for the United States. If we accept this role we are locking Canada into the U.S. economy, and by doing so we condemn this country to permanent unemployment and continuing inflation. Having acquired control of our raw materials, the United States industrial complex now wants the energy resources with which to convert our raw materials into finished products which they can sell back to us at ever higher prices. Canada's energy policy is like 'the peace of the Lord which passeth all understanding."

• (3:10 p.m.)

We have vast quantities of coal, yet Canada is an importer of coal. We have huge reserves of oil, yet Canada is a net importer of oil. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has uttered brave words about keeping Canadian ownership of the uranium industry at 40 per cent, but the recent decision of Gulf Minerals to develop reserves in Saskatchewan is making a mockery of his words. In the past two years spokesmen for the United States government have been using the bait of increased access to the U.S. market for Canadian oil as a means of getting their hands on two commodities which they desperately need—natural gas and water. They have won the first battle and I predict that victory in the second will not be long in coming. Anyone who is led astray by the assurances of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) need only remember similar assurances which were given by the Liberal party and the Liberal government in 1963 before reversing itself to conclude the Columbia River agreement, which gave one of the largest rivers in Canada over to the complete control of vested interests in the United States.

As I said, the government has lost the first battle because it has approved the export of 6.3 trillion cubic feet of natural gas to the United States. I point out that this action was taken without any reference to Parliament and in the absence of any statement by the government regarding its long-term energy policy. The government has no coherent policy setting forth Canada's long-term energy needs, nor has it made clear how our vast energy resources are to be utilized for the benefit of the people of Canada. Instead, we are allowing our energy resources to be picked off one by one, with the Americans taking what they need while at the same time restricting their markets where it is to their advantage to do so. We of the NDP believe that the government's decision to allow the export of 6.3 trillion cubic feet of gas to the United States is contrary to the best interests of the Canadian people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In the first place, it will increase the price to the Canadian consumer. Indeed, it has already had that effect in anticipation of the sale being approved. Prices in Canada will follow those on the American market. Moreover, if we sell the accessible gas to the United States, as we are doing, Canadians will have to depend increasingly upon gas produced in less accessible areas and the cost of the gas will consequently be much higher.

We are opposed to this decision because we believe that inadequate consideration has been given to Canada's long-term energy needs. Under the arrangements which the government have approved, Canada will be selling to the United States more than half our total gas production, and by 1990 we shall be selling two-thirds of our total gas production to the United States. The National Energy Board estimates that we are now supplying to the United States 3 per cent of its total consumption and that by 1990 we shall be supplying 15 per cent.

Of even more significance, the board estimates Canadian consumption per capita in 1990 to be at the same level as per capita consumption in the United States in 1975. In other words, the National Energy Board and the government seem perfectly prepared to see Canadian consumption per capita lag 15 years behind that of the United States, despite the fact that we were late in utilizing gas and that we have a cold climate. We believe that future Canadian long-term requirements have been grossly underestimated by the board. On the basis of a mere 10 per cent increase per annum—I believe the increase will amount to more than that—we shall have reached in 1981 the consumption which the board estimates for 1990.

The National Energy Board and the government have overlooked two important factors in estimating our long-term needs. First, they have overlooked the necessity for conversion to gas, particularly for the generating of electricity, bearing in mind that gas is the least polluting form of energy.

Mr. Pepin: They have not overlooked it.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The second is that a very large requirement for natural gas will exist in Canada if we are to embark upon a program of processing more of our own primary products in this country. The effect of the government's decision to approve this tremendous sale of natural gas to the United States is to tie Canada even more closely into the American economy; it is one more step in making Canada an economic dependency, a military satellite and a cultural colony of the United States. I tell the government that they may sit here in their ivory tower and toss about finespun theories, but the Canadian people are becoming alarmed at this situation, as is shown by the statements of one of the government's former ministers, Hon. Walter Gordon, and others, as well as by editorials appearing in newspapers and periodicals across the nation. I warn the government that the time will come very soon when the Canadian people will no longer allow a cynical and supine government to barter away our birthright in the name of continentalism.

We in the New Democratic Party believe that the first call on our energy resources should be the development of a viable Canadian industry which will convert our raw materials into processed and manufactured goods. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in a speech he was to have made in Portland, Oregon, on September 23, but which was read for him by his Parliamentary Secretary, set forth two conditions for supplying the United States with natural gas: first, free access for Canada to the United States' market for Canadian oil and, second access to the United States' market for Canadian manufactured products. We did not get either of these concessions.

We do not object to selling to the United States any of our surplus energy resources, subject to two provisos. The first is that Canada's long-term needs as an expanding industrial nation have been fully taken into account, and the second is that we gain access to the United States market for Canadian semi-processed and finished products. Neither of those provisos has been met and the government has betrayed the best interests of the Canadian people by entering into an agreement which will perpetuate our economic dependence upon, and exploitation by, the United States.

Mr. Woolliams: We are good whipping boys.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In his speech, the Prime Minister made reference repeatedly to the need for more planning. At times he suggested that we had not enough planning in Canada. That is not true; we do have planning. As a matter of fact, Canada has been the victim of corporate planning by United States-based multinational corporations. We have had planning, but it has been planning by and for corporations rather than planning for the well-being of all Canadians. Corporate power has been expanding steadily in our society. Corporations have been able to insulate themselves from the free forces of the market place. By setting administered prices they have virtually taxed the public on the consumer goods they buy in order to secure the necessary funds for their capital requirements, thus insulating themselves from the effects of any monetary policy the government may impose. These corporations control their sources of supply, set their own prices and by expensive advertising programs, influence consumer buying patterns.

• (3:20 p.m.)

The effect of this corporate domination is all too evident in our society. It sets the social priorities, with the result that we have a superabundance of private goods but a famine in public goods. We are able to spend $1.2 billion a year in advertising, but we lack the funds to combat pollution effectively. Commercial construction is up, but the building of houses for low and middle income groups is down. Money can be found for prestigious office buildings and high-rise apartments, for a third supermarket in each shopping centre and for a fourth gas station at each street corner, but money is lacking for public housing, nursing homes for the aged and schools for the mentally retarded.

The Speech from the Throne calls for "a society in which life is measured in qualitative, not quantitative, terms". This is unmitigated hypocrisy when the Canadian people have to endure the pollution of their atmosphere, water and soil, and the government sits supinely by when the financial institutions ignore their pleas for larger investment in residential housing.

The New Democratic Party believes that planning must be public rather than corporate, and must be subject to the control of the people through their elected representatives. We must establish priorities that will make more effective use of our nation's resources, so as to create a viable industrial economy, increase our wealth production and provide employment opportunities for our people. We must not only share the benefits of increased production with all sectors of our population; we must also insist that the tax burden of this country be imposed on a more equitable basis. Under the guise of promoting economic growth, the government—particularly its members on the Finance Committee—are seeking to ease the burden on the corporate sector at the expense of the salary and wage earners of Canada.

If this country is ever to enjoy economic independence, then the decision-making power in our economy must be restored to the Canadian people and exercised by their government. Up until now the government has been content to allow the major decisions affecting the lives of all Canadians to be made in the boardrooms of foreign corporations. The time has come when that decision-making power must be transferred back to Canada, for if it is not we face the loss of Canadian sovereignty. At the accelerated rate of American takeovers we have only a few years left. The challenge which faces this government is to act boldly and to act now.

An hon. Member: Sounds like the Wafflers.

Mr. Gillespie: Is this the Waffle group?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I interpolate to say that the subject I have been discussing should be of great interest to the two members who have just regrettably interrupted me. I shall be glad to listen to their views, and I hope they will be as courageous in the House as they have been outside the House.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis):

That the amendment be amended by changing the period at the end thereof to a comma, and by adding immediately thereafter the following words: "and we regret, in particular, the government's failure (1) to deal effectively with the threat to Canadian independence created by the growing foreign ownership of our economy; (2) to provide policies to reduce the high rate of unemployment, which is now expected to reach disastrous levels this winter; and (3) to introduce a guaranteed income below which no Canadian family will be allowed to fall, so as to eradicate the poverty which now afflicts at least five million Canadians."

• (3:30 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, we have to deal with four different items: the Speech from the Throne, the Address in Reply, the amendment proposed by the Conservatives and the one moved by the New Democratic Party.

Before discussing the proposed amendments, I first wish to congratulate warmly the mover and the seconder of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne (Mr. Trudel and Mr. A. B. Douglas) as they have made superhuman efforts to camouflage the commonplaces and platitudes contained in the Speech from the Throne and to give a high lustre to the intentions expressed by the Liberal government in the speech which was read yesterday by His Excellency the Governor General.

As regards the authors of the Speech from the Throne, the government advisers, they deserve little recognition as they only arouse feelings of wretchedness and disappointment.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said a moment ago that our standard of living was among the highest in the world, then, in a subsequent sentence, he deplored the great difficulties facing several sectors of the Canadian economy.

True, the authors of the Throne Speech have succeeded in reaching pathetic heights by using the same old phrases, already heard hundreds of times, the better to put the people to sleep.

When, for example, we find in the Throne Speech, words such as the following, and I quote:

—Canada continues to enjoy social stability to an exceptional degree—

We truly wonder whether government advisers have eyes to see with and ears to hear with.

It is truly pitiful to hear the government say that Canada enjoys social stability to an exceptional degree when, at the present time, all the country's police forces are searching for those who kidnapped a British commercial attaché and whose ambition is neither more nor less than to overthrow, through murder, assassination, force and blackmail, all forms of established power in short to have the revolutionary forces prevail and destroy values cherished by all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, we had only to hear the famous FLQ manifesto, broadcasted last night by the CBC and which was reproduced in full in today's Montréal-Matin to become aware that in the Canadian metropolis, where complete social stability exists, there are heartless people and cowards who are ready to kill in order to serve their revolutionary purposes.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think that Canada is enjoying social stability to an exceptional degree when we are seeing at home what has happened in Algeria, South America and in some other countries over the past 25, 30 or 50 years if we refer to Russia as a basic example. When we witness these people proclaim in their manifesto the freedom to take freedom away from others—this is their entire and complete program—or blame industry and those who show initiative—we might ask those young, or not so young, people what prevents them from establishing industries in their country, Canada, if they really love it. I have no pity at all for those who resort to blackmail and harm people who never did them any wrong.

Mr. Speaker, the only argument that the government advisers can put forward to suggest that Canada enjoys an exceptional social stability, is that they probably had in mind the social stability which allows big finance to crush the Canadian economy and to deprive most Canadians citizens of a higher standard of living that would ensure them a better use and distribution of our national wealth.

It is all very well to suggest that Canada enjoys the highest standard of living in the world, the unemployed and the large families who live on welfare find this is not so. That is the kind of stability that we know.

There is another exceptional sentence, a flash of genius from the government's advisers in the Speech from the Throne, which reads as follows:

> The conviction is growing throughout the world that if man is to survive he must strive without delay to regulate his future. This is a task which presupposes a fullness of freedom and an extensive field of human experience.

What does that mean exactly? A fullness of freedom, what is it? An extensive field of human experience, what does that mean?

According to the government, would a fullness of freedom mean making the laws on abortion even more liberal, as suggested in the Speech from the Throne? If it is such a parody of freedom the government has to offer, we of the Ralliement Créditiste will continue to fight the Liberals' proposals on abortion, just as we did during the first session.

One of the last sentences of the Speech from the Throne is typical of the present government's attitude of Liberal promises over the years:

> "We stand on the threshold of greatness".

How exhilarating! We stand on the threshold of greatness! That calls to mind the rhetoric of the Hon. Jean Lesage in Quebec in 1960. We stand on the threshold of the just society! The Liberals have been promising us that greatness for years. The Liberals, along with the Rt. hon. Prime Minister, promised us the just society to which all Canadians aspire. But they now admit that they were unable to give us this greatness and this just society. We still are at the threshold of a just society and of greatness.

Mr. Speaker, what should we do to attain this just society and this greatness?

The Speech from the Throne is quite clear on this point:

> We must accept . . .that the most drastic reality is change.

To us this is the most significant sentence in the Speech from the Throne.

In my opinion, what needs to be changed first is the present government, and it will not do simply to put in its place the party on the other side, a Progressive Conservative government, because we have had one before and we were not better off. There is no difference between a Conservative and a Liberal apart from the fact that—as a Conservative put it on a television program—one is blue and the other is red.

The Liberal administration of the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent was replaced by the Conservative administration of the Right Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). The Conservative administrations were replaced by the Liberal ones of the Right Hon. Mr. Pearson and of the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

We have changed only the driver of the cart pulled by a tired old horse whereas it is not the driver but the cart and the tired old horse which should be traded in for a modern car with a powerful engine.

This is what has to be changed. In other words, it is not the fact that we have a new driver or a new government that is essential to the economic and social development of the Canadian people, but rather the fact that we have a new engine, or, still better, a new financial system since the one now in use renders our resources barren, freezes them, taps them and turns them to its advantage.

Mr. Speaker, I am not the one who is responsible for this situation. It has been completely brought about by those who run the show. A federal-provincial conference was held here in Ottawa a few weeks ago. The ten premiers of Canada, along with the Prime Minister of Canada, got together to tackle certain problems. The constitution was discussed. Has it changed anything? No. The premiers did not know exactly what to put forward as amendments to the constitution.

The premier of Quebec said that roughly 50 or 60 per cent of the present constitution needs to be amended, but that they did not know exactly what to amend.

The Prime Minister of Canada tells us on television: We have made progress. The ten provincial premiers tell us: We have made progress. Progress where? Nobody knows. In what area have we achieved progress? God knows, but as for ourselves, we do not know.

However, all spoke to the Prime Minister of Canada of a common concern. In fact, British Columbia asked for an extra $500 billion a year; the province of Quebec is asking that the constitution be amended in order to get a bigger share of tax revenue. The NDP government of Manitoba wants the same thing. Without exception, all have financial problems, and they have all told the Prime Minister of Canada so. The Prime Minister, who has his own way of saying things, in his own style of reply, told them: Gentlemen, I am happy to see you. You are short of money and I appreciate your position. It is unfortunate, but I have no money either. The only means I have to find money, is to get it out of the Canadian citizens' pockets. We administer with the revenue we have.

The premiers left for their respective provinces saying: Thank you, Mr. Prime Minister, we understand that you are as "broke" as we are. You have no other means than we have.

And yet, the Prime Minister is conversant with constitutional law. He understands the Canadian constitution, and he knew it thoroughly even as a young CCF supporter in 1940, 1941, 1942. In fact, he remembers that time so well that he has just appointed an eminent member of the NDP to the Senate. Incidentally, he has not forgotten to appoint the former premier of Alberta, Mr. Manning, a Creditist.

Mr. Trudeau: There is still room for you.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister of Canada is crafty; he is polluting Canadian politics by using the other parties in an attempt to surround himself with a somewhat sensible entourage.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Trudeau: There is still room for you!

Mr. Caouette: I thank the Prime Minister for his kindness towards me but, as a Creditist, Mr. Speaker, I would refuse the post even if the Prime Minister were to offer it to me because we have far more important work to do here in the house of Commons. Besides, the Prime Minister—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Caouette: I am happy to see my colleague for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) applaud. He calls for the abolition of the Senate yet he has not said a word against the appointment of his friends from the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Speaker, one can check by looking at subsections 14, 15 and 16 of section 91 of the British North America Act to see whether the Prime Minister is right when he says to the provincial premiers: Gentlemen, there is but one means available to us to secure the funds we need, it is taxation? We must get it in the pockets of the taxpayers.

—the exclusive Legislative Authority of the Parliament of Canada extends to all Matters coming within the Classes of Subjects next herein-after enumerated; that is to say,—

I now quote subsections 14, 15 and 16:

14. Currency and Coinage.

15. Banking, Incorporation of Banks, and the Issue of Paper Money.

So this is something else than going through the pockets of the Canadian taxpayers,

I now quote subsection 16;

16. Savings Banks.

But the central government has the power to legislate on monetary as well as fiscal matters. And the Prime Minister say, as he did earlier, that revised taxation will help us solve our problems.

Nonsense! Last year's Throne Speech referred to White Papers—it was a White Paper session. This year, White Papers are again mentioned in every possible way, along with those on taxation, unemployment insurance, social security and economic growth.

The Prime Minister is talking about fiscal reforms as a means to achieve justice. What kind of justice? As the Prime Minister said on television not so long ago: It is a matter of taking from the haves to give to the have-nots. Is that justice?

The Prime Minister may believe that, but if we discourage personal initiative, if we stifle personal ambition, we will end up like many other countries in the world: we will lose our economic vitality, our enthusiams to create or organize.

The Prime Minister knows that. His policy consists in taking away from some people to give to others. Nonsense, Mr. Speaker! That way, as was stated in English:

• (3:40 p.m.)

[English]

By taking away something from those who have and giving something to those who have not, we will end by having all kinds of people who have nothing and no more people who have something.

[Translation]

We know that our national production could be increased—the Right Hon. Prime Minister said so himself—if all our 600,000 unemployed were put to work.

In Canada there is enough wealth for all people without depriving anyone. But how hard it is to make people understand this! We do not understand it, neither do the provincial premiers. They come to Ottawa begging and Ottawa says no. This is the reply they received at the federal-provincial conferences in February and in June. When other similar conferences are held, the Prime Minister will once more say to the premiers: "Gentlemen, we have no money, that is the trouble."

Although it is stated in the Throne Speech that the third session of the 28th Parliament commences in the decade of the seventies, a decade which we dare not assume will be a continuation of the past, there will be no change and no progress as long as the present financial monopoly remains in the hands of a few hoarders who manage money and credit to their own advantage, without giving any thought to the real producers of wealth, that is the contractors, the manufacturers and the workers of Canada.

The great change that is needed, the grand change that the political men of this decade must bring about, the reform to be undertaken, the most urgent reform, because it is a prerequisite of all other reforms, is monetary reform.

The Prime Minister may introduce tax reforms, dozens and hundreds of White Papers, but, as long as the monetary system has not been improved, neither him, nor this government, nor the opposition nor the New Democratic Party will be able to change anything whatever in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Caouette: In the Speech from the Throne the government recognizes that we are entering a new era where prevailing forces tend to modify past values and positions, that this conflict between new values and those of former years lead to frustration for present generations who refuse to question the old financial assumptions and system and that the rising generations will not accept the yoke of the financial system which prevent all economic and social progress, in short social justice.

Mr. Speaker, I said earlier that the first reform to undertake has to do with the financial system and not with taxation. The first change, the most pressing one is the present monetary system.

The proof of what I am saying, Mr. Speaker, lies in the list of the bills mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, and I quote:

1. A bill to amend the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act.

Grants are needed so that the companies can operate gold mines, and let us note that it is necessary. It is a financial measure. I go on with the quotation:

2. A bill to amend the Established Programs (Interim Arrangements) Act.
3. A bill to amend the Small Business Loans Act.
4. A bill to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act.
5. A bill to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act.
6. A bill respecting Investment Companies.

7. A bill respecting the Canada Development Corporation.
9. Veterans Pension Legislation.
10. A bill respecting the C.N.R. Financing and Guarantee, 1970.

—or deficits paid up by the government.

11. A bill to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act.

About monetary reform, the Prime Minister claims that we spend our time talking about money. What are the Speech from the Throne or the bills all about? Money and control by the government and the present Canadian banking institutions. Nothing else. I continue the quotation:

12. A bill amending the Interest Act and the Small Loans Act.
13. A bill to amend the Bankruptcy Act.
14 and 15. Bills to amend the Canada-Finland-and-Canada-Jamaica Income Tax Agrements.
16. A bill amending the Crop Insurance Act.
17. A bill respecting Co-operative Credit Associations.

Those 17 bills are financial measures for the purpose of remedying the patent evils and the most flagrant injustices of the present financial system.

But that is not all. There are other measures covering control of atomic energy, pollution, development of imports, textiles, resource management, the anti-dumping act, budget estimates, the Auditor-General, the marketing of farm products, a commercial agreement with Australia, altogether 12 measures dealing with the operation, administration, and protection of the present financial system and of its power over trade, commerce, industry, agriculture, in short over everything. Thus, almost two-thirds of the bills the government intends to introduce have a marked financial orientation. The Prime Minister is aware of this.

We of the Ralliement créditiste are therefore justified in demanding that priority be given to financial reform, in saying that we must first achieve this reform instead of trying to curb its ill effects, in other words we wholly reject this whole policy of a poultice on a wooden leg which is the basis of the reforms proposed by this government and by the preceding ones.

The poor situation created by the financial system has had disastrous effects on the Canadian economy in general and on the welfare of the individuals in particular.

The Prime Minister, after telling us we had the highest living standards in the world, admitted a while ago:

It would be irresponsible to suggest that the economy is now in satisfactory condition. When costs rise more rapidly than productivity, when men and women are unable to gain employment, when a reasonable distribution of the wealth of Canada is denied to certain sectors or regions, then these are matters for deep concern.

Fortunately, our population, the number of Canadians engaged in productive employment—increase

—the total volume of goods and services which they produce, and Canadian exports all continue to grow.

That is the statement of the government. Mr. Speaker, that is the way the government advisers analyse the present economic situation, according to the Throne Speech read yesterday by His Excellency the Governor General.

Further on the Speech mentions again the problem of exports:

Our exports in past months have achieved record heights.

That is the old liberal slogan, Mr. Speaker. We must export or perish. If our exports are growing, we will be prosperous! If they are declining we will be miserable!

23 years ago, on the 23rd of August 1947, a then liberal member, Mr. Azellus Denis, who is now a senator, said on Montreal station CKAC in a broadcast paid for by the federal liberal party, and I quote:

Whatever demagogues who are more than shortsighted may say, the liberals do not give anything to foreigners, because Canada produces 40 times more than Canadian can consume; and without exports and loans—when necessary—we would have overproduction, factories would close down, we would end up with starvation, unemployment and misery.

That is what the Liberals said in 1947! That is what they are repeating today while they are asserting somehow triumphantly, and I quote:

Our exports in past months have achieved record heights.

And they add that this is to be taken as a good omen for economic prosperity.

Let us see, Mr. Speaker, the value of those assertions on the part of the Liberals.

• (3:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to inform the hon. member that his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there consent that the hon. member continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleagues for their courtesy towards me. I will try to be brief.

Mr. Speaker, as far as Canada's foreign trade is concerned, here is what we could read in the September 22 bulletin of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics and I quote:

During the first half of this year, the strong foreign demand for Canadian products (and I purposefully underline the word "products") played an extremely important part in softening the impact of the limited demand in several important areas of this country, especially as regards consumers' individual expenses.

Which means, Mr. Speaker, that the demand for products—I mean the demand on the part of Canadian consumers—slowed down in Canada. We may ask ourselves why there should be such a slowdown of the demand on the part of Canadian consumers. Is it because all the needs have been met? Why then do so many families that live on the meagre benefits of unemployment insurance and on welfare have to tighten their belts? Simply because they do not have the required purchasing power.

But that means nothing to government advisers, all of whom advocate economic growth for the sake of growth, as well as full employment, accepting it as the end of economic activities and the main concern of governments.

According to government advisers, trade has shored up our economy. This is what the bulletin of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics for September 22nd 1970, has to say:

In the first six months of 1970, Canadian export trade of goods has been outstanding; exports have exceeded imports by $1,296 million, that is four times more than in the comparable period in 1969.

At that rate, if the government experts are right in their claims, Canadians, who have had a trade surplus four times as great as in 1969, should enjoy a higher standard of living, unemployment should decrease, the actual salaries of workers should go up, while industrial and commercial undertakings should know greater prosperity.

But that is not the case, Mr. Speaker. Except for the fantastic increase in the profits of financial and banking institutions, industrial profits are lower—the Prime Minister made mention of it a while ago—while the true domestic production has decreased.

This, Mr. Speaker, is no unfounded statement. The bulletin of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics tells us clearly, and I quote:

The seasonally adjusted index for domestic production in Canada increased by 0.4 per cent in July. The increase is due to a higher productivity in the service industries, whereas in the goods industries, there was a decrease of 0.5 per cent.

Such are the facts, Mr. Speaker. In Canada, the production of true wealth is going down whereas exports are increasing at a high rate; exports were worth $4,525 million during the first 6 months of 1970, against $3,809 million during the first 6 months of 1969. This means an increase in the export of goods produced by the Canadian people of over $700 million, or $300 for each citizen.

Meanwhile, inflation is denounced and workers are blamed for demanding the higher wages required to meet the ever increasing cost of living.

• (4:00 p.m.)

What hope is there that prices will go down in Canada if the production of goods and wealth does not increase, and if the amount of goods and wealth exported keeps going up? Increasing exports and production at a standstill can only result in a scarcity of goods for the Canadian people and thus cause prices to rise because of the demand of consumers still able to afford those goods.

They want to solve the problem of inflation, but actually the methods used only make it worse, because while production remains at a standstill, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) makes every effort to export as many goods as possible. In so doing, he creates a scarcity of goods. On the other hands, he allows entry into Canada of a foreign purchasing power which can only contribute to step up inflation.

The Canadian government announces in the Speech from the Throne its intention to amend the Export Development Act. We do not know yet what is in the mind of the responsible minister or what the intentions of the government are.

If through this new legislation the government wishes to increase exports further, thus depriving Canadians of the goods they produce and bringing about a new increase in prices, all the Canadian consumers will lose their shirt because, with incomes frozen, as it were, by the Prices and Income Commission, they will have to be satisfied with a smaller quantity of products, which in turn will naturally produce a new increase in prices.

Another problem relating to our transactions with foreign countries is that of foreign investments in Canada. While it is feared all across Canada that financial domination will also bring about political domination, it is rather disappointing to realize that the latest figures bear out that the movement, started a few years ago and promoted by the preceding governments, both Liberal and Conservative, is only increasing under this government, so that Canada becomes more and more dominated by foreign finance to ensure its own expansion. This country is becoming more and more enslaved by foreign finance. Indeed, Canadian industries become more and more the property of foreign investors and our natural resources are falling into the hands of foreign powers.

We understand very well the policy of the Canadian government to introduce a bill to amend the Atomic Energy Control Act. Atomic energy will be tomorrow the most important source of energy in the world, and as we have in Canada natural resources which permit us to hope that that energy will be available to Canadians, our government is taking the right step to ensure that that energy remains available to Canadians and under Canadian control at that.

But why, at the same time, does the Canadian government not do the same in connection with the other energy sources which it surrenders to the greed of foreign interests, mainly on the international level? Why does it not do the same with respect to the oil and natural gas resources? Why does it not do the same with respect to Canadian water and energy which are about to be controlled entirely by foreign interests?

Not a month go by, Mr. Speaker, without Hydro-Québec, for instance, calling on American investors. As late as yesterday, the Premier of Quebec went to the United States to ask American financiers to come and invest in the province of Quebec, thus letting them take over the control of Quebec wealth.

The same thing is done by the federal government when it appropriates the greater part of the revenue from our natural wealth. Out of each dollar paid to Hydro-Québec for the consumption of electricity in Quebec, more than 25 per cent is used to pay interest to American and European financiers.

But why does the federal government not warn the Liberal government of Quebec against giving control of water and power resources in the Bay James basin to American interests? Perhaps Premier Bourassa would be interested in developing and harnessing those resources.

Indeed, as time goes on, control by foreign finance weighs ever more heavily on our economy. The statistics published by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, on September 22, 1970, are quite explicit in this connection. At a time when experts find deplorable this domination by foreign finance, we have to conclude that foreign finance has more and more power on this Liberal government.

• (4:10 p.m.)

I quote from a report of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics:

In the second quarter of 1970, the transactions (direct investments) with non-residents resulted in a net $165-million increase of direct investments in foreign-controlled companies established in Canada. American investments accounted for about 85 per cent while the United Kingdom and continental Europe were responsible for the balance.

The Throne speech states that it is time, in 1970, to bring about changes. We of the Ralliement créditiste say that 1970 is the best time ever to change the financial system which is strangling us, which imposes upon Canadians the scarcity of consumer goods, which yields to foreign financial interests the control of our natural resources, of our production and, I dare say it, of all our institutions, including our political institutions, that is the governments in power.

A change is needed. There must be a change, as the Quebec Liberals used to say in 1960, because tomorrow it will be too late.

To conclude my remarks, Mr. Speaker, this is how I consider the changes needed so that Canadians may truly enjoy their production, control it and fully profit by our natural resources.

Here is the first question which must be asked. Why a financial system? What part must it play?

The answer is simple enough: A financial system is supposed to finance firstly the production of goods, in order to meet needs and secondly, the distribution of those goods, according to needs.

A financial system which finances the production of goods and also succeeds in distributing them is efficient. If it does not play that part, it is inefficient and even harmful.

Well, Mr. Speaker, at the present time there are goods required by the population which we fail to produce because under our financial system the capital is diverted from its primary purpose. Certain products lie on the shelves, some are even destroyed, although a number of needs remain unsatisfied.

We must therefore conclude that the present financial system does not fulfill its purpose which should be to finance the production and distribution of goods. And what we are asking the government and the Prime Minister to do is to find a solution to financial problems.

Then we will no longer witness incidents such as the one which has just taken place in Montreal. Being deprived of the security and the freedom to which they are entitled, some people rebel against the established society. Those who cannot adapt themselves to a society, Mr. Speaker, try to destroy it.

So, let us establish in our country a social and economic context in which all Canadians will find a place for themselves and feel that their country belongs to them, and which could also serve as a model for all the world to follow.

[English]

On motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale), the debate was adjourned.

---

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate requesting this House to unite with the Senate in the appointment of a Special Joint Committee to examine and report upon proposals, made public, on a number of subjects related to the Constitution of Canada and also to select members of this House to act on the proposed Special Joint Committee.

* * *

CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—TERMS OF REFERENCE

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, earlier this week the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution submitted its reports on its activities, indicating that it would like to continue those activities in the new session and, in particular, that certain arrangements had been made to visit eastern Canada for the purpose of carrying on discussions. I wonder if the House would be agreeable to reconstituting the Special Joint Committee now in so far as this House is concerned by conferring on it the same powers that it had previously, and by stipulating:

That the following members be appointed to act on behalf of the House of Commons on the Special Joint Committee, namely, Messrs. Alexander, Allmand, Asselin, Breau, Brewin, Dinsdale, Fairweather, Fortin, Gibson, Hogarth, Hopkins, Lachance, MacGuigan, Marceau, McQuaid, Osler, Ouellet, Roberts, Rowland and Woolliams; and

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours thereof.

I wonder whether the House would be agreeable to an order in those terms, so that the committee may continue its work as requested.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, am I to understand from the minister that the terms in which the consent is sought are as laid down in the formal order which he and I have discussed?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes. I am afraid the hon. member was not in the House, but I sent a copy of it to his colleague, the whip, earlier and I understood he was agreeable to it. If the hon. member wishes, I will read it in full.

Mr. Baldwin: Yes.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The order would be as follows:

That a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons be appointed to examine and report upon proposals, made public, or which are from time to time made public by the government of Canada, on a number of subjects related to the Constitution of Canada during the course of the comprehensive review of the Constitution of Canada, which review was agreed upon at the Constitutional Conference of the Prime Minister of Canada and the Premiers and Prime Ministers of the provinces in February, 1968, and alternative proposals on the same subjects;

That the committee have power to sit during sittings and members, such sub-committees as it may deem advisable or necessary;

That the committee have power to sit during sittings and adjournments of the House of Commons;

That the committee have power to report from time to time, to send for persons, papers, and records, and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee;

That the committee have power to adjourn from place to place within Canada;

That the quorum of the committee be 17 members, whenever a vote, resolution or other decision is taken, so long as both Houses are represented and that the joint chairmen be authorized to hold meetings, to receive evidence and authorize the printing thereof, when 7 members are present so long as both Houses are represented;

That the committee be empowered to retain the services of three specialists to assist it in its work; and that it also be empowered to retain the clerical and stenographic help deemed advisable by the joint chairmen;

That the papers and evidence received and taken on the subject in the preceding session be referred to the committee and made part of the records thereof; and

That the following members be appointed to act on behalf of the House of Commons on the Special Joint Committee, namely—

The names of the hon. members already alluded to are listed. Finally, the order would read:

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours thereof.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I find that I cannot accept one clause of the proposal, that providing that the committee shall have power to adjourn from place to place in Canada. That would be done without our having discussed it. I assume that the minister has now moved a motion to have that proposal from the other place accepted.

I should like to indicate my position on this issue. Mr. Speaker, we must have general support for the proposition that this committee be established.

We have made known our views in this regard. Actually, we were the first party to propose this step some time ago. Unfortunately, events of the last year have qualified the situation and circumstances have caught up with us. The Federal-Provincial Conferences which have been held have become, unfortunately, to an extent in the minds of some Canadians, the great "laugh-in" of public affairs of this country. There is probably more need now than ever before for a committee to ventilate these issues and discuss them with the people of Canada. Whether we are too late or not, only time will tell.

However, Mr. Speaker, it is my view and, I think, the view of some members of my party, that we must take a very searching, close look at the question of committees, the committees' structure and their work. The situation could arise—it almost arose during the previous session—in which we would find this House short of between 50 and 100 members. The onus of adjourning from place to place in Canada is one that should fall upon the committee, which should report to this House as to the need and advisability of its adjourning and travelling. Only in the House can that onus be sustained. In addition, there should be a responsibility on the government—I say this because I am fully aware of what it may involve—of co-ordinating the efforts and travel of committees. We must not forget, Mr. Speaker, that this House is the place where decisions are to be made and where deliberations are to be concluded.

The use of committees to clarify and explain matters and interrogate witnesses simplifies the work of the House. We think those activities are essential. We support these purposes. Nevertheless, we are becoming increasingly alarmed at what appears to be a tendency of stressing the work of the committees as an alternative to the work of this House. We on this side of the House raised this matter on several occasions last year and Mr Speaker at one time was good enough to suggest that the question might well be referred to the Standing Committee on Procedure.

Having said that, and having left myself free to pursue the matter another time, may I say that if the government agrees with me—and I have every reason to hope it does—this clause might well be removed and the committee might well make a report and bring it before the House. We would then have an opportunity to meet and discuss this matter. I realize the committee has made certain commitments. This is not an issue to be lightly dealt with in this way and at this time. We have a very heavy responsibility to operate this House efficiently and to ensure that it does the work the people of Canada expect of it. Our operations should not be dissipated and dispersed through committees operating in many instances outside the House, consequently gravely interfering with the proper function and decision-making of the House of Commons.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, although I agree with the general proposition stated by my hon. friend for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) that we should be careful about giving permission to committees to travel throughout Canada or outside Canada, I regret that he objects to permission being granted in this case. This is an important committee. While I might agree with his not too favourable comments about some of the recent Federal-Provincial Conferences, I think the members of the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution feel that their work has been most worth-while.

At this point I think it would be most unfair, not just to the members of the committee but to certain sections of Canada, for the committee, having travelled to various parts of Canada not to be permitted to go to other parts of the country. I hope, therefore, that the hon. member for Peace River will enter a caveat, which I will support, that the practice of committees travelling be looked at very carefully but nevertheless, having stated his objection, he will let that permission be granted as far as this committee is concerned.

The entire motion as read by the acting House leader is in the form in which he showed it to us a couple of hours ago. I checked with our members of that committee and other members of our group. We are quite prepared to endorse this motion as it is today. If there is to be a modification, we will go along with that as well. I hope we will not discriminate against those parts of Canada which the committee has not yet visited. Why deny this permission at this time? This is the view we take with respect to this motion.

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I must correct the impression the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has gathered from my remarks. We are not opposed per se to this or any other committee adjourning from place to place in Canada as circumstances may warrant. We feel that blanket authority should not be granted. I know these are the terms upon which authority must be granted, but we say there should first be a statement in this House by the chairman of the committee, on instructions from the committee, with some indication as to the intention of the committee, why and where it proposes to travel and what is involved.

If that is done, as I hope it will be in this and any other case, and the chairman of the committee meets the onus which we suggest is upon him, this party will then give its consent. We do not think that onus has been discharged and we would like to see that done. We are prepared to give our consent, with the proviso that the chairman will explain in the not-too-distant future what is involved in this clause of the recommendation.

Mr. Douglas A. Hogarth (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I serve on this committee. We just finished a sojourn of about ten days in the province of Manitoba and in the Yukon Territory. In my respectful submission there are a great many matters concerning the Constitution of Canada that can only be dealt with if the committee goes to the people in those areas of the country which have these problems. We anticipate travelling the week after next to the Maritimes, including Prince Edward Island. Apparently the people there are expecting us, and are no doubt preparing briefs.

It seems that the hon. member's objection, with the greatest respect, is a little late. In any event, I ask—and I think the whole committee will concur—that we should be allowed to fulfil this obligation. If there is to be an inquiry into the travelling of committees at a future date, possibly it could take place after the commitments of this committee have been met.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, we do not have available the proceedings of the last session. My understanding is that the committee has in fact submitted a detailed itinerary. Members of the committee who are now present will confirm that. I wonder, whatever the merits of the general proposition the hon. member makes, whether he has not already obtained the condition he seeks in the sense that the committee made a commitment to travel to Nova Scotia. The committee planned its work in some detail for the coming year. Under the circumstances, I feel these conditions are being met.

Mr. Baldwin: I suggest that between now and next Tuesday the usual and interesting discussions should take place as to the details of this matter. I am sure nothing will be lost over the Thanksgiving weekend. Hon members will be retiring to meditate upon the words of wisdom they heard today. By Tuesday we would then know the precise terms, places and times that the committee has in mind.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I do not accept the suggestion of the hon. member that I join him for Thanksgiving weekend. I will give notice of the motion so that my colleague, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen), will not have to read it again next week.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, before we adjourn perhaps the acting House leader would confirm what I think everyone suspects, that the business for next week will be continuation of the Throne Speech debate.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, sir.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 2(2), this House stands adjourned until eleven o'clock Tuesday morning next.

On motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale), the House adjourned at 4.31 p.m., pursuant to Special Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, October 13, 1970

The House met at 11 a.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. AIKEN—PRESENCE OF ARMED TROOPS IN PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS

Mr. G. W. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege relating to the presence within these buildings of armed troops. I do not believe it has ever been necessary in Canadian history to have troops stationed within the precincts of Parliament. I, as a private member, may not be aware, of course, of all that the government may be, but it strikes me as deplorable that armed troops should be within the building. If it were necessary for the protection of members to have additional security within the building, I would not object, but the physical presence of armed troops revolts me.

• (11:10 a.m.)

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I should like to reassure the hon. member and the House that it was not by design that members of the armed forces were in the building this morning. When it was first communicated to me that, in the course of duties which were to be performed, as arranged last night, for the protection of members on both sides of the House and other members of the Ottawa community, the armed forces had come on to Parliament Hill, I issued instructions immediately that they were to retire and not be within the buildings. I regret that it was through an error that they came within the precincts of Parliament. We are taking steps to make sure that it does not occur again.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka that perhaps the matter should not be pursued further. I am in full sympathy with the point he has raised and assure him that the presence of armed guards in the buildings was without the authority of the Chair. In view of the action which has been taken now by the Minister of National Defence, I assume that no further action will be required. The protection of members has been the responsibility of the protective staff of the House of Commons, and this situation continues.

---

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF ESTABLISHMENT OF DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS WITH PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce the successful conclusion of our discussions in Stockholm with representatives of the People's Republic of China, reflected in today's joint communiqué which records our agreement on mutual recognition and the establishment of diplomatic relations. The joint communiqué of the government of Canada and the government of the People's Republic of China concerning the establishment of diplomatic relations between Canada and China is as follows:

1. The government of Canada and the government of the People's Republic of China, in accordance with the principles of mutual respect for sovereignty and territorial integrity, non-interference in each other's internal affairs and equality and mutual benefit, have decided upon mutual recognition and the establishment of diplomatic relations, effective October 13, 1970.

2. The Chinese government reaffirms that Taiwan is an inalienable part of the territory of the People's Republic of China. The Canadian government takes note of this position of the Chinese government.

3. The Canadian government recognizes the government of the People's Republic of China as the sole legal government of China.

4. The Canadian and Chinese governments have agreed to exchange ambassadors within six months, and to provide all necessary assistance for the establishment and the performance of the functions of diplomatic missions in their respective capitals, on the basis of equality and mutual benefit and in accordance with international practice.

Officials from my department and from Industry, Trade and Commerce will be leaving for Peking very shortly to begin administrative preparations for the opening of a Canadian embassy in Peking. We hope to have the embassy in operation within two or three months.

The establishment of diplomatic relations between Canada and China is an important step in the development of relations between our two countries, but it is not the first step, nor is it an end in itself. We have opened a new and important channel of communication, through which I hope we will be able to expand and develop our relations in every sphere. We have already indicated to the Chinese, in our Stockholm discussions, our interest in setting up cultural and educational exchanges, in expanding trade between our two countries, in reaching an understanding on consular matters, and in settling a small number of problems left over from an earlier period. The Chinese have expressed the view that our relations in other fields such as these can only benefit from the establishment of diplomatic relations between our two countries. They have also agreed in principle to discuss through normal diplomatic channels, as soon as our respective embassies are operating, some of the specific issues we have raised with them.

As everyone knows, the agreement published today has been under discussion for a long time. I do not think it is any secret that a great deal of this discussion has revolved around the question of Taiwan. From the very beginning of our discussions the Chinese side made clear to us their position that Taiwan was an inalienable part of Chinese territory and that this was a principle to which the Chinese government attached the utmost importance. Our position, which I have stated publicly and which we made clear to the Chinese from the start of our negotiations, is that the Canadian government does not consider it appropriate either to endorse or to challenge the Chinese government's position on the status of Taiwan. This has been our position and it continues to be our position. As the communiqué says, we have taken note of the Chinese government's statement about Taiwan. We are aware that this is the Chinese view and we realize the importance they attach to it, but we have no comment to make one way or the other.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): For greater clarification, Mr. Speaker, could I have the consent of the House to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether the government of Canada is breaking off diplomatic relations with the government of Taiwan?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is it agreed that the Leader of the Opposition may ask a question at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Sharp: I am grateful to the Leader of the Opposition for his question, because I think it is important that it should be answered at this time.

There is no disagreement between the Canadian government and the authorities in Taipeh on the impossibility of continuing diplomatic relations after the government of Peking is recognized as the government of China. Both Peking and Taipeh assert that it is not possible to recognize simultaneously more than one government as the government of China. Accordingly, the authorities on Taiwan and the Canadian government have each taken steps to terminate formal diplomatic relations as of the time of the announcement of our recognition of the government of the People's Republic of China.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I have previously commented on this matter. I have tried to make my position very clear. I have stated and still believe that it is realistic and appropriate to recognize what is in fact the government of a country if it can be done, as I previously said, under decent and acceptable conditions.

The government of Peking has in fact been the government of mainland China for many years. Experience has indicated that in the long run it is better to bring about recognition by the society of nations and to establish working relations with what is in fact the de facto government of a country. This, of course, does not involve in any way approval of the purposes of the particular government or the way in which it functions. Canada has diplomatic relations with a good many countries although, to put it mildly, we do not wholeheartedly approve of their method of operation.

Although this is a matter of controversy, I recognize the fact that it is appropriate to establish diplomatic relations with Peking under the proper conditions. I still believe that it is not appropriate to accept as a condition the withdrawal of recognition of the government of Taiwan.

Mr. Sharp: There is no government of Taiwan.

Mr. Stanfield: The minister says there is no government of Taiwan. There has been a government, Mr. Speaker, with which we have had diplomatic relations. There is no question about its de facto jurisdiction over Taiwan.

Mr. Sharp: Over China.

Mr. Stanfield: To allow ourselves to be pushed into the position of withdrawing recognition of the government that has been in fact the government of Taiwan in order to achieve diplomatic relations with the bigger fellow is not an acceptable condition. Therefore I do not approve of the government of Canada breaking off diplomatic relations with the government of Taiwan.

• (11:20 a.m.)

If the government of Taiwan breaks off diplomatic relations with the government of Canada because of recognition of Peking, that is its responsibility. I want to be very clear about that. But I want to be equally clear that I do not approve of the government of Canada having bargained with Peking for recognition and exchange of representation on the basis that Canada would break off diplomatic relations with the Taiwan government, which does appear to have been a condition of diplomatic recognition by Peking in this case. I do not approve of the government of Canada having accepted that condition and I wish to make this very clear.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the members of this party have long urged the recognition of the People's Republic of China by the government of Canada. We are very glad, therefore, that the government of Canada and the government of mainland China have been able to work out the necessary arrangements whereby diplomatic relations can be established between our two countries.

The present government in mainland China has been the de facto government of that vast area for some 21 years, and it seems to be ridiculous to go on failing to recognize the existence of a government which controls almost a quarter of the earth's population. It seems to me that the time was long overdue for taking the step which has now been taken. I am convinced that once diplomatic relations have been established we can work out many cultural exchanges and trading relationships to the mutual advantage of both countries. I believe most Canadians will feel that the step the government has now taken is one which is not only in the interest of Canada but one which could be in the interest of world peace. I say that because I do not think one can long keep a large country such as China out of the councils of the world.

With reference to the severing of diplomatic relations with the government or Nationalist China, I would simply point out that when the government in Taiwan is prepared to state that it is the government of that area, and of that area only, it will be time for the Canadian government to negotiate with that government for diplomatic recognition. But as long as the Taiwan government claims to be the government of China, which clearly it is not, it is impossible for the Canadian government to recognize two governments of China. If the government in Formosa should decide to restrict the area over which it claims sovereignty it would then be possible for the Canadian government to discuss with it the question of recognition and the exchange of diplomatic representatives.

I hope that since the government has established, or is in process of establishing, diplomatic relations with mainland China we will now take a much more forthright position with reference to mainland China's entry into the United Nations and her right to sit on the Security Council. I do not think that the United Nations will ever be an effective body for maintaining the rule of law in the world as long as it excludes a country which represents such a vast proportion of the world's population. To have a Security Council composed of the United States, the U.S.S.R., Great Britain, France and Taiwan is ridiculous. I hope that the Canadian government will show some courage at the United Nations by pressing for the admission of China to the United Nations and her right to take her seat on the Security Council of that body.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I find it absolutely incredible and upsetting to see the other parties applaud the statement in which the government announced the recognition of Communist China.

At this time when federal, provincial and municipal governments, as well as all police and armed forces must defend the fundamental freedoms of citizens, the federal government takes it upon itself to recognize a country whose government is composed of men much alike the FLQ members.

Is that logical? Everybody is scared! We are all afraid to leave the Parliament buildings, to go to Montreal or Quebec, because FLQ members could kidnap us and make us join Mr. Cross and Mr. Laporte. We hear the members of the NDP, the Progressive Conservative and the Liberal parties applaud the recognition of Communist China because it will promote the sale of a few bushels of wheat to the Chinese and cultural exchanges.

Have we so great a need for the Communist culture of the Chinese? For 21 years, we have recognized Nationalist China. Today, the minister informs us that Nationalist China no longer exists. We break off all relations with that country and we recognize one government only: the one that was forced on the Chinese people by the revolution.

In Canada, however, we want to pass a law to fight revolution. I hear some laughter; some think this is funny. Taken by the FLQ at 2 o'clock this afternoon, they will say: Try to free the political or ideological criminals that are being held in Montreal.

Mr. Speaker, we do not accept recognition of Red China.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Caouette: Let the government heed our words: we are against revolution. We are in favour of freedom for the human being. We shall not safeguard such freedom by granting recognition to those who spread discord and revolution throughout the world.

This is our position: freedom at home. Yes, but a sound one, one which will permit us to go ahead, to develop our country, not to give it up or to surrender it to people thirsting for blood and revolution in the world.

If we repudiate the FLQ in the province of Quebec, we have no right to recognize Chinese or Russian communists or any others.

I notice that you are about to call me to order, Mr. Speaker, but before resuming my seat, I should like to say that the government is making a mistake in asking us, on the one hand, to stop the FLQ from going wild and kidnapping people and, on the other, to recognize Communist China which is resorting to the same tactics: kidnappings, executions, revolt and selective assassination.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

• (11:30 a.m.)

[English]

ENVIRONMENTAL POLLUTION

ESTABLISHMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as hon. members know, there was a special committee in existence last session dealing with the question of pollution. I believe there has been discussion among members of the other parties and, with the consent of the House, I should like to move a motion that would have the effect of establishing this committee for this session. I move:

That a special committee of the House of Commons be established to investigate generally the problem of pollution in the waters, soil and air of Canada, and the plans of the federal government in relation thereto, with powers to report from time to time its observations, opinions and recommendations thereon;

That the committee be empowered to send for persons, papers, and records; to sit during sittings and adjournments of the House; to print from day to day such papers and evidence as may be ordered by the committee; to appoint, from among its members, such subcommittees as it may deem advisable or necessary, and to delegate thereto all or any of its powers, except the power to report directly to the House;

That the evidence adduced by the committee during the past session in relation thereto be referred to the said committee;

And that the members of the committee be Messrs. Aiken, Anderson, Beaudoin, Comeau, Deakon, Gibson, Givens, Haidasz, Harding, Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand), Lachance, and Sulatycky.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, now that it appears the government has adopted this outlaw as its own we are prepared to go along with the proposal.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We are happy to support this motion, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the President of the Privy Council. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

[Translation]

DOMINION BUREAU OF STATISTICS

TABLING OF QUESTIONNAIRES RELATING TO POPULATION, HOUSING AND AGRICULTURE

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I want to table copies in both English and French of the questionnaires to be used for the census on population, housing and agriculture which will be conducted by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics in 1971.

* * *

[English]

CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

MOTION TO APPOINT SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE

On the order:

Government Notices of Motions—The President of the Privy Council:

That a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons be appointed to examine and report upon proposals, made public, or which are from time to time made public by the Government of Canada, on a number of subjects related to the Constitution of Canada during the course of the comprehensive review of the Constitution of Canada, which review was agreed upon at the Constitutional Conference of the Prime Minister of Canada and the Premiers and Prime Ministers of the Provinces in February, 1968, and alternative proposals on the same subjects;

That the Committee have power to appoint, from among its members, such sub-committees as it may deem advisable or necessary;

That the Committee have power to sit during sittings and adjournments of the House of Commons;

That the Committee have power to report from time to time, to send for persons, papers, and records, and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the Committee;

That the Committee have power to adjourn from place to place within Canada;

That the quorum of the Committee be 17 members, whenever a vote, resolution or other decision is taken, so long as both Houses are represented and that the Joint Chairmen be authorized to hold meetings, to receive evidence and authorize the printing thereof, when 7 members are present so long as both Houses are represented;

That the Committee be empowered to retain the services of three specialists to assist it in its work; and that it also be empowered to retain the clerical and stenographic help deemed advisable by the Joint Chairmen;

That the papers and evidence received and taken on the subject in the preceding session be referred to the Committee and made part of the records thereof;

That the following Members be appointed to act on behalf of the Special Joint Committee, namely: Messrs Alexander, Allmand, Asselin, Breau, Brewin, Dinsdale, Fairweather, Fortin, Gibson, Hogarth, Hopkins, Lachance, MacGuigan, Marceau, McQuaid, Osler, Ouellet, Roberts, Rowland and Woolliams; and

That a Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours thereof.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, may I say that it has not been possible to clear up the disagreements or, more properly, reservations in connection with this motion. It may be possible to do so later. With your consent and the consent of the House I should like to suggest that the notice of motion be stood in its place until a later day.

Mr. Speaker: Does the motion stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion stands.

---

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

NATIONAL SECURITY

ABDUCTION OF SENIOR BRITISH TRADE COMMISSIONER AND QUEBEC MINISTER OF LABOUR—PRESENT SITUATION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether there is any further information he can give at this time with regard to the kidnapping cases? I ask this question in full knowledge of the possible delicacies of the position and responsibilities of the Prime Minister.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the way in which the question was asked and I shall attempt to answer it as best I can. I think the simplest thing to say is there is complete agreement between the government of Quebec and the government of Canada on the position taken by Premier Bourassa yesterday afternoon when he made it quite clear that the only thing that had to be done now was to ensure through negotiations that there be a mechanism established for the release of Mr. Cross and Mr. Laporte. This is the thing that has to be established at the outset. I might add that on the general topic I can only express an opinion. I do sometimes wish that the media—radio, television and press—would exercise a bit more restraint in talking about these problems. It is a mistake, I think, to give them publicity, which is the thing they hope for most. I also think it is a mistake to encourage the use of the term "political prisoners" for men who are bandits.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

WAGE INCREASE GUIDELINE—EFFECT OF SETTLEMENTS WITH POSTAL WORKERS AND CERTAIN SENIOR CIVIL SERVANTS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the settlement for the postal workers and now the decision handed down by an arbitrator with regard to certain senior civil servants, which provides for increases in salaries ranging from 13 per cent to 15 per cent, may I ask the government whether this means the government has now abandoned the 6 per cent wage guideline as being unworkable and ineffective?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the guideline was introduced as just that, a guideline. In answer to my hon. friend's question I should like to say that, in the opinion of the government at least, unless labour and income settlements generally attain a lower level than that at which they have been running in current months and over the past year or so the long-run battle against inflation is a long way from won because these costs are bound to build themselves back into the cost structure of the economy.

CRITICISMS BY CHAIRMAN OF PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Do the statements made by Dr. Young, the chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission, having to do with his criticism of the business community's general lack of willingness to face up to strikes and his criticism of Steinberg's for increasing wages despite the assurance of that firm that this meant no increase in prices, represent government policy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as is well known, the setting up of the commission is government policy. I do not know of any mechanism whereby the commission checks its statements with the government before they are made on matters such as the hon. member just quoted. Therefore they cannot be said to be government policy because they were not devised by the government.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In view of the fact that Dr. Young is the chairman of a commission set up by the government and in view of the fact that his attacks have been almost solely on wage and salary increases, accompanied by a significant silence about increases in the profits of the chartered banks, does the Prime Minister not consider that the effectiveness of the chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission has come to an end?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will recognize the Leader of the Opposition in a moment, but I suggest to the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands that his question is in the form of an argument and is not acceptable in those terms.

CONTINUATION OF POLICY OF RESTRAINT AND WAGE INCREASE GUIDELINE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister of Finance tell the House whether it is going to be the policy of government to continue the policy of restraint and the 6 per cent guideline? Is it going to continue to be the policy of the government to follow this approach in the fight against inflation?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will be speaking at some length on this matter later this day.

* * *

PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION

METHOD OF PROVIDING FOR PAYMENT OF INCREASED COST

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the President of the Treasury Board. My question relates to the Prices and Incomes Commission. Is the government drawing on the contingency fund to pay the increased cost of the Prices and Incomes Commission or will there be a supplementary estimate which will be submitted to Parliament?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, in so far as additional funds beyond those provided in the main estimates will be needed, there will be a supplementary estimate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the element of policy involved in this, will that estimate be submitted to the House of Commons at an early date?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, all supplementary estimates are submitted to the House of Commons.

Mr. Baldwin: Not willingly.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Will this be done at an early date?

* * *

[Translation]

POST OFFICE

MONTREAL—DISCUSSIONS WITH FORMER EMPLOYEES OF G. LAPALME INCORPORATED

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister in charge of the Post Office.

Can the minister tell us whether negotiations with the former employees of G. LaPalme Inc. of Montreal have come to an end, or whether he will have other meetings with the representatives of these people who have been the victims of their own union?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, first I want to say that the meetings I have had with the employees of G. LaPalme Inc. took place after their statement that they have had nothing to do with the kidnappings of hostages. My final meeting is scheduled for 3 p.m. today.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[English]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

COMMUTING OF DEATH SENTENCES FOR MURDER OF POLICEMEN

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address this question to the Minister of Justice or the Solicitor General but in their absence may I put it to the Prime Minister. Is it the government's policy, which seems to be established now because of two previous cases, to exercise in all cases the Royal prerogative and commute all death sentences of persons charged and convicted of the murder of policeofficers, having regard to the present legislation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, all cases are decided on an individual basis by cabinet and it would be a mistake to say that there is a policy which applies in advance to all cases. Of course the law itself is to be reviewed by the House of Commons at the expiration of five years.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, in view of the seriousness of what has occurred recently in western Canada and elsewhere, would the Prime Minister agree that this is the proper and appropriate time for the Minister of Justice or the Solicitor General to make a report, particularly in view of the fact that murder has increased by 55 per cent in Canada?

Mr. Trudeau: I have had a report on this particular case from the Solicitor General, Mr. Speaker. At this time there is nothing to announce except that the search is being continued and that the RCMP are being assisted by the armed forces. I will bring the suggestion of the hon. member to the attention of the minister and if he has anything to add he will do so.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA—CANADIAN SUPPORT FOR ADMISSION TO UNITED NATIONS

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, in view of the announcement just made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs regarding the agreement of the governments of Canada and the People's Republic of China on the establishment of diplomatic relations I have a twofold question. What commitment has the government of Canada given to the government in Peking regarding sponsoring or supporting the admission of that country into the United Nations? Second, has Canada in her negotiations with the Peking government determined whether or not that government will support the charter of the United Nations and particularly the declaration of human rights?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, during the negotiations I said publicly in this House and elsewhere, and the same position was stated to the representatives of the People's Republic of China in Stockholm, that if we establish diplomatic relations with the People's Republic of China as the government of China it would, of course, be quite consistent and to be expected that we would support that government in the occupation of the China seat.

Mr. Thompson: Could I have an answer to the second question regarding whether or not the government of Peking will pledge its support of the charter of the United Nations and the declaration of human rights?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I should assume that if the government of the People's Republic of China wishes to occupy the seat of China in the United Nations it would at that time be declaring its support for the charter.

* * *

TAXATION

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION BASED ON WHITE PAPER ON REFORM

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance in respect of the timetable for the introduction of income tax changes arising out of the white paper on taxation. In view of the indefinite reference to the timing of legislation in the Speech from the Throne, can the minister assure the House that such legislation will be introduced during the current session and that it is the intention of the government to proceed with legislative enactments at the current session?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

MANPOWER

NEWS RELEASE INDICATING SUMMER EMPLOYMENT FOR CANADIAN STUDENTS IN GERMANY IN 1971

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration concerning a news release, which I believe all hon. members received over the weekend from an organization known as Student Employment Europe, under the heading "5000 Canadian students to work in Germany summer 1971". Was this document prepared with the co-operation of the minister's department and is his department in fact calling upon West Germany to aid Canada's faltering student employment program?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member will have noticed as well a recent press release about the very great effort which was made this past year in connection with the employment of students for the summer; that general effort will, of course, be extended and strengthened. So far as the particular news release is concerned, I should like to take the question as notice.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister would look into the situation surrounding the delivery of this document which came without envelope and appeared to many of us to be one of the multitudinous outpourings from the minister's department?

STUDENT SUMMER EMPLOYMENT—ABILITY TO CONTINUE EDUCATION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration whether any systematic canvass is being made by the federal government in co-operation with the provinces regarding the position of students at this time of the year following the summer, for example, as to how many have had to drop out of university or high school because of employment difficulties during the summer? Is any such systematic canvass being made by the minister or his department?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, a survey is under way of the situation in regard to students and the effectiveness of employment programs this past summer.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, would the minister answer the question I asked him, whether a systematic canvass is being made as to the effect on these students? I did not ask him about the success of his program but the state today of students as a result of this summer's difficulties?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I thought I had answered the question and if I should say in addition to the Leader of the Official Opposition that the study is systematic I would be glad to do so.

[Later:]

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I wonder if I may ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, in line with the questions asked by my leader, whether there is any active and real negotiation between the provinces and the federal government with regard to extending university facilities which are sadly overcrowded in all provinces in Canada today?

Mr. Lang: That question goes beyond the purview of the Department of Manpower and Immigration. The question of education of course falls principally within the scope of the provincial governments, as I am sure the hon. member knows.

* * *

[Translation]

INDIAN AFFAIRS

NORTHERN QUEBEC—TRANSFER OF ESKIMOS TO PROVINCIAL JURISDICTION

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Could he tell us whether steps have been taken for a jurisdictional transfer in New Quebec and whether he anticipates a settlement in the near future, particularly in the field of education?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, discussions are still going on with Quebec authorities and I had the opportunity to meet with the Minister of Natural Resources two weeks ago in this regard. It is a very intricate problem as the Eskimos have expressed their opinion very clearly and discussions are still going on with them and with the provincial authorities. We hope to find an area of agreement satisfactory to the three parties concerned.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister.

Could the construction of a million-dollar school at Fort George be interpreted as the desire of the federal government to transfer the jurisdiction in education to the provincial government of Quebec?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the Eskimo population should not be deprived of education facilities because some people are quarrelling. We are taking our responsibilities in order to offer those Eskimos and those Indians the best education opportunities.

[English]

RESOLUTE BAY—USE OF NATIVE LABOUR ON LOCAL PROJECTS

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I had intended to ask the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development a supplementary question, but I will forgo that and instead ask the minister directly whether he is aware of a preposterous situation whereby Department of Transport officials at Resolute Bay in the Northwest Territories, upon briefing Canadian and U.S. businessmen intending to bid on a particular five-year contract for catering and the like, have advised private industry at that Arctic community and other posts not to consider native labour for local projects and to regard available Eskimos as occasional help? In light of previous declarations by the government that it had a favourable approach to promoting the employment of Indians and Eskimos, would the minister look into this matter and report to the House at an early date?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Yes, Mr. Speaker, and I really cannot understand that attitude. This is not official government policy. On various occasions we have said that, like the government, the private sector has to make special efforts in order to provide the Eskimos and the Indians of that region with regular jobs.

* * *

[English]

NATIONAL SECURITY

MOVEMENT OF TROOPS INTO OTTAWA—NUMBER AND USE

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): My question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. In light of the highly sensational and widely varying reports with regard to the bringing of additional troops into Ottawa and their use, would the minister advise the House just what is the situation, what use will be made of these troops and how many were brought in?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the troops were brought in at the request of the security forces, principally the RCMP, to supplement the police resources, which have been under very considerable strain, for the purpose of the protection of individuals and property. I think it would be undesirable to indicate either the specific roles or the number of troops in order to preserve the basic security involved.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Is the purpose to supplement the police forces or are these troops to take on additional duties that the police forces would not normally fulfil?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I do not think the hon. member is correct in his final statement. As I said, the forces are to supplement the police authorities.

* * *

UNITED NATIONS

SOUTH AFRICA—CANADIAN ABSTENTION ON ARMS EMBARGO RESOLUTIONS—DECISION ON SPARE PARTS

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): My question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Was it upon his explicit instructions that the Canadian delegation at the United Nations abstained in the vote on a resolution in the special political committee calling for the adherence of all states to an arms embargo against South Africa?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Obviously the delegation acts on my instructions.

Mr. Rowland: Would the minister indicate to the House when we might expect a cabinet decision upon the question of shipment or spare parts to the Union of South Africa in light of the Security Council and special committee resolutions, and would he indicate whether, once that decision is made, we may expect a statement in the House?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I am very happy that the hon. member has drawn attention to the reason for our abstention which is that we have not yet reached a decision on the question of spare parts. I hope a decision will be reached soon.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

INTERPROVINCIAL MARKETING—REQUEST FOR REFERENCE TO SUPREME COURT—INTERVENTION IN CASE BEFORE QUEBEC COURT

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Now that the province of Manitoba has decided to intervene in the proceedings involving the validity of regulations in Quebec prohibiting the importation of agricultural products, will the minister indicate to the House whether or not the government of Canada will be represented by counsel at those proceedings? Alternatively, will he discuss with the Minister of Justice the necessity of proceeding directly to the Supreme Court and securing a speedy decision on this issue as was done in the breathalyzer case?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Without reviving all of the points I have raised in reply to the hon. member's previous questions on the same subject, I would like to say that I have discussed this matter and will do so again with the Minister of Justice in view of the new developments. But I have to say that I do not believe that a satisfactory solution to the whole problem can be reached as expeditiously through that route as through the one I indicated to the House some time ago.

Mr. Baldwin: You and I are not on the same wavelength.

* * *

FISHERIES

ATLANTIC SALMON—DISCUSSIONS WITH DENMARK RESPECTING CONSERVATION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. Did discussions take place with the government of Denmark at the recent meetings held in Copenhagen, referred to in a press release issued by the minister's office today, regarding the conservation of Atlantic salmon? If no agreement was reached, is the minister now prepared to recommend to his cabinet colleagues economic sanctions against Denmark?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): I will certainly continue to give that matter consideration.

Mr. McGrath: Perhaps the minister might answer my question before he starts considering it. The question was specifically whether the government discussed with the government of Denmark at the meetings held in Copenhagen recently the question of the conservation of Atlantic salmon and the harvesting of that species by Denmark which is threatening its very survival?

Mr. Davis: We had discussions in Ottawa with the Minister of Fisheries from Denmark late in the spring. I am not aware of any recent discussions with Denmark on the subject of fishing for salmon in the Atlantic.

* * *

PESTICIDES

DDD—REASON FOR ONE-YEAR EXTENSION ON USE—NOTIFICATION OF CHANGES

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I have a question on a matter which has been previously discussed. In view of the reported decision by the federal Department of Agriculture to extend for one year the use of the pesticide DDD, which was to be banned as of January 1, 1971, can the minister inform the House whether the department received any information indicating that this chemical has become less dangerous and less a health hazard which could justify such a decision?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I do not think that this is the reason in the context in which the question was asked. As was pointed out, there was a 90 per cent curb on the purposes for which DDD could be used, but a condition was attached that satisfactory alternative chemicals would be available for some of the purposes for which that chemical had been banned. However, I will check into the situation and give a more specific reply to the question tomorrow.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture. Can the minister say why general notices of changes will be sent out by private letters to chemical manufacturers and not be announced by public notices? How will the public know of any general notices of changes?

Mr. Olson: I think it is done by both routes, although I presume that the private letters that go to industry are of a more technical nature giving details respecting the technology that is involved in the statements. I do not believe there is any attempt to refrain from notifying the public in general terms.

* * *

GRAIN

LOCAL ELEVATOR CONGESTION—AVAILABILITY OF BOXCARS

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): I wish to direct my question to the minister responsible to the House for the Canadian Wheat Board. In view of the fact that farmers are unable to deliver their prescribed quotas at the present time owing to congestion in the local elevators, what assurance can the minister give the House that boxcars will be available to transport the amount of grain that he professes to have sold?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The program for the very heavy deliveries of grain is going ahead very well. There is congestion in some elevators as a result of some heavy deliveries on the quotas which have been opened fairly wide, and this congestion is being relieved as rapidly as possible. Certainly it is simply a matter of time until cars arrive to provide space in elevators for the delivery of these quotas. Of course in the meantime the farmers have the cash advance program available to tide them over.

* * *

[Translation]

AGRICULTURE

IMPORTATION OF NEW ZEALAND BUTTER

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Can the minister tell the House whether Canada received a certain amount of butter from New Zealand this summer?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): No, I do not believe so, Mr. Speaker. I will check to see, but as far as I know no import permits have been issued since September, 1968, more than two years ago.

* * *

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

BANKS ISLAND—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF OIL EXPLORATION AGREEMENTS

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development arising out of the matter of oil exploration on Banks Island in the Canadian north. Will he table in the House any memoranda of agreements between the government and the Eskimo people, between the government and the oil companies or between the Eskimo people and the oil companies, so that we may fully understand what decision has been arrived at in connection with this exploration?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I think I could table the text of the agreement between the companies and the government, agreement which has been communicated to the Eskimos' lawyer in Banks Island and whose contents was discussed with the Eskimos a few weeks ago in the presence of representatives from the government and the companies.

[English]

Mr. Barnett: As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the minister to answer my original question. Will he table these documents in the House so that members can examine them?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to table the documents we have but I do not know if they are available right now. I am not aware whether they have been returned to me by those who signed them.

BAFFIN ISLAND—PROPOSED RE-OPENING OF IRON MINES —CONSULTATION WITH NATIVE PEOPLE

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the minister with reference to a question I put to him the other day about the possible re-opening of iron ore mines on Baffin Island and the negotiations going on with a consortium of South African and American companies. Have there been any consultations with the native population in that area in order to protect their aboriginal rights in this matter?

Inquiries of the Ministry

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, this question is still at the preliminary stage. This is the situation: Very large deposits of iron ore have been discovered and we are presently studying the possibility of working these deposits to provide a large number of jobs for the Eskimo population of the area. However, we are not yet in a position to report on this development.

The Eskimos are aware of the possibilities of this area and we certainly will be able to discuss with them, during negotiations, the degree of their participation in this development.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Richmond.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): As a further supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question just asked by the hon. member was not really supplementary to the preceding one, and the Chair has recognized the hon. member for Richmond. I will return to the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands in a moment.

[Later:]

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development whether he can give the House the assurance that no final agreement will be entered into with the consortium of South African and American corporations to which I referred until there has been full consultation with the native people with respect to their aboriginal rights?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, we are aware that this will have important implications for the Eskimos, and I can assure the House that we shall in due course discuss with them all the aspects of the problem, more specifically the issue foremost in my mind: to make sure that Eskimos will be hired and will get all the education and the training needed to do an efficient job.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

STUDY OF BILL C-197

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Privy Council.

As the debate on Bill C-197 was adjourned at the close of the last session a few days ago, would the President of the Privy Council inform the House whether the Standing Committee on Agriculture will continue its study of this bill so that it may be referred back to the House?

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is on the list of bills. Just how it will be advanced and when, I will disclose later.

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

VETERANS AFFAIRS

CLOSING OF LONDON, ENGLAND, OFFICE—CONTINUATION OF SERVICE

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the decision to close the DVA office in London, England, would the minister advise what continuing service will be provided for the many Canadian veterans who receive assistance and are resident in England, and what is being done to reassign the staff employed there?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, over the years our personnel in the London office has been gradually diminishing, corresponding with the reduced number of our veterans there, but I wish to assure the hon. member that our veterans are still being served with the same zeal and efficiency as before.

* * *

TRADE

PROPOSED ENLARGEMENT OF EUROPEAN COMMON MARKET—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce whether at a very early date, perhaps in the throne speech debate today, he intends to make a statement with regard to the enlargement of the European Common Market that is now under consideration, and further, whether he intends to make a statement as to the views he expressed abroad with regard to some plan he has in mind as to the reference of any agreement between Great Britain and the EEC to some international organization?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I hope to do that soon. I was expecting to be challenged by what the Leader of the Opposition had to say on this subject in his speech on Friday last, but I must admit I was not. I was hoping he would provoke me into entering the debate but there was not much in what he said on the subject. However, I will try to be provoked just the same.

Mr. Stanfield: May I point out to the hon. gentleman in the same spirit, Mr. Speaker, that, whatever importance he may attach to my views, this is a very important question, and I hope he will have something important to say on this subject inasmuch as no spokesman for the government has done so to date.

* * *

AIR TRANSPORT

KOOTENAY WEST—ALLEGED UNSATISFACTORY SERVICE BY PACIFIC WESTERN AIRLINES

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport or in his absence for his Parliamentary Secretary. In view of the completely unsatisfactory service now provided by Pacific Western Airlines in Kootenay West after its recent purchase of B.C. Airlines, would the minister personally investigate the existing service with a view to having it improved, as was promised to the citizens of the area at an Air Transport Committee hearing in Castlegar several months ago?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): In the absence of the minister, Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this question as notice.

Mr. Harding: Would the minister also check immediately the reasons for PWA cancelling the former Saturday and Sunday air link between Castlegar and Calgary via Cranbrook?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that his supplementary question should normally be placed on the order paper or discussed at the time of adjournment, but since it is supplementary to a previous question to which the Parliamentary Secretary has undertaken to give a reply it has been accepted along with the main question.

* * *

RESEARCH

POLICY RESPECTING GRANTS TO FOREIGN-OWNED CANADIAN COMPANIES

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Following the tabling last week of the answer to a question of mine, which shows that 70 per cent of all federal government non-repayable financial grants for scientific research and development during the years 1965 to 1969 were awarded to foreign-owned firms, could the minister advise the House whether his department has now begun a reassessment of its scientific grant programs with a view to bringing about a change so that most grants will go to Canadian-owned companies?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we do not discriminate in the support that my department gives to research and development. We give it wherever it is being done when it is in the Canadian interest, even when it is being done by foreign-owned companies in Canada. The proviso, of course, is that such research will be used in Canada. That is how the program is being administered.

* * *

MANPOWER

PROVISION OF EMPLOYMENT FOR WORKERS DISPLACED BY PLANT SHUTDOWNS

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Has the minister made any approach to his colleague, the Minister of Labour, with respect to a method of providing new jobs for workers affected by permanent plant shutdowns such as the Garden City Paper Mill at St. Catharines, Ontario, where 150 workers lost their jobs forever?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, my colleague and I have not discussed this specific issue. The departments, of course, frequently discuss the general issue.

* * *

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed, from Friday, October 9, consideration of the motion of Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Stanfield (p. 29), and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands) (p. 41).

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, today at this time it is difficult to come to grips in this speech of mine with the economic problems that face our people. It is also difficult at a time when it would appear that the security and very foundation of our nation are being somewhat shaken. At the outset may I say to the government that now is the time to support to the fullest our administrative personnel and our officers so that law and order can and will be maintained in this nation in the future as it has been in the past.

I might say as an aside that I am confident, and I am sure all members will agree with me, that the majority, more than 99 per cent, of the citizens of Canada, because of being steeped in the traditions of this nation have confidence that we can return soon, I hope, to normalcy. There is an emotional temper afoot. No one can deny that. We saw this today in the question of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and in the Prime Minister's answer to the Leader of the Opposition. I felt that the question and the statement made fitted the responsibility of Parliament in this regard at this time. When one speaks of the emotional temper afoot one cannot help but think of the words of the late president Franklin D. Roosevelt in a statement he made at a time when violence was afoot throughout the world. It is so well put together that it became almost a prayer. This is what he said:

> Grant us brotherhood, not only for this day but for all our years—a brotherhood not of words but of acts and deeds. We are all of us children of earth—grant us that simple knowledge. If our brothers are oppressed, then we are oppressed, If they hunger, we hunger. If their freedom is taken away, our freedom is not secure.
>
> Grant us the common faith that man shall know bread and peace—that he shall know justice and righteousness, freedom and security, an equal opportunity and an equal chance to do his best, not only in our own lands, but throughout the world. And in that faith let us march toward the clean world our hands can make.

Those words have real meaning at this time when our nation is under so much stress.

In proceeding to the meat of my address I would ask this question: What did the Speech from the Throne and the Prime Minister's message contain relating to the matters before the nation so far as this House is concerned? The two speeches reminded me of a university graduate delivering at the request of the faculty a valediction. You know, a valediction is given when a graduate is bidding farewell to the students. The Prime Minister has placed himself in that position. If I might paraphrase, this is what the Prime Minister said: I as Prime Minister have failed you; my government has failed, the just society I promised you was a fake, a fraud; the just society is a far away ideal, a new heaven. I could not help but think that the Leader of the New Democratic Party touched on something very important at that time. To paraphrase the Prime Minister again he said that it is a far away ideal, a new heaven but that he has lost faith. He said in effect that there is no heaven, injustice is everywhere, he cannot do anything about it and that we are all going to—I cannot mention the place opposite heaven. That is what he said.

The two speeches were made up of mere magical phrases. In a nutshell, the Prime Minister's speech that was read can be classified as gobbledygook. The playboy and world traveller has a sense of his own writing, and indeed reading, and a personal affection for beautiful words because he bewailed the mammoth string of wooden clichés which he has used so often to preach his propaganda and dogma about what his ideal is. The two speeches will long be remembered for their hollowness in respect of any positive suggestions to curb the ever-spiralling cost of living which is affecting Canadians at all levels and in respect of a remedy to work out any reasonable solution to the problem of disputes between labour and management.

If I might digress at this point I would say that the western farmer is in trouble today because the government failed to measure up to its responsibilities in the dispute between labour and management and this has made it difficult for grain to be moved to the ports and markets. I would suggest this involves other things such as the postal strike and so on. Then there is the problem of social need in respect of housing, the crying need to solve air, water and noise pollution as well as the need for programs to guarantee job security and retraining and, above all, the need to re-establish respect for law and order.

It seems to me that the Trudeau government, which Canadians in 1968 fondly hoped would carve out and create a just society for all Canadians, has reduced this nation to a mere second-rate power among the smaller nations of the world, and has stripped us of our domestic prosperity, unity and dignity. It has successfully eroded our international respect abroad, responsibility and, indeed, our image. However, in 1972 when the election rolls around this all-powerful, absolute, cruel and heartless government will be defeated at the polls. Senator Cameron may have put his finger on the situation. He is a Liberal senator in the other place. He said recently that if an election were held in Canada at the present time not one federal Liberal would be elected west of the Great Lakes. I think that if he took a look at the situation he would say the same thing in respect of Liberals even east of the Great Lakes. The people are fed up with this government.

This government has neglected the cities. I could carry on in this vein. The two speeches, however, rang out with hollowness. They lacked any content. They were both rhetorical incantations. The verse of the government contains only words and not deeds.

Let us for a moment review the platitudes and the clichés in the Prime Minister's speech, let alone in the Speech from the Throne, in which he attacked us and our leader. The Prime Minister started off in his usual gracious manner. He said he had a hunch that the leaders of all parties, particularly the Official Opposition, would be critical of the Speech from the Throne. Why? Because he must have known before the speech was delivered that it was a weak effort, strong in language but weak in deeds. This is really the kind of government we have today. No one needs to exercise his political capacity or sagacity to reach that conclusion.

What did the Prime Minister say about foreign ownership of Canadian industries which is an important problem today? He attacked the position taken by our leader and the leader of the New Democratic Party. This is a typical statement by the Prime Minister. Perhaps I might paraphrase what he said: We on this side have said, through the offices of a minister reporting to cabinet, that we are in the process of trying to enunciate government policy in this important area in order to avoid a pragmatic or ad hoc approach, but we knew we did not have the support of the opposition on this.

During the election the Prime Minister preached strong nationalism and the taking over by Canada of foreign investments. The moment an election is over there is one thing we can always rely on a Liberal Prime Minister doing. When the election is over, what do they do? They rush to the United States, cap in hand, to get another big, fat loan, as the government of Quebec did and as this government will do. Not only does that aggravate our problems but it mortgages the future of Canadian generations yet unborn through foreign investments and increases Canada's national debt. That is kind of inconsistent. The Prime Minister talks about inconsistencies, yet he preaches one thing on the hustings and does another.

• (12:20 p.m.)

Of course, one need not go far to find the answer for this. One only needs to read what was printed in Le Devoir in February, 1963. There the Prime Minister wrote about liberal philosophy. I have quoted these words before, and it is time to repeat them, because they place many things in their proper perspective. The article is headed, "Pearson, or the Abdication of the Spirit, by Pierre Elliott-Trudeau". At page 14 of the article the following appears, "Thus, the political philosophy of the Liberal party is simplicity itself." That is what he said, and it is easy to understand. He goes on to say, "Say anything, think anything you like. But put us in power, because we are best fitted to govern."

When he stepped into the leadership of the Liberal party he talked of a just society. But that was merely a vague promise of something to come in the future, if we ever get there. That was merely stalling, because nothing is being done.

Let me go to another subject. What does the Prime Minister say about youth? He said that Canada is a young country. Those are beautiful words. He also said that it is in the youth of our country that we seek our future. Well, any Prime Minister could have said that. We all agree with those words. Then he went on to say:

> To the youth the past is of relatively little consequence: their lives are still to be lived.
>
> A poet once wrote that "a land without ruins is a land without memories." Our lack of ruins is in some ways a tribute to our ability in the past to adapt to change.

There is one truism about this statement: the Prime Minister has left the country in ruins. What has the government done for the youth of this country or for youth in general—that is what I ask—except mimic their ways and dress? That is something any man of 50 can accomplish. But that is not what our youth are looking for.

I have asked questions on this subject. The two ministers, the Solicitor General (Mr. McIlraith) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), have failed to reform our laws that affect our youth. I have brought before this House several times a bill to amend the Criminal Code, because the code says that any person of seven or over who is competent to know the nature and consequences of a criminal act may be convicted of a crime. The government has managed to build an unenviable record. Not since confederation have such claims been made for a just society and administration of justice. We have incarcerated, during the period this government has been in office, more young men and women in our country that at any time since confederation. Is this a record to be proud of? Is this what the government is doing to youth? Actually, this government is good at bringing about highs—high unemployment, high interest rates, high rates of incarceration and high murder rates. The murder rate in Canada has gone up by 55 per cent. This is the government's record and, while intelligent men and women are placed out of sight and out of mind in penitentiaries, the drug problem continues to grow.

The research centres and the rehabilitation centres recommended by the LeDain Commission have been and are still being ignored. They ought to be set up immediately. In liaison with the provinces, the government ought to run such centres. Their purpose is good, for they would explode the drug fictions and make sure that youth becomes more knowledgeable about the use or misuse of non-medical drugs. Words are not enough. Let us have some deeds.

It is two years since this government took office and since the members of the Privy Council, took up their jobs as the executives of Canada. And what does the government say about all these matters? In its own defence the government blames the courts; and the courts, in their own defence—actually the courts have no method of speaking effectively—say that Parliament made the law. Parliament has tried to get these well spoken script readers to change the law, but we have only had more scripts. Again, we have had words but not deeds. Let me repeat: the government blames the courts and the courts blame Parliament. They say that Parliament passes the laws, and that they must be enforced. What is the government? It is really a sort of classical university unto itself. That is what it is.

This past summer I saw some of the realities of our country. As I drove from Ottawa to Calgary on that great No. 1 trans-Canada highway, I saw young people hitchhiking. This summer more young people in Canada roamed and hitchhiked across the country than ever before. Never before have we seen young men and women hitchhiking across this country as we did this past summer. What were they looking for?

Mr. Crouse: Work.

Mr. Woolliams: Yes. They were looking for work and opportunity, and they found no work and no opportunity. They were made promises, but few were kept. On this side of the House we begged the government for a positive program to help them. We begged the government to help those graduating from high schools or universities to find employment and opportunity. Few got work. The government did little. Moreover, it destroyed the morale of our armed forces and even destroyed the militia. Then it tried to establish a playboy army by paying youth to play at soldiering while at the same time we put in mothballs $285 million worth of CF-5 aircraft. Again, there were words but no action.

Mr. Baldwin: Just look at the Prime Minister's staff.

Mr. Woolliams: Yes. Just look at the staff. There is no policy or plan to assist our youth to get an education or to obtain job retraining. While the Prime Minister permits the dissipation of our best resource, youth, unemployment grows and grows among young people. We hold a record in this regard and then he says, "Canada stands as one of the most happy and enviable facts of the times." I do not think he can take credit for all that has happened in this country since confederation. He went on to say:

> Because of all this, our country can be looked upon as a global environment, as an environment exceptionally favourable to the fullness of human development.

When young people leave high school and university and cannot find jobs and when young people cannot enter university because of lack of money, are we allowing them to develop? Let me ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang), when they are on the list of the unemployed, are they developing? So I say to the government that this is a time for decision and not a time for rhetorical phrases and procrastination. It is a time for an energizing performance. It is not a time for vacillation. We are living in important times. It is time to restore law and order. It is time to maintain our principles and bring about justice and liberty in the true sense of the word. It is not a time for tergiversation. Above all, it is a time for straight talk and not for political verbicide and waffling. The Prime Minister has said:

> Some are unable to maintain such a standard because of a lack of education or an absence of the skills necessary in today's world; others are unable to stretch their fixed incomes to meet the increased costs of necessities; still others are temporarily without employment through no fault of their own.

Let me ask four questions. What aggravated and accelerated the high cost of living? The government's policies did. Who brought in nineteenth century economic methods to cure inflation? The Prime Minister did. Who aggravated unemployment and dumped people out of work on the unemployment market? The Prime Minister did. Who placed the burden on the underprivileged and on those living below the poverty line in Canada? The Liberal government did.

• (12.30 p.m.)

The Prime Minister says justice will be obtained when the needs of everyone are satisfied. What have you when most things have been ignored, have deteriorated and all are dissatisfied? The Prime Minister stated in his speech in the debate on the Speech from the Throne, as recorded at page 34 of Hansard:

> There is justice when everyone's essential needs are satisfied. This implies a reasonable access for all to the goods owned and produced by the country. Now, work is the normal mode of access to the goods on which life depends; it therefore cannot be disassociated from the right to live.

Has the high cost of living brought justice to the old age pensioners or the veterans? Never have they been in such a cost squeeze. Who has been satisfied by throwing people out of work and reducing the low income pensioners and others to destitution? Nobody. Is that the just society?

My charge against this government is that economic justice is rationed. When justice is rationed, how can the ideal of the just society be even a vision let alone a realization? The Prime Minister promised a heaven. He has lost his faith. Now we are left to believe in that other place where all people are suffering.

What about his brave words regarding pollution? The Prime Minister has talked about the ability to set up a number of laws to deal with pollution. For two years I have been raising a question in this House. I use this only as an example. Each year one and a half million visit Banff national park. Raw sewage from the government administrative offices and the government's facilities which they supply during the months of June, July, August and September is being poured into the beautiful, colourful and clean Bow River which crosses Alberta and joins up with the Saskatchewan River and eventually flows into Lake Winnipeg. This is because the government is expropriating practically all free enterprise except the big corporations. Imperial Oil and Canadian Pacific Railway can move in, but the little man is out. While the government talks about doing something concerning pollution, they are not even cleaning up their own household. It is a speech of words and no deeds.

The situation is so bad on the Bow River that 60 miles upstream cattle have died from the pollution caused by this government that talks about fighting the pollution of air, water and noise. The government has now set up a committee. That will mean another delay. I hope my expression will be parliamentary when I say that when I listen to their story about pollution I think, what bloody rot!

What about the cities? The Prime Minister blames the housing crisis on the framework of the Canadian constitution. He says that according to the constitution we cannot rush into the situation like a bull in a china shop. He seems to be out of date. The late Bob Winters started a mammoth housing project after World War II. That was the beginning of a national housing scheme which built houses across this nation and which started suburbia. In a period of 18 months the Diefenbaker government poured $700 million into housing. This was in 1957 and 1958. This would be a lot more today if we compare the present proportion of our budget. While we now have a $13 billion budget, in those days the budget was only $5 billion or $6 billion. If the late Robert Winters was able to do so much when he was the cabinet minister in charge of housing, why cannot the Prime Minister do the same as we move into the seventies?

What we need is a housing program that will rock this nation, one that will work for the average man. Unless a person earns $8,000 to $12,000 he cannot purchase a house in the Montreal, Winnipeg, Calgary or Vancouver areas. This is for the rich. There is nothing for the poor. That is the just society. Is that the far-away ideal we heard about during the election campaign?

An hon. Member: And Toronto.

Mr. Woolliams: I agree with the hon. member. I am glad to see the Liberals are aware of the situation in Toronto. We now have good representation from Toronto. After the next election we will have many more members because the people in that area are fed up.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: The late Premier Johnson of Quebec saw infiltrating revolutionary forces in his province. He saw revolutionary forces and crime syndicates in Montreal, Winnipeg, Calgary, Vancouver and Toronto. He asked the federal government to please set up a royal commission to tabulate how those people were working, the countries from which they were infiltrating and who they were working with. Had this been done we would today have the evidence to lay before the administrative and police officers as well as the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice. We would be able to handle the FLQ problem. While we asked for that action for two long years the government said, "Oh, we don't need it". We wonder how close they are to this situation when they refuse to find out the facts and the evidence.

The Prime Minister will not yield to the request of the opposition to investigate syndicated crime in our urban centres. All words, no action! Appeasement has never promoted lasting peace. Understanding the problem will achieve a solution, if we act.

The greatest injustice done by this government to any class of people outside of the average men in the urban centres is the injustice that has been done to the treaty Indians. Nothing is more important to a treaty Indian than his treaties. This is the cry of his generation. Here lies the cultural gap between the now white generation and the now red generation, and I am talking about the colour in a colloquial sense and not in a philosophical sense.

Before the Indian Act is repealed, before the dictatorial, bureaucratic, unsympathetic white paper is implemented, the treaty rights concerning the Indians' land, culture, way of life and inalienable rights, as guaranteed, must be defined, clarified and judicially defined. Therefore this government, as was promised by the Pearson government and died on the order paper when we were defeated as a government, should immediately set up an Indian commission and administrative board with all the necessary informalities so that evidence judicially admissible or inadmissible should be made admissible before this board in order that this board can ascertain the treaty rights of those Indians and so that the proper facts and documentation which are presently denied by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development can be ascertained. This board must be armed with the proper powers to subpoena witnesses, hear evidence and force the production of documentation which is being denied the Indians. The most skilful lawyers and advisers should be placed at the disposal of the Indians.

When members on this side of the House make the positive suggestion that the government hire and pay these people to ascertain those rights, the government says it is not necessary. For ten years a case has been pending in the Exchequer Court involving the Blackfoot reservation Indians who are asking for the establishment of their treaty rights. They are also asking for compensation for land abuse and expropriation. For ten long years that case has laid idle. This is not because the court will not hear the case but because the Indians do not have a lawyer. One lawyer undertook to act in connection with the petition. Then he wrote to the Department of Indian Affairs asking whether he could receive at least his expenses. But he got no answer, no co-operation. Is this the just society? It is just in words, but not in deeds. Until we have achieved this promise of legal assistance, this nation can never achieve the destiny visualized and expected by our forefathers, nor can we as Canadians point a finger at other nations, whether they be the United States of America or the countries in Africa, as to their rationing of justice.

• (12:40 p.m.)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Does the House give unanimous consent for the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Woolliams: I have only a few more remarks to make. I shall not abuse the courtesy of the House. But I will say this. The constitution has guaranteed the Indians their rights, if rights they are—I could elaborate on this theme if I had time. Those rights arose because of treaties made in the name of the Crown. The terms of the constitution placed the Indians under federal jurisdiction. An attempt is now being made to assign this responsibility to the provinces as part of an effort by the government to evade its full responsibility. It is being done in the name of justice and, we are told, following consultation. What really happened? They hired a few Indians on the breadline to go out and try to sell this program.

But let me ask these questions. What Indian has asked for land ownership which would result in provincial taxation of Indian reservations? What Indian has asked that the Canadian constitution be changed to remove any reference to Indians or Indian lands? What Indian has asked that treaties be brought to an end? What group of Indians has asked the government to exclude from its special consideration half of the Indian population in Canada? Mr. Speaker, these questions are self-answered. No Indians have asked for these things. Yet this policy is being rammed down their throats.

The just society is a far-away ideal. The Indian had faith, and what he was promised was a heaven. It proved to be a fraud and a fake. The heaven has turned into hell for these people, who are now demanding action.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Jerry Pringle (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I am indeed happy to associate myself with those who have extended compliments to the hon. member from Bourassa (Mr. Trudel) who so ably moved the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. I also congratulate the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for selecting a member of this stalwart group on the immediate left of the Speaker who are entrusted with the balance of power in this chamber and who are affectionately referred to by the opposition as the government rump. I would be remiss, Mr. Speaker, if I failed also to extend sincere congratulations to the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault) on the occasion of his elevation to the position of Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour. As unofficial leader of the rump in Canada's twenty-eighth Parliament, he discharged his duties faithfully and well. Our loss, here in the rump, can only be compared in depth to the expressions of sadness and grief exhibited by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. MacInnis) as a result of the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour being reseated in another section of the chamber.

My compliments also go to the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) who seconded the reply. I congratulate him on the context of his remarks which brought a message to the chamber from Canadian agriculture. His long association with various segments of our agricultural industry, as a practising farmer, is invaluable to Parliament in general and to the Standing Committee on Agriculture in particular.

Notwithstanding the apparent determination of the Official Opposition to obstruct progress or permit change in needed farm legislation, farmer producers have been striving to throw off the yoke of the status quo and accept authority, provided by provincial enabling legislation, for production planning coupled with the responsibility of marketing. This is especially true of commodity groups which are heavily dependent on domestic sales.

Failure to complete the report stage and third reading of Bill C-196, the Canada Grain Act, as amended by the Standing Committee on Agriculture, may serve the interests of the grain trade but will provide little or no solace to grain farmers now desperately in need of the provisions in the Act to improve and expedite the marketing of grain according to world customer demand. The hope of our grain farmers, and indeed of all producer-oriented Members of Parliament from all parties, is that the Official Opposition will agree to permit the debate on Bill C-196 to proceed in its present status during this new session so that the bill can be passed without further unnecessary delay.

The second farm bill to fall prey to the sabotage tactics of the Official Opposition was Bill C-197, an Act to establish a farm products marketing council and to authorize the establishment of national marketing agencies for farm products.

Mr. Speaker, although I have been associated with Canadian agri-business for many years, no one has satisfactorily explained to me why farmer producers have been denied the right to place a price on their products. The purchaser quoted the price and the farmer took what he was offered. With the exception of the Wheat Board and the Dairy Commission, little or no federal ground rules, known as enabling legislation, have been enacted to allow commodity groups in competition with other commodity groups to discipline themselves and establish a reasonable degree of stability. On the contrary, farmer producers have actually been encouraged to produce in heavy surplus, to build unmanageable inventories, resulting in disastrous market prices which on a regular basis dropped below the cost of efficient production. This system has enabled secondary industry to farm the farmers while the Canadian taxpayers picked up the tab in the form of subsidies just prior to the collapse of a commodity group into bankruptcy.

Consumers have also unwittingly been the innocent victims of this system. Heavy surpluses forced prices to farmers down, although secondary industry usually managed to maintain satisfactory margins. The consumers jumped with joy, only to find that within a period of time farmers were forced into alternative production, creating shortages which shoved prices to a high level, more than wiping out any advantages gained during the low-price period. Farmer producers, with unpaid feed bills in areas of specialized production, either lost their farms or, in attempting to switch to other commodities, went further into debt to provide additional capital.

Therefore, under the old system of surplus and shortage consumers have suffered with producers. The solution has proven to be production and marketing stability. By this I mean ample high quality production with manageable inventories, providing an adequate service to processing and distribution outlets at stable prices and in competition with other food items. This system may curtail the profits of some segments of secondary industry. However, producer confidence, inspired by stability, encourages farmers to take advantage of technological progress by investing in mechanical aids which improve efficiency and lower costs.

A moment ago I suggested that the solution has proven to be production and marketing stability. I use the past tense because existing marketing boards operating within the scope of provincial enabling legislation have already brought during the last nine years a degree of stability to their commodity groups virtually unheard of in the history of Canadian agriculture.

I say this while acknowledging the fact that a threat to interprovincial movement of poultry products now exists in Canada. It has been dubbed the "chicken and egg war". Those of us who are familiar with the sequence of events know that each step taken by provincial governments in order to maintain stability was the direct result of actions taken by commodity groups who have refused to adopt the concept of orderly production coupled with orderly marketing through marketing boards.

It is no secret that Quebec egg producers pleaded with producers in other poultry surplus provinces to adopt a system of supply management and orderly marketing which would assure some price stability in Quebec. This took place over a period of years. They wanted some stability that was comparable to other commodities in other provinces which were operating through producer marketing boards. When the Quebec egg producers' pleas were ignored the Quebec agency, I would say somewhat in desperation, placed interprovincial movement of eggs into Quebec under the jurisdiction of the Quebec board. They did not eliminate interprovincial movement of eggs into Quebec, and I place emphasis on that fact.

During this period certain promoters known in the poultry trade as integrators apparently decided to invest heavily in facilities for broiler production in Quebec. We now come to the chicken part of the "chicken and egg war". It is interesting to note that while broiler marketing boards were operating successfully in other provinces, Quebec producers were either unable or unwilling—I am more inclined to believe the former to be true—to establish a broiler marketing board in Quebec. Quebec producers with little or no capital were persuaded to provide land and labour at prices considered unrealistic in all other parts of Canada. It was not long before huge unwieldy surpluses of broilers began to build up in Quebec and subsequently went into interprovincial movement to all sections of Canada at what must be considered distress prices by all people knowledgeable in the broiler industry.

It is inconceivable to believe that the promoter integrators of Quebec who enjoyed mark-up revenues from feed sales, egg hatching and processing would expect farmer producers in other parts of Canada to go bankrupt and abandon their investment. It is also paradoxical that Quebec egg producers showed the way to the other provinces. It was they who paved the way for resumption of stability, something in which all farmers across the land are interested, which has been lacking in agriculture through the years but which is now finally finding its way to the surface. All other provinces, with the possible exception of Newfoundland, have with the co-operation of provincial enabling legislation issued orders relating to interprovincial movement of broilers similar to the Quebec order regarding the interprovincial movement of eggs.

This unilateral action on the part of provincial marketing boards and governments was taken as a last resort and not without considerable apprehension as to the future of interprovincial trade in Canada. Let it be a matter of record that the broiler commodity groups in all provinces of Canada endeavoured to persuade the promoters in Quebec to cut back their production and to work out a market sharing system so it would not be necessary to ask them to hold back their shipments. This is something that had to happen. I have been in touch with most broiler marketing boards in the western provinces, and it is my understanding that some stability is already returning to the market. I have been told there is a shortage of broilers in Ontario but on checking I find that a bothersome surplus still exists. Broiler chicken is still the cheapest meat on the counter and will continue to be in the foreseeable future. May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. It being one o'clock I do now leave the Chair.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

---

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF DELEGATION FROM GHANA

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I take pleasure in bringing to the attention of hon. members of this House the presence in the Speaker's gallery of a delegation of Parliamentarians from Ghana. I am sure all hon. members of this House will be pleased to pay tribute to their appearance here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

* * *

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment (Mr. Stanfield (P. 29) and the amendment to the amendment (Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands) (P.41)).

Mr. Pringle: Mr. Speaker, when I was obliged to call it one o'clock, and for the benefit of those who have tuned in late, I may say that I was discussing the sequence relating to what is now known in the vernacular as the "chicken and egg wars", I was referring to the problems relating to interprovincial trade between the various provinces.

Let me make it very clear that I know of no one who holds the Quebec farmer-producer, and I stress that phrase, in his role as a type of hired man, grower accountable for the present dilemma. It is most unfortunate that they undoubtedly are suffering now financially as a result this ruthless overproduction. It must be noted that broiler growers everywhere are deeply concerned, but I believe that farmer-producers will find the solution if we grant them the opportunity to do so.

It was suggested on several occasions earlier today that we should support the government of Manitoba which has elected to seek a ruling from the Supreme Court of Canada. I am at a loss to understand how this will solve the problem of interprovincial trade. This may assist Manitoba in shipping eggs into Quebec, if they are successful, but as I previously stated, the Quebec order does not eliminate the interprovincial movement of eggs into the province of Quebec. Other provinces have made similar orders and I should like, if I may, to quote from the last paragraph of the order published by the province of British Columbia. It reads:

> Nothing in this order shall prevent any person from bringing into, packing and storing in the Province of British Columbia any import product or from exporting any import product to any place outside the Province.

• (2:10 p.m.)

But the Province has the jurisdiction to regulate sales, and is doing this to the best of its ability. In fact, Quebec is granting contracts and orders for the inter-provincial movement of eggs at present. But let us suppose that the steps taken by the Manitoba government are successful. It will mean that the efforts of one province in Canada to regulate interprovincial trade have been ruled ultra vires. However, the other orders made by at least eight other provinces are not exactly the same as the Quebec order. That means we would have to go back to the Supreme Court of Canada—I am not a lawyer but I am advised that this would have to happen—on each different order, and I am not too sure whether my tenure of office would be long enough for me to see the end result. But I know what it would be if we could provide the producer-growers of Canada with a marketing act which would be operated by producers and be satisfactory to them.

I think we all agree that trade restrictions at provincial borders under individual provincial jurisdiction are going to be a stop gap measure at best. A national producer marketing act operated by producers, designed to challenge the various commodity groups to compete with each other for their fair share of the consumers' dollar would provide the best vehicle. I therefore renew my plea to hon. members opposite to permit the enactment of such legislation as soon as possible.

Canadian farmer-producers, through their various commodity group organizations, are ready, willing and able to shoulder the responsibility of stable food production. They possess the expertise and desire to manage their own affairs.

I was more than pleased with the emphasis on pollution control included in the Speech from the Throne. Since my constituency is located in the beautiful Fraser Valley, the acknowledged garden spot of the world, any type of pollution quickly becomes a matter of deep concern. This is evidenced by the formation of a number of groups willingly giving of their time and effort to fight pollution of all kinds wherever it becomes apparent. Perhaps one of the most active groups is known as SPEC, which stands for the Society for Pollution and Ecological Control. This group is not only dedicated to attacking industrial waste, whether air, land or water, but is also concentrating on the control of pollution at the home owner level. In this particular, area we are concerned with fighting pollution more than with fighting industry. We do not believe that the elimination of industry will cure pollution, but we believe that we have the technological knowledge at present to cure pollution and to permit industry to continue to operate.

These groups have recognized that the use of detergents in automatic washing machines, overuse of pesticides, incinerator burning, and in fact outdoor barbecuing, all add to pollution. It is interesting to note today that a member of the society in my home town of Chilliwac, Mr. John Rogers, has been petitioning for a survival day for all Canada for many months. I am sure he would be gladdened by the knowledge that the nation's capital is attempting the experiment on October 14, and I wish it well even though I am not too good at riding my son's bicycle.

Another problem of deep concern relating to the ecological future in my area is the proposed flooding of the Skagit Valley by the department of lighting of the city of Seattle. Although the existing dam is located in the United States, the flooding will take place in Canada. This would create a ten mile addition to Ross Lake with a gradient of only 100 feet or less so that only a very small draw down would create a large area of mud flats. It is my understanding that the International Rivers Improvement Act, passed Parliament on July 11, 1955, requires federal permits approving the altering of any waterway crossing an international border. We are, therefore, hopeful that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) will take whatever measures are necessary to persuade the Seattle department of lighting to seek additional power elsewhere.

In closing may I say to all hon. members within the sound of my voice that the 100th birthday of British Columbia's entrance into confederation takes place in 1971. Plans are now being developed throughout the province for a year of meaningful celebration, and worthwhile projects are being projected commemorating the past 100 years whilst steadfastly looking to the future.

May I at this time properly thank the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), his cabinet and the government for the very generous gift of $10 million to the people of B.C. from the people of all Canada to assist in paying the cost. Many fine and worthwhile buildings will be made available to the people of B.C. which would have undoubtedly been denied to them without the generous gift of this government. I therefore, extend a warm and sincere invitation to everyone: come to British Columbia and join with us in 1971. You will receive a welcome unsurpassed anywhere in the world.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege for me to take part in the Throne Speech debate. I wish to offer my congratulations to the mover (Mr. Trudel) and seconder (Mr. Douglas (Assiniboia)) of the motion which brought the Throne Speech before us in the House of Commons. It is an honour to be so selected.

[Mr. Pringle.]

I find the Throne Speech to be a very interesting document. It contains many platitudinous statements with which practically anybody of any loyalty to our country cannot but agree, yet many of these are hollow in that the meanings of the words are neither interpreted for us, nor are the statements which follow the embodiment of what is meant. In fact, many of them are contradictory.

Today I want to draw the attention of the House to one aspect of the remarks made in the Speech from the Throne. The Speech from the Throne states that the passing of the 60's and the beginning of the 70's reminds us that Canada faces a new age, an age which will be subject to forces not all of which are yet comprehended or understood, forces which will proceed from external as well as internal origin. I agree with that statement. I only wish that some of the happenings and events that are taking place today might indicate that the government as well agreed with it.

• (2:20 p.m.)

It is a new age not so much because of changed circumstances, but new because of changed values and attitudes.

I think that is a fair statement too, Mr. Speaker, but what disturbs me is that there is no attempt in this Speech from the Throne to define or explain what these changed values or attitudes are. Like a lot of other Canadians today, I am concerned about what they might be. The next paragraph of the speech is as follows:

Because of the clash between these new values and the old, because of the quest by the young and the disillusioned for some resolution of attitudes, we live in a period of tenseness and unease. It is an age frequented by violence as desperate men seek ill-defined goals; an age of frustration as gentle men question impatiently old assumptions.

I question many of the old assumptions that are before us, Mr. Speaker, but I would like to hear the government state more clearly what some of these new attitudes and changed values are, because therein does my concern lie. Thus, Mr. Speaker, my remarks are going to be based upon these statements which I have quoted from the Speech from the Throne.

I believe that this is an historic but sad day for Canada. The government of our great land, while being intimidated on the one hand by the FLQ, which it knows as well as we do is a revolutionary movement in sympathy with and in full support of the communist movements of Cuba, Algeria and elsewhere, has chosen today to announce its recognition of the communist government of China. Political leaders in Algiers, Peking and Moscow must be very smug and happy today. Likewise it must be a dark, discouraging and frustrating experience for our friends who directly confront communist China, such as Korea, Viet Nam, Thailand and many other countries which by their own experience know the ruthless strategy of communism, and whose citizens have struggled and died for the hope of freedom. I think of the Phillipines and of Hungary. I think of Indonesia, of Czechoslovakia, and of at least another score of nations across the world. Is this where the changing values and new attitudes are?

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) said earlier today that Canada has no statement to make one way or another in regard to the claim of the Peking communist government that Taiwan is an inalienable, territorial part of China. Who does the minister think he is kidding? Do we throw 14 million people into the hands of the communists without even a quiver of conscience? How could any government of a free nation, or any conscientious liberty-loving person be neutral between freedom and slavery?

A few days ago the death was announced of M. Daladier, once leader of pre-war France. I cannot help but wonder if we are in the midst of another Munich betrayal.

In 1936 in the Council Chamber of the old League of Nations in Geneva, the Emperor of Ethiopia, under whom it was my privilege to serve directly for some eight years, when the pressure of events had caused him to realize that passiveness of the League had neutralized any action for justice in face of the invading fascist armies in his country, said, "God and history will not forget." Perhaps God and history will not forget today either.

But, Mr. Speaker, referring again to the changing values and new attitudes which the Speech from the Throne spoke about, I must say that as a Member of Parliament and as a citizen of Canada I am disturbed and saddened by the events of the past nine days. A tragedy of numbing severity and of frightening ramifications at two distinct levels has stunned the country. On one level we have witnessed the spectacle of warped and desperate men playing at the same time magistrate and executioner in mad pursuit of their goals. For the safety of two innocent lives we have but two responses—hope and prayer. For two equally innocent families, one cannot verbalize or articulate sympathy equal to what all Canadians feel.

At a collective level as a nation we have witnessed a tragedy no less inestimable. For the past nine days we have seen the subjugation of democratic values to terrorism, the subjugation of human life to political expediency, the subjugation of justice by law to oppression by anarchy. We allow this situation to continue only at our individual and collective peril. Frightened Canadians in Quebec and in every other province, I believe, look bewilderingly for leadership.

I am reminded, Mr. Speaker, that just about three years ago—in fact it was on October 17, 1967—I raised a question in this House regarding reports that appeared in the press, which had appeared throughout the summer and during the following months, concerning guerilla terrorist training activity taking place in the Laurentians. I talked about the huge staff at the Cuban pavilion at Expo actually participating in such terrorist training. I talked about the distribution of communist newspapers, and in particular of GRANMA, the official Cuban communist party newspaper which was being distributed freely from the Cuban Expo pavilion.

I was laughed at then, Mr. Speaker, and I found it necessary to write an open letter to the minister of external affairs, the Hon. Paul Martin. I tried to talk to him about the matter, but I could not get anywhere with him with regard to it. So, my open letter was an attempt to bring these things to his attention.

In this connection, I quote from an editorial which appeared in the Toronto Telegram on July 31, 1961, as follows:

> Recently there have been overtones of association between small extremist French Canadian separatist groups and alleged guerilla veterans among the bloated staff of the Cuban Expo pavilion. In 1965, half a dozen French Canadian separatists attended "summer courses" at the University of Havana...

The editorial continues:

> Cuba, unlike almost all her communist fellow states, is openly playing the oldest communist game of all, violent international revolution.

At that time we did not realize really what was taking place, and we are only now coming to the reality of it.

The federal government is naïve to assume that it is dealing with political separatists or with those whose commitment is to change by political means. In that regard I must say that the statement made the other night by Rene Levesque was a commendable one. I am very pleased he made it because he disassociated himself and his organization, which is seeking to bring about change in Canada through legitimate political means, from those who would bring change about through revolution and terrorism.

The abductors of Mr. Cross and Mr. Laporte are members of the FLQ who are committed first and foremost to the destruction of a political system by revolution. These are not the new ideas and attitudes that we want in Canada. These people seize any issue to advance their cause, through violence if necessary. The FLQ is not a political action group working to reform the country. They are revolutionaries. Ascribing middle class values of fair play to these men is not to face up to reality. There can be no middle ground with these desperadoes.

I call upon the government, supported by Parliament, to re-assert that the rule of law, the sanctity of the judicial process shall prevail in this emergency. To bargain with those who would equate reason and reform with abduction and murder is to bargain with no less than the stability of society itself. Any concession to those to whom violence is a political expedient, no matter how small, can only be construed as a sign of insipient weakness and a lack of resolve and commitment to those principles upon which civilized society inevitably rests. To suppose that criminals, who would countenance the taking of innocent lives for their own twisted purposes, will be amicable to reasoned compromise is to ignore historical experience and present realities. I must commend the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for his statement during the question period today when he resented the fact that certain members and elements of the press continue to call these men political prisoners—those whose release is being sought. They are what he said—criminals and brigands, and I think we should deal with them.

• (2:30 p.m.)

It disturbs me to hear men on television and radio, who would pretend to lead public opinion, say they cannot make a moral judgment on these issues until they know more of the facts. The country is responsible. Just as we members of this chamber extend the responsibility to others, we carry public responsibility as well. The agony of decision must not obscure the issues involved. The choice is between a society of order and justice, where the majority determines the destiny of a nation, or a predatory state of anarchism where a nasty, brutish and short life is expendable to the dictates of a minority. Concession in this context can lead only to further concession, as we have already witnessed. The rule of law in a free society is non-negotiable.

Realizing as I do the gravity of the situation, and conscious as I am of the responsibility of all members of the House of Commons to assure the Canadian people that we shall never succumb to lawless terrorism, I call upon the government to implement without delay the following five-point program. I call upon the Prime Minister to make a nation-wide address to the Canadian people to reassert the primary rule of law in this country and to assure them of the government's resolve to take measures of appropriate severity to the gravity of the situation. Acting upon the authority conferred upon it by Section 91 subsection (1) of the British North America Act, I call upon the government to declare that the political kidnappings in the city of Montreal are matters affecting the peace, order and good government of Canada and henceforth will be treated as a federal responsibility, working in close co-operation with the provincial and municipal authorities. We have already seen a partial step in this regard, although even that was bungled this morning. When we see troops in battle dress in the House of Commons or even on the Hill, we admit our own weakness or ability to judge the situation. It is good that this situation has been corrected.

Third, I call upon the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) to announce a substantial award, plus executive clemency, to anyone who can provide authoritative information leading to the apprehension of the criminals responsible for these two abductions. Many times in the past this has proven to be a very useful strategy. Fourth, I call upon the Prime Minister and members of the cabinet to commit such officers of the RCMP and of the Canadian armed forces as are necessary to ensure the speedy apprehension of those responsible for these heinous crimes. I invite the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice, and the provincial and municipal authorities, to explore in detail the feasibility of commencing an immediate house to house search of any area where reasonable suspicion exists that FLQ cells are operative. It is a travesty of justice that persons are able to hold the men whom they have abducted without the forces of the law being able to apprehend them or even know where they are.

As a member of the House of Commons, I hereby serve notice that at the earliest opportunity I shall attempt to secure an amendment to subsection (1) of section 233 of the Criminal Code of Canada concerning the crime of kidnapping to make kidnapping for political ends a capital offence subject to the death penalty.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Thompson: As the law stands now our hands are tied.

[Mr. Pringle.]

This is a concrete program born not of panic but of resolve, put forward not in turbid confusion but in the unshakable conviction that whatever be the problems of our society they are not solvable by vigilante lawlessness. It is a program which would not only unite the Canadian people in their determination to continue a society which effects change by non-violent democratic processes but would also serve notice upon those who would use terrorist tactics to erode the confidence of the people and to eradicate a nation's values that such methods will not and cannot succeed. To forfeit this opportunity to clearly express our values and the depth of our commitment to those values would be an individual and collective abdication of our responsibilities.

In closing, I should like to refer to another statement contained a little further along in the Speech from the Throne. I would challenge the Prime Minister to act upon these words which basically are his. These are the words:

> ...there is more need than ever before to preserve as constant values truth, honesty, excellence and relevance; that a society which is not inspired by love and compassion is not worthy of the name.

I would add to that statement "that is not inspired by love, compassion and justice is not worthy of that name". Certainly, the people of Canada are expecting more than they are getting from the government of Canada today in this crisis.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I should like to congratulate the mover (Mr. Trudel) and the seconder (Mr. Douglas (Assiniboia)) of the Speech from the Throne for the tremendous job they did in this respect. I should like to participate in this debate today to discuss the developments in our economy and in our economic policy that have taken place since I presented my budget to this House in March.

Our perspectives on the economy and on economic policy are changing with changing events. It may be helpful if I begin by recalling to hon. members how we viewed the situation last March, based on the facts then available. The data on the year 1969 was nearly complete. It revealed that the inflation gripping the country had carried prices up at a rate of about $4\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. Our fiscal and monetary policies had finally, after some delay, succeeded in reducing the rate of growth of demand after mid-year. This lower growth of demand had induced lower profit rates, but had brought no reduction in the rate of wage rate increases. As for prices, we were able to say at that time that we could see some hopeful signs of a lower rate of price increase, but nothing more. It looked as though the stage was set for some dampening of the inflationary forces, but one could not be sure. The Prices and Incomes Commission had just concluded its agreement with the business community and we were conscious that any success they might achieve on their front would permit more rapid relaxation of the restrictive policies.

In these circumstances, we struck a stance for a moderate expansion in fiscal policy. We planned for a reduced budgetary surplus and for increased non-budgetary expenditures, which taken together implied an increase in our cash outlays from the previous fiscal year of about three-quarters of a billion dollars. In planning our increased expenditures we concentrated on high priority programs such as those of regional economic expansion, housing and manpower training. We also took particular care to ensure that much of the new stimulus would be directed to regions of traditionally higher unemployment.

At the same time, because of the continuing inflationary threat, we took out some insurance by planning for a system of controls over buying by consumers on credit and by extending our measure for deferred depreciation on non-residential construction where we felt the thrust of construction costs was particularly strong and infectious.

In outlining this policy position, I stated clearly that the government would respond quickly to changes in the economic outlook with changes in its policy measures.

On the basis of this policy position, I anticipated that output and employment would move upward in 1970 though at a lower rate than in 1969. I indicated that there would be some increase in unemployment accompanied by difficult labour negotiations and strikes. I also held out the hope that price advances would be somewhat less vigorous. These expectations have so far been borne out by developments, though in somewhat fuller measure.

• (2:40 p.m.)

I should like now, Mr. Speaker, to review the economic developments to date this year in some detail. The economy has been growing less rapidly this year than last. In the first half of the year the national output, apart from price changes, grew at an annual rate of just under 2½ per cent. This compares with a rate of a little below 4½ per cent in the last half of 1969.

Some sectors of the economy have been stronger than others. Growth of the demand for consumer goods and services and for new capital goods have been outpaced by demands of governments and even more by demands for our exports. In the personal sector, a slower growth of income has led to lower growth in the demand for goods and services, especially in the first quarter of this year.

Investment in residential construction, following the lower starts of late 1969 and early 1970, experienced a sharp fall, especially in the second quarter. We are now, however, on the way up. Housing starts, reflecting the March budget's injection of an additional $150 million in CMHC loans, have been rising for several months. In September they were running at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of about 185,000, up from about 175,000 in July and August and an average 137,000 in the second quarter.

Business spending on new capital has been sluggish so far this year. On non-residential construction spending was no higher in the first half than the average level of last year. This is in spite of an increase of about 15 per cent indicated for this year in the surveys of investment intentions. The intentions surveys also suggested much higher levels of spending by business on machinery and equipment this year, but in the first half this spending was some 6 per cent below 1969. These shortfalls of spending below intentions reflect in part the deliberate choices of business in the face of their expectations of profits and sales. But they also reflect, especially in regard to construction expenditures, the strikes and lockouts in the construction industry. These disputes have produced an 82-per cent increase in the number of man days lost in the construction industry in the first eight months of this year compared with the same period in 1969. Labour peace in this sector would, I am confident, give rise to a marked renewal of activity.

Let me turn now to two expansive areas of demand this year. I refer first to demands by governments for goods, services and new capital assets. Taking all levels of government together their expenditures have risen by about 8 per cent in the first half of this year as compared with some 5 per cent in the second half of last year. The increase this year has been particularly heavy in the second quarter.

Secondly, exports have been a most dynamic force in the economy this year. After having grown at about 7 per cent over the last half of 1969, they grew by some 9 per cent in the first half of this year, most of this increase being concentrated in the first quarter. The latest figures, for August, show some decline from the very high plateau achieved earlier in the year, but exports continue to run well above the figures for the last quarter of 1969. Our sales to countries other than the United States have been the most buoyant. On a seasonally adjusted basis export sales to the United States were lower in August than in December by 7 per cent, but sales to other countries were higher by 14 per cent.

Merchandise imports have been on a declining trend this year and as a consequence the balance of trade has been very strong indeed. Even when this favorable balance is offset by a first half deficit on non-merchandise transactions of about a billion dollars, the current account of the balance of payments is left in surplus by nearly $300 million.

This strong trade surplus, reflecting in part our better price performance, combined with strong inflows of capital to produce considerable upward pressure on the Canadian dollar. We decided at the end of May that we should not resist this pressure any longer. The alternatives were to revalue or allow the dollar to float. In the event, we decided to cease for the time being to purchase sufficient U.S. dollars to keep the exchange rate of the Canadian dollar in the market from exceeding its par-value of 92½ U.S. cents by more than 1 per cent. Since then the exchange rate has been allowed to respond to market forces. I shall refer later to the effects of the subsequent rise in the exchange value of our currency.

I would like now to discuss the labour situation in some detail. The population of the country that is of working age grows at a fairly predictable rate. The rate was about 2.6 per cent last year and we expect it to be about the same this year. What is very much less predictable is the proportion of those in the population of working age who will offer themselves for employment. This proportion, technically referred to as the labour force participation rate, has been showing some wild gyrations lately. These gyrations very seriously affect our unemployment figures. For example at a given level of employment a difference of 1 percentage point in the participation rate—which is the order of magnitude we have been lately—can make a difference of 1¾ percentage points in the unemployment rate. This is a very serious matter. We believe the factors involved in these swings include the movement of students in and out of the labour force, the impact of the manpower training program and the reactions of potential income earners in a family unit to the fortunes of the principal breadwinner. These factors interact in a complicated way. Predictions and assessments of the unemployment situation are greatly complicated by this situation.

Another factor of considerable importance in assessing the unemployment situation in the country has not received much public attention to date. This is the dramatic acceleration in recent years in the time lost in work stoppages owing to industrial disputes. The figure of man-days lost per quarter from this cause has been rising at an average rate of 25 per cent per year since 1962 and has now become very large. Disputes in some industries cause unemployment in others. In fact, the second quarter seasonally adjusted unemployment rate was probably a half to three quarters of a percentage point higher for this reason. In referring to this matter I do not wish in any way to minimize the distress that unemployment causes. We must, however, recognize that it would be futile to use fiscal and monetary policy to try to eliminate unemployment arising from this cause.

In following the developing situation in respect of unemployment, it is important to keep a close watch on the number of those who have been unemployed more than three months. For these persons the lack of employment is obviously even more serious than for those who are out of work for shorter periods. This proportion is small. In August, people in this category comprised 1.7 per cent of the labour force, and the figure has remained remarkably stable, indicating a high order of resiliency in our economy.

I have spent some time, Mr. Speaker, in commenting on these special features of the labour supply situation because all members of this House share the government's deep concern with the fact that unemployment is as high as it is.

Mr. Stanfield: Shall we send the minister a towel?

Mr. Benson: The hon. member could use, himself, all he can get. In spite of the levels to which unemployment has risen, I cannot report any convincing evidence that the rise in wage rates has begun to slow down. I believe that the pressures in the economoy emanating from this fact are the most important single obstacle to the resumption of the faster rates of growth with high employment and steady prices which we all want.

Mr. Lewis: Bilge.

Mr. Benson: The average annual increase in base rates provided by major wage settlements during the first two quarters was 8.9 per cent. For 1969 as a whole it was 9 per cent.

An hon. Member: What about government manpower?

Mr. Benson: To the extent that these settlements are indicative of cost developments in other parts of the economy or to the extent that they may guide new wage and salary settlements on a broad scale in other parts of the economy, then we are faced with the possibility that such increases may be rolled through the system. This could seriiously affect our price performance if a sufficient easing of fiscal and monetary restraint were in progress to accommodate it.

The rise in wage costs in the face of a mediocre productivity performance has meant a substantial surge in labour costs per unit of output in manufacturing. In that sector and in the economy at large, profits per unit of output have taken another sharp plunge in the second quarter of this year similar to that recorded in the second half of last year.

Mr. Lewis: We ought to send some people handkerchiefs.

Mr. Benson: This has no doubt been an important factor impeding the growth of investment and employment this year.

I want to emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that we have been rewarded in our struggle against inflation. I am sure all members of the House welcome the better recent news concerning prices, and that they will want us to consolidate these gains. Raw materials prices have been falling since early in the year, relieving the impact of higher wage costs in varying degrees from industry to industry. Wholesale prices generally have been on a downward trend this year. The all-items consumer price index, on a seasonally adjusted basis, increased at a 1.5 per cent annual rate over the February-August period this year. Food prices played a very imporant role in the slowdown. The consumer price index excluding food increased at a 3.2 per cent annual rate, which is sharply down from increases at close to a 5 per cent annual rate in most of 1969. Generally, our price performance in recent months has been considerably better than that in most other industrial countries.

• (2:50 p.m.)

I spoke earlier, Mr. Speaker, about the policy measures adopted in my March budget to deal with the economic situation at that time. I have traced the economic developments since then. I would like now to describe in some detail the policy responses of the government and the specific measures we have taken to deal with this changing situation. The government's economic policy objective is to give to the economy the maximum stimulus that can be provided without unleashing another and inevitably more damaging round of inflation.

In pursuing this objective, we are continuously reassessing the degree of stimulus that can be provided within the terms of the objective. In this reassessing we have been greatly encouraged by the more moderate price increases. As the new price information brightened into sharper focus, the government felt that it could take a more relaxed fiscal stance. We are still very worried by the continued increase of wage costs. We continue to hope, however, that moderating prices hold some promise that wage demands might soon be scaled down. Given the lags in the impact of policy changes, which we consider carefully in our planning, we felt a progressive adjustment of the stance was warranted. This view developed before we were pressed by events into allowing an appreciation of the dollar to occur. We recognized that this appreciation would put pressure on our exporters and on our import competing industries.

One of our first moves was to drop the insurance policy we had taken out in the form of a projected control over consumer credit.

The Governor of the Bank of Canada has explained in his statement of August 31 that monetary policy since early in the year has sought to relax the very tight credit conditions which prevailed at the beginning of the year. The bank rate has been progressively lowered from 8 per cent to 6½ per cent. Market rates of interest, especially for shorter term securities, have fallen this year. The rate on long term government of Canada bonds is down roughly half a percentage point and treasury bill yields are down about 2½ percentage points. Since March of this year the average monthly increase in the seasonally adjusted private money supply at annual rates has been 12.1 per cent.

I should like also to refer to the measures I announced at the meeting of Ministers of Finance and Provincial Treasurers at Winnipeg in June. On that occasion I announced that the government of Canada would undertake to accelerate payment to the provinces of tax collections we make on their behalf. This has the effect of increasing our non-budgetary requirements this year—in effect the funds we put into the economy in this way—by $150 million. In addition, I announced that equalization payments to provinces would be increased by $60 million over the $867 million originally planned, on the basis of new data that had become available since the estimates.

Finally, I announced that $150 million remaining to be spent under the technical and vocational training schools program would be disbursed to the provinces in this fiscal year and the next. This, coupled with a further extra $15 million of disbursements to the provinces under other programs, added $90 million more to our budgetary expenditures for this year. Thus the effect of these measures was to add $150 million to our budgetary requirements and $150 million to our non-budgetary requirements or $300 million in all—a very considerable figure.

We have taken further important steps since the June announcements. Let us consider budgetary expenditures first. Equalization payments to the provinces for the current year have been raised by another $50 million to approximately $975 million owing to the impact of yet further new data. Payments under social insurance programs such as the Canada Assistance Plan have risen and will add further to the purchasing power in the private sector. Hon. members will be aware of the important effort and expenditure we made this past summer in connection with student summer employment programs.

In addition to these extra steps, I wish now to announce that the government has recently decided to ask the approval of Parliament for the expenditure of an additional $60 million to be directed very specifically to the alleviation of unemployment where the unemployment conditions are especially severe. Just under a third of this sum will be used by the Department of Manpower and Immigration in an extension of its manpower training programs.

Mr. Stanfield: Will the minister permit a question which I think is appropriate at the present time? Does the minister mean to indicate that the payments to the provinces during the current fiscal year will be higher than those that were forecast?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I indicated two situations where they will be substantially higher; first, with respect to the increase in equalization arising out of the data which is received, as my hon. friend knows, two years late; second, because of the agreement of the federal government to speed up payments to the provinces of taxes collected which will be an expenditure for us in the current year. Then, there is the speeding up of the program with respect to vocational schools where we agreed to pay off the $150 million, half this year and half next year.

Mr. Stanfield: My question relates to the forecast made for the current year as to the payments to be made to the provinces under the tax-sharing arrangements. Is the minister suggesting that these payments will, in effect, be substantially higher in total than were forecast?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I was not speaking of the tax-sharing agreements under which we collect taxes for the provinces and transfer them. As a matter of fact, if my hon. friend will wait a few minutes, I will file a table which will show exactly what payments will be made to the provinces. We have decided at this point to ask Parliament to allocate an additional $60 million of which one-third will be used to increase the manpower retraining programs. About one-quarter of the amount will be employed for the use of special employment programs and will be directed to capital projects in regions where unemployment is higher. The remainder of the program, about $25 million, will be used to employ men for a variety of operations and maintenance tasks which need doing but which departments had been asked earlier to postpone.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the minister a question? Are these additional funds to deal with unemployment going to the Department of Regional Economic Expansion or will some other department do this?

Mr. Benson: They will be going to several departments. Manpower retraining will be getting about one-third. There will be $25 million which will go to various departments.

Mr. Lundrigan: That is for Newfoundland. What about the rest of Canada?

Mr. Benson: Again, these special efforts will be made in regions of particularly high unemployment. These extra measures undertaken since June will add over $200 million to our budgetary expenditures.

I have been speaking of measures we have taken that involve budgetary expenditures. Several measures also adopted since June involve non-budgetary expenditures. The largest single item relates to the program announced on August 5 by my colleague, the minister responsible for the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Under this program, the government has added $100 million to the capital budget of the corporation for the current calendar year to enable it to expand its lending for construction of homes for home-ownership and rental accommodation for families of modest income in areas where housing and employment needs are greatest. These new funds will add 15,000 housing starts this year.

May I now be permitted to outline the budgetary and non-budgetary changes since the budget and the effect of these upon the cash position of the government. Budgetary revenues are down $50 million and budgetary expenditures are up $350 million, producing a prospective budgetary deficit of $150 million instead of the surplus in prospect last March of $250 million. In addition, there has been an increase of non-budgetary requirements of $325 million, except for funds required to finance foreign exchange transactions. With this exception, I am now anticipating a cash requirement on budgetary and non-budgetary account of about $1.3 billion. To October 1 of this fiscal year the Canadian cash required to finance exchange transactions has been just over $1.2 billion. These post-budget government outlays represent a very considerable fresh fiscal stimulus to the economy.

• (3:00 p.m.)

If I may have the permission of the House, Mr. Speaker, I should now like, for the information of hon. members, to include as an appendix to Hansard tables in the form normally provided with budget speeches. These include a summary statement of our cash requirements for 1969-70 and our current forecast for 1970-71, the yields for the same two years of our main categories of budgetary and old age security revenues and again for the same two years tables and explanatory notes giving the budget figures in terms of the national economic accounts in the form published by the Bureau of Statistics together with a reconciliation with the budgetary accounts.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have to ask the hon. minister's pardon. I was not listening. I was conferring with the Clerk.

Mr. Benson: I requested the permission of the House to attach certain tables as an appendix to Hansard today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the minister have the permission of the House to append these tables?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

(Editor's note: For text of above documents see Appendix A)

Mr. Benson: Let me now summarize the progressive expansion which has taken place in the government's fiscal and monetary policies in step with the steady easing of inflationary pressures over the past several months.

In the budget last March, there was a significant easing of fiscal restraint, with the government's cash requirement undergoing a swing of around three-quarters of a billion dollars from the previous year. At the meeting of Finance Ministers and Provincial Treasurers in Winnipeg last June I indicated that outlays to the provinces would increase by some $300 million to cover accelerated transfers of tax revenue, accelerated payment of technical and vocational training school grants and higher equalization payments. Since that time it has been estimated that equalization payments to the provinces will be further increased this year by $50 million. The student summer employment program launched by the government, together with increased payments under various social insurance programs, will add another $73 million to current expenditures.

An additional $100 million has been allocated in the present calendar year to finance the construction of 15,000 housing units for families with moderate incomes. And today I have announced plans for new expenditure of $60 million of programs aimed directly at relieving unemployment where conditions are most severe.

On the monetary side, there has also been a significant easing of restraint. Since March of this year, the money supply in private hands has increased at a seasonally adjusted annual rate averaging 12.1 per cent. Rates of interest are significantly lower, particularly for shorter-term securities.

Mr. Speaker, this review should assure all members of the House that the government is maintaining an alert, continuous watch for opportunities to move the economy forward. Just as soon as we have felt reasonable confidence that our anti-inflation policies were bringing favourable results we have moved to stimulate the economy. We are anxious and determined to achieve a faster rate of growth and higher employment. But we know we cannot achieve and retain this prize through inflation.

I would like to make a few observations on the outlook as it now appears to us. In the government's view the pace of our advance and the support we can give to it will be determined very largely by developments in the private sector of the economy. A key is the performance of costs. The recovery of capital investment depends very directly upon the outlook for profits. This is turn depends upon productivity and wage costs. The potential demand exists, for there is today no generalized over-capacity in capital equipment and structures such as we have known in certain earlier periods. On the recovery of capital investment depends the recovery of employment and personal incomes and hence consumer spending. We can expect strength from government expenditures and exports, the forces which have sustained the economy this year.

As our economy moves forward our governments and industries will have growing needs for funds. Having in mind the pressure that appreciation puts upon our industries in direct competition with foreign producers, I would urge those who are contemplating borrowing to consider very carefully whether they have fully availed themselves of the competitive services of the Canadian capital market before they decide to float issues outside of Canada.

We anticipate a steady improvement in our employment situation, though the winter ahead will be a difficult one. We shall need a substantial annual rate of real growth before any marked improvement in the unemployment rate will be forthcoming. These are the hard facts.

We believe that the economy is capable of returning to the rates of growth which will reduce the unemployment rate significantly over the next four or five quarters. We believe that our policy stance will guide the economy on this course. The government will do the people of Canada no service if it rekindles the inflation by seeking to force an advance more rapid than productivity improvement and cost moderation will permit. The government will continue to be alert, as it has been alert, to reassess the developments in costs, in productivity and in prices, which must in the end determine the maximum degree of stimulus that the economy can safely absorb. When we can take further action to spur the economy closer to the goal of full employment and growth with stable prices we shall do so. We believe the stage is now set for the recovery of employment—perhaps slowly at first but at an accelerating pace. A strong growth of employment and the reduction of unemployment consistent with good price performance and moderating costs is the priority goal of our economic policy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lundrigan: I should like to ask the minister a question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member rising to a point of order?

Mr. Lundrigan: I was hoping to ask the minister a question before his time ran out.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister's time has just expired by about one minute. I gave him a minute's grace because it seemed to me he was coming to the end of his remarks. However, if the House gives unanimous consent, the hon. member may ask a question. Is there such unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lundrigan: My question relates to the $60 million nest egg which the minister said would be available. Would the hon. gentleman tell us the basis of its distribution and whether he has arrived at a conclusion concerning the manner in which the money will be distributed, and to what parts of Canada?

Mr. Benson: First of all, in my speech I did not talk about $60 million, but about several hundred million dollars—changes in expenditure in the last several months and additional expenditures. With respect to the new item of $60 million, I indicated that 30 per cent would go to manpower, about 25 per cent to capital expenditure and the remainder on various maintenance expenditures. If the hon. member wants details of the total amount and precise information as to where these sums are to be spent, I will be pleased to provide it if he will drop me a note.

Mr. Lundrigan: Perhaps I should rephrase my question; I seem to find difficulty in communicating with the hon. gentleman. Has he decided where these monies will be distributed, when they will be distributed and the basis of the distribution? I am referring only to the nest egg he offered to offset the unemployment situation in places where 20 per cent or more of the work force is unemployed.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Mr. Benson: No, Mr. Speaker. I did say that we had already decided on making this expenditure, and I have indicated to my hon. friend that I will give him a breakdown by areas if he drops me a note. I cannot, off the top of my head, say that we are spending x dollars in Newfoundland, that we are erecting a building somewhere else, and so on, but I will supply the information if my friend drops me a note requesting same. In addition to that, we will be introducing a supplementary estimate to cover this expenditure.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, in the Speech from the Throne and in the remarks of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in this debate, this House has witnessed an almost unparalleled barrage of high-flown phrases and wordy platitudes. No doubt the speech writers in the Prime Minister's office and the other draftsmen responsible for these documents, are congratulating themselves on their command of language and esoteric concepts. But what the Canadian people are more interested in is whether the government commands a grasp of the problems facing the Canadian people, and whether the government has an effective program to deal with those problems.

Thus, I welcomed the amendment moved by my leader, because it brought the debate back to reality, back to the threat to Canadian independence created by growing foreign ownership of our economy. It brought us back to the reality of high levels of unemployment, to the reality of poverty and hardship that is being faced by many Canadian families.

If we heard something of the sublime in the Speech from the Throne and in the remarks of the Prime Minister, then I think we heard something of the ridiculous this afternoon from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson). The Speech of the Minister of Finance this afternoon was a recitation of the failure of government policy. I noted that the minister placed a great deal of emphasis in his speech on laying the blame on the labour situation in Canada. It seemed to me that he was acting something like Dr. Young, Chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission in this regard. I am not sure whether the Minister of Finance is parroting the chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission or whether the chairman is parroting the minister; but in either case they are both talking in the same way.

For one thing, the minister commented on the wild gyrations taking place in the labour force participation rate. I suggest that this is just one more piece of evidence that points out that the government has a complete lack of control over the economic situation in Canada.

The minister took great pains to point out that there has been an increase in work stoppages in Canada. I think the key question is: Why are they taking place? The answer to the question is that the government has allowed a jungle-type society to continue to exist in this country. The government has failed to introduce a comprehensive incomes policy such as that proposed by New Democratic Party members. This is the reason for the increasingly difficult situation with respect to management-labour relations. Where is the incomes policy that we have heard suggested over the past several months?

The minister also said that a slowdown in wage demands is not coming. He suggested that this was the most important factor in the economy. On the other hand, he also pointed to a plunge in profits. I have never heard the minister express concern about a plunge in wages. Neither have I heard him express concern, or at least any great concern, for those Canadians who altogether lose their incomes as a result of unemployment. When did either the government or the Minister of Finance have any concern to express about the sharp increases in profits that have occurred during the past number of years? When did they have anything to say about the increase in interest rates? They have said nothing about that.

These factors are supposed to be indications of a healthy economy. Yet once wages start to go up this is cause for great concern amongst the government policy makers. This is why I suggest there is a basic contradiction involved here. I further suggest that the government has revealed its true colours in that it is not concerned with the ordinary working man in this country. Rather, it has concern for the corporate sector of the economy, for those people who already have a larger than proportionate share of the wealth of the country.

Certainly, the announcement of the minister this afternoon that more money would be voted to alleviate unemployment is belated but welcome. The minister then went on to say that a difficult winter is ahead. I suppose he expects people to take some consolation from that statement. He said that possibly there would be a return to normal growth conditions within the next four or five quarters.

What does that mean, Mr. Speaker? It means that there will be a return to normal growth conditions at the end of 1971. The minister is suggesting that at that point it is possible the government will take steps to stimulate the economy. And what will happen near the end of 1971? This is very near the time when the government is going to think of calling the next federal election.

Both the Speech from the Throne and the Prime Minister's address dealt with economic conditions. There were curious contradictions and conflicts, some straying from the facts, and throughout a failure to face up to necessities and to the bankruptcy of government policy. On the one hand, it was noted that something had to be done about unemployment and other problems. On the other hand, the attitude of "I'm all right, Jack" was taken. At one point some satisfaction was gained from the contention that unemployment rates had levelled off. If it is suggested that the seasonally adjusted unemployment rate remained at 6.7 per cent in both July and August of this year, this will be small consolation to many thousands of Canadians.

The situation was perfectly predictable. The government was warned from many sides that its economic policies would result in a serious slowdown in the Canadian economy. It was warned that the voluntary guidelines policy to be implemented by the Prices and Incomes Commission could not succeed. The New Democratic Party advocated a comprehensive incomes policy. Other proposals were advanced. But the government blindly persisted in its policies. Now, many thousands of Canadians are reaping the whirlwind of the government's policies.

The government is now faced with a serious problem. Expectations are for high unemployment this winter,—admitted by the minister—a serious slowdown in business investment and the prospect of no growth in the second half of 1970. It seems clear that there will be no real economic pick-up until well into 1971. The reason is obvious: there is a time lag between policy changes and their effect on the economy.

A year ago the New Democratic Party urged the government to change its policies. The government failed to listen. On Friday the leader of the New Democratic Party again put forward a five-point economic program involving public investment programs, investment controls, redistribution of income by tax reforms, prices and income controls if necessary, and action to reduce our dependence on and vulnerability to the United States economy.

The Speech from the Throne must be analysed in terms of its adequacy. No one will dispute that there are some welcome announcements in the Speech from the Throne and in subsequent statements by ministers. Some proposals may even be regarded as a faltering and inadequate step in the right direction. The establishment of ministries concerned with environmental affairs and urban affairs will be meaningful only if accompanied by sound, far reaching and courageous programs.

In the final analysis, the government's program must be judged on the basis of its adequacy. Does it take the necessary steps to ensure the well-being of Canadian society? Does it ensure the welfare of individual Canadians? Is it prepared to go beyond "equality of opportunity", as mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, to "equality of condition"? Does it show courage?

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that on too many counts the government has fallen short in a speech liberally sprinkled with conflict and contradictions. Let me cite a few examples. According to the speech, the just society has now become the "distant ideal". Concern is expressed for the "life-support systems of the biosphere", and a new department of environmental affairs is to be created. But there is no assurance that the government is prepared to take the profound steps necessary to cope with these matters.

Reference is made to the need to anticipate and plan rather than reacting to events. But the government persists in taking smug satisfaction from its performance. Reference is also made to equality of opportunity, but not to equality of condition. Too often the phrase "equality of opportunity" is used in order to avoid the decisions necessary to bring about meaningful change. In reference to the government's urban activities, the Speech from the Throne states that "the government seeks, by making rational its efforts in these fields", and so on. That is surely an admission of past irrationality and hardly an assurance of future common sense. Reference is made to the "competitive marketing system faced by consumers" and then we are told the government is going to do something about "combines, mergers and unfair trade practices".

• (3:20 p.m.)

There is only one short paragraph concerning problems of foreign ownership and no assurance of any program arising out of the current government study of this matter. The Speech from the Throne states:

> It would be irresponsible to suggest that the economy is now in a satisfactory condition".

And then later:

> Unemployment remains distressingly high in some parts of Canada—

It then concludes:

> In sum, the vitality of the economy, coupled with present governmental policies, is countering slowly but effectively the pressures of inflation and unemployment.

Much lip service is paid to the United Nations. But words cannot make up for the failure of the Prime Minister to fulfil the expectation that he would address the 25th anniversary session of the UN on behalf of the people of Canada.

In the light of the two kidnappings in Montreal in the past ten days, special note must be taken of the statement in the Speech from the Throne:

> Notwithstanding its difficulties, Canada continues to enjoy social stability to an exceptional degree.

Surely, this is the type of statement that can only contribute to an attitude of smug complacency which in turn allows situations to grow which eventually can result in the type of problems now faced by the governments of Canada and Quebec. It is not my intention to comment upon the immediate problems in view of the delicacy of the matter, but I did want to comment on some broader implications.

First, any tendency to donwngrade the problems facing Canadian nationhood is wrong. This crisis, which was somewhat submerged during the past year, now is a matter of concern for each and every Canadian. If we want a Canada we are going to have to work for it. For one, I want a Canada.

Second, the Prime Minister received a mandate from the Canadian people at the last election largely on the confidence and expectation that he could solve the problems of Canadian nationhood. Many people from all parts of Canada looked to him to save Canada. To create such a hope and expectation was false. To rely on such an approach was false. The evidence is now clear that, for whatever the reasons may be, the state of our nation has not improved and the Prime Minister has not reached the impossible objective associated with his political personality.

However, it would be folly to counsel despair. Rather, all Canadians must reassess the situation and develop new approaches. Constitutional reform must be tackled on the basis of dealing with real issues and problems. Regional development programs must be related to people, not to the strengthening of private corporate power. Concepts of law and order must not be used as a weapon to prevent or hinder changes in outmoded or inadequate systems.

I was especially interested in the comments on tax reform in both the Speech from the Throne and the Prime Minister's speech, since I served as a member of the House committee studying the white paper. Members will know that the majority of the committee bowed to the pressure of business and corporate representations and recommended substantial concessions to the corporate sector. Maybe they did not go quite as far as the Senate committee but we really do not expect any better from the other place.

It is also noteworthy that the committee meekly acquiesced to the modifications of the Minister of Finance to the White Paper proposals as they affected the oil and mining industries. It might be useful to recall some events. On August 5, the minister informed the committee he did not intend to announce any further modification of the white paper but added a rider "you can never tell". On August 26, the minister announced his concessions. By early September, when the committee met to consider its report, government members were prepared to accept the new proposal without having asked a single question.

I note the Prime Minister attempted to rationalize the concession to the mining industry in terms of growth. I challenge him to reconcile these concessions with the statement in his speech last Friday, which reads, at page 34 of Hansard:

> The only true prosperity is that which is equitably shared.

I challenge both the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance to reconcile these concessions with the following two sentences in the Speech from the Throne:

> Thereafter, legislation will be introduced incorporating policies designed to make more equitable the economic burden shared by our fellow dwellers in this complex and varied land. These taxation measures are part of the government's pledge to utilize the wealth of Canada for the good of all Canadians and not just for those fortunate enough to be shielded by the protective apparatus of giant corporations, alert professional organizations or powerful labour unions.

This is one more example of the hollow words in the Speech from the Throne. It is one more piece of evidence that real tax reform is a long way off. While it now appears that the government intends to proceed with the enactment of whatever changes are finally decided upon, I hope adequate time will be reserved for consideration of the legislation.

Members will be aware that the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) and myself introduced a minority report on behalf of the New Democratic Party. I commend its recommendations to the Minister of Finance. Tax credits instead of tax exemptions, a full capital gains tax, an end to the special privileges associated with corporate and investment income, an end to special concessions to large oil and mining industries, integration of estate and income taxation, and an adequately structured progressive tax rate schedule—all of these things are needed for real tax reform.

The government must change its approach and not back down to the pressure of special interests. The Speech from the Throne correctly noted tensions existing in Canadian society. Inequality of wealth and economic power is one of the causes of these tensions. Failure on the part of the government to correct these inequalities can only intensify these tensions in society.

One final word on taxation concerning the provinces. There was some legitimate concern on the part of the provinces concerning the long run revenue implications for the provinces related to their fiscal needs. Beyond that the role played by the provinces in the White Paper debate was very disappointing. Most of the provinces joined the anguished cries of corporate business and were prepared to concede just about anything wanted. I think Canadians expected a more responsible approach by provincial governments. At least one provincial government has the unenviable position of being linked with the other place. A Leader-Post article dated October 1, 1970 is headed, "Province, Senate agree". The first paragraph reads:

> The Saskatchewan government and the Senate Banking Committee see eye to eye in their disagreements with the federal government's white paper on tax reform.

I have already made some comments in respect of the national economic situation. I should now like to turn to a number of matters concerning the province of Saskatchewan which has been particularly hard hit by a combination of national economic events and special factors operating particularly in that province. The crisis faced by Saskatchewan during the past year poses many questions involving Saskatchewan's future and I would like to take a few minutes to discuss the implications of some government programs and policies on that future.

One indicator of the course of events in Saskatchewan is population. On July 1, 1970, the Dominion Bureau of Statistics estimated there were 940,000 people in Saskatchewan, an absolute drop of 22,000 from the figure of 962,000 in October, 1968. Net migration out of Saskatchewan would have of course been much higher. Unemployment figures have not reflected the true picture due to the high degree of mobility in Saskatchewan's labour force, the relatively high percentage of people engaged in agriculture and the fact that some groups, such as Indian people on reserves, are not included in labour force surveys.

Several industries have faced serious problems. Potash faced special problems due to unplanned, too rapid expansion; oil and uranium slowed down but most important, agriculture faced a real crisis due to a slow down in markets, price drops and continual cost increases. Agriculture is still the most important industry in Canada and grain production is still foremost within the industry. For this reason I think it is tragic that the Canada Grains Act was not passed at the last session. The government waited too long to introduce it with the result that we did not finish the committee stage until the last day before the summer adjournment. It was an improved bill that came out of the committee, and we in this party wanted the bill passed quickly. That was not to be. When the House reconvened on October 5, the Conservative members tabled 44 amendments. I submit that such a move was made for one reason only, that was to kill the bill, and they did. Most of their amendments would have reduced the Grain Commission's powers to control the grain trade. Now, the bill has to be introduced again in this session before it will be possible to introduce protein grading which is so badly needed.

• (3:30 p.m.)

The Speech from the Throne tried to paint a good picture of the infamous Operation Lift and tried to suggest that it was responsible for unclogging wheat markets. I suggest that the unclogging of wheat markets was due more to crop conditions in a large number of foreign countries. It was also suggested that, the Lift program encouraged a healthy diversification of agricultural activities." Possibly the government has not heard that the price of weanling pigs in Saskatchewan dropped from $22 to $3 to $4 in recent months. Such are the consequences of crash programs like Operation Lift.

In addition, hon. members will recall that last spring the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board warned farmers not to increase their barley acreage. Some increase took place anyway. Now, we have the prospect of a barley shortage and the minister is busily covering his tracks by urging farmers to grow more barley.

In the long-run Operation Lift will prove a real setback to western Canadian agriculture. Had this expenditure been used to stabilize farm income, production adjustments would have been made without the damage that has been done.

Finally, it should be noted that when the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) spoke last Thursday in the debate in seconding the motion now before us he did not once refer to Operation Lift, although he referred to many other items. From a farmer from a farm constituency in Saskatchewan, surely this silence is eloquent.

There are other aspects of agricultural problems in Saskatchewan that I would like to discuss, including price supports, marketing, grain movement, etc., but time does not permit. There is one particular matter though that is causing many farmers concern, that is the government's dairy policy.

I raise this matter because of the previously quoted reference claiming that Operation Lift encouraged agricultural diversification. Many farmers in Saskatchewan are concerned at the rigid application of the policies of the Dairy Commission which now effectively prohibit them from obtaining cream subsidies in particular. This operates badly for many prairie farmers because the Commission's policies were introduced at a time when grain markets were buoyant and many farmers had gone out of milk production. I hope the commission and the government will review the rules to bring about a more fair operation for any prairie farmers.

In answer to questions and representations the government has pointed out from time to time that Saskatchewan will benefit under regional development programs. Complaints have already been made about the low allocation of expenditures to Saskatchewan.

In addition, early last spring Regina and Saskatoon were declared special areas by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion for purposes of industrial grants. To date, there has not been one announcement of a grant under this program. There have been rumours, but that is all.

I am concerned about what is happening to Saskatchewan communities, large, small and rural. Unco-ordinated programs, economic pressures and technological developments are bringing about changes which often do not consider people and their needs. I believe that planning, co-ordination and foresight are required if we are to avoid even more serious problems. I would like to deal with some cases.

The Post Office Department has been engaged on a program for the past three years of closing hundreds of small post offices across Canada, many of them in Saskatchewan. In response to the need for changes, it developed its own criteria and applied them ruthlessly. I am glad to see that the minister in charge of the Post Office has called off further closures until further review. I hope the minister will develop new criteria which avoid both the old political patronage approach which bedevilled the Post Office for so long and the new inhuman profit and loss approach. Decisions need to be taken within the framework of community plans and needs.

I would like to advance one proposal for consideration in developing an alternative policy. I would like to suggest that the sub post office structure be developed for some rural areas. Such a system is now used in most cities. In the city of Regina there are 37 sub post offices. One of these offices operates a general delivery service for customers in a nearby rural area. To adapt such a system to rural areas, attention would have to be given to delivery of mail, adequacy of service and the situation of the postmaster.

It is essential, however, that the government not return to the old patronage system in the post office. I express concern about this matter because of one incident involving the closure of the post office at Serath, Saskatchewan, located on the boundary between my constituency and the constituency of Regina Lake Centre. Serath is a small country community located approximately 20 miles from centres to the south, north and west. As a result of closures, it was the only post office, together with another small nearby post office in a large rural area, between the CNR main line and the CPR Bulyea subdivision line. These post offices are now closed. I have obtained a copy of the correspondence concerning this closure. The entire situation stinks of Liberal patronage politics.

The first major development was a letter from the Liberal member for Assiniboia dated November 12, 1968 to the Hon. Eric Kierans, then postmaster general. Concerning Serath, that letter states:

> When I was in Regina on November 9 to attend a provincial Liberal executive meeting, I was approached by some leading Liberals in the area north of Regina, which is not in my constituency and which is represented by an NDP member. They made what I consider an unusual request, that a post office be closed. They said the post office at Serath is serving very few patrons recently and could be closed with little hardship to anyone, and a considerable saving to your department. If it is not already slated for closing perhaps you could have it investigated with that end in view.

This was followed by a letter dated December 16, 1968 from the other Liberal member from Saskatchewan who was then minister without portfolio. It was addressed to the former postmaster general and it reads:

> I spoke to you the other day about two post offices about which I had received a closing suggestion.
>
> The post offices in question are located at Serath and Arbury, both in Saskatchewan. The information I have is that they are very little used, and that no rural route is indeed needed, because the people who live in the area travel easily to Southey and to Raymore.
>
> I received representations from a responsible source, and I pass them along for your consideration.
>
> Yours sincerely,
> Otto E. Lang

Arbury, located in my constituency, is now closed. I wonder who the "responsible source" was?

There were also some letters from well known Liberal supporters in the district urging that the post office be closed. One such letter stated: "The only ones that are getting their mail there are strong NDP. The postmaster himself is an NDP organizer". It might be noted that the majority of the people in this district have generally supported the NDP.

Then, on January 19, 1970, there was a letter from Peter Simmie, research assistant in the office of the present Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang) to Mr. Andre Houle, special assistant to the Minister of Communications (Mr. Kierans) who dealt with post office closure matters. That letter reads:

> On December 4, 1969, Mr. Lang wrote to your minister concerning the possible closing of the Esk, Saskatchewan post office. As you may remember, a petition was circulated amongst the town's citizens, and received the endorsation of 38 of the 41 families. Mr. Kierans replied to my minister on December 29, 1969: "The Minister has since received representations at Serath, Saskatchewan which has, we understand, only 28 subscribers at present. It seems as if many people in the immediate area do not patronize the post office in Serath and have indicated no real opposition to the closing of the post office. However, there is a proviso and that is that the same people who would prefer the Serath post office to close would firmly support the maintenance of the Esk post office.
>
> We would appreciate your looking into the possibility of ensuring the continuance of the Esk post office and, if necessary, closing the Serath post office to effect the necessary economies."

I wonder who "the same people" are who wanted Esk kept open and Serath closed. I suggest it was the local Liberal executive.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Then on June 4, 1970, there was a letter from Andre Houle to Peter Simmie as follows:

> Please refer to previous correspondence concerning the possible closing of the Esk and Serath, Sask. Post Offices.
>
> After a careful review of all the relative factors, it has been decided to retain the Esk post office as it is serving a useful purpose in the community.
>
> With respect to Serath, however, our survey has revealed that the village is far from being self-sustained and the customers must of necessity go to the larger neighbouring centres for banking, medical and shopping facilities. Therefore, action is being taken to close Serath post office in conjunction with the establishment of a new rural route at Southey which will serve the customers concerned. As a result of this and other related changes in the area, we expect to realize a saving in excess of $2,800 per year.

The above information is being provided in view of the interest you have expressed in this regard.

Why is Esk so much more stable than Serath? I have nothing against keeping Esk open, but let us compare the two communities.

Esk is about five miles from Lanigan, a rapidly growing town. Serath is about 20 miles from the nearest town. Serath has 50 householders according to the latest postal guide while Esk has 38. True, Serath does not have banking and medical facilities. What does Esk have? The 38 householders comprise 23 farmers, one teacher, three retired, one postmaster, four labourers, two grain agents, one carpenter, one housewife, one garage or service station operator, and one general—whatever that is.

The then Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans) refused to listen to many representations and reasoning. Local Liberal politics held sway. Some local Liberal supporters wanted to get the rural route contract. This is the type of patronage politics that has hurt the post office more than all other factors. The two Liberal members from Saskatchewan played a disgraceful role in this episode.

Another matter of concern to many communities is the reduction in railway service. The CPR has closed most of its agencies in Saskatchewan, and branch line service in many areas is restricted to grain movement. Now, the CPR is trying to unload its last remaining passenger service in Saskatchewan, the main line service.

The CNR also tried to close most of its agencies and establish a master agency plan. Public reaction was so strong that it looks as if the CNR has called off its plans. Instead, it is resorting to the old railway game of squeezing out service when the railways do not get their way. Passenger tickets have been taken away from many station agents. Communities on some lines no longer have cartage services; draying contracts have been terminated; distribution of express is becoming more centralized. Such an approach by the railways is the height of irresponsibility.

These examples and many others I could cite, Mr. Speaker, illustrate how the structure of Saskatchewan communities is breaking down because of the lack of co-ordinated planning sensitive to the needs of people. What is needed in Saskatchewan is concern and attention to the needs of communities, large, small and rural, to ensure that viable communities exist which are desirable places for people to live, from aesthetic, cultural and economic standpoints.

Many program changes are needed. I give one small example. For years forest nursery stations have provided trees free of charge to farmers. A very useful service has been performed. I suggest the time has come when this service should also be provided to urban communities. I recognize that in doing so consideration would have to be given to the situation of commercial nurseries.

In view of the serious problems facing rural Canada and smaller communities, and in view of the urgent need for co-ordination, planning and programs I urge that a minister of state for rural affairs be appointed. A useful step will be taken by appointing a minister of state for urban affairs and housing. I hope this step will be followed by meaningful programs. I suggest there is a similar need for a minister of state for rural affairs. Because of the failure of the government to act on this and many other problems, I will support the amendment to the amendment moved by the leader of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Philip G. Givens (York West): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I wish to congratulate the mover of the motion for the address in reply, the hon. member for Bourassa (Mr. Trudel), and the seconder, the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas). I do this not only as a formality but because of my high personal esteem for both of these gentlemen.

Many years ago when I was a law student, I began to learn about the constitution of this great country. I learned pretty quickly that municipal institutions came under section 92 of the British North America Act, which meant they came under the jurisdiction of the provinces. Indeed, I had a very good teacher. My teacher in constitutional law was so eminent that he now sits as a justice on the Supreme Court of Canada.

Then, almost 20 years ago I went into municipal politics. I worked my way all the way up from nothing to a state of absolute poverty, through the stages of alderman and controller, and went on to become the mayor of my beloved city of Toronto. I saw the city of my birth grow from a population of 650,000 to a metropolitan area of over 2 million population. I saw it grow by an estimated 50,000 to 60,000 people a year each year for the past 20 years, and as well I saw grow its problems of congestion, poverty, housing, welfare, education, traffic jams and pollution. I saw these problems engulf my city and its environs.

Quite often I sat wringing my hands in frustration because of a lack of power and money to do the things which had to be done for my great city. I would go to the province with my hat in hand, like a mendicant or beggar, looking for financial assistance and legal assistance. I was told by the boys in the provincial government that it was the federal government which had the money and that I should go to see my friends in the federal government. So, I would come up to Ottawa. They would take me out to lunch and they would tell me, "Phil, you know very well that jurisdiction over the cities belongs to the provinces."

I rapidly became a track star on the run-around track of passing the buck, and when I came here as a federal member of Parliament two years ago I knew about the constitution. I knew what it said in the constitution but, Mr. Speaker, that did not make it right, because it did not accord with the reality of the situation.

I have argued loud and long, time and again, that the municipalities we now have in this great country are not the municipalities which were envisaged by the Fathers of Confederation and the BNA Act, that their responsibilities today are not just to fix curbs and fill potholes, to look after police protection and fire protection, that today the cities are conglomerates, and that Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg and Vancouver could never have been envisaged in 1867 in the extent to which they have grown today.

Indeed, notwithstanding the fact of the constitution, the federal government today is financially right up to its neck in municipal matters, to the extent of hundreds of millions of dollars spent on housing, airports, harbours, post-secondary school education, post offices, public works and so on. Today the budgets of Montreal and Toronto are bigger than the budgets of at least seven of the provinces, and the populations of Montreal and Toronto are each bigger than the populations of seven of the provinces. Indeed, today the populations of each of the cities of Toronto and Montreal is bigger than the population of all the four Atlantic provinces put together.

If the provinces have a right to sit in at constitutional conferences, as I have seen them with premiers representing provinces which have populations of anywhere from 150,000 to 200,000 or 300,000 people, then surely the populations of our great cities have a right to be represented at these conferences which will determine the constitution of this country for the next 100 years.

I have pointed out that by the year 1980—this has been stated time and again by eminent statisticians and research authorities—which is only a short ten years off, 80 per cent of the population of Canada will be living in the cities of the nation. Sixty per cent of our population will be living in cities of over 100,000 population, and one third of the entire population of the nation will be living in Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver. I have argued that there was a need for the federal government to manifest its concern for the cities in order to prod the provinces, even though the cities are their responsibility under the constitution, something which I have never denied. I have argued that urban areas have affected national policies, financial and monetary policies, more than many of the provinces. In any event, Mr. Speaker, we are not dealing with municipalities as such but with people, the people we represent in this House of Commons.

But, Mr. Speaker, all these arguments seemed to fall on deaf ears. I was told that the constitution stood in the way, that I was beating my head against a brick wall, and so it seemed to me.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. Woolliams: They were bluffing you.

Mr. Givens: Anyway, I will leave to others the chronicling of the sequence of events which took place from the beginning, two years ago, until now. But, lo and behold, in the Throne Speech last week my impossible dream seems to have come true. By the appointment of a secretary of state for urban affairs and housing, the government has acknowledged that it has a place in the urban affairs of the nation. This is a specific acknowledgement in the Throne Speech. This is a de jure as well as a de facto recognition that the federal government owes responsibility, and is manifesting its concern, for the cities. It could not be clearer than it is in the Throne Speech. This means to me that there will now be a recognition of the place of municipal governments in the day to day public business of this country and in the planning for the future. In addition, in the search for a new Canadian constitution, the municipalities will be recognized and accepted as participating partners and be given a role consistent with their influence on the lives of the Canadian people.

So far as I am concerned I consider this to be a total vindication of my position and I have only one word of caution I wish to express at this time. If a federal initiative in urban affairs is to bear fruit, it must necessarily be accepted in good faith and must take into account the indispensable participation of the other levels of government, particularly in the area of formulation of national urban policies. It must be a tri-partite arrangement. This means that the federal government must recognize and pursue actively its responsibility to foster effective and continuous consultation between all levels of government in the formulation of national urban policies. It also means that the municipal governments must recognize the responsibility they have to consult together in the formulation of the municipal point of view. They must, themselves, come to terms with the problems that are situate within their boundaries and they must work together to assure a better understanding by each municipality and its officials of national urban problems. Without the full participation of municipalities as provincial and national groupings any federal initiative is doomed to failure. Without the full and active participation of individual provinces and the provinces as a group, once more federal initiative is doomed to failure.

The Canadian municipalities, through the Canadian federation of mayors and municipalities, have obviously contributed to the alerting of the federal government to its need to take an initiative in urban affairs. Let us hope that the municipalities do not consider the federal initiative to be a sufficient measure. Let us hope that they are urged to move even further and faster along the road to three party consultation rather than make the fatal mistake—and this is what it would be—of relaxing their efforts at the first sign of success in this venture.

Much has been said about the matter of pollution. We have been inundated with a miasma of pollution jargon. In an age of transcience in which fashions and fads change over night, as people leap from one sensation to another, there is a strong danger that the public will lose interest and that the destruction of our environment will continue apace as man goes the way of the dinosaur into oblivion. But I do not think this will happen.

I think that pollution is, and will continue to be, the vital issue for the rest of this century. If we fail in this period of time and over the next generation to control its disastrous devastation and to repair the basic defects of rampant population growth and uncontrolled technology, and if we do not somehow adjust our concern about the environment and adapt it to our traditional institutional framework of society, then we will have had it; we simply will not survive. Many cracks have been made by sophisticated, "hep", people, the swingers, who have wondered out loud through the facilities of the media whether the furore about pollution is full of sound and fury signifying nothing and whether indeed it is a passing fad like the mini or the midi or the Nehru jacket. There are the neanderthal types in all walks of life who have indicated that it is only a tempest in a teapot, a gimmick for professors and radical students to attract attention and publicity for themselves.

In the past decade we have seen many emotional and volatile issues grab people and shake them only to be forgotten the day after tomorrow. Our attention span is terribly short and our concentration as fickle as a femme. This unfortunately is true. I feel, however, that never before have we been faced with an issue of such vital significance to ourselves and the future of our children and our grandchildren. This is an issue which we live with every day and which is before our very eyes day in and day out, week in and week out, year after year. We are reminded of it constantly as we breathe the air, listen to the constant cacaphony of deafening noises around us, struggle through crowds and traffic, twitch our noses and turn away from looking at the streams, rivers and lakes in and out of our cities in order to keep from throwing up.

If in the face of these frightening reminders which we see every day we turn away or lose interest and turn to something else for kicks, then we will truly deserve the catastrophe which will descend on our heads. Therefore, I consider the call in the Throne Speech for a co-ordination and consolidation of all our efforts in an effective fashion and the establishment of a department with a mandate for the protection of the biosphere to be a declaration of major importance which would not have been possible two years ago.

On the subject of abortion, I welcome the proposal for a special debate. Naturally, I would prefer to see the government take specific action on this matter but two years in these hallowed halls and corridors have taught me that there are many deep and serious divisions of opinion on this subject and of course I have mine. I do not think I will ever forget the debates in this House when we were discussing the therapeutic abortion amendment to the Criminal Code omnibus bill last year.

The state of New York, which has a population greater than the whole of Canada and which has an ethnic, racial and religious mix which is a microcosm of the whole of the United States and comparable to ours, has freed abortion from criminal strictures. Although this great state is just across the border, it may as well be at the other end of the world so far as this progressive move is concerned. At least the xenophobes in our midst can take comfort in the fact that we have not been brainwashed and acculturated to this degree by our United States neighbour.

When we passed the therapeutic abortion amendment I really believed we had done a good thing and that we would be protecting about 100,000 Canadian women a year who seek illegal abortions from the back alley butchers who prey on them. Alas, this has not been the case. I believe it is time this Parliament took heed of the growing number of Canadians who maintain that an intimate decision concerning abortion should be made by the woman or couple concerned, without being dominated by those who would impose their ideas concerning morality and religion on others who hold entirely different views and beliefs.

I feel the same way about another controversial matter mentioned in the Throne Speech. I refer to the question of the non-medical use of drugs. I have been appalled by what I have seen in the courts in Toronto and by what is going on in the courtrooms throughout this nation with regard to this problem. Every day hundreds of youths across this country are being arrested, mugged, finger printed and given a criminal record at the start of their lives for the mere possession of a "reefer" or two of Cannabis marijuana. Many of these kids have come from our finest homes. The result of such conviction, regardless of the penalty imposed by enlightened courts, has a devastating effect on the families as well as the accused. It is granted that this whole problem in respect of drugs is vexing and perplexing, but this method of handling these cases under the Criminal Code is really archaic and Draconian in an enlightened society. I shall anxiously await the commission's final report so that it can be studied, discussed and acted upon without further delay.

So, for the reasons I have indicated, I am delighted with the Throne Speech and for the first time in the two years I have been here I can honestly say I now feel at home in this House.

• (4:00 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I take the opportunity of congratulating the movers of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne (Mr. Trudel and Mr. Douglas).

We are all invited to discuss the Speech from the Throne. In all such speeches, we find valuable items and some that are less so, as well as omissions. This speech teems with good intentions. In fact, it says, and I quote:

> As Canada moves into the seventies, we are all invited to join in this bold enterprise—to share the excitement, to face the challenge, to pursue the distant ideal of a just society.

Further, it says:

> The Canada of the seventies must continue to be a land for people; a country in which freedom and individualism are cherished and nurtured; a society in which the Government lends its strength to withstand, rather than support the pressures for conformity.

That surely set me wondering! Here is more:

> Fortunately, our population, the number of Canadians engaged in productive employment, the total volume of goods and services which they produce, and Canadian exports all continue to grow.

Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to spend the few minutes I have left commenting only the Throne speech. As many others, I would like to make some objective remarks.

After two years in the House, we might well ask ourselves certain questions. In fact, there were 300,000 unemployed two years ago; today there are 500,000 people out of work.

The government has adopted an anti-inflationary policy. The attempt to limit salary increases to 6 per cent is an example. However, they forgot to ask industries and businesses to restrict their profits to 6 per cent. To me, it was gross injustice. I was very surprised to see that the government wanted to limit salary increases to 6 per cent without any consideration for low wage earners. This type of unfairness was designed to widen the gap between the rich and the poor.

As regards housing, there are still very serious problems in this field.

On many occasions—and I shall take the liberty of repeating this—we had asked the Minister to repeal the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials. For a year and a half now, we have been asking the government to make low-interest loans to workers with low incomes. In my view, such action would soon bring about the expansion of the construction industry.

A policy aimed at making the repayment of loans easier may well be introduced, still, low-income workers cannot be required to pay over the years three times the actual value of their homes.

It is indeed a pleasure and a duty to request once again—and I hope the minister will listen to us this year—low-interest loans, or, in other words, loans bearing interest at 5 or 6 per cent for wage-earners with an annual income of $10,000 or less.

With respect to agriculture, the two years that have just elapsed have not yet brought the expected profits of results. This could be discussed at length. However, where the milk producers are concerned and taking into account their good faith in relation with quotas, I urge the minister in charge to rectify as quickly as possible the iniquities they have been suffering since last April. Because of that iniquitous situation—and many of you know it—several dairy farmers have disappeared. The minister had undertaken to put an end to that anomaly as soon as the good faith of the dairy farmers could be established. Having said this I hope that the minister will act without any delay so that these producers can get the grants they need desperately. We have perhaps forgotten during the last two years to readjust the pensions of the blind and the disabled. Those pensions set at $75 monthly are insufficient, and this has been the case for a long time. I hope that this year we will be able, after discussion, to increase the pension of the people who, in addition to living alone, need someone to help them. This $75 pension, in view of the need for a companion, is ridiculous surely, considering the cost of living today. Since April 1964, a blind person cannot earn more than $1,600 a year or his pension will be reduced. I hope the government will reconsider this measure and will allow a blind man to become less dependent and thanks to his skill, to increase his income without losing his pension.

Mr. Speaker, if we make a quick survey, it is hard to believe that we will gain the confidence of the people in this manner.

Last year, I spoke at some length about objectivity. I thought that, which the good will of all hon. members, we could achieve a greater degree of objectivity, act more as administrators than as politicians. Such objectivity, I feel, has not been exercised in the manner that I and the whole population of Canada would have wished to see in the House. This year, I hope that there will be more objectivity here than heretofore. We can never gain the confidence of the people so long as suggestions brought forward and likely to help our fellow-citizens are being rejected.

I dare hope that we may still prove our Parliament to be truly democratic.

To my way of thinking party discipline is much too rigid in certain cases.

• (4:10 p.m.)

I know that the party in power is often embarrassed. I also know that, according to an old tradition, any legislation introduced in the House, if rejected, necessarily brings about the fall of the government.

In my view, this tradition could disappear. I feel that the government should be defeated through a vote of non-confidence. If this measure were more clearly defined we could ask the political parties to be less rigid when party discipline is involved.

I do not accept very well that party discipline should involve the conscience of the members, because this practice leads us to deny certain commitments we have made and forces us to vote against our own convictions. Obviously, the party in power is often placed before this dilemma. By changing that attitude or those old traditions, we could give more freedom to the members and thereby prove to the Canadian people that a democratic parliament can really be achieved.

As long as party discipline is that rigid, it will continue to bind the conscience of the members. There are striking examples.

Indeed, last spring, the matter of dairy policy came up. I remember full well that the majority of the members, who represent rural areas, were not in favour of the government policy. But the party discipline was strong enough to silence the members of the party in power and the government cut back the subsidies by $10 million, which did excessive harm to milk producers.

Today, we are still trying to get the situation back to normal. But the fact remains that party discipline forced a number of members to vote, I am convinced, against their convictions. They would have liked to have fought for the interests of the riding they promised to represent well, but they were unable to do so.

Now, I dare hope changes will be made to that effect, to enable Parliament to allow all its members to be more honest and honour their commitments towards their electors.

Mr. Speaker, a while ago mention was made of a bill allowing greater freedom in the matter of abortions. I am sorry that the Speech from the Throne did not refer to a bill that would have given us the opportunity of discussing abortion this year. I feel that the impressive statistics published in the last three years and a half justify a new debate on that law.

I would have liked better during this session to see a debate on capital punishment rather than on further liberalization of the legislation on abortion. I would have preferred that we should try to get rid of our criminals rather than consider doing away with innocent people.

Mr. Speaker, I shall take this opportunity to mention a problem of some significance in my riding which does not have only advantages but also its own problems.

For the past few months I have made representations to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) in order to get, on behalf of my riding, information concerning the current unemployment rate. I consider myself justified in asking the minister for a better understanding of the difficulties we experience at this time.

There are various reasons for the 15 per cent unemployment rate in my riding. We should also be able to find work for some 1,500 students who enter the labour market each year.

The training programmes that have been made necessary by the work done at the international airport and that normally should help reduce unemployment will certainly not be felt before 1980. As there were reductions in some areas of the textile industries in my constituency, unemployment has gained momentum.

I am convinced that the minister understands the situation and that he will attempt to give it special attention. I will have the opportunity in the near future to present him with a petition from my constituency, namely from all the municipalities, the Chambers of Commerce, the Regional Economic Council and from cities such as Joliette and l'Assomption. I think that, in the light of claims which will show the difficulties we are experiencing, the minister will seriously consider the possibility of including my constituency as a designated region or at least setting up special areas which would be a great help for us.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words about severe unemployment throughout Canada and particularly in the province of Quebec.

I made on occasions some suggestions aimed at curtailing unemployment. There are works to be done in each municipality. I wonder whether we could not ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his government to give special attention to the organization of winter works this year. This is something that was going on previously, but that has been called off by the government. I wonder whether we would not have reasons re-establish them, at least with respect to public services in each municipality.

I wonder also whether it would not be desirable to have students work during the summer at cleaning up our waterways; this would give employment to students and help fight pullution at the same time.

These works would confer a tourstic attraction to our cities.

I would like to ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion as well, to consider very particularly the possibility of granting assistance to industries.

The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion has greatly improved the situation by allowing certain expenses in different areas of Canada, especially in the province of Quebec. We have, therefore, profited by a reasonable part of those works.

But I wonder if it is adequately considered to protect the industries. It is very interesting to see a certain number of new industries come into being, but I believe that we unfortunately forget to give them adequate attention. In my opinion, it would be much less burdensome to allow these industries to have a certain expansion or, at least, to continue their operations.

Before concluding my remarks, I would like to say a few words on a question which has not been mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, namely the measure to amend the constitution. Some hon. members talked about the matter and discussed it, but I regret that that question has not received the priority which it deserves.

I think that in the opinion of Quebecers and of all other Canadians, such a change is becoming increasingly essential and should have been mentioned in the Speech from the Throne. People are worried right now because we are living anguishing hours. Still, I believe we should ask what is behind this phenomenon.

I think that over the past 10 years Quebec has made quite normal claims at federal-provincial conferences. Perhaps the federal government has refused for too long to recognize the particular situation of Quebec in Canada. In fact, 80 per cent of Quebec's population is nevertheless represented by French speaking people.

The history of the French Canadian nation leads us to recognize differences. It is also the responsibility of Quebec to see to the preservation of our traditions, of our turn of mind and of our views which are not necessarily identical to those of other Canadians. I think that these are quite rightful aspirations. We share much in common with all other Canadians: we want well-being and affluence but, at the same time, we want to keep our language and our habits, desires which are quite legitimate.

I regret, however, that the federal government should be reluctant to revise the Constitution, which discourage, to a certain extent a number of Quebec people. It may be that the federal members from the Province of Quebec should have given their colleagues from the other provinces more precise information on the difficulties and the aspirations of Quebecers. It may have been to often said that only a few people, a gang of bums, were involved, and that the matter did not have any great importance.

If that is so, then it was not the truth. A wish for emancipation was coming alive in Quebec. I believe that, to a certain extent, it was due to some hesitation in granting this wish that the movement for independence came into being, and, through all this, it happens that some groups go further than those who wish to remain peaceful.

Some will say that at the last election, the Province of Quebec, being well satisfied with the present system, elected a majority government which favoured federalism. But perhaps no attention was drawn to the fact that 66 per cent of the French-speaking population of Quebec voted for opposition parties, and this proves the dissatisfaction of a large number of citizens.

I say that because we already have a committee whose very first task will be to tackle the problem of improving the constitution.

I also believe that the briefs submitted by the Quebec governments since 1960 were aiming at the same goal and emphasizing the needs of the whole Canadian population.

The brief tabled at the last conference was almost the same as those from the precedent governments although its tune was a little different.

If on occasion we have perhaps changed our tune, it might be because we used the appropriate tune at the time, which made it possible for the Quebec premier to change his tune and perhaps his words while still taking into consideration Quebec's objectives and needs and also the conditions by which this province could remain in our great country, Canada, so that the Quebec people could be happier and more content.

I do not think that by passing one single piece of legislation we could settle the problem of national unity. I believe in differences. Some are found in our province but also elsewhere. We are prepared to recognize them and we have proved it.

Should we also ask to the majority of hon. members to understand these differences in order that each citizen can get his share of happiness and satisfaction in Canada?

We are willing to accept—and we have proved it—the differences that exist in other provinces. I must say that so that there can be a better understanding in our country, since I am convinced that, if we were better informed and more open-minded, we would be able not only to accept the province of Quebec, but to keep it within Canada and to make it easier for it to obtain the particuler rights which would enable its inhabitants to be happy. Under these conditions, we will build our country—and this is surely the desire of the vast majority of Quebecers—while respecting the differences existing not only in Quebec but elsewhere as well.

After all, I still think that in the future, thanks to a better understanding from those sitting here, the province of Quebec will develop further in this beautiful country which is called Canada.

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, during the next few minutes I should like to express my opinion on the Speech from the Throne delivered on October 8. I commend the government for it because I am convinced that its devoted civil servants must have taken a lot of time to prepare as perfect, as eloquent a piece of oratorial art as this with such high-sounding but absolutely meaningless words.

In my estimation, this speech could easily be compared to a stuffed animal. One admires the art of the craftsman who has given it an appearance so near to reality; one admires the finish, even the elegance of this so-called work of art, but everyone knows very well there is no consistency inside this beautiful body, that this lovely decor hides only a few pounds of straw and that the whole thing rests on the ability of the craftsman to give it its striking appearance.

Once again, as usual, we are given pompous statements devoid of meaning.

Mr. Speaker, one reads in the Speech, and I quote:

> Canada continues to enjoy social stability to an exceptional degree.

Incidentally, I should like to say that when the Speech from the Throne was written our situation was not what it is today. Still, we knew something was wrong. Today, the situation is far more serious than we thought.

They dare say that Canada enjoys exceptionoal social stability. I wonder where the staff of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) get their information.

Perhaps the people working for some of the hon. opposites still believe in Santa Claus. If the members of the government believe in Santa Claus, I beg of them to dispense with trying to make us believe in him. Obviously, we no longer do.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, someone should ask the employees of G. Lapalme Inc. if they believe in Santa Claus! We should ask the farmers of Eastern Canada if they are still expecting Bill C-197 from Santa Claus! Western farmers who are at grips with the famous Lift program should be asked if they think Santa Claus exists! We should also ask Canadian shoe manufacturers, Indians of the North, as well as foreign investors whether they believe in Santa Claus!

In one word, Mr. Speaker, government members should leave their offices and look around.

If the Prime Minister's statement is true, what are we doing here? If everything is fine, why keep trying to improve the situation? We are now at the beginning of the third test year of the present government which is repeating its usual story, the establishment of its just society.

I sincerely wonder if it is a just society for fun or a just society for a few. According to the Winnipeg Free Press of April 21 last, Governor Louis Rasminsky of the Bank of Canada stated that average salary increases of 7 to 8 per cent a year too high to allow the federal government to successfully combat inflation.

Well, in the course of last year, no doubt as an active participation in the anti-inflation fight, this same Mr. Rasminsky raised his own salary from $50,000 to $75,000 a year, or 50 per cent, which is only six or seven times more than what he had considered too high. A just society for whom, Mr. Speaker?

I am not against the principle of "just" salary increases. I use the word according to the meaning it has for us Créditistes, that is, equal justice for all.

Justice demands, I claim, that the wage increases to be granted to Canadian workers be proportionally equal to that given to Mr. Rasminsky.

But you will say that this would be absolutely impossible, and you are right. Then why not keep wages at a stationary level and cut down commodity prices? Impossible again, you will reply. And again I agree; such action is impossible in this unhealthy system. The solution to the problem lies in the implementation of Social Credit policies.

I know for sure that nobody will ever accept this truth without being compelled to do so. And in spite of it all, it is considered that Canada enjoys exceptional social stability. Words! Words! Words! Preposterous I say!

Where is that so-called just society? Are we talking about true distributive justice, or about the hollow concept of "justice"? Speaking of "justice", I think that at the present moment, we know nothing about it in Canada.

I would like, at this stage, to relate a conversation I had with somebody whose logic was perplexing.

In view of all that is happening in Canada, this person asked me simply: "Why should the federal government not decide to be honest once and for all and enact legislation which would confiscate to the benefit of the government all private property in Canada?»

This person told me that he considered the present governments as true usurpers taxing indispensable commodities in order to take over, by indirect means, what belongs to the people.

Why not, then, frankly be usurpers and do it directly, without hiding behind taxes? What do you answer to such advanced logic? In my opinion, such a statement leads us to doubt the exceptional social stability we enjoy in Canada, according to the Speech from the Throne.

Every day there are edifying news about attempts made to bring about a just society. Thus, in looking through the annual report of the Canadian Film Development Corporation for 1969-70 I was quite surprised to find out that such films as L'Initiation and Les deux femmes en or had received financial assistance from the said corporation.

Mr. Speaker, here is what it says on page 9, and I quote:

"Under Section 10(2) of the Act establishing the Corporation, a completed film, in order to be eligible for a grant, must have a significant Canadian content.

Mr. Speaker, it is conceivable that a producer could decide to include in a film obscenities, insults to justice, words that vilely sully the beliefs of the majority of Canadians, and all sorts of things we all, I am sure, condemn, since he alone assumes moral and financial responsibility for them.

But that taxes paid by Canadians should contribute to the financing of such films, that, I repeat, is revolting to me. I strive to bring my children up in the natural respect of genuine love and of the most elementary human values, hereas the government, using funds raised from the fruit of my labours and those of all Canadians, allows producers to show such films in all our movie houses, accompagnied by spectacular and well-orchestrated publicity. That, Mr. Speaker, is beyond my understanding and I am squarely against it.

Is this the "just society" which means to shake the foundations of a self-respecting society? We should not wonder at the trouble our young people have been giving us lately. And to think that in the report it is said that such movies have a significant Canadian content. Supported, I suppose, by some kind of foundation garment. Is this what should be used to identify our society, as basic principle? Perhaps it is one of the objectives sought in the creation of the "just society"!

Moreover, we are spending thousands of dollars to find the reasons why so many young people take drugs. In fact, we are degrading them with all kinds of things and they have no hope left in the future.

There is no logic in the government's attitude, Mr. Speaker. Thousands of dollars are spent on research into the harmful effects of cigarettes, drugs, etc., and at the same time, tobacco farmers are granted subsidies to increase their production. As for me, I do not really see the logic in such a reasoning on the part of a government deemed reasonable.

We can also see in the Speech from the Throne that the government has just found a miracle solution to the problem of housing and pollution by establishing federal departments. We really feel that the matter is being dealt with, that we need no longer worry about housing and pollution. The creation of these departments is so ridiculous that it is virtually impossible to say a word about it to our constituents without making them laugh, and I do understand them!

This reminds me of the fine books and documents that I keep preciously on the shelves in my office, here, in the parliament buildings. They all deal with bilingualism and biculturalism in Canada. So many words which mean nothing.

In my opinion, bilingualism in Ottawa is, in fact, a French Canadian who speaks English.

Most of the messengers of the House of Commons, whose mother tongue is French, speak English, while those whose mother tongue is English are very seldom able to speak French. The same applies to elevator operators, members of the protective staff, etc. And yet large amounts of money are used to publish rubbish submitted by young people who are not much more intelligent than their proposals.

What is the use of special commissions, task forces and even departments, when we know very well that this will in no way change the views of our devoted Prime Minister? Where is the democracy of which we have been hearing for 20 years? We should call this a dictatorship, because here in Ottawa, there is only one man who governs. We see this every day. I am thinking of the worthwhile efforts of hon. members who sit on committees and of the reports of which no account is ever taken.

• (4:40 p.m.)

We are informed of a possible series of debates on consumer protection, reorganization of the textile industry and the study of the report of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women, etc. Even people outside politics could easily see, upon reading the speech, that the present government is beating around the bush to save time. The Prime Minister is the only one who knows what the immediate future of the country will be.

The uneasiness we are plagued with is an economic one. All efforts to protect the consumer, to reorganize the textile industry and to raise unemployment benefits, will have to be made all over again soon if we do not change the foundation of our economic system.

And the foundation I am talking about here is that of the monetary concept.

Mr. Speaker, it is amazing to note how easily certain people get lost in the clouds. In conclusion to his brilliant speech, our clear-sighted Prime Minister stated, and I quote:

We stand on the threshold of greatness.

I am convinced that this sentence will remain famous in our records for posterity. It is about the 30th time that at the opening of a session of Parliament, our poetically-minded prime ministers have really felt they stood on the threshold of greatness. This is where we have been standing for the last 100 years. What a joke!

Extreme poverty exists in the St. James district, in my riding. People there no longer believe in beautiful and bombastic tirades.

We must put an end to this once and for all.

Some government members may tell me that this time, it is for good that our poetically-minded Prime Minister is truly on the threshold of greatness.

This has been said so often that I feel people like us should not let ourselves be forever taken in by the same thing.

For the last few days, we have been living in the climate which prevails on the other side of that threshold. For my part, I do not believe that it is the threshold of greatness. The people who are active in the FLQ are surely to be condemned, and I condemn them very strongly. Actions such as those taken recently should, in my opinion, be most severely punished. However, I do understand them! For quite a long time, especially in Quebec, certain demands have been made, and, as long as the authorities do not get their arm twisted, nobody will do anything. We are floundering about in a completely obsolete system. The poor are telling us that. It is most difficult for a student, a small wage earner to work and survive.

The government is resorting to handsomely paid publicity to fool the people. It is using funds coming out of the tax-payers' pockets to finance pornographic films. It sets up inquiry commissions by the dozen without achieving any results. Their reports are only so many beautiful books. Furthermore, it is claimed that our country enjoys "social stability to an exceptional degree" and that we are "on the threshold of greatness."

Let us put the question to some 1,500 businessmen or others who went bankrupt this year in the province of Quebec. It will be seen if we have reached the threshold of greatness, especially the threshold of prosperity.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding my remarks, I want to assure the hon. members that as long as I have the privilege to make my views known in this House, I shall do so with vigour and determination in an attempt, against all hope, to bring them to open their eyes and see the "greatness" on the threshold of which we are standing, a greatness that wallows in violence, in a total lack of respect for the fundamental rights of society, in the tolerance of all known vices, in the recognition of the greatest agitators in the world, among other things.

I want future generations to know that it will not be people like me or my colleagues who will have brought this so-called just society, this so-called greatness but the present so-called government.

Mr. Guy LeBlanc (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) told us a few minutes ago that the Speech from the Throne was a mere list of good intentions. Knowing him and having spoken with him at noon, I feel he is attaching a derogatory meaning to the words "good intentions".

I also believe that a Speech from the Throne should represent a program being implemented by people, as a team, with good intentions.

First, I want to congratulate the movers of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne (Mr. Trudel and Mr. Douglas) who carried out their task with sincerity and conviction.

In the hon. member for Bourassa, I have recognized the realistic businessman who is used to aim straight at the target and speaks his mind.

In the other mover, the member from Assiniboia, I have recognized a most serious man, with a sense of humour which is a quality we should keep if we really want to be objective and positive in our daily tasks.

The member form Assiniboia spoke with great competence on the agricultural problem, all the more so since all hon. members and many Canadians are aware that he is in a position to speak as an expert on agriculure as he is himself a master in this field.

During the few minutes at my disposal, I propose to express my own modest opinion on the opposition's motions, which I would call negative, and to state why I fully support the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne.

I am opposed to the opposition's motions. The subamendment of the New Democratic Party, for instance, states in the first place that the government failed to deal effectively with the threat to Canadian independence which is dear to all of us.

However, I believe that the government did take effective measures to protect the economic independence of our country.

I believe we could give a lot of examples to substantiate this statement, but I intend to mention just one: the industrial incentives legislation which has been improved over the past few years and which has been most beneficial in our areas, especially in mine where employment was provided.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Besides, the government intends to take further steps in this connection. For instance, the bill on the uranium industry with regard to foreign control is a concrete example of what is contained in the Speech from the Throne as to the government's program.

When I speak of negative attitudes, I have in mind certain positions taken by the New Democratic Party and, as a case in point, I will mention a topic which is of particular interest to us from the lower St. Lawrence and Gaspé region.

I have in mind a debate on a private bill concerning the population of low-wage earners of my region, the Quebec Telephone bill regarding the Compagnie de téléphone Bonaventure et Gaspé Limitée.

Members of the New Democratic Party did not allow representatives of the latter company to appear before Parliament and expound the situation. And those people talk about freedom and democracy. When people wish to come and explain what they want to do for the citizens of my area, they are not allowed to speak. Our friends of the New Democratic Party did that!

The New Democrat subamendment deals with the high rate of unemployment. According to that party, the government has not done anything. But we all know that the government has set a policy to reduce unemployment. I mean the professional training and retraining as well as the Canada Manpower Mobility program.

Every day many unemployed Canadians benefit from this program and from retraining courses. I know that education, curriculum preparation and complete jurisdiction in education comes under the provinces.

However there is nothing to prevent us, economically speaking, from encouraging our young people and our unemployed citizens to complete their education, their training.

As mentioned in the Speech from the Throne and as all Canadians can see for themselves, inflation which has been a very serious problem, not only in Canada but in many other countries, is on the wane.

The fight against inflation has not helped the government to deal with the problems of unemployment but, with inflation decreasing, we can hope it will be easier for the government and for all citizens to work on bringing down the high rate of unemployment.

The government intends to continue its action to this end. We will just mention the various regional development agreements the government plans to revise or renew. And we could mention many other steps the government intends to take.

The sub-amendment also deals with the guaranteed minimum income, in order to abolish the poverty from which at least five million Canadians are said to be suffering. We are all for it, because all of us want to carry on the fight against poverty.

However, it would be a mistake to say that this government has done nothing or is doing nothing to ensure a minimum income to Canadian citizens, because that is what it has been trying to do since 1968.

Take the social programmes that have been improved and will be further improved. Let us also consider the efforts made by the Economic Council of Canada in order to advise Parliament, the government and the Canadian people. And the government wishes to continue to guarantee such an income since a measure to that effect stands in the name of the government.

At this stage, I should like to add a personal remark. When it comes to providing an income, we must also think of providing jobs, and since the people are willing to work, it may be more practical, and we would thus perhaps show more consideration for the pride of our fellow-citizens, to take steps to find them jobs.

And I come now to the amendment in the name of the official opposition. It states in part, and I quote:

—of the indecision and the failure of Your Excellency's advisers—

In my humble opinion, there has been no indecision nor have there been failures.

[Mr. LeBlanc.]

If we consider realistically the 1968 program, without thinking of any Christmas gifts for Santa Claus, as the previous speaker mentioned, it may be said that it has been completed.

The idea of a balanced budget was put forward. Certain steps have been undertaken in order to balance the budget, and I believe that all Canadians will agree on that point.

At that time, the government made it known to us that it wanted first to pass the bills under consideration by this House, which we have done.

The new program shows the good-will of the government. The negative approach of the opposition can also bring about failures. I think of the famous Bill C-197 which the previous speaker mentioned. That legislation, which was designed to aid farmers and to make trade easier between the provinces has now been studied for months. Even during the period of adjournment, the members of the committee came back to consider that bill. Why? In order to be able to pass it during the session which ended a few days ago. And I think that the provincial authorities were hoping that we would adopt that measure before the end of the last session. It turned out to be a failure.

• (5:00 p.m.)

The destructive opposition makes of the just society which is proposed a remote ideal. When one speaks of an "ideal" one always thinks of something that must be relatively far-off. Far-off, yes, but where and in what place? It is, in fact, the same ideal that individuals and societies have always wished to attain, a purpose that is relatively far-off. A program such as the one contained in the Speech from the Throne represents, it seems to me, the research for a far-off ideal.

In 1968, the government has spelled out his "philosophy" of the just society. I use this word even if some members have used it in a disparaging sense. Someone said it was time to live through justice and not off charity, and to do everything possible to achieve a just society. I fail to see why the opponents of the government, the members of the other parties, should chide the government or the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for speaking to us of a just society. Its achievement is not the promise of Santa Claus, or the promise of a miracle for tomorrow, because no one can tell us today that, tomorrow, we will have a just society. However, someone who is sincere can promise to use all the means at his disposal to achieve a just society. We can, for instance, even today, make an ideal of our concept of a just society and the Speech from the Throne, according to me, is a proof of that.

As a whole, I think the attitude of the opposition is negative. I am proud to express my views on behalf of my electors of the riding of Rimouski. That negative attitude of the opposition is surely harmful. That it should harm our party, in the face of the problems now facing us, has no importance.

Some time ago I read that a statesman must work for the generations to come but that a politician, in the narrow sense of the word, works solely towards the next elections. To my mind, some members of the opposition could meditate upon that statement. Such an attitude is harmful to the good features of our system, and it is certainly harmful to parliament which is the expression of our freedom, and a tool that has proved itself and will continue to do so provided we can continue to improve it. I feel that attitude has lessened the confidence Canadians have in the system, in parliament. That is why I think it might be wise for the opposition, instead of acting as it has done in the last few days, instead of refusing to see what is good in the program of the Liberal party, and saying that it is all wrong, that the government achieves nothing, to at least admit that there are good things in the Speech from the Throne which, as I said a while ago, illustrates a philosophy and a program.

Everyone will agree, I hope, that it is quite normal to bring to mind certain principles, to say why we want to work towards this or that end, before preparing a program like that one.

Philosophy and program, both are necessary since it is impossible that everything can be bad and, in line with this, I will refrain from adopting the extreme standpoint of our friends in the opposition. When I tell them that they find everything bad, I do not suggest that all is fine in Canada, which would be naive from me. In fact, some problems do require a solution in this country, and this is a truism. This is why we should always have governments and other structures designed to solve our problems, such as that of the Constitution for instance. It is said that the government is ignoring it, but a special joint committee has been created by this House to make a survey of all the constitutional issues which have been discussed for years.

The question of tax reform is dealt with in the famous white paper which has been talked about so much lately. We all have fears, in spite of the committee report published recently. We think it right that the small wage-earner will no longer have to pay taxes in future, if legislation is passed accordingly. But we believe that the load of the middle class should be lightened, because middle class people work very hard to maintain the economic stability of this country. It seems to us that there should be a better balance between the tax paid by the middle class—business men, professionals and others—and the wealthier classes, corporations, etc.

There is also another problem, the partiality for the C.B.C. which has been criticiezd by many members on all sides of the House for many years. We are proud to be able to say that in Canada we enjoy freedom of the press, but a good many people seem to think that in the name of freedom anything goes. It has been said that our freedom begins where that of the other ends. It has also been asserted that freedom consisted in abiding by the law.

In my opinion, our bill of rights should state once and for all and for the benefit of the public at large, what is freedom. Are we deprived of our freedom when those who want to read or to make some research in libraries are required to abide by the rule?

Let us deal now with the problem of unemployment. What about some of our fellow-citizens over forty who lose their job because of unfortunate and uncontrolable circumstances and who cannot find employment? At that age, most workers are still quite productive.

As regards unemployment, I think a useful method would be to make every effort to offer a wide variety of suggestions to our youth.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Young graduates are looking only for interesting and remunerating employment. But it would not be exaggerated, I think, to remind them that, on leaving school at 18 or 19, they can be ready, in a relatively short lap of time, to create jobs in small undertakings or businesses.

Regional development is a problem of particular interest to my friends in the Gaspé region and the Lower St. Lawrence, where is located the Rimouski constituency which I represent. For many years now, governments have spent millions of dollars to set up a program and my electors are becoming more and more concerned in that regard. They want to know if they have not been misled and when they will be able to see concrete achievements.

I am referring here to a measure taken in my riding, about which my fellow-citizens and myself feel proud: the creation of an inter-municipal committee for the Rimouski-Mont-Joli-Price zone. This initiative was taken by our own people, by citizens who think the government can help them, but who also believe that they must begin by helping themselves.

With regard to the projects of this inter-municipal committee, I hope that, in the fields coming under its jurisdiction, the federal government will give serious consideration to the requests of the members of this committee with regard to the improvement of the airport of this urban centre, and of the port of Rimouski, a very important port, to the creation of an industrial park and to improving both ocean and river shipping.

I would like to draw the attention of hon. members to the policy of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in connection with the building of low-cost housing. Back home low-cost housing units are being built as everywhere else in Canada but, although our directors, the officers of the Corporation, mean well, they have lost sight of the fact that what is a low price in Toronto, or Montreal is not so in our area, as when we speak of low-cost housing, the price must bear some relation to the salary scale prevailing in this particular area.

So, either the cost of housing remains at the same level with the possibility of increasing wages, or what would be even better from certain points of view, the price of those supposedly low-cost dwellings is reduced, so long as my fellow citizens obtain what they require.

I also have in mind a certain policy of the Canadian National Railways in regard to our region. I am thinking about the fate of some employees of this company, while everybody is talking about the protection of workers. I am one of them, as are most of the members of the House. I know that a man who has been employed by the company for one or two months perhaps must sleep in his car because the company does not provide him with a place to live or does not pay his expenses.

I have in mind some investigation methods it uses to discuss...

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. LeBlanc (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, would the House allow me to continue for a few more minutes?

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Has the hon. member for Rimouski the unanimous consent of the House to complete his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Agreed.

Mr. LeBlanc (Rimouski): I thank my hon. colleagues for giving me this permission. I will not exceed my time and I shall finish my speech as quickly as possible.

There are many other points which I would have liked to deal with. I might be able to come back to them. I would have liked to refer to in particular, the problem of the farmers and the producers of industrial milk which are of prime concern to us.

Before closing I should like to say again that, like several of my colleagues, I sincerely and earnestly support the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne because this speech gives us an image of the just society. I cannot understand why anyone could object to our desire that justice prevail among our people.

In addition, if we consider as a whole the three Speeches from the Throne since 1968, we notice that the last one is a consistent follow-up of the other two, with regard to the establishment of the just society. The second Speech from the Throne set up a program for drafting white papers for the purpose of establishing the structure or the framework of that society which the government wants to create in order to prepare, for our young people, and for all our fellow citizens, the Canada of the 80s or of the year 2000.

[English]

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I too should like to offer my congratulations to the hon. member for Bourassa (Mr. Trudel) and the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) who had the honour to move and second the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. I wish them well in achieving progress in their respective constituencies. While I may not speak of them in the same vein in 1972 or whenever the next federal election is called, I do wish them well until then.

I should also like to take this opportunity to offer the government my sincere feelings concerning the difficulties they are facing in dealing with those minority extremist groups which have inflicted a blemish upon the reputation of Canada as a nation, a reputation that all other nations viewed with envy in respect of the status of our law and order and freedom of life. The incidents of the past several days have far-reaching implications which go beyond the two kidnappings. I hope that with co-operation at all levels of government and among all parties, law and order can be restored for all Canadians. The cornerstone of this Canadian nation, this democracy, is respect for and obedience of the law. When we permit the law to be defied or evaded, whether by the rich or the poor, we are to that extent weakening the bonds of our civilization and increasing the chances of its destruction and the chances of substituting a system in which there will be violence, tyranny and anarchy. Mr. Speaker, this is a time for statesmanship, not politics, and I hope that with cool minds, with understanding and wisdom we will overcome this nightmare with which we unfortunately are faced.

My leader and other colleagues who have spoken before me have dealt forcibly and adequately with the shortcomings of the Throne Speech. I am sure other colleagues who speak after me will do likewise. I would, however, like to dwell for a moment on the last paragraph of the Hansard recording of the speech made by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on Friday, because it confuses me. I should like to quote what he said, as follows:

> —we here in this House have both the opportunity and the responsibility to demonstrate to all Canadians that in our common commitment to Canada and to the democratic process we are capable of producing enlightened debate and wise decisions. I look forward, Mr. Speaker, as I know do all hon. members, to a session which will bring distinction to this Parliament and to those who have the honour to sit within it, and which will contribute to a better Canada in a better world.

To use one of the quick reports which the Prime Minister has used in this House, I say "Ditto". These words confuse me, because last year hon. members of this House were a bunch of nobodies. Suddenly we have become members of distinction and honour. Therefore, I hope these words were meaningful and sincere and were not just so many more empty words such as I have heard from the opposite side of the House on many previous occasions. Two years ago when I first entered this House, Mr. Speaker, I heard supposedly sincere words which have turned out to be meaningless, words such as these, that every Canadian regardless of where he lives in Canada must have equality of opportunity. That was over two years ago, Mr. Speaker, and I am still waiting for the meaning, just as some 4 million other Canadians are waiting—the one quarter of our population who live below the poverty line.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Quite a number of these poverty stricken Canadians are in my province. I had occasion to visit those who reside in my district, and they are waiting as they have been for too many years. All I can reason is that equality of opportunity means to this government that there will be studies done and white papers produced; then they will study again and they will consult and they will dialogue, and then committees will tour Canada and supposedly allow the people to participate and to become involved. And still the people are poor. I would like to know, Mr. Speaker, when the action is to start. When are the studies and dialoguing to be finished?

The answers have been in front of the government's noses for years. The Economic Council of Canada had the answer over four years ago. They proved after countless reviews and studies, conferences and reports, that poverty was real. The Canadian Welfare Council and other Canadian organizations have produced answers on poverty. We are all aware that the Senate Committee on Poverty has travelled across Canada and produced answers. Now we are to have a nutritional study across Canada. And do you know what this committee is going to find out, Mr. Speaker? It will find out that poor people need more food which contains the correct vitamins. The government will study this report and print it in two official languages for the committee: the bodies of some 4 million Canadians will continue to deteriorate while this government continues to procrastinate.

Let me give you some examples of poverty, Mr. Speaker, as I have found it while touring the remote areas of my constituency. Picture if you will, Mr. Speaker, a Canadian citizen, bedridden for years in a room just large enough for himself and his wife who sits in a chair for hours and days on end without sleep because she does not have a bed to sleep in, and the room is only granted by the good graces of the family that has taken them in. Picture an elderly citizen with a mechanical heart, miles from a hospital and existing only by the grace of God, or imagine my dismay when I visited a family of six living on a meagre allowance and saw two invalid children suffering from chalk-bone, and our regulations restrict the special care required; how about the old age pensioner who wrote to me recently wondering why he has to pay back some of the $240 he earned last year selling newspapers to supplement his income.

Mr. McGrath: Shame!

Mr. Marshall: I could mention many cases of people going blind because they cannot afford the necessary periodical corrective care or the cost of transportation to visit the proper care centre. This is not to mention the hundreds of families in remote areas who cannot afford decent accommodation and are living in shelters that you wouldn't believe. And yet this government and its experts hide their heads in the sand and brag about what they are doing about overcoming the housing problems in the cities. Does anyone ever hear of what they are doing to meet the housing requirements of those in the rural communities, or to provide the necessary water and sewage facilities? No, Mr. Speaker. They are going to wait until 1980, when they believe, in what can only be termed gross ignorance, that all the people in Canada will be moving to the larger centres. What hypocrisy!

I think it is time, Mr. Speaker, that we substituted a little human consideration and feeling for scientific studies. Here we are, in our concern for pollution, prepared to spend billions of dollars to control and prevent the pollution of the environment and we hesitate to spend money which is long past due to prevent the pollution of the bodies of millions of incapacitated Canadians both young and old. We continue to spend millions on medical research to prevent sickness and to learn the reasons for death by disease, yet we will not provide the moneys needed to prevent undernourishment of the bodies of the poor when we are so well aware of the cure. No, Mr. Speaker, the answer is not in more studies; the answer is in concern for our fellow man—and the sooner the better.

What about our youth in the remote areas of Canada? If we want a better Canada in the future and a better Canadian, we should be concentrating on providing a program of development for all the youth of Canada, and not just for the chosen few who happen to be living in the larger cities. We need a nationwide youth development program with proper guidance and leadership interwoven with our school systems in every nook and cranny in this country. I ask myself this question: Why is so little attention given to youth development and recreation in our list of priorities, when this is the basis of producing a better citizen and of finding in the future the better Canada for which we are looking? Again, we have reports, Mr. Speaker, the P. S. Ross report and the Harry Jerome projects; and the government expects to produce results with a $5 million Canada-wide physical fitness program. What we need, along with the new ministers of state, is a minister of youth development. Let us allocate money out of our budget in this direction. The return in champions and better citizens in the not-too-distant future would be amazing.

In my district of Humber-St. Georges-St. Barbe, Mr. Speaker, I have become well aware of those problems which can only be solved by properly thought-out and programmed development. The process can only evolve around the development of our natural resources. We have found, to our sorrow, that the basis of our economy for many years—the cod fishery—is being fast depleted. The minister is well aware of the problems in this area. While I realize that the problem is a delicate one from the point of view of enforcing restrictions to protect our fishing zones, I am convinced that the present minister is doing all he can to overcome the weaknesses of past governments in coping with these difficulties. I hope he will make progress in continuing liaison with foreign countries to respect the exclusiveness of our waters and at the same time provide that protection which is required to keep foreign draggers away from our Newfoundland shores, so that our people can survive against the deliberate raping of their livelihood.

I commend the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis) for his efforts in that portfolio, but I hope he can do more to convince some of those in other closely associated departments that more assistance is required in the way of fisheries improvement loans and in the provision of better facilities to enable the fishermen to cope with new methods which are being introduced and to take advantage of the other species of fish which have been found, with success, through the development branch of his department. I hope, too, that he will look with favour upon my private member's motion which would make available subsidies to fishermen so they could provide themselves facilities which are vital to their success in this fast-changing industry. I was glad to hear the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) announce that more funds will be directed in order to assist in this area. I hope too, Mr. Speaker, that we will see during this session the promised catch insurance plan for fishermen and that it will be ready with the bill to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act.

I should like to say a few words, Mr. Speaker, on regional economic expansion. In my opinion, as I have stated many times in this House and in my province, this department could be the answer to the problems of the regionally despaired if, indeed, the plan were carefully studied, thought-out and programmed to achieve its aims and objectives. While I am more familiar with the plan from the viewpoint of Newfoundland, and especially my district, I am very disappointed due to the fact that the plan is going the way of the FRED program, which was studied for some years and scrapped here in Ottawa as being unacceptable in the form in which it was presented. I have to say that while the new development plan that is now being studied shows signs of better organization, the first phase of the plan as announced some months ago, and the projects approved, again show a lack of carefully thought-out, projected aims and a lack of intergovernmental co-operation.

To give a glaring example of one project I quote the case of the potential industrial development of Stephenville where, through the good graces of the American government, the province was handed over a modern complex of real estate, worth millions of dollars, which lends itself to a ready-made industrial park. The establishment of a liner board mill was supported by grants and loans under the federal department to support the industry with water and sewage systems, new roads, bridges and a high school. But there was the glaring, fundamental omission of common sense, fundamental planning. The mill, which already employs over 200 people in the construction stage, was responsible for bringing in people from surrounding areas under relocation and has already created for the town of Stephenville a housing problem with which it cannot cope.

Eventually, when the mill goes into production it will employ some 700 people. By simple mathematics, Mr. Speaker, if you multiply 700 by a conservative figure of three per family, you will have some 2,000 human beings who will require housing. There will be the associated need for water and sewage, schools for the children, recreational facilities and other services which should have been foreseen from the outset. But instead, the town of Stephenville and the school authorities already cannot cope with the problem and there is a need for emergency measures to be taken, which can only result in extreme difficulty and eventual chaos. This is not only unfair to the local authorities but it is downright stupid fundamental planning by the supposed experts who are falling all over themselves in offices instead of listening and paying attention to the briefs which have been submitted by interested citizen organizations. It makes me wonder how sincere are the minister's words when he keeps repeating the now empty phrase that no development plan will be successful unless grass roots organizations become involved in the creation of a development plan.

[Mr. Marshall.]

• (5:30 p.m.)

I point out these facts to the minister, not for the sake of criticism but to emphasize that he has the co-operation of every organization in my district. They have listened, and want to participate for the good of their own community or area. I hope that every brief submitted by organizations from my district will be given the courtesy of consideration. I am prepared to give the benefit of the doubt and assume that the new senior appointments to the staff of the Department of Community and Social Development in the province will give that consideration.

The Regional Development Incentives Act as it applies to Newfoundland is almost a lost cause, Mr. Speaker, because it completely misses its objectives in so far as that province is concerned. The reason for this was given by the minister when he stated that it excludes some areas from types of activity such as the development of natural resources, which in some regions is the main, if not the only, source of development. Another bad feature is that it fails to provide assistance to those who want to expand small industry, through lack of capital. One example is a fish plant operator who was denied a grant because of some technicality of commitment. The applicant, who was expanding his fish operation, had to order new equipment from Germany six months in advance in order to get it in time for the fall herring season. He was turned down because he had made the commitment beforehand. Another example is that of an electrical plant operator who almost daily must refuse contracts because of lack of capital for expansion. The act should be flexible in order to give special consideration to those in regionally despaired areas who require more help than the industrial giants who will not come to Newfoundland when they can locate more centrally in Canada.

I cannot blame the federal government for not being willing to provide the funds for the development of a national park in my district. I sincerely hope that the government member from my province, a member of the cabinet, will do his utmost to convince the provincial government to turn over the necessary land to create the Bonne Bay Park, which will give an effective impetus to the economy of the province.

The need for public services induces me to make a plea to the new minister responsible for the Post Office. I was pleased to hear that the closing of post offices will halt and that the situation will be reviewed. The post offices in isolated communities of Newfoundland are still an important communications link, even in this day of satellites. I welcome the announcement. Another important item which should be reviewed is the salaries of postmasters in many communities. These salaries are, to say the least, shameful. I hope these salary scales will be reviewed as quickly as possible.

Still on the subject of communications, Mr. Speaker, there is a breakdown between the responsible federal department and the provincial government of Newfoundland. While I commend the CNT for the expansion program to extend telephones to the northwestern peninsula in my district, there are two failings. One is that the provincial government have failed to provide the related power facilities, thus denying many communities this much needed telephone service. The other matter which has been forgotten is the cost to the consumer. Already one community has had all its telephones disconnected because the residents cannot afford to pay the charge. Is this good planning, Mr. Speaker? Is this equality?

I have reviewed the 68 measures mentioned in the Speech from the Throne. I hope they will not be taken in the order in which they appear in the list. I sincerely hope that legislation relating to income security, veterans' pension legislation and the bill to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act will receive immediate consideration in this House. There is a fundamental military lesson which can be applied and of which the government should take note. An advancing army can progress only as fast as its slowest elements, and after success in reaching an objective it should consolidate its position before advancing further. I say to this government that our aims in science and technology are running away with us. We cannot cope with the situation. We have already discovered that all the wealth we have gathered will be of no avail because we will have to spend it to control and prevent pollution.

We must consolidate our position. Our wealth in resources has been in the ground and in the sea for hundreds of years. It will still be there in a few years hence. We should look over our shoulders and raise the standard of living of those who lag behind and are unable to catch up without our help. This is our duty and responsibility as a state. Each day we delay, we must remember in our conscience that we are responsible for bringing closer to death those who are incapacitated, maimed and whose bodies are deteriorating because we are not living up to our responsibility. We must concentrate immediately on helping the aged, sick, maimed, incapacitated, blind, deaf and retarded. This is our duty as a state. We owe this to these citizens because they are unable to care for themselves. This is their equality of opportunity. I hope the government will direct their immediate attention to this part of our society, to give some meaning to their concern for the disadvantaged people and areas of our nation.

Mr. Allen B. Sulatycky (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I, too, wish to add my congratulations to the mover and to the seconder of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. Both these members have displayed their ableness in moving and seconding the Address in Reply.

I want to concentrate on the aspect of urban affairs in the few minutes available to me this afternoon. The riding which I represent is not considered an urban riding although a very small portion of the city of Calgary is located within it. I want to emphasize the importance of urban development to the small, growing communities of Canada rather than dwelling upon the importance of an urban affairs department for the burgeoning, large cities of this country.

All who have a concern for the direction of social and economic development in this country will welcome the announced intention of the government to designate a minister solely responsible for urban affairs and housing. The problems of the cities are well recognized by citizens of this country, whether they live in the cities or elsewhere. It is also recognized that the federal government is greatly inhibited by the Constitution from taking any firm and unilateral initiatives with regard to cities. Hopefully, all provinces will co-operate in any attempt by the national government to act in this area in which the provinces have the greater, and virtually exclusive, jurisdiction. While we await a redistribution of powers among the various governments in the country we will have to do the best with the system which exists at the present time. We do not do our best if we exclude the national government from an active role in urban policies. The new ministry will give it such an active role.

Fortunately, though we may have problems in our cities, they lack the severity of those faced by cities in the neighbouring country to our south or in other highly-industrialized and urbanized areas of the world. No less an observer than Buckminster Fuller has said, for example, that Toronto is a city without problems. All of our larger cities display in general a very attractive face, making them appealing to the visitor or to the residents. But behind this face are problems which will soon become insoluble if we do not quickly come to grips with them.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Solutions to the problems of our cities have been suggested by many who rank as experts in the field. It is a field which is perhaps best left to experts and I, for one, will not presume to offer my own solutions. My concern runs in another direction. Basically, it is that in attempting to develop cures for the ills of the city we do not lead to its further degeneration. We shall avoid this pitfall only by setting a clear course of action based on the conscious choice of the type of settlement pattern we wish to see. Do we wish to have only a dozen or so extremely large cities in which almost all of our population is concentrated or do we wish to have many cities of differing sizes offering our citizens the greatest choice? Do we wish our cities to be located only where large concentrations of people are found, or are there more desirable locations elsewhere?

The answers to these questions are already determined. If we do not make a conscious choice to the contrary, within a very short time most of our population will be living in the two dozen larger cities already established. The rapid influx of people may well prevent the solution of the ills which the cities now face, because we shall constantly be a step behind the growth of the population.

If we are to design a sensible system of settlement in Canada we must first discard two common Canadian characteristics. The first is the sense of inevitability associated with the growth of our larger urban centres. This is evident in our constant prognostications of population patterns in Canada ten or twenty years from now. It is displayed by those who announce that at a stated point in time a certain percentage of our people will be concentrated in only a few areas. It is shown, for example, in the statement by a Canadian trade magazine that such an influx—and I quote—"cannot be stopped any more than the ocean surf can be turned back". It is reinforced by civic politicians who make statements such as "this city has a certain momentum which it must maintain." Any more of such momentum is likely to lead to destruction.

The second characteristic of which we must cleanse ourselves is our "mining camp" psychology. In the development of human communities we have tended to concentrate our efforts on barely a handful of communities, establishing other settlements only temporarily to serve the interests of the dominant communities. This is a pattern which began with the earliest of Canadian industries, the fur trade and which still continues today. In the era of the fur trade many trading posts dotted the landscape, built only to serve immediate needs and having no other purpose than to satisfy the commercial interests of embryonic cities hundreds of thousands of miles distant. The pattern has repeated itself a number of times since then. Today, as we survey the landscape of Canada, we find that outside southern Ontario and the St. Lawrence Valley area there are fewer than ten major cities. Scattered about the country are hundreds of smaller communities. We find them wherever there is a mine, an oilfield, a pulp mill or another resource based industry. Some of these communities are as old as, or older than, the Canadian nation, and others are new having sprung to life only within the last few months or years.

Most often those that are old are struggling for survival, while those that are new are too blinded by hope and confidence in the future to envision themselves as tomorrow's Barkervilles and Belle Islands. Canadians are slow to recognize this very evident demographic characteristic. Even the government's task force on housing and urban development did not note it. Its only reference to the communities between those considered rural and those considered urban, said:

> As a sort of half-way house between rural Canada and the burgeoning urban areas lie the small communities which dot the landscape, particularly across the prairies. They are a mixed bag. In regions where agriculture is strong, one finds prosperous and growing service communities meeting the needs of the surrounding population, generating a growth factor of their own and seemingly on the verge, in a few cases at least, of that "great leap forward" into full urban status. In areas where the rural economy is weak, so are the towns, many of them struggling with local industries of varying relevance to ensure that a baby born or a new resident acquired is a net population gain and not merely an offsetting factor against the drain to the city.

This is not an accurate picture of the pattern of settlement in Canada. Our settlements are not concentrated only in the large cities and in farming areas. There are many communities which do not rely solely on agriculture, settlements which do have an industrial base, narrow though it may be, and which are capable of sustained growth if they are given a chance and not forced to compete unfairly with the large urban centres of this country.

Our mining camp psychology is at the core of regional economic disparity in this country. Many of the areas which suffer from a weak economy do so because of their reliance on a single industry which is no longer viable. What I recommend is that in dealing with urban affairs we should devote all our efforts to developing as many urban communities as possible, the greatest attention being given to the sound economic development of the smaller towns and cities which show a potential for urbanization. Some very eminent people are making similar proposals. Earlier this year the United States Secretary of Agriculture, Clifford M. Harding, called for national policies specifically designed to bring about unprecedented growth in rural areas. He advocated the creation in and around the smaller cities and towns of "sufficiently good employment opportunities and living environments that larger and larger numbers of families may choose to rear their children there."

Throughout Canada there are many small towns and cities which are well suited to sustain a larger population. Some of them are growing, others are not. The one certain thing is that in the absence of a changed attitude on the part of governments in Canada, and Canadians, these communities will all gradually decline because of the present overwhelming trend to concentrate all our economic activity in the largest centres.

The difficulties which these communities face in maintaining their growth are similar to those faced by others in their situation wherever they might be in Canada. I am sure this applies to such communities in my own riding of Rocky Mountain, communities which, as a matter of fact, are among the fastest growing in the country. Grand Cache, for example, in the northern end of the constituency is Canada's newest community, having been built only in the last two years to serve the huge coal mining developments associated with the McIntyre-Porcupine Mines near the Smokey River. A number of other communities in the riding have doubled or even tripled their population in the last ten years. Among the growing communities of western Alberta are Fox Creek, Whitecourt, Drayton Valley, Edson, Hinton, Canmore, Black Diamond and the communities which comprise the Crowsnest Pass region. As I say, the problems which face these communities are similar to those confronting any small growing community wherever it is situated in Canada. The basic difficulty is that they must compete with the large cities for capital, labour and industry. This is the unfairest competition imaginable. The small community always comes out second best.

While there is a drastic need for housing in the large cities, there is also a similar need in the small centre which is growing. But the sources from which a person may obtain capital for constructing housing are very much more limited in the small community. Indeed, often it is impossible to get financing for housing in many towns. In large cities there are many branches of chartered banks, various trust companies and usually a wide selection of mortgage companies with which a developer or an individual may arrange financing for housing projects. In the average town, there may be one or two, perhaps three, branches of chartered banks, and often they are reluctant to make housing loans except for single family dwellings.

• (5:50 p.m.)

As in the cities, there is demand for various types of accommodation in smaller centres also, but the financing of such accommodation is very, very difficult to obtain. In many communities only the banks and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation will finance housing of any sort. It is also evident there are more CMHC programs available for cities than for smaller centres.

If one should try to borrow money for a housing development from a trust company or life insurance company, for example, one is given the cold shoulder. A number of months ago I had an opportunity to see just how much the cards are stacked against the growth of smaller centres. A person who was interested in developing a number of housing units in a town in my riding invited me to attend with him at the office of a major Canadian mortgage corporation in Edmonton. We were invited into the mortgage manager's office and he proceeded to tell us that his firm had vast amounts of money available for investment and housing purposes. He displayed a very lively interest in the project as it was described to him by my constituent, who saved to the end the fact that this particular project happened to be in a town of some 3,000 people situated some miles outside the city. When this fact was made known to the manager, his attitude changed remarkably and he simply stated that no funds were available for mortgages outside the city.

This is not an isolated instance. I have experienced similar examples during my law practice in rural areas of Alberta. It is a very common occurrence for financing for very worth-while projects to be refused simply because the projects are situated in a community that is not one of the major urban areas of Canada.

The problem of providing housing to growing small communities appears to prevail throughout Canada. A Calgary firm, Atco Industries, has had a great deal of experience in providing prefabricated housing for resource communities, not only in Canada but throughout the world. In an article written in January of last year the president of that firm, Mr. R. D. Southern, said the following:

> While the problems of providing low cost acceptable housing to isolated and urban areas are largely similar, one major difference precludes any sensible plan for providing housing to the population presently moving into and required for industrialization and expansion of Canada's isolated northern regions. That problem is an almost complete lack of ability to provide mortgaging for normal residential purchases. This inability is not hard to understand, when the sparseness of population and vastness of the isolated regions are considered, but it also extends to the small towns that are the nucleus of northern and isolated area growth.
>
> It is incongruous, in a country like Canada, which has been and should be committed to the industrialization and expansion of its northern territories—and, I might add, other areas capable of sustaining economic growth—

> —for the future economic benefit of all Canadians, that rather than providing incentives to locate in these areas, there is a complete and devastating road block to the provision of a dignified class of housing.

I should like to emphasize the last statement, that there is a complete and devastating roadblock to the provision of a dignified class of housing in these small communities. This extends not only to housing; these communities run into difficulty in arranging financing for such things as services, the ordinary requirements of any community. As well, businesses have difficulty in arranging financing for commercial expansion. I believe this applies equally to growing small communities in other parts of Canada as well as to communities in northern Canada.

As I said, the problem does not stop at housing; in the area of commercial development availability of financing is just as critical. I have had many businessmen in a number of small communities tell me that they have run into obstacle after obstacle in attempting to obtain capital for expansion purposes. Other businessmen in large cities have the necessary capital made readily available to them, but it seems that when a small town entrepreneur comes to draw from the well, it suddenly runs dry.

These are problems that we must solve soon. In solving them we may very well help to solve some of the problems in the large cities. But we will not solve them by letting current economic and technological advances take their own course. It is certain that the end result of that course will be a greater and greater concentration of population in fewer and fewer locations. I do not think this is necessary or desirable. It is certainly not inevitable.

I find comfort in the words of the distinguished American public servant, John W. Gardner, who served as secretary of health, education and welfare in President Johnson's administration in 1965. Before I refer to his comments, Mr. Speaker, perhaps this would be a good opportunity to call it six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Does the House agree to call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It being six o'clock, I do now leave the Chair. The sitting will resume at eight o'clock p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

---

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Sulatycky: Mr. Speaker, before we rose for dinner I was saying that it is neither inevitable nor desirable that all, or even an extremely large portion, of our population be crowded into only the very largest cities. I was about to quote the words of John W. Gardner, former United States secretary of health, education and welfare, who said:

> Within the past 20 years the urge on the part of large numbers of people to pile into cities has become anachronistic. For ten thousand years people had excellent reason to crowd themselves into cities. Only there could they find the richness and variety of stimulation that make for creativity, the massed resources and economies of scale that make possible the greatest enterprises. But today, thanks to advances in communication, transportation and the arts of organization, we can provide these conditions at any point on the map that strikes our fancy. So the questions become: How can we best use land space? What patterns of settlement and open space best serve our purposes? How can we revitalize rural areas, create new cities, and overhaul existing cities in ways that serve human needs, the requirements of economic vitality and the claims of beauty?

The answer to these questions is certainly not by crowding more and more people into the largest cities. One further observation which one can make from viewing the developments of urbanization in the United States is that although more and more people crowd into and around the cities, fewer and fewer people wish to live there. In a Gallup poll taken last year it was found that most Americans would live in a small town or on a farm if they had their choice. Only 18 per cent really desired to live in cities.

In Canada we have the opportunity to create for our people the greatest variety of living environments. That should be the prime objective of the new ministry of urban affairs. To reach it we will have to devise acceptable means for influencing the location of economic activity. We should not hesitate, if necessary, to conscript capital for this purpose. There is no doubt that government alone cannot provide all the funds necessary for this purpose. If our existing financial institutions fail to meet the needs and the demands of growth in smaller centres, mechanisms must be developed to compel these institutions to apportion some of their available resources to such communities. I would say that if the same institutions fail to meet the needs of the larger cities, we should not hesitate to compel them to apply their resources in ways which are of the greatest benefit in the opinion of the people of the country rather than in the opinion of the directors of the corporations alone. These funds should not be limited to housing and to industrial activity but should provide capital for industrial expansion and commercial expansion as well as for the services usually required in municipalities.

Any program that will improve our large cities will succeed only if it is tied to a program to increase the over-all number of cities in this country. We must ensure that we have not only a number of very large cities but that we have many small cities—small, but lively and thriving—spread throughout the country. I suggest this is the direction which must be followed if we are to succeed in any urban policy in this country.

In summation, I should like to refer again to the points I have attempted to make. I believe one of the tasks of the ministry of urban affairs should be to take an inventory of existing communities in Canada to determine which are capable of sustaining public growth and to ensure that these communities do not suffer because of increased emphasis being placed on the larger cities. I believe we should ensure that capital for housing, commercial and industrial development is made available to the smaller as well as to the larger centres. Only then, I believe, will we develop a sound system of geographic development in this country and a sound settlement pattern providing for the people of Canada the opportunities which this land should make available to them.

• (8:10 p.m.)

[Translation]

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to extend my sincere congratulations to the movers of the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne (Messrs. A. B. Douglas and Trudel). They performed their tasks extremely well.

This debate is giving me and other hon. members a chance to criticize the present government for its lack of decision and imagination when it comes to meeting its obligations. This debate enables me also to let the proper authorities know of the conditions prevailing in my constituency and of the needs of my constituents.

Taking into account the promises made to them during the 1968 election campaign, Canadians were justified in believing that a Liberal government would offer them favourable conditions in all fields, and would solve problems quickly and completely.

However, even a brief examination or hasty review, of present conditions will show that the problems are still numerous. While they pile up one on top of the other, the government fails sadly in its obligations and does nothing to solve them.

Thus, I am not telling anybody anything when I say that inflation is still solidly established, that taxes have never been so high, that the present rate of unemployment is very high, that thousands of householders cannot earn a living for their families and that our industries, especially the textile and shoe industries, operate at a slow-down rate, when they are not completely closed, while imports increase at a frightening rhythm.

According to data from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, the gross national product increased only by 1 per cent during the second half of the current year. For the first six months of the year, the number of dwelling units started was 40 per cent lower than last year.

From January to June new car sales were 15 per cent lower than for the same period last year and there were 75 per cent more bankruptcies.

This is in short where the Liberal government has led the country in return for the confidence the people put in it at the 1968 elections.

Mr. Speaker, since the present debate began, some Liberal members have accused the official opposition of obstructing the legislation proposed in the field of agriculture to help that deserving group of our society. They mentioned Bill C-196 and Bill C-197, blaming the opposition and particularly the official opposition for systematic obstruction.

We are conscious of having done our duty in this field as well as in others, and of having acted in the best interest of the farmers.

If we had accepted Bills C-196 and C-197 as they were introduced, the Canadian farmers would have been embarrassed by these two measures since, in both cases, many amendments have been proposed then rejected by this government. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) has never agreed to take into account the views of the opposition. All he wanted was to have the House approve these bills as introduced and they were so flawed that we thought it our duty to delay their passage as long as possible, mainly that of Bill C-197, to help the population and particularly the farmers.

Our attitude in this field has been identical to that we had regarding the White Paper presented, some time ago, by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson). Had we heeded him, we would have passed the legislation sponsored by him as it was, whereas today a joint committee of the Commons and the Senate has adopted a great many of our views on fiscal reform.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, far from seeking to create obstruction, we have had as our sole purpose to see that the people of Canada get the legislation they deserve.

Returning to Bill C-197, Mr. Speaker, when speaking to farmers we realize that those the legislation would most affect know very little about it. Few of them are aware that the council responsible for applying the legislation would be fully government-appointed. The farmers expect that they will have their say in an area which concerns them so closely. In fact, I think that those on the front benches opposite have missed the chance to tell the farmers, for instance, that the Council, entirely appointed by the government, and not elected as we want it to be, would control quotas, marketing, storage, labeling and distribution and would have the right to collect charges from the farmers.

• (8:20 p.m.)

They are completely unaware of that. Ministers should therefore go to the province of Quebec and clearly explain this provision of the law. They would realize that farmers have a lot of objections.

Mr. Speaker, within the few minutes left to me I would like to particularly call the hon. members' attention on the conditions prevailing more especially in my constituency. Needless to say that the city of St. Hyacinthe is considered as a natural centre of culture and regional attractions. Over there, farmers and factory workers are familiar with each other and there is complete agreement between these two groups of our society.

Of course, my riding is affected as much as any other by the general conditions prevailing in Canada at the present time. However, the city of Saint-Hyacinthe being a textile centre, the problems of that particular industry affect especially the workers of my riding.

Mr. Speaker, this is not the first time that I have had occasion to speak about this matter here in the House. Since the present government has been in power, I have taken every opportunity to point out to the responsible minister, and the government as a whole, that some action was urgently required in order to maintain this industry in our area.

Unfortunately, all my requests fell into deaf ears with the result that today our textile workers wonder how long they will be able to keep their jobs.

The textile industry deserves the attention of this government. It provides work for at least 83,000 people, 47,000 of whom live in the province of Quebec. Its yearly output in my province is estimated at $850 million. Every year several millions of dollars are invested in equipment and in the construction or renovation of buildings.

In spite of the importance of this industry, this government has waited until it is almost too late to take the necessary action.

We have warned the government, particularly about the field of shirt making, that imports were much too heavy for the Canadian industry to feel at ease. Nothing was done, except after the damage was irreparable. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce did take some action, but it was too late. The harm was done.

In St. Hyacinthe, for instance, the Yamaska Shirt which once had 350 employees cut its staff by 75 per cent. In factories such as Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company and Penman's Limited which employed hundreds of workers a few years ago, there are much less now.

As far as the footwear industry is concerned, official statistics show that since 1963, 45 manufacturers have gone out of business. Some industries are getting ready to reduce the number of employees or to close down.

In 1960, there were 249 Canadian plants in the footwear industry, while in 1970, there are only 189 shoe manufacturers in the country. In 1966, there were 25,360 employees while, in 1970, there were only 22,000.

On the other hand, shoe imports in 1956 amounted to 6,898,315 pairs as compared with 46,100,000 pairs in 1969.

Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the government trading with underdeveloped countries, but I believe our first responsibility is to ensure employment for Canadians before throwing our doors wide open to imports.

Last week I had the opportunity to go into a shoe shop in Saint-Hyacinthe, and in talking with the owner I found to my amazement that 80 per cent of his inventory was imported.

It means that the Canadian market—and the other stores are identical to that one—supplies only 20 per cent of the domestic consumption. That is an anomaly when one knows that workers, in the Canadian shoe industry are amply equipped and able to make a product that will meet the needs of Canadians.

Canadian footwear can favourably compare with any other. However, in certain government quarters, it is suggested that if we favour imports on so large a scale, it is because we want the protection of the Canadian consumer.

Mr. Speaker, in the light of my personal experience, even with the wave of shoe imports from foreign countries, far from paying less for my shoes in 1970, I have to pay more than when the Canadian market was supplied mostly by Canadian plants.

This argument does not hold and before making people believe that we want to protect them, it would be better to take the necessary steps to protect Canadian workers.

Mr. Speaker, I would have liked to discuss many other subjects, but since time goes by and that I have only a few minutes left, I would like to discuss the measure concerning designated areas.

The area of Saint-Hyacinthe has all the essential criteria in order to be declared a designated area. On many occasions, I have made to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) personal representations which have been followed by those of the city council and trade unions of the city of Saint-Hyacinthe. Unfortunately, they have not been taken into consideration.

That attitude, I am sorry to say, induces the people back home to think that the riding is not being treated fairly.

I say it again: the Saint-Hyacinthe area has all the criteria required to be recognized as a designated area. At least 20 per cent of the work force is unemployed. All these things have been pointed out to the responsible minister, delegations have come here to meet him; but justice has been denied the area of Saint-Hyacinthe. I do not hesitate to say so, this is injustice, even gross injustice towards the people of Saint-Hyacinthe. It is injustices of that kind that breed the events we have witnessed in the province of Quebec in the last few days. Such injustices give certain elements of the population springboards from which to demonstrate and attack the government.

Once again. I urge the government to eradicate those injustices because they are detrimental to mutual understanding and national unity.

Mr. Speaker, those were the remarks I wanted to make. I trust they will be taken into serious consideration, this in the best interest of the electors of my riding.

• (8:30 p.m.)

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, at the outset, I should like to offer you special greetings and to tell you how reassuring it is for the members to see you preside over the proceedings of the House. Your competence gives you the authority required to ensure the freedom of the members while protecting our parliamentary institutions. I think that I speak now for the majority when I offer you our best wishes for good health at the beginning of this session and I hope that we shall have you with us for a long time during other sessions and perhaps on a permanent basis.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, when moving and seconding the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, the hon. members for Bourrassa ( (Mr. Trudel) and for Assiniboia (Mr. A. B. Douglas), proved to those who might have doubted it, that they were worthy of the confidence the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) had placed in them. I join with those who spoke before me to offer them all my congratulations.

In the past, on the occasion of the Speech from the Throne debate the members revealed the interests of the citizens they represented. Since I had the opportunity, on several occasions, to avail myself of this advantage I am certain that the people of the Lac-Saint-Jean riding whom I have the honour to represent, will not take offence if during my speech I do not bring up the specific problems which concern them, in view of the new responsibilities which the Prime Minister has seen fit to entrust me with. It is my duty to make known in this House and to those who will be good enough to read my remarks in the official report of the debates of the House my opinions on Canadian agriculture and what it might become if only we would all agree to show some understanding.

Canadians have never, generally speaking, felt the pangs of hunger since they have been accustomed to taking for granted that Canadian farmers would provide them indefinitely, and very cheaply, with a wide variety of products, thus accepting only in many cases a ridiculous return as a reward for their efforts. We have forgotten that our farmers did not share, to the same extent, this increase in the standard of living which has been brought to us by the development of our country, with the result that they are today among the Canadians with the lowest incomes in spite of their long hours of work and the very high risk investments they have to put up.

It is quite obvious that this situation could not go on and on. It is the reason why we have witnessed these past years the birth of a counter-movement whereby farmers question the somewhat old-fashioned notion prevailing in this area of economic activity.

The farmer has always been exploited, and he wishes today to take or is taking the situation into his own hands, so as to set up a production or distribution system which will protect him against the cyclic trade recessions from which he has always come out the loser, and which will guarantee him a better return on his investments and labour.

Recently I flew over the north shore of the St. Lawrence, east of Montreal, on a clear and sunny day; looking at those wonderful farms with their multicoloured fields unfolding under my eyes I thought I was in dreamland. And I could not, Mr. Speaker, but rejoice as a Canadian about all that partly-developed potential which is our common heritage, and I was telling myself that the day is not so far off where the man owning that land, the farmer, at least I hope so, will get all the consideration he deserves, as well as a fair remuneration for his labour.

• (8:40 p.m.)

We must all agree with these objectives, even if this were to entail in some cases an increase in consumer prices. However, we should not press on or the end result might be disastrous.

One only needs to cast a glance around to realize what is the situation at present. One of our main difficulties stems from the vastness of our land and the diversity of its potentialities. Our federal system which involves the sharing of responsibilities and jurisdictions is both complex and profitable since it provides for the evolving of a national policy which may be effective inasmuch as understanding and co-operation prevail between the various levels of government.

The present policies adopted by the marketing boards bent on raising tariff barriers between provinces are clearly to be condemned. No one will object to some kind of order in the production and marketing of farm products that will ensure security to the producers as well as a reasonable return for their efforts. However, we cannot let certain groups be able to destroy our country by preventing some products from being sold in other provinces.

I do say "destroy our country", because never before has the Canadian common market, which is the very essence of Canada's existence, been threatened as it is now.

At the last session, during the study in committee of Bill C-197, which provided for setting up of national marketing agencies, it was rather obvious that some provinces, taking advantage of what I would call a mistake made by a marketing agency in Quebec, had made excessive and extremely dangerous reprisals.

I do not intend to exonerate the Quebec group which, while meaning well, probably wanted to go a little too fast and apparently committed a tactical error because it is one thing to prevent products from another province—in this instance eggs—, from entering Quebec, and another to want a specific group of producers in another province to be allowed to supply the Quebec market.

In my opinion, and the comparison may seem somewhat stretched, René Lévesque and his group would have been unable to devise any better way of ruining the country than this embargo which several provinces have placed on certain products coming from Quebec and, since they can be mentioned, on broilers.

Ontario, particularly, should lift this embargo, that province being, in my opinion, little affected, if at all, by the decision made in Quebec by the egg marketing agency. At least 55 per cent of the Quebec egg market is still being supplied by Ontario, only 45 per cent of Quebec's egg consumption being produced locally.

There is some control applied, but Ontario eggs are not prevented from entering Quebec. A limit has been set as to the number of Ontario producers shipping to Quebec, and I am against that. Just the same, there is a difference between limiting the number of producers of a province allowed to ship their products to another province and preventing any producers of one province from shipping their products to another province. And that is the problem we are again facing today.

In short, what is the purpose of all this? Is it the intention to ruin a Quebec industry which made the mistake of being efficient, of being in the forefront, of being forward-looking, of being competitive, that is the broiler business.

It is claimed that the Quebec broiler producers do not pay their workers adequately. That is quite possible. I tried to check that and in some places I was told that it was not true. I agree that it is probably true in some cases, but I will not generalize by saying that the Quebec egg producers are not paid as they should be. It is likely that this new competition by the province of Quebec on other markets may have come as a surprise because it was so unexpected and in the past there was so little competition from Quebec producers. This is understandable because I am myself greatly surprised to see that we have been able, in the province of Quebec, to produce so much and to reach such a degree of efficiency that we can sell our products to our friends in British Columbia.

If the aim is to destroy this industry in Quebec, to bring it to heel, as we are told by some people, I have figures which prove that this war of the markets may take us very far, and that we all run the risk, as consumers, to have to foot the bill which will probably be quite high.

I have with me a table extracted from the report of the Federal Bureau of Statistics, Agricultural Section, issued every four months.

It can be noted that for 1968 the total value of the Canadian agricultural production amounted to $4,390,767,000.

Who was producing it? The province of Quebec? No, at least certainly not alone. Ontario, the most industrialized province, was producing the most part of it with a total of $1,328,163,000, followed by Saskatchewan with $900,491,000. Coming third was Alberta with $808,770,000 and, fourth, Quebec with $634,637,000. Then there was Manitoba with $368,315,000, British Columbia with $211,914,000, and then Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island.

The total figures do not necessarily tell the whole story. I tried to assess what could be the per capita production and I looked into the figures of the Canadian population as of June 1, 1968. So, I discovered, that, with regard to agriculture, Saskatchewan headed the list with a per capita production of $938, followed by Alberta with $530, Manitoba with $380, Prince Edward Island with $312, Ontario with $182, Quebec with $107, British Columbia with $98, New Brunswick with $80 and Nova Scotia with $72.

There is no doubt that Quebec overproduces in some lines. Let us take the dairy industry, for example. There is no one who has not heard of over-production in the Quebec dairy industry. However, again looking at statistics, I find that for 1968, dairy production in Ontario was valued at $248,214,598, while in Quebec it had totalled only $232,781,566, that is 38.6 and 36.2 per cent respectively of the total value of Canadian production.

In short, even in the dairy industry, Quebec was accused of being responsible for the dairy surpluses while the volume of our production was even lower than that of Ontario.

Therefore, I ask you who is overproducing in Canada? Have we ever heard any recriminations against Ontario producers? Not that I know of, Mr. Speaker. Here again people have raised their voices against the Quebec producers. Too many Quebecers were producing too much milk. It is the only thing they overproduced.

Now it appears that we overproduce broilers. Hold on, that it has no sense whatever! In short, I ask the question once again: What do they really want? More unemployment in Quebec or that Quebecers remain idle and live on social welfare? Should that be the aim I have but one thing to say: people will have to accept to pay more taxes in order that Quebec may have higher equalization payments, to enable her to buy certain products. It will be one of these two things. Either we will produce or else the other provinces will do it and give us the money to buy their products. This is a decision that will have to be made.

As for me, I will not accept that. We have too much self-respect, I believe, to do so. The total manufacturing value and the total value of farm production in Quebec are clearly inadequate and there is no question of reducing them. On the contrary. With more than 40 per cent of the unemployment in Canada, Quebec must increase its production and ensure the necessary jobs through a growing manpower.

Raising barriers between provinces will surely not enable us to solve the many problems that are facing us.

The Speech from the Throne says that a federal legislation will be necessary to institute a national marketing agency. We all know that at the end of the last session, similar legislation had been proposed in Bill C-197. Unfortunately, it was not passed in time and the situation has so rapidly deteriorated that it has to become now an urgency.

It is likely that a similar legislation will soon be proposed to this House, and I hope that hon. members will want to give it priority and consider it with all the possible dispatch which requires this decisive situation in the marketing of Canadian farm products.

• (8:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Speaker and hon. members of this House, I strongly urge you to consider the present situation in the field of marketing agricultural products as highly serious and dangerous. The balkanization of our country has started. There is a real danger of escalation if we do not act rapidly, firmly and in full collaboration with all provinces. I urge all members to use all their influence in their home province to stop this dangerous trend, bearing in mind that we are all bound to lose in such a game, some more than others.

[Translation]

It will be easily understood that I cannot resume my seat without saying a few words on the dairy industry.

It is indeed too early to claim a victory because there are still many problems to solve. But, one thing seems sure now and, barring any unforeseen circumstances, the end of the current milk year will restore a reasonable balance between consumption and production of these goods in Canada.

That result has not been easy to realize, and Quebec producers in particular know it well. But, after all, the difficult decisions which the government has been forced to take last year have borne fruit and today, we can look at the immediate future at least with more optimism.

Our supplies of powder milk are now normal and prices have levelled off. The production of cheese will all be sold at a good price and we might perhaps even be slightly short. As to butter, the very high supplies of last year will have been reduced by more than half and, for all practical purposes, will become normal.

Mr. Speaker, if we have at all the co-operation of interested groups, it should be possible to maintain the balance, which would subsequently permit better prices and therefore greater net income for our producers.

We have asked that milk production be reduced and we have had our wish. It is therefore normal for the producers having left that line of production to go into other fields, and more particularly in the province of Quebec where the number of those having done so is quite high. Farm production in Quebec will therefore have to diversify and needless to say competition will be stronger. Hence the importance of having a good network of marketing boards administered under a national legislation which would enable farmers to share in the Canadian market on a sound competitive basis.

Something will have to be done to prevent the provinces, through provincial marketing boards, from trying to go their own way by sacrificing the efficiency of costs and quality at the expense of consumers.

As a rule, I think that we can feel moderate optimism for the years to come. The great situation has greatly improved and it is obvious that the enswing good results will be felt in other related areas.

Before concluding my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank all my colleagues for the good words they had for me and they may rest assured in advance that I will continue, as in the past, to work in co-operation with them in the best interests of all Canadians and, in particular, of farmers.

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, when I was first elected to Parliament in 1962, the day of the opening of the session and especially the Speech from the Throne were for me quite an event. I had hoped to discover a wonderful program for the new session and I was somewhat disappointed.

In 1963, I felt less enthusiasm and in 1964, 1965, 1966, 1967, 1968 and 1969 I had a totally different opinion so that in 1970, with this Speech from the Throne, I am confirmed in my opinion. In fact, this speech is but a wonderful piece of fireworks.

Through this torrent of words and all those high-sounding sentences, the awful reality still remains. I shall attempt now to present it to this House.

Before going any further, I cannot avoid an old tradition whereby congratulations are offered to the mover and the seconder of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne (Mr. Trudel and Mr. Douglas). They have shown some talent in speaking in such great length.

After the first sitting, I retired to my office in order to read over the text of the speech which had just been given to us. I had received several invitations to attend official functions but I was unable to go because I had to analyze the current events in my province in order to visualize Canada in the future.

And since history is still the best teacher, I studied all day long in the light of my readings about the past. We can compare the life of a people, a dynasty, a kingdom, a dictatorship or a system to the human life: birth, adolescence, maturity and death.

• (9:00 p.m.)

I hope we are witnessing the peak of financial dictatorship in Canada.

When one reads history, one realizes that when the great become so powerful as to forget the sufferings of those who have allowed them to reach such heights, the people tired of sacrifices will smash the very shadow of its oppressor.

The financial dictatorship which reigns in Canada today and remains insensitive to human sufferings, refusing to loosen its grasp in order to alleviate the rising tensions in all parts of the country, will shatter Canada unless an energetic government rises to overcome this monster.

The Speech from the Throne read by His Excellency the Governor General of Canada shows clearly that this third session of the 28th Parliament must be different from the previous ones. The speech says this:

—Canada faces a new age; an age which will be subject to forces not all of which are yet comprehended or understood, forces which will proceed from external as well as internal origins. It is a new age not so much because of changed circumstances, but new because of changed values and attitudes.

Because of the clash between these new values and the old, because of the quest by the young and the disillusioned for some resolution of attitudes, we live in a period of tenseness and unease.

I feel, Mr. Speaker, that these are times of awareness for the new generation which does not accept without recrimination the fate of our generation, any more than we did that of our fathers. The difference lies in the fact that means of communication have greatly developed, allowing our youth contacts that would have been unthinkable a few years ago.

The Speech from the Throne says this, and I quote:

—It is an age frequented by violence—

I will add, since no one dared be specific in the Speech from the Throne, that this time that violence is directed more against the powers that be. That should encourage the members of this House, and the officials who often act as liaison officers between the departments and the big financiers, who control the economic blood of the nation, to seriously examine their conscience, if they still have one.

We must ask ourselves seriously whether our obsolete system has not always been the cause of a certain violence against the little people, violence far more subtle than that which manifests itself today, but which is no less cruel for it is applied to people who are totally helpless. I say this to the masters of finance, to their faithful servants the governments which have succeeded each other to this day, who should from time to time visit our under-developed areas: Go share the life of families in shantytowns or simply ask those fathers and mothers who must sometimes feed eight or nine children on $80 or $90 a week and, moreover, are unemployed three or four months a year, being forced to live on weekly unemployment benefits of $47.

In a tour of my constituency, I had the opportunity to see for myself all the deficiencies of the federal policy and I cannot forget the words of a mother of ten, who is living on a settler's lot and who had just been refused the assistance of a loan which was essential to the survival of their little farm: Ah, were I not such a devout Catholic, I would take some desperate action!

Is this not disturbing enough for a member of Parliament fighting for social justice? And this is but one example among hundreds of similar cases. You merely have to drive around in our rural areas to see for yourself the large number of our derelict farms and homesteads on the verge of bankruptcy. Half a century ago, many of these farmers were happy people living on unmortgaged land. Today, this is what I have heard from one of them: "We had to modernize to comply with government requirements, to a point where our entire inheritance which represents the hard work of two or three generations is mortgaged. It is thus that we have gone through all those efforts only to surrender the whole thing to the finance company. Such are the consequences of our system of perpetual indebtedness."

And as a crowning injustice, Mr. Speaker, while the federal government is paying western farmers not to produce, the Quebec farmers pay a fine of $1.25 per cwt. of milk, because they are unable to reduce their production.

You do not have to wonder why Quebec is on the brink of revolution. We are certainly passed the time when the father and the mother had to toil 20 hours a day to ensure three meals a day for their children, but we still live at a time—and this more than ever—when Canadians must pay three or four times the price for a small family home.

You will say I exaggerate. Even though we have already quoted all the relevant figures in this House, as proof of our statements, I want to give you, once again, a slight example.

If a young couple want to have a house built for around $12,000—it is certainly not a big house—they will have to pay 12 per cent for the federal excise tax included in the retail price, plus 11 per cent for the federal tax on building materials, plus 8 per cent for provincial tax. Thus, they will have to pay 30 per cent of the cost of the house or $4,000 on $12,000. The house value is then only $8,000 but the owner will have to borrow $12,000 because the federal and provincial governments will grant no credit. Our young couple will therefore apply to the CMHC, a federal agency, to finance $12,000 over 30 years at a 10 per cent interest rate. After 30 years, if still alive, they will have payed over $55,000 for their small hut. If you add up the municipal and school taxes and the insurance premiums, you get a fabulous amount. You will understand that the house is to be rebuilt after 30 years. Bearing this in mind, how can we reasonably invite the middle income families to own their houses? This is mathematically impossible.

Our young people, who can count very well now, see in this system the most glaring theft ever supported by any government.

To quote again the words of the leader of the Ralliement Créditiste (Mr. Caouette): The cause of our social and political dissensions is mostly an economic and more especially a monetary one.

Quit playing the ostrich and be frank for once in your life.

Frankness that is what the people clamour for in all their demonstrations. They are fed up with all that hypocrisy in which our governments have so sumptuously wrapped themselves since Confederation.

Mr. Speaker, it is not the first time the system is contested. In his younger years, when he was a student, the right hon. Prime Minister himself could not escape the desire to tell what he thought of our capitalistic system. I think that he was sincere then when he founded Cité Libre with all his partners: Gérard Pelletier, Pierre Juneau, Roger Roland, Marc Lalonde, Naïm Kattan, Jean-Louis Gagnon, Jean-Pierre Goyer, Jean Marchand and other leftists of that time.

Now that our rotten system has absorbed them, they should be seen now in their present positions. What has happened to their sincerity of the past? Has the safeguard of the millionaires overridden the just society they wanted to establish? Why do they tolerate, I would even say protect, that financial dictatorship which chokes the people?

If the Right Honourable Mackenzie King entrusted the Bank of Canada with the absolute control of the printing and issuing of legal money in order to pull Canada out of the financial slump into which she had been thrusted by the chartered banks of that time, why does not this government direct that same Bank of Canada to issue itself and control as strictly as then the new monetary credits which represent more than 90 per cent of the money supply? That is the crux of the problem and all those whom I named a moment ago know it well. Why, since they are in power, are they acting like puppets and high financiers? How long are we going to allow private corporations, such as chartered banks, to play the main part of the Bank of Canada?

All young people know pretty well today that owing to that extraordinary privilege granted by the government, chartered banks take hold of the money of the citizens to lend it to those same citizens whom they just robbed. Indeed, if someone deposits $6 in his bank account, the chartered bank will lend him $100 at a 10 per cent interest rate. This trick is marvellous and especially profitable.

[Mr. Gauthier.]

Therefore, as long as this government does not remove this capital injustice by improving our monetary system, it will continue to finance its whole administration thanks to the money provided by taxes, without allowing the population to benefit from the issuing of new credits, the product of its work.

The government will continue to levy taxes on the citizens of the provinces and tell the latter that it has no money to transfer to them. All this will be another opportunity to get more and more involved in the provincial fields of taxation, leaving the provinces with the scraps from the table, in order to dominate them all the better by keeping them in poverty.

And, in an attempt to make people forget all that, they will try to stretch the time by promising to amend the constitution. What a farce, Mr. Speaker! They want to amend and even to renew a constitution which they were never honest enough to respect.

If the new constitution is to get the same treatment as the old one, it is really not worth sinking more millions of dollars into research and studies of all kinds.

This is the old story of the vicious circle, as when a hypnotist repeats the same formula to put his medium to sleep.

We have gone through the period of royal commissions which enabled the government to remove ticklish questions from the House for one, two or even three years, while getting good jobs for a number of their supporters. However, that cost Canadians tens of millions of dollars.

I hope last year saw the end of the big studies such as the ones undertaken by the BAEQ which meant jobs, during about three years, for 80 federal civil servants, but ended finally in utter confusion.

And now, we are entering the period of white papers, issued in order to tell the people why we have no money. We have none because a few of the big financial and banking interests control the release of today's economic blood, that is new credit to be doled out as they see fit and for their profits to government and municipal agencies, to school boards, because our governments do not have the courage to take steps that would make of Canada its own master.

The present government, far from assuming its responsibilities, likes to blame everything on inflation. However, it does not state that the problem is in the big finance companies and in the banks, whose profits are constantly increasing.

The people are faced with complete deflation since they do not have the money to buy products. As far as I know, inflation is when there is too much money in relation to the products on the market.

What is missing today? Certainly not the products since surplusses must be destroyed and farmers are fined for over-production. Financiers are still the ones who cry out against inflation and still, the people are the victims of this evil.

The first step of the government in his fight against inflation should have been to freeze banks interest rate.

To the contrary, every ceiling was eliminated. Big financiers were also allowed to raise their prices before they were asked to please refrain from increasing them for a little while.

And today, workers are accused of asking for wage increases because the administration fees charged by the bank have increased. Indeed, loans and taxes cost him more.

Therefore, I ask the government to revert to a more logical approach if it wishes to establish the justice of which our society has such a great need today.

• (9:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Hu Harries (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate both the hon. member for Bourassa (Mr. Trudel) and the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) on their contributions. I should particularly like to say how much I admire the contribution that is being made by the hon. member for Assiniboia toward a better understanding of the Prairie grain economy. I think his efforts are dedicated, sincere and quite obviously effective.

As a new member from western Canada, I was initially distressed to find that some hon. members from outside the Prairies seemed to fail to understand the critical and continuing importance of the grain industry to all of Canada. While I sympathize with my colleagues on both sides of the House for what sometimes seems to be an unnecessarily protracted discussion on western grain, I nevertheless believe that western members must continue to press upon the House a full realization of the economic importance of wheat and coarse grains.

It is my view that alone among the major industries of this country, agriculture has been forced to adjust to a wholly new technology unaided by any control of the price system such as is found in so many other industries. Agriculture has faced production adjustments by exacting a fierce toll from the little farmer and small producer. Our economy today is cheap food at the farm level only, because virtually all the increases resulting from automation and technology have been passed on to the consumer and have not been, as in so many other instances, usurped in part at least by labour and capital. Imposing this new technology upon the usual climatic uncertainties of Prairie grain growing areas has meant that the normal economic instability of that region has been greatly increased.

• (9:20 p.m.)

Contrary to what some of my eastern-oriented friends seem to believe, the Prairie grain economy has not been and is not today being nurtured by public financing. On a per capita basis or on a basis of per dollar productivity, the grain economy gets virtually nothing from the government but, on the contrary, makes an enormous national contribution. People such as my friend the hon. member for Assiniboia know the grain industry of the west, its importance and its continuing impact upon our nation. Again I congratulate him on his seconding of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne.

I should like to deal very briefly with two matters. The first is the question of student employment. Because of the nature of the school population distribution that faces us today in Canada, we face a major problem over the next five years to find productive seasonal employment for senior high school students and post-secondary school students. The problem was made more difficult this year because of the generally quiet tone of the economy, but it would be wrong to suppose that this was the fundamental reason for the lack of adequate student employment opportunities.

It is quite clear that this problem will become worse and will reach very substantial proportions next year even if there is an economic recovery in the meantime. This, of course, is a problem that the government recognized and took steps to meet. I think many members will share my enthusiasm for the steps the government has taken, particularly in making hostel facilities available to the young people who were travelling across the land this summer. I believe this kind of activity ought to be encouraged.

It seems to me that with a nation which spans a continent, if we cannot do everything possible to encourage our young people to move from one part to another and visit people in other areas, we cannot possibly suppose that Confederation will be the success it ought to be. The idea of making money available in order to employ young people in government offices and government activities is generally one that is commendable, if not very imaginative. In view of the crash nature of the program this year, I think the results were quite clearly worth the effort; but surely we can conceive employment programs which do more than simply put young people into an office environment wherein they are clearly appendages and, for the most part, unnecessary to the successful functioning of the office. Apart from that, I believe it would be unfortunate if we educated the young people of this nation to believe that one can find the action in a government office while following summertime employment. I think there is a much broader sphere available to us.

I hope that during the next several months the government will find the opportunity to develop ideas that will look to the development of smaller group activities related to projects that have the support of the youth of this country. It is not everyone's bag to be a cadet for the summer. Surely, with the clear and continuing interest that youth has in environment, there are many places in which their enthusiasm, their talents and their energies can be profitably employed.

It is quite obvious that in the price system which we generally accept as a regulator of our economic activities there is a very large gap when it comes to costing the real social aspects of a particular activity. Surely, in both rural and urban settings we can find programs which will appeal to youth, give them the opportunity to work in areas they find challenging and, at the same time, enable them to make a significant and continuing contribution to national development. If we cannot keep youth involved in the system in which we believe, or alter that system to make their contribution effective, then quite clearly we have failed.

My party owes much of its current success—and I am not thinking particularly of the recent election result in Nova Scotia—to a resurgence of interest by youth in the political process. I know that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his government are alert to both the challenge and the responsibility. I am sure that this House will do everything it can to encourage them to bring forward programs that appeal and are challenging to the youth of this country. It seems to me that this matter has No. 1 priority.

The second matter on which I want to speak for a moment or two is the oil and natural gas policy of this country. First, because export as it is conceived and presently controlled is so clearly in the interest of Canada, I am amazed that the obvious evidence can be so readily overlooked or misread by some hon. members opposite. It seems to me that talk of the need to use natural gas for the establishment of secondary industry ignores both simple petrochemical facts as well as the basis upon which the National Energy Board calculates Canadian need. If the record of the Energy Board is carefully examined, I am sure you will find that when there is any doubt about the need for gas for domestic, industrial or commercial use, that need is reflected in the volume of gas that is set aside and reserved for the national economy. So there is no constraint imposed upon the development of secondary industry as a consequence of exporting to an excellent market such as we have in the United States that which is clearly surplus to the needs of this country.

• (9:30 p.m.)

If the government can be criticized at all in respect of the export of gas, it can be criticized in that it took too long a time to arrive at a fairly obvious conclusion and that, if anything, it was too cautious in its calculations as to reserves. I remember the first gas hearing before the Dinning commission some 20 years ago. At that time exactly the same kinds of arguments were made as are made today. Surely, when we see what has happened in the past 20 years we must downgrade any argument that has attached to it the antiquity of those which we hear and which have been resurrected in respect of current permits.

The gas export policy, after the initial inquiries of the Dinning commission, the Alberta Oil and Gas Conservation Board and, latterly, the Energy Board, has brought gas not only to parts of the U.S. but also to the vast eastern Canadian market. It has brought millions of dollars into Canada by virtue of sales and in money saved on foreign purchases, because let us never forget that so far as energy is concerned, for a number of years we were in a most disadvantageous position. In view of the sales that have taken place over the last 20 years, surely it is not necessary to remind the House that the reserves available today are many hundreds of times greater than those available 20 years ago.

The geology of the great producing basins of western Canada shows beyond doubt that, given the incentive for exploration which comes with gas export and with a growing oil market, there are vast undiscovered resources which will be found and which will contribute to the requirements not only of the export market but, more particularly, of the Canadian consumer—so that 20 years from today we will be able to look back and will find the same ratio of reserves to requirements. This seems to be quite apparent from the history of the last 20 years.

There is one problem which I suggest the Energy Board might find time to consider. That is the question of the price differential which exists in areas proximate to the sources of gas. Here there is a problem that accounts largely for the overhead costs. I believe it is a problem that can be readily solved.

With respect to the national oil policy, one fact comes through clearly. It is that the policy we have been following for ten years must be drastically changed. The continuing insecurity in regard to Middle East oil supplies surely demonstrates beyond doubt that the first step in Canadian oil policy must be to ensure that the Canadian market can be substantially served by domestic oil supplies. There does not seem to be any sense in kidding ourselves that we can continue to expect the United States to carry for us the insurance policy in respect of our oil marketing.

More than 50 per cent of the Canadian market is served by foreign crude. It is apparent that so long as that situation continues, we cannot expect to have western crude serve the logical middle west U.S. market that is available to it. It seems to me that the construction of a 300,000 to 350,000-barrel line eastward from Toronto is a clear, first requirement in a revised oil policy for Canada.

I know that many people place reliance, with a good deal of reason, upon the eventual development of large reserves of crude oil on the Atlantic shelf. If these reserves are discovered, there will be still a very significant time lag between the initial discoveries and the development of an oil field capable of supplying part of the deficit that we now have in our balance of international crude. So I say that the mere possibility of the development of sources of crude on the east coast is not, and cannot be, sufficient reason for continuing to procrastinate with a view to making certain that the Canadian domestic market can be adequately served by domestic crude over which we have virtually complete control.

I think history shows that the major disability with respect to the eastward extension of the interprovincial pipeline from Toronto relates to a supposed price differential. Surely, the pricing policies pursued by the international oil companies are not so obscured as to hide from us the fact that talk of a price differential, when western crude goes to a market east of Toronto, is nothing but a red herring and that there is not an effective price difference.

The United States needs our crude oil, and will need it in increasing amounts. But it is obvious that we will not obtain any substantial increase, on a long-term basis, in our exports to that market until we remove the insecurity that attaches to our ability to serve that market when there may be difficulties in obtaining Middle East supplies of crude. They do not want us just on the days that we happen to have oil available; they want us on a continuing basis, one that ensures that their own security will not be placed in jeopardy. Surely this is not an unreasonable demand. There is no question that it is now economic to extend the interprovincial pipeline eastward as far as Montreal. If this is done on a basis that will capture approximately half the existing market, then as northern oil development proceeds it is entirely reasonable to suppose that a transcontinental crude line of substantial proportions can be tied into the whole eastern seaboard market of the United States and the mid-continent area of both that country and Canada.

• (9:40 p.m.)

In these circumstances we would be in a position to take full advantage of what seems to many people who have studied the question to be an economic opportunity that would be of very great benefit, not only to the provinces of western Canada which now have a modest crude production but to that part of northern Canada wherein the mineral rights are held largely by the national government; to that part of northern Canada where unquestionably there will be found large reserves of crude. What we are looking at now is a gradual development of a market approach to reserves, the ownership of which is vested in the people of Canada and which can mean tremendous benefits for the whole of Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The House divided on the amendment to the amendment (Mr. Douglas, Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands) which was negatived on the following division:

• (9:50 p.m.)

Division

YEAS

Messrs:

Barnett
Beaudoin
Broadbent
Burton
Dionne
Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)
Fortin
Gauthier
Gleave
Godin
Harding
Howard (Skeena)
Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)
Lambert (Bellechasse)
Lewis
MacInnis (Mrs.)
Mather
Nystrom
Peters
Rodrigue
Rose
Rowland
Saltsman
Skoberg
Tétrault
Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley)—26.

NAYS

Messrs:

Aiken
Alexander
Alkenbrack
Allmand
Asselin
Badanai
Baldwin
Barrett
Basford
Béchard
Benson
Bigg
Borrie
Boulanger
Breau
Brown
Caccia
Cafik
Cantin
Chappell
Chrétien
Clermont
Comtois
Corbin
Côté (Richelieu)
Côté (Longueuil)
Crouse
Cyr
Danson
Davis
Deachman
Deakon
Douglas (Assiniboia)
Downey
Drury
Dubé
Duquet
Émard
Éthier
Fairweather
Flemming
Forget
Francis
Gervais
Gibson
Gillespie
Givens
Goyer
Gray
Grills
Guay (St. Boniface)
Guay (Lévis)
Guilbault
Haidasz
Hales
Harries
Hopkins
Howard (Okanagan Boundary)
Howe
Hymmen
Isabelle
Jerome
Kaplan
Lachance
Laing (Vancouver South)
Lambert (Edmonton West)
Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt)
Langlois
Laniel
LeBlanc (Rimouski)
Lefebvre
Legault
Lessard (LaSalle)
Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Lind
Loiselle
Lundrigan
MacDonald (Egmont)
Macdonald (Rosedale)
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacLean
Macquarrie
McBride
McCleave
McCutcheon
McGrath
McIlraith
McIntosh
McKinley
McNulty
McQuaid
Mahoney
Major
Marceau
Marchand (Langelier)
Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo)
Marshall
Monteith
Munro
Nesbitt
Noble
Noël
Olson
Otto
Peddle
Pepin
Perrault
Portelance
Pringle
Prud'homme
Ricard
Richardson
Ritchie
Robinson
Rochon
Rock
Roy (Laval)
Schumacher
Scott
Smith (Saint-Jean)
Southam
Stafford
Stanfield
Stewart (Marquette)
Sulatycky
Sullivan
Thomas (Maisonneuve)
Thompson (Red Deer)
Trudeau

Division

Trudel
Turner
(London East)
Turner
(Ottawa-Carleton)
Watson
Weatherhead
Whelan
Whiting
Woolliams
Yewchuk—140.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the subamendment lost.

On motion of Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West) the debate was adjourned.

It being ten minutes after ten o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

APPENDIX

GOVERNMENT OF CANADA CASH REQUIREMENTS
(Millions of Dollars)

| | 1969-70 | 1970-71 Forecast |
|---|---|---|
| Budgetary Transactions | | |
| Revenues | 12,313 | 13,100 |
| Expenditures | −11,938 | −13,250 |
| Surplus (+) or Deficit (−) | + 375 | − 150 |
| Net Non-Budgetary Transactions | | |
| Excluding foreign exchange transactions | − 293 | − 1,185 |
| Amount Required to Date to Finance Foreign Exchange Transactions | − 335 | − 1,222* |
| Total Government of Canada Cash Requirements | | |
| Excluding future foreign exchange Transactions | − 253 | − 2,557 |

*As of October 1, 1970

GOVERNMENT OF CANADA BUDGETARY AND OLD AGE SECURITY REVENUES
(Millions of Dollars)

| | 1969-70 | 1970-71 Forecast |
|---|---|---|
| Budgetary Revenues | | |
| Personal Income Tax | 4,562 | 5,270 |
| Corporation Income Tax | 2,612 | 2,440 |
| Non-Resident Tax | 249 | 255 |
| Estate Tax | 101 | 110 |
| Custom Duties | 818 | 820 |
| Sales Tax | 1,717 | 1,785 |
| Other Duties and Taxes | 897 | 995 |
| Total Taxes | 10,956 | 11,675 |
| Non-Tax Revenues | 1,357 | 1,425 |
| Total Budgetary Revenues | 12,313 | 13,100 |
| Old Age Security Revenues | | |
| Personal Income Tax | 1,027 | 1,140 |
| Corporation Income Tax | 227 | 215 |
| Sales Tax | 577 | 600 |
| Total Old Age Security Revenues | 1,831 | 1,955 |

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT REVENUE AND EXPENDITURE ON A NATIONAL ACCOUNTS BASIS
(Millions of Dollars)

| | 1969-70 | 1970-71 Forecast |
|---|---|---|
| A—Revenue | | |
| Direct Taxes, Persons | 6,790 | 7,630 |
| Direct Taxes, Corporations | 2,256 | 2,105 |
| Direct Taxes, Non-Residents | 252 | 255 |
| Indirect Taxes | 4,024 | 4,200 |
| Other Current Transfers from Persons | 4 | 5 |
| Investment Income | 1,059 | 1,275 |
| Capital Consumption Allowance | 214 | 230 |
| Total Revenue | 14,599 | 15,700 |
| B—Expenditure | | |
| Current Goods & Services | 4,453 | 4,875 |
| (Non-Defence) | (2,610) | (3,030) |
| (Defence) | (1,843) | (1,845) |
| Transfer Payments to Persons | 3,702 | 4,150 |
| Subsidies | 571 | 690 |
| Capital Assistance | 97 | 160 |
| Current Transfers to Non-residents | 196 | 200 |
| Interest on the Public Debt | 1,675 | 1,885 |
| Transfers to Provinces | 2,719 | 3,590 |
| Transfers to Local Governments | 88 | 100 |
| Gross Capital Formation | 450 | 500 |
| Total Expenditure | 13,951 | 16,150 |
| C—Surplus (+) or Deficit (−) | + 648 | − 450 |

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT REVENUE PUBLIC ACCOUNTS AND NATIONAL ACCOUNTS RECONCILIATION
(Millions of Dollars)

| | 1969-70 Preliminary | 1969-71 Forecast |
|---|---|---|
| 1. Budgetary Revenue | 12,313 | 13,100 |
| Deduct | | |
| 2. Budgetary Return on Investment | − 860 | − 950 |
| 3. Post Office Revenue | − 355 | − 345 |
| 4. Other Non-Tax Budgetary Revenues | − 142 | − 130 |
| | (− 1,357) | (− 1,425) |
| 5. Corporate Income Tax, Excess of Accruals (+) or Collections (−) | − 583 | − 550 |
| Add Extra-Budgetary Funds Revenue: | | |
| 6. Old Age Security Taxes | 1,831 | 1,955 |
| 7. Unemployment Insurance Fund, Employer-Employee Contributions | 494 | 515 |
| 8. Government Pension Funds, Employer-Employee Contributions | 494 | 535 |
| 9. Prairie Farm Assistance Act Levies | 6 | 5 |
| | ( 2,825) | ( 3,010) |
| Government Investment Income: | | |
| 10. Interest on Loans, Advances and Investments | 423 | 500 |
| 11. Interest Receipts on Social Insurance and Government Pension Funds | 285 | 400 |
| 12. Profits before Taxes (Net of Losses) of Government Business Enterprises | 351 | 375 |
| | ( 1,059) | ( 1,275) |
| 13. Capital Consumption Allowances | 214 | 230 |
| 14. Miscellaneous[1] | 128 | 60 |
| 15. Total Revenue, National Accounts Basis. | 14,599 | 15,700 |

[1] These miscellaneous adjustments represent insurance companies tax revenues, miscellaneous indirect taxes, miscellaneous transfers from persons and adjustment for the supplementary period. In the national accounts, revenue in the supplementary period is shifted into the following fiscal year.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURE PUBLIC ACCOUNTS AND NATIONAL ACCOUNTS RECONCILIATION

| | 1969-70 Preliminary | 1970-71 Forecast |
|---|---|---|
| 1. Budgetary Expenditures | 11,938 | 13,250 |
| Deduct | | |
| 2. Budgetary Transfers to Funds and Agencies[1] | — 551 | — 570 |
| 3. Post Office Expenditures | — 341 | — 385 |
| 4. Deficit of Government Business Enterprises | — 77 | — 85 |
| 5. Reserves and Write-Offs | — 323 | — 60 |
| 6. Purchase of Existing Capital Assets | — 9 | — 10 |
| 7. Budgetary Revenue Items Offset Against Budgetary Expenditure[2] | — 80 | — 60 |
| | (— 1,381) | (— 1,170) |
| Add Extra-Budgetary Funds Expenditure | | |
| 8. Old Age Security Benefits | 1,732 | 1,905 |
| 9. Unemployment Insurance Benefits | 176 | 220 |
| 10. Government Pensions | 542 | 745 |
| 11. Prairie Farm Emergency Payments | 4 | 5 |
| | (2,454) | (2,875) |
| 12. Expenditure of Government Funds and Agencies[1] | 646 | 660 |
| 13. Capital Consumption Allowances | 214 | 230 |
| 14. Miscellaneous[3] | 80 | 305 |
| 15. Total Expenditure, National Accounts Basis | 13,951 | 16,150 |
| 16. Surplus (+) or Deficit (−), National Accounts Basis | + 648 | — 450 |
| 17. Surplus (+) or Deficit (−), Budgetary Basis | + 375 | — 150 |

[1] In the national accounts, budgetary appropriations to various funds and agencies are replaced by the expenditure actually made by these funds and agencies.

[2] This item mainly consists of revenue from sales of goods and services by the government. These sales appear as final expenditure of the private sector and are deducted to avoid double counting.

[3] This item includes the supplementary period adjustment. In the national accounts, expenditures on goods and services in the supplementary period are divided between adjacent fiscal years; most other expenditures are shifted entirely to the next fiscal year.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, October 14, 1970

The House met at 2 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

THIRTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF ELECTION OF MEMBER FOR NANAIMO-COWICHAN-THE ISLANDS

Mr. Speaker: As hon. members know, today is survival day. That being so, I felt it might be appropriate if I were to mention one of our colleagues who has a survival rate rarely matched in the history of our chamber or, indeed, of Canadian politics. I refer, of course, to the celebration by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands and his friends and colleagues of the thirty-fifth anniversary of the hon. member's election to the House of Commons. The hon. member was first elected a member of this House in 1935 and served here until 1944, when he became Premier of Saskatchewan. In 1961 he resigned that office to become the federal leader of his party and returned to the House of Commons in 1962. I am sure I reflect the views of all hon. members when I extend on their behalf and, indeed, on behalf of the people of Canada, our congratulations on this occasion and our very best wishes for continued health and happiness in all the hon. member's endeavours.

• (2:10 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am seldom at a loss for words but on this occasion I am afraid that is the case. I had been hoping that my long period in public life could be kept secret. I want to thank Your Honour for your kind words and to say how much I have endured—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): —enjoyed these years in the House of Commons.

An hon. Member: Endured and enjoyed.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I know how much the public and hon. members opposite have had to endure during those years.

When one has served this long in public life one approaches the end with mixed feelings. Someone described mixed feelings as the feelings of a man watching his brand new Cadillac going over a cliff with his mother-in-law inside. I have a feeling of satisfaction for the associations I have developed over the years and at the same time a certain feeling of sadness because as one advances in years one recognizes that one's parliamentary career must eventually come to a close.

I should like to thank you, Sir, for your kind words and to say what a great pleasure and honour it has been to sit in this House under your direction. I have sat as a member under many Speakers but I do not know of any other Speaker under whom I have sat with so much pleasure and with such a great sense of appreciation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I should also like to say how much I have enjoyed the association with members of all parties in the House. We have our political differences but in the House of Commons, as in politics generally in Canada, there is a fellowship and an understanding of each other's viewpoints. We may not always agree but each of us recognizes and believes that other members are trying in their own way to serve the best interests of the country. I should like to say to my colleagues in all parts of the House that I appreciate very much the tribute they have paid me.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

---

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

DELEGATION OF PARLIAMENTARY RESPONSIBILITY TO MINISTER WITHOUT PORTFOLIO IN CHARGE OF HOUSING

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 41(2) I should like to table copies of Order in Council PC 1970-1781 which designates the Minister without Portfolio in charge of housing as the minister responsible to Parliament for the National Capital Commission.

* * *

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

RESTORATION FOR MURDER AND CERTAIN ACTS OF TERRORISM—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I ask the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. I think it very fitting that this motion be put on survival day.

There can be no greater and more pressing necessity for action by any government than when the rule of law, the foundation and framework of any society which aspires to be democratic and civilized, is mocked. The rule of law is mocked when weakened by permissive punishment for the ultimate mockery of murder. The rule of law is mocked when it is suspended by a government sworn to uphold it. Mr. Speaker, when the rule of law is both weakened and, so weakened, suspended, then indeed must a government act to strengthen and restore the rule of law or else adopt that mockery as its own.

With the unanimous consent of the House I therefore move:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should immediately introduce a measure to amend the Criminal Code to restore the death penalty for the act of murder and to provide the death penalty for any person who, by an act of terrorism based upon the threatened sacrifice of human life, other than his own, intends thereby to force a government or a person who is charged with the safety of human life to conform to his purpose.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Battle River. Standing Order 43 requires that there be unanimous consent before the motion can be put to the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

* * *

POWER

PROPOSED FLOODING OF SKAGIT RIVER VALLEY—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave of the House to move a motion under Standing Order 43. In the brief explanation I am permitted to make may I say that members of all parties in the House are concerned about the proposed flooding of the Skagit River Valley in British Columbia.

An hon. Member: Where is it?

Mr. Rose: It is because we are agreed that we should give our immediate attention to this problem that I believe there will be unanimous consent to the matter being considered by one of our standing committees. I therefore move:

That the whole question of the flooding of the Skagit River Valley in British Columbia be referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence for consideration and report.

Although my colleague the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding) is ready to second my motion, I am certain he would be pleased to give way to any other member from British Columbia.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West. It also requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Downey.]

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

* * *

CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

MOTION TO APPOINT SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE

On the order:

Government Notices of Motions—The President of the Privy Council:

That a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons be appointed to examine and report upon proposals, made public, or which are from time to time made public by the Government of Canada, on a number of subjects related to the Constitution of Canada during the course of the comprehensive review of the Constitution of Canada, which review was agreed upon at the Constitutional Conference of the Prime Minister of Canada and the Premiers and Prime Ministers of the provinces in February, 1968, and alternative proposals on the same subjects;

That the committee have power to appoint, from among its members, such subcommittees as it may deem advisable or necessary;

That the committee have power to sit during sittings and adjournments of the House of Commons;

That the committee have power to report from time to time, to send for persons, papers, and records and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee;

That the committee have power to adjourn from place to place within Canada;

That the quorum of the committee be 17 members, whenever a vote, resolution or other decision is taken, so long as both Houses are represented and that the Joint Chairmen be authorized to hold meetings, to receive evidence and authorize the printing thereof, when 7 members are present so long as both Houses are represented;

That the Committee be empowered to retain the services of three specialists to assist it in its work; and that it also be empowered to retain the clerical and stenographic help deemed advisable by the Joint Chairmen;

That papers and evidence received and taken on the subject in the preceding session be referred to the committee and made part of the records thereof;

That the following members be appointed to act on behalf of the House of Commons on the Special Joint Committee, namely: Messrs. Alexander, Allmand, Asselin, Breau, Brewin, Dinsdale, Fairweather, Fortin, Gibson, Hogarth, Hopkins, Lachance, MacGuigan, Marceau, McQuaid, Osler, Ouellet, Roberts, Rowland and Woolliams; and

That a Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours thereof.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of Standing Order 21 this government notice of motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under Government Orders at the next sitting of the House.

---

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

NATIONAL SECURITY

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF EMERGENCY POLICE POWERS—APPROVAL OF HOUSE OF COMMONS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Prime Minister whether, in view of statements he made outside the House yesterday, consideration is being given to the declaring of emergency police powers of the sort, for example, to permit the police to search without warrant and arrest and hold individuals for questioning without having to lay a specific charge or justify any such action? Is any such consideration being given?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Since the beginning of this emergency, Mr. Speaker, the government has considered all possible types of action including this and many others, but there has been no decision made along these or any other lines which is not obvious to the country and to Parliament.

Mr. Stanfield: Will the Prime Minister give the House the assurance that no action of this nature will be taken without the approval of the House of Commons?

Mr. Trudeau: I believe, Mr. Speaker, that this is a matter of law. Quite frankly, I do not think this type of suspension of civil liberties, if I understand the Leader of the Opposition, would be possible without some amendment to our statute or some action by the government which would have to be brought before the House at some point.

Mr. Stanfield: Will the Prime Minister give the assurance that even if the government has this authority in law no such action will be taken without seeking the approval of the House of Commons?

Mr. Trudeau: This is completely hypothetical. I repeat that if such action were ever contemplated it would certainly be discussed in the House of Commons. Whether it would be immediately before or immediately after would depend, of course, on—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I am sorry to observe the lightness with which the opposition treats this question. It is obvious that if urgent action is needed at some time in the middle of the night we cannot ask Parliament to approve it first.

Mr. Aiken: All these things happen in the middle of the night.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You have no power to do it except through Parliament.

* * *

PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION

EXTENSION OF LIFE—RETENTION OF DR. YOUNG AS CHAIRMAN

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the fact that the Order in Council appointing the Prices and Incomes Commission will expire at the end of the present calendar year, is it the intention to extend the life of the commission by Order in Council? Will there be the same terms of reference or does the minister envisage some legislative enactment?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The commission will be continued as long as it is considered by the government to be playing a useful role, which it is certainly doing now.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I ask the minister whether he expects to retain Dr. Young as chairman of that commission, bearing in mind that his credibility has been destroyed by his attack on the arbitrator—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member will recognize that the question as asked is not in order. Even on this day I do not think he should be allowed to ask a question in those terms.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I rephrase my question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the chairman has criticized the business community for its lack of readiness to face strikes, does the minister consider that the present chairman should be kept in that position?

Mr. Basford: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

CONTINUATION OF WAGE INCREASE GUIDELINE POLICY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs a question which the Minister of Finance indicated he would answer yesterday in his speech but did not. Is it the intention of the government to continue the guideline policy for a further period when the year originally contemplated expires?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I think this is something to be announced in due course by the commission and by the government, as to what action will be suggested for January, 1971.

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the emphasis placed by the Minister of Finance on stepping up the private sector, would the minister not agree it is important that the uncertainty as to government policy in this area be cleared up as rapidly as possible?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Leader of the Opposition is inviting the minister to express an opinion and the question is not in order in those terms.

STEINBERG WAGE INCREASES—CLARIFICATION BY CHAIRMAN OF PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION OF EFFECT ON PRICES

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): In view of the complaint by Steinberg's Limited concerning an inaccurate and unfair statement made by the chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission, will the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs discuss with Dr. Young the necessity of issuing a statement making it clear that the wage increases recently negotiated have not resulted in price increases?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I am not sure that Steinberg's will ever recover from the shock of being defended by the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Basford: I might say that the consumer price index to be released later today will indicate the success the policies of the government and the commission have achieved over the last few months.

Mrs. MacInnis: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I raised the question of a company which is aggrieved and which has sent a wire to the minister alleging unfair treatment. I do not care who it is; if there is unfair treatment—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

[Translation]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

MONTREAL—PRESENCE OF FLQ CELL WITHIN FRENCH NETWORK

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the honourable minister responsible to Parliament for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Would the Secretary of State tell us whether he has been informed about the possible existence of an FLQ cell within the CBC in Montreal?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): No, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

[English]

UNITED NATIONS

TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATIONS—NON-ATTENDANCE OF PRIME MINISTER

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Prime Minister. On the occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary celebrations of the United Nations, when all leaders of governments which are members of the United Nations will be present at this historic event, would the Prime Minister explain to the House and through the House to the Canadian people why, when he has ten days available to visit the U.S.S.R. he cannot spare a few hours to represent Canada—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will recognize that the question as asked is not in order. He is putting an argument, not a question. The hon. member for Grey-Simcoe.

[Mrs. MacInnis.]

Mr. Thompson: I will rephrase my question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Grey-Simcoe.

* * *

TRADE

PROTEST AGAINST IMPOSITION OF QUOTAS BY UNITED STATES ON CERTAIN IMPORTS FROM CANADA

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of National Revenue. Is the government making any representations to the United States government by way of protesting trade Bill H. R. 18970 now before Congress which proposes to impose quotas on several imports by that country from Canada which are vital to our economy?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I think that question relates more directly to the responsibilities of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and I shall be pleased to draw it to his attention.

[Later:]

Mr. Noble: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Revenue. When he refers my first question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, will he also ask the minister whether the government is aware of the disastrous effect that the bill to which I have referred can have on the already depressed mink producing industry in Canada?

Mr. Gray: I shall be happy to do that, Mr. Speaker.

PROTECTION OF CANADIAN TEXTILE AND FOOTWEAR MANUFACTURERS AGAINST IMPORTS FROM PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Grey): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue in connection with the greatly increased trade and business contacts that are expected to follow diplomatic recognition of Red China. In view of the fact that many of our textile and footwear manufacturers have already experienced great difficulty because of foreign imports, what steps is the government going to take to ensure that these new business associations will not eliminate many of our well established commercial organizations and greatly increase unemployment?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, as far as my own responsibility is concerned, I shall certainly see that the department vigorously enforces the law under its jurisdiction in this regard. Also the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce recently announced to the House a new textile policy which is being put in place and which I think is designed to assure the interests of one industry the hon. member mentioned, while paying due regard to our trade relations with other nations.

UNITED NATIONS

TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATIONS—NON-ATTENDANCE OF PRIME MINISTER

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, if I may rephrase my question, I merely wanted to ask the Prime Minister whether he would explain to the House why he was not representing Canada at the anniversary celebrations of the United Nations?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer is quite simple. The invitation to visit the U.S.S.R. was extended to me nearly a year ago, I believe, by the then visiting Foreign Minister of the Soviet Union. Dates began to be negotiated between both governments, and some time last—

An hon. Member: Who was it who arranged the dates?

Mr. Trudeau: Well, if you do not want an answer, talk to your own member.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, with due deference to the right hon. gentleman I think we deserve an answer to what is a straightforward question. If the Prime Minister does not choose to answer that question, then could I ask the right hon. gentleman whether or not the FLQ precipitated crisis is going to interfere with his plans to visit the U.S.S.R.?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Ha, ha, ha!

Mr. Trudeau: Someone thinks it's funny. Ask the right hon. member for Prince Albert, who says "ha, ha, ha."

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Has the right hon. gentleman a supplementary?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister pointed at me a moment ago, and I would like to ask him whether he is sure he is going to have the necessary protection, with armed guards in battle dress, when he goes on this trip?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think that question is acceptable.

* * *

INDIAN AFFAIRS

STERILIZATION OF ESKIMO WOMEN

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, if I may interrupt the exchange between the two right hon. gentlemen, may I direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development which I asked him last Friday. I intended to follow it up by asking a question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare but he is absent even though he is scheduled to be here. May I ask the minister whether any investigation has been made into the question of sterilization of Eskimo women, particularly on Victoria Island in the Holman Island community?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I got in touch with the Minister of National Health and Welfare and I am informed that there is no program of sterilization of women in this government, I mean in this area. However, a few women from the Holman Island community and from other villages have been sterilized. I think there were seven such cases during the year at Yellowknife. In each case, the written consent of the wife and husband, as well as that of two physicians, have been secured.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, when the minister says that there was the consent of the woman and the husband—

Mr. Trudeau: And two doctors.

Mr. Lewis: —and two doctors—by the way, Mr. Speaker, I was not talking about sterilization of the government—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: —this conveys to me that somebody sought the consent of the people involved. I should like to ask the minister whether an inquiry has been made to determine if these people were approached by someone representing the health department seeking their consent and, if so, would that not represent a program of seeking consent? Were they talked to in their own language and, if not, was there an interpreter present? If the minister does not have that information, would he be good enough to find out these very important details about what happened?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I can find out all those facts for the hon. member but I think what happened there is exactly what happens elsewhere in Canada. There is consent of the people concerned and two physicians. I think that is a fair policy, but I can inquire to find out if there was any pressure. If there was some pressure it should be condemned, but according to the facts I have there was no pressure at all. It was done with the consent of the woman and her husband and after consultation with two physicians.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, to follow up the preceding question and the answer given by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, could the latter inform the House at whose request such sterilization was done? Was it at the request of the Indians themselves?

Mr. Chrétien: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult to know how this took place. Probably the women were admitted to hospital, the doctors discussed the matter between themselves, and this solution was offered. The wife and husband both gave their consent and the two doctors were in agreement. I believe that is normal practice, a practice that is not incompatible with the freedom of individuals to make similar choices.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Following the study made by officers of his Department on sterilization, could the Minister tell us if sterilization is preferable to abortion which is so much appreciated by our friends of the NDP?

* * *

[English]

AIRPORTS

TORONTO—MEASURES TO RELIEVE OVERCROWDING OF FACILITIES AND TRAFFIC CONGESTION

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport but in his absence I should like to direct it to the Acting Minister or the Parliamentary Secretary. Has the minister's department any immediate plans to deal with the serious overcrowding of counter facilities, parking facilities and the congestion of people and automobile traffic at the Toronto international airport?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport): In the absence of the minister, Mr. Speaker, I should like to take the question as notice.

* * *

LABOUR RELATIONS

NOVA SCOTIA FISHERMEN—FEDERAL GOVERNMENT REPRESENTATION IN APPEAL COURT CASE

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Justice or the Minister of Labour. Will the government of Canada be represented a week today when the appeal division of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia meets to consider constitutional questions involving labour relations of fishermen?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I should like to answer that question at a later date. Whether the government would intervene at this stage before the Court of Appeal of Nova Scotia or at a subsequent hearing is something I have not had an opportunity to discuss with my colleagues.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, may I present a supplementary question to the minister for an answer at the same time. Will the government, when the announcement is made, indicate whether it will decide to accept the findings of the court? I ask this question because time is somewhat of the essence when dealing with long drawn-out labour problems such as this.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I can make any commitment as to the acceptance or not of the findings or judgment of the court until we see the judgment.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO CANADIAN FIRM IN SALE OF RUSSIAN FARM EQUIPMENT

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): My question is for the Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Speaker. In view of the difficulties that a Canadian firm is having in selling Russian farm equipment in Canada, has the government been requested or is it considering offering financial help to the said firm?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have had some letters and other communications in respect of the financing of some of these tractors in the normal or ordinary way that other imported tractors are financed for the farmers of Canada. We have had some discussions with the Department of Finance, but no consideration is being given to any special financing, only in the normal way under programs such as the Farm Improvement Loans Act so that the application to these equipment sales will be equal to other imported goods.

FARM MACHINERY PRICES—ACTION BASED ON BARBER COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the high farm machinery prices as pointed out by the Barber Commission report, can the minister indicate what action the government has been taking in accordance with the recommendations of that report?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to but there would not be time at this stage of the proceedings to make a detailed statement on what has been done.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I was going to suggest to the minister that this is the kind of information which ought to be given by way of a statement on motions.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, will the minister be in a position to make a statement on motions within the next week?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, nothing has transpired recently that would be news to the House. I could provide my hon. friend with a resumé of what has been done and what has been announced in the House from time to time.

FARM MACHINERY PRICES—LEGAL ACTION AGAINST MACHINERY COMPANIES

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the apparent monopoly practices by certain machinery companies in this country as indicated by the Barber Commission report, is the department preparing any legal action against such firms?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we are acting on the recommendations of the Barber Commission.

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabaska): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. Can he tell us when, as a result of his action on the Barber Commission recommendations, we can expect a decrease in the price of tractors? Can he give us an approximate time?

Mr. Olson: Many weeks ago there were alternatives offered to the farmers of Canada of tractors of the same horsepower at a much lower price, per horsepower.

* * *

PUBLIC SERVICE

ELEVEN PER CENT PAY INCREASE—POSITION OF CONSUMER AFFAIRS MINISTER AND PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Was the recent increase in pay of approximately 11 per cent granted to a group of civil servants by the Treasury Board with his permission and was the Prices and Incomes Commission consulted?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Prices and Incomes Commission is independent of the government and is free to comment on any wage settlement it wishes and in fact has commented on some government settlements or recommendations made by government mediators and arbitrators. As to whether I gave permission or not, I am not in a legal position, of course, to give or withhold permission.

Mr. Hales: On what basis was the guideline of 6 per cent broken?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, that question should properly be directed to the President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question I should like to ask the minister. In light of—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe the hon. member for Wellington has a supplementary. I shall come to the hon. member in a moment.

Mr. Hales: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to continue. I shall direct my supplementary question to the President of the Treasury Board. On what basis was the guideline of 6 per cent broken?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member alleges that a guideline was broken. If he would be more specific, perhaps I could answer.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Hon. members will recognize that we are entering a field of argument between the hon. member and the minister. I think we should give an opportunity to the hon. member for Calgary North.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs whether this is evidence of a new policy since he has vacated the 6 per cent guideline set out by the government?

Mr. Basford: No, Mr. Speaker.

ALLEGED DEMOTION OF K.A. STEAD BECAUSE OF INABILITY TO SPEAK SECOND LANGUAGE

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. On Friday last the Prime Minister, in answer to a question on this subject, advised the House that he would ask the Secretary of State to obtain a report on the charge levelled by the Public Service Alliance that Mr. K. A. Stead of the National Museums Branch had been demoted because of his inability to speak a second language. Has the minister received the report yet? If so, will he advise the House tomorrow on motions about this matter?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, it is a very short report. In answer to the question as formulated by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings I am informed by the National Museums of Canada as follows:

1. Mr. K. A. Stead has never held the position of chief of the education and extension services branch of the National Museum.

2. Mr. Stead continues to hold the classification of IS3 and to receive the maximum salary rate of that classification, which level he attained in 1968.

3. Mr. Stead has been assigned duties which it is believed he is competent to perform. These duties are not considered to require a knowledge of a second language. Mr. Stead's inability to speak a second language was not a significant factor influencing the decision to assign to him these duties.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh

* * *

[Translation]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INFLUENCE OF FLQ ACTIVITIES ON RECOGNITION OF PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Have the activities of the Quebec Maoist FLQ had anything to do with the sudden announcement of the recognition of Communist China by the Canadian government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I am under the impression that a somewhat similar question was put yesterday, and that the Chair raised objections thereto.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[English]

FISHERIES

NEGOTIATIONS WITH SOVIET UNION RESPECTING FISHING OFF PACIFIC COAST

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. Can the minister say whether discussions are continuing between the Soviet Union and his province of British Columbia regarding the depletion of our fishing resources? If so, how long will they continue and can he say when he will be able to make a report to the House on the discussions?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I hope these discussions will be completed either today or tomorrow and that I will be able to make a report before the end of the week.

CLOSURE OF CERTAIN WATERS TO FOREIGN FISHERMEN

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the situation on the west coast and the overfishing which is depleting our resources on the east coast, can the Minister of Fisheries give any indication when action will be taken to close off the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the Bay of Fundy as exclusive Canadian fishing waters in Atlantic Canada as well as Queen Charlotte Sound and Hecate Strait on the west coast?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Very soon, I hope, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

POLLUTION

SALVAGING OF GASOLINE FROM BARGE SUNK IN ARCTIC

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport or in his absence his Parliamentary Secretary. Was any attempt made by any government department this past summer to locate and salvage the 2,000 tons of light diesel and aviation gasoline which was lost with the sinking of a barge in Arctic waters just over a year ago?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would think that this question could well be placed on the order paper.

* * *

UNITED NATIONS

TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATIONS—NON-ATTENDANCE OF PRIME MINISTER

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. I am wondering whether the right hon. gentleman would take the House into his confidence and tell us why, apparently at the last moment, his plan to make the lead speech at the United Nations today was cancelled—it would have taken only two hours—and was turned over to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I ask the question because this does appear to many Canadians to be a snub to the United Nations.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I understand that the hon. member is pursuing a question asked earlier in the question period.

* * *

[Translation]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RECOGNITION OF PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA—DISCUSSION RESPECTING NUCLEAR TESTS

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Since the recognition of Communist China by the present government, does the Prime Minister know that this morning an atomic bomb was exploded on the Chinese communist mainland, and did the Canadian government, during the talks which resulted in this official recognition, demand that China stop atomic tests as a prerequisite to recognition by Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The answer to both questions is no, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a supplementary question.

I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether, during his visit to Russia, he will take this opportunity to discuss the suspension of atomic tests in Communist Russia and in Communist China as well.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that the discussions will cover the problem of disarmament in general and nuclear disarmament in particular. It is also possible that we will talk about international relations in general and China in particular.

* * *

[English]

NATIONAL PARKS

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—ESTABLISHMENT OF SECOND FACILITY

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I will try not to take advantage of his bruised condition. Can he advise if his department has abandoned his commitment given in the House some time ago to establish a second national park in Prince Edward Island? If so, is he contemplating the provision of an equal or better value substitution?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member, I am sure, will admit that this is the kind of question which should be on the order paper. If there is urgency, I am sure we would profit from the pleasure of hearing the hon. member at the time of adjournment.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION ON SMOKING

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is it his intention to produce at the present session of the House legislation on smoking, health and advertising?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker. This area of subject matter is on the proposed list of legislation, if it can be reached at this session.

* * *

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—MEASURES TO STIMULATE ECONOMY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether the measure he proposed yesterday with regard to stimulating the economy is based on the assumption that the seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment will remain the same or is this the policy of the government even in the event of the seasonally adjusted rate increasing?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): What I spoke of yesterday was not a single measure but rather a number of measures the government has taken which are very significant over the period since last March in order to stimulate the economy generally. The measure I announced yesterday for the first time was simply another measure and rather small compared with the vast measures the government has taken since last March.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I certainly agree that the measure taken is rather small, but I am asking the Minister of Finance whether he is prepared to take additional measures if the seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment increases? When the next figure is produced, which I predict will be higher, will the minister produce additional measures?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to suggest to any hon. member in the circumstances that the question asked is hypothetical, but I would think that procedurally I would have to make that ruling.

* * *

HOUSING

HAMILTON—AMOUNT OF MONEY FOR LOW-INCOME HOMES

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which I should like to direct to the Minister without Portfolio in charge of housing. Unfortunately he is not here this afternoon, but I should like to place it on the record and have it taken as notice. It comes about as a result of information I received to the effect that some $18 million which had been earmarked for the city of Hamilton and district for the purpose of low-income housing has been reduced by some 60 per cent. I should like the minister to confirm or deny this statement. If it is a fact that the amount has been reduced, I should like the minister to give the House the detailed reasons for the reduction. If it has not been, I would like to have the assurance of the minister that the $18 million earmarked for housing in the city of Hamilton and district will be available until the time of expiration as set out in the criteria announced by the minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I assume the hon. member wanted the question to be noted by someone on behalf of the government.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to remind the hon. member that it was not quite correct form to ask that a statement be confirmed or denied, but I will take it that his question has been asked directly and noted.

Mr. Alexander: If anybody on the other side is in a position to answer that question, Mr. Speaker, I would certainly appreciate it.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

SUPPLYING OF RAPESEED FREE OF ERUCIC ACID TO FARMERS

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. In light of the importance of increased sales of rapeseed to our western economy and in view of the high level of erucic acid in present samples of rapeseed oil, which is being frowned on by the federal Department of Health, what steps is the Department of Agriculture taking to assure farmers of an ample supply of rapeseed low in erucic acid?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we are taking some steps now to increase rapidly the available supply of Oro seed which is not only low in erucic acid but registers zero in content of that acid.

* * *

HOUSING

NURSING HOMES—DECISION RESPECTING USE OF LIMITED DIVIDEND HOUSING LEGISLATION

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address my question to the same anonymous person who took note of the question put by the hon. member for Hamilton West. Would the minister responsible for housing indicate to the House when a policy decision may be expected with respect to the use of limited dividend housing legislation for the construction of nursing homes?

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

GREAT SLAVE LAKE LINE—ACTION TO ESTABLISH INQUIRY INTO CONTRACTORS' CLAIMS

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport. Can he say whether or not action has been taken on the recommendation of the Standing Committee on Transport to establish an investigation or inquiry into the claims of contractors against the CNR with regard to the construction of the Great Slave Lake Railway?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to look into this matter and take it up with the minister and then send an answer directly to the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ATTENDANCE OF MINISTERS UNDER ROSTER SYSTEM

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a question of privilege at this time concerning the attendance of ministers of the Crown in this House. I do not raise it with any particular malice against any minister of the Crown, but I bring it up because this is the start of a new session and we in the opposition who wish to ask questions consider it important that ministers be present.

I direct my remarks to the right hon. Prime Minister and remind him that of the 20 ministers who are supposed to be present today five are absent, or some 25 per cent. I hope that during this new session we will be able to have a full complement of those ministers who are supposed to be here. I wish to emphasize that I am not in sympathy with the roster system for the attendance of ministers, but I will accept it provided they are in attendance when they are scheduled to be present.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, at the outset of the session I am glad to try to clarify the position. I think the hon. member has made a valid point. If we are to expect the roster system to operate at all it is important that the ministers be here. But I must bring to the attention of the House that there are some occasions, as is the case today, where there may be three ministers absent. There are 16 ministers here. The three ministers absent, who should be here according to the roster system, are away from Ottawa, one at the United Nations, another one in the United Kingdom, and the third in Europe on government business. In cases such as this it is expected that the Acting Minister, if there is one, or the Parliamentary Secretary, if there is one, will answer questions directed to a minister. But of course there is no provision for anyone to answer questions when a minister is not expected to be here, which is the case with the housing minister to whom a question was directed a moment ago.

[Mr. Rowland.]

[Later:]

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the new House Leader. In view of the fact that the right hon. Prime Minister has today indicated that when a minister is not due in the House according to the roster system no acting minister is appointed to answer questions, and in view of the fact that this was the case last year, can he indicate the reason for this downgrading of Parliament just one step further?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

PROVISION FOR CONTINUING SPEAKER

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister giving consideration to the making of arrangements for discussions amongst all parties, either through the party leaders or other representatives, as to the possibility of making provision for a continuing Speaker for the House of Commons, especially in view of the fact that at the present time we have one who enjoys the confidence of the entire House?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure that this is a matter of urgency. Perhaps the hon. member might consider putting the question on the order paper.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): May I ask, Mr. Speaker, that this question be taken as notice by yourself.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that this is something in which Your Honour should not be involved, I wonder if the Prime Minister would perhaps take notice of my question. Would he consider arranging for discussions among the representatives of the parties on what I believe is an important issue so far as this House of Commons is concerned?

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

* * *

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONSIDERATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed, from Tuesday, October 13, consideration of the motion of Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Stanfield (p. 29).

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my first remarks should be to congratulate the mover of the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, the hon. member for Bourassa (Mr. Trudel).

I have had the opportunity this year to get to know the hon. member for Bourassa since he was a member of the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. I can say, without fear of giving him a swelled head, that he is a very sensible man. We both agreed after all on the report of the Finance Committee and on taxation.

He has showed he is a most sensible man and the only thing I could have against him is that he is a member of the party in power.

[English]

At the same time, I would like to offer my congratulations to the seconder of the motion for the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas), whose constituency I have had some pleasure in visiting, not when he was the member but under other circumstances. It is a very pleasant part of the country. All I can say of both these hon. gentlemen is that their advocacy was polite and courteous, but I did not detect any scintilla of enthusiasm on their part for the speech that they were asking the House to support. They did not seem to have conviction, or heart. One has only to look at the list of the legislation that has been tabled—

Mr. Gibson: Yes, indeed.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Gibson) loves to sit back on that part of his anatomy which seems to give the greatest sound, because that is all we ever hear from him. Many of the items listed are more or less pedestrian, housekeeping items. There are pieces of tidying up legislation, and that is the fate of most Speeches from the Throne.

Then, there is another category of bills which last year made part of the grade, but for one reason or another they died on prorogation. After all, some of those bills deserved to die; they were bad. In so far as others are concerned, the legislative hurry caught them so they died in committee. Then, there were other bills that had been announced but never made it to first reading. There is the very famous and hardy veteran, the bill on the Canada Development Corporation. It may be that because it is now somewhere around No. 10 on the list it has better priority than the Prime Minister gave it last year when there were 75 items on the list and this one would have been the 76th. Presumably, it has been upgraded.

• (3:00 p.m.)

Then, there are some new matters. Some will meet with approval in principle without hesitation, although there may be some differences in detail. Some others will obviously be more controversial.

In the last group—and here is a point that I wish to draw to your attention, sir—there appear some innocuous items simply titled "taxation legislation". We and the country are anticipating with a great deal of interest an early decision by the government regarding its tax proposals. I agreed with the issuing of a white paper on tax reform which allowed for a consultative process with the country, but that did not mean there had to be a rush to consider the matters included in the white paper. Certainly, in the beginning, we did not give any approval in any way whatsoever to the contents of that white paper. The government must bear the full responsibility for the uncertainty that has been created in the country arising out of the proposals in the white paper.

It is not just the responsibility of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) but the responsibility of the whole ministry under the Prime Minister that this country has been thrown into economic doldrums, in part caused by the uncertainty over the rather wild and irresponsible proposals in the white paper on tax changes. Whatever the government decision may be, you may rest assured, Mr. Speaker, that all tax legislation will receive very close scrutiny in this House and some of it may face very protracted and bitter opposition.

Then there is another bill, No. 38 on the list, called an act respecting the auditor general. I can promise you, Mr. Speaker, and members of the House, that if there is the slightest move on the part of the government to restrict the scope of the operations of the auditor general either directly or indirectly there will be fierce opposition. That office is responsible to Parliament. The government has nothing to do with it, either through Treasury Board control of its staff or as the result of any wish of the technocrats that occupy ministerial seats or their advisers. There should not be the slightest reduction of the freedom of the auditor general to comment on any or all matters that appear before him in the way of government expenditures.

Curbs have been imposed on Parliament before. We have a system of rules now that is a great gag, and I am surprised that some of the exponents of free speech in the House and some of those who allege to be the great exponents of our rules should have consented at any time to the curb imposed on Parliament by the last rule changes.

Mr. Gibson: So we go back to minority rule again.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Here is another emanation of the sound to which I referred earlier. In so far as the curbs on Parliament are concerned, we know what can be done to publicize government activity either on the floor of this House or in committee before the press who, apparently, do not attend committee meetings unless something highly sensational is likely to develop. The reports of the committees do not come out until weeks later.

Mr. Gibson: They do their best.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): As a member of the Committee on Procedure and Organization, I know that efforts are being made to improve the publication of committee reports. However, until that is done and becomes a realized success, the work of this House will suffer. It is an indirect curb on the right of examination by the House. The delay in the publication of committee reports as a result of certain difficulties is an indirect choking off or snuffing out of information.

Last week the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) put certain questions to the Minister of Finance on the nature of the economy and on unemployment. That esteemed minister replied that early in the week he would make a full statement on the state of the economy, a sort of mini-budget review. He was believed by the press, oh yes. So, what do we get on Tuesday? We heard a really low profile performance, what could be called a non-speech, which completely failed to meet the demands of the occasion. The minister did cover some very gloomy aspects of the moment, apart from a little contribution of about $60 million—some of which, frankly, would have been covered by supplementary estimates anyway because the department in question had run out of money—and a few other matters to which my colleagues, particularly the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), will refer to later today. The minister gave no indication whatsoever as to what the government proposes to do with two very important questions at present: the real downturn in the economy, and mounting unemployment.

With regard to unemployment, I will not engage in a battle of semantics involving seasonally adjusted figures and what have you. All we know is that it is agreed that 6.7 per cent of the working force was unemployed at the last report. What will the next report indicate? Will it be 7 per cent plus or minus a fraction of a point? I do not know, but we will see tomorrow when the figure is published.

Early on in his review, the minister indicated the following:

> The economy has been growing less rapidly this year than last. In the first half of the year the national output apart from price changes grew at an annual rate of just under 2½ per cent. This compares with a rate of a little below 4½ per cent in the last half of 1969.

You did not have the privilege of being in this House in 1958 and 1959, Mr. Speaker, nor did most of the members on the government side. If the minister of finance of the day had read figures like this, one would have heard groans on the then Liberal opposition side that would have been heard clear to the Pacific Ocean—and they did groan. There were difficulties in 1958 and 1959. But now the minister says it is not so bad. However, if one goes to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics reports, one sees what use the government made of statistics. The minister used selective statistics, which is particularly evident when he says that the present rate compares with a rate a little below 4½ per cent in the last half of 1969.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Let us look at what the Dominion Bureau of Statistics says in its weekly bulletin for Friday, August 28, 1970. On page 16, under "Real Domestic Product, June 1970" the report reads:

> Canada's real domestic product, seasonally adjusted, fell by 1.0% in June. This downturn in aggregate production, which was almost as sharp as the strike-affected drop that took place in May of last year, marks the fourth time in the first six months of this year that aggregate production has either decreased or shown no growth. This latest decline places the R.D.P. index at a level lower than that for the previous November. In June both the goods-producing and service-producing industries declined.

I ask, is this just a little bit below the 4½ per cent average of the last half of 1969? Let us look at another index, now.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I confess that I do not know of a standing order that covers my point, but would it not be a matter of courtesy for at least one cabinet minister to be present in the House of Commons when an important member of the official opposition is making his speech?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fairweather: The government does not seem to care in the least for Parliament.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I had been aware of this situation, but we know what the attitude of the government is towards Parliament.

Mr. Fairweather: It does not care for Parliament.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In fact, we have only two parliamentary secretaries present.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I also know the direction in which the cabinet has run. There is a little red light in front of a television camera and cabinet members seem to be struck with the idea that they shall be stars at the moment. They have all run breathless to that idiot box. No wonder they do not appear in Parliament. This is not the first time that someone has mentioned this administration's contempt for this House. May I continue the point I was making about industrial production? I wish to quote from the September 18, 1970 DBS Weekly Bulletin. At page 4 under "Index of Industrial Production, June 1970..." we find:

> The seasonally adjusted index of industrial production (1961 = 100) declined by 0.6% in July, falling to 170.2 from the revised June level of 171.2. All of the decrease was due to the durables-centered drop in manufacturing, as both mining and utilities rose fractionally. The durables' decline was largely caused by sharp drops in the primary metals (where labour disputes were a factor) and metals fabricating components.

It is interesting to note that the July figure of 170.2 is fractionally below the 170.5 figure for May.

This reflects the true picture of the economy at the present time. Let us look at the minister's speech. He has talked about investment in residential construction. It was very much lower in the second quarter of 1970. It is at a lower level than it was in 1969. The government put $150 million into the building industry as a result of changes in the budget provisions of March, but still housing construction, including residential construction, is off. The cause, first of all, is extremely high interest rates. In considering the construction of multiple residences and large apartment buildings as well as other large developmental projects, it is clear that the spectre of the proposals contained in the white paper has closed off everything. It will take a long time before there is that degree of confidence that will bring businessmen and people with money to invest in Canada. And that is the name of the game—people with money who are prepared to put up their money for investment on which they will obtain a reasonable return.

We are told that business spending on new capital has been sluggish so far this year. Of course it has been. Businessmen have been stung by the proposals in the white paper. In the exporting industries, we note that since last May there has been a continuing decline in certain types of exports. Here, one must look at the heavy chemical and forest products industries, where Canadian exporters are now competing on a foreign market at a price disadvantage. Not only have there been inroads on their sales in Canada as a result of accelerating the Kennedy Round reductions on certain domestic products so that imports have been competing against domestic products, but their exports have also increased in price on foreign markets as a result of the floating of our dollar. Why is there this difficulty with industrial production and with the economy of the country? Mr. Speaker, it is the result, frankly, of a crisis of confidence in this government. Businessmen have lost confidence. The government does not seem to know where it is going in so far as its economic programs are concerned.

We saw the wild ideas contained in the white paper. They alarmed the country tremendously. They alarmed foreign investors who wished to invest in Canada. Actually, they have caused the withdrawal of some funds from Canada. A very successful foreign investor actually told me this past summer that at present there is just no case to be made for investing in Canada if one compares investment opportunities and returns on investments in the United States, Australia, South Africa and a few other countries which have demands that are as strong as our own for development capital. The United States, notwithstanding that it is a major country with a fully developed economy, still offers opportunities for development capital. I refer to innovating capital, with which people are prepared to take a chance. According to the white paper we, in Canada, were denying people the opportunity of taking a chance. This has created an element of uncertainty.

Let me refer now to the gyrations of our dollar. There may have been a case, since the minister explained that there was pressure on the dollar, for something to be done with respect to it; nevertheless, I suggest that the answer is not in bringing about a breach of our obligations under the International Monetary Fund and being the one left-footed soldier in all the squad. We got away with it once, years ago. Is it right that we should now go back again and say to all the other countries, "You must respect your responsibilities under the International Monetary Fund regulations but we, in Canada, choose to opt out and, when we find it suitable, we will come back in." That is not the way to conduct our financial relations with our trading partners. In so far as the Canadian economy is concerned, confidence will be restored when the government makes up its mind, I hope soon, to peg the dollar. By saying that I do not for one moment want it to be understood that I approve of the narrow range of plus or minus 1 per cent existing under the present Bretton Woods Agreement. I suggest either that there be a wider range or that there be a moving average rate. Canada must return to a pegged dollar in order to give business the degree of stability that it requires and in order that our exporters can put into effect those plans and operations that must be implemented in order to compete internationally.

It is no answer to the problem put forward by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) to say that Chemcell is laying off 300 people in Edmonton—these are people with Phd's and other degrees—and that Dupont and other large chemical companies may lay off hundreds of people. People like these are not mere sweepers; the companies are laying off from the backbone of their work force. How does one expect them to start operating again a few months later or even a year later when the economy may have recovered? This is where we all lose as Canadians.

• (3:20 p.m.)

The other question is the crisis in confidence. The minister pointed out that there is now far more industrial unrest than ever before. This, of course, causes a lack of confidence both in businessmen and organized labour. As the minister indicated, we are now getting wage demands and wage settlements to cover future inflation because no case has been made that productivity is even approaching wage increases.

I am not going to get into the hassle of whether a 6 per cent or 12 per cent increase in wages is right or wrong, but if there is a consistent increase in wages, salaries and profits, and profits that are withdrawn are the wages of management, and if these are in excess of the increase in productivity there will be continuing inflation. A study made last year by the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs amply proved that this is the case as far as Canada is concerned. We see the case being made in other countries where there are rapidly escalating wages which are ahead of the increase in productivity.

One does not quarrel with the disruptive effects of work stoppages. No one gains from a work stoppage, including the employee and employer. Where there have been work stoppages in major industries a great deal of consequential unemployment has resulted. Although this has affected the figures, the net result is that our rate of productivity has declined. This was discussed earlier. Why is it declining? It is simply because the base of operation has been narrowed so much that the overhead and fixed costs have to be paid for by the much narrower base of operation. The consequences are apparent.

We did not get any answers from the Minister of Finance. He mentioned an acceleration of payments to the provinces, but that is not encouragement to the private sector. This is where the government should have support for its programs. There should be incentives for business to invest in capital assets, but they are declining.

The Chairman of the Economic Council of Canada and other members of the Council stated the year before last that the government's fiscal and monetary policies ought to be very carefully assessed and watched because it is very easy to overstep the mark. We must remember that these fiscal and monetary policies of taxation and tight money have very deep effects. All too often the federal government is unable to stop the downward trend. Adequate measures should be taken soon. Somewhere along the line the government economists and the advisers to the minister have missed the boat. They have not seen the warning lights.

The Minister of Finance talked about relaxation of fiscal and monetary policies, but it has been proved that he is too late. When the Economic Council of Canada gave a very mild warning they were bitterly condemned by the minister and his advisers for doing so. However, they were correct. The minister has said that the government has now taken certain steps. The government is going to pump some extra millions of dollars into the hands of the provinces.

The government is making available $150 million for housing and $60 million, which is peanuts, for advancing maintenance and repairs. What are they going to do? Are they going to paint garages of DND establishments? Are they going to renew doors and partitions of government buildings? Are they going to overhaul and instal more luxurious furniture in ministerial offices and the offices of senior civil servants? What are they going to do with $25 million? There will be $15 million for certain work projects. I repeat, $15 million. This is like giving a man who is dying of thirst a drop of water. A much more massive injection must be furnished by the government.

I am conscious of the time I have left, Mr. Speaker. At page 106 of Hansard there is a table which is headed, "Federal government expenditure public accounts and national accounts reconciliation". It is the same table that appears at page 4749 of Hansard for the last session. This is included in the minister's budget speech of March 12.

Remarkably the 1969-70 preliminary figures in the left-hand column of the table shown on page 106 are somewhat different from those that appear at page 4749 of last session's Hansard. I do not know how preliminary figures can change, if they are preliminary figures. There is also a major change with respect to the 1970-71 forecast. The total expenditure on a national accounts basis proposed for 1970-71 is $16,150 million while the total of budgetary expenses is $13,250 million. This is again a big increase, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I am sorry to inform the hon. member that his time is over.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Could the House grant me a few additional minutes, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel:) Does the House agree to the member for Edmonton West continuing his speech?

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

Some hon. Members: Agreed!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Thank you, Mr. Speaker and hon. members of the House. I have only a short bit to add.

In years past, we have been told by successive ministers of finance that what must really be considered are the surplus or deficit figures on a national accounts basis. Those were the true ones. I remember when the Hon. Walter Gordon instituted this basis. This was to be the real basis of comparisons. The budgetary basis was considered to be nothing, but strangely enough if the national accounts basis is to be considered on the revised figures as they appeared in the minister's speech on Tuesday, we have gone from a budgetary surplus of $250 million in March through the successive changes announced at the dominion-provincial conference to a deficit position of $450 million on a national accounts basis. In his speech the minister said that instead of having a budgetary surplus, we will have a budgetary deficit of $150 million on the basis of our present estimates.

I am often reminded of the time in February of 1968 when the present Minister of Finance stood opposite and said, "I guarantee we will balance the budget". In October figures were tabled showing that the budget was $825 million in the red. I have as much faith in the minister's figures now as I did at that time.

Mr. Woolliams: I rise on a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. During this important debate on the economic condition of the country no minister of the government has seen fit to attend on this debate this afternoon, even though a point of order was raised by another member in the House of Commons. In view of that fact, I wish to move the following motion:

• (3:30 p.m.)

That this House adjourn and report progress until a member of the government sees fit to attend this most important debate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I wish to bring to the attention of the hon. member the fact that, according to the advice I have received, since, he rose on a point of order, it is not possible for him to make such a motion.

Mr. Woolliams: What I did, in fact, Mr. Speaker, was to raise a question of privilege. A question of privilege can be raised at this time because this is a matter which affects the proceedings which are taking place in the House at this moment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): In my opinion the hon. member's motion should be related to the question of privilege. The point which the hon. member raised just now was made previously by another hon. member.

It is well taken but, in my opinion, I should not put the motion he suggests at this time.

Mr. Woolliams: May I speak further to that question of privilege, Mr. Speaker? My motion is based on the question of privilege, one which affects every member of this chamber. It has always been the practice that when a debate of this nature, or, indeed, of any other, is in progress, one or two cabinet ministers, at least, are present. Members of the ministry have today seen fit to ignore this debate completely. As I say, this is a matter which affects the privileges of every member of this House. I ask that the motion be put.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I repeat that there is some propriety to the comments which have been made, but the hon. member has heard the decision of the Chair and the Chair has no alternative but to call on the hon. member for Peel South.

Mr. Nesbitt: On a point of order. I move that this House do now adjourn.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I am again informed that such procedure is not provided for under our rules. An hon. member is not able to rise on a point of order and then move a motion to adjourn the House, as the hon. member seeks to do. It is my feeling, if not my experience, that if this were to be allowed then at any moment during any debate, for any reason at all, an hon. member could get up, raise a point of order and move the adjournment of the House. Accordingly, it is my intention to adhere to my earlier decision and call upon the hon. member for Peel South.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would invite Your Honour to reconsider your decision with regard to this particular question. I said nothing on the subject during my speech, although my speech was interrupted while the point of order was originally raised. Nothing was said by me at that time, but the matter has now been raised at the first opportunity. I put it to Your Honour that a point of order with regard to attendance in the House is admissible at any time and, therefore, that the motion is not out of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I wish to remind the hon. member for Edmonton West that the point of order raised while he was speaking was not followed by a motion. It was well taken, and, indeed, the point of order raised by another of his hon. friends was well taken. I have rendered a decision. I am ready to take this question under consideration with the Speaker for another occasion but, from the advice I have received until now, I have no choice other than to call on the next speaker who is the hon. member for Peel South.

Mr. Baldwin: Before we leave this point, may I say this: I see several assorted Parliamentary Secretaries present; they might possibly send for a minister so that the cabinet might be represented.

The Address—Mr. Chappell

Mr. Hyl Chappell (Peel South): At the outset of these observations, Mr. Speaker, might I offer my congratulations to all those who have spoken before me and in particular to the mover (Mr. Trudel) and the seconder (Mr. Douglas, (Assiniboia) of the motion before us?

Some have criticized the Speech from the Throne, but I think when one considers it together with the list of proposed legislation tabled by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on October 8, it is a most comprehensive and excellent document. A debate on the Address gives each of us an opportunity to speak on what he believes to be the most important issue facing us. Mine is the need for quick and substantial changes to our criminal law.

Last year, at this time, I spoke of the need for discipline in democracy. Thinking of the George Williams University affair, the LaPalme lawlessness, the bombing and the airport riots, I said we had seen a glimpse of chaos which amounted to a gun pointed at democracy and I expressed the view that unless democracy immediately developed a stronger discipline we were on the way to a dictatorship. I thought then that we had five or ten years in which to make our choice. Now, one year later, we do not have any time left. The challange is here, now. Democracy in Canada is threatened. Can we quickly produce the teeth and muscle to save it? The eyes of the world are upon us. The stake is not just our national reputation but our way of life—democracy itself.

To obtain freedom, each of us gave up his jungle right to behave as he wished and submitted to a code of conduct called laws, in return for protection from those who refused to follow the code. Equal freedom of action and opportunity should exist within these rules. The criminal law deals with those who interfere with our rights within these rules. Without that protection, we are without freedom. The question is: can democracy provide it, or will we slip into dictatorship to provide the discipline and save us from mob rule or revolution?

Our criminal law mainly deals with those who interfere with the life or security of another individual or who steal from the state. These people usually have had protection from, and obeyed, the laws in other respects. For many years we have been humanizing the use of the criminal law sanction, hoping to rehabilitate criminals by more positive and less punitive treatment. This attitude led to the suspension of the death penalty except in very limited circumstances. What we are faced with today in the bombings, air piracy and kidnapping for ransom is very different from ordinary criminal activity. These groups would destroy the whole basis of our law and society. They fight to take away democracy and force their will upon us. Is the concept which we have developed for the criminal sanction of the individual suitable for application to these groups, or must we introduce a whole new concept?

So many Canadians have said in the last two or three years that this is the greatest country in the world. How many have thought to themselves that mob rule and organized gangsterism can not happen here, but only in faraway places. Some will now say, what a disturbing or unpleasant thought and brush it off in the hope that the police will soon catch a few of the FLQ and that the situation will return to normal. I ask you, is there not a gun at the nation's head when it is demanded that convicted criminals be freed and transported to a nation which encourages and trains them? I ask you, how many hostages need be taken, or how many of our police must be diverted to protecting rather than apprehending roles, before we consider freedom to be on the brink?

• (3:40 p.m.)

We must realize these people are not ordinary individuals and ordinary products of our society. Neither are they political prisoners, as they are so often called by the press. A political prisoner is one who does not wish to live under the laws of a given country, and he is punished because he cannot conform. These "political prisoners" deliberately broke our laws, were apprehended under the law, tried and sentenced. They are led by international political gangsters who roam everywhere looking for a vacuum in authority and discipline and take advantage of it under foreign training and foreign support with the purpose of destroying our way of life. Needless to say these people always pick a group name associated with a local cause; thus they gain some sympathy and recruit the misguided and uninformed.

We have been living in an age of change and protest, of new demands and new strengths. Threats and selfish force have entered into protests, often joined by violence and complete disrespect for the rights and dignity of others. Important people in prominent places, both in the field of communications and in elective office, have often unwittingly, and sometimes deliberately, encouraged these people to violence by sympathizing with some seemingly worth-while element of their cause and by giving their acts excessive news coverage. People who commit violent and criminal acts are often given the chance to appear on television to try to justify them, by extolling some cause that they personally wish to espouse. This has tended to make heroes out of them in their own group, and thus has assisted their recruiting.

While protest was descending into violence and our criminal sanctions were being softened—I believe properly so far ordinary individuals—our social mores have accepted the philosophy of unrestraint and permissiveness. In this environment these selfish and destructive people have been allowed to flourish, often nurtured by the comfort that they may be accepted as the radical wing of a political philosophy. Their initial success has led them to think that if they act in mobs, and boldly enough, our laws are impotent to deal with them. If caught in crime they simply commit a worse one and demand exemption from penalty for the first.

Refusal to deliver hostages is not enough; we need tougher laws to fit this type of activity. As I said earlier, this is not ordinary crime by ordinary criminals; this is sedition and revolt against law and order. It is in fact a form of warfare. Our police are not sufficient in number to cope with such organized crime, and they are handicapped because of our strict rules which protect the suspected criminal. Our ordinary judicial process is slow, and wisely so to avoid mistakes. But will it do for the present situation where those who are apprehended could be freed by commission of another crime? We must remember that many of these people already face charges which could lead to life imprisonment if they are caught. As the law stands now, they have nothing to lose from adding kidnapping and murder to their list of crimes.

Should we not amend the Criminal Code, first of all to provide the strictest penalty for those who kidnap people and hold them as hostages, or pirate a plane or vessel, or place bombs where there is a reasonable chance of causing death?

Second, should we not also re-examine, and perhaps widen, the definition of "conspiracy" and "conspirators", so that those who openly support and encourage conspiracies can be charged?

Third, should we not re-examine, and if necessary enlarge, the section of the code dealing with treason and sedition, so that people who commit crimes of theft in order to finance revolutions are properly charged?

Fourth, should we not amend the Criminal Code to provide for speedy trial and appeal procedures so that the final penalty is carried out and attempts to rescue them by committing further crime are thwarted?

Fifth, should we not for a temporary period at least during this emergency, provide for a new type of hearing where people are forced to disclose the names of their fellow conspirators, and enable the police to use all reasonable means in order to apprehend? This would be a bold but I submit effective move, and this House has the authority to make such an amendment.

Sixth, should we not also consider making membership in organizations such as the FLQ a crime in itself? Lastly I suggest that we tighten our immigration laws to forbid entrance to Canada of those who preach the violent overthrow of our system; and I suggest we improve our intelligence in those foreign nations that assist such groups so that we know their plans in advance.

Liberty is precious. The pain and fear of those hostages and their families must be immense. But we must guard against oppression and act within the law. We cannot distort law and order by using their illegal methods—that is to say, by lining people up and shooting them—as many of our constituents have been suggesting to us during the last week end. If we did this then we would destroy that which we seek to preserve—the rule of law.

I do not call for any abandonment of the democratic or judicial process, but rather for proof that democracy can move quickly and toughen its criminal laws in times of emergency in order to save itself. I fear that if we do not show this firmness, use of the innocent hostage will spread like wildfire to other groups. Under fear of mob rule people seek protection at any cost, and we might be stampeded into a dictatorship.

In closing, may I speak for a moment for comparative purposes about my own riding of Peel South, which is composed of Mississauga, its port town of Port Credit, and Streetsville, the most dynamic and fastest growing area in the world. It demonstrates what can happen in a free and healthy democracy. Last year an immense amount of new industry settled there. By the second election to come we will have a population, I believe, of perhaps 400,000 people and will require four members to serve us. Quebec desires and deserves this same growth, and all of us look forward to similar economic growth there. But can it happen if we allow this lawlessness to continue? Surely for Quebec and for Canada the most important issue facing us is the need to strengthen immediately our criminal laws.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): First of all, Mr. Speaker, as is customary I should like to join with other hon. members who have preceded me in this debate in extending my congratulations to the mover and seconder of the address in reply, the hon. member for Bourassa (Mr. Trudel) and the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas).

I too, subscribe to many of the thoughts expressed by the hon. member who has just taken his seat. I find myself at this moment pre-empting some of the thoughts and observations that I had intended to make in addressing myself to the crisis facing our country at the present time. It is difficult if not impossible for any member to rise in his place during this debate without making some reference to the events that are taking place at this moment in this city of Ottawa and in the province of Quebec. The presence of armed troops on parliament hill is an awesome and frightening spectacle. It is so awesome and so frightening that we have to stop for a moment and ask ourselves over and over again, can this be happening here, can this be happening to us? What in the name of God is happening to our country?

As we contemplate these events, there is one thing that emerges very clearly, at least to me at any rate, and that is that this country will unhappily never be the same, no matter how successfully concluded are the negotiations now going on to free other unfortunate men who are the victims of this conspiracy. No longer can we, as Canadians, look at this world through rose coloured glasses. No longer can we view the violence, turbulence, and unrest of other countries with smug complacency in the knowledge that it cannot happen here. It is happening here and it is happening now.

I am one member of this House who finds himself at a loss to explain to my children just exactly what is happening. It is difficult for me to understand, hence it very difficult for me to explain it to them. Certainly, as members of this House, we at this time in this place can give voice to the thoughts of the vast majority of Canadians in this country who view, through the medium of television day by day and hour by hour, the drama and crisis that is unfolding before them. We can give voice to their concern on the floor of this House. We can give voice to that concern as Members of Parliament and we can express our own individual concern for the future of this country.

I believe that the majority of the people in this country feel that the Government of Canada has acted wisely in not yielding to the demands of these criminals.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: I believe that the government acted responsibly in placing paramount importance on the maintenance of the rule of law in this country. That is certainly the government's responsibility and they would stand condemned by the people of Canada if they did otherwise. We must ask ourselves whether the government, in their attempts and in their human desire to save the lives of these men, have gone a little bit too far? Have we perhaps in the process lost something?

There should be no question of absolution and there should be no question of a deal. A terrible and heinous crime has been committed. The only course to be followed now is that of the due process of law, otherwise where will this end? Who will be safe in this country? Certainly, there will be no security for those who have the responsibility of government or have the responsibility of representing other governments in this country.

At the same time, I cannot help but feel that we have perhaps slightly overplayed our hand with the presence of armed troops in Ottawa and on parliament hill. To my mind, this dramatically illustrated that we have overplayed our hand and have hurt the prestige of this country in the eyes of the world. Surely, the government did not have to resort to armed troops in full battle dress. Surely, this could only have the effect of aggravating an already aroused public and of hurting our reputation which has already been badly tarnished in the eyes of the world. I say that with all earnestness and at the risk of being classed as one of the Prime Minister's bleeding hearts. I say that because I believe that even though this is a time of great crisis some other provision could have been made. Some other forces could have been called upon without having to resort to calling in troops in full battle dress.

Perhaps the government would be better advised, while at the same time maintaining the security of our public officials, to look at the cause of the great problems that face this country. I cannot help but note that we are not going to solve the great economic problems of this country, the problems of regional development and disparity, as well as the attendant problems of unemployment, by the type of band-aid treatment announced in the House last evening by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson). He laughs at the winter works program, yet he has had to draw in his horns and bring in a program which can only be classified as band-aid treatment. They will not get at the heart of the matter and will not in my view help to reduce the growing rate of unemployment, especially in the province of Quebec, the Atlantic provinces, certain parts of northern Ontario and the Prairies. Sixty million dollars is a nice round figure, amounting to about $3 for every man, woman and child in this country. This amount would not solve the unemployment problems in the province of Newfoundland alone, let alone the vast unparallelled unemployment which exists in this country today.

Having said that, I should now like to refer to another matter than concerns me. This is an item to which I have given a great deal of thought as of late. The hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Chappell), who just took his seat, said among other things that democracy in Canada was threatened. He was referring to the presence of troops and the crisis in Canada today as a consequence of the happenings in Quebec.

Mr. Chappell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member said I was referring to the troops on the hill that put democracy at stake. I referred to no such thing. I said it was the type of warfare that was going on that led to the kidnapping, and that unless this was stopped, democracy was threatened, not because there were troops on the hill, which I supported.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. McGrath: All right, Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the hon. member. I was merely trying to paraphrase him, but he did say democracy in Canada is threatened as a consequence of what is happening. I am sure I am quoting the hon. member correctly.

I believe the greatest threat to democracy in this country is the destruction of Parliament by this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: I believe that poses a greater threat to my freedom than what is happening in Canada today. When a government refuses to allow the legitimate expressions of the people in a free country, that is precisely what takes place. The armed troops move in. This brings me to the point where I am concerned about what is happening in this Parliament. As a member, I am concerned about what is happening to this Parliament. I am concerned about a debate which is taking place in this House in this moment of crisis without any ministers present.

An hon. Member: That is not true.

Mr. McGrath: Now, we have two but only after they were flushed out by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) and the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). We have some of the newfound Parliamentary Secretaries. They are here only because they are new to the job. Were it not for that fact they would probably join the other members of the cabinet elsewhere.

I believe what is happening in this Parliament and in this House is a cause for great concern. We have lost something since this government came to power. We, as Members of Parliament, have lost our rights, our privileges and our prerogatives. No longer do we have the traditional rights, the long fought for right, to withhold supply to the government. Hence, we have no power and hence we stand accused by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) of being nobodies. Let me quote what the Prime Minister said as recorded at page 11,635 of Hansard of last session:

> The opposition seems to think it has nothing else to do but talk.

I suggest we are here to talk. That is our main role as Members of Parliament. Then, the Prime Minister continues:

> They say: if there is a problem, we will talk.

That is precisely what we should do. We talk instead of resorting to armed troops because when there is no talk there is armed conflict. The quotation continues, and I repeat that these are the words of the Prime Minister:

> If there is difficulty we will talk about it.

That is precisely our responsibility. I now quote the Prime Minister further:

> If the government is going too slowly, we will talk about it.

That is what we have to do; that is our responsibility. That is precisely what we have to do. Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister continues:

> The best place in which to talk, if they want a forum, is, of course Parliament. When they get home, when they get out of Parliament, when they are 50 yards from Parliament Hill, they are no longer hon. members—they are just nobodies, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Woolliams: We are the only thing between him and tyranny.

Mr. McGrath: We are nobodies because the government has systematically set out to destroy this institution. It has taken away from the House the traditional right to grant supply.

Mr. Gibson: You are against participatory democracy.

Mr. McGrath: The hon. member who sits on his brains is making his usual contribution. The government has set out to take away the only right we have to withhold supply from the government when we have a grievance.

An hon. member spoke about the committees. What is happening to the committees? The committees are partisan. The chairmen of these committees consider themselves to be members of the government. They do not consider themselves to be non-partisan chairman representing Your Honour in the committees. They consider themselves to be stooges of the government and representatives of the government. Only in the past few months in my own province, I have seen two members who were committee chairmen during the last session. The hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Watson) Chairman of Northern Affairs Committee, came to my province during the recess representing the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) at a ceremony. The hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Morison), who was chairman of the Committee on Regional Development, accepted a position as consultant with the government of Newfoundland in the very department charged with the responsibility of administering the program under regional development.

We know of other instances where committee chairmen have been the stooges of the government. For example, when a committee brings in a unanimous recommendation to this House which just does not fit in with the government plans, and is not acceptable to the government, the committee chairman quietly acquiesces to the wishes of the Government House Leader. All that the committee chairman needs to do is to remain seated and not rise in his place to move a motion of concurrence in the hope that the report will die. Fortunately, Mr. Speaker, that has not been allowed to happen because of the vigilance of the opposition in this House. Members of the opposition on more than one occasion have moved concurrence in committee reports, only to have the motion for concurrence talked out by government members. Then, the motion has been put on the order paper as a government measure and allowed to die a slow death.

The report of the Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development which studied the question of sovereignty in the North was moved by the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk). It was talked out by the government and died on the order paper. I can think also of the report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications dealing with the problem of transportation in Labrador and the north shore of Quebec which presumably was destined to die by virtue of the lack of a motion for concurrence by the Chairman. The motion was moved by the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Peddle). The motion was allowed to die. I could cite other instances to illustrate that the committee system is a failure as it is now constituted. It is an absolute failure and it is destroying Parliament. Let me quote the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Walker) who is one of the Parliamentary Secretaries who have been put out to pasture. I am quoting from the Financial Post of July 9, 1970:

> The new committee system is working excellently, so well that it is superseding the work of the Commons. With so many committees (24) operating there is difficulty in getting a quorum in the House itself. That is a bad situation.

There are no committees sitting today.

An hon. Member: Yes, there are.

Mr. McGrath: Well, I apologize. Perhaps there are one or two committees sitting. This still does not alter the fact that the government and its members choose to ignore the debate which is taking place at this moment of great crisis.

When the new rules were adopted by Parliament there was a debate, as indeed there should have been because these rules as we now see them would have the effect of taking away our rights and prerogatives. A solemn undertaking was given by the then President of the Privy Council that the rules would in fact be reviewed. I shall throw this undertaking right back in his face. I am talking about the former President of the Privy Council, the present Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald) who is involved with soldiers on Parliament Hill at the present time. Perhaps that is why he is not in the House. The minister's remarks appear at page 3792 of Hansard. I quote:

> I would be glad to give an undertaking on behalf of the government that after we have had experience with these suggested standing orders for the balance of this session, we would at the commencement of the next session in September or October of next year, be prepared to refer these amendments to the new committee on procedure and organization, which I trust will be established by this motion. That committee could consider these procedural changes if not within one year, within at least nine months later.

That brings us to the present time. In other words, Mr. Speaker, a solemn undertaking was given by the government that it would be prepared to take a long, hard look at these rule changes after they had been in operation for a short period of time, so drastic were they in their impact. Now, Mr. Speaker, I call upon the new Government House Leader, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen), who has been called upon to pull predecessor's chestnuts out of the fire, to try and restore some of the lost prestige of this Parliament that has been taken away by the actions of the government. I call upon him to fulfil that undertaking made by his predecessor to refer these rules back to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, and to take a long look at the committee system of this House.

• (4:10 p.m.)

I suggest to him that consideration should be given to the following: That committees should not under any circumstances be allowed to sit without a quorum.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McGrath: That, Mr. Speaker, in my opinion is fundamental if this whole committee system is to be anything but a farce.

Secondly, I suggest to the government through you, Sir, that committees, except under special circumstances which have been predetermined by the House, should not be allowed to sit while the House is in session. I consider that to be a fundamental condition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McGrath: Thirdly, Mr. Speaker, we must give consideration to doing away with the roster system in this House—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McGrath: —which, more than anything else, is taking away the rights and privileges of Members of Parliament—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McGrath: —our inherent rights to represent our constituencies, to represent the people of Canada and to direct questions to the members on the treasury benches.

That right, Mr. Speaker, I submit is being taken away from us by the roster system. It was only today, this third or fourth day of the new session, that it was pointed out that 25 per cent of the ministers were absent.

What about Standing Order No. 5, Mr. Speaker? Standing Order No. 5, which is still part of our Standing Orders, very simply says:

> Every member is bound to attend the service of the House, unless leave of absence has been given him by the House.

I know, Sir, that this Standing Order has been taken under advisement by the Speaker. I know this matter has been raised on a number of occasions, but I believe this Standing Order was left in the rule book precisely for the reason to which I am alluding, namely, that no group of members may be absent from this House at any one time without the express consent of the House. But that is precisely what is happening under the roster system. When a group of members, especially a group comprising members on the treasury benches, are absent from this House then I, as a member of the House, am being deprived of my rights. This is nothing short of being deprived of my rights—it is contempt.

Mr. Jerome: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. McGrath: I would be glad to allow the Parliamentary Secretary to ask questions when I conclude my remarks.

The other provision I would ask the Standing Committee to take a long, hard look at, an earnest and sincere look at, is a provision which in my opinion is making the committee system inoperative in terms of providing collegiality, if you like, and expertise amongst the members of the committees. It is the provision whereby the membership of the committees can be changed. This is Standing Order 65(4)(b) which reads:

> Changes in the membership of any standing, joint or special committee may be affected by a notification thereof, signed by the member acting as the Chief Government Whip, being filed with the Clerk of the House who shall cause the same to be printed in the Votes and Proceedings of the House of that sitting, or of the next sitting thereafter, as the case may be.

That rule should go, Mr. Speaker. That rule must go if the committees of the House are to work effectively and if they are to work properly. Otherwise, we will continue to have this roving parliamentary goon squad which does nothing else but move into a committee where it feels the government is in trouble. This squad votes at the direction of the government, and then moves on to do its dirty work in the next committee.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McGrath: I say that is an obnoxious and reprehensible rule, and it should be taken out. If a member wants to get on a committee he should do so by resolution of this House. There is no other way that he should be allowed to sit in a committee which is charged with the responsibility of examining bills and the spending estimates of the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Mr. McGrath.]

Mr. McGrath: Lastly, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that we at least give consideration to restoring just a part of our traditional rights and prerogatives. We can do this by making provision to bring back into Parliament certain predetermined departmental estimates, without any time limit on their passage. This would be done by agreement of the different house leaders. These estimates would come before Parliament, and would be examined by the committee of the whole house, without a time limit, so that members could give voice to their grievances, question government expenditures, and indeed withhold voting money for a department for that year unless they received a legitimate explanation with respect to their grievances.

If we did that you might see a lot more interest in this chamber by members of the Treasury Board than is now manifest.

Mr. Woolliams: And an effective opposition.

Mr. McGrath: And you would probably have a more effective opposition, more effective Members of Parliament. This institution would be restored to its traditional role. Mr. Speaker, democracy in Canada is indeed threatened. Democracy in Canada is threatened because the government chooses to do away with Parliament very surreptitiously by taking away its rights, prerogatives and privileges. Until these rights, prerogatives and privileges are restored, then parliamentary democracy in this country is a farce and freedom is threatened.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was kind enough to say he would permit a question at the end of his remarks. I wonder if the hon. member is in a position to commit his party to a general review of the rules by the Procedure Committee. That seems to be what he is anxious for, and I am sure he will find a good deal of support for that in the House. However, so far his party has resisted. Can the hon. member commit his party to having a general review of the rules by the Procedure Committee?

Mr. McGrath: Let me answer that question by asking the new Parliamentary Secretary if he is prepared to commit the government to the same?

Mr. Jerome: Certainly.

Mr. Ricard: What authority have you got?

Mr. Jerome: That isn't an answer.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. The hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome) asked a question. He cannot make a speech at this time. I now call on the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Badanai).

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I should like to join those who preceded me in this debate in congratulating the mover (Mr. Trudel) and the seconder (Mr Douglas (Assiniboia)) of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne for their well conceived addresses. By all standards, the Speech from the Throne was one of the best to which I have had the privilege of listening. In it we find the promise of legislation which translates into being the goal of a just society set by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) when he was chosen to lead the government two and a half years ago.

No one expected that members of the opposition would agree it was a good speech. According to them, it was an empty effort. Let us examine the emptiness of the declarations contained in it: the promise to provide adequate protection to Canadian consumers as a result of unfair trade practices; the planned provisions dealing with pollution, and the widening of the benefits of unemployment insurance; the revision of labour management relations and new labour standards for industries within federal jurisdiction; programs to establish national marketing boards to improve market potential for agricultural products; and the reorganization of the department concerned with environment about which the Prime Minister already acted today by appointing one of the ministers responsible for housing to be also in charge of this new department.

• (4:20 p.m.)

White papers will be presented to Parliament on income security, national defence, communications, citizenship and immigration. The value of these white papers cannot be underestimated. They are vehicles designed to involve interested Canadians in every walk of life in government policies, examples of which are the white papers on veterans affairs, tax reform, and the unemployment insurance. The tremendous response of the people to all of these has contributed to the decisions made and those yet to be made.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, is this an indication of emptiness? Does this Throne Speech, as implied by members opposite hard pressed to find fault with it, fail to offer hope for the enactment of measures that would stimulate the economy, reduce unemployment, etc.? Within the limit of my time in this debate, I shall attempt to discuss a few subjects which I hope will be of interest to hon. members.

For some time now, I have noted disturbing trends such as an economic nationalism and a heavily disguised anti-Americanism in this country which, while not widespread, is nevertheless to be deplored by responsible Canadians. I regret that the Leader of the New Democratic Party—for whom I have great respect and to whom I wish to extend my congratulations as he celebrates today 35 years in public life, and may he enjoy many more years of active service—never misses an opportunity to blame the Americans for all the ills of the world. His special target is American investment in Canadian industries. He seems to harbour a pet hate against the United States, and he has recently demonstrated this attitude by criticizing the government for the sale of natural gas to our neighbour to the south, a sale which would bring $2 billion to Canada in the next few years.

I wonder if it has ever occurred to him and to his followers that friendly co-operation with the United States is a sure way to stimulate growth and bring prosperity to Canadians. Canada needs a great deal of investment capital to provide opportunities for expansion and a higher rate of employment.

Those who are indulging in the barren role of anti-Americanism would have the government withhold industrial incentive subsidies from U.S. companies which want to invest in underdeveloped regions of Canada. I congratulate the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) for treating equally all industrial concerns that can qualify under the act, regardless of whether they are Canadian, American, or of any other nationality. The unemployed certainly do not worry about who owns the shares and who will collect the dividends, if and when they are paid. They are simply concerned with a greater number of jobs in their community, bigger payrolls and more people to pay taxes for expanding municipal services.

Premier Bourassa of Quebec was in New York recently for the purpose of soliciting U.S. investors to put some of their money into his province. His major concern was to increase American investment in his province to finance a hydro electric development, for which he needs $2 billion, This development would ensure adequate supplies of electricity for Quebec, with a surplus being left available to help supply some eastern parts of the United States. I hope that he will convince the U.S. investors to accept his proposal which, in the end, would be in the interest of both countries.

While I am on this subject, I wish to quote an editorial which appeared in the Ottawa Journal of May 5, 1970. It reads as follows:

> The following basic premise is too often forgotten by the shriller anti-American voices:
>
> One fact of life that must be recognized is that Canada, if it continues to exist, will do so by sufferance of the United States. We shall continue as always to depend upon the United States forbearance. If the Americans turned ruthless, they could extinguish us. They are unlikely to do so by old fashioned military methods or positive economic sanctions, but by ceasing to take our economic interest into consideration they could make life for us as Canadians on our part of the continent unacceptable.
>
> Canadians may not like this "fact of life"; indeed, the resentment of it is one cause of anti-American attitude. But wishing will not change anything. Since the fact of life is inescapable, wise Canadian policy starts with the need to maintain, as Holmes says, "the basic goodwill of the Americans and their government".
>
> None of this is to say that we must support everything the U.S. does. But it does suggest an examination, an analysis, an enlightened arguing rather than the shrill response of the last few days to the Cambodian adventure. It does suggest that the CBC might not cater principally to the critics of United States policies; and it does suggest that the Commons might more usefully debate a matter after thinking about it rather than in the hot flush and confusion of surprise.

On June 13, 1970, the Times Journal of Thunder Bay, in my own constituency, had an editorial expressing similar sentiments on the subject. I wish to quote three short paragraphs from it as follows:

> Radio and television documentaries, editorialized newscasts and commentary programs being what they are, provide an ideal forum for anti-Americans, despite the fact they constitute a small minority of Canadians.

Some are transplanted Americans, others are Canadian born actors, writers, and others who've discovered their talents aren't duly appreciated on the U.S. side of the border and return to Canada frustrated and angry. Even an individual announcer with an anti-American streak can give a platitude a derisive note by the inflection of his voice.

And like it or not, this is the basis on which most Americans judge us on our attitudes—another instance of the silent majority being judged by the views of a few.

Last March I made the suggestion in the House that the time may come, when and if it is established beyond the shadow of a doubt that we could have a surplus of fresh water, when we can export this valuable commodity to the United States at a good profit. And why not? Since that time, I have seen nothing valid to change my views on the question.

The United States is our closest neighbour, our best customer, our main supplier, our major source of capital, and our shield against any possible military attack. The Hon. Lionel Chevrier, who was minister of justice when the Right Hon. Lester Pearson formed his government in April, 1963 and former Canadian High Commissioner to London, speaking to the Canadian Club in my constituency had this to say about Canadian-American relations:

• (4:30 p.m.)

We are pulled together by our bilateral trade relationship and by our joint defence efforts, not to mention the joint development of Canadian water resources.

He was referring to the Columbia River Treaty and the cultural exchange between our two countries. I wish to take this opportunity to congratulate the new Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang) on his onerous appointment to what I consider one of the most important cabinet positions. I express the hope that in following in the footsteps of his distinguished predecessor he may continue an aggressive immigration policy designed to fill this empty land of ours. This is still a country of few people. It still has a weak policy towards the acceptance of eager applicants who wish to be admitted to Canada as landed immigrants, notwithstanding some sincere efforts made by some previous ministers. I have stated before on several occasions, and I repeat now, that the Canadian government's immigration policy, while far better than that of former governments, is still like a cold water tap turned on and off according to the economic winds. I maintain that it is an arbitrary theory which defeats what ought to be the whole purpose of an immigration policy, the enrichment of national life, socially and economically, by a systematic flow of people. Australia, with half the number of habitants, admits nearly double the annual number of immigrants and pays their passage as well. Immigration has helped to give Australia a population of which 50 per cent is under the age of 21. At the present rate of admission, Canada remains a nation underpopulated, with whole regions seriously lacking sufficient people to provide those regions with the energy required for their development.

One of Canada's major industries has a problem that is rather unusual these days. Even though unemployment is high, the Canadian mining industry cannot get enough skilled, as well as unskilled, workers. The world demand for metals is growing steadily and Canada, being a major supplier of the world's requirements, has a social and international responsibility to continue to provide the world's needs which, at the same time, provide Canadians with employment and a higher standard of living. It has been reported that our birthrate is dropping, which is another important factor to be considered in relation to our growth.

I was pleased to note that the Throne Speech contains a promise of a white paper on immigration. I shall look forward to it with keen anticipation, coupled with great expectation, confident that it will spell out in no uncertain terms a new selection criteria designed to attract more people willing to help in our development.

A white paper on citizenship will be indeed welcome, because our present Citizenship Act contains a discriminatory section whereby a naturalized Canadian citizen under certain circumstances is subject to the loss of his citizenship. I submit that if a naturalized Canadian citizen were to commit an offence of a treasonable nature, there is a law that will take care of him. The same law would apply to a natural born Canadian citizen. The present Canadian Citizenship Act needs revision in another important aspect, which is this: at present citizenship is denied for various reasons which are not made clear to the applicant. I have in mind cases where applicants with a good reputation, with no police record and who have lived in Canada for more than 20 years, have had their applications for citizenship rejected time after time because at one time or another they have been members of certain organizations. I sincerely hope that the proposed white paper will indicate the repeal of these objectionable features in our present Citizenship Act.

The Prime Minister in his speech on Friday, October 9, indicated his concern for the plight of those on fixed incomes and said that something has to be done to alleviate a condition created by inflation, from which pensioners have suffered most. Increased benefits under the Canada Pension Plan and Old Age Security, effective on January 1, 1971, do not meet the increases in the cost of living. I, therefore, urge the government to consider, without delay, a reasonable upward revision of pension benefits in line with the reality of the rising cost of living index.

In a Speech from the Throne debate it is almost invariably the custom for a member to bring to the attention of the government some particular need of his electoral riding. I have a very special project to which I trust the government will give favourable consideration.

Fort William is the constituency that I have the honour to represent. It is an old city which, since amalgamation with the former sister city of Port Arthur, is now part of the city of Thunder Bay.

The Historical Society of Thunder Bay is composed of members dedicated to the preservation of its rich history, dating back 300 years. With the advent of the explorers Greysolon and Sier Dulhut, Fort Kaministigoyan was built in 1687. It was later renamed Fort William after William Magillivray, one of the most distinguished governors of the Hudson's Bay Company. Here it was that a city was born, at a time when men developed a mystique about their land. The society has been active in a project to acquire the oldest surviving historic house built and occupied by the last factor, John McIntyre, of the Hudson's Bay Company post at Fort William. It is the hope of its members to restore this house as a living museum for this generation and generations yet unborn. The history of the early years of Fort William is best known because it was the rendezvous of the Northwest Company and because of the bitter rivalry with the Hudson's Bay Company.

When these two companies made peace in a merger of interests in the fur trading business, events of significance in the development of the modern city of Thunder Bay took place. John McIntyre was intimately associated with these developments. The life of this man spanned the great era of the fur trade and the early years of mining, railroading and agriculture. He lived in the spacious, white elegant house which he built. After retirement from his duties with the Hudson's Bay Company, he continued to serve the people of the district and the Government of Canada as Indian Agent, Customs Officer and Justice of the Peace. On behalf of the city of Thunder Bay, I appeal to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien), who is responsible for the restoration and establishment of historic sites, to look upon this project which is near and dear to the hearts of the people I represent in this House as being worthy of being among the monuments of our nation which record the events of the past for the benefit of future generations.

• (4:40 p.m.)

The government is certainly going to do something about pollution, but it must be borne in mind that this is not a new problem. It is a man-made condition detrimental to the environment and threatening to our well being. It is a problem about which we have become aware only recently. It is ironic that today those industries which are considered to be the great polluters have, in many cases, credible records of battles to protect the environment.

The Great Lakes Paper Company in my constituency has a good record in this regard. The Canadian pulp and paper industry has reduced the load of suspended solids in water by 60 per cent in the last seven or eight years. It has spent millions of dollars in a joint effort to combat air and water pollution, and intends to step up its battle against the problem.

Pollution, in the sense that it is being looked upon today, is almost a universal threat to all forms of life. It is a threat that must be met in co-operation with every industry, and with our neighbour to the south, as it affects our waters. But we must recognize that this problem was a long time developing and we cannot expect instant solutions. What we can expect is that the government will put into motion measures designed to prevent the problem from becoming worse. Then, having stopped it, it will be our job to see that our environment is reclaimed from present contamination. The battle against pollution is not going to be easy; it will take a long time, but persistence will eventually pay off. Some industries, such as pulp and paper, are making an honest effort to solve the problem and they deserve credit for trying.

The Throne Speech also made reference to the visit of the Royal Family to Manitoba, the Northwest Territories and Yukon. Next year, when British Columbia celebrates joining the Canadian Confederation one hundred years ago, Her Majesty, the Duke of Edinburgh and Princess Anne will join in the centennial celebrations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Badanai: These royal visits bring to the attention of Canadians the value of the Crown. While I have lived in Canada practically all of my adult life, I was not born under a British flag. Nevertheless, I began to appreciate the British concept of justice and freedom. I join with the newly appointed Senator, Eugene Forsey, when he stated in an address to the United Services Institute:

> Let us have an end to ignorant chatter about the Monarchy having been imposed on us or the Fathers of Confederation having accepted it just because they were too timid or stupid or absent-minded to do anything else. We have a Monarchy because they uanimously insisted on it.
>
> The Monarchy is part of what makes our Canadian identity, makes us different from the United States and almost every other country in the two Americas.
>
> To substitute a republic would mean a political organ transplant, cutting out parts of ourselves and transplanting into our body politic something alien borrowed from other peoples with a different history, different traditions, different needs.

As a loyal subject of The Queen, I say in any revision of the Constitution let us uphold the principle of the Monarchy.

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, before getting into the body of my speech, I cannot refrain from commenting on the observations of the previous speaker regarding the speech made by the leader of the New Democratic Party. The hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Badanai) suggested that the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) is anti-American. On his behalf, I would like to assert in unequivocal fashion that that is absurd. At the same time, I should like to assert that people who talk about building an independent Canada, achieving control of our own destiny, need not and indeed, for the majority, should not be seen as being anti-American or anti any other group or nation in this world. This is one of the most specious arguments to present against that view, suggesting that it is based on an anti feeling of any sort.

The hon. member for Fort William said that he was proud to be born under a British flag. I recall that was the argument with which he concluded. The very real danger that a number of us fear is that the hon. member might well die under an American flag. That is the issue. It is not a matter of being anti-American. It is a very real, and I think legitimate, matter of concern for Canadians to preserve a distinctive Canadian society and Canadian nationhood. I hope we have heard the last of the kind of argument that he presented this afternoon against those who argue for a positive form of Canadian nationhood. I should like now to get into the main body of my comments.

The Speech from the Throne, in the opinion of some members, had some quaint and inappropriate phrases. I do not see them as such. There was a reference to a society as necessarily being "inspired by love and compassion" if it is to be worthy of the name of society. Further on, the same document calls for a society "which encourages imagination and daring, ingenuity and initiative". Again, in the text, there is reference to the importance of developing in Canada a spirit of friendship amongst our people.

Depending on the source, this kind of phraseology could be seen as merely platitudeness or as a genuine expression of some deeply felt intention, the kind of phrase that one now finds Rotarians and Socialists alike using. One has to make an assessment of the source in order to reach a serious judgment about the intent behind the phrase. I do not dismiss in any cynical fashion phrases of this nature which are found in the Speech from the Throne. To try to build a society with many of the characteristics of friendships, one which is conducive to producing people that are imaginative and daring, is something we should all try to achieve. What we should do now is pass serious judgment on the government's performance; how well it has established its record and decide whether it is to be believed to be likely to act to implement these goals.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has established himself very clearly as one of the most powerful Prime Ministers in Canadian history. He has the largest staff of any Prime Minister in Canadian history. He has established regional desks. He has reasserted the principle of cabinet solidarity and secrecy and has streamlined the organization of cabinet. All of these changes I think are desirable. All should contribute to effective government. In addition, the Prime Minister has improved or expanded his position of influence in the country by very effective and adept use of television and by very intelligently planned, well spaced trips around the country. He has communicated with the people of Canada. He has attempted to justify what he is doing. He has built his personal popularity and, therefore, his power as Prime Minister.

All of this taken together has established the Prime Minister as the most powerful head of government in Canada since Mackenzie King. I find nothing undesirable about what he has done to build up his position of power within the cabinet and within the office of the Prime Minister. In my view, it is constitutionally legitimate. From a democratic point of view it is quite sound.

The serious question we must put to the Prime Minister is not how he has built up his power, since that is essentially trivial for a man seriously concerned about what is taking place in Canadian society, but how he is using that power to bring about the objectives stated in the Speech from the Throne presented to the members of this House and to the Senate. That is the serious question. If we are going to pass judgment or make Canadians guess about what this government is likely to do, the best we can do is look at its record in this area.

• (4:50 p.m.)

The Prime Minister has been in office over two years. He has had plenty of time to clearly establish for us and the people of Canada a certain pattern of behaviour and to establish certain expectations about what he is likely to do in the way of implementing the serious and desirable goals alluded to in the Speech from the Throne. I suggest that in the last two years the Prime Minister has accomplished almost nothing which could be described as contributing to these ends. We have seen during that period only four complex bills, two of which were hangovers from the previous Liberal administration. The first was the languages bill, a desirable item in the main and one which was accepted by the majority in all parties. The second was the omnibus bill amending the Criminal Code. Again, most parts of this measure were accepted by majorities in all the parties. I repeat, each of these pieces of legislation was a hangover from the Pearson administration.

The only other measures of any complexity introduced in more than two years of government were the Regional Development Incentives Act and the Canada Water Act. The first was good in principle and this party supported it, but the amount of money devoted to making it effective in the areas of Canada which most need assistance was about enough to buy a weekly subscription to a newspaper for every poor person in Canada. The Canada Water Act, a quaint piece of legislation which took up many weeks of parliamentary time last session was deficient in two crucially important areas. In the first place, it failed to set universal standards for pollution control; amendments which would have rectified this error were put forward on behalf of the New Democratic Party but were turned down. Second, the bill contained nothing which would have obliged the cabinet to bring before this House any proposal for the export of Canadian water to the United States. The New Democratic Party put forward an amendment which would have made this procedure mandatory, but again the Liberal government in its wisdom turned it down.

This, in my view, is the legislative record of the Trudeau government in the past two years. Let us turn, now, to an examination of the government's record in terms of policy decisions. I suggest it is, if anything, worse. Consider something which is very real and very important to millions of Canadians—housing. I would remind you, Mr. Speaker, that at the present time 20 per cent of Canadian homes lack flush toilets and another 20 per cent lack either a shower or a bathtub. In metropolitan Toronto alone, 22,000 families are on the waiting list for public housing right now. In terms of housing, in the opinion of the Canadian Welfare Council, and I am quoting, there is now "an emergency for people of low income and a serious problem for middle income Canadians."

The current rate of starts, about which the government boasts, is some 180,000 a year but the Canadian Welfare Council says that even if 250,000 new homes—the target figure—were built each year for the next five years we should still fail to meet the immediate basic needs of all the Canadians who are doing without adequate housing or who are living in grotesquely inadequate housing.

What kind of people are able to buy, and live in, new housing today? The figures for home ownership by low income families have shown a marked change in the last five years. In 1965 people in the lower third of the Canadian income scale owned 17.9 per cent of the houses. Last year the figure had fallen to 6.4 per cent, a decline of some two-thirds. Let us bear in mind for a minute or so the significance of these statistics. They mean that thousands of low income Canadians see no prospect of owning their own homes; their number is rapidly increasing when it should be decreasing. Who, then, is getting the benefit of NHA subsidies, that is, of federal subsidies made possible by taxing the people of Canada as a whole? We find it is the rich who are being subsidized when they buy houses, not the average man or the poor. The average income last year of those receiving NHA mortgages was $10,810. I do not need to tell hon. members of this House how many people of Canada fall into this category. It means that the taxpayers' money is being used to subsidize the rich. It means that the poor people and the average people are not able to buy homes under the NHA. And this situation has not been changed during the term of office of the Trudeau government; in fact, it has become worse.

There is an alternative. It is that we subsidize NHA loans at 5 or 6 per cent for average or low income families and make sure that they get these loans first. We should prevent those earning higher incomes from getting them until the needs of our poorer citizens have been met. Second, banks, trust companies and mortgage loan companies should be required by law to put more money into housing. This could be brought about by amending existing acts of this Parliament. Something could and should be done now along these lines. Third, we need a great and immediate expansion of public housing. In 1969, only 3.9 per cent of all housing starts were in the public housing field. The federal government spent only $12.6 million in this field, amounting only to 60 cents per capita. And this, to repeat a point I made some minutes ago, is the situation in a country in which some 20 per cent of the people are badly housed or else housed in conditions vastly inferior to those in which the majority of Canadians are living, and where in one metropolitan centre alone some 22,000 families cannot get suitable homes. The federal government should immediately put money into this area, particularly to meet the needs of those in the larger cities.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Let us leave housing and take a look at this great progressive government's proposals for tax reform. These proposals came from the Prime Minister, a man who talks of the importance of friendship, community and so on. What do we find? In the white paper presented to this Parliament we find proposals for tax reform. I do not say that literally, of course, but with some degree of irony.

One proposal is to reduce income tax paid by all those earning more than $35,000 a year. At the same time, people living at the poverty level in Canada are still taxed. Under the new proposals, a man earning $100,000 a year would save some $5,000 income tax. I pointed this out to a Liberal colleague, who will go unnamed. I said to him: "My friend, that great progressive party led by the Prime Minister keeps taxing the poor, as defined by the Economic Council of Canada, and don't you find this bizarre when a man who earns $100,000 a year will have his income tax reduced by $5,000?". He replied: "Well, Ed, you don't understand politics". That seems clear. So I said: "Well, maybe I do not understand politics".

Following that I did a little more thinking and I now think I understand the reason. My friend said to me: "Don't you see that we are introducing a capital gains tax in Canada?". We are the only country in the western world that does not have a capital gains tax! He went on: "(So we cannot really tax those poor people who are struggling to get by on incomes beyond the $35,000 a year level. We cannot impose on them a capital gains tax with the left hand without reducing with the right hand their level of income tax".

What this seems to suggest to me is that the Liberal party of Canada is saying, consciously or unconsciously, to its wealthy contributors: "Don't switch your allegiance to another political party. Don't abandon us or leave us in the lurch, you people who live in the middle class suburbs. We are not going to hit you too hard. We will reduce your income tax even if we do introduce a capital gains tax". This seems to me to suggest that the words in the Speech from the Throne are cynical, that they were written by those who really do not intend to redistribute power and income in this country.

What else do we find in the white paper? We find a proposal to give special tax credits to people who own shares in private companies, but no such credits to those who have purchased public bonds. Once again, this is important to the poor and to those of average income, because public facilities, whether they be a park, a hospital, a school, a community theatre—you name it—are shared by all Canadians on the basis of equality. Whether a child's parents are rich or poor, he can enjoy all of these facilities.

Real social progress, in my view, is achieved by expanding the public sector, by providing more such facilities on an egalitarian basis so that our children can grow up in a non-competitive way, knowing that many of the essential requisites of a civilized society are provided by the community, as they are presently provided as a matter of right only to the children of the wealthy.

The white paper on taxation proposes to maintain special tax incentives for investment in the private sector but not the public sector. This seems to me clearly to reveal the commitment of the Liberal party to the economic status quo. Those who attack the white paper for being a socialist document are, to say the least, a little misguided.

Finally, the white paper does nothing to bring about a real shift of the tax burden away from indirect taxation and toward corporate and income taxes. Canadians pay 52 per cent of all tax revenues by an indirect means. Both rich and poor Canadians pay the same form of indirect taxes. This is not the case with the corporate and income tax structure. Any reform that was directed toward the well-being of the average and poor families of Canada would have proposed some changes in this regard, a move away from reliance on indirect taxes, yet none are to be found in the white paper. An NDP government would have made shifts in all of these directions, shifts that the government, if it had so desired, could have made.

To turn to a different area, another practical day to day measure that involves people in our society is manpower retraining. We find all kinds of negative aspects of the manpower retraining program have lingered—I repeat, lingered—during the term of office of the Trudeau government. For example, at the present time an unemployed miner in Cape Breton of less than grade 5 or grade 6 education has virtually no realistic chance of completing a manpower retraining program to bring him up to a skilled level because there is a ceiling of 52 weeks on the amount of academic training that he can take in the program. In other words, the manpower retraining program is effective only for those who do not need it as badly as others, those who are half way there. It is useless for those at the bottom. In this respect we proposed a change, but it was not accepted.

Similarly, the manpower retraining act provides that only those who have been in the labour market for three years are eligible for retraining. This means that the young people of the country, the Métis, Eskimos and Indians, are effectively excluded under the act. I do not have to remind hon. members that the unemployment rate among the young is the highest of all age categories, and the rate is increasing. This is a change that should and could have been made by a progressive Prime Minister, but which was not.

Finally, under the manpower retraining program a man or woman with a family is given an allowance for the duration of the course. However, this allowance has not been changed for years. In other words, a man with a family taking a course has to live on an allowance that is at the poverty level as defined by the Economic Council of Canada. Once again, the NDP argued for a change in this regard so as to enable a man, not to live in affluence but on an income that would allow him to pay his rent and to buy food for his family while he undergoes retraining. But our proposal was turned down by the Trudeau government.

The policy that characterises this government more than any other is the government's magnificent war on inflation. There was no justification for launching this war. Our trade figures have been getting better for the last two or three years. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), in his folksy way yesterday, pointed with great pride to the most recent trade figures showing that Canada is doing very well in terms of international trade. But we are not doing well for the reasons that he seemed to suggest, namely the austerity program. We are doing well on the basis of orders that were placed a long time ago, before his anti-inflation program. So the anti-inflation program was not justified by our trade figures. They could be and are an important reason for tightening up. But trade figures at the time did not warrant it. What did justify it? One argument that was used related to the increase in prices which affects our pensioners and unorganized workers. I will come back to that in a moment.

• (5:10 p.m.)

One method the government used which need not have been chosen to fight that battle was the tightening of the monetary and fiscal screws. What effect did that have? Once again, it affected the public sector. It affected hospital building, school building, municipal street construction and so on. It did not affect in any significant way whatsoever the private sector of this country. It did not inhibit the construction of offices or the expansion of automobile factories and so on. Once again the people who were affected were those who most benefit by public facilities and public expenditures—all the average and poor in this country. The private sector was negligibly affected.

What is the reason for this? I should have thought the Prime Minister, who spent some time at the London School of Economics and even trotted off to Harvard for a while, would have realized that the modern corporation in Canada does not go to the market for most of its financing and does not respond in the main to the so-called market forces. General Motors in my constituency, for example, did not lower its prices. It did not cease to expand because of the Prime Minister's anti-inflation policy. The reason it did not, of course, is that it has operations all over the world. It does not just make cars and sell them in Canada. It is producing in the Argentine, Australia, West Germany and Great Britain. General Motors is only symptomatic of all big international corporations.

General Motors, in effect, said to our Prime Minister: Look, fellow, you have your quaint, old fashioned fiscal and monetary policy but we operate on a global basis. It is true that automobile purchases might drop. That is bound to be true with 750,000 Canadians out of work. You can be sure that will affect the rate of purchases of automobiles but it will not affect the pricing policies of General Motors. General Motors, in effect, says it will just sit this out because it is planning for profits not for the next year or for two years but for the next decade. General Motors is not only planning for profits in this country, General Motors is planning profit expectations determined on a global basis. General Motors, and all other major corporations in this country can sit back and ignore the Prime Minister, Mr. Young, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) and all those caught up in this quaint, old fashioned type of economic policy.

This policy did not affect the prices established in industries that are foreign owned or of an international nature. However, it certainly reduced our growth rate and it certainly did create the highest level of unemployment in a decade. I have been informed by a private source that when the figures for September are released we will see another increase in unemployment. Unemployment in Canada in September was 6.9 per cent, which is another increase in the number of Canadians out of work, with the consequential suffering families. That is the result of a needless anti-inflation policy, a policy which would not have been initiated by a Prime Minister who really intended to do something about those laudable goals referred to in the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I thank hon. members and will try to conclude quickly. The other method used by the government to fight inflation was, of course, the 6 per cent guideline policy. I will be quick on this point because of the courtesy shown me by the House.

The point I want to make is that it was completely ineffective and that should be clearly known throughout the country. Again in this House the other day, the Minister of Finance referred to the efficacy of this great program. The fact is that we had settlements in the private sector up until August 1, 1970 averaging 8.5 per cent, well beyond the guideline. The way this policy did affect the working people was through the public sector, because the government could control that. The average wage settlement in the public sector up to August 1 was 5.5 per cent, below the guideline.

The postal unions, to their credit because they were a militant group, broke the guideline and got a settlement which exceeded the 6 per cent level. The point I make here is that all the verbiage which went into justifying and explaining this guideline policy—not justified in the first place—was a cover up for a program which had no effect on most Canadians but which did affect in a serious way public employees.

The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury), after the postal strike, and after spending $30 million of taxpayers' money—that is what the post office lost trying to break that strike—had the gall, and I think that is the right word in a free society, to suggest that collective bargaining was now an anachronism. Any private company would have settled this strike long before the government did because it would have seen the drain on its cash. The President of the Treasury Board spent, and I say this deliberately, $30 million of the taxpayers' money in trying to break that strike.

This was not serious bargaining and that is the opinion of the working people of this country. This was part of the war against these working people. The war on inflation was not needed and not required in any way. It was fought by techniques that did not work. They have had no effect, quite contrary to what the government suggests. The reduction in prices I suggest is due to quite different causes.

I should like to draw these observations to a conclusion by suggesting there is no good reason at all for the people in Canada to take seriously the laudable objectives stated in the Speech from the Throne. This is true if we use as a test, and it is the only test available, the record of this government for the past two years. We have seen it in respect of housing, the manpower retraining programs, the proposals for taxation, and in the government's vicious anti-labour campaign. We have seen an attitude on the part of this government not designed in any way to cohere with what should be the ultimate objective of a democratic government; that is, to use political power for the benefit of the average and the poor. There is no reason to expect a change. Therefore, I suggest that in the days and months ahead the Liberal backbenchers of this government should talk to their Prime Minister. They should say to him, get away from your tough minded speeches, get away from your merely colourful existence and start doing something about the well-being of the average Canadian.

• (5:20 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, with my first words at the beginning of the 3rd session of the 28th Parliament, I want to offer you my respectful greetings and assure the Chair of the constant co-operation of the Ralliement Créditiste.

Secondly, I take this opportunity to congratulate, as is customary, the movers of the Address in reply to the Throne Speech (Mr. Trudel and Mr. Douglas).

Mr. Speaker, in the Throne Speech, the Liberal government has presented the general program of the 3rd session, which comprises about 68 various bills. They also announce the publication of White Papers on communications, citizenship, immigration, national defence and income security.

As several other members said, it will be difficult to assess the various bills sponsored by the government before we know their content. But even now, basing our judgment on the experience of the two previous sessions, we can imagine the spirit and the great principles which will guide this government.

In short, it is nothing new; it is nothing more or less than the repetition of an old slogan never carried out, that of the just society and, in this connection here is what the Speech from the Throne calls upon us to do, and I quote:

—to share the excitement, to face the challenge, to pursue the distant ideal of a just society.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian people shy away neither from excitement nor challenge and their most fervent desire is to see the advent of this just society which every citizen legitimately craves. But our population is on the brink of despair and I am altogether convinced that the social stability referred to in the Speech from the Throne and considered as already achieved is in fact only wishful thinking. Indeed not only do several thousands Quebecers and other Canadians unfortunately doubt the merit of the federal system and protest against it during electoral campaigns, but thousands of English-speaking citizens are doubtful about the usefulness of Canada as a separate entity, bearing in mind regional disparities, what they gain from it and what they pay for it. And this national disintegration, which no one can deny, will go on as long as our governments ignore the legitimate aspirations of our fellow-citizens, both in the social and the economic fields.

Protests, as a phenomenon, are not about to disappear because they are the result of a deep feeling of frustration. May I list some of the causes: increasing unemployment, lack of decent housing, closing-down of some plants, excessively high interest rates, social injustices of which thousands of citizens are victims, and many others of this type.

As long as our governments do not ensure, through concrete economic measures, the sound and normal development of each citizen, without at the same time adversely affecting economic liberty and security, a stable social climate, such as that in the existence of which the Throne Speech would have us believe, will not Discontent is so widespread that people cannot endorse the idealized and unrealistic content of the Speech from the Throne.

This government is noticing it itself. In fact, we can read in the same speech and I quote:

—Canada faces a new age; an age which will be subject to forces not all of which are yet comprehended or understood, forces which will proceed from external as well as internal origins.

Mr. Speaker, the wide spread phenomenon of protest in which an ever increasing number of citizens from all walks of life take part is a real fact and a power which governments, in particular the federal government, must acknowledge and compromise with. If the federal government keeps hiding in its ivory tower, refusing to recognize the daily reality with the ugly and frustrating aspect it takes for the greatness of the liberal party, this phenomenon will keep growing, and it is not sure whether the established order will last. Current events show where frustrating feelings may lead.

Besides, the government is aware of the situation while not doing anything to cope with it. I quote the Speech from the Throne:

It is a new age not so much because of changed circumstances, but new because of changed values and attitudes.

Because of the clash between these new values and the old, because of the quest by the young and the disillusioned for some resolution of attitudes, we live in a period of tenseness and unease.

It goes on as follows:

It is an age frequented by violence as desperate men seek ill-defined goals.

In short, it is a period of frustration. But it is not good enough to recognize the evil. There most be a reaction, and not necessarily by resorting to force.

The people are not asking for hand-outs, but merely for their most legitimate rights, which are security of income, freedom of the individual within security and order, the opportunity for the individual to fulfill himself socially, economically and culturally, and finally the possibility for each citizen to get his fair share of the national production.

A study of the list of bills to be introduced shows, once more and once too often, that the present government is increasingly remote from reality, entrenched in its complacency and in an attitude or self-sufficiency which is highly offensive to the Canadian people, mainly the young ones who expect more than words, more than academic statements, more than stuffy sentences which are so numerous in the Speech from the Throne.

This government was elected two years ago and we are still waiting for the first positive step that would prove that the government actually wants to achieve the just society. I do not believe at all in this just society mentioned in all the speeches of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I do not believe in this just society as advocated by the Prime Minister because everywere in Canada there is misery in the midst of plenty. In fact, everywere in Canada, poverty, unemployment, slums, starvation wages, employees crushed by their bosses, uncertainty about income, political patronage, policies that discourage initiative and ambition such, as for instance, the dairy or grain policies, are a continuing scandal in a country which still is bursting with resources and offers plenty of opportunities.

No, Mr. Speaker, we do not believe in this just society and we look forward to the day when the government will listen to our Social Credit proposals. Our task is to build a country, not to create frustration for our people.

I do not believe in Prime Minister Trudeau's just society because I can see all over Canada young people dejected at not finding suitable jobs that could enlist their knowledge and their energy in the service of their country. I do not believe in this just society because the vast majority of our students have been unable to find jobs this last summer, and after they complete their education, nothing is changed; because all over the country, the people of Canada have had enough of this mock fight against inflation which the government carries on the back of the small taxpayer, of the labourer, in short, on the back of all those who cannot afford to withstand the effects of such restrictive and limiting policy.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, the immediate result of the sham fight against inflation that the government undertook last year was to send the unemployment rate sky-rocketing, thus preventing young people and grown-ups, fathers and students, old people and children from sharing fully in our rich production, from getting their share of national production, with the result that they are poorer and more dissatisfied. The government is responsible for that on account of its false policy on inflation.

Besides, this is a scandalous situation to be in, in a country as rich as ours.

In such a critical and desperate situation, the Créditistes have kept saying over and over again that every Canadian must have his share of the national production. We suggest that this should come about in a near future, otherwise things will get out of control in Canada. It is not a matter of taking away from those who have to give more to those who have not, as suggested by socialists, but of acknowledging everybody's right to his share of the national production. To achieve that, Mr. Speaker, changes will have to be made in the present monetary system.

Here is another extract from the Speech from the Throne:

> It remains the goal of the Government to be concerned with the production of wealth. It also remains the goal of the Government that Canadians be given the opportunity to enjoy that wealth.

That is an example at a bombastic but meaningless speech. I go on with my quotation:

> Income security programmes offer one means by which this latter goal can be attained. To this end legislation will be introduced.

Mr. Speaker, that is an indirect way of announcing what the Ralliement Créditiste has always been clamouring for, that is the vital minimum. The Ralliement Créditiste has always maintained that every citizen should have his share of the national wealth and production, through a national dividend of the compensated discount.

Since the government has announced that they will be concerned with these matters, we dare sincerely hope, at the beginning of this session, that they will study the Créditiste proposals in this connection. Whatever the suggestions of the government members, there is certainly something good in the philosophy put forward by the Créditistes.

We recognize that human beings must be free and respected in order to enjoy security and freedom.

Mr. Speaker, in the hours which we live now it is most tragic that this freedom is being eroded by the deliberate interference of the right hon. Prime Minister and this is due to a situation for which he is himself responsible.

We recognize that for a society to be just each human being must get his share of the national production or, in other words, a guaranteed minimum income. We recognize that our society will be truly human only when all our legislation will be focused on the well-being of the human person.

Social Credit provides the true and up-to-date answer to the problems faced by our society. Social Credit is truly the tool which would make it possible for every human being to get his share of the wealth through the national dividend.

The Social Credit, as I said before, provides the government with a solution in its search for a just society which will become a reality only if we seriously tackle the economic and monetary aspects of the question.

Once more the government agrees with the Créditistes when it says in the Speech from the Throne, and I quote:

> However worthy our goals, and however strong our will to attain them, they will nevertheless be denied to us in whole or in part should our economy be malfunctioning.

Mr. Speaker, this is why the members of the Ralliement Créditiste are so anxious to know what legislation will be introduced in that respect, if however the government is really conscious of the problem as it leads us to believe in the Speech from the Throne.

When we look at the list of 68 bills which are referred to, we notice that if, on the one hand, the government puts its finger on the major problems facing our country at this time, on the other hand, it does not offer any appropriate measure to actually solve them.

Everything in the Speech from the Throne is but rhetoric, because it is full of grandiloquent and bombastic sentences. Here is an example, and I quote:

> This stability is not simply a matter of luck. Good fortune is a factor, but we should accept gracefully the fact that we are also more amenable to reason and, perhaps, more capable of wise decision than we are normally willing to admit.

Mr. Speaker, to say such words is to laugh in the face of Canadians. Here is one of those bombastic sentences which make the people despair of ever finding a dynamic government, or seeing the government take concrete action in order to bring about a just society.

And there is more. The Speech from the Throne ends on this line worthy of a lyric comedy, and I quote:

> We stand on the threshold of greatness.

Mr. Speaker, this is ridiculous! It is to make fun of the people to utter such bombastic and empty sentences, which show to what extent this government has lost touch with everyday reality in the exercise of power. The numerical strength of this government makes it forget its weaknesses in action, and indeed that is the drama of this administration.

Mr. Speaker, it is therefore not surprising to realize that large sectors of our Canadian population are dissatisfied, impatient, and that they question the efficiency of the democratic means used to improve society, in order to make it more human, more just and more sociable.

That is why the Ralliement créditiste has tried harder than ever to offer a clear, precise and modern answer to the normal problems of a modern economy.

All the time, we have stressed national production and the means to increase it. Through our policies of assistance to industry and subsidies of all kinds, the productive sector of our economy has increased its efforts and efficiency, so that gradually, the machine has replaced man at an accelerated yet normal rate.

The citizen, who was above all a producer, progressively became isolated from production and, thus, the security of his income was jeopardized.

The Ralliement créditiste has always maintained not only that human beings produce wealth, but that they also are agents of consumption and that, consequently, the first responsibility of any government is to ensure human being security of income or, in créditiste terms, a minimum income so that they may have their share of the national wealth.

But this can only be achieved through a thorough monetary reform with a view to, at long last, having money serve man. Our needs are ever increasing. The cost of living keeps going up. Unemployment is beyond control because of the government, and this is inevitable in the present economic situation because of the modernization of our industries which tend to produce more at lower costs.

As a result, human beings are once again denied their share of the wealth as consumers.

Mr. Speaker, a national dividend and compensated discount are precisely the type of legislative and monetary measures that would enable every citizen to get his share of the wealth and to play his full role as a consumer. We claim, and rightly so, that only in consumption does production achieve its goal and value.

During the third session of the twenty-eighth parliament, in view of the present economic situation, we will endeavour with renewed vigor to make the government understand the importance of the consumer, of every Canadian citizen, and the urgency for the members, regardless of their political affiliations, to adopt legislation to ensure every citizen his rightful share of the national product.

Mr. Speaker, more than ever we, parliamentarians, must give priority to the interest of the citizens over political interests, and fulfil our role as spokesmen for the Canadian people in this supreme institution of parliament, that the people might renew their confidence in democratic institutions.

The old man who must be content with his meagre pension to survive, the mother who is scoffed at each time she cashes her family allowance cheque for $6 or $8 a month in 1970, the student who year after year is refused a scholarship and must go into debt and who during the summer months tried to work but could not find employment, the unemployed who spends his days going from one manpower centre to another, from one counselor to another, and spends his evenings completing his education with other adults and who, finally, is a gain refused a job, the industrial milk producer discouraged in his attempts to improve his herd and his production, whose income is limited and who, besides, is taxed for his work, and who gives up one day or the other, dairy production, the wheat producer who is paid for not producing, all Canadians expect us, parliamentarians, to do more than just make speeches.

• (5:40 p.m.)

If we should continue to be satisfied to listen to such empty speeches from the throne as the one we have heard recently, it would not be surprising to see the feelings of frustration now shared by thousands of Canadians change to feelings of anger and revolt.

It is not sure that the peace and social stability referred to in the Speech from the Throne will be our lot for very long.

Mr. Speaker, I am worried about the economic and social future of our country if the government does not immediately take concrete steps to satisfy those thousands of Canadians who at present are denied their share of the national production.

Seconded by the member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert), I should like to move following sub-amendment to the amendment proposed by the official opposition:

That the amendment be amended by replacing the final period by a coma and by adding, immediately after, the following words:

"and we particularly regret the failure of the government to increase family allowances as a first step towards the establishment of a system ensuring a guaranteed annual income which would facilitate the advent of a just society.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Hon. members have heard the amendment moved by the hon. member for Lotbinière.

[Translation]

I would like to ask the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) if he has completed his remarks.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I was just reaching the end.

To really show the significance of this subamendment and also the importance of stopping fighting inflation on the back of the Canadian taxpayer, it is necessary to understand the contents of this subamendment. Interest rates are excessively high and they should be reduced.

In the constituency of Lotbinière, La Fonderie de Sainte-Croix needs coal which it buys from its supplier, Lasalle Coke Company. Besides, it is the only supplier of the kind in Canada.

The cost of a net ton of foundry-size coal was $38.25 in 1966, and $38.75 in 1967. The same ton cost $40.25 in 1968, $43.25 in 1969, $48.25 last March 23, and $59.25 on September 29. Therefore, the directors of La Fonderie Sainte-Croix are getting worried about that, and rightly so, since their costs have greatly increased. This is a factor of inflation, according to the reports of the Young Commission.

I obliged to the request of the directors of La Fonderie Sainte-Croix. Upon the request of the Lasalle Coke Company, I got in touch with members of the Prices and Incomes Commission to let them know about the steady and uncontrollable increase of coal and the control the companies have on that product.

I therefore wrote to the Prices and Incomes Commission asking for action, as increases are in fact about 10 per cent every time, which is tremendous.

Well, here is the answer from the Prices and Incomes Commission dated April 30th 1970 to a request made on March 23rd.

On March 23rd, the price of coal had gone up 10 per cent per ton. We therefore lodged a complaint and received from the Prices and Incomes Commission the following reply, and I quote:

We acknowledge receipt of your letter of April 14th in which you inform us of the recent increase in the price of smelting coke.

We called your office on April 21st to let you know that we were preparing our reply. Lasalle, the supplier, has informed the Commission that the increase in price of $5 per ton as of April 1st 1970 was due to recent advances in the cost of raw materials.

To our knowledge, the Lasalle Co. purchases large quantities of coal in the United States. Coal prices have increased by as much as 44 per cent, without taking into account tariff rises on goods in the United States.

Considering that one ton of coal produces only half a ton of coke, it is obvious that the increase in price by Lasalle will barely cover the cost of the coal.

Lasalle's production costs, labour included, have also gone up considerably. Furthermore, the price of coal may rise again later in the year when the miners receive the last increase provided for in their present agreement.

Mr. Speaker, it is not the Lasalle Co. that said that the price would rise again, it is the Prices and Incomes Commission. And that was said on April 30, at which time there had been a 10 per cent rise in the price of a ton of coal. With the blessing of the Prices and Incomes Commission, the Lasalle Co., once again, on September 29, announces another increase in the price of coal of about 10 per cent, thus bringing the price to $55.25 a ton. This means that in 1966, it was $38.25 and $55.25 in 1970.

I sent a copy of this answer to the Fonderie Sainte-Croix as a proof of the steps we had taken. They evidently protested and rightly so.

If the government cannot control this increase, if the Prices and Incomes Commission can only consider without making any suggestion, without proposing any solution, this means that the fight against inflation by the government is only a joke. In fact, it would have been possible to tell the coke company that a 30 per cent increase per year on the price of a ton of coal was too much.

As a result, the prices of products manufactured by La Fonderie Sainte-Croix, which employs 135 workmen, are increasing at a galloping rate.

That is why I say that the fight against inflation, in the light of experience acquired in our respective districts, is a monumental hoax and that the government cannot disprove it. Let us take as an example La Fonderie Sainte-Croix, which must submit to the increases of The Lasalle Coke Company, which in turn will probably have to increase its costs some day.

In reply to a question put by an hon. member, the Prices and Incomes Commission could give no better explanation of the situation than a statement to the effect that they hope there will be no further increase or, at least, that they do not anticipate any.

Mr. Speaker, the Ralliement créditiste moves an amendment in order to remind the government that in raising the spectre of inflation, it succeeds at the most in making our people believe that they can be destroyed by it. What a laugh, as inflation is being fought on the back of Canadian taxpayers, especially the little people.

Therefore, we want to remind the government that family allowances, in particular, have not been raised for quite a while, being still at $6 and $8 per month, which is ridiculous, considering that the government approves increases in production of 30% per year for a single company.

Mr. Speaker, if the government can allow private enterprises to keep on increasing their prices in such a way, thus raising the cost of living, it should realize that, on the other hand, the people of Canada cannot live on peanuts, that children cannot be fed with prayers. The rate of unemployment and the lack of income for these people are well known. The authorities should once and for all acknowledge that these people need financial support from the government to fight inflation in their own right and to cope with the cost of living increases backed up by the government.

Those are the reasons why, Mr. Speaker, by way of this sub-amendment, we assert that the Speech from the Throne does not forecast any positive or forthcoming action to revise family allowances and we want to urge the hon. members and ministers to ponder over the issue and to submit a bill during this session to increase family allowances, because we still claim that the basic unit in Canada is the family. It is high time for the government to take a concrete step to encourage the raising of families instead of discouraging it as it is doing now with all kinds of measures.

The basic unity, the family, is still the best guardian of our values, of our traditions and of order in Canada. This government, by measures such as those on abortion or the fight against inflation, which end up by increasing unemployment, are depriving family heads from their means of living, etc.

If a student is unable to obtain a scholarship or to find work, his father is obliged to go into debt. The mother is often compelled to borrow money to buy food for the family. If the father cannot afford a car to drive to his place of work, he must borrow. Then, the basic unity in Canada is no longer the family but the finance company.

It is high time that the government takes sides with the citizens and not with the companies. It has to take sides with the human person and not with the finance companies so that at last man can find his place within this system. Indeed, money has to be in man's service. Man has not always to creep before money.

Considering that it is important and necessary to give back to the Canadian family its prime importance in order to encourage the parents who have at present so much difficulty in enforcing order and justice, it is important that the government realizes the urgency of the situation and proposes a measure to increase family allowances up to an adequate level.

It would be better—and I say so straight out—not to pay any family allowances at all than to give $6 or $8 a month, because it is more or less to laugh at people.

I know that for a family of ten children the amount paid may sound interesting, because these allowances represent $60 or $80, but a family of ten has even more financial responsibilities than a family of three.

I renew this request on behalf of my colleagues in the sincere hope that base party interests will be overlooked and that, at least, once during this session, we will consider the interests of the Canadian family, of the human person, in order to achieve in our society law and order and to allow every human being to live in freedom and to enjoy political, social and especially economic security.

In conclusion, I want to thank my colleagues for their attention and patience towards me and to assure them of the co-operation of the members of our party during the debates of the House, hoping finally that the work of this session will benefit the whole population, in particular the voters whom I represent, those of the electoral district of Lotbinière.

• (5:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, many previous speakers complained about the lack of members in the House. I do not mind that, prefering to speak to a small group. I think that is a little more intimate. I wonder if Your Honour would mind calling it six o'clock. There are only a few minutes left.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Does the House agree to calling it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It being six o'clock, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock pursuant to section 2 of Standing Order 2.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, October 15, 1970

The House met at 11 a.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

CALLING OF MOTION TO APPOINT SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE ON THE CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we have had further discussions with regard to the re-establishment of the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution of Canada. As a result of these discussions there may be unanimous consent for an order that would provide that the first item of business called today would be the motion under government orders to re-establish the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution.

• (11:10 a.m.)

After this motion has been discussed for perhaps one or two hours, notwithstanding Standing Order 38(2), the address debate will continue for the rest of the day. This day will be regarded as the fourth appointed day. There will be a division as scheduled at 9.30 p.m. this evening. Monday next will be the sixth appointed day. There will be a division at 9.30 p.m. on that day. In other words, despite the interruption of the debate for a short time today, we are providing that the votes will take place at the normal time. We also undertake that the time lost because of discussion of the motion to establish the Special Joint Committee of the Constitution will be compensated at the end of the debate on the Speech from the Throne or in some other way.

It has also been informally agreed that because the vote tonight will be on the Creditiste subamendment there will be special consideration to ensure that the members of that group will be able to express their point of view before the vote on their subamendment is called. If that is agreeable, Mr. Speaker, I can send Your Honour a copy of what I have stated which may be of some help.

Mr. Speaker: It appears that the suggestion made by the President of the Privy Council is clear. Does the House agree? If so, there will be an order accordingly.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—INCREASE IN SEASONALLY ADJUSTED RATE—MEASURES TO STIMULATE EMPLOYMENT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment just announced is nearly 7 per cent—6.9 per cent—does the government intend to propose any new measures, especially in view of the fact that the seasonally adjusted unemployment rate for those between the ages of 14 and 24 is now 11.7 per cent, some 67,000 higher than last year?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the sense of disillusionment and alienation likely to arise among this very large percentage and vast number of unemployed young Canadians and in light of the tensions existing in the country, will the Prime Minister give the House some assurance that the government will take vigorous measures to stimulate employment and reduce this very serious damage to this considerable percentage of Canadian youth and, indeed, to the social fabric of the country?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. We have taken vigorous action and we will take more.

Mr. Stanfield: I am not sure who is the minister responsible, but can someone explain why in this Dominion Bureau of Statistics bulletin the usual figures relating to hard core unemployed have been omitted?

Mr. Trudeau: Perhaps the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who is responsible for DBS, might give the answer.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I do not know, Mr. Speaker, but I will find out.

UNEMPLOYMENT—INCREASE IN SEASONALLY ADJUSTED RATE—YOUTH EMPLOYMENT AND WINTER WORKS PROGRAMS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In view of the very serious figures that have just been released with respect to unemployment, and the effect on young people in particular, I ask the Prime Minister whether the statements made by the Minister of Finance in the House the other day are the government's final answer with respect to coping with the unemployment situation or whether the government is giving any consideration to a program for young people throughout this winter similar to what was undertaken last summer, or some more useful undertakings? Is the government now prepared to consider seriously discussing with the provinces, and through them the municipalities, a winter works program inasmuch as it is not too late yet to implement such a program on the thesis that the public would prefer to pay people to work rather than pay people to be idle?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in the sense that the Minister of Finance and the government are reviewing the economic situation constantly—they have from time to time, over the past weeks and past months, announced new measures and new changes in our budgetary and our fiscal and financial position—the position stated by the minister obviously is not final. The situation is constantly being studied and analysed and new measures have been announced over the past weeks and months. I cannot, of course, say that there will not be any more new measures. I cannot say today what they will be, if any, but I cannot say that the statement is final.

May I remind the leaders of both parties that I am pleased to see they are using the seasonally adjusted figures now when not so many months ago they were blaming me for using them and saying it was a fraud to use such figures. I hope they remember that in a few months.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I challenge the Prime Minister to show where I ever said it was a fraud to use the seasonally adjusted figures.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The Prime Minister seems to want to argue about which figures to use, though this is not of much concern to those who are unemployed. Since the programs put into operation by the government have not been very effective in reducing unemployment, will the right hon. gentlemen tell the House when the government, following its review, will be prepared to make some statement as to the additional measures they propose taking to grapple with this serious question?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Finance made a statement the day before yesterday and I do not expect he will want to make another the day after tomorrow.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): As the figures on unemployment produced today make it clear that whatever steps the government is taking to stimulate the economy are not having the desired effect, will the right hon. gentleman and his friends now give serious consideration to the positive measures which have been put forward by the opposition to revive the economy and stimulate employment?

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have the impression that the question as asked is somewhat in the form of an argument and I doubt whether it is acceptable.

Mr. Hees: May I ask a supplementary question, then? I shall be glad to send the Prime Minister a list of the measures the opposition have advocated to stimulate the economy so he will be aware of these proposals. Since it appears impossible to get any positive statement of policy from the government in the House, will the Prime Minister consider debating this important matter in the near future on a public platform at a time and place of his own choosing so that we can get down to actual cases?

Mr. Trudeau: I am very disappointed to see the hon. member downgrading Parliament in this way.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE EXPORT OF ARMS BY BRITAIN TO SOUTH AFRICA—EFFECT ON ATTENDANCE AT COMMONWEALTH PRIME MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs or perhaps to the Prime Minister. Has the government received representations or information indicating that certain of the Commonwealth governments might be unwilling to attend the forthcoming Commonwealth Prime Minister's Conference—I believe it is to take place in Singapore—if the British government proceeds with the export of military arms to South Africa?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The only information I have received on this subject is probably the same as has been received by the hon. member for Greenwood. I would suggest, however, that the conference should go ahead if only to enable the members of the Commonwealth to express their views to the British government and to one another on this important subject.

* * *

[Translation]

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INAPPROPRIATE ADVERTISING ON CHILDEN'S TELEVISION PROGRAMS

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Could the minister tell us if he has received protest letters from some parents against noisy television advertising directed at children and if he intends to take steps to prevent it?

[English]

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any particular letter, but I am aware of what I would call general complaints in this area from consumer groups and parent-teacher groups—that type of representation.

* * *

NATIONAL SECURITY

USE OF EMERGENCY POWERS UNDER WAR MEASURES ACT

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, yesterday afternoon during the question period a question was asked by the Leader of the Opposition concerning whether or not consideration was being given by the government to asking for emergency powers. I now ask the Prime Minister whether the government has given consideration under the War Measures Act to bringing in emergency powers.

In particular, has the government secured from the law officers of the Crown, inasmuch as the Prime Minister described what is happening as a result of the kidnappings as "this emergency", any opinion on whether or not the present situation falls generally within the wording of the Act to which I have referred which empowers the Governor in Council to do and to authorize various things because of the existence of "real or apprehended insurrection"? Would the Prime Minister take Parliament into his confidence with reference to this matter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my answer would be in the same terms as the answer I gave yesterday to the Leader of the Opposition. In effect, it was that we have considered such matters, that we have considered every possible way in which the government of Canada, in conjunction with the government of Quebec, could meet this very difficult situation. Therefore I would not be truthful if I said that we had not considered such measures. However, the fact that we have not taken them indicates that we have not considered them in a way that would cause us to act upon them, at least at this time.

As to the more precise question whether I have sought advice on this matter, the answer is that we have discussed the matter because in considering the various possibilities we have to know what are the conditions. I would suggest to the hon. gentleman that he would agree he has raised not only a legal question but, perhaps even more importantly, a question of fact which can best be understood and discussed by people who are aware of politics in this country as well as those who are aware of the law.

I might add that I would gladly seek out, perhaps in a private way later, the opinion of the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert on this question. Quite frankly, I would be interested in knowing what he thinks about the situation, and he can either tell the House or tell me privately.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I appreciate the attitude taken by the Prime Minister, but I would ask him what he meant yesterday when he referred to "this emergency". Did he mean that there was a national emergency? If so, is it not a fact that the only provision that permits action to be taken in this regard is under the War Measures Act?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, there are many words which could be used, but when two lives are hanging in the balance I do not think it is exaggerated to talk of an emergency. As to the steps which would be necessary to meet this particular emergency, whether national, provincial or regional, I can only repeat the answer I gave yesterday. But I quite seriously repeat that I am very interested in knowing the opinion of the House and particularly of the leaders of the opposition parties and the former Prime Minister who has a distinguished record in the matter of civil liberties. If he is now suggesting that this might be a national emergency which might call for the application of the War Measures Act, I will certainly take that into consideration.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I would say, of course, that the Prime Minister has misinterpreted what I said.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I asked him what he meant yesterday when he made a statement that could only be understood as meaning that the government was considering the abdication of civil liberties as it has abdicated its responsibility for the protection of diplomats by placing the whole matter in the power of the Premier and government of the province of Quebec.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

CANCELLATION BY PRIME MINISTER OF VISIT TO SOVIET UNION

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. I am sure the House is anxious to know, in view of the words the Prime Minister used yesterday—"this emergency"—whether there are any new developments surrounding the Prime Minister's intended trip to the Soviet Union which was to begin this weekend?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would confirm to the House, with reluctance, that I have cancelled my visit to the Soviet Union which was to begin on Sunday. I gave notice of such possibility of cancellation to the Soviet authorities on Tuesday. I must say that now I have received a very understanding reply from Premier Kosygin. I expressed to him my hope that the visit could be reinstated at a future date which would be convenient to him.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the right hon. Prime Minister this question. If this information was given to the government of the U.S.S.R. on Tuesday, why it was withheld from the House yesterday when I asked a question?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I believe the hon. member misunderstood my answer, Mr. Speaker. I think I said quite clearly that I had advised the Soviet authorities I was considering a possible cancellation. I only authorized the telegram cancelling it definitely some time last evening. I did not want to make it public here before it had reached the Soviet authorities.

* * *

INDUSTRY

FOOTWEAR—EFFECT OF IMPORTS ON JOBS—POLICY STATEMENT—IMPOSITION OF QUOTAS

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the many representations from workers in the shoe industry pointing out the increasing loss of jobs because of imports, can he tell the House whether he is developing a new policy for the industry and, if so, when will he be in a position to announce that policy?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend was present at the meeting I had with the association representing the producers of footwear in Canada. He will recall that one of the conclusions was that we needed a lot better information as to how imports of footwear affect the Canadian industry, specifically in certain areas. This information has now been developed with the help of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, and I am to meet the association again in the coming weeks. In the meantime, as he is aware, my department has made a tremendous effort to support sales, exports in particular of footwear in Canada. For example we have sponsored foreign buyers coming to Canada and we have made the IRDIA and PAIT programs applicable to this industry. We are also making the General Adjustment Assistance Program applicable to companies which can use it for exports. We are doing our best while developing the information that is needed to cope properly with the situation.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): I have a supplementary question for the minister. In view of the fact the Throne Speech mentions that legislation will be introduced to protect the textile industry, would the minister make representations to his colleagues to have the footwear industry included in the same legislation?

Mr. Pepin: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I just said, I do not think we have the proper information to make that move, but if it should be demonstrated in the coming days that this is necessary I am quite sure my colleagues will consider that possibility with sympathy.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, while we are aware that some measures have been taken by the department to assist the footwear industry, the fact is that the industry is in a pretty critical position despite these measures. While the minister is working on a long-term policy for the industry, is he prepared to impose immediate quotas on footwear as he did in respect of the shirt industry in a similar emergency?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, the situation is quite different. I do not have time to go into details, but in general the import of shoes into Canada is not exclusively a problem involving low-cost countries. It applies also to countries in Europe which are exporting to Canada and apparently are doing well because of factors other than cheaper labour. It is more complex than would appear and I regret that I am not able to go into details now.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, is the minister not aware that there has been a very large increase in imports of shoes—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member's question is not in order in those terms. He asks whether the minister is aware.

Mr. Hees: I will rephrase my question, Mr. Speaker. As these imports, particularly of cheap shoes, have increased by a large percentage this year, does the minister not consider that this is a very similar situation to that in respect of the import of cheap textiles and will he not consider applying the same measures?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's question is argumentative. In essence he is asking the same question as that asked by the hon. member for Waterloo.

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

LOOTING OF ARMOURY IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—ADDITIONAL SECURITY MEASURES

Mr. Robert Borrie (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to the Minister of National Defence. With the looting of an armoury in British Columbia yesterday and the experience of similar activity in the past, would the Minister of National Defence advise the House whether plans are under way to provide 24-hour security at armouries where weapons and ammunition are stored?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker; additional security measures have been initiated at other Canadian forces bases and stations in the area.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

INTERPROVINCIAL MARKETING—FEDERAL INTERVENTION IN COURT PROCEEDINGS

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. I welcome him back from Australia where I hope he observed the greater degree of latitude allowed to private members in the legislature there. Has the minister discussed with the Minister of Agriculture my request that the government of Canada involve itself in the proceedings now before the Supreme Court in Quebec or in the proposed proceedings which the province of Manitoba has indicated it intends to take before the Supreme Court of Canada concerning the prohibition of the interprovincial marketing of agricultural products?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his kind remarks. I think he and I know that we get along very well with the Australians who are plain-speaking and forthright. The practical solution the federal government has always sought to this problem is the farm products marketing agencies bill which was before the House and a committee during the last session, which we felt could resolve the problem and for which we had unanimous provincial co-operation at the end of the last federal-provincial conference. As to the legal problem involved, the federal government is concerned, of course, about any barrier to interprovincial trade. In so far as there may be a constitutional question involving federal jurisdiction we will, of course, ensure that the federal point of view is presented to the court. Whether the province of Manitoba can successfully bring the matter before the Supreme Court by way of reference is perhaps doubtful.

I am not sure, as I said before, that a reference to the Supreme Court is the proper way to handle the matter because in a reference, as the hon. gentleman knows, the facts have to be specific and ascertained. The difficulty here is that we are dealing with various types of legislation and several marketing boards and broilers and eggs. There is no consensus concerning what the facts are. If there is to be a court action, I think it would have to proceed in the ordinary way. As I say, the best solution is the legislation placed before this House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Peace River.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary of the minister. Having in mind that the passage of Bill C-197 introduced last session may not now be as rapid owing to the notorious stubbornness of the Minister of Agriculture in adapting to what the farmers want, would the minister not consult with the provincial governments to see whether or not terms of reference could be framed? The ingenuity of members of the bar is well known, and surely terms of reference could be framed to deal with and have this matter disposed of in one swoop.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It is not just a matter of terms of reference; it is a matter of agreement on the facts. That is what is at issue. It is not just the legislation; it is how the legislation or regulations are being used, as I understand it, that provokes the problem.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, is it now the position of the Minister of Justice that whenever the constitution is challenged in a number of ways the government will not seek an authoritative answer?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No. We will seek an authoritative answer but in the best way. I suggest to the hon. gentleman that that is not the correct way.

* * *

TRANSPORT

BUS SAFETY STANDARDS

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I had a question I wanted to ask the Minister of Transport but possibly his Parliamentary Secretary can reply. I have in mind the fact that the United States Department of Transport has just ordered 404 interstate buses off the roads because of major safety standard violations. What is our department doing in this same potentially dangerous area?

Mr. Speaker: It would seem to me that the question asked by the hon. member is very general in nature. Any statement which might be made should normally be made as a statement on motions, unless the minister has a very brief and concise answer to give.

* * *

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to join with the hon. member for Peace River in welcoming back the Minister of Justice. In his capacity as Minister of Justice I put this suggestion to him in the form of a question. In view of the federal government's direct responsibility for the safety of foreign diplomats in Canada and in view of the support of the Confederation of National Trade Unions for the FLQ's position, would the minister consider getting assistance from the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, past president of that union—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Grey-Simcoe.

* * *

NATIONAL SECURITY

TERRORIST OPERATIONS—ACTIVITIES OF CANADIANS RETURNED FROM ALGERIA, CUBA AND JORDAN—REPORTED GUERILLA TRAINING CAMP

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact that terrorists now operating in Canada are reported to have been trained outside this country, is the government thoroughly investigating the activities of those Canadian citizens who have returned to Canada in the past year from Algeria, Cuba and Jordan?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the question is rather broader than the scope of the responsibilities of this department.

Mr. Noble: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary which I should like to direct to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister give the House any information regarding reports that there is a guerilla training camp operating in northern Quebec?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, directing the previous question to me, I can answer as the minister has that this is not a question of immigration, I understand, but a question of returning Canadians. Indeed, if they are suspect as the hon. member suggests, it would not be a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration but rather a question for the Solicitor General. I would appreciate it if he would also direct the latter question to the Solicitor General who would know more about it than I.

Mr. Noble: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a further question to the Prime Minister. Perhaps he will remember that when he was Minister of Justice I directed this question to him. Would the Prime Minister not make an investigation as promised when I put the same question to him in March, 1968, with regard to a guerilla training camp in northern Quebec?

Mr. Trudeau: Would the hon. member read my answer at that time? I do not remember it exactly.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe that the hon. member for Sainte-Marie wants to ask a supplementary question.

[English]

PROHIBITION OF ENTRY INTO CANADA OF KNOWN ANARCHISTS AND REVOLUTIONARIES

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the serious problems in Quebec, does the federal government intend to amend the immigration laws so that we do not tolerate the entry into this country of known anarchists and revolutionaries from other countries?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The government has under consideration the whole question of our present immigration laws and procedures, and further comment on these subjects will be put before the House in this session, as hon. members know from reading the Speech from the Throne.

[Translation]

PUBLICITY GIVEN BY CBC TO PROFESSIONAL AGITATORS AND REVOLUTIONARIES

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question I wish to direct to the Secretary of State.

[Mr. Noble.]

Since he is official spokesman for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, would he tell us whether he intends to issue guidelines for bringing an end to the continuing broadcast from the transmitters of this Crown corporation, of statements made by well-known revolutionaries and professional agitators?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the Broadcasting Act, it is not the responsibility of the Secretary of State to issue such guidelines but that of the Governor in Council, the Cabinet in other words. I do not think any such action is being considered at this moment.

* * *

[English]

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

PLANS TO DEAL WITH PROBLEMS FOLLOWING CLOSING OF RIVERS AIR BASE

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): My question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Is the hon. gentleman meeting with a delegation from western Manitoba today led by the Manitoba Minister of Industry and Commerce to discuss ways and means of dealing with the economic problems created by the closing of the Rivers air base?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that it is not in order simply to ask the minister whether he is meeting with a delegation. I fail to see how that can be accepted as a question during the question period.

Mr. Dinsdale: May I rephrase my question, Mr. Speaker. Will the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion be making an announcement soon on specific plans and proposals to deal with the economic crisis created by the closing of the Rivers air base?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, it is my intention, and I believe arrangements have been made, to go to Rivers and Gimly early next week in order to study this problem with provincial authorities and draw up a plan likely to assist those involved.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Will the minister go to that province and tell citizens, as he did last week in Val-d'Or that they are negative people?

* * *

[English]

SOCIAL SECURITY

INCOMES—TABLING OF WHITE PAPER—PENSION LEGISLATION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the statement in the Speech from the Throne that Parliament will be asked in this session to examine a white paper on income security policy, can the minister say whether this is the same white paper that was to have been tabled in the last session, and can he now say when it will be tabled?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): It includes many of the considerations that would have gone into an earlier paper, and I expect that it will be tabled shortly.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask which we will see first? Will it be the white paper, or the pension legislation which was also referred to in the Throne Speech?

Mr. Munro: I would advise the hon. member that that has yet to be decided as a matter of policy by the government, and when we have decided the House will be advised.

* * *

[Translation]

BANKRUPTCY

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENT OF ACT

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

As during each session for over three years now we have been promised a reform in depth of the Bankruptcy Act, could the minister renew that commitment for the current session?

[English]

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I know the hon. member's great interest in the subject and I would direct his attention to a speech I made this summer in which I indicated that in a matter of weeks from now I will be publishing a report on the subject.

* * *

NATIONAL SECURITY

PROTECTION FOR AIRLINE AND RAILWAY PASSENGERS AND PROPERTY FROM POSSIBLE FLQ ATTACKS

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of reports that the FLQ is about to set out on a program of attacking airlines and railways all across Canada, can the Prime Minister or one of the other ministers give an assurance that adequate protection is being provided for airlines and passengers thereon as well as for railway trains across the country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The question of the hon. member really spells out the dilemma which faces the government and which apparently exists in his own party also. His former leader a moment ago was beseeching us not to move in any way which might infringe civil liberties, but in order to move in the way which the hon. member now suggests this danger might well be present.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): This is the all or nothing philosophy.

Mr. Nesbitt: Have the Prime Minister or his colleagues given consideration to the rather simple expedient of searching passengers and their luggage before boarding as is being done in Europe at present with no inconvenience?

Mr. Trudeau: I am informed that this is being done at this time.

* * *

LABOUR RELATIONS

NON-COMPLIANCE OF CHATEAU LAURIER HOTEL WITH MINIMUM WAGE LAW—POSITION IN OTHER FEDERAL AGENCIES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Has a settlement been reached with Canadian National Railways regarding the application of the minimum wage laws of this Parliament to its hotels, and can the minister assure the House that no other federal agencies are ignoring the minimum wage laws in this country?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): No settlement has been reached as yet. An order was given yesterday to proceed against the CNR in the case of the Chateau Laurier.

Mr. McGrath: Would the minister reply to the second part of my question? Would he assure the House that no other federally controlled agencies or Crown corporations are defying the minimum wage laws of this Parliament?

Mr. Mackasey: I will have the matter investigated this afternoon to be certain of my answer, but I can assure hon. members that at least under the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act Crown corporations have to observe the labour laws of this country like any other enterprise under federal jurisdiction.

* * *

GRAIN

STUDY BY WHEAT BOARD OF WORLD FEED GRAIN SITUATION—AVAILABILITY OF INFORMATION TO AGRICULTURAL CONGRESS

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): I have a question for the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. Is the Wheat Board making a study of the world feed grain situation, particularly with regard to the corn supply in the United States this year and possibly the corn seed supply there next year?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The Wheat Board keeps very closely informed on world market conditions in every respect, and this includes the situation in regard to supplies and probable supplies from the United States.

Mr. Thomson: Would any recommendations that the Wheat Board might make be available to the task force which will be meeting in November, the reason being that we might want to grow different crops next year?

Mr. Lang: I presume the hon. member is referring to the agricultural congress. It would, I am sure, be the hope of my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, that a good deal of information may be made available at that time, and when it is it will become available to hon. members.

* * *

[Translation]

INDUSTRY

TEXTILES—APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS OF COMMISSION

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Would he tell the House when the government has the intention of creating the Textiles Commission?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the three members of this Commission have now been selected, and all we need before announcing these appointments is to have the Governor General's consent. I want to point out that the Commission will operate for the time being, under the legislation governing my department. Therefore it will not have the powers to inquire into various matters until the law is introduced and passed later this session.

I am sure the Commission, once it is created, will immediately start to work because it will have extremely important problems to study.

[English]

[Later:]

TEXTILES—COMPOSITION OF COMMISSION

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question supplementary to the last one asked of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Will the new textile commission also be representative of the trade?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I made sure that the commission would not be representative of the trade in the sense that it would be made spokesmen for employers or employees. The commission will be made up of people extremely well informed on these matters but with a more general background. I do not think it would have been wise to select people on the basis of representation of the different sectors of the industry. Such a step would damage the credibility that the commission is expected to achieve in the true interests of Canada, its reputation for objectivity in world trade circles.

* * *

IMMIGRATION

REFERENCE OF WHITE PAPER AND AMENDMENTS TO APPEAL BOARD ACT TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): My question is to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. A few moments ago he referred to matters dealing with immigration to be brought before the House. Can he tell the House whether the proposed white paper on immigration and the amendments to the Immigration Appeal Board Act will be brought in simultaneously and referred to the committee and whether this will be done at an early date so that positive action can be taken with regard to the Immigration Appeal Board?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Work is going forward in regard to both matters. No decision has been taken about the timing and whether they should be brought in simultaneously. Certainly I am as concerned as the hon. member about these matters.

* * *

FISHERIES

CLOSURE OF CERTAIN WATERS TO FOREIGN FISHERMEN—DISCUSSIONS WITH FRANCE AND UNITED STATES

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who apparently has been called out of the chamber, so I will bring it to the attention of the Prime Minister. It arises from the fact that in the House yesterday the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry said that he hoped the fishery closing lines on our two coasts, east and west, would be proclaimed very soon, which was essentially the same answer that he gave to the committee last spring. Are general negotiations being pressed with France in such a manner as to clarify and expedite the proclamation on the Atlantic coast? Also, is the position of the United States with regard to a certain portion of the Alaska boundary complicating the situation on the Pacific coast and, if so, are we pressing negotiations with the United States in a way that would lead to an early proclamation of the lines in the interests of the survival of fish?

[Translation]

Mr. André Ouellet (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): I will take this question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

AIRPORTS

STE SCHOLASTIQUE—PREPARATION AND DEVELOPMENT OF AREA

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Can he tell us whether discussions are being held with the Quebec government regarding the development of the airport at Ste Scholastique or if, at least, agreements in principle have been concluded between Quebec and Ottawa?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, there has been a meeting at the departmental level where we agreed upon the general outline of co-operation. There will be other meetings in the near future.

---

[English]

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council) moved:

That a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons be appointed to examine and report upon proposals, made public, or which are from time to time made public by the Government of Canada, on a number of subjects related to the Constitution of Canada during the course of the comprehensive review of the Constitution of Canada, which review was agreed upon at the Constitutional Conference of the Prime Minister of Canada and the Premiers and Prime Ministers of the Provinces in February, 1968, and alternative proposals on the same subjects;

That the Committee have power to appoint, from among its members, such sub-committees as it may deem advisable or necessary;

That the Committee have power to sit during sittings and adjournments of the House of Commons;

That the Committee have power to report from time to time, to send for persons, papers, and records, and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the Committee;

That the Committee have power to adjourn from place to place within Canada;

That the quorum of the Committee be 17 members, whenever a vote, resolution or other decision is taken, so long as both Houses are represented and that the Joint Chairmen be authorized to hold meetings, to receive evidence and authorize the printing thereof, when 7 members are present so long as both Houses are represented;

That the Committee be empowered to retain the services of three specialists to assist it in its work; and that it also be empowered to retain the clerical and stenographic help deemed advisable by the Joint Chairmen;

That the papers and evidence received and taken on the subject in the preceding session be referred to the Committee and made part of the records thereof;

That the following Members be appointed to act on behalf of the House of Commons on the Special Joint Committee, namely:

Messrs. Alexander, Allmand, Asselin, Breau, Brewin, Dinsdale, Fairweather, Fortin, Gibson, Hogarth, Hopkins, Lachance, MacGuigan, Marceau, McQuaid, Osler, Ouellet, Roberts, Rowland and Woolliams; and

That a Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours thereof.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the courtesy of the minister in allowing me to speak first, particularly for the reason that I will have certain propositions to put before him and he might well seek the chance, in closing the debate, to answer the suggestions I make. We already dealt with this matter very lightly last Friday when I indicated some preliminary objections which I then had to the motion in the form it is put. Because of that the government has now seen fit to introduce it in this way, it having been properly placed on the order paper.

By this motion the government has actively taken the initiative to re-establish a special joint committee to deal with constitutional problems. It is asking the House to vest in the committee the widest possible powers, including the right to travel in Canada. I interrupt my remarks on the subject to suggest that some hon. members might take this opportunity to travel outside the chamber and there continue the very important discussions they are having here.

A proposed itinerary which was discussed by the committee at the conclusion of its meetings last session indicates, as I see it, that the committee plans to be absent approximately 45 days, most of them sitting days, during the next eight months. This, of course, is a matter for the committee to consider and to propose in view of what it feels is its responsibility, and we have got to give the utmost consideration to its proposals, particularly having in mind that it is a joint committee. But that does not relieve this House of the ultimate responsibility, of the need to examine and accept or reject or even possibly modify committee reports. This, as a general rule, applies to any committee report.

I was one of those who first suggested six years ago the need to have a committee of this kind. I said it could exercise a useful and even an essential function in dealing with constitutional problems. If it had been set in motion at that time, or even three or four years ago, Mr. Speaker, I think there would have been a different climate and a different awareness of our constitutional problems today.

I was quite prepared for and, in fact, I advocated a reasonable amount of travel by such a committee—certainly at least its attendance in the provincial capitals possibly by the use of subcommittees, because in an area of this kind there was need not only for a pipeline from Members of Parliament to the people but for the people to be able to make known their thoughts to Members of Parliament through the committee. But I must honestly say I did not envisage a safari of quite the same dimensions as is now being proposed, with beaters, trackers and all the rest of it. However, that is a matter we may discuss later.

But I say too, Mr. Speaker, that three years ago when I again discussed this matter in the House I felt that the rigidity of the then Minister of Justice who has now become the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and his exceedingly narrow and overly legalistic approach to constitutional issues, would likely provoke similar sentiments amongst the provinces, and any meaningful consensus was not likely to be achieved. The facts have borne out this view. There have been a number of meetings of the first ministers. There have been committee meetings with all kinds of media coverage. There has been a pouring out of papers, position papers, provincial statements, federal statements, committee reports, but virtually nothing in terms of real achievement.

The government and the Prime Minister through a very dull and pedestrian approach have managed to throw a smokescreen of boredom around the subject and have really turned the people off. I suppose what the Prime Minister is saying to the simple folks around Camelot is, "Go home and leave this to me and all the other knights around the Round Table."

The thrust of the discussion has been directed above the heads of the people, perhaps deliberately in the expectation that they would not see what was really involved, that 11 sets of hands were tightly gripped about the levers of power and none had any intention of releasing any of them. Only if Canadians as a whole can be made to realize the issues, and to understand that there are some very simple but exceedingly important decisions to be made, can we get anywhere. At the present time it is too much like the discussion that Alice had with the Cheshire cat when they agreed between them that she was walking somewhere, that she did not know where she came from or where she was going but that if she kept on walking she would get somewhere. I feel that this is the case with these federal-provincial conferences.

Should the ultimate decision on issues such as pollution be left to the provincial governments or to the federal government? Should the federal government take some greater and more meaningful roles in the problems of the great cities, such as housing and transportation? This could be applied also to consumers' interests, and there are other areas. An active parliamentary committee set in motion some three years ago, reasonably free from political rancour, could have set out these issues in a simple way and developed an awareness which might well have led to public pressure to compel the men in the various establishments who play the power game to adjust the constitution to the realities of today. I am not talking about a new constitution; I am talking about those necessary and essential decisions made to conform with what we have found from our experience needs to be done today.

• (12:00 noon)

But at present there is a general nausea at the artificial mixture of mystique and mugwumpery which surrounds these constitutional discussions and which persuades too many people now that reform or change is only a big yawn. I doubt very much now whether anyone can change this fact of life, but I am willing to go along and give the benefit of the doubt to the committee to be re-established for this session. We must make sure that we exhaust any doubt on this issue with respect to this committee which is to be re-established. We must seek the opportunity to make the people of Canada aware in the simplest possible way of the issues which face us.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

Having said that, and my colleagues may have something more to say about details, I wish to say that the debate on this motion presents the first proper occasion on which to record publicly our concern about the operation of the committees of this House. We are debating a motion to re-establish a committee and I am entitled to say at this time that we have some very serious reservations, which we expressed to Your Honour during the last session. Your Honour was good enough to indicate that this is a matter which the procedure committee might well examine. It has now been clearly established that this government with its tractable backbenchers has shown a determination to relegate Parliament, certainly this House, to a position of futility and impotence. Our experience of the last two sessions has made it crystal clear that the new committee system, which was intended to help to prop up the House of Commons as a forum for free men in a free society so that legislation passed would in fact be laws devised and adopted by the people through their representatives, has failed to achieve this purpose. These committees have now become in certain respects a means whereby the Prime Minister, the cabinet and their colleagues and lesser luminaries are de-emphasizing and undercutting the value of the House of Commons. The records of the committees themselves and the complaints made in the House during the last session bristle with illustrations of this fact.

Just two days ago the Prime Minister, in a confrontation with the press about the supremacy of the elected representatives of the people, had something to say on this score. Just whom did he think he was fooling? His scorn of the House and the parliamentary system is too obvious and well documented to need elaboration here, and the government's abuse of the parliamentary committee system is just another example.

Today there is fear, anger, despair and anxiety in this country. Violence stalks this land, as it does the United States of America—so much so that the United States Congress is now in the process of passing an extremely severe measure dealing with law and order. There are indications, if I may be permitted to say so, that the government is contemplating acting under the War Measures Act or bringing in some substitute for it. I am all for order and would support reasonable proposals, Mr. Speaker, but order under the law and not above it. And we must have law or laws passed by this House and Parliament and not produced at the whim of any one man or group of men, no matter how eminent they may be.

Surely one of the contributing factors to some of our troubles has been the fact that many, and this applies particularly to minority groups in North America and elsewhere, have lost or are losing confidence in the democratic process. Many feel that they no longer can have their day in court. I do not altogether agree with this assessment, but there is absolutely no doubt about the steady and planned erosion of the rights of this House and the substitution of authoritarian rule by the executive which is involved all too often with the personality cult. Parliamentary systems must not only work; they must be very visible and be seen to be working.

Let the government be made aware right at the beginning of the present session that we will not facilitate the operation of committees involving the continuation of practices about which we complained during the last session. Reforms and improvements must be brought about. My colleague who spoke yesterday, the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), dealt with this matter to some extent and spoke in detail about many of the things which I might have spoken about now. With respect to such things as travel, the holding of meetings and the co-ordination of meetings of committees, I say it is obvious that, unless there is some better measure of control than was the case last year, the proceedings of this House might just as well be scrapped, because slowly and surely the emphasis is being placed on the committees and taken away from this House. Since we are dealing with this particular area of controversy, we think it must be made abundantly clear that committees exist to clarify, to investigate, to examine and to help to facilitate the proceedings of the House; and they must at all times be subordinate to the sittings of the House of Commons, the operations of the House of Commons and the decisions which are made in this place.

For example, there is a need for some bills and some estimates to be considered in Committee of the Whole and in Committee of Supply. There must be an assurance of greater objectivity and freedom from government supervision in respect of committee chairmen. There must be more opportunities to test the views of members by dividing the House on some committee reports or by permitting amendments so that minorities on those committees can put forward their positions in the House on specific issues. These are very reasonable suggestions, Mr. Speaker. I ask the minister now if he will not, before this debate is concluded, give an undertaking that within a limited period of time terms of reference will be proposed which will direct the Committee on Procedure and Organization to deal specifically and immediately with this problem so that we on this side of the House, as well as members on the government side, may have some assurance that committees will function well and accept their proper role in the House, as must be the case at all times.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I say that many of the rule changes which were brought in have been effective but many of them have been shown to be not effective. They need to be examined. This examination ought to include an examination of the committee system and the new structure which was established.

My party will always go along with reasonable changes in the rules provided it is made crystal clear that the function of the House of Commons remains the principal object of our meetings in the House. I therefore hope that before this debate is concluded the minister will direct his attention to the issue and, hopefully, indicate that the very serious problems we have brought up, which have also concerned the members of his party for some time, will be met and dealt with. We hope this assurance will be given before further requests are made to establish other committees, standing or special, of this House.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I realize that the discussion which the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has opened up during the course of our dealing with this motion is an important one. I hope it is not unkind for me to say that he has ranged a bit from the wording of the motion. I do not see anything wrong with that. In fact I think it is a good idea. I support his position that we should take a new look and certainly that we should maintain a continuing look at our committee system. He has pointed out some of the improvements that are needed. He said that the changes that we made were not all negative, that some of the changes with respect to the committee system have worked out well. I wish to emphasize that fact.

• (12:10 p.m.)

I am not happy about all the rule changes that we made in the last two or three years, but I believe it was a tremendous improvement to send practically all bills, after second reading, to standing committees. I think the work that standing committees have done on bills which have been referred to them is good.

I believe it was a forward step to abolish the duplication of debate that we used to have when on occasion we would send a bill to a standing committee where it would be dealt with at length and then we would have the same debate in the Committee of Whole House. By the report stage we have preserved the right of members of the House who are not members of a particular committee to make their contribution to the details of any bill.

I am almost prepared to say without qualification that I think that the changes in the rules which had to do with the legislative process are good. I referred to the fact that after second reading bills go to committee where they are thoroughly studied. We then have the report stage. Members who wish can then deal with details. We can have recorded votes on contentious issues followed by final or third reading.

In any criticisms that we make of our new rules, or of our committee system in particular, it is appropriate to record that in this area we have done well. It is also my impression that committees are doing a good job when studying white papers. There are times when the argument gets quite intense, as it ought to, and this is an innovation that has worked out well, namely, that white papers are referred to committees and the public is permitted to appear before those committees. I happen to be a member of a committee that is doing this right now with respect to the subject of unemployment insurance. I believe it is a very worth-while exercise in which we are engaged. Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. member for Peace River that the whole question should be studied.

The area where we have not solved the problem is with respect to estimates or the granting of money. I am not going to urge that we return to the old system under which every last estimate was dealt with in Committee of Supply. I think it became rather meaningless. That is the reason we agreed to send all estimates to the various separate standing committees. But I do not think anyone in this House can claim that in the standing committees the estimates are examined in any detail or that any parliamentary scrutiny is practised. I do not pretend to have the answer, but I would say that in our attempt to make improvements we have not gone very far with respect to the handling of estimates. Possibly the whole matter of estimates has become so huge in terms of the amounts of money that we have to deal with compared with what it was 100 years ago that we have to take a new look at this situation. Maybe we have to rely on the fact that we have a Treasury Board and a Treasury Board secretariat which does this type of scrutinizing before we ever see the estimates. Maybe we also have to rely on the fact that we have an Auditor General and his staff as well as a Public Accounts Committee to do the job afterwards and that in this whole picture there is not the need for what was thought to be necessary 100 years ago. Maybe Parliament has more important things to do. These thoughts are not put forward as anything final. Although we have succeeded in what we have done with respect to the legislative process in relation to committees, we have not solved the problem with respect to estimates and the granting of money.

There are other matters regarding committees that we should study. In my view the most serious problem that faces committees is that of time. Sometimes there is also the problem of space and other facilities. I would like to see more practice of the idea of committees sitting when the House is not in session. We did enough of this in September, some committees even earlier than that, to prove that it is worth while.

This very day the House is sitting morning, afternoon and night. I am a member of an important standing committee that is also meeting morning, afternoon and night. It just does not make sense, especially when one realizes that other meetings and obligations have to be crowded into the same day. When this is the case, committees suffer. Committees could do better work if we arranged for this kind of provision. It is not necessary to do this only by having committees meet during our summer recess. I think the idea of the House adjourning for a week every four, five or six weeks, whatever period might be worked out, so that committees can carry out their work is good.

In this general vein I agree with the position of the hon. member for Peace River that we should study the work of our committees. I think we should be encouraged by the useful steps we have taken and by the progress we have made to believe that we can go on to make it an even more effective part of the parliamentary process.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

I hope the motion now before us will be agreed to. I am not sure whether the member for Peace River said it today, but he certainly said it last Friday, that when committees want to travel they should make a case for it. There should not be a series of blank cheques to permit committees to travel any time the chairman or members of that committee get the notion. I believe all parties are agreed that we should not go high, wide and handsome in the matter of committee travel. Surely in the case of this particular committee it is something that is desirable.

I also have my question about the state of the federal-provincial conferences and whether they have been useful in the last two or three years but surely the constitution is still a major problem in this country. It is still a valid proposition that the people of this country ought to get involved in that consideration as much as possible.

• (12:20 p.m.)

Ideally, we should call a constituent assembly, but this is a complicated matter and when we would have the time for it I do not know. Is it not a step in that direction to have a committee of Parliament meet the people of this country? The committee has made a start in the travels it has undertaken already and I think it should be encouraged to continue rather than discouraged from making further trips. As a matter of fact, it seems to me that if the committee simply sat here in Ottawa and rehashed its various prejudices concerning the constitution it would be rendering no greater service than the federal-provincial conferences have done in the last two or three years. To my mind, its usefulness lies in the fact that it gets around the country and meets the people, and I believe it would be unfortunate if it were not permitted to carry through the program it has outlined. In my opinion refusal of this permission would be an act of unfairness, an act of discrimination against those parts of the country which have not yet been visited.

One of my hon. friends says the committee has made only one trip. Even so, it was an important one. It went all over Manitoba. I submit that the experience of the committee in Manitoba and the Yukon demonstrated the usefulness of journeys of this kind. Granted the importance of Manitoba, the rest of the country is important too, and in my view the committee should be encouraged to go on with its program as requested in the report it made at the end of last session. I speak today with less sense of disagreement with the hon. member for Peace River than I did last Friday, because I believe he has become more reasonable; he has softened his approach. He is that kind of a man.

Mr. Baldwin: I read my own speech. It made me a lot more reasonable.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He is a man with whom it is a pleasure to negotiate the activities and business of this House, and having stated the feelings he has about the rules and about our committee system he will not, I hope, stand in the way of the committee being given the authority which it seeks. Certainly we do not object. We think it should possess this authority and that the motion as it appears on the order paper should be supported by the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments on the particularly significant motion now before us. We have agreed to hold this debate today because committees are becoming ever more important.

Mr. Speaker, we recognize the usefulness of committees for the study of bills referred to them by the House. We also admit that it is necessary for committees, particularly for the one that will be entrusted with the study of the constitution, to travel across Canada in order to better understand the problems and find more suitable solutions.

We agree that travelling across the country is necessary to meet the people who have briefs to submit or suggestions to make regarding the programs brought forward by the government.

However, I am wondering what the members of what we call 'the other place" have to do with the establishment of the committee with which we are concerned at the present time. I do not see very well how the honourable senators can make a worthwhile contribution to committees established by the House of Commons, since they are not the representatives of the people but were appointed by the governments in office.

Some may disagree with me, but I believe that the House members on the various standing or special House committees are well qualified to gather all the information required from the experts appearing before such committees.

Committees are important due to the fact that, in the course of their proceedings, either in Ottawa or elsewhere, the members are able to question experts on the matters of concern to them. The establishment of the Committee on the Constitution of Canada is justified since in the last few years federal-provincial conferences have been dealing with the problem of the Canadian Constitution.

The last one brought us back to the starting point by suggesting that there should not be a new constitution but that the present one be amended instead, and the Committee is asked to study the report containing those recommendations.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to endorse the proposals of my hon. friend, the member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), in connection with the simultaneous sittings of the committees and of the House.

In view of the fact that the Committee on the Constitution will have to leave the House about one week every month from now until the end of June, the fact that it will often be away is going to deprive the House of the contributions of a number of members.

It must also be kept in mind that several other committees will have to travel. For instance, another special committee, the Committee on Pollution and Environment, will require its members to travel across the country in order to see for themselves the problems caused by pollution.

Moreover, the members of parliamentary associations have to travel during the year. As a matter of fact, the NATO Parliamentary Association for instance is to meet in Europe in November. On that occasion, several members will be away from the House.

In view of the proliferation of all those committees and associations, I am wondering whether the role of the House is not being suppressed progressively and turned over to the committees. What is more important, the House or the committees? That is the question.

As for me, I maintain that the business of the House should come first and that the business of the committees should never interfere with or duplicate the business of the House.

Furthermore, we should consider more seriously the work performed in the committees. In fact, the task of a committee was to study the housing problem in Canada. A report was presented by its members and a minister had to resign because the recommendations of that committee did not receive sufficient implementation.

I am a member of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. I remember that, on two occasions at least, we were sent to Europe to visit the members of the armed forces, especially in Germany and, to our great surprise, upon our arrival there and before the committee study was completed and a report published, we learned that the government had decided to curtail its military establishments in Europe.

Later on, in September 1969, the committee visited Halifax and the Maritimes to study the problem of the naval forces stationed there. Once again, to our great surprise, while visiting the navy buildings, we learned that the government had decided to scrap the airplane carrier Bonaventure. Then we start asking oruselves questions and wondering about the usefulness of the committees if the government does not even take into account the reports which they submit.

I hope that the travelling which the committee on the constitution might wish to do throughout Canada, will be useful and that the government will have at least enough sense not to take a decision before the committee report has been presented to the House.

Mr. Speaker, before concluding my remarks, I should like to echo the very suggestion made earlier by my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) to the effect that it would be advisable for the House not to sit for one week every month, so as to enable every committee to sit and so that the members of Parliament may not have to run from one committee room to the other or from a committee sitting to the House of Commons.

At the present time, the government may perhaps turn this situation to its advantage because of its heavier representation. However, political parties such as the Ralliement Créditiste and the New Democratic Party cannot sometimes send more than one delegate to each committee, and their members find it quite difficult to follow the proceedings of the committees and of the House. You cannot be at two or three places at the same time. This situation is quite annoying. We are put to task sometimes for not attending committee sittings and this is precisely because we cannot be everywhere at the same time.

I suggest that the government House leader should look into the possibility of adjourning the House from time to time so that the committees may work at full blast and be more efficient.

• (12:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution of Canada in the last session, perhaps I may be permitted to add a few words of clarification on this subject. I understand the considerations that the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has advanced in the House both last Friday and today and those put forward by the other speakers who preceded me. I sympathize with the concern which has been expressed in regard to regulating in some over-all way the travelling done by various parliamentary committees. If I may say so, it would seem to me that this consideration is especially applicable to the standing committees of the House, for which travel is a rather incidental part of their function and their interests. On the other hand, I would submit that the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution is a special kind of committee, not only in the sense that it is a special committee but also because it is one which, by the very nature and essence of its work, must travel across the country to hear the views of the people of this country.

Although I do not understand the hon. member for Peace River to disagree with this, in order to underline the point I should like to refer to the debate which took place in the House on January 26 and 27 of this year, which was followed by the vote setting up the committee. One of the speakers in the debate said:

> —I hope this committee will give a voice to the views and the actions of the Canadian people. I hope the committee itself will provide opportunities to Canadians everywhere to make their views heard and have them considered and publicized rather than filed away and forgotten.

A little farther on he said:

> This means the committee must hear groups and individuals from all across the country. The committee evidently has this power...these public hearings and consultations are necessary to the process of building a real understanding of the problems.

Those were the words of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), as reported at pages 2818 and 2819 of Hansard.

[Mr. Laprise.]

If I may I should also like briefly to quote the words of the hon. member for Peace River in the debate:

> I should like to see the committee composed of members of this House and members of the other place who will travel from place to place in Canada.

Those words are to be found at page 2839 of Hansard.

I mention those statements not because I believe that this is a matter that is controversial but to indicate the general agreement that existed in the House at that time, which was manifested by speakers from all parties, that this committee should be one that travels extensively across the country.

In the report presented to the House on October 7 by the committee, a report, I might add, unanimously adopted by the committee, the request was made that the committee be re-established as early as possible in this session and with the same powers it enjoyed previously, including, therefore, the power to adjourn from place to place.

If I may say so, the committee has been proceeding rather amicably in deciding where it should travel across the country. The committee has already held hearings in Winnipeg, Brandon, St. Boniface, Thompson and Churchill in Manitoba, and in Whitehorse, Dawson City and Watson Lake in the Yukon. We propose in the near future to visit other parts of the country. As one of the previous speakers mentioned, the committee unanimously agreed at one of its early meetings that it would travel one week a month during this parliamentary session.

If the committee is re-established by the House and it should again fall to my lot to be chairman, I should like to say that I would be happy to make periodic reports to the House in advance of the committee's travel, informing the House where the committee intends to go. This would provide an opportunity for comment by any member of the House. I would not, however, like to see taken from the committee, either in form or in substance, the power to adjourn from place to place, a power that the House has already unanimously recognized.

I conclude by saying, in sentiments that I am sure are felt by members of all parties in the House and especially by members of the committee, that this is a matter of great importance to the people of Canada and to us as Members of Parliament. It is a matter that is too important to the country to be left to the unguided decision of Members of Parliament, politicians, and lawyers. It is a matter that ought to be brought to the people; and it is a matter that this House in the past authorized the committee to bring to all people across the country. I hope that once again the House will extend this power to the committee.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to say a few words on the motion that is now before the House. I do not propose to take the time of the House to give my views as to how the new committee system is working. May I simply say that I do not think it will ever work until governments wait for committees to make reports before making their own decisions. In addition, the committee system will never work satisfactorily until committee reports are studied and acted upon by the government.

• (12:40 p.m.)

I should like to address my remarks more particularly to two parts of the motion before the House. The Special Joint Committee on the Constitution is asking for the power to adjourn from place to place within Canada and that it be permitted to retain the services of three specialists. I think it is time that responsible elected representatives consider this business of committees travelling across this country. In my opinion, travel by committees from one end of the country to the other has become excessive and out of all reasonable proportions. The cost incurred on these trips is fantastic.

I only need to mention the fact that this special committee studying the constitution made one trip last session, as the former chairman has just pointed out, to Winnipeg, Brandon, St. Boniface, Yukon, Whitehorse and Churchill. On that trip there were 16 Members of Parliament and 14 staff officials. They took with them all the necessary equipment and paraphernalia required at the meetings. That trip cost the taxpayers of this country a minimum of $33,628 because to this must be added the cost of printing and the salaries of the staff that went along, the interpreters and clerks, as well as the advertising and other incidental expenses. These costs are not included in this $33,628 figure.

Somebody might say the staff is paid anyway and their salaries go on whether or not they make a trip. The salaried staff must be paid if they are going to travel all over the country, but we will then require greater staff here in Ottawa to take their places while they are on the road. Therefore we must add the costs I have mentioned to this figure.

If one takes that cost and divides it by 30, it works out to an approximate cost of $1,200 for each person who went on the trip. We in this House represent the people of this country who are now being taxed to death. People will tell us, as they have told me, that they cannot afford to pay any more taxes, they are now paying the limit.

It is time this House took a look at the cost of these committees flitting all over the country. It is quite right that this is a special committee but that is no reason why it should have special privileges to spend money in this way. The former chairman advised the House that the committee proposes to make other trips and I understand there are 42 places they expect to visit during 12 trips across the country. If the cost of each trip amounts to roughly the cost of the one that has been taken, and there is no reason to expect that they will cost less, this committee's expenses for travelling will be over $500,000—a half a million dollars. I will wait to see just how close my estimate is. I do not think we as responsible representatives should issue a blank cheque to this or any other committee to travel round this country, with permission to adjourn from place to place. I for one do not propose to issue a blank cheque for this purpose.

Let me deal with the alternatives which would cut down this exorbitant cost. This committee will have to give the public an opportunity to voice their opinions on the Constitution of Canada. It would be well within the relevance of necessity that the committee needs to travel only to the capital of each province. If the committee feels it is not going to get enough briefs and reports as a result of travelling to the capitals of each province, then it could save the taxpayers a lot of money by saying to the people who wish to come to a capital that it will pay their expenses to make an appearance before the committee in that capital. There is no reason the committee should have to journey from Whitehorse to Dawson City or from Winnipeg to Brandon, a distance of approximately 60 miles.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is 120 miles.

Mr. Hales: The hon. member says it is 120 miles from Winnipeg to Brandon. If a group of people from Brandon wanted to appear before the committee they could travel to Winnipeg to present their briefs at the expense of the committee and we would be money in pocket.

Let us give a little thought to what these things are costing. There seems to be an opinion around here that all we have to do is ask the public for money and the public will give it to us. I tell you that we have done this for so long we are reaching the point where the taxpayer is going to say he has had it and is not going to pay any more.

The committee is also asking for permission to retain the services of three specialists. As a chairman of a committee I realize that committees need staff and special assistants. I do not know why this committee could not obtain help from the Department of Justice. There are people on the staff of that department now on the government payroll who could work with this special committee. If the committee needs extra clerks I am sure there are clerks in various departments of government, now on the payroll, who could also work for this committee.

We know from past experience that committees have hired specialists and we know what they charge. A lawyer will charge at a minimum $250 per day. If you require an accountant he will charge you a minimum of $200 a day for his services. If you add these costs you will have some idea of the expenses incurred to maintain these committees, and what it costs to have these committees travelling across the country.

Let me give you the four highest costs incurred by committees during the last session. The committee on the constitution spent $33,628. The finance committee made three trips which cost the taxpayers $23,837. The regional development committee spent $7,154. The transportation committee made three trips at a cost of $23,432. I have not broken down the costs that other committees incurred last session, but the total was $96,966 excluding the costs I referred to earlier which must be added on. Last year roughly $100,000 was spent by committees on travel. I bring these facts to the attention of the House because I sincerely believe that travelling by committees is getting out of hand. It is costing altogether too much.

• (12:50 p.m.)

I am sure that you, Mr. Speaker, are very interested in this because I believe the money comes out of your budget. I am sure you must have felt that it is getting out of hand, is costing altogether too much and that some curtailment will have to be made sooner or later.

I am glad this motion came before the House at the earliest possible time in this session so that we as responsible representatives of the people can give serious thought to the matter before we issue this kind of a blank cheque for this committee. I find I shall not be able to support the motion in its present form. If the committee could say that trips would only be made to the capital of each province and would also set out some sort of a reasonable budget, I would consider agreeing to it, but in its present form of a far-ranging open-ended blank cheque I would find difficulty in supporting the motion.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak in favour of the motion before the House. Before I finish I should also like to make some comments concerning the remarks we have just heard from the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Hales). Before dealing with his remarks I wish to remind the House that this particular special committee was appointed after urging over many years by various members of the opposition parties including the party represented by myself and the party represented by the hon. member for Wellington. In my view this committee may be able to make—indeed it is probable—a vitally important contribution to the remaking or renewing of our Constitution. In the event that anyone should think this is an impractical proposition, I suggest that the unity of this country may very well depend on it. If anyone suggests that the making or remaking of a constitution is something of an academic exercise without practical value, I should like to say that subjects such as pollution, urban development and so on which were not considered at the time of the making of our original Constitution are the type of practical subjects which require being dealt with in the constitution. Such subjects which intimately affect the government and the welfare of this country are the type of subjects which this committee is asked to consider.

I believe that however disillusioned the people of Canada may be about the process of constitutional amendment to date it is possible—I do not say it will certainly happen because it may not—that if this committee, which represents all parties and all regions of Canada, can arrive at a consensus it may be able to make a vital contribution by renewing the fabric of unity of this country. I suggest it is important that this be done, and in the carrying out of this function and in doing what is essential to the carrying out of this function the people of Canada must be consulted. I suggest that the committee cannot consult the people effectively by remaining in Ottawa or by merely visiting the capital cities of the various provinces. I suggest it is necessary to go to the people in order to hear what they have to say.

As a member of the committee I would find it very informative and interesting to hear the points of view of those in the different sections and regions of our country. Travel is, of course, an inconvenience. It is an inconvenience to the people who travel. It involves some degree of expense. It has the effect of depopulating an already depopulated House of Commons when members serve on committees that travel. This is all very true. It is also perfectly true that travel can be expensive. I believe we can rely upon the committee itself to use restraint in respect of the degree of travel. I do not believe the committee would travel for the sake of travel but rather for the sake of consultation with the people of Canada.

I must say I found the attitude of the hon. member for Wellington to be that of a penny-pincher. If this committee does not do a job any money spent on it will be wasted. The committee may try very hard and not achieve anything. This is a possibility. But as long as there is a real possibility that through the process of consultation this committee may arrive at conclusions that are valuable in respect of the future of this country and the remaking of our Constitution, then I suggest the expenses which are being discussed are picayune and trifling in relation to the benefits which could result from the functioning of the committee.

With regard to the suggestion that the committee should confine its travel to the capitals, may I say I happen to represent an area which is the capital of the largest province but I want to say that Toronto is not Ontario.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brewin: I wish to say that if the committee should just visit Toronto and listen to the organizations represented there the members of the committee would not hear the full viewpoint of the people of Ontario. I believe Toronto is a very important place to visit and I presume the committee will go there and hear some very valuable briefs. I think, however, the committee should visit northern Ontario and spend some time in Ottawa. I believe there are various parts of the province I represent which ought to be heard from.

I find, Mr. Speaker, that it is close to one o'clock and I shall conclude by saying I hope this House will not place limitations on the motion before the House but will pass it and encourage the committee to do the important job that is being entrusted to it.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Very briefly, Mr. Speaker, may I say that I found the arguments of the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) somewhat superfluous in that no one has contested the purpose of the committee. The fundamental point is the control of committees by this House. I have been a member of the finance committee and other committees and I suggest that the carte blanche demands made by certain committees at the beginning of a session are made without any justification whatsoever. The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) might have presented within his report the scheme in respect of these proposals.

An hon. Member: That was done weeks ago.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It was not done to the House. It was possibly done to committee members, but not to the House. I suggest that in a report in which a committee seeks authority to travel it should outline what it intends to do. It is not only a question of the cost involved. I remember an occasion last year when the former government House Leader complained bitterly to me about the travels of some of the committees and the fact that three committees were away simultaneously for some legitimate but uncontrolled purpose.

The point is that there is no co-ordination. Committees simply ask for authority at the beginning of a session, obtain it and spin off like independent satellites. But that is not the way the committees should operate nor is it the way this committee should operate. I suggest that the members of the committee consider dividing the committee into two or even three subcommittees in order to accomplish its purpose. Last summer the finance committee was split into subcommittees and this resulted in much less strain on the committee. Because the number of members was less numerous they were able to participate better in the discussions and considerations than would have been the case had the committee as a whole visited the places which were visited. If this were the suggestion in this case it might eliminate half the objection. May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: It being one o'clock I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

---

• (2:00 p.m.)

AFTER RECESS

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, before the recess I had been talking about the necessity of the House maintaining control of the committees. My particular objections were to blanket authorization to travel at the beginning of the term. It seems to me that the committee certainly has reason to travel. Many of the committees have very legitimate reasons, and some more so than others. But it must be remembered that the House has control over committees, not the committees over the House. Therefore, if a committee wishes to travel to accomplish its purpose, it should come to the House and explain the purpose of travelling. A committee that has a legitimate purpose will find the House quite receptive to the idea.

It must be remembered that information in the hands of committee members is not information in the possession of the House. The minutes of proceedings and evidence of the committees and their reports reach us three or four weeks later, hopefully in the future much sooner. Therefore I say that I believe in this case this embroglio would not have occurred if more information had been disclosed and had been properly laid out.

I have suggested—and I think this may be possible—that the committee divide itself into subcommittees. This will eliminate a great deal of the logistics and of the expense. I would say that it would also improve the performance of committee members who will then be able to participate in the meetings. It is obvious to me from my experience last year and this year, more particularly the meetings last summer of the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs which heard briefs in various provincial capitals, that if you have 30 members in a committee and these members want to question the witnesses, they will have to be severely restricted with regard to their questioning. This is the case even when there are only 10 members in a sub-committee. If there were 30 members of the House it would be terribly frustrating in Parliament and as I said in Committee. Also, I suggest that some of the centres which the committee might wish to visit may have difficulty in accommodating 45 or 50 people, as would be proposed. In one case, for example, this logistics train that went out with the committee on its one excursion was almost equivalent to the number of members participating. For this reason, I feel we must rethink the whole matter of committee activities.

My colleagues and I are not opposed to the idea of this committee travelling. I want to disabuse the mind of any hon. member who may suggest that this is so. But we are objecting to the procedure that was followed. This has also given us an opportunity to make some other observations with regard to the conduct and structure of committees.

Last year I heard complaints from the Government House Leader that many times he was not able to schedule the work before the House because the people who were primarily concerned with a particular bill were members of a committee that was off somewhere. At one time we had the ludicrous situation of three committees being away on tours. Of course, this makes work here and in other committees absolutely impossible. There has to be much better scheduling of the activities of the committees. It is not so bad at the beginning of the session, but I must plead for better planning than we had last year when 15, and sometimes 17, committees were sitting on the same day. How can we then be expected to carry on our duties in the House? It is just not possible.

I would also lay down a further caveat, that it should not be permissible for a committee to hold sittings while the House is sitting if the committee is hearing evidence from government officials. If we are dealing with witnesses from the outside, from the public, this can be done for their convenience and as a courtesy which we extend to them. However, in so far as the other hearings are concerned, our duties are here.

Some committee chairmen feel that all this is their responsibility and they have become so possessive with regard to committees that they refer to them as "my committee". What utter nonsense! They have merely been elected chairmen of committees and not the leader of—but this is not a senatorial or House subcommittee funded with a great deal of money, as happens in the American Congress. In Canada these committees belong to this House. Each committee has a chairman, and if a chairman feels he must become that possessive then he should certainly be replaced very quickly. In any event, these committees should sit for the benefit of the members and not for the benefit of the chairmen.

• (2:10 p.m.)

As much as possible, committees must avoid sitting whilst the House is sitting. We have grave staff limitations, and three committee sittings a day pile up the work and the costs. One has merely to look at how the costs of the legislative processes have escalated within the last year or two, and at the demands made on space and on personnel. What is the use of considering legislation in committee if it takes three weeks for the blessed committee reports to come back into this House?

Members of the House do not get the committee reports on time, but all too often the government House Leader has called for legislation to be considered the day after the final committee report appears at a time when no one has yet had a chance to examine the report. Legislation is being railroaded through the House because of these administrative roadblocks.

I agree with some of my colleagues who say that the platooning of replacement members of committees is wrong. We have seen roving squads of members whose chief ability is to sit in on committees, read newspapers, sign letters and at the same time raise their right hands in approval of matters on which they have had no previous experience. These members have not participated in the committee discussions, and are merely present to fill a seat or fill out a quorum. This is quite wrong. Let all members of committees be placed thereon following a resolution of this House so to do and not in the casual slip-shod way now prevailing.

The last point I wish to make with regard to committee chairmen is to acknowledge that there are some very notable exceptions. Chairmen of committees are not supposed to act as chief government hatchet men. They are not the chief proponents of legislation. They are not the chief defenders of government legislation. When they act in that way, they are acting completely contrary to the rules. The rules state that the chairman shall preside over the meetings of a committee and apply the rules in the same way as the Speaker does in this House. The Speaker is not an active, partisan participant in the deliberations of this House, and committee chairmen should not be partisan either. The sooner some of the chairmen learn this lesson the more peaceful and the better meetings we will have.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

I have reservations about this particular motion in the terms in which it has been drawn. I think this was done perhaps as the result of a misunderstanding. I am not going to vote against it but I have entered very serious caveats. If we had an undertaking from the chairman of the committee that future plans for travelling by the committee will be explained to the House we would eliminate any possibility of further misunderstanding. Certainly other committees should be wiser, and take heed of what has transpired on this occasion.

[Translation]

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, if I rise on this motion, it is not to criticize the principles colleagues of mine have put forward on the structure and efficiency of the committees. I agree with the principles mentioned today to the effect that the House must always remain master of the committees. My colleague from Wellington (Mr. Hales) has pointed out, with great eloquence, how much the trips taken by committee members cost. We must congratulate him, as representatives of the people, for wanting to save the taxpayers' money by seeing to it that those trips cost as little as possible.

My colleague from Wellington gave eloquent figures on the expenditures of certain committees.

I do not believe that even one of my colleagues is against the establishment of the committee on the constitution. Insofar as I am concerned, I have been asking for this since 1965, and I am pleased to see that the government has decided to set up such a committee.

I would have liked it better if the discussion on the fundamental principles, the structure, the operation and the deficiencies of the committees had not taken place today on the occasion of the establishment of the committee on the constitution.

Some committee members travel, when they should not do so, and on that score, I agree with the statement made by my colleague from Wellington to the effect that we should, as much as possible, save the taxpayers' money by reducing these trips to the minimum.

Some hon. members suggested that today's discussions showed that our party is opposed to the establishment of the committee on the constitution. If they believe that, they are mistaken and I rise simply to put the record straight. No member of my party is against it, and the less so now that we are going through such a difficult period, now that the federal-provincial conferences have failed to find some machinery to amend the constitution or repatriate it.

During the last federal-provincial conference, the premiers of the provinces and the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) discussed some means that could possibly lead to amending the constitution. Unfortunately, nothing has been achieved in this respect.

• (2:20 p.m.)

Personally, I expect a great deal from the work of the Special Committee on the Constitution. In fact, if we can prove to the Canadian people that the committee is as serious as it is believed to be, the committee will perhaps save the Canadian Confederation. The purpose of the committee is to go to the people; I am all for it because I believe in democracy.

Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity to visit Manitoba with members of the committee. We went to various places in the province and I was surprised to find out how much social and public organizations were interested in the Committee on the Constitution.

I was told that among the people we met during the trip, close to 1,000 expressed the hope that the Committee on the Constitution would work seriously to achieve a new Constitution, so that Canadians could live in a more united Canada.

I repeat, the survival of Confederation will depend on the activities and findings of this committee, as there is much thought given at the present time to the structure of a new constitution for Canada not only in Quebec but also in the English-speaking provinces. In fact, when we were in Manitoba, social organizations and young people came before us and expressed an opinion as to what tomorrow's Canada should be. It is the reason why I say that this committee is of paramount importance.

I fully agree with my colleagues who attempted to show that certain House committees travel too much during the sittings of the House. I would perhaps approve the idea put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that it might be desirable to have the committees sit one week every month and the House during the other three weeks. That is a realistic proposal, Mr. Speaker.

Obviously, the business of the House must first of all be carried out here, and it is only here that hon. members must make decisions. Out of this debate, the following principle will, I think, emerge: the committees must not have precedence over the House of Commons. Insofar and as long as the House of Commons remains the place where important decisions are made with regard to the country's business, our parliamentary institution will, I believe, be preserved.

I agree with my colleagues that meetings should be held in the provincial capitals. It is obviously impossible to visit all the important localities of each province.

We went to places in Manitoba with a population of approximately 800. Were the purposes of the committee served in this way? Perhaps not directly. Indirectly, however, we did establish contacts with these municipalities and towns.

I agree with the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) who favours visits to large centres. He suggests that a committee team should be allowed to go first in order to inquire and invite people from rural regions to meet the committee members and to submit briefs.

I think it is impossible—and the chairman of the committee probably agrees—to visit the most remote areas of each province. In Quebec, for instance, we could sit in Montreal, go to Quebec City and perhaps Chicoutimi.

There are, however, important towns where we should send in advance a team that would meet people, organizations as well as members of various associations and boards of trade in order to urge them to call on us.

My colleague from Peace River said something very important when he asked the House to adopt this procedure. Moreover, according to the hon. member for Wellington, it would save money.

Mr. Speaker, the former chairman of the Committee, the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan), gave the House the assurance that, from now on, he would submit to the House the schedule of travels planned by the Committee. This sets my mind at rest and if the activity of the committees is supervised by the House of Commons, I am not against the motion. I hope that it will not be necessary to vote on the subject.

I hope that the Committee on the Constitution will be reappointed this session and that newspapermen will understand this clearly. This debate does not mean that our party is against the work of the Committee on the Constitution. I would be very disappointed tonight to hear some newsmen say that the purpose of this debate was to demonstrate that the Progressive Conservatives do not support a Committee on the Constitution. The hon. member for Peace River in good faith has called the attention of the House on the mechanisms of the committees of the House, pointing out that we must think of revamping them to make them more efficient. He also asked those responsible for the committees to cut down their travelling expenses whenever possible.

Mr. Ricard: We are the ones who requested the appointment of a Committee on the Constitution.

Mr. Asselin: Yes, I said that before. As my colleague, the member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Ricard) mentioned, it is our party that called for the setting up of a Parliamentary Committee on the Constitution. Therefore we are not here to kill our baby, Mr. Speaker.

Committee chairmen should take into consideration the comments made this morning by the hon. member for Peace River in order to do a good job, while husbanding the taxpayers' money, and report on their activities to the Commons.

If this is the assurance given to us by the former chairman of the Committee, the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville, I am prepared to support the motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I will be as brief as possible since several members, including the honourable member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise), have already expressed quite valuable views.

We are certainly in favour of a study aimed at amending our constitution. We were not the last, when we arrived here in 1962, to ask that the constitution be amended.

Today, we are asked to establish a committee to study our constitutional problems. I feel that before considering constitutional reform we should first find out how the constitution should have been applied.

The federal and provincial governments failed to respect our constitution in the past, and before thinking of amending it, it is important to bear this in mind.

If history proves that we have often neglected to apply our constitution, how can we hope that a new constitution will fare better?

In my opinion, we should first give the people of this country and our legislative bodies the moral assurance that the present constitution has been brought into operation. Unfortunately, past experience tends to prove otherwise. Furthermore, how is it that in the troubled days that we are now living, we can't interrupt our regular activities to discuss the constitution as a matter of urgency while all across Canada, people are making use of radical means of protest?

The committee members are travelling to the Maritimes next week and from what I know, their hotel accommodations and their transportation have already been arranged and witnesses have been requested to appear before committee. Oddly enough, the House has not yet approved their trip.

In my opinion we proceeded too quickly. We are acting according to a plan whose consequence is that instead of pouring water on the very hot constitutional issue we are throwing oil on it. In view of the political situation in Canada, at a time when the Committee on the Constitution is about to leave for the Maritimes and other provinces in order to hear evidence and given above all the critical climate in Quebec, it surely will be a good opportunity for the separatists, the members of the FLQ and other radicals to exploit the situation in order to stage representations and demonstrations, which will be in direct contradiction with the aims behind the setting up of the Committee on the Constitution: to make a logical, serious and objective study. Perhaps the Committee will have to meet in localities where demonstrations with a lamentable outcome will take place.

• (2:30 p.m.)

I do not wish to be a prophet of doom but in the present circumstances I would suggest postponing the Committee's travels for a few weeks to allow the temporary situation in Quebec and elsewhere in Canada to improve, as I hope it will.

I quite fail to see any urgency for the motion, although personally I approve of it but feel that because of present circumstances adopting it would be giving revolutionaries and radicals an opportunity to mislead the people as to its purpose.

[Mr. Rondeau.]

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I would like in the next few minutes to make a modest contribution to the present proceedings on the establishment of a joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate for the purpose of considering the constitution.

Last year it was my privilege to attend the meetings of this committee which were conducted with remarkable ability by the hon. member for Windsor-Wakerville (Mr. MacGuigan and the hon. Senator Lamontagne.

We must bear in mind that the activities of the Committee on the Constitution will not necessarily lead to a complete revamping. The purpose of this committee is mainly to facilitate fruitful dialogue not only with hon. members but with the entire population.

I do not agree with those who claim that any study of the constitution must bring about a new or amended constitution. Above all, what is most essential, is not to impose a constitution on the people, but to become aware of what the people want. Canadians, whatever their origin, must be made to agree to live together in the same country. As for those who expect this committee to give them a new or an amended constitution, they are not helping the people.

The hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) said earlier that he did not approve of the members of the Committee on the Constitution going to the Maritimes. All I will say to him is that, not being a member of this committee, he cannot grasp its importance or its value.

When we had the opportunity, not so long ago, to go to the Yukon and Manitoba, I was the first to realize that I did not really know my huge country nor its problems that are often the same as those of Quebec which is very often held to be different but is not in some respects.

I think that such trips allow us to get in touch with the people themselves and not only with the agencies which represent an important part of the population. What is most important, Mr. Speaker, it is to meet people, to talk with them and to determine what they want and how they want to live in our great country.

I think that this committee is essential, that proceedings should go on just as in the last session. Again, I do not expect in the near future a new constitution or important amendments to it, but I hope that all hon. members are aware that regardless of political parties, we have received a mandate to represent not a party but the people and to try to meet their real needs.

As the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Asselin) said, I also feel quite optimistic and I am convinced that despite the momentary difficulties we are having there will arise a spirit of understanding among all Canadians.

Events now taking place in Quebec are most important and will perhaps make more Canadians realize that we are now living a critical period of our history. Instead of being disheartened, of losing hope, of refusing to face facts, it is important that we, English-speaking or French-speaking Canadians, should join forces to give Canada a suitable structure.

In closing I wish to say that I am sure this committee will know how to serve the best interests of the whole population. We must maintain this committee while trying to improve it, because in some respects it does not seem to be equal to the task. I find that too much restraint—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must remind the hon. member that the matter before us is to decide whether the members of the Committee on the Constitution should be granted the public funds they need to travel across Canada.

I do not think it is appropriate at the present time to reconsider whether the committee should exist, whether we should have a new constitution and how it should be adopted. It seems to me those matters extend far beyond the limited motion now before the House. If the Chair allows hon. members to engage in a substantial debate on amendments to the constitution, we will not get through the debate today.

• (2:40 p.m.)

I therefore suggest to the hon. member for Lapointe, who now has the floor, and to other hon. members who will perhaps want to participate in this debate that, for the efficiency of our proceedings, we should keep to the motion now under study.

Mr. Marceau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I think this warning is quite appropriate and I will merely close my remarks by saying that I wholly favour granting the funds required for the members of this committee to travel throughout the province but such funds should obviously be limited and controlled. Of course, when I said throughout the province I meant—

An hon. Member: Throughout Canada.

Mr. Marceau: —of course, throughout our wide country since, in my opinion, we should be aware of the problems facing the province of Quebec as well as those in other parts of Canada.

Therefore I approve the whole resolution while I admit that we cannot allow that unduly large sums be affected for that purpose. Although I believe the appropriation is justified, control should be kept over those funds in order to ensure that they be really used for the purpose we are proposing: a better constitution for Canadians.

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, being very interested in the make-up of this committee and conscious of its importance, I cannot help but add a few observations on the funds that must be allotted to this committee for a lot of reasons.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, it is not a question of discussing, as you said a while ago. It is not a question of any hon. member doubting the importance of this committee. It is rather a question of establishing its responsibilities. It seems clear to us that Parliament must be able to initiate any decision. I think that this is why some of my colleagues have expressed certain opinions.

I acknowledge, as has been done by many other members, that Parliament must necessarily dictate to committees, rather than be satisfied with the committee's report following its visits.

It seems quite clear to me that some kind of itinerary should be submitted here. Furthermore, this House should allow the committee to hold sittings in the major communities of Canada where representations might be made by local citizens to the benefit of the committee. This committee assuredly needs the support of public funds if it is to collect the best information available all over Canada. Its reports will then be based on information obtained from direct sources.

I am somewhat concerned by the opinion of the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) that the time is not ripe for the House to invite the committee to tour Canada. I believe that the deep dissatisfaction that exists in certain regions justifies the urgent government allocation of the funds the committee needs to start work as soon as possible.

• (2:50 p.m.)

According to that hon. member, that would amount to giving a chance to revolutionaries. The time has come for us to do something. We have shown enough tolerance with respect to certain freedoms. The government, in the present context, has not only the power, but the duty to take categorical decisions.

It is not by keeping silent, by holding this silence kept for too long, that the dangers facing us will be checked. To the contrary, all hon. members must support the establishment of that committee, in order that it may be given the necessary funds and that it may quickly report to Parliament. Then the latter will have to act as rapidly and introduce either amendments to the constitution or a new constitution altogether. It needs badly to be brought up to date.

With the appropriations available to the committee, it will be possible to come up with a constitution which will take into consideration the particularities found everywhere in Canada and not only in Quebec. Due to the serious efforts which will be made, this constitution will allow Quebec to anticipate the future within a federal system, with the necessary guarantees.

There is no need to mention that the committee has only to look up the documents submitted during the federal-provincial conferences for the past ten years to know exactly what Quebec's needs are. Such visits everywhere in Canada will make it possible for this committee to become fully aware of existing differences. The committee must get the funds it needs to study problems in the field and, having secured all the necessary information, I hope that in a year from now they will propose a constitution through which the freedoms of each individual are respected, and the needs of every province are recognized. We can then build something lasting, that will enable us, to face the future with much more hope and satisfaction than we can today.

Mr. Speaker: If the minister speaks now, he will close the debate.

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, my remarks on this motion will be very brief indeed. I want to thank hon. members for their participation in this short debate and for raising quite a number of important questions in connection with the operation of the standing and special committees. It is true that in the general opinion of members of the House the changes that have taken place in the rules have meant that the operation of standing committees has become more extensive, both legislatively and in examination of the estimates. It is also obvious that the new role of the standing and special committees has to some extent altered the atmosphere in the House of Commons itself. The general wish, of course, was to give this additional responsibility to standing committees; but it is now clear to all of us who are observing the House of Commons itself that the additional responsibility that has been given to the standing committees and to special committees has had an effect on the House itself.

Whether that effect has on the whole been totally beneficial is certainly something on which opinions will develop as time goes on. It is obvious that as standing committees multiply in importance and in the burdens they carry, the prospects for members attending debates in the House will decrease. It is a matter of regret to me that many important speeches are made in the Commons to a very small attendance.

Mr. Dinsdale: We are all at committees.

Mr. MacEachen: Members are elsewhere, hopefully doing their jobs in the committees. I for one, speaking personally, attach the highest importance to maintaining the House of Commons as the central forum in this country and as the central forum in our parliamentary system.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McGrath: It is about time somebody said that.

Mr. MacEachen: When we enthusiastically gave this new and important role to the standing and special committees, it was with the clear expectation that the role would be developed within the context of our parliamentary system. Certainly, no decision has been taken by this House or by any other authority of which I am aware that would lead to the conclusion that, because of the added importance of standing committees, we have adopted a congressional form of committee system.

It may be—indeed, I am sure this is the case—that the committee system is evolving, that things are happening within the committee system which affect the House and which have not been clearly foreseen or clearly intended, or indeed, may not have been fully thought out at the beginning. There is nothing wrong at all with that. We do want to maintain the importance of the committee system. But at the same time we want to know where we are going, just where this new system will lead us and what effect it is going to have on the House.

[Mr. Speaker.]

A lot of practical questions have been raised about the operation of the committee system, the cost, the logistics, about sub-committees, staffing, sittings of committees while the House is sitting and travel—new questions that have not been fully dealt with. Having myself expressed the opinion that the committee system is expected to operate within the parliamentary system, all I can say is that the House of Commons must maintain its mastery over the committees.

Having said that, I do not for a moment suggest that we turn the clock back. But I do suggest that we move forward in the direction of giving new importance to the committees. We must look at their role in the total context of the parliamentary system. Looking at it in that way, if changes ought to be made in our present system, then they ought to be made clearly and with full insight as to their effect.

I listened with great interest to the speech of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and to all other hon. members who have spoken in the debate, and I will certainly undertake to consider with my colleagues the question whether further study should be given by the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization to the operation of the committee system and where it is going. I want to say, speaking personally as government House Leader, that I intend to attempt to conduct my own examination of the effects of the committee system on our total operations and on the role of the member of parliament in order to obtain some clear idea, at least for my own guidance, as to the direction we should take in the future.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I recommend that this resolution be adopted, with the assurance that the suggestions that have been made will be carefully considered.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

• (3:00 p.m.)

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed, from Wednesday, October 14, consideration of the motion of Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Stanfield (p. 29), and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Fortin (p. 136).

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words this afternoon about the establishment of a new department of environmental affairs, and I should like to say at the outset that shaping our Canadian environment is the biggest challenge we face in the 1970's. It is a bigger challenge than unemployment. It is a bigger challenge than inflation. It is a bigger issue than pensions or skyjacking or the FLQ. To many Canadians it is a bigger challenge than all of our financial and social problems put together.

There is real urgency here. We have to act on the environmental front quickly and with determination. We have to move ahead of events, rather than from crisis to crisis. Our critical path, in other words, must be laid out ahead of time. We must have a plan to preserve the quality of our environment. We must preserve our wildlife and our fish and our trees. We must renew our renewable resources as quickly and as effectively as we know how.

Economic growth is essential. Social progress must also continue in the 1970's. But their spin-offs must not result in a deterioration of our surroundings. Economic growth and social progress, in other words, must be paced in relation to our environment. They must be managed in such a way as to improve the quality of life in this country.

From now on our emphasis must be on the wise management of our living resources and the elements that support them. Renewability of our living resources—fish, forests, birds, wildlife—and the renewed quality of our water, our soil and our air are the keys to a better future.

Industry, therefore, must keep its poisons to itself. Canada's cities and towns must do likewise. By recycling their wastes and renewing their inventories they can help us to progress on all fronts—social, economic and ecological in the 70's.

Industry's hard-nosed scientific approach has served us well in the past. But it has never been able to solve all our problems. It has had to bend to economic imperatives. Now it will have to bend, increasingly, to environmental considerations. Life in all its forms is too precious and our Canadian ecology is too fragile for us to ignore these environmental considerations any longer.

I do not want to give the wrong impression, Mr. Speaker. I am not talking about a change in direction; merely a change in emphasis. I am not turning my back on economic growth. But I am saying that industry must be more respectful of its surroundings. I am saying that our city planners must be concerned about renewability when they uproot trees and divert streams to make way for streets and modern buildings.

We must be careful for, if we break the chain of living things, entire structures come tumbling down. Wipe out a single species and you undermine an entire life pyramid. You undermine a system which would have gone on reproducing and renewing itself forever.

This is why our modern technologists have to tread carefully in the future. This is why our engineers must insulate many of our new processes from Canada's living environment. This is why we in government must make many of our human activities as neutral as possible—neutral in the biological sense of the word—and antiseptic in so far as our fish, our wildlife and our trees are concerned.

Some people, of course, would set the clock back. They would have us go back to the Middle Ages. They would even have us go back to "monkey hill" because they are afraid of modern science, they are afraid of modern technology, they are afraid of the side effects of industrial growth. Progress, in the materialistic sense of the word, is suspect. Apprehension, and occasionally fear, has taken its place in the hearts of many Canadians.

I disagree with those people who fearfully take what I regard as a static approach to these things. I disagree with those who look on our earthly biosphere as a timeless realm in which animals and plants jostle each other in humble harmony. They say that man must fit in, accept nature's limits, reduce his consumption, limit his reproduction, join the Society for Zero Population Growth.

On the contrary, I believe that man can better his lot, improve his standard of living, and still make the most of his environment. I believe that man can improve on nature. I believe that he can renew and replenish our living resources.

I believe that Canadians can build up their fisheries and increase the cut which they take from our forest lands. We can expand our resource base and operate on a sustained yield basis. In other words, we can use our human intelligence to plan and, with intelligent planning, we can have economic growth and a healthy environment as well.

Still, a word of caution as we enter the 1970's. Let us not lose sight of our ecological time scale. Let us not think that ecological changes can be made overnight. Often they take generations. Centuries may pass before a new life species will develop to its full potential.

This is why sudden changes in our environment are to be deplored. This is why industry must recycle its effluents and whole communities find other uses for their wastes. This is why the effects of modern physics and modern chemistry must be cushioned in various ways. This is why we must turn thumbs down on those who would tax the "assimilative capacity" of our local waters and our air. No lake, however large, and no atmosphere however vast is capable of absorbing man's harmful effluents forever.

Take the liquid metal mercury, for example. In its elemental form it is unknown in nature. But man has stripped it of its sulphur. He has released the metallic mercury and shipped it out to industry to use as it wishes.

Industry in turn, has used elemental mercury in an indiscriminate manner. It has been using mercury as if it were going out of style. It has been using it up as if it were a modern raw material. It has been letting metallic mercury loose on our environment without thinking about its effects on our forest on our wildlife, fish and worse still—at the top end of nature's food chain—man himself.

Mercury as everyone knows, is a heavy metal. It was supposed to sink to the bottom of our rivers and stay there. But minute bacteria went to work on it. They generated a soluble compound known as methyl mercury, a compound which dissolves in water, a compound which is flushed out into lakes and out into the sea.

Mercury in this poisonous form has also been moving up the food chain. It has moved from plants to fish in the Great Lakes and whales in Hudson Bay. It has shown up in even higher concentrations in the flesh of bird life as well. It threatens the life of human beings who eat fish.

Drifting backward and forward across our man made boundary lines, it has created problems which are not only inter-provincial but also international in character. The danger of poisoning to people has called for various interventions on our part here in Ottawa. We have had to close lakes to commercial fishing and make loans to commercial fishermen. We have had to destroy large quantities of fish and we have had to call upon industry to make amends.

As Minister of Fisheries, last spring I called for a meeting with the top executives in the chlor-alkali industry. I asked them to change their ways. I asked them to recycle all of their mercury bearing effluents within the factory fence. This the industry did, and promptly. Ninety per cent of its mercury losses have now been eliminated. Soon the figure will be 99 per cent! That is not bad going when you realize that we first ran into this mercury thing in the fall of 1969, less than a year ago.

Some of you will remember the famous Trail smelter case in the 1920's which involved air. Fumes from the big lead-zinc refinery in southeastern British Columbia drifted over into the State of Idaho. American citizens there sued the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company Limited in Canada. They forced Cominco to strip the sulphur out of these fumes. And stripping out the sulphur led to the creation of a fertilizer industry. It created an industry which has flourished in western Canada ever since.

This is only one example of an industry which has benefited, in the long run, from a pollution abatement program. Ammonium sulfate is now a major by-product of many of our mining operations in Canada. Not only does it make money for those companies but it also encourages things to grow. It gives impetus to a thousand life cycles and it helps to renew our environment in a dozen different ways.

Look at our big pulp and paper industry. This industry alone is responsible for half of the bulk of the pollution which enters our rivers and streams at the present time. Look what it has done under pressure from our Fisheries Act. New kraft mills have installed settling basins and built biological treatment ponds. Half a dozen of them are said to be among the cleanest mills in the world. They are clean enough for salmon and they are clean enough for the tourist industry. This is a big change from half a dozen years ago when pulp and paper, inevitably, meant pollution and pollution meant a loss of business to the motel owners and the fishing lodges in the areas where these mills were located.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Again, there have been welcome by-products. Canadian engineering firms have shown us how to design these treatment facilities. They have been so successful that other countries have been asking for their services. Sandwell and Company and H.A. Simmons in Vancouver now have contracts in Sweden and the U.S.S.R. They are helping those countries to clean up their rivers and streams. Think of it! They would never have got this work if we in the Fisheries Department had not insisted that our pulp mills must not kill salmon on the Fraser River and that the waters downstream must be fit for any one of us to use for swimming.

Here again, we have shown that our environmental problems are solvable. We have shown that they can be solved so long as government continues to insist that industry tighten up on its housekeeping, that each plant recycle its effluents within the factory fence, and that anything that leaves its property does not unduly burden the assimilative capacity of the water or the air in its local surroundings.

One thing which hon. members should bear in mind is that we have a special competence at the federal level. We have a special competence here in Ottawa. We have a special competence in federal offices and federal research establishments across the country. This competence—this unique competence—is on the biological front. We have Canada's cadre of biologists, engineers with a background in biology, planners with a sensitivity for living things, fish, wildlife, trees, tundra, parklands and so on.

Proof of what I am saying is to be found, not only in the high regard with which our top fish and wildlife biologists are held the world over, but also in the actions of the provinces themselves. Out in my home province of British Columbia, the minister in charge of pollution, the Hon. Ray Williston, deals directly with our regional fisheries offices asking for advice, our forestry pathologists asking for advice and our wildlife people asking for advice. Our regional experts on the biological front are his experts, and let's keep it this way.

The mercury problem in Ontario demonstrates what I am saying in another way. The Hon. George Kerr and Ontario's Water Resources Commission naturally look to us to be the experts on fish and other aquatic plant life like algae. They have all sorts of engineers, economists and administrators. They have a lot of very competent people and they have already done a lot to protect our environment. But the fact remains; they look to us for advice on the biological side, on the living side, on the renewable resource side. It makes sense and I hope they continue to do this in future.

Clearly smaller provinces do not have this competence. Quebec does not have anything resembling a biological research board; Alberta does not; Manitoba does not. Nor are they likely to. Environmental research on the biological side is an all-embracing matter. It cannot be provincialized. It should not be provincialized because our environment is essentially global. Like life itself it is bigger than all of us.

Our fisheries and forestry staff is now being supplemented by other competent people. They are being joined by scientists, engineers, resource economists and technicians from the Wildlife Service and from the water resources section of the Mines Department. Add in survey crews which our forestry service sends out every summer and other teams from the Meteorological Service and from National Health and Welfare, and you can see that we in this department are already plugged in to our natural environment. We are already keeping a keen eye on things, locally and regionally from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the high Arctic to the International Boundary Line.

This manpower, backed up by regional laboratories is extremely helpful. But we still need a system of continuous monitoring—monitoring of our water, our air and our soil. We need to know what is happening, hour by hour, to our fish and our trees, to our wildlife and our birds, and to the health of man himself. We should be in a position to publish local environmental indices such as the air pollution index which is being reported, regularly, in Toronto these days.

Like our consumer price index these environmental indices will help Canadians to know how fast things are improving and what effects new industries are having on the communities in which they locate. At the beginning of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I stressed the need for action. I talked about a critical path. I talked about a timetable and I talked about getting things done. Here are a few of the highlights which I see us hitting over the next few months. Here are a few of the things which we can do before our new Department of Environmental Affairs is formally set up by Parliament.

First, we can transfer the relevant branches, divisions and sections of other departments to Fisheries and Forestry and begin to operate as a federal unit next week.

Second, I can, privately, name a dozen key advisers across the country. These authorities in the twin fields of renewable resource development and environmental control will meet with me periodically. We will begin to hammer out our guidelines. We will begin the task of mapping our future and roughing out our critical path for the early 70's. Here, then, is our National Environmental Council in embryo. These men and women will form the nucleus around which the government might later build a formally constituted council for the future.

Third, I personally intend to meet all of the provincial ministers who are concerned with pollution and the quality of life. I will go to them; they will not have to come to me. I will visit the provincial capitals asking for advice and talking about co-operation. I will ask our provincial people how they think we should word a new national clean air act. I will be pushing all of them to name water quality management areas—areas for joint federal-provincial management in which our new Canada Water Act can apply and soon.

Fourth, we will shortly be releasing our first nationwide standards under the Fisheries Act. These regulations will be brought in industry by industry. Starting with elemental mercury and phosphorous we will move quickly into pulp and paper. Already our regulations dealing with effluents from the pulp and paper industry have been drafted. Next week we will begin discussions of them in all their detail with the provinces and with the industry itself. Some further editing may be required because we want these regulations to work. But they will be proclaimed before the end of the year and they will then provide national norms which new mills must surpass and to which old ones must move during the 70's.

Fifth, we can do more, much more, under the Canada Shipping Act. We can get a lot tougher with tanker owners and the oil companies. We must set up revolving funds to look after those who, through no cause of their own, are hurt by oil spills and the like. And we must have task forces standing by in case of future crises like the Arrow and the Irving Whale.

Sixth, we can launch more high priority, government-industry sponsored research projects similar to the one I recently announced for the pulp and paper industry aimed at the development of new processes for treating their effluents in a satisfactory way.

Seventh, we can encourage and provide as much information as possible to local societies whose aim it is to clean up their surroundings and make proposals for action to the government.

Finally, a word about perspectives. Our tiny earth is rocketing through space like a capsule. Clearly it is self-contained and self-sustaining. Biologically speaking it can also be self-regulating. A million life cycles are pulsating within well defined limits—limits set by the earth's own eco-system. These life cycles are linked and interact with each other in a million different ways.

In the past things seemed to work reasonably well. Now, however, some sand appears to be getting into our gears. Like moondust, this sand is barren. It is inorganic. It is inanimate. It is non-living. It is non-renewable. Worse still, this sand is sometimes anti-biological in nature. It can destroy life. It can wipe out entire species. It can strip our gears. It can mess up our food chains and it can even poison man himself.

• (3:20 p.m.)

This sand is the product of man's own inventiveness. It is being created by our chemists and our physicists. It includes radioactive waste, chlorinated hydrocarbons and metallic substances like mercury. It is being turned loose in our sensitive biosphere.

This sort of thing has to stop. It has to stop immediately. This is why industries will have to clear their new products in the future, and this is why industry must recycle its effluent. This is why old factories and our existing cities and towns must become as antiseptic as possible. This is why we need to co-operate at all levels of government in Canada. This is why we also need a new department of environmental affairs to work at home and to work with other countries in our crusade to save man from himself.

I hope I have convinced you, Mr. Speaker, that shaping our Canadian environment is the biggest challenge we face in the 70's. We need economic growth but we need a clean environment as well. We need social progress and quality of life. We need to renew and revitalize. We need to put the accent on the living rather than the dead.

This is why I urge all hon. members to support us in our initiatives to pass a new clean air act and put more teeth into the Canada Shipping Act during the current session, also to support us in setting up a new department of environmental affairs in Canada, the first national department of its kind anywhere in the world.

Mr. Lundrigan: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Davis: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lundrigan: Perhaps I may not be permitted to say that what we have heard is the biggest contribution to pollution in Canada of which I am aware in the last couple of years.

May I ask the minister a question? In view of the fact that both the west and the east coasts of Canada, with six provinces directly affected and all of Canada indirectly affected by the possibility of fisheries having only about a five year life span left in the event that we do not get very active and aggressive conservational measures from the federal government—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Would the hon. member put his question.

Mr. Lundrigan: My question is coming and it is very simple. Can the minister having given us that gobbledygook, get around to indicating to the Canadian people, to the House of Commons and to his parliamentary secretary who was just recently appointed, what initiatives the new department of environmental control which will be part of the Department of Fisheries and Forestry, is planning to take to protect the Canadian people from the depletion of our major fishery resource which constitutes 10 per cent of the industry producing aspect of our economy?

Mr. Davis: The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) is very knowledgeable in fishery matters and he knows—and he knew before he began to ask his question—what our initiatives are. They are several. First, we have, through the North Atlantic Fisheries Commission which involves 12 countries, argued for a sustained yield operation in the North Atlantic. We are trying also by taking the lead at the next Law of the Sea Conference, to make this policy effective, to put fishing on a sustained yield basis and to put the countries which own the shelf areas, and this includes Canadian control over the Grand Banks, in a special position where we will not only have a sustained yield operation out there but where our own fishermen will be on the inside track. It will be the first time in the world's history that we will have had a major fishery with a predictable resource to exploit, and certainly the first time in the history of Canada when our own fishermen will have some sort of guarantee for the future.

Mr. Lundrigan: In view of the fact that the North Atlantic Fisheries Commission to which the minister referred has been recommending for five years that initiatives need to be taken and of the fact this commission has proven to be ineffective because it is not at a sufficiently high level to take initiatives, can the minister indicate whether there are any new initiatives to be taken. It has already been proven that the recommendations of this Commission have not been accepted and are not effective. Can he indicate as well—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The Chair has to bring the hon. member to order. His question is quite argumentative and he will have the opportunity to make a speech in due course. So if he has a question to put to the minister he should put it as plainly and as briefly as possible.

Mr. Lundrigan: I do not have further questions to put to the minister but I would like to say that it looks as though the FLQ—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please.

Mr. McGrath: Would the minister permit one short question? Can he assure the House and the country, and especially the fishing industry of the country, that fishery problems will not be neglected when he assumes his new responsibilities as the minister responsible for pollution. I ask that question quite sincerely.

Mr. Davis: I think the hon. member has asked me a very good question. The fisheries service has to remain an integral service in our new department. It has to be regarded by the fishermen, as their service. It will remain intact in so far as I am concerned. It will also have the first call on my time.

Mr. Lundrigan: Why did the minister not refer to it then?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I thought the applause was for me but I guess it was for my colleague, the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan).

I was fortunate indeed to find myself following the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis) in his remarks to the House concerning his new duties as minister in charge of environmental affairs. I propose to direct my remarks to the same subject.

First, I want to wish the minister well in carrying out the additional responsibilities which the government proposes to give him. Our party agrees with many of the proposals that the minister has made since it was indicated that he would be appointed to this position, and also with many of the actions that he has taken over the last six or eight months in connection with pollution control. We believe that he is concerned, as we all are, with the environment, and he has made an effort to show it.

But this afternoon I want to make a critical examination of the situation in which the minister finds himself and of some of the problems which he is facing in assuming these new responsibilities. I will be pointing out that the minister has been hobbled and hamstrung by the votes and actions of his own colleagues and of the government itself. He is going to have great difficulties in carrying out his objectives. It is with this in mind that I will point out to the minister some of the problems that I see before him and that I hope he can overcome.

First, I should express my congratulations to the mover (Mr. Trudel) and seconder (Mr. Douglas (Assiniboia)) of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne and to say it is always a privilege to be nominated to make these addresses.

The government has made three proposals in the Speech from the Throne and in the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) comments which followed: first, to re-organize the government structure to create a ministry concerned with the environment and to bring into the Department of Fisheries and Forestry several sections from other departments; second, to bring in a clean air act or some similar legislation described in the list of legislation as "air pollution legislation"; third, to propose amendments to the Canada Shipping Act with relation to pollution.

I must say at first that I agree with the necessity for such legislation. With regard to the creation of a department through which to consolidate pollution control efforts, we on this side have been pressing for this for some time now without too much response from the government or the Prime Minister until pressure from all sources began to build up. For example, on April 29 of this year, as recorded at page 6411 of Hansard I asked the Prime Minister the following question:

• (3:30 p.m.)

May I ask the Prime Minister if he intends to designate a minister to co-ordinate pollution control activities?

The reply was:

—we do assure co-ordination of pollution activities in a variety of ways, cabinet committees being one of them.

Immediately following that, the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate asked the Prime Minister if consideration would be given to having the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry "co-ordinate all activities relating to pollution control, which is now under four or five different ministers." I quote Hansard:

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member very much for the suggestion which I must say is not very helpful.

There was a very definite answer, that he did not really intend doing anything about the consolidation of pollution control efforts.

Early this year, it became obvious that there were two views within the government on how to approach the question of water pollution. One was proposed by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) who was tied to the Canada Water Act, and who rejected absolutely the principles of adopting national water quality standards, of requiring internal pollution control inside the factory fence, and of placing parliamentary restraint upon the export of water. I will deal with these aspects of the problem later in detail.

At the same time, the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry was making speeches around the country, in which he seemed to be of the opposite view. He seemed to be accepting those views which the Opposition was then presenting, and I must say that the public was indeed confused. I would hope that some of the confusion has been reduced, but I doubt it and I intend to show why.

On April 13 of this year, I asked the Prime Minister if he could clear up some of the problems within his government, and which appeared to be coming out to the public, by asking him, as recorded in Hansard of that date:

In view of the provisions of Bill C-204 which was given first reading on Friday and which effectively passes control over to the Department of Fisheries and Forestry, has a policy decision been made that administration of water pollution control in Canada should be given to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry?

The Prime Minister replied:

No, Mr. Speaker. Control is divided between the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who is responsible for the application of the provisions of the water act and the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry.

I then asked:

Might I ask the Prime Minister which of these ministers is responsible in the case of a conflict between inspectors under the two acts?

The Prime Minister replied:

Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member will give us an example of a conflict I will answer his question.

Of course at that time I could not engage in an argument, but I am doing it now. At that time the Prime Minister did not seem to know that there was a conflict, and apparently he did not intend to do anything about settling the conflict. Now, apparently, the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry has won the struggle, and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will have the administration of the Canada Water Act taken away from him. I do not say this is basically bad because I do not really think the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry will be inheriting anything very helpful when he gets it. However, that is the situation now.

Following the Speech from the Throne and the Prime Minister's statement, the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry wasted no time in repudiating the policies adopted by the government and, I may say, Parliament as well by virtue of a majority of votes in the last session. As I have already said, I have a great deal of respect for the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry and I incline more to his views than to those of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on some of these basic issues.

But, Mr. Speaker, I want to ask, where does the government stand as a government responsible for making policy decisions on these issues? It is not good enough that the Prime Minister supports one view today and another tomorrow, or that he supports one minister today and another tomorrow. How can the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry hope to proceed expeditiously in water pollution control with some of these major decisions already made, voted upon and recorded, opposite to the views he now expresses?

The first thing is money. The Canada Water Act and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources both foundered because the government would allot no money for pollution control efforts. That minister had to back and fill in an effort to make it appear that the government was doing something. He was sacrificed on the altar of expediency. Is the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry any better off today? There certainly was no indication that he is, either in the Speech from the Throne or in the Prime Minister's remarks.

There is a second difficulty related to the export of water. This issue was placed squarely before Parliament on June 3, 1970. Two members of the opposition, the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) and the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding), each had motions before the House asking that no water be exported from Canada without the approval of Parliament. Surely, that was not an untenable view, but their motions were voted down by the government majority, as recorded at pages 7689 and 7690 of Hansard. It is interesting to note that voting against those motions were the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Prime Minister, all of which seemed to indicate the government was taking an attitude that it would not concern itself with Parliament in respect of this matter, and that the issue of the export of water was one on which it could exercise some flexibility. We now find that the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry is taking a definite view on this issue, and I may say that I agree with him in principle.

As recorded in the Globe and Mail of October 10, 1970 the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry laid down four basic rules regarding water resources. The first was:

> Don't export water to the United States because it will never be possible to cut off the flow.

We agree with this. This was the suggestion we made last May and June when we tried to sell it to the government, but by its vote in this House the government rejected that idea. Where does this leave the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry? There has been a parliamentary decision on the issue, which is going to be very difficult to overcome.

There is another problem here, and again a decision was made by a vote of the House. Time and again during the debate on the Canada Water Act in the committee, in the House and outside it, the opposition pressed for the adoption of a set of water quality standards which would be applicable across Canada. The government just as stubbornly resisted.

In this connection, I wish to quote two comments made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources during the committee proceedings on February 2. The first is to be found at page 1:14, as follows:

> A national standard would be a licence, and a free licence, to pollute.

[Mr. Aiken.]

Again at page 1:15 he was recorded as saying, speaking as a Minister of the Crown:

> In our opinion uniform standards would not be in the best interest of achieving the highest quality of water all across Canada.

• (3:40 p.m.)

That is what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said just a few months ago on behalf of the government. On June 3, 1970, as recorded at page 7691 of Hansard, there was a recorded vote in the House on a motion moved by the hon. member for South Western Nova (Mr. Comeau) which read in part as follows:

> Forthwith upon the coming into force of this Act, the Governor in Council, upon the recommendation of the Minister, shall establish water quality standards for all clases of water in Canada.

That is a clear statement of policy and of intent to establish water quality standards. The government, including the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Prime Minister voted against this motion to set up water quality standards.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That was two-faced.

Mr. Aiken: That position was established and adopted by the government and, even worse, by Parliament by a majority of votes. This is the position. We can reverse it. Nevertheless, we shall certainly wonder if the government today is against establishing water quality standards all across Canada and is in favour of such a course. I want to go farther and quote what the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry said on September 23 in Toronto. I shall read from his own press release:

> So there is a great deal to be said for national standards. There is a great deal to be said for standards which apply to Canadian industries from coast to coast. Each new plant will have to meet the same set of criteria. They will not be able to seek out 'pollution havens' in some of our weaker provinces. There will be no local cesspools and the game will be the same regardless of where a firm is operating, in Newfoundland or B.C.

I agree with this position. This is exactly what we spent the whole of the last session trying to promote, in connection with legislation then before the House. It is almost exactly, word for word, our position.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

An hon. Member: But they got rid of Whelan.

Mr. Aiken: We voted on this in the House, and national standards were turned down.

The minister also said this in another speech, in Courtenay, B.C. His speech, I think, was similar to the one he made in Toronto.

> Why should we buck national standards which will force other parts of the country to clean up as well? Pollution havens in the East won't help our economic growth in the West. Nor will any lessening of standards, locally, in one part of B.C. help the rest of the province to develop as it should.

Again, we agree. Yes, we agree. Pollution havens were what we feared during the debate on the Canada Water Act. Pollution havens were what we feared when we moved our amendment to establish national water quality standards. Those amendments were turned down in committee, voted down during the report stage and again voted down on third reading. Now, the minister has come along and said, "But I agree."

I am not trying to make the government look ridiculous—which it is. I am trying to point out that it is faced with a technical and difficult problem. It adopted a policy, as did Parliament, in connection with this matter. How are we to get out from under and reverse ourselves? We could reverse ourselves; the House, of course, could do that. It is the gentlemen who are in the majority who must reverse themselves, because they have already cast their votes and voted down our amendments. I say that not only is this ridiculous, but it makes the job of the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry extremely difficult.

Before sitting down, I should like to twist his arm a little more, and rub his nose a little in what has happened. I sympathize with the minister. He has said what we, sitting here, have tried to encourage the government to say. We are glad that the minister has now said the proper thing. But where does that leave him in the light of the views he has expressed and the way he has voted?

I want to talk now about what is called the factory fence rule. I am glad the minister mentioned it today, because I do not think I need go any farther than I am about to go in my explanations. This is one of the things we pressed for throughout the hearings connected with the Canada Water Act. Although the act is foggy in general, one of its provisions permits an industry to dump pollutants into water, upon the payment of an effluent fee. The degree of effluent discharged may be open to argument; nevertheless, the principle is there. We, on this side, were trying to establish the principle that polluters should clean up pollution within their own boundaries, within their own factory fences, and that they should not be allowed to pollute by paying a fee for polluting.

Here, again, the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry has been promoting exactly what we have been promoting, the factory fence rule. However, it did not tie in with the principles of the Canada Water Act. I pressed, as did my party, for the recognition of this principle: that factories, and particularly new factories, should be required to contain within their boundaries their own pollution. We recognize that there are problems with some existing plants but see no reason why new plants should not be required to contain within their own boundaries their own pollution. I moved an amendment to the relevant section which would have prohibited new plants coming into operation, after the Canada Water Act became effective in any area from dumping pollutants. It would have required them to maintain the pollutants within the factory fence. Again, the government rejected our amendment, using its majority both in the committee and in the House. Here I must say this for the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry: although he was present for the first three votes, he was not present for the last one on this matter. It is fortunate that he was called out of the House, because this point is the one that he himself has been pressing so strongly.

On September 26, 1970, which is not very long ago, after having had his colleagues vote against this particular rule, the minister said:

> Perhaps I should make my own position clear at the outset. It is in favour of recycling within the factory fence. It is on the side of treatment before discharge.
>
> ...I believe that modern industry wants to clean up. I know that our pulp and paper industry, for example, is prepared to build new plants which incorporate the best anti-pollution devices known to mankind. These should be a requirement in any new plant. They should be a requirement regardless of location.

The minister again today repeated this position, which we support. He mentioned it in several other speeches of which he has been kind enough to send me copies. So, this is the position: most of the amendments that the opposition moved in the first part of the last session were justified and correct. We wanted to consolidate the department and make sure somebody was in charge of pollution control. The Prime Minister, while resisting this for a time, has now accepted it, and for that I give him credit. Secondly, the minister has adopted most of the major program that our party put forward in its proposals on the Canada Water Act last year. I suppose we should not object to that. We are certainly glad that the proposals we have made are now being accepted.

• (3:50 p.m.)

I raise the question, where does this leave the minister? This is my main point. Where is he going to get the necessary money? It is all right to say the polluter must pay. We agree in principle with this, but it is not realistic to say that the federal government does not have to spend any money. This is the position the government has taken for the past year. The government says it will spend no money, the polluter must pay.

I hope the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry is able to pry a little money from his colleagues the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) and the Prime Minister because he is going to need it. If the minister wants support from our side of the House, we undertake to give it because we think he needs some funds. There must be a new approach by the government to pollution control. I hope the minister has been successful in persuading his colleague to accept the point of view he has been expressing for the past two weeks. If he has, it is a good start because it is a complete adoption of the policies that we have been proposing.

In conclusion I wish to point out that pollution control will not be achieved, and I am sure the minister realizes this, by shuffling offices around in Ottawa for the next six months, as necessary as that may be. I know that he will be hamstrung for some period of time until he can get his new organization completed.

The minister, after reorganization, unless the government moves to pull him out of the situation in which he is now, will be strangled by inconsistent policies, restricted by adverse parliamentary votes, and deserted from lack of funds. He can look to this side of the House, as in the past, for support of good efforts toward pollution control. I hope his colleagues will at least do the same in a meaningful way.

Mr. E. B. Osler (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say how very fitting it was that the member representing Bourassa (Mr. Trudel) and the member representing Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) were asked to move and second the Speech from the Throne that started this debate. I cannot think of anything more fitting, both from the point of view of the character and abilities of the men involved and from the historical note that one senses when one says "Bourassa" and "Assiniboia".

These two names cannot help but make every member conscious of the great heritage that has come from French Canada and spread across the rest of Canada. The area of Assiniboia, the country of the Assiniboian, was opened up by people who could not have been born very far from the constituency of Bourassa. Assiniboia is the name that commemorates that country of the Assiniboian which was opened up by these men. I just wanted to remind hon. members of the very fitting nature of the selection that was made.

In these days of crises that we seem to be going through, that may or may not be very serious and which may last for a long time or a short time, it is fitting to remind hon. members that we in Canada are very lucky. We have every reason to be proud. Regardless of the ups and downs of the financial situation and the ups and downs of the popularity of the people involved, our Canadian armed forces can be relied upon always to do their job at a moment's notice. We have seen that just this week. There is not the slightest doubt in anyone's mind that they are capable of carrying out the rather touchy assignment that requires cool heads and tough minds.

The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) spoke very well and contributed greatly to the debate. However, the underlying thrust of his thought seemed to be the allegation that changes had taken place, but the taking place of change and the ability to change policy in itself seemed to be bad. I am not debating whether these changes have taken place or whether there has been a change in policy. I certainly do not think that if policies are changed they should be labelled as expediencies because, thank God, policies have changed ever since the first man developed the first policy.

There have even been changes in the Conservative party. One hundred years ago they had giants like Macdonald, Cartier, Galt and McGee.

Mr. Whelan: Now they have midgets.

Mr. Osler: Changes do take place, Mr. Speaker. They take place all over Canada. Canada is a federal state, as we all know, with ten provinces. It is a state with six regions, a fact we sometimes forget. We seem to be getting mesmerized by this federal-provincial business that seems to go on all the time. I do not want to decry the provinces in any way, but I do not think they are pre-ordained instruments for representing a particular region's point of view. Indeed, in some cases they have been, up to now, often negative toward Canada as a whole to such a degree that they could be labelled by a disinterested observer as parochial.

The people of a large metropolitan area, burdened down by very heavy property taxes, yet unable to find adequate financing for the urban improvements that must be made, derive little comfort from watching men on television advancing esoteric arguments as to whether the federal or provincial authorities are responsible for their problems. A Maritimer, bogged down by an unacceptably low level of employment opportunity, fails to see the merit of a tight money policy designed to cure inflation in Toronto or Vancouver.

In my own Prairie region we have many problems that I would like to speak about, but I will confine myself to one example. It is not particularly inspiring for us to know that according to DBS figures the city of Toronto alone can offer job opportunities in the civil service equal to 85 per cent of the opportunities available for the entire Prairie region. Our population in the three Prairie provinces is approximately 18 per cent of the total population of Canada, yet we have about 12 per cent of the civil service jobs. Without descending to the level of parochialism, I suggest we would not be realistic if we were to suggest that those on the Prairies who wish to serve in the civil service have equality of opportunity with those in some other parts of the country who wish to do the same.

Another situation I want to decry, and this cannot be laid directly at the feet of provincial governments, is the phenomenon called economic separatism. It is practiced by various provinces which allow between 5 per cent and 10 per cent "protection" to local industries in connection with tenders over which they have control. This practice could almost be said to constitute economic suicide on a national scale for it encourages artificially the spread of a product's production geographically regardless of efficiency. This, in turn, means that production as a whole, especially in similar units of secondary industry tends to be uneconomic, that prices tend to be unnecessarily high. This, again, penalizes both the consumer at home and the manufacturer who is trying to compete on the export markets of the world.

• (4:00 p.m.)

In addition, it militates against the less populated provinces because it becomes almost mandatory for a small, expanding company to locate in a rich, highly populated provinces so that it may get a chance to bid on that province's "controlled" business. Thus, the central provinces, and possibly British Columbia in some cases, get new secondary industries which should perhaps, from a national point of view, be established elsewhere. Moreover, a great deal of the good which the federal government is seeking to do through its Department of Regional Economic Expansion is negated.

Economic separatism is parochialism of the worst sort. Some way must be found to stamp it out. I bring forward this point of view, Mr. Speaker, only to show that we shall not get equality of opportunity by dickering on television with ten provincial premiers, no matter how long the process continues. It may accomplish other things, but I do not think it will accomplish that.

There are other situations which give rise to despondency if one happens to live outside the magic central circle. Our banking system, for example, originates in this House, as I understand it, but we in the west feel that the branch bank system which has been set up in Canada militates against us, though it is efficient and good in many ways. I would say that it militates against the Maritimes and the Northwest Territories in the same way. All the savings of the people of this country are siphoned into the two central provinces where the head offices of the various banks are located. To be sure, some of the funds are re-invested in the outer provinces but nowhere near the percentage one would hope.

Then there is the whole question of transportation. It is amazing to me that the Transport Commission, a federal agency, should seriously be considering an application by the Canadian Pacific Railway to eliminate or cut down the service provided by its one remaining transcontinental train. From the point of view of executives of the company, secure in their headquarters in Montreal, I suppose this seems a good idea because, they say, passenger train service no longer pays. But if we look at the statistical summary of the affairs of this company provided by the Financial Post we find it had total assets, back in 1885, of $158 million. Two years ago they had increased to almost $3.35 billion, an apparent increase of more than 2,100 per cent. The real increase is far greater, of course, because there are all sorts of spin-off investments which do not show up to their full value in the balance sheet. And in the same period, shareholders have received dividends amounting to more than $1,455 million.

Now, I am not one of those who think profits are a sin. I do not believe Canadian Pacific has done a bad job for Canada. By the same token, Canada has not done a bad job for the CPR. As a minor shareholder in the company I can rejoice in a personal way at its success but I cannot help wondering what is going on when they have the nerve to appear before the Transport board in an effort to get rid of their one remaining transcontinental train. Indeed, the Canadian Pacific seems to be trying to get rid of all its trains. Freight trains can be eliminated by educating customers into a realization that almost any other method of shipping goods is speedier and more reliable. Passengers can be eliminated by insisting that they are irrelevant. One way of doing this is to computerize the reservation system and then rig the computers to show that no space is available for sale. If you do it right, it is easy to prove that there are no passengers and thus no requirement for trains. I am not suggesting that this is, in fact, what is being done. I am simply suggesting that there are a number of ways in which the demand for trains can be eliminated.

Once a railway company embarks on such a program, if it keeps up its courage and insists on following it through, it ends up in an ideal situation. The company retains its real estate without the inconvenience of actually having to run trains. In the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway—and I am not suggesting I am familiar with the long term aims of this company—we now have a very effective corporate entity which insists it can no longer afford to run its one remaining cross-country passenger train. As an alternative to outright abandonment it suggests the federal government should help it run the train three days a week. I do not think this is a very good idea. It sounds very efficient, but both the travelling public and the wellbeing of the work force involved are supposed to be the scale against which we value things in this country. I venture to suggest that neither Canada nor the CPR will go broke if by some mutually acceptable formula The Canadian is kept running on the same basis as it is today.

I mention this matter, Mr. Speaker, because it is a peculiarly western problem. You see, after all, it was 25 million acres of western land which was given to this company in the first place, a generous gesture by the federal government of the day when there were only three or four western members who might have queried the arrangement in Parliament. At that time the federal power still had jurisdiction over the natural resources of the west. In the 'thirties control over those resources was turned back to the western regions. But we got back our natural resources less 25 million acres, whereas the $25 million cash subsidies which the east advanced were ultimately repaid. It also happens to be provable statistically that more western Canadians use the CPR facilities on a passenger mile basis than do people in other parts of the country. So, the deal which was made with our land is being reneged on and I am appalled to find that a federal agency should be considering such a proposal as is now before it.

There is another feature of this matter which interests me. If we are going to wheel and deal in real estate, why should the CPR, a soulless corporation though perhaps a fine one, be allowed to reconsider the terms of a land deal made some 85 years ago? We ought not to forget that the Indians and the Metis, the original Canadians of this country, also made land deals at about the same time, yet no one has thought of allowing them to renegotiate, even though their deals turned out to be at least as unprofitable to them as have passenger trains to the CPR.

To change the subject, we are all happy to note the dramatic improvement in the wheat situation, thanks especially to Lift and the exigencies of nature in faraway places.

An hon. Member: What has Lift to do with it?

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. Osler: You have been talking to different farmers from the ones to whom I talked. Anyhow, my point is that for the first time in years there has been a federal initiative taken to do something more than just tell people to cut their own throats by growing everything that they can. Whether this is an absolutely ideal program or a program that is somewhat less than perfect, it is at least a program that has been partially successful.

I hope the members of the opposition will agree with me completely when I say that since we have Ottawa and the bureaucracy thinking constructively for once about the problems of the wheat farmers in the west, then let us keep it that way. These are problems that Canadians as a whole should be concerned with, just as much as Canadians as a whole were concerned with the problems of the textile industry, an industry that Parliament has been asked to bail out on a temporary basis until it finds its feet again. I contend that the Prairie farmers have to rationalize their operations, and trying to be funny about it is not going to help.

Once long ago one of the Fathers of Confederation called D'Arcy McGee prophesied that the hodge-podge of small colonies and vast territories comprising British North America would one day become a great northern nation. "For such it must become", he said, "if all of us do our duty to the last".

At the time he made that statement some people felt that we were outgrowing the Constitution, and they were trying to put together a new one. Whether or not we should be trying to do the same thing now is difficult to say, but it is a question that we should examine and that we are examining. As I said before, perhaps we should carry it on at the federal-provincial level, though so far the progress made has to my mind been very minimal. I suggest that the most promising level is that touched on earlier today by, I believe it was, the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Asselin). I refer to the level that examines the relationship of individuals with their federal institutions. From the little I have seen as a member of the constitutional committee, this is a very promising avenue for our attention.

It is abundantly clear that a major source of the so-called alienation we are always hearing about is to be found in this relationship between the federal government, the central government, and the people of the country. Here I am not talking politically, speaking as a member of one party to another. This relationship has nothing to do with the other dialogue that is going on between the provinces and the central government, nor has it ever been adequately articulated by the provincial premiers during the three years they have been involved in constitutional review.

As I read the message of the people which I have heard so far, it seems self-evident that there is a viable Canadian community and Canadian personality manifest in our diverse cultural heritages and in our concern for the well-being of other Canadians. But our common institutions have, at least until recently, in their opinion appeared to be letting us down.

The federal position stated in "Federalism for the Future" is that the constitutional debate should review the rights of individuals before embarking upon a review of the rights of governments. From this, it is argued that we need a constitutional charter of human rights, and so on and so forth.

[Mr. Osler.]

In my opinion there is nothing wrong with this argument; it is a good concept. But with or without such a bill, many people today feel profoundly that as inhabitants of a particular region they are not being adequately heard in the centre, Ottawa. If this feeling has justification, then it shows that we must not only be concerned with human rights; we must also be concerned with federal institutions, which should be reformed regardless of what may happen as a result of the other dialogue between the premiers and the Prime Minister.

I am not talking about the merits or demerits of any particular federal party at this point. I am saying that in Canada we have a unique situation: we have a federal state that was set up about 103 years ago which positively guaranteed that there would be a preponderence of political power in the hands of the most populated regions.

The provinces of Ontario and Quebec dominate the federal-provincial scene. The sitting members from Ontario and Quebec, most of whom are very worthy members—I am not talking of personalities now—dominate the federal House of Commons. Indeed, these two provinces elect some 60 per cent of the sitting members. Therefore, I think it is little wonder that people are asking whether their message is getting through. They are not talking necessarily in the personal sense; rather they are talking of the fact that they have not greater muscle in this federal House that is theirs.

I think this was anticipated. In the days leading up to confederation both D'Arcy McGee and Alexander Galt recognized that "rep by pop" would not by itself be enough to cement Canada into a strong federal state. They suggested that there should be a Senate which represented Canada regionally on an equal basis. The Senate has perhaps not fulfilled the expectations that were originally invested in it, and I would say that this is because it is neither elected nor anything but a servant of its master, which is the House of Commons. Thus, how can it represent regions effectively? Personally, I think we should look very carefully into Senate reform. I do not feel that those who simply say we should abolish the Senate are advancing a very worthy or telling argument. I think we have to take a very hard look at Senate reform, because we have to have better and stronger representation on a regional basis.

If members of the House of Commons do not like the idea of Senate reform—and I can see all sorts of reasons why they would not like an elected Senate, which I think is the only way the Senate would be given muscle or credibility in the country—then it is incumbent upon them to put forward a better idea. This is an area that must be looked at and examined very closely.

One point that was made over and over again as the constitutional committee travelled across the country was that the Canadian people need some form of regional representation; and with the exception possibly of the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, which have natural boundaries of their own, the other provinces are not getting it. In this I include the province of Newfoundland. Until we find some way of letting the people in the under-represented areas lose their feeling of alienation, I suggest we will not have the kind of Canadianism that we want and for which we all hope. The future of Canada will be found by developing our north and our west, not by multiplying the pollution of lower Ontario and upper Quebec. Since I see here a member from the region, I add that the same argument applies to Newfoundland and Labrador, all along the undeveloped northeast as well as the northwest.

At the same time it is highly unlikely that these areas would ever have populations exceeding the populations of Ontario and Quebec. Thus, the north and the west, if they are to be developed and the people who live there are to feel that they are part of the ball game, must be given effective muscle at the federal level regardless of the pressures created by "rep by pop". The alternative is to keep them permanently in the state of colonialism that they suspect they are in now. There is no need for Canada to play this colonial game for, as Canadians, all of us have the right to equality of opportunity regardless of where we live.

As the Prime Minister declared only last week in the Speech from the Throne, we can change Canada if only we have the qualities and the will. Let us start here at the centre and get on with the job. No one but ourselves can stop us.

• (4:20 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, it is already the 3rd session of the 28th Parliament. Some people are still under the spell of the great show of 1968 when there appeared to lead the Liberal party and, later, the government, the youngest old Prime Minister Canada has ever had. A nervous, swinging bachelor who a few years before had been denouncing the Liberal herd being led to the slaughterhouse, became Number One, the saviour, the long-expected messiah. "Get ready, everybody, the just society is on its way!"

The extollers are still ecstatic but the people are still waiting. They are waiting for something to be done. They certainly want the "just society", but most of all, they would like it to become a reality.

The great fight against inflation of which the government is so proud leaves the population cold. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) may rejoyce and claim that he has won the day, but the man on the street wonders if he will still have a job tomorrow, if social welfare will look after his family better, if his dairy products will sell or if there is really any future in our immense country chock-full of resources.

He also wonders where the great battle of bilingualism and biculturalism will lead. In spite of what he is told about the advantages of democracy, he realizes to what extent it is mocked. Vanity, the excessive remoteness the government enjoys so much make it absolutely indifferent to the opinions, suggestions and action of the opposition. Yet, each hon. member has the same right, if not the same power. More than half the population is against the party which now runs the country. Our parliamentary traditions are anti-democratic. It is disguised dictatorship! Particularly when the chief will not stand any criticism and will accept and follow only what suits him.

Mr. Speaker, needless to point out that an active and objective opposition is necessary. But long and serious consideration must be given to its co-operation. By systematically rejecting all solutions suggested by other parties for the false motive that they do not originate from the Liberal party, the government is making fun of the people themselves.

An actual return to democratic processes will be required to prevent other dictatorships from taking over. Obviously, adopting the establishment of a just society as a slogan implies recognition of the existence of poverty, disparities, injustices, things that must be made to disappear from our society. It is not enough to make use of an election campaign slogan. All previous governments wanted the same thing. The importance given to the slogan will not help solve the problem of poverty, social disparities and individual injustices of which our population is victim.

The attitude of the present government, which is first and foremost that of the Prime Minister, moves further and further away from the objective. An out-and-out socialist, having taken pleasure in following on labour platforms his former friend Michel Chartrand in order to stir up the workers against the Duplessis regime, editor of a so-called advanced magazine, Cité libre, where he worked with Pierre Vallières, the author of Nègres blancs d'Amérique, finally, an inveterate globe-trotter who liked especially Russia and China, the right hon. Prime Minister does his own thing at all costs, and the recent recognition of Communist China is but a pale reflection of all the leftist and communistic projects he had in mind.

This spoiled child, unable to stand any remark, blaming Tom, Dick and Harry, the press and members of the Opposition, of whom he says they are worth nothing at 50 feet from the Parliament buildings, may not be the cause of all our frustrations, but he is one of the main factors. His adamant and off-hand manner will soon exasperate all the right-minded people in this country. It may seem cruel to utter such words but they reflect pretty well the feelings of a lot of people who are fed up with the fine words, the social antics and the childish and rambling outbursts of our Prime Minister.

People look down on us. They say: "These little Creditists with their financial obsession". But truth is not the monopoly of the great! We are conscious of reflecting the opinion of the small people. More and more, all classes of society look upon our proposals more objectively. The false and dishonest propaganda that has been conducted against us has prevented certain groups of people to consider seriously our theories. We are making great strides in overcoming this handicap. We are confident that soon the majority will agree, at least, to give a serious test to our economic system.

We want concrete suggestions. We do not have reserved rights on our doctrine. We would be more than happy to see the government steal our best ideas. All we want is to bring to the population the full freedom of the human person. "Make financially possible what is physically workable" is not an election slogan and much less a meaningless propaganda, but a concrete solution to the basic problems of our society.

With unemployment at a record high, who can claim there is a shortage of manpower? With all our natural resources, raw materials and everything we need as a base for production, who can question the unparalleled wealth of the country? Finally, with all the talent required for planning, programming and implementing, who could dare claim that our colleges and universities are empty?

With all these assets it is simply ridiculous to sit and wait for capital. What better security to issue our own credit than all these priceless assets around us? By what right do bankers and other high finance figures hold us at their mercy? Only the right we are willing to grant them. Unfortunately, to date all governments have been swapping their birthright against a mess of pottage.

It is pitiful to see all our public institutions creep and crawl before capital and capitalists. That is the problem, Mr. Speaker. Bloated interest rates, spiralling prices, in short inflation, result from the stupid lack of judgment jealously nurtured by the Establishment which, in order not to stray from the established order continues to rush in the blind alley of the present financial system.

Mr. Speaker, let me point out to the House the specific points of greater concern to the people of the Champlain constituency which I have the great honour of representing. Needless to say that all I have said until now is a reflection of the feelings expressed by the people of my constituency. Dissatisfaction is almost general. Farmers realize that everything is going to pot. The leadership given by this government with regard to dairy production is an open war against small producers who are being wiped out. The average producers are hard-set to keep going. If they exceed their quotas, they will be denied subsidies; if they increase their output, they are punished. What is left for them to do? As for the big producers, they are overworked. Because they have to hire employees, their income is reduced accordingly. What is left for them to do also? This befuddling situation is far from improving, especially when the Prime Minister, on one of his many trips, promises that New Zealand cows will soon be supplying butter to Canada.

The condition of the workers is hardly better. Industries are getting scarce in the Champlain constituency, and all the municipal authorities are quite astonished to find that, with the exception of Sainte-Marthe-du-Cap, no other municipality is recognized as a designated area. Resolutions on that subject submitted by the cities of La Tuque, Saint-Tite, Sainte-Thècle and several others had no result. Fortunately the tourist industry is developing. The swimming race called "les 24 heures de la Tuque" was once again a big hit this year. But to organize it, it is still necessary to overcome big financial difficulties. The tremendous initiative of the population should be encouraged by a substantial grant. The same situation exists in Saint-Tite where the greatest "western" festival of eastern Canada is held at the end of the summer.

Mr. Speaker, this brings me to mention the national park of the St. Maurice Valley. I was very pleased to hear that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) had signed last summer an agreement with the Quebec government for the development of that park.

The whole thing was done very quickly and took us nearly unawares, at least as far as I am concerned, as I received the kind invitation to attend the signature of the agreement only the day before the event, when I was in Edmonton at the Social Credit convention to celebrate the 35th anniversary of the Social Credit government of Alberta.

I suspect that the minister acted very quickly in order to quell the mounting pressure brought to bear by the committee that wanted the park located on the east bank of the Saint-Maurice River at Great Mekinac Lake.

The choice of site No. 1 is quite questionable considering the following factors: First, this site is not so much to the advantage of the St. Maurice Valley residents; it is a sort of dead end as it is not on a specific scenic drive; second, development costs may prove exorbitant because of land expropriation, access roads and a bridge needed to link the area with the upper St. Maurice Valley; third, it is doubtful whether or not that park will become profitable because tourists stay in such parks only when located along a scenic drive. For instance, while touring the Gaspé peninsula, they will stop over in the Forillon park. While touring the Lac Saint-Jean area, they will stay for a while in the Laurentian provincial park. They will get to the Abitibi area by going through the La Verendrye park. That is why it would have been logical to include that park in the scenic triangle formed by Trois-Rivières, Shawinigan, Grand'Mère, La Tuque, Roberval and Quebec.

I want to point out, Mr. Speaker, that I am not insisting on a site in my own riding, for the limits of that park lie for the greater part within the Champlain riding. It is a question of chosing a site that is really advantageous for the whole population of the St. Maurice Valley area. I feel that no really serious study has been made about the possibility of another site. The explanations given to date by the minister are not satisfactory and I should like him to enlighten us in this regard.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, like many of my colleagues in this House, I should like to voice my bewilderment over the recent distressing events in our country and, in particular, in the province of Quebec. However, this does not surprise me much. For many years too many leaders have been hiding their heads in the sand and have turned themselves into a challenge before the eyes of an impatient youth. Loose living in our society whose ideals and morals are declining, is too often encourager by the government itself. Very bad examples are set for our young people. The life of two hostages is at stake. Everyone at this time realizes what a precious asset life is. However, quite cheerfully, two years ago we voted for the massacre of thousands of human beings by agreeing in principle to the abortion legislation. And to think that we are not satisfied yet and that now we want abortion on request! What an example, Mr. Chairman.

Recognition of homosexuality between consenting adults is not edifying either. The dream of the right hon. Prime Minister to legalize marijuana is another very sad prospect. The Quebec movie industry jumped, just like that, without warning, directly from "La Petite Aurore" to Danielle Ouimet's buttocks, with the support of the Canada Council.

Pop Festivals are authorized and degenerate into bad taste affairs. And I skip a few, Mr. Speaker.

Such decadence is revolting. Therefore, many young people no longer believe in our society. This is extremely unfortunate, but we are all somewhat responsible, particularly those now in office. Let us berth the boat which is on the verge of running adrift.

Authority will no longer be flouted once it has regained its integrity, its unselfishness, its fairness in brief, when real strides have been taken towards implementation of the just society.

• (4:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. D. R. Tolmie (Welland): Mr. Speaker, first I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Bourassa (Mr. Trudel) and the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) for their excellent speeches.

As a former member of the Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Penitentiaries I, of course, have a very intense interest in penal reform. Perhaps this may not be a very appropriate subject to bring up at this time, but I shall speak on it in any event. I feel that a disproportionate amount of the time of the House is consumed on more glamorous and popular issues of the day with the consequence that the public is not made fully aware of the government's policies and the progress that has been made in this most important humanitarian field. The whole question of penal reform has been plagued not by a positive opposition but by a tradition of apathy and indifference. In any democracy where powerful segments of society compete for the public eye and purse, it is most difficult for a very small chorus clamouring for prison reform to be heard and answered. Therefore, at every chance it is of the utmost importance to articulate forcibly the need for reform and thereby gain public support for the implementation of same.

• (4:40 p.m.)

For those in our society still clinging to the philosophy that a prisoner is incarcerated as punishment or for the protection of society and is beyond redemption, the cold economic argument that penal reform whereby more prisoners can be released more quickly with a consequential saving to the taxpayer, has much appeal. Let us explore this argument.

We are spending over $70 million to improve the quality of our federal penitentiaries. In addition, there is the enormous operating cost of our present facilities. It costs this country approximately $3,500 a year to maintain one prisoner, and when you add the cost of keeping his dependants as well as the loss of his productivity while in prison, it is estimated that it costs this nation about $6,000 a year per prisoner. We have about 7,200 inmates in federal prisons alone. Thus it is clearly evident that if correctional reform reduces this prison population, a tremendous saving will accrue to the Canadian taxpayer.

In my opinion, transcending this monetary consideration as a reason for penal reform is the humanitarian concept that society as a whole has a moral responsibility for a minority of its members who, in many cases, for reasons of heritage, fate and environment beyond their control, have become outcasts and a menace to their fellows. As a nation with a social conscience we must endeavour to restore their self respect and lift them from their degradation. As the concern for this small helpless group matures and flowers a most beneficial result can be achieved. In penal reform, this stirring in man's conscience of the realization that the more fortunate must help the less can grow in wider human relations until man acknowledges that the strong and successful elements in our society have a duty and responsibility to the weak and unfortunate. Thus, on humanitarian grounds alone correctional reform is a most worthwhile objective.

The relatively recently recognized concept in Canada of a rehabilitative approach as opposed to an exclusively custodial system is now the cornerstone of the federal correctional policy. Thus, the entire philosophy of the federal government is directed to achieving the optimum degree of treatment, and the basic objective of the correctional system is the attempt to reform the offender and return him to society as a reclaimed, productive, integrated and law abiding citizen. My further remarks will show how this and former governments have had a systematic comprehensive program to effect these results by wielding the weapons, among others, of new physical facilities, increased training programs, research commissions and aftercare services such as probation and parole.

The new Penitentiary Act brought into force on April 1, 1962, represented a complete revision that was intended to be consistent with the enlightened rehabilitative approach to the problem of penitentiary operations. It completely re-organized the administration and set up the three main regions of Quebec, Ontario, and the western region. The Atlantic provinces were organized as sub-regions.

It was soon recognized that present facilities were not adequate to carry out a comprehensive program, and the government is now involved in an extensive program of institutional construction. A ten year program was started in 1963 and it is proposed to furnish each regional penitentiary district with the following basic facilites: one, a reception centre; two, a special detention unit; three, a maximum security unit; four, medium and minimum facilities; five, a psychiatric unit; six, prerelease hostels to help those inmates who are nearing the end of their sentences and who require assistance in re-establishing themselves in the community; seven, a staff training college; eight, institutional facilities for narcotic drug addicts both male and female.

In every institution there will be a program of activities which will comprise the following elements of the corrective process: one, employment at a purposeful occupation during working hours; two, leisure time—a program for physical education and recreation; three, religious facilities; four, contact with families and social agencies; five, education—library services, vocational training, elementary and higher education. Programs are being developed with the aid of medical and other agencies, such as the Narcotic Drug Foundation.

The question may be properly asked: the government has this new concept and grandiose plans, but what has been accomplished since 1963, the starting date of this ten year program? First, two special correctional units have been completed. Two maximum security institutions have been completed. No further maximum security institutions will be constructed until the operation of the present ones has been thoroughly studied. Four medium security institutions have been completed and are now in operation. The reception and the psychiatric centres are in the detailed planning stage. The Drug Addicts Institution in British Columbia is operating with almost 100 inmates under treatment. Four prerelease centres are now in operation in our larger cities. The Mountain Prison addition is complete. A new staff college has been built for the Quebec region, and temporary accommodation for one in western Canada has been arranged.

In addition to the facilities planned, a vast program of officer training has been operating for some two years and is rapidly expanding. No correctional officer goes on duty in a penitentiary with less than three months training, and courses for officers already in the service are available at the staff colleges.

Thus, this brief resume of physical and training facilities indicates that the government has made marked progress in attaining its avowed goal of humanitarian correctional reform. Of course, the construction of physical facilities is only one aspect of reform in the correctional process, and in order to make reform meaningful the whole broad subject of criminology must be constantly researched and reviewed.

The subject of probation and parole is an integral part of correctional reform. The basic question is, following the conviction of an offender does his and society's best interest require that he be incarcerated or can the process of reform be better achieved on probation within the community?

• (4:50 p.m.)

Statistical evidence shows that the proportion of offenders sentenced to prison in Canada is much higher than that of any other civilized country. For example, in 1953—I do not have later statistics—England and Wales sent 34,000 people to prison and in the same year Canada sent 98,000, or nearly three times as many as a country with twice our population. This is something we should really consider more seriously.

Slowly but surely the importance of probation is becoming recognized as a well tested method of accomplishing the objectives of criminal law without sending the accused to prison. Plain economic considerations should dictate support for expanded probation when it is known that the annual per capita cost of keeping a prisoner in a penitentiary or in a provincial reformatory is about $3,000, compared with approximately $250 for an offender placed on probation.

Much greater latitude must be shown by the federal and provincial governments in regard to probation. A step forward could be taken by the federal government by amending Section 638 of the Criminal Code to broaden the grounds for probation. This would have the effect of changing the present law governing probation which restricts it in the main to the first offender and excludes recidivists from its operation. This is an amendment which should be forthcoming very shortly.

On the question of parole, it should be noted that the National Parole Board has granted parole to more than 16,000 inmates in its first eight years of life. Of this number only about 1,800 had to be returned to prison for violation of parole. The board's average of about 90 per cent is very impressive indeed. Although the Parole Board, within its legislative limits, is doing an excellent job I contend that as yet we are not realizing the full economic and social benefits to be derived from a more liberal program of parole. I believe that the government is considering amending the Parole Act to extend parole or a form of conditional liberation to all inmates leaving prison. I urge the government to take immediate action to implement this most desirable innovation.

Thus it can be seen that the government, to implement its rehabilitative concept of correctional reform, has constructed new modern facilities, appointed investigation committees into criminology, and has tackled the problems of probation and parole. This, of course, is a most commendable record, but as in every area of governmental endeavour errors have been made. Inertia overcomes action, and change is always difficult and painstakingly slow.

Much has been done but much more needs to be done. What about the future? As a member and as a citizen I would like to see a proportion of the money being spent, close to $70 million on the penitentiary service, diverted to preventive measures such as a more vigorous attack, in conjunction with the provinces, on the causes and remedies for juvenile delinquency.

As a member, and as a citizen, I would like to see more money spent on criminal research. Millions of dollars are spent by companies and governments on a whole array of research projects such as drug research, food research, automobile research, and much scientific research. But very little is spent on criminal research. Less than one-tenth of the vast sums of public funds spent by both federal and provincial governments on crime and prisons is used for research.

As a member and again as a citizen I would like to see—recognizing the principle that the goal of rehabilitation cannot by its very nature be fulfilled within prison walls by psychiatric treatment, education or vocational training—a concerted effort to prepare the prisoner for return to society. The penitentiary service, as indicated, is establishing community release centres, but I visualize in Canada's future penal system a wide range of hostels outside of prison. From these bases in the community the parolee, probationer, or the prisoner serving an ordinary sentence would go out to work during the day, or to obtain training or education and would return to the controlled conditions of the hostel at night and on the weekends.

Coupled with this approach is the chance for a prisoner to contribute from his earnings to the support of his family, and to demonstrate his ability and trustworthiness as a prerequisite to his being accepted by potential employers and by his future neighbours in ordinary communal life. This radical and exciting approach to our penal system is not new, and as Canada proceeds with its enlightened ten year penal program it should vigorously embrace this half way house or hostel concept.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, may I say that the recent visit by the Justice Committee to the penal system in the western provinces was most beneficial indeed. It was not a sightseeing tour. We could see conditions personally. We examined the whole administration according to the time allocated, and we found out how the inmates felt. We found out how they felt with regard to their treatment, to their training programs, and to the parole system. I only hope that we will be able to continue these visitations.

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say how pleased I am to participate in this debate on the Speech from the Throne, and I join with hon. members who preceded me in congratulating the mover (Mr. Trudel) and the seconder (Mr. Douglas, Assiniboia) of the Address in Reply. I think they were well chosen.

When I came to Ottawa as a Member of Parliament some two and a half years ago, while I was not a representative on the government side, I had the fond hope that the government, with its Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who was certainly a very popular choice of the people at that time would do much to bring prosperity and unity to Canada. That was two and a half years ago. When he campaigned across the nation, the Prime Minister spoke of one Canada. He spoke of the just society. He spoke of bilingualism and biculturalism, and of how they would draw the country together. But at the end of these two and a half years, Mr. Speaker, we have come to the point where the capital city of Canada, Ottawa, is little more than an armed camp.

Montreal, which has the greatest mayor it has ever had, is in a situation where the cost of protective services has risen to something in the neighbourhood of $85,000 per day. Something is wrong. We have riots and bombings and treason. These are everyday occurrences, everyday words in Canada. Articles in the newspapers today and yesterday mentioned that attacks were threatened against our national railways and airlines. We have reached the situation in which a person with a somewhat unsavoury or doubtful background, in any event, is in charge of Information Canada. That is one of the most important positions in the country. It has been alleged that FLQ connections may go right into the ranks of government. This is the Canada we have today, two and a half years after all these glorious promises.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. McGrath: What a mess.

Mr. Downey: This degeneration has been aided to some extent by our legal system and its permissiveness throughout the years. There is a permissive interpretation of the law. Yesterday I sought to move a motion regarding the reinstatement of capital punishment. Acts of terrorism were encompassed in the wording of the motion. The progressively permissive interpretation of the law during the past six or eight years has made necessary a reaffirmation of our stand on matters of this kind.

I believe that capital punishment was last carried out in 1962. Since then 35 or 36 policemen and prison guards have paid the ultimate price for their service. There have been over 2,100 murders since 1962 and almost as many attempted murders. God knows how many policemen have actually been shot at; and when you are shot at, that comes very close to what could be called murder. At times our Prime Minister talks in a very tough way. He says what he is going to do, but from the other side of his mouth he often says, "Every man should do his thing." That is just what many who cause trouble are doing—they are doing their thing. We have had strikes. Some of those strikes have caused our economy grave harm and have harmed our image around the world. When one looks at the combination of all those things I have mentioned and considers some things I have not mentioned, one can safely say that Canada is like an apple rotting from the inside.

A few minutes ago the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Osler) talked about the Lift program. I imagine that the Lift program is one of the greatest sources of embarrassment with which this government has to live. One year ago the pessimistic minister who is in charge of the Wheat Board introduced the Lift program in this House and portrayed a dismal future facing the grain trade and agriculture in general. Now, less than one year later, we have made so many grain sales that it is doubtful whether our carriers will be able to carry the grain to delivery points. One wonders about the type of information to which certain people have access. What information leads them to make a choice like this, for example? I have some figures before me. The Canadian Wheat Board made a survey in connection with 4,000 elevator agents in the west and found that 161 million bushels less of cereal grains were stored on farms than had been estimated for that period by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. The DBS report showed that there were 115 million bushels of barley on farms. The Wheat Board's estimate was 72 million bushels. For oats, the DBS figure was 106 million bushels and the Wheat Board figure was 64.3 million bushels. How could decisions be made on these kinds of figures?

We have now reached a situation in which there could well be a shortage of feed grain. If anticipated deliveries are made and if certain figures are in any way correct, we shall reach the situation in which there will not be enough grain to feed the cattle and livestock of western Canada. This is happening less than one year after the government said it would pay the farmers to cut back on wheat production. Actually, in nearly all cases the payments have not been completed. This, Mr. Speaker, is something that cannot be forgiven easily. Although some money was pumped into the western economy as a result of the summerfallow program, the net result of our not growing grain is that there is a disaster, because what has happened is like a crop failure for the farmers of the west. We desperately need an optimistic and far-sighted minister to look after our agricultural affairs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Downey: We do not have such a minister.

An hon. Member: But we certainly need one.

Mr. Downey: I can imagine what would have happened if legislation such as the Canada Grain Act amendments and Bill C-197 had been passed by the previous Parliament. That legislation would have been held up by the government as the saviour of Canadian agriculture. Government members would have stood up and told the people that these bills were responsible for the sales we have made. The truth is that it took only a little change in nature to turn the situation around completely.

I believe the Speech from the Throne mentions that the marketing board legislation will be reintroduced during the present session. I think there is a place for this measure. I desperately hope that the minister has listened to the representations made to him and that he will come forward with a bill that will permit producer representation on marketing boards. We do not want them to be controlled by what is strictly a government agency. If that were to become the case, I say that with all the pessimism and inaccuracy which has been evident in connection with the administration of the Lift program we shall be in dire straits indeed.

• (5:10 p.m.)

In my area there has been talk of removing some railway services. At present there is a question as to whether several passenger train runs in Alberta will be removed. The bulk of Alberta is not included in the designated area program for regional development. This is difficult to understand because there is no industry there. The people of these areas cannot understand why they have not been designated, when so many other areas in Canada with much more industry and many more attributes have been. The riding of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson), which has a great deal of industry, is designated. It is hard to understand why through equalization payments these people must help pay for the liquor strike that occurred in the province of Quebec three years ago. Very few people in that area realize that equalization payments to the tune of $80 million are being made to the province of Quebec to make up the deficit in that government's revenue caused by the liquor strike of three years ago. Until there is better equalization and greater understanding on the part of the government, unity in Canada will be an impossibility.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to join other hon. members in congratulating the hon. member for Bourassa (Mr. Trudel) and the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas), the mover and seconder of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. Although the hon. member for Assiniboia and I are from the same province, I cannot find quite as much optimism on the Prairies as he does. In this Speech from the Throne there are many similarities with the first two Speeches from the Throne by this government. It is very long on rhetoric but very short on substance and any specific action the government intends to take. I for one, am very tired of the old clichés, platitudes and rhetoric.

In my remarks today I wish to cover a number of issues that I think are important. I shall deal with matters of vital importance to people in my constituency, the agricultural industry and the whole western economy. I want to deal with over-all conditions in Canada and try to determine why we are faced with so many problems. I shall talk a bit about foreign ownership, unemployment, the rights of women—a subject we are hearing very much about—poverty and violence, something that is now a reality in Canada. During the past summer I had an opportunity to spend several weeks in my constituency. I travelled around from farm to farm. I visited farmers on small and mixed farms, people who are not well-off economically. I discovered something that I had not experienced before, a feeling of depression, not only financially but spiritually.

I welcome the fact that the government is anticipating larger grain sales. I think all the people of western Canada welcome this. I hope the government is right in saying that we have some of the largest potential markets this year. The people of western Canada would like to know what portion of the 700 million bushels of grain sold is wheat and what portion is other grains. The farmers have a right to know. They also have a right to know how much of these sales constitute firm commitments, so they can plan for next year. I think the hon. member for Assiniboia will agree with me when I say that the farmer does not know what is going to happen next year or the year after. There does not seem to be any type of long-range planning. This is apparent from the past record. When speaking to the farmers in Winnipeg in June of 1968, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said, "Grow all the wheat you want and we will sell it." The farmers listened. They are efficient; they have grown a lot of wheat. In November, 1968, the Prime Minister said, "Why should I sell your grain?" In 1970 the government introduced the Lift program which pretty well forced the farmers to take wheatland out of production.

There has been a big change in a year and a half. Now the government is saying Canada has some of the largest markets it has ever had for grain. I ask the government once again to be considerate and to tell the farmers what is really happening. Earlier this afternoon the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Osler) stated that Lift is the instrument which obtained all the extra grain sales for us, if in fact we have made many extra sales. I suggest that Lift did not have anything to do with it. There will be larger grain sales because of international circumstances, crop failures, drought and things of that sort.

I think the government overestimated the inventory of wheat in this country. They should realize that now. The government is in a very fortunate position because the farmers did not co-operate to the full extent and 50 per cent of the wheat acreage was planted this year. Also, the crops were good. Therefore we have enough grain to meet the increased sales and for domestic use. In a patronizing and ironic way through the use of operation Lift, the government has been very fortunate. I do not think, however that the farmers of western Canada can really forgive the government for the attitude it has taken on this question.

Many members from both sides of this House have underestimated the real economic value of the western farmer. Not only is the western farmer suffering, but in a province such as Saskatchewan the whole economy is suffering. When driving around the province it can be seen that a whole way of life is being threatened. The small villages, towns and cities are affected. It is a natural phenomenon because farm income has dropped by over 50 per cent in the last couple of years. People are not buying as much as they used to, construction is pretty well at a standstill and people are moving out of the province.

Places like Yorkton, with a population of some 14,000 in the 10 or 12-year period prior to 1968 almost doubled their population. In the last year people have been leaving and the population has probably dropped by 400 or 500. This is the story of many communities of that size in Saskatchewan. It is basically the young people who are leaving in search of better opportunities. They are found in almost every walk of life, young workers, professional people, teachers and people hoping to get into business. Left behind are the people who are trying to struggle on the farm.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Someone said the other day that the average age of a Saskatchewan farmer is 57. This is perhaps the oldest average age of a worker in any industry. Those older farmers who do remain on the land are often left behind on farms which are small and uneconomic. What we need in Saskatchewan is planning. Farmers on the Prairies need a guarantee that when they plant a crop they will get a market for it and a decent price. There are many efficient farmers with the reserves needed to carry out an effective operation. There are many others who have the desire and the courage to make a success of agriculture. But they need planning from the government and some extra help.

The other day I asked the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) one or two questions about the fate of the report of the Barber commission on farm machinery prices. Action along the lines recommended by that commission as a means of lowering the price of farm machinery is urgently needed. In the past few years, while the price of grain has gone down the price of farm machinery and the cost of living generally as it affects farmers have steadily increased. This is the reason for the unrest in western Canada, for the expressions of western alienation. The difficulties which the west continues to encounter cannot be ignored by the government simply because it has been able to announce extra grain sales for the balance of the year. A lot more than that is needed.

Mr. Speaker, a debate on the Speech from the Throne gives hon. members an opportunity to discuss Canadian affairs generally and to consider what direction we are taking. A couple of years ago during the election campaign, the Prime Minister was talking about building a just society, reducing regional economic disparities, wiping out poverty and, above all, building a society in which there would be participatory democracy. It seems to me that 2½ years later there is greater dissent and more uneasiness than ever before. We see this among young people who are dropping out of society, joining various youth cultures and ceasing to care any more. One senses this spirit of dissent among ordinary people when visiting door to door or farm to farm. People are unhappy about the way things are going; they seem to have lost faith in the future envisaged by the Prime Minister and his friends a couple of years ago.

Among farmers, among workers and among students, dissent is being expressed in an organized manner. We find the women of Canada demanding rights which should be theirs and, of course, we are faced with an outright expression of violent dissent from members of the FLQ in the province of Quebec. The question all of us must ask is this: Why are so many people unhappy? Why are they questioning the society in which they live? Ours is a wealthy country with an advanced technology and all the resources we seem to need. We have a government which is supposed to be liberal, which is supposed to be changing things. Why should so much dissatisfaction exist in these circumstances?

Mr. Speaker, when we take a close look at our economy we find it is one which we ourselves do not really control, that essentially it is controlled by outside interests whose primary concern is not ours. We find that one out of every five Canadians lives in poverty and that one out of every five others lives near the poverty line. We see unemployment reaching a seasonally adjusted rate of 6.7 per cent, the highest for years. We find the air and water around us being pollutted at such a rate that within the lifetime of many of us in this chamber, it is said by some authorities, there may not be sufficient oxygen left for us to breathe. These are some of the reasons so many Canadians today are unhappy and demanding change.

We, as Members of Parliament, must listen to the views expressed by those who elected us. After all, it is we who have permitted these conditions to occur and to continue. Governments are supposed to look after the affairs of the nation, and responsibility must therefore rest upon us. Moreover, those of us who are Members of Parliament have accepted, over the years, the conditions I have described, many of us in a smug and complacent way. Many of us have sat here using beautiful rhetoric but doing nothing to change fundamentally the society in which we live. We talk of justice, we talk of freedom, we talk of liberty.

In the Speech from the Throne there is a passage which reads: "A society which is not inspired by love and compassion is not worthy of that name." Mr. Speaker, have you ever tried to tell the unemployed or the poor people of this country that the present government is inspired by love and compassion? A number of changes have, indeed, been made. Minor reforms have been carried out. The Criminal Code has been amended; Parliament has passed the official languages legislation which will bring equal opportunity to many more Canadians. The Speech from the Throne announces the intention to set up a department of urban affairs and housing, something which my party has been urging for a long time. I hope this new department can be given real muscle. Recognition has finally been accorded to the government in Peking as the government of China. These are all positive steps and I welcome them, but they represent only minor reforms and the people cannot be fooled into believing the government is doing all it can to meet the serious challenges of our time. It seems to me the government believes in perpetuating the status quo, that it believes in perpetuating a system under which important decisions are made in the boardrooms of corporations motivated by a desire for more and more profit.

What Canada really needs is drastic, fundamental change. We should seek to build a country in which the people not only own but control their own society. This implies a redistribution of power, a redistribution of wealth and services in order that everyone, regardless of economic background or social circumstances may have equal access to the benefits of the society in which he lives. I do not think a change of this nature will be welcomed by many of those in positions of power today in Canada.

Nevertheless, we must democratize our society and this means more than holding elections every three or four years. The people must be brought more intimately in touch with decision-making affecting their own lives. It would be easier to do this if so much of our country were not controlled by foreign interests—mainly, of course, by United States interests. Almost two-thirds of the Canadian economy is foreign-owned. Some industries such as the oil refining industries are owned and controlled up to 99 per cent by foreign interests. What does this mean to the ordinary people of Canada? It means, first of all, that Canada is basically a political satellite, that we cannot make all the decisions we want to make. Second, it means we cannot control inflation nor provide adequate employment for our people. As long as we remain a branch plant economy we cannot build up secondary industry to the extent needed to constitute a viable economy of our own. Today, Canada is an exporter of raw materials and an importer of manufactured goods. In a situation such as this, full employment is difficult to achieve. Everyone knows there are many more jobs available in manufacturing industries than in resource industries.

Our branch plant economy puts us at the mercy of multinational corporations whose decisions are made in another country. An example of this is the potash industry. This industry, which owns a mine in Saskatchewan and another in New Mexico, had to cut down on production. They cut down to 40 per cent capacity in Saskatchewan while the mine in the United States went on producing at about 90 per cent capacity. As a result of this, Canadians on the Prairies were put out of work.

• (5:30 p.m.)

I suggest, too, that the type of economy we have is not efficient. Each and every year more money goes out of the country in the form of profits and dividends than comes into the country in the form of investment. This is one reason why we must make control of our own economy one of the priority issues facing this Parliament in the next few years. We must regain control of Canada for Canadians. I do not think we can blame the Americans or United States corporations for this state of affairs; it is only natural that they should act in this manner. We have no one to blame but ourselves. We are the only country in the western world with an open-door policy toward our neighbours. We say to them, "Come in and develop our resources, take all you want, take your profits and go home."

This is a situation that we cannot tolerate, one that we will have to change immediately. We can regain control of our economy. Our party, editorials in different magazines, periodicals and newspapers have articulated several ways in which we can regain control of our economy. I am not going to go into those ways here. Members of this party commend the government for the action it has taken in the broadcasting field whereby, as the result of recent regulations, within about one year 80 per cent of Canadian broadcasting will be Canadian-owned. This can also be done with other industries. But we must do more than just talk about it; what we need is real action. I suggest that we have to repatriate the Canadian economy before we can really talk about solving regional disparity, inflation and having full employment in Canada.

There are a number of other matters I should like to touch upon before I sit down. One of them is the reference in the Throne Speech to possible legislation in the area of income and income security. I should like to press the government during this particular session to introduce a bill to implement a guaranteed annual income for Canadians. This is one of the most effective ways, perhaps the only way, to start a real fight against poverty in Canada. The type of social system we now have perpetuates poverty and does not encourage people to better themselves. Perhaps as many as one out of three Canadians live in poverty.

The Throne Speech also made mention of the report on the status of women and announced that during this session we will have in the House a discussion of the whole question of abortion. I should like to see us as a Parliament discuss both these subjects in a very serious way, a way we have never done before. I do not think all men here would deny that there is a double standard in Canadian society when it comes to women. It is a double standard when we do not ask women to come into the decision-making process of this country, to become really involved. Proof of that is found here in the House of Commons, where we have 263 men and only one woman. I must say that the woman we do have in the House of Commons, the Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) is a real honour to the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: The contribution that she is making here proves to me that women can and should be making a much larger contribution in Parliament and in the political process at all levels. I should like to see 100 or more women like the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway in the House of Commons. This would give the House of Commons a much more representative base and it would reflect Canadian society much better than it does today. In order to bring women into the mainstream of the decision-making process, it is up to us to bring down some good, concrete, positive legislation.

In the White Paper on unemployment insurance the government makes mention of things such as maternal leave without financial discrimination. I suggest this is something we shall have to legislate for in Canada. Another requirement for women is day care centres. During the last war, day care centres were provided for those women in the labour force and I see no reason for not providing them today. These are just two examples of measures that we should take.

I also think that women should be given equal pay for equal work. When we turn our attention to the subject of abortion, I should like to see some concrete legislation result, not just another discussion. This legislation should provide that all reference to abortion be removed from the Criminal Code. Today there are many contradictions. For example, if a wealthy woman wants an abortion, all she has to do is fly to New York or Europe and it can be arranged. However, a poor woman or someone with a mediocre income cannot do that. In other words, you have a double standard. People are being discriminated against. This is a double standard which must be removed.

There are a number of other issues I could touch upon at this time. For example, I think we must take a look at the role that young people play in Canada. We must get our young people more involved; we must bring them into the mainstream of Canadian society. In addition, we must do more to help the senior citizens of Canada.

What we really need, then, is a whole series of social and economic changes. People in every walk of life across Canada are growing more and more cynical of the institution of Parliament, of politicians in all political parties. More and more people are asking why we do not pass some really important measures, measures that are important to them, things that are bread and butter issues. Again, we have no one to blame but ourselves. We in Canada possess all the resources that we need. We have sophisticated technology. All we need is Members of Parliament with the fortitude and desire to make real changes.

I do not want to see more and more people dropping out and giving up. I do not want to see more and more people resorting to violence and destruction as the way of telling us that they are not happy, as the way of communicating to us that something is wrong. This does not have to happen and it should not happen. I do not think that any member of this House could condone the activities that have taken place in Quebec during the last week. All of us condemn the actions of the Front de Liberation du Quebec. We have to. Once we accept violence as the way of changing society, we are also accepting the fact that the person with the biggest gun or stick shall rule. We would be saying that the person with the biggest club rules everybody else. We would also be accepting the fact that if another guy has a bigger club, he will rule. We would merely be substituting one form of tyranny for another.

In the present situation I do not think the government should give in to blackmail. However, I feel I should point out that I suspect some backlash is taking place. I sense this feeling among some members of the House and many people in the media. I see this also in newspaper headlines. For example, one headline I saw this morning declared: "FLQ activities drive politicians to the right". Another headline in the Globe and Mail declared: "Spiro Trudeau". What I am saying, Mr. Speaker, is that there must not be extreme reaction or backlash to the activities of any group such as the FLQ. We must remain cool and rational and keep our senses. The only way that we will confront any type of unrest in our society is by changing our society and showing all types of people that there are democratic methods of changing society in a persuasive manner. This is what we will have to do. I think the words of a past president of the United States, John Kennedy, are very relevant at this time. He said:

• (5:40 p.m.)

Those who make peaceful revolution impossible make violent revolution inevitable.

This is something we must remember. As we react to unrest in our society, whether it is violent or non-violent, let us remember that there are reasons for people questioning the system and institutions we live in or under, and we must make certain basic and fundamental changes. We must do this because 20 per cent of our people live in poverty and thousands of people are unemployed. Millions of people in this country do not have opportunities that are available to a small minority.

Canada will have to make some real decisions, because I think we are coming to the crossroad. We must decide in which direction we are going.

We have heard a lot of rhetoric. We have heard a lot of old clichés, platitudes and prose. I suggest that this is no longer good enough. We must get down to the real issues and build a society in Canada that people can control, participate in and reap the benefits. In Canada we must build a democratic socialist society in which everyone, regardless of economic or social background, can participate and play a part. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that this be our challenge in the years to come. If all of us in this House of Commons sit down and seriously try to change things and not just talk about them, perhaps we will get a lot further.

Mr. J. E. Brown (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I intervene in this debate in order to deal with two vital matters which in my opinion are linked together and are of great importance to the constituency of Brant. I trust that hon. members will be patient with me while I deal with the first subject which I have on many occasions emphasized in this House. This subject involves a matter which will shortly, I am sure, be dealt with in discussions between our government and the government of my province of Ontario. I refer specifically to the project of the restoration of the Grand River which flows through the constituency of Brant, and especially the restoration of navigation for pleasure craft passing through one of the most scenic and historic parts of the province of Ontario.

This subject should not be laughed at or belittled by any hon. member. Of course, it is not being laughed at or belittled by anyone, but I ask all hon. members to bear with me while I plead the cause of every man, woman and young person in Brant, in the province of Ontario, which I represent in Parliament. The need for an available source of recreation is great. It is great for the large population of my area. We have the Grand River flowing majestically behind the great city of Hamilton where boating is available, the best that can be found in the province of Ontario. It extends far beyond the limits of the county which I represent, flowing as it does behind Hamilton and then past the Six Nations Indian reserve and on to Lake Erie.

The project has been mentioned by many, but I am the one who has brought the matter to the attention of the House during many sessions. The project which I recommend would involve the reconstruction of about five dams between Port Maitland at the mouth of the Grand River and Newport, Ontario, just outside the city of Brantford. Most of this area lies in the constituency which is so ably represented in this House by the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand (Mr. Knowles), who I am sure agrees with everything I am saying to the House this afternoon.

The recommendation calls also for a scenic highway between Brantford and the mouth of the river. This is a provincial matter, of course, but it is also federal because the Grand River from its mouth as far as Brantford has since early days been regarded as a navigable waterway in western Ontario. Therefore, that waterway without doubt comes within the jurisdiction of Parliament. The recommendation I am making calls also for a strip park along the banks of the Grand River, and perhaps the formation of a Sir Frederick Haldimand national park a little farther down the river in the neighbouring constituency. I have said this before and I say it again: my 1949 Encyclopedia Britannica lists Brantford, Ontario, as one of the chief Canadian ports of entry.

An hon. Member: You must be kidding.

Mr. Brown: What I have said is a well known fact, publicized by none other than the Encyclopedia Britannica.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brown: Construction of these dams, the scenic highway and adjoining parkland would not cost too much money, nowhere near as much as has been spent on the upper Grand River. The lower Grand River needs development no matter what the Kitchener-biased Grand River Conservation Authority may say about this matter, or may have done up to the present time. The hon. member is not in his seat at the moment. Also, we are witnessing tremendous industrial development taking place at Nanticoke, which makes it imperative that the federal and provincial authorities arrange to purchase all the available recreational land so that it can be saved for future and present generations.

The project I am talking about is a conservational and recreational matter. It is a project of great importance to all persons living in the Brant-Haldimand, Norfolk-Hamilton-Wentworth area. It is a project that will be utilized in the days to come.

Mr. Gibson: Hear, hear!

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. Brown: I am glad, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Hamiton-Wentworth (Mr. Gibson) has cheered, because it is a project that will be utilized in the future by the inhabitants of the Golden Horseshoe of Ontario lying only a stone's throw away, where people have to tow their boats hundreds of miles up north when they could simply be putting them on the Grand, that magnificent, scenic waterway which flows past and through my constituency and near Norfolk and other neighbouring areas of great importance. Millions of dollars have been spent by the federal government on the development of the Trent and Rideau waterways, yet since Confederation hardly a cent has been spent on the Grand. This is where the majority of the people live. I admit, Mr. Speaker, that I have not been a very good Member of Parliament, otherwise this and past governments would have done something about the matter.

I now come to my second point. Unfortunately, in my constituency for the past year and a half there has been heavy unemployment. I do not like this at all. I do not think anyone would like the situation that exists in an area where there is heavy unemployment. I am not crying; I am simply stating a fact that is well known. The unemployment which exists in my area cannot be tolerated very much longer. As a matter of fact, it is one of the worst pockets of unemployment in Canada. How can the economy of Brant and the surrounding area be stimulated? It can be stimulated by granting to the area the facilities it deserves, needs and can exploit—the most extensive and beautiful recreational facilities that can be found in North America and the reconstruction and redevelopment of navigability for pleasure craft on the Grand River.

When this is done, Mr. Speaker, you can count on it that we will have all the industrial growth we can handle in my important area. This will help bring about full employment. Also, the revenue from tourism resulting from these improvements will in itself greatly stimulate the economy of my district. This whole area in the past has been loyal to Canada. Long ago it was loyal to the Imperial Crown of the United Kingdom. Today it is loyal to the Liberal tradition in Parliament through its representatives. I say, let the Liberal tradition in Parliament show its loyalty to the area which I represent, as well as to its neighbouring and adjoining counties which I love.

I have nearly finished, Mr. Speaker. Some members will be delighted to hear this. However, there was some laughter a moment ago when I said what I did about the government not having done anything to assist and stimulate employment in my area. Not too long ago a great statesman in this country said that to govern is to choose. Mr. Speaker, I cannot govern; I can only choose. This is limiting to a degree, but it is not too limiting because I can choose and have chosen. I have chosen the man who wrote the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. Rodrigue: Mr. Speaker, may I point out that it is six o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Honey): It being six o'clock, I do now leave the Chair. The sitting will resume at eight o'clock p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

---

[Translation]

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Romuald Rodrigue (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, first of all may I be allowed to offer my congratulations to the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Honey) on his appointment as Deputy Speaker.

I would also like to join with all my colleagues in order to congratulate the mover and the seconder of the motion for the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, (Mr. Trudel and Mr. Douglas) who have carried out their task in admirable fashion.

I have read and reread the Speech from the Throne as well as the list of legislative proposals mentioned in that Speech, and I would truly like to share the optimism which the mover and seconder have tried to communicate to us.

Indeed, those who have prepared this statement must have done some truly extraordinary intellectual exercises to submit to us once again some antiquated ideas in a new light. This feat has called for increased effort and, had it not been for their artistic talents, they would have failed. This is the feeling we have after reading the Speech from the Throne, the third in the reign of the just society.

Those who have presided over the drafting of this document have given interesting consideration to our society's problems and are promising us many projects whose content must be known before we can determine their real value.

They succeeded in bringing together in that speech a collection of pretentious sentences to launch again the slogan of the just society. I am astonished that they avail themselves of that opportunity to revive an old slogan which they even tried for a while to make us forget.

Two years of power under the just society urge us to show discretion before the smoke screen which the federal cabinet is trying to throw before our eyes.

The Canadian population is ready to believe that the proposed reforms will be the ultimate solution to today's problems and that they will meet every citizen's needs. But we will know if the government is fulfilling its promises only when we read the bills.

In September 1968, in the Throne Speech of the first session, the new government stated its commitment to the objectives of a just society and a prosperous economy in a peaceful world.

Then, as today, the just society could not be achieved if the government did not eliminate the injustices bearing upon the various groups forming the Canadian nation.

In its second Throne Speech, the government announced the publication, in the following months, of several White Papers on subjects such as external affairs, national defence, tax reform, citizenship, social security, information and postal services. Those White Papers were meant to be the foundation of Canada's just society.

• (8:10 p.m.)

This second Speech from the Throne indicated also that the time had come where "Canada must be prepared to face the coming challenges of the post-industrial era". In the opinion of the government therefore a systematic reassessment of Canadian society and its guidelines was necessary.

During the following months the government tabled white papers on tax reform, unemployment insurance, the metric system as well as other documents on foreign affairs.

I am ready to believe in the government's good faith in tabling these white papers outlining its policies and making it possible for the people to discuss and evaluate programs. But I realize one thing: very often, when the bills are passed, it is already too late. Other change generated factors have nullified the benefits that legislation could have brought to the population.

Again, this year, in the Speech from the Throne, the third under the government of the just society, the introduction of several white papers is announced.

In my opinion, there is no need to recall that the Canadian people are aware of the problems of the day and that they have always offered their co-operation in the difficult moments of our history. I think that they are ready to take part in the economic expansion of the country. In fact, they have always made a valuable and complete effort in order to fulfill our aims and to grant each Canadian the means to live decently.

However, Mr. Speaker, these people are expecting results that the government wanted but did not obtain. Here is the problem at this time.

While trying to fight inflation, unemployment has been created. Indeed, the country was plunged in an extraordinary unemployment crisis when it should have been possible to fight inflation and maintain the employment level at the same time.

Unemployment statistics released at the end of June 1970 indicated that there were 539,000 unemployed in Canada, 188,000 of them in Quebec. Therefore it seems obvious, in the light of these statistics, that economic restrictions aimed at curbing the rise of the cost of living have had the direct result of increasing the unemployment rate.

It can in fact be seen that since February, when the increase in the cost of living reached its highest rate of 5 per cent, every subsequent regression of the consumer price index has been accompanied by an increase in the number of unemployed.

From May to June, the increase in prices, while still spiraling, showed a relative drop of 1.8 per cent, accompanied by a corresponding increase of 1.5 per cent of the unemployment rate.

Statistics released in July but covering the month of June reveal that, contrary to the normal seasonal trend, the number of unemployed increased by 16,000 from May to June, going from 513,000 to 529,000, and this while the number of jobs was increasing normally, i.e. by 196,000, going from 7,952,000 to 8,148,000. As compared to June 1969, the number of unemployed in Canada in June 1970 increased by 146,000, from 383,000 to 529,000.

The number of jobs, from June 1969 to June 1970, increased by 128,000, from 8,020,000 to 8,148,000.

In the light of these statistics, it is quite clear that we are far from our objectives. We are far from our goal, that is the establishment of a just society. Admitedly there is no quick solution nor a sole remedy to fight unemployment, but this is what makes me ask a question: Has the problem been considered under its true light and is the government seeking or proposing solutions to existing problems?

[Mr. Rodrigue.]

I should like to read a passage from the Throne Speech that, I think, does not reflect the government's action, and I quote:

> The Canada of the seventies must continue to be a land for people; a country in which freedom and individualism are cherished and nurtured; a society in which the Government lends its strength to withstand, rather than support the pressures for conformity.

Now, when the government proposes a tax reform as a solution to our economic problems, I say that it is holding on to conformity.

Since the elections prior to the 28th legislature, what true measures have enabled us to create the required number of jobs? Is it Bill C-232? The number of jobs created under this bill did not compensate for the number of jobs suppressed over this period, in spite of the goodwill shown in helping the new industries.

Creating new industries is not as easy as one would believe. Granting new subsidies on paper and announcing the payment of a certain amount is not enough; there are several stages before setting up an industry or ensuring its viability.

I do not question the goodwill of the minister and of all his staff, far from it. But there is a marked difference between wishing to reach a goal and reaching it.

How many jobs have we lost during this same period in footwear, textiles and electronics? In Beauce riding, which I have the honour of representing, the labour force in the footwear industry has dropped from 700 to approximately 400 workers. Similar conditions prevail in the textile industry. Furthermore, the electronics industry which has recently been dealt a heavy blow by the government contracting out satellite ANIK to a foreign manufacturer, happens to be in the same predicament.

If the purpose is to help find new jobs, I am all for setting up new industries. However, once we have them in operation, we should not leave them on their own as we did with the shoe industry, thus forsaking the fruits of 10, 20, 30 or 40 years of efforts on the part of qualified industrialists. These shoe workers have made every sacrifice during the 10 or 20 years that they toiled in order to learn a trade which was to allow them to earn a living for themselves and their families. Unfortunately, they woke up one morning to find out that they were out of a job.

In the statement he made during the debate on the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) said that the policy of the government had succeeded after a few delays in slowing down the increase in demand, after mid-year. The minister thus acknowledges the fact that with its policy the government has deliberately helped boost unemployment.

In return, is there any action the minister has suggested to offset this loss of wages resulting from the dismissal of hundreds of worker employed in the shoe factories, textile mills, electronic plants, etc., and which represented nothing less than the purchasing power of those same workers?

Mr. Speaker, the minister contends that government restraints have helped curb demand. Certainly the loss of salary or purchasing power curtails demand or slows down its growth. However, it is unfortunate that inflation has been fought at the expense of the workers.

The late President Kennedy felt very strongly about the problem of unemployment. He was a master at coining phrases. Here is one which is a genuine plea:

> The loss of a single year of personal income on account of unemployment costs us more than 12 years of education.

These words become more and more significant as our civilization becomes one of leisure.

Productivity increases and the standard of living rises with it. Retirement comes earlier, working hours decrease to be replaced by leisure. This fact has become so obvious that some corporations expect to grant their employees education leave as they do sick leave.

In view of price increases and the rise of the unemployment rate, which are the direct causes of the lack of purchasing power, we, of the Ralliement créditiste, suggest the revaluation of family allowances and old age security pensions.

An increase in family allowances and old age security pensions would be an efficient means of putting in the hands of a certain group of consumers additional purchasing power which would renew the confidence of our people while starting an economic upsurge.

Therefore, I fully support the subamendment of the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) which calls for an increase in family allowances.

Acceptance of this subamendment by the government would be a first step toward the implementation of a system insuring a guaranteed annual income and paving the way to a true just society.

• (8:20 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Colin D. Gibson (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, in the spirit expressed in the Speech from the Throne, I wish first to congratulate the hon. member for Bourassa (Mr. Trudel), the mover of the Address in Reply, and the seconder, the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) for the excellent speeches which they made in the House. I am particularly pleased since both hon. members exhibited in their speeches sincerity of character, devotion to duty and absolute integrity, as well as obvious ability.

The Speech from the Throne was an inspiring one, Mr. Speaker. The words which appeal to me most in the Speech are as follows:

> With foresight and stamina and enterprise, ours may be, if we wish it . . . a society which encourages imagination and daring, ingenuity and initiative, not coldly and impersonally for the sake of efficiency, but with warmth and from the heart as between friends.

[Translation]

And in French, my second language:

> . . . une société qui encourage la créativité, l'audace, l'ingéniosité et l'initiative, non pas froidement et de façon impersonnelle à des fins de stricte utilité, mais avec chaleur et cordialité, comme entre amis.

Mr. Speaker, several of us are determined to learn French. Of course, we shall succeed!

[English]

Speaking on the current situation in Canada, I express the desire that we reform our criminal law in order to provide much more severe penalties for offences currently being committed in this nation. I refer, of course, among other things, to section 233 of the Criminal Code or the section relating to kidnapping, and to the aiding and abetting section. I am thinking now of the crime of aiding and abetting kidnapping. I suggest that the aiding and abetting section should be used by the police whenever there is sufficient evidence to warrant a charge being laid under it. I also refer to another crime with respect to which I have found, after research, that there are no reported cases in Canada, fortunately because our society has been relatively peaceful up to this time. I refer to section 51 of the Criminal Code, which relates to acts of violence in order to intimidate Parliament or the legislature of a province. The maximum sentence for that offence is 14 years imprisonment. I urge that that offence carry a maximum sentence of life imprisonment and nothing less.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gibson: I believe that our attention ought to be directed urgently to a debate on security. There should be a searching examination of statements made on radio and television by inflammatory revolutionaries who, by sympathizing with criminals, therefore encourage support for violence by criminal acts. I submit that in so far as matters relating to the safety of the realm are not regulated by statute, the powers in that regard are in common law at the prerogative of the Crown, acting upon the advice of its servants, which has unfettered control both in time of peace or war of all matters relating to the disposition and armament of the military, naval and air forces, and the manner of the exercise of such prerogative powers cannot be inquired into by the courts, whether in a civil or criminal case. The authority for this proposition is found in the case of Regina v Chandler (1962) 2 All England Reports, page 314. I submit the same principle applies to Crown prerogative powers in Canada today. Further, Mr. Speaker, I quote from the judgment at page 320:

> Those who are responsible for the national security must be the sole judges of what the national security requires.

I represent the riding of Hamilton-Wentworth, a riding that is partly urban, in the city of Hamilton, and also partly rural. It is a riding with a population consisting of Canadians of varied national origins and many Canadians of British origin. The constituency also contains the township of Ancaster, which includes fine farming country and a suburban community. Also, it contains the historic town of Stoney Creek. That town, I hope, will be the source of Canada Day.

The Throne Speech, Mr. Speaker, dealt with labour. I believe that despite criticism expressed by some people, collective bargaining in Canada can in fact function humanely under existing labour laws. The difficulties do not lie in the system of collective bargaining but, rather, in the inability of some to make the best use of that system. The purpose of collective bargaining laws is not the settlement of disputes but, rather, to provide the mechanism whereby collective agreements can be contracted as a result of peaceful negotiations conducted in an atmosphere of genuine concern, in a spirit of good faith.

No one can deny that those who advocate the abolition of the right to strike as a general rule, rather than abolition in exceptional circumstances, overlook the fact that, with sufficient provocation the worker can lay down tools anyway and strike illegally. For example, in the recent police strike in Montreal, policemen, underpaid and ignored by society, felt compelled to strike illegally. Policemen do not have the right to strike, but when society ignored them and when humanity and justice provided them with no other choice, they went on strike. The result was an illegal strike, a bitter and violent confrontation. Why, then, is there so much turmoil today in the ranks of labour? It is partly owing to the social unrest prevalent throughout the world, as has been demonstrated by student riots at universities and similar breakdowns in social order which result in violence. Also, it is partly owing to a gang of lawless gangsters who seek power through violence and who prostitute law and order by gang terrorist tactics.

Our challenge, Mr. Speaker, is to forge a new social consciousness. It is to improve the isolation of the urban worker in a technological world. We want to remove that isolation from his life.

An hon. Member: Did the hon. member read that?

Mr. Gibson: We must provide kindness and sympathy for workers in those places where today there is autocracy and indifference toward their lives. Those engaged in labour and management must appreciate that the decisions reached in collective bargaining agreements have a profound impact upon the community at large, and sometimes the impact causes disastrous results. Abnormally large wage increases, particularly, result in lower profits and higher prices. Thus, goods become more expensive to produce and sell, and costs become greater. Prices escalate, and as a result sales become greatly reduced and finally unemployment results.

• (8:30 p.m.)

Too frequently industry greedily grabs record-breaking profit and then flatly refuses to pay labour increased wages and fringe benefits. For example, the Canadian banks have made great profits; they have been great profit-makers but they have kept some of their employees at shockingly low income levels. The government recently substantially increased the minimum wage for federal employees, including bank employees. The record of the banks with regard to labour relations is poor. Management has ignored the human factor and failed to adjust its labour policy to the fast age of impersonal technology.

Also, Mr. Speaker, we must prevent the embryo, so-called right to incite riot and revolution. We must restore law and order from coast to coast in Canada. We need vastly improved social communications between management and labour. In my view, the burden is on management to inject a new attitude of friendship and co-operation with workers. At present a team spirit is lacking. Labour needs to be treated with appreciation and respect, not treated with scorn as useless, worn-out equipment with little or nothing to contribute. A warm and kind attitude by the employer would greatly improve this sad state of affairs, which amounts to a miserable by-product of the modern industrial state. Further, at all levels of society we must enhance respect for law and order and we must be severe in punishing crimes of violence.

We must strengthen the symbols of national unity by naming July 1, Canada Day. Frequent polls throughout this nation indicate that the vast majority of Canadians want this change. Young Canadians, in particular, who have grown up with the Canadian flag demand and insist upon Parliament changing the name of the national day to Canada Day. I have faith in young Canadians. Their idealism and interest in sports and anti-pollution measures has strengthened and developed our national character. I am proud that this government lowered the voting age to 18 years. I am also proud that despite undue emphasis on the mass media, the vast majority of young Canadians are constructive in outlook and hard-working in action. They are sports minded and athletic. They have a dream of Canada which we must foster, nurture and develop. We will do this. We must continue to provide programs such as the Voyageur plan which enabled many young Canadians to travel across our land and learn to know this great country.

I hope our future plans for the armed forces reserves will give opportunity for anti-pollution training. National defence has enemies in many forms of polluters, and our young people can be used in the struggle for our defence in the war against pollution, the war to exist. However, we must not allow our armouries to become flop-houses for drop-outs and beatniks, many of whom are not Canadian and have no place in Canadian society.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gibson: Participatory democracy is not an empty phrase but is, rather, the logical and real result of planned adaptation to the needs of Canadian society today.

With respect to the Constitution, Mr. Speaker, I have served on the Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on the Constitution. This committee is in the process of meeting the public at assemblies in each province and territory of Canada. A very helpful dialogue has been and will continue to be carried on in each area of Canada. Members of all parties serve on this committee. We are working together in harmony in the interests of our nation, despite our party following and backgrounds. There is no partisanship on this committee. It has been a joy for me, as a new member, not only to get to know my country but to get to know members opposite. This is one of the greatest assets of committee work.

Mr. Stanfield: It has been a great thing for you fellows.

Mr. Gibson: It is good for us, I agree. I smile back in genuine agreement, because we do have a proper point of view after discussing problems with Conservatives and New Democrats. If they have constructive ideas, we try to adopt the best of them for our party so the front of Liberalism will be wider and stronger. A very valuable and helpful dialogue has been and will continue to be carried on in each area of Canada. In this way the government has developed a real policy of actual participatory democracy. The members of the committee not only hear from experts in law but also the ordinary citizens, young and old, from all walks of life who contribute their suggestions and criticisms of Canada's Constitution. Women, children, Indians, Métis, unemployed, wealthy, poor, young, middle-aged and all others with their diverse problems speak to us: they are not shy about it.

The chairmen of the committee wisely organized the committee hearings by giving public notice of the meetings so the local inhabitants, members of service clubs and people with special occupations could express the particular thoughts they had in mind. Everyone was given the opportunity to speak. This has played a very real part in participatory democracy in Canada. We visited the Yukon Territory and the province of Manitoba in September. We were all impressed with the vastness of the area we visited. I was moved by the difficulties those fine Canadians experience. We were all grateful to our northern and western hosts for the wonderful help they gave us. I hope that those who reside in the more heavily populated regions of Canada will forcefully and effectively improve the interests and protect the rights and other needs of those Canadians, the Indians, Eskimos and Métis. The Métis are party Indian and partly French. Their unfortunate lot is that they do not have the advantages of being Indians who are protected by the Indian Act. They are in the terrible predicament of not being accepted by society.

In Thompson, Manitoba, I was conscious of the wonderful effort of the social workers in desperately trying to find a means of aiding and assisting the Indians and Métis not only to integrate into employment opportunities but to find a social position in the modern society of today. The people of Thompson, Manitoba, have been pioneers in attempting to help with this very important problem. As an Ontario member, I pledge to never forget the plight of the Indians, Métis and Eskimos. As long as I am a Member of Parliament their interests will be close to my heart. I hope some way can be found to make their lot more pleasant and happy.

I hope those who serve on this committee will speak on this subject in their ridings, so that all Canadians will appreciate the difficulties of these people and the difficulties of the people who live in the territories. The territories have small populations. They do not have provincial status. They desperately need human contact with Ottawa. I hope senior civil servants will realize that cold-blooded letters refusing demands are not sufficient. These people must visit the territories. They must keep in constant communication with these people so that they appreciate the issues which affect them.

The work of the committee has created a new consciousness of the magnitude and beauty of Canada, a genuine feeling of pride in the principles that unite us, and a fixed and deliberate determination to achieve national unity by constructive constitutional reform. We are strengthening the cause of national unity by gaining a warm understanding of all Canadians and by continuing to learn about our mutual problems in developing our own Canadian identity. Mr. Speaker, I agree with those who have advanced proposals to adopt a Canadian charter of human rights. I quote from the booklet "A Canadian Charter of Human Rights," page 15, as follows:

• (8:40 p.m.)

> Existing human rights measures in Canada are limited in scope. The Canadian Bill of Rights passed in 1960, emphasizes political freedoms (speech, assembly, religion, etc.) and legal rights (freedom from arbitrary deprivation of life, liberty or property, and equality before the law).
>
> Other federal legislation and most provincial legislation is confined to prohibitions against discrimination in employment, admission to trade unions or the provisions of accommodation.

It is now suggested that there be included in a constitutional bill those rights which have been legislatively protected in Canada, in addition to those linguistic rights which are recommended by the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism. In the charter of human rights it is proposed to include five categories of rights, all to be protected by the Canadian courts. The first category includes political rights such as freedom of expression, freedom of conscience and religion, and freedom of assembly and association.

The second category includes legal rights, subjects covered by the Canadian Bill of Rights of 1960 such as general security of life, liberty and property, equal protection under the law against discrimination, the right to protection from cruel punishment, the right to protection on arrest—covering such matters as bail, a speedy trial, habeas corpus, and so on—the right to counsel, the right to a fair hearing, the right to presumption of innocence and the right to an interpreter. The third category provides guarantees against government action which would tend to distinguish certain persons or groups of persons for unequal treatment on the basis of their race or national origin, for example in admission to professions, educational facilities, public accommodation or the acquiring of property, communication with government institutions and education generally.

The fourth and fifth categories deal with economic rights. It is not proposed to implement these at present because society has not developed in such a way as to enable it to be done. They are in the way of providing a right to work, and so on. But we are signatories to the United Nations Charter of Human Rights and we hope it will be possible to develop this eventually as part of our Constitution.

I wish to say a word now about what might be done to make a charter of human rights work. I do this with humility, realizing I am dealing with a difficult subject. I do not want to be taken as having the gall to think I know all the answers. I would make two suggestions. First, a constitutional court at the level of the Supreme Court of Canada should pass on any statute which touches on subject matters bordering on or affecting civil liberties, before those statutes take effect. By this means the constitutionality of our statutes would be reviewed and sanctioned prior to their enactment, thus avoiding situations such as occurred in connection with the breathalyzer section of the Criminal Code, which was cleared by the courts for one technical reason but has since been brought before provincial appellate courts on the ground that it is a breach of the Canadian Bill of Rights of 1960.

Second, we must seek a speedier and more efficient system whereby both trial courts and appeal courts can be used by all Canadians without undue expense or delay. These are some of the reforms I suggest. Today I believe all members of the committee on the constitution would agree with the quotation, "I am a part of all that I have met". Although we Canadians differ in language, race and origin and come from different parts of our country, despite current events caused by cruel gangsters who seek to divide us, and despite dangers which lie ahead, Canada has survived two world wars and is now a strong, virile nation. Canada will not give in to the vile criminals who have attempted to divide us and who have poisoned the mass media with revolutionary talks. I urge the government to remove wild revolutionaries from the media, particularly those who incite revolution by violent means. We shall strive to live in a technological age with a fairer social conscience, and I believe the day is not too distant when our constitution will include a charter of human rights which will place certain basic human freedoms in a position of entrenched protection. In this way the dignity of man will be respected, the rule of law will be enforced and the Canadian nation will continue to develop in a just society.

With respect to the United Nations, again I speak with humility as one who has not spent his career in United Nations work. Nevertheless, I am one who is fascinated by the possibility of a peaceful world and in this light I would advocate the following:

(a) Immediate rules changes limiting debate to 10 minutes per speaker in the General Assembly.

(b) Strict rulings from Speakers of United Nations committees to avoid repetition.

(c) An observers' forum where representatives at the United Nations who are not full-scale delegates can express their views.

(d) A United Nations school for diplomacy where young students of ability can meet students from other nations. When these students graduate they will already be familiar with some of the views and attitudes of foreign states.

[Mr. Gibson.]

(e) A United Nations grand jury. This could be developed by the use of television. It should travel and its members should include representatives from each continent. It should discuss world peace and describe its experiences as it travels from nation to nation. It should be composed of people who are articulate and senior in years.

We have listened to the floundering and contradictory criticism tossed recklessly across this chamber by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). We have also heard from the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Douglas) as he expressed his usual party propaganda line—an ill-conceived concept of waffling—and his policy of hoarding our national resources to Canada's economic misery. Fortunately, his party will never form the government. I much prefer the orderly planning of legislation as advocated by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who has progressively improved the destiny of Canada by sound and bold leadership and kept a firm hand on the tiller while enemy waves have attempted to rock the boat. The ship of state is safe, and we shall keep it that way. Canadians will never surrender to gangsters, in a crisis or at any other time.

I hope the Leader of the Opposition will heed the advice which the Prime Minister gave in his speech on Friday last, to which I respectfully add a quotation from Piet Hein as follows:

> The road to wisdom? Well, it's plain
> And simple to express,
> Err and err and err again,
> But less and less and less.

Mr. Melvin McQuaid (Cardigan): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I join the many speakers who have preceded me in extending congratulations to the mover and to the seconder, of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. I think they did an excellent job in what I consider to be difficult circumstances.

Traditionally, the Speech from the Throne is supposed to give an outline of government policy for the session. The speech we have before us is a very long one and in my view contains far less substance than usual. The Speech from the Throne is very vague and certainly has less substance than usual. As a matter of fact, very seldom have I seen a government document that in my opinion says so little in so many words. I see very little real policy announced in the Speech, and paragraph after paragraph speaks only of very vague plans and pious hopes that the government apparently has in mind. I was very much surprised to find not a word about the proposed amendments to our constitution and its repatriation. If the Speech from the Throne had been written by the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Gibson), I think it probably would have contained some very serious recommendations in regard to this very important matter.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Constitutional amendment is a matter of some concern to Canada. We are an independent country, yet we do not have the right to amend our own constitution. It seems little short of ridiculous that Canada should be required to present an address to the British Parliament at Westminster before we can amend our own constitution. Certainly, the British Parliament is not anxious to retain its power in this regard. I suggest that a sincere and conscientious effort must be made to find a method by which, with general agreement, our constitution can be repatriated, brought home to Canada and amended by Canada.

While I support this idea, at the same time I express some reservations with respect to the amount of travelling that the committee on the constitution has lined up for itself in the coming year. I agree that some of it is essential. However, when one looks at the schedule that has been presented to the committee, one finds that in some cases a great deal of travelling could be cut out, at considerable saving to the taxpayers of this country. For example, next week the committee—and I am a member of it—is going to Nova Scotia where it will hold hearings in Halifax, Wolfville, Sydney and Antigonish. To show how unnecessary these hearings are I place on the record the fact that the travelling distance from Halifax to Wolfville is only 60 miles. Why should a committee consisting of about 30 to 35 members, along with a staff of perhaps 15 or 16, be required to travel those 60 miles thus putting the taxpayers to expense, when it would be so much easier for those in Wolfville who are interested in presenting briefs to travel to Halifax? The distance from Halifax to Antigonish is only 140 miles, and there again it would be much easier and less expensive for those who wish to present briefs to travel to Halifax from Antigonish.

When the committee visits the province of New Brunswick it proposes to travel to Fredericton, Saint John, Moncton and Bathurst. Fredericton, of course, is the capital. The distance from Fredericton to Bathurst is only 160 miles, the distance from Fredericton to Saint John is only 70 miles, and the distance from Fredericton to Moncton is only 120 miles. So why does the committee not stay in Fredericton? In all seriousness I suggest that some of these trips could very well be cut out. At the same time, those people who wished to present briefs would not be prejudiced in any way at all because they would not be inconvenienced very much by travelling to Fredericton.

Speaking in this debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, my chief concern is to try to place before this House as clearly and as forcefully as I can the economic situation in which we in the Atlantic provinces find ourselves. Canada entered the 1970s with a very definite worsening of the grim economic problems which plagued her particularly during the latter part of the 1960s. In March 1970 for example, the Canadian unemployment rate was 6.7 per cent and that rate was the highest since 1964. Turning to the Atlantic provinces, in Newfoundland the unemployment rate was 15.3 per cent—more than twice the national average—in New Brunswick it was 11.8 per cent, in my own province of Prince Edward Island it was 9.7 per cent and in Nova Scotia it was 7.7 per cent. The average unemployment rate in the Atlantic provinces was 11.1 per cent, or 4.4 per cent above the national average.

These figures, high as they are do not begin to tell the whole story. As a matter of fact, they understate the real magnitude of the unemployment problem because they do not take into consideration those who are willing and able to work but have not yet entered the labour force. Currently according to the latest figures we have, there are today in Canada over 500,000 people unemployed. This, I charge, is because of the government's anti-inflation program and is also a result of its tight fiscal and monetary policies. Further the existence of large-scale poverty in this country is an unmistakable fact. Millions of Canadians are forced to exist on incomes which deny them a proper standard of living. Many of them have the misfortune to be poorly housed and do not eat sufficient nutritious food. They suffer from every disadvantage that comes from deprivation.

In my own province, for example, the average per capita income is only $1,860 per year. That is the lowest of any province in Canada, with the possible exception of the province of Newfoundland. By comparison, in Ontario the average per capita income is $3,300. In 1967, the last year for which figures are available, 5,378 income tax returns filed in my province declared an income of less than $1,000. Remember that in considering these figures we have a total population of about 110,000 people. Some 6,367 returns were filed by people earning between $1,000 and $2,000, and 6,122 were filed by people earning between $2,000 and $3,000. Only 145 returns were filed in that province declaring an income in excess of $20,000 per year.

Those figures give the House an idea of how badly off are the people in my province so far as earning an adequate standard of living is concerned. The Charlottetown income tax district last year ranked ninety-eighth among 100 selected Canadian cities, in terms of highest average income. Basically, each Canadian should be assured of an income that would provide him with an adequate standard of living; that is the very least he should expect. As a matter of fact, this point was recognized in the Speech from the Throne, in that the Speech declares, as reported at page 2 of Hansard:

> With foresight and stamina and enterprise, ours may be, if we wish it . . . a society in which individual freedom and equality of opportunity remain as our most cherished possessions;

• (9:00 p.m.)

The Atlantic provinces as a whole have a very low rate of population growth. Between 1961 and 1966 the population growth was only 0.8 per cent per year, whereas the national average increase was 2 per cent per year for the same period. This low rate of population growth is due mainly to a high net out-movement of people from this region. There is a natural tendency for large numbers of people to move from the Atlantic provinces in search of better opportunities elsewhere.

The out-movement over the period 1961 to 1966 was about 104,000, or 20,000 people per year. Unfortunately, this trend is worsening. If this out-migration continues at the same level during the decade 1961 to 1971, about 207,000 people will have left the region during this period. That is more than 10 per cent of the present population of the area. Unfortunately, our most important export is brains. Why do these brains leave? They leave in search of work for higher pay. The main factor which contributes to this out-migration is the small employment base. No one is going to stay if there are not sufficient jobs to enable them to maintain a decent standard of living. If this out-migration of the population continues at the very high level of the past few years, we may very well ask ourselves whether the region will be left with a sufficient labour force to produce the goods and services required to prevent the gap from becoming even wider.

It is impossible to reduce out-migration by force. Nor is it reasonable to expect that people will remain in the region because of a hope that the per capita income will increase. There must be a generation of employment within the region. This must be at a sufficiently high level so that rates of pay are commensurate with those received in other parts of Canada. Only in this way will we be able to make remaining in this region an attractive proposition. This calls for a programmed approach by the federal government in the development of job opportunities in the area. That is what we require, job opportunities.

There must be a narrowing of the gap in personal income as between this region and Canada as a whole. This should be accomplished through generation of income in the region and not by a transfer of income to the region. Pouring subsidies into the Atlantic provinces will not solve our problems satisfactorily. Patronage will never produce prosperity. Those are not my words, but it is a very correct quotation. We in our province unfortunately entered Confederation on a patronage basis. What is more unfortunate is that we have existed on this patronage ever since. Pouring subsidies into the area has not worked, except that it has enabled our people to subsist in the land they love but in a land which, unfortunately, is incapable of supporting them.

New assistance to this area of Canada must not bear the tag of charity; it must help us to be productive. There must be policies aimed at substantially increasing productivity, thereby leading to maximum efficiency and the utilization of our natural resources, while processing these resources to the fullest possible extent within the region. We are somewhat encouraged by the Speech from the Throne which says:

> It remains the goal of the government to be concerned with the production of wealth. It also remains the goal of the government that Canadians be given the opportunity to enjoy that wealth.

If these are more than empty words, and let us hope they are, the government must get going right away in order to help this area. There are many ways in which help could be extended. We have natural resources in the area. In my own province, for example, we have a rapidly expanding Irish moss business. Irish moss, for the information of hon. members who may not be acquainted with it, is a small marine plant which is attached to rocks very close to low-water. The most important and valuable extract from Irish moss is a product called carrageen. It is worth from $1.50 to $2 per pound. It is used as a stabilizing base in very many products. It is used, for example, in ice cream, chocolate milk, pie fillings, beer and icings. It is also used in insecticide sprays, water-base paints, inks, shampoos, ointments, tablets and cosmetics. There are hundred of uses for this product.

Last year in the province of Prince Edward Island we produced 54 million pounds of Irish moss. This represents 37 per cent of the world supply. Think of it—37 per cent of the world supply of Irish moss was produced in the small province of Prince Edward Island. About 85 million pounds of Irish moss was harvested in the Maritimes last year. That represents about 84 per cent of the world production. This is a very promising industry, but the unfortunate part is that all this moss is exported, either to Denmark or to the state of Maine, in order to extract the carrageen, which is the important part. I suggest there is no reason at all why extraction plants could not be established in the Atlantic area. This would provide employment for a great many of our people and would enable this important extract to be taken out right at home. The product would not have to be exported to foreign countries. This is an industry which I suggest could very well be helped and supported by the federal government in order to provide more employment for our people.

Fishing is another important industry in the Atlantic provinces. In 1969 the fishing industry accounted for an income in excess of $9 million. I suggest that more work will have to be done to make fish attractive and easy to prepare, and also to encourage its greater consumption. The latest figures issued by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics indicate that Canadians eat 13 pounds of meat and poultry for every pound of fish. A great deal of blame for this can be laid directly at the feet of the Department of Fisheries. There has, unfortunately been very little effort on the part of the department to find out just what the consumer wants in the line of fish, and very little effort has been made to encourage our producers to make fish more attractive and of improved quality. Quality control must be tightened, because the entire industry suffers when sloppy inspection practices permit inferior quality fish to reach the consumer's table. Again, more encouragement must be given to our people to eat fish.

In many cases, fish recipes which are published for consumers—some by the Department of Fisheries itself—are so complicated, contain so many uncommon ingredients and take so long to prepare that the average housewife, in despair, reaches into the fridge and brings out a sausage dinner. Housewives cannot be expected to find out from processing companies what to do with fish when they buy it, and if they wait to find out from the government I am afraid the fish will be spoiled. Fish cookbooks prepared by the government—there are some good ones—should not be kept here in Ottawa waiting for the consumer to write for them. The consumer just will not write. I suggest these cookbooks should be sent out. Unless the federal government takes steps along these lines to increase Canadian per capita consumption of fish, the industry is bound to suffer. More work will definitely have to be done so that the fish may become more attractive and more marketable.

• (9:10 p.m.)

Now, of course, in our area farming is one of the main industries. Unfortunately, however, the farm population in my province has dropped by almost 50 per cent in the last 30 years. In 1930, for example, our farm population was 55,000. That represented 63 per cent of our total population. In 1966 the farm population dropped to 31,000 people, or 28 per cent of our population. A drop in farm population naturally results in a drop in the number of farms. In 1931 there were 12,865 occupied farms, but by 1966 this number had decreased to 6,357, a drop of 50 per cent in five years. In order to stop this downward trend—and I suggest it must be stopped in a province such as ours which depends so much on farming—the government must give the province some assistance in respect of marketing.

The province of Prince Edward Island grows the best potatoes in the world, but markets must be found for them. In 1969 our potato harvest was one of the best on record both in respect of quantity and quality, but unfortunately the price the farmers received for this product barely covered the cost of production. One just cannot remain in business unless he can make a profit, and one cannot make a profit in so far as farm products are concerned unless some assistance is given in the finding of adequate markets for what is produced.

The tobacco industry is a growing industry in our province. Last year 2¼ million pounds of leaf tobacco were produced. This brought a return of approximately $1.5 million to our farmers. I suggest that here is an avenue whereby the government can come to the assistance of the farmers and help them maintain a better standard of living, so that the young people would be encouraged to remain in agriculture because, as I said before, it is the most important industry in our province. If we lose it, I am afraid we will suffer very seriously economically.

These are some of the things to which this government should give attention. I know my time is rapidly expiring. I trust some of the things I have mentioned this evening will in one way or another be brought to the attention of the government, and that some effective measures will be introduced at once to improve the economy of the Atlantic area.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to join in this Throne Speech debate. I wish to add my congratulations to the mover and seconder of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, the hon. member for Bourassa (Mr. Trudel) and the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas).

This debate has been taking place this week while we have all been preoccupied with the events in Montreal regarding the kidnapping of Mr. Cross and Mr. Laporte. Indeed, the arrival on Parliament Hill on Tuesday morning of combat troops placed an ominous note over the whole capital. One cannot help but wonder if the free and open society which we have enjoyed in Canada is coming to an end. Perhaps in the future our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) will not be able to move freely within our country without the heavy security which United States presidents and leaders in many Latin-American countries have. Let us hope this is not the case, because this is one of the conditions which many of us cherish in this land. It is one of the conditions which we have enjoyed in the past and which is different from the United States. We have always had the happy circumstance that political differences could be settled by debate and not by a gun.

I commend the government on its handling of this situation, in not giving in to the terrorists. To give in is to invite anarchy—the rule of law would be finished in Canada. The strategy of playing for time while keeping up the police investigation is the right one. By doing this the terrorists will ultimately make a mistake and be brought to justice. The coverage by the news media is less commendable. The media speak of "political prisoners" in Quebec jails. These are not political prisoners; these prisoners are criminals convicted of a crime set down in the Criminal Code of Canada as enacted by Parliament. The media also speak of "the execution of Mr. Cross and Mr. Laporte" in the notes sent by the terrorists. Let us be sensible. Only a judge and jury acting under the law of a sovereign state can sentence a man to be executed. If Mr. Cross or Mr. Laporte should be killed by the FLQ terrorists, there would be only one word for this act, and that is "murder."

Mr. Speaker, as I moved around through my constituency of Algoma this past summer, a constituency which I am very proud to represent in the House of Commons, I detected a feeling of concern about the quality of life which we seem to be heading into in the 1970s. There is concern, first, with the use of drugs by so many in our society; second, with the pollution of our lakes and rivers to the extent that fishing is banned and, third, with the violence portrayed on television and exemplified in the recent events in Montreal. Our area is not immune to the problem of young people appearing in court because of the illegal use of marijuana and other drugs. The newspapers carry regular accounts of it. And, Mr. Speaker, there is no easy solution to the problem. Many people feel that we should not saddle young people with permanent criminal records because of convictions for using marijuana, but at the same time legalization is no solution to the problem. Undoubtedly this is a matter which we, as the elected representatives of the people of this great land, must study with all diligence in this session and in respect of which we must formulate solutions.

It seems to me, as I read the reports of the increased use of drugs in Canada and the United States, that this could well be the Achilles heel of our western civilization. Surely, a civilization that has been able to make the scientific and technical advances that ours has, that has developed an educational system which should challenge the most intelligent of our youth, must be able, through education and example, to control this drug problem in our society. A famous man once said, "The problem is not in our stars; it's in ourselves". Thus, part of the solution perhaps is not in the stars; it is in ourselves. Young people see the adult generation using other drugs and setting a premium on false values, and are inclined to say, "Hypocrites, who are you to talk?".

Mr. Speaker, at a time when there is so much concern with our environment I was pleased to see forecast in the Speech from the Throne a department to be concerned with the preservation of the environment and our renewable resources. This new department will combine most of the activities of the federal government in the fight against pollution. Last year many of us spent several months in committee discussing the Canada Water Act. This will be a major federal statute to co-ordinate the activities of the various levels of government agencies in Canada. There were also four other bills passed last session to deal with pollution control, including action to control pollution in the Canadian Arctic, in the oil and gas-drilling rigs offshore on the continental shelf, and amendments to the Canada Fisheries Act.

I am pleased to learn that a bill respecting air pollution will be introduced this session. This is long overdue. Although some provinces have air pollution laws, not all have. I hope that the Canada clean air bill will follow the same tack as the Canada Water Act, that is, that we recognize that much of the responsibility for pollution control in our society is a provincial responsibility. The two levels of government, by acting jointly to resolve the problem, can share resources, expertise and responsibility.

• (9:20 p.m.)

However, if the province fails to act, or if it cannot afford the cost of taking action, the federal law will give the federal government power to act and the finances to carry it through. This way we have a continuity across this great land on the levels of despoilation that are permitted to our land, our water and our air. It is unacceptable to Canadians to see the interprovincial bidding for new industries that has taken place in the past because our province's pollution standards were lower than those of others. Ontario has not had a new pulp and paper mill established in it for the last 20 years. One of the reasons for this is that pollution standards here are higher than in some of the other provinces. Many people think they are none too high even in the province of Ontario.

The federal government has a responsibility to provide maximum, optimum standards throughout the land for water and air which will ensure a good-quality environment to pass on to future generations of Canadians. The combining of many federal government activities into a department charged with responsibility for our environment, as outlined in the Speech from the Throne, is a step in the right direction.

The Algoma federal riding combines many endeavours, including farming, forestry, mining and tourism. On reading this list of activities of the Algoma riding one quickly realizes that these are primary industries. No public debate concerns us more than the current one on the foreign domination of our industry and of our land.

The present uncertainty in the uranium mining industry is an example of the immense complexity of drawing up rules for Canadian ownership. Last year at this time there were some 20 diamond drills operating in the Elliot Lake area. Today there are practically none. Exploration activity is at a minimum across Canada. This represents millions of dollars of lost development. Now that the uncertainty regarding foreign ownership of uranium mines has been raised, it should be resolved as quickly as possible so that future exploration in Canada will continue.

Fortunately, the government did establish an assistance policy last July to aid uranium mines through the next three to four lean years of markets for uranium oxide. Everyone in Elliot Lake is depending on both the government and Denison Mines' representatives, who are currently negotiating assistance to keep the mine operating, to come to an agreement very soon. The value of this assistance policy will only be proven, so far as this community is concerned, if a successful conclusion is reached.

The ramifications of the current public debate on foreign ownership in Canada are far reaching. For example, we have been searching for several years now for a company to establish a pulp and paper mill in the Algoma riding to utilize our wood fibre. One U.S. company which had started a study of the area, and of the feasibility of building a mill, decided not to proceed partly due to the uncertainty as to the foreign ownership of Canadian resource industries.

I think we must approach economic nationalism in Canada with great care. Any decisions made to limit foreign investment must be well thought-out with regard to repercussions on the communities which will be affected. If rules are developed rashly and without careful study, the results could be disastrous for the resource industry areas of Canada. It happens that many of the resource industry areas are also areas of Canada which are designated for secondary industry grants by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. It would be stupid to establish foreign ownership rules which would stop development in these areas of Canada when the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is spending hundreds of millions of dollars to promote expansion and the development of secondary industry.

Nothing that this government has done since it took over in 1968 has been more fruitful in the underdeveloped areas of our country than the establishment of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. The incentive grants for new manufacturing industry have meant a great deal to the Algoma riding. So far this year we have commitments for three regional development grants to industry amounting to over half a million dollars, which will provide much needed new jobs to our area and broaden our economic base. This kind of development reassures people that the government is concerned with establishing industry in our area. I am sure that this is only the beginning. More grants and more applications are pending, and further development will take place. There is a need in the Department of Regional Economic Expansion for a larger staff to handle the applications for grants. Many businessmen who have applied tell me that they have had to wait several months to have their applications processed. Additional competent development officers should be hired so that these applications can be handled more quickly.

The problems of foreign ownership are not limited to our mines and forest industry, but extend also to our farm and lakeshore property. United States ownership is so common on the shores of Lake Huron, Lake Superior and Manitoulin Island that local people think little of it. Many U.S. families have owned summer cottages there for two generations; they have been good summer citizens and are our friends. However, in recent years, with the opening of a four-lane interstate highway from Detroit and Chicago to Sault Ste. Marie, with the summer cottage frontier pushing farther and farther north, and with the summer riots and dissent in the U.S.A., the acquisition of Canadian land and lakeshore recreational property has gone from a trickle to a raging torrent.

Two examples will give an idea of the size of this problem. A recent transfer of property took place north of Sault Ste. Marie on Lake Superior, involving 13 miles of lakeshore property. This was a sale from a Canadian to a U.S. company. Similarly, a foreign-owned company established a subdivision on the south side of Manitoulin Island with some 2,000 lots in it. The concern is that we are selling our birthright; that future generations of Canadians will look back at the time when Canadians owned the land and then the Americans came and bought it all.

There is a need for planning to assure future generations of Canadians that land will be available to them for recreation purposes. There is a need for land to be set aside for public use as well. The federal government must stop waiting on the Ontario government for park development. There is a need for more public recreational land to be set aside now for future generations in Ontario. It is forecast, for example, that Toronto will have 6.5 million people in less than 30 years. Where will these people go for public recreational land? I can think of no better place for a national park than the Manitoulin Island area, midway between northern and southern Ontario. But now is the time to act—not after all suitable land has been purchased by our U.S. neighbours.

The chairman of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Watson), visited the island this past summer. He was very impressed with its beauty and its potential for a national park. One can capture something of the beauty of the area between the town of Espanola and Manitoulin Island by watching the current Sunday night TV series "Adventures in Rainbow Country," which was filmed there during the summer of 1969. So my invitation to hon. members is to see the TV program "Adventures in Rainbow Country," which shows some of the beauties of our area, and then I am sure they will agree with me that now is the time to decide to establish a national park in this area for recreation in the future.

Division

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. It being 9.30 o'clock p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to section 4 of Standing Order 38, to interrupt these proceedings and put forthwith the question on any amendment or amendments now before the House.

• (9:30 p.m.)

The House divided on the amendment to the amendment (Mr. Fortin) which was negatived on the following division:

• (9:40 p.m.)

YEAS

Messrs:

Barnett
Brewin
Caouette
Dionne
Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)
Fortin
Gauthier
Godin
Harding
Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)
Laprise
Lewis
MacInnis (Mrs.)
Matte
Nystrom
Peters
Rodrigue
Rondeau
Rose
Saltsman—20.

NAYS

Messrs:

Aiken
Allmand
Anderson
Asselin
Badanai
Baldwin
Barrett
Basford
Béchard
Beer
Benson
Bigg
Blouin
Borrie
Brown
Buchanan
Caccia
Cafik
Chappell
Chrétien
Clermont
Coates
Cobbe
Code
Comeau
Comtois
Corbin
Côté (Longueuil)
Crouse
Cullen
Cyr
Danson
Davis
Deachman
Deakon
Diefenbaker
Dinsdale
Douglas (Assiniboia)
Drury
Dubé
Duquet
Éthier
Fairweather
Faulkner
Flemming
Forrestall
Foster
Francis
Gibson
Gillespie
Givens
Goyer
Gray
Guay (St. Boniface)
Guilbault
Haidasz
Hales
Harries
Hees
Hopkins
Howe
Jerome
Kaplan
Kierans
Lachance
Lambert (Edmonton West)
Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt)
Langlois
Laniel
La Salle
Leblanc (Laurier)
LeBlanc (Rimouski)
Lefebvre
Legault
Lessard (LaSalle)
Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean)
MacDonald (Egmont)
Macdonald (Rosedale)
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
MacLean
Macquarrie
MacRae
McBride
McCleave
McCutcheon
McGrath
McIlraith
McIntosh
McKinley
McNulty

Division

McQuaid
Mahoney
Marceau
Marchand (Langelier)
Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo)
Monteith
Morison
Munro
Nesbitt
Nielsen
Noble
Noël
O'Connell
Olson
Otto
Ouellet
Pelletier
Pepin
Perrault
Portelance
Pringle
Prud'homme
Richardson
Ritchie
Robinson
Rochon
Rock
Roy (Laval)
Ryan
Schumacher
Sharp
Smerchanski
Smith (Saint-Jean)
Southam
Stafford
Stanfield
Stewart (Marquette)
St. Pierre
Sulatycky
Sullivan
Thomas (Maisonneuve-Rosemont)
Thompson (Red Deer)
Tolmie
Trudeau
Trudel
Turner (London East)
Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)
Valade
Wahn
Walker
Watson
Weatherhead
Whelan
Whicher
Whiting
Woolliams
Yanakis—150.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment to the amendment lost. The question is now on the amendment.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Stanfield) which was negatived on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Aiken
Alkenbrack
Asselin
Baldwin
Barnett
Bigg
Brewin
Coates
Code
Comeau
Crouse
Diefenbaker
Dinsdale
Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)
Fairweather
Flemming
Forrestall
Hales
Harding
Hees
Howe
Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)
Lambert (Edmonton West)
La Salle
Lewis
MacDonald (Egmont)
MacInnis (Mrs.)
MacLean
Macquarrie
MacRae
McCleave
McCutcheon
McGrath
McIntosh
McKinley
McQuaid
Monteith
Nesbitt
Nielsen
Noble
Nystrom
Peters
Ritchie
Rose
Ryan
Saltsman
Schumacher
Southam
Stanfield
Stewart (Marquette)
Thompson (Red Deer)
Valade
Woolliams—53.

NAYS

Messrs:

Allmand
Anderson
Badanai
Barrett
Basford
Béchard
Beer
Benson
Blouin
Borrie
Brown
Buchanan
Caccia
Cafik
Chappell
Chrétien
Clermont
Cobbe
Comtois
Corbin
Côté (Longueuil)
Cullen
Cyr
Danson
Davis
Deachman
Deakon
Douglas (Assiniboia)
Drury
Dubé
Duquet
Éthier
Faulkner
Foster
Francis
Gibson
Gillespie
Givens
Goyer
Gray
Guay (St. Boniface)
Guilbault
Haidasz
Harries
Hopkins
Jerome
Kaplan
Kierans
Lachance
Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt)
Langlois
Laniel
Leblanc (Laurier)
LeBlanc (Rimouski)
Lefebvre
Legault
Lessard (La Salle)
Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Macdonald (Rosedale)
MacEachen
MacGuigan
Mackasey
McBride
McIlraith
McNulty
Mahoney
Marceau
Marchand (Langelier)
Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo)
Morison
Munro
Noël
O'Connell
Olson
Otto
Ouellet
Pelletier
Pepin
Perrault
Portelance
Pringle
Prud'homme
Richardson
Robinson
Rochon
Rock
Roy (Laval)
Sharp
Smerchanski
Smith (Saint-Jean)
Stafford
St. Pierre
Sulatycky
Sullivan
Thomas (Maisonneuve-Rosemont)
Tolmie
Trudeau
Trudel
Turner (London East)
Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)
Wahn
Walker
Watson
Weatherhead
Whelan
Whicher
Whiting
Yanakis—108.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost. It being ten o'clock, this House stands adjourned until eleven o'clock tomorrow morning, pursuant to section 2 of Standing Order 2.

At ten o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, October 16, 1970

The House met at 11 a.m.

WAR MEASURES ACT

TABLING OF PROCLAMATION THAT APPREHENDED INSURRECTION EXISTS AND PUBLIC ORDER REGULATIONS, 1970

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 41(2) I wish to table an Order in Council under the War Measures Act authorizing the issuing of a proclamation and a copy of the proclamation.

I also wish to table a second Order in Council under the War Measures Act authorizing certain regulations to provide emergency powers.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I ask the Prime Minister if copies of these regulations will be circulated to members immediately?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I understand this is being done at the present time. The document is being circulated.

* * *

NATIONAL SECURITY

APPREHENDED INSURRECTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43 TO APPROVE ACTION OF GOVERNMENT IN INVOKING WAR MEASURES ACT

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43 I request the unanimous consent of the House to move the following motion. I move:

That the House approves the action of the government in invoking the powers of the War Measures Act to meet the state of apprehended insurrection in the province of Quebec as communicated to the Prime Minister by the government of Quebec and the civic authorities of Montreal and further approves the orders and regulations tabled today by the Prime Minister on the clear understanding that the proclamation invoking the powers as contained in the regulations will be revoked on or before April 30, 1971, unless a resolution authorizing their extension beyond the date specified has been approved by the House.

Mr. Speaker: Does the right hon. Prime Minister have unanimous consent to proceed with the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it is my grave duty to inform the House that at 4 a.m. this morning the government proclaimed the War Measures Act. This step was taken after consideration of all the facts, and particularly of letters received from the Prime Minister of Quebec and the authorities of the city of Montreal reporting a state of apprehended insurrection. The letter from the Prime Minister of the province of Quebec, which was received at 3 a.m., reads as follows:

[Translation]

Quebec City, October 16, 1970.

Mr. Prime Minister,

During the last few days the people of Quebec have been greatly shocked by the kidnappings of Mr. James R. Cross, representative of the British Government in Montreal, and the Hon. Pierre Laporte, Minister of Labour and Manpower and Minister of Immigration of Quebec, as well as by the threats to the security of the state and individuals expressed in communiqués issued by the Front de Libération du Québec or on its behalf, and finally all the circumstances surrounding these events.

After consultation with authorities directly responsible for the administration of justice in Quebec, the Quebec Government is convinced that the law, as it stands now, is inadequate to meet this situation satisfactorily.

Under the circumstances, on behalf of the Government of Quebec, I request that emergency powers be provided as soon as possible so that more effective steps may be taken. I request particularly that such powers encompass the authority to apprehend and keep in custody individuals who, the Attorney General of Quebec has valid reasons to believe, are determined to overthrow the government through violence and illegal means. According to the information we have and which is available to you, we are facing a concerted effort to intimidate and overthrow the government and the democratic institutions of this province through planned and systematic illegal action, including insurrection. It is obvious that those participating in this concerted effort completely reject the principle of freedom under the rule of law.

The Quebec Government is convinced that such powers are necessary to meet the present emergency. Not only are two completely innocent men threatened with death, but we are also faced with an attempt by a minority to destroy social order through criminal action; it is for those reasons that our government is making the present request.

The government is confident that, through such powers, it will be able to put an immediate stop to intimidation and terror and to ensure peace and security for all citizens.

Please accept, Mr. Prime Minister, my very best regards.

Robert Bourassa

• (11:10 a.m.)

[English]

I also received from the civic authorities of the city of Montreal a letter addressed to me which reads as follows:

[Translation]

Mr. Prime Minister,

The chief of the Montreal Police has informed us that the means available to him are proving inadequate and that the assistance of higher levels of government has become essential for the protection of society against the seditious plot and the apprehended insurrection in which the recent kidnappings were the first step.

Invoking of War Measures Act

We are forwarding as a matter of the utmost urgency the report describing the scope of the threat and the urgent need to reinforce the machinery to cope with it.

We ask for every measure of assistance the federal government may deem useful and desirable in order to carry out the task of protecting society and the life of citizens in this difficult period.

Lucien Saulnier
Chairman of the Executive Committee

Jean Drapeau
Mayor of Montreal

[English]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister agree to table those two letters?

An hon. Member: They are on record now in Hansard.

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker, if they can be tabled; I have some copies here. I might add a longer letter which would be of interest to the House but which I shall not read at this time. It is a letter to the Mayor of Montreal and to the President of the Executive Council from the Director of the Police Department of the city of Montreal. This document might also be of interest to the House. Perhaps the three letters could be printed as an appendix to Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreeable?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

(Editor's Note: For text of letters referred to above, see Appendix.)

Mr. Trudeau: Following the proclamation of the Act and the approval of the Governor in Council of the orders and regulations tabled at the beginning of this sitting, the several police forces in the Montreal area were instructed to increase the volume and the intensity of their activities. Commencing at approximately 4.30 a.m. this morning a number of arrests were made. As of an hour ago, the number of persons taken into custody as a result of these operations was, I believe, in the vicinity of 100. No, I am told it was approximately 154.

The letter from the government of Quebec requesting special powers followed by several hours an earlier request from that government for the deployment of armed forces personnel in some parts of the province of Quebec.

The House will know that the government of Quebec had earlier yesterday evening proposed to the FLQ kidnappers that in return for the surrender of their two hostages, Mr. James Cross and Mr. Pierre Laporte, safe conduct out of Canada would be promised them and that parole would be recommended of five FLQ members now in jail who had requested parole. That proposal brought no positive response.

It is a matter of deep regret and grave concern to me, as I am sure it is to all hon. members, that the condition of our country makes necessary this proclamation. We in this House have all felt very strongly, I know, that democracy was nowhere in a healthier state than in Canada; that nowhere was there less need for frustrated men to turn to violence to attain their political ends. I still believe firmly that this is so. Yet in recent years we have been forced to acknowledge the existence within Canada of a new and terrifying type of person—one who in earlier times would have been described as an anarchist, but who is now known as a violent revolutionary. These persons allege that they are seeking social change through novel means. In fact they are seeking the destruction of the social order through clandestine and violent means.

Faced with such persons, and confronted with authoritative assessments of the seriousness of the risk to persons and property in the Montreal area, the government had no responsible choice but to act as it did last night. Given the rapid deterioration of the situation as mentioned by Prime Minister Bourassa, and given the expiration of the time offered for the release of the hostages, it became obvious that the urgency of the situation demanded rapid action. The absence both of adequate time to take other steps or of alternative legislative authority dictated the use of the War Measures Act. After informing the leaders of the opposition parties of our intention to act in this fashion, and following receipt of the letters that I tabled a moment ago, the government proclaimed the Act.

The government recognizes that the authority contained in the Act is much broader than is required in the present situation, notwithstanding the seriousness of the events. For that reason the regulations which were adopted permit the exercise of only a limited number of the powers available under the Act. Nevertheless, I wish to make it clear today that the government regards the use of the War Measures Act as only an interim and, in the sense mentioned above, somewhat unsatisfactory measure.

Following the passage of enough time to give the government the necessary experience to assess the type of statute which may be required in these circumstances, it is my firm intention to discuss with the leaders of the opposition parties the desirability of introducing legislation of a less comprehensive nature. In this respect I earnestly solicit from the leaders and from all hon. members constructive suggestions for the amendment of the regulations. Such suggestions will be given careful consideration for possible inclusion in any new statute.

• (11:20 a.m.)

May I say in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that no Canadian takes less lightly than I the seriousness of the present situation in Canada and the gravity of the measures which the government has been asked to assume in order to meet that situation. Coincidentally, the fate of the two kidnapped hostages weighs very heavily in my mind, as it does on all of us.

I recognize, as I hope do others, that this extreme position into which governments have been forced is in some respects a trap. It is a well known technique of revolutionary groups who attempt to destroy society by unjustified violence to goad the authorities into inflexible

* An offer to deal had been made

* Evid. Bourassa had asked W.M.A. be proclaimed the prev. Sunday.
 "firm intention"

attitudes. The revolutionaries then employ this evidence of alleged authoritarianism as justification for the need to use violence in their renewed attacks on the social structure. I appeal to all Canadians not to become so obsessed by what the government has done today in response to terrorism that they forget the opening play in this vicious game. That play was taken by the revolutionaries; they chose to use bombing, murder and kidnapping. *

To those who will voice concern at the extent of the powers assumed by the government under this procedure, I can only say that I sympathize with their attitude, and applaud them for speaking out. I hasten to suggest, however, that the legislative record of this Parliament in the field of individual liberties contributes unequivocally to its credibility and good faith.

I promise that the House shall be kept fully informed if any changes in the regulations are made. Furthermore, I pledge that all extraordinary powers will be withdrawn as soon as it has been demonstrated that there is a cessation of the violence and the threats of violence which made necessary their introduction. I intend to repeat that assurance and offer an explanation of government activities in this matter to the Canadian people through the public media later today.

Before I sit down, Mr. Speaker, it would be inappropriate were I not to mention to the House my gratitude for the understanding which has been offered me in the last 24 hours by the leaders of the opposition parties and by certain members of the Privy Council, including the right hon. member for Prince Albert and the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson. For their wise counsel I say, thank you.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we are discussing a most serious matter, a matter fraught with the most serious consequences for our country and one which I hope I can discuss in that sense and in the full recognition of the very grave issues that are involved in the measures that the government has taken. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) did inform me and the leaders of the other parties last night about the probability of this action being taken, and I appreciate that courtesy. There was also some discussion. I know the Prime Minister did not intend at all to indicate that the action the government proposed to take had been approved by the leaders of the opposition parties, but I wish to make it perfectly clear that while I was informed of the decision to be taken and while there was an opportunity for some discussion I was, of course, in no position to and did not give any approval.

I am certainly not contesting the legitimacy of the proclaiming of the War Measures Act, or the legal power of the government to issue this proclamation and these regulations. My understanding is that the finding of the government that there is real or apprehended insurrection is conclusive. The government is the only one in a position to know. The government has received the letters to which the Prime Minister referred from the government of Quebec and the civic authorities in the city of Montreal. Therefore I certainly am not questioning the legitimacy of the proclamation.

Nor, Sir, am I questioning the need for governments, including the government of Canada, to take effective action to enforce law and order at this time particularly in view of the kidnappings which have taken place, the holding of these two men for ransom and the apparent failure of the methods that were being used to bring this crisis to a conclusion. I emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that I do not question the need for effective action to be taken to enforce the laws of this country. Yet we must recognize that the measure that has been adopted, the invoking of the War Measures Act, is the most serious and drastic measure the government could have taken. It gives the government very broad powers. I wish to emphasize, of course, that it is the government that has taken this action and that it is the government which must accept the responsibility for invoking this Act, because we in the opposition are not in a position to judge whether there is real or apprehended insurrection.

I say this is a very serious measure because obviously it has broad ramifications. The War Measures Act provides for the possibility of very sweeping interference with what we ordinarily consider to be the civil rights and liberties of Canadians. It is true that the government has presented and adopted regulations which do not invoke all the powers of the War Measures Act but, the War Measures Act having been invoked, there certainly are many additional powers in reserve which the government could utilize by regulation at any time. Furthermore, the extensive powers described in the regulations are to be in effect until April 30, 1971, a very considerable length of time. These powers apply, of course, throughout the country.

The Prime Minister has touched upon something that is of great concern to me. I refer to the possibility that a measure such as this could lead to escalation and might perhaps increase the tendency of some people to be attracted to radical movements. Therefore, because I recognize the need for action and am very concerned about the sweeping measures the government has adopted, I think it is important that at this time we consider the need of restricting any extraordinary measures to the greatest possible extent and for the shortest period of time.

• (11:30 a.m.)

I do not want to be partisan and I do not propose to be partisan on this occasion, at least, but in due course questions will have to be asked about how the condition in which we now find ourselves in this country developed. But I think the Prime Minister must find himself in a most extraordinary position as a man who advocated fervently the entrenchment of civil rights in our constitution and, within a relatively short period thereafter, is in the position of invoking the War Measures Act and suspending in a substantial way the tradition of civil liberties of Canadians for a substantial period of time.

* This was not murder of hostages, which came later.

I also believe that it is not good enough for the government, when the country finds itself in a condition such as this, simply to point the finger at certain revolutionaries who, it says, have brought the country into this condition. I am trying to be fair when I say that the government in authority when this condition was developing must also be prepared to answer for the condition in which the country finds itself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: A special danger exists, and the government has taken the measures it has taken. I believe strongly that it would certainly have been far more preferable to introduce special legislation with much more restricted powers than the powers the government now has having invoked the War Measures Act. The Prime Minister has said that it was not possible. I am not going to spend much time arguing about what was possible or what was done, but I assert that, rather than coming here this morning and seeking the approval of the House for a measure for which the government must accept the responsibility for having taken, the government should have concentrated on bringing before the House a bill which would have carefully restricted the special powers that it is seeking to deal with this condition. Such a bill would contain proper safeguards to reduce to a minimum the possibility of any partisan action. I do not see that in these regulations. We do not really know when these powers will end. The regulations are sweeping. I want to say perfectly frankly that I would not be prepared to support a bill that embraced these regulations but I would certainly be prepared to co-operate in providing, for a limited period of time, such unusual and extraordinary powers as were clearly necessary for the government to enforce the law.

Consider, for example, the provisions in these regulations. The regulations make it a crime to be a member of an unlawful association. First of all, they provide as follows:

> The group of persons or association known as Le Front de Liberation du Quebec and any successor group or successor association of the said Le Front de Liberation du Quebec or any group of persons or association that advocates the use of force or the commission of crime as a means of or as an aid in accomplishing governmental change within Canada is declared to be an unlawful association.

In other words, the government is creating a new crime, and I should point out in passing that it has now become a crime to be a member of an association which advocates the use of force or the commission of a crime. Under the emergency powers which the government now has it could, of course, create a new crime tomorrow. I simply wish to say that I certainly want to see the law enforced, I want to see those who are guilty of subversive activities prosecuted and punished. But I am not prepared to see it made a crime to be a member of an association, particularly in view of the measures relating to evidence in section 8, which reads as follows:

> In any prosecution for an offence under these Regulations, evidence that any person
>
> (a) attended any meeting of the unlawful association,
>
> (b) spoke publicly in advocacy for the unlawful association, or
>
> (c) communicated statements of the unlawful association as a representative or professed representative of the unlawful association is, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, proof that he is a member of the unlawful association.

Under that section it might very well be that someone who some time ago might have attended a meeting of some association that is defined as unlawful by these regulations could be convicted of an offence which carries a penalty of up to five years imprisonment.

Certainly we must protect our society. Certainly we must prosecute people who try to overthrow it violently or to use violence to achieve their purposes. But I am not convinced that we have reached the point where we must define as a crime membership in an association unless, of course, there is direct implication in the committing of a crime. When we consider the safeguarding of our society we have to consider not only the enforcement of the law, the direct protection of society against criminal acts but also the preservation of the strength of our society, and not weaken it by making it a crime to be a member of an association. I suggest that this could have quite widespread application throughout our country.

• (11:40 a.m.)

I apologize for not making my remarks more succinct but I did not have an opportunity to see the regulations until a short time ago. Nevertheless, I urge that the government, instead of seeking the approval of the House for the measure it has already taken, the invoking of the War Measures Act, should heed what is said in the House today and should at the earliest possible date bring in a bill with much more restricted powers, many more safeguards with regard to review, and of a much more limited duration.

I put these views forward very solemnly, Sir, because I am very concerned that in our desire to deal with this tragic situation that has developed, our desire to deal with these terrorists who are a menace to our society, our desire to do those things that are necessary, we do not weaken our social fabric by invoking powers that are far too extensive, possibly creating new crimes on the spur of the moment, and do not provide adequate safeguards for review.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, these last few days have been days of anxiety for all the people of Canada, and particularly for the members of this House who sit on the treasury benches. We have all been appalled and disgusted by the abduction of two innocent men who are being held as hostages in an attempt to blackmail the government into releasing convicted criminals and to do certain other things which, in my opinion, are completely unreasonable.

Because this situation is so delicate we in this party have carefully refrained from making any statements or from asking any provocative questions. Because we felt that the government should be given every opportunity to deal with what was an extremely difficult situation we have gone along with the government on at least two or three matters.

We have agreed with the government's refusal to accede to the outrageous demands of the kidnappers. I can understand the feelings of those sensitive individuals whose first reaction was that the government should deal with the kidnappers and should be prepared to accede to their demands. I would not go so far as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) as to call them weak-kneed and bleeding hearts. I think they are people with a great sensitivity and a great sense of the value of human life. But I think such people overlook two important facts.

The first fact is that compliance with the demands of the abductors would not necessarily guarantee the safe return of the two men whom they have taken as hostages. The second, and even more important, is that acceding to the demands of the kidnappers would only set in motion a whole series of similar incidents, and nobody knows where the road would end.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Once it has become established that the government of this country is prepared to negotiate with kidnappers, to break the laws of the country, to release convicted criminals, to hand out huge sums of money, to publish the names of informers, then, of course, we would in all probability have more kidnappings and more blackmail. Undoubtedly the day would then come when the government would have to call a halt. The moment it called a halt it would, of course, be subject to the criticism that it had acceded to the demands in order to secure the release of some people and was now refusing to accede to the demands to secure the release of other persons. Therefore we have supported the government because we believe that to allow any group to dictate terms to the democratic, elected government of this country is to invite anarchy and chaos in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I think that Canadians must become aware of the fact that there are revolutionary forces in the world and now, unfortunately, some in Canada who are dedicated to the use of violence to bring about social change. We in the New Democratic Party want to bring about social change, but we have always believed that the means that are used determine the ends that are attained.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Those who attain power by violence and force always have to retain power by violence and force. A government that is founded on violence and force then begins to have problems within its own ranks, and the transfer of power and the change of leadership are also settled by violence and force. When we start down that road, Mr. Speaker, we are inviting the man on horseback, and the experiences of history from the days of Napoleon to Stalin, to Hitler, have all proven the same thing, that social change predicated on violence, on sabotage, on kidnapping, on assassination, is bound to end up in a police state, with periodic purges. We do not accept the doctrine of the Maoists that "all power proceeds out of the mouth of a gun", because if we accept that concept what we are saying is that society will be dominated by those who have the most guns and the ruthless will to use them.

In a country that has not got the democratic process one can understand men who desire freedom resorting to force, but in a country which has the democratic process and has a form of parliamentary democracy we say that these are the means at hand to bring about social change.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The second point on which we have supported the government is its desire to do everything possible to secure the release of Mr. Cross and Mr. Laporte. We, of course, understood that it could not possibly negotiate on the terms of the demands that had been made. But the government has a responsibility to negotiate, if possible, the safe return of these two men to their anguished families. For that reason we have done everything we could not to make a delicate situation more difficult in order that if the government could possibly reach some agreement for the release of these men, without acceding to the demands which had been made, it should be given every opportunity to do so.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we come to a point on which we cannot support the government. The government is now convinced that there is a state of civil disturbance and anticipated sabotage which requires prompt and vigorous action. The government, of course, undoubtedly has in its possession information that is not available to us. I suggest that if the government has information that civil disturbances are likely to break out on a large scale and that sabotage is anticipated in menacing proportions, then the government, of course, has the responsibility to deal with it.

I submit that, properly, the government had two options in dealing with the situation. The first was to deal with it under the powers which it now has under the laws of Canada, to utilize all the powers under the treason sections of the Criminal Code and the sections dealing with seditious intention. There are very considerable powers there. I think the government deserves some criticism because some of those sections have not been used. There have been indications of seditious intent upon which the government could have acted. There is also the offensive weapons provision, and in dealing with the matter the government could have acted under that authority. The government had the power to call in the armed forces, and did so, and there was no criticism of the government for using these extraordinary powers if they, in their opinion, on the basis of information which they and they alone had, considered the situation serious enough to warrant such action.

The second option which was open to the government was that if it came to the conclusion that the powers it now enjoys under the Criminal Code and various other statutes were not sufficient to cope with this situation, the magnitude of which the rest of us are not fully aware of, the government had the option of coming to Parliament and asking Parliament, in a democratic way, to clothe it with the authority to deal with this unusual situation.

• (11:50 a.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Certainly I can say, so far as this party is concerned, we would have been prepared to facilitate very quickly such matters coming before Parliament in order that the government might be able to indicate the areas in which it had not sufficient power and the justification for requiring greater powers and greater authority. But the government has not utilized this option. Instead, the government has taken the unusual step of invoking the War Measures Act. In my opinion the government has over-reacted to what is undoubtedly a critical situation. Does civil disturbance constitute apprehended insurrection?

An hon. Member: Yes.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): We have had civil disturbances in Canada before.

An hon. Member: Not like this.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Well, I recall as a boy the Winnipeg strike and the riot.

Mr. Sharp: But there was no kidnapping then.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Why don't you listen, Mitch, and learn?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I recall the trek of the unemployed from Vancouver on the way to Ottawa and the riots in Regina. There have been civil disturbances before; there have been subversive organizations at work in our society before. Governments have been able to secure from Parliament the necessary power and authority to deal with these situations without invoking the War Measures Act.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): This is the first time, to my knowledge, in Canadian history that the War Measures Act has been invoked in peacetime. So far as the New Democratic Party is concerned, we have been prepared and are prepared to support enlarging the police powers if the government thinks it necessary to give the police greater authority in the matter of searching for dynamite or offensive weapons. They have the power now to search for dynamite and offensive weapons but there is one exclusion—personal dwellings. If the government required the inclusion of personal dwellings for a stated period of time, under some protection we would certainly be prepared to consider the advisability of giving those additional powers. We are prepared to support the government in taking whatever measures are necessary to safeguard life and to maintain law and order in this country. But, Mr. Speaker, we are not prepared to use the preservation of law and order as a smokescreen to destroy the liberties and the freedom of the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Shame!

An hon. Member: There is no shame.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I wonder if the Liberal members who are shouting "Shame" have read the regulations.

An hon. Member: Yes.

Mr. Langlois: The hon. member should go to Quebec and find out about the situation.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The government, I submit, is using a sledgehammer to crack a peanut.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): This is over-kill on a gargantuan scale.

Why has the government invoked the War Measures Act? May I point out that the FLQ have been around for some six or seven years. For several years now it is well known that they have committed and been found guilty of acts of sabotage, the placing of bombs in mail boxes and blowing up of public buildings.

An hon. Member: Is the hon. member condoning that?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The Prime Minister was Minister of Justice for three years and has been Prime Minister of this country for over two years. Why have we not been asked to supply the government with the powers to deal with the growing menace which it now says is so tremendous that we must invoke the War Measures Act to deal with an apprehended insurrection? The fact is, and this is very clear, that the government has panicked and is now putting on a dramatic performance to cover up its own ineptitude.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Sharp: Not at all.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In the process of invoking the War Measures Act I wonder if the hon. gentlemen opposite who are making so much noise have stopped to consider that today the Prime Minister holds more power in his hands than any prime minister in the peacetime history of Canada.

An hon. Member: Thank God.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Right now there is no constitution in this country, no Bill of Rights, no provincial constitutions. This government now has the power by Order in Council to do anything it wants—to intern any citizen, to deport any citizen, to arrest any person or to declare any organization subversive or illegal. These are tremendous powers to put into the hands of the men who sit on the treasury benches.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): If my friends will look at the regulations they will find that if the police in their judgment decide that some person is a member of a subversive organization—not just of the FLQ but of any organization that the police decide is subversive—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): —or that he contributes to such a party—

An hon. Member: Why is the hon. member scared?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): —or that he communicates any of the ideas or doctrines of such a party—

An hon. Member: What has changed you, Tommy?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): —that person may be arrested and detained for 90 days. At the end of 90 days, he has the power to appeal to a superior court judge to set a date for his trial and that may be postponed for some time. He may be denied bail.

• (12:00 noon)

A person in Canada may be held for 90 days or more without any opportunity to prove his innocence, to prove that he does not belong to a subversive organization or to prove that the organization to which he belongs is not subversive in spite of what may be in the minds of those who ordered the arrest. The regulations give the power to seize property and hold it for 90 days. It is a resurrection of the padlock law. These are very serious powers. If the government requires those kinds of powers, surely in a democracy they should have asked the democratically elected representatives of the people to give them those powers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): What will be the effect of the action which the government has taken? I hope the effect will be to bring about the release of Mr. Cross and Mr. Laporte. I also hope the effect of this will be to reduce the effectiveness and activities of the FLQ, but I am not very sanguine about that because the history of our country and other countries is that revolutionary movements, when declared illegal, go underground and have an unhappy faculty of coming up from underground stronger than when they went down.

We remember when section 98 was included in the Criminal Code to deal with the communist party. It was not very effective so the Liberal party rescinded it. I was in the House at the time the Liberal party removed section 98 from the Criminal Code on the very proper Liberal ideology that you should not condemn a person for his ideas, but only for his acts of violence.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) pounds his desk. That is precisely what he is doing under these regulations. It does not have to be an act of sabotage. One does not have to commit an act of violence. He just has to belong to an organization which, in the opinion of the police, is dedicated to violence.

Some hon. Members: Tell the truth.

Mr. Woolliams: Give him a hearing.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I suggest to the House, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Cafik: Thank God the ship of state is not in your hands!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): If the ship of state were in my hands, the first thing I would do would be to get rid of some of the barnacles like the hon. member!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cafik: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please; the hon. member rises on a point of order.

Mr. Cafik: It seems odd, Mr. Speaker, that one who advocates democracy would get rid of one of the duly elected representatives if he had the power.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The hon. member knows that being Democrats, we would get rid of him by the democratic process. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the action of the government constitutes a victory for the FLQ.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): This is exactly what they want. They want a confrontation between themselves and the government of Canada. They want to be recognized as a revolutionary force with which the government of Canada must deal, and because of whom the government of Canada must mobilize all its resources to declare war. They want the government and the people of Canada to consider that we are now engaged in a civil war with the FLQ. This is exactly what they want. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) very properly said this morning that these actions fall within the established pattern which is planned by revolutionaries.

What happens? If we examine what has happened in other countries we find that revolutionary movements begin by associating themselves with the disadvantaged in the community and by espousing their cause. Then, acts of violence and sabotage follow which is responded to by police repression. That gives rise to demonstrations, maybe strikes and further police repression until, bit by bit, all the freedom and democracy is pushed aside and there are two armed camps. This is the polarization and confrontation which revolutionary movements in the world have sought to bring about.

The government has fallen right into the trap. The government has done exactly what the FLQ hoped they would do. All across this country students, workers and alienated groups will be told "See what happens when we fight on your behalf? The government immediately brings in repressive measures".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I say to the government that we cannot protect democratic freedom by restricting, limiting and destroying democratic freedom.

The government has two tasks before it. I sympathize fully with their desire to cope with civil disturbances and with any anticipated sabotage, but the government has two tasks to do before they are going to be successful in this regard. The first is that they must use the democratic process in seeking to stop sabotage, kidnapping and acts of violence. They must work within the framework of the democratic system. If we are going to tell people that we value democracy and that democracy is the way of dealing with social change, we must use the democratic procedures and not revert on our part to the very kind of violence which we are condemning on the other side.

Mr. Sharp: Do you not condemn it?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The second is that stringent measures by themselves, and I agree that stringent measures are necessary, taken through the democratic process will not cure this situation. We must go back to the root cause. A revolutionary movement has to have a base. Where is the base of the FLQ? The base of the FLQ lies in the disadvantaged and unfortunate people in the province of Quebec.

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Where is the support coming from?

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member kindly resume his seat? I just wanted to assist. At the moment the hon. member who has the floor should be allowed to make his speech.

• (12:10 p.m.)

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would think that even with the War Measures Act proclaimed we ought still to have the right to express our views in this free Parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I am suggesting to the government that no revolutionary movement can become a menace unless it has the support of the disadvantaged and alienated groups. Who are some of these people? The Lapalme workers who were callously and shamefully thrown out of work by a callous government without any thought of what would happen to these men—

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The unemployed, many of whom have now been out of work for a long time and who plead in vain for some action by this government, yet none is forthcoming; the people who live in slums, the people who live under appalling conditions.

Mr. Trudeau: This does not excuse violence.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The Prime Minister says this does not excuse bombings. Of course, it does not. But I would point out to the Prime Minister that the best way to stop people turning to violence is to remove the root causes which make them frustrated with the democratic process.

Mr. Trudeau: And let Quebec separate? That is what they want.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): That is not so, and you know it.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): This government should know that police action alone will not prevent discontent, and will not remove the sense of grievance and injustice which is felt by people. It takes positive measures alongside firm administration of the law. The government will make a great mistake if it thinks that merely by resorting to wider police control powers the problem of the FLQ will go away. It will not go away until we deal with the discontent and the frustration in the hearts of five or six million Canadians who feel that this country is not giving them a fair chance.

I say that the government's action today is an action of panic. In the hysteria which people feel, the government may, as the Prime Minister has said, get many letters and calls approving what is being done. But I predict that within six months, when the Canadian people have had time to reflect on what has happened today—the removal of all the protection and liberties presently on the statute books of Canada, a country placed under the War Measures Act, regulations introduced allowing persons to be detained for 90 days without a chance to prove their innocence—when that day comes, the Canadian people will look on this as a black Friday for civil liberties in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, after the House gave its unanimous consent this morning, to the introduction of a legislative measure that nobody wanted and after hearing the Leaders of the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party (Messrs. Stanfield and Douglas), say that perhaps we should not have accepted these measures, I feel they are simply playing politics.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Caouette: Indeed, that is what is being done in dealing with questions that are totally irrelevant to the situation now prevailing in Quebec.

I should like to point out that as far as the people of the province of Quebec are concerned, I think I know them better than the Leader of the Official Opposition or the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

Nobody is happy, this morning, to have to introduce such measures to put an end to terrorism in the province of Quebec. Neither the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), nor the other ministers, nor any other hon. member, nor anybody for that matter, feel happy that we have been forced to take such action and if it has become imperative, then I will say that it has long been overdue.

A year ago when the Chairman of Montreal's Executive Council (Mr. Saulnier) issued a warning against terrorist activities within the Company of Young Canadians, for instance, and also within other Montreal organizations, the government refused to acknowledge the truth of those statements. At that time, Mr. Saulnier had requested a Royal Inquiry which would have turned the whole situation inside out; the government decided not to move. They had to wait, before taking any action, until two eminent personalities had been abducted. You see now why over a week ago, I was already arguing that there was no alternative but to invoke the war measures legislation in view of the seriousness of the present situation.

Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that such events took place in the province of Quebec and that some of my fellow French-Canadians are responsible for them. It seems to me there would have been some other way to draw the whole world's attention than the methods used by the FLQ.

It has been pointed out earlier that the current situation had its roots somewhere. This is true. We have been saying so for long a time. We have called this government's attention to certain activities going on in Quebec for many years. In fact, when I stated in this House on repeated occasions, that separatists were employed by the CBC, nobody would believe that this government agency was being used as a platform by those who were spreading hatred and dissatisfaction throughout Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Caouette: I was told that I was wrong. The Secretary of State defended the CBC when he was perfectly aware that separatists, members of the FLQ were employed by this government agency which is run with the taxpayers' money.

Mr. Speaker, there is another point on which I would like to draw your attention. When Algerian teachers were allowed into Canada for instance, these were revolutionaries who came to educate our children but there was no opposition to it. Hundreds were admitted into Canada and these people were arrested this morning, including professors at the universities of Montreal, Quebec and Laval.

Mr. Speaker, why did we fail to act in time? Now we see students on the march. Moreover, in Hull this morning at 4 a.m., three or four students—including the son of a physician—were arrested for subversive activities. Those students have been roused by others, by people who told them: "Let us get together to upset the established order." I do not share at all the remarks made earlier by the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Douglas) when he said that those responsible for the abductions or the current situation in Quebec are destitute people.

In fact, most university students were born with a silver spoon in their mouth. They are primarily responsible for the situation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Caouette: There are among them unambitious, cowardly young people who do not have the guts to work and want to take advantage of the ignorance of people to try and climb the administration ladder of the country. I might give you hundreds of other examples.

What we are witnessing in Canada has already happened in other countries.

Two years ago, in Czechoslovakia, students revolted against the loss of their freedom that they wanted to recover. The students in Prague today are the sons of those who 25 or 30 years ago made the revolution in order to establish the totalitarian system they have to put up with now, and they are no longer free. Such a situation must be avoided in Canada. Those who are fighting in the name of that "famous" freedom in the FLQ are people who want to deny it to others, once they are in power.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Caouette: It is quite untrue that the FLQ is made up of disadvantaged, poor people who live in slums. As for its members, we have seen them again on the state-owned television network. Last night I heard Robert Lemieux yelling that he would overcome, priding himself on being an FLQ supporter, with Michel Chartrand in his wake. That is the story.

Now we know that the people we have seen for many years, the rebels, really exist. Michel Chartrand does not live in a slummy district in Montreal, even though he has always tried to rouse the destitute, such as the boys from Lapalme, for instance. They were mentioned a while ago and said to be members of the FLQ. This is not true. You can find among the former employees of G. Lapalme Inc. a few members of the FLQ, but they are not all members. These workers were roused by people like Michel Chartrand who blamed the government by stating: "You did not hire again the Lapalme drivers." They did not work for the government, but for a private company, G. Lapalme Inc.

If I close down my garage in Rouyn, will the government be forced to hire my former employees?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Caouette: The government offered the employees of G. Lapalme Inc. to integrate them in the public service. However, people like Chartrand told them not to accept.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Caouette: We sympathize with these former employees of the Lapalme Company, but never with the likes of Chartrand, because these are people who have no respect for anyone or for anything. In fact, he is one of those who formally declare their intention of overthrowing the present system and of taking over. I do not want rulers such as Chartrand and I do not think that members of the New Democratic Party would want him either.

Mr. Speaker, following the unanimous adoption of war measures by the House this morning, I would once again ask the Prime Minister to be careful, because some armed forces members who are now in Quebec come from parts of the country other than Quebec. Their searches should be controlled lest they meet somebody with an FLQ card and mistake him for a member of the Front de libération du Québec when he might be only a member of the Fédération libérale du Québec—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I know as everybody else does, that the situation in Quebec is serious. As far as we are concerned, we do not want to deprive citizens of their rights. However, as the Prime Minister suggested earlier, those people are the ones who asked for what is happening this morning. They are those who, by their doings, have decided of their present fate. Do we have the right to let them deprive the Canadian citizens of their freedom? Indeed, they have no right to do so. Then, they will complain that we have accepted to impose dictatorial measures. The steps taken this morning have absolutely nothing in common with dictatorship. What we want, Mr. Speaker, is to save our country and saveguard its unity.

That our administration has deficiencies, there is no doubt about it. Is any administration free of them? Some countries governments have been changed and have gone through upheavals. Have they for all that attained perfection? Not at all!

The same Castro, who pulled off his coup in Cuba, in the name of freedom and the poor, today tends his resignation saying that it resulted in a fiasco. Therefore it is certainly not in Cuba that perfection is to be found.

Is there any perfection in Russia? Not at all. No more than in Czechoslovakia. We do not have it here either but at least we enjoy freedom of expression. We have never prevented Mr. Michel Chartrand of Montreal, for instance, from expressing his opinion on radio and television or from publishing in newspapers all the nonsense he wrote in them.

Mr. Speaker, we still enjoy that freedom in spite of all the faults which are found in Canada. At least we can express ourselves. And this is, Mr. Speaker, what we believe in—and I shall say it in English,—the four basic principles capable of establishing true order which the Prime Minister has called "the just society", which should avoid situations such as the one we are facing at the moment. And I quote now these four principles which can be accepted by any political party. They are not political but social and economic principles which can be accepted in order to achieve true democracy, true freedom and true security. They are the following:

• (12:20 p.m.)

[English]

1. We firmly believe that the individual is the most important factor in organized society. Because he is a divinely created being, with spiritual, mental and physical needs and potentialities, he has inalienable rights which must be respected and preserved.

Because of this belief, we are unalterably opposed to communism, fascism and all forms of totalitarian government which make the individual citizen subservient to the state.

It stands opposed to political organizations whose aims are the furtherance of the sectional interests of organized labour, business, or finance.

2. Government must serve the individual. The major function of democratic government in organized society is to secure for the people the results they want from the management of their public affairs, as far as such results are physically possible and morally right.

3. The individual must be free and have economic security. The individual can only attain his full stature in a society where his ability to make moral choices is restricted as little as possible. Economic security is a necessary means for attaining this freedom not as an end to be attained by restricting it.

This is the strongest one.

4. The physically possible must be regarded as the financially possible. Whatever is physically possible, desirable, and morally right, can and should be made financially possible.

• (12:30 p.m.)

[Translation]

Some think that is funny. Let us not forget that enforcing the War Measures Act will cost the taxpayers hundreds of thousands of dollars in bringing back order.

Might not a policy of prevention have kept those insurrections from happening, two, five, ten or fifteen years ago, and created a climate of confidence amongst all Canadians, regardless of tongue or creed.

Mr. Speaker, we have tolerated the existence of a system which forced us to fight amongst ourselves. That system bred hatred between French-speaking and English-speaking Canadians. The major problem in Canada is not a language problem.

We almost came to blows in this House on this matter.

In other countries, religion is the cause of strife. We see it now in Ireland, for instance.

If we can use the army, if we can find money to enforce those measures in Montreal and in the province of Quebec, in peace time, there is no reason why we cannot find the funds to achieve what is physically possible. Thus, we will contribute to better understanding amongst Canadians. We will no longer witness these sterile fights between French-speaking and English-speaking people, amongst Canadians who feel frustrated because one part of the country is better treated than their own.

We believe in those four principles. Enforcing the measures proposed this morning by the government does not appeal to us. Obviously, no one would wish to resort to those methods. But given the serious situation in Quebec and the irresponsibility of certain hotheads, we must face the music and protect the basic rights of the individual and the society in Canada. We shall then have a system enabling anyone to be himself.

Those who rebel today will be able to think the matter over, and consider the chances that Canada offers them. Then, all Canadians will take part in making Canada greater, more worthy and a striking example for the whole world.

Mr. Speaker, of course the measures we intend to approve today make poor publicity for us abroad. However, we must cope with the situation. The government can rely on our support to prevent recurrence of such acts as have been perpetrated. This does not mean that we shall support the government in all respects. I merely suggest that the government introduce economic, social and political reforms designed to guarantee true democracy and prevent a repetition of current events in the province of Quebec.

[English]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, this is one of those occasions when Parliament has the opportunity of dealing with the question of freedom which, above everything else, is the mandate of Parliament and the reason that Parliament exists. I have listened to the explanations by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and knowing his past connections with civil liberties associations and his strong advocacy of the right, whether in war or in peace, to disagree with the authorities, I can understand when he said how diffident he was to bring before Parliament a resolution that what has been produced by the bureaucracy shall be voted upon by Parliament.

Many of the members in this House have not read the regulations, of that I am sure. They are asked to give approval to a series of regulations that place the freedoms of Canada in cold storage for several months to come. The request of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) was that there should be a statute. I was impressed by his arguments as he unveiled his views in this connection. Why not an amendment to the Criminal Code; why not an act of Parliament that will put teeth in the laws now in existence? Laws that will place the wrongdoers in jeopardy but will not take away the rights of Canadians in every part of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Why should we in the province of Saskatchewan have our rights and our fundamental freedoms taken away, at the request of the government of the province of Quebec, Mayor Drapeau and Mr. Saulnier of the city of Montreal?

I am not going to get into arguments with those who have decided they are going to interrupt because they disagree with my views. Members of the government, with their great majority, should not try to deny those who are members of the opposition their right to speak. I have always been accorded in this House the right to speak, even from those who have strongly disagreed with me because Parliament is, to me, a cathedral of devotion to Canada, its future and its greatness.

The Prime Minister says the reason for doing this is that the situation in Quebec has gotten out of hand; there is an emergency he contends. I have been watching the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier), with his hand up to his face, looking out of one eye. As I watched him, I wondered what his reaction was. He doesn't need two eyes. He does not want to see. I wonder what his attitude is now, after two occasions on which he stood up in this House and said there was nothing in the argument of the leader of the Créditistes that in the province of Quebec there were several people in Radio Canada who were members of the FLQ. I say to him that he knew this at the very time he was denying it in this House. Why were proceedings not taken?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (12:40 p.m.)

Mr. Diefenbaker: Why were not proceedings taken against the wrongdoers in the Company of Young Canadians? The minister is the one responsible. I shall deal in particular with some persons, who have the accolades of the government, who actually were trying to undermine this country. What about these four men in Radio Canada in the province of Quebec? Were they not brainwashing the people of Canada; were they not from day to day explaining that all was well? Yet, they were kept there. They were not interfered with. They enjoyed a peculiar protection. I wonder why the Secretary of State did not act, because I say again that he knew these individuals. Why did he not act? The Prime Minister says that this thing has come on suddenly. I am tremendously interested in the fact that he had both eyes shut, not just the one like the Secretary of State, and both ears shut, as the Prime Minister indicates. I am glad that he did so. Now, he puts his hand up to his nose which indicates that the stench is too strong.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Prime Minister said today in effect "we have word from Mayor Drapeau of Montreal and from Mr. Saulnier". Well, he had that in November of 1969. I have the dossier with me. The Prime Minister had this information and the pictures of some of these individuals. He had that information and what did he do? He whitewashed it. Sir, I have made a summary of the highlights of the documents which represents a review of the evidence placed before the Committee of Parliament. This clearly establishes that there were in the Company of Young Canadians those who were advocating the end of the government by force. Let me read from this. One is entitled the "Revolutionary Strategy". Apparently, the government never read this, although it was before them. I repeat that what is happening in the province of Quebec was before the government of Canada in November and December of 1969, and the government did nothing about it.

"Revolutionary Strategy" outlines in detail the tactics, organization and methods for seizing power by force in the province of Quebec. It reads:

> There are only two strategies—electoral strategy and revolutionary strategy. Real independence is inseparable from global revolution and its conquest demands always and everywhere a war to the end against imperialism, as in Viet Nam and Guatemala—

Then:

> Let us profit by the lessons of history since the Russian revolution in 1917 to work for an authentic revolution, organizing a base whereby through revolutionary action itself we shall come to count only on our own power, ability and creativity.

And then:

> Since 1963, the explosion of the first FLQ bombs, we are in the first phase of the revolutionary struggle, which will keep up until agitation becomes general—

What did the government do about it? Nothing, except for the Prime Minister's attitude of pinching his nose. I am surprised that he took that attitude. I ask the Prime Minister whether he ever read the recommendations that were made by the city of Montreal.

Mr. Trudeau: We had them examined by justice.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What is the answer?

Mr. Woolliams: He said he had them examined by justice.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: He had somebody else do it. Surely, the Department of Justice did not conceal from the Prime Minister this evidence of revolutionary conduct.

Mr. Trudeau: Why didn't Montreal act?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I know this hurts, but I must proceed with it. I shall continue the quotation:

> Second stage of the battle...If we wish to attain the objectives...we must organize the masses in local committees, or professional liberation committees... Committees in each quarter, each ward, each factory, school, broken into cells, regrouped in regional federations... In the factories, universities, CGEP ... Organization of those who are exploited must be undertaken having in mind a popular insurrection, characterized by armed occupation—

The word "armed" is underlined.

> —of universities, schools, public services and national territory. The most difficult phase of the struggle: the armed conflict between the people and its enemies...inseparably a military and political struggle...

Then, it says about the government of the right hon. gentleman—

Mr. Woolliams: He is leaving; he can't take it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He can't take it.

Mr. Hees: Sit down and take it, Pierre.

Mr. Diefenbaker: When I deal with facts the Prime Minister always finds it necessary to leave the House. I do not mind him following his usual course.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out to the hon. member that I was very willing to listen to him but if he intends to read nonsense in this way—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Nonsense, Mr. Speaker! He says that if I read nonsense he will not listen. Well, this came from the very people in Montreal to whom he is now listening. Isn't it a strange thing that the Prime Minister is trying to pretend that what is happening has suddenly developed. These are the instructions. Violence and illegality are absolutely normal for revolutionaries.

> Don't be afraid of being illegal...Violence and illegality are absolutely normal for revolutionaries...Like the Black Panthers all the revolutionary groups—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is a little difficult for the Chair to follow the words of the right hon. gentleman. Perhaps we could have order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This lack of order indicates how far Liberalism has gone along the road of a dictatorship under this government. Let me quote:

> Like the Black Panthers, all the revolutionary groups (and there are several) must prepare for armed revolution—

There is page after page dealing with such evil persons as Pierre Vallières who, I think, was picked up during the night. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr.

Drury) indicates that that is correct. There is a call for a manifestation on behalf of Vallières, a terrorist out on bail, and it reads, in part: "Vive la révolution, vive Pierre Vallières". He has been wandering around, in recent months spreading his poison everywhere. Sedition has been committed by him over and over again. Would this government touch him?

• (12:50 p.m.)

Mr. Woolliams: No.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is difficult to understand why the government did nothing. The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) knows something about some of these characters. Chartrand has been a close pal of his. I would not have brought that up if the hon. gentleman did not want to interrupt.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I fired him twice.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Why did you not pick up Chartrand during the last several weeks when he has been issuing statements that were seditious and against the law?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Where is Chartrand now?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Where was he last night? Just discovered during the night? The government did not need these powers in order to arrest him. Did you not think that a man who was spreading this kind of falsehood—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to remind the right hon. gentleman that he should address the Chair.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well, Mr. Speaker, I agree with you entirely but when the hon. gentleman seeks the limelight I want to be assured that he gets it.

The minister of Regional Expansion says that the reason they did not pick up Chartrand until four o'clock this morning was that they did not know where he was. I ask him: was there ever a warrant issued for Chartrand's arrest for sedition? He has enjoyed particularly warm feelings from some of those in the government. It was not until four o'clock this morning that like the Phoenix he rose out of his own ashes. May I remind the minister when he interrupts that, on a number of occasions, I brought before the House the danger of bringing American revolutionaries into Canada who advocated revolution from one end of the country to the other, who advocated bloodshed and revolution. For instance Rubin had advocated the killing of the parents of each of those members of his organization—kill and kill, turn out the government and spill blood. What did the hon. minister say in answer to me? He said in effect "after all, we believe in free speech".

Is the reason Chartrand was not apprehended that the government believed in free speech? No! The Prime Minister endeavoured to leave the impression today that, suddenly, there was a reason for action now and that he was deeply shocked. Certainly, the kidnappings were committed for the first time, but what about the 2,000 pounds of dynamite that were stolen recently? What about the bombings? What about the attempts on railroads, and what about the killing of innocent Canadians? The government, except in a very few cases where prosecutions took place, did nothing. They opened up Canada's doors, laid down the red carpet, and said in effect "come, believing, come to Canada". These revolutionaries went across Canada and they preached the most diabolical doctrines. The answer of the Prime Minister and of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion was "After all, we believe in free speech". Is that the reason the government did not pick up Chartrand? His so-called free speech was a crime against the sedition provisions of the Criminal Code. Why was action not taken?

There is an appeal in the dossier calling on all comrades to attend the trial of Charles Gagnon. Was Charles picked up yesterday?

An hon. Member: Yes.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What a coincidence! The government obtains the power to do something, a power which they could have exercised at any time. Charlie has been around for months and months and the government knew where he was. The minister to whom I have referred for the last few minutes knew where Gagnon was. The appeal states that adherents are urged to fill the court every Wednesday. It reads: "It seems certain that the jury is impressed by the presence of numerous supporters in the court".

I must not speak disrespectfully of Lemieux because he is in the position of being an arbitrator, a plenipotentiary. His statements in the last several months have aroused people, of the kind he endeavours to arouse, the revolution in Canada. Why was no action taken against him? The government of Canada let these people run wild. Free speech is not what two or three ministers say it is. It is a strange triumvirate in the cabinet composed of the Prime Minister, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and, above all, their conscience, the Secretary of State.

Mr. Saulnier brought all of this evidence before the committee. He pointed out that the FLQ was organizing through the instrumentality of a government agency. What happened? Nothing. A year went by. No attention whatsoever was paid to the representations of two gentlemen, the mayor of Montreal—a tremendous power in the public life of our country—and Mr. Saulnier, both of whom dared to speak out. They were pushed aside and the government walked on the other side of the street. The government is endeavouring to leave the impression that a crisis came about suddenly.

Now, sir, I will read a few quotations from what Mr. Saulnier said. He said: "I gave these facts to the Prime Minister of Canada on several occasions". When I mentioned that to the Prime Minister today, he put up his hands to his nose in such a way that one can fully understand the meaning of that gesture. The Secretary of State closed his eyes.

Mr. Pelletier: They shine too much.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is the first intelligent interruption.

An hon. Member: No one understands it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I say to the minister that what he permitted in the Company of Young Canadians—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must remind the right hon. gentleman, first, that he should address the Chair and second, that it is one o'clock and I must leave the chair.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

---

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Diefenbaker: At the time of adjournment, Sir, I was reviewing the representations in this very large dossier in connection with the Company of Young Canadians and subversion in the province of Quebec, transmitted by that great man, the Mayor of Montreal, and by Mr. Saulnier, his chief executive officer. These representations were placed before the government in November, 1969, and the two gentlemen I have mentioned have today been given the credit in large part for having brought about the need of action being taken now. Yet they provided a complete dossier on extraordinary crime, internationally incited, and no action was taken thereon.

The dossier clearly established the existence in the province of Quebec of active, communist oriented, revolutionary forces headed by the FLQ, and at the same time it revealed the involvement of certain members of the Company of Young Canadians in revolutionary activities including propaganda, organization of demonstrations, trips to Cuba and the like. The information contained in this dossier was but a short resume of the situation, and the Mayor and Mr. Saulnier agreed that all of the investigation of the Montreal Police would be made available to the government. In other words, what was produced represents only the tip of the iceberg regarding the activities of a revolutionary secret society.

I shall proceed to read some of the other information contained in this document. What was sought by them was a royal commission. If a royal commission had been granted, evidence would have been revealed which would have been a reasonable assurance that the terrible events of the last ten or 12 days, the kidnappings of the British diplomat and of the Hon. Pierre Laporte, might very well not have taken place. These are some of the observations of the Company of Young Canadians, paid for by the people of Canada through contributions to this organization:

> Not enough force has been displayed in attacking Ottawa colonialism...We must now attack federal institutions as we did the Murray Hill business...
>
> Violence and illegality are absolutely normal for revolutionaries...

It goes on to compare the organization with the Black Panthers. There are pictures of the wrongdoers. They stand out just like an out-building in a fog on the western prairie. They cannot be missed.

Here are a number of documents put out on equipment belonging to the Company of Young Canadians, calling on Quebeckers to arm themselves, and portraying machine guns and other paraphernalia of revolution. The march of 15,000 on McGill, organized by Stanley Gray, is included as one of the achievements of the revolution. If a press report is correct, I think he was one of those picked up this morning. There is a full agenda as to how to revolt and how to destroy. The government did not read it. The Prime Minister did not know anything about it.

Mr. Hees: He just held his nose.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am amazed because Mr. Saulnier has said he told the Prime Minister about it several times. Document 10 in this dossier tells how to deal with police, tear gas and violent demonstrations. It goes on to point out that it is important to start organizations to disturb the peace in every field in which there is any possibility of creating disorder. There are detailed instructions, with diagrams, on how to construct dynamite bombs, and an explanation of guerilla fighting in the forests of Quebec in the event that it becomes necessary. A list of equipment for fighting forces is provided. It informs its readers that it is publishing a list of material for Maquis fighters which everybody organized in Maquis teams should use. These statements would have convicted these wrongdoers of the crime of sedition, but there was no action. Vallières, one of the men arrested today, is named in the dossier. Vallières makes this statement.

• (2:10 p.m.)

Vallières makes this statement:

> Revolutionary strategy is the conscious organization of violence...of the masses oppressed under capitalism.

Then he says:

> We live in an era of violence created by the English and the Federalists. We must combat violence with violence.

There are these warnings, given not about events that have taken place in the last few days, but one year ago.

> We will take the time to prepare—and when we strike—so powerful will be the blows that the enemy will never get up.

Sir, the dossier contains the blueprint for revolution under the FLQ. There are detailed instructions in pamphlet form as to how to grow pot. There are diagrams showing how one can manufacture dynamite bombs and Molotov cocktails. There are instructions on how to organize. A pamphlet also points out that it is a very good idea to obtain instruction from Cuba. The fraternal relations existing between the revolutionaries of America are given full consideration. A pamphlet says that from now on, all members of the militant Quebec Left, that is the FLQ, may be classed as "professional revolutionaries".

* Duplessus - Saulnier always were up. old.

Well, Sir, I have read enough to indicate that the Government of Canada, the present government, was remiss in its duties. It had the Criminal Code; it could have proceeded against these people for sedition, but no action was indeed taken. Furthermore, the press fully summarized the text of Mr. Saulnier's letter, which reads in part:

> The partial revelations to which I will limit myself today are but a small example of things I know and of which I have privately informed the Prime Minister of Canada a few times in the past year.

That statement is dated October 13, 1969. It was further pointed that in the ranks of the Company of Young Canadians there was one member who had previously been convicted for terrorist activities. I could keep reading to the House. In other words, when the Government of Canada was furnished this information by the City of Montreal, all it did was close its eyes, shut its ears and do nothing.

Mr. McIlraith: That is not right.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is that not right? I will let the hon. gentleman explain, because I will be very glad to hear what prosecutions are taking place and why those people who were picked up this morning, who have been guilty of sedition over and over again, were not proceeded against.

Mr. Sharp: There are 23 men in jail. What about the 23 in jail?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well now, so far as the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) is concerned, let me say this to him: his responsibility was for the safety of all diplomats in Canada.

Mr. Sharp: I hope the right hon. member supports that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He knew that there was a danger of their being kidnapped—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: —and he did not act.

Mr. Sharp: Why did the right hon. gentleman not help us, then?

Mr. Diefenbaker: He did not act.

Le Petit Journal written by Gerard Asselin, on October 8, 1970, reads:

> At the end of last spring, Le Petit Journal announced that it is expected that a foreign diplomat would be kidnapped in Canada by the terrorists.

—the actual FLQ is the follow up of the first well structured movement, that of Pierre Paul Geoffroy.

Mr. Drury: Did the right hon. gentleman ever hear of Burgess?

Mr. Diefenbaker: What did the Government of Canada do? It played around. It refused to offer a reward. The offer of a reward of $50,000 in the spring brought this result: four of these criminals were picked up. In their list of conditions to the Government of Canada, the FLQ asks for the name of the person who revealed their identities. That is one of their requisites. The government contends that the name cannot be permitted to be revealed, and naturally so. The government ought to have offered a reward, as a result of its past experience with the FLQ. The fact that information was secured immediately after the reward was offered would indicate that when a person has no money in his pocket and no principle in his head, a reward always has a softening influence.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: And what did the Secretary of State for External Affairs do?

Mr. Gibson: He did lots of hard work.

Some hon. Members: Hoot, hoot, hoot.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I always like the interruptions of my hon. friend from Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Gibson). He reminds me of something that happened in the British House of Commons. There someone said, while talking about Mrs. Margot Asquith, that there is no finer political love match in all history, no greater love match, than that exemplified in the marriage between Margot and Asquith. The same applies to the hon. gentleman. There is no finer match than that between Gibson and Hamilton-Wentworth.

Some hon. Members: Hoot, hoot, hoot.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have great affection for the hon. member and love his interruptions. I hope he continues them.

What did the government do? It played around and then pretended that the burden was on the government of the province of Quebec. Premier Bourassa has acted with directness. He has spoken with authority and responsibility.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: And what did the Government of Canada do? Being responsible for the safety of diplomats, it said to the province of Quebec in effect, "This is your baby." All through the statement the Prime Minister has made runs this golden thread of uncertainty. The premier of the province of Quebec asked for action. Why did the Government of Canada abdicate to the government of the province of Quebec the responsibility for ascertaining what had happened to this unfortunate diplomat. I repeat that this government has the responsibility for the preservation and safety of diplomats from other countries.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: All over the world, Canada has a black eye. And now what is the government doing? It has recognized Communist China. Well, I can just imagine the deluge of communist spies who will come in here attached to the Chinese embassy, when it opens. They will all masquerade as diplomatic representatives. With the United States alongside us, we have not yet seen anything of what will happen when this group comes to Canada and begins its active responsibility which is to destroy Canada from within and, as well, undermine the United States.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister said yesterday that what Canada has done will have great influence in the United Nations. Well, and I think this expression is to be ascribed to Mao, for anyone to suggest that communism and the western world can coexist side by side is as ridiculous as endeavouring to fry an iceberg. And that is the situation. They are coming, and what we have seen happening up to now will be as nothing.

Furthermore, what has been done concerning the degree to which these criminals in Canada have been operating after graduating abroad? Indeed, a number of FLQ terrorists graduated from the El Fatah school in Jordan. I am now referring to an article in The Canadian Jewish News which reads:

• (2:20 p.m.)

The "students" at that school, speaking to a Canadian reporter, admitted that they had even prepared "the names of the prospective victims", who will be their first targets when they return home.

That is, return from the El Fatah Palestinian terrorists. It goes on to say what is being done to investigate these graduates from Algeria and the Middle East who have been active in the extremist, terrorist independence movement of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker: I have to interrupt the right hon. member to bring to his attention and the attention of the House that the time allocated to him under the rules has expired, unless he has the agreement of the House to pursue his remarks.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: As always, I deeply appreciate that courtesy because when I speak I never wield a feather duster. That is why I have deep affection for this institution. It does not take members very long to find out if another member is sincere. If so, he can speak his mind. This is the only place in our country today, under these new regulations, where there will be freedom of speech.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: I now want to make reference to these regulations. Over the years I have heard various Liberal speakers say that section 98 was the most terrible section in the Criminal Code. I am informed on good authority that even the Solicitor General spoke in strong condemnation of section 98. In 1936, when the Right Hon. Mackenzie King came into office, section 98 was repealed.

There have been some members today who wondered how it was that in a matter of hours those responsible for drafting these regulations were able to produce them. I had never known anything to equal the celerity with which this was done. I will read only portions of section 98 of the Criminal Code, unless some member wants it all read:

Any association, organization, society or corporation, whose professed purpose or one of whose purposes is to bring about any governmental, industrial or economic change within Canada by use of force, violence or physical injury to person or property, or by threats of such injury, or which teaches, advocates, advises or defends the use of force, violence, terrorism, or physical injury to person or property, or threats of such injury, in order to accomplish such change, or for any other purpose, or which shall by any means prosecute or pursue such purpose or professed purpose, or shall so teach, advocate, advise or defend, shall be an unlawful association.

The draftsmen copied the words. It saves a lot of time. Section 98 was repealed in 1936, right after the election of that year. I continue to quote:

In any prosecution under this section, if it be proved that the person charged has

(a) attended meetings of an unlawful association; or

(b) spoken publicly in advocacy of an unlawful association; or

(c) distributed literature of an unlawful association by circulation through the Post Office mails of Canada, or otherwise; it shall be presumed in the absence of proof to the contrary, that he is a member of such unlawful association.

The new regulations are identical except that it was decided to add a few more things. If the Prime Minister had brought in a statute, I would have done everything possible to help bring about changes in the Criminal Code to meet the changed conditions resulting from the type of illegal activities that are perpetrated against the state. If we had an opportunity to deal with this, every member of this House would do his part. It would not take very long to get it through. But no, they decided to impose an Order in Council that simply abolishes freedom in every part of this country for a period of months, if not longer.

I wish to read some of the sections. I ask hon. gentlemen opposite who are devoted libertarians whether they agree with this? I quote:

The group of persons or association known as Le Front de Libération du Québec and any successor group or successor association of the said Le Front de Libération du Québec or any group of persons or association that advocates the use of force or the commission of crime as a means of or as an aid in accomplishing governmental change within Canada is declared to be an unlawful association.

Over the years I have been a strong opponent of legislation that provides for the outlawing of any organization. I want to "inlaw" organizations and to have changes made in the Criminal Code that will cover the modern techniques that destroy nations from within. I have taken unpopular stands. I frankly state that in 1948 my own party came out in favour of outlawing communism. I was the only one to oppose it. I received a very unusual lack of welcome. The Conservative party was going to sweep Canada with that policy. I said, "You cannot do it. You cannot deny an individual the right to think as he will. The offence is not in being wrong, the offence is in doing wrong." Wherever communism has been outlawed it has operated underground. When it has come out, it has been stronger than ever.

It is interesting to note that under this regulation the communists can do what they want in Canada without being subject to the provisions of this section as it now reads.

A person who

(a) is or professes to be a member of the unlawful association,

(b) acts or professes to act as an officer of the unlawful association,

(c) comunicates statements on behalf of or as a representative or professed representative of the unlawful association,

(d) advocates or promotes the unlawful acts, aims, principles or policies of the unlawful association,

(e) contributes anything as dues or otherwise to the unlawful association or to anyone for the benefit of the unlawful association,

(f) solicits subscriptions or contributions for the unlawful association, or

(g) advocates, promotes or engages in the use of force or the commission of criminal offences as a means of accomplishing a governmental change within Canada is guilty of an indictable offence...

Wrong should be punished. Why not amend the Criminal Code? Why bring in a great umbrella which will deny freedom elsewhere in Canada in trying to meet a situation in one province? It is as simple as that. One section of the regulation reads and I think somebody made a mistake here:

In any prosecution for an offence under these Regulations, evidence that any person

(a) attended any meeting of the unlawful association,—

It does not say when. If any member of this House ever attended one of those meetings he will, prima facie, be guilty of that offence. There ought to be some amendment. I presume it was intended the next line should also apply:

(b) spoke publicly in advocacy for the unlawful association,—

Grammatically it cannot stand up. It does not say when. All that is necessary is for someone to say, "I saw you attending a meeting of an unlawful association". You are then before the court. You can be picked up and detained without the opportunity of habeas corpus. A change should be made in that, because grammatically it is not correct. If it is read altogether, it says "attended any meeting of an unlawful association, spoke publicly in advocacy of that unlawful association." Either it does not mean what it says or it does not say what it means.

• (2:30 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: One can be arrested without warrant for committing an offence. There are sections about peace officers, sections 10, 11 and 12, all of which I support.

I ask the government even now to withdraw this resolution, bring in a bill and let members of this House give effect to bringing about changes in the Criminal Code to cover the situation rather than take away from Canadians something which is dearer than life itself—their civil rights, their right to live their lives as they will and not to be denied their constitutional freedoms without which life would cease to have any interest.

I am concerned for my country. I have known during the years the degree of fear, frustration and foreboding in the hearts of Canadians in every part of our country. Where is the pride in Canadianism today? People are fearful. Permissiveness has become a way of life and Parliament has made its contribution to that concept in abortion changes and in legalizing adult homosexuality. Everywhere groups of individuals contend that, because they have numbers behind them, they are above the law. The result is that freedom is destroyed for the rest of Canadians. I make this plea to the government. I brought in the Bill of Rights. It was ridiculed for many years. It finally became law in 1960 and from 1960 until 1969 various individuals across Canada in the universities and in the lower echelons of the courts declared that the Bill of Rights was merely a pious declaration written in grandiloquent language but having no binding effect on the courts. Indeed, I was surprised that when Joe Drybones of Dog Lake Reserve had his case heard before the Supreme Court of Canada, the Government of Canada was represented by counsel who bitterly contended that the Bill of Rights had no legal effect and was merely a declaration. The courts held otherwise and today Canadians enjoy a freedom under law which they did not have before.

Mention was made today by the Leader of the Opposition of the Bill of Rights, to the effect that the Prime Minister had hoped he could make it into a constitutional amendment. Such is not possible. As I see it, it will not be possible in the generation of any member of this House because the provinces will not give up their jurisdiction over property and civil rights. Dare any government bring before the Parliament of Canada a measure for the repeal of that act? Habeas corpus itself is only a statute. It was enacted in the 17th Century, yet no one dares abolish it except in circumstances of grave emergency.

I would like—and hon. members may think it is only a dream—to see action taken by the Parliament of Canada which will raise the hearts of men, and raise the horizons of young men and women, to give them an understanding of the greatness of our tradition, of the meaning of freedom and its record in Canada. It was in Canada that slavery was first abolished under the British Crown, 40 years before it was abolished elsewhere. I should like to see a declaration made by a committee of this Parliament setting out national goals, a declaration of our hopes, our expectations and our ideals. It would have no probative value but it would contribute to achieving the objectives I have in mind, that is, in giving Canadians principles to be proud of. Some talk about the abolition of the monarchy. How many of them realize that as long as we have a Queen, and the Queen remains true to her oath, there can never be a dictatorship in Canada? As one travels across the country, going to schools and colleges, one finds young men and women who say: "Why should I be interested in the past? The past means nothing to me." That question was answered, for me, when I was a young graduate, by a professor who said: "Have you ever noticed what happens to a person who loses his memory?"

I should like to see a committee of this Parliament, in a spirit of give and take, produce a declaration for Canada of objectives and ideals so that there may be new horizons for Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacEachen: Sounds like the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I understand that the leader of the Creditiste party, speaking outside the House, stated that I—and I believe the leader of the New Democratic Party was included in this, too—had reached an agreement with the Prime Minister last night but had gone back upon that agreement today.

I said in the House this morning that, while there had been an opportunity for some discussion, I was not in a position to give any approval. I was not aware that the leader of the New Democratic Party gave approval either. I am surprised that the leader of the Creditistes should have made such a statement as has been attributed to him.

I wish to make it perfectly clear that I made no such agreement last night with regard to supporting the position of the government. A great deal of the discussion related to the possibility of consulting our caucuses this morning to see what the position of our parties would be. I rise in my place to say I can only assume that because the discussion took place in English, for the most part out of consideration for the leader of the New Democratic Party and myself, there must have been some misunderstanding. I repeat, there was no agreement. Neither I nor the leader of the New Democratic Party have gone back on any agreement today, and I wish this to be clearly understood.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): On the question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I wish to support entirely what has been said by the Leader of the Opposition. Speaking for myself, not only did I not agree with the course the government was taking but I endeavoured to make it perfectly clear that, in my opinion, the additional powers the government wanted should be secured by resorting to this Parliament and by placing legislation before Parliament.

• (2:40 p.m.)

Therefore I hope the leader of the Creditistes party did not make the statement that has been attributed to him.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

If he did, I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that it is wrong. It may be that he was confused by the fact that we did agree we would consult our caucuses this morning, and that we did agree that we would give consent to the motion which the Prime Minister has introduced so that it could be debated today.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, we have just listened to the usual eloquent submission made by the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), and I hope he will concede that I listened to him with my usual attention. Neither the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) nor I yield to him in our devotion to civil rights in this country, despite the lifetime that he has devoted to protecting and enhancing those rights. I think he will appreciate that while his rhetoric can run a little freer in opposition, because of the responsibilities we have been given by the people of Canada, as temporary custodians of our laws we have to temper what we say within the limits of responsibility, balancing the rights of individual citizens against the rights of society as a whole. As the right hon. gentleman will appreciate, that is always a question of judgment in each individual case.

The action the government has taken is a drastic measure. I have no intention, nor has the government, of evading or attempting to minimize that fact. It is a drastic measure because it has been precipitated by persons with an utter contempt for the rights of others. It is a measure brought on by persons with an utter contempt for the democratic process, by persons who undoubtedly envisage themselves as totalitarian masters in Quebec and perhaps even further afield. They seek to mutilate and destroy our social institutions, including that of representative government.

Their chosen instrument for this purpose—and this is well indicated by the communiqués to which the right hon. gentleman referred—are not instruments of persuasion. They are not the instruments of free dialogue and discussion to attempt to convince their fellow citizens. They are the instruments of hatred, violence, turmoil and chaos. This society in Canada cannot long endure if the time comes when the right of individuals to life and personal security can be rendered meaningless by criminals—not by "political prisoners" but by criminals—through acts of terror directed at the government.

The government of Quebec and the federal government have been urged by some whose good faith I do not doubt, and in respect of whom there is no reason to believe they are sympathetic toward Le Front de Liberation du Quebec, that we should surrender to the demands of the FLQ, demands in terms of bullion, in terms of exchanging criminals now in prison for the victims of kidnapping. The House is fully aware of the full range and gross enormity of those demands.

I ask this House whether anybody really believes seriously that such surrender or such acquiescence to those demands would have solved anything. It is the view both of the federal government and of the province of Quebec that such surrender would have been nothing less than the first instalment in a program of continuing blackmail.

* and perhaps further afield.

Surrender would simply have inflated the ego and whetted the appetite of the FLQ, while at the same time enervating and eroding the will of governments and society to resist the encroachments of these criminals.

I think the House will subscribe to the proposition that no freely elected government can ever be held to ransom. We are fully conscious of the danger to the two men who are in the hands of these abductors. We have respect for them and their lives and are deeply sensitive to the responsibilities we have with regard to how to deal with this matter. But I do not believe that any release or exchange of prisoners—criminals—in return for the victims of kidnapping would have solved the problem. I do not think that any of us could be sure that it would even have saved lives.

Mr. Lewis: No one has suggested otherwise.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Many people have, Mr. Speaker, but I am not going to pick an argument with anybody at this stage. I am merely setting the ground for the atmosphere within which the action of the government has been taken.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Any exchange would merely have invited escalation: hostage for prisoner, hostage for criminal. And there would have been no stop to it.

It is rather a false logic for people to suggest that if we resist these demands we are imperilling the lives of these people and would indirectly be killing the victims. What type of false logic is that? If the victims were killed, then they would have been killed by the abductors. There is no way that that responsibility can be shifted. We have a duty not only to try to save those lives but to anticipate the danger in which other lives might be placed. So we had to act, Mr. Speaker.

It is true, as some distinguished members of the House said earlier, that there had been a developing situation, and I will deal with that later. There had been a recent and rapid escalation. I believe that the climate that had been set by an attempt to negotiate, by the vocabulary which had been adopted of "political prisoners", the use of the word "execution" of those who had been kidnapped instead of "murder", as if to imply some legitimacy, placed the government in a position of immobility whereby all the action in terms of public opinion was left to a bunch of renegades and the government was having difficulty sustaining its position.

All that has now stopped. I believe that the rules of this House ought to be waived this afternoon if this debate is not finished. I believe that the House should deal with this resolution, since it is of such importance that Parliament ought to pronounce upon it at one continuous sitting. This would let the people of Canada know the position we are taking.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We have brought this resolution to Parliament to test the will of Parliament. There is no attempt whatsoever being made to evade parliamentary scrutiny.

Mr. Fairweather: You had to bring it here because the law so provides.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No. Any ten members can rise and challenge a proclamation, but there is nothing within the law to force the government to bring this proclamation before Parliament. We did it because we believed the people of Canada should be involved.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (2:50 p.m.)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe this House should rise until Parliament has pronounced upon this resolution so the people of Canada, the people of Quebec and the terrorists know exactly what Parliament says.

An hon. Member: We will stay.

Mr. Baldwin: You asked for it; it is agreed.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I understand we have unanimous agreement to that proposition, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Perhaps in the light of the agreement I heard from all sides of the House I might invite you, Mr. Speaker, to make an order to the effect that this House shall sit until this resolution is dealt with.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not too sure what the proposition is.

An hon. Member: Neither is he.

Mr. Speaker: I believe the hon. Minister of Justice has made a motion which at this point would require the unanimous consent of the House that the House pursue its sitting beyond the usual time of adjournment, for the purpose of continuing the debate on the motion now before the House, until obtaining a resolution of the House thereon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, we might be prepared to agree to that, but surely this is not the way to deal with a matter of this sort, in the middle of an hon. member's speech. I should like to suggest that the House Leaders get together in the next hour or so, and if there is a disposition to continue the debate certainly I, for one, will raise no objection. Surely, this is the proper way to conduct the business of this House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is apparent that there is no unanimous consent at this point. In any event, I suggest that the Minister of Justice pursue his remarks.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I think that the House would want me now to deal with the justification for the government's action. The right hon. gentleman—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Possibly it is not appropriate at this moment, and I do not know whether he can give the information, but has the minister any information as to whether these two unfortunate men, the British diplomat and the minister of the Quebec cabinet, are still alive?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am advised by my colleague, the Solicitor General (Mr. McIlraith), who is naturally closer to that particular problem because of his responsibilities, that there is no information at the moment.

The proclamation, Mr. Speaker, of course, depends on the government having appreciated a state of apprehended insurrection. I believe those are the words of the proclamation. Those words have to be interpreted in their ordinary meaning. Members are as capable as I am of referring to the dictionaries which state that "apprehend" is to anticipate with anxiety, and "insurrection", a rising up against an established authority, a revolution or a revolt. As I said earlier, this has to be a question of judgment based on the information available to members of the cabinet. Needless to say, some of that information, because of the current state of affairs, is not information that necessarily can be made public.

I think hon. members will appreciate the reasons for that. The right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) this morning tabled two letters, one from the Prime Minister of Quebec. I just want to read the appropriate words.

[Translation]

Under the circumstances, on behalf of the Government of Quebec, I request that emergency powers be provided as soon as possible so that more effective steps may be taken. I request particularly that such powers encompass the authority to apprehend and keep in custody individuals who, the Attorney General of Quebec has valid reasons to believe, are determined to overthrow the government through violence and illegal means. According to the information we have and which is available to you, we are facing a concerted effort to intimidate and overthrow the government and the democratic institutions of this province through planned and systematic illegal action, including insurrection. It is obvious that those participating in this concerted effort completely reject the principle of freedom under the rule of law.

In order to refresh the memory of hon. members, I shall read the relevant passage of the letter signed by both the mayor of Montreal, Mr. Jean Drapeau, and the chairman of the Executive Council of the City of Montreal, Mr. Lucien Saulnier:

The chief of the Montreal Police has informed us that the means available to him are proving inadequate and that the assistance of higher levels of government has become essential for the protection of society against the seditious plot and the apprehended insurrection in which the recent kidnappings were the first step.

[English]

The government of Canada has to take the final responsibility, but when the Government of the Province of Quebec and the mayor of the largest city in this country, on the information available to them and the information available to us through our own law enforcement agencies, are of the opinion that the state has been reached where we ought to, as sound and commonsense human beings, anticipate a danger to our society in the form of insurrection and are willing to use that type of vocabulary to the Prime Minister of Canada, then that is material which we cannot ignore.

I want to recite a list of events that have contributed to the rapid acceleration of this dangerous situation in Quebec. They are the kidnappings, which in themselves if they were isolated would be a purely criminal affair but, within the context of a wider conspiracy and being used for ransom against a legitimately constituted government, are something else. We have the continuous threats to life and property in the communications of the FLQ of a seditious, violent and inflammatory nature. They have been issued and members are aware of them.

We have also a series of bombings and violence, a rising increase in thefts of dynamite now available in some hidden caches in the province of Quebec. More disturbing, we have a type of erosion of the public will in the feeling among some sincere people that an exchange of prisoners for the victims of the kidnappings would somehow ease the situation.

One of the difficulties in our society or in any free society is that we are not organized, and people are ordinarily not organized, against that sort of threat. Ordinary people generally believe that such actions as kidnapping, bombings, theft and violence by organized revolutionaries will not take place. The people of this country do not easily accept this because we have had a very happy history, as the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert said. This is a novel situation in Canada and it provokes the unprecedented use of a very severe measure for the first time in peacetime. We have been singularly fortunate since Confederation and we are now dealing with an unprecedented, serious situation.

• (3:00 p.m.)

This situation has arisen in other countries. The population resents violence but the population, taken generally, is not organized to meet it but relies upon governments to do so. Governments have to exercise and fulfil their responsibilities in meeting it. I might say, too, that the recent call for a public manifestation by men like Gagnon, Vallieres and Chartrand established and escalated the whole coming together of an infiltration of FLQ doctrine in certain areas of society in Quebec—in the unions, among universities and in the media—and the growing feeling among the people of Quebec, particularly the citizens of Montreal, that they are living under a reign of terror. You do not have to ask me; ask any member from Montreal and the people they represent just what they have been undergoing last week in the city of Montreal.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I believe we had to respond today in an urgent fashion to the call of the provincial government and the city of Montreal to exercise our duty in a federal state, to ensure that the necessary co-operation in a federal-provincial aspect was maintained between the government of the province of Quebec and the government of Canada. The attorney general of the province of Quebec and the premier of the province of Quebec advised us that the law as presently constituted and directed in a free society was not equipped at the moment to meet the serious situation they were facing, and that they needed additional powers of arrest, of search and of detention.

At least no such seditious doc. was put out by RCMP within the next yr. & no one has ever been reprimanded.

Mr. Baldwin: Why did you not come here and ask for it?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I will deal with that point in a minute. So this measure is brought before the country and the House. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said, it is an interim measure; it is an emergency measure. I listened very carefully to the speech of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) this morning. The suggestion in respect of a special statute is not necessarily excluded so far as we are concerned. This is a debate; we want to listen to what the opposition has to say and how they judge the situation in the country.

Mr. Forrestall: Is somebody working on such legislation now?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): If the hon. gentleman will listen to me, he will learn soon enough. The attorney general of the province of Quebec called in troops under the National Defence Act by a letter to my colleague the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald). The provincial attorney general said that he needed extra powers, extraordinary powers, to deal with the matter. I believe we had a duty as well to allow the provincial attorney general to fulfil his responsibilities in respect of the enforcement of the law in the province.

It is all very well for the right hon. gentleman to recite some facts from the past. He knows that the enforcement of the Criminal Code, including the section relating to sedition, at the present time rests with the provincial attorneys general. It may be in times gone by that if Mr. Saulnier thought he had sufficient evidence, he had control of his own police force under the law as it existed then and could have prosecuted. He chose not to do so. The responsibility for the administration of justice as presently defined in the Criminal Code of Canada lies with the provincial attorneys general.

If organized crime should become more prevalent—I hope this never happens, but it may in a violent society where crime is mobile and where through the communications media information can be transmitted much more quickly—it may be that we should consider in this House an amendment to the Criminal Code to broaden the powers of the federal attorney general in dealing with some of these matters like sedition or treason which now come under provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. Asselin: Why not now?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The hon. member is responding with some favour to the suggestion I make. But this situation does not exist now. I want to deal with the extent of the power given the government and the province of Quebec under the proclamation and regulations. Although the provisions of the War Measures Act and of the Public Order Regulations, 1970, made pursuant to that proclamation—copies of which have been received by hon. members—are in force throughout Canada, the regulations are directed primarily, and in practical terms exclusively, to the situation that prevails in the province of Quebec. Indeed, the Front de Libération du Québec is mentioned expressly in section 3 of the regulations and that organization, or any successor group or organization to it, is declared to be an unlawful association.

The right hon. gentleman asked: Why drive them underground? They are already underground. One might ask: Why make them unlawful? I suppose in strict terms they are already unlawful. Now we have a declaratory provision that makes it quite clear to prosecuting attorneys that being a member of this organization, or promoting or advocating its intent, is now a crime.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The ends and aims of those persons who comprise that group or association are well-known; they are in fact notorious. They will stop at nothing to subvert democratic government in this country. While their prime target today may be the government of Quebec, there is every reason to assume—indeed, I think there are many clear indications—that other governments and indeed the central government of this country fall within the purview of their endeavours.

In recent days these persons have demonstrated an arrogance, disrespect for law and order and a degree of inhumanity that our ordinary democratic processes cannot continue to tolerate. Intimidation of the government and of the public by means of kidnapping and murder have become their modus operandi. It is in this much to be regretted climate that the government of Canada felt constrained to move in this admittedly unusual manner.

It must be underlined, however, that these regulations apply only to those who have demonstrated inclinations of a seditious or treasonable nature. The Criminal Code includes in its definition of treason a person who uses force or violence for the purpose of overthrowing the government of Canada or a province. The Criminal Code defines sedition as the advocation of the use of force without the authority of law as a means of accomplishing a governmental change within Canada. I think the House should be aware that these regulations are directed only at the overt manifestation of treason and sedition. This is the thrust of the offences set forth in section 4 of the regulations. Sections 5 and 6 of the regulations are directed at those who would aid and abet or assist in the commission of seditious or treasonable offences.

In summary, then, it can be said that the Public Order Regulations, 1970, are designed to assist the law enforcement agencies in the apprehension and conviction of those who would subvert our elected governments and destroy our way of life. The Front de Libération du Québec is dedicated to that end and its ultimate goal is a totalitarian state achieved not by evolution but by revolution.

These regulations, then, will have application to a very limited number of persons in this country. They are not of broad compass and they by no means apply to crimes or criminals generally. Rather, they single out the very special crimes of treason and sedition—crimes that go to the very heart of our democratic rules and procedures—for more effective law enforcement. This step was made necessary because of the unique considerations that were found to prevail within the province of Quebec.

So except as altered by these regulations, the ordinary law applies. The proclamation is merely an empowering order. In other words, the proclamation does not bring in the full scope of the War Measures Act; it does not bring into play all the other items set forth in the act. The proclamation is limited by the terms of the regulations, and the War Measures Act is brought into force only in so far as those regulations are concerned.

Mr. Woolliams: You brought it in last night and you can bring in a new law tonight.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I think the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) can take my assurance that if we considered it important enough to bring it before Parliament now, we would not ignore Parliament in any future instance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The proclamation is empowering only. It creates extended powers of arrest, powers of search and powers of detention in the specific area of crimes I have mentioned. Trial by the ordinary courts of the land, including jury trial, still prevails. The ordinary rules of evidence continue to prevail and the ordinary appeals open to convicted persons continue to prevail. The main effect of the regulations is the creation of a new offence of belonging to the unlawful organization known as the Front de Libération du Québec and related directly or indirectly to the violent and criminal aspects of that association which are declared to be unlawful.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Mr. Nielsen: Would the minister permit a question at this time?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Perhaps the hon. member could put his question afterwards. I know the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) well enough to know that he has the patience to wait until the end of my speech.

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

The ultimate aim of the regulations is to restore and preserve order, and the regulations enlarge the investigative and the apprehension powers by expanding the powers of arrest, the period of detention and the powers of search. Bail, which is normally within the power of the court, is, in respect of offences listed in the regulations, vested in the attorney general of the province.

One may ask: Why these powers? Because in the opinion of the attorney general of the government of Quebec, an opinion which I share, in the present situation—and, after all, prosecution is a provincial matter—under the present law, the prosecution of this type of violent, criminal conspiracy is rendered difficult, if not impossible, and so is investigation rendered difficult, if not impossible, under the present provisions of the Code. The Criminal Code as presently constituted deals primarily with individual crimes. It is true that it mentions conspiracy, but the whole compass of the Criminal Code is that crime in its essence is an individual matter.

An hon. Member: What about conspiracy?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I mentioned conspiracy. But without the additional powers necessary to immobilize and to apprehend this organization as presently constituted, the attorney general of Quebec felt that the law was at present insufficient.

An hon. Member: Where is the proof?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) in his statement earlier today suggested that what we are doing is in some way undemocratic.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): That is the essence of it.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I want to assure him and the House that, as found within the Statutes of Canada, this procedure is contemplated under the Canadian democratic process. The procedure by way of proclamation is found within the War Measures Act. This is a completely constitutional technique. Let me point out more particularly that the regulations were issued under powers granted to the Governor in Council by Parliament; so that the constitutional source of this enactment was, and is, Parliament itself.

The power vested in the Governor in Council by Parliament is also a power of which the Governor in Council can be divested by Parliament. Indeed, the very exercise of this power by the Governor in Council is recognized in part 2 of section 6 of the Bill of Rights, itself enacted by Parliament, which requires that such proclamations be laid before Parliament forthwith—as has been done—and which declares that anything done or authorized, or any order or regulation made under the authority of the War Measures Act shall be deemed not to be an infringement of any right or freedom recognized by the Canadian Bill of Rights.

• (3:20 p.m.)

The procedure we are adopting is recognized in the Bill of Rights. In other words, the ultimate constitutional source and the legitimacy of the proclamation by the Governor in Council under the War Measures Act is a power granted to it by Parliament to so enact. It is Parliament which confers this legitimacy, and it is Parliament which can take it away. The power of the Governor in Council flows from Parliament and it is ultimately accountable to Parliament, and thereby to the people of Canada.

I want to move on to address myself to the reason the War Measures Act was used. The question has already been asked: why was the War Measures Act resorted to and why was it brought into force in the early hours of the morning? There are two basic reasons in answer to the first question. The government of Quebec had come to the conclusion, and the government of Canada agreed, that the existing law was inadequate to deal with the crisis in Quebec. This left only two possible courses of action. The government could have sought special legislation of the type embodied in the regulations which have been brought into force under the War Measures or, alternatively, the War Measures Act could have been resorted to.

I suggest to the House that if a special piece of legislation had been resorted to, the provisions might well have been similar to the provisions now found in the regulations. But this government was assured by the government of Quebec, and by senior persons directly involved with attempting to cope with the terrorists, that a search and arrest operation of considerable magnitude directed at the FLQ was necessary and that time was of the essence.

Our initial reaction was the reaction of several members of the House, to seek the authority of Parliament first. But faced with the seriousness of the situation and with the necessity of not broadcasting what the government of Quebec and the government of Canada intended to do, faced with the urgency of anticipating any further escalation in the situation in Montreal, the government of Canada resorted to the War Measures Act. It is my hope that some day the full details of the intelligence upon which the government acted can be made public, because until that day comes the people of Canada will not able fully to appraise the course of action which has been taken by the government.

The element of surprise was essential, and members of the House will have to rely upon the judgment of the government. I am not saying that other value judgments cannot be brought into play. I am not saying that this debate is not the most legitimate exercise of the parliamentary function. But that was the value judgment we had to exercise and that is how we did it. Also, at this stage, when we are dealing with a situation which is not completely clear, when we are dealing for the first time in Canada with a type of organization which in peacetime is dedicated to violence and the terroristic overthrow of government, there is advantage in having a certain amount of flexibility, in seeing what we need to deal with this proposition.

There is advantage in having a certain amount of flexibility, particularly in the delicate relationship in the federal system as between Ottawa and Quebec, to mobilize our joint efforts so that the proper result can be obtained. So the purpose of the action was surprise, to render immobile and inefficient, as quickly as we could, the Front de Libération du Québec which menaces the health and the lives not only of individual citizens but of the polity of Canada and the polity of Quebec.

I want to say that this action was taken reluctantly. Throughout his life and throughout his career as a Member of Parliament, the Prime Minister—and, if I may say so, I have so far as I have been able—has tried to advocate those measures of law reform that are needed in an age of confrontation, this age which is dominated by a conflict between freedom and authority, which puts the law in a special delicate position because on the one hand the law is the symbol of authority and on the other hand it is the guarantee of freedom. Between the two the law is caught in the crunch. The administration of the law demands a sensitive type of judgment.

We have tried to ensure that in the administration of the law, in reforming the substance of the law, the personal options open to individuals, the ambit of individual liberty available to citizens shall be made as wide as possible, consistent with public order. We have tried, in terms of public administration of the law, to widen the rights of citizens, accused before the law, particularly the right to bail, to balance the rights of citizens against the rights of the state and to open up for citizens new avenues of appeal and recourse against the government.

The bail reform bill, the criminal law reform bill and the federal court bill, together with other legislative action, are measures based on the premise that the orbit of personal freedom must be widened and guaranteed. The rule of law is the essential condition not only for the existence of the state but for the existence of individual liberty within the state. Freedom is the precondition of liberty, and restraint is the beginning of freedom. The rule of law is the source and condition of that restraint, and through it the freedom and the liberty of the individual in society are maintained.

Insurrection and violence are not only a total denial of the constituted authority of the state but are a denial of the liberty of the individual himself who depends upon the controlled organization of the state. This type of violence defies not only the total integrity of society as a people but the individual integrity of every person in that society. In this sense, then, the concept—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the minister will not mind my interrupting at this moment to bring to his attention that his time has expired, unless he has the agreement of the House to continue.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Invoking of War Measures Act

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I thank hon. gentlemen and the hon. lady from Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) for their courtesy.

In that sense, then, the concept of absolute freedom which at times is dressed up through verbal sleight of hand such as "political prisoners" and "liberation of the people"—this sleight of hand implying that there are absolute rights and absolute liberties in any particular society—is a perversion of the rule of law. It is the replacement of the rule of law by the rule of absolutism. It denies not only the existence of the state but, ultimately, the freedom and liberty of the individuals composing the state. This type of conduct mocks society at the same time that it seeks to destroy it. We have been living through a charade that mocks, a charade that seeks to destroy.

Accordingly, no democratic process can categorically license any absolute or unfettered conduct without endangering the viability of the democratic process itself. The measure of the democratic process is the history of the rule of law. There has never been anything in any constitution of any democratic society, at any time, which sanctions the concept or practice of absolute liberty and lawlessness. Indeed, if there are any absolute rights they reside in the right, both moral and legal, of the democratically constituted authorities to protect the rights and liberties of the citizens. Society itself cannot—because no government constituted in the name of the people can—through countenancing insurrection and violence oblige its members to subject themselves to the deprivation of life, liberty, property or dignity and claim to be democratic. A government which allows that sort of thing to happen cannot claim either to be democratic or to speak on behalf of the people.

If a government is to reflect and articulate community values and community expectations, it must as a fundamental constitutional norm guarantee the basic survival of that community as a collectivity, and the freedom of that community as individuals. No democratic state can be asked to negotiate the terms of its existence or negotiate away the rights of its members.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Political morality does not begin at the barrel of a gun, and the state has both a right and an obligation to protect itself and the members of the community which compose it. The proclamation of the War Measures Act and the enactment of the Public Order Regulations, 1970, should not be interpreted as indicating any departure from the government's declared intention to proceed with its law reform and civil rights program. However, it must be underlined that human rights and fundamental freedoms can only exist within a society that respects those rights. We are experiencing today a direct attack on the very fabric of our society which is dedicated to the protection of those rights and freedoms.

A society that fails to protect itself, a society that cannot manifest the will to protect itself, is a society that does not deserve to be preserved. We believe that the rights and freedoms that all Canadians enjoy are based upon our democratic institutions and upon the principles of representative government. We believe that these elements of our society must be preserved at all cost. While it is a result I regret very much indeed, we cannot be unduly concerned about the rights and freedoms of those who act to subvert our governments by force and intimidation.

The Public Order Regulations, 1970, should therefore be looked at as an unhappy but necessary step in the ultimate preservations of the rights and freedoms of Canadians generally. I wish to assure the House that it is the intention of the government to proceed as rapidly as possible with its announced law reform program. We also intend to bring this matter now before the House to a successful conclusion. I can only express the hope that the initiative which the government has been compelled to take today will eliminate terrorism and violence in our society, that it will be of short duration and that it will produce a new and better climate for the enjoyment of our rights and freedoms.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Since the minister's time had expired, questions can be asked of him only with the consent of the House and of the minister himself.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I shall answer.

Mr. Nielsen: For the benefit of the House I wonder whether the minister could clarify the government's intentions with respect to the communist party of Canada, because under the terminology used in section 3 of the regulations it would appear that this association is an unlawful one within the definition of the regulations. If one reads the last four lines of that regulation it will be seen that any association that "advocates, promotes or engages in the use of force or the commission of criminal offences as a means of accomplishing a governmental change within Canada" is an unlawful association. Having regard to the ideology of the communist party of Canada and its adherence to the use of force if necessary to accomplish governmental change, can the minister say that the government intended making the communist party of Canada an unlawful association?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I know the hon. gentleman puts his question in all seriousness, but I would point out that the text will be interpreted by the courts and that prosecutions will be instituted by the provincial attorneys general. So long as there is the separation between the executive and the courts, and between the federal and provincial attorneys general in terms of responsibility for administering justice, that interpretation is not left to me; it is left to the prosecutors and to the courts.

Mr. Nielsen: I appreciate the minister's difficulty in attempting to interpret laws that the government has passed. My question was this: Is it the intention of the government to say that the communist party of Canada shall be deemed to be an unlawful association?

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I think the hon. member will have to rely upon the wording of that particular section and draw his own conclusions.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might direct a question to the Minister of Justice. I followed his argument and agree with that part of it which asserts that the administration of justice in these matters is the responsibility of the attorneys general of the provinces. The regulations set out certain offences and crimes. Does the administration of these matters not fall under the attorneys general of the provinces?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that I follow the purport of the hon. member's question.

Mr. Woolliams: I ask the question again. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) said that for crimes set out in the Criminal Code, the administration of justice falls under the jurisdiction of the provincial attorneys general. The regulations set out new crimes which are similar to those in the Code but are different from them. Will the administration of justice, so far as these crimes are concerned, come under the attorneys general of the provinces?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is so. I hope the attorneys general of the provinces recognize the purport and the limitation of these regulations.

Mr. Woolliams: May I ask the minister one more question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the House will allow the hon. member to ask one additional question. We really ought to go to the next speaker.

Mr. Woolliams: As I understood the minister's argument, one of the reasons the government has not brought in a special statute or amendments to the Code is that the Code is administered by the provincial attorneys general. He left the impression that this measure could be undertaken by the Minister of Justice of Canada.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): If I left that impression, I am sorry.

Mr. Forrestall: Are we to have legislation soon?

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) put forward a defence for what the government is now doing. I suggest to him that defence was as fallacious as it was eloquent.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: Just hold your horses. We have had enough of these catcalls from the Liberal backbenchers today. They should listen with some tolerance to what is said from this side of the House. This intolerance is probably reflected in the matter we are now discussing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: I say that because I suggest to the Minister of Justice that there is not a single person in this chamber, from any part of the House, who does not feel, as he does, utter detestation for the FLQ in Quebec for abducting two innocent, unfortunate men, for the bombings which have taken place and for that organization's threats to subvert Quebec and Canadian society. There are no members in this House, indeed there are few people in this country, who do not condemn that organization and all it stands for, and the cowardly and cruel acts for which its members have been responsible. Therefore, all the minister's speech—in which he tried, by setting up a framework of panic and terror, to take unto himself and his government the condemnation of this organization—is irrelevant and surplus. We are all aware of the things he spoke about. We are all aware, moreover, that there is a very serious and critical situation in the province of Quebec. We are all anxious to assist this government and the government of Quebec in dealing with that situation in a proper and democratic way—but not in an arrogant and dictatorial way, as is now the case.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: That is the case now, Mr. Speaker. Throughout these unhappy days we in this party have not laboured the point. In fact, our members have desisted even from asking questions on this matter during the question period, because we have known of the delicacy of the situation and have felt profound sympathy for the way in which this government and the government of Quebec have been burdened with a terrible problem involving the lives of two innocent men. If we had been faced today with a request by the government for certain specific changes in the law, with evidence that those changes which this House of Commons would pass were necessary, we would have a different situation. What we are faced with at present is a thoroughly authoritarian order—which I will try to analyse in a moment—which, it seems to me, no democratic assembly such as this can possibly accept. It may be accepted by government backbenchers who are determined to support their Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the government regardless of whatever conscience they may have about democracy.

An hon. Member: That is utter nonsense.

Mr. Lewis: The Minister of Justice tells us that this step was taken with the aim of restoring and preserving order and that it will settle the whole matter. He also talked about other things in our society. I say to him, without attempting to suggest that either he or the Prime Minister is a dictator, that every dictator in the history of humanity has justified his dictatorial acts by declaring that he was preserving order in society. Every reactionary spokesman in the United States, Canada or any other country has justified his demand for reactionary and repressive measures by stating that it was for the purpose of restoring or preserving order. These words are no more progressive because they come out of the mouth of the Minister of Justice than if they had come out of the mouth of Spiro Agnew of the United States. It was actually the same kind of statement.

Before I go any further let me say this to the Minister of Justice and, through him, to the Prime Minister. The government's excuse for taking action by Order in Council is that they have some intelligence of which we are not aware: it was required that all these steps be taken immediately, at night, in order that the government could deal with certain people and events by surprise. In all earnestness I say to the government: You have done this. I disapprove of it. I think it was wrong and unnecessary, as I will try to show, but you have done it now. You have been able to incarcerate 154, 200 or 300 people. You have been able to institute searches without warrants. If you are sincere in what you say, on Monday morning you will revoke this Order in Council. You will cancel it and you will bring before this House a bill to amend the law in order to deal with this matter.

I say this very seriously. You will have had three days, today, tomorrow and Sunday. You have already told the people in the Front de Libération du Québec what you intend to do. They know all about it; the surprise is over. You have done all you can by surprise. If you are sincere, and if you are guided by what you say, there is not the slightest excuse in the world why this Order in Council should not be annulled by Monday morning. There is no reason why this Parliament should not be presented with a projet de droit, a bill to amend the law to deal with the critical situation in Quebec.

If the government does not do that, I give it this warning now. It is the intention of my colleagues and myself to use subsection 3 of section 6 of the Bill of Rights and we will, within the ten days or the time limit specified in the bill, under the signature of ten Members of Parliament bring forward the necessary motion praying that the proclamation be revoked. There will no longer be any excuse for it. It is not necessary for the minister to continue this undemocratic, authoritarian order in force any longer than is necessary—and one minute longer than Monday morning is unnecessary, Mr. Speaker.

It should not be necessary for me or for others to declare that we detest the FLQ in Quebec and any other organization that seeks to overthrow our society by force.

If I may be permitted to make a personal reference, I have been in active politics for a great many years. During the time when some members now in this House who hold high office spoke kindly about communism, dictatorial methods and violent revolution, I fought them inside the CCF and inside the labour movement of this country. I, therefore, do not have to emphasize that fact. Other members in this House in high places have to explain their previous association with or sympathy for organizations that wanted to overthrow democratic governments by force.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: That should not be necessary. After all that the Minister of Justice has thrown at this House, what are we being asked to approve? I say to hon. members that we are being asked to approve the complete suspension of the ordinary laws of this country, all the rights and freedoms of our people throughout the whole of Canada. That is what we are being asked to approve. The minister read only the first part of section 3. The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) was right in drawing the minister's attention to the second half of section 3. The minister only read these words:

> The group of persons or association known as Le Front de Libération du Québec and any successor group or successor association of the said Le Front de Libération du Québec—

He finished there. Well, the section does not finish there; the section continues:

> —or any group of persons or association that advocates the use of force or the commission of crime as a means of or as an aid in accomplishing governmental change—

Not within Quebec, but—> —within Canada is declared to be an unlawful association.

Even though it is unkind and perhaps even offensive, I say that the minister did not have the courage to answer the question of the hon. member for Yukon as to whether he intended any other organization in Canada to be covered by this law. Because he did not do that, every member, including members opposite, ought to look with the utmost suspicion at what we are being asked to approve today. We are being asked to approve placing in the hands of this government, in effect the Prime Minister, unrestricted and unlimited power. This is the first time it has been done in the peacetime history of Canada. We are discussing nothing less than this.

I am fully aware of the situation in Quebec. I am acquainted with the difficulties with the FLQ in that province. Despite all this, I believe the response of the federal government today to be excessive, hysterical and unacceptable. Furthermore, I doubt very much if it will be efficacious. Indeed, I deeply fear that in the long run this action may well do great harm to the unity in Canada and to the relations between Canada and the province of Quebec. I will have something to say about that matter later. The Prime Minister in his speech, and the Minister of Justice in his speech, in effect said, "Trust us. You know we are civil libertarians. We have made certain amendments to the Criminal Code. We propose other amendments to the Criminal Code. You know we are good democrats. Trust us. We will not do anything wrong. You know we are all in favour of civil liberty."

The Prime Minister has discarded and betrayed many progressive ideas in connection with the economic and social front which he formerly held. I am no more confident that he is not today also discarding his civil libertarian cloak, not in a temporary but in a permanent way.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Lewis: We cannot trust any man who takes unto himself dictatorial powers, myself, anyone in this House or anyone in this or any other country. I remind hon. members of the famous saying that power corrupts, and absolute power corrupts absolutely. Although I may again be unkind, I say, on the basis of observation in this House for 2½ years, that the Prime Minister and members of his cabinet have given ample evidence that power has in fact corrupted their sensitivity about the rights and welfare of the Canadian people. I am not prepared to give them even more power than they now have. Personalities do not really matter; we are concerned with a basic principle of deep and overriding importance.

I say to the ministers present, including the Minister of Justice, that the proclamation is based upon a law which says that the mere proclamation itself is evidence that a state of apprehended insurrection in fact exists. That is so; the law is so. The Minister of Justice did not have to belabour the point that what the government has done falls within the law. The law has been used only twice before, both times in the case of a world war. It was never used before World War I or between the two world wars. This is the first time it has been used since World War II.

I make this point as strongly as I can. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice came to Parliament for approval of their proclamation and Order in Council. I say to them that we need evidence of the necessity for such a drastic and undemocratic measure. It is not enough to say, "We have a letter from Mr. Bourassa, a letter from Mr. Drapeau and from Mr. Saulnier. That is all we can give you. On the basis of those letters you ought to say we have done the right thing."

I not only listened to the letters being read, but I read them. Mr. Bourassa did not ask for the War Measures Act to be invoked; neither did Mr. Saulnier nor Mr. Drapeau. They asked for assistance to enable them to deal with the critical situation in Quebec and the fear of insurrection which they now have in their minds. This is not sufficient evidence upon which this House should be asked to approve the action of the government in suspending all the rights and freedoms of the Canadian people. I am not committing myself ahead of time, but I am half convinced that it was necessary at this time to extend the law to give the police powers of search without a warrant, much wider powers than they now have.

I suggest to the Minister of Justice and his officials that they ought to have looked at new section 98E of the Criminal Code which deals with offensive weapons. It gives the Governor in Council authority to declare anything an offensive weapon. It gives a very wide right of search without a warrant, with the exception of private homes. For this particular purpose, in Montreal it might have been necessary to amend that section with relation to searching for dynamite. The government could have removed the exception regarding private homes and given the right to search, without warrant, private homes as well as other premises. That might have been necessary.

It is conceivable that it might have been necessary for this House to consider the possible detention of people arrested on reasonable grounds for believing they were guilty of a crime, and extending the right to detain beyond 24 hours without bringing the person before a magistrate. This period could have been extended to two, three or four days. These are the measures which I read into the letters which the government received. Of course, there may have been telephone calls and other conversations that I do not know about. There probably were. I cannot speak of those things. A measure extending the right to search and the right to detain for two or three days before bringing a person before a magistrate might be necessary in the present situation in Montreal.

• (3:50 p.m.)

I cannot see any way in which this wholesale elimination of the rights and freedoms of Canadians could be efficacious in the work which is now necessary in Montreal and the province of Quebec generally. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the proclamation of the order in council which is before us merely proves that the Department of Justice, that the Department of the Solicitor General of Canada, that the Department of the Attorney General of Quebec, that the Quebec provincial police and the Montreal police have all failed in their duty to deal with the situation which existed in Quebec for at least seven years since 1963. It proves that the FLQ has been allowed to continue its work without any of our police forces, federal, provincial or municipal, being able to carry out the kind of security job, the kind of infiltration of the organization which would have enabled those law enforcement agencies to prevent the possibility of the FLQ threatening the fabric of life in Quebec, as it now does.

It appears that the government, for some reason which I cannot understand, stood by and hoped that the FLQ would go away, instead of having the courage to persuade the Attorney General of Quebec and the police agencies concerned that they ought to deal with the situation in an efficacious manner. I am reminded that the other day, when the Prime Minister was asked whether or not he would bring—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I know the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) is leaving now, but I had some difficulty in communicating with the speaker and I hope that in future care will be taken not to stand in the line of sight between an hon. member who is speaking and the Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, you flatter me by being so anxious to see me through the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen). I was reminded, when the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice were speaking, of an exchange which took place between the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and the Prime Minister last Wednesday, October 14. The Leader of the Opposition asked the Prime Minister whether he would assure the House that no action would be taken without approval being sought from the House of Commons. The Prime Minister said, "Whether it would be immediately before or immediately after would depend, of course" and there were some comments at that time and the Prime Minister said:

> I am sorry to observe the lightness with which the opposition treats this question. It is obvious that if urgent action is needed at some time in the middle of the night we cannot ask Parliament to approve it first.

I call attention to that last sentence. Last Wednesday the Prime Minister knew what he was going to do and precisely the hour at which he was going to do it. If not, it is the kind of prescient remark which one could scarcely expect even of this brilliant Prime Minister. I wish I had time to cull the writings and speeches of the Prime Minister when he was a great champion of liberty against Maurice Duplessis in Quebec. I wish I had the time to read them, whether in English or in French, because I am certain that in those writings I would find innumerable statements which would condemn his action today in language as eloquent as any used from this side of the House in the debate in which we are now engaged.

In fact, I can imagine how the late Maurice Duplessis must be chuckling, in whatever place he is resting, on seeing one of his arch enemies produce to the Parliament of Canada precisely the kind of measure which he, in his time, had produced to the Parliament of Quebec and which Pierre Elliott Trudeau so eloquently condemned in years gone by.

I feel strongly about this, not only because of what I consider to be the democratic immorality of the measure before us but because I am certain it will do great harm to the unity of Canada and to the relationship between Ottawa and Quebec. In 1968 Canadians thought the Prime Minister might help to unite the citizens of our country. The record is heartbreakingly black. During the 2½ years in which he has been Prime Minister of this country we have seen, not a weakening but a strengthening of separatism in Quebec. Separatism today is stronger than ever before in the history of the province, stronger than it was in 1968. The FLQ has become a dangerous force, such as it never was before, to the point at which the Prime Minister and the government ask us to approve this measure because, they say, they apprehend an insurrection.

What is happening to Quebec as a result of the policies of this government and as a result of the inflexible attitude of the Prime Minister, which he is continually incorporating in his policies. He calls people bleeding hearts and nonentities; anyone who cares about democracy is being soft. The result of this has been an increase in the threat to Canadian unity. When the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) spoke earlier he was critical of my leader, mainly, I thought, because he misunderstood my hon. friend from Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas).

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: I may not be able to make myself any clearer than my hon. friend did, and the minds of hon. members opposite are probably no brighter now than they were then, but let me try to repeat what my leader said, in somewhat different words. After criticizing my leader, the hon. member for Témiscamingue then went on to make precisely the same point himself, talking about the poverty, the unemployment and the frustration which results in the kind of thing one sees in Quebec today. This is precisely what our leader was saying.

Though minority groups may advocate violence, they have never been a threat to society unless objective conditions in society make it possible for them to win the support or, at least, the sympathy of the people around them. The communist party has never made progress anywhere in the west except where objective conditions of injustice, poverty, deprivation and degradation made it possible for it to attract the support and sympathy of the population. In exactly the same way, though to a lesser extent, thank God, this is true in the province of Quebec.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Lewis: It is. The economic and social policy of the government has created the atmosphere in which the FLQ feels strong enough to act as it is now acting, counting on much more support from members of the universities and those in the ranks of the unemployed. Hon. members shake their heads, but that does not alter the situation. That is the fact of life in Quebec. Every economist foretells that this winter unemployment in Quebec will climb to a rate of 15 per cent. This is very likely.

• (4:00 p.m.)

This is why I say to the government that no matter how many Orders in Council it may pass, there will be unrest, demonstrations and violence as a result of the economic policies it has pursued and the unemployment they have created. It is the mess created by the Minister of Communications (Mr. Kierans) when he was Postmaster General, which created an environment wherein the FLQ could hope to gain sufficient sympathy from among the population as to be able to do some of the things it has done. It is the failure of the government to accomplish anything in the field of regional disparity, and the despair and frustration resulting therefrom that has created the objective conditions for disorder which no Order in Council will do away with.

The frustration of the young, the despair of the poor and the hurt of the unemployed are causing the present difficulties in Quebec, as much as anything else. The government must deal with these basic economic and social problems. Depending on this kind of Order in Council is an extremely reactionary way of settling the Quebec situation. Since when has repression solved anything? I challenge the Minister of Justice and any other spokesman for the government to give the House one single example in the history of the western world where repression has accomplished the preservation and reintroduction of order. It never has and it never will. I hope with all my heart that I am wrong, but the result of this action in Quebec will be that a good many of our young students in that province will look upon those apprehended in the middle of the night as heroes and martyrs. It will result in building a still higher and thicker wall between Ottawa and the people of Quebec.

The Minister of Justice said that this entire exercise is directed, not at all the people of Canada or all provinces of Canada but at Montreal and the province of Quebec. I say to the men in government who have just as much concern about the problem of unity in Quebec and Canada as I claim to have—and I respect their sincerity—that they have not given this matter any thought; that they could have acted differently. They could have assisted the various law enforcement agencies in Quebec in a different way, by increasing the police forces, by amending the laws in the way I suggested, by insisting that those agencies do their job, by getting rid of any corruption there may be in some of the police forces involved—I do not refer here to the RCMP; by insisting that some of the police forces be freed of people who may have infiltrated those forces, making the work of the forces in seeking to find FLQ members difficult if not impossible.

It is not the law that has stood in the way. The Minister of Justice referred to the provisions regarding subversion, sedition and treason contained in the Criminal Code. We have referred to the section dealing with offensive weapons. There were powers in the Criminal Code that could have been used had the law enforcement agencies done their job and put their finger on the people against whom those powers could have been used. For ten years they have looked for them and have failed. No Order in Council will change that situation.

The government is able to imprison 200 or 250 or 154 people, whatever the number is. Is anyone on that side of the House sanguine enough to think that this will end that particular organization or another organization like it? Is anyone here sanguine about the possibility of this sort of thing reoccurring? I say to the members of this House that therein lies the great danger behind the kind of measure we are asked to support.

What will be the long-run effect on Canada-Quebec relations of this kind of behaviour? What will be the result on the separatists who are distinct from the FLQ? Will Mr. Levesque and the others now be able to point to Ottawa descending upon Quebec in a way that it did not descend on other parts of the country where violence has occurred, if not of the same sort as in Quebec, nevertheless violence of a sort? I am very worried about the effect of this measure on the young of Quebec, the students and the young professionals. I am worried whether this will not alienate them still further from the federal government, from federalism and from Ottawa. I am worried whether all the ills against which they have shouted for years will not now boil up in them in resentment and frustration against Ottawa and Canada as a whole.

It seems to me that every time the leader of a government or of a country takes unto himself this kind of allegedly tough line, he satisfies the ego of those in authority a great deal more than he satisfies the objectives of social needs and social conditions. That is happening in this case. I think this is a case of overreacting. It is hysteria that I think is unnecessary. Even if it were necessary to act in the middle of the night—and I do not admit that—it is not necessary beyond the next 48 hours. The government will stand tested on whether this evil and vicious measure is by Monday still on the statute books of Canada. We will then know whether the government has the sincerity, the democratic feeling and sensitivity to get rid of the measure and produce democratically laid-on-the-table legislation for this House of Commons to consider.

Invoking of War Measures Act

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to discuss proceedings for later this day. As the House knows, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) suggested that we continue to sit until we complete debate on this resolution; and that, of course, is the view of the government. The leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Douglas) suggested that the House leaders consider the matter. The best agreement we could reach was that we continue until five o'clock and resume our sitting at 7.30. At that time we will be in a better position to determine how long we shall sit this evening. I could have moved, under the rules, a motion if I had the floor in the regular way. But I am not moving that motion because I realize that if ten members want to stop me, they can. I am hopeful that by using this method we can reach agreement without a motion; I hope we can come to a mutually satisfactory arrangement.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, first may I say that undoubtedly the serious nature of this particular motion and of the action taken by the government warrants as full and exhaustive a study by the House as can be achieved, and as soon as possible. We are not unwilling to come back at 7.30. I would also confirm what the minister said, that if at that time it does appear there are a number of hon. members of the House who feel that their views on this matter should be expressed and want the opportunity to express them, obviously it would not be wise to try to sit through until the early hours of the morning or till late at night to complete the debate.

An hon. Member: Why not?

Mr. Baldwin: The government has done what it wanted. The procedures taken by the government in the form of the proclamation and the Orders in Council are before the House. No matter what this House does, the measures taken will continue in existence. If it is found possible, through an examination of hon. members who wish to participate, that the proceedings could be concluded and all questions taken dealt with, I would be happy to see this achieved. If it does not appear, because of the number of members who want to participate, that this can be done, under the circumstances we will have to review our position at 7.30. As the minister said, we can discuss it at that time.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) says, there were certain discussions among us as House leaders. However, the proposition he has now indicated varies slightly from what I thought was agreed to. We are willing that the House rise at five o'clock and come back at 7.30, but we thought it was on the understanding that we would finish this matter tonight.

We are not suggesting any cut-off or that it be concluded by nine, ten or what have you; but it does not seem to make sense for us to come back tonight if we are not going to finish this debate. If it is going to go on and on, it might as well be set over to another day. I am not by these words saying we are not prepared to agree to this, but if we do take this supper break and then come back, we would hope it would be for the purpose of finishing this debate tonight. There are a couple of other things we might look at. We could go on to 5.30 or six o'clock instead of five o'clock. We might even consider, at some point, reducing the speeches to 30 minutes instead of 40.

An hon. Member: Oh, no.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): There is some objection to that. At any rate, I felt I should make clear what it was we had agreed to. We would prefer to stand by that agreement. Nevertheless, we are not going to stand in the way of some agreement for a sitting tonight.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, we of the Ralliement Créditiste understand the situation the government has to face and we offer our co-operation so that if possible, the debate ends early tonight.

[English]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, in all fairness to the House Leader for the NDP, it is true that he did make that more extensive agreement, and I appreciate that he is ready to agree to the further proposal that I made as a result of a conversation with the official opposition House Leader. I think at the moment the best thing we can do is come back at 7.30. I am hopeful that then it will be possible to continue and, hopefully, finish tonight; but this matter will be reviewed at that time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I suggest that we will agree to this on the understanding that at 7.30 we can assess the situation and not just diddle along not knowing where we are going.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There appears to be a measure of agreement between hon. members. Obviously, what we are agreed on is that we shall rise at five o'clock and return at 7.30. The suggestion is made that we then appraise the situation. I suggest we will at least have to start at 7.30 and recognize one of the hon. members who wishes to continue the debate. I should think there might be a discussion among the representatives of the parties on this matter.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Perhaps before 7.30.

Mr. Speaker: If there were no agreement then, of course, we would require unanimous consent and any member could bring the proceedings to a halt by pointing to the fact that he had not given his consent. The agreement is that we rise at five o'clock, return at 7.30 and continue, subject to unanimous agreement at that time.

Mr. Baldwin: Your Honour could issue a proclamation at 7.30.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I have paid much attention to the speeches delivered in the House today. Since I am not a law expert, there are many points I will refrain from discussing and leave it to the hon. members of the Bar to bring clarification and find the best method of reaching our objectives.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Some items of the regulations submitted to the House appear odious and I do not intend to try and justify them. The thing is to ascertain whether this was the only possible action under the circumstances. If there was no other alternative and we just had to take the action we did, should we pursue it or should we resort to other measures more appropriate to the issues involved?

Moreover the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in moving the motion this morning indicated himself that the War Measures Act provided greater powers than were necessary to settle the Montreal problem. As he was the first to admit it, a series of speeches could be made stating that those powers are excessive. We agree that the act provides more powers than we need, but we do not intend to use all of them. How can this be done while avoiding the danger that, in spite of its statements, the government might misuse such powers? That is a matter that will have to be discussed.

Suffice it for me to say at the start, Mr. Speaker, that we may very soon come up with one of the formulas that may have been suggested by some hon. members, which would enable us to restore law and order in Montreal. What is the situation exactly? Have we exaggerated it? Have we over-reacted? All that, of course, rests on an assessment of the situation and knowledge of the environment. Inquiries were made on the causes of the situation prevailing in Montreal and elsewhere in the province of Quebec. They might prove valuable. However, I could make others just as valuable whose findings will be in flagrant contradiction with those I am talking about. That could be discussed ad infinitum but it will not solve the problem now existing in Montreal.

Perhaps I should have referred first to the hostages since sentimentally, emotionally and morally that was imperative. I shall therefore talk about the two persons held at gunpoint by their kidnappers.

What is the government doing to protect them? What are we doing to weaken or destroy the Front de Libération du Québec?

This question was raised earlier. The right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) has asked: Why did you not intervene sooner? You were aware of the situation; it was all in the book that you had in your hands. The script was there in full. What have you been waiting for? You have done nothing.

After today's debate, in spite of all our efforts to convince the hon. members opposite, in spite of the two persons whose lives depend probably on our action here and in spite of all that has happened since their abduction, we are having some difficulty in getting the House of Commons to act quickly and agree to certain measures. You can just imagine what would have happened last year if, without any request from the provincial government, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police or the provincial Sûreté du Québec, the authorities had said:

"We need emergency powers in order to bring this movement to heel".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Some people say we have not done anything. They insist on using global expressions to impress I don't know who. But at the present time, the kidnappers demand the release of 25 members of the FLQ now in prison following their appearance before the courts. We have been told: Mr. Vallières is free and Mr. Gagnon who was refused bail for a long time by the Attorney General has been let out on bail under the laws of this country. This government is no doubt responsible for that. We have done what we could. The police have acted well. It is quite unfair to blame the government today for not doing what it should have done, considering the FLQ activities.

Before dealing with the situation proper, allow me for a few moments to analyse the causes. Why are there FLQ members in Montreal or in the province of Quebec? True enough, our friend from York South (Mr. Lewis) has readily found why: the stupidity of the government, the postal strike, a few other deficiencies in the economic area, and above all, unemployment. Those are the causes of this discontent and, obviously, we are blamed, we who came to Ottawa in good faith, and did our best to represent the citizens of Quebec, for not having succeeded in solving the problem, separatism having increased—and it may be true—from what it was when we took office.

On the other hand, the hon. member has not cared to prove that separatists would not have been still more numerous, had it not been for a group of French Canadians who came to Ottawa and pressed for recognition of the French fact all across Canada, despite antagonism, not from the hon. member for York South—I would not even want to suggest it—but despite the most tenacious opposition which was experienced from the other side of the House. And we have tried to do what we could, even for Quebec, in spite of the protests that we were acting only for Quebec, because we are in the situation we know of. People say: "You know in Quebec, it is only an economic issue. Solve the unemployment problem and the French Canadians will be satisfied!" If we take special steps to boost the Quebec economy, people say: "These people are only interested in Quebec, and they want to give Quebec privileged treatment." This is the situation in which we place ourselves—

Mr. Lewis: This is not the opinion of the New Democratic Party—

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I did not understand, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lewis: This is not the situation of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Maybe I spoke too fast, but I definitely excluded the New Democratic Party from this matter, and therefore, it cannot be involved.

Anyway, the NDP becomes involved when it says that "the arrogance of the Prime Minister" is responsible for the birth and growth of the FLQ.

If the actual reasons for this unrest are solely those mentioned by the NDP members, namely, unemployment, slow economic growth, etc., there is no doubt the NDP should be occupying the FLQ's place in Quebec. In fact, these are goals they have long been trying to achieve honestly in Canada. It is known that the NDP is not their representative. If this is what they want, if this is where the problem lies, it is because the trouble goes deeper. And I do not understand why the hon. member for York South, who is intelligent and educated, does not see in the FLQ the expression narrow-minded and racist nationalism, and that this is the main reason for the problem. He did not mention it, merely to annoy the government a little more, no doubt. That is how the FLQ was born. It is the result of a certain form of narrow-minded racism or nationalism. Nobody is talking about that. Who is responsible for that? Is it the Prime Minister or is it the lact of understanding of some colleagues of the hon. member for York South or of some of his compatriots?

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to pursue the subject, because this would tend to shift the problem. I do not like the attempts that were made to exploit every sore spot in our society to embarrass the government at a time when it is trying to save not its own life but the Canadian state.

In my opinion, that is the only problem that remains. Everything else may be part of the normal political game and I think this is not the right time to play it. In some people, that attitude is so deep-rooted that they cannot act otherwise, and I can understand that.

The problem is whether the situation in Montreal justified drastic measures and, in the affirmative, whether the emergency was so great so as to require us to act as fast as we did.

That is the problem that came up. Mr. Speaker, I understand that those who are safe behind the Rockies or the heart of the city of Toronto have no idea of what is going on in Montreal and in the province of Quebec at the present time. Of course some people know it theoretically. Some may make sociological analyses of what goes on in Quebec. But there are other developments and hon. members should perhaps be aware of them.

At the present time in the province of Quebec the freedom is dead, people are afraid to go out, and this does apply to me, as I am no better than anyone else, nor do I have more courage. Let us put the question to all hon. members from Quebec, red or blue, and if there were NDP members they would be in the same situation too.

The members from Quebec are afraid, very often not for themselves, but for their children and for their wives. Some businessmen are in the same boat: I have met some here in Ottawa today who had run away from Montreal.

There have always been people who are threatened day in and day out in public life, that is true. I, myself, have been the object of threats. One does not die because of a threat.

But, from the moment when threats are carried out, then the danger increases. And by whom are they carried out? By two or three men with guns who have kidnapped one or two people? No, Mr. Speaker!

The situation is much more serious than that. Any person having knowledge of the FLQ organization in the province of Quebec at the present time cannot but be aware that the state of Quebec and the federal state are truly in danger in Canada.

Why? The most pessimistic say that the FLQ has some 3,000 members.

An hon. Member: More.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I do not know if that figure is accurate but I am aware that there are quite a few.

And I know something else: these people have infiltrated every strategic place in the province of Quebec, every place where important decisions are taken, and without giving complete details let us say that at the present time they are in a position to cause the Quebec and the federal governments, as well as the city of Montreal, irreparable harm, with the support of outside organizations which are not necessarily in agreement as to the measures taken because it is well organized.

Some say: Why have you not made it illegal? That is what we are doing under these regulations, though it might not be the best solution. It is known that the FLQ is made up of cells of two or three persons each, cells that do not know each other, that do not necessarily work hand in hand and that are now in touch simply through coded messages broadcast free of charge by our radio stations. What you might think are only speeches are in fact coded messages which are sent here and there.

We are dealing therefore with a well-structured organization which is able, with the help of other organizations seeking the same objectives, to make life impossible, in the province of Quebec, for all those who do not share the ideal of the FLQ, whose primary aim is to destroy the country.

Had we failed to act today, and had separation taken place in a month or a year from now, I know quite well what would have been said in this House. Had Place Ville-Marie in Montreal been blown up someday, people would have said: "But what kind of government have we got? All that information was available to you, you could have used emergency powers and you did not do so? This is a government of incompetent men."

And when we try to do it, people say: "You over-reacted"! That's it: "You over-reacted"!

One thing is certain, Mr. Speaker—I dont know anymore than the police, probably much less—there is an organization which has thousands of guns, rifles, machine guns, bombs and about 2,000 pounds of dynamite, more than enough to blow up the core of downtown Montreal.

Those are people ready for assassination, kidnapping. All that exists in the heart of our country, at a time when the situation is already difficult, and the government would say: First of all, we shall introduce a bill for democratic discussion in the House. During that time, the culprits would get away and the police would be left in the lurch. At least this case would be treated in a democratic manner!

It is as democratic as Chamberlain's action when he went to meet Hitler in an effort to avoid the war.

An hon. Member: Come on, come on.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, there was an emergency. We deemed it to be so. I do not say that we are gods. We deemed it was so, and we believed that was the thing to do at the time.

It has been claimed that the means resorted to might be out of proportion to the objectives. The Prime Minister told you himself this morning that he was the first to recognize that. It is not my intention to dispute the fact. It has been recognized.

If there are other means to achieve the same objectives, to protect the citizens of Quebec who are also citizens of Canada and want to remain such, we do not exclude the possibility of examining proposals submitted and it may be that within a very short time we are going to find a solution that will please everyone.

We take it for granted that no one in this House condones the current events in the province of Quebec, especially what is happening within the FLQ.

I am not making a superficial speech. I do not want to suggest that some members find this funny. No one is finding this funny, I am convinced of that.

Tonight, our problem is to determine what means we should use and, whatever they are, no doubt we will be criticized. We accept it in advance. But as a government, without pleasure and rather regretfully, we have decided to use the only means available to protect ourselves against this extremely serious danger threatening the lives of a number of citizens.

If the House considers that the situation was not urgent, that a notice should have been given, that a debate should have been called in the House or that we should have waited for 48 hours, I think that we must first worry about saving democracy. Democracy cannot work when the opponents do not accept to play under the rules of democracy.

The right hon. member for Prince Albert was talking about the exchange of ideas in Canada. I entirely agree with him on this point: there cannot be any restriction on the exchange of ideas, even if the right hon. member does not like them and even if there is a separatist faction in Quebec! We were never asked to declare it illegal. This faction intends to destroy the country and its members try to reach their objective through democratic means. This is normal. We do not have to intervene. But when people refuse to play the democratic game, a government anxious to safeguard democratic institutions cannot be paralysed in the name of democracy. In my opinion, democracy in this instance would be of the wrong kind.

Some people say that this action will be tantamount to building up a wall. Even if we did accept the suggestions of the hon. member for York South, even if he had * without giving complete details - developed the only true democratic formula for preventing revolutionary activities, in a word, even if we did implement his solution, we would come at exactly the same results.

The FLQ members will be satisfied only after the country has been destroyed and anything that we undertake will amount to raising a barrier between them and us, there is no doubt about it.

Such is the challenge we have to meet. We do not ask that the Opposition assume responsibilities which are ours to assume, but at least please refrain from tripping us up while we are trying hard to drive the country out of this jam.

• (4:30 p.m.)

[English]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if hon. members opposite wish to issue a proclamation to stop me from speaking now.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) has made a fiery and impassioned speech. Speeches of this quality and character, sincere as they are, taken together with the quality of the actions of the government give us cause for concern on this side of the House and should give cause for concern to all Canadians who wish to preserve the freedoms which they prize so dearly.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: The minister said there was overreaction. Let me read to the House from the Ottawa Citizen of today an account of what sort of action was taken under this proclamation, action which causes us to say that there cannot be overreaction on the part of opposition members or anybody else in Canada who worries very much about what could be the facts in the future. The article in the Citizen reads in part as follows:

A knock—then police.

The full impact of the War Measures Act was impressed upon the family of Hull doctor Georges Lebel early today as five policemen barged into his house and roused the eight members of the family out of bed.

Doctor Lebel, still shaken from the incident when interviewed hours later, said the policemen knocked at a basement door, then barged in at about 4 a.m.

They hurried upstairs, ordered everyone out of bed and told Doctor and Mrs. Lebel to gather their children in the kitchen and stay there.

Doctor Lebel's teenage daughter was sleeping behind the locked door of her room. Mrs. Lebel said a policeman asked her who was in the room and before she could answer, he kicked in the door and brusquely ordered the girl to get up and get into the kitchen.

Doctor Lebel said he was told the object of the raid was Roger Monette, an engineering student boarding in a basement room. Police went through every room in the house, emptying drawers and shelves. They even searched the Lebel's birdcage.

Doctor Lebel's daughter worked for the Parti Quebecois during the April election.

Police took PQ literature from her room.

They also took other documents from other rooms...

The police left as quickly as they had come, taking with them Monette and envelopes of literature.

They told the doctor they would be back later for another search.

P.Q.

Does the minister say, after listening to that, that we are not right in overreacting in regard to what could happen under the regulations which have been adopted? How many hundreds of times is that sentiment being repeated in the country at this time?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): How would you prefer the regulations to be applied, in order to avoid what you have mentioned?

Mr. Baldwin: If the minister stays here long enough he will hear my view. I do not intend to make partisan politics out of this matter.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: Do hon. members say that we are not right? Not only do we have the right, but we have the duty to bring before the House and before this country information on incidents of this nature.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: We do so, not when the government is bringing legislation before us but when we are being asked to give total approval to what the government has done.

An hon. Member: What proof have you of this?

An hon. Member: Do you know that what you have read is correct?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Be quiet. If you want to make a speech, make it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. At the moment the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has the floor.

Mr. Baldwin: I should have read from the same article that a gentleman named Cassavant was also taken. He phoned his wife this morning from the QPP headquarters in Hull. He is alleged to have told her that about 200 other persons from Hull alone were being held for questioning.

An hon. Member: Don't go away, Jean.

Mr. Aiken: The Prime Minister left a while ago.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Baldwin: The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) asked a question which goes right to the heart of this issue. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), to give him credit, tried very bravely to answer a question that was extremely difficult for him to answer. The question put by the hon. member for Yukon showed how difficult, how serious and how dangerous is the problem. It showed what could happen. It is like getting into quicksand—every step taken could plunge the country and the people further into the bog. Mr. Speaker, when the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) came here today, he did not even know how many people had been picked up for questioning. There was a blank in the text of his speech at that point, and he had to ask. This is the danger we face.

I have no hesitation in acknowledging that judging from my limited appreciation of the situation, something had to be done. But the questions we must ask ourselves are these: Was what was done the only thing that could have been done? Were there alternative steps which could have been taken, without taking the drastic and exceedingly dangerous step which the government has now undertaken and asks us to approve?

I agree with the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), and I say this quite seriously, that when the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice again read the speeches which they made today—I have not had time to assess the full import of the speech made by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand)—they will see a remarkable similarity between the views and the principles they expressed and those expressed by other people throughout the history of the world who deemed it necessary to assume great, authoritarian powers.

There is no question at all, sir, that the rationalization and the justification which have been urged upon us in the speeches we have heard from the government side come dangerously close to the same, almost perverted logic which at times we have heard from those who, against the wishes of the people they have ruled, assumed dictatorial and unnecessary powers. Mr. Speaker, in that regard there has been a suggestion concerning the letter received from the province of Quebec. I listened very carefully to that letter being read. I may have missed part of it, but it did seem to me that the question about apprehended insurrection was thrown in as an afterthought.

The requests which were contained in that letter from the province of Quebec to the government of Canada included one for certain alterations in our criminal law, for certain departures from the practices which have prevailed in the past and for certain extensions of government and police rights so far as the curtailment of certain civil liberties are concerned. But the question of apprehended insurrection was thrown in as an afterthought. I raise that matter for the reason that it has been suggested that time was of the essence and that nothing else could be done. I have grave doubts about that and I shall make this clear later.

This situation reminds me of cases that I used to handle as a young lawyer representing certain municipalities during the depression instituted by the Liberal party back in the 1930s. I was often asked for an opinion as to whether a person was an indigent and entitled to assistance from a municipality. The test in such a case was sudden and urgent necessity. I am reminded of a woman who came to me—she was 8¾ months pregnant—and claimed that it was a matter of urgency and she went to hospital within the next week.

In the eloquent speech read by the Prime Minister this morning, this passage appears at page 3:

> Yet in recent years we have been forced to acknowledge the existence within Canada of a new and terrifying type of person —one who in earlier times would have been described as an anarchist, but who is now known as a violent revolutionary. These persons allege that they are seeking social change through novel means. In fact they are seeking the destruction of the social order through clandestine and violent means.

I do not necessarily quarrel with that statement, but there is a clear admission, augmented by the evidence read into the record by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), by the hon. member for York South, and admitted by hon. members opposite who have participated in this debate, of knowledge that a situation exists and has existed for some time under which the apprehensions now felt by the government should have been known and should have been considered months ago. It is not often that a member of this House has an opportunity to quote what he said the preceding day, and I will not attempt to do it and create a precedent.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: I am not going to quote myself; I am going to paraphrase what I said. I always hope that if hon. members opposite listen to reason often enough, some day they may practise reason. So far they have not shown much indication that they know how to do that. Yesterday I said I was quite willing to accept the fact that the government must take some measures. I referred to the fact that in the United States of America the Congress of that country had just passed, and the President signed last night, a quite severe law and order measure. I referred to the War Measures Act, but I made it implicitly clear that in my view there was an onus on the government to refer to this House, for decision by it, measures of a legislative kind and that this was the way to act. I do not think the government has discharged the onus which it must accept, of indicating and proving beyond any reasonable doubt that the steps it took last night were reasonable and were the only alternative.

During the course of this grievous problem we on this side of the House have shown restraint and understanding. We have shown a willingness to co-operate within the proper definition of the discharge of our responsibilities. I am completely convinced that if yesterday, or the day before, the government had come to the leaders of the opposition parties and said to them, "Here, generally, is the information which we have. In our opinion there is a need to extend the right of the police and of the civil authorities for certain specific reasons and in certain specific ways," and if an outline of the legislation had been indicated, there would have been a willingness, certainly on the part of this party and I would like to think I speak for all opposition parties, to accept within a reasonable period of time, within the limitation of one day, legislative changes of that kind. It is nonsense to say, as some have said, "We did not dare do that because we would have been telegraphing our intentions."

Mr. McIlraith: That is not nonsense.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, it was the worst-kept secret in the world. I was in the parliamentary library the day before yesterday and there saw some newspaper correspondents examining the War Measures Act. There is no question that if a reasonable suggestion along these lines had been made, had been conveyed to the leaders of the opposition parties and through them to the members who sit on this side of the House, there would have been a disposition to allow the government to put before the House, and have passed and become an act of Parliament, those changes which in its opinion were essential. I do not think there is any question about that.

• (4:50 p.m.)

I am very unhappy; I am most concerned about what is being done. The highways of history are littered with the debris of democracy's tattered constitutions, of those states where there have been encroachments in the same way as this government is now seeking to make encroachments upon the liberties of the people of Canada. Mr. Speaker, as one reads the terms of the War Measures Act one sees that it speaks of war, invasion and insurrection, real or apprehended. Surely we can take these phrases together and conclude from them that the intention of the Parliament of Canada in 1914 was not to include, as being susceptible of action under this act, the set of circumstances, grievous and serious though they are, which exist today in the province of Quebec.

I am convinced that this alternative which was available to the government, and which it could have acted on, would have succeeded in accomplishing what the government has now accomplished. The government's action may well result ultimately in driving deeper divisions between the peoples of Canada, as has been suggested by hon. members on this side of the House. Violence begets violence; hate breeds hate; confrontation leads to more violence, and the whole rotten and vicious circle starts its cycle again. This has been the history of a great many countries of the world during the past 20 or 30 years. I shudder to think of what may well happen as a result of the government's acting as it has.

It is not—I will repeat this, if necessary, ad nauseam—that there was no other alternative. If it could have been demonstrated, and it has been demonstrated today by any speaker on the government side of the House, that there was no reasonable alternative, I would most reluctantly have gone along with the government and said, "I will approve what you have done." But when there is this alternative and the government rejected the opportunity to exercise it, I must say it is most difficult for me to approve in total some of the exceedingly repugnant provisions contained in the Order in Council.

The government, through the Prime Minister, has indicated its willingness to discuss—I think it was the term used by the Prime Minister—with the leaders of the opposition parties the introduction of legislation. It seems to me, having in mind the news item I read and the extent to which the circumstances depicted therein may have been duplicated across large portions of the province of Quebec, that at this time, as was so eloquently stated by the Leader of the Opposition, the right hon. member for Prince Albert and members of the NDP, the government could say, "We have succeeded in achieving what we set out to do. We give notice that a minister of this government will stand up in the House today and say that on Monday the government will seek unanimous consent for the introduction of a bill setting out, in a much narrower fashion, those changes which in the opinion of the government are essential and have been discussed by members of the House."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken):

> That the motion be amended by striking out all the words after "that" and adding the following:
>
> "the government should forthwith introduce legislative proposals to meet the conditions referred to in the motion."

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question, perhaps after Your Honour has read the amendment? The hon. member hung his case on an article in the Ottawa Citizen of today. Is it not true that the report says that the action to which the hon. member expressly referred was not taken under the War Measures Act?

Mr. Baldwin: The very first sentence reads:

> The full impact of the War Measures Act was impressed upon the family of Hull doctor Georges Lebel—

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Read the end of the article. Read it all.

An hon. Member: The hon. member is misleading the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: I wonder if an insurrection is going on on the government side.

An hon. Member: The hon. member was misleading the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Peace River has proposed an amendment to the motion which is before the House. I have obvious reservations, from the procedural standpoint, about the amendment proposed by the hon. member. He will perhaps have considered himself that he is really proposing an entirely new question to the House. This, to my way of thinking, does not even look like an amendment. If the hon. member thinks he can argue the case, I will hear him and other hon. members who may wish to speak from the procedural standpoint on what has been proposed.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, we have not been given a copy of the amendment, and therefore cannot consider it.

Mr. Baldwin: I am sorry. I will send a copy over.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Make sure it is the same as the copy that was sent to Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Baldwin: I was under the impression that the hon. member could read quite well.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, may I make a suggestion? In view of what Your Honour has said on the matter put forward by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), could we not consider this matter during the dinner hour? We are to come back at 7.30 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members who are interested in this matter from the procedural standpoint and wish to give advice to the Chair when we resume at 7.30 p.m., will have the opportunity of doing so. After that a ruling can be given by the Chair as to whether the amendment can be put to the House.

Mr. Baldwin: I undertake to give a copy to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald) and explain it to him.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock, and pursuant to the order made earlier this day, I do now leave the chair. I remind hon. members that the House will resume its sitting at 7.30 p.m.

At five o'clock the House took recess.

---

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 7.30 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. When the House rose at five o'clock a point of order had been raised in connection with the proposed amendment of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). As I indicated, I am quite prepared to give a ruling now. If, as I have said, hon. members can bring forth arguments to support the proposition that this suggested amendment is acceptable procedurally, I will of course hear them.

Mr. Baldwin: In view of the fact that the child is mine and Your Honour appears to look upon him with some disfavour, I would like to comment very briefly. Recognizing that I am departing from precedents, I point out to Your Honour that the motion of the government is unprecedented, calling upon this House to give its approval to a certain type of action taken by the government and brought before the House in this way. This is a unique and unprecedented motion.

The motion I have sought to put before the House in the form of an amendment simply seeks to provide an alternative course that could be taken by the government. Your Honour may well say, and I recognize the truthfulness of the statement, that we have our right to dissent by voting against the motion. However, that does not permit us to offer for the consideration and the division of the House, what we feel is the most logical and sensible alternative. That is the unprecedented amendment which I offer to the unprecedented motion.

Mr. Speaker: Without going into the details of the situation I am sure the hon. member for Peace River, who knows so much about rules, Standing Orders and precedents, will agree that it is difficult for the Chair to accept this interesting amendment from a procedural standpoint. I indicated to hon. members before the House rose that in my view this motion brought in an entirely new proposition. I concluded that, on this basis, the amendment was not acceptable. In support of this view, I refer hon. members to Beauchesne's fourth edition, citation 203, paragraph (5) which reads:

> An amendment was ruled out because it raised a new question which could only be considered on a distinct motion after notice.

This is the suggestion I respectfully make to the hon. member at this time. I also refer hon. members to citation 202(12) which reads as follows:

> An amendment proposing a direct negative, . . . is out of order.

Hon. members realize that the way to express their disapproval of a motion before the House is to vote against it rather than to propose an amendment which is, in fact, a direct negative. I will spare hon. members other citations with which I was occupied during the dinner hour.

I am not suggesting that the motion now before the House cannot be amended. I have no doubt that it can. I certainly do not want to use the rules to prevent legitimate amendments, but in the case of this suggested amendment I respectfully submit to hon. members that it cannot be put at this time.

Mr. MacEachen: I believe Your Honour suggested that we ought to decide our course of action as soon as possible on resuming business at 7.30. I have had consultations with the other House leaders. In order to provide a maximum opportunity for members who wish to speak, to provide a definite time for a vote, and to give certainty on that, as well as to recognize the urgency of the subject matter, the House leaders propose the following arrangements to the House.

The House will sit tonight until ten o'clock and then adjourn until eleven o'clock tomorrow morning. Tomorrow, we will rise for lunch and resume at two o'clock. There will be routine proceedings tomorrow as usual. We will continue in the afternoon until every member who wishes to speak has had an opportunity to do so. Following that, we will adjourn until Monday. The vote will be the first item of government business on Monday. There will be no further speeches at that time.

Monday will be regarded as the fifth appointed day for the Address in Reply. I believe that will give every member an opportunity to speak. There will be a certainty as to when the division will take place on this important issue. It will assure the people of Canada that members have expressed their opinion immediately and have taken a vote on the matter at an early date.

• (7.40 p.m.)

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, the President of the Privy Council has accurately summed up the views of the House leaders. That seems to be a resumé of the feeling of the hon. members. I endorse fully what he says. An hon. member who feels he has a view to express on this most important subject should not be deprived from doing so.

On the question of the vote, I repeat that in the light of commitments which may well have been made for Saturday, the vote should not be taken until Monday in the circumstances which the President of the Privy Council has indicated. Tomorrow, we should have a question period to make up for the one we magnanimously gave up today.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the President of the Privy Council has correctly outlined the points on which as House Leaders we reached agreement a short while ago and we are happy to support this order at this time. There is one point which might be underlined—maybe it was stated, but, if so, I did not hear it. It was understood as part of our agreement that when the debate on this motion ends tomorrow it will be deemed that a recorded vote is to be held on Monday, whether or not there are sufficient members here at the time the debate ends to ask for a recorded vote. In other words, it is part of the order to which we are agreeing now that there is to be a recorded vote on this motion as the first item of government business on Monday.

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, we agree with the suggestions made by the President of the Privy Council.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I just ask one question, Mr. Speaker? At what time are we sitting on Monday under these arrangements?

Mr. MacEachen: I expect we shall sit at eleven o'clock on Monday and deal with routine proceedings, then take the vote as the first item on government orders. Then, we shall call the debate on the address and it will be regarded as another appointed day.

Mr. Baldwin: Would the President of the Privy Council be good enough to tell us upon what day the next vote will be taken in connection with the debate on the address?

Mr. MacEachen: I think it will be on Tuesday.

Mr. Speaker: I shall not attempt to repeat the details of the proposals which appear to have been agreed upon by hon. members. I think a reading of Hansard will probably indicate what it is we have agreed upon. I shall perhaps seek authority to publish tomorrow an abbreviated Order Paper, one which would contain only government orders and routine proceedings. As hon. members know, there is a backlog of private members' motions and it would complicate the lives of many people were we to attempt to publish the usual Order Paper tomorrow. I suggest we have an abridged Order Paper for tomorrow's sitting.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy LeBlanc (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I was wondering what could be my role in this debate, in my capacity as member for Rimouski, especially when speaking after ministers and members both from the government and the opposition side, and I concluded it was the role of a Quebec backbencher who believes that he has been elected not to destroy Canada, but to bring about the Canadian ideal.

It is useless to insist on the fact that the situation is serious, and that some adventurers, citizens of Canada, want to destroy our country, beginning with the province of Quebec. It is clear that what is being sought is to deprive Canadian citizens of their freedom.

Free member of Parliament elected by free citizens, I shall endeavour in the next few minutes to say briefly what my fellow citizens of the riding of Rimouski and a good number of other Quebecers think and want.

Most of my electors in the riding of Rimouski are happy with the step taken by the government of Canada to enable Canada to keep its good name with regard to freedom. When I speak of the majority of my electors, I think not only of those who have voted for me, but also of numerous personal friends, even amongst the Progressive Conservatives in the riding who would have been grieved by the woolly attitude of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Stanfield) during the debate today. I could say the same about the friends I have among the Creditistes in the riding of Rimouski.

As for those we call separatists, independentists or members of the FLQ who always feel they respect freedom, they refused to take advantage of certain rights inherent in freedom by failing to exercise their right to vote.

My fellow citizens of the riding of Rimouski, like most Quebecers, are dynamic members of the Canadian society, because they are honest, responsible and efficient, not because they speak up loudly; on the contrary, they are called "the silent majority".

• (7:50 p.m.)

In my opinion, dynanism is not only a matter of loud and forceful words but of results. Those serious and honest people work every day to make a success of their careers and to help Canada grow. What do they want? I can say that as a member of Parliament I have the same ambition, although it may appear more radical. We all think, however, that this is not the appropriate time to express lofty thoughts. We should not be wasting our time stating our views however inspiring they may be; the time has come to act in order to get concrete results that the Canadian population, and particularly that of Quebec, has been waiting for.

The people want a progressive Canada and, most of all, the unmasking of all subversive organizations in Quebec as well as their elimination.

In view of the great number of letters and messages that I have been receiving from my constituents for a long time now but particularly today, I must at least mention one fact with regard to the CBC. All the people who have contacted me have stated that the CBC was very partial in giving free publicity to the conspirators and revolutionaries who think they are with it. In fact, to use some of their favorite expressions, the time has come to bring the CBC into line and to put an end to its partisan system of information which shows total disregard for our society.

We must first grant as much authority as possible to our police force. Then the government of the province of Quebec and the government of Canada should shoulder their full responsibilities in order to neutralize these parallel powers.

What has been decided upon during the night and what we are now debating, that is the War Measures Act, is what the people want in order to live in peace and see the troublemakers brought to heel.

Like my fellow-citizens, if I had had any illusions left, I would have lost them today upon hearing some opposition spokesmen. Responsible citizens believed, I am sure, that, on such a day as this, hon. members, because of the very serious circumstances, should have been of one mind to ensure peace and order in Canada. One should not seek order as such but one should seek freedom. However, without order, there can be no freedom. Our aim, it may be stated, is freedom within order.

For his part, the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette), leader of the Ralliement créditiste, deserves our congratulations.

I do not want to become a flatterer but in fact he behaved as a convinced and earnest citizen of Quebec and we can say that he did us proud.

Some hon. Members: As always.

Mr. LeBlanc (Rimouski): As far as the hon. members for the New Democratic Party are concerned, several people including myself, after reading the newspapers and listening to the news tonight, at least in eastern Canada, will certainly be disappointed and those who still had any illusions will lose them.

In my opinion, through the voice of its leader, the New Democratic Party has showed itself in an unfavourable light. The first spokesman for the New Democratic Party said, for instance, that the government overreacted to a critical situation. We know that our voters do not share this opinion at all.

At a time where we should try to keep cool, not to lose our heads in order to consider things just as they are, the spokesmen for the New Democratic Party attempted to arouse passion in a true election speech.

[Mr. LeBlanc (Rimouski).]

I was reading recently—as I said not too long ago—that statesmen—and the leader of the New Democratic Party should certainly be considered as such—should think less of the next election and more of the future of their country. If we consider the stand taken by the leader of the New Democratic Party, we find that he did not behave today as a statesman but as a politician or rather a "petty politician". He was even bold enough to talk about ownership and, in my opinion, the leader of this party and his group do not show too much respect for private ownership. He contradicted himself.

You should not condemn a man for his ideas, he said. This is a truism because a man's ideas are intangible. If somebody voices seditious ideas on television, I do not know what they are if they are not acts.

He went so far as claiming that had he been in the shoes of the FLQ leaders, and should that organization take office, he would have first gotten rid of the elected representative he referred to this afternoon.

What is his approach to freedom? The fight against air, water and land pollution are among today's topics. One of my friends talked recently about the pollution of brains and minds.

As we often forget the true sciences of man in all our activities, it would be perhaps advisable to speak here of pollution of the mind, and, from what we have noted today, if there is a nucleus of mind polluters here in Canada, I think that it is to be found among the members of the New Democratic Party which has changed its name several times since its foundation.

As far as the Leader of the Official Opposition is concerned, he too has been disappointing. His colleagues from Quebec have been somewhat saddened by his attitude, because we know that, whatever decision is taken, the Quebecers who are concerned for their freedom wish to see a statesman such as the Leader of the Official Opposition take a clear-cut position.

His speech today was vague. He has referred to several things without taking any stand.

I think that my friends from the constituency of Rimouski who had placed their confidence in the hon. leader of the opposition a couple of years ago would be disappointed to see his comportment today. Electors from the riding of Rimouski and Quebecers in general want the government to take a positive and concrete view in these painful hours. They know that some Quebecers have tried to turn to their advantage the problems of the unemployed, of other workers and of low-wage earners. We are aware of those problems and so is the government, but we all want, with the government to work honestly and actively at their solution without destroying anything. They note that some of these revolutionists, these adventurers, who have nothing to lose because they were never able to earn anything, endeavoured to corrupt our youth before they could satisfy their thirst for power only. They made false representations to our workers, making them believe that the government would give them everything, all cooked on a silver platter.

Same thing for our farmers: their leaders delude them in the same manner as union leaders delude workers and as some leaders of the Quebec Farmers Union deceive the farmers. My friends can understand that we, on the contrary, want to give workers, farmers and small-wage earners the means to help themselves. How proud of them we are!

In order to strive for progress, my fellow citizens do not use the same means as the fomenters of sedition of the FLQ. They want to make a success of their case and to further Canada's development by working honestly, trying to teach their children to look truth and to respect the best rules of life possible. They are also in favour of freedom, but they do not want tolerance.

As I said earlier, there is no freedom without order or rules. It is said that Parliament is the forum where we can express our freedom, but without order, discipline, procedural rules, we would not be free. Thus, when the Speaker asks a member to resume his seat, does he infringe on the freedom of the latter? Not at all, he protects the rights of the majority as well as those of the minority. Long live freedom in order and discipline!

Evidently, it does not do to be fanatical about order. It should be applied kindly, and primarily sensibly.

We all know in Quebec that we are Canadian citizens. It is true that we want to retain our identity but some people waste our time when they insist so much on constitutional problems and I will even go as far as to say language problems. Proud as I may be of the language I speak, my mother-tongue which I am anxious not to lose and which no one, I hope, will cause me to lose, each value should be put in its proper place on the scale of values.

We want to retain our identity because we are aware of being part of the Canadian family and want to continue doing so.

Mr. Speaker, before I conclude my remarks I should like to indicate that I have described my fellow citizens in Quebec to the best of my knowledge. I can assure the House that they are proud of being Canadians and I shall try to state more briefly what they wish and what they think. As they do, I believe that the government though essential, is not everything. It should be noted that each individual in a democracy must belong to the elite, and my fellow citizens as well as all the Quebec members join me in support of the right honourable Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). We consider that he has done his duty. We congratulate him and we are basically happy with what he has accomplished.

Of course some distasteful things have to be done, but they are dictated by the present circumstances. We are against war. We are in favour of peace, but when we must defend ourselves, we must be prepared for war. We are all standing behind the right hon. Prime Minister and the government in order that Canada remain a country of freedom and order.

• (8:00 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which I am required to do at the first available opportunity during a sitting when an issue has come up which entitles an hon. member to rise.

During the course of my speech to the House this afternoon I quoted from an article which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen of today's date. At the conclusion of my speech, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald) intimated that I had misquoted the article. In fact, some hon. member from the opposite side said I was misleading the House. At the time I had before me a photostatic copy of the particular article and I hesitated to impose my views because sometimes a photostatic copy does not include the entire article. The minister indicated I had not read the last part.

I have before me now the article. It is precisely as I indicated it was and the wording is the same. It indicates beyond any doubt at all that all of the operations that are referred to by the police were conducted under the present provisions of the War Measures Act which is now in force.

An hon. Member: What is your page number?

Mr. Baldwin: The page is number 3. What the minister was referring to was an article which appeared on the front page which indicated at the conclusion that the Ottawa police had not taken any action under this particular proclamation. I thought I should make that position clear at this time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The Chair does not pretend to be a judge on such occasions as this, but because of the importance of the debate now taking place this might be an appropriate opportunity for the Chair to bring to the attention of hon. members citation No. 113 in the fourth edition of Beauchesne which reads in part as follows:

> But a dispute arising between two members, as to allegation of facts, does not fulfil the conditions of parliamentary privilege.

[Translation]

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, Canada is now going through difficult times and I think Quebecers should express their views on the measure now before the House.

As several members have said today, the legislation under study cannot appeal to any member since Canada has always had the reputation abroad of living in a true democracy.

When, in the light of facts, the government decides to resort to such exceptional measures, it is because the situation is most serious.

Should we repeat that the measure before us involves the granting of extraordinary powers to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his cabinet? These powers can even restrict freedom of speech, of the press and of association or assembly. But as a member of this House, am I in a position to judge of the advisability for the government to bring this legislation before us, when I realize that the government must know much more than I do on the present situation.

Some speakers today took pleasure in attacking the government about certain social and economic conditions existing in Quebec which they blame for the situation now prevailing in our province. Obviously, this is choosing the easy way.

We cannot ask that those who live outside Quebec be fully aware of what is going on presently in our province, and I express the wish that our fellow members from the other provinces will never have to live through an ordeal like the one we French Canadians are experiencing in Quebec at the moment. Now, it is Quebec's turn, but maybe in a week, in a month from now, it will be the turn of Ontario or of any other province.

Obviously, the younger generation in Quebec is far from satisfied with the social security programs, or with the political system. Obviously, changes are called for in the province of Quebec as in other provinces. I have often said so. The young people want governments to do something. They no longer want to get involved in an obsolete structure, the Canadian Constitution. The majority of young Quebecers want to stay within Confederation, provided they are recognized by our English-speaking colleagues as equal partners in this great country of ours.

Have we, members of Parliament, done anything to reassure them in that regard? Amending or redrafting the Constitution is taking too much time. Decision-making in the fields of social security and political mechanisms is being delayed. Knowing very well the temperament of our young people, I am aware that they are restless, that they want change and progress. They protest and most of them protest objectively. In Quebec some professional agitators have no respect whatever for democracy and take the opportunity to stir up university students and organize demonstrations similar to the one we watched last night on television. 3,000 young people gathered to discuss the present situation in Quebec and unscrupulous people, one of whom was Michel Chartrand, lectured them and stirred them up to agitation.

As Canadian parliamentarians, we have our responsibility in the crisis Quebec is going through at the present time.

Our immigration regulations have not been strict enough for one thing. We have admitted from Algeria people who have come here to preach revolution. We have also admitted Cubans who have come to set up Maoist groups in Montreal, Quebec and Trois-Rivières, because this is a democracy and we must respect freedom of speech. In so doing, we have been remiss through our failure to assume our responsibilities.

It is useless to cry. Even if we could correct our past mistakes, our task now is to build for the future and to restore in our country the respect for authority of people who wish to live under a truly democratic system.

The government has decided to adopt emergency measures and we are considering them now.

This afternoon the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) admitted quite frankly that this measure granted the government much greater powers than were needed to control the situation in Quebec. It is true.

• (8:10 p.m.)

It is true and as a lawyer I should think, first, that this measure which is going to be applied for six months and a half, will perhaps reduce for too long civil liberties of our fellow citizens. The danger I should like to point out to the House is that the government has that power in its hands. Who will use it, if not the police? How will they use the means put at their disposal by the government in order to control the situation?

Here is where the danger lies, Mr. Speaker. Because of that, maybe, innocent people who have nothing to do with the FLQ will pay for those who support a measure such as the one taken today by the government.

Some families will be searched, even though they have nothing to do with the FLQ in Quebec, because it is an emergency measure.

My leader was asking the government today, in an objective manner, to apply these urgency measures on a temporary basis. He also asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) to introduce as soon as possible amendments to the Criminal Code sections dealing with sedition and kidnapping. He was then merely suggesting amendments to the measure in order to give back to citizens the civil liberties that this measure tends to remove.

Mr. Speaker, such is the position that my leader took today on this important issue. Naturally, dishonest newsmen will say tonight, as they have done during the day, that the Progressive Conservative party through its leader supported the subversive movements in Quebec. I say those people are in bad faith because what the leader of the Progressive Conservative Party wanted to point out to the government is that implementation of these measures has been solicited for a period of six and a half months and that our leader, considering this to be too long, would wish to see other means taken.

The Minister of Justice could introduce in the House amendments to the Criminal Code in order to achieve the objectives the government set when deciding to adopt this emergency measure. That is what the Progressive Conservative Party is requesting of the government through this evening's amendment.

I repeat that we parlementarians should have a feeling of guilt because of the present situation in Quebec. Today, the situation which has prevailed in Quebec for close to 15 days has been clearly outlined.

Of course you cannot expect that people who live in British Columbia be aware of that situation. But, Mr. Speaker, we know that our people live in an atmosphere of terror and fear.

Some public men receive anonymous calls or blackmail threats. The terrorists will try by any means to spread panic among the people.

Unfortunately, I think that subversive forces in Quebec are better organized than we think. As a matter of fact, the Quebec Labour Minister was abducted a week ago and a British diplomat was kidnapped more than ten days ago, and neither the provincial police nor the police force of the city of Montreal nor the RCMP, who work as a whole, have been able to find the hostages. Where have they been hidden? We do not know yet. That is evidence that the revolutionaries are well organized, which is very serious. Mr. Speaker, I think that extraordinary measures have to be taken...

Some hon. Members: This is what we have done.

Mr. Asselin: I am not giving you hell; let me finish my sentence.

I said that extraordinary measures have to be taken to reestablish order and peace in the province of Quebec and renew the people's confidence in our democratic system.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Asselin: I do not wish either to congratulate Quebec's silent majority. The people remain silent. They leave it to the politicians to untangle the problems we are experiencing. Most Quebecers agree that Quebec and Canada can continue to live in a democratic system.

When do we see people taking to the streets to support those responsible to maintain order and peace in Quebec and in Canada? It is total silence.

This evening, I appeal specially to the silent majority in Quebec. It is its duty, to show massively to those who have the responsibility to order and peace, that it is with them and disapprove of the acts of subversion now being committed in Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, I know that many other hon. members wish to speak in this debate. Before I conclude my remarks, I express the wish that the enforcement of the measure before us will only be temporary and will be replaced by another one through an amendment to the Criminal Code. I fully support the leader of my party and my colleagues, who have called for such an amendment. If a motion along those lines is introduced, I, as a Quebecer and as someone who is seeking respect for order and authority, will vote in favour of that motion.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Mr. Jacques Guilbeault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, first of all I wish to congratulate as warmly as possible the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Asselin). His words and particularly the position he has taken, clearly identify him as a member from the province of Quebec who understands the serious problems now facing Canada, and especially Quebec.

I would ask the hon. member for Charlevoix and his three Progressive Conservative colleagues from the province of Quebec to talk to the other members of their party and bring home to them what the situation is in the province of Quebec, so that when the question is put they will not be the only ones to speak with the voice of reason, but the whole opposition along with them.

Mr. Speaker, rather than make a bombastic speech leading nowhere this morning, the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Standfield) should have immediately given the floor to his colleagues from the province of Quebec, for they can appreciate fully what is taking place in their province and will know which way to vote when the motion is put.

Mr. Speaker, I was disgusted today when I heard the member for Peace River, (Mr. Baldwin) read from the Ottawa Citizen a melodramatic story telling of a family being awakened and a bird cage searched. I have always respected and trusted the member for Peace River. He is a serious man, steady and experienced. But, when in a debate as serious as this one is, he introduces sentimental and futile arguments like that one, I wonder what to think.

Mr. Speaker, we have had, in the ranks of the New Democratic Party, dedicated defenders of the rights of the individual, but I imagine that today's spectacle will continue later when one of its members is recognized. Still, I should like all hon. members to understand that when we come to a decision later on, we will have to decide on the suspension of individual rights. We all realize that whether or not we like it, individual rights will be suspended temporarily, and it is up to us to decide whether they will be suspended by an order of the government, or by the activity of the terrorists in Quebec. That is the choice we must make. We will suspend them through the legality of an act adopted by this House, or we will allow the terrorists in Quebec to suspend them in their own way.

We will also have to choose between the rights of the individual or collective rights. We may be violating individual rights by granting greater powers to the police forces; this doubtless will annoy some people. But, are not the collective rights of the people to live in peace, harmony, free from fear, more important than sparing a few individuals the annoyance of being awakened in the morning? That is the whole question.

To my mind—and I say this sincerely—the harmful effects of the legislation the government put before us will be very limited. Indeed, who is afraid of being disturbed by the police, if not that ¼ per cent of the Quebec people who live outside the law and pursue the aims and objectives of the FLQ.

• (8:30 p.m.)

As for me, I am not afraid of the police force. I am sure that my honest neighbours, the citizens of my riding who lead a normal life will not be inconvenienced by such measures. Of course, those who live in cells, who attempt to destroy our society, who are plotting, I am sure, while we are discussing, are inconvenienced and cry that their civil rights are being violated. However, common sense tells us that the majority of Canadians were expecting some action on our part, a positive action. Well, the time has come. Whether we extend the debate for two three or four days, the people expect Canadian parliamentarians to restore law and order in Canada.

Before closing, I should like to read an excerpt of the editorial published in La Presse, in this morning's edition. We can read the following, and I quote:

For the second time in one year, the army has been called out in Montreal. These two interventions of the army prove, in the last analysis, that there can be no lasting authority without force.

The purpose of any civilization is to delay the outbreak and the use of force; to replace force by words, that is to say by the law and negotiation within the law. But when words have become meaningless, through too much lies; or when they have been replaced by machine-gun and dynamite, force must be used. A disciplined and visible force is better than an invisible and lawless force.

Is authority necessary or not in a society? The answer is simple: It is necessary.

[English]

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, when a democratic country faces a threat, a crisis, from any external or internal enemy it has to balance two things, the safety of the state on the one side and the rights and liberties of the individual on the other. Even in time of full scale war, worldwide war, it has been found necessary, if not popular, in countries that cherish freedom, to ensure in the process of seeking to safeguard freedom that freedom is not undermined. The real question that faces this House is, where does the balance lie?

I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that the government in proceeding to proclaim the War Measures Act has gone far beyond any reasonable balance and unwittingly has endangered the rights and the liberties of Canadians in a manner and in a degree far beyond that required to meet the present crisis. What, I ask the House, has the government in fact done? It has invoked the application of the War Measures Act. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) in his speech this afternoon sought to play down—

An hon. Member: What did Ed Schreyer say?

Mr. Brewin: I am not interested in what Ed Schreyer said. I am speaking in this House on my own responsibility. I do not know what he said. I would request members of the House during this debate, which is an important one, to listen rather than inject senseless questions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I wish to bring to the attention of hon. members that the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) has the floor.

Mr. Brewin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think I can claim also to have had enough experience that I might be able to say something that is new, and impart some knowledge to some of the members of the House who have not had the same experience. I suggest that for a change they listen. I was saying that in his speech the Minister of Justice sought to play down the importance of the proclamation of the War Measures Act. What he, in fact, suggested was that all we were faced with were the regulations that were passed under the authority of the War Measures Act. I suggest that that is not the case, and that the proclamation of the Act by itself has tremendous consequences.

It confers vast, almost unlimited powers on the executive or the government of the country. It has never before been invoked except in the midst of worldwide war in which civilization as a whole was threatened. Let us consider what the proclamation of the War Measures Act enables the government to do. First of all, that proclamation suspends the constitution of the country. We are at this moment without any fundamental law. The constitution which governs the affairs of this Parliament and country is temporarily suspended because of the proclamation of the emergency. Secondly, the proclamation enables the federal government to override provincial legislatures and provincial legislation. I am rather surprised that so many who in this House proclaim themselves to be the champions of provincial rights, and who are loud in their defence of provincial rights, should remain silent at the wholesale invasion of provincial rights which is involved in the proclamation of the War Measures Act in peacetime.

• (8:40 p.m.)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would be kind enough to permit a question.

Mr. Brewin: Certainly.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the minister seeking the floor for the purpose of asking the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) a question?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I understand the hon. member had yielded the floor.

Mr. Lewis: He has courteously agreed to answer.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Does the hon. member not agree that although the War Measures Act potentially confers a great deal of power upon the government, this power is only exercised by regulation? Should one not turn to the regulation to see what power is being exercised?

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I do not accept that argument. I have a copy of the War Measures Act in front of me and it says that the Governor General in Council—I suppose the Governor General in Council usually acts by regulation—may authorize such acts and things and make from time to time such orders and regulations, and so on.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): "May."

Mr. Brewin: Of course, it is only permissive. But I point out to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) that the government does not have to operate by regulation. Let me repeat what I have said. The Governor in Council, which means the cabinet or the executive, has authority under the War Measures Act to do almost anything it likes, including the setting aside of provincial legislation and invading the fields of the provincial legislatures. I am pointing out that is rather a drastic power. I am rather surprised we have not heard anything about it—

An hon. Member: What imagination!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): When did the hon. member wake up?

Mr. Brewin: I will deal with the question of imagination later. I intend to show that these powers have actually been exercised by governments here. No effort of imagination is required to demonstrate what has been done under the War Measures Act by governments of this country which, incidentally, were of the same political stripe as the present government.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Hear, hear!

Mr. Brewin: The third result of the proclamation of the War Measures Act is this: the Bill of Rights has been torn up. We do not have an effective Bill of Rights at present, by reason of this proclamation. Some think that the government's regulation is reasonably restrained. I do not think it is very restrained. For the time being, at any rate, the Bill of Rights is torn up by this proclamation of the act. Also, Mr. Speaker, the proclamation of the act jeopardizes freedom of speech and freedom of assembly for all Canadians from one end of Canada to the other. The effect of the proclamation of the War Measures Act is this: it authorizes internment and imprisonment without trial; it enables the wholesale confiscation of property; it even authorizes the deportation or exile of Canadian citizens.

It is claimed by some that this may be an exaggerated account of what can be done under the War Measures Act or what is enabled to be done by its proclamation. My answer is that it is precisely those powers which have been exercised in the past under the War Measures Act. Some hon. members of the House may be too young to know the facts personally, or they may not have read about them. I had the experience of representing the Japanese Canadian community at the end of the last war. By Order in Council passed under the War Measures Act, Canadian citizens of the Japanese race were ejected from their homes, deprived of their property, herded into relocation or internment camps and, finally, subjected to exile or deportation from the country. All this was done by Order in Council under the War Measures Act, without there being any suggestion that these people had been guilty of any act of sabotage or disloyalty.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): But the Order in Council had to be passed to bring that regulation into force.

Mr. Brewin: Indeed, it was passed. If I may make a personal comment here, I think that is one of the most shameful episodes in Canadian history. It was passed by the government. Finally, the government rescinded its own order when public opinion caught up with the iniquity of that legislation.

Mr. Woolliams: A Liberal government did that.

Mr. Brewin: That is right. This brings me to the crucial point of my remarks. The powers of the government, once the proclamation has been carried into force, are so sweeping and so liable to abuse that they should only be called into play if necessary. I understood the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to recognize this in what he said.

In expressing his own anxiety about the matter, I think the Minister of Justice spoke about the distasteful step which had been taken. The Prime Minister recognized that such sweeping power should be invoked only in cases of clear necessity. As I recall it, the Prime Minister in his speech said that circumstances dictated the use of the War Measures Act. He said there was no alternative. Mr. Speaker, I challenge that assertion.

There would have been no difficulty in meeting the challenge of the FLQ and meeting the request of the government of Quebec and the city of Montreal by strengthening the existing law by act of Parliament. That could have been done. That was a clear alternative and was infinitely preferable to what the government has seen fit to do. The members of this party and the official opposition have made it abundantly clear that they would have facilitated amendments to the Criminal Code to authorize more widespread and effective means of search in this emergency than the present law allows. We have approved the government's unwillingness to meet the outrageous demands of the kidnappers.

I now want to say a word about the regulations which have been passed. The regulations have been passed with speed. I suggest they are overzealous and ineffective. One of the main provisions in the regulations is the banning of organizations declared to be illegal. I suggest that is a futile gesture. We have had experience of doing just that under the War Measures Act. During the last war the communist party was declared illegal. What was the result? That drove them underground. It made them seem the champions of oppressed groups and enabled them to emerge after the war stronger than they had ever been in the history of Canada. I think you have to trust people a little. We in this party are in favour of banning lawless acts, but we are not in favour of banning dangerous thought. Suppressing thought and freedom of expression and association has never been effective. The only effective way to deal with grievances is to remove their causes.

I have spoken, Mr. Speaker, of the effect of this measure on the fundamental rights and liberties of all Canadians and the extent to which they are endangered by the government's action. What worries me as much, or even more, is the direction the legislative blunderbuss that is being used in this case is pointing. It is directed at one province. I fear the result of this. It will bring about the further alienation of people of good will in that particular province.

I have always believed that one of the first duties of the members of this House is the fostering of the unity of Canada and the fostering of good will and understanding between the peoples of all Canada. I fear, Mr. Speaker, that this legislative intervention will in the long run have a counterproductive effect. I know that the government claims it is responding to the request of the government of Quebec and the city of Montreal. But did those authorities really ask for the suspension of the constitution? Did they ask for the legislative blunderbuss that is being presented to us? Did they actually mention the War Measures Act? In the long run, will the people in that province welcome this particular type of intervention? I venture to suggest that they will not.

Invoking of War Measures Act

• (8:50 p.m.)

Parliament's chief and most glorious function is to be the watchdog of freedom. If Parliament surrenders this role, it abdicates its chief function. Freedom in security is worth fighting for. Freedom depends upon continued vigilance against encroachments on freedom, whether real or apprehended. Freedom does not depend on force, not on the severity of laws in the face of dissatisfaction, but on the ability of government to remedy the abuses that have created the dissatisfaction.

I suppose that the party system and the attitudes, particularly of government members, are such that it will be quite useless to appeal to them to change their minds and not support this particular resolution. We know this resolution will be accepted no matter how firmly the opposition does its duty to oppose what we think is an unwarranted encroachment on the rights of citizens of this country. I urge the government to demonstrate its good faith, concern for freedom and sensitivity to the supremacy of Parliament by rescinding the application of the War Measures Act and this proclamation with its wide and dangerous consequences, which I and other speakers have outlined, as soon as possible and to substitute a law to be passed by Parliament which can meet, rather than exacerbate, the crisis that Canada faces today.

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Before getting to the primary remarks that I have in mind, Mr. Speaker, I wish to comment on the observations of the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin). I have in front of me a copy of the War Measures Act. I do not say that the hon. member has deliberately misled the House, but I interpret this Act in a different way. The hon. member stated that these broad and far-ranging powers are in fact in force now. I quote from the act as follows:

(1) The Governor in Council may do and authorize such acts and things, and make from time to time such orders and regulations,—

The act goes on to provide:

(2) All orders and regulations made under this section shall have the force of law, and shall be enforced in such manner—

I contend that to say we have passed the War Measures Act in such a broad way as the hon. member has outlined is simply and totally false.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cafik: This act can only be interpreted in a reasonable way. I suggest we have to look at the act. It clearly states that the regulations are what will go into effect. These regulations are what was tabled in this House today. I suggest that comments which go beyond the range of those regulations are irrelevant and that it is silly to present them at this time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cafik: It has been suggested by some hon. members that some, if not all, members on this side of the House have no respect for personal rights and liberties. I think I speak for members on both sides of this House when I say that we all have a great and abiding concern for individual rights and freedoms.

[Mr. Brewin.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cafik: I do not subscribe to the view that the state is supreme over the individual. Quite the contrary. None the less, I feel very strongly that no man is allowed to exercise his freedom and rights in such a way as to deny those same rights to the collective group of Canadians. I further suggest that this is the situation we have before us. The FLQ traitors and bandits are threatening to take the lives, and indeed have taken the lives, of individual citizens in this country. If we do not act in a responsible, quick and efficient manner, we are not fulfilling our obligations as members of this House or members of this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cafik: Every one of us can surely make a not too subtle distinction between freedom and licence. Licence gives the right to do anything without any consideration being given to its effect upon others. Freedom does not give that right. Freedom implies obligations and duties. Freedom is a sham if it does not allow other people the same freedom that we want for ourselves.

We cannot defend freedom by destroying it. There are always dangers. I agree with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in his statement that this is an act he would have preferred not to bring forward, but the situation before us demands that kind of positive action to protect the people of this country. No nation which lacks the courage to defend itself deserves to survive. In fact, in our troubled times I suggest it would not survive. We live in an age of violence. Violence exists to some extent here and abroad because we have not been careful enough to preserve these basic rights in the past. Far too often we have mollycoddled those people who have been willing to deny us our fundamental rights and have not defended ourselves against them. It is damn well time we did.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cafik: I believe this proclamation is necessary, and indeed essential, to protect the civil liberties of all Canadians, not to destroy them. It is an interim measure. As soon as possible I hope we will take other steps in order to have permanent laws and regulations in order to safeguard ourselves at all times. I do not know how in this moment of crisis we could have acted otherwise. The element of surprise was absolutely essential. That quality could never have been fulfilled had we listened to the advice of opposition members presented here today. How could we act differently than we did when the Premier of one of our great provinces asked that we act immediately so that his province could be protected? How could we not listen to him and the mayor of Montreal when they outlined the urgency of the situation? How can we do otherwise than give them the power to protect the people they represent? We could not remain helpless in the face of this treachery. We had to act, and we did.

We must use whatever lawful means are at our disposal to crush these bandits and common criminals who would destroy our nation. I further suggest that no person in this country need fear the loss of civil liberties except those who are trying to deny the rest of us those same liberties. The kidnappings were unfortunate. God knows, we are all praying that these men will come out of this situation alive. It is unfortunate that it took this tragedy to precipitate us into action and to realize how serious and dangerous the situation has become. In my view we have no right to spend the public's hard-earned money, garnered through taxation, to support and encourage certain of the means of communication in this country to subvert our own people. I do not think it takes much imagination, when you turn on a television set or a radio set, to know what I am talking about.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cafik: We see these people subsidized as they spread their voices of hate across this nation. We recently set up a Committee on Pollution to clean up our rivers, streams and air. Surely to God we can do something to clean up the filth that is being passed into the minds of those who live in this country by those who would subvert us.

I suggest that the government give serious consideration to the passage of a special act in this Parliament. For want of a special name I would entitle it the "Security of the Nation Act." It would clearly set out what lies before those who would try to destroy us, so that they would know their rights and we would know what powers we had to deal with them. Such an act ought to be introduced into the House and debated, with everyone having a chance to express his view.

I further suggest that the government give consideration to the following ideas in connection with the act to which I have referred. First, I believe capital punishment should be reintroduced and made applicable to anyone who blackmails the state, its elected officials or those who are entrusted with the enforcement of the law, such as magistrates and judges. Second, capital punishment should be the penalty for kidnapping and hijacking which endangers the lives of human beings. Third, it should apply to bombing or other acts of violence directed against the state where danger to human life is involved. Fourth, we should deport those who come to this country to encourage the commitment of any of the offences to which I have referred.

I do not think we can afford to tolerate those who advocate political violence in this country if they are not Canadian citizens. Indeed, I wonder whether such people should be tolerated even when they are Canadian citizens. Fourth, I believe that those who belong to associations which advocate the use of violence for political purposes should be regarded as having committed a criminal offence, the penalty for which is a minimum of five years in jail. Fifth, I believe that special powers should be provided in any such act to enable law enforcement officers to deal with insurrection in an effective way. This would not be easy, because this section of the legislation would make permanent such things as arrest without a charge being preferred, and so on. Perhaps this section should only be implemented on the orders of the Governor in Council. Sixth, I believe we also have to make provision ensuring that those charged with sedition or treasonable activity are brought to trial more quickly.

In addition, I believe two further steps should be taken, though they have nothing to do with the act I have proposed. The government, in concert with other governments, should make arrangements with friendly nations—indeed, with all nations, as far as possible—in an effort to have the death penalty imposed for international kidnapping and hijacking offences. Efforts should be made to agree that such countries would not submit to national or international blackmail in any shape or form. If this were done, we might see an end to violence of the kind which is so prevalent today. I also suggest that in conjunction with other states we should take action against those nations which give political asylum to people who perpetrate such crimes. I support the interim measure which is now before us. Like everyone else, I am unhappy that it should be necessary. But it is necessary, and I hope the government will take action by setting up a separate act to deal with this situation in a permanent way in future.

I wish, now, to make some comments on observations made by hon. members opposite. I, too, am disappointed at the reaction of some members of the opposition. I know that were I an opposition member I would have supported this motion, outlined the potential dangers and put the government on notice that it ought to be very careful, and that if it did not exercise these great powers in a responsible way I would be on their tail. I do not think it behooves anyone in this House to oppose this drastic measure taken in order to ensure the security of our country. The leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Douglas) said earlier today that if he were the captain of this ship of state, one of his first acts would be to get rid of me, a barnacle on the ship of state.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cafik: Some of you may laugh. You are the very ones who are getting up and crying for the civil rights of the people of this country, yet attempting to deny me mine.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Cafik: I am no less important in this chamber than any of the members opposite or those on this side of the House, and when I have something to say, I intend to say it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cafik: I suggest that the leader of the New Democratic Party ought to be very careful before making such stupid and senseless statements. It is unfortunate that I have been so kind to him, but that is my nature. I should like to close by saying that we all hope and pray that God will give this government and this chamber the courage and the wisdom to know how to act in these difficult times.

An hon. Member: Amen.

Mr. Cafik: I also hope that the two men who are now captives of these bandits will gain their freedom. I know the government will do everything in its power to try to secure this objective, and I hope to God that they are successful.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, after listening to the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) I find myself recalling the words of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) with a good deal of discomfort. I have always had a great deal of admiration for the Minister of Justice; I believe that he will always carry out his job to the best of his ability. He said, in effect, "Don't worry, I realize we are being given too much power, but as long as I hold the job of Minister of Justice the members of this chamber and Canadians generally do not have to worry." I should like to say through you, Mr. Speaker, that if the Minister of Justice were traded for the justice minister of the province of Ontario, I would not feel quite as safe about interpreting the regulations.

• (9:10 p.m.)

The point I want to emphasize is this. This sort of expression is often used as a Liberal trick, "Don't worry. As long as we are here, we won't do any harm". The fact is that it is the rule of law that governs, not the rule of people. I have absolute trust in the Minister of Justice, and I believe the average Canadian also has trust in the Minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: But men may come and men may go. Today we have a certain minister of Justice; before these rules and regulations expire we may have another minister of justice. At the outset may I say that I do not think anyone underestimates the crisis in Quebec at the present time, one which has no doubt brought about the passing of certain Orders in Council bringing into force the War Measures Act and the regulations made thereunder. The Minister of Justice and those working in his department are to be trusted with the powers they have been handed. But, Mr. Speaker, when the members of the government walked into this chamber this morning they had already proclaimed the law. It was proclaimed last night. Therefore, we are now debating something that took place last night. This law was proclaimed before Parliament met this morning.

That is the basic premise upon which I commence my speech. This law came about by executive action and was proclaimed before Parliament met. Although this is no time for recrimination and reproach, surely the government knew for a long time the crisis that existed particularly in this one province, as so ably described by the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), and could and should have taken action. Government members talk about confidentiality, about the element of surprise. This chamber could have met in camera and passed this law. We are all aware of the problems facing the province of Quebec. We are all aware that the situation is such that not only could law and order in the province break up, but so could the unity of this country.

However, it is the method in which the situation was handled about which we are complaining. We have pressed the government to take action. We have been asking the government to establish law and order in the province of Quebec. Many members on this side of the House—though some of us stand alone on this question—wanted our immigration laws tightened up so that the revolutionaries from other places who have caused the crisis in the province of Quebec would have been unable to come to this land and infiltrate themselves into our society in order to erode the rule of law. Consequently, the government must take some responsibility for this situation.

Let me repeat: when Parliament met today, this law was already in effect. The position I want to get across, and I take it to be my leader's position, is that we are saying there must be some extraordinary law passed at this time in order to restore law and order to the province of Quebec and to Canada wherever required. But, Mr. Speaker, what tools should we use in the process? We have asked for a war against crime. We begged the government as long as two or three years ago to set up a royal commission which would document the situation, hear evidence and list all the people who have infiltrated our society. Had this been done, we would have had their names and would have known what they had been doing. However, no action was taken along this line. That is why we asked for a war against crime, against those people who are trying to disrupt society and all that it stands for in Canada today.

I repeat, what kind of tools should we use? You cannot cure one evil with a worse. The first charge I make against the Minister of Justice is that what the government has done is just that; it has tried to cure one evil with a worse. This kind of law is as bad as that which it is trying to cure.

An hon. Member: What would you have done?

Mr. Woolliams: I will come to that, if the hon. member would listen. If he had listened to my leader today he would not need to ask that question, so I can only conclude he must have been absent from the Chamber. What this party would have done, as we have already said, is amend the Criminal Code to give it the necessary powers to cope with the situation and the crisis at hand. I congratulate the Minister of Justice for having some sympathy for this position, as revealed in his speech.

After procrastinating for so long, the government decided it needed surprise and it has already sprung its surprise. Let the government bring in next week a law to replace these regulations, a law that would establish the rule of law in Canada and at the same time protect the civil rights of every Canadian. I have heard what the mayor of Montreal said and what the Premier of the province of Quebec said. They asked for action, but they have been asking the government to take action for the last two years and the government has done nothing. The government has now secretly brought into force the War Measures Act.

I should like to quote the words of a man who was the kind of Liberal who used to sit as a member of the Liberal party. I shall read to the House what Mr. Power had to say, as recorded in Hansard, when in 1945 the government brought in a secret Order in Council, P.C.6444. The pertinent part of the order reads as follows:

> The Acting Prime Minister or the Minister of Justice, if satisfied that with a view to preventing any particular person from communicating secret and confidential information to an agent of a foreign power or otherwise acting in any maner prejudicial to the public safety or the safety of the state it is necessary so to do, may make an order that any such person be interrogated and/or detained in such place and under such conditions as he may from time to time determine.

Those words are part of an Order in Council passed exactly like the one last evening, by surprise. Mr. Power was one of the members of the executive. I have not heard one Liberal today take a stand against the establishment in the Liberal party, and I am disappointed. I would have thought one of them would have taken a different position from that of the government, but all of them have used the same argument and given the same support. The words of Mr. Power, I suggest, should be remembered tonight while we are debating this resolution.

The government has argued that it does not want to go after the FLQ. We want to be just as tough with the FLQ as the government. In fact, two years ago we wanted to get even tougher. But as William Pitt the Younger said, you can never cure one evil with a worse. This is what Mr. Power said:

> As for me, brought up in an atmosphere wherein a framed photograph of Magna Carta was on almost every wall, accompanied with a warrant for the execution of Charles I, and steeped through my reading in the traditions of the martyrs of liberty and freedom, I cannot wish to turn back the pages of history seven hundred years and repeal Magna Carta. I cannot by my silence appear to approve even tacitly what I believe to have been a great mistake on the part of the government.

• (9:20 p.m.)

Our position is that this Order in Council, put into force in this fashion, constitutes a great mistake on the part of the government and that they could have achieved the same ends just as effectively with other methods. They could have returned law and order to the province of Quebec just as effectively by coming to Parliament and bringing about an amendment to the Criminal Code giving the necessary power to police officers to clean up the mess to which the government contributed. This could have been done even if it had been done by the cabinet.

Continuing the quotation, Mr. Power said:

> If this is to be the funeral of liberalism I do not desire to be even an honorary pall-bearer at the funeral, and I do not wish by not taking part in this debate to give silent approval to the procedure which has taken place.

Those are the words of a Liberal at that time a secret Order in Council was passed in order to deal with a spy case. I know the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) recalls that matter, because he referred to it in his speech. Let us consider what Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King said when speaking in the House of Commons in 1934, as recorded at page 2342 of Hansard for that period. The House was dealing with the law at that time. He said that we are behind the traditions that are the foundation of law and order. These are the traditions on which law is based.

An hon. Member: Not to the Liberals.

Mr. Woolliams: It may not be to the Liberals. This is what he said:

> Now let us come to another point which I wish particularly to stress. I refer to the right set out in Magna Carta that no man shall be dispossessed of his rights without the lawful judgment of his peers under the law of the land; not the law as made by the Governor in Council, not the law as made by some unnamed and as yet unexisting body, but the law of the land as known to everyone.

At six o'clock last night this law was not known to Canadians. At four o'clock this morning it was not known, but it became the law. That is what I meant when I said you are curing one ill by treating it with something worse. The law should not make its first appearance in the Canada Gazette through the power of the Governor in Council rather than that of Parliament. It should appear in the Statutes of Canada. The Minister of Justice said that we have really nothing to worry about because if they change the law through Order in Council, it will come back to Parliament for consideration. The Prime Minister this morning—this was confirmed by the Minister of Justice—left the impression that they had to act quickly. I have some sympathy for that position, but he left the impression that the government would prepare a proper bill to be brought before Parliament and put into the statute books. This would contain the powers they felt they needed to cope with the situation. I ask the Minister of Justice whether he will stand in his place and say that the government intends to bring in a bill which will give them the powers they feel they need to deal with this crisis, and that this bill will supplant the regulations passed early this morning. Is that the government's policy? Does silence indicate it will be? Of course it does not. This Order in Council is the law, and it will be the law for the next six or seven months.

Surely this means, if it means anything, that the Prime Minister in presenting that argument, as confirmed by the Minister of Justice, was handing soft soap to the opposition who were opposed to this kind of law, in order that it might be passed quickly. It would then be passed on to the public of Canada through the news media. I suggest if they meant what they said, they owe it to the Canadian people to keep their word. They should bring in a bill which would provide the kind of law needed to cope with the crisis which exists in Quebec. That is what this party is asking for, and I believe that is all that the opposition members who have spoken have been asking for. If the government will indicate that this is what they will do, we will confirm the action they have taken to handle this crisis.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: It seems to me that the powers under th War Measures Act are particularly stringent. This is so of the Order in Council. We should have a specific statute to cope with a specific situation. There is a crisis in the province of Quebec, but there certainly is not a war. The government says they had to act quickly and so they brought in this Order in Council. They should now put their law drafters to work on a bill to amend the Criminal Code and enact the law necessary to cure this crisis. We would then have a specific law for a specific purpose. If they followed this proper parliamentary procedure the new law would become a permanent part of the Criminal Code.

I am not very concerned about who might be elected a Member of Parliament and appointed Minister of Justice. Whoever it might be, I am sure he would carry out his duties with a degree of responsibility. But when you invoke a law like this, what will happen throughout the country? As the Minister of Justice said today, the administration of justice is a function of the attorneys general of the provinces. So we will have ten attorneys general administering this act. What will happen is that every police officer will have the right to act under this measure. How can the Minister of Justice know what houses are being walked into tonight? How can he tell us tomorrow in the House of Commons the number of doors that have been knocked on, the number of arrests that have been made and the number of people who have been detained without bail, without counsel and without the right of a trial within a certain number of hours or days? How can he fulfil that responsibility? That is the situation which results when you create law by Order in Council rather than by Parliament.

Many policemen are dedicated to their jobs and I am sure the majority of them will carry out their duties with the proper degree of responsibility. However, it takes only a few irresponsible police officers to create a great deal of injustice, and the responsibility for that will lie at the feet of the Minister of Justice. Let us not conclude this debate with the idea that because the Minister of Justice says we should not worry, because he will always accept the responsibility, everyone will interpret the government's intentions with responsibility and the courts will determine that what is intended is reasonable. The actions of the government in this respect have, in effect, made this country a police state. This debate is really a process of speaking and listening. This law existed when the government came into the House: today make no mistake about that. The law was in existence and this debate has given us an opportunity to express ourselves and indicate where we stand.

Through the implementation of the War Measures Act and the Orders in Council contained therein, the government has set aside the constitution and civil rights for everyone in Canada. What is going on in Alberta tonight, that they need this kind of law? What is going on in British Columbia, that they need this kind of law? Indeed, what is going on in Manitoba, that they need this kind of law, or in Ontario or the Maritimes—

An hon. Member: And Newfoundland.

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, and even Newfoundland.

An hon. Member: Oh, but Joey is there.

Mr. Woolliams: I appreciate that someone might say these criminal elements could move out of the province of Quebec into Ontario or any other province, but that is no excuse for making law by Order in Council and in secret. The law should be known by Canadians who sit in their living rooms and by Canadians who walk the streets. When the law is made by Order in Council, in secret and at night, particularly when it is made retroactive, the civil rights of Canadians leave the purview of this Parliament and go out of the window of every home in Canada. That is the point we are making.

• (9:30 p.m.)

So, I say this. We have the question of civil rights. What are they? They are the right of the individual to life and the right of the individual to liberty. We have heard so many definitions of liberty. We appreciate the kind of liberty we talk about in respect of Canada when we all give up something for the benefit of the whole society. Then, they talk about freedom of speech. This is evidence that they knew for a long time they were going to do this. In fact, I am convinced that when the Leader of the Opposition asked the question two or three days ago this Proclamation was on the tracing board.

Last night when I was at the CBC I was told the personnel of the CBC had been advised that there was censorship so far as discussion of this problem is concerned on the air, through television or radio. I should like to ask what minister picked up the phone and called President Davidson of the CBC. Had this ever been done when the Conservatives were in office, I wonder what would have happened. I should like to know what minister gave the instruction to the president which caused the close-down of the news last night on the CBC.

We now not only have this type of law, but in addition we have a news agency set up and controlled by the executive of Canada which has become all powerful by means of an order in council implementing the War Measures Act. It does not really matter what position members of the opposition take in respect of this particular Proclamation. If they vote against it, they would be saying they are voting against the methods, although they appreciate the crisis and realize there must be some action taken. If they vote for it they would, in effect, be saying this government was caught because it procrastinated for so long. I am sure these people must have accepted the statements of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice today that a statute would be brought in to replace this secret Order in Council which was made in the middle of the night. If the minister is shaking his head, may I say that I at least understood him to say that.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I think the hon. member should read my speech.

Mr. Woolliams: When the minister says I should read his speech this means that he does not intend to do it and that we are going to have a dictatorship in Canada for six months under this particular Order in Council which re-implements the War Measures Act. In fact, there are people in Canada who have believed that this government led by the distinguished right hon. gentleman has wanted this kind of dictatorship for a long time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Woolliams: I said there are some people who believe that. This belief has been confirmed by this type of action because the same objective could have been accomplished by Parliamentary action. There is no need for me to say anything more. I have set out very carefully the reason we have taken the position we have. We say we appreciate the crisis which exists in the province of Quebec. We appreciate the fact that extraordinary measures were necessary. We say they could have been achieved by amending the Code in Parliament through the proper democratic process. That is our position.

We say it is a very dangerous process of law to do this by order in council. This very order in council could be amended tomorrow night without any consultation with Parliament whatsoever. With that, I thank the members of the House for their kind attention.

Mr. John Roberts (York-Simcoe): I shall not speak for long, Mr. Speaker. I doubt that I shall add to the arguments that have already been presented by members of this House. However, perhaps some of the arguments bear repeating because they do not seem to have penetrated the perception of many members of the opposition. Given the level of perception they have shown in the past, that may not be too surprising. I was essentially provoked to take a part in this debate because of the remarks of the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis). I regret that he is not in the House now. The hon. member gave us a display of rhetorical fireworks instead of the considered judgment of which he is capable. I regret to say that for the first time in the long time I have known him, he descended to the level of a bush league politician. He alluded to the government backbenchers, as I regret to say did the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) later, and said they would be forced to support this government legislation contrary to their conscience. Well, I can tell you I do not hold my conscience in fee to the hon. member for York South, nor to other members of this House. We hold our conscience in relation to our God, so I suggest the hon. member for York South take care of his own and I shall take care of mine.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Roberts: In the past I have not been afraid to speak against, and vote against, this government when I felt its action might even remotely or intangibly interfere with the area of free speech and civil liberties. I remind the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) that we two found ourselves on the same side on this matter once in the past. It is not a fear of conscience that keeps me from speaking out against this government's decision. It is because this decision has the full support of my conscience that I speak now. I think it important not only for my constituents but for the people of Canada to know that in this House the backbenchers support the government, not out of fear but out of a genuine and honest conviction that this is the only course of action now open to us.

The hon. member for York South, in some peculiar argument in contradiction of the Minister of Justice, said that the argument of the Minister of Justice was wrong because we all feel strongly about this event. Of course, we all feel strongly. But feeling is not enough. Feeling is not the test. The test is what do you do. There are those who feel strongly who are not now faced with the responsibility of action. What we must decide upon is not the feelings of the members of the House but on the action of the government. We must ask ourselves what has that action been? It is not that vague strawman that has been set up by the leader of the New Democratic Party when he spoke about deportation. It is not those lengthy descriptions of possible dangers developed by the hon. member for Greenwood and the hon. member for York South. It is not the kind of scarecrow presented to us by the hon. member for Calgary North, the master of wild accusations, when he speaks about dictatorships and a police state. Those, I suggest, are creatures of his fervid mind.

What we are talking about is this act, and I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Greenwood was less than forthright and open when he alluded to the possible provisions of the act, because he did not go on to explain that in section 3(2), it is precisely under regulations that the act is carried forward. What we should be concerned with are the exact limitations which are imposed on the civil liberties of Canadians, not vaguely and hypothetically through the act, but specifically through the regulations. That is what the government has done. It has brought in regulations and has not utilized the full power which the act provides.

• (9:40 p.m.)

There is one thing which has concerned me more than anything else throughout this debate. This is the continuing accusations of the "sweeping" nature of the action of the government when in fact it is not sweeping but limited. There have been accusations that there is abrogation of parliamentary authority when in fact we are at this moment involved in bringing this question before the House of Commons so that it can pronounce in an authoritative way on the action the government has taken. The hon. member for Calgary North says, "Oh, they passed this law deep in the night at four o'clock and it doesn't matter what we say." I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that if the House of Commons voted against the motion today, those regulations would not stay in effect. We are appealing now to the House for its decision.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Roberts: The government is not escaping its responsibility; it is coming to the podium of the people and their representatives to hear their declaration on the appropriateness or not of its action. I do not think we can say, as some hon. members have suggested, that it is fear that keeps members from pronouncing honestly on this question, or that there is one member in this House, given the gravity of this question, who would squelch his conscience in order to support a government in an action of which he fundamentally disapproves.

This measure is not sweeping. Its limited regulations refer only to organizations which are threatening to overthrow or to reform the government by violence. It is not a permanent measure, it is a temporary one. This measure does not give continual authority to the government. It calls that authority back into question within six months. It is not a blank cheque; it is a cheque that can be cancelled within six months. There is not a suspension of legal processes in these regulations but simply a delay in their operation, a maximum delay of 90 days before a trial must be set. That is the most extensive interference with what has been the traditional liberty of Canadians, not a suspension of the judicial processes but simply a delay in applying them.

How should we judge this limited specific set of regulations which the government has provided? Not, I suggest, with wild alarms and excursions in the night. Instead, we should ask ourselves: do the conditions warrant this kind of limited response? Is there a "clear and present danger" to the security of our society? I suggest that while members may have different views on this, the responsibility must be weighed by the government carefully and it must be taken not simply in conjunction with the isolated set of events that have taken place in the past two weeks. We are not simply speaking of the possibility of two brave men going to their death. We are speaking about events that have taken place this last week in the context of events over the past decade, in the context of a society which is larger than that of Canada, of an international society of which we are members.

I suggest that in the past decade we have had sufficient experience in South America, and in other countries, and sufficient knowledge of revolutionary techniques and ideology to see that this is not simply an isolated event but one step in the continuing process to an increasingly violent attempt to overthrow established government. It is a step on a road to considerable insurrection. We are not speaking simply of one series of events. We are talking about a slippery slope. We are asked to approve action which will determine that the government will not descend that slope and start running away from its responsibilities for action, a running away from which there would be no turning back.

The fundamental question that faces us is whether our citizens can rely on the protection of law or whether they must submit and come to terms with the practitioners of violence and terror. I suggest to you that a terrorized society cannot be a free society, and I doubt whether anyone who had any knowledge of Quebec could have doubted in the past week that it is a society in danger of being terrorized. If the government loses its own confidence in its capacity to maintain the principles of law and order, how can the citizen find that government credible? What we face is the possible replacement of the law of authority by anarchy and the law of the jungle.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I cannot speak on behalf of Quebecers. The hon. member for York-South (Mr. Lewis) has dared do so. He made predictions as to the future of Quebec and acted as spokesman for that province.

I cannot speak on behalf of Quebecers, but I can speak to the French Canadians of Quebec and of Canada with the hope of getting through to them. I want to tell them that some English-speaking Canadians do recognize the situation which their province is facing. I want to tell them that the issue is not one of choosing between imperialism and independence, between isolation and membership in the Confederation, between francophones and anglophones, but of a choice between democratic and liberal institutions mellowed over centuries of tradition. The choice open to Quebecers is one between civilization and barbarism.

Mr. Speaker, I am a young man and if I were a Quebecer, I could perhaps be a separatist. However, I could never be a separatist in an independent Quebec animated by a spirit like the one which we have come to know these last couple of weeks.

The heart of the matter lies not in whether or not Quebec must stay within the Confederation, because if the terrorists come out on top, whether Quebec is in the Confederation or not, Quebec society will fall a victim of terrorism.

The hon. member for York-South has mentioned an "over-reaction" on the government's part. He fears that the population of Quebec will direct its sympathy towards FLQ members.

However, I can see the possibility of a crystalizing of opinion in the province of Quebec.

I hope this will be a true acknowledgement of the facts, for revolution is not a game played by amateurs or an abstraction concocted by intellectuals; it is the thirst for blood rampant in the minds of evil-haunted murderers.

The FLQ terrorists do not fight for the independance of Quebec; they seek violence not order, fear not freedom, distress not peace.

[English]

I would also like to say something to my fellow Canadians who are English speaking. That is to emphasize what I have already said in French, that this is not a question of one part of our country being against another, of one faction being against another faction. It is a question of a group of extreme, violent, determined, warped madmen, a tiny group who are seeking to impose through the means of terror and violence their undemocratic will upon a society which has democratically shown that it rejects their pattern for the future of Quebec. The men who have violently conducted their tasks within the past two weeks are no more typical of the Quebec society of today than the Doukhobors with their violence are typical of western Canada.

The greatest error that we could make, a tragic error, would be to let the events of the past seduce us into believing that there is divergence among the views of the English or French speaking Canadians on how those criminals should be treated. I am confident that the people of Quebec will react with hostility and with anger to the desperate actions with which we have been faced.

Liberty must grow out of order. It cannot grow from anarchy and it cannot exist in a society where the government has renounced its responsibility for the preservation of the authority of the law.

We have heard from some members of the opposition today counsel for delay, for drift, for reflection, for compromise, for irresolution, for continued delay in legislation. I say we are face to face with those who believe that power grows out of the barrels of guns, who will fight for power with guns and who will maintain a violent society with bloodshed and guns. It is time for a determination to maintain the principles of civilized conduct and law and order so that we do not relinquish ourselves to that black night of despair of a society which has succumbed to the strength of brute, violent and unprincipled power.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I would think that no one on either side of this House could feel the debate we are having here today is not one of great import for the nation. Regardless of what views have been stated here in this debate today, it would be a very foolish person indeed who did not feel we were in effect dealing with the very vitals of the nation itself.

I cannot help but think as well, as I stand here as a member of this House, that there is a very unusual situation in this country tonight in that I am one of the 264 people left in the Dominion of Canada who still have the right to say what they feel and believe. Tragically, none of my fellow citizens has that kind of freedom in this land tonight.

Mr. Olson: Nonsense; read the regulations.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I am going to deal with the regulations very shortly, but I think it must be a person either with lack of eyesight or ability to read who has looked at these regulations even quickly and not realized the kind of sweeping power that has been given to less than 30 men in terms of the freedoms, rights and privileges exercised in a free society. And while some may not be thinking it tonight, I believe that many of our fellow citizens will look back on this day, this black Friday in Canadian history and say, "This is the end of what has been termed a just society." The just society has come to mean, and will come to mean, the suspension of freedoms and privileges for the citizens of this country.

We have been concerned over the last week or two weeks with the kidnapping of two eminent men in our society, one a citizen of this country, the other a diplomat. We have been concerned about the fate of these two men, the possible securing of their freedom, and the questionable ransom involved. Now, we are not just concerned with the ransom of two men, we are concerned about the possible ransom of 21 million people in this country. I, for one, engage in this debate not with any great sense of wellbeing as to the outcome of this action by the government of the country.

What has been done? There has been some suggestion here today that we have spent too much time looking at the War Measures Act because, as speaker after speaker on the government side has said, from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on down, "We have been asked to take this action and proclaim the War Measures Act. We have of necessity proclaimed it as an act in effect, but we have confined ourselves to these regulations." And while I think it would be quite possible, as it has indeed been possible for many members of the House, to make the case that at two o'clock, three o'clock or four o'clock tomorrow morning, or any morning, the government might want to expand and broaden these powers, I am quite prepared for the purpose of this debate to confine myself to what the regulations have to say. I think that any person concerned with the basic functioning of a free society, giving only a modest amount of thought to these regulations, would be disturbed to the greatest possible degree.

I invite members of the House to look at the regulations with me and to examine, first of all, the interpretation of particularly important words used in the regulations. Perhaps I should even raise a question at this stage upon which the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) could advise us, although I am not sure that a legal opinion given by him in this House would be binding in any future legal action. The first definition of which I speak, concerning a peace officer, reads;

> —a peace officer as defined in the Criminal Code and includes a member of the Canadian Armed Forces;

We are not told by this definition whether that means active or reserve, duty or off-duty. One could well wonder at the kind of implications this might have for men who might suddenly be faced with a situation which would lead them to take the law into their own hands. Certainly, there is no definition along those lines in this particular interpretation.

But that is not the most serious of the interpretative aspects of these regulations because in the very next paragraph, in the definition of statements, we find this:

> "statements" includes words spoken or written or recorded electronically or electromagnetically or otherwise, and gestures, signs or other visible representations;

I ask members of the House what kind of sweeping power does this give to any police officer or any court when the reference is to gestures, signs or other visible representations, which could be part and parcel of man's indictment? We have a Prime Minister who is very well known for the kind of gestures, the kind of signs and other visible representations that he makes from time to time. Some of them he demonstrated for us here in this House today. Are we to be told that if a man makes a certain sign with his hand, with his head, with a shrug, with a wink, or with a nod that this will be regarded as incriminating evidence? There is no reason not to believe that if the situation is treated as desperately as some people are prepared to treat it, this could well be used as an argument for a man's arrest, indictment and conviction.

Those are the kinds of regulations that we are being asked to approve, quite aside from other major provisions in the War Measures Act itself. We are being asked to believe that membership in a particular organization is to be considered a crime. Earlier, when the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) spoke, he indicated that to him this was one of the most objectionable parts because, for the first time in the history of this nation, it expresses a willingness to believe people guilty of a crime because of the ideas they hold, or the thoughts they might profess. This strikes at the very heart of the freedom of speech and expression in this country, or in any other country that seeks to be free.

We are told that if a person advocates the use of force or the commission of crime as a means of accomplishing governmental change, this is also to be regarded as being a criminal act. I do not have to remind members of this House, because we are continually altering and changing the Criminal Code, that from time to time the Criminal Code itself becomes obsolete and incapable of enforcement.

May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: It being ten o'clock, pursuant to the order made earlier this day, this House stands adjourned until eleven o'clock tomorrow morning.

At ten o'clock the House adjourned pursuant to special order.

APPENDIX

[Translation]

GOVERNMENT OF QUÉBEC
THE PRIME MINISTER

Quebec City, October 16, 1970.

Mr. Prime Minister,

During the last few days the people of Quebec have been greatly shocked by the kidnapping of Mr. James R. Cross, representative of the British Government in Montreal, and the Hon. Pierre Laporte, Minister of Labour and Manpower and Minister of Immigration of Quebec, as well as by the threats to the security of the state and individuals expressed in communiqués issued by the Front de Libération du Québec or on its behalf, and finally by all the circumstances surrounding these events.

After consultation with authorities directly responsible for the administration of justice in Quebec, the Quebec Government is convinced that the law, as it stands now, is inadequate to meet this situation satisfactorily.

Under the circumstances, on behalf of the Government of Quebec, I request that emergency powers be provided as soon as possible so that more effective steps may be taken. I request particularly that such powers encompass the authority to apprehend and keep in custory individuals who, the Attorney General of Quebec has valid reasons to believe, are determined to overthrow the government through violence and illegal means. According to the information we have and which is available to you, we are facing a concerted effort to intimidate and overthrow the government and the democratic institutions of this province through planned and systematic illegal action, including insurrection. It is obvious that those participating in this concerted effort completely reject the principle of freedom under the rule of law.

The Quebec Government is convinced that such powers are necessary to meet the present emergency. Not only are two completely innocent men threatened with death, but we are also faced with an attempt, by a minority to destroy social order through criminal action; it is for those reasons that our government is making the present request.

The government is confident that, through such powers, it will be able to put an immediate stop to intimidation and terror and to ensure peace and security for all citizens.

Please accept, Mr. Prime Minister, my very best regards.

Robert Bourassa

The Right Honourable Pierre Elliott Trudeau,
Prime Minister of Canada,
House of Commons,
Ottawa

[Translation]

CITY OF MONTRÉAL
CANADA

Office of the Chairman of the Excutive Committee
15 October 1970

City Hall
The Right Honourable Pierre Elliott Trudeau, P.C., Q.C., Prime Minister of Canada,
Parliament Buildings,
Ottawa, Canada

Mr. Prime Minister,

The chief of the Montreal Police Service has informed us that the means available to him are proving inadequate and that the assistance of higher levels of government has become essential for the protection of society against the seditious plot and the apprehended insurrection in which the recent kidnappings were the first step.

We are forwarding as a matter of the utmost urgency the report describing the scope of the threat and the urgent need to reinforce the machinery to cope with it.

We ask for every measure of assistance the federal government may deem useful and desirable in order to carry out the task of protecting society and the life of citizens in this difficult period.

Lucien Saulnier
Chairman of the Executive Committee

Jean Drapeau
Mayor of Montreal

---

Police Department
Office of the Director

City of Montreal
City Hall Annex
October 15, 1970

His Lordship Mayor Jean Drapeau
Mr. Lucien Saulnier
Chairman of the Executive Committee

Gentlemen:

An extremely dangerous subversive organization has gradually developed in Quebec over the last several years with a view to preparing the overthrow of the legitimate government by seditious means and eventually armed insurrection.

The recent kidnappings of a foreign diplomat and of a minister of the Crown of the province of Quebec by this organization are the first stage of its seditious plan and of activities leading directly to insurrection and the overthrow of the State.

Under the circumstances, the investigation which must be carried out by police authorities must necessarily include all the activities of the various cells of this seditious organization and should not be restricted, if it is not to be doomed to failure to a mere search for the individuals who have perpetrated the heinous kidnapping of the two (2) persons who are still being held.

The threat to our society from this seditious conspiracy that has swung into action in the last eleven (11) days, the investigation problems created by the internal structure of this organization divided into many small autonomous cells and the incredible amount of checking and searching imposed upon us have taxed and are taxing to the utmost the resources available to our Police Department.

The extreme urgency of obtaining concrete results in uncovering all the ramifications of this organization and its seditious activities, the volume and complexity of evidence to be gathered and filed, finally the enormous task that we must carry out without resorting to unhealthy and undesirable repression, make it essential for higher levels of governments to come to our assistance if we are to succeed.

The slow pace of procedures and the restrictions resulting from the legal machinery and means at our disposal do not allow us to meet the situation.

Consequently, I recommend to the Executive Committee of the City to ask the higher levels of government to give us the means which in their estimation are suitable and useful to enable us to gather and submit the evidence necessary to protect society against the seditious and insurrectionary activities triggered by the kidnappings.

Very truly yours,
M. St-Pierre,
Director.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Saturday, October 17, 1970

The House met at 11 a.m.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

NATIONAL SECURITY

ABDUCTIONS—INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO REPLACE REGULATIONS UNDER WAR MEASURES ACT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether there is any information he can give the House about Mr. Cross and the Hon. Pierre Laporte?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I regret, Mr. Speaker, there is no information I can give at this time.

Mr. Stanfield: With regard to the legislation to be introduced in substitution for the invocation of the War Measures Act and the regulations proclaimed by the Governor General in Council under that Act, is the Prime Minister prepared to give an assurance that legislation will be introduced at an early date? In particular, is he prepared to give a specific assurance that such legislation will be introduced next week?

Mr. Trudeau: I think I covered this point in my speech to the House yesterday as well as I could. I remind the Leader of the Opposition that I suggested at that time we would give serious consideration to introducing such legislation but that we need a period of time during which to see how the regulations might be improved before being changed into statutory form. I asked the leaders of the opposition parties, indeed, all members of the House, to put forward any suggestions as to how these regulations might be improved before ultimately being transferred into a statute.

Mr. Stanfield: I assure the Prime Minister that we would be happy to make suggestions of the kind he has in mind, but does he not recognize that the statement he has made does not contain any assurance of a concrete nature and that according to other statements he has made the present situation might conceivably continue for the duration of the proclamation? Can the Prime Minister not give the House some specific assurance that legislation will be introduced within a given time which will do the job necessary to be done but be sufficiently narrow in import so as not to interfere with the normal course of civil liberties any more than is required?

Mr. Trudeau: The answer to all of that is yes, except for this. If the hon. gentleman wants to know exactly how much time it would take, then I cannot give him an assurance. Obviously I could not undertake to revoke the War Measures Act next week if next week we have not passed this legislation. I do not yet know from the Leader of the Opposition how long he will take to co-operate with us in producing such a measure.

FLQ ACTIVITIES—DURATION OF EMERGENCY POWERS

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): In view of the fact that the proclamation bringing the War Measures Act into effect and the subsequent Orders in Council are related to the FLQ and the activities of the FLQ, can the Prime Minister indicate whether it is the intention of the government to keep these emergency powers until the government is satisfied that the FLQ and associated and related bodies have been wiped out?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Not necessarily this particular legislation, Mr. Speaker. I repeat that if we can replace the regulations by some statute that would have the same effect we would be very happy to give up this theoretical exercise in which we are engaged which includes powers much broader than we need under the War Measures Act. When this will happen, of course, remains to be seen. We will have to continue to exercise powers in one way or another under the War Measures Act or under a special statute while there is a danger of insurrection.

VANCOUVER—COMMUNICATION RESPECTING APPREHENDED INSURRECTION

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Has the Prime Minister received a communication from the mayor or other authorities in the city of Vancouver indicating that there is an apprehended insurrection there requiring the application of the War Measures Act to that city?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not. Has the hon. member?

NEGOTIATIONS FOR RELEASE OF KIDNAP VICTIMS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he could inform the House, since Mr. Lemieux has again been detained and the two radio stations concerned consider that it would be illegal to transmit any messages, if either of the two governments are carrying on any negotiations for the release of the two kidnap victims?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I cannot answer that, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Prime Minister indicate to the House whether his inability to answer my question results from not knowing or whether—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

DEATH OF MEMBER OF ARMED FORCES ON GUARD DUTY IN OTTAWA

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Defence may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Will there be an investigation into the unfortunate death yesterday of a member of the armed forces while he was on guard duty in Ottawa, and can the Prime Minister say whether the government will make sure that any survivor's benefits that are available will be put into effect?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am informed that the Minister of National Defence has asked that a board of inquiry be set up to look into this matter.

* * *

GRAIN

WHEAT—NUMBER OF ACRES TO BE SEEDED IN 1971—LIFT PROGRAM

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture having to do with the estimate he has been making recently as to the number of acres of wheat which should be seeded in 1971. Would he say what that estimate is and also whether, having regard to that estimate, he has concluded that the reasons for setting up the Lift program have not been justified by events and demands for wheat from all over the world?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): No, Mr. Speaker, I would not agree with that conclusion. Canada will have at the end of this crop year sufficient quantities, notwithstanding the 50 per cent reduction under the Lift program, to meet all anticipated demands for Canadian wheat. What I and my colleague the Minister of Manpower and Immigration responsible for the Wheat Board have said is that it would appear at this time that up to about 20 million acres of wheat in 1971 would be appropriate.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then may I ask the minister whether the estimate given by a prominent member of the grain trade and economist that on the basis of world demands almost 30 million acres will be required is not correct?

[Mr. MacDonald (Egmont).]

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, if world demand appears to increase sufficiently between now and planting time in 1971, of course that will be taken into account in our information to farmers.

* * *

MANPOWER

NEWS RELEASE INDICATING SUMMER EMPLOYMENT FOR CANADIAN STUDENTS IN GERMANY IN 1971

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration whether he has now looked into the matter I brought to his attention the other day about opportunities for summer employment for our students in West Germany and, if so, with what result?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the department has been looking into the source of the proposal and of the news release. It has no connection whatever with the department and so far it has not been related to the generally well known student organizations. Of course, the department at the same time is interested in the pursuit of exchange programs of a different scale and a different sort. Therefore I do not have complete information yet for the hon. member.

* * *

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

NORTHEASTERN NEW BRUNSWICK—RENEGOTIATION OF FRED AGREEMENT

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Can he say whether the government has under reconsideration the renegotiation of the FRED agreement in northeastern New Brunswick?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Bell: May I ask the minister if he can say whether there will be favourable word on this in the near future, say by election day, Monday, October 26?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question as asked has too much of an election flavour and as such is not acceptable.

---

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

NATIONAL SECURITY

APPREHENDED INSURRECTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43 TO APPROVE ACTION OF GOVERNMENT IN INVOKING WAR MEASURES ACT

The House resumed, from Friday, October 16, consideration of the motion of Mr. Trudeau:

That the House approves the action of the government in invoking the powers of the War Measures Act to meet the state of apprehended insurrection in the Province of Quebec as communicated to the Prime Minister by the Government of Quebec and the civic authorities of Montreal and further approves the orders and regulations tabled today by the Prime Minister on the clear understanding that the proclamation invoking the powers as contained in the regulations will be revoked on or before April 30, 1971, unless a resolution authorizing their extension beyond the date specified has been approved by the House.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I resume my remarks this morning even more disappointed, if that is possible, than I was last night at the inability of the government, as reflected through the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the members of the cabinet, to give the House sufficient indication why it should support the extreme and, in my view at least, unwarranted measures which have been taken by the government.

It is very difficult for an individual member of the House to believe that he is actually participating in this kind of debate and that at one stroke both the constitution and the civil rights of the people of this country have been suspended.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): It is also difficult to believe that a man who used as the thread of his campaign for election a little more than two years ago the unification of the country should now threaten to divide it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Those who do not see this are victims of their own blindness. Perhaps they do not recall the remarks of the Prime Minister earlier this week to a press conference in response to a number of questions relating to the dreadful kidnappings in Montreal. He replied:

> Yes, well there are a lot of bleeding hearts around who just don't like to see people with helmets and guns. All I can say is, go on and bleed, but it is more important to keep law and order in the society than to be worried about weak-kneed people who don't like the looks of—

Then the reporter interrupted:

> At any cost? How far would you go with that? How far would you extend that?

The Prime Minister answered:

> Well, just watch me.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I hope it will be recorded that a number of government members applauded that quotation.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Are these the words of a man who seeks both to resolve the differences of opinion and points of view in this country and to accept the rule of law? They are the words of a man who in fact has suspended the rule of law.

Invoking of War Measures Act

• (11:20 a.m.)

I am troubled by the many grave aspects of this problem, not the least of which is the indication, much too obvious across the country at this moment, of a fanning of the flame of ancient misunderstanding, prejudice and bigotry that would pit English-speaking and French-speaking people against each other in this country.

An hon. Member: Shame on you.

An hon. Member: You can do better than that.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): These may be difficult words both to hear and say but they must be said if we are to face the problems confronting this country in a manner that will allow for the continuity of all that is best and good in Canadian life and its social fabric, because the traditions, attitudes and hopes of Canadians have been dealt a serious body blow by the actions of this government this week. Those who argued so strenuously yesterday, and who I assume will do so again today, that what has been done is really a very limited kind of action will soon become aware that the limits to this action are not at all narrow and involve not just a few or a few hundred but many thousands and, potentially, perhaps even millions of our fellow Canadians.

I shall not read at any length what is being reported by the press of this country, but we are told that political literature is being confiscated. I venture to guess it is not just literature advocating the overthrow of government—municipal, provincial or federal—but political literature of many different aspects and produced by many different parties.

An hon. Member: That is a lie.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): If it is a lie then I trust this will be fully established in the days to come in light of what seems to be becoming painfully apparent now. Not only in the area of political literature, however, is there seeming indecision concerning what constitutes a grave threat to the safety of the state and its citizens. We also see the abuse, arrest and detention of innocent individuals and in a free society the fear—

Mr. Cafik: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Would it be one worth replying to?

Mr. Cafik: You can judge that. You suggested that innocent people have been arrested because of these measures. Would you care to name one who is innocent?

Mr. Baldwin: The police will not release the names.

Mr. Nowlan: We cannot even get names in this police state.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): The question merely indicates the ignorance of the author.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I thought there was still a little opportunity left to be heard in this place because, as I said last night, this is the only place in this country where one can now express any kind of political opinion.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is quite right that he should be given the hearing he is entitled to. I would suggest he be allowed to continue.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): It is bad enough that fear and anxiety are now being felt by many people in our society because of this action, but what hits most directly at the vitals of a free society is the obvious reluctance of much of the mass media, particularly in the province of Quebec, to express the kind of views and opinions that enhance and encourage free discussion and free assembly in a society.

An hon. Member: Where did you hear that?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I ask for order and for the co-operation of hon. members. I do not think that the kind of interruptions we are hearing at this time help the debate very much.

Mr. Aiken: It seems that some members are pretty touchy.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I find that there appear to be two classes of people in the discussion of this problem, those who make their home regularly in the province of Quebec and everyone else. If it will console those who feel that I have absolutely no understanding of the problem, let me say that I spent five weeks in the past year living in the province of Quebec. I do not say that that makes me an expert, but perhaps it does make me a little more understanding of and sympathetic to the problems of all Canadians, and it is with this in mind that I hope I am speaking today.

I do not expect all hon. members to agree with me. Quite obviously I may be in the minority as the majority party seems to support the government action. But what I do expect is that if Parliament is still free to function, I will be given a hearing. That is all I ask at this point; that is all any member can hope for in the forum of Parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): But I am deeply troubled by the fact that much of the mass media in the country generally and certainly within the province of Quebec is extremely reluctant at this very moment to offer the kind of free information that they are able to provide in relation to the free exchange of opinions and the exercise of freedom and liberty within our society. There have been reports that not just in the private sector of broadcasting but even in the public sector unwarranted influence may have extended to the higher levels of administration in order to curb the kind of speculation and comment that the government feels would encourage the free expression of opinion that it no longer finds acceptable in that province.

It seems also, by implication, that Parliament itself is to be considerably limited in considering these vital questions. We were told at the outset that the reason the War Measures Act was invoked was that there really was not the necessary machinery within Parliament to deal effectively with this question, that too many other problems would arise, and therefore Parliament was an outmoded and ineffective instrument to deal with this problem.

An hon. Member: Nonsense!

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): That is what was said yesterday and I invite the hon. member to look up the record of yesterday's proceedings. Arguments were put forward by both the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) to the effect that it was not possible for the Parliament of this country to make decisions involving the temporary suspension of the Bill of Rights of this country.

Quite frankly I find it passing strange that a number of provincial premiers seemed to respond favourably so quickly to the action that the government has taken. I am not sure what methods were used to elicit this response. But I do think it passing strange that, although we have watched meetings to make changes in our constitution between the provincial governments and the federal government for some two years now, at which the discussion has been long and difficult, with seemingly little progress made to date, suddenly overnight a number of these premiers are willing to let the whole of the constitution be suspended for an indefinite period of time. I cannot accept it and as a Member of Parliament I will not accept it. We must be sure that the people realize the grave and serious measures that have been enacted by the government.

• (11:30 a.m.)

I want to try now, Mr. Speaker, to discover the reasons for the action taken by the government. Why is it being done? I have noticed that even in the editorial opinion this morning of those who, by and large, support the government's position there are reservations about what has happened to force the government into this extreme position. The question is being raised, and I think will be raised increasingly over the next few days, is it panic? Has the government in fact been panicked into taking this serious action?

What happened on Thursday to force the government, in the wee small hours of Friday morning, to bring forth a document suspending the constitution and the civil liberties and human rights of the people of this country for the stated purpose of dealing with apprehended insurrection? Where is this insurrection, Mr. Speaker? When did it occur? What information was available to the government on Thursday and early Friday morning of this week that it did not have in the earlier part of this week, last week, last month or last year?

Indeed, the Prime Minister has told us that he well understands the problem in Quebec. He has told us ever since he became leader of his party that he knew how to handle this problem, that if the country would entrust leadership to him he would deal with it effectively, that there would be no more of the difficulties, uncertainties and fears that had been growing in number in the province of Quebec in the middle and late 1960's, that he was the man to deal with the problem rationally, coolly and without provocation. We can now see the result of his dealing with the matter.

Of course, the reason advanced by the government for what has happened is that it has special information which, if it were revealed, would endanger the very kind of detection and apprehension that needs to be undertaken if we are to overcome this serious and grave risk to society and its governments. In how many other countries throughout the centuries have certain individuals, having asked for in effect dictatorial powers, said to the people, "Give us these powers because only we know best, only we know how to deal with the difficult situation that exists in this country today, so trust us and we will not desert you"? Mr. Speaker, such words have always been, and still are where they are echoed, an invitation to accept a dictatorship.

I hope the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand), who has left his place in the chamber, will not go too far. I would like to raise a question with regard to his speech in a moment. As I was saying, such words are an invitation to accept the kind of authoritarian or totalitarian state that I am sure no right-thinking person in this country would ever choose.

Surely the very reason that we have Parliament and this House is that people can be fully informed, so that the people can in fact exercise their right to know.

We have lost this week, Mr. Speaker, not only all individual and property rights that pertain to living in this country but we have also lost the most basic right of all, the right to know. That is what the government has deprived this House of both yesterday and today. Is there panic? Has the government responded in some degree to panic?

There is another possibility, one so terrible that I am extremely reluctant to raise it this morning, but I certainly could not be true to myself, to my own opinions and to my own ideas, which I feel I have a right to express in this House, were I not to express it in this debate. Does the action which has now been taken by the government represent, in effect, the seizure of an opportunity to suppress and repress those who have disagreed with them and whom they cannot accept?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I hear some ohs and ahs as if this were a terrible thing to say, and that is why I want to quote what the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion said in the debate last night. I am glad he is still here because he can correct me if I misquote him.

An hon. Member: Quote Hansard, not a newspaper.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I certainly have not had a chance to read Hansard this morning. It was a little late in reaching us. The minister is here and he can certainly say if it is a misquotation. He is reported as having said in the debate yesterday:

> If we had not acted, the separation of Quebec would have been a fact, a month or a year from today.

I ask the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion—I will allow him a moment if he wishes to return to his seat—if in fact—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is not the question period. The hon. member should make his speech.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I will ask him rhetorically, Mr. Speaker, and perhaps he can communicate with that well known nod of his head. Is there some confusion, perhaps not confusion, but is there some feeling—

An hon. Member: In your mind?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): —in the mind of the government, particularly in the minds of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, the Prime Minister and perhaps others in the government, that the FLQ to some degree or other means separatism? Is that what the Prime Minister is saying, that separatists are the FLQ, that somehow or other you really cannot distinguish, that they are one and the same thing?

Has the minister in fact spoken for the government in saying that what we are really out to deal with here by these measures is not just acts of terrorism by one relatively small group of people, who are seeking through violent and anarchic means to destroy society, but a much larger group of people, 25 per cent if we can go by the last provincial election results, who believe there is a realistic option in considering some form of independence for the province of Quebec? Is that what the minister was saying to us yesterday afternoon? If it is, Mr. Speaker, then all of us, English-speaking and French-speaking alike, had better examine our consciences extremely quickly because we have allowed to be launched in this country this week the most dangerous kind of political action ever known in the history of the country and one that I refuse to accept.

Let me be perfectly clear. I am not a separatist either for the province of Prince Edward Island or for la belle province de Quebec. I do not support those who believe that the people of Quebec, French-speaking, English-speaking, whatever language they speak, would find a better destiny apart from Canada than within it. I support a viable and vital place for the people of Quebec within the Canadian confederation. But God help me if I believe that the only way I can convince those who disagree rationally, honestly and fairly with me is by the taking up of arms, that men who do not hold this opinion can only be subjugated by force of arms and by repression. If that be so, Mr. Speaker, this country is on the threshold of doom and disaster. This is of such paramount importance that if the Prime Minister or the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion would like at this moment to take the floor I will yield it so that they may make perfectly clear that what is being attempted here is not in any way directed toward suppressing the free expression of the opinions of those who believe there is another political possibility for the province of Quebec that can be achieved through a rational and democratic process.

• (11:40 a.m.)

The Prime Minister, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, and no other minister, has made this fact clear to the people of this country. If the Prime Minister wishes to avoid, as I most sincerely hope he does, the very grave possibility of misunderstanding on this matter, he will not hesitate for one moment to let all the people of the country know that at the very least what is being attempted here is that the government is dealing with those who will not respect law and order and the democratic process of choice and change. If, in fact, the Prime Minister is directing his ammunition and the repeal of law in this country at a wider audience, at those who disagree with the federal option, what hope can any of us have for the workings of a rational, democratic process in this country? I remind him, as I would remind the Premier of Quebec if he were here, that those members from that province who were elected to this House and to the Legislature of Quebec who support their governments do not represent even half the people of that province. If one looks at the matter merely from the standpoint of those who speak French in that province, one sees that the proportion who did not vote for these governments is even greater.

I want to refer to what surely is another basic question, the extent to which this action will be effective. Presumably the basic reason behind the measures the government has taken is the belief that only through the use of extensive powers of this kind can the authorities detect with effectiveness the kind of terrorism that they believe is at present abroad within the province of Quebec. Yet I remain very seriously troubled.

I have found from my reading and from my listening to the news media in the past few days that those who are being detained are from all ranks of society, that some of those who are suspected of having connections with the FLQ are even in the police. How is it possible, just through the use of increased and wide-ranging powers, to assure us of the effectiveness of the detection that we are told is so badly needed? What are the long-term effects of this kind of detention going to be in our society? Surely we realize that when we throw great numbers of people into prison, sometimes on short notice and with very little information, a number of them are bound to be peaceful and innocent citizens who may have expressed a point of view at some time or other which is in disagreement with that of others. They may not be inclined toward violence. What will detention for 30, 60 or 90 days in jail do to innocent people who have held opinions differing from those of others? May I remind hon. members that what we have learned over the past two years of the general jail situation in Quebec would not lead anyone to believe that the kind of bitterness that may result from holding people under those conditions will not lead to more and greater violence. Will that solve the basic problems confronting us in this situation?

We have been told time and again during the past two and a half years that the government and the Prime Minister knew how to deal with the situation. The Prime Minister knew how to solve these big, basic problems. Have they been solved? Have they been alleviated? Speaking yesterday, the Prime Minister reminded us that the action that had been taken could be considered by some as a trap, that by the state's use of strict and authoritarian—one might say totalitarian—measures, there is a danger of giving both encouragement and credibility to the forces of darkness the government is trying to stamp out. Earlier this week the Prime Minister said that what this group really wanted was lots of publicity. Has any organization ever received more publicity than this organization has received as a result of the actions the government took?

There is another troublesome thought that comes to my mind increasingly. By this action of dealing with terror by imposing a kind of state terror we have descended to the level at which these people operate. Mr. Speaker, this House must have, if it is to maintain its freedom and its responsibility, more information. A free society can only live by free communication. If the government, in addition to bringing in the War Measures Act, has actually said to the people of this country that they no longer have a right to information, then our situation is even more grave than we are willing to admit.

The lives of two men, Mr. Speaker, are central to this tragedy. No one in this House this morning knows whether or not they are alive. All of us cannot help but be deeply troubled by the dreadful circumstances into which these men, their friends and their families have been cast. Yet I cannot help feeling that we have compounded the tragedy by endangering the safety and security of all our people. I remind all hon. members, Mr. Speaker, that democracy can not be inherited; it can only be preserved. There has been a tendency over the years in Canada to be smug about the kind of tolerance and freedom we have exhibited. That we may have endangered our freedom by one stroke of government action this week is taken altogether too lightly.

Does one not see a paradox when one considers man and his social system? In the world of today, or of any day, one will find men of strong opinions and individual differences. Most often they live in a society which itself is of a fragile quality. Greater or lesser risk always underlies the functionings of such a social system. On the other hand, you will find weak and docile individuals within authoritarian and totalitarian systems. If we are opting in this House to bring in that kind of system, then we have seriously endangered not only the liberty of individuals in our country but their future opportunity to be the strongminded, independent individuals that surely God has given each one of us the right to be.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, last night, when I felt compelled to enter this debate, I gave much thought during the evening as to the philosophy underlying the type of speech that I would make today. I do not like talking from a prepared text. I have listened to the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald). He is a man with whom I have sat in this House for many years. I respect him and I know that everything he said today was said with that degree of sincerity which is one of his characteristics. Nevertheless, when he says that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) of the country—I believe I have his exact words—is fanning the fires of bigotry or increasing the possibility of bigotry across this country, it indicates that if there is any panic that panic lies in the remarks of the hon. member for Egmont.

• (11:50 a.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: Despite the five weeks the hon. member spent in the province of Quebec he does not understand the difference between the FLQ, the terrorists and bandits who make up that organization, and the legitimate political party known as the Parti Quebecois of Quebec. I would sacrifice my life to see the existence of that party preserved because it is a legitimate, political party. It wants to bring an end to this country through democratic means, but that is the privilege of that party. That is what the House of Commons and democracy are all about. I endorse the right of the Parti Quebecois to exist, but when we try to equate the FLQ with the Parti Quebecois we are equating bandits, terrorists and part of an international movement with a legitimate political party in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Minister of Labour deliberately wants to misquote me. I was not confusing the difference between those who support separatism and the FLQ in Quebec. I was asking whether the confusion did not lie in the minds of the government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I also have a question of privilege. I have been in this House of Commons since 1962. I am a member of the government and of the cabinet. What is even more important to me at this moment is that I am a Canadian from the province of Quebec. I was born in that province 49 years ago. My family still lives in Montreal. We will remain in Quebec as long as it is part of confederation, which will be long after all of us are dead. No separatist group that espouses violence, such as the FLQ, will force me or anyone in my family out of our homes. To suggest that the Prime Minister does not understand the difference is ironic.

The speech I want to make today is on the failure to make a distinction in the debate yesterday between separatism and the FLQ. I have a few words to say about that.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Why don't you—

Mr. Mackasey: I listened to the hon. member with respect and I ask him to do precisely what he asked us to do, listen in quiet. Possibly he will learn something.

I have often been laughed at, sometimes even by members of my own party, for regarding myself as a House of Commons man. I am not ashamed of that. Some backbenchers were in my office last night. They reminded me of what I told them when they were elected to this House two years ago. No matter what changes we make in our parliamentary system, sooner or later the action comes back to the House of Commons. We must understand this procedure and its existence. It is the heart of the democratic system of this country.

Having understood this all my life, having sat in cabinet and having taken part in the agonizing decision which the government took under the War Measures Act, let me say that there are very good reasons why people who pride themselves on their liberalism made this decision. At the risk of being accused of vanity, I think I am one of those. I support the government, not because of cabinet solidarity but because I am convinced as an individual, a member of this House and a citizen of this country, that what the government did the other night was the right action for the future of this country. I now want to direct my speech to the motion.

This country has been blessed like no other country. Until the last few years we have never known bloodshed. In the eyes of some cynics we were united 100 years ago in a way that was too peaceful. We have never known civil war. Perhaps we have taken democracy too lightly on both sides of this House. We have been blessed like no other country.

For some ironic reason, throughout Canadian history we have had the right Prime Minister at the right time to deal with the particular crises that have faced this nation. We had Laurier when we needed a man to bridge the gap between the two cultures. We had Sir John A. Macdonald who had the vision to weld together the British colonies. We had Mackenzie King for many years, who piloted this country very skilfully through the war, the problems of conscription and other things that could have torn this country apart.

When this party got too smug and too arrogant we were replaced by the right hon. member who sits opposite in 1956 or 1957 until 1963. That reminded this party that there is no room for arrogance or dictatorship veiled or otherwise. This party had grown old in office. The right hon. member for Prince Albert was eventually replaced by another, Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson who gave this country some of the symbols that stand us in good stead today including our flag. Finally, we have the present Prime Minister, the man who in 1964 had the power to stand up in Quebec when very few people were standing up at the height of the separatist movement and say, I am a federalist and prepared to say so.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: Can anyone here think that a man with his record in the field of civil liberties, a man who fought against the infamous padlock law, against a law not designed to put down insurrection but designed to prevent amongst other things freedom of religion and religious expression, a man that fought for the Jehovah's Witnesses along with Frank Scott right through to the Supreme Court of this country, would treat this situation lightly? I refer of course to the Prime Minister of this country. Who else went side by side with the present Minister of Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) and the Secretary of State, whom the opposition laughs at periodically, to stand up for the oppressed workers of Quebec against Duplessis and his infamous bill? Do you think that these people arrived at this decision lightly? With their background they know what they are doing.

Mr. Nowlan: Can I ask the minister a question? I have a question for the minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I heard the hon. member the first time. He does not have the floor. The minister has the floor.

Mr. Mackasey: I also heard the hon. member. Knowing the tenor of his questions, I am not prepared to answer them right now because I have a vein of thought I want to pursue. I might also say I am proud of the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner). Although he now represents an Ottawa riding, he spent most of his formative years in the province of Quebec, in the heart of French Canada.

Do hon. members opposite really think that we take civil liberties and the rights of individuals so lightly that we would bring in this particular Act without agonizing soul-searching based on facts we have which cannot be revealed? What other reason do we have? How many people have even bothered to read between the lines of the letters appended to yesterday's Hansard? How many people have bothered to read the emotional but factual speech made by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion yesterday?

The hon. member for Egmont cannot have it out of both sides of his mouth. If the democracy he is talking about is something that should be preserved, then we have to do everything to preserve it, even temporarily invoking laws such as the War Measures Act to ensure that democracy remains in this country.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): You want to destroy freedom.

Mr. Mackasey: The hon. member asked us to remain quiet when he was speaking. Why does he not practise what he preaches?

• (12 noon)

There is a letter printed in the back of Hansard signed by the Mayor of Montreal and the Chairman of the Executive Committee. It begins:

[Mr. Mackasey.]

The chief of the Montreal Police Service has informed us that the means available to him are proving inadequate and that the assistance of higher levels of government has become essential for the protection of society against the seditious plot and the apprehended insurrection in which the recent kidnappings were the first step.

But it is like using vaccine against the flu. If the steps we have taken prove successful, then certain events do not take place. We are then in the embarassing position, of course, of being accused of over-reacting. People may say there was no plot really; nothing happened; Place Ville Marie was not bombed out of existence or razed to the ground. In a few years we could be accused of having over-reacted because certain things did not take place. But if we waited until they had happened, what would we be accused of? What do you think might be happening in Quebec while we dawdled over the possible passage of special legislation, having made a start on it in yesterday morning's debate without first having used the powers under the War Measures Act.

I am prepared to listen to another man who is well known for his views on the rights of individuals in this country, Mr. Eugene Forsey—I do not think he loses any of his credentials because he is now a member of the other House. When he spoke last night on television—and I suppose his answer surprised a lot of people—he said he thought the government had acted wisely; he could not understand the excitement. When he was asked to analyse the word "forthwith", he said: "Any time within the next ten days." He expressed the opinion that it could be even more tragic for democracy if a hastily designed emergency bill drawn up so as to pass through the House of Commons and the other place in the space of 24 hours had been adopted. Eugene Forsey thinks such a bill is essential. The Prime Minister thinks it is essential. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) thinks this is essential—

Mr. McGrath: Well, where is it then?

As hon. Member: Bring it in.

Mr. Mackasey: There you go. As Eugene Forsey said, such a bill should be well thought out. It should reflect the best advice of members of this House and of the other House. Above all, it should be proceeded with in a deliberate fashion. If we had followed this procedure rather than the procedure we have adopted under the War Measures Act, tell me how many people we would have apprehended among those it was necessary to apprehend? Who knows where they would have been while this debate was going on? They would have been laughing at us from other lands and, again, we would have been accused of bungling and failing to protect the democracy about which everyone is concerned. The way the hon. member for Egmont talks about civil liberty, one would think he had a monopoly of feeling on this subject. We all share those sentiments. This is what made our decision an agonizing one. But certainly, if the Prime Minister goes on television and says he will bring in such a bill, he is the Prime Minister of this country and I am satisfied with what he says.

The logic of the New Democratic Party, Mr. Speaker, is amazing. I do not know why I always come back to that party; it has been suggested I have a love-hate relationship with it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He really loves us.

Mr. Mackasey: Only certain members. I listened to the leader of that party speaking on television last night, hoping that because he speaks from the heart and without prepared notes he might unintentionally have adopted what I believe to be a most falacious argument when he spoke here earlier in the day. He suggested then that the FLQ existed only because there is unemployment in Quebec, only because there are slums in Quebec. This part of his speech is reported on page 200 of Hansard. He makes a valid point that every terrorist movement, every revolutionary movement, must have a base. I agree with that. Then he goes on to ask: "What is the base of the FLQ?" I apologize to the hon. member for Egmont for my emotional attack on him. This is the point which really upset me. This is what the hon. gentleman has to say:

> The base of the FLQ lies in the disadvantaged and unfortunate people in the province of Quebec.

He goes on, then, to talk about unemployment, slums, and regional disparity. Mr. Speaker, by those criteria the FLQ should exist in Newfoundland where there is more unemployment, more disadvantaged people and more regional disparity.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I believe the hon. member for Egmont seeks the floor on a question of privilege.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I do not know who is responsible for the quotation which the minister has just made, but it does not come from any speech of mine.

Mr. Mackasey: I am sorry. I suspect the hon. member was not listening closely. I was referring to the speech of the leader of the New Democratic Party.

This is precisely my point. If the people of Quebec have a right to be sorry and upset about the high rate of unemployment in that province, and I think they have, if they are concerned about slums in Montreal and Saint-Henri, and I think they have a legitimate cause to be concerned, and if certain people in Montreal look at some of our delusions of grandeur in that great area and compare the results with their own environment, this is bound to breed unrest. But there is a legitimate way of expressing this unrest and that is at the ballot box. Any time the people of Quebec feel sufficiently fed up with the free enterprise system they can vote for the New Democratic Party—though the NDP has never been able to achieve power in Quebec since confederation. Nevertheless the people have this right. If they do not want to vote for the Liberal party in Quebec they can vote for one of the other parties, and one of the other happens to be the Parti Quebecois. And if the vote in favour of the Parti Quebecois in the last election represented one out of four, this should provoke us to think about doing something to ease the unrest, and this is the best defence against the legitimate aspirations of the Parti Quebecois.

But let us have no illusion that the base of the FLQ is limited to the underprivileged people of the province of Quebec. The same FLQ would exist in Quebec if there was no poverty, if there were no slums. In fact, it would exist even if the Parti Quebecois was in power, because they are there for one reason only, and that is to overthrow the state, not only in Quebec but as part of an international movement. When I look at the position of some of those in that movement, I wish I had their income; I wish I earned in a year what some of them get in a week. Nevertheless, I can understand the concern of the New Democratic Party about a free enterprise system which tolerates the rate of unemployment which prevails in this country. We all share it.

• (12:10 p.m.)

Mr. Woolliams: Ten per cent.

Mr. Mackasey: It is fine to listen to one of the millionaires who does not understand poverty. What I have been saying is that there is a legitimate way in Quebec of expressing disapproval, just as there is a legitimate way in Newfoundland. If the ingredients of the movement behind the FLQ consists simply of poverty, unemployment, slums, and that type of social disorder, then the FLQ should exist in many other parts of the country, not only in Quebec.

My point is that the NDP have either underestimated or failed to understand at all the real forces that drive the FLQ. My job as Minister of Labour is not the easiest one in the world, but it is a revealing one. I remember going to another part of the country and having to solicit the legitimate assistance of the communist party to put an end to a strike which was being prolonged by Maoist cells in British Columbia, and I can prove that statement. So if any hon. member thinks that the philosophy behind the FLQ is restricted to the province of Quebec, then it is about time people like the hon. member for Egmont get their heads out of the beautiful red sands of Prince Edward Island.

If I return to my notes I will run past my time, so I will not do so. I ask hon. members to take a good look at the letters contained in the appendix to Hansard, to read between the lines and see whether there has been any panic. Perhaps we have been a little slow in doing things, and we were reminded of that yesterday. Perhaps our reluctance to do things as repugnant as what we have had to do is based on the fact that there are more than the average number of members of this cabinet who consider themselves small "l" Liberals when it comes to the question of rights of individuals. I think this would also be true were the opposition in power.

The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion spoke yesterday of fear in Quebec. I am not any braver than he is and I am just as fearful as he is. It was not too many months ago that my office was set on fire by a Molotov cocktail and a bullet was put through the front window of my living room. That occurred during the last provincial election in Quebec. It does not give me any satisfaction or make me feel any braver to stand here in the chamber knowing that my family is in Montreal; but I leave them there because I believe in democracy. I believe in the intelligence, the wisdom and the really deep feeling that French Canadians have for this country.

When the so-called three wise men, the present Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State, came to this Parliament in the sixties, their motivation was to stand up for what they believed to be federalism. They stood for the best interests both of Canada and of Quebec. They sacrificed what they were doing then, as have all other members from the province of Quebec, be they from this party or other parties. The members of the Creditiste party have stood up in their province and spoken up for Canada, and they are not ashamed or afraid to do so.

I do not want to appear smug when I say that we know what the events are in Quebec. We know them because we come from that province. If the New Democratic Party were able to elect a few members from that province, then they might be somewhat more enlightened about what are the real causes of the situation and what is the basis for the FLQ's existence. The NDP can claim that the 25 per cent of the vote given to the Parti Quebecois resulted from social unrest. I would say that the majority of the votes came from an abnormally high number of unemployed, and this is a real indication to all parties, including our own, that these people are fed up with the type of society which in their opinion, makes them second-class citizens in their own province. These people have shown an indication of that in the traditional democratic manner with which French Canadians are synonymous—through the ballot box, and have established a legitimate political party known as the Parti Quebecois, a party that has rejected the violence of the FLQ.

Sometimes unintentionally we blur the lines. I have heard more than one member say that the CNTU is part of the FLQ. The CNTU is not part of the FLQ. Some do not know who is the successor in the CNTU to Jean Marchand. They think it is that big mouth Michel Chartrand, but he is not. It is a gentleman called Pepin who has rejected and deplored the bombings, the kidnappings and the violence of the FLQ movement. This is also true of the Quebec Federation of Labour and Mr. Laberge, and it is true of the overwhelming majority of the Lapalme workers.

When we say that the discontent of the Lapalme workers is one of the contributing factors to the growth of the FLQ movement, let me point out that the plight of the Lapalme workers today is due to the unwillingness, rightly or wrongly, of a lot of people to examine the philosophy behind Bill C-186. If when the LaPalme workers had been offered integration into the Public Service they had been permitted under the laws of the land to bring their bargaining unit with them, or to apply in the normal manner through the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act for certification on a regional basis, then they would be working in the Public Service today.

Let us all understand that when that legislation came before the House it may not have been the best type and it may not have been the worst. But it never had the opportunity to be fully examined because it was rapidly made the subject of hysteria between employers and employees and all the vested interests in the country who felt that national bargaining units were best for Canada. And they may be. But that more than any other fundamental reason is the reason those men are out marching. They have refused to give up their bargaining unit, their union, which under the law we could not give to them.

In conclusion, when the Prime Minister says he will introduce a bill to provide all of the powers that the authorities need, and no more, to fight these terrorists, bandits and revolutionaries, then I believe him. Knowing the Prime Minister and knowing the agony he went through before putting the powers under the War Measures Act into force, before concluding he had no alternative but to move in the way he did—surprise was of the essence in the particular situation we faced—I am sure the Prime Minister will not wait one day longer than he thinks necessary before repealing those powers.

This country is going to remain united, and no bandits, terrorists or revolutionaries known as the FLQ are going to destroy it as long as we can combat them by democratic means. The War Measures Act is a democratic means. It is part of the laws of the land. The government came to the House of Commons at the earliest opportunity to explain as fully as it could the reasons behind its action.

• (12:20 p.m.)

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great interest to the remarks by the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey). We have also listened to several other ministers of the Crown who were involved in the decision to invoke the War Measures Act early yesterday morning, and I mention particularly the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand). I wish I could accept with confidence the remarks of these and other members on the government side who have spoken in this debate because it would be much easier for me to agree than disagree.

I believe that the vast majority of people across Canada and the vast majority of the press yesterday and today are giving support to the government for having done the right thing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thompson: They are so fed up with the activities of the FLQ terrorists in the province of Quebec and have pleaded for and expected action for so long to meet this problem that in the present emergency, about which we have not been given all the details yet except that it is very serious, they feel this type of action is warranted. I understand their reaction.

Having said that, I am convinced that Canada will rue the day which is marked on our calendars as October 16, 1967. I say that not because I do not want action taken against the FLQ. I have many times pleaded for action. In fact, it is very interesting to note as far as history is concerned that on October 17, 1967, just three years ago today almost to the hour, I asked in this House the following question of the Solicitor General:

> Is the hon. gentleman aware that Radio Havana is broadcasting a daily half hour program on the 49 metre band in French, beamed directly at Quebec listeners and giving instructions in subversive activity and guerilla warfare—

They laughed at me that day. The Solicitor General would not give an answer. Many members then accused me of radicalism and extremism. I have in my hand a montage of clippings taken from various newspapers dated July, April and May, 1967. These are clippings from our own Canadian newspapers telling about the subversive activity that was already taking place in Canada.

On October 30, 1967, having been unable even to get an answer to a question in the House, let alone being given any credit for raising a pertinent question of some importance, I wrote an open letter to the Secretary of State for External Affairs listing the various activities which had come to my attention and were taking place. I was not conducting some witch hunt. I had picked this information out of the papers that were circulating in this country including the newspaper Granma, which is the official organ of the communist organization in Cuba. It was circulated in mass quantity in this country all during Expo right out of the Cuban pavillion at Expo. It was brought then to the public's attention, although there was no public admission by the police and certainly no admission or recognition given by the frontbenchers of the government at that time, that there were actual training camps in the Laurentians teaching subversive activity, guerilla warfare and terrorism. They laughed at that time. The people of Canada have been subjected to this kind of thing for too long. They are getting fed up and tired so today they have reacted in favour of extremism against something that should have been handled in the normal way a long time ago.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thompson: I am convinced the police knew all about this. These things were not done in secret. It was open so far as those people who wanted to acknowledge and see that it was taking place are concerned.

Just last Tuesday, October 13, when I spoke in the House, I outlined a four point program I thought the government might accept. It is very interesting to note that the government has acted on all these points except one. They could have taken a much less severe and less dangerous step than the implementation of the War Measures Act which would have done for the FLQ crises exactly what has been done under the War Measures Act. The people of Canada have hoped and prayed that the government would take this action. I called then upon the Prime Minister to make a nationwide address to the Canadian people and to assert the primary rule of law and to assure the people of Canada that the government was resolved to take measures of appropriate severity.

I asked the Prime Minister then to declare, under the provisions of Section 91(1) of the British North America Act, that the terrible kidnappings in the city of Montreal were matters affecting the peace, order and good government of Canada and henceforth would be treated as a federal responsibility in close co-operation with provincial and municipal authorities. Had the government followed and strengthened the law it would have meant bringing a bill into the House of Commons, if that was necessary, to amend the Criminal Code. I also asked that he announce a substantial reward to anyone who could provide authoritative information leading to the apprehension of criminals, for that is what these FLQ people are.

I found it very interesting to hear the Minister of Labour talking about the difference between the Parti Quebecois and the FLQ, and then suddenly announcing to the House that he knew what that difference was. He then went so far as to say these were international revolutionaries. Anyone who knows the situation and has been following it at all knows that is what has been happening. I agree entirely that the Parti Quebecois has endeavoured to do something I cannot agree with but through legitimate, political means. It is an altogether different thing than revolutionary terrorism and no one on this side of the House has intimated they were the same. It is an altogether different thing when people are plotting revolution and terror and overthrow not only of the government but a system of government.

I am convinced that these people are part of a Communist organization which is working in the north and south of the western hemisphere to do that very thing. They would like to do the same thing in Canada as well and life means nothing to them. Violence and terror mean nothing at all to them except that they are a means to an end. So when the Minister of Labour acknowledges that here in this Chamber, let him not accuse anyone on this side of the House of not knowing that difference.

This whole exercise is an attempt to obscure and cover over the fact that action should have been taken several years ago, six months ago or a week ago but was not taken. The Minister of Labour, the Prime Minister, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and the Minister of Justice have all mentioned in their remarks in this debate that they found it necessary to move with severity under the provisions of the War Measures Act because of the critical situation the country faced 36 hours ago. The Minister of Labour this afternoon has quoted from yesterday's Hansard the comments of the mayor of Montreal and the chairman of the executive committee, Lucien Saulnier, contained in a letter addressed to the Prime Minister. By coincidence, Mr. Speaker, these two gentlemen said the same thing last November. They pleaded for action and they were laughed at then.

Invoking of War Measures Act

• (12:30 p.m.)

Yesterday the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert outlined some of the actual facts contained in their submission. They referred to the fact that political kidnappings would be one part of the FLQ strategy. Had action been taken on the advice of Mayor Drapeau, we would not have Mr. Cross and Mr. Laporte where they are today, wherever they are, in the land of the living or not. These are the things which concern me. It is all right to say now that it was necessary to implement The War Measures Act, but why was some action not taken before? Last Tuesday I asked the Prime Minister and members of his cabinet to commit such officers of the RCMP and the Canadian Armed Forces as are necessary to ensure the speedy apprehension of those responsible for these heinous crimes. I asked them to explore every feasible way in which this could be done. Had they done this they might have been in a position to have acted in a more constitutional way than they have now.

I wish to make clear again that I do not object to what has to be done in respect of apprehending those who are dedicated to the overthrow of our way of life. I merely object to how it is being done. On the one hand, the government might have acted a little earlier had they listened to the facts. Surely the security files revealed this situation a long time ago. But they did nothing. A lot of what we hear today about the protection of law and order in this country is a smokescreen, on the one hand for the inactivity and indecision of this government and, on the other hand, is a cover for the real implications of what the War Measures Act really means to this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thompson: Yesterday the Minister of Justice said that this resolution was brought before Parliament to test the will of Parliament. It is all right to test the will of Parliament in respect of the action taken, but some kind of justification is demanded and that is why we are here today. If in the next week or days ahead the people of Canada do not understand what we on this side of the House are trying to say, I am convinced they will later on. Again, having commended the government for taking action, late as it was, I should like to ask this question. Why is it necessary to take away the civil liberty and freedom of Canadian citizens living in Alberta or Newfoundland because of a situation which exists only within the province of Quebec? Surely there must have been some other way to do it. The period is indefinite, as the regulations are in force for six months with power to extend.

What I am about to say is not a popular thing to say but I shall say it in any event and do it at the risk of being criticized. I am old enough to remember what happened in Germany in the early 1930's. I can remember a voice we listened to on radio which pleaded for the support of the German people for the very same reasons—the maintenance of law and order. Tragically, the public responded to the plea. A few did not. Many of those who did not lost their lives because a few years later they even dared to complain.

[Mr. Thompson.]

Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask this question as well. Is it wisdom to entrust unlimited power to the Prime Minister under such a stringent measure as this because of a localized emergency which might have been controlled otherwise? I have spoken to many members from the other side, some of whom approached me at the close of the session last evening. I give them full credit for being just as sincere and dedicated to Canada as I think I am. They said: Look, regardless of the past and regardless of whether or not the government was slow in taking action it was obviously necessary that this kind of action be taken now. I do not disagree with that.

However, this morning I should like to ask these members why it was necessary that it be done in the way it has been done. Why could the Prime Minister not have said: Look, we had to take this action; we were slow in not taking action before with regard to a situation in respect of which I cannot give you all the details at this moment. He could have said that they took the action they did but that it has been taken for only a temporary period of time, perhaps only for a month. I would not have objected even to six months if the government could have said that within that period, or as soon as it is possible, legislation will be prepared to amend the Criminal Code or that new legislation would be brought in that would adequately take care of the situation after this emergency has passed. I do not think any of us on this side of the House would have objected to that. I believe that would have been assurance to us that the government was intending to use this only as a limited emergency power. The government, however, has not done this.

This extraordinary power has been granted for a period of six and a half months and the Prime Minister has reserved the right to extend the time if he wishes to do so. He has the same right or authority to extend the time as he had when he brought in this measure in the first place at four o'clock yesterday morning. Why could we not now have from the Minister of Justice and our Prime Minister a statement which would unequivocally commit the government to bring in the necessary legislation to limit to a shorter period the time in which the War Measures Act will be in effect? I would hope the Prime Minister would do this.

I have a good deal of confidence in the Minister of Justice. We have come to know each other very well in the years during which we have sat together in the House. I have confidence in his motivation. If I can have confidence in that regard I think we can differ and differ honestly. But having that confidence I should like to hear him commit the government unequivocally to the use of this measure strictly as an emergency measure for as short a time as possible and that beginning tomorrow work will commence on legislation to cover the specific situation. I grant that it will take some time to make sure that the proper legislation is brought before the House of Commons either as an amendment to the Criminal Code or in the form of a separate piece of legislation. We would give support to that.

No member of this House can like what is going on. The Minister of Justice does not have a reply for me in this regard. I wish to say to him what I believe was said in similar words yesterday. The means that are used to determine the end achieved—change predicated on violence or terrorism—are bound to end in a police state which can only perpetuate itself in violence and terrorism unless we deliberately and conscientiously include the safeguards and checks that are necessary at the time of implementation in order to prevent that taking place.

For the sake of the record and in reply to some members on the other side who have ridiculed our questioning and the stand some of us are taking on this side, may I say that we are being asked to approve the suspension—they laugh when we say this but it is true—of all the laws of Canada and replace them with dictatorial powers to be used at will. Maybe the regulations that we have before us do not exactly provide that, but the War Measures Act does. If the government can implement it on the one hand as it defined it yesterday, they can, on the other hand, extend it to complete the power which the War Measures Act allows them, again by order of the Governor in Council, and they can do it at night.

• (12:40 p.m.)

The authority in this measure enables the government to give police the power to arrest, detain, and deport those suspected of insurrection. The Act gives the government blanket authority to take any action it considers necessary in cases of feared insurrection. I think this is probably necessary at this time, and no one is really questioning that. But the government may also, according to the War Measures Act, do and authorize such acts and things and make from time to time such orders and regulations necessary or advisable for the security, defence, peace, order and welfare of Canada. This includes such action as censorship and the control and suppression of publications, writings, maps, plans, photographs, communications and means of communication. That is what it means. It means the arrest, detention, exclusion and deportation of undesirable people. It means the control of harbours, ports and territorial waters and the movement of vessels. It means control of land, air and water transport and movements of people or their belongings. It means control of imports, exports, production and manufacturing. It means control of appropriation, forfeiture and disposition of property and its use.

Furthermore, the act automatically applies to every section of the country although its use is limited and directed by regulations devised by the government to assist in the apprehension of those involved in the recent kidnappings in Montreal.

This is why I am fearful that in the future we in this democratic nation, with a democratic way of life about which we have continued to boast, stand in jeopardy because of the action taken at this time. Such complete power is unnecessary to resolve the issue that is involved and it is dangerous in the hands of any man or group of men. That is why we on this side are concerned. Again I say that in that concern we recognize that action had to be taken. But it should have been taken a long time ago. We also recognize the danger of what might be the end result. I have yet to hear from any member on the other side an adequate assurance that precautions will be taken, that more reasonable alternatives will be initiated, to prevent the happening of what it is actually within the authority of the present legislation to bring to pass.

I only want to say again that I resent very much that the civil liberties and freedoms of the people of Canada, 21 million of them, have to be abrogated. Even the Bill of Rights itself has been cast aside because there exists in one part of this country a serious situation that demanded firm action lest the country should break apart. I believe it is not in the best interest of the country that Parliament should give unlimited power to the Prime Minister or to those who are responsible for the administration of the affairs of the country over an issue such as we face. I was shocked yesterday, when the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) was reading documentation that had been presented to the Prime Minister by the mayor and the chief executive of the city of Montreal, to hear the Prime Minister call it nonsense. Is this action reflected in the statement which was made by the Prime Minister on the steps of the House of Commons—just watch what I will do? It is the kind of response that we receive from the Prime Minister which leads me to believe that we are not out of order in being fearful about what might come to pass in the country as a result of having given him the powers that now rest in his hands.

I want to give credit to every member of the House for being a loyal Canadian. We are the representatives of millions more such people. We should be proud of what our nation has been, of our history and our heritage. But we should also be mindful of what has made it such. I believe that we could sum it all up if we were to quote here the very paragraphs of the Canadian Bill of Rights to remind us of what are Canadians' rights. These rights do not come from the government, they come from God himself. We are creatures in his image. It is our responsibility to protect them, to guard them, to perpetuate them, not to assume that the government can give these rights or take them away. Let us examine carefully the real issues before we are taken in by the heat and the emotions of the moment, and in the end lose what we still have.

Mr. Prud'homme: Would the hon. member allow a question?

Mr. Thompson: Yes, with pleasure, if the Speaker gives permission.

Mr. Prud'homme: When he said that the War Measures Act should apply to only one part of the country, was he aware that Canada is one country and that what applies to one part of the country should apply to all of it? Is there not a danger that if this were to apply to one part of the country only, Quebec at present, some people could profit from the situation in another part of the country, could profit from the fact that all the forces were busy in Quebec by taking violent action in some other part of the country?

Mr. Thompson: I respect the question and the questioner, who is a good friend of mine, but I do not accept the validity of his argument. If I were playing football today and I cracked my shinbone and drastic action had to be taken such as surgery to correct the injury, need I bind up my other leg and arms as well? I do not think so. There is such an accident or unfortunate situation in one part of the country, that requires this kind of action but people who live there because of a danger that does not exist?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (12:50 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Ovide Laflamme (Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I would like to participate in this interesting debate which is drawing the attention of a great many Canadians, even though it is meant primarily to give members an opportunity to express their opinion on the measures adopted by the government to meet the present state of emergency in Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, when we listen to the speeches of opposition members, we wonder about the purpose of this debate. They say: The government could not act otherwise under the circumstances but assumed powers that are too extensive.

Mr. Speaker, when a state of emergency has to be dealt with, one is not justified in criticizing the government for taking too many precautions in order to regain control over a situation which is deteriorating from day to day.

But, as this debate permits the exchange of some views, I wish to call attention to the fact that the government's decision was made following a request from the Quebec provincial authorities, with the unanimous approval of the National Assembly, that of the executive Council of the City of Montreal, which represents close to one-third of the population of the province of Quebec, and that, I am sure, of almost the whole of the Quebec population. This was an urgent request and, in my view, the government acted wisely and speedily. The government acted so promptly that, in a few hours, throughout the province all those who advocate the use of submersive means to overthrow the established order were arrested and are now detained.

Mr. Speaker, who is responsible for such a situation? The matter can be discussed for hours and attempts made to find out causes, but this would only serve to provide us with guidelines for the future. But there is a point which it is important to consider for a few minutes and upon which many hon. members have insisted, that is the great influence of the mass media on the population.

The generation that is challenging the established order was born with the media, especially television. That generation has greatly abused freedom of speech and is guilty also of many other excesses. It is obvious that the great impact of the mass media has incited people unable to control themselves perhaps because they enjoy too much freedom to use subversive means.

Last Sunday, the premier of Quebec channelled the thoughts of all Canadians when he said that the responsibility for protecting order and justice rests with the competent authorities, even though the lives of two citizens—one British diplomat and the hon. Pierre Laporte, provincial member for Longueuil, a friend of mine who, I am sure, is mentally and morally fit to take it—are at stake. I hope, in the interest of the province of Quebec and of Canada, that they will be released safe and sound.

The Parti Québécois, as it was said earlier, is not directly concerned. One thing remains sure, however, and this is why some confusion may exist. The objectives seeked by the FLQ and the Parti Québécois are identical; only the means to reach them differ. The FLQ wants to upset the established order, destroy the country through violence and force. As for the Parti Québécois, while challenging the minds and attempting to destroy the country in the minds of the people, especially, in the minds of the young people of Quebec, wants to subvert the established order by advocating the separation of Quebec through democratic means, but it does it through excesses of language and the "rape" of young people's minds, as it has already been said in the House.

And during the few years when we have witnessed the rise of separatism and heard these inflammatory flights of oratory, hot-headed young people were setting themselves a sort of aim which was not a real one, that is the establishment of a Quebec state that, alone, would be able to settle all problems. This theory has been idealized on the one hand and on the other hand subversive minds, people unable to bear the wealth of freedom which we enjoy both at the provincial level and at the national level, have swung into action. Now, we are witnessing a series of bombings. Time has passed and, for a while, the bombings in Quebec may have answered the purpose of certain people, because they contributed to the unstability of the economy. While industries were being established outside the province, these people would say: "Bombings in Quebec are not such a bad thing after all as we can see industries being set up in other provinces".

The provincial elections held on April 29 had disappointing results for Mr. René Levesque, leader of the Parti Québécois. Last night on the publicly owned TV network, acting like the crow that dropped its prey, he tried to convince his viewers that this debate is tantamount to a federal-provincial crisis. He claimed that the government of the province of Quebec had ceased to exist. In my opinion, this is cheap politics on his part at a time when the National Assembly where some of his party members are sitting was unanimously begging the federal government to put into effect the measures which are now known to us, i.e. the intervention of the army to help out the police forces which for several months now have had more than they could handle in the way of protecting the citizens in general, and more especially respectable persons like the hon. Pierre Laporte, from falling into the hands of kidnappers, and of bringing an end to any panic within the population.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being one o'clock I do now leave the Chair to resume the same at two o'clock this afternoon.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

---

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

[Translation]

Mr. Laflamme: Mr. Speaker, at the time of adjournment, I was explaining certain issues underlying current events in Quebec, outlining to the House the significant influence of the mass media, particularly since the advent of television.

The great influence of the mass media and the misuse of the freedom of speech have lead a number of extremists to commit assault and terrorism. Those very people who want to turn our society into a "society with more freedom", deprive at the same time of their basic liberty the citizens of the country, especially Quebecers. It is not a question of establishing now who, in the past, could have been responsible for these actions and for the present situation. Rather, I think that action was imperative.

For years, civil authority has been jeered at in all structures of society, in Quebec as well as in the entire country.

By the information media, especially in Quebec, there is also "the challenge of authority constituted in the schools". And the entire present generation, which benefits from greater access to schools, is being indoctrinated by these revolutionaries who repeat emulously that our constitution is bad and should be completely remodelled.

Moreover if one would analyse the average age of alleged FLQ members one would see that they are 25 or less.

As these subversive activities were being planned drugs were distributed among young people. There is no city in Canada right now where youngsters of 16 or 17 have not impaired their health owing to uncontrolled use of drugs. Naturally, this created an atmosphere favourable to subversive action.

That is why, every time I hear members of the opposition say that the government should have acted and taken measures sooner, I contend that most of them would have been the first to say then that the government was reacting too quickly and was trying to exercise too strongly the powers it had under the law.

In my opinion, the government could not face the fact that in a society which had as much freedom as we have, subversive elements were fostering a revolution to establish a dictatorship such as the ones that exist in Cuba or other countries which do not have anything like the basic freedoms we enjoy in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, before recess I was saying that on television yesterday the leader of Parti Québécois Mr. René Lévesque had suggested a federal-provincial debate on the present situation, tragic and serious as it is. In this I submit he went against the opinion of the members of his own party sitting in the National Assembly where Premier Bourassa received the unanimous support of all members to ask the federal government for armed intervention in order to assist the police forces.

Mr. Speaker, it was said time an again that the present government action is one of assistance to police forces. I do not see how we can reproach the government for having acted so swiftly and I would even say so efficiently. Hundreds of lives have thus been spared by the armed forces and the police in resorting to arrests of a preventive nature. Prompt action was required.

In fact, in Hull, a young girl was kidnapped and held captive until four o'clock this morning. She was subjected to all kinds of tortures, then she was relaased only so that she could warn the Prime Minister that, unless a stop was put to the use of the army to fight the FLQ, children would be the next victims. This was a message that the Prime Minister was to give, with assurance, on the radio.

That is what terrorists are doing in our country. The time had come to use against criminals, who want to spread panic and terror by threatening the lives of individuals, every measure that a structured society like ours has at its disposal.

A society such as ours does not have the right to give in to blackmail, even though young people are used to seeing such tense situations unfolding on the screen.

If the Quebec or Ottawa government had yielded to that outrageous blackmail, a lot of young people would have witnessed that blackmail and that terrorism. It is fortunate that Quebec had at its head a young premier who was wise and forceful and who acted with insight and in co-operation with the government of his country; he was thus able to keep the situation under control and to tell those people, once and for all, that terrorism has no place in Canada and that the agitators will have either to die or to change their minds.

Those are, Mr. Speaker, the preventive measures that the House should adopt unanimously. It will still be time later on to discuss the subtle technicalities aimed at preventing any kind of subversive activity in Canada.

• (2:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I will not be here on Monday when the vote is taken. For this reason, I wish to make my stand perfectly clear. Everyone should stand and be counted on this issue, but the fact remains that some of us have to attend to other unavoidable commitments. I do not want any ambiguity as to my position and the reasons for adopting this position. That is why I am participating in this debate.

The main points of argument have been put forward very clearly by the various parties in this House. I have listened to these speeches exceedingly carefully. I do not think I have missed a speech since this debate began. I wish to sum up the reasons why I would vote against this motion. It amounts to endorsing and showing confidence in what the government has done by invoking the War Measures Act at this time.

I want it to be abundantly clear that the members of my party do not deny that the government of Quebec needs the extra powers for which it is asking. Nor do we deny the fact that this government has every right and responsibility to see that they get these powers. We have known for a long time that there is a cancer eating at the vitals of the province of Quebec, a cancer which is very likely to spread to other parts of the country. I am not talking about one province versus another. We know this has to be dealt with.

I want to give the reasons why we think the way in which the government is dealing with this matter is wrong. It is far too dangerous a method for those of us who respect Parliament to accept. I could not vote for this motion because it asks us to blindly approve the government's action. We have not been given the facts indicating why this motion is necessary. We have heard about sticks of dynamite, cells of the FLQ and other things. I have no doubt that these are the facts, and a great deal more could be alleged.

The members of this House have not been given a proper analysis or outline of the complete situation. This is our right. Why could there not have been a special in camera session during which the government could have briefed hon. members if there are other matters which we do not know about? If there are facts that in the opinion of the government warrant this action, why haven't the responsible elected members from every province and district in Canada been informed of these? As the representatives of the people of this country, this is what we have a right to expect. We have not received an answer to that question. Why were we not approached days, weeks or months ago with regard to this particular need?

An hon. member this morning very cogently indicated, with documentation, that for well over a year the city of Montreal and the province of Quebec have been in a state where they wanted help from the federal government. No action or insufficient action was taken to meet the need. Why was this not done? Why was it necessary to have a hurry up, middle of the night performance about which we were informed only after it occurred? It has now been more than ten days since Parliament resumed. Why could we not have been informed earlier about this proclamation to help the city of Montreal and the province of Quebec?

• (2:20 p.m.)

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) says this act is stronger than is needed at the present time. We want to know why we cannot have legislation of the kind which is needed, not far-reaching provisions which are sweeping away every vestige of hard-won civil liberty across Canada. What is needed now is a measure to deal with the particular emergency in Quebec. I have read carefully the letters of the Premier of Quebec and the Mayor of Montreal, but nowhere can I find a request that the War Measures Act be invoked. The idea did not come from them, or at least it does not emerge in the letters. The Prime Minister says he does not need all the powers contained in that act. Very well, let him ask for the powers which are in fact required. The explanation that it is necessary to pounce quickly upon suspects is not sufficient, in my view, to justify the action which has been taken.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) failed to explain yesterday why amendments to the Criminal Code could not have handled this emergency in Quebec. Why were such amendments not proposed? We in this party would have supported amendments designed to strengthen powers of search and confer other powers for dealing with terrorists. But this was not the course taken. Instead, a statute was invoked which had been designed to deal only with a situation in which the country was in a state of war or insurrection of a kind no one has yet referred to in this House. No reply has been made to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) and others that a statute be drafted rapidly to meet the situation and replace the sweeping powers conferred by the War Measures Act. The only answer we got was that we must have faith in the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister is a fine man, an upstanding man, a lover of his country—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. MacInnis: Why cannot we rest our confidence there? I want to say that if the angel Gabriel appeared to me in person and asked me to turn over the functions of Parliament to him because he was a clean-living, fine angel, my answer would be, no. To do so would be to negate our very reason for being here as representatives of the people.

There are altogether too many unanswered questions in this situation. Those of us who come here believing we have a duty to represent the people cannot be fobbed off by excuses, or persuaded to give in to a small group of members, in fact, in the ultimate instance, to the wishes of one man over an issue which will affect this country for a long time to come.

The Prime Minister promised he would consider drafting such a statute as I have described but there is nothing to compel him to do so. Between now and next April he could, if he wished, extend the powers he presently has beyond April 30. There may be members on the other side of the House who are prepared to abdicate their responsibility to the extent of approving the intentions of one man, not knowing under what conditions he may have to operate, but I, and those associated with me, have no intention of belonging to their company. This is my first reason for opposing this motion.

The second reason is that this action in invoking the War Measures Act is one which should not have been taken in the absence of consideration and debate by this parliamentary body. I am aware of all the excuses and reasons given for the course taken, but there is no reason under Heaven for bypassing the elected representatives of the people when such sweeping powers are brought in, particularly since we are in session and quite able to deal with emergency legislation. There are procedures by means of which a suitable measure could have been got quickly through the House. In my opinion this is just another example of this tendency to downgrade the authority of parliament. People have remarked that liberty is seldom taken away in one sudden swoop but that it is usually taken away piece by piece. In my opinion, this is one more serious step in the downgrading of the authority of this Parliament, the legislative body, the decision-making body of the people of Canada, that is, if more than lip service is to be paid to the idea of democratic government in this country.

In the third place, I believe we should oppose this motion because no serious reasons have been given for the government's failure to use another method of meeting the situation, such as amending the Criminal Code or the passing of a special statute. I will put forward a further reason for opposing this legislation. We have found in the past in this country and in other countries that once measures of this kind have been put into force they are extremely difficult to remove. My memory goes back to days when I was a very young girl and section 98 was placed on the statute books of this country. It was debated by Parliament. It was before the House for two or three hours and received Royal Assent quickly; it was put through in a panic situation. People at that time—nobody believes it any more—believed firmly that we were in the midst of a red revolution on the banks of the Red River. They panicked, and the government of the day put through section 98 which in its own way provided sweeping powers to deal with what they considered to be a dire emergency.

That section, section 98, was on the statute books of this country for 17 long years. It was used in the depression to very bad effect. During the 'thirties, when he was a member of the opposition, Mr. Lapointe, later minister of justice, tried to get legislation through Parliament to repeal it. He was unsuccessful because once a measure of this kind comes into force it is extremely difficult to get rid of it. Those who cheerfully say "Give the Prime Minister a few weeks and he will be bringing a suitable measure before Parliament to replace this statute" are optimists to a very high degree indeed, in my view. I would not be a bit surprised to see this measure remain in force a lot longer than April 30 next year. I hope that will not be the case, but on the basis of experience these measures are terribly hard to remove.

• (2:30 p.m.)

Another reason that I must oppose this measure is that no one knows where this sort of measure will end. We were led to believe by the Prime Minister—no, the Prime Minister was a little more frank than some of his supporters who have spoken; he indicated that the measure was to be used to deal with the FLQ and perhaps other organizations of an illegal type. Other speakers on the government side were very much more careful to point out that they felt the measure was invoked solely to deal with the FLQ. But who is to say where the measure is going to end? Once you move into the area of calling organizations illegal, heaven alone knows where this will end.

It is very interesting to note that not more than 36 hours after invoking the act the mayor of my own city of Vancouver, a city where no one has yet heard of a state of insurrection existing, showed himself to be very eager to take action under the act. I should say he wanted the authorities to take action since he is unable to wield its powers himself. The mayor desired to have what he regarded as "nuisance organizations" declared illegal. The fact is that he is running for election and badly needs to have demagogic material to assist him to return to office; but his election has nothing to do with the powers that can be exercised under this act. However, I am just citing the fact that throughout British Columbia it is already very well known that this legislation is available to those who are in a position to use it.

It was made abundantly clear to me yesterday in the speech of the Minister of Justice that the authority for declaring what is an illegal organization rests with the attorneys general of the provinces. In my opinion this is a very peculiar way to secure even handed justice in Canada. The act and the orders in council that were passed may be federal in form; but if the attorney general of each province is to be permitted to determine what is an illegal organization in his province, then Canadians do not have uniform justice across the country.

The fears that have been expressed by many in this House that the action taken by the government will not help to solidify Canadian unity but, on the other hand, will divide Canadians becomes all too real. To my mind it is wrong to leave the definition of what is an illegal organization to the whim of the attorney general of a province. In fact, if I were in charge of the government, knowing something of the composition of the present government of British Columbia, I might even be a little alarmed at allowing the attorney general of that province to declare which organizations are legal and which are not. Perhaps there is no immediate danger in this regard, but we must remember that this sort of thing can snowball at an accelerating rate.

These are some of the reasons that I oppose this measure, but there is one over-riding reason, and it is that I believe firmly in democratic government. I believe that although people may not be as informed as we would like—and they cannot be informed so long as we have a situation where even their representatives are not told the truth—and even though people are unable to use the machinery of government to achieve their objectives, I still believe that government by the people is the only form of government that is worthy of people like us who have a great heritage to preserve and to protect.

I believe that this sort of measure has reduced the members of the House to the role of rubber stamping a decision by the Prime Minister of the country. This applies to the backbenchers on the opposite side of the House as well as those of us on the opposition benches. If we are going to be reduced to the role of rubberstamping, after the event, something the government has done, then I believe the sooner the doors of this Parliament are closed and the truth becomes apparent to the people, the better. The people are being lulled into a sense of false security as a result of our not being given the facts. As I say, their representatives are being faced with a fait accompli when they are invited to endorse a policy adopted by the government without their knowledge, and without being given any information on which to base a judgment.

Those are the reasons I must oppose this measure. When the votes are registered on Monday, let no one say there were those of us in this House who were afraid to stand up and be counted. I am getting my vote in early. My vote will be one that says I believe that, serious as the situation in the province of Quebec undoubtedly is, it is important that, in giving the government power to deal with the situation, we should not throw away those liberties that all of us from coast to coast have won, liberties which our forefathers gained for us with such difficulty.

These rights that we have won are worth preserving. In my view their fate cannot hinge on the decision, judgment and honesty of one man, no matter how able he may be. We must keep these rights in our own hands if we are to consider ourselves worthy to sit in this House and to represent the people in our constituencies.

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, as the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) said yesterday morning, this is a most serious matter. I sincerely regret that many of those on the opposite side who have spoken to this question have not regarded it as sufficiently serious to comment on the matters genuinely at issue and to avoid political recriminations.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has invited the members of this House to make constructive comments on the changes they would like to see made in the regulations, and to comment on the provisions they would like to see incorporated in the new piece of legislation of a less sweeping nature that he has promised to bring forward as soon as it is feasible to do so. If opposition members are not prepared to fulfil that duty, then I am. I should like to begin my remarks by commenting briefly on the regulations which have been presented to the House for its consideration and approval.

• (2:40 p.m.)

I would comment in particular on two of the regulations before commenting in general on the question of unlawful associations. First of all, with regard to regulation 7(2), which provides for a detention for 90 days before a person is brought before a judge, I would submit that 90 days seems to be an unnecessarily long period. I believe this period in these regulations, and also in any subsequent statute which might be passed, might well be limited to 30 days. This would seem to fulfil the needs of the moment and would also provide for somewhat greater protection for the liberty of the subject.

I would also draw the attention of the House to regulation 8(a) where it is provided that:

> In any prosecution for an offence under these Regulations, evidence that any person
>
> (a) attended any meeting of the unlawful association,...is, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, proof that he is a member of the unlawful association.

I think this sub-paragraph goes too far. I do not think we ought to have this type of provision in the legislation which states that mere attendance at a meeting, even of such an unlawful association, in the absence of more evidence is proof of membership. I would also have some reservation about sub-paragraph (c), if this purports to mean that someone who, as a result of negotiations entered into between the government and an organization such as the FLQ, were ipso facto to be considered a member of that association. I believe if there were evidence to the contrary in such a case, such a person would not be guilty of any offence under these regulations.

Despite my feeling that several of these regulations go too far, I am very firmly in agreement with the principle of these regulations and with the action which the government has taken. The member who preceded me just now was discussing the passing of the unlawful association legislation in Canada. She referred to the fact that in 1919 the Conservative government at that time passed unlawful association legislation and installed it in the Criminal Code as Section 98.

Some 17 years later, in 1936, a Liberal government removed that unlawful association section from the Criminal Code. What the previous speaker failed to avert to was the fact that it was precisely because this provision was made an amendment to the Criminal Code rather than a temporary emergency measure that it lasted for 17 years. The problem with unlawful association legislation is that after the crisis period is over, it tends to remain on the statute books and its interpretation is extended to apply to situations for which it was never intended, and sometimes very unfairly so. This does not mean that such legislation is not very essential at moments of crisis to deal with particular problems which exist at that time. The essence of the distinction is simply that this legislation should be in effect for as short a time as is necessary to cope with the specific problem for which it is intended, and it should not remain indefinitely on the statute books of Canada. That is precisely the way in which this measure works.

The real test of the government's intention will be how the exceptional powers which are granted by these regulations are used. I think it well to underline that the exceptional powers which the government has actually taken are not the full scope of the powers which would have been available to the government under the War Measures Act. The government could under that act, if the situation had warranted, have requested regulations of a much wider nature than it did. It has not done so and has already in this way, by drawing the regulations as narrowly as it thought advisable, indicated its good faith. I believe that the test of the government's intention, and that the test of what the government is here doing, will be the way in which these powers are exercised in the succeeding weeks and months. Unlike the opposition, I am not prepared to make a judgment before the evidence is at hand. I propose to wait to see the future fate of these regulations and their enforcement, before I make a judgment as to whether or not the powers which the government has assumed are undue.

There are legitimate concerns both about the wording and the consequences of the assumption of these awesome powers by the government. Some of these questions have been raised by members of the opposition. I disagree with some of their arguments, even while recognizing the legitimacy of the concern they have expressed.

The predominant tone of this debate has been political. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) expressed the view that the government in power must be prepared to answer for the crisis situation. The most remarkable speech along this line, and I very much regret he is not with us in the House at the moment, was made by the leader of the NDP, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas).

This hon. member made not one but two speeches at the same time. First, he made a statesman's speech in which he said there was no room in Canada for violence. He said, as reported at page 197 of Hansard:

> —we believe that to allow any group to dictate terms to the democratic, elected government of this country is to invite anarchy and chaos in Canada.

He put himself and his party on record as opposing that. He then went on to make his second speech, his contrary and political speech. After having recognized the problem and the way to deal with it, he in effect, denied the government the effective means of dealing with it. This might have been tenable if his chief argument had been that the government should have proceeded by way of statute rather than by way of regulation. He did make that objection, but the main thrust of his political, second speech was that the government and the Prime Minister personally were responsible for this crisis.

The hon. member recited all the ills of the province of Quebec with no recognition of the special kind of threat we face in the FLQ, the threat to infiltrate our way of life by whatever means may be conveniently at hand for the use of this desperate organization.

I must admit I am reading the remarks of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands in light of the explanation of his remarks given by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis). The hon. member for York South seemed to feel there had been some difficulty in understanding the remarks his leader had made and he, therefore, said he would try to repeat what had been said using different words so we could more clearly understand them. That hon. member put the matter more clearly. He said:

> What is happening to Quebec is a result of the policies of this government and is a result of the inflexible attitude of the Prime Minister, which he is continually incorporating in his policies.

The situation in Quebec, he says, results from this government and this Prime Minister. What utter rot for the hon. member to parade before this House. He accused the government of repression and even challenged us to indicate where in the world what he called repression had been useful in dealing with problems of this kind. There are many examples which indicate that the judicious and limited use of force by a legitimate government has succeeded not only in protecting the people of the country but in eliminating a subversive threat that was being made by a particular group. I need mention only such countries as Kenya, Malaysia and the Philippines. In each of those countries, the government had to cope with subversive attacks on their duly constituted authority. If the hon. member does not think those countries are sufficiently western, let us look at France. As we know, General de Gaulle, who knew how to use force when it was necessary, faced down those in France who would have destroyed that country and put her into chaos.

There is a case for legitimate use of force in a democratic country. The hon. member for York South was right in stating that traditional revolution cannot succeed without popular support. He did not use the word "traditional", I put in that word. The point is that this is not traditional revolution, this is criminal war. The FLQ is not trying to win Quebec by battle in the field or, still less, unfortunately, by persuasion. It is trying to win Quebec by terror.

Last night a 27 year old girl from nearby Hull was seized in front of her house about seven o'clock by a group of men. She was carried off, was tortured throughout the night and was released in the early hours of the morning with the letters FLQ scratched across her, and with the message that the FLQ was prepared now to escalate the war not only to women but also to children. These are the methods of the FLQ. These are not the methods of a democratic group. They are the methods of a group which is determined to gain power by terror and tyranny. I am astonished that the hon. member for York South did not see fit to make such distinctions. I am astonished he did not recognize the difference between open violence and hidden violence. The violence we face in Quebec is not of the type that results from the escalation of feelings on the picket line, with which he is familiar. It is not the result of somebody performing a legitimate function who suddenly finds that his emotions get beyond his control to the extent that he breaks the peace. This is not that kind of violence. This is hidden and systematic violence.

In an interview on the CBC some months ago, we saw two FLQ members who had been trained in the Middle East. These are not the methods of democratic men or even of men who are prepared to fight openly in the streets. These are the methods of hidden violence. I am astonished that the hon. member for York South did not make a distinction between limited and unlimited violence. In Quebec we have seen murder and the threat of murder. We have seen kidnapping and the threat of kidnapping. We have heard of threats to destroy the communication and transportation system of Canada. I am above all astonished that the hon. member for York South did not make a distinction between violence which is proportionate to social ills and violence such as this which is completely out of proportion to any social ills.

Does any hon. member of this House sincerely believe, even if we accept the fancy hypothesis about the Lapalme workers, that if those workers were given back their jobs the FLQ would disappear and violence cease in Quebec? Does anyone think that if there should be no unemployment in Quebec this would solve the problem? This violence is not proportionate to the social ills which exist in Quebec. It is violence of a kind which, as I said, is hidden, is unlimited and is totally out of proportion to the social ills which exist in the society.

• (2:50 p.m.)

I have spent many years fighting for civil liberties in Canada. I have been a director of the Civil Liberties Association and its chairman. It is precisely because I believe I understand what civil liberties are all about that I support the government's action.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacGuigan: It is an action which is directed toward preserving civil liberties and freedom generally in this country. There is no freedom in anarchy; there is no freedom in violence. There is no freedom in terror. There is freedom only in law. Let us have that law so that we may have our freedom.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, we have just heard the words of a man who is supposedly learned in the law, a former dean of law and a young man supposedly of some ability. If I were that man with the background I would anticipate I should have and should be displaying to the people of Canada I would think that the words spoken should stick in my throat, because what he said was that whenever freedom is threatened you give the government the power of dictatorship so that it can protect your freedom.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Coates: I am against government by dictatorship. That is what the War Measures Act is. I am opposed to it. Somebody said, how did we get elected. Mr. Speaker, members of this House were elected by the democratic process which is not in effect in Canada today.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

An hon. Member: Why are we wasting our time listening to you?

[Mr. MacGuigan.]

Mr. Coates: Whether you do or do not listen to me, my friend, does not really make any difference, because if your Prime Minister decides that I should be incarcerated for the next 90 days then I can be in that jail for 90 days whether I am a member of the FLQ or anything else. That is what the War Measures Act and the regulations associated with it provide. It is just as simple as that.

The members in this House are very touchy, Mr. Speaker, and well they should be. It is not just the 30 or so men sitting on the treasury benches but all 158 members of the Liberal party who have decided, and will decide just as long as the Prime Minister wants them to, that this government will have the power of a dictatorship, an oligarchy, the power to take away their freedom and liberty. So, they may well be touchy.

Yesterday and today, members of this chamber have been provided with a rare display, a display the equal of which I have not seen since June 1968, a display in which cabinet ministers, including the Prime Minister, stand up in this chamber in an effort to defend themselves. We have not been treated this way before, and there is a very good reason. The Prime Minister and his cabinet ministers know just how extreme the measures that have been taken are. They know how far they have gone and they are endeavouring to justify action that is far in excess of anything that has ever been done in this country in its 103-year history, except in time of war, and to do what?

An hon. Member: To save Canada.

Mr. Coates: Somebody says "To save Canada". Are we in Canada at the present time in a state of civil war?

An hon. Member: Almost.

Mr. Coates: The gentleman says "almost".

An hon. Member: Like the Tory party.

Mr. Coates: Now, the gentleman becomes facetious.

An hon. Member: Tell us about the leadership convention.

Mr. Coates: Well, my friend, it is indeed a very high level of intellect that is evidenced by the remarks of some of the backbenchers of the Liberal party. It is no wonder we in the opposition must speak out for freedom in this country when there is a bunch of asses like those speaking out from the back benches of the Liberal party at the present time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. The Chair would like to bring to the attention of hon. members that the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates) has the floor. At the same time, I wish to remind the hon. member that the language used in this House should be on the highest level.

Mr. Nowlan: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I do not think that your ruling was quite correct, with all respect. Asses do not speak out. Asses just bray, as we have seen.

• (3:00 p.m.)

Mr. Coates: If anybody is deeply hurt, I can always change the word to "jackasses," "donkeys," "oxen," or something that is at least as appropriate and indicates the degree of esteem in which these members should be held by the Canadian people for the great contribution they have made up till now. We have heard members who support the government suggest that Canada is either in the throes of a civil war or on the verge of it. If that is the case, why have the people of Canada not been told, because I am sure one does not overnight get to the point of being involved in a civil war. Why has the government not taken action before now to prevent such a situation developing?

My hon. friends suggest that we are on the verge of a civil war. To my knowledge this situation has been in existence in this country since at least 1963. Until now people have not been kidnapped, but they have been killed and maimed, properties have been destroyed and threats have been made over and over again against the state, against the province of Quebec and against people. Nothing new has occurred, except that a British diplomat and a Quebec cabinet minister have been kidnapped. It is terrible to think that this has occurred, but it is just a continuation and an escalation of what has been going on since 1963, a period of seven years.

If during that period of time this government had thought we were approaching a civil war, should it not have taken steps to produce legislation that would have given it the power to stamp out once and for all insurrection in this country, instead of announcing at 4 a.m. that Canada is to have its liberty and freedom set aside? And our liberty and freedom is to be set aside not just for today or tomorrow, not just for this week or next week but for 6½ months at least while the government moves in whatever way it decides to move to eliminate the problem as it sees it.

An hon. Member: Brilliant!

Mr. Coates: We heard the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) speak yesterday. He made a brilliant speech, but he should have because no man in this country, including the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), bears greater responsibility than the Minister of Justice. He is the guardian, not only of the law but of the liberty and freedom of the individual. If we as individuals in this nation cannot depend on him to jealously guard our freedom, we do not have much hope.

Let us go back, not to 1963 but to June of 1968 at which time I and all hon. members of the House were involved in an election campaign. At that time I was led to believe—I have read and listened to the Liberal propaganda—that the problems facing Canada between 1963 and 1968 would disappear immediately, overnight with the election of Pierre Elliot Trudeau as Prime Minister of Canada; that the just society would come into effect and that regional economic disparity would be eliminated immediately.

Mr. Cafik: How stupid can you get.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Coates: The Canadian electorate were stupid to believe that Pierre Elliott Trudeau would produce that situation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I would ask the hon. gentleman to resume his seat. Is the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Cafik: I was rising to ask if I could ask the hon. member a question.

Mr. Coates: If the hon. member wishes to ask a question, he can do so when I have finished my speech. We were told that with the election of a prime minister from the province of Quebec we would have no serious problems in the days ahead, because who better could talk to the people of Quebec than someone from their province, and who better could show them that federalism was the way of life for all Canadians to follow? What has happened? After less than 2½ years in office we have heard this Prime Minister say that he does not have the answers, there is no just society and he does not even want to use that slogan any more because the just society is not working out.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Coates: The jackasses are still braying in the background.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Coates: What we have now, rather than a just society, is an unjust society that infringes upon our liberty and freedom, liberty and freedom which we are told is being eliminated for a reason which a great many Canadians feel is proper. I do not say for one moment that the action taken by the Prime Minister is unpopular in the country. Indeed, last night I listened to Premiers from coast to coast saying that it was a reasonable action on the part of the government. They had not even had an opportunity to look at the regulations passed under the War Measures Act, yet they were saying they believed it was a reasonable action. When they look at the regulations and see that, among other things, they provide as follows, I wonder what their reaction will be:

> 8. In any prosecution for an offence under these Regulations, evidence that any person
>
> (a) attended any meeting of the unlawful association,
>
> (b) spoke publicly in advocacy for the unlawful association, or
>
> (c) communicated statements of the unlawful association as a representative or professed representative of the unlawful association is, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, proof that he is a member of the unlawful association.
>
> 9. (1) a peace officer may arrest without warrant (a) a person who he has reason to suspect is a member of the unlawful association;

• (3:10 p.m.)

A police officer may, after arresting an individual, incarcerate him in jail for a period of 90 days. The hon.

member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) suggests that this may be too severe. He says that members of the opposition have been asked by the Prime Minister to make suggestions regarding the type of legislation that should be produced. But although the Prime Minister says that, he is unwilling to give us the facts about the seriousness of the situation. In the absence of documentation on the seriousness of the situation we are supposed to propose legislation for the government's consideration. How ridiculous could anything become? Mr. Speaker, it is the government's responsibility to produce legislation based on the facts that it has and outlining the degree of power it feels it should have. We are saying that nothing we know indicates that the government had to go to the extreme that it did in order to secure the power it has today.

Let us consider the country to our south, which is much bigger than Canada, with ten times as many people. It has all kinds of difficulties because of organizations like the FLQ. It has dozens of organizations like the FLQ which are bent on the destruction of that country, bent on the destruction of its system of government, just as the FLQ is bent on the destruction of our system of government. But that government has not announced that civil war exists in the United States. It has not proclaimed that the President of the United States should be made a dictator. It has logically and systematically asked its legislative bodies to increase the power of the President so that he may be better able to protect the individual through law and order. How much more reasonable it would have been had our government, when it knew the seriousness of the situation existing in the province of Quebec, moved to take the same steps, to produce the same kind of legislation that would have given the Prime Minister the type of power that the President of the United States achieved through the legislative process?

All Canadians have been asked by the Prime Minister to accept his decision, to agree to the elimination of liberty and freedom so far as the regulations passed under the War Measures Act are concerned. I watched the Prime Minister last night on television, as I am sure most Canadians did. He did a tremendous job in explaining his position; there is no argument about that. As a matter of fact, I think that even Barbra Streisand would have been proud of him last night because he acted so well. But, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is a Jekyll and Hyde. I recall seeing the Prime Minister in this House of Commons yesterday, when he was listening to a former prime minister outlining the documentation that had been presented to a committee of this House by the mayor and chairman of the executive committee of the city of Montreal. When he had finished gesturing, making fun of a former prime minister, he had this to say as recorded at page 204 of Hansard:

> Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out to the hon. member that I was very willing to listen to him but if he intends to read nonsense in this way—

The "nonsense" that the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) was reading happened to be the evidence that had been placed before a special committee of this House inquiring into the activities of the Company of Young Canadians. That was the Prime Minister we saw in action in the House of Commons. He was a far different fellow from the individual who appeared on television last night pleading with the people of Canada, at his pleading best, to bear with him during the period in which liberty and freedom were to be set aside so that he could wipe out the insurgents in the province of Quebec. That is just one of the many examples of the type of Prime Minister we have.

I remember when he was Minister of Justice and he rose in this House and told members of the opposition, "We are the masters of the House." I remember very well when as Prime Minister he said on July 25, 1969, as recorded at page 11635 of Hansard:

> The opposition seems to think it has nothing else to do but talk. They say: If there is a problem, we will talk. If there is a difficulty, we will talk about it. If the government is going too slowly, we will talk about it. If there is a real problem in some part of Canada, we will talk about it. That is all they have to do. They do not have to govern—

An hon. Member: Amen.

Mr. Coates:

> —they have only to talk. The best place in which to talk, if they want a quorum is, of course, Parliament. When they get home, when they get out of Parliament, when they are 50 yards from Parliament Hill, they are no longer hon. members—they are just nobodies—

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, that is the Prime Minister who is asking the people of Canada to go along with him. If he says that Members of Parliament, who represent the 21 million people in this country, are nobodies, then what are the Canadians in the street whom the members of this House represent?

An hon. Member: Somebodies.

Mr. Coates: I wonder just how high is the Prime Minister's regard for the ordinary man in the street, if a Member of Parliament is a nobody. Yet he is the man who says, "Bear with me, my friends. I will be a benevolent dictator for 6½ months, or I will then tell you how much longer I will be a benevolent dictator." The Prime Minister allowed a situation to develop in the province of Quebec. He saw it developing even before he became a Member of Parliament. He saw it developing when he was in this House as Minister of Justice and then as Prime Minister. Then suddenly, at four o'clock in the morning, he said, "Today I assume new and greater powers; greater powers than any man has ever held in the history of this country." He took those powers unto himself.

• (3:20 p.m.)

Last night he put on sackcloth and ashes. He told us a fine story. No doubt Canadians were touched by his performance. If that had been the performance of the Prime Minister day in and day out, I would say it was well and good. But that is not the kind of performance the right hon. gentleman puts on for the members of the House, who protect our freedom and liberty. He laughs at us; he gets up in the middle of our speeches and walks out; he sits down and hoots at us when we ask him legitimate questions; he stands up and says, "If you are going to heckle me, I am not going to talk to you; I am going to take my doll home and play."

An hon. Member: That is pretty childish.

Mr. Aiken: It is childish.

Mr. Coates: That is the kind of Prime Minister we have. That is not the man who put on such a performance last night on television. They are different men; they are Jekyll and Hyde. I do not know which of these two men wields the greatest power that has ever been assumed by any individual in this country.

An hon. Member: Mr. Hyde does.

Mr. Coates: I am afraid that instead of Dr. Jekyll, it is Mr. Hyde.

An hon. Member: Are you Barnum, or Bailey?

Mr. Coates: I will take the hon. member into the circus, because he is the biggest clown you will ever see.

An hon. Member: There's a sucker born every minute.

Mr. Coates: The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) had this to say yesterday about the government's action, as reported at page 195 of Hansard:

> The War Measures Act provides for the possibility of very sweeping interference with what we ordinarily consider to be the civil rights and liberties of Canadians. It is true that the government has presented and adopted regulations which do not invoke all the powers of the War Measures Act but, the War Measures Act having been invoked, there certainly are many additional powers in reserve which the government could utilize by regulation at any time. Furthermore, the extensive powers described in the regulations are to be in effect until April 30, 1971, a very considerable length of time. These powers apply, of course, throughout the country.

It is my belief, Mr. Speaker—I want to make this abundantly clear—that it was not necessary for the government at 4 a.m. yesterday to go to the extreme of invoking the War Measures Act. But now this has been done, now that the government has taken this action, now that this law is in effect, I say the government ought to move forward and produce for this House specific legislation giving the power necessary to combat the FLQ and any other subversive organization in this country. The legislation should be in effect for whatever period the government may deem necessary. But I say that whatever reason there was for invoking the War Measures Act, the inherent value of using that legislation has now gone.

Surely, the most significant reason the government can put forward for adopting an act giving it such sweeping powers as the right of immediate arrest is that surprise was needed to round up the insurgents. The government did not want to take the chance of their doing any more damage. Now that the element of surprise has gone, why does the government say, "We want this power for an additional six months and we are not even willing to consider giving it up before then"?

Why cannot the government, if it knows the facts, come to this House with them. It says it knows the facts and on the basis of those facts it has invoked the War Measures Act. If that is the case, surely the government must know what is required by way of special criminal law that would allow it to deal with the problems in Quebec. If that is the case, why does the government not bring legislation before us immediately so that we may consider and discuss it in this chamber which is the embodiment of freedom, liberty and the democratic institutions of this country.

The government produced the regulations it wanted, all-embracing as they are, in the short period of time that was available to it. Therefore, why cannot it bring forward special legislation that would give it the same powers but would not give the Prime Minister and the cabinet the additional, all-embracing power that abridges the liberty of every Canadian, which liberty may be eliminated if that be the wish of the federal government and the attorney general of any province. Why cannot the government make that move now, instead of 6½ months from now? Why cannot it now produce the legislation which it feels is required in order to stamp out the FLQ and other terrorist organizations in the province of Quebec?

Because I believe the power that has been assumed by this government is far greater than it need be and will bring more danger than good to the future of our nation, I wish to amend the motion to read as follows:

> The House approves the action of the government in invoking the powers of the War Measures Act to meet the state of apprehended insurrection in the province of Quebec as communicated to the Prime Minister by the government of Quebec and the civic authorities of Montreal and further approves the orders and regulations tabled today by the Prime Minister on the clear understanding that the proclamation invoking the powers as contained in the regulations will be revoked on or before October 30, 1970, unless a resolution authorizing their extension beyond the date specified has been approved by the House.

Mr. Bell: Let the government get around that one.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I would ask the hon. member to send a copy of his amended motion to the Chair.

Mr. Dubé: May we also have a copy of it, Mr. Speaker?

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. Paul St. Pierre (Coast Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, I introduce my remarks by pointing out to the House that in my part of the country laws are not the most important element of our lives. In Coast Chilcotin we prefer fewer laws, not more. There are a great many who hanker for the good old days when laws were few and simple. As one old-timer expressed it, in those days we did not have many laws in this country and the few we had, the people broke. Arising out of this, Mr. Speaker, I have an impulse of sympathy for those in the opposition who have been opposing this drastic measure taken by the government.

Whatever my impulse may be, Mr. Speaker, I feel bound to follow as best as I am able the fundamental law of common sense. In common sense, this government had no choice except to act as it did. It had a duty to protect six million good citizens of Quebec from a few hundred terrorists. The government had to move swiftly. It could not afford the luxury of prior public debate about its plans.

If there was any way that this government could have announced its intentions days before taking action and still have rounded up any suspects when a new law was finally passed, I have not heard a single member of the opposition explain it to my satisfaction.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. St. Pierre: I have no hesitation in fully supporting the measure, Mr. Speaker, much as I and other members of this House dislike it. If this were all I had to say, there would not be much reason for being on my feet. All the reasons in favour of this move have been given fully and very eloquently by speakers who have preceded me and there is not much point in my repeating them. But there is another aspect to the situation.

We in this House are discussing democracy. Democracy is closely bound with the whole question of the introduction of this measure. This is a time to ask ourselves: How well is this operation proceeding on Parliament Hill? How well does it serve the nation? To what extent should we respond to the mood of the people? To what extent should we react to the strengths and weaknesses of the democratic system? In the few minutes available to me I should like to deal with just one of the operations on Parliament Hill.

There is an operation here which I suggest is not fulfilling its function. Its members are supposedly appointed for merit. All too often I suspect they drift into that body as a reward for long service. They are appointed, Mr. Speaker, not elected. Not for them, the true test of democracy, the test of the ballot-box. They in fact very often claim that their voice is the voice of the Canadian public, but they never put it to the test of the vote. Of course, there are some good men among them—clever, brilliant, distinguished men.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will realize there is a motion before the House which, to my understanding, does not cover the subject upon which the hon. member now seems to be embarking. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) seems to be mesmerized by the hon. member's comments, and perhaps a few others. I suggest that the hon. member is straying some distance from the matter now before the House for consideration.

Mr. St. Pierre: I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that many preceding speakers have dealt at great length with the question of whether democracy is working properly in this country. I am merely following on the path that they have opened.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the War Measures Act has been proclaimed, which makes it possible for the government to bring in other orders to do anything that it wants, perhaps the hon. member will suggest that an order be brought in abolishing the other place. I think we should allow him to develop his case.

Mr. St. Pierre: I was saying, Mr. Speaker, that these appointed persons very frequently claim to speak for the public of Canada. However, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre misunderstands my meaning. He appears to think that I am discussing the Canadian Senate. I am discussing the parliamentary press gallery.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Red is my face, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. St. Pierre: It is perhaps the largest collection of singular, incurious reporters ever gathered in a single place. I stress the word "reporters". In the newspaper business a good reporter is the noblest work of God, a man who can get facts, get them right, often in spite of strenuous opposition, gain them if necessary by subterfuge, but get the facts. Place the significant facts in front of the reporter. This is the one man on which the entire industry depends. He is more than an editor, editorial writer, publisher or columnist. He is more than all of them together—because the reporter digs out facts. Without him, none of the others would have any material with which to work.

Something seems to happen, even to good reporters, when they enter the parliamentary press gallery. All too often they turn into pundits and are never again good for anything.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must confess, if it is in order for the Chair to make confessions, that I had the same misunderstanding as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. If the words of the hon. member had referred to the other place and were out of order, they are equally out of order with regard to the fourth estate. The hon. member should in due course indicate how the remarks which he is making are related to the motion before the House.

Mr. St. Pierre: I can only repeat what I have already said, Mr. Speaker. The operation of the press is a fundamental part of democracy, and I suggest to hon. members that what we are discussing in this debate on the War Measures Act is the essence of democracy. Unless there is a functioning press, we cannot have democracy.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. St. Pierre: I would draw the attention of the House to the pundits. Certainly we have plenty of them. Every morning they get up and put their fingers on the pulse of the Canadian public. They have never been elected, but somehow they know exactly what the public is thinking and they inform us of the success or failure of this or that government motion, what the feelings of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) are, or what sort of power play is operating within this or that party.

We get that familiar Parliament Hill news story in which significant facts are as scarce as a piece of pork in a can of beans. Of course, the pundits are never defeated. They never stand for election, and they are never defeated. In recent months they explained to us how the Social Credit government was going to lose the election in British Columbia, how Wilson was going to win the election in Britain, and how Mr. Smith was going to win the election in Nova Scotia.

Failure does not bother them, because a pundit is a man who can predict what is going to happen tomorrow, the next day, next month or next year and is never at a loss to explain why it did not happen. They are entertaining fellows; their writings are often witty and certainly highly enjoyable. But, Mr. Speaker, where have all the reporters gone? Where are the men who can give the Canadian public the plain, unvarnished facts about what goes on on Parliament Hill?

Where is the respect which the parliamentary press gallery should claim from members of this House? It does not command it, from my observation, from what I can sense of the feelings of Members of Parliament after two years here, which is not a long time but I have taken care to try to sense their feelings. The feelings toward the parliamentary press gallery are equal measures of fear and contempt. Members fear the gallery because the press is for many members the only consistent means of contact with the constituency at home. This is why I say it is vital to the process of democracy. A bad press for a member can be devastatingly damaging. The contempt arises for the reasons I have already listed.

It was interesting in the course of this debate to observe the reaction of the House to the attack on the French language CBC made by the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette). He has made it before. Yesterday I made a particular point of scanning the House while the hon. member for Témiscamingue was launching his familiar attack. In the time I had available I observed that every French-speaking Canadian member of this House, in all parties, applauded his words. This, surely, is a serious matter.

I cannot discuss French language television because I do not see it. In fact, I very rarely see English language television; on the few occasions that I do, I have usually found the reporting rather tendentious. But there is no doubt, I suggest, as to the mood of this House concerning the services of the CBC, and I do not think it will be good enough for the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) to continue to shrug his shoulders and say the matter is out of his hands.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. St. Pierre: I return to that part of the media I observe more closely, that is, the newspapers. I am not enjoying making this speech, because the gallery contains some very able and hardworking newspapermen and I feel a temptation to single them out by name. This would scarcely be fair because by force of circumstances I have come to be acquainted with the work of some of them and not of others, and to name one or two while ignoring others would be unfair. But I should not fail to exempt one organization from my criticism, and that is the Canadian Press. I suggest we do not give enough recognition to that organization, Mr. Speaker. Hour after hour, day after day in this House we look up, and of the some 130 men in the press gallery one only is there—the Canadian Press reporter.

The general public does not realize that members of the gallery seldom attend the House except for the brief circus of the question period. From my own observation, the Canadian Press still clings to the principle of objective reporting and the reporting of fact. It was drilled into that organization by a very fine newspaper man named Gil Purcell. However, there is another fact about the Canadian Press that most hon. members in this House may not know. It is a co-operative news-gathering agency whose funds are provided by a number of newspapers; and with their typical parsimonious and niggardly attitude, the Canadian publishers starve it.

The Canadian Press does not have enough men here to staff the many jobs they are doing or could be doing so well for us. The publishers, I submit, bear the responsibility for much of this breakdown in communication between Parliament and the people of Canada. The publishers should get down here and take a look at what is going on. They should know, some of them, that what they are providing here is a gaggle of old hens who cluck around in the parliamentary restaurant over a few grains of gossip. The Canadian public deserves better.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. St. Pierre: They should send down here some young, eager and curious men. Reporters, Mr. Speaker, are what we need, not somebody with a degree in political science and an exaggerated sense of his own omniscience. I suggest they should come from the police beat, which is one of the hardest in the newspaper business because policemen do not provide facts freely or easily. It is a great beat for gathering news and a fine training ground for reporters.

I blame the editors. Sitting hundreds or thousands of miles from Parliament Hill, they take it upon themselves to decide what is happening down here. Time and time again they send a reporter down here and say, "Go your own lick. Get in deep and find the stories." Two days after, the correspondent's phone is ringing. The editor says: "Get the local angle on this. We need a follow-up on that. Why weren't you at this or that press conference?" Most of the time these editors can get everything they need along these lines from the Canadian Press. But when an editor gets what he calls his "own man" in Ottawa, he cannot seem to rest unless he is poking, prodding and chivvying him around.

Of course, the introduction of a number of crackerjack reporters into the press gallery will not be an unalloyed joy to the government. But it would be very healthy for the government. Active reporters would find out secrets and print them, and that is how it should be. What is needed, if the Canadian public is to get the factual information it should be getting from Parliament Hill, is new blood in the press gallery. I thank hon. members for their attention.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, at the outset, I should like to congratulate the hon. member who spoke before me for the courage and the audacity he has shown in saying in a loud voice what several hon. members have been thinking for many years. He touched upon a subject which I wanted to bring up myself during my remarks. Although his speech did not deal solely with the subject matter under consideration, namely the passage of measures intended to remedy the difficult situation in Quebec, he said some things which should make us think and should remind the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) that it is his responsibility to see to it that his department exercize more stringent control over the C.B.C. which, in the past few days namely, has given too much publicity to the FLQ anarchists, much more than it has ever granted hon. members.

Therefore, I congratulate again the member who has the expertise since he is of the trade, I am told, and who is aware that the criticisms of his government bring out some deficiencies of this Liberal government which otherwise would not be noticed by the public. However, he should also remember that in 1962, 1963, 1965 and 1968, we, the Conservatives, especially those from Quebec, have been the victims of a partisan and blind press which was seeking to show but one side instead of stressing the quality of the candidates.

Mr. Speaker, I will have the opportunity of dealing with this question on another occasion. I should like now to deal with the subject under discussion. What is strange is the fact that we are expressing our opinions on the emergency measures to be taken in order to end this emergency.

In the circumstances, it seems rather cynical or ironical that today we should discuss the survival of democracy in Canada.

This is the first opportunity provided us by the government to take advantage of democracy. Since the government took office, the opposition has never been able to outline its views and have them accepted, partly if not totally. Even if the amendments proposed by the opposition were good, the government would reject them. Today, for the first time, we are enjoying complete freedom to discuss an important matter.

Yesterday, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), for whom I have great admiration and much personal friendship, told us in his speech that the House should sit long enough to allow all hon. members to express their opinions on the war measures.

He even suggested that the government was ready to move that the House should sit until all hon. members had stated their views.

This is the first time that we see the government recognize that it must set an example of democracy, if it wants to impose it by force on Canada, and especially on Quebec. I hope that this will be a lesson to the government and that it will realize that democrary is not a one-way proposition or concession, in short that democracy really exist only when all members of society have the same rights, the same privileges and the same possibilities to represent their fellow-citizens.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Of course we could quote several examples showing that this government has never respected this democracy of which he proclaims itself the sole defender.

Mr. Speaker, we have been living through some dark and painful hours in Quebec. Some hon. members have expressed their opinions in an honest, conscientious and responsible way. As for those who do not agree with me, I respect their opinion and I hope that they will respect mine. Nobody in this House is in a better position to judge the seriousness of the situation than the hon. members from Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, I do not wish for a moment to excuse the way the government has acted, but in the circumstances the authorities did not have any other means available to thwart the organized offensive prepared perhaps by the Company of Young Canadians which has been financed by the federal government for several years. The members of the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs have found out that a great many members of the Company of Young Canadians were activists, anarchists who, with the financial means provided by the government, had been able to spread their hate and prepare disorder and revolt.

I wittingly refrain from answering certain political provocations coming from some government members answer these considerations. In the interest of all Canadians, we should limit ourselves to the careful study of the question and try to understand that there is an explosive situation in Quebec and everywhere in Canada, if it admitted that Quebec is a part of Canada, and that the authorities had not only the moral but the political obligation to intervene—according to the information given to us by the government—upon request not from the Quebec Liberal party but from the government of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, if the government had refused to meet this urgent request from the authorities of the province of Quebec, it would have simply refused to recognize the authority or the right of a provincial government to take the line of action required to protect the people. I believe that in the circumstances, the federal authorities had to comply with the request of the government of Quebec.

Besides, Mr. Speaker, we, in our party, feel that the government could have prevented such events through amendments to the Criminal Code or other appropriate measures likely to achieve the same purposes. The thing is to know whether the government had enough time to pass such a legislation considering that the situation was deteriorating at an alarming speed.

• (4:00 p.m.)

One must have lived under that tension, and worried about one's security and that of one's family to understand the situation and appraise the importance of the decision taken by the government. I feel that we should objectively ask ourselves: What was the situation in Quebec 15 days ago, 7 days ago, a couple of days ago?

The government and the people of Quebec as well as the Canadian government were given the ultimatum by a group of revolutionaries to accede to its requests in order to spare the lives of two innocent people. The alternative was not easy for the governments, and I feel that a sense of responsibility was needed to meet the challenge as the governments of Quebec and Ottawa did. They also had to ask themselves whether there were other means at their disposal. I feel that, under the circumstances, there were none.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, my colleague the member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates), proposed the kind of amendment that will surely ease whatever concern some people might have if the emergency measures were to be maintained over a long period of time.

I trust the government will seriously consider this amendment. Obviously, the measure set before the house smacks of dictatorship and interference with fundamental civil liberties. There is the danger of too strict a control of the state over the individual. That is why we, of the Progressive Conservative Party, have cause for concern if the government intends to apply these emergency measures over too long a period. That is why my colleague moved this amendment. I hope the government will indicate to us that it does not intend to use these extraordinary powers to inflict its whims upon the people.

That is what my colleague was trying to point out earlier.

I would have voted against the measures proposed by the government, but if I have decided, along with some of my colleagues, to support the government, it is because were we to refuse our full support to the government for the implementation of the measures taken, we would be supplying additional weapons to the FLQ, which would use that argument to denounce the autocracy, the interference and the authoritarianism of governments. I would not want to take that chance, because radio, television and the press have already given them too much publicity.

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Say that to your leader.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I could easily answer the hon. member for Laval and tell him some government members disagree with the government on that point.

An hon. Member: Name them.

Mr. Valade: Ask them.

An hon. Member: Name them.

Mr. Valade: Here is proof that some government members are not being serious about such an important question. And, had I wished to answer, I would have been side-tracked by government members—

An hon. Member: Name them.

Mr. Valade: —and we would fail to discuss the subject matter and the importance of the question. I do not intend to digress right now, but I shall do so some other time. This is a serious matter, and I feel it is not the proper time to make jokes.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) once said: Enough of this nonsense. Today, it is not nonsense we are discussing but the very serious situation that now exists in Canada. Some 10,000 policemen and a great number of troops are now posted all over Montreal, and specially outside the homes of all diplomats and officials of municipal, provincial and federal governments. That is an indication of a state of things so serious that we cannot afford to wander off into frolic and nonsense.

Mr. Speaker, the information function of the press was discussed earlier. I am among those in the House who are entitled to complain of the lack of objective information supplied by parliamentary reporters with a few exceptions, as our Liberal colleague who spoke before me stated.

Quebec newspapers almost totally lack objective information as regards members of the opposition and here is proof. During the month of november 1969, I asked the government to think seriously of the situation which existed in that province and I said, as recorded on page 453 of Hansard:

> Mr. Speaker, to close one's eyes and to pretend that things will settle with time is to sit on an erupting volcano.
>
> For too long the Prime Minister of Canada has ignored or made light of the many warnings that were given to him, both in this House and outside. When tolerance, Mr. Speaker, turns to flabbiness, when liberalism becomes licence and political dogma obliterates authority, sweeping reforms are needed to prevent a disaster.

The government answered that we could not foresee that the situation would degenerate into this critical state. This is not true. We were talking about it in the House last year and the newspapers never mentioned our interventions. Were they bent on hiding our warnings to the government? Was what we were saying too serious for them to find the "sensationalism" needed for their headlines? I do not know. Owing to the lack of objective press coverage the people of Quebec were kept too long in the dark about the work of their representatives in the House of Commons. This is why extremists use these pretexts to rouse the population by saying: Why continue to be loyal and faithful to a central government that is not interested in our problems? They are right in reacting this way, considering the lack of information. The correspondents are not telling our people of Quebec what their members of Parliament are doing in the House of Commons. I would like them to report not only on those members who do address the House. We all know that our work day begins at 9 o'clock in the morning and ends at 11 o'clock at night, four or five days a week. When has a correspondent told the population what the job of a member of Parliament actually consists of? Parliamentary correspondents have written only about the pay increase the members will eventually get and sure enough this topic did make the headlines!

It was a sensational topic for newspapermen. But when a member stands up and tells the government: be cautious, pass legislation to avoid tragedy, find solutions to economic problems, to disparities, bring in legislation to remedy the situation, reporters do not even mention it.

We have sat on committees, we have worked 12 to 15 hours a day in certain cases. Occasionally, there was one newspaperman, but most of the time there was none.

It is not surprising that we see a clash in Quebec and I am not in any way condoning the extremists for having taken advantage of the situation. But if we have this explosive situation today, someone is responsible. The responsibilities should not only be laid at the door of governments and members, of provincial and federal politicians, of city councillors, but also at the door of the press, radio and television as well as of every Canadian citizen.

If we have come to the point where a member must return home accompanied by a soldier, it is that we are leaning over the abyss and that we must take the necessary action to protect the lives of the citizens, the lives of those who are respectful of law and democracy.

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister said yesterday, and I quote:

• (4:10 p.m.)

[English]

Those people of the FLQ have utter contempt for the rights of others.

[Translation]

I agree with the Prime Minister in that regard. However, I ask the Secretary of State the following question: Is it true that those people refuse to respect the citizens' rights? Why, in the last few years has the Secretary of State let the state radio and television systems be systematically invaded, to be used for revolutionary purposes in Quebec?

We have often urged the minister to appeal to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation so that Algerian, German or Cuban revolutionaries would stop corrupting the minds of our young people and inciting distressed workers to revolt and protest. At that time, he gave us the stock answer: As a minister, I am only the CBC's spokesman. If that is so, then let us make the necessary amendments. After all, it is certainly not an unassailable fortress, unless it is the headquarters of the FLQ.

Something must be done. We must stop burying our heads in sand and ignoring the existence of corruption and attacks on public figures, governments and traditions, the instigator of which is the CBC for which the Canadian people pay millions of dollars each year.

Here is something worse still: Recently, a CBC commentator, who had been sent to the Press Gallery, was airing his views on the hon. members. According to him, all hon. members—apparently he did not want to spare any—especially the French-speaking members from Quebec, are not worth much. He told someone: no hon. member from Quebec has any ability. I shall not name him because I would not want to put him in a position where the authorities would consider that he is being persecuted by politicians.

It rests upon the CBC to see that its employees are objective and do not show partiality, depending on circumstances, their whims and their moods.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to give proof of what I state because it is well known that I always say what I think, in spite of the dissatisfaction that it might cause in news circles.

In August last, some politicians criticized the travels of the Prime Minister abroad, the country being in a difficult economic situation, and the CBC broadcast these charges. It was a newscast and not a public affairs or information program since it began with these words: "You will be hearing now a commentary from our correspondent in Ottawa". The correspondent in Ottawa said on the air that the Conservative opposition, for want of serious arguments, had criticized the Prime Minister for his travels abroad, and he added that he knew that the Prime Minister, when travelling, took a lot of paperwork with him, because he was a glutton for work. I do not intend to discuss the working habits of the Prime Minister, because when he is on a business trip, he has work to do surely. But that a newsman should take advantage of a news bulletin to make a personal remark with a political impact, that is altering the news. It is an abuse of his position, since this position comes under governmental authority.

Mr. Speaker, I felt it was my duty to make these remarks, since a Liberal member has made similar ones before I did. There is at this time in the province of Quebec a dangerous situation because the life of two men hangs on the emergency measures proposed by the government, as well as on the investigations and searches that are being conducted.

But it is our duty, as public men, to eliminate some situations, otherwise Quebec will cease to be a part of Canada.

Last year I attempted to bring some problems to the attention of the authorities. The government did not heed my warnings. Today I have an opportunity to submit to the government some remarks on the fundamental freedoms of the individual. When public men, elected by the people to represent them, are denied such freedom, how can it be granted to the population as a whole?

Those, to my mind, are contradictions to be found in the government's attitude. If we adopt emergency measures merely to deal with such an explosive situation, those measures should be followed up by legislation to correct the anomalies that exist in the economic and social fields as well as in the news media, especially when a government agency financed from taxpayers' money is concerned.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the government and my colleagues will understand that I am bound to vote in favour of the emergency measures. It must be understood that when the survival of freedom, of the Quebec people and of all Canadians is at stake, there is no room here for political disputes since the general welfare must come first.

Mr. Speaker, I hope my remarks have not hurt anyone. At least, this was not the intent of my contribution. I hope that the newsmen, who might be hurt by my remarks and those of the previous speaker, will understand that after 12 years in this House, we can no longer keep silent about this situation. Those people should understand that we are not trying to control or censor the news media. Far from it. But more often than not we are ourselves censored and intimidated by those people, their behaviour, their lack of objectivity and information.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Since the beginning of this debate on the motion concerning the enforcement of the War Measures Act, too many members of the opposition and journalists have taken the Right Honourable Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his cabinet to task, accusing them of depriving the Canadian people of their liberties.

When a minority takes advantage of the great freedom we have to undermine our parliamentary institutions, we are duty bound to grant those who are responsible for the protection of society emergency powers in order to maintain law and order.

Mr. Speaker, we shall preserve and improve our civilization provided it is realized that it does not result from a combination of mysterious and elusive elements, from a blind and senseless fate. All of us contribute to make it every day by our actions.

In a well-organized democracy, society must be directed towards progress by the authority. Therefore it must have the support of all the citizens which it will have to co-ordinate in a well-adjusted entity, which respecting the indefeasible rights of everyone to live in honest liberty. The best formula to lead us to this ideal is democracy, that is government of the people, by the people and for the people. It constitutes a political state in which sovereignty belongs to all the citizens, without distinction of birth, wealth and ability.

Canadian society is presently endowed with one of the best forms of government ever found. Does the public know it? Does the youth understand it? Is civic training an element expressly desired in education? Are the means of communication, press, radio, television positive enough to show and have appreciated the good side of life in Canada, in its true sense?

Never in the history of mankind has life been as good as it has been these last years. However, in spite of the ever increasing rate of progress, discontent, criminal activities, rebellion and even revolution on an organized scale seem to gain wider acceptance from day to day.

The FLQ which has made the headlines in Quebec for several years now has set up a revolutionary program which is well organized all across the "belle province" and besides ammunitions and dynamite, this group can boast of weapon at its disposal, the most effective, the information media.

In recent years, the Gaspé area has seemed to lose its calmness during summer, particularly since the information media, with the CBC in the lead, have presented a new colourful description of the Maison du Pêcheur at Percé and of its occupants as well.

During the summer holidays the Maison du Pêcheur is the meeting place of protesters and anarchists of the province of Quebec and their sympathizers. Persons like Pauline Julien and Pierre Vallières visited those young anarchists at that Percé training school last summer. That is part of an overall plan, a well-organized system, as the hon. Minister for Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) pointed out to the House yesterday.

When the activists at the Maison du Pêcheur occupied private hunting and fishing grounds in the Gaspé area last summer, that was part of the program of revolutionary activities in Quebec whereby private fishing grounds in the province were to be visited during 1970.

The population of the Grande-Rivière area became indignant at the temporary occupation of that peaceful club whose members leave more than $50,000 in salaries and other income to that municipality. Furthermore, that club protects the reproduction of salmon in the Gaspé peninsula.

The goal of the activists at La Maison du Pêcheur was to prevent the people of the Gaspé area from fishing in that river, because they have many other fishing spots. Indeed, that river contains hardly 200 salmons. The activists were looking only for a certain publicity over the CBC and in the newspapers of the fair province. They attained their goal. And the police succeeded in getting them out of the club which they occupied only when they told them: If you do not get out, we will use force and to take you to jail. And as soon as they were told: "We are bringing you in", they got out smiling. That is where they wanted to go, in order to allow their lawyer, Mr. Robert Lemieux of Montreal, to be able to go to Percé. As to the latter, he enjoyed free publicity over the CBC network and in all the other news media.

However, with regard to what happened in the Gaspé peninsula last summer, especially, in connection with

La Maison du Pêcheur, the action taken by the Corporation des Enseignants du Québec was the last straw. They helped Lemieux and the anarchists by providing $100 bail for each of the prisoners, several of whom already had a criminal record.

The circular letters distributed in the Gaspé peninsula last summer by the activists from La Maison du Pêcheur bear a close resemblance to the FLQ manifesto published after the kidnapping of diplomat James Richard Cross. Those people are therefore members of or fellow-travellers of the very same revolutionary organization that we are declaring illegal in order to protect the freedom of the honest citizens of the Gaspé peninsula, as well as those of the cities of Montreal and Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker, history teaches us that small active groups can destroy democracy and replace it by a rule of terror.

We are happy in Canada compared to people in other countries, but to be happy is not enough. It is essential to know it and to think about it to realize what happiness truly is.

Each night, we take time out to think about that, reading newspapers, listening to the news and to the discussion of problems over radio and television. Unfortunately, as many previous speakers remarked, most of the time we hear about what the government has not done, about the ills of our society: crime, accidents, bankruptcies and class struggle. This gives rise in the individual to a deep feeling of insecurity and discontent. Young people do not have enough experience to consider the other point of view. They feel that they are being exploited, and that they live in a world where everything should be changed and overthrown.

Since the media are practically within everyone's reach, too often the most bitter Canadians use them to pour out their bitterness into the rather peaceful soul of the quiet majority of the working and honest people in this country.

Disturbance and disorder are more sensational than order and well-organized work, and it seems that it is this disturbance and disorder which is mainly covered by several of our radio and television stations, including the C.B.C.

A revolution is the product of immature minds which have skipped some stages in their development, and for want of taking the necessary time to mature, their only hope lies in destruction, in the belief that a new, perfect and calm order will crop up by itself without their building it.

Does Parliament at times give the people a true image of democracy? The government, elected by the majority, must be respected and even supported by the minority which did not select it. The right to express one's opposition to some government bill is indefeasible, but it must be done with a showing of respect for the authority lawfully elected, without ever interfering with the efficiency of its work. It is permissible to alert public opinion but never to thrust oneself upon it, motivated by personal interest in definance of truth and order.

Mr. Speaker, Canada and particularly Quebec are living through difficult times and the governments need the support of all political forces to save their institutions. Through our actions, we will inspire confidence to our young people who have been poisoned too often by the destructive ideals à la Michel Chartrand.

Allow me to quote an editorial aired by CJRC, Ottawa, on the present situation. I quote:

> We find comfort in the calm and the sense of measure of the local population who make allowances and consider these measures as necessary to avoid the worst. This is a plea to students. Doubtless impressed by recent events and inclined to participate in this social upheaval and follow like sheep the reactionaries who have no other purpose than the destruction of society, the majority of students are mature enough not to believe all they are told and to refrain from engaging in a symbolic crusade that can only lead to disaster.
>
> We are amazed to note, for instance, that some agitators are trying to prompt the students of the area to walk off following the arrests made during the night. Chartrand's arraignment was long overdue, because far too long he has been spewing his insults, his harsh and dirty words. He preaches nothing but revolution and anarchy.
>
> The students must realize that what is going on in Quebec is not a game, a cruisade; it is no longer a mere contestation: It is even worse, and you must stand and be counted not in support of those trained revolutionaries, but to show your good sense.
>
> You do not want to be governed some day by Chartrand, Vallières and other so-called patriots of the same ilk. Patriotism for those loud-mouths is anarchy.
>
> So, students, wake up and unite to protect what will be yours later: a democratic society where freedom is not trampled upon, but in which everybody must participate.
>
> Open your eyes, we are writing history. Do not think it is a game and reject from your midst the undesirable ones.

Canada belongs to Canadians, but Canadians must work for Canada. We are living in a huge country, but there must be no place in it for revolutionaries and anarchists.

The government must patiently and wisely safeguard the freedom of the community by restricting the liberty of those who want to destroy it.

It is dangerous to argue no end and to use the most sensible arguments with people who no longer speak the same language.

Society belongs first to those who work, who honestly pay their taxes, to those who express sincerely their views through a reasoned vote and who respect and support authority to whom they have delegated their administrative powers.

We must first ensure that society is successful for those people and ensure their happiness as well as the happiness of their families. People in the Gaspé peninsula, which I represent, wish to live in a society where the elected governments are respected. They expect those governments not to sacrifice society to a small bunch of revolutionaries who want to assume power at gunpoint.

• (4:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, during the time I have been here, which covers six Parliaments, I have, I fear, made a good many speeches. Never have I spoken with less joy, with more pain and distress, than I bring to my engagement in this very serious discussion. Indeed, I would say that I couple immense sorrow with considerable fear.

The strain upon members of this House has been great. It has been much greater on those who lead the country. We all know the immense stress which surrounds the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his associates, and even that is very much less than the awful anxiety which those who belong to Mr. Cross and Mr. Laporte have been bearing and enduring for far too long. Then, today, we have another sad postscript with the loss of a young Canadian, a member of the Armed Forces.

This is an important discussion and it is interesting, I think, to recall that we are now purely in a deliberative role rather than a legislative role because the impact of that which we are discussing has already been felt. The operation is in effect, and we are here not legislating in the sense that we are passing any law. We are seeking to appraise an action, a very important action, a very serious and unprecedented action already undertaken.

Tom Paine, many years ago, spoke of his age as "times that try men's souls," and we in public life in recent years might well say the same thing about this period in Canada. I verily believe that this House and this country are passing through fires which will leave such a mark upon our country and its institutions that they will never be quite the same again. I never thought that on a beautiful autumn Saturday I would be with my colleagues discussing in peacetime, or what we call peacetime, the question of the approval of the invocation of the War Measures Act in a situation wherein there has been no foreign invasion of this country.

• (4:40 p.m.)

We delude ourselves, Mr. Speaker, if we do not acknowledge that because of the terrible events of recent weeks, months and years Canada stands a little less tall than once it stood. In such times, and I have seen evidence of this in the debate, it is hard even for reasonable men to maintain a reasoned, reasonable and deliberative approach to public questions. These virtues are all the more essential to a steady deliberation of public questions because of the stresses and strains of the society around us and the easy inducements to quick, emotional responses to very serious matters. Already in this debate things have happened occasionally which I find regrettable. I had hoped that no one would seriously suggest, in trying to score debating points, that any one in this House, in this atmosphere of anxiety and tension, wants anything but the termination of the terror and the eradication of the terrorists in the FLQ just as quickly as possible. To suggest otherwise is, I think, shameless and regrettable. Let it not be suggested that any member cares less about the terrible travail of the people of Quebec than does any other member. I have no friends in the FLQ and no former friends in the FLQ.

I am happy that at long last some measures are being taken against these people. I hope they will be efficacious. But it is unworthy for anyone to suggest, however subtly, that any group or any individual is soft on these unworthy and unwholesome residents of this land and on those whose actions have brought us to this dread state of crisis. What we are trying to evaluate at present is the efficacy and propriety of various steps taken in respect thereof. But as to the desire and the need to rid the land of these diabolically active and evil men, there is no question; nor should anyone state that there is. Nor is it really helpful in these difficult times, when people are sorting out what they think are best approaches, for anyone to use designations such as, "bleeding hearts", or "weak kneed" or "timid". We are all terribly traumatized by the tragedy. I do not describe as weak-livered people those who, like the Premier of Saskatchewan, suggest, while recognizing as we all must the sanctity of human life, that perhaps throwing a few goons out of the country once and for all was a price that he would consider paying if he were in Premier Bourassa's shoes.

I think what is essentially the problem in this serious question, and since other members have advanced their points of view I will put my views in an abbreviated form, is that one might designate the government's handling of this situation very simply as, "Too much too late". The question which must be answered, and I think it is incumbent upon those in charge of the nation's affairs to answer it, is this: was there any other way of dealing with the situation, other than the suspension of the civil rights of Canadians, as is the case. There is no point I think, sir, in our discussing whether in fact there has been a suspension of civil rights. Of course, there has been a suspension of civil rights. Many people say that this is fine and that is their point of view. I have a feeling that many who applaud this particular exercise are, as the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) pointed out this morning, rejoicing that something is being done—and God help us, it is time that something was done. But it is our duty at this time to examine the nature of the action. Perhaps I ought to call it an extreme reaction.

People approve some action being taken. I think the whole country, except the possible victims of the action, is at one on this. But has it yet been demonstrated to us that this was the best, that this was the only solution? Many people in Canada are not, thank God, too familiar with the War Measures Act. I am sure that many people who have proclaimed their delight have not had the opportunity to read the regulations and probably are far from familiar with the War Measures Act. I am glad of that. I am glad that it is many, many years since this very, very serious piece of legislation has been operative, in this land in peace.

I am not going to indulge in a series of tirades or bring forward a catalogue of criticisms. That will not help much and it is not essentially in my nature so to do. Nevertheless, I think there is a terrible onus on the Prime Minister and his associates in two respects: they will have to answer to the people of this country for what they are doing now; but more so, I think, they will have to answer for what was not done for so long.

I heard the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) this morning, with his usual eloquence and sincerity, talk about some of the problems he has faced and the violations taking place around his home and office. Those are terrible. We have heard about these things for many, many months and years. One cannot help asking, not even the most charitable, why was so much allowed to happen without the state taking retribution by utilizing the powers of the police and the courts in their municipal, provincial and national emanations. The right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) yesterday, and my colleague for Red Deer today, catalogued, I think powerfully, masterfully and fairly the situation in respect of that particular aspect of the case. The public will ask, as it must, why this was not done. After this first operation is over, the public will have to know something more about the government's various operations in what I hope is the final phase of the crisis. This information must be forthcoming. There is a major responsibility on the government in this connection.

The Minister of Labour told us this morning to read between the lines of the letters from Montreal and Quebec City. I have done that and I have not been able to learn the answer. There is no denying that these regulations offer a panoply of powers. It is the essence of any constitutional democracy that any emergency action be limited as much as possible to that which stimulated the action, and that the suspension of normal constitutional procedures be limited as narrowly in time as possible. Just the opposite happens when governments take unto themselves a plenitude of powers and when there is a lengthy period of suspension of the normal course of constitutional processes.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Professor D. E. Smith, an authority who has studied the Canadian constitution, recently wrote an article in the Canadian Historical Review. I quote:

> Constitutional governments cannot ignore this temporary concentration of power, for as long as it lasts it forms a threat to the constitutional order. It is essential, therefore, that the threat be removed as quickly as possible. And this can be best accomplished by establishing rules for the initiation and exercise of emergency powers. Emergency powers should be initiated only for the defence of constitutional government and they should be devoted solely to ending the crisis. Any other use of extraordinary powers by the executive would destroy the distinctive feature of constitutionalism—the restraint of arbitrary political power.

I hope that if this debate accomplishes anything, it will reinforce the urgency of finding these other measures and means which have been suggested by the Leader of the Opposition and spokesmen for other parties in reference to the provision of legislation which more narrowly and precisely, and just as effectively, accomplishes the ends. It will then not be necessary for Canadians to have their state, their country, their nation operate under this very drastic and extreme legislation designed for use on the rarest possible occasions. I hope that something new will be found as soon as possible.

The indication which came from all parties would presage its rapid translation into legislation. The suggestion that we are debating the end as well as the means would no longer be an essential part of our operation. There are always uncertainties when the state leaders have to operate under emergency situations.

I was disturbed when I read an excellent editorial in this morning's Globe and Mail. I am not suggesting that the editorial disapproves of the action, but it does underline something. I quote from the editorial:

> There is a more immediate responsibility—to make certain that the powers the Government has taken are not abused. That they are used only for the purpose stated, to combat those who would use violence to destroy our society. That they are not used to inhibit old enemies or hamper legitimate political opposition. We must be told who is arrested, when they are arrested, why they are arrested and when they will be tried and for what offences. We must be certain that every soldier on civil duty in Quebec is essential to public order.

If there is opportunity for wrongdoing, intentional or otherwise, then all guardians of freedom should be concerned. I was interested to read the report of the raid on the home of Dr. Lebel in Hull yesterday. One item that impressed me was, and I quote:

> Police took Parti Quebecois literature from her room.

Wrong as I think the Party Quebecois is, surely they are not criminals for publishing these documents. This is the kind of danger that may arise.

Mr. Langlois: They also took the phone book. Come on, don't be silly.

Mr. Macquarrie: Pardon me, while I instruct this gentleman. The rule is when one wishes to address this House, he rises, gets acknowledgement from the Speaker and makes a speech.

Mr. Langlois: We all know that.

Mr. Macquarrie: Rudeness is never a substitute for ability. The fact that literature not of a terrorist nature was seized is something which should cause people to be concerned. Mistakes do happen. There may be people who do not have their instructions precise. This is why the continuation of such broad vehicles which permit mistakes is not something we should applaud. That is why we are suggesting these things be made more precise, direct and less restrictive. There are many questions.

I noted with interest the exchange between the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner). These questions will arise if this broad opportunity exists for long. The hon. member asked the minister, what about communists?

Some months ago I saw a most unsavoury group of people on the lawn of Parliament Hill. They were called Maoists. It strikes me that they would exactly fit the terms of the regulations because they do not believe in overthrowing this form of government by persuasion, gentle or otherwise. Are the students who belong to this group also to be apprehended and dealt with under these regulations? This is something the public should know. I did not think they were very wholesome people. However, if you take them, what do you do with the other types who also suggest changes by violent means?

It would be very easy for one to deliver himself of his views on the FLQ, to apply adjective upon adjective, to heap opprobrium upon opprobrium and every word he would say would be sincere because they deserve all the opprobrium one can think of and then go on to say hear, hear; go, ahead, bravo.

But it is incumbent upon us to calmly, coolly and carefully reflect as to whether this is the best measure and whether it contains dangers which would be harmful to the state. We have to ask ourselves whether stamping out that which should be stamped out by this particular method might result in injuries of other kinds to other people who do not deserve this heavy weaponry of the state. I hope that this emergency, and the consequence invoking of the War Measures Act, will have a much shorter duration than set forth in the regulations.

I will rejoice when the day arrives when the executive is able to say that the immediate need for this has been removed and we will now resort to something else. I invite them to do that as quickly as they can.

The War Measures Act and all it implies has now been in operation for some little time. I fervently hope that what the government set out to do will be achieved. I do not like the situation. I want to terminate it as soon as possible. However, while it is in operation I am sure all decent Canadians wish that it will accomplish its goals, so that terror and anarchy, too long dealt with without efficacy and I am afraid at times without strength, will be brought to an end.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Ross Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, so much has been said during the past few days that it is certainly not my intention to speak at any great length. What happened the night before last was, of course, that the government decided to make use of the War Measures Act. The government has been accused of doing this in a dictatorial fashion, and the necessity of taking such action at all has been questioned. Some opposition members have said that there was nothing democratic about the action taken.

Let us consider the facts for a few minutes. There is a great deal of difference between sitting to the left of Mr. Speaker, in opposition, and sitting to the right of Mr. Speaker, with the responsibility of governing. Many years ago the War Measures Act was passed in this House by members sitting in the seats which we now occupy. So it was passed democratically. I was not here, of course, and I do not suppose anyone here today was present on that occasion. But the act was certainly passed in a democratic way by Members of Parliament then living and sitting in these hallowed seats. It was not designed to be used specifically during wartime; it could be applied at any time should the government of the day feel circumstances were such as to justify its being put into force.

Much has been made by members of the opposition of the fact that this is the first time the War Measures Act has ever been proclaimed while the nation was not at war. It has been proclaimed only twice, once during the second world war and once during the first world war. When those proclamations were made, they were made to help protect us from the people we were fighting thousands of miles away. This is the first time in Canadian history that we have faced the possibility of being shot by fellow Canadians. I am sure this is just as much an act of insurrection as those which took place during the war with Germany, Japan, or whatever country it might be.

Parliament passed the War Measures Act in a democratic way, right here in this House of Commons. What could be more democratic than what happened in June of 1968? It is high time those who sit to the left of you, Mr. Speaker, realized that in June, 1968, the people of Canada did not just vote for the Liberals; they voted against the Tories and decided that this government should accept the responsibility for taking action should a crisis arise. A crisis certainly arose the night before last. Is there anyone in this House who would deny it? When property is being bombed, when bullets go through the houses of certain members, when people in Quebec say they are afraid to walk down the street, how much more serious a crisis do we need?

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that the government has acted most democratically. It did not need to bring this matter to debate in the House of Commons. It could have carried on with the normal business before us; it could have continued the debate on the Speech from the Throne. Instead, immediately after the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) had told us what he had done, he gave an opportunity to all of us to discuss the situation and the measures taken. How much more democratic a procedure could be desired?

When I listen to some of the opposition members—I emphasize the word "some" because there are a number who are genuinely worried about what might happen—I realize that some of them have played politics from the word go.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: I know this is not a time to tell stories, but I cannot help recalling the one about the three people who were discussing which was the oldest profession in the world. A doctor said it must be the medical profession because we read in Genesis that God took a rib from Adam; so there must have been a doctor there. An engineer pointed out that even earlier in Genesis we read that God created the world from chaos; so there must have been an engineer there. The politician said, "Where do you think the chaos came from?"

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whicher: It has come in the last few days from the opposition parties in this chamber.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: The deputy leader of the New Democratic Party appeared to have little regard for Liberal backbenchers. It was all right for us, he said; we would have to support the government whatever the circumstances. Mr. Speaker, what is wrong with being a backbencher in the Liberal party? Anybody could be a frontbencher in the NDP because there are so few of them. I would much prefer to be a backbencher in the Liberal party in a situation such as this, than be a frontbencher in some of the other parties.

The government has acted with a great deal of responsibility. Perhaps some hon. members do not agree with me. The strongest Tory in Canada today is Premier John Robarts of Ontario. Let members of the official opposition ask him what he thinks about it. The strongest member of the New Democratic Party today is Ed Schreyer, Premier of Manitoba. I invite members of the NDP to ask him what he thinks about it. And he was a colleague of hon. members sitting to my left not so many months ago.

The duty of governing makes people responsible. It is all very well to be petty; it is especially easy if one comes from out west or from Nova Scotia, knowing nothing of what goes on in Quebec. I like to think I know what is going on there because I have been a close friend of many in my party who live in the province of Quebec. They let us know what is going on in that province. It is too bad that some of my Conservative friends have apparently not listened as closely to some of their colleagues from the province of Quebec. Sound advice would be given to them by some of these fellows who know very well what is going on.

They should read the speech delivered only a few moments ago by a Conservative member from Quebec. It was a fine speech. Conservative members who had the opportunity to hear it should put a copy of it on the desks of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) first thing tomorrow morning. They should pay attention to the spirit of the speech, not just to the words. Let them read the speech delivered by the hon. member for Sainte-Marie (Mr. Valade). Let them listen to the speech which will be delivered in a few minutes by my good friends who sits only two seats from me. It will be a good speech because he is putting Canada ahead of politics.

Mr. Ricard: Not like you.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. Whicher: A lot has been said in the past few days about the terrible things that have happened in the province of Quebec. There have been bombings and kidnappings, and people are asking whether the next thing will be shootings. My friends in the New Democratic Party have said that the action taken by the government is going too far; that we should have introduced legislation. I ask rhetorically: What would have happened had we brought in legislation and discussed it for five or six days? Where would the 254 people who are traitors to Canada, members of the FLQ now in jail, be had we wasted five or six days before we passed legislation? They would be scattered underground across the country, disseminating their poison either through their pen or voice.

We are facing a serious situation. We believe in Canada, and Quebec is part of Canada. We cannot get along without Quebec. The boys in Quebec are not only fighting for their rights; they are fighting for ours. Thank heaven we have a Prime Minister who appreciates what is going on in that great province. Somehow or other he will bring things together. When the crisis is over we can carry on as a peace-loving nation, as we have for many years past, and go on to that greatness that is bound to be Canada's.

I listened to the deputy leader of the New Democratic Party the other day criticize those of us who are proud to call ourselves Liberal Backbenchers. In this regard I bring the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) into the discussion, since he chastised the government this morning. I remember a year ago when these people said we were not doing our duty as far as Biafra was concerned. We were told that millions of people would be killed; that genocide would be committed; that the whole of Biafra was starving to death. Certain people in that country were trying to divide the country of Nigeria, in the same way as politically certain people are trying to divide Canada today; and we are not going to stand for it.

The deputy leader of the New Democratic Party, who I am sorry is not here today, is a brilliant man and has been well trained. Yesterday he said that the Spiro Agnews of the United States were throwing their poison around. I most humbly inform him that many members of this chamber are not nearly as afraid of the Spiro Agnews of the United States as they are of the David Lewises of Canada. I remember the hon. member proudly stating, "I will put my reputation on the table above that of anyone in this chamber. I have been fighting communism for years and years". That may well be true, but many of us who occupy the backbenches of the Liberal party have been doing exactly the same thing.

I remember that a great American, Joseph Kennedy, who had a wonderful family, said it was not the $400 million that he had made that was important; it was his family. As far as fighting communism is concerned, the bogey that the hon. member raised, I am willing to put my reputation on the table along with his, and dozens of others in the House would do exactly the same. How would you like it, Mr. Speaker, if the leader of the Conservative party were Prime Minister of Canada today? How long do you think Canada would last? Or if the leader of the New Democratic Party were Prime Minister of Canada today, how long do you think Canada would last? I say it would last about ten minutes. I would sooner have my good friend, the leader of the Créditistes as Prime Minister and gamble on him.

We are lucky in our choice of Prime Minister—and in saying that I am certainly not waiting for any call. When I first came to Ottawa after long experience in the legislature of the province of Ontario, I was not a Trudeau man. I did everything in my power to see that he did not become leader of the Liberal party. But having been here for a couple of years and seen the sincerity and brilliance of the man, the quietness with which he does business, I say we should all thank God that he is Prime Minister of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: He is one of the few men who can hold Canada together.

Mr. Aiken: Why are we in this mess, if he is so damned good?

Mr. Whicher: If I were a Tory, I would not talk about a mess. They have three leaders and do not know which to choose. That would be enough to bother anybody. Talk about acts of insurrection! It is a wonder they have not invoked the War Measures Act in their own caucus.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whicher: I do not wish to take further time, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure my Tory friends will applaud me for saying that. I want to end on a serious note. Having talked to my friends from the great province of Quebec, I know of the serious difficulties confronting that province, indeed the whole country. I also know this measure was not invoked lightly. I have every confidence that legislation will be brought before the House, if not next week then the week following. The War Measures Act will not be the law of the country and legislation more limited in scope to look after the present crisis will be put before Parliament. I hope that instead of taking four or five days discussing it, members of the opposition will pass it quickly.

Mr. McGrath: It has been passed since four o'clock Friday morning.

Mr. Mahoney: He is talking about the proposed legislation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I bring to the attention of hon. members that the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) still has the floor.

Mr. Whicher: Contrary to what some of the front-benchers in the New Democratic Party and the Conservative party may think, we Liberal backbenchers do have a little say about what goes on around here. We certainly express our views. We are as interested in civil liberty as anybody else. Dozens of members of the Liberal party had many years of war experience, as did other members. In a situation like this it is possible that innocent people will be taken to jail, and that is indeed very unfortunate. But we are just as interested in their liberty as other hon. members. This is why I am confident that the government will bring in new legislation a little better suited to the present crisis than the War Measures Act.

I have many friends from Quebec, some of them who speak both languages well. In view of the crisis we are facing, I want to close on this note. I do not know whether hon. members are familiar with the works of a great English poet who many years ago wrote a poem which I think is apropos the present situation. I am sure the Prime Minister will know this poem, because I think he is acting in the way Rudyard Kipling described in the first two lines of the poem "If":

• (5:20 p.m.)

If you can keep your head when all about you
Are losing theirs and blaming it on you,—

The Prime Minister is keeping his head and will continue to do so whether or not all about him lose theirs. We are in good hands.

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, as a Canadian and a Quebecer, I would like at this time to express some very objective and personal opinions in the course of this most important debate, in view of the consequences of the measure now under discussion. Of course, as a member of an opposition party, I have responsibilities but these are not necessarily of a nature to compel me to oppose this measure now before the House.

My first responsibility does not consist only in participating to debates on various legislative measures, but it includes as well compelling the government to take action when I feel that the legislation being examined is necessary for society. However, it is also my duty to oppose the passage of a legislation which might go against the interests of Quebec or Canada.

Belonging to a political group is not conducive to an end, it is a means. As a chosen representative in the last election, I am entitled to express my opinions and my constituents expect that I do so freely and objectively. They do insist that I protect not only the interests of my constituency but those of my province and my country as well.

Therefore, I shall carefully refrain from political partisanship in the course of such an important debate. I shall carefully leave aside certain arguments which can be discussed at the proper time.

I did not think that so soon after being elected I would have the opportunity to take part in the passing of such an important measure. In the name of the majority of the people of Quebec, in the name of the French Canadian nation and of its future, I do not have the right to give in to partisan considerations.

I did not hesitate to say, when I was elected, that I would first of all represent my province in Parliament.

It is my duty not to miss any opportunity to defend the interests of my province which are, really, those of Canada.

The speeches of some of my colleagues have left me with a feeling of disappointment. They took advantage of this debate to make points that reeked of partisanship.

The leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Douglas) does not shy away from doing just that, upbraiding the people responsible for the atmosphere which has in the end brought about the problem which we must face now.

The leader of the Ralliement créditiste (Mr. Caouette) has charged the leaders of the opposition parties with partisan politics but could not refrain from ending his speech with a manifesto which, if carried out, would in his estimation bring about a settlement, but I doubt that it would be effective.

When such an important problem is discussed it is wrong to waste time since the enemy is still free. In fact, the enemy is upon us.

Of course I have not always been in agreement with the measures moved by the government in this House. Nevertheless I feel that I was able to support the wise ones tending directly to the preservation of the interests of Quebec and Canada.

I have listened with attention to the speech made yesterday by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) and I greatly appreciated it. I take the liberty of also mentioning the one made last night by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I must admit that the latter has, in a very dignified manner, drawn a clear picture of the present situation. If all my colleagues in the House followed this speech very closely, I must say, in all fairness, that it is because the Prime Minister explained plainly and objectively the situation prevailing in Quebec and in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. La Salle: I am not saying this to win the applause of the government members. I have said that I am not always in agreement with the government's proposals, but I believe that I am brave enough to support the adoption of measures that I believe adequate and necessary. In my view, the Prime Minister's speech yesterday gave the best possible description of the situation we are facing at the present time. We wonder why the government acted with such haste in this matter. We have been told that the city of Montreal through its representatives and the province of Quebec through the prime minister officially applied to the federal government. I certainly would not have supported the government if they had refused help and assistance. I do not question the veracity of the facts submitted by Messrs. Bourassa and Drapeau.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Last year, Mr. Saulnier painted a dark picture of the situation and of the FLQ.

We all know that today unfortunately the young people of Quebec are led by hot-heads. I am not saying that they belong to the FLQ or support it.

They were left to do as they pleased, which is unfortunate. They succeeded in securing election to associations which seem very prestigious to all Canadians.

Mr. Saulnier was certainly right. But I do not believe this is the proper time to blame the government, delay adoption of the measure now before us, or panic about what we have been told. However, certain reasons led a very small part of the people to support movements like the FLQ. But I will give the benefit of doubt to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, to the provincial police and to other police authorities who probably thought that it was not yet time to act immediately.

The fact that they waited for some time allowed us to get rid of a greater number of revolutionaries. The experts among the police force know much more than we do about it and I wonder if, precisely, we are not passing unfair judgment. As I would rather not worry about what seems to be indecision from the government, I reserve myself the right to discuss that in due time. I shall not hesitate in doing so if it ever becomes necessary.

Like several hon. members, I wonder whether the legislation is not too strict.

From what the Minister of Justice said yesterday, I understood that it might be amended and that the enforcement of the act could be suspended if it was deemed that the emergency situation warranted it. I am still convinced that emergency measures should be passed. Needless to say that I shall not hesitate to vote for the measure now before us.

Some hon. Members: Hear, Hear.

Mr. La Salle: Last Thursday, I had prepared a press release because I felt the government had to take action. I did not have to send it out Friday morning, since the government's action met my views completely.

Nevertheless, I should like to read it. It dealt in particular with the detention of two hostages, in this case Messrs. Laporte and Cross. It is clear that this situation will be coming to an end soon.

It appears on the one hand that our governments must exercise a certain flexibility in this matter and on the other hand, that we must protect the moral authority of the state and the democratic institutions because they have to be safeguarded.

In my opinion, yielding to all the FLQ's demands would be equal to the worst kind of prostitution. Nothing would be settled and the outlaw's would certainly do it again. We would therefore accept to become conditionned to an anarchic dimension. Whether we admit it or not, we are dealing with a group of terrorists who are leaving our governments no other alternative but a final confrontation.

The lives of these hostages require that our governments take all the necessary measures to avoid the worst but any settlement that would guarantee the liberation of Messrs. Cross and Laporte while permitting these people to proceed with their subversive action, would certainly entail disastrous consequences for the Quebec economy.

The statement by Ontario Premier Robarts, which has been termed inflammatory in the circumstances, is none the less very realistic, because I believe that Mr. Robarts considered it was impossible to yield to the terrorists' demands.

The FLQ has granted several extensions of time, but our governments will have to set a final deadline in this matter. It is urgent therefore that our governments devise some machinery such as legislation carrying very severe penalties for any extremist movement; they must not hesitate to bring in troops as soon as an insurrection is in the offing. I was saying those very words last Thursday night, Mr. Speaker.

To conclude, I shall say that people are extremely concerned about the establishment of a police state whose prime duty would be to restore order in Quebec.

To those who are concerned about the presence of policemen in the province of Quebec, I say that I would rather be near a police officer than near two terrorists. I think there is no need to remind the people that it has cost daily, for these past few days, approximately $500,000 for the protection of our institutions.

I know it is high time for our governments to act in order to restore a climate of trust which will ensure the political and economic stability in the province of Quebec.

We can and we wish to continue discussing that measure. The government could also be blamed on many other counts. I do not say that the measure under study is perfect but considering the situation we are facing and the concern among the people in Quebec, the government must without hesitation assume its responsibilities.

The possible independence of the province has been discussed, but I feel Quebec is still part of Canada. Most Quebecers want to remain within Canada.

According to the arguments of some of our colleagues, we should withdraw from the scene and leave Quebec the full responsibility for the situation. The members from the province of Quebec did not hesitate to support any government when serious problems cropped up in other parts of the country. Must I promise to support the members from the other provinces if a problem arose there? I feel that the members from Quebec will not hesitate to support their federal colleagues to solve, partly or completely, a problem that may exist outside Quebec.

This allows me to appeal to the openmindedness and good will of all members, to help the province of Quebec to get rid of a minority that worries its people and can spread the problem elsewhere in Canada.

According to the speeches of some members, the rest of the country is being penalized because of the problem in Quebec. Nothing proves that the movement does not exist elsewhere in Canada. If you refer to the document Mr. Saulnier presented last year, you will see that the movement was not necessarily limited to the province of Quebec. This is one reason why all the members should be responsive to the problem, and should work in order that this measure might allow us to get rid of this radical and harmful movement whose object is the destruction of our democratic institutions.

I would not say that this measure penalizes the rest of the country. I doubt that the Canadians who are not aware of the problem, who are not disturbed by the FLQ, are inconvenienced by the presence of policemen or soldiers.

• (5:40 p.m.)

I do not believe that anybody in my parish is or has been annoyed by police, even though the War Measures Act has been in force since four o'clock on Friday morning.

I have the clear impression that those who feel uneasy because of the presence of a policeman have something on their conscience.

The job of the police is not to bother innocent people. We try to adopt a measure and I intend to support it, because I believe it is necessary under present circumstances.

I say it once again, it has not been established that this measure will still be necessary six months from now. It is quite clear that the House will be able to propose new measures when the one now in force will no longer be encessary. We will then be able to ask and even force the government to revoke it.

I do not believe that the government will refuse to revoke this measure if it is proven that it is no longer necessary.

I do not believe either that a government would be ingenuous enough to assure itself all the protection it is presently granted, if this should not prove necessary.

And, for this reason, I will continue to believe not only that this measure is necessary, but that it will result in the annihilation of a movement which is obviously not wanted either in Quebec or in other parts of Canada.

There has been a tendency to accuse the government too easily of having been too slow in acting and I think this is true. The necessary measures probably were not taken. The lesson may be a tough one but its effects will prompt us to quicker action in the future.

On the other hand, and in all objectiveness, I must say that members of the New Democratic party have blamed the government for going too fast. I wonder exactly what they want. The government goes too fast or it is too slow in taking action. I am still convinced that conclusive evidence was needed. It was uncovered a few days ago and on its strength the government had to do something.

In my opinion, the motion before the House should not only be examined further but passed while too many people in Quebec seem to be giving way to dejection.

Some have referred to social order and to problems due to unemployment. Those things maintain a revolutionary atmosphere. I will have the opportunity to talk about it some other time. I shall not fail then to ask the government to act quickly in order to solve problems. I do not think that now is the time. I shall appeal to the French Canadian people and seize the opportunity to discuss the theory that the present system has not been able to bring the French Canadian people what they expected of federalism.

I often say that in the last 10 years we have made giant steps. A review of the 100 years of Confederation shows that I am one of those who have reason to be disappointed.

Considering the developments of the last ten years and the statements made by some French Canadians in various walks of life, in politics or business, I see no reason to get discouraged.

Considering the open-mindedness of our colleagues in other provinces, I have every reason to be hopeful for the future. I wish to remind the French-Canadian nation in Quebec that it should not get discouraged but should trust the representatives it has chosen.

Whatever my political affiliation, I believe that it is my duty, as an opposition member, to take part in the nation's business. I wish to do it objectively, opposing some measures if I am deeply convinced that they go against the interests of the French-Canadian nation of which I am a representative in this House.

As so many other hon. members, I make it a point to look after the interests of Quebec and those of Cannada. The liberation of Quebec cannot but help the liberation of Canada. And as much as my Ontario colleague, I hope that we shall build together a marvelous Canada, in the framework of well-organized Confederation.

That is how I see the possibility for greater happiness for the French-Canadian nation, the population of the province of Quebec and that of the other provinces. There is no doubt that the indecision of the Canadian government when the constitution was discussed did not do much to give hope to the people of Quebec. The government should seriously consider the amendments which are being sought to the constitution. I ask the government to consider particularly the briefs presented by the premiers of Quebec in the last 10 years. The subject matter of those briefs is identical, because the needs and aspirations of Quebec have not changed. Furthermore, the peaceful means of Quebec have not changed, except that the province has been infiltrated by a movement of which we are trying to rid ourselves by an act which, in my opinion, is perfectly justified, and that is why I will not hesitate to approve it. I therefore appeal to other hon. members to do the same in the interest of Canada.

[Mr. La Salle.]

This measure does not provide exclusively for the protection of the province of Quebec, but also of Canada as a whole. There is no evidence that such a movement does not have supporters in other provinces where it will carry out its operations. Mr. Chairman, it is interesting to note that all hon. members have been allowed to express their opinions freely. It made it possible for me to understand how few are those who really understand Quebec's problems. The most unbiased speeches made in this House have allowed our colleagues of the other provinces to understand Quebec's aspirations which do not run counter to those of Canada.

The government was obliged to take an embarrassing measure but it was necessary. When the nation is threatened, there is reason for concern and this is how I feel now. When I say that a majority does not want to be crushed by a slim minority in Quebec, this is a fact.

The sacrifices made by the French Canadians from Quebec have been rewarded with some degree of success. I said earlier that in the last ten years, the province of Quebec asserted itself by peaceful, democratic means. I might disturb the peace of mind of certain members by saying that to my great pleasure, the Canadian government includes an unprecedented French Canadian representation. If some day we were in power, I would wish for a French Canadian representation as numerous and as competent as the one we see today in the cabinet.

Considering all the sacrifices willingly accepted by Quebecers, I believe that we are in the process of asserting ourselves in Canada and of proving to the English-speaking majority that we are willing to co-operate in the building of a magnificent country.

Some rays of hope seem to be appearing on the horizon; on the other hand, the FLQ, by its evil actions, can but reduce this hope to dust. That is why I am asking the people of Quebec and all members, wherever their electoral district is located, to consider the importance of this measure, so that the province of Quebec may continue to grow and to strive towards the same objective: that of a Canada at peace.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I ask why a less stringent measure was not proposed. At this moment, two hostages are in the hands of the kidnappers, and it has been proved that an amicable arrangement would have been equivalent, for the government, to a rejection of basic principles, and the hostages would not have been freed for all that.

It is foolish to believe that this action was unnecessary. I say this quite objectively. My intention is not to save the face of the government; but I think that, in all conscience, I must be objective about such a serious matter. Whatever my colleagues may think, I shall be convinced that I have said not only what I had in mind but also what I ought to say in these circumstances.

Last night, I heard on television the leader of the Parti Québecois, Mr. Lévesque, who was very concerned about the arrest of some PQ members in the province of Quebec. Let us not imagine that at present, the police merely arrest members of the Parti Québecois. Such a suggestion is untrue. It may be assumed that, in the province of Quebec, the members of the FLQ support the PQ but it would be wrong to believe that PQ members are also members of the FLQ.

I am deeply convinced that the purpose of this measure is not to embarrass members of the PQ who work towards an ideal that I respect, namely, the independence of Quebec. This option is premature. I am not saying that it is impossible that the independence of Quebec will ever be achieved.

Therefore, the hon. members should keep in mind the willingness and the work to be achieved by the committee on the constitution whose task will consist in considering the granting to Quebec of some legitimate supplementary powers. In so doing, the majority of Quebecers will enjoy a federalism that will respect the needs of the French-Canadian people of Quebec.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I will say that I felt it was my duty to take part in this debate as the elected member of a very typical Quebec constituency and that I had to voice my opinions.

Needless to say I am deeply convinced in supporting this measure. It is my sincere belief that I am protecting the interests of my people, of my province and at the same time those of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (5:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member who sits close to me, the hon. member for Hillsborough, I have been in this House for some length of time and, so far as I know for some time before my own participation in the business of this House, parliament has never been asked to deal with or express an opinion about such a fundamentally important matter as that which we are talking about right now. We are dealing, in one sense, with the lives of two individuals, Mr. Cross and Mr. Laporte, and in another sense we are dealing with the fundamental liberties of Canadians all across the land.

Endorsement is being sought, in a moral sense not a legalistic, authoritarian sense, for action that has been taken. We are being asked to endorse some action that I believe very clearly could contribute to an escalation of the difficulties and could result in pockets of civil war taking place in Canada. Because if we are to believe the declarations made by the various members of the cabinet concerning the seriousness of the situation, and couple that with our knowledge through newspaper accounts of the terrorists activities over the past seven or eight years, then we know those activities are not going to stop with the arrest of 100, 200, 300 or many more people.

This situation is not going to end with the finding of the dynamite and of the weapons that have been stolen from armouries as well as elsewhere. As long as that psychotic feeling exists among such groups of people, and apparently they are extremely well organized and proficient in their activities having gained a certain expertise far in excess of what existed in 1963, 1964 and 1965, that activity is not going to desist but is going to increase. That is why it is a very crucial thing that we are being asked to consider and endorse.

I listened, and was greatly impressed, by part of what the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) had to say today because one thing he mentioned, to which apparently many of his colleagues in his own party did not listen, was that we should be engaged in a type of debate which does not involve the catcalls, the hoots and hollers, that usually take place when differences of opinion are expressed. It is a sorry situation when individuals in any part of the House, expressing their views out of the depths of their own sincerity, are ridiculed and slandered, as was the case in the speech of the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher). The greatest tribute one can give to that speech is to ignore it. It is unfortunate that those assumptions of the Minister of Labour were not listened to, because we are dealing with a serious situation. From the point of view of the Minister of Labour, it is unfortunate that he had to rely on the opinions of Dr. Forsey in order to buttress his position. If there were four sides to any question Dr. Forsey would, in the time I have known him, be on all four sides of it himself.

• (6:00 p.m.)

Mr. Perrault: Do not attack someone when he cannot defend himself.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I should appreciate it if my hon. friend from Burnaby-Seymour would keep his mouth shut.

Mr. Perrault: Do not attack someone here who cannot defend himself.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I am perfectly willing to repeat what I said about Dr. Forsey outside the House, to his face.

An hon. Member: It is Senator Forsey now, is it not?

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I say to the newly appointed Parliamentary Secretary that he ought to look into his own mind, and at some of the things he has said. They are not very pleasant, are they?

An hon. Member: Don't be that way, Frank.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I say here, and I will say outside, that I do not value very highly Dr. Forsey's opinions because so many times I have seen him adopt whatever views seemed to be convenient for the moment. I do not say that unkindly.

Mr. Peters: We were paying his salary, too; at least, we had some interest in it.

Mr. Perrault: Does the hon. member have any charges to make?

Mr. Peters: No, we do not have any charges.

Mr. Perrault: There is no unity in the hon. member's party.

Mr. Peters: I have known Dr. Forsey for many years and what my colleague has said is perfectly true.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Skeena has the floor.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): The point I am trying to get across is that concern for the well-being of Canada does not rest exclusively with any one member, and that applies even to Parliamentary Secretaries. Disdainful thoughts should not be expressed simply because one happens to have a particular view about one matter that is as fundamental and basic as this. We are initially concerned about the safe return of Mr. Cross and Mr. Laporte. We are also concerned about retrieving the explosives, guns, ammunitions and other weaponry in the hands of members of the FLQ as well as other insurrectionists.

One aspect that puts a different colour on this matter and is a cause of some wonderment is this: I think the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), and the Solicitor General (Mr. McIlraith), on the basis of their knowledge of the criminal law and the way in which the police work, will tend to agree with what I am about to say. If the members of what I loosely call the underworld had abducted Mr. Cross, Mr. Laporte or anyone else for that matter, it would have been only a matter of a few days before the police would have discovered the criminals. The police use informers to obtain information about activities in the underworld. The police operate on the basis of approaching informers and making deals. In return for information on certain major crimes, they tend to lessen the impact on the individual and charge him with a lesser crime. They do that for the individual who is giving them information. On the basis of information received, they are able to discover where certain criminals are, where stolen goods are, and the like. This fact gives one reason for wonderment.

What has caused the breakdown of the normal and efficient activities of police forces engaged in obtaining information about activities such as we are discussing? This failure, I suppose, more than anything else indicates that the abductors are a highly organized group of insurrectionists and that they think differently from criminals whether in Montreal, Vancouver or anywhere else. We do not know, actually, whether Mr. Cross and Mr. Laporte are even in the country at the moment. Certainly, this is a cause for wonderment.

On the other hand, recent events suggest, perhaps, that the authorities know where Mr. Cross and Mr. Laporte are. They certainly suggest that there may be some substantiation for the impression given by Premier Thatcher that the authorities know who committed the abduction. I notice the Minister of Justice looking quizzically at me. May I say that I am not responsible for what appears in the newspapers. I am only alluding to what Premier Thatcher is alleged to have said. Premier Thatcher is reported as having said that, he spoke to a federal cabinet minister who told him the federal government knew who the abductors were. The Minister of Justice shakes his head. I am sorry; I am misinterpreting what the shake of a head means. In any event, Premier Thatcher has said this. Whether he knows what he is talking about in this situation is impossible for one to say. But it seems to me that there is something a bit fishy in the activities of the highly organized police forces. There is something fishy about the fact that neither the police in Montreal nor the Quebec Provincial Police have given any indication as to whether Mr. Cross and Mr. Laporte are still in the country, still in Quebec, or still alive. That is a situation about which we have to be concerned.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand), the Minister of Labour and others have said that the government had certain information which necessitated its taking the action it took. This information demanded the invocation of the War Measures Act. Parliament is being asked to participate now with the government and to endorse that action. We are being asked to do that on the basis of a simple declaration; we are asked to have faith in what the government says was the correct course of action. We do not know about that, because no one has indicated yet what that information was or the extent to which the situation was serious. It seems to me that, since the Prime Minister and the government had reason to believe such a terrible situation existed that it necessitated taking such extraordinary measures as removing the civil liberties of all Canadians in this country, and not just of members and supporters of the FLQ, and since the government has asked Parliament to participate in its decision, the government ought to have taken certain selected members of the other parties of the House into its confidence, and revealed to them this information.

But that course of action was not taken. The government simply requests us to have faith in it. It says, "We know what we are doing, and all will be well." I do not think that is good enough. We should not be approached on such an important matter on that basis. I might add as an aside, to put the matter into perspective, that the decision to invoke the War Measures Act was taken—and I think this is essentially correct—on the basis of a provision within the Bill of Rights itself. When the Bill of Rights was introduced into Parliament by the Conservatives, when they were the government, that party asked Parliament to amend the War Measures Act and to include it within the Bill of Rights. Parliament did that unanimously.

• (6:10 p.m.)

Under that section of the Bill of Rights introduced by the Conservative government, the government of today has taken this action. It is rather odd to hear the person who was prime minister at that time, who had authority to take protective measures, if he wanted, with respect to the War Measures Act, complain about the action being taken under a measure for which he himself laid the groundwork. That is really an aside; it has nothing to do with the consequences of the decision we are being asked to make.

We should consider some of the factors which have contributed to the situation in the province of Quebec.

Many have made great declarations about Canada, perhaps more than any other country, being a place where freedom of speech, action and movement are taken for granted. They are part of our heritage. They are part of what we understand as we grow up. This carries with it, without fear of consequence, the right to dissent, petition, complain, object, demonstrate, appear on Parliament Hill with placards, picket this place and in that way disseminate information throughout the land. Many people take advantage of that freedom. We should not be misled into thinking this is all that constitutes democracy in our nation. What is the point of dissenting, complaining about a difficult situation and asking for redress or solutions to problems when no one listens, when government refuses to act on complaints or chooses to disregard their legitimacy? People develop frustrations. All across this country there are groups which feel they have a legitimate complaint against the government for what it has done or has not done. The government has ignored or disregarded those legitimate claims and these groups have become frustrated. There is a sense of hopelessness. This, to an extent, probably happens in Quebec as it does elsewhere.

A case in point comes to mind with respect to the Eskimo people in the province of Quebec. With one voice they have insisted that they do not want to have their rights and jurisdiction transferred to the province of Quebec. They have said this on more than one occasion, yet the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien), who is responsible to them, has completely ignored the unanimous opinion of these people and is continuing with Quebec negotiations regarding the transfer. Surely, frustration and hopelessness will come out of that situation. If it continues, these people will conclude that they must take some other course of action instead of simply expressing their views to a government which will pay no attention to them.

With the death of Maurice Duplessis there came into Quebec a new concept of freedom of political thought, political hope and freedom for the people to advance from the shackles that the Duplessis government had put on that province for a long time. Out of this situation came what we call the separatist feeling, the desire for political individuality within the bounds of the province and a desire for specific recognition of the political unit called the province of Quebec. Some people in political life exploited that feeling for political purposes. One was Jean Lesage, former Premier of Quebec; another was my friend from Témiscamingue, the leader of the Ralliement Créditiste.

Mr. Peters: Témiscamingue, Quebec.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I tried to make the proper pronunciation so that it would not offend my colleague from Ontario, the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters). The Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) also exploited that attitude and feeling. In fact, he referred to the people in Quebec as his separatist brethren. That is rather an affectionate term to apply. Exploitation and recognition of that feeling in Quebec was abandoned before and during the time Jean Lesage was Premier of Quebec. He realized that it was dangerous to continue playing games with the separatist feeling. He abandoned it because it was getting out of hand.

Once these people—and they are not confined to those I have mentioned—gave up the idea of trying to establish some sort of political alliance for votes, the people who had been exploited naturally felt frustrated and sought another avenue. I do not know to what extent the members of the FLQ were party to the separatist development in Quebec eight, ten or fifteen years ago.

Mr. Pelletier: Obviously you do not know much about that matter.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I am glad the Secretary of State has finally said something in this debate, instead of just sitting embarrassed in his seat. I said, quite candidly, that was something I did not know. How much clearer could I be? I am not trying to be shallow or to play games. I make no connection between the FLQ and the Parti Quebecois or any other political party. The fact is that elements within the FLQ have a psychosis; they are not concerned with taking the reasonable approach to anything.

I do not know if anybody knows whether the hope for political support of the growing feeling of separatism in Quebec resulted in the FLQ. This is a distinct possibility. This is one way in which groups develop their objection to society, first by frustration, second by exploitation and third by finding no avenue for their situation. I think the recent unconscionable strike by the police force of Montreal contributed to the present breakdown. If the police, the people who are supposed to protect our rights and positions, abandon their cloak of protection and do not really care what happens to individuals and property, it contributes to the growing disenchantment that exists in that province.

The intrusion the other night by Premier Robarts contributed to the situation. His intrusion and comments resulted in Claude Ryan, Louis Leberge, René Levesque, and I do not know who else, combining their voices and saying to the government: Give in to the demands of the abductors. That did not contribute to the situation in a very helpful way. I am sure Premier Robarts has enough problems with the Mafia, the police force and union movements in the province. He should have been overly cautious about what he said.

• (6:20 p.m.)

I have great doubt about what is the correct course of action. The Prime Minister asks us to trust him. There may be some in the House who will do so. But there are members of the cabinet who would not, I am sure, be trusted by other members of the cabinet in terms of asking them to take their word for something. The Prime Minister rose in the House, made the statement he did and read certain letters. It was difficult for me. It is easier to grasp the meaning of something one reads oneself than it is when someone translates it. This is my own problem for not being bilingual. It was easier for me to grasp what was involved after reading Hansard today and listening to the Prime Minister on television last night.

Admittedly, there was a need for surprise; I do not gainsay this.

The fact that the government has refused up until now to take action under the Criminal Code in respect of additional authority for the police force is really beside the point. The government felt there was need for surprise; there was need not to telegraph the punch to those who would be picked up. I agree with this wholeheartedly; I have no hesitation in supporting that contention. The element of surprise has ended and everybody knows that the police forces are on their way and are searching hither and yon.

The effect of the War Measures Act has been felt. Everybody knows it is there and that the police and the army are out to ferret-out everyone they can, and they will make mistakes in doing it. But I think it is unfair to the people of Canada for the government to come here and ask us, on the basis of trust only, to endorse the concept of trampling on human rights and freedoms, to suspend the operation of the Bill of Rights—for how little that means in itself—to invade the privacy of people, to lock people in jail upon suspicion or because of the feeling of an individual police officer or somebody in the army. It is unfair for the government to come to Parliament and ask us to participate in that decision on the basis of trust alone. Members of this House might not hesitate one bit if they knew fully what was involved, but I do not think it can be done on the basis of the Prime Minister asking us to trust him, when he does not show any trust for Parliament.

I think, quite frankly, that Premier Bourassa was pretty incompetent in this field, understandably so because he has been Premier of Quebec for only a short period. I think he was frightened and that he panicked. He was not sure what to do, if anything, to cope with the situation, regardless of the degree of competence of the police forces under the authority of his government. He wrote a letter to the Prime Minister. That letter was tabled. I should like to read one short excerpt from it to show what was asked for by Mr. Bourasssa. He did not ask for something which might be considered reasonable, and I am sure that letter was very carefully drafted after consultation with the Prime Minister. It did not come as a bolt out of the blue, as a one-sided piece of correspondence. It is a co-operative, or collaborative letter to put a point across. He asked for authority and power far beyond even that which exists at the moment. Referring to emergency powers, he said:

> I request particularly that such powers encompass the authority to apprehend and keep in custody individuals who the Attorney General of Quebec has valid reasons to believe are determined to overthrow the government through violence and illegal means.

This, to me, does not carry with it the right to court procedures, appeals and the other things about which the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) talked the other day.

This gives me more reason to think that Premier Bourassa in a moment of panic and fright wanted thoroughly authoritarian and dictatorial powers to do what he liked, to lodge people in jail and let them rot there whether or not they were guilty of anything. So far, that plea, as I read the regulations, has been resisted. But it does seem—and this part of the message did not get through the other day—that the letter and, I am sure, the other letters which the Prime Minister of Canada received, were written with his knowledge and consent, which gives an entirely different dimension to the situation.

The Prime Minister said in the House yesterday, and repeated in his television broadcast last night, that legislation is to be developed and presented which will be less broad in its scope than that which is authorized under the War Measures Act. To me, this implies that the legislation will be in the area of criminal law; that it will be part of the Criminal Code regardless of the restrictions, unless they are unique ones. But at the moment no indication has been given that the legislation will be any different from simple criminal law, and if that is the case it will leave the liberties of the Canadian people in the hands of the police or the army to be determined.

I, for one, do not want the liberties and the rights of any Canadian to be left in the hands of policemen or army personnel. I say this because the police forces and the army of this nation are not taught to concern themselves with apprehending criminals and others who break the law. They are not concerned with justice or other humanitarian aspects of our society. Frankly, I would prefer to have the War Measures Act than similar authority given under the criminal law to the attorney general of any province or to the police force.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I think the cabinet, not this cabinet particularly but any cabinet, any elected body, any government—because we have inculcated within us a concept about democracy and rights: perhaps we do not treat them properly sometimes, but the total concept is there—could be better trusted to show concern about the rights and freedoms of Canadians than any police force in the nation.

One would have to look at the legislation, naturally, to see what it contained, but we have experience of the way in which the Prime Minister thinks and should take that into consideration. I am not talking about the Minister of Justice, because knowing him I am sure he was very reluctant in cabinet the other morning to agree with the war measures provision. The Minister of Justice has a tremendous concern about the humanities, much more concern than the Prime Minister, who is a theoretician, a technician and a mechanic when it comes to dealing with the human rights of people. But generally speaking, with an understanding of the way in which the Prime Minister operates, thinks and treats human beings, even Parliamentary Secretaries, I am, at the moment, not disposed to vote for any specific legislation in this field but, rather, to leave it the way it is.

• (6:30 p.m.)

The moment we put this authority into the Criminal Code, it becomes part of the criminal law. We have enough trouble in this nation with blanket search warrants—they are not called search but writs of assistance—which the police forces are entitled to use in certain circumstances. I do not know what those circumstances are, but I think they include smuggling, customs infractions and narcotics offences, among others. Even those blanket powers of search and arrest give us quite enough concern, without giving the police forces the right to invade privacy and restrict the liberty of people. My concern arises simply as a result of the distorted attitude that a policeman may have toward whether or not a certain thing is happening in a certain house.

When the vote comes on Monday, I am not sure as of this moment whether I shall vote for or against the motion. It is a matter that requires a great deal of reflection. The first reason for invoking the War Measures Act has come and gone—the element of surprise. Surprise is not needed any longer because everybody knows what has happened. If that were the only question, we could revoke the War Measures Act right now.

Authority to search, arrest and detain may still be required. There are two factors involved here. One of the most important from the humanitarian point of view is the lives of Mr. Cross and Mr. Laporte. Those two individuals are vitally important in the scheme of things. If some time before the expiration of ten days when, under the Bill of Rights, ten members can put down a motion to revoke the measure taken, these two gentlemen are found alive—I hope that is the case—that need for the War Measures Act also disappears. Indeed, if they are found dead—and that would be sad and regrettable—the need disappears. However, let us not speculate about that; it is a matter in the minds of everyone.

If we are able to locate the two tons or 20 tons, whichever it is of dynamite that is being driven around in a truck somewhere, plus all the other dynamite and guns that the former Minister of National Defence, Paul Hellyer, permitted to be stolen from his armouries a few years ago without showing any great concern—incidentally, I did not notice any French Canadian members getting very excited about that at the time—then once more the need for certain measures taken under the act disappears. I submit that in asking that the measure be in effect from now until the end of April the Prime Minister either has no faith, or very little, in the army, the RCMP and our police forces and their ability to tackle the problem during that time, or he wants this extended power because it is nice to have it.

There are a number of questions that must be answered and which in my own mind I have not answered. Some of them I have, but on balance a number of things have to be answered by each individual member. It is not a question whether or not I support what the government has done or whether I trust the Prime Minister. I have my own view about his capabilities and his concern for the well-being of individuals and humanitarian concepts in Canada. We are dealing with the much broader question that I described earlier, namely, to what extent we are going to participate in adding to, if nothing else, pockets of civil war in Canada.

The Minister of Justice has an intimate knowledge of just what is happening, but this knowledge has not been transmitted beyond the cabinet. I think that at least in a selective sense in terms of secrecy, the opposition should know what is going on in general. Because there is a distinct possibility of further outbreaks taking place here and there, the Minister of Justice knows that he cannot handle the problem by authoritarianism alone.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member's time has expired, but he can continue with the consent of the House. Does the House give unanimous consent to letting the hon. member continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): For a moment or two, Mr. Speaker, I want to list some of the thoughts I have. The Prime Minister is asking, for a period beyond the ten days permitted under the Bill of Rights, for absolute dictatorial, authoritarian power to do whatever the government pleases without any check or balance against it. The government says there is a check and balance at election time, but that is two years away. People have short memories, and in addition the Liberal party has a great propaganda machine. I am talking about granting authoritarian, dictatorial powers at this time. The government wants Parliament to trust it on the basis that it knows what it is doing, that it knows the situation. On the other hand, the government is not willing to take Parliament into its confidence, to trust Parliament. As I have said, no one has any edge on concern over anybody else in the matter of rights, freedoms and the well-being of Canadians.

The government wants to bring in a new law. As I have said, I am not disposed to let individual rights and freedoms rest in the hands of any police force in this nation. The place for protecting such rights and freedoms is Parliament, because Parliament consists of people who have some sense of responsibility. Police forces do not have the feeling for rights and freedoms that we have, because they are not trained to have that feeling.

The other consideration is this. The government knew that this insurrectionist movement in Quebec was being developed, and knew for many years. For at least four or five years the government knew it was growing, that training camps were being set up to turn people into experts on demolition, army activities and guerrilla warfare of the sort that takes place in other countries but never here. The government had available to it certain criminal procedures in this regard, but they either failed to follow them or ignored them.

The Prime Minister of Canada—admittedly, this is a political consideration—was elected a couple of years ago, as he said and as we thought, to bring unity to Canada. All that has happened has been an increase in insurrectionist activities in one province in particular. There has been an increase in bombings, murders, bank robberies and all the other activities that may or may not be connected with the FLQ but which result therefrom. Hence, we are on the verge of disunity.

As was mentioned yesterday, the government has contributed immeasurably to social unrest by taking an indifferent attitude to the economic situation that exists throughout the nation. The government has stated it is a good thing to have 6 or 7 per cent, or whatever is the figure, unemployment in this country because unemployment is needed to keep inflation in check. There has been no indication whatever, not even a hope expressed, that the continuance in force of the War Measures Act will in any way detract from the development of the terrorist movement of the FLQ or a group by any other name in Canada. There has been no indication that the government is interested in bringing about a much better economic and social situation in Canada to deal with those who are underprivileged and poor. These are problems that plague my mind.

• (6:40 p.m.)

At the moment, I am tempted to vote for the measure when it comes up on Monday, but I really do not know. If I do that, I hope at the moment of voting those over exuberant Liberals do not think I am endorsing the Liberal party or the government, because it is my own conscience that is involved.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In fact, I should be quite frank and say I have two points of order, but I shall raise them one at a time. My first point of order has to do with the hours of sitting for today. I know it is quite clear from the order agreed to yesterday that when we resumed the sitting at two o'clock this afternoon we were to continue to sit without a break until we finished this debate. I wonder, particularly to give the Hansard people a bit of a break, whether there would not be agreement to suspend the sitting from now until eight o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: My understanding is that we are to sit through. My understanding also is that there have been discussions about the matter. If there is agreement that we should suspend the sitting I am certain the Chair would go along with that, but I heard negative sounds from the right of the Speaker's chair. If it is the wish of hon. members, of course, there is no difficulty.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no agreement.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on another point of order, and perhaps I shall be a little more successful on this one. Earlier today, I had the pleasure of commending those at the table for the excellent way in which they had reduced to writing what we agreed to yesterday with regard to today's sitting. Perhaps that is my justification for now drawing attention to what I think is a rather serious error in Votes and Proceedings for yesterday having to do in fact with the very motion we are now discussing.

If you will look at the motion as now recorded in Votes and Proceedings, which after all is the official record of the House, you will find that toward the end of it in column two on page 27 of Votes and Proceedings for yesterday the wording is:

—that the proclamation invoking the powers as contained in the regulations will be invoked on or before April 30, 1971 unless a resolution authorizing their extension beyond the date specified has been approved by the House.

In Hansard that word was "revoked", not "invoked". Even the little bit of French I know permits me to say that in French the words at that place in the sentence are «sera révoquée». I suggest that if the printing I have is the printing that everyone else has there is an error that ought to be corrected.

Mr. Speaker: The advice I have received from the table at the present time is that this is obviously a misprinting, that the record is wrong and should be corrected. Of course, it is correct in the French text which reads:

[Translation]

—the proclamation invoking the powers as contained in the regulations will be revoked on or before April 30, 1971,—

[English]

From my understanding of French, I think that obviously would be the correct wording. There is a serious mistake in the English text. It should be "revoked on or before April 30, 1971". Perhaps, with the agreement of hon. members, the necessary correction will be made in the official documents of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is a particular pleasure to follow immediately a member of the House who has not firmly made up his mind on an issue. This is probably unique in this debate, and possibly even unique in the general experience in this chamber. It is indeed a pleasure to have a chance hopefully to reconfirm or reinforce the tentative intention of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) to vote in favour of this motion.

I should like also to allude to the remarks made earlier by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle). A very few months ago I had occasion, upon a matter of considerable personal conscience and feeling, to determine that I had to vote against the line of my party and against the majority of the members of my party. I sympathize with the hon. member, as I know it is a difficult decision he has had to make. I am sure his colleagues, as well as other members of the House, will appreciate the amount of soul-searching, and indeed the degree of courage, which the hon. member has exercised in reaching this determination.

The hon. member for Skeena, in remarks he suggested were not exactly germane to the main topic of his speech, said that the reason we are debating this particular resolution today can be related to amendments made to the Bill of Rights. That is not precisely the case. The reason we are debating this resolution is the result of the anxiety of the government to have this subject debated and considered in this House and in the nation at the earliest possible moment. Had the government chosen to follow the letter of the law, as required in the Bill of Rights, it could have waited 15 days to table the Order in Council in the House of Commons and then, on motion of 10 members, a convenient date for the debate would have been selected. However, this course was followed on the initiative of the government, that is, seeking the unanimous consent of the House for a special debate. I think this is a significant fact and one that ought not to be ignored. The government has taken this course, and we are debating this not because the government was obliged to follow that course, but because it wanted the debate at the earliest possible moment.

I think there is common agreement amongst all sides of the House on a number of issues. Many people have spent a great deal of time reiterating these. Certainly, we have nothing but the utmost sympathy for the families of Mr. Cross and the hon. Mr. Laporte, and for them as individuals in this particularly trying time. We do hope that whatever action has been taken or will be taken will result in their safe release and return.

We are all in agreement I think that Canada, and the province of Quebec particularly, are faced with a very perilous situation. We have the assessment of the federal government, voiced by a number of members of the treasury benches, and most particularly the emphatic assessment of the very knowledgeable Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand). We also have the provincial assessment as set out in Prime Minister Bourassa's letter to the Prime Minister which appears as an appendix to yesterday's Hansard. We likewise have the assessment of the city of Montreal and the director of the Montreal police department. We have also had the assessments of numerous backbenchers on both sides of this House who are familiar with this situation.

I will not attempt to catalogue those from this side of the House who have spoken from their personal knowledge of the situation that exists. However, I would say that I have watched this debate throughout and I have noted the silence with which hon. members of the official opposition from the province of Quebec have greeted the speeches of their colleagues. It is indeed regrettable that in their caucus they could not have convinced their fellow party members that the situation is as it is, and that the reaction must have been as they have indicated.

The hon. member for Ste. Hyacinthe (Mr. Ricard) has not spoken in this debate, but I think he probably will. His other three colleagues, the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Asselin), the hon. member for Sainte-Marie (Mr. Valade) and the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) have all spoken, and certainly one would find difficulty in relating the content of their remarks to the speeches by their leader, and the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), or indeed any of the other members of their caucus.

• (6:50 p.m.)

I think we are all agreed, too, that the government has taken a grave step. This has been admitted by the Prime Minister, by the Minister of Justice and by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion among others. There is no question of the seriousness of the step or that it was taken reluctantly. There is no question that information is not generally available to those on this side of the House who are not on the treasury bench any more than to those on the other side or to the general public, on which we are able to assess the government's decision to take this step. We can only accept that this government has been a responsible government, and that its record in the matter of civil rights is such that this is not something it would have done without the deepest soul-searching and without, as the hon. member for Skeena who spoke immediately before me pointed out, hedging very substantially in respect of the request for emergency powers that came from the government of Quebec and the city of Montreal. So, I think those of us on the backbenches on this side of the House must share the apprehension of all people who do not have the opportunity to know fully the facts that have been the basis for this decision.

We share that apprehension, but we also share the consensus, which is overwhelming throughout this nation, that it was a right decision. We share the opinion of the nation that this is not an act this government would be disposed to permit to continue beyond the time that is absolutely necessary. I believe there is general consensus on all sides of the House that the existing powers under the Criminal Code were inadequate. This appears to have been admitted every place. People ask: Why was action not taken on the evidence given by Mr. Saulnier before the Broadcasting Committee a year ago. Of course, the administration of justice is a provincial function. If Mr. Saulnier had the evidence he alleged he had, and the evidence which the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert read, I ask why did not the police force of the city of Montreal or the Quebec provincial police start the prosecution? The federal government had no right to exercise police powers competent to deal with the matter in the circumstances. It is as simple as that. If the evidence existed, and if in fact prosecution was desirable at that time, then indeed the onus was on municipal and provincial authorities to exercise their jurisdiction. They had not only the right but the obligation to do so.

Another area of disagreement here is something that was summed up by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) in four words, "Too much too late". The timing certainly has been challenged. Perhaps 100 years from now some historian, with access to all the information, may be able to second-guess that assessment and say that it should have been done a week ago, a month ago, a day ago or a day, a week or a month from now. We here are only human. I am sure the members of the cabinet would admit to humanity, particularly in this grave situation.

There has also been disagreement on the method of obtaining the extra police powers. It has been suggested that the Criminal Code be amended. I am not too clear whether the people who have been suggesting amendment of the Criminal Code have been suggesting a general amendment to cope with situations now and forever more or a particular amendment which would deal with the situation as it is now. If it is to be a general amendment, I would tend to view it with the same degree of apprehension that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) and the hon. member for Skeena viewed the history of section 98 of the Criminal Code which remained in that piece of legislation for almost two decades. Are we to have a provision in the Criminal Code that is conceived in crisis circumstances with which we have to live indefinitely? I hope the circumstances in Canada will not require any such thing.

On the other hand, if there is to be a particular piece of legislation amending the Criminal Code, can we count on it that this is the last and only time such a situation will exist in Canada? I think the experience in other parts of the world would tend to render that judgment rather sanguine and foolish on the part of the government. I would ask members opposite who have urged the amending of the Criminal Code to consider seriously, on the basis of the information they have regarding this crisis, whether they would be prepared to rush through amendments to the Criminal Code that would establish police powers that were not clearly necessary. I, on this side, would not be prepared to do so. I would want to examine that very carefully. I would think they would also want to examine it very carefully.

The other item on which there has been disagreement is the length of time provided in the proclamation for which the War Measures Act would be in effect. This, again, must be related to the magnitude of the problem as conceived by the government. It cannot be related to anything else. If it had been more serious and more deeprooted in their assessment, perhaps they would have suggested a year. If it had been less deeprooted, perhaps they would have suggested a shorter period. Surely, a decision concerning the length of time this act will remain in force is a substantive decision, the same as the other substantive provisions in these regulations, such as the decision to invoke the War Measures Act as it relates to arrest and custody and not, for example, to censorship.

The length of time the act will be in force in this particular case is not a procedural or peripheral item at all. It is an item of substance. There has also been, I believe, a great deal of gross overstatement concerning the effect of this proclamation. Certainly, nothing I say here is intended or designed to in any way minimize the fact that this was a very serious and very grave move made in response to a very serious and grave situation. Nevertheless, it has been suggested that this amounts to a suspension of civil liberties or a suspension of the constitution, whatever that means, in Canada. Much has been made of the suggestion that it was a law passed in the night and that Parliament was unable to comment on it. Parliament commented on the War Measures Act when it was passed. Parliament decided at that time, in a democratic manner in accordance with the rules of the House of Commons, that the government would have the power to do these things, in specified circumstances.

There is no merit in the suggestion that Parliament should have had an opportunity to debate this decision or comment on it before it was made. Within seven hours of the time it was made, we were given an opportunity here to commence debating its merits. That is more than the government was required to do under the law. The government brought it before us at the earliest possible moment.

Now, I should like to refer to the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald). It would seem that it is not necessary for one to be an old Tory any more in order to start preparing one's memoirs. I cannot but think that the speech given by the hon. member for Egmont last night and today must have been directed to posterity rather than to the situation today. It will read beautifully when his book comes out. But the suggestion that he is one of 264 Canadians still free to speak his mind rather overdramatizes the situation. I am one of them, too, and I do not feel I am that exclusive, I do not feel as exclusive as the millions of people in Quebec who are living in fear and who are not free to speak their minds. There are 17 million or 18 million Canadians in other parts of Canada who are free to speak their minds and will continue to be free to speak their minds.

• (7:00 p.m.)

The only advantage that the hon. member for Egmont has, as far as I can see, as a result of his status as a Member of Parliament is that he is not only free to speak his mind, a thing that most of us would wish to do, but he is also free, if he wishes, to advocate the use of force in the commission of an offence as a means of accomplishing a governmental change in Canada. If that is a freedom he prizes, he is welcome to it but every other Canadian shares the other freedoms to do everything except that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Mahoney: Some of the areas of disagreement of which I have spoken up to now involve value judgments, and I know that disagreements on these are honestly formed and honestly taken. However, there has been considerable disagreement on exactly what the government has done in proclaiming the War Measures Act and in enacting the regulations. These are questions of fact, not of judgment. Incidentally, the Ottawa Citizen did us a service yesterday by publishing the War Measures Act in full. It is unfortunate that they printed it unamended and did not include the change the Bill of Rights made a few years ago. Nevertheless, that is not particularly relevant to the discussion because the other sections of the War Measures Act are the ones that spell out the powers of the government in this situation.

The powers of the Governor in Council are set out in sections 3, 4 and 5 of the War Measures Act. Section 5 is not applicable to the case because it refers to the deportation of enemy aliens, and regrettably our enemies in this case are not aliens.

Mr. Forrestall: Are you sure of that?

Mr. Mahoney: However, section 4 provides the penalties and sets the limits on them, a maximum of $5,000 and or five years in prison, and the government in drafting its regulations has chosen to go to the maximum in that respect.

So, we are concerned with the various items enumerated in section 3 of the War Measures Act which allows the government to pass regulations dealing with censorship and the control and suppression of publications, writings, maps, plans, photographs, communications and means of communication. The government has chosen to deal in its regulations with communications and means of communication. The government has not chosen to attempt to deal with censorship, in the broadest sense of the word, or with the suppression of publications, etc.

Subsection (b) deals with arrest, detention, exclusion and deportation. The government in its regulations has dealt with arrest and detention; it has not exercised any power of exclusion or deportation. Subsection (c) deals with the control of the harbours, ports and territorial waters of Canada and the movements of vessels. The regulations are silent on that one. Subsection (d) deals with transportation by land, air or water and the control of the transport of persons and things. The regulations are silent on that one. Subsection (e) deals with trading, exportation, importation, production and manufacture. The regulations are silent on that. Subsection (f) deals with appropriation, control, forfeiture and disposition of property and of the use thereof. To the extent that this relates to the people in the FLQ or any other association advocating the use of force and the commission of crime as a means or as an aid in accomplishing a governmental change in Canada, the government has applied it. Certainly there are some provisions therein regarding forfeiture and the disposition of property, but it has to be property which can be used as evidence.

So, really, the government has shown, I think, a very vigorous restraint and a great discretion in the application of the items under the War Measures Act which it felt were necessary to deal with the situation. This was dealt with at some length by the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan), but I think it bears repetition.

Under the regulations themselves, section 1 is the short title and section 2 is the definitions. I have not heard anyone complaining about them. Section 3 designates the FLQ as an unlawful association, and also designates any group of persons or association that advocates use of force or the commission of crime as a means of or as an aid in accomplishing governmental change within Canada as an unlawful association. Does anyone in this chamber take exception to that in the circumstances?

Section 4 (a) to (f) of the regulations defines various criminal activities of overt members or supporters of the FLQ, the unlawful association. Does anyone in this chamber take exception to that? Section 4 (g) is not exclusive to the FLQ. It deals with a person who advocates, promotes, or engages in the use of force or the commission of criminal offences as a means of accomplishing a governmental change within Canada, and it provides that such a person is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years. Does anyone take exception to that?

Section 5 deals with accessories after the fact, people who, knowing or having reasonable cause to believe that another person is guilty of an offence under these regulations, or under Section 4 to which I have just alluded, and gives that other person any assistance with intent thereby to prevent, hinder or interfere with the apprehension, trial or punishment of that person for that offence, is subject to the same penalty. Does anyone take exception to that?

Section 6 creates a like offence with a like penalty for any person who knowingly permits the unlawful association of the FLQ or any branch or combination or any assemblage of persons who are gathered to advance their idea of overthrowing the government of Canada by violence or the commission of crime. Anyone who permits them to have a meeting and to congregate in a building which he controls is also guilty of the offence. Does anyone here take exception to that?

Section 7 provides that a person taken into custody for this type of offence can be held without bail pending trial unless the attorney general of the province consents to his release on bail. It further provides that once that person has been held for 90 days from the time he was first detained, he must be brought before a judge. This has been the subject of some comment and I would not, myself, be disposed, on the basis of what I know, to either strongly urge that the 90 days be maintained or that they be reduced. It seems to me that a shorter period of time might reasonably be expected in this case. However, again I do not know, and none of us here, except those on the Treasury benches know for sure, the basis on which these substantive decisions have been taken.

In section 8, again we are faced with a provision that shifts the onus of proof from the Crown to the accused. I think this provision gave the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville some trouble. Frankly, it does not give me that much trouble. People who have openly consorted with the FLQ and openly acted as their representatives, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, are deemed to be members of the FLQ. I think that Mr. Lemieux, if that is all he has done, is all right. He was retained in a professional capacity and with the full knowledge of the lawful authorities. I do not think this provision was designed to catch him or anyone whose relations with the FLQ have been lawful. But surely evidence in these cases is in the possession of the person who is charged. The reasons for his consorting or communicating with them is something that he can readily put forward and thus shift the onus of proof back to the Crown.

Section 9 of the regulations deals with arrests without warrant, and further provides that the arraignment and charge after arrest must take place within seven days, subject to the right of the provincial attorney general to extend that period for a further 21 days. This is a serious infringement of civil rights. Whether or not it is justified in the circumstances, again is something that only future disclosure of the grounds on which this decision was made by the government will permit people like myself, who do not have access to the full information, to judge.

• (7:10 p.m.)

Section 10 provides for search without warrant. I do not think anyone can take exception to that one in the circumstances. Section 11 deals with retention of evidence, and section 12 provides that regular criminal procedure applies to the prosecution of these people, except as specifically altered by the regulations. That is a saving provision and I think again that under the circumstances and, with the knowledge we have, it is one that can be fully supported.

The government has admitted that this proclamation of the War Measures Act has given it more power than is needed in the circumstances. But it has also taken the minimum possible amount of power under that statute. It is the only statute that it had available to it. Hon. members opposite have said, "You should have done something else." What else could have been done other than amend the Criminal Code, and how many hon. members opposite would have been prepared to agree to the type of amendments to the Criminal Code that would be necessary, and for the debate on them to take place in short order? How would they have been better prepared for such a debate than for this one in which they are asked to endorse the proclamation of the War Measures Act? How would they have known a great deal more about the facts of the case?

We have seen some considerable confusion on the other side of the House. Some people have said that we have given unlimited power to the Prime Minister. The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson), and most of the other Conservative party speakers, have objected to the action on that ground. Members of the New Democratic Party read the act and the regulations more carefully, and said we are giving unlimited power to the provincial attorneys general.

Whatever it is, Mr. Speaker, I contend that we are not giving unlimited power to anyone, but this does not denigrate from the fact that a serious curtailment of civil rights is taking place. The hon. member for Coast Chilcotin (Mr. St. Pierre) complained to some extent about the work of the press. However bad it may be in his opinion, or in anybody else's opinion, I am glad that it is the press and not the Conservative party that is communicating to the public the situation under this particular act.

I would like to speak now along this same line on another subject. I have not always been entirely in sympathy with the various agencies for which the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) reports to Parliament. Allegations were made by the leader of the Ralliement Créditiste and by others, in and out of this House—the hon. member for Sainte-Marie (Mr. Valade) also spoke on this subject—suggesting that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and in particular its French language network, has in fact been harbouring people who have been active participants in the FLQ.

The Broadcasting Act passed by this House of Commons in 1968 provides among other things that the national broadcasting service, the CBC, should:

> contribute to the development of national unity and provide for a continuing expression of Canadian identity;

I would be most reluctant to see any move taken in this House to give the government the opportunity of dictating to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. I think that the Secretary of State is regrettably stuck with the very unsatisfactory job of reporting to this House of Commons for a highly contentious organization, and really all he can do is report. It would be out of the question, it would be a more serious move in the long run than the government has taken in invoking the War Measures Act, to require that a political officer of this government should have any direction over the policies and affairs of the CBC.

The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, Mr. Speaker, consists of a board of directors. The board of directors is composed of a president and 14 other directors appointed by the Governor in Council. These directors spend a great deal of time flying back and forth across the country in the first class sections of Air Canada aircraft. Perhaps instead of junketing off to Yellowknife as they did some time ago, and to Halifax within the last month, they might just sit down and appraise just what is going on in their corporation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mahoney: This is where the responsibility lies to see just what is happening in the CBC, without involving political officers, cabinet ministers in the government, in a situation in which the government has no right to be involved. If the board of directors of the CBC—I am challenging them today—will just look at what it is doing, and stop taking the snow-job they are getting from that high-priced bunch of assistant vice-presidents that they have over there—

Mr. Bell: What about the minister?

Mr. Mahoney: —then I think there is some hope that the CBC may return to fulfilling the objectives Parliament conceived for it in the Broadcasting Act.

The government has to govern. Another thing that has been largely forgotten in this debate by the people opposite is the fact that the government is accountable. The government has taken a very grave move. It will be accountable to the electorate for that move, not only for what it has done to date but for how it conducts itself as long as the War Measures Act is in force. I think I can assure this House that hon. members on this side, as well as hon. members opposite, are going to be scrutinizing with great care the way this country is run under the provisions of that act as long as the government deems it necessary to maintain it in force.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mahoney: I said earlier that the government has a fine record, the Prime Minister has a fine record and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) has a fine record in the area of civil liberties. Members of the Liberal party are as alert to civil liberties as other members of this Parliament and as members of any political party anywhere.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the measure before us today is undoubtedly the most important ever to come before the Parliament of this country since the Second World War. Consequently, all of us here charged with the responsibility of representing the people of Canada must search our souls and consciences and ponder upon the action we are about to take. The vote on this measure, Mr. Speaker, without a doubt will be the most important vote ever taken by this House.

We meet this day and night in an air of crisis in Canada, at a time when our government has seen fit to impose the stringent provisions of the War Measures Act. We in this House have a particular responsibility to our constituents at this time. I think it is only right that this debate should continue today. I think it is only right that each member should have a chance to have his say because the measure before us is so important and is so broad in its impact that it places in suspension the constitutional rights and civil liberties of every man, woman and child in the country.

Hence, I feel it incumbent upon me to rise to my feet and speak, as do other hon. members and as did those who preceded me, because this measure affects everyone. It affects my constituents. It adversely affects the constituents of the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney) who just took his seat. It affects us all. So, it is only right that we should be here meeting in this extraordinary session and that we should stay here, all night if necessary, to explain our views and the way that we are reacting to this momentous measure.

• (7:20 p.m.)

Sir, this is an unprecedented measure on the part of the government. No government ought to bring in such a measure without, at the same time, giving the representatives of the people a chance to express their views. I think it is fair to suggest that before Parliament concurs in the measure, it ought to extract certain conditions from the government. I am not any more happy about this move, now that I have heard what the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney) had to say, than I was a few minutes before he spoke, even though he took great pains to explain to us the regulations the government has proclaimed under the War Measures Act and the provisions of the act with respect to which the regulations now in effect remain silent. What concerns me is that the government can, at any time, change the regulations. The government can, at its discretion, bring in new regulations. It is asking us now to support a move that would give it carte blanche over our constitutional rights for six months.

I support the view that this is a most critical and emergent situation. This is a great crisis for our country. One would have to be blind not to see that. May I also say this, sir: there were signs from which we could see this coming. I will not repeat what has already been said by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Douglas, Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands) and others who have preceded me. It was obvious to me that the government was preparing itself for this move. They were, if you like, setting the stage when they decided it was necessary in their collective opinion to bring troops in full battledress to Parliament Hill and to the cities of Ottawa and Montreal. I knew then that the government was preparing Canada for this drastic move. The government was setting the stage for the proclamation of the War Measures Act.

At that time I thought the government was overplaying its hand. I thought then, and I still think in restrospect, that the government was over-reacting. It was over-dramatizing the situation. It is only in the light of the proclamation of the War Measures Act that the dramatic move on the part of the government in bringing in troops makes any sense, in my view. There is always a great danger of over-reacting. This is something about which we should be very vigilant. That is what concerns me at the present time, although I do not diminish in any way the seriousness of the situation facing our country.

When we arrive at a moment when our constitutional and civil liberties have to be suspended, then I believe that we in this Parliament should take on the onerous responsibility of examining carefully the actions of the government and probing into the reasons for that action. This, hopefully, is the reason for this debate. Perhaps before it concludes a little light will be shed on the matter.

It has been said, and I think this bears repetition, that the government obviously had information at its disposal which it has not seen fit to make public. It had to have information at its disposal on which to base its decision. Surely, sir, no government would make such a move as this, no government would take upon itself such a responsibility, without having facts at hand which would clearly, in the collective opinion of government members, warrant the taking of such a move.

The government of course needed the element of surprise, and I subscribe to that view. Considering the situation that exists in Montreal, and considering the communications from that city and the government of Quebec that were sent to the Prime Minister, I can understand the government's position. I sympathize with the government; I can certainly rationalize the moves that took place yesterday morning. The element of surprise was obviously very important, hence explaining why the act was proclaimed at four o'clock in the morning. It appears that the element of surprise within the context of this extraordinary move has had its effect. I have read in the press and heard in the House about the wholesale arrests that have been made. Mr. Speaker, the government is responsible to the people of Canada; it must take and is prepared, I am sure, to take full responsibility for its actions. Having imposed the stringent and extreme War Measures Act on us, it follows that the government had the responsibility of placing before Parliament in the time that had been bought, legislation which would take the place of the War Measures Act now in force. I think that is a reasonable expectation. I also feel that many of us are rather surprised the government has not, up to this time, made such a move.

The government has said that it will consider bringing in new legislation. On the basis of this vague undertaking, it asks Parliament to endorse this measure which would give it broad and sweeping powers until April 30 next. I think that is an unreasonable position for the government to take. I appeal to the government to reconsider that position before the vote takes place. We all wish to take a responsible attitude towards this measure. Indeed, we sympathize with the position in which the government finds itself. Nevertheless, in my view the government has made an unreasonable request of Parliament. It has asked Parliament to provide it with these sweeping powers unconditionally. As I say, that is an unreasonable position for the government to take.

• (7:30 p.m.)

The government should have placed before Parliament legislation to give it the powers it so desperately needed under the War Measures Act, legislation that would have addressed itself more particularly to the crisis in the province of Quebec. Instead, we must continue to operate with our constitutional rights suspended, not only in Quebec but all across this country. That is the position we are in at the present time. This measure applies to every province and region of Canada from Newfoundland to British Columbia. I am sure once that aspect of this measure is fully appreciated by the people of Canada, they will react. At that time the government will be in a very awkward position to explain why it has found it necessary to ask for these broad, sweeping powers for such a long period of time.

I feel that the amendment placed before this House by the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates) is reasonable. It merely suggests to the government that it be granted these powers under the War Measures Act until October 31, 1970, instead of April 30, 1971. In the two weeks before the end of October, the government would have ample opportunity to give careful and studied consideration to whatever legislative means it feels would be effective in giving it the powers it now has under this measure to deal with insurrection and the crisis in the province of Quebec.

The members of this House, as the elected representatives of the people of Canada, have a tremendous and onerous responsibility. It is probably the most momentous responsibility we shall ever have. Certainly, we have to exercise that responsibility. In my view this can be done in two ways. First, I suggest that we should exercise vigilance. We should be very vigilant of this government to make sure they do not abuse the powers they now have. We must watch carefully to ensure that these powers are exercised in the way in which they have been spelled out in the regulations presented to Parliament by the government. That is our responsibility as long as the War Measures Act is in effect.

Our second responsibility, which is concomitant with the first, is that while being vigilant over the use of these powers by the government we must at the same time continually press the government to introduce legislation that will replace this measure. These are the responsibilities that we now have. We must exercise them.

I find no problem in supporting the amendment before the House. However, I find it difficult to support the resolution asking Parliament to concur in granting these powers to the government for a period of six months. As we meet in this moment of crisis, I think it is only fair for us to expect the government to be reasonable. The government should not force us into a position where we have to take an extreme stand. I think most hon. members want to support the government. If the government wants to be reasonable, it will meet the provisions set out in the amendment. In my view, two weeks is ample time to prepare the necessary legislative measure to give the government the power it now has, but it must be specific and narrower in its application.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, at the very beginning of my remarks, I would like, though quite briefly, to extend to the families of Messrs. Laporte and Cross the assurance of our prayers. I also wish, that during this debate they will feel reassured because our thoughts are with them and their suffering is ours.

I now sincerely appeal to the kidnappers. I ask them to admit they have failed and to hand back their hostages, never forgetting that the safe-conducts offered by the political authorities are still valid. Let them remember that the French-speaking people of Quebec would never forgive them the death of Messrs. Cross and Laporte.

This should start them thinking, but I know they could not care less since they have already rejected the democratic process. Let them remember however that the people will have their day and when they do even those who are seeking today drastic political changes in the institutions of the province of Quebec through democratic means will, in the long run, be the first to feel the disastrous effects of the changes they seek.

To govern is to choose. Democracy is freedom for people to choose. The people of Quebec, of Montreal and of Canada have made their choice. Until proof to the contrary is available, the various governments are taking their power from those same Montrealers, those same Quebecers and those same Canadians. The exercise of power therefore rests with them. The present crisis probably reflects the inadequacy of our legislation, since it has been necessary to resort to the War Measures Act and the relevant regulations.

• (7:40 p.m.)

I therefore urge the government to call without delay a meeting of all political leaders in order that a series of measures likely to bring the present crisis under control may be introduced in the House. After all, in the eyes of the whole world, Canada is now on a war footing and this, I believe, is detrimental to the Canadian image and to the present situation.

I urge the government to repeal the proclamation of the War Measures Act with the least possible delay in the circumstances. However, whatever new legislation may be voted by the House should include interim provisions covering those already arrested, those to be arrested, and against whom a complaint will have been lodged. For these, the rigour of this act in order to maintain law and order in Canada, would continue to be exercised until their trial.

My reluctance to vote for the passage of such an act is in no way different from that of the Rt. Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand), the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier), the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) and several others. But the State must ensure for all its citizens peace, security and welfare.

There is fear in several quarters. I understand that. Our Quebecers, whatever their origins: French, British, Jewish, American, Greek, Italian or any other, are fearful. I want to reassure the people who are going through an extremely difficult period. The government has the situation under control and will keep it so because it has the support, up to this day, of the majority of the Canadian people and of almost all the people of Quebec.

If those who now hold these powers know how to use them without ill using them, the Canadian people will keep on supporting them.

The people of Quebec who have to live in a different way today, are, of course, the ones who have to fear the brunt of the action we are discussing today and this, more than all other Canadians. Let them understand clearly and also the police force that enjoy considerable powers, that the government is not embarking on a witch hunt. It is not a particular provincial party which is the object of the measure, nor its 600,000 members, but in fact those who pursue terrorist aims. Any abuse shall therefore be very severely repudiated.

It is not the government which is seeking violence but those who wish to overthrow the established order. Any action is aimed at them first and foremost. It is the duty of the government to pursue them to the confines of the province of Quebec and everywhere in Canada. It is against them and nobody else that the law applies in full.

I easily understand the indecision of the leader of the Progressive Conservatives (Mr. Stanfield) who still seems to pursue a double policy: he is neither for nor against the present measures. In view of the situation, these look quite reasonable to me.

With regard to the usual message of virtue of the New Democratic party members, I just want to say this: I remember when I attended the founding convention of the New Democratic party. In order to avoid the splintering of the new-born party, in a desperate move, one night, the two-nation theory was accepted so as to prevent Mr. Michel Chartrand from going out slamming the doors and returning to the province of Quebec.

Unfortunately, we needed a crisis to make Canadians realize how much we need to stay united and that, whatever language we speak, we have probably the same aspirations while remaining different. It is said that crises bring people closer. I hope that these events will be an obvious example that there is in Canada people with different goals but who nevertheless live together.

I wish that the crisis we are going through will make the hon. members and all other Canadians reflect on the nature of Canada, and on what are the Maritime provinces which suffer much more than the province of Quebec from the recession that might exist, and the provincial, municipal and federal authorities who work as hard as possible to get rid of it.

Before concluding my remarks, I should like to appeal energetically to the youth of the province of Quebec and ask them when they will start to think.

I am asking those young people when they will stop supporting the cause of those who want only one thing: to use them to attain objectives which are not theirs.

Young people must be completely free in preparing for their future, but they must think about the economic and social consequences that any move they will make in the next days will be reflected in their own future. They are the ones who will pay for the risks they will take and the aftermath of the present crisis.

Our young people should look around and compare their situation with that which prevails in other countries. They should compare their freedom with the freedom that exists in other countries and they will see that the real happiness to which we all aspire is relative.

Mr. Speaker, I want to repeat that no one in this House, is happy about having to vote for these exceptional measures. Unfortunately, they are necessary in view of the uncommon crisis we are going through. That is what we must understand.

I want to repeat, for the guidance of the people of Quebec, that they are not seeking peace those who, perhaps through means other than ours, want to bring about otherwise a political system. No one in this House, is pointing a finger at any particular political party.

As for the leader of the Parti québecois, he claims there is no longer any government in the province of Quebec, probably in the secret hope that the people might appeal to his good services. I say, there is a government in the province of Quebec, that of the Hon. Robert Bourassa. There is, at city hall in Montreal, a municipal government now headed by Messrs. Drapeau and Saulnier. The Canadian government is ably led by the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Those authorities, legally chosen by the electors of Quebec, the city of Montreal and Canada must assume their responsibilities.

I cannot understand that in such circumstances the debate should last for so long, nor what are the reasons inducing our colleagues to oppose the measures. Are they as reluctant as we are or more so to adopt the measure before the House. If so, I should like to hear it, but I have carefully listened to their numerous interventions and nothing has been said along those lines. I thought that the members of the opposition, particularly those of the Progressive Conservative party, considered this a heinous measure. Up to now, I have found nothing in their speeches that would convince me that it is.

I call on them, and I urge them to listen, because their constituents are beginning to want to know more. There is no partisanship involved here. At the present time, there exists a crisis in Quebec whose effects seem ignored in many areas of Canada. The government had to resort to extraordinarily drastic measures because he had no other choice. When there is only one way to face a difficulty, one has the choice of taking it or not. If one does not, one can become the target of the harshest criticism. People would be saying without any hesitation: You had a means at your disposal, and you failed to resort to it.

In my opinion, it is imperative in such a crisis to support the government, because under democratic principles any measure considered improper could be revoked later on, if the government has really misused the powers it has been granted. If the government goes too far, I am sure that the people will have no mercy for the municipal government, and for the provincial government as well who will have appealed to the federal government; and I am sure that it will be even more unmerciful for the federal government because it could have rejected the pleas of the provincial and municipal governments.

And the people who have chosen these governments will be able, at time of the municipal, provincial or federal election, to express their disagreement through the democratic process. But it does not seem to be the case at the moment. This is why, under the circumstances and subject to my previous explanation, I think that the political leaders should meet as soon as possible in order to bring before us new legislation. Under the circumstances and however unbelievable as it may seem, it would be a sign of cowardness to deny our support to the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (7:50 p.m.)

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I will admit that I am somewhat reluctant to speak following the comments of my hon. friend, the member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) who was complaining about the length of this debate.

[Mr. Prud'homme.]

I thought, Mr. Speaker, that there was an understanding among the leaders of the different parties to the effect that any member wishing to express his opinions on the matter under discussion should be entitled to freely do so. However, it was only this afternoon that some members from Quebec asked me to state my opinion on the subject now under discussion.

I would like to remind the members of this House that, with my participation to this debate, every Progressive Conservative member from Quebec will have participated in this discussion whereas several Liberal members, through fear perhaps, refuse to voice their opinion before this House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Ricard: I say to the hon. members from the province of Quebec who act as if they were martyrs to rise and speak so that they may frankly express their opinions instead of making constant interruptions during our observations. For goodness' sake, they should recognize us the same right they exercise so freely.

Mr. Speaker, the government has no lesson to teach us. If need be, we could trust the government, provided its past were not so much at variance with its present conduct. It must be kept in mind that its actions have been rather questionable: it has reversed its position on the matters of nuclear arms and the omnibus bill. Many members voted against their conscience. At a first free vote, they followed the dictates of their conscience, but when the measure was brought forward by the government, they voted as their leader told them to.

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Ricard: That is the kind of interruption they can make. They are not able to exercise their rights and to express their views here. Once again I say that they should let those who want to speak do so in a moderate way.

An hon. Member: The War Measures Act.

Mr. Ricard: The hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney) is shouting: "The War Measures Act".

[English]

The hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney) is one of those who chided me and invited me to take part in this debate. I am doing so. He has been trying since the commencement of this debate to lead us astray. I tell him that I have seen others attempt this, and this is not the night that he will lead me astray.

[Translation]

There is no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that we are presently going through a very difficult period of our history, especially in Quebec. The very life of peaceful people is threatened. Two kidnappings have taken place, a short while ago. Following the example of the hon. member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), I should also like to extend my sympathy to those who have been stricken.

The Cross and Laporte families can be sure of our deep-felt sympathy.

Such a chaos cannot last much longer in the province of Quebec. The authorities are responsible for restoring law and order. It is up to the municipal, provincial and federal authorities to enforce the law.

The Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) told us that at the request of the authorities of the city of Montreal and of the province of Quebec, assistance had been given to remedy a situation which threatened the lives of the citizens.

Early Thursday morning if I remember correctly—

An hon. Member: Friday morning—

Mr. Ricard: —Friday, after consultations with his cabinet, the Prime Minister decided to apply the war measures. From his own admission, there are in these measures many more powers than needed by the government to deal with this situation.

We are asked to approve this measure and the government side blames us for not seeing things in exactly the same way as they do. It is the duty of the members of the opposition to find out what they are asked to do, in the best interest of the population of Canada and, in particular, of the province of Quebec and of Montreal.

Mr. Speaker, considering the position occupied in the House by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). I would have thought that he could have been given additional information by the Prime Minister. However, I am inclined to think that whatever additional information the Leader of the Opposition may have received, it was of trifling importance as compared to what we have in our possession.

Apparently, the right hon. Prime Minister has decided that the Leader of the Opposition should get all the information he needs from the newspapers rather than to trust him with information which in circumstances as serious as the ones we are now living would have been useful not merely to the leader of the opposition himself but also to all the members of the opposition and hence to the entire nation.

Mr. Speaker, I said it was our privilege and our right to criticize the government and to see that the measures it proposes are the best. Then we are not the only ones to wonder about the "full power" which the liberal government is now asking.

I have in hand an editorial from Mr. Claude Ryan of Le Devoir, who surely may be considered as an unprejudiced man, as—

An hon. Member: You are saying it.

Mr. Ricard: The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) has always that benevolence of his. I think he admitted that while he was talking to union members in order to incite them to strike. I think that he is used to it and cannot change. He just told me that I did not know what I was saying. He once told me: You are not telling the truth and he has a peculiar way—

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): —to say stupidly stupid things.

Mr. Ricard: —of making himself known.

He misused his rights when he was making speeches to the workers to stir them against their bosses.

Mr. Boulanger: Those are Ricard-style lies. This is you to a T. You are preparing your election, the same as when you are doing door-to-door canvassing.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, the interjection of the hon. member for Mercier gives us an idea of the kind of freedom and democracy these people want to give us. I listened to all the speeches made in this House and I did not interrupt anybody. I listened to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) as well as as to the hon. member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault).

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): We listen to you too.

Mr. Ricard: In short, I have listened religiously to all those who spoke on this subject because it is only polite to do so. I shall ask for the same politeness. I know that it might be asking a lot from the hon. member for Mercier; I believe that courtesy is beyond his reach and that he would not even recognize it if he met it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I should like first to remind hon. members that the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe has the floor. As for him, I would remind him that he must address himself to the Chair.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker I am under the impression that this is what I was doing.

In any event, to return to Mr. Ryan's editorial, I should like to quote this passage:

> Faced with an unprecedented situation that no similar government in the Atlantic world has had to face experienced yet, the government of Mr. Bourassa had to demonstrate that it has the highest respect for life. It had also to find a formula that would constitute a first step towards the rehabilitation in the democratic process of elements temporarily outside it where methods of action are concerned, but whose political and social convictions match those of thousands of their fellow-citizens.
>
> This double challenge was very exacting. It forced the government not to yield to pressures requesting a more impressive deployment of strength. It forced it to put considerations of pride and power in second place. It forced it to give a beginning of recognition to a movement whose objectives one may dispute and of whose methods one may disapprove, but that exist nonetheless. It was a hard, difficult and thankless approach. It was nevertheless the most generous and, in the long term, the most positive.

We are not alone in questioning what is being asked of us. We are, I hope, all in favour of the return to order. We will certainly support any measure for the purpose of restoring order, but at the same time we have a responsibility to the people and we want to acquit ourselves of this duty to the best of our ability.

And Mr. Ryan's closing paragraph reads as follows:

We regret the choice that was made, for that purpose, of the framework of the War Measures Act, which has a potential scope completely out of proportion to the problem the authorities are now facing. We also regret that action under the War Measures Act should already have been initiated in a spirit and according to methods which invite the worst apprehensions. However, we can but assert anew the right of a democracy to defend itself and its duty to judge harshly those who injustly jeopardize the freedom and life of their fellow citizens, and to restrain them.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, is the hon. member talking about the FLQ or about the government?

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, I have read some excerpts from an editorial in order to show that there are others besides the opposition members who are wondering about this. If the minister had listened to my speech, it would probably not have been necessary for him to interrupt me once again.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member will allow me, I would like to ask him what he means when he alludes to people who threaten the lives of citizens. Does that concern the members of the government or the FLQ?

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to explain all the article to the minister. If he will read it himself, he will draw his own conclusions, as I did myself.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that the crisis through which we are going will be stopped as quickly as possible. However, I cannot let this opprotunity go by without recalling that this uneasiness has very deep roots. If we really want to solve that problem, we will have to grapple with the causes of the uneasiness which is grieving us now.

Nobody is ignorant of the fact that for many years the representatives of the government of the province of Quebec who succeeded each other came here to demand rights and went back home empty-handed. That has bred in the mind of the population insatisfaction and apathy towards the central government. That is one of the causes of the present uneasiness.

I would also like to take this opportunity to appeal to all my English-speaking fellow citizens, both in the House of Commons and outside, so that they make an additional effort in order to understand the aspirations of the people of Quebec.

They do not want any favours. They do not want to be treated like poor relatives. The province of Quebec is only asking for complete respect of its rights and prerogatives.

We, from the province of Quebec, want to be full-fledged Canadians and this is why I plead with my Quebec colleagues so that together we may build a better Canada in which our children will have to live. Unless there is total understanding and agreement between the components of the Canadian nation, we will continuously be faced with emergencies such as this one. I am confident that my English speaking fellow citizens will also want to do their share for the good of the Canadian people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (8:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity to express my views on the resolution now before the House. Although I come from the province of British Columbia in the extreme west of Canada, I feel we too should speak on the current crisis which affects primarily a province in the eastern part of our nation. I believe I should officially place on record my views and my position on the action taken by the government yesterday when it invoked, by Order in Council, the War Measures Act and in effect suspended the Canadian Constitution, the Bill of Rights and the civil liberties of over 21 million Canadians.

At the outset let me say that I am totally and unrelentingly opposed to the terrorist activities of the FLQ. Their bombings, kidnappings and attempted blackmail of our democratically constituted federal and provincial institutions are methods which are alien and abhorrent to our Canadian way of life. I fully endorse the stand of our federal administration in its refusal to bow to the blackmail demands of the FLQ. I believe no democratic government could long survive if blackmail, threats, bombings and violence became the order of the day. Terrorist activities to achieve social reform cannot be tolerated in Canada. The FLQ terrorists cannot justify their actions on any moral, political or humanitarian grounds, because in our nation we allow them freedom of expression and of organization to plead for all the social changes demanded by them.

I fervently hope that the kidnapped victims, Mr. Cross and Mr. Laporte, will be released to their families unharmed. Any move made by the federal government, apart from submitting to base blackmail, should be pursued with vigour and, I trust, success.

I wish briefly to discuss the action taken by the federal government yesterday when it invoked the War Measures Act to meet the crisis in the province of Quebec. I realize the tenseness and seriousness of the situation in that province, and particularly in the city of Montreal. I recognize the need for immediate and substantial assistance to meet the crisis there. But in my frank opinion the suspension of the constitutional rights of 21 million Canadians was not the manner in which this crisis should have been handled. It is too late for us to have a voice as to whether the War Measures Act should have been invoked or not, because it is already here. It became law by Order in Council at 4 a.m. yesterday. It did not have the consent of the elected members of this House.

It is rather shocking for one to realize that measures of this nature can be brought in by Order in Council. One can go to bed at night, wake up in the morning and find that his constitutional rights as a Canadian have gone and that he has been subjected to a new act. This worries me, although I realize that in certain circumstances legislation of this type must be on the statute books. I believe, however, that additional powers could and would have been granted by this House to meet the crisis in Quebec without the need in peacetime to take the unprecedented step of invoking the War Measures Act and depriving every Canadian of his or her rights and privileges under the constitution.

• (8:20 p.m.)

The question I want to put here is—and it has worried me considerably since I first heard of the action which the government had taken and which I think is an indication of the lack of leadership in this nation—is what do we do when a crisis dealing with the very existence of government in Canada hits this nation or this Parliament. I will tell you what is happening here. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his cabinet devised a policy. On several occasions, I believe, they called the leaders of various parties into the office and indicated to them what they were doing, but they did not seek the advice of the opposition parties in this House. I say that in a national crisis of this nature there should be no party politics in Canada. We should have a national policy and a program laid down, not by one party but by all parties collectively. What worries me is that if this crisis is as serious as the members on the Treasury bench tell us it is, and the government has indicated that this is so by taking the unprecedented step in peacetime of invoking the War Measures Act, then the leaders of the opposition parties should have been brought into the picture to help advise on a policy that would be accepted from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

I am apprehensive that if a major international crisis took place tomorrow that the same type of treatment might be accorded the opposition parties by the government. If it did, I would say that this is not the sign of good leadership and it is not the sign that we have a statesman in control of the government of Canada. This is where I fault the government.

We are not given all the facts. Cabinet ministers have hinted that there is other evidence which members of this House have not received. I want to tell them that it is about time they learned to give to all members in the House, including the members of the opposition, all the facts, regardless of the consequences. We too should sit down and assess the picture with all the facts at our command and, I hope, in an impartial manner. It has been this aspect that has worried me more than anything as I heard the speeches from members on the government benches and on the opposition side. If there is a crisis—as I believe there is although I do not know whether it is national in scope—then surely we are part of the democratic process and just as proud to uphold democracy in this country as are the members of any other party.

I would like to say just a few words more. We have had lots of material written in the newspapers about the FLQ which has been outlawed. A number of members of that organization were rounded up in a surprise move which started early yesterday. I have here a report from the Ottawa Journal which, I believe, must have been a reprint from the Montreal Gazette. It is rather surprising to find that a confidential RCMP report which the Gazette apparently obtained this past Thursday says there are 22 active cells of the terrorist Front de Libération du Québec in the province, with a total membership of 130 persons. The newspaper says that the report estimates the FLQ has another 2,000 members not actively engaged in the work being carried out by the cells. Then, the story goes on to say that there are 130 activists in Montreal or in Quebec, and this covers the whole of the province. We are told that ostensibly the War Measures Act is needed to corral 130 active members of the FLQ who are known to the RCMP.

I realize the need for giving additional powers to the police to deal with the bombings and the blastings which must be stopped. We must give them the power to curb these terrorists. But if this is the extent of the activists in the cities of Montreal and in Quebec, it seems to me that perhaps clamping the War Measures Act on the whole of Canada was a move that might well have received second thought from the government. I am not trying to underestimate the damage that these people can do. I am not for one second trying to tell anyone that there is not a real problem in the province of Quebec, because there is. Whether it is the municipal, provincial or the federal government that is threatened, we must move and not hesitate to move quickly to make certain that democracy remains alive in this nation.

The thing that worries me is that I see several other groups mentioned in this report, and this is information which I do not have. In this apparently confidential RCMP report there is mention of the members of the Jewish Defence League, and a group known as the Student Anti-Pollutionists. I do not have information on these groups. I think the government should level with the members of the House of Commons. Are the members of these other organizations also classed as terrorists in this crisis? I think all members of the House would like to have an answer to this, and frankly I feel that we have a right to know.

I am not going to say much more but there are one or two more points I would like to make. I have watched and read in the last two days the results of the moves which the government has made. I have been astonished and upset to see that perhaps we made the wrong move; perhaps we should have taken a little more time to assess the results of what might have come out of the invocation of the War Measures Act.

When I see headlines in the paper to the effect that the statement of the FLQ aims is being cheered by 3,000 students, and I hear reports on the radio of rallies in many parts of Quebec and other provinces of students and others who are protesting, not only the move against the FLQ but the invocation of the War Measures Act; it upsets me immensely. I am led to wonder how wise has been the advice to the politicians who drafted the moves and brought about the situation in which we currently find ourselves.

• (8:30 p.m.)

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I think we all learn lessons from history. I know I have learned a lot this last two or three days. There is no use ducking our heads in the sand and saying the crisis in Quebec does not stem from some of the social ills in that province. I am not going to stand here and blame this government for specific troubles which we have had, for example in Montreal, but I am going to tell you that politicians of all stripes down through the years have neglected the basic social reform problems that must be corrected.

You can say what you like, discontent can fester and fester over the years, based on bad housing, based on unemployment, based on a host of other social ills. We have to do something about correcting what I think is one of the basic problems not only in this country but in every country in the world. We must face up to this, and as elected members of this House we have to do a lot more thinking and decide to mend our ways.

In closing, I say that the War Measures Act is in effect. There is nothing I can do at the present time to stop its use. But I say to the government: you have talked about bringing in legislation which will take care of the situation, and which will give you an opportunity to withdraw the War Measures Act and carry on under that other legislation. I urge the government to do this with the utmost speed. Do not let us allow the War Measures Act to remain in force in this country in peacetime one day longer than is necessary. As one who really believes in civil liberties it hurts me to see us forced into this situation. The surprise element is over. If that is what you wanted with the War Measures Act you have had it. Let us get on with the job this coming Monday of removing the War Measures Act from current enforcement in this nation.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, instead of doing as many of the other hon. members of the House have done, that is expressing a personal opinion—

[Translation]

—I thought that it might be advisable to get in touch with the people in my riding and ask them for their opinion. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, I have received several telephone calls from people who gave me their opinion. All those people support the position taken by the government to settle the problem before it spreads elsewhere in Canada. The necessary measures have to be taken so that innocent people will not fall victims of criminals.

French-speaking Manitobans as well as all other Manitobans, particularly those of my constituency, are aware of the problems and fair claims of Quebecers.

However, we believe that FLQ extremists do not represent the interests of Quebecers, only their own. They are nothing but revolutionaries, trained in Maoist and Castrist camps.

We hope that Quebecers will rectify a situation that could reflect on the province of Quebec as well as on the rest of Canada.

Canadians and especially Quebecers wish to help the government restore order, justice and civil rights by democratic means.

[English]

I was very pleased indeed, Mr. Speaker, when someone mentioned this afternoon the number of premiers of the various provinces who have supported the policy of the government. I am more than pleased that the Premier of Manitoba, even though he is not of the same political persuasion as mine, went on record positively, like other Manitobans, particularly those in my area, to the effect that he was in accord with the government policy.

We in Manitoba realize that these measures are drastic but we also realize that they are temporary. Perhaps this crisis will teach us a lesson and will awaken us to the problems of Quebec and of the nation as a whole. Let us hope, Mr. Speaker, that the result of the crisis will be to bind us together even more, and create better understanding amongst Canadians.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, there is very little left that can be said on the merits of this subject.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Forrestall: I am pleased that the members on the government benches agree with that. Each of us in his own way is trying to interpret what has happened, not only for the benefit of his constituents but for his own benefit. We are in a bit of a dilemma; we are in a quandary. These are very bad times in Canada. It is an awful thing to have to say, Mr. Speaker, but I hope that they are bad enough to warrant the drastic action that has been taken. God help us if they are not. In that case, what we have done would be far worse than what we are told is happening now.

• (8.40 p.m.)

The people I represent in the Dartmouth area and along the eastern shore of Nova Scotia are as concerned as I am about what has happened. I hold no brief for the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) but I do not in any way question the legitimacy of his action. I am in no position to question the urgency of his action. On those two grounds I can only support him; I have no hesitation in saying that. Indeed, I am repeating what my leader has already said.

Any action deemed necessary to rid the country of the forces of evil at work in Quebec is justified. But it is only justified if the situation is as serious as we are led to believe. My greatest fear, apart from my fear for the lives of people in public life in Quebec, is that between 40 and 50 per cent of the people living in Canada have never before seen this law invoked and they may not know its import. I am talking about the War Measures Act; it has not been invoked since the last world war. I wonder how many of our young people are aware of the seriousness of that which has been done in the last few hours.

I am concerned for the well-being of the country and of all Canadians. I want to put a few questions on the record, in the hope that answers will be forthcoming. The first question is the one asked by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), who opened the debate on behalf of the opposition. It is this: Why are we not working right now on legislation to amend the Criminal Code of Canada? If, in the opinion of the government, amending the Criminal Code would not meet the situation in Quebec, why have we not been told this? If it would, why has not somebody told us that the law officers of the Crown are at work preparing the type of legislation the House and country demands in order to preserve freedom?

The Canadian people would like to have answers to these specific questions. I hope the Prime Minister or a member of the government will answer them at the earliest possible moment. I think we in the House and the country as a whole are entitled to answers. I think it is regrettable that the Prime Minister did not take into his confidence other privy councillors. I am referring to the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), former Prime Minister of this country, and former Prime Minister Pearson. He should also have taken into his confidence the Leader of the Opposition, the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Douglas) and the leader of the Créditistes (Mr. Caouette). These men are honourable Canadians. They ought to have been trusted with the essential details which were the basis for the government's invocation of the War Measures Act. If this had been done, there would not be any serious question in the country about the matter.

Everybody trusts the Prime Minister; I am sure of that. I am not reflecting on him in any way; indeed, he has my sympathy. His task in the last few hours has been onerous. I think it will become even more onerous as time goes on. I believe he could have removed a tremendous burden from his shoulders if he had taken one step—that of advising the leaders of the parties, in the fullest manner possible, of the specific details of the plan submitted by the director of the Quebec provincial police to Premier Bourassa, to the mayor and the executive of the city of Montreal and, through them, to the federal government. The details of that plan may well have convinced the leaders of the parties that there was complete justification for the government's action. As matters now stand, we do not know that there was complete justification. We can only assume there was.

I am very curious as to the time the government first considered the necessity or advisability, as a result of certain contingencies, of invoking the War Measures Act. As I asked before: Is anyone in the government now at work amending the Criminal Code along the lines that have been suggested or, if not along those lines, along lines determined by the government? I also wonder, as do thousands of students in Canada, what the civic authorities responsible for enforcing and administering the law intend to do with respect to students who support the FLQ? Are they to be taken to jail? I wonder whether this measure also applies to groups which may for one reason or another feed on the insipient venom of the FLQ.

Why is the government asking for this power for six months? Why not for one year or two years? Why not for one month, as suggested by the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates). Why should it not be for one week? All the Prime Minister has to do is stand in the House and say, "We want these powers for another week." Is it asking for six months because it means to inflict terror in the hearts of the terrorists? I suggest that that is already there.

I ask, too, Mr. Speaker: On what date did the Premier of Quebec first express concern to the government of Canada about the inadequacy of the existing law? Was that 11 days ago, 12 days ago or two months ago? Did the former Premier of Quebec communicate such concern? Did he voice such concern? I think the people of Canada are entitled to know. They have been asked to accept tremendous limitations to their freedom and they are prepared to accept this. Because they are so prepared, they are entitled to have answers to these questions.

I wonder how often the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) has in the last few days, weeks or months communicated to the office of the Prime Minister his concern about the situation in Quebec. It would be interesting to know how many communications have passed between the Minister of Justice and the Prime Minister in the past 12 months on the deteriorating situation in the province of Quebec.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Apart from social gossip and casual meetings in the hallways, I wonder how many hon. members from the province of Quebec have explicitly said to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) that they are concerned about what is happening in their province. I wonder how many have gone to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I think the people in the province of Quebec are entitled to know that. I have not heard too many of these members talk about this, except in a casual way. I would like to have this specific information. I want to support, as fully as I can, the Prime Minister of this country in any action he feels necessary to rid this country of terrorism.

I also wonder how many Canadians from the province of Quebec have written to the Prime Minister or the Minister of Justice in the last 12 months to express their concern. How will we determine when the apprehended insurrection, real or imagined, comes to an end? Who will determine it? Will it be the Prime Minister, the Minister of Justice, the Prime Minister of Quebec, the mayor and the executive committee of the city of Montreal or will it be done independently without consultation? We cannot assume the answers to these questions.

The people of Canada are entitled to know the procedure that will bring this situation to an end.

The conditions in the country that will require revoking this drastic step should be made absolutely clear to all Canadians. I am a little surprised that the Prime Minister, the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) did not do this. We are left to assume when the act will be revoked. I wonder whether the government has taken the opportunity in the last several hours to advise, in an official way, the premiers of the provinces who are members of the privy council of the background which led to the implementation of the War Measures Act and the regulations under it? If not, will they be advised? The sooner they are advised, the better. Even at this late date, the privy councillors should be fully advised of the reasons behind this step.

The people of Canada, as well as the press, are curious. They want to know if there have been any bomb threats or any bombs found in public buildings. How many people have had their lives threatened by the FLQ in the last 14 days, apart from the two about which we know and which hopefully are still alive and in their charge? When will charges be laid against the approximately 300 people who have been arrested since early yesterday morning? When will they be charged and what will the charge be? Who is working on the charge? What will the information contain that is laid against these people? Who is drafting it? Is the federal authority involved or is it purely a matter of provincial administration? Will all the charges be the same or will there be different charges? If this were not such a serious situation, one might be tempted to ask when construction will begin on the penitentiary that is going to house these people.

Has the government given any thought in the last 12 days to the tremendous costs that are involved? Will the defence purse strings be loosened prior to 1973? Are there contingency plans? Will the Department of National Defence plans suffer as a result of this situation? I am not suggesting they should not suffer if it is necessary to make a change. Will any program be curtailed because of the mounting costs resulting from what is happening today?

If this situation continues for any extended length of time, where will the financial assistance come from to meet the tremendous administration costs in the city of Montreal? When will we learn whether the terror in Quebec has clear international implications? One minister of the Crown has hinted at this in this House and on television, yet denies full information to the people of Canada. As a result of this, we can only expect the Canadian people to be concerned.

I do not suggest that the government is attempting to stir up the feelings of the Canadian people. I am sure this is not what was intended. However, this is what has been done. The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) earlier today made very clear that there are international implications. If so, those who have the detailed knowledge should communicate to the people of Canada how extensive these implications are.

[Mr. Forrestall.]

I wish to reiterate my support of the Prime Minister and the government in any action to bring to a halt all the terrorist activity that exists today. These people are so cowardly they are really not worth talking about. There must be an end to the conditions that give rise to thoughts that lead men to react violently against their fellow man. If I am satisfied that the situation warrants the implementation of this drastic step, I will support it. However, I first want the answers to a few questions. As my leader stated, there might have been another way for the government to act. It is not enough to simply say this was not possible. If it was impossible, we should be told why. Answer some of these questions and I am sure the people of Canada will accept being deprived of certain of their freedoms for as long as is necessary to rid this country of the evil that exists in it.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I should like to take part in this debate briefly this evening for two reasons; first, to indicate to this House and the people of Canada the very high level of support for the action which has been taken by the government in that part of Canada from which I come, the Province of Alberta. I have spent many hours on the telephone today, and before today, with respect to this matter and I think I can say, without reserve, that the action which has been taken by the government along with the explanations which have been given has the almost unanimous support of the people of Alberta in all political parties. I want to say that this support has come from good Canadian citizens of all political affiliations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Olson: My other reason is to argue that there is at least a degree of misunderstanding which is being perpetuated with respect to the legal base for the kind of action the government is taking. I think it should be known to this House and to the country that all the people to whom I have talked in Alberta recognize the gravity of the situation. Indeed, they regard this as a national problem, not as a Quebec problem. I might say I do not believe the people of Alberta who are not as close to the scene where these acts of violence have taken place have the same level of fear, because they are not as closely exposed to it, so I think there is some difference between their understanding of the situation and that of the people who are living with it in Quebec.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Olson: But there is no difference in the views of the people of Alberta, nor indeed is there any difference in the underlying apprehension of the long term effects if the government had not taken action. I say this because the people from western Canada, and from Alberta in particular, realize that the kind of thing which has manifested itself in Quebec in the last few days is certainly not confined to Quebec. The people of Alberta are concerned lest it could be a condition which is contagious, one might say, undermining the role of law and order in Canada.

Unusual steps have been taken not only by the Government of Canada but by the government of the United States in the last few days to deal with the kind of additional support which the police forces need in order to control acts of terrorism, bombings and that sort of thing. The people of Alberta are aware of this as well, so let there be no misunderstanding about the mood and the general support, as I said, the almost unanimous support, of people in other parts of Canada. They are concerned about this and they want the proper action to be taken. Not only that, but they regard the action which has been taken as being something which is more than a little distasteful to all of us, but necessary.

The other matter I wanted to talk about, and again very briefly, and I say this with a great deal of sincerity, is that there is some misunderstanding about what the War Measures Act is and the legal, consequential actions which must be taken to use the act in an emergency. What worries me is that there seems to be some feeling amongst some members, thankfully only a very few members of the opposition, that the government somehow is not acting on the instructions of Parliament. This is a very serious charge if there were one grain of truth in it, but there is not. I say that because the War Measures Act is in fact an act of this Parliament and the steps the government has taken to deal with this emergency are the exact measures which Parliament knew would have to be taken if a situation arose in Canada where it was necessary to use the War Measures Act.

Mr. Aiken: May I ask a question?

Mr. Olson: I shall be through in a few minutes. I will answer questions then. I say this because the War Measures Act was passed many years ago and it has been amended from time to time. The last time, as far as I can ascertain, was in 1960 when it was amended by the Progressive Conservative government of the day. Section six was repealed and another section was substituted. I have no complaint about that. I think it was a good amendment. The government has followed to the letter the provisions of that amendment. I commend both the people who made that amendment and the actions of the government today in complying with it.

Let us be clear about one thing and that is that the government of the day in 1960 not only amended the War Measures Act, but they must have been aware of all the provisions within that act when they amended it. At that time a special committee reviewed not only the War Measures Act but many other acts in an attempt to make the Bill of Rights consistent with those acts, and to take into account the need for meeting this situation. So, I say this argument that the government is doing something new which was not anticipated by Parliament when they passed and amended the War Measures Act is in my view simply a wrong argument which leaves a dangerously wrong impression with the Canadian public.

The War Measures Act reads, and I shall refer to it very briefly: "The issue of a proclamation by Her Majesty or under the authority of the Governor in Council shall be conclusive evidence that a state of war, invasion or insurrection, real or apprehended, exists." Every government, every Parliament knew that these were the conditions under which the government was charged with the responsibility of bringing in a proclamation and making regulations which would be necessary to give effect to the act.

If in a situation where insurrection is apprehended the government fails to use the tools which Parliament has charged it to use in that connection, the government would have been remiss in its duty and in carrying out its responsibility. But this is not what happened. The government did what Parliament expected it to do in that kind of situation. Surely, if the War Measures Act is not to be used, even in a limited form when there is an apprehended insurrection, what in the name of common sense did Parliament put it on the statute books for and leave it there through all these years?

In this emergency it is incumbent upon all of us to avoid partisanship, to be honest with the people of Canada and not try to tell them that the government did not act in accordance with the statutory provisions of Parliament. As far as an apprehended insurrection is concerned I do not want to repeat the argument which has been advanced, but it goes with the argument I am making now. Surely, if proof of that is not sufficient with the letter and advice from the Prime Minister of Quebec and the Mayor and Executive Council of the City of Montreal, where all these acts are taking place, then what is apprehended insurrection?

• (9:10 p.m.)

May I conclude by saying I believe those who argue that the government have taken an illegal or improper act, that in some way the government have violated the function of Parliament to make statutes, are not fooling the people one bit. In my view, since this measure was and is an act of Parliament and the act anticipated that the government should take certain action if the situation arose, then the government had to take the responsibility to act. Indeed, the government would have been remiss not to do what it did. In the situation we have today, the government has acted in accordance with the declared wishes of Parliament over a number of years.

Mr. Speaker: I believe the hon. member is rising for the purpose of asking a question.

Mr. Aiken: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the minister a question arising out of his statement that some hon. members appear to be questioning the legality of the government's action. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) made his position very clear at the beginning of the debate; he said he did not question in any way that the government had the legal right to take this action. I have been here for most of the debate, but not all, and I have not heard that suggestion made. I wonder whether the minister could enlighten us as to the sources from which this seems to have come.

Mr. Olson: I would be very happy to do that, Mr. Speaker, and to do it very briefly. I was here when the Leader of the Opposition made his opening remarks. I was also here to listen to the remarks of the leaders of the other parties. I realize that the leader of the official opposition and the leader of the New Democratic Party did, in fact, say that at the outset of their speeches. But what concerns me is that in other parts of their speeches, in the press and in radio and T.V. broadcasts that they have made since, they have attempted—I think this is a fair statement—to lead the Canadian people to believe that this action should have taken a different form; that the government should have come to Parliament to get the authority that the police needed to do this job.

What I am suggesting is that Parliament some time ago made a decision as to what it expected the government to do in this kind of situation.

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, I am not an expert on hair-splitting and I am not going to argue the legal points.

An hon. Member: You are a lawyer.

Mr. Bigg: Yes, I am a trained lawyer. But I am also a citizen of Canada, and I am putting the welfare of Canada ahead of my own personal and political career. I, therefore, beg the indulgence of the House for a moment while I give my personal views of this matter. My views may or may not agree with my party's views. They may or may not agree with the views of other members of the House.

Having reached the ripe age of 58, I have gained some experience as a result of dedicating most of my active years to the interests of Canada under other people's orders, largely the orders of a Liberal government, and of doing what I was told on the beat. I want to give the House my impressions from, you might say, a retired policeman's point of view. It may be worthwhile because I think I am the only ex-member of the Mounted Police who presently holds a seat in the House.

The present emergency is essentially a job for the police on a very wide scale. I should like the members of the House to remember that the problem in Quebec is not a local problem but a global one. If we look upon it as any less I do not think we can keep it in perspective. It has been said by those in much closer touch with the basic facts than I that these people who are now active in Quebec in murder, arson, bombing and blackmail are not representative of any large segment of the population, but that they get their spiritual leadership, if I may use that word, from an international movement of gangsterism which seeks no less than the tearing up of our western civilization and way of life.

If I wanted to be partisan, I could point my finger at people who in the past have been more or less carried away by no doubt very well meaning ideologies of one form or another. Some people call them fellow travellers, though perhaps I would not go that far. Because of their awareness of inequalities at home, inequalities in regard perhaps to race, colour or creed, they have from time to time written inflammatory literature. It is not long ago that a very large majority in this House censured this sort of thing.

I am not going to take very much time this evening, but I do want to remind hon. members how dangerous it is to be inflammatory, to encourage racial, religious and other ideological passions to the point where people who mean well but blind themselves with what they call patriotism lead us on the road to anarchy and war. This has happened in Quebec. This is what has caused the wave of revolution to hit the shores of this country. I should like to believe that this wave has come entirely from the outside, but unfortunately I know it has affected some of our own people. No words of mine are going to add to the rifts which might come between one Canadian and another. Therefore, I find myself, perhaps foolishly, aligned without equivocation on the side of law and order.

Hon. members can blame me if they like for saying that. After all, they may say, he is a poor, old, tired policeman who did not think for himself, and it does not sound as though he is thinking for himself now. But that is not quite the case. As someone has remarked, I have dabbled in the law. I think I understand some of the legal ramifications of this measure, but I am not going to worry about those. I want to know what we should do faced with this very serious situation.

I should have liked to have the government ask me for advice, but they did not. I should have liked them to ask the advice of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and a former Prime Minister of the country, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). I would like them to have asked the advice at least of two former premiers of our great provinces who are here and are available. What is the use of calling names at a time like this, when the situation requires the full co-operation of every loyal Canadian?

• (9:20 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bigg: I shall try to put forward in my own way a three-point program that we can now follow. The milk has been spilled and an effort has been made to bell the cat that spilled the milk. What can we do now? We have to close ranks. The War Measures Act has been invoked, so I am not now delaying the passage of any important bill. I am here to make a short, positive contribution in the shortest space of time possible. I intend to suggest three steps to which I think no Canadian could object.

Although the War Measures Act has been invoked, I think it is distasteful to Canadian people regardless of the fact that it must be used at the present time. It is time for those on the treasury benches to put aside any false pride they may have and admit that they did not hold the consultations for many reasons. The government is facing a situation which is so grave that it needs consultation with and the support and friendship of every hon. member in this House, particularly experienced members who have had the responsibility of power and have not in the past abused that power to any great extent. These men can be trusted by every Canadian. These men could sit with the government, behind closed doors if necessary, and give the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) the benefit of the experience and wisdom they have gained over the years.

I suggest that a committee of this House be struck, composed of all Privy Councillors. That committee should sit as the custodian of our freedom and should ensure that the War Measures Act is used effectively, without abuse in fact or in spirit. It is not good enough that justice be done. The people of Canada should, and have the right to know that it is being done, how it is being done and when it is being done, so long as this knowledge does not prejudice the security of Canada. I am prepared to support the appointment of such a committee for this limited purpose. This is not a partisan problem. I do not intend moving a motion, but I should like every member of the House to think about my suggestion. Perhaps we should extend to Mr. Caouette the right to sit on that committee because he is the leader of a very large section of the population although his party does not have many members in this House. We would then have Mr. Flemming, a former Premier of New Brunswick—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interupt the hon. member when he is making such an interesting speech, but I am wondering whether he might not identify members by their constituencies. I think this is a very valuable practice, and I would not think it is in order to make exceptions even for the commendable valid purpose the hon. member has in mind.

Mr. Bigg: I thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am sorry that my memory is not good enough to remember all the members by their constituencies. I will leave it at that: the members of the privy council are well known to the House and hon. members will realize who I mean. If this suggestion is adopted there will be no difficulty in identifying those persons whom I suggest be appointed to such a committee of the House.

My second suggestion is perhaps minor if the first one is adopted. The War Measures Act has been put into effect until the end of April, 1971. Perhaps it should be reconsidered by the government and by this House month by month so that the people of Canada would know whether we, their elected representatives, are in favour of everything that is being done. I am sure the government will have the unanimous support of the House as long as the committee I suggested is operating as a committee of surveillance in respect of our rights and freedoms.

My third suggestion is that instead of just talking, we should take active steps to see that the security of Canada is enhanced internationally, nationally and locally. By that I mean we should take a very good look at our foreign policy and our immigration policy. We should also take a good look at our commitments to NATO. These three matters are tied in with external security, without which internal security is a joke.

We should as soon as possible call upon all the young men in Canada, and in some cases anyone under the age of 70 who is physically fit and wants to serve the country in whatever way he is needed. They might be invited to volunteer for service during emergencies such as the one which now exists. Members like myself who are veterans of the mounted police could make themselves available on very short notice for point duty. If they are too old to go out on the beat, ride a motorcycle or bear arms, they could relieve the more active young members for that kind of work while they handle the keys to the cells and perform administrative functions of one sort or another. We should also take a good look at the manpower situation in our armed forces. It has taken a shock like this—a kind of baby Pearl Harbour, if you like—to remind us that we are probably incapable of defending Anticosti Island, let alone the largest coastline in the world and about 3,500 miles of border.

If we are to accomplish these things there must be no talk of partisanship. We must accept the responsibility of dealing with this little spot-fire in Quebec and seeing that it is put out. Anyone who has ever fought a fire, particularly in dry bush, knows how dangerous a spot-fire can be. Only by putting out little spot-fires can you avoid losing a whole territory. We can act firmly now. Nothing will frighten the enemies of Canada more than the knowledge that 265 members of this House put their lives, property and loyalty 100 per cent behind the government.

If the government want this kind of co-operation and loyalty—and I am sure they do—they too must drop any suggestion of partisanship. If we call this non-partisan committee together, it will be seized with the responsibility of securing our borders and securing peace and good will within the country. It will be responsible for making sure the people of Canada not only have this security but know that they have it, how they get it and why they are getting it.

This motion is not spelled out in black and white. I wish I could vote for it in its entirety, but I have reservations. I should like the government to at least consider these three suggestions. If they undertook to consider them, I could perhaps in some way accept the War Measures Act. When there are loopholes in respect of these very great and unnatural powers in peacetime, it is our duty to adopt whatever safeguards we can.

• (9:30 p.m.)

It is not in the nature of politics to pat your political opponents on the back. It is our job to criticize. In spite of the fact that tempers perhaps have flared a little, I think this debate so far has been mostly constructive. Members in this House with whom I have not agreed on other matters throughout the years have stood up and, I am proud to say, have put to one side their personal views concerning how Canada can best be run within our democratic framework. I detect a great unanimity about the fact that we want to restore law and order in our country. I hope the government will lean over backwards, as I hope I shall do, to see that from now on the FLQ will have 265 enemies, not people who are obviously their enemies but people who are forced into this position. I, for one, will go a long way with the government, with my own party and with other members of this House to see that law in Canada is restored to normal.

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. speaker, at the outset I wish to commend my good friend the hon. member representing Pembina (Mr. Bigg) for a very constructive and positive contribution to this debate. I believe he deserves the commendation of all of us. He has expressed very well the feeling of all members of all parties in this House that, while we may differ in our approach to what is a very serious problem, we are all deeply committed to keeping Canada united and to fighting as diligently as is possible threats to national unity by any forces which would destroy this country.

I have had the honour of serving in the opposition in another House. It is not an easy task to be in opposition. An opposition has a responsibility to set forth a diversity of opinion on the range of issues which may exist in the country. I believe the views of an opposition should be considered, listened to and pondered well. I espouse, the cause of a strong opposition because that is the only way to keep our parliamentary system strong.

In this debate in the past two days, we have listened with interest to a great many valuable opposition speeches. There has been vigorous opposition here to some of the remarks made from the other side of the House. Some members there have expressed serious concern about certain aspects of the War Measures Act. If we are a responsible government on this side, we will do our best to allay those fears which, in some cases at least, may appear to have partial basis in fact. I agree with my hon. friend across the way in opposition who just spoke when he suggested that perhaps we should attempt to gather together as much unanimity of opinion as possible in the House. It seems to me the most damaging blow to the FLQ, and to other groups seeking to destroy Canada, would be an opinion from this House that we disapprove of what they are attempting to do and condemn them with one voice.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Perrault: If in order to achieve that degree of unanimity it may be necessary for certain assurances to be provided from the government side to our friends in opposition, then I think we should provide them. I did not hesitate, when I was in opposition, to suggest that there should be more consultation particularly on important matters among the leaders of the parties in the House. On the rare occasion when it was done in my previous forum of activity, I believe the people benefited by the sharing of knowledge among the party leaders. In matters relating to the security of the state it is not possible, of course, to open every file and dossier. My friend who was formerly a member of the RCMP I believe realizes this. All security files cannot be opened to a wide range of people. But in so far as it is possible I hope the government does share with the other party leaders as much information as possible about the nature and the extent of the challenge facing Canada at this hour.

In the sort of oratorical snowstorm which has taken place in the past two days, perhaps some members on that side have overlooked some relevant facts. Many have said in this debate that the action of the government is unnecessary. They have said that we are guilty of over-kill. But really, in the final analyses, how is the urgency of a situation to be determined? When we are told by the leader of one of the major provinces in Canada that after consultation with authorities directly responsible for the administration of justice the Quebec government is convinced that the law as it stands now is inadequate to meet the situation satisfactorily, when a communiqué of that kind is received by the federal government and immediate action is requested, and when the mayor of the largest city in Canada, a great disciple of Canadian unity, suggests as he did that society is being threatened by seditious action—

Mr. Alkenbrack: He told you that a year and a half ago.

Mr. Perrault: When such information is communicated urgently to the government of Canada, that government must act immediately in the manner requested by those other levels of government. When the head of the police department of the city of Montreal states, as recorded at page 245 of Hansard, the following,

> An extremely dangerous subversive organization has gradually developed in Quebec over the last several years with a view to preparing the overthrow of the legitimate government by seditious means and eventually armed insurrection.

no government, Conservative, Liberal, NDP, Social Credit or anything else can remain supine and silent. The government must act and it must fully seize the only legislative weapon, the only statutory piece of machinery available to it, to act in the immediate fashion that these governments crying out for action demand.

The Prime Minister certainly did not defend the War Measures Act as being a perfect piece of legislation. I hope some members will re-read his statements. He said that the measure was too wide-ranging. It should be repeated that the regulations which have been proclaimed permit the exercise of only a limited number of provisions under the act. As well, the Prime Minister, as recorded at page 194 of Hansard, said:

> —I wish to make it clear today that the government regards the use of the War Measures Act as only an interim and . . . somewhat unsatisfactory measure.

And in all the oratory we have heard during the past few days, I wonder whether the members of the opposition parties have ignored the request made by the Prime Minister to them. He said this:

> —it is my firm intention to discuss with the leaders of the opposition parties the desirability of introducing legislation of a less comprehensive nature. In this respect I earnestly solicit from the leaders and from all members constructive suggestions for the amendment of the regulations. Such suggestions will be given careful consideration for possible inclusion in any new statute.

Yet, you know, some members of the opposition have portrayed the Prime Minister of this country as a despot who has been plotting for years to seize power. It is not worthy of any Member of Parliament to make such a charge. Since this crisis arose how much time has been spent by the opposition sitting down in caucus drafting the proposals they believe should be enshrined in the alternative legislation to come before the House to meet this emergency? How much time has the opposition spent? The government is working on it. I guarantee that.

• (9:40 p.m.)

Mr. Forrestall: You are the first person to admit it.

Mr. Perrault: And let me say to you that the offer the Prime Minister made on October 16 is a sincere offer to the opposition to join in the kind of all party unity referred to so eloquently by my friend, the hon. member for Pembina.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Perrault: The question arises: when is the draft of your proposal going to be received by this side of the House? When are the eloquent members of the NDP going to send over their views?

Mr. Peters: As soon as they get back from Saskatchewan.

Mr. Perrault: When will the members of the opposition send in their proposals? The Prime Minister said here he wants to meet the leaders of all parties to discuss legislation. Are you ready to meet?

An hon. Member: Of course, we are ready to meet.

Mr. Perrault: Let there be no baseless charges bandied around the House that the Prime Minister has refused to consult and to meet the opposition. The members of the opposition know very well that prior to the proclamation of the limited powers which are in effect under the War Measures Act, all party leaders were informed about this pending action. Indeed, consultations were held with the former prime minister of this country. Is this the action of a Prime Minister dedicated to a new type of dictatorial rule in Canada? Had there been more consultations when the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) was prime minister, Canada might be in a better condition today.

An hon. Member: Even in his own party.

Mr. Perrault: Yes, even with his own party.

Mr. Forrestall: Stop preaching about unity out of one side of your mouth.

Mr. Perrault: I say that the statements by the Prime Minister earnestly soliciting all party co-operation, and the ideas of other parties, have been advanced in all sincerity. I hope that his invitation is accepted by the Opposition.

There has been a suggestion that there should be a greater sharing of information. At these sessions, which hopefully will take place with respect to a measure to replace the War Measures Act—and I hope as quickly as possible—this exchange of additional information can take place.

I think that the events of the past two days point to a serious deficiency in the Criminal Code of Canada. It has been said in this debate that the government has been aware of a growing danger in the province of Quebec in recent years. The government has been accused of failing to act. Yet, within its ambit of responsibility and power, the government certainly has acted. There have been intensive RCMP activities in the province of Quebec, as hon. members are aware, but, tragically, the enforcement of the Criminal Code, including the section relating to sedition, rests at present with provincial attorneys general. The responsibility for the administration of justice as presently defined in the Criminal Code lies with provincial attorneys general. It may be that all of us can be critical of the failure of the attorneys general in the province of Quebec to act more vigorously. In this regard, I believe that the federal government must be invested with power, through amendments to the Criminal Code, to deal with national crimes such as sedition and treason.

Surely, we have learned our lesson after watching a major situation develop over recent days. Organized crime is operating on such a vast scale, it has become so mobile and so sophisticated in its perverse way, that the Attorney General (Mr. Turner) should be invested with power to act beyond that which he possesses at the present time.

It is not my intention to prolong this debate. Many speeches have been made and all of the ground has been covered. I suggest to members of the House that at this time a demonstration of solidarity, and of agreement, would be the most positive sign possible of the fact that despite our political differences we want Canada to remain free and strong, that none of us will tolerate sedition and anarchy in our midst. If additional assurances can be given by the government that new legislation is being prepared and will be introduced shortly, and that the War Measures Act will be withdrawn as soon as that measure has been dealt with, and if we can have more sharing of information with the opposition with fair consideration given to their proposals—and we have heard some good ideas in the past two days—perhaps we can achieve that level of unity which is so desirable at this time. A united Parliament will demonstrate to the people of Canada that when the fate of the nation is at stake we will not permit partisan politics to dominate our activities in this House. Let us demonstrate the same kind of solidarity on this issue that the provincial governments of Canada, regardless of political stripe, have demonstrated in support of the federal action. Almost without exception they have said "yes, it is an undesirable situation but the action is necessary. We, too, would welcome an alternative to the War Measures Act, but we support the necessary decision of the federal government". We should strive to speak with one voice on Monday. We should say "No" to those who would destroy Canada.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I will say at the moment that I will be brief. However, I want to express a few words in support of the amendment now before the House. I am in agreement with the War Measures Act being invoked, but with the restriction that it be invoked for a short period up to the end of this month, October 31, and with the understanding that at that time it be replaced by less comprehensive legislation which will take care of the situation that exists in Quebec. I do not think there is anybody in the House that would not vote for that. The only thing between the government and us in that amendment is the time factor. The motion before us sets the time limit at April, 1971. We say that is too long. All we are asking the government to do is to change course a little and narrow the time. We will then all be in agreement and could speak with one voice, as the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault) has just asked us to do.

As a member of this chamber I never thought I would find myself in the position of having to debate the War Measures Act in peacetime in this House. I have always felt, living in a democratic society, that we would have the necessary goodwill and the judgment to help us to resolve the problems as they occurred in our country. However, we are faced with this situation, and I can assure hon. members that we cannot deal with it perfunctorily.

• (9:50 p.m.)

How are we to vote on this motion and on the amendment to it? We find that peace, order and good government seem to be only a cliche now. We have arrived at a rare juncture in the history of Canada. We have had to declare a state of war in time of peace. Suddenly, we realize that all the freedoms we have enjoyed have been taken away. We find now that the Prime Minister comes to the House of Commons in a bullet-proof car; there are troops on Parliament Hill, troops around the capital; the largest city in Canada, Montreal, is under the control of troops and the police force, and the two year old son of the Minister of Justice of Canada is playing in the backyard under the shadow of a submachine gun to protect him. This is the situation in which we find ourselves in Canada today. It is a sorry state of affairs. I feel badly that I even have to speak about it.

In retrospect, Mr. Speaker, the government has failed us badly. It has allowed certain things to continue, things it knew about and had been told about. I do not propose to take up the time of the House reiterating all the things that have been so eloquently discussed previously. The right hon. member for Prince Albert, a former prime minister, brought many things very forcibly to our attention yesterday. However, there are one or two other aspects that have been overlooked and that I wish to bring to the attention of the House.

First, I want to talk about the Company of Young Canadians. This house approved a budget of approximately $2 million for the operations of the Company of Young Canadians. On November 27, 1969, after about two years of operation and after the matter had been brought to the attention of the government by the opposition and other people, a committee called for an investigation of this Company of Young Canadians. Mr. Lucien Saulnier, chairman of the executive committee of Montreal, and Montreal Mayor Drapeau appeared before the Committee. What did they tell that committee? I would like to put on the record one or two things. I reiterate that this was last fall, in 1969. Mr. Saulnier said:

> We know that in Canada individuals and groups are working actively to implement a plan which will carry the destruction of freedom, of our form of democratic government and, in this plan, the people's will, as expressed in the ballot box, is excluded.

He went on to list a number of things that he had noticed, and then said:

> We also found on the premises officially occupied by the Company of Young Canadians and paid for by the Canadian taxpayers, newspapers and pamphlets showing how to fabricate Molotov cocktails, paint bombs, flasks and vials devised to disrupt police work in the maintenance of public order.

These are the things he brought to the attention of the committee. He also said that these were:

> —things I know and of which I have privately informed the Prime Minister of Canada a few times in the past year.

That means he privately told the Prime Minister in 1968 what was happening in Montreal, and the great dangers involved. What was done? The only thing that happened was the Company of Young Canadians was revamped and a new person put in charge. However, it was allowed to continue in existence. It was not scrapped. It was allowed to continue even after the very devastating observations which I have just brought to the attention of the House.

I also wish to mention the Algerians who came to Canada. In April, 1964, in this House the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) asked several questions about the Algerian people who were allowed to come to Canada. He was told there were 114 of them. I think the House realizes what troubles and problems they have caused in Canada. On July 31, 1964, I was speaking in this House on interim supply, dealing with the budget of the Immigration Department. At that time I brought this matter to the attention of the late Hon. René Tremblay when I said:

> There is another matter which is, I think, of interest, and it concerns the proposed immigration to Canada of a large number of farmers of European descent who were formerly farming in Algeria . . . these people had a reputation which was not of the best.

That was written up in all the newspapers but still we allowed them to come into Canada. Look at the trouble they caused. What about Hal Banks? We had quite an interesting debate with the late minister of immigration of that day who allowed Hal Banks to come here and cause all the trouble on the St. Lawrence Seaway.

What about these draft dodgers we have been allowing to come into our country? I am sure they have not contributed anything to our country or to the peace, order and good government of Canada.

Let us consider the training of the red militants who have been allowed to get into the United States by way of Canada. These people come up here as so-called sugar harvesters. They cannot come directly from Cuba to the United States and so they come by way of Canada. Why should we make it possible for these people to use Canada as a stepping-stone, and to sow their seeds of discontent?

What about the Canada Council? Reading the Ottawa Citizen tonight, I noticed that one of those arrested in Montreal was Stanley Gray. The Canada Council, under the direction of the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier), offered a grant to this man of $5,500. I received many letters about it at the time.

To review the matter, the Canada Council was launched in 1957 by the St. Laurent government. The first chairman was Mr. Brooke Claxton, a very respected Liberal politician. Its purpose was to promote the arts and the humanities. One hundred million dollars was provided for its principal funding, and it has been subsidized each year. Last year the government gave $20 million to it. I repeat that the Canada Council offered a grant to Stanley Gray who was arrested yesterday in Montreal. I wrote to the minister about this and received a two-page letter from him under date of May 12, 1969, from which I wish to quote one paragraph:

> Another point had to be discussed by the Council and that was whether there was evidence that Mr. Gray's non-scholastic activities reduced or would reduce his scholarity performance or could in any way put into question his qualifications as a scholar. The Council decided that in this case, Mr. Gray's scholastic qualifications were not in question.

No, they were not in question, but his other subversive activities were certainly in question. The Canada Council did not look into that aspect of things and so offered him the money. Perhaps the director of the Council would not have had to prepare a statement to justify the award to Stanley Gray if all the other implications had been considered instead of just the scholastic aspects. These are some of the things that have been happening.

I would have thought the Prime Minister could have performed his duties much better as the head of this country, if he had remained at home and looked after some of the things that were happening in this country about which he had been told over two years ago. He was told what was happening, yet he found time to fly all over the world and let things slip at home. Now, the government that was in office while these conditions were developing must be prepared to answer for the condition in which the country finds itself today. I said I would be brief, Mr. Speaker, and so I must hurry on. Now, we find that the government has gone all out, in fact, it has gone overboard and brought in the War Measures Act.

Invoking of War Measures Act

• (10:00 p.m.)

I was pleased to note that in the Prime Minister's opening remarks he said, as reported at page 194 of Hansard for October 16:

> Following the passage of enough time to give the government the necessary experience to assess the type of statute which may be required in these circumstances, it is my firm intention to discuss with the leaders of the opposition parties the desirability of introducing legislation of a less comprehensive nature.

The Prime Minister says he wants to do this. All our amendment asks is that he do this by the end of this month. The government has gone overboard and brought forward a measure giving it almost unlimited power. I put myself in the shoes of my good friends who live in the province of Quebec. I know how I would feel if my wife and family were in the danger that exists there. I daresay that under those conditions I would think the War Measures Act was not a bit too severe.

When we are told that there are 3,000 members of the FLQ and that they have 2,000 pounds of dynamite and can set it off with methods that are difficult to discover, and when we are told how those people operate with a code system, and so on, it is not hard for me to realize how concerned people must be in the province of Quebec generally and in Montreal particularly. Mr. Speaker, I do not think too much will be cured by this measure. I do not think the trouble in Quebec, or in all Canada for that matter, will be remedied by crushing the FLQ. These troubles can only be resolved if we transform the lives of alienated Canadians whether they be in Montreal or in any other part of Canada. The best way to deal with people who feel they have nothing to lose is to give them something to conserve. I think we have conserved much in this great country of ours. We have tried and tested values which have been handed down to us over 2,000 years and have stood the test of time pretty well. We have conserved many principles and ideals which must be looked at and used again.

In conclusion I say this. The fact that this action has been taken at the request of the Premier of Quebec and the mayor of Montreal cannot be overlooked and overemphasized. The mayor of Montreal, in the letter which the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault) read, said that an extremely dangerous, subversive organization has gradually developed in Quebec over the last several years. There is nothing new about the situation that developed and which required the government to invoke the War Measures Act at four o'clock yesterday morning.

Secondly, I agree that action had to be taken and I also agree that the action ought to have been taken sooner. I think we all realize that the action ought to have been taken sooner. My concern is that the government has overreacted. I am glad to know that the Prime Minister has said emphatically that he will revoke this legislation and replace it with less comprehensive legislation. I am, therefore, prepared if necessary to give up a little of my freedom for a short period of time in order to preserve democracy for the whole country and, hopefully, to save Quebec.

This morning's edition of the Globe and Mail carried an editorial which read in part as follows:

> Mr. Trudeau has said that this is his intention, that he recognizes that 'the act is much broader than is required in the present situation', that he will be working to produce 'legislation of a less comprehensive nature'. He has asked the leaders of the opposition, and all members of the House, to make constructive suggestions for new legislation.
>
> We make one now. Limit the legislation to what is needed, yes; but make it no easier for a government to impose or maintain. Keep it a shocking thing, which no government can impose without a drama that penetrates all and frightens all.

[Translation]

Mr. André Ouellet (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great interest to the words spoken by the hon. members from both sides of the House who since yesterday have addressed this House on the important motion submitted by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to invoke the War Measures Act.

In my capacity as member for one of our Montreal constituencies, in my own right as a Quebecer anxious to assure the security and welfare of the citizens of this province and as a Canadian proud of this country and wishing that it remain unified and flourishing, I want to thank all the members in this House who rose in favour of the prime minister's motion.

Those of us who live in the province of Quebec and who have lived through the events of these last few days, those of us who took trouble to enquire about the situation, know very well that the government's decision was neither untimely nor exaggerated.

Let us recall all the events. First there were the kidnappings, then the threats to life and private property. There were FLQ communiqués of an inflammatory and seditious nature. There was a systematic use of the communication media by these criminals. For a long period of time already there had been bombings, thefts of dynamite and acts of violence of every kind.

Was it necessary to wait for the heart of Montreal to blow up with dynamite? Was it necessary to wait for selective assassination before taking action? I think the government proceeded wisely and I am sure that most Canadians agree with this decision.

After listening to a large number of conservative members, I realize that, on final analysis, this party did not, still does not realize what is going on in Quebec. We are told about the activities of the Company of Young Canadians a few years ago. We are told about subversive elements in the CBC. We are told about some scholarships granted several months or even several years ago to individuals who have become revolutionaries.

I think that the important point now is not what has taken place a year or two ago, but the events of the last ten days. In this regard, I find that the Progressive Conservative party, through its spokesmen in the House, displaces in an odd way the subject of this debate.

• (10:10 p.m.)

Many of those who spoke have indeed seemed to me to ignore the facts completely. They would have been better to ask their colleagues from Quebec, in particular the member for Charlevoix (Mr. Asselin), or again, the member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), because really, with the attitude taken in the House by the Progressive Conservative party and its leader, I am certain that this party will never have more than three or four Quebec representatives in Ottawa.

I would have thought however, Mr. Speaker, that the honourable member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Ricard), who spoke to-night, would have shown himself up to the situation.

Not only did he deal a particularly dirty blow at the Minister of Reginal Economic Expansion, but he did not even want to say whether or not he supported the war measures taken by the government to protect the population. His tirade against the minister was totally uncalled for, since the minister is one of the great champions of the citizens' rights in general, and especially of the workers and of underprivileged people in Canada. I think that the work he is doing within his department to eliminate regional disparities should cause admiration and should be commended by all members.

The member for Saint-Hyacinthe has left the House even though he said he would remain here to listen to all the speeches the members would make. Before leaving he had urged the Liberal members from Quebec to voice their opinion. His leaving the House rather gives me the impression that he was here not to hear members' speeches, but just to wait for an opportunity to take the floor. I deeply regret his absence, as I would have asked him some questions. I want to refer to the part of his speech where he spoke of the editorial published in this morning's Montreal paper Le Devoir, outlining certain views expressed by editorialist Claude Ryan.

I would specially refer to a paragraph of that editorial which the member for Saint-Hyacinthe carefully refrained from mentioning and which reads as follows:

> Going back on former impulse, Mr. Bourassa, all things considered, chose to resort to the authority of Ottawa. By his voluntary request for implementation of the War Measures Act, the premier accepted the principle of subordinating his government to that of Mr. Trudeau. He thus sanctioned, in the eyes of the rest of the country, an old recollection according to which Ottawa is the seat of the true national government and Quebec, finally, a province a little more turbulent than the others.

I should like to know if the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe endorses those words. It is often said that words exceed one's thoughts. I am really wondering if Mr. Ryan, in his writings, has not exceeded not only his own thought, but what he really hopes for, what he has been concealing for a number of months, his real thought on Canadian politics and the true place that Quebec should have both in Canada and abroad.

When I hear an editorial writer from Montreal say such things, I find that he is going too far. We are living in a country called Canada, under a Canadian government, and I do not believe Mr. Ryan is right when he says that the events happening in Montreal come exclusively under the jurisdiction of the provincial government.

In my opinion, what he said in his editorial ties in quite well with the remarks made recently in Montreal by the leader of the Parti Québécois, Mr. René Lévesque, who spoke of the federal government as of a foreign government. This is very unfortunate from an editorial writer such as Mr. Ryan who enjoyed, however, the admiration of many people.

I am under the impression that during the last few months, following a series of lead articles more or less well thought out and, in particular, after this article, he is much less popular not only in the province of Quebec but elsewhere in Canada.

I think that the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe was much too vague in his remarks. Yet, his three Progressive Conservative colleagues from Quebec had said that they supported the position of the government and that they would vote for the motion. I am wondering if the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe will be here Monday to vote, and if he does not vote, I think that he will be shirking his duty.

Mr. Speaker, I think that this crisis does not only concern Quebec. Too many hon. members have seemed to look at what is happening in the province of Quebec as if it were strictly a Quebec matter. It is really a Canadian matter. It is not only a crisis affecting Quebec only but Canada as a whole.

Our country has changed in ten days. I would like tonight to express the wish that our present trials will make us grow up, will enable us, as Canadians, to tighten the bonds that tie us together and will teach us to co-operate in the best interests of the nation.

That is why I deeply regret the comments made in the House by certain members of the NDP. It is all very well to speak in the name of freedom. I do not believe that there is anyone here who is against individual liberties. Because of the NDP's weeping and wailing, I am tempted to repeat the well-known sentence: "O liberty what misdeeds are done in thy name!"

Under the circumstances, the attitude of the NDP is completely irresponsible and unacceptable. Obviously, that party does not have any elected members from Quebec and will not have any for a long time yet, considering its totally unrealistic mentality.

Judging from what the New Democrats say, one would think that they were living in limbo, that they have no knowledge whatever of the serious situation prevailing in Montreal.

Mr. Speaker, it is dishonest to pretend as some have done that the extraordinary legislation proposed by the government will deprive Canadian of all their freedom.

These emergency measures adopted by the Canadian government are exceptional measures meant exclusively for terrorists, revolutionaries, in short those who would overthrow legitimate authorities by violence, crime, murder.

The vast majority of the population, well meaning citizens whose conscience is at peace have nothing to fear from these emergency measures and should not let the members of the NDP convince them that their liberties are at stake. The Army and the police will not bother them. On the contrary the task of the armed forces is to protect the population and to maintain peace.

I trust that by using such powers the government will be able to put an end to intimidation and terror and to ensure peace and security for all.

I pray that the lives of Mr. Cross and Mr. Laporte will be saved. I pray that their wives and children may see them home again safe and sound.

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, it is rather late. All of us are tired. The problem is serious and I have no reason to speak now.

• (10:20 p.m.)

[English]

While I do not approve of what the government did on Friday morning, I am willing to support it. I was willing to support it on Friday; I thought the element of surprise was necessary. But I do not know whether I am willing to accept it today. I was willing to accept it Friday morning.

An hon. Member: That was a fish day.

Mr. Comeau: I think the government should come forward very soon, as promised by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) last night on television, with legislation so that we may revoke the War Measures Act and bring in a bill which will deal with the situation more closely.

[Translation]

I am not from the province of Quebec but I think that the current problems there have become much worse since last week. There is no one in Canada who is not disgusted with what is going on in the province of Quebec. Those events have consequences for French-speaking Canadians throughout the country. The FLQ matter is serious, there is absolutely no doubt about it. This clandestine movement must be crushed. I really wonder if machine guns and guns will be enough. But this is not the way to solve the situation once and for all.

We all know that in the last few years, society has become—I do not blame anybody—much too permissive.

[English]

Protests have been encouraged in the last seven years. Young people, although in a minority, have made a lot of noise. Some people have been allowed to break every rule in the book across the country, the police watching them. The unrest we sense today in Canada has to do mostly with young people. This is unfortunate, because not all young people are for this type of measure.

I suggest one of the reasons a minority of young people is disturbed is that there is just no challenge today for our young people—no challenge in our schools, no challenge in our universities, no jobs to give them in the summertime. I am not saying that this is a cause of the situation we have today, but it is a cause of unrest. It is something that has to be tackled. We have allowed situations to develop, which I shall not deal with, in the province of Quebec and elsewhere and now we are in a state of civil war or at least on the verge of it, we are told. This scares me. I am relatively young, but it scares me to see soldiers and these measures being used. I know they are probably necessary, but it scares me to see people being arrested without bail. It scares me to think that if one belongs to an association, one can be arrested by the police. It scares me that it is not what you do but what you think that makes you liable to punishment.

I know very well that tonight, and since four o'clock yesterday morning, the Prime Minister has the support of 99.9 per cent of Canadians for what he has done. I know it, but I say we can still have our objections. I hate members of the government criticizing us because we raise questions. Surely we can raise questions, we can have doubts. We are not bound to accept everything per se. Even knowing that 99.9 per cent of Canadians accept what the Prime Minister has done, we can still raise questions.

What really scares me about this situation, what really makes me think about what is going on in Canada today, is that if in this passage in the Canada Gazette the words "Parti Quebecois" had appeared in place of "Front de Libération du Québec", 99 per cent of Canadians would still support the measure. I say, also, that if the Prime Minister had stated at this moment in time, "Let Quebec separate", 99 per cent of the people of the nine other provinces would still approve.

An hon. Member: That is right.

Mr. Comeau: That scares me because, by God, if that is the case, what is Canada coming to? It is not only against the FLQ that the people of Canada are supporting the Prime Minister today; it is not only what happened yesterday . . .

Mr. Corbin: Explain.

Mr. Paproski: Be quiet.

Mr. Comeau: I have explained. If words other than "Front de Libération du Québec" has been inserted, the rest of the people of Canada would still support this measure. Maybe they would not support it to the same extent because there are some in the nine other provinces who still believe in Canada and in the province of Quebec. But there are very many people who are completely fed up with what is going on. It scares me that if the Parti Quebecois had been named in that document, the people would still support the Prime Minister. There is nothing wrong in belonging to a political party, no matter what it is. I am not a friend of the separatist movement but there is nothing wrong in a country like Canada, where we have free speech, in belonging to that party. Members of the FLQ are probably members of the Parti Quebecois, but members of the Parti Quebecois are not automatically members of the FLQ.

[Translation]

This is what embarrasses me a bit and I will repeat it in French. If the Parti Québecois were subjected to the war measures, most of the Canadians would still support the enforcement of those measures. I do not like that.

• (10:30 p.m.)

[English]

I represent a constituency that is 30 per cent French-speaking and about 60 per cent English-speaking. It was the English-speaking people who elected me here. The people in my riding do not care whether one is a Catholic or a Frenchman; they know you for what you are, Mr. Speaker.

I support what the Prime Minister did on Friday morning, but I do not support his action on a continuing basis. I plead with the government to revoke the War Measures Act and to bring in legislation to deal with the situation. The word "War" in "War Measures Act" scares people. An incident was referred to this afternoon concerning what happened to a 20-year old girl at the hands of the FLQ, or someone, in Hull. It would probably not have happened if the War Measures Act had not been invoked. Although it appears to have the support of the Canadian people, this does not make the measure any more justifiable.

As an opposition member my job is to ask questions to make sure that things are done correctly. I listened to the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) this afternoon criticizing us for being against this act, criticizing us because we had a different opinion. He gave my leader hell for having a different opinion from his own. Six months ago when my leader supported the B and B Commission, the hon. member praised him. Today, because he does not agree with him, in his book my leader is no good. I say, let us revoke this measure soon. I hope hon. members will accept the amendment moved by the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates).

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): How will you vote?

Mr. Comeau: I will support the amendment. Hon. members opposite accuse us of playing politics, yet I cannot find one of the 155 members opposite who is not going to support the Prime Minister. They are not going to question this measure. What kind of country is this?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I ask the hon. member—

Mr. Woolliams: Just a bunch of sheep.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. We should have order in the House. The hon. member for South

Western Nova (Mr. Comeau) has the floor. If this debate is to carry on peacefully, hon. members should refrain from making remarks from one side of the House to the other.

Mr. Comeau: All the amendment provides is that instead of keeping this measure in force for 6½ months, we do so only till October 30. This will give the police all the authority they want for another two weeks. The government can come back to Parliament at the end of October and ask for another debate on this important matter. Then if it is necessary to extend the measure, we can do so. But I do not believe the government should have this power for too long.

I make no apology for raising objections to the measure even though some government backbenchers do not approve. I hope the government is right and that this is the last time the War Measures Act will be used. I hope we will be able to cure the ills of this country in the near future.

[Translation]

Mr. Arthur Portelance (Gamelin): Mr. Speaker, when I was elected a member of Parliament, on June 25, 1968, I did not think that we would have to vote on a matter as delicate and as important as the one now under consideration.

I know that several members of the opposition agree with the decision taken by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his cabinet. Certainly, they did not arrive at such decisions without due consideration. They simply answered the call of the premier of one of the Canadian provinces, the hon. Mr. Bourassa, as well as the call of responsible persons, such as the mayor of Montréal, Mr. Jean Drapeau, and the chairman of the executive committee, Mr. Lucien Saulnier.

Members of the opposition seem to believe that a dictatorship has just been implanted in Canada. If such was the case, the government members would be the first ones to object to it.

However I do not believe that such is the situation now. I am convinced that all my constituents entirely support the decision of the federal government to help Quebec restore order.

The province of Quebec is not the only province in Canada, and Canada is not the province of Quebec. This country includes ten provinces all equally important.

I was surprised to hear the former leader of the Progressive Conservative Party, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) say that the citizens in his province would be deprived of certain liberties for some time.

The hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) made similar remarks. Yesterday, I heard him on television refer to some freedoms of which citizens other than Quebecers would be deprived.

Now, if I were in their shoes I would be ready to do without some freedoms if I knew that problems similar to those now prevailing in Quebec might develop in my province.

Being a Canadian does not merely mean being a Quebecer. We, Canadians, are privileged, for the whole world looks at us today. Many people would be happy to come and settle in Canada if it were possible.

We must be proud to be Canadians, and to safeguard that freedom I am happy to be part of a government headed by the present Prime Minister.

A few days ago, Mr. Cross was kidnapped in Montreal. His mission in Canada was to help Quebec and the rest of Canada to secure foreign capital to help the underprivileged by creating employment. I believe that was one of the projects of the Quebec government. In fact, the premier of that province spares no effort these days in order to secure foreign capital. Mr. Cross's main responsibility was to interest his government in investing in Canada. How strange that Mr. Cross, by coincidence, should disappear from view.

Later, another personality, and not the least important, the Hon. Pierre Laporte was kidnapped. From the time he entered politics, Mr. Laporte was the one who fought the most zealously for freedom in Quebec and in Canada. He wanted a free press and he fought for it vigorously in the province of Quebec. Mr. Laporte also wanted freedom in the labour movement. He has nothing to blame himself for with regard to freedom.

Mr. Speaker, those coincidences are strange. In the same time, the FLQ speaks of liberty, endoctrinates the students, devotes a lot of time to the universities, the CEGEPs and high schools to win over our young people. What did it promise? We do not know, because it had nothing on which to base its promises. Its members did not have the courage, every four years, and at times oftener, to try to be elected democratically.

The Quebec government is aware of the problems it must face and does everything possible to help the underprivileged but, as the member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) said yesterday, it is not only the underprivileged who are members of the FLQ.

It seems to me that some young people attending university, take a rather active part in such groups.

At the present time, in Montreal, the situation is untenable. Everyone knows that. Several members have mentioned that, last year, one of the committees of the House, of which I was a member, considered the problems concerning the Company for Young Canadians whose offices were located in Quebec. The chairman of the Montreal executive committee provided us with the proof that a revolutionary movement had developed in Quebec. If it had been conclusive evidence, if the arrests of some of its members had been possible, the Quebec authorities held the necessary powers to make the required arrests. But this has not been the case. However, some arrests have been made since the FLQ, with its blackmail, asked the government to release some of its prisoners.

The Montreal police, in spite of its efficiency—and I know personally several of its members who are honest and hard working people—has difficulty in controlling a movement which seems to me rather well-organized.

Last week, visits were paid by people who, apparently, are members of the FLQ. Besides, some of them have already been arrested. Indeed, some had been recently liberated, and the opportunity had not been missed to have them on the CBC television network so that they could give their impressions to the viewers. Those same persons were then visiting CEGEPs and universities, and intended to visit still more this week. Fortunately, an end has been put to those activities.

Last Thursday, one of my daughters, who attends the University of Montreal, was present at one of those meetings where there were political agitators inviting the students to hold public demonstrations. All the students of Quebec are invited to do just that, Mr. Speaker. I wonder what those agitators have to gain by having our students hold demonstrations. Is it planned that next week or later, all the students of Quebec will take to the streets? Are there special reasons to wish straight thinking students to act in that manner? Is there something to hide? Is it because some could not attend the lectures? Are some professors busy doing something else? Is it difficult to justify one's absence, at the university, either as a student or as a teacher?

In particular, I call upon those students within my constituency who are attending CEGEPs, high schools and universities to make it their duty to be present on time in their classrooms. Perhaps they will assist us in exposing some of the agitators who belong to their groups and encourage them to behave as they should so that there might be some success in restoring order in the province of Quebec.

This afternoon, the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) was expressing his concern about separation by the province of Quebec. He said he had the honour of spending five weeks in Quebec this year. So, after a stay of five weeks in Quebec, the hon. member suggests he knows about all the problems of the province of Quebec.

No hon. member of the Quebec region, of Montreal or of any other part of the country would think to tie in the parti québécois with the FLQ. I quite agree with the hon. member for South Western Nova (Mr. Comeau). However, the hon. member for Egmont should not lose any sleep because a government was democratically elected in Quebec on April 29 last. For the information of the hon. member, there were then 76 per cent of the electors who did in fact vote against separatism.

Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (10:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Forrestall: He was out one per cent.

Mr. Portelance: Well, it is one per cent too much probably. But 76 per cent voted against separation. The majority of the people of Quebec do not agree with it, and I am one of them.

Mr. Forrestall: But do not be critical of them for trying.

[Mr. Portelance.]

Mr. Portelance: No.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, last night, the right hon. Prime Minister addressed the nation and today I had a chance to get in touch with several of my constituents. Moreover, I had to decline an invitation to a function which I really wanted to attend and it would have been an occasion for meeting many of them. But as the member for South Western Nova so eloquently said, I assure him that 99.9 per cent of all Canadians are supporting him. The others assuredly are neither Conservatives nor Liberals but I know that they still are conscious of the present situation. I am convinced that the people of the constituency of Gamelin have full confidence in the government of the day and again I would ask the students to help us save democracy in Canada and I pray all of those who will some day want to become part of the Canadian government to stick with our present system, for if ever they join the system which is being offered to them as a substitute, I cannot promise that they will ever have the honour of being elected as representatives of the Canadian people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[English]

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I, too, would like to contribute a few remarks to this debate. Certainly, in my experience in this House, it is an occasion of momentous import and one which I am sure all members of this House hope they do not have to experience again, certainly in peacetime, that is to be debating the War Measures Act and the proclamations under it. This is something I never thought I would see in this Parliament of Canada. Even though we have been debating this resolution for two days, because of the very nature of the proclamation under the War Measures Act, no one so far has mentioned that great parliamentary word "filibuster". Action has already been taken under this measure. Men are in jail. Women are in jail. Certain rights have been suspended and this Parliament, instead of legislating, as the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) said earlier, is really philosophizing and meditating on the steps the government took when certain information came to its attention. We are discussing whether the government should have taken more or less steps, whether it moved too fast or too far.

It has been a long day and I realize that other speakers wish to add their thoughts to this debate which is unprecedented in the parliamentary life of Canada. I quite agree with most speakers I have heard—and I have been here most of today and yesterday—that the great majority of Canadians do not really appreciate the complexity and seriousness of this debate. Although this has been a long day, I say to you, Mr. Speaker, it has been no longer than the dark cloud which has covered Canada since this debate on the War Measures Act commenced in this Parliament. This day has been no longer for anyone here than it has been for the families of those who have been kidnapped. We have heard some very fine expressions today, especially in the recent remarks of the hon. member for South Western Nova (Mr. Comeau) who articulated a thought to which I think we should all hearken, including the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) and anyone else who comes from the western provinces.

I am apprehensive because I believe many English speaking Canadians are ready to delegate their authority to the Prime Minister, and not just because of the FLQ. This bothers me. I could not begin to try to emulate the sincerity of the hon. member for Gamelin (Mr. Portelance) who, as did other members today, told us of his personal knowledge of matters within his province. But that province is part of Canada and this is a Canadian problem, not just a Quebec problem. This is the reason I have no hesitation in speaking tonight.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault), in what I thought was the most constructive contribution made tonight, wanted to know how we could unite. I say to him that there is no doubt on any side of this House so far as the FLQ is concerned. Members on this side of the House, on his side of the House and in the legislatures of Canada stand unalterably opposed to the FLQ. So far as I am concerned, the actions of the FLQ, the recent kidnappings, the terrorism and the ransom requests, as well as the question of whether or not the government should have acquiesced to them, is not the point of this debate.

• (11:00 p.m.)

This debate comes down to one issue alone. That is whether the application of the War Measures Act as set out in the proclamation, which applies to this country from coast to coast and outlaws associations of certain political parties, was the proper move for the government to make in response to the request of the authorities in Montreal and Quebec; and whether the 6½ months within which the government can exercise this power is the sort of authority which this or any Parliament should delegate to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) or any prime minister. That is the issue.

We have heard many sincere expressions of thought from those who have become personally involved in what is happening and who, because their domicile is in the province of Quebec, feel a real apprehension about what is happening in their province. But I put it to you, sir, that coming from Nova Scotia and having practised law for six years in British Columbia, I was horrified when I came back from that pastoral land, that province by the sea, to see three armed soldiers across the street from where I live in Ottawa. The only thing that brought a sense of reality and a sense of humour—which is lacking in this debate because this is a serious issue—to the situation was when my four year old boy went over to cross-examine the soldier, who was in his teens, and there was a humorous exchange between them as the boy was trying to find out whether the gun was loaded.

The only facetious question I wish to put in this debate—it has something to do with the amendment moved tonight and with where we are going in Canada—is that if the amendment to limit the government's extraordinary powers to October 30 does not carry, what will the children of Ottawa do on Hallowe'en? I ask the question because I say very seriously that there are houses in Ottawa to which I do not want my children to go for trick or treat, and there are houses to which they would not be allowed to go because of things that have happened. Some children in Canada are talking about that. I know that what I am saying is light and frivolous and that it is potentially facetious. A minister lives close to me. I do not know what he will do.

I agree in part with what my friend, the hon. member for South Western Nova (Mr. Comeau), said. I have no doubt that the Prime Minister—who disappointed me in many ways last night, not because of his lack of sincerity but no one has a monopoly on trying to do the best thing for Canada in this hour of crisis—did not give us all the facts. As a politician and a parliamentarian I thought I was entitled to hear the facts. If I am not entitled to hear the facts, I think at least the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), as one of the three officers of the House—mentioned in the BNA Act—the other two being the Prime Minister and you, Mr. Speaker—could have been taken into the confidence of the Prime Minister and could have been consulted so that we would not have to give a blank cheque on a proclamation under the War Measures Act which gives special powers to the government for 6 months.

There is no doubt in my mind that because of the fear, tension, consternation and apprehension that all Canadians feel at this novel and disgusting development in our political history, the people are instinctively and emotionally with the Prime Minister with regard to the proclamation under the War Measures Act. The hon. member for Coast Chilcotin (Mr. St. Pierre), to whom I usually listen with a great deal of interest and with expectation, disappointed me today because he suggested that under the War Measures Act the press gallery should be banned. While there may well be complaints about the press gallery from time to time, I was hoping he would give a constructive point of view, of the kind that I have always heard him give in this chamber, with regard to the basic problem under discussion, rather than lead us down the trail with the red herring of the press gallery.

After saying that the Canadian people are prepared to give instinctive, emotional support to the Prime Minister, let me say that this was the proper move. There is, for example, the incident mentioned today by the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) concerning the girl in Hull. Whether this was done by the FLQ or was a result of the hysteria that has developed in Canada, I do not know. The fact that there are troops in the streets makes people prone to look to the father figure and to delegate our responsibility and duty to someone who we believe and hope can resolve the problem.

I do not suggest that the test of the War Measures Act is whether it is popular tonight or whether it will be popular next week because I, like the hon. member for South Western Nova and others, question some of the facts and the reasons behind the invocation of the act. I question where it will lead us. That is not the test of the most unprecedented parliamentary move that has ever been made in this country. Is it right, and will it work?

I agree with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) when he said in this debate on Friday that it was a matter of value judgment. The government has the responsibility of exercising their judgment in this very difficult situation.

In anything I say tonight I do not want it understood that I do not appreciate—having been exposed to people in high office at a time when they had to make decisions of state—the tension and strain under which our leaders have lived these last few days. It is a matter of value judgment; I do not argue with that. I suggest that it is much easier to agree with them tonight and hope they are right, than to question and be misunderstood, as I am afraid many of us may be. I stand here tonight prepared to question because the pages of history are full of questions. There is no monopoly, on the government or on the opposition side, on men who question the easy path and do not accept the easy way. Because of the judgment factor I feel very ill at ease about granting the Prime Minister these special powers in response to the letters of the Premier of Quebec and the authorities in Montreal.

Another point on which we are all united is this. We do not doubt that there had to be a response. I am directing my attention to the kind of response the government has made. It is ironic and sad that the matter of the constitution and the Bill of Rights, involving all the components of Canada—a matter on which the Prime Minister, because of his alleged expertise in this field, has been given a mandate—is becoming an albatross around his neck. I have to confess sadly tonight that I do not have faith or confidence in my Prime Minister in this very difficult period.

• (11:10 p.m.)

An hon. Member: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nowlan: And for anyone who laughs or smiles, I will recite why I do not have confidence. I do not intend to take too long but I go back, as other hon. members have done, to this whole problem of insurrection, of terrorism, of revolution, and of the FLQ. It did not come about last Thursday. It came six or seven years ago when the first bomb exploded and injured or killed, I forget which, someone. That was when the FLQ was born. If it had not been the FLQ as such it might have been some other organization because, at the moment, the world is full of revolutionary organizations. But what happened?

In October, 1969, Mr. Saulnier, the same man who wrote the letter that was supposed to be one of the catalysts for the Prime Minister's decision to invoke the War Measures Act, wrote the Prime Minister. When the Prime Minister was asked about this letter, because it was produced at a committee meeting, he had paid so little attention to it that he did not remember receiving it. This was the letter indicating there ought to be a security commission to investigate what was going on in Montreal. To his credit, and to the credit of his advisers, he was informed before the day was out that his answer was wrong. He came back into the House and apologized.

But, Mr. Speaker, this was a letter from Mr. Saulnier, from an important individual to an important individual about an important subject, and I found it difficult to appreciate fully the memory lapse the Prime Minister had.

You, Mr. Speaker, and all other members of the House know that after that letter was sent other events occurred. Just about a year ago, close to Hallowe'en night, there was the Montreal police strike. There were fires in the city of Montreal, and a policeman was killed. Other events occurred that brought a parliamentary committee into being to investigate the CYC. The right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert has reviewed all that for us. Earlier today the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) gave some evidence of his attempts to attract the attention of the government to some affairs going on in Montreal as far back as 1963. Then, there was Expo '67 when the Cuban embassy or pavilion was allegedly giving out pamphlets dealing with terrorism revolution and insurrection. But nothing was done.

As a member of the committee that investigated the Company of Young Canadians, the committee to which Mr. Saulnier and Mr. Drapeau gave evidence, I well remember that from some of the press, and certainly from the majority of the members of this House, came the allegation that we were witch hunting. Government members indulged in white-washing, trying to cover their own administrative mistakes and to point the finger at somebody else. That left things up in the air, and the request for a security commission went unheeded. That is point No. 2.

Now, I come down to a political area where I would expect that the judgment of the Prime Minister, and of the members of his party from Quebec, would be far superior to mine. It was only about a month and a half before the provincial election in Quebec that the Prime Minister said certain things, in that colourful phraseology that he uses. He said that the Parti Quebecois had miniscule support in Quebec. He used other objectives about the people who supported that party, all of which gave me the impression that it was a pretty small unit and that the election would take care of it.

An hon. Member: It did.

Mr. Nowlan: Some one is saying it did, but look at an analysis of the voting and you will see that one out of every three French-speaking Canadians voted for the Parti Quebecois. I say the election did not take care of the problem in Quebec or in Canada, and the problem in Canada vis-à-vis Quebec will not be taken care of as long as the Prime Minister tries to use, as a dose of castor oil for the terrorists, those constitutional policies he is applying unilaterally across Canada. We are all a little different in the different parts of Canada. The hon. member for Coast-Chilcotin (Mr. St. Pierre) and I who come from two different coasts are a little different. I say that difference stems from the collective way of life of the respective societies we have in the provinces.

After that I was a little perturbed at the Prime Minister's underestimation of the political support for this separatist party. Then, when I was back in Nova Scotia, involved in some other events, I read in the newspaper that the Prime Minister had been talking about bleeding-hearts on Parliament Hill and weak-kneed legislators. I did not think that was quite the type of remark to make about a serious subject. What did not help me either was a picture on the front page of the Montreal Gazette the day after showing his bullet-proof limousine, and his big fist sticking out of the window at the reporter's camera. Perhaps it was just one of his gestures, but when there had already been blood on the streets of Ottawa not to mention Montreal, it is no joke. My faith was shaken, but I was still prepared to give him the benefit of the doubt.

Then, the Prime Minister bawled out the press for giving free publicity to the FLQ. He asked, "What are you trying to do" or words to that effect, yet within 48 hours we had the War Measures Act introduced which gave the FLQ a status internationally that it never had previously. I am not going to go into what has happened since the proclamation was issued, but there are other matters that make me ponder about the judgment of the Prime Minister in these areas of his supposed expertise.

I could not understand why it was the Quebec Minister of Justice who answered to the world about the kidnapping of the diplomat, Mr. Cross. I though it should have been the Prime Minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp). But we all heard Mr. Choquette, and his very first words were, "I am instructed by the federal government to say..." This is a little thing, but the whole bundle bothers me, Mr. Speaker.

I come now to the use of the powers given by the War Measures Act. I do not know all these individuals in Quebec who have been arrested. I have not read that the kidnappers were captured, but some of the Quebec intellectual elite, some of the entertainers, some of the union leaders were picked up and are now held somewhere relatively incommunicado. Certainly, while they are being held their rights have been suspended.

An hon. Member: What about Vallieres and Gagnon?

Mr. Nowlan: Yes, I am aware of those two. They worked for Cité Libre at one time, as I understand it. I did not mention that until you did.

I listened to the Prime Minister on television last night, and there was a part of his statement that I just cannot rationalize with much of what has gone on today. I have not got the text of his speech and I may be misquoting but I heard him say, no doubt to re-assure Canadians, something to the effect that the situation was under control. The seizures, Mr. Speaker, have taken place. The surprise moves of the police and the army have taken place. I guess the majority of people who could be apprehended have been apprehended. If the situation in that sense is under control, then I ask why does the Prime Minister need the open-ended powers that the War Measures Act gives to him completely across Canada? When we talk about it being revoked in six months, or six months and a day, we all know that according to the regulations it can be extended at any time. I believe that in his statement the Prime Minister was kind enough to say he would come back to this House if that were done and lay the proclamation on the table for study. That does not leave me too satisfied.

Then there was the investigation of the B and B Commission leak, when the RCMP were called in. That by itself was perhaps nothing. The statement made in London two years ago about the crummy press, and that he would sic the police on the reporters if they investigate certain private lives perhaps was nothing by itself. But when you put all these incidents together you ought to become a little apprehensive and concerned.

• (11:20 p.m.)

I have sat in this House for five years and heard the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), and other eminent gentlemen who have been in the House longer than I have and who have served longer than I will, talk about democracy and liberty. I have heard it said that if we do not pass this measure, the walls of Parliament will fall and the people will not respect Parliament.

I am a young member, as is the hon. member for South Western Nova. Quite frankly, I appreciated the rhetoric but I do not necessarily agree that the institution of Parliament has reached the stage some have suggested. We are all men of good will. We are debating the War Measures Act; the liberty of some is at stake and the liberty of many others may be at stake. No one can deny that. Yet it seems passing strange to me, Mr. Speaker, that his should be the first debate I have been involved in wherein liberty really has been the kernel of the dialogue in this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: That may be a sad commentary on our society. It is also sad that the one Canada in which many Canadians believe has become the armed Canada for many of us, that the just society has become the armed society and that the flower power of the Prime Minister has become soldier power around Parliament Hill. These are not all troubles of the Prime Minister's making. Expectations were raised, some have not been realized and the inevitable frustrations have set in. We must have conciliation and not confrontation in order to resolve conflicts between people.

The Prime Minister's Achilles heel is that he utilizes logic and textbooks in attempting to solve the problems of people. You cannot resolve problems with logic and textbooks alone; you must realize that the human element is also involved. That, I am afraid, is where the Prime Minister has overstepped the mark.

Some of the people, quite logically, stand behind the Prime Minister tonight in the implementation of the War Measures Act. But will they be behind him three months or six months from now, especially if we find out that there was no real basis for these stringent methods and that proper procedures in the police courts and jails have not been followed? Is it not a painful paradox that a man such as the Prime Minister, who thought the World War II was a war of imperialism, should now use the power of war to fight a perverted nationalism?

It is also a passing strange paradox that the discussion of the Bill of Rights and its underlying philosophy that was the highlight of a federal-provincial conference, should now have shifted, and that we should be debating a proclamation which gives the government almost absolute power over all of us. The government has panicked because of the actions of a few.

I listened with a great deal of interest, as I usually do, to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey). I was appalled by some of his analogies, by some of his red herrings and the smokescreen he tried to lay. I was not appalled at his sincerity because I fully accept that. When he talked about our Prime Minister and his contribution to civil liberties in Quebec, I wanted to ask him whether in his heart of hearts he thought that if the powers under the War Measures Act had been invoked at the time of the asbestos strike, the Prime Minister would have ended up in jail.

I ask two questions about this measure. Is it right to invoke it? Will it succeed? Some tried to leave with us a pretty clear inference that underlying the all-encompassing powers under the War Measures Act which has been invoked is information that is available to members on the government side but is not available to members of other caucuses—the caucus I belong to, the NDP caucus and the Créditiste caucus. If that is so, it makes a mockery of our unity. That will not unify us.

• (11:30 p.m.)

Another question is this: Will the measure succeed? I put this question to all members of the House and especially to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner). Has the knock at night, or has repression by day in any jurisdiction in the world solved the political problems of the society concerned? Such action might divert people's attention. It might put a damper on them. It might put them behind bars for awhile. One should take off one's blinkers and look around at the world to appreciate that people no longer want a strong father figure to govern them. The knock at night, whether at four o'clock or two o'clock, and continuing repression by day on the part of any government with unique powers will not resolve political problems. Such action will defeat their solution. After all, fear breeds fear and force answers force; and power without persuasion and belief is about as permanent as quicksand.

I am afraid, Mr. Speaker, not because I want to alienate anyone but because there may be some in Quebec tonight who have supported the Parti Quebecois but who subsequently thought there was a federal option and were prepared to opt for it: these people may be alienated. Some people may have had friends in the FLQ; they may not have thought them such bad fellows. I am not talking about people like Vallieres; I am talking about some others. For instance, two good friends of mine went to see Chartrand speaking in Montreal. They were not very impressed by him. But by imprisoning some of these people are we not in danger of making martyrs of some and heroes of others?

[Mr. Nowlan.]

Will not the task of those who like the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) opted for federalism be made more difficult? Unfortunately, I was not here to listen to the minister's speech but he, on behalf of the French-speaking Canadians he represents, opted for federalism. Will these repressive measures not confirm some of the misleading propaganda and literature that has been prostituted by the FLQ? That is what bothers me, Mr. Speaker.

I will spend little time answering the argument put forward by the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher). Some have asked whether the implementation of the War Measures Act is legal. There is no question but that the Prime Minister can quite legally invoke the War Measures Act, but that is not the test we should use. The test is whether it is right and whether it will work. There was a man in Munich who created legal tribunals and appointed judges to be the dispensers of justice meted out by those tribunals. He headed a parliament that passed laws and made certain people criminals. He was interviewed by a British correspondent, Sefton Delmer of the Daily Express, on March 3, 1933. I am referring to social history. These facts are contained in Alan Bullock's book, "Hitler, a study in tyranny".

Mr. Delmer made inquiries about certain powers that had been assumed after Hitler had asked for them following an unfortunate incident involving the burning of the Reichstag on February 27, 1933. I am not trying to suggest that anything like that is happening here. I am only trying to meet the argument that this action is legal, and therefore good. Because of the fact it is legal, it should be carefully scrutinized by every member. Look at the answer given to the correspondent, a member of the fourth estate, with reference to these changes in civil liberties. The correspondent from the Daily Express asked him what truth there was in rumours of a projected massacre of his political opponents Hitler replied:

> My dear Delmar, I need no St. Bartholomew's Night. By the decrees issued legally we have appointed tribunals which will try enemies of the state legally, and deal with them legally in a way which will put an end to these conspiracies.

This interview with Hitler appeared in the Daily Express on March 3, 1933. I would like to put something else on the record with regard to legality. It is a statement of a politician, and it reads:

> The streets of our country are in turmoil. The universities are filled with students rebelling and rioting. Communists are seeking to destroy our country. Russia is threatening us with her might and the republic is in danger. Yes, danger from within and without. We need law and order.

If I asked some people who said that, I might get the answer "Spiro Agnew". However, this is what Adolf Hitler said in 1932. This is the serious aspect of what we are debating here tonight. I am unalterably opposed to the War Measures Act being invoked at this time, unless the Prime Minister can take my leader or the members of Parliament into his confidence and tell us what happened in the last seven years that makes last Thursday any different from the six and a half years before that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: As far as the powers are concerned and the argument that they are only for six months with the option to renew I point out that in Greece, the foundation for the western democracy, a junta there some years ago passed extraordinary emergency powers on a temporary basis because of insurrection. I forget all the names, but that junta is still in command and these extraordinary emergency powers are still in operation. This happened in a country where they said it could not happen.

We should not be concerned about what is happening because of the soldiers on the streets and the bombs, but because of what Parliament is doing. We should look to the south where they have had selective assassination. They have had more bombings than Quebec and Montreal have had. Several years ago 40 blocks of the city of Chicago were burned. There were more blocks burned in the city of Los Angeles than in any city in this country. The government, be it state, congress or the president, have done nothing more than call out the national guard to put out the fires and to shoot the snipers. Have they taken away the civil liberties by due process of law? I say no.

When talking about the White Paper six months or a year ago, the Prime Minister and some ministers of the government smugly talked about the difference in social values between this country and the United States. If we move ahead with this War Measures Act for six months with an option to renew, no longer will a politician or any Canadian be able to stand smugly and suggest that social values in this country are far superior to those south of the border. With all their stress and strain, selective assassinations, bombings and killings, that country has not done what we propose to do on Monday when we vote on this.

I conclude, Mr. Speaker, by coming back to where I began.

Mr. Mahoney: You have not gone very far.

Mr. Nowlan: I urge the member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney) to get off his rear end and contribute something from his head instead of his seat.

Is it right and will it work? I say that it is not right as presently drafted. Even more serious, it will not work. It will be a sad day for the Liberal government or anyone who pretends he is Liberal in spirit or in thought if this passes unamended. It will be a pathetic day for this Parliament if it passes without some restrictions. More important, it will be a sorry day for Canada and for Canadians from coast to coast if it passes unamended.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): It is a long time since I have had the opportunity of speaking on Sunday morning. I was quite willing to wait for that opportunity.

In the years that I have been here there have only been four or five debates that have deserved the attention of all Members of Parliament in the way this debate has. I wish to comment on the calibre of the speeches that have been made. Most of the people I have listened to have been very sincere in the arguments they advanced. Very little time has been spent on defending the government's position, but rather they have spoken about the position of the individual and his role.

I was interested in the speech of the hon. member for South Western Nova (Mr. Comeau). He indicated that the Prime Minister has the support of most of the people in this country. He used the figure of 99 per cent. I do not think that is correct. We must discount the FLQ and their supporters. We must also discount other people for various reasons. I agree that the majority of Canadians are in favour of this resolution. However, it is for a totally different reason than the one stated in the House today.

These people believe that the Prime Minister has suddenly said "To hell with Quebec. We are putting the army in Quebec to straighten out these people. They are going to be just like other Canadians when I finish with them."

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Peters: The people from Quebec, on the other hand, are saying that the army was put in to keep things the way they are. There are some very distinguished people in this House from Quebec, but they always refer to themselves as Quebeckers. I never refer to myself as an Ontarian. The only other people in this House who refer to themselves by a provincial name are the Newfoundlanders, but there may be others who use a fancy name. Sometimes the people from Alberta use the designation Albertan. Ever since I have been in this House, the people from Quebec have called themselves Quebeckers. Since I have been in this House people who have come here from Quebec have always said, "We are different. We want to run our own affairs. We do not want legislation passed nationally because it may hurt us provincially. We will not let you play a role."

The leaders we have had, with rare exceptions, have been provincial first, and then come to Ottawa for various reasons later. Most members will agree that in this debate many of the members from Quebec have considered their own situation. I do not blame them for this because the situation there is very bad. If the action of the Prime Minister is going to work, those cabinet ministers who are provincialists will have to give up some of the things that they think are essential to the province of Quebec. They must work to make it more like the other provinces. There must be a Canadian atmosphere rather than "What can we get and what can you do for us?". What they should be asking is, what they can do for the rest of Canada. Most members from other provinces have always been sympathetic toward Quebec.

Some speakers from the Liberal party have referred to the two party policy of the New Democratic Party. I agree that we have had that. The same people I am speaking of have advised us many times about the type of policy we should have. We listened to them because we did not know what was going on in the province of Quebec. We could not speak the language. The adherents to my party have been limited in Quebec. We were sold all kinds of ideas. People who have been in the party for a long time have sold us many ideas. It is very surprising tonight, but I am not unhappy to see, that one them is in gaol and the other one is in the Senate. These are people who have been giving us ideas from that province for many years. Maybe that is not the way they should end up. Some of those who have given us advice are in the cabinet today. I make no apology for the mistakes that we have made. We have made them with the best of intentions. We agreed to everything they asked for and they asked for various things over the years. We got ourselves into one hell of a position, and if you ask me what the policy of the New Democratic Party was for the Province of Quebec I haven't the faintest notion, Mr. Speaker.

• (11:40 p.m.)

I believe, however, that there are a lot of people in the Province of Quebec who do believe they should have the opportunity of participating. You can remember, Mr. Speaker, when we passed the Trans-Canada Highway Act and other acts—you can name them by the dozen—and Quebec said: Not us, don't run the highway through Quebec because it costs federal money. We got around to a state in which whatever was done for Quebec it could not be said the federal government had done it. For example, in the case of a technical school, we do not say that the federal government put up 75 per cent of the money. We only talk about the 25 per cent the Province puts up and we allow the Province total control. Rightly so, Mr. Speaker, because Quebec asked for it. The people of Quebec should consider the reason the majority Canadians today support the Prime Minister's actions. I think they will find that many Canadians are totally fed up with the machinations that go on in the Province of Quebec, totally fed up with the idea that they are different in each and every case. Most Canadians think that today we are making a last ditch stand to keep Quebec in confederation by force and they are supporting the Prime Minister because he is doing this.

The debate which is taking place in the House tonight, Mr. Speaker, is not on that issue. But I come from the Province of Ontario. I am not unfamiliar with the French fact in other provinces, since there are probably 25 or 40 per cent French speaking people in my constituency. But they are in Ontario and they do not feel the same way. Not long ago a totally French community in my area asked me for assistance to get them a CBC satellite from Montreal directly off the CBC. I asked them why. I said they had two stations 30 miles away, one in Ville Marie and another in Noranda. They said they were tired of listening to local politics from these stations and wanted straight programming from the CBC. So, the problems of these French speaking people are not necessarily the same and I think we should look at them in that light.

There is another problem, Mr. Speaker. Every problem has been discussed, so I don't intend to take up much time, but there is another problem that I think we could look at in terms of what is right and what is wrong. I agree with the previous speaker that this act will not solve all the problems that we think it will solve, but if it can solve some of them we shall have accomplished something. It has been suggested, and it has been suggested by members of my own party, that we pass a statute. Let me say right now, Mr. Speaker, that I would much prefer to support the War Measures Act which I know will disappear eventually because public opinion will find it repugnant than to add a section to the Criminal Code or a new statute to our statute books which would enable the Prime Minister every time he gets a letter from the head of a municipality to invoke substantially the powers contained in the War Measures Act.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault) made an eloquent speech tonight. Just let him think about what would happen if the mayor of his community were to ask for this kind of power. I think it would be the most amusing, the most disastrous and probably the bloodiest arrangement you could have. I think he would agree it would probably be less than desirable. I am not interested in providing this kind of power by means of a statute. Whatever we do, surely we will consider it to be an emergency beyond any normal requirement and this kind of power will only be granted on very rare occasions, and only after a great deal of consideration has been given to it and public opinion taken into account.

I hope the police will now have power to do something about those people who are engaged, in my opinion, in assassination and in total destruction. I am not too sympathetic toward many of the other people in that province because they have sure encouraged these people. The Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) is one I single out. But I think every time we try to put the unilingual fact in a bilingual nation difficulties will arise. Unless we are willing to make some compromises with the Province of Quebec, unless there is willingness to co-operate, these difficulties will continue.

We cannot blame the young premier of that province. He must be under terrific strain. He is probably scared to death by the enormity of the situation. In my opinion, in his election campaign, he set about trying to do something about the basic problems, to supply jobs, to improve the economy in Quebec just as one might attempt to do in any other province rather than worry about whether an ambassador to France should be appointed, or whether only French-speaking people should be brought in, even if it was necessary to get them from Algeria. He has embarked on an economic program which will eliminate many of the problems of that province. But I believe he is in serious difficulties and I hope considerable assistance will be given to him by those from that province who will be obliged to reorient their thinking.

Then, I remember Michel Chartrand. I can remember the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. I can remember when they were talking to the CNTU. They were talking about having it only for Quebec, having it strictly in the province. I agree the position changed after a period of time, but I can remember the syndicates as well. I can remember Michel coming into northern Ontario and telling the people there how they had to unite with their brothers in the Province of Quebec or their whole heritage would disappear. I have listened to Michel for 30 years. I don't think he has become any milder now than he was then. I did not understand him any better then than I do now. His language was always that of a miner or a bushworker. It really hasn't changed. I do not think of him as a bomb-throwing revolutionary—the bombs he throws are words, and I think this will be found to be true of many of the other people who are involved.

There are members of this House who are totally committed to trying to help solve the problems which have created this situation. I suggest, however, that all the members of this House are not blameless. When I first came here we did not have simultaneous translation. The only time members from Quebec participated in our debates at all was when the subject affected their own province, and then they spoke in their own language. I say, with shame, that the rest of us were not bilingual and the debates at that time were like running two Parliaments. This has been overcome, and I think many things which have stood in the way of greater co-operation have been removed.

In the minds of many people—and many in the Liberal party do not seem to realize it—this is probably one of our last chances. This Prime Minister, with his mandate, offers probably one of the last chances to unify the country. All of us will have to work to this end and for this reason I hope we will give every assistance we can to get rid of the problem. I hope we will receive every assistance to fight the problem facing us today; that we will recover those who have been kidnapped and eliminate those who are obviously bent on a course of assassination.

• (11:50 p.m.)

I remember listening on the radio to the story of the kidnapping of the Lindberg child and I well remember all the problems that arose as a result. These people in Quebec, the terrorists, not only kidnapped one person; they kidnapped two in the city of Montreal. Supposing five or six were abducted; how would you feed them? Would you send round to a Chinese restaurant for take-out dinners? These people do not seem to see anything wrong in what they have done.

One member yesterday accused the NDP of not knowing anything about the province of Quebec. It is true; we do not. But I think the hon. member would be very dishonest if he were to say that we in this Parliament, certainly in my term of 13 years, have not on numerous occasions granted practically anything asked for in order to help maintain unity in Canada. When Quebec has made a request we have acquiesced. When they asked to opt out of something, we allowed them to do so. When they asked to opt in, we likewise agreed. The same thing goes for the building of highways, and so on.

The history of co-operation between Members of Parliament from other parts of Canada and their fellow members from Quebec is fairly good as far as our party is concerned. At the same time, it behooves the members from Quebec to look at the problems in the rest of Canada as well. I realize the Prime Minister has been supported by the majority of Canadians; but the people of Quebec might be shocked to find that that reason for choosing the Prime Minister is the exact opposite of the reason the people in other provinces gave their endorsement of the Prime Minister.

I do not know whether this problem can be solved. Certainly there is a long piece to go. I am sure there is great misunderstanding between the Francophone and Anglophone cultures. I have listened to most of this debate, to every special broadcast on radio and television, I have heard interviews conducted on the street and have been very interested in the matter, as I think all Canadians have. In this time of catastrophe in the province of Quebec there lies an opportunity for some outward-looking on the part of both sections of Canada. If the will for unity in Canada exists at all, it exists today. I think each section of Canada can see how the one can help the other. Together we can solve the problem in Quebec. If it is not solved, then many of the faces we see here today will not be in the House in a few months' time.

[Translation]

Mr. Prosper Boulanger (Mercier): Mr. Speaker, I especially want to reply to one of my colleagues, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Ricard) who has left the House about three hours ago. He had been asking the government members from the province of Quebec to express themselves as clearly as he claimed to have had the courage to do so. It is easy to meet this challenge. For this reason, I shall express my own opinions which are very much in accordance with others expressed here tonight.

[English]

I listened to the remarks of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) and I also heard what was said by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan), who has now left the House. If I were to open a theatre and needed a comedian, I would call on that hon. member right away because he really is a good actor and could make quite a show. If I needed a lawyer, perhaps I would use him too, so long as I had a cause that was not too important. Having listened to the debate for two days, it strikes me as funny when members on the other side say they know that 90 per cent of the population agrees with the government's action and are in favour of its decision. Yet they stand up and try to defend what they call the civil rights of the people.

I have received telephone calls from people in my riding, and I have also made a few. But let me tell the Tories tonight that there are only a few Tories left in Quebec. If an election were held tomorrow, there would be even fewer: in fact, I do not think there would be any. All hon. members are doing is trying to get their names in the newspapers; they just want to have something to say. Hon. members are losing their credibility when they say they are trying to save the unity of the country.

[Translation]

—national unity. Where is the merit in all this?

[English]

If I asked one of the Socialists, an NDP member, to make a political speech such as I have heard here, I would have to ask what was the difference between the PQ and the Socialists. I see the hon. member for Timiskaming looking at me when I say that.

Mr. Peters: I think Levesque would be looking at you, too.

Mr. Boulanger: What is the difference between a Quebec Socialist and the PQ? There is none whatever. Let me tell you why I say that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I would ask the hon. member to address his very interesting remarks to the Chair.

[Translation]

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Speaker, if I had to draw a comparison between the two, I would say that the experience of the last federal elections would make us laugh, because, in my constituency, for instance, the candidate of the New Democratic party was, in the following provincial election, the treasurer of the candidate of the Parti Québécois. When that kind of people try to make us believe that they want to save a situation which they do not seem to know at all, I think they are increasingly losing the confidence of Quebecers.

I heard the hon. member for South Western Nova (Mr. Comeau) say earlier: We, the French, but, in Quebec, we are Canadians and we do not say: We, the French, but rather: We, the French-speaking Canadians. That is the difference. What a pity that the one who presided over the fate of France for years came here and practically challenged us by shouting "Vive le Québec libre" on the steps of Montreal's city hall where I sat for many years. Should he not be held partly responsible for what is happening? We must tell ourselves that this is not a problem peculiar to Quebec and to Canada, but a problem of international revolution and it is much more serious than some members of the opposition may think.

As for me, at the request of the member for Saint-Hyacinthe, I shall be much more specific.

I shall say neither "yes" nor "no". I shall be delighted, after having heard the speeches given in the House today and yesterday, to vote for this measure.

The member for Saint-Hyacinthe attacked verbally the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand). He even accused some of us of not wanting to speak up. When the time comes to answer him, he is no longer in the House. I hope that tomorrow he will know that I made things clear.

He should not have kept us waiting so long. In his 20-minute speech, he did not say much. He practically insulted some of the members of the government.

• (12 midnight)

[English]

Before I sit down—and I said I would not be very long—let me say that people should stop saying, right now, they are trying to save Quebec. The Quebec members here are trying to save Quebec. Many of us wore uniforms during the war. We were together as Canadians in the first world war and we were together as Canadians in the second world war. We will be together for many years to come, because the idea of separatism in Quebec will not get through. Some people are using the extremist way and they call themselves FLQ. Some groups use the so-called democratic way. When you read newspapers such as were referred to by the hon. member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), particularly when you read the words of the leader of the party, you see

[Translation]

No government in Quebec!

[English]

What does he mean? That man has been disappointed because of the small success he has had so far. Before it came to be called a party it had many names. Some hon. members know how many names it has had, because the Socialists have had many names. It was called many different names. Once it was RIN, and so on. I hope hon. members are not trying to tell us they agree that we should stick together because they want to save the province of Quebec. Why are the Socialists in Quebec such close friends of these other people? These members surprise me. I heard the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) and others speak. You are lucky. As we say in French:

[Translation]

The members of the New Democratic Party always try to run with the hare and hunt with the hounds. But, in 1970, it does not work so well. Thus, the socialists in Quebec will not go far.

I do not want to be humorous during such a serious debate. Earlier, I listened to the news. New proposals were made to the abducters of Messrs. Cross and Laporte. The Quebec government has given explanations has to how to save the life of a Canadian and an Englishman who, I think, are men of great value.

This is serious business. There has been enough talk. We should now wait until Monday to know how the opposition will vote.

[English]

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in listening to the hon. member for Mercier (Mr. Boulanger) who has just finished his remarks, because he portrayed by his comments the typical Liberal arrogance that we see here every day. He said that just because he had made a decision, nobody else had the right to talk about it.

An hon. Member: You should have put your earpiece on.

Mr. Yewchuk: The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) said something similar. He put forward a complete fabrication which he attributed to some member of the opposition, and then denied it himself. In spite of the fact that the hon. member for Mercier feels that the government's decision is correct and does not deserve comment from anybody, we should be given the courtesy of making comments whether he feels they are useful or immaterial. It may be that the comments made from now on will not cover anything that has not been mentioned. Nevertheless, we wish to make comments and perhaps in some way contribute to this debate.

Terrorism in the world is not something new; it has been going on for some time. In the past ten years there has been a wave of terrorism in most countries of the world and, lately, through South America and the United States. Canada has not been immune. Kidnappings have occurred in South America for the past year. When we heard about the events in South America, most Canadians felt, I am sure, as I did—that we were really glad to be living in Canada because that sort of thing could never happen here. Now, just a few months later, exactly the same thing has happened here. This indicates that something very serious is happening in our world. It indicates that there is a good deal of satisfaction with the system as we know it and as it is operating.

Perhaps it indicates a little more than that. According to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey), it indicates that an international organization is involved in all these revolutionary activities around the world, including those in Quebec. I suppose this is a possibility. If we look at the manifesto the FLQ put forward, we find it resembles the manifesto put forward by certain groups in the past, groups associated with either Marxism, Maoism or some other "ism," usually on the left of the political sphere although further to my left than by hon. friends here. We should try to find out why this sort of unrest is happening in our country. I should like to put forward some ideas which may or may not be acceptable to members of the House. They do not have to listen to them if they do not accept them, but I will make them anyway.

I think this unrest results partly from a trend, or fashion, in this country to glamorize change. Change has been a god in this country over the past few years, particularly under the leadership of the Liberal party which is dedicated to change. I do not think change in itself is bad, but when change is made for the sake of change it does not necessarily improve conditions in the country. Change has been falsely equated with progress, and I suggest this is not necessarily the situation. There is a rash of change in this country and in our crowded environment there are those who feel that things are not changed as quickly as they should be. With the desire to bring about change in everything with which we are familiar there is a tendency to mock and scoff at established institutions. There is a tendency to adopt ways of doing things in order to speed up the desired change. I see this as the way Liberal principles—I should change that wording because they have no principles. I see this as the Liberal mechanism of doing things, or that is the way it has been portrayed to us.

• (12:10 a.m.)

Many members have mentioned that the FLQ is not something new; that it did just happen two or three weeks ago and certainly not last Friday morning. It has been operational since about 1962 or 1963. During the past two or three years this situation has been referred to by members of the House during the question period. On each occasion the ministers who were questioned simply scoffed at these suggestions. They adopted the attitude of sticking their heads in the sand in the hope that if they did not recognize the problem it would disappear. However, while they were holding their heads in the sand in ostrich-like fashion, the FLQ came along and gave them another push so that their heads went further into the sand. Then, their heads popped out of the sand long enough for them to realize that something serious was going on in the country.

Following the kidnappings of a British diplomat and a Quebec minister, they suddenly recognized there was a problem. I wonder whether either minister present, the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) or the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) can keep their heads out of the sand long enough, and keep the sand out of their eyes, ears, nose and mouth, to tell us why they waited for this dire emergency to occur before taking action since the first bomb blasts occurred in 1963 in several major areas of the country. Now, the crisis has reached the stage where it is necessary to invoke emergency measures, including the War Measures Act. Actually, this is the first action that has been taken against this organization which has been operating in this country since 1962 or 1963.

Mr. Olson: That is not correct.

Mr. Woolliams: I think it is correct.

Mr. Yewchuk: Today, several members on the government side stressed over and over again what great guys they are because they are living up to their responsibility as members of the government. I think they really have been neglecting their responsibility for a long time. This responsibility has been neglected by the government since 1963, when the first bomb went off in Montreal. This government has not done anything about the situation. The members of the government have been guilty of gross negligence in not attempting to deal with the situation before it reached crisis proportions. This is very typical of the way in which this government, and the government which preceded it, have been dealing with the problems of this country since 1963.

Mr. Olson: How did the FLQ members get in jail?

Mr. Woolliams: You don't really believe that.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, a private conversation is being carried on right beside me.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member resume his seat. I wonder whether we might hear the hon. member I think he has something of importance to contribute. It is difficult for the Chair to hear him while there is a private conversation being carried on across the chamber.

Invoking of War Measures Act

Mr. Yewchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do not speak very loudly and I know how much you want to hear what I have to say. We heard the Prime Minister speak yesterday. I was quite impressed by his television appearance. He did a fine job. He mentioned how fragile our democratic system is, and how fine a line there is between stability and democracy. I agree with him. It takes a crisis of this magnitude for the government to realize that it must act. I believe one of the greatest blows democracy in this country received was when this government came to power.

First, this government whittled away at the democratic rights of Parliament during the last two years. Second, we have lost our civil rights completely for a period of six months with no real explanation concerning why such a measure was necessary at this time. We have not heard very much since Friday morning, other than what has been happening for the preceding two or three weeks or even for a long period. Yet, suddenly this very severe measure is introduced. I should like some sort of an explanation for that if anyone should care to give it.

Just lately we heard that Premier Bourassa had made another offer to the kidnappers. Apparently he has offered them immunity from punishment if they deliver the two victims unharmed. I can appreciate the sort of anguish he must have experienced in making this kind of offer because, in considering the safety of two persons, he had to yield a little to what we consider to be blackmail. I do not envy him his position. I think we should offer some alternative to the action the government has taken. This has already been mentioned on several occasions by members of the opposition. The War Measures Act is in force but it is not really necessary that it be in force for a period of six months or even longer.

I support the amendment moved by one of our members to the effect that the act be in force only for a period of a couple of weeks or long enough to give the government ample opportunity to bring in another statute or an amendment to the Criminal Code which would allow the government to deal effectively with the crisis which exists. I suggest that if such a statute should be brought in, it should contain a time limit just sufficient to meet this crisis situation.

It is likely that a new bill or an amendment to the Criminal Code to deal with this situation could be quite severe. We must be sure that such severe legislation would be limited only to the time of the crisis with which we are dealing. If it should be brought in, there should be an understanding that it would be reviewed within a certain period during a cooler time in our history, whenever that might be. In the circumstances, and considering all the factors involved, I consider it possible that invokement of the War Measures Act was the right thing to do because there may not have been any other way to handle the situation after the decision was suddenly made to take action. My only hope is that this exercise will lead to greater freedom rather than less freedom.

No one is very happy to see armed soldiers, guns and bullet-proof cars around our capital city, in the province of Quebec or anywhere else for the purpose of protecting our citizens. It is an unusual sight and one that we have difficulty accepting. I hope that in a year or so this whole scene will become only a relic in the museum of Canadian history. In order to ensure that this happens one might try to determine why these problems have arisen and why the FLQ has flourished. Personally, I know a couple of reasons, but I believe we should also examine the basic discontent with our social structure and recognize that in many areas of our country, including Quebec, poverty is a very great problem. Unemployment, too, is a major problem and the economy in general is in a poor condition. The people of Quebec have had some difficulties with their language and some cultural problems. There are many other problems which have been plaguing the country. All of these have to be tackled in earnest, along with any new proposed legislation that will be brought in, if the solution to this crisis is to be of a lasting nature.

• (12:20 a.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, as most hon. members, I feel a little tired, even exhausted at the end of such a long debate.

However, I do not want to miss the opportunity to speak as a member coming from a minority French-speaking group outside Quebec, because I feel it is my duty to do so.

The events now occurring in Quebec were a great shock to my fellow citizens of Madawaska-Victoria whom I represent in the House. I must say that my area is right next to Quebec. My constituency lies south of that of Témiscouata, in the lower St. Lawrence, and the newspapers we read as well as the television programs we watch come for the most part from Quebec.

We live in New Brunswick, but it is not superfluous to say that we maintain cultural and other relations with Quebec. Most of our professionals have received their training in Quebec. Even today a great number of the teachers in our schools come from Quebec where they have also had part of their training. This goes to say that Quebec's influence is greatly felt in my region in the north-west section of New Brunswick.

As most Canadians, my fellow citizens have been upset by the developments of the last few days, but they were quickly relieved to see that Canada was in such good hands and that the federal government had not shirked its responsibilities. They therefore support the government's decision as I do myself and this is the reason why I have stayed here this weekend. My constituents did not expect any less from me even though they would have preferred to see me take part in the electoral campaign under way in my province at the present time.

My colleagues in the Liberal Party, even some opposition members, have condemned the attitude of the mass media in this whole affair, and especially the manner in which they have interpreted the events taking place and the statements of the government. I have applauded such comments. I agree with their authors. In such serious circumstances, the press has not been quite up to it. I note, however, that it seems to be amending its ways and that it now sticks to the facts more than it has done in the previous days. This undoubtedly betokens greater strength on the part of newspapermen than was first assumed.

I said a while ago that the greater part of the information which in New Brunswick reaches the French-speaking audience comes from Quebec and we in New Brunswick are nonetheless far from being satisfied with the media through which this information is fed to us.

We also depend on Quebec because of our lack of news media. Our area is served by the CBC national radio and television network. We believe we are entitled to know what is going on in Canada. We agree that the majority of the CBC French network listeners reside in Quebec but this is no reason why we should be kept in the dark as to whatever goes on outside Quebec. For the past five years we have been flooded with separatist propaganda. Whenever a separatist did something, he was shown to us on television. That is no reason to keep us unaware of what goes on outside of Quebec.

The CBC French network is not exclusively reserved to the province of Quebec, and yet what else can we conclude when we look at its programs. They can stand a great deal of improvement. I hope events will give CBC authorities a little push because our young people have been brainwashed by what is being broadcast by national networks. That is a crime against youth, which does not always know the whole truth.

I am not a television fan, but when I do watch it, news bulletins are really what interests me and God knows how many times we have been deprived of sound and objective information.

Not only have we been flooded for a few years by separatist statements, either in a so-called democratic way or not. What is more serious—as I mentioned a while ago—is that we were not informed about the other side of events. We were refused systematically and regularly a real image of events. We were cheated. We never had our chance, Mr. Speaker. Now, we demand it.

I could say many other things in fact, but as it is late, I will spare the House. I could have taken advantage of this debate to talk about a particular situation, and come back to the events of New Brunswick. I could have spoken of a separatist training camp developping at Moncton's CBAF radio station. The CBC staff of Moncton is now occupying key positions of CBC commentators in Montreal. I shall not speak any more about this but I just wanted to convey my dissatisfaction about the service provided until now by the CBC.

The condition of the French-speaking press in New Brunswick is also rather interesting. I want to speak particularly of the daily newspaper Évangéline. In fact, the situation of this newspaper was not specially interesting until a short time ago. Some separatists, maybe members of the FLQ or rather strong supporters, had infiltrated it. Some Frenchmen also. They were little soldiers of general de Gaulle refusing to do their military service and they were sent here like that, to teach us a lesson, it is said. Their mission was to awaken the Acadians, to introduce them to protest methods and to organize demonstrations. This situation lasted for a few years. The alleged leaders in Acadia were surprised in their sleep. Fortunately, they awoke before it was too late. They kicked those intruders out and since then things are much better in Acadia. They are better in New Brunswick and I am sure that they will stay that way.

• (12:30 a.m.)

Nonetheless, this does not mean that there are no more agitators within the confines of New Brunswick. I could not tell what their political affiliation is. All we know is that they are there to stir up strife and spread confusion in the minds of our young people.

Mr. Speaker, as I said a minute ago, it is getting late and I would have much more to say. However, I do not intend to inflame this debate further. I only wish to reiterate my complete faith in the government, and I must say that I will support it with my vote on Monday.

[English]

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, it is with some reluctance I stand here on Sunday morning at 12.35 a.m., having been here since eleven o'clock on Saturday morning, to take part in this debate in a period of our history which, to say the least, is most disturbing. To even take part in this debate is perhaps a little bit presumptuous of me in view of the fact that I come from Canada's newest province, Newfoundland, which has been part of Canada for only 21 years.

It is also perhaps presumptuous of me to take part in the debate for the simple reason that I am not able to stick my thumbs in my lapels and stand here as a great statesman like many other hon. gentlemen, the leader of my party, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) of Canada, and the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker whom I have admired for years. I doubt that there are many members of the House who want to listen to the remarks I have to make; they having been here for many hours, and I am aware of the fact that there is little anybody can add to the remarks of great statesmen.

It is very encouraging for me, as a young Canadian, to see that the House of Commons has responded eminently to one of the most critical situations in our history. I have been privileged to sit as a member of this House for the last two years. Perhaps I will not be sitting here for many more years, since I have no aspiration to become a professional politician. On many occasions during those two years I was disillusioned because the House of Commons seemed to be a place where parliamentarians played a political role, a political game, where people became involved in political discussion just because they thought it was the thing to do. I have frequently felt that the inclination of members to play a role, and on many occasions to express hypocritical attitudes, dominated their instincts and inclination to be great Canadians. But in the last two days I have been encouraged at the ability of Members of Parliament to put aside their political motivations and to offer to Parliament and the Canadian people some leadership, some advice which might help Canadians toward a better life in the future.

It seems to me that it takes a crisis like that which we are faced with today to bring out the best in Canadians. Perhaps as Canadians we have had it too easy. We have been willing to go along with the tide, to adopt a lax, lackadaisical attitude, to allow ourselves to be lulled into a sense of false security. I believe that the present crisis may elevate our parliamentary system to a level that is more respectable, and that will be admired more by Canadians.

I am a little at a loss, Mr. Speaker, to understand the sudden confusion and disturbance that has developed in the chamber. However, I have just been informed that there has been a break in the situation as it pertains to the tragedies that have befallen our country. I do not know if it is in order for me to pose a question to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) but, with the unanimous consent of the House, may I ask has he anything of a significant nature, to indicate to Parliament, which the Canadian people may want to hear before I continue my remarks?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would think the hon. member should pursue his remarks.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I will just leave the impression I have created and continue my remarks. In my opinion, and perhaps my opinion is not very valuable at this point in our history, in the last number of years there has been a tremendous deterioration in the various institutions and systems which make up the Canadian nation. This includes the institution in which we are now serving, the churches, and the family, which is the most fundamental institution in our nation. All Canadians have had reason to question the breakdown in law and order, and the deterioration which has taken place in our social systems.

• (12:40 a.m.)

Perhaps I broke a little ice on Sunday evening a week ago when I indicated that I thought there should be a debate in the House of Commons on the present situation. I understand that some who are pretty close to the Speaker and others in high authority thought I was somewhat presumptuous in making such a suggestion. I felt we ought to have a debate such as is now taking place, which I believe has served a useful purpose. No one feels more strongly about the need for law and order in our country than I do. I think my behaviour on Monday illustrated my feelings in this direction.

There must be law and order in the country. I support and respect the attitudes, values, aspirations, goals and objectives of the Canadian people. However, in the past two years I have been disappointed in that we have had very little leadership in this nation. I was amazed to see some good friends of mine, people who aspire to being parliamentary secretaries and ministers and who are potential leaders of our nation, today stand up in the House of Commons and give the government their blind allegiance.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member. There are conversations in the gallery which make it very difficult for the Chair to follow what the hon. member who has the floor is saying. I think there should be respect for the hon. member who has the floor.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lundrigan: In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, there is no one in this chamber with stronger feelings than mine about the fact that in the last two years the Canadian nation has not been given the leadership it deserves. In Canada, we need someone to stand out there in the distance, elevated over the great heights, to be a beacon to show us the way and to show that we have values and attitudes which ought to be admired. We must have a beacon, Mr. Speaker, a man who will stand up and say, "This is the way of progress for Canada." This is the most disturbing period in Canadian history. I am not concerned about myself. I have thought that perhaps I should not have entered Canadian politics if I wanted to make a living. I am fairly content—

An hon. Member: The hon. member should get out of politics.

Mr. Lundrigan: Please do not interrupt. Mr. Speaker, would you ask the hon. member to allow me to speak without interruption for a few more minutes? It is possible for one to get by in Canada, yet I have great concern for the tens of thousands of school children in our nation who want the opportunity to make a living. They want to carve out a small place in our society which gives people freedom to be themselves. Mr. Speaker, it seems that these little niches on our very small globe have become very few and far between. I thought Canada was the place where Canadians could feel free to progress and to advance if they had the leadership which is so necessary. I am disappointed in what has happened in the last couple of years.

Someone has said that the Irish in me is coming out. Perhaps it is. Perhaps I am a bit sentimental. Perhaps we are not sentimental enough because too many of us speak from a political standpoint and tend to say that which is necessary and will appeal to our constituents. I urge all Members of Parliament, including our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who has grave responsibilities, and the leaders of the various parties, to exercise from now until we get Canada back on the proper track the greatest discretion, and to provide the best leadership that has ever been had in Canadian history.

Mr. Robert Borrie (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to participate in this debate, but after hearing the comments of some hon. members in this chamber I felt my position should also be put on record. My reasons for not wanting to participate in the debate were these. I felt the views of my colleagues from Quebec would have greater import and impact than mine with regard to the reason for the proclamation issued yesterday. I believe they know conditions in the province of Quebec much better than I know them, and having listened to the comments of some hon. members I think they would agree.

Prince George-Peace River is a long way from the heart of the problem that required the Prime Minister to make the proclamation yesterday. Even though separated by distance, Mr. Speaker, we are no less sensitive than others to the anguish the FLQ has brought to the citizens of the province of Quebec. We are not faced with the physical presence of violence. We do not have to concern ourselves with the safety of our families. Our businesses and social activities have not been interrupted or challenged by terrorism.

Some hon. members who oppose the government's action suggest that the measure is too broad. They ask: What need is there for other provinces to be covered by the same legislation, when the cancer is rooted in only one province? Mr. Speaker, I feel that the federal responsibility is to all provinces, to all citizens. When we start considering legislation to ensure law and order for citizens in one section of our country, we are tending to balkanize Canada. We will not contribute to the balkanization of our country; legislation passed in this chamber is for all Canadians.

My friend opposite, the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding), insisted this afternoon that the government make the information that led to the proclamation yesterday available to Parliament. Surely, Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend and others who advocate complete disclosure and revelation of facts must know that the divulging of those facts may be of greater value to the FLQ than to hon. members. Confidential information and discussions, even in caucus, oftentimes turn out to be the day's headlines. I am not implying, Mr. Speaker, that all members are loose of tongue. If I were a law abiding citizen who supplied information to the police or the government, I would start looking for a haven if I knew that my reports were being discussed in this chamber or in committee. Our intentions may be of the highest order, Mr. Speaker, but it does not require a high degree of intelligence to know that informants may be found when the type of information sought is known.

• (12:50 a.m.)

The suggestion has also been made that the act be revoked Monday, and that this House consider special legislation. With all due respect to the process of providing legislation, I hesitate to turn that responsibility over to this chamber. In my few years here I have seen and heard the verbosity that goes on and on in the preparation of refined legislation. Debate is a necessary part of democracy, but in a time of urgency and emergency I would not want to see law enforcement agencies working in limbo, working without the support of the lawmakers of this land.

Concern has also been stated time and again in this debate that this War Measures Act gives too much power to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I think I speak for a good many Canadians, Mr. Speaker, when I say the power could not be in better hands.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Borrie: This is a pretty gloomy day, Mr. Speaker. No Canadian in full possession of his faculties wants to see the act in use. However, the response that I have received from my own constituents indicates that we have support for the type of regulation in the proclamation.

I have just learned, and I suppose it is general knowledge in the House, Mr. Speaker, that a news bulletin reported that a body has been found in one of the cars used to abduct one or the other of the kidnap victims. A further news report confirms that it is Mr. Laporte. I think that this news firmly entrenches my opinion, views and conviction that this government has acted in a proper way. We are not dealing with political dissenters; we are dealing with organized murderers.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, anyone rising to say anything at this point, in view of the news that has reached us in the last few minutes, cannot but speak in sadness and with restraint. I assure hon. members that I shall exercise restraint and that I shall be as brief as I can. Indeed, apart from the news that brings a special sorrow to our hearts at this time, one would not want to indulge in any repetition at this stage of the debate. Neither do I think there is need for any recrimination at this time.

It is still my view that using the War Measures Act was a mistake. I shall express that by my vote on Monday. But I am prepared to admit that a verdict on that action which perhaps will be more valid than the judgments we try to make here will come later. That verdict will come when all the facts have been made public, maybe a few months from now. If at that point those facts justify the action, we who now feel otherwise will have to admit it. If at that point the action is not justified, the people of Canada will be able to express their opinion when they get the opportunity to do so.

The reason I would like to say a few words, even this late in the debate, is that the question we should now be facing is very simple: Where do we go from here? I have three brief suggestions to make.

The first relates to the question as to what we should do in view of the general feeling of repugnance regarding the use of the War Measures Act, a repugnance expressed not more forcibly by anyone else than it was yesterday by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

This evening I listened with interest to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) when he suggested that because Parliament had put the War Measures Act on our statute books, it was anticipated that it would be used. I do not read our history that way. This evening I again read the statement made by the then minister of justice, Hon. Mr. Doherty, in August 1914, who when moving the bill the first time it was presented, assured Parliament that it was a temporary measure.

I also read this evening the words of Mr. St. Laurent in 1946 when we were in the process of getting rid of the proclamations under the War Measures Act. He said to this House that he hoped it would never be used again. It seems clear to me that an act that in 56 years has never been used in peacetime is the kind of act that really was not intended for such use. Even so, I confess that I am not happy about the suggestion that has been made repeatedly—indeed, some of my own colleagues have made the suggestion—that instead of dealing with this matter by the War Measures Act that we should amend the Criminal Code.

What bothers me about that is that the Criminal Code is a permanent piece of legislation. If we put into it measures strong enough to deal with a special situation, we may find ourselves with permanent law that goes beyond our concepts of civil liberties and should not be on our statute books.

I make the suggestion that maybe there is room in our statutes for a piece of legislation that could be known as a civil disturbances act. I have in mind an act something similar to the War Measures Act in that it would come into effect only on proclamation, but it would be a special piece of legislation for disturbances or difficulties inside the country. When proclaimed such an act would provide much narrower powers than the War Measures Act, in other words only those powers actually needed. I make this suggestion as one that might be considered. It was my intention to develop that more fully, but obviously at this hour of the morning one shortens his remarks.

Secondly, I feel we have to work very hard to show that in our kind of society we still think there is a better way than to use force or repression to deal with ideas that we do not like. Let it be clear that I am not confusing the FLQ with those other people in Quebec who would like to have independence. The FLQ is the violent expression of that idea. Because the two have got confused, we are in the position of trying to cope with an idea we do not like by use of force.

We have to cope with the idea of separatism or of Quebec being independent in a much better way, by a determined effort to make it clear that it is a better Canada, both for Quebec and the rest of us, if we remain united. I do not want to live in a Canada without Quebec. I agree with the hon. member for Mercier (Mr. Boulanger) that what we are concerned about in this debate is not just saving Quebec but saving Canada.

• (1:00 a.m.)

I think that in order to do this we must rely, not on force, not on repression, not on laws or regulations which go beyond the concepts of civil liberty, but we have to work in all parties in Canada on the proposition I am sure all of us believe in, namely, that this Canada united is better for all of us than a Canada divided in any way whatsoever.

Mr. Prud'homme: Enough.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A sentence or two more, if the hon. member will permit me. I think we have to face the fact that the terrible experience we have been through has put a strain on relations between French Canada and English Canada. This crisis will pass away, all of us hope, and when it passes away the old conflicts, the old disagreements will come up again. They are submerged at the moment. When they do come up again it will be partly because of what we have been through. We must work very hard, harder than we did before, at understanding each other.

Let us not be surprised if the problem is more difficult because of what we have been through. I think the goal is still worth achieving, the goal of a united Canada, and—

Some hon. Members: Enough.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I recognize how strongly people feel, and I am prepared to recognize the fact that those who knew Mr. Laporte more intimately than did some of us, feel very sad. This is a sad moment not only for Quebec but for all of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Saint-Denis on a question of privilege.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, under the circumstances, the best thing the hon. member could do would be to offer his silence for a better united Canada.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I do not quarrel with the hon. member. I was in the midst of my last sentence. I shall say no more. We are all very sad, tonight.

Mr. Speaker: It appears to the Chair that all hon. members who desired to do so have spoken to the motion now before the House. Accordingly, pursuant to the special order, a recorded division on the motion and the amendments thereto is deemed to have been demanded and ordered deferred until Monday, October 19.

This House stands adjourned until Monday at eleven o'clock in the morning.

At 1.05 a.m. the House adjourned, pursuant to special Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, October 19, 1970

The House met at 11 a.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

THE LATE PIERRE LAPORTE

ASSASSINATION BY FLQ—EXPRESSION OF TRIBUTE AND SYMPATHY

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the House learned late Saturday night of the brutal, cowardly slaying of Pierre Laporte. That tragic event is evidence of the moral wasteland occupied by the FLQ. Their activities these past days have been designed to turn Canadian against Canadian. The FLQ scheme has been a deliberate provocation of hate. Their purpose is to inspire within all of us fear and hatred, and in this atmosphere to destroy our nation.

They will not succeed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Canadians for too long have known freedom, practised tolerance, and enjoyed the benefits of our rich cultural diversity. They will not be tricked by such a transparent device; they will not be dominated by criminals. Canadians have seen, too, the bitter and divisive effects in other countries when hatred is met by hate, when crime is followed by vengeance, when reason is overcome totally by emotion.

[Translation]

Made up of men full of hatred, the FLQ resorts to violence to inspire hate, feed it and to spread it insidiously, hoping that disorder, confusion and panic will then prevail.

Such is its first purpose. Such is the trap it is setting for us: to turn Canadian against Canadian, to divide us through hatred and racism, to aggravate disagreements between generations even to the point where they can no longer be reconciled. But those fanatics are perhaps even more diabolic in their need to inspire hatred for themselves—blind hatred. Thus they could bring us down to their level and degrade our society.

[English]

Pierre Laporte devoted his life to the betterment of the people of Quebec. Hon. members will have an opportunity tomorrow to pay their respects to this man. In the interim, all Canada grieves for Madame Laporte and her children. They will know that the name of Pierre Laporte will be repeated by school children for generations as a symbol of our steadfast opposition to division, disunity and hatred in Canada.

This deed will not deter progress toward needed social change; rather, it will reinspire the many persons in all parts of Canada who share the broad vision of Pierre Laporte.

By this deed the FLQ has sown the seeds of its own destruction. It has revealed that it has no mandate but terror, no policies but violence, and no solutions but murder. It is alien to all that is Canadian. It will not survive.

[Translation]

Those men with hatred in their hearts thought they could divide us in tragedy, but they bring us together today in a same will.

For the only passion which must drive us now is the passion for justice. Through justice, we will get rid of the perversion of terrorism. Through justice, we will find peace and freedom.

• (11:10 a.m.)

[English]

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to add my deep regrets and those of my colleagues to those expressed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). My colleagues and I were shocked, as was the rest of Canada, by the brutal murder Saturday of Pierre Laporte.

His death was particularly shocking because Mr. Laporte was a great humanitarian and he died in a very inhumane way. He was, of course, a distinguished parliamentarian, a journalist, and a man who has rightfully been called one of the fathers of the new Quebec.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, our French-Canadian fellow citizens are going through grievous hours of national mourning. But this affliction is a blow to the whole country.

Posthumously, I would like to stress how convincing Mr. Pierre Laporte was in his determination. This supporter of human rights was the victim of pseudo reformers. The execution of an innocent man makes their action all the more horrible.

Those activists, which we can hardly call men, have already proven that nobody can hope to build a new society through bloodshed.

[English]

Mr. Laporte believed that firm words were the instrument of effective social change. Throughout his career his words and deeds were his weapons of progress in his beloved Quebec. Pierre Laporte has become a martyr in the eyes of all democratically-minded Canadians. His death must not be a useless tragedy. We must ensure that his death will be a milestone in the struggle for Canadian unity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: This, sir, should be a day of unity. The questions I raised on Friday last remain as important to me as then, but this is a day for unity and I hope that we can show it.

Mr. Laporte was a gifted parliamentarian. It is especially fitting, therefore, that we pay tribute to him here in Parliament. I express my sympathy to the government, to the National Assembly and to the people of Quebec. Above all, Pierre Laporte was a gentleman and a devoted husband and father, and it is for his family that our feelings run deepest at this time. He was a friendly man, and all Canadians have lost a friend in the death of Pierre Laporte.

[Translation]

Once more, Mr. Speaker, in this hero of democratic values, I pay homage to a man dedicated to his cause and his province, a responsible parliamentarian.

I express my deepest sympathy to the family and friends of the deceased.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[English]

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, all members of the House, and I am certain the great majority of the Canadian people, are appalled and disgusted at the unnecessary and cruel murder of Mr. Pierre Laporte. This was a crime for which there can be no possible excuse.

Pierre Laporte was a man who believed in the unity of the Canadian people, who worked toward that end and maintained a bridge between the French-speaking and English-speaking people of this country. He is a martyr now in that cause. It remains for those who support his point of view in the province of Quebec and those who support his point of view in the rest of Canada to take up his task and to cement that unity and that friendship between the two founding races of this country. I should like to pay tribute to Mr. Laporte's memory, to the heroism of his death, and to the magnanimity of his life. On behalf of the New Democratic Party I should also like to extend our deepest sympathy and heartfelt condolences to Madame Laporte, members of the family and his colleagues in the government and legislature of the province of Quebec.

I wish to say that on this day all members of this House, irrespective of political party, stand united in our determination to stamp out terrorism in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): There is growing up in the world a double standard of morality. Some hold forth the concept that crimes committed in the name of an alleged cause are excusable although they would not be excusable if committed as a result of passion or for personal gain. I reject this double standard. Terror is terror, murder is murder, kidnapping is kidnapping, and to claim that these crimes are committed for political reasons is no excuse whatsoever. Therefore it is the responsibility of this Parliament to give the government every support in its attempt to apprehend and bring to justice those who have been responsible both for these kidnappings and for the murder of Mr. Laporte.

In this very serious and tragic situation I believe it is important that all of us keep cool heads and that we do not allow hysteria to precipitate us into taking action that we would later regret. The government has a responsibility. That responsibility is to use all the means in its power to hunt down those who are responsible and to bring them to justice. That is a laudable objective. In the carrying out of that responsibility the government will have the fullest support and co-operation of the New Democratic Party members in this House.

But we in the opposition also have a responsibility. Part of our job here is constantly to remind the government and the people of this country that in taking the measures that are necessary to punish those who are guilty we do not at the same time injure innocent people. It is a function of the opposition always to raise its voice in the interest of those who may innocently suffer in the process of seeking out the terrorists. I hope we can make clear to the people of Canada that there are democratic ways by which we can meet a crisis like this and that we never want in Canada to have to choose between the horrible alternatives of terrorism on the one hand or a police state on the other.

We believe, as I think all Canadians do, that if we stand together with clear objectives we can effectively meet this crisis and at the same time preserve the democratic institutions we hold dear and for which brave men have laid down their lives in days gone by.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (11:20 a.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and myself endorse fully the statement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on the dreadful events which took place in Quebec over the week-end.

Any French Canadian worthy of the name feels great shame following the savage assassination of Pierre Laporte. We wish to extend to his wife, his mother, his children and his family, as well as to the Quebec government, our most sincere sympathy.

It is indeed unfortunate that this dirty job should have been carried out by people claiming to be dedicated to the liberation of Quebec when they did not hesitate to destroy in cold blood the life of Pierre Laporte. Let us face it, the avowed purpose of the FLQ is to do exactly what they have done in Quebec over the week-end. I say that all its members are killers just like those who put an end to Pierre Laporte's life, unscrupulous killers.

I am convinced that the FLQ leaders know everything, including the place where their bandits are hiding, and I submit, Mr. Speaker, that those leaders should immediately be brought before a firing squad and compelled to divulge everything about the activities, the structure and the existence of the FLQ movement, which is bent on destroying the free society in which we live. They should be compelled to denounce their killers, their bandits, on the threat of having 10 of their members executed for each person they kill.

The government knows who are the leaders of the FLQ. It should bring them before the firing squad, in order to put an end to this unspeakable terrorism in Quebec.

My words may sound harsh, Mr. Speaker, but I suggest that, if democracy does not defend itself, it will again be attacked within a few days or a few weeks.

The people of this country are sick and tired of FLQ activities which do not date back to only a month or two. You may blame as much as you like the distress of some people in certain areas of Canada for the existence of the FLQ, it is just not so. You may succeed in providing Canada with the best of societies, still the FLQ members will try and destroy it because their purpose is not to build but precisely to destroy, to foster hate and iniquity and to maintain an unbreathable atmosphere in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, in the last couple of days, I have received many telegrams referring to the stand we took immediately after the government and the Right. Hon. Prime Minister introduced this new legislation. Out of all those messages, only two take us to task for supporting the government.

The first telegram came from the Communist Party of Toronto, the Communist Party of Canada. The second, from the heads of the Federation of National Trade Unions and of the Quebec Labour Federation, from Mr. René Levesque and Mr. Claude Ryan, of Le Devoir, put the blame on Ottawa for the present situation.

Those are the people who are blaming us for taking the position everyone is aware of in regard to what is happening in our country. We must stand our ground. We must enact new legislation to ensure greater respect of individual freedom. We do not want a permanent police state, but neither do we want the people of Canada to feel that their rights are being encroached upon and that they are being deprived of their freedom.

In view of present developments, we believe the government will bring forward more appropriate legislation so that individuals—mothers, fathers, young people of both sexes, children may live free and secure in a country which deserves better than this weekend's tragic events.

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

UNDERTAKING TO INTRODUCE BILL TO REPLACE WAR MEASURES ACT REGULATIONS

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a short statement having to do with the future business of the house. As background I wish to draw attention to a statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on Friday last in the debate, with which we are all familiar. The Prime Minister said:

> Following the passage of enough time to give the government the necessary experience to assess the type of statute which may be required in these circumstances, it is my firm intention to discuss with the leaders of the opposition parties the desirability of introducing legislation of a less comprehensive nature. In this respect I earnestly solicit from the leaders and from all hon. members constructive suggestions for the amendment of the regulations. Such suggestions will be given careful consideration for possible inclusion in any new statute.

I understand, Mr. Speaker, that letters have already been directed to the leaders of the opposition parties on this general question, indicating the willingness of the government to consider their suggestions.

At the same time, at the request of the government the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) has been working all week end with his officials with a view to determining when it might be possible to bring in the bill to which the Prime Minister referred in his statement. The Minister of Justice has now reported. In fact, he concluded his work at midnight last night and, as a result of his report, it will be possible to have such a bill prepared and we intend to introduce it for first reading in the House within a month.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Naturally, Mr. Speaker, the present proclamation cannot be revoked until the new legislation is passed by Parliament. How long that will take in view of the importance of the legislation is very difficult to foresee and will depend on the time taken in proposing amendments, in discussion in this House and in the other place.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for his statement. I think it goes to show the country that this House, like a family, can, when a crisis escalates and catastrophe threatens, draw together and present a common and united front to show the enemies within and the watchers without that strength can be used with moderation and reason.

What has been said by the minister makes some difference in the approach this party takes to the issue now before the House in the amendment which has been proposed, and before I sit down I intend to seek on behalf of the member who moved the amendment—he may have to do this himself—unanimous consent to withdraw it. This, of course, will make a difference in the support this party will be able to give to the motion which has been placed before the House by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

• (11:30 a.m.)

The virtue, Mr. Speaker, of a democratic system is that there can be a debate on the issue on such an occasion, permitting hon. members to place on record views they may hold very strongly on certain points, and at the same time meet the crisis with the sort of unity which is so very essential. If it is not in order to withdraw the amendment now, I give notice on behalf of the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates) that at the appropriate time the amendment to the motion will be withdrawn.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the members of the New Democratic Party welcome the statement by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) that legislation will be introduced within a month to deal with unusual civil disturbances or anticipated sabotage. We in this party took the position last week that the government should have dealt with the situation in Canada in this way rather than by resorting to the invocation of the War Measures Act.

Some of the statements that have been made in the last few days indicate how serious such a sweeping measure can be. For example, the mayor of one large city said that this would be an excellent way to clear out the hippies and draft dodgers. The difficulty with such sweeping powers is that they may not always be used for the intended purpose, particularly in view of the fact that the Criminal Code and the Public Order Regulations, 1970, will not be administered by the federal government but by the Attorneys General of the provinces. Consequently I can understand the desire of the government to bring in specific legislation rather than having the great reservoir of power it now has under the War Measures Act.

There is little value at this time in arguing about whether the government should or should not have invoked the War Measures Act. We feel they should not have, but that question is academic. We are now operating under the War Measures Act. But the sooner we can get out from under this Act and have specific legislation dealing with specific crimes, the better, rather than an omnibus piece of legislation; a net so wide it can gather in all kinds of people who may not be persona grata with the authorities in some parts of Canada.

At ten o'clock this morning I received the letter, dated last Saturday, from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in which he asked for our suggestions. We thank the Prime Minister for requesting our opinions. We will certainly give him our best thought on this matter and suggestions which we hope the government will consider.

When the legislation is introduced we will be prepared to give the government what we deem to be adequate powers to deal with the crisis provided that the rights and liberties of citizens are fully preserved and protected. The sooner the government can have this legislation ready for our consideration, the better. I am convinced that it is not a healthy situation to have the country under the very wide powers under the War Measures Act which are now granted to the various authorities.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, we are thankful to the government and to the President of the Privy Council for introducing this motion which will enable us to consider an appropriate measure to take care of situations that may arise in this country.

But, we must not forget that Friday morning when the government suggested support for the War Measures Act, it did not impose it to the province of Quebec. It was upon request by the government of the province of Quebec and the municipal authorities of Montreal that emergency measures were proposed last Friday.

At that time, there was no other way to act faster, I think, than the government did. But if the government can introduce a bill within a month to ensure freedom to its citizens while being able to act more promptly to hunt down those who are responsible for the situation—as we know it—to arrest those who are responsible when there is a riot, an attack or activities which are not in the best interest of the people and endanger the security and the freedom of Canadian people, we shall then have a more appropriate legislation.

Given last Friday's circumstances, the government did what it had to do. Contrary to what some people claim, it did not impose its will in the province of Quebec. Indeed, certain discontented people insinuate that the government of Quebec is the slave of the federal government. It is quite far from the truth: the authorities of Quebec and of the city of Montreal asked for the assistance of the federal government. I know what I am saying because the mayor of Montreal called me on the subject.

Those who say that Ottawa wanted to take the lead are wrong. I think that Ottawa wanted to help the province of Quebec and the city of Montreal in order to restore order and maintain the right to freedom of individuals who want to be free.

Mr. Speaker, again we thank the government for bringing in this motion under which it will be possible to pass legislation ensuring personal freedom and at the same time, authorizing the arrest of those ready to deprive Canadians of such freedom.

* * *

[English]

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DISCHARGE OF POLLUTANTS BY SHIPS

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-2, to amend the Canada Shipping Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

INVESTMENT COMPANIES BILL

FILING OF STATEMENTS AND INFORMATION, QUALIFICATIONS AND DUTIES OF AUDITORS, TRANSFER OF SHARES, ETC.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-3, respecting investment companies.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

EMERGENCY GOLD MINING ASSISTANCE ACT

AMENDMENT EXTENDING APPLICATION TO JUNE 30, 1973

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-4, to amend the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

• (11:40 a.m.)

[Translation]

DEUTERIUM OF CANADA ASSISTANCE ACT

AUTHORIZATION OF GRANT TO NOVA SCOTIA TO ASSIST COMPANY

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-5, entitled "An Act to authorize the making of a grant to the province of Nova Scotia for the purpose of providing assistance to Deuterium of Canada Limited.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Under the heading "Introduction of Bills" there is, as hon. members know, a long list of private members' bills to be introduced. I propose to make a statement in connection with the introduction of those bills. The House may feel that this might not be the appropriate time to become involved with this kind of statement. I think it might be made tomorrow if hon. members will allow these bills to stand.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: First reading of Senate public bills. Government notices of motions. Oral questions. Orders of the day.

---

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

NATIONAL SECURITY

APPREHENDED INSURRECTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43 TO APPROVE ACTION OF GOVERNMENT IN INVOKING WAR MEASURES ACT

The House resumed, from Saturday, October 17, consideration of the motion of Mr. Trudeau:

That the House approves the action of the government in invoking the powers of the War Measures Act to meet the state of apprehended insurrection in the Province of Quebec as communicated to the Prime Minister by the Government of Quebec and the civic authorities of Montreal and further approves the orders and regulations tabled today by the Prime Minister on the clear understanding that the proclamation invoking the powers as contained in the regulations will be revoked on or before April 30, 1971, unless a resolution authorizing their extension beyond the date specified has been approved by the House.

And the amendment thereto of Mr. Coates (page 269).

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand there is a desire on the part of the hon. member who moved the amendment to seek the unanimous consent of the House for the purpose of withdrawing it. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Coates) withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the wish of the House that the Chair put the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the wish of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Trudeau) which was agreed to on the following division:

• (11:50 a.m.)

YEAS

Messrs:

| | |
|---|---|
| Aiken | Baldwin |
| Alexander | Barrett |
| Alkenbrack | Basford |
| Allmand | Beaudoin |
| Anderson | Béchard |
| Andras | Benson |
| Asselin | Bigg |
| Badanai | Blair |

Division

Blouin
Borrie
Boulanger
Brown
Buchanan
Caccia
Cadieu
Cafik
Caouette
Carter
Chappell
Chrétien
Clermont
Coates
Code
Comeau
Comtois
Corbin
Côté (Richelieu)
Côté (Longueuil)
Crouse
Cullen
Cyr
Danforth
Danson
Deachman
Deakon
Diefenbaker
Dionne
Douglas (Assiniboia)
Drury
Dubé
Duquet
Faulkner
Flemming
Forget
Forrestall
Foster
Francis
Gauthier
Gendron
Gervais
Gibson
Gillespie
Givens
Goode
Goyer
Gray
Greene
Grills
Groos
Guay (St. Boniface)
Guay (Lévis)
Guilbault
Haidasz
Hales
Harries
Hees
Hogarth
Hopkins
Horner
Howard (Okanagan Boundary)
Howard (Skeena)
Howe
Hymmen
Isabelle
Jamieson
Jerome
Kaplan
Kierans
Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand)
Korchinski
Lachance
Lambert (Edmonton West)
Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt)
Langlois
Laniel
Laprise
La Salle
Leblanc (Laurier)
LeBlanc (Rimouski)
Lefebvre
Legault
Lessard (LaSalle)
Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Lind
Lundrigan
MacDonald (Egmont)
Macdonald (Rosedale)
MacEachen
MacEwan
MacGuigan
MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond)
Mackasey
MacLean
Macquarrie
McBride
McCleave
McCutcheon
McGrath
McIlraith
McIntosh
McKinley
McNulty
Mahoney
Major
Marceau
Marchand (Langelier)
Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo)
Marshall
Mather
Mazankowski
Monteith
Morison
Munro
Nesbitt
Noble
Noël
Nowlan
O'Connell
Olson
Orange
Osler
Ouellet
Pelletier
Penner
Pepin
Perrault
Portelance
Pringle
Prud'homme
Reid
Ricard
Richard
Richardson
Roberts
Rochon
Rock
Roy (Timmins)
Roy (Laval)
Ryan
Saltsman
Schumacher
Scott
Sharp
Skoreyko
Smith (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Smith (Saint-Jean)
Stafford
Stanfield
Stewart (Cochrane)
Stewart (Marquette)
Stewart (Okanagan-Kootenay)
St. Pierre
Sullivan
Tétrault
Thomas (Maisonneuve-Rosemont)
Tolmie
Trudeau
Trudel
Turner (London East)
Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)
Valade
Wahn
Walker
Watson
Weatherhead
Whelan
Whicher
Whiting
Winch
Woolliams
Yanakis
Yewchuk—190.

[Mr. Speaker.]

NAYS

Messrs:

Barnett
Brewin
Broadbent
Burton
Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)
Gilbert
Harding
Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)
Lewis
MacInnis (Mrs.)
Nystrom
Orlikow
Peters
Rose
Skoberg
Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley)—16.

* * *

• (12:10 p.m.)

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed, from Thursday, October 15, consideration of the motion of Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel, for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session.

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, may I congratulate the mover (Mr. Trudel) and seconder (Mr. Douglas, Assiniboia) of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. They have been signally honoured by being chosen for their role in this debate and they have acquitted themselves well and deserve the commendations of this House and of their constituents. May I also compliment the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Badanai) who spoke so well on Wednesday, not for the manner in which he felt he had to eulogize the Speech from the Throne but for his excellent remarks on the subjects of anti-Americanism and immigration.

This country is in a mess. It promises to become worse rather than better. Dreaminess, softness, inaction and then over-reaction have replaced practicality and common sense. As a result there is social unrest in this country. The financial and fiscal affairs have been mismanaged and the government's ivory tower misconceptions of the needs of the country have been and are harmful to its urban areas and particularly harmful to metropolitan Toronto.

The affairs of this country are in an almost incredible mess, given the facts of our wealth of resources, plant, know-how and connections. This country was not fighting a war, at least until last Friday, save for the public relations war on poverty. This government was not policing the world; yet our interest rates and inflation have risen higher than in the United States and all the western nations except for a few banana republics, and our rate of unemployment is 6.9 per cent.

At the last election the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) asked for a working majority. At the rate he is going he should have reversed that and asked for a majority working.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ryan: According to the Paris-based Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, which studies such things, Canada's economic growth as revealed by its annual productivity increase has fallen and is now just over 2 per cent, or one of the lowest in all the western countries. It is expected to be zero by the end of this year. This organization expresses surprise at our poor showing having regard to our potential. At this moment in time what this country needs as a leader is not a dreamy front man, but a practical, economic redeemer and social stabilizer.

Since I joined the young Liberals when I was 16 years of age until I became a Liberal Member of Parliament I was adamantly convinced of a few Liberal political dogmas: First, that the Tory party was the party of big business; second, that the Liberal party was the party for immigration and the Tory party was constantly and inconstantly the one to turn the tap off and on; third, that in this country Tory times were tough times.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: But you changed your mind.

Mr. Ryan: I did. I first found out as a member that the Liberal party was the party of big business, then that the Liberal party was prepared purposely to cut immigration in half, and some wanted to eliminate it completely and, finally, that Trudeau times were tough times.

In respect of inflation I feel that the government is largely the author of its own misfortune. It has doubled the money supply since taking office in 1963. Not being on the gold standard, it exercised its prerogative to print money and printed too much. The money supply includes bills and coins in circulation and moneys on deposit, as most hon. members well know.

• (12:20 p.m.)

In the midst of this situation and to my astonishment, at the time of the last ten-year review of the Bank Act the government decided to lift the ceiling on bank interest rates completely. I could see the allowance of government-controlled increases, provided the power to lower the ceiling was retained, but not removal of the ceiling. Against some opposition in the Liberal party, the then Minister of Finance, now Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), insisted on pressing for complete removal. This made one wonder how large the campaign contributions had been to the party. All that was required at the time and all that is required now is a ceiling sufficiently high to permit the banks to compete with trust companies and near-banks for savings deposits. These competitors should be controlled too, if necessary. Thus, there should be a ceiling and it should float at the discretion of the cabinet, on the advice of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson). The Speech from the Throne should have announced a new ceiling of 6½ per cent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ryan: But no—and as a result of this naïve and disastrous decision the five big Canadian banks have had not just a hey-day but three successive years of record profits at the expense of downward spirals in almost every other sector of the country's economy. There have been repercussions in other ways. With swollen deposits created in large part by the printing presses, as the government sought to dodge interest payments on bond issues, the banks have made a killing. In raising their rates to all the traffic could possibly bear these solid but favoured institutions drove interest rates on mortgages and consumer credit loans to new and almost incredible highs. With what results? Big business, cost-push inflation, buyer resistance, construction slow-down, housing lack, excessive wage demands, excessive prices, productivity slump bankruptcies—and there are many of these in Toronto now—demands to exclude immigrants, unemployment, emigration and, finally, loss of government revenues.

The need to float the dollar has caused the government to break this country's agreement with the International Monetary Fund to keep a fixed dollar. The Canadian dollar became suddenly strong, not just because our exports, mostly of primary resources, surged temporarily after long strike conditions, nor because our auto pact agreement with the United States is productive of foreign exchange, nor because our imports are down due to lessened productivity. The truth is that it became temporarily strong mainly because the combination of the premium of eight cents on the dollar plus our fantastic domestic interest rates was starting a flood of United States dollar investments in Canada, in both properties and equities, which condition, in addition to giving the government an exchange problem, would give Walter Gordon and the Toronto Star apoplexy if it were allowed to continue. Indeed, the failure to act in time and firmly on controlling interest rates, prices and wages, and the oversteering of this government by the Prime Minister and his awkward squad within his office and in the cabinet, have caused a domestic emergency within this country and further harmed its low stock abroad.

Because I was closely associated with the NATO picture and Canada's position in the Alliance I was deeply disturbed when the Prime Minister, before the last election, began questioning this country's participation. I was alarmed at his and others' remarks afterwards. As chairman of our Parliamentary Association I had travelled for two and a half years liaisoning with the 14 other NATO countries. When he did not seek my opinion I wrote to him offering to prepare a memorandum of my thoughts on NATO for him to consider but received no reply whatsoever.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Ryan: While I did not and do not want our troops to remain in Europe forever or even to carry on their nuclear roles past 1975 when our planes will be obsolete, I believed and still do that we must pay our fair share of the premium for this successful insurance policy. The irony of our unilateral reduction of our heavy armoured brigade at Soest and our air wing in southern Germany against the spirit of the Harmel report and the pleadings of our allies is that the air mobile force will have to be equipped with helicopters and other forms of transport that will likely cost more than the tanks and planes to purchase and to operate, and NATO really does not need that role filled as it did the former ones. To some degree our participation in the alliance has been maintained but the cost to our country's reliability in the 14 other NATO countries has been great.

So much for the west. In the east the government has been on its knees for almost two years trying to be recognized by Red China, to the dismay of a great many Canadians, the United States and almost every country on the Pacific rim. After the last election the government decided to recognize Red China even if it meant withdrawing recognition of the Republic of China at Taiwan and expulsion of its embassy at Ottawa. This is said to be a logical thing to do because Mao in Red China rules over millions of people and a large territory and has de facto control. Exactly the same logical case can be put for the recognition of Rhodesia and East Germany, but the Secretary of State for External Affairs has stated in the House that Canada will not recognize these regimes. Neither Red China nor any other country should dictate our foreign policy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ryan: And it certainly should not dictate to us what our relations will be with any other country or any other government, but it did. Now the Maoists have a red carpet to Ottawa and a front seat view of Washington at a time when the author of this misfortune has found it necessary to invoke the War Measures Act to fight their like and to cancel his trip to Moscow. Oh, the irony of it all!

Like so many of the policies of the government, Mr. Speaker, the promise of participatory democracy in Canada is a sham. The "Action Trudeau", young live wires of 1968 have died in infancy. Contrary to vaunted, bureaucratic utterances, the white paper on tax reform is not a valid example of participatory democracy. Mr. Philip Johnson of the Montreal Gazette, killed this notion dead when he wrote on September 30 last:

> So what it boils down to is, in order for Mr. Trudeau's participatory democracy to work, every citizen must be rich, highly educated, unemployed and have access to all government information.

• (12:30 p.m.)

> The only ones in Canada who appear to measure up to these standards are cabinet ministers, but even some of them are not that rich or educated.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ryan: Of course, a very bad feature of the policy of issuing a white paper and then debating tax reform in the various communications media and in House committees is that lawyers and accountants do not know how to advise their clients with any certainty. How can a lawyer possibly draw a good will these days for a client worth $100,000 or more? This has been the situation for almost a year and it is likely to continue indefinitely. Many new business ventures, particularly in Ontario, have been stalled or lost because of the uncertainty created by the white paper.

After the federal changes are made the provinces will ask: where will we get our money and what will we do to adjust to the new changes in the income and estate taxes? I submit that these problems will continue for a long while yet. The provinces will not be happy either because, for some reason, they were never consulted before the white paper was drawn up or tabled. So much for this government's respect for co-operative federalism.

I am greatly concerned about urban problems, particularly as those of metropolitan Toronto are worse than those in any other city or region in Canada, and they promise to worsen rapidly. Everywhere across the country there is increasing unemployment, and cities are hard-pressed as they see ever larger numbers of employable people applying for welfare. They attribute the increase to the government's peculiar way of fighting inflation and they seek assistance from that government to make up the difference in the cost. So far there has been no sign of relief from Ottawa.

Urban transit presents grievous problems in both Canada and the United States, but the United States is doing something about them. The federal government there has committed itself to the provision of $5 billion over a period of five years for the capital and operational requirements of urban areas throughout the United States, whereas the Canadian government up to this point has never really been involved in mass transit financing or planning.

Montreal, in addition to Dorval, is getting a great new international airport at Ste. Scholastique. Toronto and southern Ontario may or may not have another airport by 1976, and it may or may not be an international one. No one knows very much about it.

The present Malton airport is international but in a very limited sense as direct flights are only permitted to the United States, the Caribbean and a few other points. If the direct scheduled flights from other continents which should be permitted to land at Malton on the basis of points of origin and final destination were permitted to land there directly, then there would be no need for the Montreal district to have a second airport in priority to the Toronto district. In that part of the just society the inhabitants of the Toronto region are being grossly penalized in terms of inconvenience, loss of time and expense.

The following airlines may land at Toronto only: BOAC, Air Canada, and Canadian Pacific. The following airlines can land at Montreal only: Sabena, KLM, Swissair, Alitalia, Air France, Lufthansa, Iberia, Aeroflot, and Canadian Pacific. The following airlines will be able to land at Montreal next spring: El Al, and TAP.

Charter flights go directly from departure point to destination. During the first three months of this year, 15,726 passengers took off from Toronto for European cities. Only 2,735 took off from Montreal, and we cannot get the exact breakdown figures from DBS on scheduled commercial flights. However, these charter flight figures illustrate that the Toronto airport is almost six times more important as an international airport than Montreal. On scheduled flights to and from Europe, perhaps one million passengers a year are compelled to make an unnecessary stop at Montreal. I believe that this glaringly unjust condition will only be rectified by the defeat of the present government whose leader is convinced that Toronto is the city that has everything and that it should be treated as a milk cow and nothing more.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ryan: This Robin Hood philosophy leads the Prime Minister to believe that the constitution prevents him from doing anything for this metropolitan area, but when the designated areas of Quebec, the Maritimes and the Prairies are needy the story is quite different. Under FRED and ARDA and other aid programs, millions of dollars collected in Ontario, British Columbia and Alberta are used to pay for roads, bridges, parks resettlement, and manufacturing and processing plants in these areas. I do not complain about the economic assistance to these areas, although no doubt many of the ventures being assisted will prove to be uneconomic and a large part of the program will be a failure. But I do complain that none of this handing-out could be done without the co-operation of the provinces and municipalities involved. The Prime Minister's inconsistency is that the constitution does not bind him for these programs, but it does for similar types of aid to the cities. It is an incredible position for the Prime Minister to be taking in the circumstances.

I am glad to see that after the constant prodding and urging of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) the government in the Speech from the Throne proposes the reorganization of its urban activities. Now it admits it had some. Such reorganization is to be under the direction of a minister of state for urban affairs and housing. He will not have a full-fledged department but a co-ordinating role, we are told. This could be a good, sincere move but, on the other hand, it may only be a tranquilizer and a stall. The Prime Minister has never been enthusiastic about urban problems and has had to be bulldozed into making this change, not just by the Leader of the Opposition but by some hon. members across the floor. The need of cities to improve and expand their services is great and urgent, and their taxing field has reached the point of exhaustion. Federal money is a must for the cities.

Mr. Alexander: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ryan: I hear the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) thinks so too. We in Toronto can be thankful to the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) for his great sacrifice of one and a half years ago. The greatest need of all in the Toronto area is for an adequate supply of good, serviced building land for planned subdivisions in the adjoining countryside, satellite or new cities, or all three types of development. Only federal money can provide the necessary land bank that will plan towns and reduce the cost of a serviced building lot. This assistance, together with the removal of the 11 per cent tax on building materials at least for residential construction, is desperately required in Toronto, and I am sure also in the Montreal and Hamilton areas. If nothing is done in the area of housing and planned subdivisions, in a few years the lack of housing and lodging in Toronto at sensible costs and rents will cause the city to decline into a city of eyesores, slums and contrasting baronial homes, all of this associated with mounting violence.

In recent days we have seen terrorists attempting to subject the government to blackmail. They have stooped to assassination. Citizens and government alike are forced to recognize that we have failed to deal adequately with the deeply set social problems which give rise to such terrorism.

• (12:40 p.m.)

We must realize that a great many of our social ills have their roots in our cities, with their inadequate housing and outmoded urban transportation systems and, most of all, poverty. The federal government likes to give the impression that it is meeting the problems of our cities. Nothing could be further from the truth. For the whole country it allocated some $200 million for low-income housing projects. The city of Toronto alone, with a waiting list of 22,327 families for public housing, could very well have found use for most of the $200 million. Montreal and Vancouver, with their tremendous increases in population, are facing an equally tragic situation in trying to give their populations adequate housing at a price they can afford. The brightly coloured wood panels hiding the scars of our cities can no longer contain the restlessness of our people.

It was said in the Throne Speech that a just society is "a society in which individual freedom and equality of opportunity remain as our most cherished possessions." We sincerely hope that the government still bears in mind this high ideal in the thinking out of its public housing policy.

If public housing projects are in too many cases better looking ghettos, as has been indicated by the minister responsible for housing, then the authorities should not be afraid to consider other alternatives. The government should consider empowering the Canadian Development Corporation to run provincially incorporated building societies as subsidiaries or to invest in them. Large-scale, subsidized rental in certain cases might be a much more appropriate answer to the needs of the citizens. If it is not too late, let us give our cities a human face. Let us bear in mind that an urban policy should not aim at efficiency to the detriment of the well-being of the citizen. Cities should be built for man and not man for the city.

We of the opposition welcome the decision of the government to establish an urban council. We hope that this council will achieve what is most needed and what the government took so long to recognize—co-ordination of federal activities in the cities. This urban council should not be a centralist mechanism through which Ottawa tells the cities and provinces what it has decided to build, as was done in the case of some airport projects. The urban council should be a source of information and knowledge, a council where the three levels of government consult and exchange data which will contribute to improving the quality of urban life.

The membership of the urban council should consist of permanent members of federal and provincial governments along with flexible representation for municipal authorities. In other words, the membership should change for the cities and other municipalities according to the problem being discussed and the region affected. For example, a new Toronto airport location is the concern of most municipalities in southern Ontario, whereas waterfront development is the concern of the municipalities from Oshawa right around the western end of Lake Ontario to Port Dalhousie.

In its research division we sincerely hope that the urban council will dedicate its energy to finding a solution to the pressing problem of urban transportation. In Toronto even 16-lane highways are insufficient to meet the demands of the heavy traffic flow. Solutions must be found for in-city traffic, whether by pressurized tubes, mini rails or other such systems. These are badly needed in areas which the subways do not service.

Canada is a young and affluent country, yet its railway systems are 20 years behind. The nation's capital is serviced by a milk train to Toronto. Canada should take a look at Japan and France where immense progress is being achieved in the field of railway transportation.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I just say that investments in urban affairs programs are not a modern frill. They are urgently required to repair the damage of years of neglect.

[Mr. Ryan.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, before I make any comments on the Address in reply to the Throne speech, I would like to mention that we have just witnessed a vote I consider the most important since my election to the House. I think that there is not one member who would like to see a situation similar to the one that exists in Quebec repeat itself.

I would also like to thank and congratulate all the hon. members who expressed their views in the debate that lasted until Sunday morning. We all felt that the problem did not concern Quebec only but the whole country and as a member from Quebec, I thank all my colleagues who gave us their sympathy, although the tragic events occurred in the province of Quebec, and particularly in Montreal.

Being the first government member to speak on the address today, in the name of my constituents I wish to extend sincere sympathy to Mrs. Laporte and her family in the tragic hours they are living at this time. Pierre Laporte was a great parliamentarian who had a clear vision of the problems and was a specialist in urban matters.

When he was Minister of Municipal Affairs, Pierre Laporte fully endorsed the Sylvestre report recommending the merger of 14 municipalities on Ile Jesus, a centre that now ranks as the second largest municipality in Quebec with a population of 230,000.

Many have paid tribute to you and justly so, Mr. Speaker, since the beginning of the proceedings. Such expressions of admiration and regard reflect your own impartiality and the firmness you have always shown in conducting our proceedings.

I wish to congratulate the mover and the seconder of the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, the hon. member for Bourassa (Mr. Trudel) who made us so deeply aware of urban problems, and the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas), who outlined the situation prevailing in the western provinces.

• (12:50 p.m.)

These two members distinguished themselves by their committee work, the former during the study of the proposals for tax reform by the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs and the latter, during the study of Bill C-196 entitled "An Act respecting grain."

I am pleased to make my humble contribution during the debate on the Speech from the Throne. I shall take this opportunity to acquaint the hon. members with some peculiarities of the constituency I have the honour to represent here.

The Laval constituency, in the western part of Laval, on Ile Jésus, is separated from the Canadian metropolis by the Back River and comprises 60 per cent of the population of City of Laval. As I said at the beginning, it is the second largest in Quebec, both in size and in population. We anticipate an increase in population of approximately 100,000 over the next ten years.

The City of Laval as seen from the air, looks like an island of greenery between two bodies of water, the Rivière des Milles-Îles and the back river, Rivière des Prairies.

All ethnic groups are represented in Laval, which contributes to its cultural wealth. In a move to get closer to our western friends, on September 22, 1967, the City of Laval was paired with the City of Saskatoon, and this initiative has helped to seal the bonds of friendship between those two Canadian cities.

Large green areas have been set aside. The fertile soil of the farm-lands is ideal for growing vegetable produce for the Montreal market; in addition, four golf courses make of Laval a golfer's paradise. Because of the interest shown by the municipal authorities and of a well-organized sports and recreation department, Laval will be preparing serious contenders for the 1976 Olympic Games.

The lay-out of Ile Jésus which has relatively few irregularities, has all the characteristics likely to facilitate urban development.

A 42 million square foot industrial park is available to industries wishing to take advantage of the facilities of Laval, in the way of geographical situation, skilled manpower and communications, which will be improved in connection with he building of the international airport at Sainte-Scholastique.

Needless to say, the location of the airport Sainte-Scholastique will contribute considerably to the economic development of Laval. This action on the part of the federal government will ensure better services to Laval residents. The building of a bridge at the Cavendish exit has been awaited for over 15 years.

Considering the present and future needs of the residents of Laval, the Minister of Communications (Mr. Kierans) announced last summer the purchase of land in the industrial park of Laval in order to erect there the first mail sorting plant in Canada. This pilot project will help speed up mail delivery.

Moreover, in order to improve postal service, two sub-offices will be constructed, one of them at Sainte-Dorothée and the other at Laval-Ouest. I hope that another one will soon be erected at Sainte-Rose. I have decided to speak in the Throne speech debate for several reasons.

In my opinion this Speech reflects accurately the principles which have been expressed since the last election campaign in 1968 with regard to the establishment of a "just society". Canada is entering a new decade. Together we have to build a society made for man. Misery, labour disputes, governmental institutions which are sometimes out-of-date, revision of the education system, housing, air and water pollution, pollution by noise, inflation, crime, dissent, non medical use of drugs, all these are complicated problems of modern life which is forever changing.

A hundred years in the age of the printed word is equal to ten years in the electronic age. We are not fatally condemned to be the slaves of technology nor do we have to be smothered by giant and impersonal organizations.

Is it not the role of each member to set up the standards of a society where the young will not feel alienated, where a class of society will not be excluded from the decision making centres, where the old will no longer be considered a burden, but rather as a pool of experience gained through daily work and where the rich will not take over all the powers regardless of the needs of Canadians who are less fortunate or less favoured geographically?

A country needs more than dollars or natural resources to live. It needs motivations, aspirations and imagination. It needs something to conquer, to strive for.

The Speech from the Throne says, and I quote:

> We are entering an age of tension, an age of challenge, an age of excitement. At the threshold of the seventies a choice is open to Canadians as it is open to few persons in few countries. With foresight and stamina and enterprise, our's may be, if we wish it;
>
> —a society in which human differences are regarded as assets, not liabilities;
>
> —a society in which human individual freedom and equality of opportunity remain as our most cherished possessions;
>
> —a society in which the enjoyment of life is measured in qualitative, not quantitative terms;
>
> —a society which encourages imagination and daring, ingenuity and initiative, not coldly and impersonally for the sake of efficiency, but with warmth and from the heart as between friends.

This is the kind of society that we want. Are we ready to work to attain these objectives? Is it not more logical that instead of attending to the most urgent issues first, we should undertake a transformation in depth of our society? It is urgent to amend the constitution so that it might better reflect the aspirations of all Canadians.

Canada must continue to be a land for man, a land where freedom and respect for the individual are nurtured, a society whose government is capable of standing firm against conformist tendencies, blackmail, or the pressures of those groups which have no respect for human values, and try to destroy the present structures instead of improving them. The systematic destruction of our political structures would only precipitate us into an economic recession.

In Quebec, as everywhere else in Canada, the young people—and they are the majority—believe that efforts and work are the best weapons to attain and deserve key positions in society.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it one o'clock?

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

[Translation]

Mr. Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, at the time of adjournment, I was making remarks on the unfortunate situation now existing in Quebec. Our civil liberties are threatened and our people are worried.

Democracy is like one's health: we appreciate it when we lose it, either because we abuse of our liberties, or because abusive force or violence are used.

The governments acted conscientiously in taking steps to protect the collective interests of the nation. Had they not done so, the people would condemn them. We are living most tragic hours, for the survival of our basic principles and respect for the individual are threatened. Let us avoid irresponsible comments: let us place the problem in its true context and let the powers that be take the initiative of making statements.

We will fail in our attempt to transform society if we surrender to our fears, or nurse feelings of hate against certain ethnical groups. The only way to cure our society is to forge ahead determinedly, with the co-operation of all those who are prepared to take their responsibilities in order to find the causes of the present unrest. The sick society cannot be cured by the sole intervention of its governments. On the contrary, it is the business of everyone who has a craving for truth and justice. It is appropriate that everyone examines his conscience in the tragic hours we are experiencing at this time.

Let us be conscious of our role, of our capacity and of our will to contribute to air a little every day the lungs of that society which certain elements wish to suffocate. To that end, it is necessary to establish clear goals. During the first session of this 28th Parliament, the House of Commons considered more than 101 pieces of legislation. Last year, 90 other measures were submitted to our study. During this session, 68 bills will be examined.

It is necessary to stir up the imagination of men by presenting them with various pieces of legislation in the form of a White Paper in order that they contribute to draft laws which will really reflect their aspirations. Such a dialogue with the population is likely to crystalize their thoughts into laws.

Is that not what we have done here in order to bear out the extent to which the population is anxious to participate in federal legislation?

Following the press release that the chairman of the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, the hon. member for Gatineau (Mr. Clermont), published on December 19 last, in which briefs from the public were invited, the said committee received 524 briefs, as well as 1,093 letters and other documents.

While studying the tax reform proposals, the committee met 146 times and looked into 211 briefs provided by 820 people. Such evidence, I believe, shows to what extent our people wished to participate in the legislation.

Is this not the job that we are pursuing under the leadership of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau)?

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to be a government member, to belong to the great Liberal family, which is getting larger every day, which is respectful of human rights and is equal to its task in any situation. I am proud to belong to the dynamic group now administering the country and whose aim, over the next decade is to make our society more humane.

On reading the Speech from the Throne and the speeches of the mover and the seconder of the Address in reply, one notes that the government wishes to take part in the development of our cities through the construction of low-rental housing, the renewal of urban centres, the construction of homes for the aged, and the enactment of legislation to protect consumers.

Hardship, discrimination and social disintegration work havoc to a greater extent in urban centres. There, because of its size and complex and heartless society sometimes engenders the most deplorable situations.

We are aware of this situation and we wish to do something about it. I do not know whether the member for Spadina (Mr. Ryan) had read the Speech from the Throne. He would have noticed that, to foster coordination of the activities of all levels of government, and to contribute to sound urban growth and development, the Government proposes the re-organization of its urban activities under the direction of a Minister of State for Urban Affairs and Housing. The Government seeks, by making rational its efforts in these fields, and through consultation with those most directly concerned, to help Canadians reach and implement the decisions that will determine their urban future.

The right hon. Prime Minister stated in this House, on Friday October 9, as recorded on page 36 of Hansard:

> Let me say as well that it is false to sugest that the federal government has not been active and welcome in the cities of this country for many years. More than 20 departments of the federal government are now present and engaged in the cities. And some of them are very active. In the field of low income housing, for example, 44 per cent of all the activity undertaken in Canada since 1950 has been achieved in the past two years.

In the name of my constituents, I wish to thank and congratulate the Minister responsible for housing (Mr. Andras). Last year, $200 million were invested in Canada for the construction of low-rent housing. In the city of Laval, 1,000 new units will be built thanks to a $12 million federal loan granted under the National Housing Act. This injection of economic blood by the federal government represented a new start for construction in Laval.

Moreover, the federal government has guaranteed a loan representing 95 per cent of the building cost of the Centre de séjour Laval where 350 people will live. The centre will be erected in Sainte-Dorothée.

Under the adult professional training program, the federal government has contributed $362,907,385 to the province of Quebec out of total investments in Quebec, of $654,386,037 as of April 1, 1969.

In the city of Laval, the federal government has paid more than $18 million for the construction of polyvalent schools.

Under its adult professional training program, from April 1, 1969 to January 31, 1970, the federal government has paid to Laval an amount of $559,675 for the purchase of courses from the Quebec Department of Education and $766,830 in allowances. At the Quebec level, the contributions amounted to $31,612,780 in allowances and over $23 million have been affected to the purchase of courses.

To abstain from divulging this information, Mr. Speaker, could tend to support certain arguments still going on in Quebec.

At the beginning of my statement, I pointed out that the Laval constituency was situated on Île Jésus between the back river, Riviere des Prairies and the Riviere des Milles-Îles. Those two rivers are unfortunately utterly polluted and every spring when the waters rise, the rivers overflow their banks. Every spring, the residents of Laval-Ouest, Sainte-Rose, Saint-Eustache, Rosemère, Bois-des-Fillions, etc., sustain considerable damage. Thousands of dollars are spent by residents every year because of flooding. Deposits from these polluted waters contaminate the two river banks.

My predecessor, the hon. member for Ahuntsic (Mr. Rochon) when he was member for Laval, drew attention to this problem time and again. In those days it was a priority, but today it has become a crucial problem. The project to channel the water from these rivers would control the water level and eliminate damage and losses. The dredging of these two rivers is not only a priority but an emergency. The alarm has been sounded. An anti-pollution program must be carried out. I beg the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Laing) to grant the request of the members representing the interested constituencies who have submitted briefs on the subject.

In closing, I warmly congratulate the hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Lessard), first on his appointment as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson), and also for his speech on the agricultural situation in Canada, in which he familiarized hon. members with the existing crisis in the Quebec poultry market. I think this is an urgent problem and in order to solve it we are asking for the co-operation of all hon. members.

• (2:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak in this debate. First, I should like to congratulate the mover (Mr. Trudel) and the seconder, (Mr. Douglas (Assiniboia)), of the address on the capable manner in which they carried out their duties.

The Speech from the Throne is an amazing document, a document long on philosophy but short on policy. On page one, the author of this grim fairy tale states:

> We live in a period of tenseness and unease. It is an age frequented by violence as desperate men seek-ill-defined goals; an age of frustration as gentle men question impatiently old assumptions. It is an age in which the life-support systems of the biosphere may collapse unless man reverses his present course and begins again to live in harmony, rather than in competition, with his environment. It is an age in which the forces of science and technology now in motion are so massive, so swift, and so comprehensive that man may be facing his last opportunity to control his own destiny rather than be subject to it.

• (2:20 p.m.)

These words, Mr. Speaker, remind me of the words in a book which was first published in 1859. The first chapter, by Charles Dickens, of "A Tale of Two Cities" reads:

> It was the best of times, it was the worst of times; it was the age of wisdom, it was the age of foolishness; it was the epoch of believe; it was the epoch of incredulity; it was the season of light; it was the season of darkness; it was the spring of hope; it was the winter of despair; we had everything before us; we had nothing before us; we were all going direct to heaven; we were all going direct the other way!

Things have not changed very much since 1859, for I note a marked similarity between the words of Dickens and the words of the Throne Speech, and unfortunately a marked similarity between the conditions described by Dickens and conditions as they exist today. The speech says that the decade of the seventies extends beyond our present vision, and that is the understatement of the day. In fact, that is one of the troubles with this government; it lacks vision. In proverbs we read that when there is no vision the people perish.

In another paragraph, the speech states that man must anticipate and plan; that he must accept that contentment and indifference are illusory; that the most dramatic reality is change; that there is more need that ever before to preserve as constant values truth, honesty, excellence and relevance. Was there ever a period when man was not required to anticipate and plan ahead? And was there ever a period when man's plans were more frustrated than they are today by the present federal government?

The Throne Speech speaks of truth and honesty, and then goes on to say that unemployment remains distressingly high in some parts of Canada, although the rate has not increased significantly in recent months. Well, I do not know what figures the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was looking at when he made that statement, but according to the press the federal government paid out $43.9 million in unemployment benefits during July, up from $41 million in June and up from $25 million in July, 1969. Canadians made 148,000 new claims against the unemployment insurance fund in July, up from 120,000 the year before. In all, there were 439,000 people claiming benefits at the end of July, 160,000 more than the year before. On top of this, the proportion of people who have been on unemployment insurance for more than six months rose to 23 per cent from 15 per cent a year ago.

What is the prediction for the future? According to the Financial Times for September 21, unemployment is still high and the worst is yet to come. We have 6.9 per cent of our labour force unemployed at present, but recent lay-off announcements in the electronics and chemical industries, plus the side effects of the automobile strike, are expected to drive up the number of unemployed by the end of this year to approximately 750,000 people. This would mean an actual rate of people unemployed in the vicinity of 9½ per cent of our labour force, a cruel and intolerable situation in a nation like Canada, since this would be a rate of unemployment higher than at any other period in our history. This is not what we want as Canadians.

The Speech from the Throne states that with foresight, stamina and enterprise we may have a society in which individual freedom and equality of opportunity remain as our most cherished possessions, a society in which the enjoyment of life is measured in qualitative, not quantitative terms. I would remind the Prime Minister and his government that without jobs and incomes there can be no way of life, no enjoyment of life, for hundreds of thousands of Canadians.

What we as Canadians really want is not more people on the welfare rolls; we want more people on the payrolls. Even the Prime Minister and his colleagues seem to be dimly aware of this fact as they talk of pursuing the distant ideal of a just society. In fact, the government's pretentions of a just society today are only a mirage, and like all mirages it keeps fading in the distance, unobtainable and without substance.

The Throne Speech states that one of our needs in Canada is adequate housing. This will always be a problem in any nation where there is a marked shift from the rural to the urban areas. But surely the government is aware that the 37 per cent decline in housing construction across the nation today can be directly related to the building codes imposed on CMHC loans, to the high interest rates on those loans, and to the federal taxes on construction equipment and building materials. It is unfair and unjust to our young people, and some not so young, to make housing the lever by which the government manipulates the economy, upward or downward, like a puppet on a string.

Our housing development and our construction industry will only go forward when the government establishes a stable housing policy which is designed to encourage home ownership at reasonable cost, with the future wellbeing of our Canadian families as the central core of that policy. It is the Canadian family that provides stability to this nation, and if there is a breakdown in our family life there follows a breakdown in society. This brings with it an outbreak of lawlessness, a disrespect for law and order, something that is all too prevalent in Canada today. The withdrawal, for example, of the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials and construction equipment would go a long way towards reviving housing construction in this nation.

As I read the Speech from the Throne, Mr. Speaker, I cannot help but question the motives of this government. I ask myself, conscientiously and seriously: In what direction are we being led? The speech calls for the reorganization of the government's urban activities, under the direction of a minister of state for urban affairs and housing. In other words, another minister, more bureaucrats and more civil servants. I would remind the government that what we need are not more housing authorities; what we need in Canada are more houses.

The Prime Minister is reported as saying during the past summer that if we do not like the way he is governing this country we can lump it. I for one do not like it, and I submit that the onus is on us to speak out against the present government's form of empire building. In Canada today we already have 25 government departments, 13 departmental corporations, 15 agency corporations, 14 propriety corporations, and 46 designated departments for purposes of the Financial Administration Act, making a total of 113. In this bureaucracy, at the federal level, we have a total personnel in excess of 371,000 people, excluding military personnel. When you add to this the bureaucracy of the provincial governments which employs some 333,000 people, and the 275,000 employed by regional and municipal governments, hon. members will realize there are close to one million employees in government in Canada today, and this for a nation of less than 22 million people.

What does all this mean, Mr. Speaker? It means that the influence of the government on business and on the public will continue to grow. I mention this because of the words in the Speech from the Throne which refer to the white paper on taxation and the implied threat made to corporations. Under this government it has apparently become illegal to make a profit. In my early years, when I was working for a large corporation, I was always pleased to note that the parent company was making money. Profits are the best guarantee to an employee of future job security, a fact that this government would do well to remember.

What worries me is the growing socialistic thinking of the government. There is an attitude that government can continue to take more and more out of the private sector of society without any concern at all for the state of the economy. However, there is a limit beyond which governments cannot go, and I submit that we are now nearing this limit in view of the rate of taxation imposed on industry and Canadians generally.

• (2:30 p.m.)

For example, let us consider some of the reports emanating from our large corporations. Take Massey-Ferguson, for example, Canada's fifth largest company. Sales for the first nine months of this year were down $14,500,000 from the corresponding period in 1969. For the third quarter, their net loss was $11,100,000 compared with a profit of $9,500,000 for the third quarter in 1969. In Toronto, General Motors has announced the closing of its Frigidaire home appliance division which will affect the employment of some 400 people. They presently employ, I am told, 1,400 people in that particular corporation and they plan to move a thousand of these people to other sections of their operations, but this still leaves 400 people unemployed as of the first of this coming year.

In both cases the reasons for the heavy losses or close down are similar. Production costs no longer make it feasible to continue in this field, and costly strikes, reduced demand, accelerating inflation and the high cost of money are curtailing profits. These are the end results of the policies of this government on our large corporations, and they are having equally disastrous results on our small businessmen throughout the nation. In my opinion, the answer does not lie in building up a greater bureaucracy in Ottawa. As we say in Atlantic Canada, we have too many people cutting bait and not enough fishing. We cannot share the wealth until it is first produced. We cannot have a higher standard of living in this country without increasing productivity first and increasing the quality of our product. Unfortunately, this is not the situation which exists at the present time. In my opinion, steps should be taken immediately to reduce the number of people in the establishment in Ottawa, not expand it.

At page 3 of the Throne Speech there are words with which I can agree. It states that we have an economy that is in need of adjustment, a society beset by a variety of tensions, an environment that has been abused and degraded, an international community that is under intense pressures and that these are the problems that demand our urgent attention. Of course they do, but do you Liberals ever ask yourselves what brought about this desperate situation in Canada so graphically described by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in the Throne Speech? Did it ever occur to you that it is the policies of your government that have thrown our economy out of adjustment and almost completely out of control?

It is the policies of your government that have beset our society with tensions, and which promise more of the same now that Chinese communists can legally come to Canada, where they are already reported as increasing their efforts to turn Toronto's Chinatown into a Maoist stronghold. The tears in the eyes of the Nationalist Chinese as they watched their ambassador depart from Canada gave some indication of their concern for their future wellbeing in this country.

If this does not worry the Liberal party and its members then it should, because it worries me and it worries the people I represent in this House. It is the policies of this government that have placed our international community under intense pressures. With your defence and foreign policy, or lack of it, we have lost the respect of our former NATO allies. It was some 37 years ago, at the famous Quebec conference of Churchill, Roosevelt and Mackenzie King, that a decision was made to proceed with the invasion of Normandy to liberate northwest Europe. At that time Canada had reason to be proud, for our armed forces commanded respect. Today, in matters of defence and foreign policy, our reputation in the western world is almost extinct, and in some quarters it is held up to ridicule and abuse.

Obviously, we are now trying to isolate ourselves from the world by walking out on our NATO allies at a critical time. Britain is obliged to send another brigade to fill the gap we left in the NATO defence line. As a result of our actions, we no longer command the same confidence and respect of our two closest friends, England and the United States, our partners and allies on the Normandy beaches. The same can be said of our relations with the people of the Netherlands, the people of France as well as the people of Belgium. They labelled our recent white papers on foreign affairs as so much window dressing, for in essence they indicate we have no clear purpose and we have no defence policy.

However, they have done one thing. They have given encouragement to socialist and communist governments throughout the world. Many Canadians are now beginning to ask why we are isolating ourselves and why we are no longer interested in international co-operation. Those of you who support the present government have a responsibility to answer these questions in view of the calibre of the government with which we are now allied, such as communist controlled Cuba and communist controlled China.

Today, when the strength of NATO is vital to world peace, I believe that Canada would be well advised to take a greater interest and responsibility in collective security than is presently the case. The present government seems to have forgotten that world communist leaders may from time to time alter their timetables, but their objective remains the same, namely, world domination and a completely controlled society.

At the rate we are going under the hon. member for Trinity's (Mr. Hellyer) disastrous unification scheme, we shall soon be like an old dog, a dog that can bark but cannot bite. We are simply deluding ourselves if we believe we are under the United States nuclear umbrella and, therefore, we have no need to train combat troops; that our NATO allies can provide a detente with the Communist forces without us. In my opinion, we are drawing the wrong conclusions because we start with the wrong premise. I only hope that Canadians become aroused to what is happening to us in the international sphere under this government before it is too late.

Our Prime Minister had planned to visit Russia. In view of internal problems in this country we are told now that this visit has been postponed, but he will be going at a later date. In view of his attitude towards NATO I have some questions for him and I hope he will secure some answers when he does visit Moscow. For example, I should like to know why there has been such a massive increase in Russian military power in the Middle East, as well as the addition of four more communist divisions facing NATO forces. We would like to know the reason for the great Russian naval expansion or buildup in the Mediterranean. We would like to know why Russia now has some 10,000 military advisers in Egypt, and why there are also some 100 Soviet flown MIG-21 planes and some 22 Soviet-manned missile sites in that country. Why is the Soviet navy stretching out into all the world's oceans with new naval bases being established? Why should they increase their fishing fleets enormously on the east coast the number of ships which can easily be converted to naval ships if the occasion should require it? Surely, we should know.

We should ask ourselves why Russia is building up this great military strength so quickly. How realistic are the peace negotiations and the talk of detente in Europe? I hope our Prime Minister can obtain some answers to these questions, for surely we should not be foolish enough to imagine that we can negotiate from weakness with Russia. In my opinion if NATO, the core of western defence, should collapse or should lack strength or purpose, we may well sacrifice world peace and see another generation committed to the tragedy of another even greater war or enslavement.

The Throne Speech indicates legislation will be presented to the House dealing with pollution in the ocean and in the atmosphere, and suggests there is a need to co-ordinate and consolidate our efforts under a department of environmental affairs. The Prime Minister, when speaking to this House on October 9, said this department would have as its core the Department of Fisheries plus the water sector of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, plus the administration and the responsibility for the Canada Water Act. It would also have the administration of the Canadian wildlife service.

This is in keeping with suggestions that were made by Conservative members on this side of the House when speaking on Bill C-204, an act to amend the Fisheries Act, including members from Newfoundland, Nova Scotia and other parts of Atlantic Canada. We stressed this very important point and at that time we said the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis) should be given more power under the Fisheries Act so that our industries and our municipalities would know where they stood on the serious problem of pollution control.

However, when we were making these suggestions we specifically mentioned strengthening the authority of the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry, not the abolition of this historical department. We have had a Department of Fisheries ever since Confederation, and I deplore the indicated downgrading of this department by changing its name to the Department of Environmental Affairs. By this proposed action, the fishing industry loses its historic and traditional position as a leading department of government representing an important primary industry on both coasts.

• (2:40 p.m.)

In his speech the Prime Minister referred to the inscription over the doors of the Parliament buildings, "The wholesome sea is at her gates, her gates both east and west". I implore him to remember the traditions built up over the years, especially in Atlantic Canada where wooden ships and iron men established our eastern provinces and built up an enviable position in the fishing industry. By all means give more authority to control pollution to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry, but let us not destroy the traditions built up over more than 100 years by changing and downgrading the Fisheries Department. Perhaps the answer would be to combine fisheries with agriculture, as has been done in the United Kingdom. The abolition of the Department of Fisheries or the putting of it on a par, for example, with the Canadian wildlife service is nothing more than bureaucratic nonsense.

[Mr. Crouse.]

The Minister of Fisheries and Forestry in his Speech, as recorded at page 162 of Hansard, referred to what has been done toward the cleaning up of our rivers and streams that were being polluted by our paper mills when he and his department enforced the terms of the Fisheries Act. He followed by listing seven proposals which if implemented would all be helpful in cleaning up our environment. We on this side take no issue with those proposals. However, it would not be the new department or the minister or even the law that would clean up our air and waters but rather the enforcement of the law and the co-operation of the people that would really aid in improving the conditions under which we live. For example, the Fisheries Act had the teeth but its lack of enforcement contributed in no small way to the present pollution of our rivers and streams. Therefore, some of the blame must be accepted by the present government and some of the blame must be accepted by the present Minister of Fisheries and Forestry.

The need to control pollution and improve our environment runs like a thread through the Throne Speech. Since action on the problem is important, I believe it is timely for the government to reconsider its stand on tidal power in the Bay of Fundy. When the Atlantic Tidal Power Programming Board was formed in 1966 to make a definitive study of Fundy's possibilities it seemed that, at long last, the question was to be resolved. However, when the board made its report earlier this year the government turned down the proposal. In their view power certainly could be developed and in large quantities, but with interest rates at 7 per cent they implied it would cost too much. In my opinion the question in the next decade will not be whether tidal power can compete economically but whether any alternative to tidal power can be developed to compete with its freedom from any form of environmental pollution.

The truth of the matter is that the tidal height in Minas Basin is greater than anywhere else in the world. Therefore, it follows that if development is uneconomical the prospects of developing tidal power anywhere are very grim indeed. We know, however, that tidal power is being utilized on the river La Rance in Brittany, France and the working model at Expo '67 gave an indication of its possibilities in our part of the world. It is difficult to understand why the government turned down the development of this project, since large sums of money have been found for cultural activities while bread and butter issues which would provide employment and be self-liquidating must take second place. We know billions of dollars will have to be invested in the next four years to build new Canadian power stations. Demand for electricity is expected to grow at a compound rate of 7½ per cent a year between now and 1975. The Dominion Bureau of Statistics forecasts that generating capacity will have to be boosted to nearly 54 million kilowatts, up some 16½ million kilowatts over the generating capacity of last year.

The harnessing of the tides of Fundy is almost a must when one considers that the pollution of our air, land and sea is recognized as a real threat to the future well-being of mankind. I say this because thermal plants liberate carbon dioxide and other pollutants into the atmosphere, while both thermal and nuclear plants have to get rid of large quantities of waste heat. Tidal power would give us electricity while conserving some of our irreplaceable natural resources such as oil or uranium. Tidal power would bring a new prosperity to Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island through the provision of vast quantities of electrical energy, some of which could be exported to the power-hungry eastern seaboard of the United States. This would help to defray the cost of construction.

I urge the Prime Minister and the government to carefully consider this project. In an age when we have high unemployment, with one-third of our population living under the poverty line, and while millions of Canadians are suffering from the ravages and misery of inflation, this is one self-liquidating Canadian development that could be helpful in bolstering the economy of the Atlantic provinces and indeed could be helpful to all of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. J.-R. Comtois (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, the third session of the twenty-eighth legislature begins in the early 70's, a decade which will, undoubtedly, be of special importance.

Canada is entering into a new era, where already certain forces, incomprehensible to us, are at work, the causes of this being both internal and external. The conflict between the new values and those of the past, the need felt by the young and the disappointed generations to adopt new attitudes and perspectives, unavoidably give rise to unrest and tension. It is an era marked by violence to which bewildered men resort in pursuit of uncertain objectives. Even for many men of good will, who impatiently question the old principles, it is a time of frustration. But it is also a period of hope and of challenges to be taken up in order to attain "the just society" to which we all aspire.

Mr. Speaker, in the night from Saturday to Sunday, we suffered a great loss through the death of Pierre Laporte. In my own name and in the name of all my fellow-citizens, I want to extend to Mrs. Laporte, to her children and her family, our deepest sympathies.

Pierre Laporte was well known back home, Mr. Speaker. He was educated at L'Assomption College, It is in l'Assomption also that he met his wife, Françoise Brouillette.

It was in my area that he spent his summer vacations for 20 years. We have known Pierre Laporte the politician, but also Pierre Laporte the man. He was a great Liberal and a great democrat. I am sure he will not have sacrificed his life in vain.

Mr. Speaker, are those we are looking for the only real culprits? What about those we have seen on television and heard on radio who for a number of years have stirred up passions and daily preached hatred? What about René Lévesque and company who preach there is no longer a government in Quebec? What about all these saviours of the race who are ready to govern Quebec, but without facing the electorate? I don't want to put too much emphasis on that, but I would ask the people of Quebec—youth in particular—to reflect on the events that afflict us at this time.

Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted, in the course of this debate, to pay a well-deserved tribute to the former member for Terrebonne and Labelle, His Excellency Léo Cadieux, the newly appointed Canadian Ambassador to France. I wish him the greatest success in his new functions and I am convinced he will be a credit to all his fellow citizens. I can even give him the assurance that the coming by-elections in Labelle on November 16 next will result in replacing him by a Liberal.

I also congratualte the hon. member for Bourassa (Mr. Trudel) for his outline of the problems of his constituency, of his region and of the country when moving the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. Among other things, he pointed out the role of the federal government in the economic development of his constituency and of Greater Montreal.

The co-mover of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas), ably showed us the similarity between problems of his region and those of Eastern Canada. He spoke of the inevitable changes of agriculture and of the regrouping of farms to make them more profitable. What is a necessity in the West becomes urgency in the East when the size of farms in the East is compared with those in the West. Also, he has mentioned the possibility of opening a national park in his constituency and I hope from the bottom of my heart that he will soon see his wish materialized.

The constituency of Terrebonne which I represent is half-urban and half-rural. The local population knows its problems and is endeavouring to solve them. The future international airport of Montreal at Sainte-Scholastique happens to be within my constituency. This major project will create special problems for us, including construction of adequate access roads and highways, new modern utilities, regrouping of municipalities in the area, public transportation, improvement of telephone facilities, etc.

Mr. Speaker, I do hope the federal government will seriously look into the possibility of designating all this territory as a special area for the purpose of helping the province of Quebec in carrying out these major projects.

Mr. Speaker, the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is very active in our region. Every year we can see hundreds of new buildings and I congratulate the government for having set up at last a Department for Urban Affairs and Housing.

Mr. Speaker, the previous speaker, the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy), told us about the pollution of the back river, Riviere des Prairies, and the Mille-Îles River.

As you know, those rivers touch on my riding and I strongly support the representations of that member so that pollution be stopped. For 25 years local authorities and House members have been urging the government to canalize both rivers. I hope that the next budget will allocate funds for completing these projects because there are more than one and a half million people in that region.

The Throne Speech announces the early presentation of White Papers on communications, citizenship, immigration, national defence and income security which we will have the pleasure of examining. The government has also tabled 68 bills to be submitted to members of Parliament during the session. Several of them are of particular interest to my constituency. For example there are bills to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act and the Farm Improvement Loans Act, a bill creating the Canada Development Corporation, one relating to income security, veterans pension legislation, a bill to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, a bill respecting government organization, a bill creating a Department of Urban Affairs and Housing, another creating a Department for the protection of the environment and, finally, a bill respecting farm products marketing agencies.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed to remind my colleagues that there is still much work to be done in our beautiful country and that to do so in order, peace and social justice, there is nothing better than work, perseverance, dialogue and understanding. Canada will thus be more thriving and beautiful. Canadians will be more united if all together they do their duty simply.

• (2:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as everyone understands, this is a difficult day during which to make a speech. However, even in times of adversity life must go on, and I suggest that it behooves us not to slacken but rather to intensify our efforts to build in Canada the kind of society in which there is human dignity for all our people. We are of course quite conscious of the many strains to which life in this country is subject, and for the short while that I would like to speak this afternoon I wish to say something about one of those strains. Indeed, it is the one that I think is most serious, not only for us in Canada but for mankind throughout the world.

I refer to the strains and the stresses that are created in human society by gross inequalities and widespread poverty. Ours is an age in which we sometimes marvel at and even boast of our scientific and technological achievements. We like to quote figures to show how great are the advances we have made. Mind you, in recent times we have come to realize that progress is not everything, particularly when one of the by-products of progress is the bespoiling of our environment to the extent that it might be impossible for human life to continue. That is a problem by itself, a problem of great magnitude. I welcome the widespread public concern over that problem and I welcome the fact that the government is also concerned about it. However, alongside that great problem of saving our environment so that human life can continue, I suggest that there is this other extremely serious problem, namely, poverty and inequality.

[Mr. Comtois.]

The situation on the world scale is well known, namely, that about two-thirds of the world's people live their entire lives in hunger and poverty. We know that despite the tremendous amounts of money we have spent on external aid, despite the fact that we have raised the living standards of some of those in the developing countries, the gap is still growing and our world is still threatened with all of the difficulties that come because two-thirds of our people are hungry and the other third enjoy only at least a slightly better standard of living. But not only is that true on the world scale, I think it is terribly true for Canada.

I insist that along with the efforts we must make to meet our stresses and strains in the constitutional area, between or among our various racial and other groups, we must also concern ourselves with the fact that when masses of people are poor and have nothing to look forward to but living in poverty throughout their lives, this kind of thing tears our society apart.

• (3:00 p.m.)

I suggest indeed that no matter how perfect a constitution we might write, no matter how much accord we might achieve in federal-provincial relations, and in relations between the executive and the members of the House of Commons, unless we do something about this problem of poverty and inequality our society will not be able to stand the strain.

There are two things which I think are not the answer to the problem of poverty. The first thing which I am convinced is not the answer is something on which we have relied for a long time. It is not the answer to do things for the poor, yet to leave them in a state of poverty. I am convinced that many of our welfare programs, and many of the other things we have done, do only that. They are things we do for the poor, but after we have done them they are still poor. As a matter of fact, statistics show that for all we have done to raise the economic standard of the lower groups in our society we have raised the standards of those at the upper end to such an extent that the gap is wider than ever.

Some might argue that the poverty that is experienced down at the lower end is therefore psychological. It is still very real, and I believe a great deal of the tension and chaos and uncertainty in social life today stems from this feeling of frustration, injustice and unfairness, arising from the fact that we have so much poverty, and I am convinced it is not the answer just to do things for the poor but to leave them in that state.

The second thing, Mr. Speaker, that I think is not the answer is for us to continue to believe that we can enjoy the hierarchical economy that we have accepted as a matter of course. Since the days of Adam Smith it seems to have been the notion that if there are more rich at the top some of that wealth will filter down and the poor will somehow manage to survive.

In fact, I think it has to be said that in many of the efforts that we make to improve the conditions of those at the lower end of the scale we keep saying to ourselves that we can do this without interfering with still higher standards for those at the top. I think we will have to get to the place where we realize that if we are going to abolish poverty for those who are in it, it is going to cost us something. There may actually have to be some levelling of the living standards of our people, including our own.

We may have to come to a day when instead of making wage and salary increases always on a percentage basis, so that those at the top get a whole lot more and those at the bottom get very little, we may have to recognize there is a better way to do it. I know that my hon. friend from Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) speaks on this at times. He does not like us to talk about any levelling up of incomes because he says that means we are going to take from those that have and give it to those who have not and, in his inimitable way, he says we will end up having nothing but have-nots.

It is always enjoyable to listen to him say it, but that is one of the fallacies we have to recognize, that we cannot expect to get rid of poverty if at the same time we want to maintain the gap between the poor and the affluent, if at the same time we want to make life richer and still more bountiful for those at the top. Our concern must be not just to do something for the poor without it hurting us. Our concern must be a new order of values, a new approach to society that says that the right to a guaranteed livelihood is an essential part of living in this country.

We have criticized the Speech from the Throne for some of the rhetoric that is in it. We always do that. We always criticize the other fellow's rhetoric and then we turn around and try our best to match it. I join in the criticism of the rhetoric, but at the same time I like the phrases in the Speech from the Throne about the kind of society we ought to have, with love and compassion, and so on.

I like the sentence that is in there somewhere about our needing new attitudes and new values. Mind you, that sentence was not defined or explained, but it is there. I believe, and I hold to it very strongly, that one of the values we have got to weave into the fabric of our society is that this business of a wide gap between the poor and the rich must go and that in its place we must really concern ourselves with the economic well being of all our people—and I mean that—of all our people.

• (3:10 p.m.)

I repeat that it is not economic well-being for the poor to be given only enough welfare to keep them alive. They may stay alive on that basis, but in psychological terms they are just as poor and just as far down the ladder as was the case years ago when people had far less. I spoke in this vein during the debate on the address in reply in 1969. On that occasion I put some statistics on the record. In particular, I pointed out that approximately two decades ago 1½ million Canadians were reporting incomes of less than $2,000 a year. Yes, conditions for them have improved. The statistics now show that approximately 1½ million Canadians are reporting incomes of less than $3,000 a year. They are still at the bottom of the ladder. This is what has happened in two decades. Those people have had their position improved. The figures do not tell the story for everybody, but they suggest the picture, an increase from $2,000 to $3,000 a year. But $3,000 a year today is much more serious poverty than $2,000 a year two decades ago.

In the meantime incomes for other people have increased to $15,000 and $20,000. Salaries such as those are no longer surprising. I am not against people having the affluence and high standard of living that is possible today, but I accept the words of the Speech from the Throne that we need a new scale of values. I want those at the bottom to be brought up first.

If we are going to talk about human dignity we need a determination of national resolve, not just that we are going to help the poor, but that we are going to get rid of poverty even if it means that we have to curb some of the higher incomes and adopt a policy of narrowing that gap, helping those at the bottom rather than just having an increase on a percentage scale for everyone.

A few moments ago, I alluded to the world's situation. I think the same holds true there. Our international life will not hold together if we try to go on much longer with two thirds of the world's population hungry and one third enjoying relative affluence. The same is true for our country.

