> I simply raise this question: Is the only answer to give this jurisdiction to a federal court? In other words, would it not be possible to draft, if there are problems—and I gather there are problems with regard to, for instance, the location of an action against a federal tribunal the problem of the plaintiff moving from one province to another suing a federal administrative tribunal—

He says it is very simple to get over that objection noted on page 13. Once you choose a jurisdiction, you are stuck with that particular jurisdiction in all provinces.

I now wish to deal with the matter of legal chaos. I will use the example of a three-way accident involving cars A and B and car C, an RCMP vehicle. Because the Crown is involved this must be decided in the new federal court. A and B can have their case decided in the provincial court. What happens if the provincial court decides that A is at fault and the Exchequer Court decides that B is at fault? When the sheriff picks up the property to pay for the damages, which judgment governs?

Dozens of powerful corporations make contracts with such Crown corporations as Panarctic. If they become involved in litigation, there are eight corporations which could be sued. The problems of these corporations could be litigated in the provincial court, but if the Crown were in breach of contract the provincial court could not make a decision. If the provincial court decided that a company was at fault and the Exchequer Court decided that the Crown was at fault or one of the other companies involved, we then have legal chaos. Mr. Watson said that he did not have any experience as a court room lawyer, but he was able to look at the chaos that some lawyers meet with this bill.

I now wish to deal with one other thought. The most important instruments a citizen has are special writs. At one time I was very critical of administrative boards. I had a lot of suspicion about them, but I have changed my philosophy. There is a place for administrative boards. When a matter is decided by the board everything, including the kitchen sink, goes in. I compare the powers of a board to a book. It has four sides. The powers of boards are set out in a book about the size of the book I am now holding. If they exceed those powers, their orders can be quashed. It is very simple, really. There is no need to go through a procedure costing $1,000 or $2,000. You go to a judge and say: This board has exceeded its authority and I want its order quashed. The mistake is generally on the record, or it is a question of law, or the decision was contrary to natural justice. Those rights have existed for a number of years. They are the safeguard of the citizens against an all-powerful state. This is why we find special remedies given to the trial court in section 18 yet the right of appeal in section 28, sets out the same reasons as those applicable to special remedies. This is legal chaos in itself.

To compound it, two of the witnesses before the committee said they still did not know whether, when boards exceeded their authority, people who felt themselves aggrieved should apply to the ordinary courts of a province or not. One lawyer may hold one view, and another lawyer may hold a different view. Lawyers do not always agree; that is why we have judges. But why should citizens be put to such great and unnecessary expense?

With great respect, I suggest that the motivation behind this bill was to give the Crown more power. Remember, people who work for the Crown, and I am not being disrespectful to them, naturally hold the philosophy that if you are going to play a game of cards it helps to have a good hand. But, Mr. Speaker, once in a while when I am playing cards I like to have the right to deal.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

An hon. Member: Stacked deck.

Mr. Woolliams: That's right. I want to make sure the deck is clean when I am playing blackjack. These people put together a bill. They have thought it out so as to give the greatest power to the Crown. The amendments I propose would at least put some safeguards into it from the point of view of the average man. These two amendments are very serious; in fact, I have never been more serious. I thank the House for its kind attention and I hope hon. members will give what I have said the kind of consideration for which I have sought to argue.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I shall not get into a forensic duel with the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams). Those of us who are members of the committee have heard his arguments a number of times.

An hon. Member: Never better than today.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Never better than he was today. But there was nothing new. This issue was canvassed thoroughly by the committee under the chairmanship of the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Tolmie). I should like to pay tribute to him—he is sitting in the House today—for his leadership and impartial chairmanship of a very sensitive committee of the House of Commons—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): —a committee which transacts at least as much business as any other committee of the House.

Despite some of the flourishes of the hon. member for Calgary North, during most of our deliberations we engaged in a non-partisan review of the bills which came before the committee. The hon. member mentioned that Liberals had occasionally disagreed with the position taken by the government before the committee. I see no objection to that, because one of the merits of the committee system is that it enables Members of Parliament to exercise independent judgment relatively free from the control of party whips. As a matter of fact, I have found myself on the losing side on several occasions before that committee. One was in connection with the breathalyzer test; the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Murphy) beat me on the penalty. The government did not seek to revive this issue on the report stage; we took our beating in committee because we believe in the committee system. The fact that the chairman had to break a tie in the voting on several occasions, as the hon. member pointed out, is in itself an indication that we have been considering this bill in a non-partisan way. But the question raised by the hon. member was considered thoroughly by the committee and rejected by it, so the hon. member cannot say the subject did not receive the consideration which it merits.

I wish to analyze briefly the jurisdiction of the Federal Court. The hon. member sought to give the impression that this bill was the expression of a reaching out for power on the part of the Crown. Well, the jurisdiction of the federal court differs from the present jurisdiction of the Exchequer Court in only a very few aspects. First, there is a jurisdiction of review and appeal over federal boards and tribunals. That is an extension of jurisdiction. The second extension is concurrent jurisdiction with provincial courts over matters involving promissory notes or bills of exchange, where the Crown is a party. The third extension is a concurrent jurisdiction with the provincial superior court in matters concerning aeronautics. Those are the only extensions in jurisdiction given.

I wish to analyze the jurisdiction of the Exchequer Court and the Federal Court and attempt to explain it, through this House, to the people of Canada. Historically, the act was set up because there had to be some forum in which claims could be made against the Crown in right of Canada. So all actions against the Crown in right of Canada are taken in the Exchequer Court—and if I use the term "federal court" I am not doing so on the assumption that the House will pass this measure but to make it more convenient for hon. members by using a consistent terminology.

There are certain branches of federal law which, for historical and practical reasons, come before the federal court. This is because they are complicated, because litigation is specialised and because a certain expertise has to be developed. They involve questions of Admiralty, of industrial property, patents, trademarks and copyright, expropriation, estate tax and income tax. As I say, this type of law is specialized. It often involves the Crown and it has been adequately handled by the Exchequer Court in the past. As a matter of fact, several judges from provincial superior and supreme courts have advised me privately that they wished jurisdiction over industrial property could rest exclusively with the federal court. They say that a case involving patent or copyright so seldom comes before a provincial court that the judges lack the necessary background or expertise to deal with it, properly and trials are unnecessarily long because of lack of experience in this type of case.

There are other branches of federal law which are left to provincial courts—divorce and bankruptcy, both of which fall within the jurisdiction of Parliament. It is worth noting that because of the technical nature of these branches of the law, the law itself has to be supplemented by very full sets of rules. Indeed, in these two fields, the rules from a procedural point of view are almost as important as the substantive provisions of the act itself. In order to place a technical branch of the federal law within the competence of a provincial court it is necessary to supplement it with extremely comprehensive rules. Some Chief Justices of provincial courts have suggested to me that the federal government ought to take bankruptcy cases away from the provincial courts and give them to a federal court. There are a number of judges in Ontario and Quebec who would prefer to see the federal bankruptcy law handled by the Federal Court.

We are not grabbing back jurisdiction, as the hon. member suggests. We have left bankruptcy where it is, and we have left divorce where it is. As a matter of fact, we are hoping that divorce cases will be handled not only by superior courts, but that advantage will be taken of the latitude in the law and that county courts will handle divorce as well. I would inform the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) that there is sufficient latitude in the law, in my opinion, to allow county court judges in Ontario or elsewhere to hear divorce actions.

There are certain branches of the law with national impact involving litigation that crosses provincial boundaries and which is probably better handled by a federal court than a provincial court, where only one party to the action might be in his home territory. This is why we suggested concurrent jurisdiction in the the aeronautics field. Supposing there was an air tragedy involving a major air line; it is likely that the passengers on the aircraft would come from more than one province. On the other hand, in the crash of a small plane in the Okanagan valley involving two or three people from British Columbia, any subsequent litigation obviously should properly be brought before the Supreme Court of British Columbia, and there is nothing in this federal court bill to take away this jurisdiction.

However, in the case of a national disaster involving passengers from every province in the country and even from abroad, rather than have a host of actions brought in various provincial superior courts or supreme courts all across the country, it would be better for all litigants to have one forum where the action can be decided at one and the same time.

So there is no federal power grab, to use the synonym of the hon. member for Calgary North. The jurisdiction is not being increased except in the three areas I have described. The jurisdiction has been increased in the field of promissory notes and bills of exchange where the Crown in right of Canada is party to the action, and in the field of aeronautics. In both these areas the jurisdiction is concurrent, not exclusive. There is still concurrent jurisdiction left with the superior courts.

In reviewing the supervisory jurisdiction of federal boards, commissions and tribunals, the whole rationale of the bill is that there should be a review procedure, whether by way of the traditional common law prerogative writs or the new statutory review remedy available under clause 28. Right of appeal under specialized statutes is preserved under clause 29.

As I say, there should be a common forum so that the federal boards cannot be attacked or harassed by a multiplicity of jurisdictions. Federal boards should be dealt with on a federal basis. I make no apology for this because in clauses 18, 28 and 29, as I said yesterday, we are setting up the infrastructure of public administrative law in this country, a branch of the law that has been too weakly developed to this point.

The hon. member for Calgary North adduced an argument that I know by heart.

Mr. Woolliams: I know yours too.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I also know mine by heart, and I make it only in response to the speech of the hon. member. We did introduce evidence to the effect that the federal court is no more expensive for the litigant than any other court. I submitted the tariffs of the Exchequer Court and they compared favourably with those of the Supreme Court of Alberta, the Supreme Court of Ontario and the Superior Court of Quebec. There was very little difference between them.

The hon. member also argued that the federal court is not accessible. Let me tell him it is now on circuit. I have tried to explain that under clause 7 and clause 16 the court is empowered to go on circuit, to go where the litigants want to litigate. If an action arises in the federal court between citizens of Alberta, then the federal court will go to Alberta to hear the action, whether it be an application, motion, or any other type of interlocutory proceeding, or whether it be a trial on the merits or an appeal. The circuit procedure that has been part of the practice of the court for the last two or three years under the present president is now written into the law in statutory form.

The hon. member for Calgary North argued that the procedures of the court are complicated. We have submitted the rules of procedure.

Mr. Woolliams: The minister does not agree with Mr. Henderson.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Henderson is very knowledgeable before the court, but he knows as well as I—and I have had a good deal of practice before the court as well, I might add—that the new rules of procedure were modernized and published last year. I say that they are as streamlined and as non-technical as the rules of any of the supreme courts or superior courts of this country.

This is a court that tends to have a certain type of specialty, a certain type of expertise, as a result of the very nature of the sort of litigation that comes before it. It is true that lawyers do not get before the federal court, or will not get before it, as often as they appear before the Provincial county court or superior court. The simple answer to this is that there happen to be more automobile cases, more matrimonial cases, more property cases and more contractual and tortious cases, or délit cases, to use the language of the Code Civile of Quebec, than other types of litigation.

However, in regard to matters that have historically and properly placed within the jurisdiction of the Exchequer Court, matters having a national impact, a certain specialized importance, matters that involve the provinces or the federal government and citizens of the country, this court is a useful vehicle for the purpose of administering justice in the interests of the people of Canada.

One final remark, Mr. Speaker. I listen often to the hon. member describing the forces of the Department of Justice being mobilized against the little guy. I would remind him there have been times when the Department of Justice has had to take on some of the big landowners in Alberta who are represented on occasion by the hon. member for Calgary North in order to defend some of the leasehold interests in that province. I know his argument is fiction, and I always listen to it with a smile, as I did on this occasion.

The Department of Justice represents the people of Canada and ensures that the people of Canada are properly protected.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It ensures that the laws of taxation are fairly administered. Sometimes the Department of Justice, on behalf of the people of Canada, has to prosecute tax evaders and the like. It also has to make sure that the people of Canada get the best price in cases of expropriation. So I suggest his argument works both ways.

The department tries to recruit the best lawyers it can. It is true to say that 50 per cent of the cases coming before the Supreme Court of Canada and 50 per cent of the cases coming before this court are brought on behalf of the people of Canada. We bring cases dealing with admiralty matters, taxation, industrial property cases and expropriation. I think the people of Canada expect the Department of Justice to represent them as best it can, and the department will continue to do so, even against clients represented by my hon. friend from Calgary North.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand the hon. member for Calgray North wishes to ask a question.

Mr. Woolliams: Assuming for a moment that everything the minister says is acceptable, rather than letting the minister or his department decide, has he any objection to letting the people decide whether it is cheaper to litigate in court A compared with court B.? That is all I am asking. What is the objection to letting the people decide?

An hon. Member: No answer.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, may I first of all apologize to the House. I misread part of a report, which was more or less a synthesis, with regard to clause 41 (1) and (2). The hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) moved an amendment in the committee which was negatived on division. I said that it had carried seemingly without discussion, and I apologize to the hon. member for innocently misleading the House. I goofed on that one.

There does not seem to have been much continuity to the discussion but I can readily understand some of the points made by the minister, though I was not so persuaded by some of the arguments put forward by the deputy minister, Mr. Maxwell, at the committee hearings, particularly in view of some of the final amendments made by the committee which appeared in the report of June 9. It seems to me that, notwithstanding the persuasiveness of Mr. Maxwell, there is a built-in attitude or frame of mind as a result of his extensive communication with the department. Quite frankly, I think he is too involved with the department to look at the situation as one does from the outside. I would caution the minister very seriously and sincerely that while the department does say it sets out to defend the interests of the people of Canada, that is not so in fact. The interests of the Crown become paramount. It is not the interests of the people that become paramount. There is a very grave distinction between the interests of the Crown and the interests of the citizen.

The minister knows that when he was with a firm in Montreal which made a specialty of taking on the Department of National Revenue, those who took cases for prosecution on behalf of the department were not doing so with the interests of the people in mind. This was done on behalf of the government with a capital "G".

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): In those days we took on every department.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): In any event, that was the case. There is one point I want to suggest to the minister which may provide an out in respect of the point made by my colleague the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams). The minister did say that judges would travel on circuit as provided in clause 7 and subsequent clauses. He said a person from Vancouver would not necessarily have to come to Ottawa to pursue a case. There are many interlocutory procedures. This is the point that concerned my friend.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): They will be heard there, too.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Interlocutory procedures arise for certain purposes and need one judge. Perhaps this judge will not be travelling at the time. I trust we are not going to have judges travelling around like the stars in the firmament.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): There is provision for deputy judges in clause 10.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): This is the point, the provision involves difficulties. The appointment of a deputy judge under clause 10 can only occur on the recommendation of the Chief Justice, as I recall it, with the approval of the governor in council. In other words, there has to be an order in council for this. The clause states:

—any judge of a superior, county or district court in Canada, and any person who has held office as a judge of a superior, county or district court in Canada, may, at the request of the chief justice—

I presume that is the chief justice of this federal court. Let me repeat:

—may, at the request of the Chief Justice made with the approval of the governor in council, act as a judge of the Federal Court—

I wonder why a couple of superior court or county court judges in a province could not be appointed on a permanent basis. They could hold the position of deputy judge for the purpose of interlocutory proceedings in respect of which one has to obtain an ex parte order or orders that have to be obtained for substitutional service and this sort of thing. I refer to what we call interlocutory applications made in chambers. These are the things in regard to which you are able to go down to see a judge in his chambers. I suggest this would remove a great deal of difficulty. If the judge or members of a federal court did not happen to be in Edmonton, for instance, I, as a barrister with a case for some citizen in hand, could get an order for substitutional service or something of that nature. Under this clause, I would have to wait for the federal judge to come or retain an agent in Ottawa to get that order from a federal judge in his chambers here. I do not think that should be the case.

Let me offer as a sincere suggestion to the minister that one judge could be appointed in the city of Calgary, the city of Edmonton and at other points on a permanent basis so that members of the bar would know they could go to see Mr. Justice so and so, or his honour judge so and so, and get the necessary order in that way.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) is aware that this matter was discussed yesterday. I intervened in the discussion on amendment No. 3, which has already been put to a vote. This dealt with the rota of judges. I hope he will not feel I am being discourteous if I do not reply on this issue, because I am already on record in Hansard on the point.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am sorry I did not see those remarks in Hansard. It seems to me the minister might have replied in the same vein to the hon. member for Calgary North because this was a good part of the argument of that hon. member.

Having said that, I will not come to the practicalities of the matter. I suggest to the minister that this will create almost a bar here in Ottawa to deal with the federal court. The minister may shake his head but this happens to be one of the facts of life when working in centres some distance removed from Ottawa. The minister, when practising in Montreal, found it easy to get up here to Ottawa, but I will ask him whether his clients of very limited means could afford to send him from Edmonton or Calgary to Ottawa at an expense of some $220 just for airfare?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): He would not have to do it because the court is on circuit.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Because of the timing, it may be necessary to appear before the court here. One may have to retain an agent in Ottawa to initiate the proceedings because, undoubtedly, they will have to be initiated in Ottawa. Statements of claim and other documents will have to be filed here. There will be a tremendous business created for members of the Ottawa bar. If the minister does not think that is going to increase the costs, I do not know what will. He mentioned that court fees will be the same but has he ever considered that other item we call solicitor-client fees? Has he ever seen an agent's bill? It may be that justice is expensive in this country, and it can be very expensive when the procedures become more and more involved.

My friend and colleague, the hon. member for Calgary North, is familiar with the situation and knows what he is saying. He has had considerable experience practicing before the court here in Ottawa. I have had limited experience before the Supreme Court of Canada, but let me assure you that the costs of agents are particularly high. They get involved in these cases as much as possible because this is part of a specialized business. One has only to look over a bill of costs to see what this expense involves when a special application is made by an agent in chambers here in Ottawa.

Let me go to another point in relation to the reservation and exclusive right for writs, as provided for in clause 18. Recently I attended a meeting of the Edmonton bar association. That meeting was attended by distinguished counsel from both the academic and practising fields. They examined this bill. It appeared as though they had just seen it for the first time. I find it rather strange that the bar as a whole in Canada has not responded with more interest to the provisions of this bill. I do not think even the Canadian Bar has directly made any full representation or examination in the form of a detailed brief.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): There is a dispute concerning the nature of the approach that was made here to the effect that no one made representations directly on behalf of the Canadian Bar. I can make a safe bet, I believe, that the British Columbia Law Society, the Alberta Law Society nor any other law association in the country have not turned their minds officially to this bill. When it comes time either to have it appear in the other place or be proclaimed, there will be a great awakening and the minister will receive all sorts of representations. Before long, we will be asked to amend the bill. I am only blaming the lawyers themselves. They did the same thing in respect of the Canada Corporations Act. Until representations were made to them, and they were asked to react, very few if any made any contribution or comment. Now, when one speaks to them about the bill they express horror concerning some of the provisions. I think a somewhat similar situation will occur with regard to this particular bill.

I wonder why it is necessary that to have a reservation of exclusive original jurisdiction for the application of writs of habeas corpus ad subjiciendum, writs of certiorari, writs of prohibition or writs of mandamus as provided in clause 17? I must say that under clause 18 we also have these exclusive, extraordinary remedies referred to the trial division. In the past, as I understand it, these have also been under the jurisdiction of the superior courts of the provinces. It seems to me I come back to the principle advocated by my hon. colleague from Calgary North, that it should be up to the individual to choose the court in which he will launch his action. I must say I realize what the intention is, but I have these reservations. It is a large central court. I do not know whether the ultimate idea is that regional divisions of the Court shall be established, such as exist in the United States, and that there would be a Canadian federal circuit court based regionally, say, in the Prairies, in Ontario, in Quebec and in the Atlantic provinces. In any event, I support the amendment of my hon. colleague. I have some hesitation, as I have indicated, in respect of particular clauses.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief in supporting my hon. friend from Calgary North. First, I assure the minister and the House that I shall not become involved in the area of argument between the minister and the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) in which each portrays himself as sort of a barefoot boy David of the law profession fighting the horrible Goliath. I will leave that battle to be determined between them as best they can. But I do not think we need take up a collection to provide either with shoes.

I should like to make one point in respect of the minister's suggestion concerning the rates in this new federal court being similar to those in other courts. What we pay for when we find it necessary to see a lawyer is that lawyer's time, and what is in that lawyer's "noggin". If that lawyer should be an expert in divorce work or in whatever field it might be, it is not necessary for him to spend all the time in the world on the case and it will be handled competently.

However, if once in a blue moon a lawyer has to launch an action in the new federal court, the first thing he will have to do is read the rule book of that court. The minister says it is simple. Perhaps it is as simple as the rules which now exist in respect of the Exchequer Court. But the fact is that the lawyer would have to read them. He would have to spend some time in determining their simplicity and in deciding how to proceed. If he should have only one case in a particular year in this court, then the full burden of his investigation of the rule book would fall on the client who comes to him with that one case. On the face of it, while one might compare the tariffs between the courts, that is not the whole story. We must consider that it is the time involved for which the lawyer charges, as well as his knowledge or lack of knowledge, and the time he has to spend obtaining the knowledge with which to serve his client. It is for this that he must be paid.

Those of us who are lawyers know that in some courts the procedure is as intricate as an 18th century minuet or the ritual courting dance of the whooping crane. It is necessary for one to have a great deal of skill to find his way through the procedure in order to serve a client. Therefore, I hope the minister, recognizing the basic common sense of the argument from this side, will accept the amendment of the hon. member for Calgary North.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question? The question is on motions Nos. 1, 2 and 10. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motions?

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 45 the recorded division on the proposed motions stands deferred.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan)—Fisheries—Initiatives to offset overfishing by foreign draggers—Oceanographic studies; the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis)—War Measures Act—Vancouver police refusal of permission to Viet Nam Committee to hold march.

It being five o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, Private Bills. As there are no private bills listed on today's Order Paper, the House will now proceed to the order of business Notices of Motions (Papers).

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR REPORT BY BERGER, TISDALL, CLARK AND LESLEY LTD.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena) moved:

That on Order of the House do issue for a copy of the report on attitude of Indian people based mainly on a visit to the Six Nations Reserve on July 16, 1969, submitted to the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development by Berger, Tisdall, Clark and Lesley Ltd., as referred to at page 6 of the quarterly report on public relations activity, June, July, August, 1969 by the said Berger, Tisdall, Clark and Lesley Ltd.

• (5:00 p.m.)

He said: May I say with respect, Mr. Speaker, that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan) desires to make a comment first.

Mr. Judd Buchanan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the department has not felt able to table this report, which should be termed a letter since that is what it is. The reason it has not felt able to do so is that an undertaking has been given to the people who made the comments which have been included in this letter that they would be made on a confidential basis, and that their names would not be divulged. That is the reason the department has felt it was not in a position to table the letter, and therefore the notice of motion for the production of papers has been denied.

However, this morning I had a chat with the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) and explained this to him. He said that so long as we would table the letter he would be quite agreeable to having us substitute, instead of the individual names, the name of an Indian spokesman, and delete the reference to other individuals. Otherwise, the letter is exactly as it came to the department. So, with this understanding we will be happy to table the document as amended and I believe the hon. member will then be prepared to withdraw his notice of motion for the production of papers.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Generally, I am quite agreeable to that. I appreciate the courtesy of the Parliamentary Secretary in calling me earlier today and explaining the situation. I also commend him for doing a fine research job and in convincing the department that it was in error last year when it advised the parliamentary secretary of that day of the circumstances surrounding what is now termed a letter.

I might add that the quarterly report of the company in question, namely, Berger, Tisdall, Clark and Lesley Limited, makes reference to this particular document, which is now called a letter, and in fact it is called a report. My reference to the word "report" was based on the use of that term by the company in question.

I wonder if I could say in passing that I do not think it is material whether I withdraw the motion or whether we assume it is passed. In either case the same effect will be accomplished, namely, the document which the department has refused to make public earlier will now be made public and quite appropriately so. I am agreeable to withdrawing the motion, but this is immaterial except for the fact that if I withdraw the motion I think the Parliamentary Secretary will have to have the consent of the House to table the letter because there will be no order of the House to do so.

All this leads us to conclude that parliamentary secretaries and cabinet ministers all too often in the past—and this proves the point—have been at the mercy of department officials who may want to conceal something which they have no right to do. I would appreciate it very much if the newly appointed parliamentary secretaries, in prosecuting their positions to the full would look more closely at their departments when documents are classified as confidential.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the wish of the House that the document be tabled, subject to the reservations and conditions mentioned by the Parliamentary Secretary in his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion is withdrawn.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

WELFARE AND INCOME SECURITY—REPORT OF DR. J. W. WILLARD

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of any reports or reviews with regard to social welfare legislation and income security prepared by or under the direction of Dr. J. W. Willard, Deputy Minister of Welfare for Canada, since June 25, 1968.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the material which is the subject of this resolution and that is why I sometimes refer to it as the Willard report and sometimes as the Willard reports. That is not a matter of consequence but I thought it might be useful to indicate that whichever term we use, singular or plural, we are talking about the same material.

The Willard report, as I understand it, is a document prepared either by or under the direction of Dr. J. W. Willard, deputy minister of welfare for Canada, on the question of social security, perhaps social welfare, perhaps income maintenance, and other related questions. It is some time since that report was prepared. We did learn that it was in the process of preparation, and a couple of years ago the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) indicated that consideration was being given to the tabling of that report when it was completed. After a time that tune was changed. We were told that we would not get the Willard report as such but that we would get a white paper based on it. That promise was very definite. Indeed we were told that we would get that white paper before the last session ended. The session ended and we did not get the white paper. We have been told in this session that we are still going to get a white paper, that it will not be the same white paper that we did not get last session but that it will cover some of the same ground.

It is not my purpose in these few remarks to be as provocative as these few sentences I have uttered may suggest. We can save that for other occasions. I should add that what we are most interested in is the legislation that will arise out of this whole study, whether we are talking about the Willard report or about the white paper based thereon. But it does seem to me that a pretty fundamental issue is involved in this motion, and I make an earnest appeal to the government that it reverse its decision of last year and that it agree now to make the Willard report public. This government has had a great deal to say about participatory democracy. It has declared that its aim is to get the people of Canada involved in the decision making process. It has set up Information Canada which is supposed to be established for the purpose of getting information through to the people of this country. In fact, some ministers on the other side of the House have declared openly that they think the stance that has been taken in the past—and which is still taken—that no government document or material is to be produced unless there is a clear case for it should be changed. This means that a great deal of government material never sees the light of day. As I said, there are many ministers who say that the reverse should be the position, namely, that every government document should be made public unless there is a good case for not doing so.

In the field of social security, pensions, welfare and income maintenance we have a subject that is extremely important. I do not deny for a minute that I have some ideas in this field. Some people might even think I have some prejudices that I press time after time. But even though I admit that, I insist that in the decade of the seventies we have got to do some real sorting out of the whole question of income levels and the relationship of social security legislation to our economy as a whole. We have got to take a good, hard look at all of our income programs, whether they apply to income from earnings or income from social security programs.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that if the government has used public funds and has put such an eminent civil servant as Dr. Willard to work on this whole question, the material he has produced should not be withheld from the people of Canada. I know of Dr. Willard's work well enough to know that whether his conclusions agree with mine or not, which after all does not matter, in his report there will be abundant material that would be useful to the parliament and to the people of Canada in grappling with this whole broad question of income levels, income maintenance and social security.

An hon. Member: The guaranteed annual income.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, the guaranteed annual income is something that comes into it and, as I say, I am speaking in a very restrained manner this afternoon because I do not believe that this is the time to get into the particular social security changes that I want to see developed. There are plenty of opportunities to do that, but rather I am basing my case for this motion on the fundamental proposition that here in the Willard Report is a mass of material, a mass of information that I am sure would be useful to the people of Canada, and would be useful to us now, not when it is let out of the archives 25 or 30 years hence. It has been paid for by the people of Canada, and I think we ought to have it.

I have no sympathy for the argument that the government probably has, even though it will not put it forward, that it will embarrass the government if it produces this report and then comes down with legislation that does not go along with what is suggested in the report. Surely we are big enough not to take that approach.

If Dr. Willard's studies were to be valuable they had to be done on a broad basis without just suggesting this or that particular program. There had to be an examination of the whole question of income levels and social security. I am satisfied, as I say because I know of the work of this distinguished civil servant, that the material he has produced is valuable material. I think it is a shame, I think it is irresponsible on the part of the government to say that this is in the private preserve of the members of the cabinet.

I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary, who, I presume, will be responding to me, will realize that in this appeal this afternoon I am refraining from what I might have done—making an appeal for raising the old age security pension, for establishing a guaranteed annual income and what have you. He knows my views perhaps as well as I do myself. But I am approaching the matter in what I think is a fair, almost academic manner.

Here is a mass of material, produced by an eminent civil servant, and paid for by the people of Canada. It is material that relates to a pressing problem facing Canada in the seventies. I do not think it is fair for it to be kept secret, and even though last year the government turned my motion down I hope it will accept it this year and table the Willard Report in parliament.

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to say a word on the motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). He has always been interested in social legislation in Canada, and I know also that his interest is genuine.

However, one must not forget that if the government seeks to progress through normal means, it must have at its service people who can work in peace and quiet, undisturbed by public opinion, in order to better devise progressive programs, especially as far as social security is concerned. I know that all that information is accumulated at the present time so that such a document can be put at the disposal of all in due course.

Mr. Speaker, notice of motion No. 51 deals with the production of reports of studies on social welfare legislation and on proposals concerning income security, prepared by the federal Deputy Minister of National Health and Welfare, or under his direction, since 1968.

That motion covers all the area of social security, namely income security, as well as welfare care and services. In dealing with that motion, I thought I could give a brief outline of some important progress made in the area of social security, and examine some of the main problems we are facing today in that area.

As I just said, the expression "social security" is often used to mean income security programs, as well as those designed to ensure welfare care and services. Through the years, Canada has understood social security in various ways. Although what progress has been made stems from long years of steady evolution, it is only in the last 25 years that the most important legislation has been adopted. Indeed, it is only in that period that the overall system of social security we know today has evolved.

We note three very distinctive stages in the progress of social security in Canada.

The first stops with the World War I. Until that time, social security legislation was almost non existent and progress slow. With the growth and the expansion of the country, new economic and social needs appeared, and it became necessary to supplement private and local social measures with wider measures such as provincial legislation on child welfare, on the provincial ownership or control of institutions for the mentally ill, the retarded, the consumptives, the blind and the deaf-mute, and the act of 1908 on Canadian annuities which marked the start of federal legislation for old age security in Canada.

The second stage stretched from the beginning of World War I to the beginning of World War II in 1939. The progress of social security is closely linked to the rapidly increasing industrialization, the social and economic upheavals of the depression of the 30's, as well as the migration from rural areas to the cities, and the increase in prices. It is this gradual increase in prices which slowly has contributed to the transfer of social security planning from the local and provincial governments to the jurisdiction of the federal government. Several major programs were set up at this time: provincial workmen's compensation boards, allowances to needy mothers, and federal-provincial old age pensions.

The adoption, in 1914, by the Ontario government of legislation to help workers injured on the job was one of the first steps toward a modern social security system. It included, and this is important, the principle of collective responsibility and State insurance. Moreover, it inaugurated a new way of protecting the temporarily or permanently disabled or sick worker, and his family in case he should die at work. The legislation provided for medical assistance and cash allowances over the period of time the employee was disabled and also for the implementation of accident prevention programs. The example thus given in the legislative field was to be followed by other provinces. Then came a second important accomplishment in that field: the introduction of a complete rehabilitation service for disabled workers.

In 1916, the Manitoba legislature passed legislation in order to help needy mothers and their dependents and other provinces followed with similar legislation in following years.

The year 1927 was outstanding as the year of the first important federal move in the income security field, namely the old age pension legislation that was passed then. The scheme provided for federal participation to the cost of provincial pensions granted to people 70 or over, who were declared eligible following a means test taking into account the applicant's income and assets. The same policy was followed in later years with respect to legislation concerning the blind (1937), old age assistance at 65—proclaimed in 1951—and allowances to wholly disabled people, in 1954.

On account of the extensiveness of unemployment during the depression period of the 30's, unemployment assistance measures had to be introduced and one can say that the provinces asked the federal government to assist provincial as well as municipal governments in coping with the high cost of unemployment. It was at that time that the federal government decided to create a national unemployment programme.

The federal unemployment insurance legislation, passed in 1940, provided among other things the establishment of a national unemployment service.

The third stage covers the World War II and post-war periods, the most flourishing era of social security in Canada. It coincided with times of great industrial expansion and economic growth which enabled us to finance the new and more ambitious social measures that became necessary to cope with numerous urgent problems in the social and economic fields.

It was during that stage that we adopted a new concept of social security. It marked the advent of plans granting universal coverage to nearly everyone above or under the age limit and redistributing revenues to the benefit of households with children and adolescents; this was achieved under the family and youth allowance program whereas, on the other hand, the old age security pensions took care of senior citizens.

In 1951, the implementation of a Canadian old-age security plan was becoming one of the most ambitious—and I would say daring—undertakings that Canada had ever devised in the area of income security.

In order to supplement those universal programs, in 1965, the government established the Canada Pension Plan which is a complete program of social security, providing retirement pensions and disability allowances as well as benefits to survivors. Contributions to the plan started in 1966, benefits to survivors in 1968 and disability allowances in 1970. Under the plan, retirement pension related to income, which will come to maturity after a ten-year transitional period, will supplement the uniform standard old-age security plan. Benefits under the Canada Pension Plan will follow wage changes and will increase with consumer prices; old-age security is also controlled, in a way, by consumer prices.

The Canada Pension Plan provides for its application not only in a province where such a plan would have been established. The province of Quebec has in fact set up its own plan, as we know, the Quebec Pension Plan. The two plans have however been coordinated so as to offer throughout Canada a contributory pension plan. Under such a formula, we have tried to cover nearly the whole active population by adopting a compulsory system.

Another way—

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Will the hon. member permit a question? In view of the fact that what the hon. member is giving us reads like the introduction to the Willard Report, I wonder if it would not be simpler just to table the report?

[Translation]

Mr. Isabelle: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to my hon. colleague from Winnipeg North Centre that I have not received that report. In second place, if I can conclude my study on the review of the social security social legislation which Canada passed several years ago we could perhaps reach a consensus and make hon. members admit that the publication of such a report now is unthinkable. Indeed, I have the impression, as I said at the beginning, that all the studies dealing with this matter should be reconsidered, in order to publish a new and complete report. I am as eager as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to read that report, which according to various rumours is extraordinary.

Another approach, Mr. Speaker, to income security for older persons was introduced in 1966 when the guaranteed income supplement for all old age pensioners was established through legislation. Until then, these people, because of their age, received little if anything under the Canada or the Quebec Pension Plan. The legislation providing for a guaranteed income was implemented in January 1967; it guaranteed a minimum income to old age pensioners. The concept of a guaranteed minimum income is a major new development in the field of income security in Canada. Indeed, instead of a means test in terms of the actual income, the use of a means test in order to determine the entitlement to the benefits of this new plan is a departure from the universal coverage connected with Canadian income security schemes.

Great progress has been achieved in the field of health protection for the citizens, through the establishment of a federal plan of health grants in 1948 a national hospital insurance in 1958, a federal health fund in 1966 and the medicare plan in 1968.

Under the Hospital Insurance Act, the Canadian government shares the working expenses connected with hospital care in general hospitals, that is, active treatment hospitals, chronic disease and convalescent hospitals which operate under hospital insurance plans administered by provincial authorities. All provinces participate in the plan which offers a complete range of hospital services available to all residents in each province. Furthermore the federal government shares the expenses of out-patients clinics if the province so desires.

Among the main objectives of Medicare there is the determination to provide to all Canadians the medical services available, regardless of their financial means, thus making early diagnostic and treatment easier.

The federal government agrees to pay 50 per cent of the costs incurred by the participating provinces provided that the medicare plan of each of those provinces meets certain minimum criteria in connection with the extent of the coverage, the universality of the coverage, the portability of benefits and the public administration of the plan. Each provincial plan must meet the following requirements:

a) Be administered as a non-profit public organization under the control of some provincial authority;

b) Provide all necessary medical services, through practising physicians, to every citizen of the province, as insured services available to all under the same conditions, or, in other words, general coverage of medical care;

c) Insure in addition at least 90 per cent of the total number of insurable residents in the province during the first year, and undertake to raise this percentage of insured people to 95 per cent during the three following years;

d) Make the system "portable", that is to say, to give full coverage including all services, after three months' residence in the province, as well as coverage outside the province during the waiting period when a person decides to settle in another province.

Besides, the Medical Care Act allows the federal government to include other services provided by non medical specialists and this, also pursuant to the conditions laid down by the Governor in Council. Up to now, such extra services have been limited to some special techniques used by dental surgeons, within the framework of hospitalization.

Two provinces, British Columbia and Saskatchewan, joined the federal plan on July 1, 1968. Manitoba, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland did so on April 1, 1969, Alberta on July 1, and Ontario on October 1. As of November 1, that is next sunday, the province of Quebec will also be in it. It is foreseen that other provinces will eventually join the plan in 1970.

Mr. Speaker, the federal government has undertaken, under the Canada Assistance Plan, enacted in June 1966, to pay half the cost of medical care provided by the provinces and the municipalities to recipients of assistance payments, these being based on a means test. Other people in need of medical care and not receiving payments can, after their needs have been similarly assessed, receive periodic medical care. The provinces decide on their own how such care is allotted.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I regret to interrupt the Parliamentary Secretary, but I must remind him that his time has expired.

[English]

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, I wish to support this motion that an order of the House do issue for a copy of the Willard report. We are informed that one of the reasons no action has been taken on the veterans affairs report is that the government is waiting for the master plan to be unfolded. This is my main reason for supporting this motion. I do not want the government to have a screen to hide behind, if indeed they are using the Willard report to hide behind. Our veterans, particularly the Hong Kong veterans, should be attended to immediately.

When the Willard report is issued, it will be of great value. I cannot state now that I will support most of the findings in that report because I do not know what it will contain. However, I presume it will attack the problem of poverty in Canada and will no doubt suggest some form of guaranteed income for all Canadians. That is not a partisan priority; I think all members are interested in some form of guaranteed income.

The way in which this problem is attacked is very important. We want to know what an expert in the field, such as Dr. Willard, has to say about it. That is only one of the things to which we look forward. I do not expect we will get the Willard report immediately, even if this motion is unanimously adopted. I suggest we should be making plans right now to deal with the poverty situation in Canada. We should be working on the problem of unemployment today. Young Canadians in particular are upset spiritually and economically. Although Parliament may not be able to do a great deal for them in a spiritual sense, it can help them in an economic sense. I suggest there should be government assistance for these people. They should not be offered handouts. What they need is a challenge to use their youth and to show faith in Canada. They should be offered the opportunity of exploring our resources. They should be paid bonus wages for making a proper survey of the natural resources in our northland.

There should be an income tax incentive for our youth. It is ridiculous to charge young people income tax on the one hand and to give them bursaries or scholarships on the other. The finest way of encouraging them to get a good education is to pay them well for participating in the development of our burgeoning young nation. They should have the opportunity to pay their own way through university. I have no sympathy for those who do not look after themselves and are not able to attend university. By assisting our young people we will be preventing poverty before it can occur. I am not saying that we should abolish many aspects of social justice. I am in favour of most of it.

But let us plan now and not wait until even the Willard report comes out as an excuse for inaction. Let us give them right now an opportunity to take up their responsibility, to use their imagination, their initiative, their energy, and make sure right now, even if it is at considerable expense, that we use and develop resources of our nation as a lodestone to involve these young people. Then they will not be such easy prey for the FLQ or any other crackpot organization to get hold of, when we need each and every one of them for the development of our country. I will close without more ado. This is only a short pep talk I am giving. Hon. members know what is needed as well as I do. I support the motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and I hope it will come to a vote.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I, too, Mr. Speaker, wish to support this motion for the tabling of the Willard report. I listened with interest to the remarks of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Isabelle). I have come to know and admire his qualities during the time he has been chairman of the Health and Welfare Committee. I admire, also, the way in which he outlined the history of our social welfare legislation and spoke of some of the developments which might be expected in the future. However, I should like to have heard a little more about the policy underlying the government's refusal to accept this motion. I hope hon. gentlemen opposite will even now undertake to reconsider this decision before very long.

Several of us have a number of similar motions for the production of papers. I believe the government's refusal to table them is based on an old-fashioned way of looking at things. In the old days, the idea was that experts got hold of papers, documentation and information, and then hung on to them, feeling that this was a source of power or, in any case, that other people were quite unable to extract any value from them for a useful purpose. I do not believe this is any longer the case. Today people are accustomed to getting a great deal of information over radio and television and in other ways; they are becoming more and more involved in forming opinions on policy. I am glad to know that the government has been disposed to help members of the opposition parties in this House to get secretarial assistance, technical assistance and assistance in research so that they may be in a better position to deal with the questions of policy which arise.

To return to the Willard report, for a number of years a good many of us who sit in this House have been deeply concerned about social security issues. We want action to be taken on the basis of the fullest possible understanding. We have been waiting all summer very hopefully to get this report. We do not want to find, when the report is finally tabled, that there is insufficient time in which to study it or to consider all its ramifications. We would like very much to see this report now.

Dr. Willard is a man with wide experience, a man who has done a great deal of work in this field and we should like to have the benefit of hearing his recommendations as soon as possible. I believe the government itself would have everything to gain by making them available to us. There may be reasons why the government does not wish to present this document.

An hon. Member: They are afraid.

Mrs. MacInnis: They may be afraid that in some cases the people who were involved in the research would be embarrassed. I am sure Dr. Willard would not be in the least embarrassed to have his research work made public and discussed publicly. I am sure he would be the first man in this country to want the fullest discussion of his work, not only by members of this House but by the public generally as a means of preparing the ground for the legislation which he has been urging for a long time.

Dr. Willard was one of the first to suggest the need for greater income in the form of a guaranteed income or in some other form. I cannot believe, either, that the government would be embarrassed by this report if it were produced. What has the government to be embarrassed about, unless they do not intend to go along with Dr. Willard's findings and hope that if they withhold it they can bring in some kind of mini War Measures Act, at which time it would be impossible to discuss this issue in a calm atmosphere?

There is another possibility which may underlie the government's reluctance to table this report. It is the snobbery of a lot of scientists, a snobbery which remains in some quarters although most modern scientists are getting away from it; the idea that it is the mark of a real scientist to be able to keep his work and his findings away from the public. This is a very old-fasioned attitude. The Parliamentary Secretary put it in a few words when he said that these people liked to "travailler dans l'ombre et le silence" undisturbed by the "bruit du public", or something like that—I did not take down his exact words. Mind you, Mr. Speaker, I have great sympathy for people who like to work undisturbed by crowds and noise, but in this case the work is finished. The work in l'ombre et le silence est fini, et maintenant c'est le moment d'exposer leur travail au peuple et aux membres de ce Parlement.

People are not stupid. People are able to use these findings. But even if they were stupid and could not use the findings intelligently, let us not lose sight of the fact that it is the people of this country, the taxpayers, who pay to have these studies done. If you have paid your money, whether it is for shoes, food, a house or a report, you have a right to see what you have paid for. I really think this is the most compelling argument in favour of production and against keeping all these things under wraps.

Hon. members will see that a large number of motions for the production of papers are on the Order Paper in my name; two or three dozen, I imagine, and I know it will seem at least twice that number to hon. members on the government side. But I have not placed them on the order paper just for the sake of being cantankerous. I think there is a real principle at stake; it is that members of this House have a right to know the facts and members of the public have a right to know the facts. I, for one, intend to keep on bugging and bothering and making a nuisance of myself along with others in this House until we get satisfaction.

These studies do not belong to the government. The public has paid for them and we, as representatives of the public, have just as much right as those sitting on the other side of the House to know what is contained in these reports. It is the government's right, of course, to decide what to do on the basis of the facts and figures contained in the reports, but as to the contents of the reports we feel we have a right to know. Therefore, I strongly urge the Parliamentary Secretary to reconsider the position he has taken. He is a man of science himself. As a matter of fact, I have heard him argue at various times in favour of getting witnesses before us who could speak on the subject from different angles. Certainly, he showed himself in favour of bringing out the fullest possible information concerning matters before us before we took up our positions.

We have been through that with the inquiry into smoking and with various other inquiries, including abortion and birth control, and I have found that he has been fair and most anxious to facilitate the largest possible number of witnesses with different points of view appearing before the committee. Appearing before the committee means appearing before the public and helping to mould public opinion before there is any question of legislation being introduced. The old-fashioned idea that the law comes first, that the government says "This is it" and then tries to squash the people under it until it is accepted, will not work these days. The new approach is to have the facts discussed and examined first. Anything that cannot stand this kind of public scrutiny will not work today; it is wrong and unworkable because the public insists on having the facts.

Therefore, it is with a great deal of conviction and appreciation that I support this motion for the production of the Willard report. At the same time I ask the government please to reconsider its policy of trying to keep these reports and studies away from the members of the House and the public whom we represent.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the notice of motion standing in the name of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) requests the tabling of the report by Dr. J. W. Willard on social security in Canada. I listened very intently to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) and I am sure that when the government tables its white paper on social security some time during the session, the Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs will have many hours of deliberation on much of the information contained in the Willard report. Doubtless Dr. Willard himself will also appear before the parliamentary committee.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre suggested that we must do some real sorting out of our income security and protection programs. I agree with that. It seems to me that this is exactly what the government has been doing in preparing its white paper which will be presented to Parliament this session. The Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs and the whole House will have a chance to debate this white paper at considerable length.

Dr. Willard's report is an internal document, not the report of a royal commission. Certainly it will have had a most useful bearing upon the preparation of the government's social security white paper which will be presented this session. There are many family income security programs in Canada. One of them which I am sure will be considered in the white paper on social security is the family allowance program. One aspect of social security is the protection given under the system to families with children. Canada has had an income security program providing cost allowances to dependent children since the end of the Second World War. In many respects our program was unique in terms of its structure and it would be interesting to review the development and some of the consequences of this program.

The family allowances program was established in Canada in 1945. Prior to this date, family allowances were studied in Canada by a parliamentary committee of the House of Commons in 1929 and by a social insurance commission in the province of Quebec in 1933; but in neither case were any recommendations made. In 1943, Dr. L. C. Marsh, in his report on "Social Security for Canada" prepared for the advisory committee on reconstruction, recommended a family allowances program for Canada and suggested that this scheme should occupy a key position relative to a general social security system.

The implementation of family allowances in Canada was motivated by many social and economic factors. On the social side, the program was intended, firstly, to recognize the economic burden of families with children as compared with the needs of families without children. Secondly, it was designed to give a greater measure of equality of opportunity to children. Thirdly, it was contended that it would help ensure an adequate income for social insurance and social assistance recipients with children.

On the economic side, the prime consideration was the role which family allowances were expected to play in helping to maintain a high level of employment and income by stabilizing consumer spending on goods and services. Another important economic consideration was that family allowances were seen as a means for adjusting the wage system in Canada to provide for the social responsibilities of the worker with children. The cost of family allowances in the first year of operation was estimated at $245 million. It appears that the present and future costs of this program were carefully considered in relationship to the national income and the ability of the Canadian economy to support these costs. One of the substantial criticisms levelled at family allowances when the program was being considered was that it was too heavy a fiscal burden to be assumed by the federal government. It was argued by some that the federal government could easily support this program provided national income continued to increase.

Another argument in support of the ability to pay was that the economy had managed to support was expenditures at an annual rate of $4 billion, so that the $200 million for family allowances should be easily provided for. Events have since shown that the Canadian economy has experienced a rate of economic growth which not only has been sufficient to finance family allowances but has been adequate enough to finance a comprehensive social security system which has largely developed since the end of the Second World War.

The foregoing have been some of the important considerations which influenced the development and design of the family allowances program. Let us now look at the structure of payments and benefits available to children in Canada. Family allowances is a program which pays benefits to all eligible children in Canada meeting certain minimal conditions. The program of children's allowances consists of: family allowances, which pay benefits to children at the monthly rate of $6 for each child under 10 years of age and $8 for each child aged 10 or over but under 16 years—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has expired. I do now leave the chair, to resume same at eight o'clock p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FEDERAL COURT

MEASURE RESPECTING CONSTITUTION, JURISDICTION, ADMINISTRATION, ETC.

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-172, respecting the federal court of Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before the House commenced private members' hour at five o'clock we had deferred the vote on motions Nos. 1, 2 and 10. With the leave of the House I shall now call motion No. 13.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North) moved:

That Bill C-172 respecting the federal court of Canada, be amended by adding to clause 38 page 22 thereof the following subclause:

"(3) The provisions of section 38 shall apply where persons other than the Crown are involved in any such proceedings".

He said: Your Honour, I have nothing to say on this motion because it merely provides that the provisions of section 38 shall apply where persons other than the Crown are involved. I put forward the argument in this regard this afternoon, so there is nothing more to say. This amendment just brings the matter into line with the earlier discussion.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, we believe that for the reasons we advanced, the amendment is not necessary. We believe it is clear from the first subclause of clause 38 that the clause applies to all matters and proceedings in the court, and subclause 2 was added merely to make it clear that the general rule stated in subclause (1) was binding upon the Crown. In those circumstances, we feel we have covered the matter.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question? All those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Motion No. 13 (Mr. Woolliams) negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will now consider motion No. 15.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

Hon. John. N. Turner (Minister of Justice) moved:

That Bill C-172, an act respecting the federal court of Canada, be amended by (a) striking out line 5 on page 35 and substituting the following:

"the Crown in any proceedings in the court shall be paid to the Receiver"; and

(b) striking out lines 19 to 21 on page 35 and substituting the following:

"Crown in any proceedings in the court"

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Woolliams: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I make this suggestion. The Minister of Justice was good enough to advise us that the reason for some of these amendments was procedural in order to clean up certain matters in the bill. It would expedite matters if he would give an explanation of the purpose of each of the amendments.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) is quite right. I circulated to those interested in the bill the reasons behind motions Nos. 15, 16, 17 and 19. They are technical and are only for the purpose of clarification; they do not involve any change in policy. The purpose behind motion No. 15 is this. Dealing first with the proposed change to subclause 3, it was decided that no special procedure need be established by the Governor in Council for the payment of money, so that these words can be viewed as unnecessary. The law should not require a procedure that is unnecessary. With reference to the change in subclause 1, this is proposed simply to make it clear that the provision deals with proceedings in the federal court only.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 15 (Mr. Turner, Ottawa-Carleton) agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We shall now consider motion No. 16.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice) moved:

That Bill C-172, respecting the federal court of Canada, be amended by striking out line 33 on page 37 and substituting the following:

"applies, to the exclusion of any other right of appeal in respect of a judgment, de-"

He said: Mr. Speaker, here again the purpose of the amendment is for clarification and does not involve any change in substance or principle. The introduction of these new words is in order to clarify the route of appeal that must be taken in respect of a judgment, decision or order given or made after the act comes into force. As the provision is now written, it might be open to the view that two conflicting routes of appeal exist, and such a view could give rise to uncertainty and confusion. The amendment proposed therefore makes it clear that an appeal will lie to the new court of appeal in the first instance and a further appeal will be open to the Supreme Court in accordance with clause 31.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 16 (Mr. Turner, Ottawa-Carleton) agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House will now consider motion No. 17.

That Bill C-172, respecting the federal court of Canada, be amended by (a) striking out line 16 on page 40 and substituting the following:

"Parliament of Canada other than this act, including any such act passed in the third session of the twenty-eighth Parliament"; and

(b) striking out lines 26 to 29 on page 40 and substituting the following:

"Column I of Schedule B to this act are repealed or amended in the manner and to the extent indicated in column II of that schedule."

He said: This amendment would make it clear that all references to the Exchequer Court and the Exchequer Court Act in existing acts and in bills being introduced in this session are amended. This amendment would also delete any reference to Part II of Schedule B.

When the federal court bill was introduced in the last session, it was introduced sufficiently late in the session to enable other bills in the House that contained reference to the Exchequer Court and the Exchequer Court Act to be precisely identified and amended in Part II of Schedule B. Since the federal court bill is being introduced at an earlier stage in this session, it was thought preferable to delete Part II of Schedule B and merely amend all bills introduced in this session by reference. Some of the bills now referred to in Part II of Schedule B require precise amendments. However, those bills have now received royal assent and are more appropriately dealt with in Part I of Schedule B.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 17 (Mr. Turner, Ottawa-Carleton) agreed to.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice) moved:

That Bill C-172, an act respecting the federal court of Canada, be amended by striking out lines 30 to 37 on page 40 and lines 1 to 11 on page 41 and substituting the following:

"65. This act shall come into force on a day to be fixed by proclamation."

He said: Mr. Speaker, clause 65 deals with the coming into force of the bill. Since it is proposed to delete Part II of Schedule B, the references to the coming into force of the acts mentioned in that part may be deleted. Subclause 3 is also deleted, as it deals with the Supreme Court Act amendments which have now received royal assent.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 18 (Mr. Turner, Ottawa-Carleton) agreed to.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice) moved:

—That Schedule B of Bill C-172, an act respecting the federal court of Canada, be amended

(a) by striking out the subheading "Part I" on page 43;

(b) by striking out the amendment to the Canada Elections Act, 1960, c. 39 and substituting the following amendment to the Canada Elections Act, 1969-70, c. 49, on page 43:

| "Canada Elections Act 1969-70, c. 49 | Subsection 3(4) is repealed and the following substituted therefor: "(4) The Chief Electoral Officer shall be paid a salary equal to the salary of a judge of the federal court of Canada, other than the Chief Justice or the Associate Chief Justice of that court, including any additional salary authorized by section 20 of the Judges Act, and is entiled to be paid reasonable travelling and living expenses while absent from his ordinary place of residence in the course of his duties." |

(c) with reference to the amendments to the Canada Shipping Act, as follows:

1. by striking out the first line of item 7 set out in Column II on page 46 and substituting the following:

"7. Subsection 658(1) is re-" ";

2. by adding immediately after item 7 on page 47 the following item:

"8. Subsection 658(2) is repealed."

3. by renumbering items 8 to 10 as items 9 to 11, respectively,

4. by striking out the first line of the renumbered item 10 on page 47 and substituting the following:

"10. Subsections 710(1) and (2) are repealed" ;

5. by striking out the first twelve lines on page 48 and substituting the following:

"discharging of cargoes on board or from that ship, or the trimming of coal on board that ship, and that ship is at any time found in Canadian waters, the Admiralty Court may, upon its being shown by any person applying in accordance with rules of court that prima facie the claim against the owners is a good claim, issue an order for the arrest of the ship."

6. by striking out subsection 710(3) on page 48;

(d) by adding the following item to the amendments to the Customs Act set out on page 52, as item 1 thereof, and by renumbering items 1 to 6 as items 2 to 7, respectively:

"1. Paragraph 45(1)(c) is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(c) any person who entered an appearance in accordance with subsection (2) of section 44, if he has a substantial interest in the appeal and has obtained leave from the court," "

(e) by striking out the renumbered item 7 of the amendments to the Customs Act on page 54 and substituting the following:

"7. Paragraph 45(21)(c) is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(c) "rules" means rules made under the Federal Court Act." "

Federal Court

(f) by striking out item 4 of the amendments to the Divorce Act on page 55 and substituting the following:

"4. Subsection 20(2) is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(2) For the purposes of this section, where any petitions for divorce pending between a husband and wife are removed under subsection (2) of section 5 by direction of the federal court—trial division into that court for adjudication, the proceedings shall be deemed to be taken in the province specified in such direction to be the province with which the husband and wife are or have been most closely associated according to the facts appearing from the petitions." "

(g) by striking out the amendment set out in column II opposite the Excise Tax Act on page 55 and substituting the following:

"Subsection 58(3) is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(3) Where leave to appeal under this section is granted, the appellant shall, within sixty days from the granting of the leave, deposit in the registry of the federal court the sum of one hundred and fifty dollars as security for costs, and thereupon shall set the appeal down for hearing at such time and place as the court may direct, and an officer of the registry shall notify the Tariff Board, the appellant and the other parties to the proceedings under section 57 accordingly." "

"Expropriation Act 1969-70, c. 41

1. Paragraph 2(1) (a) is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(a) "Court" means the federal court of Canada;"

2. Paragraph 43(b) is amended by adding thereto the words "except that upon the coming in to force of the Federal Court Act, the reference shall be construed as a reference to Section 57 of that act;"."

coming into force of the Federal Court Act, the reference shall be construed as a reference to section 57 of that act;"."

(i) by striking out the last twelve lines on page 58 set out in column II, with reference to the Industrial Design and Union Label Act, and substituting the following:

" "24. A certified copy of any order of the court for the making, expunging or varying of any entry in the register of industrial designs, or for adding to or altering any registered industrial design, shall be transmitted to the minister by an officer of the registry of the court, and such register shall thereupon be rectified or altered in conformity with such order, or the purport of the order otherwise duly entered therein, as the case may be." "

(j) by adding thereto, immediately after the amendments to the National Energy Board Act set out on page 61, the following:

"Northern Inland Waters Act 1969-70, c. 66

Section 21 is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"21. (1) An appeal lies from a decision or order of a board to the federal court of appeal upon a question of law, or a question of jurisdiction, upon leave therefor being obtained from that Court on application made within one month after the making of the decision or order sought to be appealed from or within such further time as that court or a judge thereof under special circumstances allows.

(2) No appeal lies after leave therefor has been obtained under subsection (1) unless it is entered in the federal court of appeal within sixty days from the making of the order granting leave to appeal.

(3) Any minute or other record of a board or any document issued by a board in the form of a decision or order shall, if it relates to the issue, renewal, amendment or cancellation of a licence, be deemed for the purposes of section 20 and this section to be a decision or order of the board."

The heading immediately preceding section 26 and section 26 are repealed."

(k) by striking out the reference to "subsection 64(3)" in the list of sections contained in item 1 of the amendments to the Railway Act on page 62; and

He said: Mr. Speaker, the whole of amendment No. 19 relates to amendments to Schedule B. These amendments to Schedule B are proposed as one motion because they are all technical in nature. Most changes are the result of the bill being introduced at a later time, so that amendments to bills that were in the House in the last session and that were set out in Part II of the schedule are now amendments to acts and should be set out in the portion of Schedule B that is now Part I. Part II would be deleted and replaced by the general enacting words referred to in connection with clause 64. A few other amendments to Schedule B are proposed in order to make other technical changes that have been recommended for purposes of consistency or clarification.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister one question which is not pertinent to this amendment but relates to a problem I have. There is a group of acts which set up boards which have appeal procedures, and there is a group of acts which set up boards which do not have appeal procedures. Do all the acts which involve appeal procedures now come under the federal court of appeal?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): All those acts which came under the Exchequer Court now come under the federal court of appeal.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 19 (Mr. Turner, Ottawa-Carleton) agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House will now proceed to the votes which have been deferred in accordance with section 11 of Standing Order 75.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I think we should clarify the situation so that we all know where we stand. As I understand it, my motions Nos. 1, 2 and 10 will be voted on together. The hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), or perhaps someone on his behalf, may speak concerning his amendments. Motions Nos. 1 and 2 set up the concurrent jurisdiction of the trial division and the court of appeal, and motion No. 10 sets up the procedure for that. Motion No. 3 will be voted on separately because it provides that judges move around. Therefore, there will be two votes so far as our amendments are concerned.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I was hoping there would be some way in which a non-lawyer could get into this discussion. On behalf of the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) I am happy to indicate that one vote on amendments Nos. 4, 7 and 9 will be satisfactory.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): What about the vote on motions Nos. 5 and 6?

Mr. Woolliams: They also go together.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Perhaps Your Honour would summarize the situation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As I understand it, the situation is this. It is agreed that motions Nos. 1, 2 and 10 are to be grouped and taken in one division. Motion No. 3 would be taken separately. Motions Nos. 4, 7 and 9 would be grouped and taken in one division. Motions Nos. 5 and 6 would be taken in one division, and motion No. 14 would be voted on separately. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is so ordered. The question is on motions Nos. 1, 2 and 10 (Mr. Woolliams) as follows:

No. 1

That Bill C-172, an act respecting the federal court of Canada, be amended by striking out subclause (d) of clause 2, page 1 thereof, and substituting therefor the following:

"(d) "Court" or "federal court" means

(i) the federal court of Canada, and

(ii) for the province of Ontario, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick or Alberta, the trial division or branch of the Supreme Court of the province,

(iii) for the province of Quebec, the Superior Court of the province,

(iv) for the province of Newfoundland, the Supreme Court of the province,

(v) for the province of British Columbia or Prince Edward Island, the Supreme Court of the province,

(vi) for the province of Manitoba or Saskatchewan, the Court of Queen's Bench for the province, and

(vii) for the Yukon Territory or the Northwest Territories, the Territorial Court thereof;"

No. 2

That Bill C-172, an act respecting the federal court of Canada, be amended by striking out subclause (e) of clause 2, page 1 thereof, and substituting therefor:

"(e) "Court of appeal" or "federal court of appeal" means

(i) that division of the federal court of Canada referred to as the court of appeal or federal court of appeal by this act and

(ii) with respect to an appeal from a court other than the federal court of Canada, the court exercising general appellate jurisdiction with respect to appeals from that court;"

That Bill C-172, an act respecting the federal court of Canada, be amended by adding to clause 28 page 19 thereof the following subclause:

"(7) The notice of appeal and the filing shall follow the rules set out in section 27."

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motions lost. The question now is on motion No. 3 (Mr. Woolliams) as follows:

No 3

That Bill C-172, an act respecting the federal court of Canada, be amended by striking out clause 7 on page 5 thereof and substituting the following:

"7. (1) The rules may provide for a rota of judges to provide for a continuity of judicial availability in any centre where the volume of work or other circumstances make such an arrangement expedient."

(2) No judge shall be required under rules made under subsection (1) to remain in any centre other than the National Capital Region for a period longer than one month, unless it becomes necessary to do so to complete the hearing of a cause or matter, or unless he consents thereto."

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. Motions Nos. 4, 7 and 9 have been approved by order of the House to be taken in one division. The question now is on motions Nos. 4, 7 and 9 (Mr. Brewin) as follows:

No. 4.

That Bill C-172, an act respecting the federal court of Canada, be amended by striking out clause 18.

No. 7.

That Bill C-172, an act respecting the federal court of Canada, be amended by striking out subclause (1) of clause 28 and substituting the following therefor:

"The court of appeal has jurisdiction under this section to hear and determine an application to review and set aside a decision or order made by or in the course of proceedings before a federal board, commission or other tribunal upon the ground that the board, commission or tribunal

(a) failed to observe a principle of natural justice or otherwise acted beyond or refused to exercise its jurisdiction;

(b) erred in law in making its decision or order, whether or not the error appears on the face of the record; or

No. 9.

That Bill C-172, an act respecting the federal court of Canada, be amended by striking out subclause (3) of clause 28 and substituting the following therefor:

"The court of appeal shall have exclusive jurisdiction (a) to use an injunction, writ of certiorari, writ of prohibition, writ of mandamus or writ of quo warranto, or grant declaratory relief, against any federal board, commission or other tribunal; and (b) to hear and determine any application or other proceeding for relief in the nature of relief contemplated by paragraph (a) including any proceeding brought against the Attorney General of Canada, to obtain relief against a federal board, commission or other tribunal;"

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice) moved that Bill C-172, respecting the federal court of Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

An hon. Member: On division.

Motion agreed to.

• (9:10 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time?

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, we are prepared to get it out of the road and to see whether the government really has any effective legislation available.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We agree, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: It is not clear to the Chair what the hon. member is agreeing to.

Mr. Baldwin: Third reading.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

EMERGENCY GOLD MINING ASSISTANCE ACT

AMENDMENT EXTENDING APPLICATION TO JUNE 30, 1973

The House resumed, from Monday, October 26, consideration of the motion of Mr. Greene that Bill C-4, to amend the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, in 1948 the original Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act was passed. It was designed to be a very temporary measure to aid mining communities throughout Canada while they passed from a period of wartime, with its shortage of men and materials, into the new era that was developing in our country, an era when the mining industry, particularly the gold mining industry, found itself in difficulty. I think everyone who participated in the passage of the original act thought that the measure would bring forth other measures of a more permanent nature to solve the problems of the gold mining industry.

The reason the country was so concerned about the gold mining industry was that during the war the industry had lost many of its employees and had had difficulty buying equipment and simple requirements such as hoses, drills, steel, machines and so on. The hope was that the mining industries of Canada would return to their former condition, prior to the war. I am sure many members here are unfamiliar with the role played by the gold mining industry in the years prior to the war. I remember when most of the employment in northern Ontario was in the gold mines. People came from all over Canada to work in the industry. Wages were considerably higher than those of other industries in the country. A salesman in a gold mining community could expect to make money on his sales, something that was almost impossible in other parts of the country.

We believe that we built Toronto. There are those who disagree, but nevertheless we believe that we supplied most of the money that built Toronto, and in turn that there is an obligation by Toronto that has not been met. The fact is that the gold mining industry was a key industry in the late depression years. Without the industry, the depression would have been much more severe in Ontario. Therefore, in 1948 when mines were being closed as a result of economic conditions during the post-war years it was only reasonable that this measure was passed to assist the industry.

I am sure that no one who participated in passing the act in 1948 expected it to stay in existence for longer than three years, which was the original period, but several things happened to make it impossible for the gold mining communities to return to the economic level they had attained prior to the depression. For one thing, the product of the gold mining industry is a national commodity. All newly-mined gold in Canada is sold to the Canadian Mint, and the Canadian government in turn sells that gold, or most of it, to the United States which deposits it in Fort Knox where it becomes part of the international money system of the world.

While the cost of every other commodity has gone up, with the resultant effect this has had on the gold mining industry as on every other industry and individual in Canada, the price of gold itself has not changed. I do not intend to make a speech about the gold standard because a number of Socialist colleagues sitting behind me are not known for their great love of monetary metals. However, I think it is important to ask what role gold plays in our monetary system.

Since 1948 the government of Canada has paid out a subsidy of $281 million to the industry, and this is a period of 22 years. I think everybody who is interested in the payment of subsidies should ask why the Canadian government has been willing to sell gold at $35 an ounce to the U.S. treasury when it costs them a subsidy of $281 million to ensure the continuance of gold mining. We have now reached the stage where today 28 mines employ a total of roughly 7,300 gold miners. We shall be paying $14 million this year by way of subsidy to the industry. If that sum were divided among those employees, it would go a considerable distance toward providing them with an income to stay at home.

No one has decided what relationship gold has to the International Monetary Fund or what value there is in continuing to mine gold. I am sure there are some who do not realize the contribution made by the industry in post-war years which enabled the Canadian treasury to sell gold to the United States in return for U.S. dollars, at a time when this currency was badly needed to develop areas of Canada.

The industry presented a brief to four ministers and members of Parliament last June. They pointed out in their brief that the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act had been responsible for keeping in existence most of the gold mining communities. Not only did it help maintain jobs, but part of the general subsidy sustained long-established communities that were facing serious threats to their continued existence.

I am sure some people ask why we bother to keep these communities in existence. It is very interesting to note that in most of the major mining communities in Canada where gold mining has been subsidized over the last few years, changes have taken place. This would indicate that there will be an end to the type of assistance the federal government has supplied under the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act. I am thinking particularly of the town of Timmins. Originally Timmins was one of the largest gold mining camps in North America. It produced a great deal of gold for the monetary system of North America and it was developed almost entirely around the gold mining industry.

I can remember when one of the mines in Timmins had close to 5,000 employees. Each employee was making 52 cents an hour on the surface, and when I first started, 58 cents an hour working underground. That does not sound like very much money today, but in those days they were among the highest paid employees in the country. Over the years, as other industries have developed in the mining field, gold mining wages have remained notoriously low. Very little of the subsidies has gone directly or proportionately into the wage structure. In Timmins we now have one of the largest copper producers in the country. We also have several large asbestos producers. We also have producers of zinc, lead and base metals. Even the McIntyre Mine, which is known all across the nation and across the world, has been able to develop a copper property inside the old gold-producing area, so that the same facilities are now being used to produce copper and gold.

Changes have taken place and some advantages are enjoyed in the communities because of new methods. This has only been possible as a result of maintaining the gold mine over a period of time in order to keep up the communities vital to any mining taking place in the area. The situation at Kirkland Lake is very similar. In 1957, when I was elected, there were probably nine gold mines in Kirkland Lake but today there are only two. We have added to that mining area a copper producer, an iron producer and in the immediate periphery we have developed several other base metal mines. Although the area is not self-sufficient, it is heading in that direction as the gold mining industry fails.

I have been told by the industry, as certainly the committee that met with them was told, that it is their opinion that in the very near future—in mining, that means in the next five years—world gold production will probably be used solely for industrial purposes with very little gold being made available for monetary purposes. I am not making a financial speech on financial matters, because I certainly am not capable of doing so. Since I have been a member of this House I have found that very few people are capable of making such a speech, and most of them are not here now.

It seems to me there is a relationship between gold and world trading. We have always been very happy to sell wheat to Russia because Russia did not pay us, as some other countries did, with money which we loaned them on a long-term basis to be paid back to us in bits and pieces. Russia paid us in gold bullion. We were very fortunate in this regard because we could accept that gold at $35 an ounce, hold it for a short period of time and then sell it to the United States at a profit of $7 per ounce. Perhaps we should deduct that profit from the subsidies we have paid. This might reduce them to some extent. This side of the gold mining industry is one we have not explored. I am not sure that the Bank of Canada has ever known what to do with gold. I do not know who the bright guy was in the treasury board who a few years ago said we should start hoarding gold and establish our own stockpile. But this paid off; it was a good move. There must be some smart financial people who are not in that field now because the price of gold on the international market is very little higher than $35 an ounce.

As far as the gold mining communities are concerned, they are still selling gold at a fixed price. The price has been fixed for many years. This industry, unlike any other, is not able to take advantage of the marketplace to meet higher costs, higher wages and higher maintenance expenditures. In northern Ontario, particularly in my part of the country, we have tried a number of schemes over the years. I was very pleased to hear the minister say when he introduced this legislation that there were strings attached. He said this is the time for municipalities, labour unions, employers and the gold mining industry itself, as well as the provincial government, to co-operate with the federal government in finding some way of solving the problem that the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act was established to solve. I congratulate him for coming to this conclusion. I came to this conclusion before I came to this House when I was working in the gold mines.

When I first started working in the gold mines, the industry made a good profit on each employee. This good profit has not been made on each employee for a long time. The industry has just got by, but has been doing a service to communities and to itself. If you think in terms of a woman who likes to be kept in the manner to which she has been accustomed, the gold mining industry has been accustomed to a fairly high standard but it is not now being kept in that way. The gold mining communities are willing to participate with the federal government in its attempts to find a solution.

We not only have the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act; we have the incentives program and assistance to northern minerals exploration. The industry is asking that this program be extended to the whole of Canada and that more money be put into the fund so that finances can be provided for exploration in all parts of Canada rather than in the Yukon and Northwest Territories only. Assistance in the form of incentives has been of help, but it has not been directed in the proper way. If it is to be directed to the mid-Canada corridor, where most of the development is taking place, we will obviously require much stronger incentives than we now have. It is all right to hold out a carrot to entice industry, but what industry do we expect to entice? We do not find anyone coming to nibble at the carrot.

We can offer to supply new development companies with services such as water, sewage, fire departments, schools and all the modern facilities of a big city at about one one-hundredth of the cost of these services in our major cities. But it seems to me that if the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) is going to hold out to these communities a carrot in a form other than subsidies, he will require the co-operation of four or five branches of government which would have to decide that certain industries would be better off in these areas than in our major cities.

This was done in England in two ways. First, the industry was told that the undistributed profits of the company could not be used unless the company had a lease, and that it could obtain a lease only if it were prepared to move into the area to which the authorities wanted it to move and, secondly, it would not be granted a building permit in any area other than the one designated. I know this plan did not work 100 per cent. But industries were enticed to go beyond the periphery of London, Coventry and other major points and settle in areas such as the Midlands which had gone out of textile production. Heavy industries were brought into these areas, with some success.

I should like the minister to table the interdepartmental report he received. This was prepared not only by his department but, I understand, by a number of departments. The gold mining industry is not like any other industry; its problems are different. I am not particularly concerned about the 20, 25 or even the 40-year old people in the gold mining industry. We are concerned about the 50 per cent in the industry who are over 50 years of age. They have only a limited educational background and over the years they have been trained only in lode mining.

Although there are other mines in the area, the miners cannot work in them because of the dissimilarity in mining methods. Originally, gold and silver mining was carried out by one or two miners in an isolated area almost entirely on their own initiative, although supervised by others. This situation is not duplicated in other areas of mining. So the gold mining industry is in serious difficulty and, more importantly, the communities that have been built up around the industry are in serious difficulty.

In my opinion, the mid-Canada corridor concept mentioned by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) the other day in this debate is a matter to which the government should give serious consideration. Here we have a plan developed by private initiative, which indicates the immense potential of the mid-Canada corridor. It indicates to the general public that those who invest money in the mid-Canada corridor will reap immense financial benefit. I have absolutely no interest in Mr. Rhomer running a large portion of Canada. I am not the least interested in giving him that large section of Canada, but I think the government should not neglect the study he has made and the information he has given concerning the immense potential of this area. I suggest, as the minister mentioned, that the gold mining communities are centrally and strategically situated in this area. They would be the basis for any organized development in that part of Canada.

The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) indicated that growth centres would be established. If he has pursued that policy very far, the results have missed me because in northeastern Ontario the growth centres obviously will be the established mining communities which have immense quantities of social capital. They have houses and all the amenities of the major cities. In most of these communities there are educational facilities the equal of any in Canada. In my opinion, for the employment factor we have in these communities today the facilities are far in excess of their needs.

I do not think a man who has worked for 30 or 40 years in the gold mining industry can be retrained mentally or even physically. He cannot be retrained to work in an office or even to do factory-type work. Over the years he has worked in that area and has educated his children, who cannot find employment in the area. He has worked in order to build a home for himself and his family. He has roots in the community and has made a contribution to the social capital of the community. Now he is faced with the almost immediate closing of all the gold mines if the provisions of the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act are not continued.

I believe those who say that the subsidy is rather silly will have to come up with an immediate solution to take care of the people who will be displaced almost immediately if emergency gold mining assistance is cut off or curtailed. So I am looking forward to the meetings of the committee to which this bill is to be referred and to hearing the views of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in respect of the bill and his discussions with people in the mining communities concerning a solution to this problem.

The people in the mining communities today are not particularly happy with their record in respect of welfare. Kirkland Lake is the highest welfare area in the province of Ontario, with Timmins a very close second. They are not proud of these statistics or of the fact that the mining communities are dependent upon the federal government for emergency gold mining assistance to enable them to continue in existence—not to make their industry viable, but just to keep them there at all. What we want is an opportunity to expand Kirkland Lake. Every year in the past 30 years Kirkland Lake has lost a small portion of its population. We have reached the goal of the many young people today who say that we should have a population increase of zero. We have done a little better. Because of the facilities we have, the fact that we own our own railway in northern Ontario, the fact that we have good highways and have commodities other than the products of mines, we should with the assistance of the government be able to develop a viable community.

If the government could come up with a well thought-out, well planned and well founded policy that would have hope of success, the people of northern Ontario would owe the government a vote of thanks. The people of the gold mining communities are not happy that they have to come before the public every two or three years and request the continuation of the subsidy for a commodity which most Canadians believe should be left in the ground.

On behalf of the people of these areas, I say that I do not believe they have anything to be ashamed of, because the contribution of the gold mining communities to the economy of Canada and the development of the provinces in which the gold mines are situated is a very great one. Because of this I believe these people deserve support in respect of the passage of emergency gold mining assistance legislation.

If I am at all unhappy about this bill, it is because we have retained the word "emergency" in its title. It seems to me, and it has seemed to me for some time, that anything that goes on for 22 years is no longer an emergency but is a fact of life. I am an optimist, although not sufficiently optimistic to buy gold mining stock; but I am always hoping that the international price of gold will go up.

I am sure that if the world continues in the unsatisfied and unsettled condition which exists in almost every part of the world, there will continue to be people putting gold under their beds and it is possible that the price of gold will go up. I suggest that if it goes up sufficiently high to enable mining communities to exist on their profits, they will be able to pay back to the rest of Canada many times over the contribution people have made to them over the years, because as the situation in the world deteriorates it is my opinion that gold will again become a very valuable international trading commodity.

I hope members of the House will find it easier to support the contribution that will be made under the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act than wait for the day when an increase in the price of gold will make it possible to expand this industry.

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, my remarks concerning this bill will be brief, because although at one time my constituency was a major producer of gold, that is no longer the case. There are many abandoned gold mines throughout the area, but the last of these closed down in the spring of this year and salvage operations are now under way. So I am pleased at the extension of this assistance because in other parts of northern Ontario it will still be important to the communities that depend on this industry. In my constituency it will make no particular difference.

I would now like to speak about the effects on the community when the gold mining industry ceases to exist. It is in this area that the EGMA has failed, because although it gives a great deal of money to the industry, when a mine closes down none of that money benefits the workers or the community in which the industry existed and from which the community profited for a number of years.

Last June, Lakeshore Gold Mines Limited announced the closing of their mine. I am referring to the MacLeod-Mosher mine in Geraldton, Ontario. What has been the effect of the closing of this mine? A very large number of workers found themselves in serious trouble. I do not want to take the time of the House in going through the figures and statistics concerning the number of workers and their ages, but let me summarize briefly. Approximately 52.4 per cent of the remaining work force at MacLeod-Mosher are over 50 years of age. This age factor presents a serious problem to these workers. Who will hire them?

It is a known fact that even though legislation exists to prevent discrimination because of age in employment, nevertheless such discrimination does exist. Companies are very dubious about hiring people over 40 years of age, which is most unjustified and shortsighted. The gold mining industry has not been prepared, and never has been, to accept its responsibilities to the workers and the communities in which they operate. So the social fact is that what we have done with these workers is simply to throw them on the heap. I believe that some kind of assistance should be provided for these people.

The Department of Manpower and Immigration came to Geraldton and did an excellent job in trying to relocate these people. But relocation is not always the answer when people have become involved in a community for many years, when their children have gone to school and grown up in the community, and when they have bought a home and paid for it. In such circumstances they are not always anxious to be relocated. Also, the service industries depend upon these people. So when the Department of Manpower and Immigration promises relocation for those who cannot possibly find jobs or be retrained, this is not always met with great joy and delight in the community.

The only teeth in the new bill is to make the companies which are to receive this assistance promise that they will use the services of the Department of Manpower and Immigration, and that is acceptable. The only problem is that it does not go far enough. That is why I think there should be more teeth in this bill. In order to receive this assistance, the companies should be required to make a further contribution to the workers when the mine closes down.

Of course, the gold mining industry complains that it is not a profitable operation. I find this rather hard to accept. Let us consider a few of the figures in respect of Geraldton. MacLeod-Cockshutt Gold Mines has been operating since 1938. From 1938 to the end of 1966, MacLeod-Cockshutt milled 9.4 million tons of ore for a total value of recovery of $49,150,576.00. In addition to that amount, about $2.9 million came from government subsidies through EGMA. Consolidated Mosher Mines Limited started operations in 1962, and in that very first year they received $385,411.99 through EGMA. From 1962 to 1966, inclusive, the operative income was $12.4 million from bullion recovery, and $2.4 million in EGMA. To put all these figures together, the total value recovery is $61 million plus. In addition, these companies have received during this period $8 million plus in EGMA. This represents a grand total of more than $69 million.

When I go to Geraldton, knowing that this amount of money has been produced from this community, I notice that nothing is left. Very little exists in that community to show for all these fabulous earnings. What we have here is something that northern Ontario has been familiar with for far too long in its history. This is the grab-and-run policy of the mining industry. This grab-and-run approach has to be replaced with something different. It has to be replaced by a policy that puts people and their interests first. The new bill makes some small concession to that, as I have mentioned. It says that the Department of Manpower and Immigration must be involved. That is not enough. Something more is required. More government action is required. There must be a guarantee that a far larger portion of the wealth produced in northern Ontario will remain there to benefit the region and its people who have spent their lives in this region of Canada; otherwise, the potential of growth in this area will not be realized. It is quite evident that if the workers are to be protected and the north is to be developed, government action and intervention are required to ensure that the workers will be given a fair shake.

When you look at the gold mining industry in total, you find some rather interesting figures for the province of Ontario. I am referring to the Ontario Department of Mines Review, 1969. According to this review, last year was the third consecutive year that the Ontario mining industry topped the billion dollar production mark. Gold production for 1969 in Ontario totalled around $45 million. These figures indicate that that industry is a giant among giants and could well afford to accept, and should be made to do so, its responsibilities to the workers and the communities that are and were instrumental in helping the industry make such fabulous earnings.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I strongly feel that this amending bill, besides insisting that the companies become involved with the Department of Manpower and Immigration should include a severance pay clause benefitting workers who can no longer find employment even through the services of this department. Older miners should be allowed to retire in the communities in which they have spent so much of their lives, and some of the profits of the companies should be made available to allow them to retire in an acceptable manner.

Provision should be made for some sort of severance pay and also for some sort of payment to communities which have lost this industry. The aim should be not only to assist the corporations that mine the gold but to assist those workers who invested their lives in the industry, and also the communities surrounding the industry. When a gold mine closes down the community is left, and so are many of the miners, with no assistance provided for them.

Mr. Oza Tétrault (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I notice that the minister is in the chamber and I know he will listen to my remarks. In March of this year I made a speech on the subject of gold mines, especially those in northern Quebec, seeking extension of the subsidy on gold mining which was to be discontinued on December 31, 1970. Now a new approach has been taken and the subsidy will be paid until June, 1973. In my speech in March I emphasized that the municipalities in my constituency were very nervous about the prospects for the mining industry. We did not know whether the government was going to continue the subsidy. This is a situation which has existed since 1948, and every three years people have been sent from my constituency to plead with the government to continue the subsidy.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, representatives of many municipalities have submitted fairly long briefs to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) clearly showing the importance of gold mining in northwestern Quebec.

I appreciate the fact that the cost to the government of subsidizing gold mines is fairly high, since that has amounted to $280 million since 1948. On the other hand, it should not be forgotten that the citizens of the different mining communities pay taxes, unemployment insurance contributions, etc. If the government does the necessary computing, it will find, I am sure, that it is not the loser, since it has surely received millions in direct and indirect taxes.

Some 2,000 gold miners with their families live in northwestern Quebec. Consequently, the closing down of those mines would compel thousands of workers to migrate, and this would increase unemployment as these men are not trained for other work.

Mr. Speaker, experience has shown that retraining is not always possible for workers over 40 and, right now, almost 50 per cent of miners are 45 years old or over and about 75 per cent of them have less than 10 years of schooling.

As the representative of a region where the economy is based mainly on the mining industry, I know full well that Canada could not do without that precious metal currently used in the making of various products. In fact, which of us does not own a gold watch, ring or chain?

The few millions the federal government gives this industry represent a real investment, because the importance of gold in private industry is forever increasing. Indeed, South African engineers say that industry will soon absorb almost all the gold produced.

Moreover, with grants to gold mines, the government is promoting exploration, which is essential. Everything possible should be done to ensure successful results.

Mr. Speaker, let us simply recall the good years when prospecting played an important part in the economy of northwestern Quebec. The Horne mine was discovered there and it is now the Noranda mine, one of the richest copper deposit in Canada.

One thing for sure, the problem we are discussing today will crop up again in 1973. I think that the federal government should endeavour to come up with a final solution to the problem of gold mining assistance. As I said earlier, stopping subsidies would create insurmountable difficulties in various areas of the province, particularly in northwestern Quebec.

One method has been suggested to counteract the closure of gold mines and that is to retrain the miners and grant them allowances enabling them to relocate where they might work at their new trade. Unfortunately such a program would strangle the economy of mining towns where there would be nobody left but children and older people.

Above all, I do not understand why the government is paying the farmers to prevent them from producing wheat and that, on the other hand—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

FISHERIES—INITIATIVES TO OFFSET OVERFISHING BY FOREIGN DRAGGERS

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I feel deeply honoured that we have two eminent environmental experts in our presence this evening in the person of the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis) and in the person of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene). Their presence almost flabbergasts me because I am going to touch on a topic that demands a tremendous amount of expertise and I have only two or three minutes with which to scratch the surface.

It is encouraging to notice that in the area of oceanography, about which I raised this question with the Minister a couple of days ago, Canada by its efforts with Hudson 70 has been making some dramatic moves. It is also encouraging to read a report in the Globe and Mail on trilateral efforts by Canada, the Soviet Union and the United States in the area of research respecting herring resources on Canada's east coast.

I want to open up the question of the whole business of marine resources—not only the renewable resources but others such as oil, minerals and the like. I ask the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry if he could now for a few minutes, and later in a prepared statement, elaborate on Canada's present and future efforts in oceanography and matters to do with marine resources.

I have been reading a great deal of literature on this subject and I notice that most people writing on it today acknowledge that our marine resources are of much more value than our land resources. It startled me to learn that the offshore oil resources and the continental shelf resources as outlined at the 1958 Law of the Sea Conference at Geneva indicate that there may be as much as 300 billion barrels of oil as one type of resource. That is over and above fishing and what can be called renewable resources.

I have been reading a number of articles by eminent people in the field who feel that Canada, among the major marine nations of the world, has to regain lost ground in terms of oceanographic study. Rear Admiral Harry Porter, writing in the March, 1970, edition of Canadian Shipping in an article called "Seapower and Canada," said:

> Today, much effort is being spent on oceanographic research —research into the biological content and chemical and physical properties of the sea. This work has major economic and military significance, and is of particular importance to the fishing industry. Canada carries out a modest program in this field, while the U.S. has a large program. The Russians have a research fleet that, in numbers, is larger than the rest of the world's put together.

I do not know if Rear Admiral Porter knows exactly what he is talking about, but I have checked him out and apparently he is a rather conservative individual, in the non-political sense. There is also an article by Mr. M. J. Colpitts, chief of the marine division of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, which appeared in the June/July, 1970, issue of Sea Harvest. In this he indicates practically the same conclusion and goes on to point out the efforts being made by a number of countries such as the United States with its 1966 Marine Resource and Development Act in order to give all its marine studies, oceanographic studies, and so on, a particular direction, a specific and encompassing contribution. They feel it is very important to be in the vanguard in this area.

Great Britain in 1968 formed the Committee on Marine Technology, and also in 1968 France announced a program to tie together all the efforts they are making in this particular area. The Republic of Germany, which is one of the greatest predators of the fisheries on the east coast of Canada, in 1968 set up the German Commission for Oceanography. Six other nations, including France, constitute what was termed Eurocean. These six nations are trying to work together on oceanographic studies.

I raise the question because yesterday I had an opportunity to talk with a number of people at the United Nations who are expert in the field, regarding the Law of the Sea. The Minister of Fisheries and Forestry has been saying we must have a vehicle for bringing about discussions and negotiations on our marine resources as they pertain to fishing, but these people tell me that they are only now in the stages of setting up a preparatory committee to find out if they will have such a conference, what the agenda will be and who will participate.

They tell me that the United States has assembled such a mass of information and such documentation on the business, and has accumulated ecological studies, mineral rights, territorial rights and so on, that it will take them about two years to find out exactly what the United States has presented. Indeed, they feel it is likely to take about five years before the preparatory work can be carried out for such a study. However, they feel it is physically possible within two years but could take as long as five. I look forward to hearing from the minister about the work he has done in the last few weeks with respect to the Soviet Union and Canada, and I hope he will tell us more about his plan for the east coast of Canada.

It seems that discussions along the lines that have taken place will form the burden of our activity in connection with marine technology. We are concerned about what happened on the west coast, where Canada held discussions in this area. We are so backward in this area that we cannot sit at the same table. It is like me trying to twist arms with Yukon Eric. I wonder if the minister, notwithstanding—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) covered a lot of ground in his seven minutes. I will try and cover part of that ground. First, with regard to oceanography, I do not think Canada needs to hand her head. The hon. member mentioned recent explorations over Georges Bank where Canada, the United States and the U.S.S.R. were diving to see what actually happens on the bottom.

The Russians, with all their men and vessels reached certain conclusions. Canada, renting a little submarine that was built in my riding, went down to the bottom to see what was happening for the first time. They provided data which is really unique, with regard to herring spawn, for example. No one had this information before. It was found out by Canadians in a submarine that cost three-quarters of a million dollars. The Americans have never come close to this in terms of competence in a submarine that was built at a cost of $11 million by Lockheed. Canada got there first. We got there at a fraction of the cost to the Americans. We are doing all right.

I was surprised to hear the hon. member say that we are not spending money on oceanography. Canada has one of the world's best, if not the best, centres of oceanography at Bedford in the Halifax area. We are spending millions of dollars in oceanographic studies in the north Atlantic. We know a lot about fish in that area. We have some of the best people and best equipment. Coordination of our efforts will be better under the new department of environment which will bring together all matters in connection with our waters. I think we will be more effective in the future.

The agreement with the Russians on the west coast was possible as a result of our closing the port of Vancouver. If we had not done that, the Russians would not have come to us. When we closed the port, the Russians pleaded with us to let them have fresh water so that they would not have to travel 4,000 miles to Siberia. We said we would open the port if they got off the continental shelf. They agreed to do so. Perhaps the hon. member is pleading a similar case for the east coast. If so, is he asking us to close St. John's in order to get the Russians to come to us?

Mr. Lundrigan: That's not fair. You know the difference.

Mr. Davis: The hon. member has said that we should do the same on the east coast as we did on the west coast. I believe we have to take a different approach.

Mr. Lundrigan: I did not say any such thing. I will get even tomorrow. That's dirty pool.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. It is my duty to interrupt the minister and inform him that his time has expired.

WAR MEASURES ACT—VANCOUVER POLICE REFUSAL OF PERMISSION TO VIET NAM COMMITTEE TO HOLD MARCH

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) the following question:

As the police in Vancouver have refused permission to the Viet Nam Committee to hold a march and rally this Saturday, despite the fact that such permission has been granted twice a year on a Saturday for the past five years, will the minister inquire into the matter with a view to ascertaining if this refusal is an abuse of the present regulations under the War Measures Act?

[Mr. Davis.]

The minister was not particularly helpful in his reply, merely suggesting that my question ought to be addressed to the Attorney General of British Columbia. I tried hard to get through to Vancouver this morning to find out if there was anything new to report. In the meantime, I was asked if I would discuss this matter on the late show tonight and I agreed. Subsequently I did get through to Vancouver. I was very glad to learn that someone had relented and that permission has now been granted for the march and rally this Saturday in connection with Viet Nam Day in Vancouver.

So far, so good. But I am not satisfied. I have not been able to find out how this result was achieved. I do not know whether it was the police, the engineering department, the city fathers or His Worship the Mayor who brought it about. I discovered there are people in Vancouver who have the idea that despite his public refusal to have anything to do with the administration of the War Measures Act in the provinces, the Minister of Justice himself had a hand in getting this edict reversed.

I believe that having invoked the War Measures Act, the federal government bears the responsibility for seeing that its powers are not abused. I am one member from British Columbia who believes the people of British Columbia would go along with this line of thinking. Since we have the kind of mayor in Vancouver who is likely to be carried away by his own excitement, especially in times like these, it would be reassuring to learn that the federal Minister of Justice has helped to set things right so that the rally could go on this fall as it has gone on every fall for five years.

I trust that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Béchard) will be able to throw some light on the way in which this situation has been resolved. I can assure him we are very glad it has been resolved, and I hope he will be able to claim credit at least in part for the result, here at the federal level.

[Translation]

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the sympathy I feel for the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, I am afraid that my statement tonight will not give her nor her friends of the Viet Nam Committee the satisfaction they were looking for.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to hear that the planned march will take place. However, I would like to inform the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway that the Minister of Justice and the Prime Minister have repeated time and again in this House and elsewhere that the War Measures Act proclaimed on October 16 was to apply only to the specific FLQ problem in Quebec. To the knowledge of the Justice Department, it would seem that Vancouver's Viet Nam Committee does not pursue the same objectives as the FLQ.

On the other hand, the implementation of the regulations provided for in the proclamation of October 16 is under the exclusive jurisdiction of the Attorneys General of the provinces.

Consequently, I think that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway might abide by the answer given yesterday by the Minister of Justice, namely to get in touch with the Attorney General of British Columbia.

In any event, this march will take place, and I cannot say whether this demonstration will be the consequence of the representations made by the Minister of Justice. However, I cannot but repeat that the jurisdiction of the Minister of Justice does not extend as far as that, since this matter is under the jurisdiction of the Attorney General.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

NATIONAL SECURITY

INFORMATION LEADING TO INVOKING OF WAR MEASURES ACT

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the critical atmosphere of doubt and uncertainty created by the conflicting statements of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand), the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien), the Premier of Quebec and the Mayor of Montreal regarding the nature of the threat to the democratically elected government of Quebec and the administration of Montreal which led the government to proclaim the War Measures Act.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South has filed the notice prescribed under Standing Order 26. His proposed motion deals with a matter which is, of course, of extreme importance. Because the application of the War Measures Act has such far-reaching effects on individual freedom, the matter has to be of prime concern to Parliament. This is why very special care must be taken to ensure that all reasonable opportunities for debate must be afforded.

In this regard, it will be noted that the exhaustive and earnest debate which took place in the House following the proclamation of the Act has provided one such opportunity. Since then, debate on the Speech from the Throne has continued and has given hon. members further occasions to consider the many aspects of the matter. In addition, the daily question period has been concerned principally with the situation created by the proclamation of the War Measures Act.

The fact that these opportunities have been provided by ordinary daily procedures does not mean that a special debate might not be held under the terms of Standing Order 26. I suggest to hon. members that while this may be very useful the Chair cannot overlook the provision in the Standing Orders that in a given session there can only be one debate about a particular matter. If we are to have at any time an emergency debate I would think that hon. members would want the Chair to exercise extreme caution in selecting the circumstances under which such debate should be undertaken.

The motion proposed by the hon. member focuses on suggested discrepancies between ministerial statements dealing with the circumstances which have preceded proclamation of the Act. The hon. member charges that these statements have resulted in what he terms a "critical atmosphere of doubt and uncertainty". To my mind, the proposed motion is more in the nature of a censure motion which might well be presented to the House by other procedures.

Standing Order 26 and the practice which has evolved in the application of the Standing Order require that the Chair should take into consideration the probability of the matter being brought before the House within reasonable time by other means. The Minister of Justice has indicated to the House that legislation to be substituted for the regulations under the War Measures Act will be introduced soon. Of course, I cannot commit the minister to any timetable, but my interpretation of an answer he gave earlier this week is that the legislation will be introduced next week.

In the circumstances, and taking into account the relevant procedural requirements set out in Standing Order 26 and in our practice, I must come to the conclusion that the hon. member's motion cannot be put.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

NATIONAL SECURITY

FAILURE TO FIND MURDERERS OF PIERRE LAPORTE AND KIDNAPPERS OF JAMES CROSS—ADDITIONAL MEASURES—RESPONSIBILITY FOR INVESTIGATIONS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Solicitor General whom I thought I saw a moment ago.

Mr. Baldwin: Jumping George.

Mr. Stanfield: I will defer my question until his arrival, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacInnis: Get that roster system working, will you?

Mr. Speaker: I recognize the hon. member for York East.

Mr. Lewis: I think I see the minister arriving, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, as it is now two weeks since the War Measures Act was invoked and there seems to be no report about James Cross, and in view of the fact a spokesman for the Quebec Provincial Police is reported as having said sadly that there is absolutely nothing to report on the investigation and everything is dead quiet, can the minister give any explanation of the lack of success which is very disquieting to the people of Canada, and can he tell the House, perhaps not in a specific way, whether any additional or expanded measures are going to be taken to capture the murderers of Pierre Laporte and the kidnappers of James Cross to secure his liberty?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I assume that in the preamble to the question the Leader of the Opposition takes responsibility for the anonymous spokesman to whom he refers, but I cannot accept that part of the preamble to his question in any way. To begin with, I do not know whether there was such a spokesman or not. I am sorry that the Leader of the Opposition bases his question on that kind of anonymous statement. As to the substance—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Take your soapbox and go.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Muir: We expect more than that from you, George.

Mr. McIlraith: The hon. gentleman is very good at interrupting. If he will be responsible for a few minutes and try to keep this very difficult situation in perspective, I will give him all the information I am able to give at the moment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Muir: We don't need a lecture from you. Try to get down to the basic facts.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Muir: If you were alive this probably wouldn't have happened.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. After the debate we have had we might at this point return to the question period and allow the minister to reply to the question.

Mr. McIlraith: As to the substantive part of the question with regard to what further measures we propose to take, that will have to await the passage of time because I have no measures that we expect to take to announce to the House at the moment. As to the details of why there have been no results it would satisfy, I am sure, the feelings of all of us if the criminal aspect of this matter were brought to a successful and rapid conclusion. I can only remind the hon. Leader of the Opposition that this is a situation which very often develops in criminal investigation work and in pursuing the investigation of criminal activities. We always come to that period in the investigations of criminal acts. In these two particular cases, it is admittedly of very great concern to every Canadian that the solutions come quickly and satisfactorily, but I cannot be in the position of reporting from day to day concerning what leads are being followed and whether they are good or bad because, as hon. members will appreciate, it would cripple the investigative work. Not only that, but many of the leads do in fact turn out to be from improper tips or information.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I am a little at a loss to know what the applause is for. I received the same answer a week ago. I should like to ask the Solicitor General what authority is now accepting responsibility for these investigations relating to James Cross under the War Measures Act and in his capacity as a British diplomat. Is the government of Canada accepting the responsibility?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, the legal responsibility for investigating the criminal acts as such is and must remain primarily that of the Attorney General of the province concerned. In addition to that, because of the nature of the crimes in this matter, the federal authority is going out of its way to support in every way possible and assist those investigations. That has been made clear to the House by the action taken in respect of making the army available when requested and the other steps that have been indicated in this House from time to time. There is in addition an element peculiar to the one kidnapping in this case in that it involves a representative in this country of a foreign government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A foreign government!

Mr. McIlraith: I believe that to be the correct designation of the government of the United Kingdom representative. Perhaps if the former Leader of the Opposition would let the present Leader of the Opposition get the answers—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe we have been sidetracked for a moment and also that the Leader of the Opposition has a supplementary.

An hon. Member: Senior or junior?

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to see that the people on the government side of the House seem to think this is a subject of some frivolity. I sincerely plead with the Solicitor General to exercise his responsibilities on behalf of the Canadian people and particularly to Mr. Cross, however he is described, because, hopefully, he is alive. I plead with the Solicitor General to exercise the responsibility of leadership that the Canadian people expect of him at this time.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Leader of the Opposition for that statement and request. I appreciate it very much and would ask him in return to somehow control his followers when he asks responsible questions and permit me to give the answers which I think his questions deserve, as I have tried to do today and on earlier occasions and I have been cut off by his followers.

Mr. Speaker: Order. There are a number of supplementaries. The hon. member for York South.

WAR MEASURES ACT—ARRESTS, RELEASES, CONTINUING DETENTIONS AND CHARGES

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Solicitor General whether he can give the House the latest information with regard to the number arrested, the number released and the number still in jail. I would also ask him whether he has any information concerning any charges laid.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would be very glad to do so. The total number arrested, as I have it, is 405. The number released is 273 and the number still being held is 132 as of last night. I do not have the figure as to the number charged.

Mr. Lewis: Has anyone yet been charged, and if a formal charge has not yet been laid does the Solicitor General have any information as to charges that are being prepared?

Mr. McIlraith: I do not know whether anyone has in fact been charged as yet. As to charges that are likely to be laid, I do not think it would be appropriate to give such information as I have, and also it is fairly limited at the moment.

APPREHENDED INSURRECTION—REPORTED SUPPLYING OF ADDITIONAL INFORMATION TO LIBERAL MEMBERS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): May I direct a supplementary question to the right hon. Prime Minister arising out of a report of a statement alleged to have been made by the hon. member for Don Valley that he and other members of the Liberal party had information from ministers of the Crown which is not known to the public. Has the Prime Minister or any other minister in his cabinet given information to members of the Liberal party in caucus or otherwise which has not been given to this House?

An hon. Member: Oh, that is a touchy one.

Mr. Muir: The Prime Minister is sulking again.

Mr. Lewis: Just keep quiet a moment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: When hon. members interrupt the Prime Minister they merely give him an excuse to sit down and not answer.

An hon. Member: He will not answer, anyway.

Mr. Lewis: I want to repeat my question and ask the Prime Minister whether members of his party in this House were given information by him or any other minister in his cabinet which has not been given to this House?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, I cannot speak for other ministers. I myself know of no information given to members of this party which I have not given in the House or they have not given in the House. It is conceivable, of course, that some ministers may have said something to members of my party of which I do not know. If I had more details I might be able to track down the suggestions of the hon. member. For my own part, I did deal with this matter in our caucus. I gave to our caucus the same information I have given to the House. In describing the state of confusion in the province of Quebec I may have gone a little further in that secret assembly than I did in the House, but this was done in describing the circumstances which I termed in this House the state of confusion and threats of violence in the province. I may have elaborated on that somewhat.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I please follow that up. Since the Prime Minister's reference to confusion in Quebec and threats of violence is obviously important to other members of the House as well as to the people of Canada, would he now feel free at some appropriate time to inform the House of the points on which he elaborated to members of his party, since for the life of me I cannot see why members of the government party should be privy to information that other members do not have.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The latter part of the hon. member's question is obviously an argument. I am sure he will agree with that.

Mr. Trudeau: I may be able to answer it if you want to consider it as a form of question, Mr. Speaker. In elaborating on what I call confusion in the province of Quebec I gave no secret information to any of our members. What I am telling the House is that I spent a little longer in describing the situation in the province of Quebec which, incidentally, I also described to the leaders of the opposition parties at the private meetings I had with them. But these facts are not secret facts. They are facts that are known by the people of Quebec. They are known by every member of this House from the province of Quebec, whether those members are in our party or in other parties which supported the government's proclamation of the War Measures Act.

WAR MEASURES ACT—PAYMENT BY QUEBEC FOR SERVICES OF ARMED FORCES

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question in view of the statement by the Solicitor General to the effect that the province of Quebec had requested the proclamation of the War Measures Act as well as the services of the Canadian armed forces.

Two days ago, in reply to the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) who was inquiring whether the province of Quebec would have to pay for the services of the armed forces in Quebec, the Prime Minister stated, as reported at page 658 of Hansard, and I quote:

> Mr. Speaker, the matter is a legal one, but if I can reply, I believe the National Defence Act provides that, when a province requests the assistance of the armed forces in the form of civil assistance, the expenses of the operation are borne by that province.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to know precisely what the Prime Minister means when he says that the province must bear the costs.

Last night, the premier of Quebec stated that the federal government had never—

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me that the hon. member is making a speech. He could perhaps ask the second part of his question later as a supplementary and allow the Prime Minister to give an answer to the first part.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, to complete the first part of my question, I shall ask the Prime Minister if it is true that Quebec will have to pay for the use of the armed forces in the province?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question, which enables me to shed some light on the matter. First of all, I will say that the answer given in the House the other day was correct and that it is based on Section 227 of the National Defence Act. I did say that the cost of these services will be paid by the province which asked for the intervention of the armed forces. The reason for this is that when members of the armed forces go to a province at the request of the attorney general of that province, they act as peace officers not as soldiers. Right now they are not in Quebec under the orders of Canada's commander in chief but under those of the provincial authorities and I think that this is what the people of Quebec want, that is to have the initiative of maintaining peace in their own province. The federal government is certainly not going to get involved in this aspect of their business.

Given the foregoing, I must point out that the regulations adopted under this legislation provide that only additional expenditures must be paid by the province which requested the services of the armed forces. In other words, the province will not be required to assume the costs of the soldier's regular pay or rations, only the extra expenses incurred as a result of provincial authorities requesting the members of the armed forces to do this additional work.

If I may continue, Mr. Speaker. It might be better for me to wait for supplementary questions and I hope there will be some.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister if he is aware of the serious objections now being raised in Quebec about our double taxation. In other words, is the Prime Minister in a position to guarantee the people of Quebec that there will not be double taxation and, therefore, injustice regarding the application of Section 227 of the National Defence Act?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I want to tell the hon. member that when the city of Montreal asked the armed forces to intervene last year, the request was made by the Attorney General of the province of Quebec and Quebec authorities paid for the additional work done by the armed forces.

I could further say that whenever armed forces are sent to other provinces to bring assistance in cases of flood, for instance, although the situation is not exactly the same, the federal government usually sends the bill to the provincial authorities concerned.

This being so, Mr. Speaker, it is true that 12 hours after the province of Quebec had asked for the support of the armed forces—and this for the first time in peacetime—the War Measures Act was enforced. It is therefore possible that from thereon, it should be necessary to make other arrangements for that payment. I have already spoken to Premier Bourassa to that effect. I told him that we should settle the matter together. It is not a financial matter between Quebec and us, but we have to know what are the provisions of the legislation and what was the past practice. What happened last week is quite unusual. There is no precedent for this in Canada in peacetime and consequently, we are ready to discuss the matter of settlement with the authorities of the province of Quebec.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[English]

RESPONSIBILITY FOR ADMINISTRATION OF WAR MEASURES ACT REGULATIONS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have listened very carefully to the Prime Minister's answers on this serious matter and I would like him to give serious thought to this question. Would the Prime Minister advise the House why, as his government proclaimed the War Measures Act, the administration of justice under that Act is not being carried out by the federal Department of Justice as it was in the war? Why was this responsibility thrust on the provinces?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, for a very simple reason, Mr. Speaker. The National Defence Act is written in this way: it is at the demand of the Attorney General of a province that the army is brought in as an aid to the civil power. This law has been debated many years ago by Parliament and we did not see any reason, in this particular case, to do anything which was contrary to what was done in the past. On the contrary, we feel that the province of Quebec should be supported in its determination to establish law and order in that province, and when they acted as they did under the National Defence Act we responded in the way in which governments have responded in the past.

Mr. Woolliams: May I ask one further question, Mr. Speaker? Under the War Measures Act there were certain new offences created. In view of the fact that during the war the War Measures Act, following implementation, was administered by the federal Department of Justice, why was the change made in these circumstances and the responsibility thrust on the provinces so that they are taking all the evil and bad effects?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, this is a view of events which does not correspond with ours, of course. The House probably knows that the argument in the province of Quebec is that the federal government is running too much of their own affairs, and we as a government which believes in federalism think, on the contrary, that the province should be running its affairs in all areas which in normal times are under its jurisdiction.

As the hon. member knows, under the Criminal Code the responsibility for administering the Criminal Code is that of the provincial Attorneys General. That is why, in the regulations under the proclamation, we stated that the regulations would be administered by the Attorney General of the province, and it is these regulations which were voted upon by the house and which had the unanimous support of the Conservative party as well as other members of this House.

Mr. Baldwin: Only when we pushed you into bringing in a new Act in 30 days.

KIDNAPPING OF JAMES CROSS—NUMBER OF RCMP ENGAGED IN INVESTIGATIONS—OFFERING OF REWARD

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, arising out of statements made this morning by the Solicitor General I have a couple of questions because of the situation in which Mr. Cross presently finds himself. How many members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are engaged at the moment in active investigations concerning, particularly, the Cross case? Second, in view of the fact that Mr. Cross occupies a quasi-diplomatic position, why is it that the government of Canada has not offered a reward? I brought this up some two weeks ago and it is supported now by Mr. Kelly, a very distinguished retired member of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I shall try to deal with the two questions separately. As to the numbers of RCMP directly and immediately involved, if the hon. member is relating that to the active work of the joint anti-terrorist squad in Montreal, the number is 300. Incidentally, I should add that they are all bilingual. In addition, there are other members of the force in that province doing other individual items of supplementary work—a very large number, probably the same number. In addition, there is a very large number in headquarters who are checking certain records, the kind of thing that has to be checked out by way of identification, finger-prints and so on. In addition, there are others in other parts of the country who from time to time may be checking on individual items or leads affecting one or two of the persons for whom warrants have been issued.

As to the second question on the subject of a reward, that matter has been under continuous consideration for quite some time by the government. A reward has not yet been offered for reasons that were considered carefully and which we thought were good and sufficient cause for not offering a reward at the particular time. The situation at the moment is that no reward has yet been offered.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If the government does not intend to offer a reward, why was the offer of $50,000 put up by certain Toronto businessmen not accepted?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I want to make it very clear that the right hon. gentleman did not listen to my earlier answer to his second question. I made it very clear that the government had not yet offered a reward.

Mr. Diefenbaker: When? How long?

Mr. McIlraith: I suggest that the hon. member is attempting, in placing the supplementary question, to misinterpret that and say that the government has not the intention of offering a reward. I was very careful not to say that and I point out to him that Hansard will substantiate me.

Mr. Diefenbaker: How long, oh Lord, how long?

WAR MEASURES ACT—COST OF PROTECTING CERTAIN MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister.

Could he tell us who will pay the cost of detailing members of the armed forces to protect members of Parliament here in Ottawa or elsewhere?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I did not understand the hon. member's question.

Mr. Godin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to know who will pay the cost of detailing members of the armed forces to protect members of Parliament here in Ottawa or elsewhere.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if members of the armed forces are substituted for RCMP officers, the Solicitor General of Canada may be billed for it by the Department of National Defence. The Solicitor General hopes this will not occur; you see, it is a matter to be settled amongst ourselves.

When troops are substituted for policemen in the province of Quebec, the answer would normally be the one I gave a short while ago.

EARLY REMOVAL OF FREEZE ON NATIONAL DEFENCE BUDGET

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask the Prime Minister, because there is a lot of concern about the cost involved, whether or not the government has given any consideration or had any discussions to date about the removal of the freeze on the Department of National Defence budget earlier than 1973?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question is certainly not urgent. The budget is frozen for three years and we will consider in due course whether in the application of the four priorities established by the federal government in its statement of April, 1969, the defence department should have a higher budget, a lower budget or the same budget.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Joliette has a supplementary question he wants to ask?

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): No, Mr. Speaker, this is not a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: I shall recognize the hon. member in a moment.

[English]

For the moment the Chair will allow a supplementary question to the hon. member for Egmont.

WAR MEASURES ACT—INSTRUCTIONS TO PERSONS RELEASED FROM DETENTION NOT TO EXPRESS VIEWS THEREON

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): I have a question for the Solicitor General, Mr. Speaker. Could the Minister advise the House whether police officials in the province of Quebec have been instructing persons released from detention not to talk to the press or to express any views in regard to their detention in order not to risk further detention? If such advice has been given to people formerly under detention, what is the view of the government and what action will be taken?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I have no information on whether or not the Quebec provincial police have been instructing detained persons as they are released.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members will recognize that we have just about reached the end of the question period. It may be the wish of hon. members that the whole question period this morning be reserved for the very important matters that have been raised, but we will have to consider within a very few moments whether to give an opportunity to hon. members with other questions. For the moment, the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Egmont on a supplementary question.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): For the purpose of clarification, I wonder whether the minister would agree on behalf of the House to investigate this very important question of civil liberties and report back to the House at the first of the week?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I do not quite follow the hon. member as to what civil liberty is involved if someone tells some one else what the regulations under the War Measures Act contain. I am not quite clear as to the inference to be drawn from the question. If the hon. member wants to clarify it—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps this clarification may be arranged between the hon. member and the minister.

SUBSTITUTE LEGISLATION FOR WAR MEASURES ACT REGULATIONS—PROVISION OF BILL TO MEMBERS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Minister of Justice. Have the provincial Attorneys General been shown a draft copy of the government's proposed legislation to replace the War Measures Act? If so, can the Acting Minister of Justice tell the House when Parliament will also be granted this privilege?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the Attorneys General of the provinces have not been shown any such draft bill.

Mr. Woolliams: Just a moment, now. That is not correct.

ALLEGED CENSORSHIP OF CONTENTS OF UNIVERSITY STUDENT NEWSPAPERS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Solicitor General whether he can now answer the question I asked in his absence more than a week ago? I asked whether Royal Canadian Mounted Police officers were censoring university newspapers and, if so, whether they were doing this with the authority of the government?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that I did not answer that question earlier. RCMP officers are not censoring university publications.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I wonder how the minister can square that answer with news reports last week that before the Carleton University newspaper could be published the RCMP—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REFUSAL OF ENTRY TO BANFF SPRINGS HOTEL TO GROUP FROM MORLEY RESERVE—RESOLUTE BAY, USE OF NATIVE LABOUR ON LOCAL PROJECTS

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and tell him how pleased we are to see him back in the House after the many question periods he has missed. Is he in a position now to answer the questions which were posed to him earlier? One was about the Banff Springs Hotel and the other had to do with the Department of Transport and the employment of Indian and Eskimo people in the Territories. Also, while I am on my feet may I ask him whether he has made recommendations to the Prime Minister with respect to the possibility of appointing Indian people to the Senate?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, it would take quite some time to answer the three questions, but I can—

Mr. Speaker: The minister might perhaps answer the first two questions. I do not think that the third one is in order.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, it is true that I was not here two or three times during the question period. Indeed, I was in western Canada and in the Yukon. I met Indians from Saskatchewan and Alberta. I even went to British Columbia—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister might perhaps answer the question now.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, about the incident in Banff, we inquired from the management of the hotel in question. It was a mistake by the manager who thought that these Indians were there as artists. They had signed no contract with the management of the hotel.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Following discussions between the Indians and the Association of Architects, the Indians were allowed to hold their display of native art without being considered professional artists for all that.

With regard to the situation in Resolute Bay, the interpretation mentioned by the hon. member was arrived at by mistake. Yet the matter is quite clear. The Department of Transport itself hires over half the available Eskimos to do specialized work. The company was informed that it should not expect a great many specialized employees because they were already working for the Department of Transport.

There has been no discrimination whatever. The Department of Transport is simply interested in hiring them first.

INDICATION OF TAR AND NICOTINE CONTENT ON CIGARETTE PACKAGES

Mr. Oza Tétrault (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I intended to put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, but in his absence I shall put it to the Prime Minister.

Does the Prime Minister expect the adoption in the near future of measures compelling Canadian cigarette manufacturers to indicate on every package the tar and nicotine content of their products, as has recently been undertaken in United States?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me this question was asked a while ago. I would not want to be unfair to the hon. member, but, if I am mistaken, the minister might answer this question in due time.

WAR MEASURES ACT—ASSOCIATION OF PAUL ROSE WITH PARTI QUÉBÉCOIS

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Solicitor General a question.

In view of the fact that a member of the government said yesterday at the University of Ottawa that Paul Rose, who is now wanted by the police, was the chief organizer of a PQ candidate at the last elections and in view of the fact that this statement may be a blow to the reputation of the Parti Québécois, could the minister tell the House whether this detail appears on Paul Rose's record and, if not, could he report to the House as soon as possible?

[English]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I was not aware of any member of the government being at Ottawa University yesterday and I have no knowledge—

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure whether the question was asked of the Solicitor General. Even if the minister is the one who made the statement outside the House, the question would have to be asked of the Prime Minister.

Perhaps the hon. member could direct his question to the Prime Minister.

Mr. La Salle: Shall I repeat my question, Mr. Speaker? I was asking the minister whether he was in a position to confirm the statement of a government member to University of Ottawa students yesterday to the effect that Paul Rose was chief organizer for a Parti Québécois candidate from the Montreal area during the last provincial elections? Can the minister tell whether Paul Rose's record—

Some hon. Members: Not chief!

Mr. La Salle: All right, not chief. I should like to know whether Paul Rose's record contains this information, since such a statement is in fact detrimental to the Parti Québécois. Could the minister give us some more information on this?

[English]

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I have no knowledge of the alleged statement—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister is replying to the question. I am not sure that we are getting anywhere in trying to elucidate the very important point raised by the hon. member for Joliette.

[Translation]

It might be advisable for the hon. member to secure this information through another channel rather than by asking a question at this stage since we have only two minutes left before the question period ends. The hon. member might ask his question again on Monday.

PRIME INTEREST RATE—ACTION TO BRING ABOUT REDUCTION

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Following his discussions with the presidents of the various chartered banks, who in effect thumbed their noses at his request for a reduction of interest rates, does he plan to take any action by way of legislation or otherwise?

USE OF WAR MEASURES ACT TO CONTROL HALLOWEEN ACTIVITIES

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fears of many parents about incidents tomorrow, on Halloween, especially in Montreal and Ottawa—I except heavily guarded Rockcliffe from Ottawa—can the Prime Minister say whether the government is giving any special consideration to the taking of precautions under the War Measures Act?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have no knowledge of any. I know that local authorities have taken special precautions. If they need our help or if they need the assistance of the army, we will be glad to assist.

Mr. Bell: Perhaps the Solicitor General, who has a very special interest in Ottawa, can give us one of his helpful replies. Will he consider imposing an early curfew at least for Halloween under the War Measures Act?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I understand the concern behind this question. I do not believe it would be an appropriate use of the War Measures Act to declare this kind of curfew in the several cities across Canada on Halloween. However, I should add that the authorities in several municipalities to my knowledge have been quite concerned about this and have taken action within the authority they already have to quieten the activities of very young people on Halloween.

INVESTIGATION OF SHOOTING OF YOUTH NEAR SASKATOON

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Solicitor General. On October 20 the minister said his department was investigating the incident of a 15-year old youth being shot to death by an RCMP officer near Saskatoon. Has the minister completed his investigation? If so, can he inform the House of the results?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I do not have the report yet. The coroner's inquest was to proceed, I believe, on October 26, and the police investigation will not be completed until after the coroner's inquest has been completed. Perhaps it would be better if I were to wait until the two reports are in before making a reply.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

EMERGENCY GOLD MINING ASSISTANCE ACT

AMENDMENT EXTENDING APPLICATION TO JUNE 30, 1973

The House resumed, from Thursday, October 29, consideration of the motion of Mr. Greene that Bill C-4, to amend the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

[Translation]

Mr. Oza Tétrault (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I was saying last night that I do not understand why the government offers western farmers subsidies for not producing wheat while it is considering the possibility of cancelling the subsidies to gold mines.

Mr. Speaker, these subsidies insure employment to many people as well as the development of areas with inexhaustible resources. I believe that before long northwestern Quebec will no longer depend on gold mines, but in the meantime the government should extend its program in order to insure the survival of the communities involved.

In closing I would like to remind the minister that since the government is subsidizing new industries in designated or special areas, it should also subsidize industries already in existence.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I feel some obligation to speak on Bill C-4 because I come from an area to which the provisions of this act apply.

The bill under study is entitled "An Act to amend the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act", and is introduced by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene). It contains the following recommendation:

His Excellency the Governor General has recommended to the House the present measure to amend the Emergency Gold Mining Act to extend its application to June 30, 1973.

This new bill proposes four changes which, on the whole, merely authorize an extension of the assistance to gold mines up to June 30, 1973. The first change provides for an extension of the application of the act until 1973; the second provides for an increase of 25 per cent in assistance.

According to clause 2 of the bill, this Act will not apply to mines that were not in production during the month immediately preceding August 7, 1970.

Mr. Speaker, there may be reasons why certain mines did not produce during the month preceding August 7, 1970. Perhaps they did not because they had not received enough assistance to produce or maintain their operations. The explanatory notes of clause 3 are as follows:

The purpose of this amendment is to require a person who receives any payment under the act to agree to hire any new employees through the facilities of the Department of Manpower and Immigration, to give four months' notice of the closing of his mine to the minister—

This is a rather important clause because, not so long ago, we witnessed the closing of a mine in the area of Cadillac. No notice had then been given and hundreds of workers were laid off without anyone guaranteeing them any security whatsoever or helping them in any way to find other employment.

And mining authorities of the province of Quebec are still faced with the problem of the Cadillac-Molly mine that closed its doors without notice.

I continue quoting the explanatory notes for clause 3:

—and to use the services of the Department of Manpower and Immigration for the purposes of finding employment for the former employees.

Mr. Speaker, the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act adopted in 1948 seeked to help gold mine operators to overcome economic difficulties caused by increased production costs and a stable gold price. The purpose of this legislation was to extend gold mining operations and to give people in communities where their living depends on such operations a chance to gradually adapt themselves to the reduction of financial support.

An amendment to the legislation in 1967, that is 19 years later, extended its enforcement for a 3-year period, that is up to December 31, 1970.

The number of reef mines eligible for assistance provided by the legislation has decreased from 87 in 1948, to 44 in 1960 and to 35 in 1968.

Five reef mines which received financial assistance provided by the legislation put an end to their operations in 1968 and it is expected that four or five others will do the same before the end of 1971, if they do not receive any assistance.

The Wasamac mine No. 2 in the Rouyn-Noranda area remained the only mine in operation in 1968.

The amounts paid to gold mine operators as of March 31, 1969, for the years 1948 to 1968 inclusive amounted to $261,293,250.09 for a production of 57,166,704 ounces of gold sold in accordance with the provisions of the legislation.

The total amount of assistance payable for gold produced and sold during the calendar year 1968 is estimated at $14,300,000. As of March 31, 1969, the total assistance paid for 1968 amounted to $11,430,163.02, that is about 90 per cent of the assistance granted as a result of applications already received. The remainder is payable following an audit of the applicants' books.

I have here a table showing the amounts of assistance paid from 1948 to 1968 to all the gold mines in operation in Canada. I also have a table which shows the production of bullion in Canada from 1948 to 1968. For the year 1968 I can see a production of 2,748,333 ounces of gold.

In northwestern Quebec, the Horne mine was to prove the richest in Canada. This discovery was but the first of several others which helped make this mining area the most important in all the province of Quebec for a good number of years.

From 1922 on, the Noranda Company has developped into a major concern and is today an internationally known company which has the facilities here in Quebec to process copper ore and to manufacture finished products.

The operation of the Horne mine opened the way for the Noranda foundry—the biggest in the world—and later for the Canadian Copper Refiners plant in Montreal East, the most important copper refinery in the world.

Since the first delivery made by the Horne mine to the Noranda foundry, 54 million tons of ore have been extracted from that vein and this ore has produced nearly 1,200,000 tons of copper and 8,300,000 ounces of gold. In 1967 the production of that operation amounted to $24 million. The foundry of the Horne complex has handled since the beginning more than 17 million tons of copper concentrates originating from other Quebec mines and other provinces. In 1967 the deliveries of the foundry amounted to $227 million. The Horne complex, including the mine, the concentrator and the foundry, provides 1,600 jobs and pays each year $9.5 million in salaries.

The Noranda Mines Company reinvested a part of the profits in the exploration of the area in the immediate vicinity of Noranda and of the whole territory of the province. With the years, this company discovered or acquired a participation in several concerns already existing in Quebec, as for example, the Quemont mine which has been working for 20 years a copper-zinc-gold-silver-pyrite deposit. This concern has extracted, since the beginning of its operations, 14 million tons of ore; it employs 350 persons and pays each year $2.5 million in salaries.

The situation is about the same for the Normetal Mining Corporation Ltd., located some 75 miles north of Noranda, near the Ontario border.

The Noranda group, although it is dominant is not the only one active in the area: Lake Dufault Mines Ltd., a branch of Falconbridge, has been operating since 1964 a copper-tin-gold-silver lode which, although of limited size, has contributed more than $75 million to Quebec mineral production. In 1968, metal deliveries reached $13 million and some 250 persons were employed.

Wasamac mines operate two small gold lodes in the Noranda area; one since 1965 and the other since May 1968.

The ore treated at the Noranda foundry is routed to Canadian Copper Refiners in Montreal East, which supply work for 1400 persons, whose salaries total $9,000,000 a year. Moreover, each year, more than $8 million are earmarked for the purchase of materials and supplies. Part of this refinery production supplies in turn the Noranda Copper Mills plant built in Montreal East in 1942. The latter employs 950 people and pays salaries that amount to $6.8 million.

On the other hand, the mining industry in Noranda gave rise on the site to related industries, such as Quebec Iron Foundries, a plant that manufactures crushing agents used mainly during the first phase of ore processing. Quebec Iron Foundries owns a chain of foundries throughout Canada, two of which in Quebec, one in Noranda and the other in Mont-Joli.

Those are but a few examples of the great natural resources potential to be found in our area, that is in northwestern Quebec.

Since the start of the mining industry in the Abitibi area, all levels of government have made tremendous investments to allow newcomers to live as full-fledged citizens or, at least, as close as possible to the minimum standards of the twenteth century.

In the fields of roads, education, hospitalization, social services, technical services, communications, radio, television, and so forth, local structures have been established at considerable expense to allow the Abitibi people to develop normally, at the same speed as the inhabitants of other areas; anyway, directly or indirectly, all levels of government, with the help of the Canadian taxpayers, have footed the bill.

Following such efforts and such investments, we would hate to see some municipalities turn into ghost towns because the industry which was the backbone of their economy, could no longer operate.

There is no need to cavil about the causes of the difficulties encountered by the gold mines as they are well known. Moreover the federal authorities are aware of the problem that is to be faced not only by the operators of the gold mines but also by the civic authorities, municipal councils, school boards and especially the workers directly involved in those operations.

For some years now we have been witnessing something new in our area; owners of gold mines have to close down their operations not because of a depletion of ore but because extracting costs are too high and grants too small. Such conditions are a cause of alarm to us and one must expect, should those conditions remain, that they will get worse to such a point that other industries will have to close down also.

Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Villeneuve (M. Tétrault) was right when he said a while ago that the government subsidizes western wheat producers for not producing any wheat but that it will not subsidize gold production at a time when we would be sure of using or exporting the whole of our gold production, while we are not sure of exporting the whole of our wheat production. Since we are not sure of being able to export our wheat, our farmers are paid for not producing and while we are sure of being able to export the whole of our gold production, payments for producing gold are being refused. To me that is an irresponsible behaviour on the part of the government and that is what my colleague from Villeneuve was pointing out a while ago when he showed the government the foolishness of their protection measures, for not producing wheat on the one hand and not stimulating gold production on the other hand, and yet gold is a product that permits us commercial exchanges with the United States, that are ready to absorb the whole of our gold production.

Mr. Speaker, the government ought to improve greatly the assistance to gold mines. The gold producers are not asking for a handout from the government, on the contrary, they want it to encourage the development of new mines in that area, if only to meet the needs of the people.

It is therefore of vital importance to the cities in our area that the mining industry be maintained and developed.

To all those who live where gold mines are being exploited, as well as to those who from one end of the country to the other supply goods and services, that act has been a source of great benefit in the past; this is no time to repeal it nor to let it stagnate. It must be improved with a view to contributing even more to the economic development of our area, as well as that of north western Quebec and north eastern Ontario.

The act has played an important social role by protecting the family and society where gold mines are being operated. It has helped, up to a point; but it has harmed, for instance, the development of new mines.

Has any thought been given to those citizens who, after working in gold mines for 20, 25 years, and building a little house at Val-d'Or, Malartic, Noranda, Rouyn, Amos, La Sarre, or Normétal, have been forced to go into exile, to work at Thompson in northern Manitoba, or Sudbury, or in other Canadian provinces, and to leave their homes and what they own behind, in the community in which they have lived for so many years?

Mr. Speaker, the government is responsible for this situation. It does not have the right to tolerate, to bring about this situation as it is doing now. As I said, the act played a significant part in protecting the family, but did not fulfil this role to the extent that we could keep our fellow citizens in our area by enabling them, through some assistance, to work at the development of new mines.

Thanks to this act, many workers continued to live decently, when otherwise they would have been forced to go. Some actually had to, because the act was not generous enough. They were able to raise their children, to provide them with adequate food and clothing for 35 or 40 years, whereas had it not been for the act, they might have suffered from poverty, although they are not very rich.

Finally, thanks to that act, an important group of taxpayers—companies or individuals—have kept on paying federal, provincial and municipal taxes. Does the government, by providing assistance to gold mines, not get back a great part of the money through various taxes, hidden or official, in many different ways, such as income taxes, pension plans, etc.? The government turns again to the taxpayers for money. Consumers are left with no purchasing power after all the governments have helped themselves to the workers' pay envelope.

Not only companies' stockholders but also a whole segment of the population live directly or indirectly off the gold mining industry.

The present policy towards laid-off workers under which part of the cost of relocating these people in other mining communities is paid, might of course have adverse effects later on other manufacturing sectors because of a drop in population. It must be realized that most miners being married and having lived in these cities for many years, it is inconceivable to claim that only the head of the family will have to move. This would mean, in short, if 100 miners were to leave, a loss of at least 500 individuals who might, in several cases, fill a position with other industries.

In a short while, other gold mines will have to shut down because of a lack of manpower and of exhorbitant operating costs. A generalisation of this situation would obviously result in a business slump that our cities will not be able to stand. It is easy, therefore, to foresee the slow but certain disappearance of all other industries.

Considering the present needs and the new commitments to be assumed in a changing society which requires more public services, particularly in education, we think it is the right time to adjust the grants to gold mines to enable the management—and that is one of the main objects—to give their employees wage increases similar to those granted in other industrial sectors.

I am urgently asking that those who work in gold mines get the same treatment as those who are employed in other mines or industries. Today, there is an obvious difference between the salaries paid to gold miners and those paid to workers in other industries.

Despite the considerable mechanization which contributed to ease the inflationary pressures on costs through manpower reduction, the mining industry has always depended on a significant human participation. Wages make up from 55 to 60 per cent of production costs. Therefore, the mining industry provides openings for the labour force.

Each dollar of assistance protects about $5 in salary and $2 in supplies obtained from different localities in Canada. That consequence, in human terms, has some importance.

The firms and the men who keep on working, thanks mainly to the act, have paid back to the federal government, in the form of taxes, almost 50 per cent of the aid received, including sales taxes, and even close to 75 per cent, if taxation at all levels of government is taken into account.

On behalf of a worried population who wants to save whatever can still be saved, not only in order to maintain the production of gold, but to promote a certain development of that industry, so that other mines may begin production, if their owners have the certainty that the operation is at least a profitable venture, the urgency of such an act providing for assistance to the operation of gold mines leaves no doubt and is in short a most humanitarian measure.

Additional grants would not be a burden to the Canadian economy unduly because they would come back for the most part, if not completely, to the federal treasury in the form of income taxes, or direct or indirect taxes. Thus by helping industries of prime importance to survive, the prosperity of many areas would be ensured, which would allow to maintain the production of gold.

It is therefore very important that immediate action be taken, if we want not only our cities to survive, but to prosper and expand.

If we want northwestern Quebec to survive, a promising area with an almost unlimited potential but to which governments have not given enough importance, it is necessary to act immediately. Indeed, the population of that area, in 1959, was 51,800, and in 1969, it was 56,000. The gold mines employed 2,360 people in 1959 but only 1,930 in 1969. Their dependants, in 1959, totalled 5,900 and, in 1969, 5,000.

Mr. Speaker, those are the remarks which I wanted to make in connection with gold mines. On behalf of those citizens of northwestern Quebec, and of those of northeastern Ontario, who are in the same situation, I say again that the government can export to the United States the entire gold production of Canada. Indeed, we have a very important trade with that country. And I maintain that the government would then have at least the certainty of keeping its balance of payments with the United States within more reasonable limits than if it put an end to gold production.

On behalf of northwestern Quebec, in the name of the miners and especially of their families, I ask the government to be more generous. I am not begging but I ask the government to give assistance to the development of new gold mines in our region by encouraging prospection and getting the companies to invest there to save from stagnation an important proportion of our population and give our citizens the right to live in their country, Canada, and mainly in this part of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker: If the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. members for describing some very important aspects of the problem to the House and to assure them again that the government and the committee will sincerely take their views into account.

DEUTERIUM OF CANADA ASSISTANCE BILL

AUTHORIZATION OF GRANT TO NOVA SCOTIA TO ASSIST COMPANY

Hon. J. J. Greene (for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion) moved that Bill C-5, to authorize the making of a grant to the province of Nova Scotia for the purpose of providing assistance to Deuterium of Canada Limited, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand), I am pleased to ask the House to approve second reading of this bill. I am sure members in all parts of the House appreciate that the heavy water plant at Glace Bay, Nova Scotia, was planned a number of years ago and was to start production in 1966. It failed to do so because of faults in design. A massive investment by the province of Nova Scotia has been rusting away.

Consequently, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on April 10 of this year announced that the Government of Canada would provide to the government of Nova Scotia the substantial assistance necessary to rehabilitate the plant and get it into production.

• (12:20 p.m.)

The bill now before us will provide part of that assistance. At the time when the project was started, the area development agency approved the company's application for assistance to the maximum of $5 million under the legislation then operative. Under that legislation, the grant would have been paid only when the plant was in production. Moreover, the legislation under which ADA operated sets a termination date. To receive an ADA grant, a plant must be in production by March 31 next year, that is to say, some five months hence. This will not be possible in the case of Deuterium of Canada Limited. Parliament has given the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) authority to grant time extensions, but only when the reasons for delay are beyond the control of the people establishing the plant.

In the Deuterium case, the failure to meet the deadline is due not to external factors but to technical difficulties which clearly must be regarded as the responsibility of the people putting up the plant. Accordingly, the Area Development Incentives Act cannot be used to make the intended $5 million grant.

All members will agree that this has been a difficult and financially burdensome problem for the government of Nova Scotia. That government believes the plant can be rehabilitated, but substantial further expenditures are required. Opposition spokesmen, as recorded in Hansard for April 10 last, welcomed the Prime Minister's announcement of the federal government's intention to help the government of Nova Scotia with these expenditures. We, in this House, all recognize that it would be tragic if the large capital investments already made had to be abandoned. One way to save the government of Nova Scotia from that situation is to pay the $5 million which was expected when the project was launched with the aim of being in production long before the legislative deadline for ADA grants.

Since special legislation would now be required to make this payment, we propose to take the opportunity to ease Nova Scotia's financial problems to a further extent by asking Parliament, through this bill, to authorize payment of the grant in instalments as the rehabilitation of the plant proceeds. This is more advantageous than the normal ADA provision for paying the grant only after production has started.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the substance of this piece of legislation. I believe hon. members on both sides of the House regard it as a necessary contribution to the economy of Cape Breton. On behalf of the minister I, therefore, ask approval of the bill to authorize a grant to the province of Nova Scotia for the purpose of assisting Deuterium of Canada Limited.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Parliamentary Secretary whether he intended to leave the impression that with the passage of this bill only a maximum of $5 million would be available to Deuterium of Canada.

Mr. O'Connell: No, Mr. Speaker; that is not the intention. The role of the Parliament of Canada would be to authorize the payment of this $5 million grant. The Government of Canada has already authorized, as indicated by the Prime Minister on April 10 last, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited to make other financial assistance available, namely, the pre-payment of one year's production being valued at $16.4 million and an increase in the price per pound of heavy water over the lifetime of the contract of approximately $20 million, being roughly $2 per pound. So, those two additional aids have been committed, not through Parliament but through Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, under arrangements with the Province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in presenting the bill to the House on behalf of the minister the Parliamentary Secretary has outlined the difficulties that were experienced at the Glace Bay heavy water plant. I can only add that I believe I speak on behalf of the citizens of that town when I say they are grateful for the fact that the assistance is to be made available and, as the Parliamentary Secretary has indicated, that the Nova Scotia government, which has changed hands in the last couple of days, apparently has expressed to the federal government its intention to rehabilitate this plant. This is a question which has been uppermost in the minds of the citizens of that town and, I might say, the citizens of Cape Breton and Nova Scotia as a whole. The arrangements that have been made concerning the advancement of moneys by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited will certainly be helpful in respect of the first year's production.

I think the question that has been uppermost in the minds of most people for some time concerned the availability of the new management, now under the direction of Mr. R. B. Cameron and Mr. Nazzer, who is considered to be one of the outstanding authorities in this field. Under their direction the rehabilitation of this plant should be successful. We are grateful that this bill has been brought forward at this time so that the rehabilitation will get underway as quickly as possible. Despite statements to the contrary, the Nova Scotia government of Mr. G. I. Smith worked long and faithfully on this case, and under the direction of Mr. Cameron and Mr. Nazzer I believe the situation has been brought to a point where this financial assistance will get this plant off the ground. Under the management of these two very capable persons the rehabilitation will take place. This, of course, will be a great source of aid and comfort to the people of Cape Breton and, as I said, Nova Scotia as a whole.

Again I should like to emphasize that I am delighted to hear the Parliamentary Secretary say that the government of Nova Scotia, which of course today is a Liberal government, has every intention of going through with the rehabilitation of this plant. I express my gratitude.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, many of us have long been concerned about the development of this heavy water plant in Nova Scotia, particularly because, despite the planning done many years ago to ensure that we would have a plant that would produce heavy water, as yet none of that commodity has been produced. Many of us are aware of the difficulties the Maritime Provinces are having. We are aware also of the fact that much of their hope for additional development in that area stems from the production of this plant which would have a number of by-products. Hopefully, this should be the basis for the creation of a totally new industry in this province which would make it much more self-sufficient.

Some of us will be reluctant to pass this bill at this time. I say that because of the events that have taken place in the past few months, particularly the statements made by one of the cabinet ministers in that area who said, in effect, to the Conservative government that until it brought forward new plans that would indicate some hope of success in the development of this plant, the $41 million the federal government had tentatively agreed to provide would not be provided. It is very interesting to note that that cabinet minister now seems to have no objection to the paying of this $5 million grant to the province, partly because of the change in government. I certainly give the government credit when I say that that is not the reason for proceeding with this bill. This bill was prepared originally some time ago. I have checked it and find it to be identical with the bill that was before us much earlier. In fact, it was first dated June 15, 1970, so this bill is not new and it was not brought in because of the change in government.

It is not entirely in keeping with the facts that plans are being formed now in such a way that an assurance can be given this plant will go into operation and will produce heavy water on schedule. If there were evidence of political patronage and the federal government were going to play around with the $5 million for election purposes, I would be opposed to the grant. I am sure, however, the cabinet minister was carried away, and I think, knowing the situation during an election, that his statement was probably not entirely correct.

The previous speaker indicated that the management of the Deuterium plant had changed for the better, and I think that this is something for which we should give credit to General Electric. There seems to be a desire on the part of General Electric to produce a heavy water plant in the Maritimes. It will certainly not be nearly as large as this one. If the Deuterium plant is going to be totally successful, we will have to improve the type of atomic energy reactor we are using rather than use the enrichment type of reactor that is being used in the United States. So, we find that General Electric is co-operative in this regard because the success of its plant will depend on the number of reactors that are sold. Since Canada is selling atomic energy reactors, it is absolutely necessary for us to have the facilities to produce the heavy water which is essential for the atomic reactors that we are attempting to sell.

Therefore, I think we should make a much more formal arrangement with the province of Nova Scotia than we have in the case of the Deuterium plant. I believe that Atomic Energy of Canada is largely responsible for the mess that has developed in that province. I think the advice that has been given by Atomic Energy of Canada has been poor and unresearched. In Ontario, where we have started to use atomic energy for the production of electricity, we have been able in most cases to build small reactors that have been tested before we put money into building large reactors. We have developed to the stage where hydro has now reasonably large reactors operating in the field of electrical production. Atomic Energy of Canada has been able to make a considerable contribution in that field in terms of developing a small pilot reactor, and they have applied their knowledge to a large operational unit. I do not believe this course was followed with regard to the Deuterium plant in Nova Scotia and much of the fault lies, not only with the management hired by Nova Scotia, but also is due to the poor advice and lack of co-operation of Atomic Energy of Canada.

I think the Canadian people have an interest in the plant. If it is not successful, the Canadian people will have to make arrangements for other assistance to be given the Maritimes. It seems to me that now this plant has been developed, and that it has taken almost the total cash assets of Nova Scotia to bring it this far, we as a nation cannot allow it to fail. We will have to supply not only this $41 million by way of assistance, but we will also have to supply a number of other assets to the province of Nova Scotia to make this venture a success. I think that Atomic Energy of Canada must be requested to provide Deuterium with the know-how which they have developed. We should be appreciative of the help of General Electric, but we should also be able to make a contribution to ensure the success of this plant.

[Mr. Peters.]

I think the contribution by Nova Scotia of $140 million to the development of the Deuterium plant is a major contribution by the province toward the development of a totally new industry in the area. Certainly, the change of government is an indication that the people of Nova Scotia are aware of the fact that all the eggs are in one basket, and that the success or failure of the plant will depend entirely on the federal government. I think more contributions will have to be made by the federal government than have been made up to now. We are subsidizing the production of heavy water to the tune of $20 million, and we are making available $16 million in the first year of production. Now, we are making $5 million available for development. It has been estimated that it will cost upward of $20 million to $30 million to enable the plant to produce heavy water. The necessary money will be hard to come by.

I suggest that the federal government go into partnership, through the regional development department, with the Nova Scotia government. The Nova Scotia government will have no pride in having developed this successfully by themselves. Their pride will lie in the ability of this new industry to provide employment in the area. The people will be proud of their contribution toward providing employment and not necessarily in providing the physical facility of Deuterium of Canada. The federal government can contribute by participating directly in the successful development of this plant.

I agree with the previous speaker that the change in management and the hiring of Mr. Cameron and Mr. Nazzer to operate that plant will go a long way toward assuring the federal government that any contribution they make will not be wasted. I think it is unfortunate that an election should have come at this time in Nova Scotia giving rise to a suggestion of patronage by the federal government. There was a suggestion that if one government was not elected there would be no contribution but that if another government was elected a contribution might be made. If the plans for the choice of management and for the plant of Deuterium of Canada had to be submitted to the federal government before this grant could be made, then I suggest that the new government is no more capable than the old one of providing those plans because they have not had the time to develop plans. So, the timing of the contribution by the federal government may be unfortunate in that it gives the appearance that the promise of the federal minister to make a contribution to one government and not another hinged on the outcome of the election.

We have not heard the end of this unfortunate project. It seems to me that more money will be necessary to bring it to a successful conclusion. The Canadian public has an interest in this plant because if it is not successful and we have to go abroad for every atomic reactor that we need, and as well as for heavy water to operate them, then that would indicate other countries which built another form of atomic reactor were right and we were wrong.

The success of the heavy water reactor which we have developed and sold around the world depends, to a large extent, on making this plant a successful operation. It also seems to me that the federal government has been playing around with the type of grants it has been providing, such as ARDA grants, grants matched by production, and grants provided as subsidies to cover the cost of the product. I believe the answer is direct participation by the federal government in the development and management of this plant.

If the federal government makes its contribution in a direct manner then I am sure the new government in Nova Scotia will be as willing, as I presume the previous government was, to enter into partnership with the federal government to make the plant a success. This plant has the potential to end many employment problems in the Cape Breton area, and to solve some of the problems that Ontario and other parts of Canada may experience in the operation of reactors that are demanding heavy water now, not in three or four years from now, and which can only be produced by plants having the capacity of the Deuterium plant in Glace Bay.

Mr. G. W. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, the assistance provided by the federal government to the government of Nova Scotia under this bill was negotiated by the previous provincial government of the Hon. G. I. Smith, and was announced in this House by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on April 10 last. At that time I had an opportunity to make a few remarks on the general problem, and now I am pleased to note that the new Nova Scotia government has confirmed the correctness of the previous decision to proceed to bring the plant into production of heavy water.

There is no doubt about the fact that power sources in Canada are gradually diminishing. They are certainly falling behind projected requirements. New sources of water power are becoming scarcer. The use of coal in the production of power is also diminishing to a considerable extent, and so we must turn to nuclear energy to provide electric power for Canada's future needs. To keep our nuclear power plants operating, it is necessary that heavy water be produced in Canada. The decision to proceed with the establishment of heavy water nuclear plants in Canada was made many years ago because it seemed that Canada had the best source of uranium, and to that time had done the most extensive work undertaken in connection with the peaceful use of atomic power.

I was a member of a special committee of this House, I believe it was in 1960, which examined research in Canada, when the government's decision was discussed by a great many eminent scientists. At the end of very extensive hearings, the decision was confirmed that Canada should continue to develop heavy water nuclear power plants. In the light of this history, the only possibility left is to proceed with this plant at Glace Bay, providing the engineering is successful. I presume that the engineering problems have now been mastered, or that at least the engineers see the possibility of being successful in bringing the plant into production. The sooner that happens the better it will be not only for the people of Cape Breton-East Richmond but also for the whole of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. members who have spoken in this debate for the support which they are giving to the bill. I would say no more, except that I do feel it is important to correct an impression which may have been left unintentionally by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) as to the role and responsibility of Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. I think it is my responsibility to try to set the record straight.

Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. is in no way responsible for and had no role to play at all in the design of the Deuterium of Canada Limited plant.

Mr. Peters: That is the problem.

Mr. O'Connell: Heavy water is a product that can be made commercially. There is no radiation, nor atomic aspects connected with it. It is only confusing to compare it with the role that Atomic Energy of Canada might play in advising on the design of atomic reactors, as was the case in Ontario.

This is not an atomic reactor; it is a heavy water plant. Canadian General Electric is producing it as a product, like any other product. It is just water that is 10 per cent heavier than usual. Therefore, it is not correct to associate Atomic Energy of Canada with the problems that have been experienced. It had nothing to do with the difficulties being faced there. Atomic Energy of Canada only underwrote the sales of heavy water. It had to enter into a contract for that, but the responsibility for production of heavy water was the responsibility of the private company that began the operation, and it became the responsibility of the province when it assumed that responsibility from the private company.

The only other point on which I wish to comment was that raised by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) in connection with the engineering. We want to make it clear in this bill that the grant does not begin to flow to the province until Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, which is acting as the agent of the Government of Canada, is satisfied that there is a remedial program and that the new operator who has been selected for the plant has the powers and responsibilities, and in fact has such a program. Then, this grant will flow in terms of the phases of that program as they go into operation.

• (12:50 p.m.)

The grant is therefore subject to the engineering being satisfactory, in the sense that it would be reviewed by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, but Atomic Energy of Canada would not take responsibility for the engineering or the work itself. That is the responsibility of the owners. The task of the federal government agency, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, is to be satisfied by reviewing the plans that there is a major chance of success but it does not take responsibility for the plans. I think it is important to make that clear, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, could I ask a question of the Parliamentary Secretary? Is it not true that Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, in looking over the plans and recommendations to decide on behalf of Canada whether it has sufficient potential of success, could have supplied that same expertise in helping to develop the management of this plant?

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Speaker, that is a hypothetical question. The role of the owner was to produce heavy water. In terms of the contract, it was not the role of Atomic Energy of Canada to give advice, in fact, advice was not sought. The hon. member will recall that Mr. Jerome Spevack, who was the owner of the process, held it as a secret process. It is not a situation in which one could give advice to the owner; it is a situation in which the contract was let to provide so much water and it was the responsibility of the owner to do that. Other owners are meeting their responsibility but we have to make it clear that the government of Canada, through its agent, does not accept responsibility for the operation of the plant.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): One o'clock.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I think that, under the War Measures Act, when looking at the clock the Minister of Justice can say it is one o'clock!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, why don't we introduce the next item and then call it one o'clock?

Mr. Baldwin: It has already been called.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE OF PUBLIC ACCOUNTS AND REPORT OF AUDITOR GENERAL

Hon. John N. Turner (for the President of the Privy Council) moved that the Public Accounts for the year ended March 31, 1969, and the Auditor General's report thereon, and the evidence adduced by the committee during the past session in relation thereto be referred to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Now, it is one o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The House will resume debate on the motion that was moved by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), for President of the Privy Council and seconded by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin). Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, is the Parliamentary Secretary not to give us his words of wisdom on this very interesting and complicated motion?

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, I thought I would hear first what the House Leader of the party opposite has to contribute.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I can only hope that this degree of moderate wisdom will be, by a process of intellectual osmosis, carried over to those occupying the front benches opposite so that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his colleagues will learn to listen to the opposition before doing some of the stupid things they do.

An hon. Member: You mean, that the opposition do.

Mr. Baldwin: This very interesting motion, Mr. Speaker, gives members of the House an opportunity to deal with several aspects of a matter to which reference has already been made. The motion reads:

> That the Public Accounts for the year ended March 31, 1969, and the Auditor General's Report thereon, and the evidence adduced by the Committee during the past Session in relation thereto be referred to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts.

Of course you, Mr. Speaker, and hon. members of the House, will notice that this motion is included on the Order Paper as a government order. This is the result of a policy which has been announced by this party and, hopefully, supported by my friends who sit on my left, to this effect: that, with regard to the appointment, the operations and the terms of reference of committees generally, we are not prepared to be as free and easy as we have been in the past. This matter was discussed and the issues were referred to in the debate this House embarked upon at the time of the establishment of the joint committee of this House and the other place to deal with the constitution.

At that time, on behalf of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, I made certain points. I did so in a very friendly way and I propose to be reasonably friendly today. The points I made then were these: that we were becoming very concerned about the operation of committees and about the impact they were having on the capacity of this House to function efficiently and properly as a forum wherein could be debated the affairs of the people of Canada. It was because of our experience with committees last year, not only of this House but of the other place—we have a vested interest in the operations of committees in the other place because we are both part of the Parliament of Canada—that we made it quite plain that from that time on, all motions dealing with committees would have to be placed on the order paper; that unanimous consent would not be given; and that it would be essential that there be at least an opportunity for discussion. Pursuant to that policy, the government placed on the order paper the terms of reference for the appointment of a number of committees, including this one.

A short time ago the hon. member for Malpèque (Mr. MacLean) placed on record his consent on behalf of this party to the establishment of some of these committees, but consent was deliberately withheld with respect to this committee so that it would provide a vehicle for discussion and an opportunity to renew the interesting debate we had earlier on this subject.

I might say in passing that there are a number of areas of concern to us. One is the question of cost. We are concerned about the cost because the people of Canada are much concerned about the level of taxation. They want to know what Parliament is doing, what its operations are costing and whether all of them are necessary. It is with this in mind that I called into question the extent to which the joint committee on the constitution was proposing to become involved in a travelling program of a substantial nature in accordance with the power sought, and granted, of journeying from place to place.

I should note in passing that the report filed by the co-chairman of the committee this morning makes provision for travelling all over Canada during a period of 45 days from the time the session began until the end of June. The cost involved here might well be substantial. However, I shall go no further on these lines, because I would not be allowed to do so. I draw attention to this matter, however, because we entered a caveat at the time we first held our discussion on this subject. We made our views known at that time, but no notice has been taken of them. Since then, some interesting information has come to us from the other place, information which emphasizes the desirability of providing means whereby this House would have some degree of control after committees have been appointed on motions of this kind. These things should not be left to the committees themselves or to the good offices of Mr. Speaker, who is sometimes left in a difficult position.

The evidence indicates that well over one million dollars has been disbursed so far with respect to two committees of the other place, and more will yet be spent. As was demonstrated by the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Hales), who spoke in the last debate on this subject, the possible costs of the committee to which I have been referring will be an amount of similar magnitude. For this reason, whenever there is a motion before us to set up a committee, we intend to bring our concern about these matters to the attention of the House. When a million dollars is being spent, I want to know, and my hon. friends want to know, that good value will be obtained for it in the circumstances which prevail today.

Another area of our concern is the extent to which the multiplicity of our committees is reducing the operations of this House to a nullity. I know there are problems. I know we are learning as we go along. The other day I was reading a report brought in by the new leader of the house in the United Kingdom, Mr. Whitelaw. Some members of this House, including the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) had an opportunity on one or two occasions both here and elsewhere to meet members of the United Kingdom Parliament and discuss our experience with them. Members of the British Parliament were very interested in our committee system, but they warned us: do not go too far or too fast or you will remove all the emphasis from the House and place it on the committees, and the chamber of the House of Commons will cease to be what it has been for so long, the central pivot of our democratic system.

I notice that at Westminster they have gone moderately along the path we have taken by setting up specialized committees to deal with some of their work. I intend, later in my remarks, to commend in the highest terms the Public Accounts Committee. It has carried out its function in an admirable and non-partisan way, and what I have said so far does not apply to that body. But I am using this motion as a peg upon which to hang words of warning to the House, and to the government, with respect to possible abuse of the committee system. When I see only a score or so of members in this chamber, as happens every day of the week, I know there are large numbers of our members who are engaged in committee work or engaged on their constituency duties. But I believe it is incumbent upon us to pattern the committee structure on the basis that this House is the central point around which all the activities of Parliament should revolve.

We ought to examine every proposal to set up a committee in the light of this responsibility, and I can assure hon. members that I intend to do this from time to time in the hope that the government will take up the suggestion I made at the time of the last debate on this subject, a suggestion which was echoed by other opposition members. The time has come, in the light of our experience during the past one and a half years, for the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization to review the operations of House committees so as to ensure that the difficulties and the faults which have been so obvious, and to which attention has been drawn time and time again by my hon. friends on this side of the House, are removed and that necessary reforms are introduced. If this is not done, the committee structure will collapse and bring down with it much of the value of debate in this House.

The Parliamentary Secretary (Mr. Jerome) was a valuable member of the special committee which was the forerunner of the present standing committee, so I am sure he would be the first to acknowledge that the system which we introduced was experimental in nature. The stage has now been reached at which many of the reforms we brought in then need to be modified in the light of our experience. I am not suggesting that the committee should meet tomorrow and bring forth changes the following day. I recognize that the committee has other responsibilities. But there is no reason why a sub-committee should not be set up to deal with this matter. One has only to hear the outpourings of dissatisfaction and annoyance coming from private members, particularly those on this side of the House, to realize that something ought to be done by way of improvement. But this warning is by way of a preliminary to what I have to say about the particular committee we are being asked to consider this afternoon.

I am glad to see that the public accounts committee is going to be re-established. This is one committee in which, certainly over the last 12 years—with one exception last year with which I propose to deal later—there has been a sort of non-partisan, objective approach on the part of a number of Members of Parliament operating on behalf not only of their constituents but of all the people of Canada. They have examined, scrutinized and challenged the cost of government under capable leadership and brought to the attention of the people of Canada details of extravagances, aided by the Auditor General and the officials of departments who have appeared before them.

Ever since 1958 when the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), as Prime Minister of the day, re-established the committee as a viable and useful entity with a member of the opposition to chair it—now a member of the other place—the committee has had a very effective and useful life and has done yeoman service for the people of Canada.

For that reason, I am glad to see the committee being set up under terms of reference embracing the report of the Auditor General. I think we are lucky to have a very valuable and useful occupant of that position today. It is interesting to note that there have been, I do not know how many Prime Ministers, 15 or 16—there may be some scholars on the other side who can tell me the exact number we have had—yet there have been only six Auditors General.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The number is 15.

Mr. Baldwin: I thought at times the number might have been 13, but I am now told it is 15. However, there have been only six Auditors General in the same period. The present occupant brings a lot of useful character and knowledge to the position. It is of interest to note that during the last few days he was unanimously recommended for re-appointment as Auditor General of the United Nations, this being his third term. I think this inures to the benefit of Canada and it is of some satisfaction to us to realize the value of the present Auditor General. However, I would not be fulfilling my duty in speaking to the House today if I failed to point out that by an anomaly, as far as salary is concerned, which is one of the matters dealt with in the evidence that the motion asks to be referred back to the committee, the Auditor General receives substantially less than his assistant.

In the area of the accountability of governments for spending, I think this is a shocking condition. I hope that when the committee is appointed under its terms of reference, as I am sure it will be, the committee will turn its attention to this particular problem. Some recommendations were made by the committee. I agree with some, I disagree with others, and I must say that there were some that could only be compared with the perverse verdict of a jury in the face of overwhelming evidence before them. However, as I say, one of the matters that must be dealt with by this committee is this salary situation. The qualifications of the assistant Auditor General are very high, and I have great respect for him personally. Yet under the terms of the statute that now governs the operations of the Auditor General and his office, we find this very ridiculous situation prevailing. When the committee is established, I hope it will see fit to turn its attention to this particular issue.

The need today for this committee in terms of the examination made by the Auditor General is very high. This is an age of bureaucrats, and we have a government of bureaucrats. I am not against bureaucrats; indeed, we have to have them today, though we have a particularly invidious group sitting opposite us who are well schooled in the art of being a bureaucrat. However, it is helpful to know that in order to meet the challenge of bureaucracy it is essential to have a public accounts committee, and that it is essential to have terms of reference that permit the closest and most detailed examination of the operations of the bureaucracy as it is spread throughout each department. This, in turn, involves some examination of the changes made in the functions of the Auditor General. This is one reason that the terms of reference to which I have referred included the requirement, as an integral part of the motion, that the evidence taken before the committee last session should be referred to the present committee.

On this issue, as well as on the issue of the relationship of the committee to the Auditor General and of the Auditor General to the government, it is fascinating to read in the evidence, evidence that is quite relevant in this context, some of the statements that were made by Professor Norman Ward, probably the outstanding and acknowledged authority on the public purse, the operations of the Auditor General and the public accounts committee. His credentials are impeccable. He is objective and non-partisan. He is the author of several books and was apparently the last witness to appear before the committee last session. I should like to put on the record before I conclude some of his evidence in the hope that what Professor Ward said will commend itself to members of this committee. When they come to deal with this particular aspect of the functions and duty of the Auditor General, and to deliberate thereupon, I hope they will not fail to remember what Professor Ward said and to bear it well in mind.

I was speaking about bureaucrats a few moments ago. There is no doubt that there was on the part of government members opposite, and certainly on the part of every member of the administration, a quite obvious and demonstrated attempt to cut down the functions of the Auditor General. The Auditor General had annoyed them: they did not like his criticism. If I ever found an Auditor General who said things that appealed to the government, then I would say he ought to be fired on the spot. No government, particularly one of this size, can fail to make errors of judgment, to over-spend, to be guilty of being improvident, to engage in non-productive payments. That is part of the game and we must expect it. This is why we must have committees, and officials like the Auditor General, who function on behalf of the taxpayer, who will be breathing down the necks of departments, bureaucrats and deputy ministers and saying to them: "Hold on a minute, you are going the wrong way. What are you doing here?" Report must then be made to the House in elaboration of their findings.

When we see, as we saw last year, the then President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald), who has now gone forward into a higher echelon of bureaucracy, and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) making statements that constitute an obvious attempt to relegate the Auditor General to the performance of functions that were subservient to those he had exercised before, it must serve as a warning to all of us, particularly to members of the opposition. This will not be tolerated.

Let me put on the record at this stage the statement that if this government attempts to bring in new legislation of a kind envisaged by the former President of the Privy Council and eagerly supported by some of his colleagues, this legislation is going to run into the toughest kind of opposition there is from members on this side of the House. I give that warning to the government right now. Having said that, I leave my few remarks in, I hope, a spirit of amity and friendliness. I hope the hon. members who serve on the committee will take these remarks very much to heart.

I have before me the minutes of proceedings and evidence of the committee on public accounts, number 33 dated June 16, 1970. These proceedings took place just before the committee brought down its recommendations to the House. This is part of the evidence that is now being sought to be placed before the new committee. Let me read some of the things Professor Ward said. I should love to put it all on the record, but it will be on the record of the committee.

Mr. Deachman: Mr. Speaker, that is quite a lengthy report and I wonder if the page number could be given just to assist the members?

Mr. Baldwin: Yes, I had intended to give the page number, Mr. Speaker. I hope the hon. member will take this report home, read it and cogitate on it over the weekend. I read from page 33:6 from Professor Ward's evidence:

> I am aware, and I think it is to the eternal credit of the present government, that for the first time in Canadian history the opposition parties have been given small sums of money—

I emphasize that word "small". He continues:

> —for research purposes as parties. I have not yet been able to find out, particularly because I have not had time, how they are using the money and what for, but I hope to. This is, I think, an enormously important step in the right direction, but when you consider that the total amount of money made available to the three opposition parties is around $225,000, as I remember, and the government on its side has behind it a civil service of over 300,000 people altogether, counting the Crown corporations, spending a budget which is now running into the dozens of billions of dollars, $225,000 or so for the opposition does not even qualify as a drop in the bucket as ammunition with which to prepare cases to criticize the government.

Those are Professor Ward's views, not necessarily mine, but I think the comment he makes is interesting. On the next page, 33:7, which is the seventh page of the 33rd volume, the professor is reported as follows:

> I am disallowing here any kind of partisan interest—

I could use those words myself of Professor Ward; I am not disallowing any kind of partisan interest. He continues:

> —from the point of view of a particular party, but it is a fact of life in Canada that for the past half century for all but 12 years, Canada has been governed by a party which never bestows its leadership on a seasoned parliamentary veteran. Without exception every single leader of the Liberals since Sir Wilfrid Laurier have been chosen in convention. Every one of them has beaten far more experienced parliamentarians for the leadership. This, I think, is probably one of the secrets of the party's success, perhaps—

That word "perhaps" is the professor's word. To quote again:

> —but it has as far as Parliament is concerned the rather curious by-product that for prolonged periods the Prime Minister of Canada is not himself a man experienced in sitting on committees such as this. I have not had time to check out all the committees in existence during all the years of the four people I have mentioned; Mr. King, Mr. St. Laurent, Mr. Pearson, and now Mr. Trudeau. To the best of my recollection I have never encountered any of their names in the proceedings of a Parliamentary committee. They have had no experience.

I could add that there are one or two of them that have not had too much experience in Parliament either, Mr. Speaker, and certainly their records since they have become leaders show it. The professor goes on to say and I quote from the same page:

> This again enormously enhances the importance of this Committee and the Auditor General who is Parliament's servant or particularly working with this committee. This is I think a uniquely Canadian phenomenon. I do not know of any other free country in which the leadership of a major party is in power most of the time is given not occasionally or even regularly, but all the time to somebody in effect who opted from outside. That, I think, is again one of the fundamental considerations that has to underline any consideration of the role of Auditor General in Canada, that he occupies a most peculiar position through no fault of his or anybody else's. The facts of Canadian party life just have worked out that way now for half a century.

I do hope the committee that is appointed for this year will give more serious consideration to those statements. There are so very few really effective and potent weapons available to an opposition party under the kind of system and statutes we have, which permit the government the right to operate in so many cases by Order in Council. To meet the vast forces of government and its supporting bureaucracy, we must have an official like the Auditor General working with a reinforced committee such as the Public Accounts committee.

Finally I have two more quotations from page 9 of the same issue. The first one reads:

This raises the question—which I presume will come up again later but I want to make sure that I put it on the record now because I wish to say something about it—whether or not the Auditor General should simply confine himself to commenting on the legality or otherwise of expenditures or whether he should get himself involved in commenting on what is in effect policy from the point of view of the government.

I pause here because this is the crux of the argument which has developed between the cabinet on the one side and the Auditor General on the other. I am convinced that the two ministers whose names I used, or whose positions are used, did not speak out as they did in criticism of the Auditor General and his role without having behind them the full support of the government and the Prime Minister.

I think the words of Professor Ward must be engraved on the hearts of the members of the committee when they come to examine this problem. What are the functions of the Auditor General? Must he be confined within strict terms, as has been suggested by ministers on the other side, or should he have a degree of freedom which permits him an opportunity to go into other matters, which I submit is so essential? Let me continue with what Professor Ward said:

My general position on this, which I really have held for many years, is that there is no conceivable way in which you could limit an Auditor General to commenting only on the legality of expenditures—none. The reason I say that is that it is his duty, clearly, to report what he considers are extravagant or improvident expenditures.

I pause here to say what a great field he has when he serves with the gentlemen who sit opposite us. Then, to continue:

But they could be perfectly legal. I could be paid by the government $1,000 for $1,000 worth of work quite legally, but under the same kind of contract I could be paid $5,000 for doing $1,000 worth of work and it would be perfectly legal—and I think, it would be the duty of the Auditor General to point out that I had in fact been paid five times as much as the job is worth.

Just as simple as that in those clearly expressed terms, Professor Ward has pointed out the nub of the problem regarding the conflict between the government and the Auditor General. When we see the committee bring in recommendations, as they obviously attempted to do, which would take the government side, then I think probably—I will not say there was a hatchet job because I think I would not be right in saying that—it is time to take stock. There were a few times when the committee obviously attempted, through government members, to carry forward the views of the then President of the Privy Council and to incorporate them in the terms of the recommendations of the committee.

I would like to see the committee review this, too, and the other evidence which was given last June. By reviewing and changing some of those recommendations in light of the clear warning uttered by Professor Ward, they would show themselves to be honourable and distinguished Members of Parliament.

• (2:40 p.m.)

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. member a question.

Mr. Baldwin: Delighted.

Mr. Cafik: I am a member of the Public Accounts Committee, and I gather the hon. member is referring to the recommendation in respect of a new Auditor General's act. I may be wrong, and if so the hon. gentleman will correct me, but as I recall it those recommendations in the committee were passed unanimously by all members on the committee. I suggest that if there is any criticism of those recommendations, that criticism I presume would apply to the members of his party as well as to other members.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I have never been an obsequious member of this House. If members on our side of the House in my judgment are mistaken, I would have no hesitation in saying so. This is a policy I would recommend to members opposite. It would be much better if members on the other side would stand up and criticize the government, especially when there is so much to criticize.

The quotation continues:

I hasten to add that this never has happened. But it could happen perfectly legally and it would certainly, I think in a case like that, still be the duty of the Auditor General, whether it was legal or not, to comment on what seemed to him to be an improvident expenditure.

I think this is extremely important, Mr. Speaker. I am just about finished. I hope I have excited other hon. members to get up and defend themselves and contribute to this very important debate which I believe is of great consequence to the people of this country who are saddled with a heavy burden of taxes which will become even greater if the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) has his way. Then, there is this paragraph on page 10:

I do not really know of any way either in which you can prevent the Auditor General from straying over, sometimes at least, even inadvertently, into the field of policy, because policy nowadays is not that clear-cut a thing that you can distinguish the purely financial aspect of policy from policy itself. One only has to consider for example how many of our major expenditures of government today—this again is very unlike the way things were in 1878—are substantive expenditures, like the family allowance, in which the actual administrative cost is a tiny fraction of the total cost of the program. The Auditor General, if he confines himself solely to the purely legal administrative aspects of running this enormous program, in a case like this is simply going to have to neglect things that conceivably might be worth looking at because they are involved in some kind of policy. I will return to that point later.

Then, finally:

But my general view of this is that the Auditor General really cannot be narrowly confined to a purely legalistic view of his job if he is to do his job properly. Of course he is going to make mistakes—he is human, and of course he is going to aggravate the government—they are human.

I sometimes doubt that statement.

And he should make mistakes and aggravate the government rather than overlook things that ought to be drawn to the public's attention. It is far better that he should be free to make mistakes in the same way that the Supreme Court judge is free to make mistakes than that he should be hampered so that he is afraid to make mistakes.

With that, I shall leave my comments before the House. I say again that in the kind of world in which we live, and with the kind of governments we have in this country and in the United States where the Congressional elections will be held next Tuesday, one of the major issues is the very issue of government expenditures and taxes which are reflected in the cost of living. Any attempt to curtail or limit the powers and functions of the Auditor General or of the Public Accounts Committee would be a great mistake. I urge the committee when it commences its deliberations to bear these things in mind.

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to use any further time of the House on this somewhat routine measure but, as we had anticipated, some of the things the House Leader of the Opposition has said certainly require some comment from this side of the House. I am only too happy to make those comments. I assume I am eligible to reply to the hon. member because, not having risen as high as the ministry and not being in the civil service, I am not subject to that very wide designation of his of being a bureaucrat, which seems to cover just about every one who has views opposite to his. In any event, I think the very subject of this motion, to refer certain matters to the Public Accounts Committee, leads us to a consideration of some of the fine work that was undertaken by this committee during the last session. I think it is significant that co-operation between the parties in this House has led to this vehicle being on the order paper.

We learned that the hon. member had some comments he wished to make in this connection and, accordingly, this matter was held over until this time in order to give him an opportunity to deliver the comments he has delivered today. We are prepared to have these matters discussed because the committee system is an extremely important part of the operations of this Parliament so far as the government is concerned. However, I think the references made by the hon. member to the Auditor General's Act are entirely unfair. I think anyone would agree that last year, regardless of what I think was a very unnecessary political attitude on the part of many members of the House—the most unfortunate atmosphere possible—the whole subject was considered. I think the hon. member will agree with me that, despite the political connotations, legitimate progress was made in respect of that very important statute. I see that the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Hales), who was chairman of the committee at that time is here, as is the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Bigg). I am sure they and other members who were members of the committee will agree with me that, notwithstanding the extremely difficult and strained atmosphere, the work of the committee progressed very well and that, in fact, there were great accomplishments.

Therefore, I take great issue with the hon. member's reference to this subject because it would seem to be a condemnation of the work of the committee. I take it as the very strongest commendation that even under such difficult conditions the committee made great progress and accomplished many things in much less time than would have been possible under the former rules of the House.

Before leaving this subject, I should like to refer to one other matter pertaining to the same Public Accounts Committee. I refer to the time when very considerable tariff concessions to the Ford Motor Company were debated by members opposite.

Mr. Woolliams: You gave them $10 million.

Mr. Jerome: The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) is again off the subject. This matter was extremely political, in view of the stand taken by members opposite, when it was discussed by the Public Accounts Committee. I am sure members opposite will agree that the kind of investigation that was carried out in the committee would not have been possible if the matter had been dealt with by the Committee of the Whole House. These tariff concessions were discussed with the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) and members of his staff, as well as senior representatives from the Department of National Revenue and the Department of Finance. If any question involving tariffs comes up in the course of the debate on estimates or in the course of the debate of a subject that is before the Committee of the Whole House, a minister has the opportunity from time to time to evade questions by saying that that area of questioning should fall to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray) or else to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson). That kind of escape is possible here in the House. But the kind of examination that took place in the Finance Committee would not permit that type of escape. The resulting detailed examination that was available through the Committee procedure gave all hon. members on both sides of the House, an unparalleled opportunity to examine that important question in detail. So, I think that the importance of the committee system is self evident. In addition, one should remember that last year some 1,200 hours were spent collectively by the standing committees on the examination of legislation, in fact about twice as much time as was spent by this chamber.

So, there is certainly a very clear case for the work that is being done in the standing committees and for the entire committee system. When hon. members opposite question the cost, I think it is fair to examine these things because it is not just the cost but the value received that has to be considered. When one sees the number of hours spent in detailed clause by clause examination of legislation and of departmental estimates, in the sort of detail that is possible in the committees but not possible here, one realizes the importance of the committee system. We are in conflict at all times on at least two counts: first, this House is a debating society in the true sense of the word and second, it is important that everyone has time to speak in this chamber on subjects of their choice.

At the same time, we already sit in this chamber as many hours in the day and days in the year as it is possible. The schedule to which we adhere at present cannot be stretched much more. This means that we are in conflict in so far as efficiency is concerned. This place cannot go on maintaining the respect of the citizenry if it does not do its business efficiently. We are using all the available time and we must keep up with the business. The result is that the committee system presents a golden opportunity to make the procedures of the House more efficient, because the matters that have to be discussed can be discussed in the House as well as in several standing committees at the same time. The item of the most fundamental importance is to ensure that through participation in the affairs of the standing committees the whole system is made to contribute and to complement the function of the House, not to compete with it. That, I think, is the problem.

In addition, we are in another conflict which I think is very important because we, who are directly involved in the affairs of this chamber, become knowledgeable about what happens here. We are all elected representatives; we are very much involved in politics and in government, and consequently we tend to think that everyone in the country knows and cares about these matters as much as we do. In fact, they do not. In fact, the great majority of our citizens not only do not know a great deal about the political life of the country or the function of their government, but they do not care.

It is an important function of Parliament as a whole to fulfil an educative role, to take the government, at least to some extent, to the people; to get out to the country and function in other centres than the very much confined space of these buildings. The committee system can do this. When a committee travels to Vancouver or to Halifax or to any of the smaller or more remote centres—and here I am addressing myself to hon. members from the areas outside the major metropolitan centres—the government is brought closer to the people. Hon. members know that they represent people who feel they are very much out of the main stream of events; they are away from provincial capitals and from the national capital.

I think it is a very important duty and function of Parliament to attempt to bring the government to those people and, so far as possible, to let those people participate in and see government functioning in their own centres. The committees that travel about the country, as well as working at the time that they are there, fulfil that very important function. So, we have the conflict of efficiency as opposed to the debating society approach which enables everybody to hold up the work of this House and carry on until everyone has had a chance to speak. We also have the conflict of centralizing the government in Ottawa as opposed to bringing it to the people.

These are the conflicts that have to be borne in mind when hon. members say that the committee system is detracting from the business of the House and from the importance of this chamber. I will go along with the hon. member in attempting, as he was, to be non-partisan because I do not suggest for one minute that what I am about to say here does not tar us and hon. members opposite with the same brush. The plain truth is that in theory the committee system at present is not bad.

Mr. McGrath: Nonsense.

Mr. Jerome: What can make it bad is the failure of members of this House to participate in it and make it function. That is where the indictment should lie, not on the system itself but the manner and the extent in which hon. members participate in it and make it function. Again I say I am not attempting to lay criticism at the feet of hon. members opposite that does not tar us with the same brush, because the performance of some of the hon. members on our side is no better.

Mr. Woolliams: Do not become a statesman because of your recent appointment; just carry on as you did before.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The Parliamentary Secretary has the floor.

Mr. Jerome: Of course the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) holds himself out as a paragon of virtue so far as his participation in the committee system is concerned. I am sure that if we examined the record we would find that his attendance at committee meetings is such as to be exemplary to other hon. members. However, I wish he would concentrate on other members to make sure they do as much as he does, because at present that is not the case. I am not speaking as a statesman, I am stating a fact.

The fact is that members of this House do not show up at committee meetings and do not participate in the way they should. If the hon. member for Calgary North thinks it is funny that I am talking as a statesman, that is too bad.

Mr. Baldwin: Would the Parliamentary Secretary answer a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the hon. member for Peace River seeking the floor for the purpose of asking a question?

Mr. Jerome: The question probably refers to the member's suggestion to review the committee system by referring the matter to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization. He said that in order to precipitate this course, if necessary, he is prepared to debate every routine motion for reference to a standing committee until he has made his point about expenses. We are quite prepared to examine, with a very careful eye, the proposed expenses of the committees.

I am speaking from personal experience as the immediate past chairman of the special committee on election expenses, which sat for a very short period in the last session. One of the first subjects that we discussed—and opposition members who were on that committee will support me on this—was whether that committee needed to travel. Because there is a system in the province of Nova Scotia that would have been of interest to the committee, because there is one in the province of Quebec, because there are different electoral systems in various provinces throughout the country and, in fact, in other countries throughout the world, there would have been every justification for the committee applying to the house for permission to travel. The subject was discussed and I think hon. members opposite will agree that, as chairman of the committee, I expressed the opinion as forcibly as I could that the right thing for the committee to do was to stay here, unless members felt there was some worthwhile work that could be done.

I am happy to say that members of all parties were agreed. I submit that as an example of the proper attitude taken by committee members of all parties with respect to the expenditure of money on committees.

It is all very well for the hon. member opposite to suggest a review by the Procedure and Organization Committee, but it is only fair to put on record that at the end of last session the government was anxious that some arrangement be made whereby that committee could review all the rules of the House, and do it on a continuing basis. We still stand in support of that proposition. The hon. member opposite knows that his party has taken a position opposed to that. We have been anxious to give the committee not only the power, on an ad hoc basis if necessary, to review the rules governing committees but also, if it is preferred by the House, to give it a standing reference covering all the rules of the House. In our view this would be a sensible arrangement.

That suggestion has met with opposition from the other side of the House. Again I say we submit that the proper thing to do is to have the committee not only discuss the rules pertaining to committees but have it constantly discuss, and consequently recommend, changing and updating of all the rules of the House. Participation by members of this House is what will make the committee system function as it should. I repeat that we are perfectly prepared to have the committees' rules, along with all the rules of the House, placed under constant review by the Procedure and Organization Committee.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I have only a few words to say concerning the motion to refer certain work to the Public Accounts Committee. Speaking as a past chairman of that committee, there are one or two observations I would like to make. I compliment the government for calling this motion at an early stage in the session, as a matter of fact on the seventeenth sitting day. I have seen sessions which have gone on for months before any work was referred to that committee. This raises another point. The Public Accounts Committee recommended to the House that its members should be appointed for the duration of a Parliament. That recommendation was acted upon and now members are appointed to the committee for a whole Parliament. Members appointed for a whole Parliament provide continuity of work and research.

We also suggested that the Auditor General's Report be automatically referred to the committee when tabled and that it should not be left to the whim of the government when to refer the report. As yet that recommendation has not been acted upon and the committee only functions at the whim of the government. As a matter of fact, if the government does not want the committee to examine the Auditor General's Report, it does not have to refer the report to it. This is one of the committee's recommendations that should be acted upon by this Parliament.

We should stop and take note of the very inadequate way in which the Public Accounts Committee must function. For that committee we have one clerk. That is the extent of our staff. This is no reflection on our clerk. We have been fortunate in the Public Accounts Committee in that we have had excellent clerks, but for example when we were investigating expenditures in connection with the Bonaventure, the shipping company which did the refit came before us with its whole staff and also legal counsel. We did not even have legal counsel although we were dealing with a very intricate problem.

In the United Kingdom the public accounts committee has a staff of 10 or 12 people. They do not work just while the House sits. That committee functions the year round and is equipped to do the job for which it is established. So far as our Parliament is concerned, we are only scratching the surface and I strongly urge that our Public Accounts Committee be given better facilities, better accommodation, better staff and be set up for a year-round operation.

Any government that has an expenditure of about $13 billion a year certainly warrants a good, strong Public Accounts Committee. I believe the Public Accounts Committee functions as well as or better than any other committee of the House simply because we have done our best to keep it non-partisan. Granted, at times this was difficult, but all members of the committee, regardless of party affiliation, realized they were dealing with the expenditure of taxpayers' money, be they Liberal taxpayers, Conservative taxpayers or others. Members of the committee had one objective—that the money be spent wisely and properly. After all, Mr. Speaker, what other control have we in this House except when the departmental estimates are before us? I am sorry to say that under present arrangements, when departmental estimates are referred to committees they are not getting the close supervision that they should be getting and the publicity that should accompany them.

Once this House passes the estimates, the various government departments are given authority to spend the money granted by the House, and we must depend upon experienced civil servants to spend that money wisely and justly. When they do not, it is the responsibility of the Public Accounts Committee to call the civil servants before it and inquire why the money was not spent in a productive way. We in the Public Accounts Committee must deal with non-productive items. "Non-productive" is a hard word to define, but the committee has asked the Auditor General to list what he considers non-productive expenditures.

The House Leader of our party has called attention to the very fine report that Professor Ward made to the committee, and I recommend that all hon. members read it. The Public Accounts Committee has functioned well for the past 13 years under its present system. I sincerely hope we will able to continue on that basis, in a non-partisan way, dealing with the issues that the Auditor General brings to our attention. If the Auditor General does not have a good Public Accounts Committee to answer to, we will have a poor Auditor General, because the two go together. The committee, as it were, is his right arm. If we are to have a strong, viable Auditor General we must have a strong, viable, energetic Public Accounts Committee.

When the proposed Auditor General of Canada act comes before us, Mr. Speaker, I shall have only one plea to make. I hope this House will not do anything to curtail the powers of the Auditor General. In business, if you call in an auditor to audit the books of a company you do not say to him, "I just want you to look at that and that" and tell him what you want him to do. You do not lay before him a list of things you want him to do. You say, "There are the books. Audit them and bring to our attention anything that is not correct, any place where there has been non-productive spending, and show us what we can do to improve the operation of our business." So it should be with the business of the federal government.

I am sure that other hon. members wish to say some words on this subject. This has been a good opportunity for the House to comment on the operations of the Public Accounts Committee. I close by saying, as I did at the beginning, that I am pleased the government acted so quickly in calling the motion to refer this matter to the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, this debate has ranged over a very wide area, and I wish to make it clear that I do not intend to touch on all the aspects of the matter that have been discussed by those who have preceded me. As a matter of fact, I rise to deal with one particular point about which I feel rather strongly; but I admit that before I get to that main point there is one temptation that I really cannot resist. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), when talking about committees and how much they cost, referred to the fact that two of the committees of the other place had expenses during the last session, or at least over whatever period he was quoting, totalling $1 million. Four hundred and ninety-seven thousand dollars were spent on the Committee on Poverty. Some poverty! Also, $515,000 was spent on the Committee on Mass Media. If you add to that $442,000 for the Committee on Banking and Commerce, and $435,000 for the Committee on Science Policy, you are reaching a figure of almost $2 million.

Since suggestions are being made about steps that should be taken to save money, there is one obvious suggestion which I thought the hon. member for Peace River would make, namely, abolish the Senate. There is no use beating around the bush; let us deal with these things directly.

Mr. Woolliams: The last NDP member who said that went to the Senate.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): You should be with some of your own up there, Stanley.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The hon. member is asking about some of my friends up there. All their lives they have been in favour of abolishing the Senate, and I trust they still are. After they have been there a while they will probably be even more in favour of doing so.

The main point I want to discuss is what I regard as the increasing importance that attaches to the work of the Public Accounts Committee. The thoughts which I have in mind I have already expressed in other ways and on previous occasions. Let me say that in my view we have not yet solved the problem of parliamentary control over government expenditures before they are made. We used to have the committee of supply. One hundred years ago Members of Parliament thought that through the committee of supply they did control the public purse, and perchance they were right. In recent decades that has not been true. As a matter of fact, we have more or less recognized that fact by abolishing the committee of supply and we now send all the estimates to various Standing Committees.

I think that most of the committees do a very good job and in some respects I think their work has been improved. However, it would be a wild and foolish Member of Parliament who would assert that the committees that examine estimates are scrutinizing public spending as the public feels it should be done. We just have not been doing the job and we have not solved the problem of how to do it. In fact, it is the one aspect of the massive rules changes that we have made in the last two or three years which I think is still unfinished business.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want what I am going to say now to imply that we should let that go by the board. I think we should still find some way, in advance of the spending of money, for Parliament to check on it. But until we do find the way it becomes all the more important that we have this ex post facto check by the Public Accounts Committee. Sometimes it is argued that it is too late, that the money has been spent. The fact of the matter is that turning the searchlight on illegal or extravagant expenditures does have a salutary effect. I think that function must be stepped up, and I agree with the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Hales) that the staff and assistance to the Public Accounts Committee ought to be increased.

There is something else we ought to consider, Mr. Speaker. Often we are told that the Auditor General does more than just give a report after the fiscal year is over, more than just lay it before us on the basis of what happened after the event is all over, but that he does a running audit right throughout the year. We are frequently told that he finds many things that need to be corrected and which are corrected right on the spot. It has also been suggested that sometimes he finds things that he thinks are wrong and has arguments with those in charge of the various departments. He may or may not win the arguments.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that we might step up the process by which the Public Accounts Committee gets at these matters by making provision for the Auditor General to appear before the Public Accounts Committee on a current basis and to report to that committee some of the difficulties he is encountering. I adopt the language of the hon. member for Wellington when he said that the Public Accounts Committee is the Auditor General's right-hand man. I think it is true that you have a good Auditor General if you have a good Public Accounts Committee, and vice versa.

I strongly urge that we give some thought to this matter. Let us face the fact that what we used to do in committee of supply is not being done. Let us face the fact that the only effective check on expenditures before they are made is that which is made by the Treasury Board before we ever see the blue book of estimates. I am not satisfied with that, but such is the situation. That being the situation, I think that the kind of checking done by the Public Accounts Committee has to be stepped up. There has to be more of it, and there will have to be arrangements such as I have just suggested by which the Auditor General could report to the Public Accounts Committee on a current basis.

I am repeating myself, Mr. Speaker, but let me put it this way. Precisely because we do not have the kind of parliamentary control over the purse-strings that we think we have, or at least think we ought to have, the work of the Public Accounts Committee becomes all the more important. I am glad that we have this institution of an opposition member being appointed chairman of that committee. I certainly support those who express the view that the committee has been doing better work in the last decade than used to be the case. Let us strengthen it in every way we can, because it is pretty important in this massive expenditure operation that is modern government that there be a reasonable check on that expenditure by those of us who represent the people of Canada.

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I shall not delay the business of the House very long but I have one or two thoughts which I should like to put on the record. For many years I have been particularly concerned about the escalating costs of our committees.

As I see the responsibilities of members of this House, they fall into two main categories. The first, I suppose, is to speak up and to be heard in the presentation and passage of legislation. The second—I am not at all sure that I have these in the proper order—is that I think the people who elected me to represent them here consider that one of the duties of a member is to scrutinize government expenditures. I think that if we do not wholeheartedly carry out that part of our function, we are indeed derelict in our duty.

I should like at the outset to congratulate the members of the Public Accounts Committee. I was a member of that committee for part of the previous session and am quite familiar with its work. Its members were a pretty level-headed group of individuals. Their chairman acted in an excellent manner. In that regard I am referring to the cost of operating the committee. It is one of the few committees of this House that travelled far afield. It travelled to Halifax to look at the famous Bonaventure, and incurred minimum costs on the trip.

I was delighted to hear the Parliamentary Secretary expound on the benefits of the committee system. I agree with him, up to a certain point. Examination in detail, as he suggested is good; who can deny that? Here I am thinking of another committee of which I was a member last year, the Committee on miscellaneous estimates. That, too, was very well chaired and conducted a good deal of examination, although I am afraid it did so superficially. According to a report in the Toronto Telegram of last week that committee passed expenses of $2 million. When the matter came before this House only one voice spoke about it, that being mine. What I resent and take exception to is that—the previous speaker alluded to this matter—before you get a chance to look at these expenditures, the matter is fait accompli: the money is spent; it is gone.

The previous speaker mentioned the $1 million spent by the Committee on Poverty and the Committee on Mass Media.

What concerns me deeply is that the Committee on the Constitution, I am told, spent $32,000 on a trip to Manitoba. It has advertised 34 more forays that it will make. Mr. Speaker, they moved into the city of Halifax a short while ago, 16 strong I am told, with a supporting cast of 16 translators, reporters and what-have-you. They listened to briefs presented in that fair city. Seven people attended the hearing, including the janitor. Two briefs were presented to them by two junior students of a college. The professor who coached them in their presentation did not think it was worth his while showing up. This sort of thing must stop.

On October 23 I directed the following question to the government House Leader, as reported at page 516 of Hansard:

> In order that the House may have better control of its activities and expenses, will the Government House Leader bring in a motion referring to the Committee on Procedure and Organization for report the need of all committees of the House to file a complete report of the expenses incurred—

The House Leader replied:

> This subject was touched upon in our debate on the establishment of the Constitutional Committee and I believe there was general agreement that we should look at this question. How we do it is a matter that I will be happy to consider.

In view of the minister's remark, "How we do it is a matter that I will be happy to consider", I wish to make a suggestion to him. Instead of sending this matter back to the Committee on Procedure, we ought to send it to the Public Accounts Committee. I have great confidence in that committee. It seems to me that there would be better ventilation of the whole affair in the Public Accounts Committee as opposed to the other committee. I say that with all respect for the Committee on Procedure, which is also a very good one.

In his remarks the Parliamentary Secretary commented on attendance at committees. I agree that in some instances the attendance at committees is not good. I have been a fairly regular attender of committee meetings. I resent going to committee meetings, participating in the examination of all matters coming before the committee and then finding, on the day of the vote, that the government has picked up a roving squad and brought it in to vote. The votes are all rubber-stamped and passed through in a very few minutes.

An hon. Member: That is terrible.

Mr. Woolliams: Often they cannot get a quorum.

Mr. McCutcheon: One other thing bothers me. Considering the way the government arranges committee meetings and all the duplications that exist, if our committees are to be properly manned with an average attendance of, say, 18 or 20 members, we will face a deficit, so to speak, of 15 members who are required to constitute a quorum in this House. We will not be able to open proceedings in the House of Commons because all our members will be engaged in committee work.

An hon. Member: That is right.

Mr. McCutcheon: Having said that, I will not delay these proceedings any longer. I suggest that perhaps the Public Accounts Committee is the committee through which a proper answer to my question of October 23 could be given.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) wants to make a statement on Bill C-174, so I shall be brief in order that he will have time for his remarks. I wish to deal with two points. I listened to the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Jerome), and I think he overlooked one thing. There is a difference between the functions of the members who sit behind the executive, the government, and the functions of those who sit in the opposition. We have to scrutinize matters in this chamber.

There are only 72 members in my party and we are always in attendance. The other parties can speak for themselves. I realize this is not a new problem. I realize that the government must keep its members busy and so it has allocated them to various committees. I am not a member merely of one committee. I am chairman of the justice caucus of our party and put a great deal of effort into that committee. I appreciate the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome) saying that I attend committees. I do attend committees. But there are times when one has to be in the House. Hon. members must receive more co-operation. For instance, there are times when the Justice Committee is meeting and I have to be in the chamber on another matter.

On one occasion, I believe it was on the expropriation bill, I asked that the matter be allowed to stand because I was presenting to this House during private members' hour a bill to amend the Criminal Code in connection with persons aged seven or older who might have committed a crime under the Code. I read in the newspaper that although I had been very active in the Justice Committee that afternoon, I was not present when the vote was taken with reference to the particular proposal I had opposed so strenuously. What I am saying is that you cannot be in two places at once.

I do not want to dig back into old history, but I remember Mr. Pickersgill, Mr. Pearson and Mr. Chevrier. When we had 208 members, forming a powerful government, they would not under any circumstances allow a committee to sit while the House was sitting. They realized, and I appreciated their position, that their job was to scrutinize the government's actions very carefully, to attempt, as we did yesterday, to secure amendments to certain legislation. It is very easy for the executive to present the bills. The executive sends its members to the committee.

Here is another thing I do not like about committees. I hear committees chairmen—this was particularly true of the Finance Committee—saying, "You are each going to have three minutes to speak." Isn't that a wonderful thought? If you were defending an accused in a courtroom and the judge said you had three minutes to cross-examine a witness you might barely get started on it. It was a wonderful statesman's speech by the hon. member. These fellows grow to be statesmen. The more power they get, the more statesmanlike they become. This is the symptom of some appointment, some recognition.

We have to deal with this problem. The practical function that I have noticed—I do not mean the idealistic or the academic approach—of government members, basically, is that the chairman will say, "Here is a bill, and we are going to put it through in its present form." The minister hands out a little amendment to make it look as though we are intelligent. We think we are making amendments and changes and say, "This is a wonderful thing; this committee business is so refreshing." Well, gentlemen, let us not fool ourselves. When I am in a committee I do not want the chairman to say to me, while I am dealing with the question of capital gains—as we were in the Finance Committee—that I have two minutes. A number of people who have not done any studying whatsoever also have two minutes, and they are sweeping everything under the carpet while I am trying to get the facts on top of the table.

My job is not to praise the government: I leave that to others; there are enough backbenchers to do that. They all do it very well. My job and my function as long as I sit here—I hope to move over to the government side one of these days, and when hon. members over there now have my function I will listen to them—is to scrutinize very carefully, oppose if I think necessary, and suggest positive changes. So when I hear somebody get up and speak with those ideals, fold their arms and look to the sky and say that committees are non-partisan, I know that is tommyrot. The chairmen are picked; they are chosen by the men in power, the executive. They know when they go in there who is going to be chairman. I can name them before they are appointed. That is the way the committee system has been working.

There is merit to the new rules in some ways. There is merit attached to the committees in the United States. There is some merit attached to all systems and something to be learned from them all. I think the New Democratic Party should have some committee chairmanships. The Conservative party should have the chairmanship of some committees. The Créditistes should have some committee chairmanships. Then we will know that they are not partisan.

When we talk about all the amendments that are accepted, I know what these amendments turn out to be, even in our committee which works pretty well because most of us belong to the same profession. When you get a group of people from the same profession they have a sort of affection for each other aside from their political affiliations; we do work pretty well together. I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that if I had my way in this party, totally, and if I ran into the kind of thing I am talking about day after day, I would boycott the committees.

Mr. Woolliams: I will tell you why that is not done. The press says, "Oh, it's bad; the Conservatives won't go to the committees." I never came to Parliament and, like many other hon. members, gave up my private life just to play games. And that is what is going on. The hon. member says these committees are functioning. If that is the case, let us be honest and make them function.

There is another problem. I really appreciated the action of Mr. Speaker the other day, because he showed what a gentleman he always is in the position he holds. I moved an amendment in the committee, a serious amendment affecting the ability of a citizen to choose whether to go to the court of the Minister of Justice, the federal court, or to a provincial court. However, I do not intend to get into that argument. The committee split on the question. But that amendment was ruled out of order when I desired to move it at the report stage of the bill. I am not breaking any confidences. I said to the Speaker, "If we had had one more person there, instead of having to spread ourselves in the committees so thinly, I might have won the vote in the committee, and I am sure Your Honour would not then have ruled the motion out of order."

That is why Mr. Speaker was so gracious on the argument, and I am not saying he would not be gracious anyway. The Minister of Justice was fair enough to say, "You can have your day in court, anyhow, in the House of Commons." What I am saying is that this only emphasizes the fact that committees are a farce. Until we get independent chairmen and show real independence in the committees, they will function in the way they should.

Now I am going to say something about that travelling circus, as I call it. I know something about the travelling circus I am going to talk about, namely, the Constitutional Committee which at one time I attended and which now I am not attending. That committee is crossing this country for one reason—not for the sake of participatory democracy at all, because you heard what happened in one city, but to build up a political image and aura for the Liberal party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: The constitution is too important a subject to be playing politics with, and I say that if the people of Canada knew how much money was being spent on travelling, and knew what is going on, they would protest. I know of another case where a group of government officials practically went around the world in a jet. I want to know what that cost. They talk about members' salaries. Why, that is peanuts compared with the money being spent today in committees for a lot of nonsense, particularly the travelling circus, the Constitutional Committee. I am serious when it comes to that. I am going to place some questions on the Order Paper. What are these committees costing? Why are these trips being planned? I supposed the reason is that some of them did not get their expected parliamentary secretary appointments. I saw one member jump. He got his appointment. I am glad to see him promoted, because the hon. member has been more silent, since, more statesmanlike.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Woolliams: This travelling is sort of a pay-off. It is not something new which was thought up even by the Trudeau government.

Mr. Perrault: Shame!

Mr. Woolliams: An hon. member says, "shame". Everybody is afraid of the truth. It is a shame the hon. member will not accept the truth. That is what is going on. When they cut out that nonsense, people on all sides of the House will attend committees—because, I repeat, I did not come here to play games.

• (3:40 p.m.)

With regard to expenditure and public accounts, I hope that serious thought will be given to the suggestion that the opposition be given the right to choose the estimates of three or four departments for discussion in the House for a few days. I am prepared to give up my Saturdays if there is any question of saving time. This will enable the estimates to be scrutinized by a committee of the whole House. I am not being disrespectful to the press because they have the same trouble as members; there are so many committees sitting that the press has to run around and try to find out what is going on. The only reason this place exists is so that the people are able to be given the facts. This is why the opposition must have a voice in the matter of bringing estimates before the House.

With those thoughts I will sit down, because I want to hear the Minister of Justice speak to his bill. I hope I never again hear a Parliamentary Secretary, one of these new appointees, give us the kind of professorial, idealistic lecture that we heard today. Some of us have been around here long enough to know that that sort of thing is a bunch of nonsense.

An hon. Member: Too long.

Mr. Woolliams: Maybe I have been here too long, but I will let the people of Calgary North decide that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

TAX REVIEW BOARD BILL

ESTABLISHMENT, DUTIES, APPEALS, ORGANIZATION, ETC.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice) moved that Bill C-174, to establish the tax review board and to make certain amendments to other facts in relation thereto, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I do not have too much time this afternoon, but I am delighted to have the opportunity of introducing a bill that represents the first major overhaul of the legislation relating to the review of income tax and estate tax assessments by an administrative tribunal since the Tax Appeal Board was created in 1946.

Persons who are dissatisfied with the tax that a minister of national revenue has assessed against them under the provisions of the Income Tax Act or the Estate Tax Act at present have the right of having the dispute heard either by the Tax Appeal Board or the Exchequer Court of Canada. Since its creation in 1946, the present board has fulfilled a valuable and needed function. Many taxpayers have availed themselves of the right to go before the board in the first instance rather than to exercise their option to appear before the Exchequer Court. Experience has now shown, I think, that changes should be made to improve and to render more efficient the services performed by the board.

The Royal Commission on Taxation, under the chairmanship of the late Kenneth Carter, had as one of its recommendations the creation of a tax court with an appeal to a panel of three judges of the Exchequer Court. It was contemplated that the present Tax Appeal Board would be absorbed into the tax court. Those members interested should refer to pages 165 and 166 of volume 5 of the Carter report. If that recommendation were not acceptable, and the Tax Appeal Board were retained the Carter report recommended as an alternative the removing from it of the close association that it has with the Department of National Revenue, bringing it within the reporting authority of the Department of Justice. Its members should have the title, distinction and tenure of judges. It should have sole, original jurisdiction in all tax appeals, and provision should be made for discovery and production of documents. Again, members interested should refer to pages 164 and 165 of volume 5 of the Carter report.

The government and the House of Commons, by giving third reading to the federal court bill last night have adopted the primary recommendation of the Carter report that there should be a tax court, which in this case will be the trial branch of the new federal court. There will also be an appeal on the record to an appellate court, which will be the Court of Appeal for Canada. In that sense we have fulfilled that recommendation of the Carter commission.

After careful scrutiny of the work that is now being performed by the Tax Appeal Board, the government came to the conclusion that it would not be in the public interest that the board should be absorbed into the new federal court. It is our view that no good grounds can be advanced which would justify stripping the taxpayer of the existing privilege of appealing assessments either to an administrative tribunal like the Tax Appeal Board, with easy access, a minimum of complicated procedure and no power to award costs in the event that the appeal was not successful or, if the taxpayer so wished, to a court of law, the Exchequer Court or the new trial division of the federal court.

There are many cases—I think hon. members will subscribe to what I say—where what is needed is an impartial tribunal which will, in an expeditious and inexpensive manner, hear and adjudicate complaints which citizens, particularly citizens of modest means, have in respect of challenging assessments made against them. In such cases, a court of law, with its formal procedure for the discovery of documents, for settlement and adjudication of issues of fact and law, would unduly hamper and hinder the individual of modest means in obtaining a judgment at low cost, an impartial review with a minimum of procedural difficulty.

In this day and age of increasing bigness, remoteness and impersonality of government, it behooves the House of Commons, I believe, to take steps to see that not only is justice done but that to the public it appears to be done. One of the most significant changes introduced by the legislation now before the House which reconstitutes the Tax Appeal Board as a tax review board is that in future all persons who are appointed as members will hold office, as do judges, during good behaviour until they attain the age of 70 years. Under the existing legislation, members of the Tax Appeal Board can be appointed for a term of 10 years only. As pointed out in the Carter commission report, insecurity of tenure was one of the obstacles to the recruitment of members for the board.

Moreover, the appointment of members to hold office until 70 years of age will, in effect, provide the board with a greater degree of independence than in the present case where members hold office for ten years only, subject to reappointment. I submit that the bill will strengthen the independence of the tribunal because it will come under the general responsibility of the Minister of Justice and will not report to the Minister of National Revenue, as has heretofore been the case. These provisions reflect the recommendations made by the Carter commission.

In other words, having a board composed of members appointed for a limited term and reporting to the Minister of National Revenue, who happens to be one of the two parties to every suit, has given some people the idea that the board is not as impartial as it should be. I am not saying that the judgments handed down have not been reasonable judgments arrived at by reasonable human beings trying to do their best. But when members are subject to reappointment by the Minister of National Revenue and have a limited term of office, and one of the parties before the board is the person who represents the people of Canada and who appoints or may reappoint the member, I think there is the feeling that the board does not enjoy the independence it should enjoy.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the new legislation specifies that the chairman and the assistant chairman must be members of a provincial bar or judges and that one or the other must have practiced law in the province of Quebec or must have been a judge of the Superior Court of Quebec. This last provision is meant to ensure at all times the presence of a chairman or of an assistant chairman who is fully conversant with the Civil Code of the Province of Quebec. This is a major aspect of the legislation, particularly when dealing with appeals about succession duties where the case at issue depends on the understanding of the rights and obligations prescribed in a will or other document whose interpretation is governed by a relevant provincial statute.

• (3:50 p.m.)

[English]

One of the major purposes of the bill is to provide the ordinary taxpayer with a tribunal that combines accessibility, informality and effectiveness. In other words, it must be what it was originally meant to be in 1946, a taxpayer's court. The bill also provides that no special form of petition or pleading will be necessary to institute a review or an appeal from an assessment, and that the board is not to be bound by any legal or technical rules of evidence. The board is directed by the legislation to see that all appeals are dealt with as informally and expeditiously as the circumstances and considerations of fairness will permit.

Over the past few years—and the board has been in existence for almost 25 years—there necessarily has been built up a series of precedents, procedures and rules that have tended to make the board more formal and a little more cumbersome than it was originally intended to be. What I would like to do is strip it down again to what it was originally meant to be, namely, an informal board operating in an informal atmosphere where the taxpayer is able to come in—he does not need a lawyer, he can come in with a neighbour or a chartered accountant, representing himself or having anybody's help—to explain his case to the board in an informal way.

In the past, criticism has been made that if a taxpayer won before the Tax Appeal Board, the Minister of National Revenue, if the case involved a matter of interpretation so far as the law was concerned, or an important case that might create a precedent affecting numerous taxpayers, would appeal to the Exchequer Court. In the event the minister were successful in the appeal to the Exchequer Court, the taxpayer would normally be obliged to pay the costs that were awarded against him before the Exchequer Court.

I have felt for a long time that this created an unnecessary hardship on Canadian taxpayers and discouraged many people from taking an appeal before the appeal board. As a matter of fact, I can say there have been times when I was in private practice that I suspected the Department of National Revenue—and I think they will deny this—used the Tax Appeal Board as a method for hearing the taxpayer's case on discovery, that is to say, getting the basis of the taxpayer's case, and if they lost they would go to appeal and would have all the evidence they needed on which to build up their own case. I am not sure I could document this, but I have that suspicion.

I want to ensure that the Tax Appeal Board, or the new tax review board, cannot be used just as a preliminary step for the Department of National Revenue as a way of getting the taxpayer's case on the record. The proposed tax review board bill now before the House contains a provision for the modification of the Income Tax Act to provide that in any case where the Minister of National Revenue appeals a decision of the board to the court, and the amount of tax involved in the controversy does not exceed $1,000, the court is required, in delivering its judgment, to provide that the minister is to pay all reasonable and proper costs of the taxpayer in connection with the appeal to the court whether the taxpayer wins or loses. In other words, a taxpayer on an appeal in a matter involving less than $1,000 of tax assessed would have his appeal at the expense of the Crown, if he won in the first place.

Those are the broad areas of concern represented in the bill. I think it has to be read in conjunction with the federal court bill which passed this House last night on third reading, thanks to the courtesy of my friends on the opposite side. If the other place so provides, we will have a new federal court which will also be a court of first instance on tax matters. The taxpayer will have, and will continue to have under this bill, an alternative way of appealing tax assessments against him; an alternative way that will be less cumbersome than a court, less expensive and more informal and he will not need a lawyer.

We believe the taxpayer will be encouraged by the informal atmosphere and the opportunity to lay his case before an impartial tribunal rather than a group of men who are appointed for limited terms, appointed by the minister who happens to be one of the parties to the action. This board would be made up of men or women who may be lawyers, chartered accountants or from other disciplines. The president and the vice-president have to be lawyers, but the others need not. A taxpayer will have the chance to put his case before the board and he will have the right, of course, if he loses, to appeal to the federal court. On the other hand, if the minister appeals the case and the action involves less than $1,000, the taxpayer will not be penalized for having exercised this informal option.

I thank the House for this courtesy, and I thank particularly hon. members opposite who may have wanted to talk at great length on the matter that preceded this item. I am very grateful that I was given the opportunity of introducing the government's case on this bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing the House that the Senate has passed Bill S-2, an act respecting statistics of Canada, to which the concurrence of this House is desired.

It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

MATERNITY LEAVE ACT

EMPLOYMENT OF WOMEN IN FEDERAL JURISDICTION BEFORE AND AFTER CHILDBIRTH

On the order:

Second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration of Bill C-6, an act respecting the employment of women in federal jurisdiction before and after childbirth—Mrs. MacInnis.

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the Parliamentary Secretary rising on a point of order?

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Speaker, we had the pleasure the other night, in connection with Bill C-3, to hear rather lengthy arguments about requirements for recommendations to the Governor General in respect of bills requiring the expenditure of public moneys.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I perceive that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Mahoney), who will correct me if I am wrong, is attempting on his point of order to refer to the procedural correctness of the bill. If the House would permit me, I would remind hon. members that on October 26 Mr. Speaker reminded members of the requirements of our Standing Orders, particularly Standing Order 62, that private members' public bills should not impose taxes without the authorization of His Excellency, which, of course, is not available in such cases. It seems to me—and His Honour mentioned this matter in his remarks—that the bill now before the House does infringe that Standing Order.

I should like to hear argument on the procedural point only, and I would ask hon. members to confine themselves to that point. If, after hearing argument, it is my opinion that the bill is in order, of course the Chair will hear substantive arguments. Having said this, I think it might be in order first for the sponsor of the bill to proceed with whatever procedural arguments the hon. lady would like to make.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, before you give your final ruling I should like to draw attention to some features of this bill. This is the third session in which it has been on the Order Paper. There has been tremendous interest in the subject matter of the bill. This is one way in which the matter could be brought before the House for discussion. I wish to draw attention to the fact that the bill is entitled "An act respecting the employment of women in federal jurisdiction before and after childbirth".

The purpose of the bill is to provide maternity leave for women employed in any work, undertaking or business within the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada. Its provisions are in line with those of the Maternity Protection Convention of the International Labour organization, passed in 1919 and revised in 1952. I would point out that this legislation is of very great concern to women's organizations across this country, not only locally but nationally.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I had cautioned hon. members—I hope the hon. member who is sponsoring this bill, and others, will follow my admonition—that I hoped we would at this point hear arguments on the procedural aspect. I suggest, with respect, that the hon. member has moved away from that topic.

Mrs. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to point out that the principle of this bill has to do with the protection of women before and after childbirth, and that its provisions are much more elastic and far reaching than any provision we have had so far in federal legislation even within the public service. There are very new and important points covered in this legislation. We are urging, not only that there be maternity leave for women, with two-thirds of their previous earnings, during this time but that their jobs should be held open for them and that there be no infringement of their seniority rights.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. With great respect, I suggest that the hon. member is explaining the bill to the House. It is a very important and interesting bill. However, I had hoped I had been precise in directing the attention of hon. members to this point, that what concerned His Honour and what concerns myself relates to clause 6 of the bill and how it can be reconciled with Standing Order 62(1). I shall read this Standing Order so that hon. members will have it in their minds when they address themselves to this point:

> 62(1) This House shall not adopt or pass any vote, resolution, address or bill for the appropriation of any part of the public revenue, or of any tax or impost, to any purpose that has not been first recommended to the House by a message from the Governor General in the session in which such vote, resolution, address or bill is proposed.

Hon. members are aware that in this case there is no such recommendation. It would seem to be clear that clause 6 of the bill would create a tax or impost if the bill were enacted. I would ask the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) to confine her remarks to that rather narrow procedural point at this time.

Mrs. MacInnis: Your Honour, I understand the procedural point. I wonder whether it would be proper for Your Honour to allow me to leave out clause 6 entirely, because I believe hon. members would be very pleased to discuss the other provisions of the bill. The bill can stand by itself perfectly well with the deletion of clause 6. I wonder whether this would be possible.

An hon. Member: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the hon. member is making a suggestion, which may very well be a reasonable one, she might like to address herself to that matter, or if she has concluded her remarks perhaps other hon. members would like to address themselves to this point before the Chair makes a decision.

Mrs. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I should like to suggest to hon. members that it seems to me this bill could stand very well without clause 6, because I understand there is other, prospective legislation in respect of the expenses involved. Consequently, this bill could stand very well without the financial clause in it. I wonder whether Your Honour would consider permitting the deletion of clause 6.

Mr. Mahoney: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think there would be a disposition to agree with the hon. member. However, I believe the procedure should be that the bill be allowed to stand and that the hon. member submit a motion to alter it. It might be dealt with in that way.

Mrs. MacInnis: I would be very glad to do that, Your Honour, with your permission.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It would seem that there is disposition to do this. I believe it would be necessary to have the consent of all hon. members. If there is a disposition to do this by unanimous consent, it would seem to be in order.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Speaker, I believe motions are dealt with on another day in such a situation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair is a little confused at this point. I wish to make sure that hon. members are ad idem on this matter. I understand the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway to suggest that there might be unanimous consent that clause 6 be deleted from the bill and that the bill be considered in its new form. I understand, probably incorrectly, that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Mahoney) has suggested that this subject matter, with clause 6 deleted, should be reintroduced in the form of a new motion. I do not know whether I correctly understood the Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, at the present time there is before us a motion for second reading of a bill. In replying to the point of order raised, the hon. member sponsoring the bill has indicated that she is prepared to make an amendment to bring it within the rules. It would seem that the proper procedure would be that with the consent of the House the bill could be brought before us in amended form. I suggest that this should be done by way of a formal motion, and that it cannot be done in the form of verbal comment. The procedure in respect of amending a bill is much more formal than a member simply rising in this chamber and requesting an amendment.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, without becoming involved in the argument, I wonder whether we might reach an agreement along the lines now suggested by the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis). May I ask if this could be done: Could there be an understanding that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) would reintroduce the bill with clause 6 omitted and that it would take the position on the order paper that it now has? In other words, this would mean that the hon. member could proceed with this bill on the next day on which public bills come before the House. The hon. member probably wishes to proceed today, but I see difficulties and complications. This might be a compromise on which we could reach agreement.

Mr. Francis: That is precisely the suggestion I was making. I think there has to be a formal procedure for amending the bill now before the House. For my part, I am prepared to say that this bill should retain its place on the list and come up for discussion at the appropriate time.

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Speaker, the subject of this bill is of great concern to all members of the House. We are concerned about the subject of maternity benefits, and I for one would welcome a procedure which would enable the House to discuss the provisions of this bill at the earliest possible opportunity. I think we should attempt to remove any impediments which might exist so that the bill might be introduced in the House. I would be very content if this could be done. In other words, if the hon. member would bring in an amendment, I suggest that the bill be allowed to maintain its position at the head of the list of private members' public bills so that at the next opportunity to discuss these bills we could go ahead with it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If this is agreed, the matter will stand and the hon. member will have the opportunity to reintroduce the bill in such form as she feels would be acceptable under the rules. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL CORPORATION ACT

MEASURE TO ALLOW MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT TO PARTICIPATE IN DELIBERATIONS OF CROWN AGENCIES

On the order:

Second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections of Bill C-7, an act to amend the Canadian Commercial Corporation Act—Mr. Stewart (Cochrane).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Before the hon. member addresses himself to the matter before the House I would enter the same reservation as I did with respect to the bill we have just dealt with, sponsored by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis). The bill sponsored by the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart) may be somewhat more sophisticated in respect of the provisions of Standing Order 62; in other words, I do not think it is quite as obvious. But I am prepared to hear argument from the hon. member sponsoring the bill and from all hon. members who would like to address themselves to the point.

It seems to me that the bill will have the effect of creating a charge or impost on the public treasury, and of course the recommendation required is not available. Therefore, I would ask that until I have had an opportunity to hear those members who would like to address themselves to the procedural aspect, the hon. member confine his initial remarks at least to that particular point.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I shall speak only on the procedural aspect, Mr. Speaker. I am a little surprised that this question is raised at this time, because if anything has been said in latter days regarding private members' bills, or public bills as they are called, certainly one criticism levelled at me was not that it was not procedurally correct.

So far as any charge to the treasury is concerned, of course that is completely out of the question, as is obvious in the bill. It says in very plain terms: "One of the members other than the president may be a Member of Parliament". It does not purport to add another member to the board, and in that case add any expense to the treasury in the event he would have to be displaced from one place to the other and have his expenses paid. Therefore, that Member of Parliament would simply be replacing any other member who may be appointed to the board of directors. So as far as the procedural aspect is concerned, frankly I am at a loss to understand why this question should have been raised.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, having looked at this bill, it seems to me that there are two possible points that can be raised in regard to it. The first is whether an additional charge is placed on the treasury by the terms of the bill. I have heard the explanation of the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart), who argues that the bill merely seeks to say that within the terms in which any Crown corporation would name its board of directors, one of them would be a Member of Parliament. There would be no increase in the total remuneration paid by that corporation and there would be no additional charge on public funds. In that respect it seems to me that this bill is beyond question within the terms of private members' bills which are permitted to be considered by the House.

The second question which should be raised is the possible conflict between the Senate and House of Commons Act. As members of the House are perfectly aware, that act prohibits members of the House from accepting remuneration in right of the Crown in any other employment or in other terms. These are broad and sweeping terms indeed. The question that has to be decided by hon. members is whether the terms of the bill as it is drafted would in fact resolve any possible conflict with the other piece of legislation.

It seems to me that the hon. member has attempted to anticipate this difficulty by stating in the clause "he shall be eligible for remuneration and expenses and shall not, by reason of his being the holder of the office or place in respect of which such remuneration and expenses are payable, be rendered incapable of being elected, or of sitting or voting, as a member of the House of Commons". These are the penalties prescribed by the Senate and House of Commons Act for an infraction of this section.

The hon. member has attempted to anticipate any objections that might be raised and to provide immunity from the penalty provided under another statute. It seems to me that the terms of the bill are within the scope of the kind of legislation that can be sponsored by private members of the House.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the point made by the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart) when he suggested that this bill should be regarded as in order because the money that would be paid to a Member of Parliament under the bill would not be new money. He argued that it is money that is already provided in a statute, and therefore it is not an additional charge upon the treasury. I am afraid I have to remind him that the rules in this respect do not stop at that point. For example, citation 246(3) of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition, which is one of the citations that bear on this point, reads as follows:

> The guiding principle in determining the effect of an amendment upon the financial initiative of the Crown is that the communication, to which the royal demand of recommendation is attached, must be treated as laying down once for all (unless withdrawn and replaced) not only the amount of a charge, but also its objects, purposes, conditions and qualifications. In relation to the standard thereby fixed, an amendment infringes the financial initiative of the Crown, not only if it increases the amount, but also if it extends the objects and purposes, or relaxes the conditions and qualifications expressed in the communication by which the Crown has demanded or recommended a charge.

The rest of the sentence states that this applies to ministers as well as to private members. The hon. member for Cochrane argued that his bill does not involve any new money, but it seems to me that he is in effect seeking to amend two statutes. One is the Canadian Commercial Corporation Act, which has already laid down the conditions under which money is to be spent, and one of those conditions is the paying of expenses of certain identified people. He changes that condition by adding a Member of Parliament as a person who can be one of these people. The other act that he is seeking to amend is the Senate and House of Commons Act, and perhaps some other legislation affecting us, which says that Members of Parliament cannot get money in this way.

I concede the right of Parliament to pass a bill that would alter that condition, but since it is altering the financial situation in respect of Members of Parliament I submit that it would require the royal recommendation. In other words, it seems to me that on two counts this bill offends the principle that I just read from Beauchesne that a proposal infringes the financial initiative of the Crown, not only by increasing the amount of money involved but by extending its objects and purposes or relaxing the conditions and qualifications which have been expressed in a royal recommendation. On these counts it seems to me that the argument that it is not new money must fall to the ground.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I would like to support the point of view put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) with respect to the argument advanced by the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) in terms of the bill not seeking to provide an expenditure of additional moneys. I submit that the word "additional" has no place in the consideration of whether the bill is in order in accordance with Standing Order 62(1). Your predecessors, Sir, have always been very precise and careful in interpreting Standing Order 62(1) in its broadest possible sense and, as I recall it, Mr. Speaker—when there has been any indication in a bill regarding the expenditure of what is looked upon as public revenue—has always used that to say that the bill should founder on that point. Standing Order 62 provides:

It is not a matter of any additional part, or anything that has not already been committed; this is a bill that seeks to appropriate some part of the public revenue to pay salary and expenses to a Member of Parliament who may sit on the Canadian Commercial Corporation. For my part, I have always felt that there should be a more lax approach taken by Mr. Speaker and the House in this respect, because I think there is far too much rigidity which generally has impinged upon the desires of hon. members to bring ideas forward.

I am very interested in seeing this bill proceed so that we will be able to examine the concept whereby it is suggested that one group of politicians, namely, the government, should have the right to appoint some other politicians to a corporation such as this. There are a number of other bills on the order paper along this line. This principle should be examined with some care and I suggest, Sir, that if you find after argument that the bill does founder and does not meet the test demanded by Standing Order 62(1), perhaps the hon. member could ask the unanimous consent of the House—the House is its own master in this regard—to waive Standing Order 62 in order that the bill may be proceeded with and considered.

I think the proposal in the bill is one that should be carefully examined in full public light in order to see what other manoeuvring might be involved in this system of allowing the government to appointment its friends to particular boards and corporations.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart) has spoken once. Is there unanimous consent that he be given the opportunity to address further remarks to the Chair?

Mr. Howard (Skeena): With respect, Sir, I do not think he needs unanimous consent.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Cochrane on a point of order.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the arguments that have been presented regarding the procedural point are at all conclusive. First of all, it is perfectly obvious to everyone that the paragraph that was added to the bill, which will in effect prevent a member from being thrown out of the House of Commons if he should receive expenses for serving on a board, has been added simply to protect an hon. member who is appointed to a board. It is not in there with the intent that any hon. member should qualify for extra remuneration from public funds.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): The whole idea of adding that paragraph—and it is required—is simply to follow a precedent that was set when, for example, the bill on the International Development Research Centre was passed. This provision was included in that bill, and it was necessary in order to protect any member who at a future time might be appointed to the board. The same paragraph was included in a motion that was presented by the hon. member from Richmond Hill—

An hon. Member: York North.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): —who had to be reimbursed for services when he was an executive assistant prior to coming into this House. It was necessary to add this paragraph to protect him so that he would be able to continue to vote and take part in the proceedings of the House of Commons. I think that to base argument on that particular paragraph is a wrong way to proceed, because the object of the bill is simply to place a Member of Parliament on a board of the government, a public board. This is all it purports to do. He would be there as one of the members. There are a number of board members now. He would simply take the place of another member.

There is no question of remuneration other than what already exists in the bill which would go to members of the board. The House of Commons Act is not being contravened in any way, because we have added this particular paragraph which is necessary in these cases. So I submit to Your Honour that there should be no question as to the procedure in this case. There is no transgression of the rules, and I submit we should go ahead and discuss the subject matter of the bill.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, I may be able to contribute something on this point of order. I think you are on fairly safe ground if Your Honour decides to rule, on the basis of precedent, that the bill submitted is in fact out of order. I might also say that I am basing this argument almost on a reversal of precedent. I would refer you, Sir, and the House to Hansard of May 30, 1966, page 5705, when we proved that there is nothing new under the sun. I sponsored a Notice of Motion on this particular subject and at that time there was no discussion in connection with whether or not it came within the rules of the House. In fact, we had an excellent debate on it. However, it was talked out at that time.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Oh, no!

Mr. Walker: Yes, by the other side of the House. But the point I am trying to make is that there is a vehicle already approved by precedent for discussing this very important subject, a subject on which I would tell the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart) that I am in complete agreement in principle. That precedent was established through the way in which my Notice of Motion was handled back in 1966. If this is so, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest you would almost be creating a new rule if you decided that what was done then was not the proper way to deal with this subject matter.

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Speaker, it is, of course, a comfort to have the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) on one's side in an argument like this and I will not reiterate the points he made. However, I will say that the suggestion of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), that unanimous consent might be forthcoming from the House, is not acceptable because this proposal flies directly in the teeth of the principle established in sections 10 and 11 of the Senate and House of Commons Act and I do not feel it is a principle that should be attacked obliquely. I think it should be faced up to directly.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I thank all hon. members for their contribution to the procedural point. I shall take a moment to remind hon. members, and particularly the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart) who is sponsoring the bill, that His Honour on October 20 gave all hon. members notice that he felt that private members' public bills should conform with the rules and practice of this House. Mr. Speaker at that time said that if he had doubts he would ask hon. members to establish the procedural correctness of their bills before permitting them to argue the substantive aspects.

As indicated in my initial remarks, I have very serious reservations with respect to this bill sponsored by the hon. member for Cochrane. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has referred to Beau-chesne's citation on the interpretation of the relevant Standing Order and the practice of this House. The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) has pointed out that this practice has been followed rather strictly. I think that should be the case here, particularly in view of the constitutional ramifications of allowing the House to consider a bill which purports to charge the treasury and is sponsored by a private member in the absence of a recommendation from His Excellency the Governor General.

Having said this, I say to the House that because of the remarks of His Honour on October 20, and because of the very good arguments that have been made today, because I still have the greatest reservation about the procedural correctness of the bill I would, if I were going to do so now, rule it out of order. However, I would like the House to permit me to discuss it with His Honour and perhaps the next time this order of business is called, His Honour will be in the chair and my colleague the Deputy Chairman of Committees or myself will have an opportunity to discuss the question with His Honour and make a ruling on the point. Do I have the consent of the House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Mahoney: Do I understand, Mr. Speaker, that this bill is to retain its place on the order paper?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yes, it will retain its place and will be called at the time of the next similar order of business.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD DAY ACT

RECOGNITION OF CANADA'S FIRST PRIME MINISTER BY OBSERVANCE OF A HOLIDAY

On the order:

Second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs of Bill C-8, an act respecting Sir John A. Macdonald Day—Mr. Macquarrie.

Mr. Baldwin: I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if this bill could stand and retain its place so that it would be in the same position as the other bill with which we dealt.

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Speaker, in view of the progress we have made in this hour, and in view of the unexpected moving along of the order of business, I wonder if we might call it five o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that we should call it five o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) on a point of order.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, in light of the fact that, spurred by the opposition, this House has made tremendous progress today, could somebody on the other side please indicate the business for Monday? I presume we will go back to the tax appeal board. But assuming the House makes the same disposition of this matter as it has with the other bills, could some kind soul on the government side indicate what business will follow on Monday, in the way of any change in the order of business as announced by the President of the Privy Council on Thursday? We have already dealt with the business indicated by him.

Mr. Mahoney: No, we have not.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Speaker, I understand that Bill C-174 will be before the House on Monday, respecting the tax review board.

On motion of Mr. Mahoney the House adjourned at 4.38 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, November 2, 1970

The House met at 2 p.m.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

IMMIGRATION PROCEDURES FOR PERSONS ENTERING CANADA

Question No. 26—Mr. Paproski:

1. Is it the intention of the government to tighten immigration procedures for persons entering Canada as visitors?

2. Do immigration officers currently require identification from all persons seeking to enter Canada?

3. Are persons who are or may become public charges allowed to enter Canada as visitors?

4. Are known or suspected drug users or peddlers, within the meaning of the Criminal Code, permitted to enter Canada as visitors and, if so, what is the reason for such a policy?

5. In what cases are persons prohibited from entering Canada as visitors?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. It is not the intention of the Government to make it more difficult for genuine visitors to come to Canada. An improved internal system is being developed to facilitate early detection and removal, if necessary, of those who overstay their legitimate sojourn in Canada as well as those whose immigration status is in doubt.

2. Yes.

3, 4 and 5. Categories of persons prohibited by law from entering Canada, as immigrants or as visitors, are described in Section 5 of the Immigration Act. These include persons who are public charges or who are likely to become public charges, as well as drug addicts or known or suspected drug peddlers and unlawful users within the meaning of the Narcotic Control Act.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION LOANS TO INDIAN FARMERS

Question No. 37—Mr. Gleave:

Of the 48 Farm Credit Corporation Loans to Indian farmers in Canada (a) how many individuals in each province received such loans (b) what was the amount of each loan to each individual (c) what was the purpose for which each loan was made?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): The Farm Credit Corporation advises that: This question is identical to Question No. 2054, June 16, 1970, which was answered on October 5, 1970.

OLD AGE SECURITY AND GUARANTEED INCOME SUPPLEMENT RECIPIENTS

Question No. 64—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

1. How many persons in Canada, by provinces, are in receipt of the Old Age Security pension?

2. Of the recipients of the Old Age Security pension, how many persons in Canada, by provinces, are in receipt of the Guaranteed Income Supplement?

3. Of those receiving the Guaranteed Income Supplement, how many persons in Canada, by provinces, are receiving the full amount?

4. What is the average amount, in Canada, and by provinces, being received as a Guaranteed Income Supplement by recipients of the Old Age Security pension?

5. Do the answers to the above questions take into consideration persons living outside of Canada who are in receipt of the

Questions

Old Age Security pension and, if so, how many of such persons are there, and if they are considered as belonging to the various provinces what is the number of each province?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5. The following answers are given as of August, 1970:

| | Nfld. | P.E.I. | N.S. | N.B. | P.Q. | Ont. | Man. | Sask. | Alta. | B.C. | NWT | Yukon |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1. | 31,713 | 12,340 | 70,854 | 53,479 | 401,762 | 624,977 | 94,175 | 92,722 | 114,557 | 197,609 | 808 | 462 |
| 2. | 24,938 | 8,495 | 42,166 | 32.093 | 227,425 | 252,139 | 47,777 | 45,076 | 57,568 | 85,490 | 665 | 248 |
| 3. | 19,408 | 5,394 | 26,092 | 21,157 | 150,077 | 123,587 | 25,621 | 25,344 | 32,471 | 46,172 | 584 | 203 |
| 4. | $29.64 | $28.09 | $28.96 | $28.25 | $28.45 | $25.01 | $27.82 | $27.35 | $31.53 | $26.92 | $31.83 | $31.18 |

Average for Canada: $27.41

5. The figures given in 1. above include persons receiving the Old Age Security pension outside of Canada in August 1970. Some of these persons may be out of Canada permanently, others on a temporary basis. They are considered as belonging to the various provinces, with the numbers for each being as follows:

| Nfld. | P.E.I. | N.S. | N.B. | P.Q. | Ont. | Man. | Sask. | Alta. | B.C. | NWT | Yukon |

Total for Canada: 13,420

The Guaranteed Income Supplement is payable outside of Canada for only six months following departure. No data are available as to the number of pensioners receiving the supplement outside of Canada.

IMMIGRATION APPEALS

Question No. 105—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. How many immigration appeals against deportation are now pending?

2. What action is being taken to alleviate the problem?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. 3,751 as of October 1, 1970.

2. This backlog of appeals pending before the Immigration Appeal Board is largely comprised of people who came here ostensibly as visitors and then applied to remain permanently. Many such applicants are found to be inadmissible as immigrants. When they refuse to leave as requested, it is necessary to order their deportation and the majority of them exercise their right to file appeals with the independent Immigration Appeal Board. The Department and the Board are fully aware of the problems created by this backlog and for some time now have been seeking solutions to them. Mr. Joseph Sedgwick, Q.C. was commissioned to study this matter for the Department and his findings are expected shortly. Numerous remedies have been suggested, including amendments to the Immigration Appeal Board Act itself, as listed in the legislative program of the current session of Parliament.

MANPOWER TRAINING PROGRAM—BRITISH COLUMBIA VOCATIONAL SCHOOL, BURNABY

Question No. 111—Mrs. MacInnis:

Does the Department of Manpower and Immigration pay an amount to the British Columbia Department of Education or the British Columbia Department of Labour for each Manpower-sponsored student at the British Columbia Vocational School in Burnaby and, if so, what amount is paid per student?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Yes. The Department pays the province for the actual cost of providing training. The following are estimated costs per training place. Aircraft maintenance, $1,680; Baking, $1,540; Academic upgrading, 10, $1,680; Acedamic upgrading, 12, $700; Building service worker, $140; Cook, general, $1,540; Commercial general, $700; Bookkeeping and accounting, $1,400; Commercial upgrading and advanced options, $1,680; Court reporting, 1,120; Commercial secretarial, $1,400; Drafting, mechanical, $1,400; Drafting, structural, $1,400; Appliance servicing, phase 1, $420; Appliance servicing, phase 2, $700; Electronics technician, $1,400; Meat processing, $1,120; Mechanical maintenance and repairs, $700; Stenotype Operator, $1,400; Welding, general, $1,400; Welding, upgrading, $1,400.

REDESIGNING OF PASSPORTS

Question No. 129—Mr. Forrestall:

Can the government indicate what progress has been made on the subject of redesigning such travel documents as the Passport, with a view to utilization of computer techniques particularly in connection with the work being done by ICAO in this field.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Some progress has been made by the ICAO panel established to investigate the feasibility of an improved style of travel document which would incorporate computerized reading techniques. As a panel member, Canada has attended the two meetings that have been held. However, much development work remains to be done. In its deliberations, the panel must take into account such matters as the security and format of the document, materials and production methods, and the costs involved, both to governments and members of the travelling public. The final decision whether such a document is economically feasible will depend on the findings and recommendations of the panel and their ultimate acceptance by ICAO as a recommended standard.

MILITARY ITEMS OR EQUIPMENT SOLD TO PORTUGUESE COLONIES

Question No. 136—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

1. Since 1960 what military items or equipment has Canada sold to Portugal and by type, at what cost?

2. Since 1960, what military arms or equipment has Canada sold to Angola, Mozambique or Portuguese Guinea?

3. Since 1960, has Canada sold any commodity that could be considered of a military nature, to Angola, Mozambique, Portuguese Guinea or Portugal?

4. To the acknowledge of the government are any Canadian arms or military equipment being used in the persecution of domestic conflicts in Angola, Mozambique or Portuguese Guinea?

5. In particular, are Canadian Sabre Jets being employed in any of these conflicts and, if so, when were these arms or equipment made available to these Portuguese colonies and from what country were they purchased?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): See reply to question No. 1,617, answered October 7, 1970.

CURTAILMENT OF PUBLICATIONS DUE TO INCREASED MAILING CHARGES

Question No. 161—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. Does the Post Office Department have any estimate of the number of non-profit quarterlies, journals, magazines, newsletters which have ceased publication on account of increased mailing charges and, if so, what is the estimated number?

2. What is the estimated number of the above-mentioned which have for the same reason been forced to cut down the number of their publications?

3. What is the estimated number of letters and telegrams from groups and individuals received by the Post Office Department concerning increased postal rates for (a) publications (b) first class mail?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister without Portfolio): 1. No.

2. Not known.

3. This information is not readily available. To provide it would necessitate the expenditure of many hundred man hours which cannot be justified.

ADVISABILITY OF COMPULSORY ARBITRATION

Question No. 171—Mr. Robinson:

Will the government consider the advisability of providing a law requiring compulsory arbitration in order to avoid unnecessary strikes and the loss to the economy and to wage-earners when such strikes take place?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): In giving consideration to amendments that might be made to the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act, the provision of compulsory arbitration in the law has not received favourable consideration for a number of reasons, one being that, as has been the experience in other countries, it will not prevent strikes and economic losses arising from strikes.

CONTRIBUTIONS TO POLITICAL PARTIES BY CORPORATIONS AND UNIONS

Question No. 172—Mr. Robinson:

Will the government consider the advisability of requiring corporations and unions to obtain approval of their shareholders and/or members before making contributions to political parties?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): The Task Force on Labour Relations made some recommendations with respect to trade unions and political action. The government's position on this will be made known when the bill to amend the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act is brought forward.

NEWSTART PROGRAM—THE PAS, MANITOBA

Question No. 223—Mr. Simpson:

1. What is the annual budget for the NewStart Program at The Pas, Manitoba?

2. How many persons are employed under this Program?

3. Has a consultant or consultants been hired by NewStart at The Pas and, if so, what is the name of the consultant or consultants?

4. What are the duties of the position of consultant and what qualifications were required?

5. What remuneration is being paid to the consultant or consultants?

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): 1. The budget of Manitoba NewStart for 1970-71 is $950,000. Budgets for future years will be determined on the basis of the program which is approved annually by the provincial Minister of Education and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

2. Manitoba NewStart currently employs 51 persons.

3, 4 and 5. Manitoba NewStart is an autonomous corporation and the information requested should be obtained by writing to: Mr. W. C. Thomas, Executive Director, Manitoba NewStart Inc., P.O. Box 5000, The Pas, Manitoba.

NATIONAL SECURITY

KIDNAPPING AND MURDER OF PIERRE LAPORTE—POLICE SURVEILLANCE OF PAUL ROSE—PUBLICATION OF PICTURE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Solicitor General whether a prime suspect, Paul Rose, was under police surveillance for perhaps as long as 48 hours between the time of the kidnapping of Mr. Laporte and his murder and that he escaped from police surveillance during that period—perhaps as late as October 16, the day before the War Measures Act was invoked? If so, did the Solicitor

General know that Mr. Rose was under surveillance and did he either approve or express any views about this?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, it is quite true that Mr. Rose was under surveillance after Mr. Laporte was kidnapped and before the War Measures Act was proclaimed.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, was the Solicitor General consulted about Mr. Rose being kept under surveillance rather than arrested at that time?

Mr. McIlraith: He knew of it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanfield: After the escape from surveillance of Rose, did the Royal Canadian Mounted Police recommend that his picture be published promptly and was this recommendation not acted on and was this recommendation known to the Solicitor General?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, the reason he was under surveillance and no warrant was issued for him was, of course, what must be obvious, that there was not at that time evidence against him to warrant the issuing of the warrant for his arrest.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Solicitor General whether he would reconsider and answer the question I asked? Did the RCMP recommend publication of Rose's picture and the offence, because I understand Rose's fingerprints were on an FLQ communiqué that had been received? Did the RCMP recommend at that time the publication of his picture and was this known to the Solicitor General?

Mr. McIlraith: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is making assumptions about the details of evidence in this case. I do not propose at this point to give the details of the evidence that was available in connection with the warrant that has subsequently been issued for Mr. Rose. That is a well established practice in the House. I do, however, repeat what I said earlier, that the reason he was not arrested at the time he was under surveillance was that sufficient evidence was not available to permit the issuance of a warrant.

MURDER OF PIERRE LAPORTE, KIDNAPPING OF JAMES CROSS—OFFERING OF REWARD

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): In view of the negative results of the police investigations in both the Laporte and Cross cases so far, has the government now decided to offer a substantial reward for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the criminals involved in either of these two cases inasmuch as rewards have been helpful in solving criminal cases in the past?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): I can only repeat what I sought to convey in earlier answers to the same question, that the matter of a reward is under very close consideration by the two governments at the present time and has been from day to day for some days.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: It takes them a long time to do the obvious.

Mr. Hees: As this matter has now been under consideration for several weeks and as the offering of a reward could prove very useful in solving either or both of these cases, would the minister advise the House what in the world is stopping the government from making this very constructive move?

Mr. McIlraith: It is very simple, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the minister as I have tried to be as lenient as possible in allowing questions and answers in connection with this matter. It seems to me that the original question asked by the hon. member was quite legitimate although it has been asked before, but his supplementary question is the same argument as has been made before. Perhaps we could hear the argument in response to it from the minister, but that will not advance the situation very much.

Mr. McIlraith: The answer is very simple. It is that the government prefers to take the advice of the police authorities responsible in this case, plus the advice of the responsible legal authorities, rather than the advice of the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, that is the usual snide type of remark the Prime Minister makes. Can we not have a sensible answer to a constructive question on a most important matter?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

KIDNAPPING OF JAMES CROSS—EFFICIENCY OF POLICE INVESTIGATIONS

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a supplementary question.

Considering that more than a month has elapsed since Mr. James Cross was abducted and that the people of Canada are concerned about the delay in capturing the abductors, would the Solicitor General satisfy this House and the Canadian public that the searches are being carried out in a truly efficient way by the various police forces of Canada?

[English]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to give the House the assurance that effective police work is being done by all the responsible authorities in an attempt to solve these cases.

Mr. Woolliams: My question is not a supplementary but it is certainly related. In light of the Prime Minister's statement—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question would have to be supplementary before the Chair could recognize the hon. member now. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands would normally be recognized at this time unless there is a supplementary question.

QUEBEC—INFORMATION CONCERNING ALLEGED DISCUSSIONS ON ESTABLISHMENT OF PROVISIONAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): My question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the Prime Minister has confided to the press that the government has "solid information" regarding alleged discussions for the setting up of a provisional government in Quebec, the said discussions having taken place in that province prior to October 16, is the Prime Minister prepared to take the House into his confidence and give to hon. members the contents of this solid information regarding the incident in question?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the solid information I referred to, when asked by the press if I had any solid information and my answer was yes, is the facts that have been laid before the country by the person who was involved in this, in an editorial last Friday.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): In view of that—

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): As a supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I see the difficulty of the hon. member for Calgary North and I will recognize him in a moment. In the meantime I will allow the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands a supplementary question. I will return to the hon. member for Calgary North in due course.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister if, in this solid information which the government has, there is any indication that the discussions regarding the setting up of a provisional government in the province of Quebec contemplated any unconstitutional or illegitimate actions to establish such a government?

Mr. Trudeau: None that I know of, Mr. Speaker, but they were obviously predicated on the fact that a government that had been elected six months before with an overwhelming majority of seats was now, in the mind of this person, so unstable and unlikely to last that he was contemplating a means to replace it.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I ask if this solid information, which the government alleges it has in its possession, was a factor in the government deciding to proclaim the War Measures Act?

Mr. Trudeau: I have answered this all last week, Mr. Speaker, during which time the opposition was busy spreading this rumour; the answer was no and it still is no.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary North.

Inquiries of the Ministry

QUEBEC—ALLEGED PLOT TO ESTABLISH PROVISIONAL GOVERNMENT—LAYING OF CHARGES

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, in light of the Prime Minister's statements today and the statements he made on Friday regarding a plot to create a provisional government in Quebec, are charges being laid against any person under the War Measures Act, the sedition sections of the Criminal Code or any other sections of the code in view of the solid information he says he has?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): None that I know, Mr. Speaker, and I would even say I think not. The solid information was the fact that these conversations had taken place. Had I in this House, when asked about these rumours, said I knew nothing about them I would not have been telling the truth. Had I confirmed them I would have been accused of spreading the rumours. Therefore I told the House I did not want to deny or confirm such rumours.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Justice. In view of the facts set out by the Prime Minister in the House today and also on Friday, has any thought been given to laying a charge of criminal conspiracy in respect of illegal discussions and agreements in the conversations the Prime Minister has discussed?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): No Sir.

BROADCASTING

PROVISION OF SECOND TELEVISION CHANNEL IN SYDNEY, N.S.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the Secretary of State who reports to the House for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the Canadian Radio-Television Commission. It is further to previous questions I have posed on the same subject. Has a decision been reached as yet on the provision of a second television service for Cape Breton Island and eastern Nova Scotia? If the minister has not got the information at hand, would he immediately check with the CRTC and the CBC to ascertain what progress is being made and how soon this service will be available to the many taxpayers concerned?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the matter is still under consideration as part of the CBC's capital expenditure projects. I have followed the matter closely but, for the moment, I would like to take notice of the exact question put by the hon. member in order to give him as soon as possible the very latest information on this matter.

[English]

Mr. Muir: I thank the minister for his reply. At the same time would he also investigate the alternative of providing cable television to the area in question, and report back to the House?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

MEETING OF GOVERNMENT, BUSINESS AND LABOUR ON PRICE RESTRAINTS FOR 1971

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Is the government planning to call in the very near future a meeting of government, business and labour to discuss the matter of price restraints for 1971 in view of the fact that the heads of the principal business organizations in Canada have stated recently that their members will not continue to practise price restraint in 1971 unless organized labour agrees to restrain its demands for increased wages and in view of the fact that in the past two or three days the leaders of organized labour have also stated they have no intention of doing so?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, although I do not accept that the submissions were made in the terms of the hon. member's question, I have already been advised by the chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission that he is still discussing these matters with the people mentioned by the hon. member.

Mr. Hees: Does the minister not consider that time has run out and that these decisions must be made before the end of the year or price restraint will cease to exist?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is now submitting an argument in support of his question and I have to presume that his submission will be taken into consideration by the minister in reaching his decision.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

MONTREAL—ALLEGED EDITING OF NEWS BY MAYOR

Mr. Pierre De Bané (Matane): I want to put a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

I should like to ask the Secretary of State whether he could check the charges brought against the CBC by one of its employees to the effect that the Corporation allows the mayor of Montreal to edit the news, to preview broadcasts before they are normally put on the air and to select the accompanying news clips. Is the minister ready to ask the CBC to find out whether these charges are justified?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Muir.]

[English]

SPECIAL INSTRUCTIONS RESPECTING NEWS PROGRAMS

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): I have a question for the Secretary of State, Mr. Speaker, also involving the CBC. Have any special instructions been given to the CBC or Radio-Canada affecting the corporation, either in English or in French, as to the dissemination of news since the proclamation of the War Measures Act? If so, would the minister make a statement in the House, if any such special instructions have been given, as to how the news is to be reported?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I do not understand whether the hon. member is referring to instructions given by the government to the CBC, in which case the reply would be no. If he is referring to directions given by the CBC to its reporters and commentators, I would have to inquire from the CBC in order to give the hon. member a detailed reply.

[English]

Mr. Nowlan: Perhaps I lost the translation as I stood up, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister mean that he will inquire whether such instructions have been given and that he is prepared to make a statement to the House?

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, if I may be allowed to answer the first part of the question pertaining to instructions given by the government to the CBC, the answer is no. With regard to whether the CBC itself has given instructions to the information, news and public affairs services, it is public knowledge that the president of the CBC at a certain point made public the recommendations he had made to those services to exercise restraint. I do not know of any instructions other than those but I shall inquire and answer the hon. member's question later.

ARREST OF CERTAIN NEWS BROADCASTERS UNDER WAR MEASURES ACT

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): My question is directed to the Secretary of State, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask him whether a number of news broadcasters connected with Radio-Canada were picked up by the authorities under the provisions of the regulations under the War Measures Act and, if so, have they since been released?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I know that certain persons connected with the CBC—I could not clearly state whether they were employees or merely free-lance contributors—have been arrested and later released. I could not give the hon. member the precise information he requested, but such information must certainly be available either from the CBC or the Quebec Minister of Justice, and I can make inquiries if the right hon. representative is interested.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I think that information should be available because over a year ago the matter was brought before the House and the Secretary of State at that time apparently did not know of the existence of these FLQ people—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not believe the right hon. member is asking a supplementary question. The hon. member for Fraser Valley West on a supplementary.

OPPORTUNITY FOR REBUTTAL ON PROGRAM, "WEEKEND"

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State if he will investigate whether or not it is the policy of the CBC television program, "Weekend", to allow anyone criticized on that program the opportunity of rebuttal on a subsequent show, or is this privilege confined to cabinet ministers such as—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's supplementary question is obviously an argument or a grievance. I would not think it is a legitimate question. If hon. members will allow me, we will try to go to another subject at this point.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MEETING BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND PRIME MINISTER OF ISRAEL

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister met with Prime Minister Golda Meir today to discuss matters of mutual concern to both countries? If so, has he anything to communicate to the House about possible changes in Canada's attitude toward the Middle East situation, or anything of interest to tell the House?

An hon. Member: Or about the War Measures Act.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I had a very interesting meeting indeed with the Prime Minister of Israel. We talked essentially about the Middle East and the problems there, and there is nothing at this time that I can communicate to the House.

An hon. Member: Does she have a War Measures Act?

Mr. Trudeau: Don't you know?

NATIONAL SECURITY

WAR MEASURES ACT—ARRESTS, RELEASES, CONTINUING DETENTIONS AND CHARGES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice will recall that last week I asked him two or three times how many persons were being held under the War Measures Act regulations beyond the period of seven days at the request of the Minister of Justice of the province of Quebec or of any province?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I can give the hon. gentleman and the House the statistics as I have them as of 11 p.m. last night. Four hundred and twenty people have been arrested and 286 released; therefore 134 are still detained. Answering his question of last week, I can say that none of those who have been released have been charged. No charges have yet been laid against those still detained. I still have not been able to obtain a breakdown of how many have been held after seven days but I assume that I can obtain this information at an early date. The statistics I have been given have not been broken down that way.

Mr. Stanfield: Would it be fair to assume at this date that a very substantial percentage of the 132 people being held have now been held for more than seven days?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I would not like to assume that, no.

Mr. Stanfield: Is it so difficult for the minister to obtain this information which it seems to me is highly relevant to the current situation?

Mr. Baldwin: The Prime Minister makes irrelevant statements.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): They are not irrelevant. I have received every co-operation from the Attorney General of the province of Quebec, but for this particular breakdown I have not been able to get the figures.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): May I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice, Mr. Speaker. When he reports on that matter, will he also report on approximately how many people are still being sought?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I will report on this.

[Later:]

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Justice whether, among the total of 420 people who have been arrested, there are any who were arrested, released and then arrested again?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I do not have that information, but I will obtain it.

INDUSTRY

FINANCIAL SETTLEMENT WITH DOSCO SHAREHOLDERS—SUBMISSION TO HOUSE

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): While I have the floor, Mr. Speaker, I should like to reply to the hon.

member for Cape Breton-East Richmond who directed a number of questions to the Prime Minister and myself last week. I now have the answers, if you will allow me to give them. The hon. member asked first of all:

Prior to any government financial settlement with the shareholders of Dosco, will this matter be brought before the House for agreement?

My answer is that no settlement of the amount of compensation has yet been reached between Cape Breton Development Corporation—Devco—and the former owners of the assets expropriated by Devco on March 30, 1968. It will be a matter of government policy whether or not any proposed settlement with the former owners is brought before the House. I would point out to the hon. member, however, that there is no requirement in the Cape Breton Development Corporation Act for so doing.

His second question was:

—will the Prime Minister also inquire of the Minister of Justice whether the list of shareholders will be made available along with the dates when the shares were acquired by the individuals?

The answer is that Devco did not expropriate the shares of the companies involved in this acquisition but, rather, expropriated the physical assets of those companies which were located in Cape Breton. Accordingly, Devco has no records of the shareholders of those companies and therefore is not in a position to supply the information requested. For the same reason, Devco is unable to supply the text of any agreement between the shareholders of the companies and Dosco.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, since the minister has taken the opportunity to answer those questions, I would ask if he would take a good hard look at any arrangement that the government makes in order to save itself millions of dollars?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is making a representation which he must assume will be taken into account.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

TAKEOVER OF RYERSON PRESS BY UNITED STATES COMPANY—FOREIGN OWNERSHIP POLICY

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Is the minister investigating the reported sale of Ryerson Press to the Canadian subsidiary of a United States company? Can he report on the present situation and can he also indicate whether the government is contemplating any action similar to that taken with respect to Denison Mines earlier this year?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is no law under my jurisdiction which would give me authority to investigate such a sale.

Mr. Burton: May I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. In view of the statements made by the right hon. gentleman and the Minister of National Revenue that it will be some time before the government is able to make public or indicate its policy with respect to foreign ownership, is the government giving consideration to an interim policy to deal with problems and situations such as this one that are likely to arise?

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): An interim policy—no, Mr. Speaker. There have been ad hoc decisions which the House knows very well, and in that sense I suppose these could be termed an interim policy, but as requested by the House we have hoped that all these ad hoc decisions would be replaced eventually by a more general policy. I know that the party of the hon. member is having some difficulty in reaching its general policy; perhaps we could have a race.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Will the minister undertake to investigate the particular matter of the sale of Ryerson Press to determine what action might be taken by the federal government or other jurisdiction to save a very important industry for Canada?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is probably referring to the Combines Investigation Act which comes under my department. There is no evidence that I am aware of connected with the sale or proposed sale of Ryerson Press to show that it is a breach of the Combines Investigation Act.

HEALTH

REQUEST FOR COMMISSION TO STUDY QUACKERY AND CHIROPRACTIC TREATMENT

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can the minister indicate whether he has received a communication from the Canadian Medical Association recommending that a commission be set up to study and report on health quackery and chiropractic treatment in Canada? Also, can the minister indicate what action, if any, has been taken on this matter?

An hon. Member: That's a new twist.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I believe, Mr. Speaker, that such a communiqué has been received. I am not in a position at this time to indicate to the hon. member what action, if any, will be taken with respect to the communiqué. I would hope to be in a position to advise him later.

Mr. Yewchuk: Would the minister say whether he will make a statement on motions in this regard?

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether a statement on motions will be necessary or whether I can just advise the House and the hon. member when I have the floor in answer to another question.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CUBA AND ALGERIA—ALLEGED PRESENCE OF FLQ ELEMENTS

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Has he met representatives of Cuba and Algeria in order to know if some FLQ members would now be in those countries?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, we have had no such conversations with the governments of Cuba or Algeria. Of course, we did make contact with them, for example, before making our offer of safe conduct to Cuba. That offer could not have been made without the agreement of the government of Cuba.

[Translation]

CUBA—ALLEGED OFFER OF SAFE CONDUCT TO PAUL ROSE AND ASSOCIATES

TIME OF DEBATE ON PUBLIC ORDER (TEMPORARY MEASURES) BILL—REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Government House Leader when the government intends to initiate debate on the bill introduced today by the Minister of Justice and whether it is the intention of the government that examination of the bill be undertaken by the Committee of the Whole in lieu of a standing committee?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I propose that we begin discussion of the bill on Wednesday. It is the intention of the government to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole.

POLLUTION

WABIGOON—ENGLISH RIVER SYSTEM—ACTION TO ELIMINATE MERCURY CONTAMINATION OF FISH AND PROTECT HEALTH OF INDIANS

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): My question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry who deals also with matters of pollution. It is based on the allegation of the Ontario Water Resources Commission that mercury pollution originating from Dryden Chemicals Limited has affected fish for hundreds of miles down the Wabigoon-

English River system as far as Hudson Bay. Has the federal government entered into discussions with the appropriate Ontario and Manitoba authorities concerning this critical situation? Also, what steps have been taken to protect the health of Indians in the area who have no alternative to fish as a staple in their food diet?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, we are continuously in touch with both the province of Ontario and the province of Manitoba in this connection. With respect to fishermen, including native fishermen, we have been purchasing all the fish offered regardless of their mercury content, or making loans where the lakes were closed.

[Later:]

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): My question is supplementary to one asked earlier of the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry but is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It is with regard to the alarming mercury poisoning. Will the minister inquire to ascertain whether the results of blood tests carried out on native Indians, particularly Indian children, could be communicated to the band chief in the area concerned?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I see no objection to that.

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Fisheries. Is the minister prepared to take action under the provisions of the Canada Water Act to combat the extensive mercury pollution in the river systems around Dryden, Ontario?

Mr. Davis: Yes, Mr. Speaker, but I do not see an immediate application of the Canada Water Act.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MIDDLE EAST—CANADIAN REACTION TO BRITISH POLICY STATEMENT

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It is based upon the comprehensive policy statement made by the British Foreign Secretary on the Middle East situation. Can the minister advise whether the Canadian government had foreknowledge of this important policy statement? Does the Canadian government look with favour upon the suggestions of the British for ameliorating this difficult situation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have doubts about the question of the hon. member, particularly the second part. However, the matter is of interest. Perhaps the minister might be allowed to reply, with the consent of the House.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I was not personally aware of the contents of the British statement in advance, Mr. Speaker. I will look at it to see whether I care to comment.

AGRICULTURE

PRICE OF DRESSED HOGS—ACTION UNDER AGRICULTURAL STABILIZATION ACT

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. On October 27 I asked the Parliamentary Secretary if the minister or the government were prepared to initiate action under the Agricultural Stabilization Act to make payments to hog producers in the Prairie provinces in view of the fact that the price for hogs, basis dressed weight, has fallen below the support price of $22.17 per hundredweight. Can the minister now reply to this question?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker. With regard to this question I may say the mandatory price support for hogs under the Agricultural Stabilization Act is calculated on a national weighted average price to producers which currently is $23.74. I wish to advise the hon. member that the national weighted price for hogs for all of 1970 and up to and including October 10 was $31.95 per hundredweight.

INTERPROVINCIAL MARKETING—REQUEST FOR REFERENCE TO SUPREME COURT

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): My question is for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the continued concern of provincial authorities and the agricultural industry over the conflicting views concerning jurisdiction with regard to interprovincial trade, does the government now intend to ask for a Supreme Court reference in this matter?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): No, Mr. Speaker. After conversations with officials of my own department as well as officials of the provincial Departments of Agriculture, I am convinced that the most satisfactory solution is to proceed with Bill C-176. I say that for reasons I have explained in this House many times.

Mr. Danforth: I wish to ask a supplementary question based on the answer of the minister. The bill is very complex. Can the minister indicate how soon after the passage of the bill we may expect it to have some influence on this very serious problem?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt whether the question is in order.

NATIONAL AND ROYAL ANTHEMS

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): I have a question for the Government House Leader. I had no success last session with his predecessor on this matter. Can the minister indicate whether legislation will be introduced this session dealing with Canada's national and/or royal anthems?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): It is possible that the House will deal with this question this session, Mr. Speaker. I am presently considering when and how this might be done.

PENSIONS

RECIPROCAL AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It is based on assurances of progress given several times last session by the minister. Has a reciprocal pension agreement between Canada and the Federal Republic of Germany yet been reached?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Agreement has not yet been reached, Mr. Speaker. I visited Germany with my officials. Approximately two weeks ago we had a very extensive meeting with representatives of the German government. Another such meeting is planned for this month in the hope that agreement will be reached in the early part of January. If this schedule is adhered to, it will not be implemented until it has been dealt with by the German parliament.

NATIONAL SECURITY

MURDER OF PIERRE LAPORTE, KIDNAPPING OF JAMES CROSS—ANNOUNCEMENT OF OFFER OF REWARDS

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of the question period a question was directed to me concerning a reward. I answered that this matter was under very close consideration by the two governments, the federal government and the government of Quebec. I now wish to add to that answer. A reward has now been authorized and a statement has been given to the press.

Some hon. Members: How much?

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): May I ask the minister how much the reward will amount to, who authorized it and when it will be made available?

Mr. McIlraith: It has been authorized by the governments directly concerned, Mr. Speaker. There are several rewards involved, and it is up to the figure indicated in the press release. The total amount is quite adequate.

An hon. Member: Will you share the press release?

Mr. McIlraith: I will be very glad to bring the press release before the House immediately the final revision is issued.

Mr. Hees: I rise on a question of privilege. When the question was asked a short time ago the minister said this decision had not been made and gave no indication that it would be made. Now he says that a press release has been issued. Obviously the answer he gave me is in contravention of the rules of the House. It is about time you started treating this House with some respect instead of insulting it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. McIlraith: On a charge like that, Mr. Speaker, I believe it is only fair that I have an opportunity to reply. I have sought to show respect to Parliament and to the other government concerned in this matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McIlraith: The press release was issued at 2.40, Mr. Speaker. The information I gave in answer to the question by the Leader of the Opposition was precisely correct at that point of time. It had not been decided to issue the press release at that time for a very good reason.

Mr. Hees: If the press release was issued at 2.40, it was obviously prepared a long time before that. What was the reason for not giving this information to the House when I asked for it?

Mr. McIlraith: I would be glad to give the reason.

Mr. Hees: Well, let's have it.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Will the minister clear up something that must be in the minds of everyone? I refer to the fact that it took so long before you made this decision. Would you mind explaining to the House and the country why there was such a delay?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, I will be glad to.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Both the hon. member for Calgary North and the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings have addressed themselves to the minister. They should address their questions to the Chair.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated last week, this matter was under continuous consideration from day to day. As to what arose today, at two o'clock, after the bell started to ring summoning the House to meet, a new matter arose that completely changed the answer that I would have given at five minutes to two. That matter had to be checked out, and it was checked out between two and 2.40. Surely hon. members are capable of understanding a simple matter like that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. There are two or three supplementaries. I recognize the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands on a supplementary.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, members can understand that the Solicitor General had to have the concurrence of the government of Quebec before the decision and the announcement could be made. When did the government of Canada and the government of Quebec reach the decision that a reward would be offered; and when was the press release prepared announcing that such a decision had been reached?

Mr. McIlraith: The final draft of the press release would have been made some time about two o'clock today.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): When was the decision made?

Mr. McIlraith: The decision that a reward would be authorized, if and when the circumstances warranted it and it would not do more damage than good in view of other elements that may have arisen in the consideration of the criminal cases, was made, many days, indeed some weeks, ago.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair will allow the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings a supplementary.

Mr. Hees: Would the Solicitor General now advise the House what important information came to his attention at two o'clock to make him change his mind?

Mr. McIlraith: No, Mr. Speaker, I would not be in a position to give that information at this time. I would be very happy to give the information, and I hope I can give it soon so that the House will have the opportunity of assessing for itself how utterly irresponsible the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings is in these matters.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me we are now getting into a debate between the minister and the hon. member, and certainly that would not be very helpful.

Mr. Hees: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the minister accused me of being utterly irresponsible.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: I asked him a very responsible and important question and he gave me an answer contrary to the facts just announced. I asked him what had changed his mind, and he replied that I was irresponsible for asking that question.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Hees: That is the sort of nonsense that we get from this government day after day.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before calling orders of the day, I believe the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond has a supplementary.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I have a supplementary question for the Solicitor General. At 2.15 the Solicitor General said that the government was giving consideration to the offering of a reward. Now the Solicitor General informs the House that the government of Canada has decided to offer a reward. Am I to understand from this statement that the government of Canada does not exist, or the Prime Minister and the other cabinet ministers in the House today?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Again I suggest, with respect, that this is developing into a debate between hon. members and the minister. If the House will agree to return to the item "First Reading of Senate public Bills", I understand there is an item that should have been called at that point.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

STATISTICS ACT

ESTABLISHMENT OF STATISTICS CANADA, PROVISIONS FOR ADMINISTRATION, ETC.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce) moved the first reading of Bill S-2 (from the Senate), respecting statistics of Canada.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day. Is the Secretary of State for External Affairs seeking the floor on a point of order or question of privilege?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Before moving to orders of the day may I have the permission of the House to revert to motions in order to make a statement that I would have made at the opening of the House today, one that I think it is urgent to make but was prevented from doing so because of a meeting with the Prime Minister of Israel?

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SOUTH AFRICA—ANNOUNCEMENT OF ENLARGING OF EMBARGO ON CANADIAN ARMS EXPORTS

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the government has been reviewing its policy with regard to the application of the embargo against the export of arms to South Africa. This review was undertaken as a result of Security Council Resolution 282 of July 23, 1970, which elaborated upon the terms of the Security Council's 1963 resolutions on this subject. Since the latest resolution went beyond the terms of the arms embargo as originally established, thorough consideration was called for to determine what steps the government should take in compliance with the terms of the new Security Council resolution.

The Canadian government has since 1963 applied a general embargo on arms exports to South Africa. Exceptions were made, however, to allow for shipment of maintenance spares for equipment supplied before the 1963 resolutions were adopted, as well as for export of certain aircraft piston engines and spares for them.

In light of the review just completed, the government has decided that henceforth the supply of all vehicles and equipment, and the supply of spare parts for vehicles and equipment, for the use of the armed forces and paramilitary organizations of the Republic of South Africa will be prohibited.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: In addition, certain aircraft piston engines and maintenance spares for such engines, previously exempted from the government's application of the embargo, will no longer be supplied for military use by the armed forces or paramilitary organizations in South Africa.

In complying with the recent United Nations resolution on this subject, the government does not intend that normal trade with South Africa in goods for civilian use should be affected.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): May I just say very briefly, Mr. Speaker, by way of immediate comment that I really do not believe that the government of Canada had very much alternative to the course it has just announced in view of the position taken by the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) on British arms shipments to South Africa.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, we have long advocated this action and naturally we welcome it. We do question why it took so long and why it was necessary to wait until this time. Be that as it may, I hope the government is giving consideration to changing another anomaly in our relations with South Africa. We pronounce our detestation of the principles of apartheid, yet at the same time give special, preferential treatment to South Africa as though it were still a nation of the Commonwealth. I am wondering whether the time has not come for that part of our anomalous and sometimes hypocritical policy to be reviewed.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

TAX REVIEW BOARD BILL

ESTABLISHMENT, DUTIES, APPEALS, ORGANIZATION, ETC.

The House resumed, from Friday, October 30, consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) that Bill C-174, to establish the Tax Review Board and to make certain amendments to other acts in relation thereto, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that, as a result of a change in the order of business, this item was called on Friday afternoon rather than today as had been announced last Thursday. Prior to the minister making his statement on Friday, I would have liked to raise the point of order that I am now going to raise with regard to another rather poorly drafted recommendation.

This is not a major point but it is one which I think strikes at the logic and consistency of a proper application of the recommendations. Your Honour will recall that the other day I had some words to say about these particular recommendations, the manner in which they were being drafted and the improprieties of them. The government must face up to the responsibility of making appropriate recommendations to this House because the expenditure of money is only authorized by recommendations meeting the legislation and authorization given by Parliament. In this particular connection, I would draw to Your Honour's attention paragraph 2 of the recommendation which reads as follows:

To provide also that the salaries, travelling allowances and annuities payable to members, former members and widows of former members shall be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, and that all other expenditures shall be paid out of moneys appropriated by Parliament for the purpose.

The provision in this recommendation is implemented by clause 16 at page 7 of the bill. I will not go into the reading of that particular clause, but if Your Honour will turn to page 16 of the bill you will see there clause 23, subclause (2) which reads as follows:

Subsection (2) of Section 9 of the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

(2) All benefits and other amounts required to be paid pursuant to this Act shall be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund and, except in the case of benefits calculated by reference to annuities payable under the Governor General's Retiring Annuity Act, the Judges' Act or the Tax Review Board Act shall be charged to the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Account.

The provision in respect of these benefits, which incidentally are the supplementary benefits, the 2 per cent annual increments to cover increases in the cost of living, etc., and we all know about those, are therefore part of the statute law and are statutory estimates. They do not require a particular item in the annual estimates, yet if one reads the recommendation, one does not see the word "benefits". If you look at the definition of "benefit" under the Act one must conclude that such benefits are considered as separate and distinct from the annuities upon which they are calculated. This is made clear by Section 6 of the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act. That section reads:

The supplementary retirement benefits payable to a recipient shall be paid at the same times, in the same manner, during or in respect of the same periods and subject to the same terms and conditions as the pension payable to that recipient.

Then, pension is defined by Section 3(1)(d) as follows:

—"pension" means a pension, annual allowance or annuity payable pursuant to an enactment listed or described in Schedule A.

I would put it to you, therefore, that benefits under the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act are not part of the annuity but are supplementary to it. Therefore, the net result of this is that whereas the act purports to make a statutory payment out of the benefits under clause 16, the recommendation does not mention benefits and does not appropriate them to a charge on the Consolidated Revenue Fund. All I am saying is that the act purports to do one thing and the recommendation forces Parliament to do something else. I say it certainly could be corrected but I point out to Your Honour that in my submission, and I think on review perhaps Your Honour will agree, the recommendation should be amended. I am not going to hold up the passage of the bill pending this necessary amendment to the recommendations. I am certain it is not as pertinent as it was the other day in respect of the Investment Companies Act wherein the flaw in the recommendation was vital to it.

Having said that, unless Your Honour or the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) wishes to make some comment—

Mr. Speaker: I assumed the hon. member rose on a point of order at this stage. He has raised an interesting point on which the Minister of Justice might like to comment before an opinion is expressed by the Chair as to whether or not this bill should be allowed to proceed at this time.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I do not want to hold it up.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): On the point of order, I am not sure the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) is really considering it in that precise form since he has generously suggested he would not want to hold up the bill. May I submit to Your Honour that a recommendation both under the new and old rules never, so far as I can find, mentions item by item those charges on ways and means. I suggest these words found in the recommendation "salary, travel allowances and annuities" are certainly wide enough to include the term "benefit". These are generic terms general enough to include any specific items. The concluding words of the second paragraph of the recommendation, namely that all other expenditures shall be paid out of money appropriated by Parliament for the purpose, would include any specific funds already authorized other than the Consolidated Revenue Fund to be paid by parliament.

I submit to Your Honour that the recommendation in amplitude is wide enough to cover any of the specifics in the individual parts of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Waterloo rising on a point of order?

Mr. Saltsman: No, Mr. Speaker, not on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: My understanding of the point raised by the hon. member, as part of his submission, is that perhaps we should not hold up the consideration of the bill at this stage. Both the hon. member for Edmonton West and the hon. Minister of Justice have submitted very potent arguments. I have very often felt it should not be necessary that our recommendations should attempt to go into all the details of the bill because we are bound to get into difficulties. It is only normal that some aspects of the bill should be overlooked and in this case the recommendation becomes faulty. I have very often felt it would be sufficient for His Excellency to advise us in writing that he had looked at the bill and finds it is all right, so we should proceed with it. In my view, this would be sufficient.

This is a constitutional position and we want to know whether His Excellency thinks this is a bill with which we can proceed. If he tells us that in three words, we should take his word for it. If the law officers of the Crown or of Parliament want to go into the details trying to cover the field they will necessarily get into difficulty, the type of difficulty the hon. member for Edmonton West has just drawn to our attention.

In any event, I suggest that with the consent of the House we proceed with a consideration of the bill at this stage. The argument and position explained by the hon. member for Edmonton West will be looked into perhaps a little more closely at the time we reach another stage of the consideration of this bill. The Chair may then give a ruling and if the recommendation is found defective it can be remedied at that time.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I suggest that the amendment could be slight, requiring only one or two words. This would clear up the matter. In any event, I think I have made my point.

I should like to refer to the minister's statement of the other day, and I realize he is having to leave the House for other reasons. I hope we can welcome him back very shortly. In any event, this bill had its origin in the recommendations of the Carter commission. That commission indicated something I, too, have found over the years, particularly when I was connected with the Department of National Revenue as Parliamentary Secretary. The operations of the tax appeal board do become much too formal and very often assume the unnecessary trappings and formality of a court. Over the years it had become really a tax court, and that, in effect, is what the Carter Commission wanted. I think we are engaging in a sort of exercise in semantics or perhaps moving the men around on a chess board by saying that all the functions of the Tax Appeal Board, as it now exists shall be transferred to a tax appeal court which is part of the federal court set up under Bill C-172. I believe there is now a great deal of activity that really will be for nought. I cannot accept the minister's wishful thinking that this body, as he says, will be so informal that a mere letter or piece of paper sent in to the board will suffice to launch an appeal and that it can be done by a neighbour, accountant or someone on a very informal basis to just one commissioner and so on. This raises a great number of questions.

First of all, I wonder about precedents. Are all the precedents of the tax appeal board and the interpretations of the Income Tax Act to be set aside by this bill? Will this tax review board start afresh and say it entirely discards the decisions of the tax appeal board? If that is so, then there will be a complete revolution in respect of the Income Tax Act and the interpretations thereof. That is the first point. If there are to be precedents, then immediately I suggest to the minister and to his Parliamentary Secretary that some of the informality will be gone because expert tax accountants and expert tax lawyers will be the ones who will approach the tax review board and point out the existence of certain previous interpretations of the law.

Another point is that I think the bill proceeds per incuriam, that is, frankly in ignorance of the provisions of the Canada Evidence Act because in clause 9(2) it says that the board will not be bound by any legal or technical rules of evidence in conducting a hearing for the purposes of that act. I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, that under no circumstances can we circumvent the rights granted by the Canada Evidence Act or the evidence act of any particular province by such provisions setting up a tax review board act. The right granted under the Canada Evidence Act is a fundamental right. It cannot be set aside very lightly by provisions such as those in clause 9(2). That is another question I raise.

Then, I want to ask questions concerning the mandatory requirement that all hearings shall be by one member. The minister indicated that he felt the hearings before the tax appeal board had become fishing expeditions or a form of preliminary hearing. In fact the Department of National Revenue people having seen the whole of the taxpayer's case would then be able to judge whether they should go to the Exchequer Court and could prepare their case before the higher court on the basis of what had been presented before the Tax Appeal Board. With the greatest respect, I ask just how this will differ. The taxpayer, in order to try to convince the tax review board, will have to lay out his entire case.

I am sure that neither the minister nor his parliamentary secretary will say for one moment that no one from the tax department will be present before the tax review board. The case will be laid out, and the mandatory requirement is that it be before one commissioner. What a fishing expedition for the Department of National Revenue this could turn out to be, if such appearances were ever fishing expeditions or preliminary hearings. I do not think the Minister of Justice remembers all of the Income Tax Act. I believe he forgets the fact that he practised law with a firm that enjoys probably the greatest reputation in Canada as a tax advisory legal firm. Before appearing before the tax review board the taxpayer will have to lay out his case before the deputy minister because the appeal must be to the deputy minister. The assessment is varied, vacated or confirmed. If it should be confirmed, or merely varied, the next recourse to the taxpayer will be to go before the tax review board. A look at the amendments to the Income Tax Act, as put forward in this bill, would indicate that the appeal to the deputy minister has not been eliminated. Therefore, the deputy minister has the first shot at the taxpayer's case.

Secondly, before the tax review board proposed under this bill, the taxpayer will have to lay out all his cards. The tax authorities will see the strength of his case. Then, if the department is not satisfied with the decision of the tax review board, proceedings will be started in the trial division of the federal court. I admit that until that proposed stage the taxpayer has not been involved in any costs, even if he loses, apart from his own solicitor-client costs. However, if he should go to the trial division of the federal court, in the event that the amount of the tax payable is in excess of $1,000 costs may be assessed. If the amount of the tax payable is less than $1,000, then in no instance will he pay costs since under this bill there is a direction that the costs will be paid by the Crown in all appeals involving a tax liability of $1,000 or less. This is excellent but the minister, however, cannot eliminate the opportunity for a fishing expedition.

I believe the minister was quite right and that the government has moved appropriately in placing this body under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Justice rather than under the Minister of National Revenue. Successive ministries have continued to have the Tax Appeal Board report to Parliament. Mind you, the board also reports to Parliament in this particular instance. The Tax Appeal Board reported to Parliament through the Minister of National Revenue and he made the recommendation for appointment to it. To that extent, I think there was a weakness. Now, the appointments will be on the recommendation of the Minister of Justice. But I believe the federal court and the tax review board will be more under the imprint of the government rather than Parliament than hitherto.

I would have liked to have seen this bill tidy up or remove entirely the appeal provisions from the Income Tax Act, but such is not the case and, frankly, we have a somewhat bastard way of drafting the legislation. The net result is a complete lacuna in a certain sector. I will come to that in a moment. In any event, I agree that it is a constructive move to place this Tax Review Board under the aegis of the Minister of Justice.

My next comment relates to the appointment of judges to age 70 to the federal court. This provision first appeared in Bill C-172. When the minister answers questions I would like to hear him tell us whether it is now government policy that all appointments to the bench be up to age 70 and that if there are any openings under the Judges Act this year, as was forecast in the Speech from the Throne, the provision regarding appointment of judges up to age 70 in the superior courts of the provinces will apply. Is it now a general policy of the government that appointments to the courts in Canada will be only to age 70?

The minister, in justifying appointments to age 70, indicated that hitherto under the Income Tax Act, division I, appointments were for periods of 10 years, and since it was deemed insecure, the best possible men could not be obtained. I should like to disabuse the minister's mind in this regard, because I do not think any administration failed to reappoint men who were competent. Generally, all men have seen out their time. There may have been the odd exception, but I do not accept for one moment the contention of the minister that appointments for 10 years to the Tax Appeal Board have created any difficulty among persons who have been appointed to the board in the past. What the minister proposes to do now indicates a retrograde step in my opinion, in that the present members of the Tax Appeal Board will be treated differently. Under clause 18 (3) and (4) we see that those members of the Tax Appeal Board who have now reached 70 years of age will retire and will be entitled to a full pension. Those members who have not reached age 70 will complete their period of 10 years and will retire with a very small annuity. There may be only one or two in this situation, but they have given a very important segment of their lives to this work. I know the age of one member of the Tax Appeal Board, and it was merely as a result of consulting the record that I am aware of it.

It seems rather odd to me that these two provisions, which do not do the same thing, are contained in the bill. Apparently Exchequer Court judges will continue in the federal court of Canada to age 75, since such were their terms of appointment, but one or possibly two members of the Tax Appeal Board will have their appointments cut off. I think that the only decent thing to have done would have been to guarantee them a reappointment to the Tax Review Board. Strangely enough, as I recall, the one man who is most affected is one whose term expires in two or three years time. In other words, he was appointed by the administration of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). It is a rather strange coincidence, but all the other judges who were appointed by subsequent administrations as well as prior administrations will not be affected. It seems to me that some political axe work is going on right in this clause. The parliamentary secretary may shake his head in injured innocence but that is the result of the legislation.

I would like the minister to explain why he does not give equal treatment to all members of the board. These people came to the board in the normal anticipation, based on years of precedents, of being reappointed to the board. If the name and the constitution of the board is to be changed, why should its members not be able to anticipate reappointment? After all, the man to whom I referred, I think, may have two or three years to go. He will not go on an extended leave but will carry out the duties of one of the members of the Tax Review Board, so why not reappoint him?

I would like to revert to clause 11 (2). This is a requirement which I believe is an improvement. It provides that rules made under this section will be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, and will have no effect unless they have been published in the Canada Gazette; that is quite right. The wording that follows seems strange. It reads:

> —and copies of all rules made under this section shall be laid before Parliament within fifteen days after the making thereof or, if Parliament is not then sitting, on any of the first fifteen days next thereafter that Parliament is sitting.

I suggest that the word "making" is very imprecise. I do not know when the rules are made. Is it when the order in council is approved, or are the rules made when they are published? I suggest to the parliamentary secretary that consideration be given, at the appropriate time, to changing the word "making" to "within 15 days after the publication thereof". Then, we will have a precise date known to everybody. The rules must then be tabled in Parliament within 15 days after the publication thereof. There is no question that the rules do not come into effect until they are tabled in Parliament, but it is their publication in the Canada Gazette that is the crucial date. I suggest to the Parliamentary Secretary that the better wording would be "after the publication thereof" rather than "the making thereof" because we do not know when they were made.

I should like to make one more point. I had some difficult skating to do in and out of many clauses in several bills to get around this point. We know that hitherto all the statutory requirements concerning the Tax Appeal Board were contained in division I of the Income Tax Act. This starts with section 86, and includes sec. 104. This present legislation purports to delete merely a small number of sections in that division of the Income Tax Act. Then, the bill makes what is called consequential amendments to other parts, one of them being section 101 of the Income Tax Act. Strangely enough, however, it fails to recognize that the definition of the word "court" in that whole part of the Income Tax Act is contained in section 104, in which section "court" is defined as being the Exchequer Court. But if we go to Bill C-172 and look at Schedule B, which has the consequential amendments, section 104 is not amended. Therefore, under the Income Tax Act the Exchequer Court is still the Court. This will necessitate some changing around. I merely raise the matter at this point because I would like to have the government prepared to meet the objections to this in committee with an appropriate amendment.

This is merely a minor point, Mr. Speaker. I know it becomes a little tiresome for other hon. members when we are dealing wtih such minor dressing up of legislation, but I think it is better to give the government notice now so that it can consider my objection. If I am wrong, then when we examine the legislation in committee I can be told so, and we will not have to waste a lot of time. The government will be prepared. In a manner of speaking, we have now had the preliminary hearing on this particular bill and the government has seen my case. Having said that there are some things wrong with the bill, I must repeat that I am quite prepared to have second reading given to it and have it referred to the appropriate committee. It may be that the Justice and Legal Affairs is the best committee to which to refer the bill, because this is strictly lawyers' law. Some other bills are scheduled to be referred to that committee which might be more appropriately considered by other committees.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, in trying to determine what is significant about the legislation before us, I think the key was given by the minister in his remarks on Friday when he said that not only should justice be done but it should appear to the public to be done. In many ways, this bill does not change anything substantially. It will make some changes which I believe are improvements, in the sense of assuring the public that not only is justice done but that it will appear to be done.

The idea of providing for judges who will hold office until 70 years of age and not just a ten-year period, is an important consideration in re-assuring any taxpayer who goes before the appeal board. It is also important to remove jurisdiction over the board from the Department of National Revenue and place it under the Department of Justice.

If I might digress for a moment, Mr. Speaker, this is much like everything else that we give to the Department of Justice. Often that department is asked to correct, through legislation, some of the basic flaws in our society. In this case the basic flaw is the tax system. If we had a better tax system there would be small need for this kind of board. As it is, this board will have its hands full, because although the white paper on tax reform started out to remove many of the anomalies that exist in the tax system, I suspect that what we will eventually get will be more of what we had previously. Therefore, the appeal board will be called upon to adjudicate many cases that it would not have to adjudicate at all if we had a proper tax system. This is part of the whole approach we take in our society of providing opportunities, either under the Criminal Code, the Department of Justice, combines legislation or in other ways, to correct basic difficulties that we are not willing to correct by tackling the fundamental problems in our society.

What kind of cases will come before this appeal board? Most of the present cases deal with allowable expenses, the question of whether somebody who has made certain expenditures can charge them as legitimate expenses. They are not cases of fraud, or cases where somebody has been caught in an embarrassing position by not declaring the full amount of his income. These cases occur in marginal areas where a taxpayer says, "This is permissible under the law. I am permitted to go to this convention even though it is taking place in the South Seas, because it is a business expense." Then the department argues, "This is not what the tax laws were designed to encourage."

Other cases concern the distinction between what is a capital gain and what is an ordinary profit, because all kinds of arrangements are made in order to try to get as much income as possible in the form of capital gain rather than as regular income, since at the present time capital gains are not taxed at all and ordinary income is fully taxed.

So long as we have this kind of system, and given the outlook and psychology of our society, it is almost inevitable that people are going to try to take their gains in one form rather than in another and thus minimize their tax liability. This has been the great difficulty facing this court. The court's decisions deal with how a person took his income, and the way he arranged his business life. The white paper on tax reform, which started out to change all this, has created as many difficulties as existed previously. Even if you accept the entire proposals in the white paper, and there seems to be some evidence that they will not be accepted in their entirety, there will still be left a distinction between capital gains and ordinary income. As long as this distinction remains, the courts will be busy trying to clean up this Augean stable. They will be busy all the time because people will try to take their income in a way in which they will not have to pay so much taxes. I do not think courts can reach satisfactory decisions in cases like these, at least satisfactory in the sense that a taxpayer will be completely happy or satisfied that justice has been done to him.

One of the other areas of difficulty is that in many cases what is needed—again this is true in combines legislation—is an advance commitment from the tax department on how it is going to treat certain forms of income. Anyone who wants to minimize his tax liability is not likely to go to the tax department for advice on how to do it. If he is trying to take his income in one form rather than another, and looking for special ways of doing it, he might think that the tax department is not the best adviser in the world for this purpose. Many of the arguments that take place, and the tax assessments which are contested later on, arise from this situation.

We have no great objection to the legislation. We are quite prepared to give it second reading and have it go to committee. The only point we wish to make at this time is the futility of much of this legislation. In the Justice Committee we did try to correct problems that should be corrected in the tax system and, indeed, I do not envy the people who will be called upon to act as judges in these matters.

Having sat in this House for some six years now, I have had considerable experience with the income tax department and their assessments. By and large I must say that I think they have been quite fair and reasonable, that they do not wish to take a position until they have considerable evidence to support their stand. The disagreements that arise are usually disagreements of interpretation of income and allowable expenses and I do not see how this new procedure will change things greatly.

One advantage of the new set-up is that ordinary people, whatever their reasons, will have better access and perhaps feel freer to contest decisions that have gone against them. To the extent that we permit scrutiny of government decisions and civil service decisions, and to the extent that it is clearly demonstrated to ordinary people that we are trying to do this, then I think the legislation is an improvement over what is presently on the books.

[Translation]

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to answer the questions asked by the members who participated in the debate earlier today. However, if the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) reads the speech the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) delivered last Friday when he introduced the bill, as reported in Hansard at page 762 and following, I think he will find the answer to almost all the questions he asked today.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I read it.

Mr. Béchard: Besides, Mr. Speaker, at the very suggestion of the hon. member for Edmonton West, the best time to discuss some technical aspects of the legislation and the details he would like to obtain, is in committee.

I do not want to deal at length here with some points that he has raised. Of course, being an opposition member he sees in certain appointments or in the expiration of the terms of office of certain commissioners a trace of party politics. But this is not at all the case as regards Bill C-174 which is being discussed at the present time.

As the minister has so ably put it and as the two previous speakers have admitted, the legislation has been prepared with a view to speeding up procedures, increasing their efficiency and putting them within reach of the small taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to unduly delay proceedings, but I nevertheless wish to thank the two previous speakers for their constructive remarks.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please, is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I raised a point of order at the beginning of my remarks and I wonder whether the Speaker will give his ruling with regard to it when the bill comes back from the report stage or if there is some other means whereby Mr. Speaker can communicate his ruling on this point of order. If the bill goes to committee now there will not be anything before the House, so I am just raising the question. Perhaps the committee could be advised informally, through usual channels, of Mr. Speaker's views and there we could tidy up matters. If we could have that word while in committee, then perhaps the bill could be brought back shipshape.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I see the point raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and it was my impression that Mr. Speaker was thinking along the lines he has expressed. When the hon. member raised the point at the beginning of his speech, from what I heard, I thought Mr. Speaker was ready to let the bill go through this stage of the proceedings with the possibility of correcting anything that needed to be corrected at a further stage.

Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Canada Co-operatives Association Bill

CANADA CO-OPERATIVES ASSOCIATION BILL

INCORPORATION, ARTICLES OF ASSOCIATION SHARE STRUCTURE, GENERAL POWERS AND DUTIES, ETC.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs) moved that Bill C-177, respecting co-operative associations, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, by way of introduction to this motion for second reading of this bill and reference to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, I should like to say a few words in support of the bill entitled an Act respecting Co-operative Associations. I trust that these remarks in explanation will assist hon. members in their consideration of this lengthy piece of legislation.

As is well known by hon. members knowledgeable in the field of co-operative law, there has never been any federal legislation of general application governing the incorporation and operations of co-operative associations at the federal or national level. Going back into history and checking Hansard, one learns that as early as 1907 a bill passed in this House but fell in the Senate mainly because, as I read the debate, the proposed legislation did not clearly indicate that it was to be operative only in the areas in which the federal Parliament was competent to legislate. Since 1907, the co-operative movement of Canada from time to time has pressed various governments for the passage of such legislation, namely legislation at the federal level allowing for the incorporation and operation of what we could call federal co-operatives. Some years ago, the two largest Canadian co-operative organizations jointly pressed the government for federal legislation on co-operatives. The joint Senate-House Committee on Consumer Credit, which I had the honour of co-chairing with Senator Croll, in its report of April 25, 1967, supported representations made to the government and concluded by way of recommendation "that federal legislation governing the incorporation of co-operatives is long overdue".

The government of that day, headed by Right Hon. Lester Pearson, indicated to the co-operative movement that it was in sympathy with its demands. He said that he and the government would consider carefully introducing before this House a federal co-operatives bill. I am happy, Mr. Speaker, as a member of the government headed by the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to bring this legislation forward after a parliamentary pause of some 63 years—which is somewhat slower than Parliament usually operates. I am glad that after such a long wait the co-operative movement of Canada is now able to see before Parliament a bill which, at the national level, will allow for the incorporation of federal co-operatives.

The absence of a federal co-operatives act should not be taken to mean that no co-operative associations have ever been incorporated by the federal authorities. That is not so, as co-operative associations have, over the years, been incorporated either under the federal companies act—under what used to be the Dominion Companies Act—or by special acts of Parliament. Although the validity of these incorporations was never questioned, it was generally recognized by experts in co-operative law that the Companies Act was not the proper vehicle for incorporating co-operatives and, in recent years, we have adopted a similar policy under which no such incorporations have been allowed to take place.

An obvious question that arises, Mr. Speaker, is: why is the Companies Act unsuitable for co-operatives associations. Or, in other words, why have co-operatives not been incorporated under the Companies Act? Why do we need the special act we are considering today? The answer to this question largely rests on the distinctive nature of a business corporation and a co-operative association. There are, in effect, a number of differences between these two types of organizations, namely, the co-operative association and the business corporation. For the purpose of illustrating the point that the Companies Act is not suited for co-operative associations, I propose to discuss two of the more basic differences.

One of these differences relates to the treatment of surplus or profit resulting from operations. In the case of an ordinary business corporation, generally speaking, such surplus is distributed to the shareholders by way of dividends and there are provisions to that effect in the Companies Act. But in the case of a co-operative association, the surplus of operation is normally distributed to the members or clients of the association on a patronage basis. This means, in effect, that the share of a member of a co-operative association in the surplus of the operation is calculated on the basis of the use he has made of the services of the association. The more he uses the association, the more he receives as his share of the surplus resulting from the operation; whereas shareholders in a corporation receive their dividends regardless of whether they have used the services of the corporation or not.

The second important difference is this: it is a basic principle of co-operative law that a member has only one vote, notwithstanding the amount of his investment in the association. As hon. members know, in the case of an ordinary business corporation, of course, the voting rights of a shareholder are ordinarily dependent on the extent of his investment in the corporation, one share bringing one vote. Again, there are provisions to this effect in the Companies Act. These are but two important differences as between corporate law and co-operative law which render the Companies Act unsuitable for co-operative associations.

As I said before, a number of co-operatives have been incorporated by the federal authorities under the companies act. In doing so, it was recognized that some violence had to be done to some of the provisions of the act, in order to suit the peculiar nature of a co-operative association. That is the reason it was eventually decided that no further incorporation of co-operative associations under the Companies Act should be allowed to take place. That is also one of the reasons we are bringing this legislation forward at this time, so that co-operative associations incorporated at the federal level could be governed by a statute of general application better suited to the special character of their organization than the Companies Act.

Hon. members are aware of the work done by the co-operative movement within the framework of provincial legislation in various fields of economic activity. A few figures might assist in placing in perspective the importance of the co-operative movement in Canada. In 1967, the volume of business for more than 2,500 co-operatives amounted to more than $2.1 billion, an increase of close to a quarter of a million dollars or 11 per cent, over the previous year. Assets totalled $1 billion, of which members' equity represented 47 per cent. Membership at 1,700 million members was up slightly from that of the previous year.

Many co-operative associations desire to serve their members on a multi-provincial or a national basis. We believe that they should have the facilities to do so under legislation of general application well suited to their peculiar nature, as is the case with other types of organizations under the Canada Corporations Act.

I would like to insist on the fact that this bill deals only with the incorporation and operations of federally incorporated co-operatives. It does not touch upon the controversial question whether co-operatives should be subject to the same taxation laws as other types of business. This question, of course, is one for my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), in the context of his proposals for tax reform. That matter will be before this House in due course and upon that Parliament will take whatever decision it deems appropriate. That question does not arise in this debate, which is related to a bill to allow for the federal incorporation of certain entities. As I say, this bill does not touch on that question one way or the other. It does not touch on the question of the tax status of co-operative societies and has no relation to whether this bill should be or should not be passed.

I said in my introductory remarks that this is a long bill, almost an overly long bill. It contains 138 clauses of a rather technical nature. For these reasons, I do not intend to review here the provisions of the bill in any detail. I am sure that the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, to which I hope the bill will be referred, will consider each of these provisions carefully. I and my officials will be readily available when the committee studies the provisions of the bill and goes through them, clause by clause. For the purpose of second reading and reference to the committee, it might be sufficient for me at this time to mention briefly some of the more important features or principles of this legislation. Before doing so, however, I should like to briefly explain to hon. members the various steps that have preceded the presentation of this legislation.

First, there was created in 1965 a study committee to assist the government in the preparation of a bill allowing for the incorporation of co-operative associations at the federal level. This committee was headed by Mr. Louis Lesage, the Director of the Corporations Branch of my department. Also on that committee were Mr. Gordon Blair of Ottawa and Saskatchewan, who has since joined us in this House as the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton, and Mr. Francois Jobin, a Quebec City lawyer, who has since joined the Quebec Department of Financial Institutions, companies and Co-operatives, as Head of the Co-operative Branch. The work of the committee has been most useful to us in the preparation of this bill. I wish now to record our gratitude to the three members of that committee.

As a follow-up to the work of the committee, we consulted a large segment of the co-operative movement, especially those associations that had, from time to time, shown an interest in this kind of legislation. The comments and suggestions that we received, as a result of these consultations, were very precious to us.

Before putting the bill in its final form, my officials also had numerous discussions with provincial officials. We are much indebted to the provinces who have permitted us to draw on their expertise and experience in this field in preparing this legislation. Many of the provisions of this bill have been modelled on provisions now in force in one or the other of the provinces.

Finally, a special word of thanks should go to Mr. R. J. MacMaster of Vancouver, an acknowledged co-operative law expert. Mr. MacMaster's advice and suggestions have been most valuable to us throughout the preparation of Bill C-177.

You will note, in the first clauses of the bill, that a semi-registration system has been adopted for the creation of a new co-operative association. Perhaps this is my western bias coming out, but I think some form of registration system is less cumbersome to administer than a letters patent system of the type now prevailing, for instance, under the Canada Corporations Act. The ministerial discretion, however, is maintained; hence the expression "semi-registration system". Such ministerial discretion is considered normal and necessary in the case of co-operative associations in order to ensure that only "bona fide" co-operative associations be created.

One of the purposes of this bill is to enable co-operative associations to federate on an interprovincial basis, and also to enable individuals desiring to carry on an enterprise on a co-operative basis in more than one province to become incorporated under the federal Companies Act or by special acts to take advantage of the proposed act through a certificate of continuation. For example, if a co-operative association had been incorporated by a special act of this House in 1930 or 1940, it could now come under Bill C-177, by a certification of continuation. The law of general application would apply. There would be a good number of advantages for them following that course of action.

One of the objectives of this legislation is to permit existing co-operatives to federate for either interprovincial or national objects. This will be facilitated by a transjurisdictional transfer procedure which is set out in clauses 7 and 8 of the bill. This is a rather interesting provision. To be effective, such a procedure will require the passing of a permissive act by the province concerned allowing a co-operative association to leave its jurisdiction for the purpose of its being continued or federated or amalgamated under the provisions of this bill. Even then, the transfer from the provincial jurisdiction to the federal jurisdiction could be effected only with the consent of the federal authorities and that of the province concerned. The transfer of a co-operative which ceases to operate on an interprovincial basis could similarly be effected from the federal jurisdiction to a provincial one. This procedure, I should emphasize, is only permissive and will require, to be effective, the consent of all the authorities, federal and provincial.

There are limitations as to the nature of the objects that federal co-operative associations would be allowed to have. These are very important. These limitations are found in paragraphs (a) to (h) of subclause (1) of clause 5 and relate to the business of insurance, telephone, railways, banks, etc. You cannot form a co-operative association to carry on that kind of business. In addition, excepted from the application of the bill are co-operative credit associations, credit unions or Caisses Populaires. It was not believe that federal co-operative associations should be allowed to enter a field that has so far exclusively been controlled by the provinces, that is credit unions and Caisses Populaires.

In the case of the creation of a new co-operative, at least seven natural persons are required to file articles of association, while, in the case of federations, only two existing co-operative associations may file such articles. The reason for having at least seven persons in the case of new co-operative associations is that, in the case of a co-operative association operating on an inter-provincial or national basis, it does not seem unreasonable to require that at least seven persons show an interest in the association to be formed. However, in the case of federations, the number of applicants is only two because federations are usually formed by co-operatives having a sufficiently large number of individuals as members.

Before the association is registered, certain conditions must be complied with. Only a co-operative which would not be confined to provincial objects, which will "carry on its undertaking in two or more provinces" and which will "have a fixed place of business in each province where it carries on its undertaking", will qualify.

Furthermore, and this probably goes without saying, an association will be required to operate on a "co-operative basis". As the purpose and method of operation of a co-operative differ substantially from those of other corporations, it is most important that those who operate companies for other purposes should not be able to do so under the guise of a co-operative name. A co-operative association or federation would be considered to be operated on a co-operative basis if it complies with the requirements set forth in the bill. These are, in effect, the cardinal principles on which co-operative associations are based:

(1) No member, as a rule, shall have more than one vote;

(2) No member, as a rule, shall vote by proxy;

[Mr. Basford.]

(3) Interest on share and loan capital shall not exceed a fixed per cent per annum; and

(4) The business of the association shall be operated as nearly as possible at cost and, after provision for reasonable reserve; any surplus funds arising from the operations of the association shall be distributed wholly or in part among the members or among members and patrons of the association in proportion to the volume of business which they have done with the association.

The charter of the association will be comprised of the memorandum of articles and the charter by-laws. The internal organization of the association will be governed by its by-laws, that is, its charter by-laws and ordinary by-laws.

All of the charter by-laws would have to be enacted by the board of directors and sanctioned by the members either at a special or annual general meeting of members. These by-laws will come into force only on their being approved by the minister.

Both the memorandum of articles and charter by-laws may from time to time be amended. The filing of a supplemental memorandum of articles will be required only in cases of a rather major nature. This would be so, for instance, in the case of an association wanting to extend the objects for which it has been incorporated or to further its other objects. The system of charter by-laws will have the advantage of eliminating as much as possible the need for supplemental memorandum of agreement. This is designed to simplify the administration. For example, changes in the capital structure of an association and matters concerning the membership and voting rights, borrowing powers and other subjects of a similar importance, could be modified by amending the charter by-laws.

The act provides for two types of co-operative associations, with or without share capital. Whether the co-operative is with or without share capital will be set out in the memorandum of articles.

It will be possible for co-operative associations to provide for a delegate system, the particulars of which will have to be set out in the charter by-laws.

The charter by-laws will set out the number of co-op shares to be issued as well as their par value. The members' shares or common shares are designated as co-op share. In the case of a business corporation, it is possible to issue shares without nominal or par value but, in this act, it will not be possible to provide for a co-op share or preferred share having no nominal or par value. The value of a co-op share is not subject to fluctuation and the voting rights being an attribute of membership generally have no relation to the number of shares held.

Co-operatives with share capital will have an unrestricted power to purchase or redeem their own shares. Such a power to redeem or purchase its shares is important in the case of co-operatives, as it is necessary that the control of the association always vest in members who are actually using the co-operatives.

By the effect of clause 17(2), co-operatives are permitted to reissue their co-op or common shares. This is reasonable as co-op shares have a fixed par value which can never be increased or decreased. Preferred shares, which will also always be with par value, when redeemed, will not be, however, reissued. They will be cancelled. When further authorized capital will be required, the co-operative association will have to proceed by way of amendments to its charter by-laws requiring ministerial approval.

One clause of the bill requires a co-operative association, incorporated under the act, to include in its corporate name the word "co-operative", "co-op" or "pool". Similarly, there are provisions that associations other than associations incorporated under this act or an entity expressly authorized to use these words by provincial legislation, shall not use these words in order to avoid a misrepresentation or deception. The conditions of membership in an association are to be regulated by the by-laws of the association.

Shares in a co-operative association will be transferred only with the permission of the board of directors. This is a usual limitation in the case of co-operative associations because of the special relationship that a member has to his co-operative. The shareholder or member of a co-operative association does business with the co-operative and is not only a mere investor. For that reason, the co-operative needs to control the admission of shareholders or members. One of the fundamental principles of a co-operative is that any surplus arising from its operations must be distributed among the persons who, by their patronage, have made the surplus possible. Before the distribution is made, reserves may be set aside. The distribution of surplus will be controlled by the rules established by the charter bylaws of the association.

There are many other aspects of this bill that I have not mentioned, and which undoubtedly the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs will want to study carefully. This will be so, I would think, for instance, of the provisions relating to the preparation and disclosure of financial statements, transjurisdictional transfers, etc. I am confident that hon. members, having considered the provisions of this bill and having waited 63 years for its introduction will agree that this is a piece of legislation that deserves their support. I look forward to making myself and my officials available to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs when the bill is referred to the committee so that we can examine the bill in very great detail.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the members of the official opposition support the principle of the bill and look forward to the opportunity that will be afforded them of examining it clause by clause during the committee stage.

We also salute the co-operative movement in Canada. We salute it for the good work it is doing and for the patience it has manifested in waiting these many years to get the bill to Parliament. The minister referred to this fact. A bill of a similar nature was before Parliament in 1908 but was defeated by the other place for reasons which it would probably not be useful to go into at this particular time. However, perhaps we will hear more of that when this bill is before the committee.

Speaking of the committee, Mr. Speaker, I note with some surprise that the bill is to be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. The minister did not seem to exhibit any undue interest in this, though one would have expected the bill to be referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. The Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has been assuming a greater role session by session, yet it has no standing committee of its own. The fact that this bill has had to be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs emphasizes this need, and I am surprised the minister did not make reference to it. Since there is no standing committee on consumer affairs, I see no reason why the bill could not be sent, as I say, to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Having said that, I am delighted to note that this bill, which has been advocated all these years by the co-operative movement in Canada, incorporates in its preamble the fundamental principles of the co-operative movement as laid down by Rochdale Pioneers of England in 1844. Perhaps these principles are worth mentioning here. They are, first, open membership, which means that all who can benefit from the services may join; second, democratic control, which means that each member has only one vote, regardless of the size of his shareholding; third, limited return on capital at a modest rate set by the annual meeting; and lastly, distribution of surplus on the basis of patronage. I think it is useful to set out these principles in the bill, which is placing a special responsibility upon the federal government in a field which heretofore was exclusively within the jurisdiction of the provinces.

As the minister pointed out, associations that wish to incorporate under this bill must carry on undertakings in two or more provinces with a fixed place of business in each province in which they carry on their undertakings.

I note that the bill will set up a system of registration which will come largely under the discretion of the minister. I am not suggesting that the minister is not capable of exercising the proper discretion and responsibility given to him by the legislation, but like everybody else he is a fallible human being and I am a little concerned at the increasing discretionary powers that the minister is taking unto himself, not only as a result of the provisions of this bill but under other bills he has brought to Parliament since assuming his current office.

These are some of the points that we shall bring to the attention of the minister when the bill is before the standing committee, but I hope that, before we conclude this stage of the proceedings, the minister will inform the House why the bill is being sent to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs rather than the committee that normally deals with the minister's estimates and legislation coming within his jurisdiction.

Co-operative associations have for a long time been handicapped by lack of legislation dealing with their national activities. Manitoba was the first province to incorporate a co-operatives act in 1887, followed by Quebec in 1906. The co-operative movement in Canada was first launched in Stellarton, Nova Scotia, in 1861, and since that time has grown to the point where, as the minister mentioned, it does business today in excess of $2 billion.

The co-operative movement in Canada has a membership of over 1.5 million people. These people are totally involved in co-operatives of one form or another under the headings of marketing and purchasing; fishermen's co-operatives in the province of Newfoundland and the other Atlantic provinces, as well as in the province of British Columbia; service co-operatives; and production co-operatives. The need for legislation at the federal level was thus quite clear and in line with the continuing needs of the co-operative movement in Canada, needs that have been manifest for the past 50 years. This prompts one to ask why it has taken so long to introduce such legislation.

I should like to find out what became, for example, of the recommendations of the royal commission on co-operatives which was set up in 1945. I do not think the minister made any reference to that royal commission, the recommendations of which have gone largely ignored, though coincidentally perhaps some of them may have been incorporated into the bill now before the House.

This bill is largely of a technical nature and will provide mainly, as the minister has said, for the operations of co-operatives in a way that is substantially different from the operations of other corporations. Hence, co-operatives will be removed from the jurisdiction of the Corporation Act. There will be this system of registration rather than the requirement of parliamentary legislation and letters patent.

There are a number of questions of a technical nature which we hope to put to the minister, his officials and the witnesses who will be called when the bill is before the committee. At first glance it seems to me that, apart from the discretionary powers referred to by the minister which he will be assuming under this legislation, it is not clear whether or not, a division within his department will be established to handle the operations of co-operative associations. Obviously this will be necessary and will automatically flow from the bill. I notice the minister is shaking his head, but unfortunately a shaking of the head is not recorded by Hansard.

Mr. Basford: It is a shaking of the head in the affirmative.

Mr. McGrath: I hope he will clarify this point when he has a chance to speak before the legislation passes this stage.

The question that comes to mind is, since we are setting up this type of a structure why not create the post of registrar to be responsible for co-operatives? In other words, we could have a registrar of co-operatives instead of having this power largely assumed by the minister as now envisaged by this legislation. To my mind the minister was very vague on the kind of consultation which has been held with provinces regarding some of the objections raised when the original bill was brought before Parliament in 1908, objections that were of a constitutional nature. I should like to know whether or not some of these objections have any foundation at the present time.

I salute the co-operative movement in Canada for the good work it is doing all across the country. We notice this bill will help to facilitate this work and make it much easier in terms of federal responsibility. We cannot help but wonder why it has taken Parliament so long to act on a matter that is obviously so important. In conclusion, I would again plead with the minister and his colleagues to give earnest and serious consideration to the necessity of establishing in this House a standing committee on consumer affairs in order that we might have the opportunity, not only of dealing with this particular legislation but of dealing with many important areas which come within the minister's jurisdiction, and which are so vital and important to the consumers of Canada.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of our group to welcome this legislation and say to the minister that we will be as helpful as we can at all stages of the proceedings on this bill. First, I should like to add my comments to those of the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) regarding the disposition of this bill after it has received second reading. As indicated on the order paper, the bill is to be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. My question to the minister is, why should this be so? I know that the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is something of an orphan and its measures are shifted to different committees for consideration, but it seems to me that usually the minister appears before the committee on health and welfare.

I do not think this bill should fall within the prerogatives of a lot of lawyers on the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee. Just as war is too important to be left in the hands of generals, this legislation concerning co-operatives is too important to be left in the hands of lawyers, particularly since the number of lawyers who have some knowledge, feeling and understanding about co-operatives is so small. I would feel much more comfortable, and I would hope the minister would also, if this bill were to be considered by a different committee than the one proposed.

At the outset, let me say that finally we are getting a bill which provides for federal incorporation of co-operatives. As has been said, we have been waiting some 62 or 63 years for this. I have not been waiting that long, and certainly the minister and the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) have not been waiting that long because we are not that old, but the people in the co-operative movement in Canada have been waiting that long.

Mr. Benjamin: Since 1908, we have had 41 or 42 years of Liberal government and 21 years of Conservative government during which time the co-operative movement has appeared year in and year out to plead, ask, beg and present briefs. The co-operative representatives always received a pat on the head and been told what a great thing the movement is, but they always got the runaround. There is no particular credit to the present administration that this bill is now before us. After the length of time that has passed, the situation has become so inordinately bad that somebody had to move. I do not think it is incumbent upon the minister or his colleagues to brag about the fact that they are the ones who finally did it.

We agree with the bill in general and will support it. There are several improvements we think it needs. It is our hope the minister and whatever committee the bill goes to, will listen carefully and with sympathy to the suggestions made by people from the co-operative movement and Members of Parliament. We hope the minister will see fit to accept what we feel will be improvements to it.

There are at least three provisions in this bill which my colleague will deal with at greater length. These fly in the face of the very principles of the co-operative movement which the minister outlined. The bill is designed to cover co-operatives doing business in two or more provinces. This is what the co-operative movement has been requesting for all these years. Provincial legislation is fairly adequate for any co-operative that confines its activities to one province. When membership and operations cross boundaries federal legislation is needed.

Particularly since the end of the last world war, co-operatives have become provincial co-operatives with activities in several provinces. For this reason, the bill is long overdue. The co-operative movement considers a federal act is necessary, not to replace provincial legislation but to complement it. This legislation is also necessary to protect the name "co-operative". We are all aware of the many instances in which the name has been abused and misused by those who would try to take advantage of a name that is held in high esteem by the public. For example, one can think of some building co-operatives which use the name to take advantage of greater access to the people to whom a builder wants to sell or rent his buildings.

The co-operative movement has been, to put it mildly, very patient. No doubt we should be grateful for that patience as well as the fact that they have not been much more militant than one would otherwise expect. In this regard I need only quote from an article in the "Co-op Commentary" number 23, under the heading "Studied Indifference". In this article it is pointed out that there are many things not available to co-operatives which might be available under federal law. Let me quote from this article:

> If, when meeting the cabinet committee last week, the CUC and CCC needed justification for their use of the phrase "Studied Indifference" in describing the attitude of Canadian federal governments they need have looked no further than this:
> Incredibly, in Canada federally, there is no protection in law against misuse of the word "co-operative" in a company name.
> There is no federal legislation limiting a member to one vote.
> The general meeting of members cannot take responsibility for enacting bylaws.
> The principle of patronage returns is not recognized.
> Bylaws do not have the force of a contract between the member and the co-operative.

These are some of the illustrations given by the co-operative movement itself in this article entitled "Studied Indifference" to indicate how the co-operative movement has been treated by successive federal governments.

This bill should not be looked upon as just another piece of legislation affecting one area of business enterprise. In fact, I believe that in an early clause, perhaps in the clause defining a co-operative, this bill should enshrine the principles to which co-operatives adhere. I am disappointed that the bill does not do this. I hope the minister and the committee will consider such an addition to the bill. The bill should recognize that co-operatives are something more than and different from ordinary business enterprises. I believe a full and proper interpretation of what co-operatives are should be spelled out in the provisions of the bill. The bill should clearly say that a co-operative is an association of persons working together to provide themselves with goods and services; that it has a different set of values as an enterprise, and that it operates to meet the common needs or goals of a group of people who voluntarily associate themselves in a co-op. In addition, it should say that the profit motive is not one of the principles a good co-operative follows.

There are still people in this country who would like to impede, prohibit or destroy parts or all of the co-operative movement. One has only to think of the Equitable Income Tax Foundation that comes from underneath its rock periodically to wage war on the co-operative movement. The most recent instances have been during and since the Carter report on taxation and the government's white paper on tax changes. The battle is not over yet and has not been completely won by the co-operative movement. There are many struggles awaiting co-operatives. Their growth is still impeded in too many ways. The principle of business for service is still not sufficiently recognized as opposed to business only for profit. I hope that this legislation will be a major step in assisting the co-operative movement across Canada to achieve this end. This bill can apply only to a limited number of co-operatives. No. one should think for one moment that there will be a stampede by hundreds of co-operatives, the day after this bill is passed, to become incorporated under it.

Many co-operatives will not want to, will not need to or will not be able to incorporate. But there are for example, in the first instance, the national type co-ops—I am thinking of the Interprovincial Co-operative Association—which will likely want to and be able to incorporate under this legislation. There are regional co-operatives, such as the Federated Co-operative, the Maritime Co-op Service and the United Maritime Fishermen, all of which likely will want to incorporate. All of these agencies likely will go into national organizations from the regional base they presently have. There will be the primary co-operative producers, such as Canadian Co-Operative Implements Limited, which likely will want to come under this legislation since it is presently doing business in four provinces. I believe it also wishes to expand into two more Provinces as well as into some of the states south of the border. As a result of the royal commission on farm machinery, I think it is all the more important that Canadian Co-operative Implements Limited receive every facility of government, federal and provincial, to grow, expand and provide some real and meaningful competition and better products for the users of farm machinery.

My colleagues presently in this House and many of their predecessors for many years, Mr. Speaker, have raised this question. I know that hon. members in other places have done the same thing. I think it is fair to say there is no one in this House who will be opposed to this legislation or who will try to hinder it in any way. I believe this is a remarkable improvement over what occurred in our Parliament in previous years when attempts were made to obtain legislation designed to aid and develop the co-operative movement in Canada. I hope the minister will do his best to have this bill sent to a different committee than the one presently envisaged or make an effort to get rid of many of the lawyers on that committee and substitute members who have been participants in the co-operative movement. I realize that this will be up to the parties and House Leaders, but any assistance the minister can give will be greatly appreciated by many members. In conclusion, may I say that we welcome this legislation. We hope the House will deal with it quickly and efficiently and bring about some improvements to it.

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say just a few words at this stage to express to the minister and the government our satisfaction to see this bill introduced during the session.

Some hon. members who spoke before me said that this bill had been expected for more than half a century; doubtless the existing cooperative associations throughout Canada will welcome it. I hope that when this bill is considered by the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, the cooperative associations will want to give evidence before it and will be invited to do so.

Mr. Speaker, the cooperative movement in Canada has a long and admirable history, because since cooperatives have been in operation, they have at times given consumers as well as producers a new direction to their lives. Very often, people are exploited by profit mongers, and co-operative associations were introduced to curb their greed.

[Mr. Benjamin.]

I remember what I read several years ago about the beginning of a cooperative association for fishermen in the Gaspé area and in the Maritime provinces.

Thus, the credit union movement first had to educate people and give them new hopes. In spite of certain obstacles, it did succeed in improving the standard of living of the Gaspé and Maritimes fishermen.

In the field of consumption, for instance, numerous credit unions have managed to compete fairly with the great chain stores that had sometimes been exploiting the consumers.

Also, in the field of dairy products, people have been known to unite and achieve what they could never have done individually.

Naturally, abuses have been committed; however, they were no fault of the credit union movement itself, but rather that of the people who managed those particular credit unions.

Adoption of this bill and its referral to a standing committee of the House will be welcome not only by Parliament but also by all credit unions in Canada. The minister can rest assured of our co-operation in order that this bill be passed as soon as possible and become law before Christmas.

• (4:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): I want to make a few brief remarks about Bill C-177, echoing the remarks made by the minister and by other members who welcomed the long awaited introduction of this bill. In effect, it will become a charter for the Canadian co-operatives that wish to carry on in the interprovincial markets. The Gods grind slowly, but I am somewhat surprised that it took the good government across the way quite as many years as it did to produce a bill to regulate the co-ops carrying on business across provincial boundaries. However, fortunately the day of reckoning has finally come; we have the bill before us and I hope and expect that it will receive a fairly speedy passage, certainly since it is being referred to a committee.

Whether this bill should go to the Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs where the minister customarily appears, or whether it should go to the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs where the motion presently directs the bill is another matter. What is important is that it go to a committee where it can receive detailed examination. If it does, then I think the co-operative associations, which are a substantial industry in Canada, will welcome it.

As the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) said, the purpose of this bill is to complement provincial legislation, certainly not to replace that legislation. On that basis, I can support the motion and the principle of the bill. I hope the bill will expand the activities of the co-operative associations in Canada and not restrict them. On that basis, I certainly can support the bill. It should enable co-operative activity to be extended across provincial boundaries and not hinder the development of the co-operatives which contribute so much to this country. On that basis also, I can support the bill.

There are many things I could say if I wanted to expound at any length on the co-operative movement, as did the hon. member who spoke for the Official Opposition, the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), who so aptly gave us his reading of history. It is the east that has contributed so constructively to the co-operative movement as a result of the challenge of disparity and economic disadvantage. We have had to develop new types of business organizations and new co-operative methods to compete with many of our more affluent neighbours, both in the coal mining industry and in the fishing trade in Nova Scotia. Certainly, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) knows about what can almost be called the Antigonish movement, a movement which has since gone far beyond the boundaries of Nova Scotia. He is aware of the impetus given the Co-operative movement by those in Nova Scotia who were vitally involved in it. My own constituency, the Annapolis Valley riding, has today some of the more basic and progressive branches of agriculture which are vitally involved and integrated with the co-operative movement.

I do not want to take up any more of the time of the House. In fact, perhaps the minister will get the bill through before five o'clock.

Mr. McGrath: There is no chance of that.

Mr. Nowlan: I do not want to elaborate any further, or to give facts and figures to indicate how much the co-operatives mean to my constituents and to the people of Nova Scotia. But certainly we who have pioneered in the co-operative movement in Nova Scotia welcome Bill C-177 in general, and say that perhaps it is long overdue.

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Essex): I want to make one or two short remarks on this bill. After listening to so many members talk about this wonderful bill and how long overdue it is, I wish to add that I heartily agree with them. I do so not for political reasons but as a result of my long association with co-operatives before I became a member of this honourable institution. I learned the fundamentals of democracy through my work with the United Co-operatives of Ontario in my home locality, a work that I enjoyed very much before becoming a member here. This is legislation for which we have asked for a long time. At the time I was director of the United Co-operatives of Ontario and the party of the hon. members who spoke previously was in office, we asked for this legislation, and I am glad to see it finally brought before the House.

I agree with the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) who remarked that he does not know how much the lawyers in the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs know about co-operatives.

I had hoped that at least we would have been given the opportunity to examine the bill. I just want to say that even if the minister is not persuaded that this legislation should not go before the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, those who have some knowledge of co-operatives will be given an opportunity by the chairman of that committee to give their opinions.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): A number of us have been asking for this legislation for quite a long time and we are very glad to see it now. I, for one, want to congratulate the minister on a piece of legislation which, so far as we can learn, is regarded very favourably by the co-operative movement. That is not to say that they do not find faults or shortcomings in it, but they certainly think it is good basis for a start.

At this stage I would like to add my voice to those of speakers who have urged the minister to send this legislation to another committee. I think that the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) made a good point when he said this is a good argument in favour of establishing a consumer committee which the minister would have all to himself.

Mr. Basford: Hear, hear.

Mrs. MacInnis: The minister is in agreement.

Mr. Basford: I do not set up committees.

Mrs. MacInnis: I do not know how we can proceed unless the minister asks or presses for it. If the minister would suggest the establishment of a consumer committee, he would receive support from many members of the House because such legislation has been referred previously to the Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs which is overloaded with many other matters. Actually, this is a consumer matter more than anything else. Certainly, it should not be a happy hunting ground for legal people. I know they have had many innings already and have probably done very well, but now this legislation should go past the legal people to those who have been concerned with co-operative principles.

The minister said something rather significant in connection with this piece of legislation. He said that the reason the government decided to bring this legislation forward after so many years is that co-operatives have been under the aegis of the Corporations Act for too long and that the Corporations Act has been distorted too often to try to make it cover co-operatives. Perhaps he will correct me if I am wrong, but that is what I thought I heard him say. If that is so, than I really feel that this is a good reason for believing that co-operatives should have an over-all act. The point I am trying to make is that this is not just an addition to ordinary business legislation. This bill is a pioneer piece of legislation in the Canadian Parliament because it is the first federal over-all legislation which aims to deal with co-operatives. Co-operatives are not ordinary business concerns in any sense of the term. They are fundamentally and basically different. Their motivation is different. Their motivation is not competition, it is co-operation. Their purpose is quite different. Their purpose is not to make a profit for those people who engage in them. Their purpose is to provide goods and services at cost to their members.

In addition, they have a whole different set of values. Their idea is that people develop and grow, and society develops and grows harmoniously and well through people working together to achieve a purpose which is in the interests of all of them. This is quite different from the ordinary concept of business along orthodox lines as we have it in Canada. I certainly could not put it more succinctly and briefly than a little pamphlet which I have here from the co-operative movement of Saskatchewan, titled "Co-ops are People." This title is a good reason for not sending the bill to the legal committee but to the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare if the minister is not quite ready yet to have his own committee put into operation. However, I am very pleased to know now that he wants his own committee, and a bill such as this is an important reason for establishing it.

This pamphlet reads in part:

> When a person joins a co-operative organization he automatically enters the co-operative movement, a worldwide brotherhood of people in all walks of life, all with the same basic purpose and accepting the same co-operative principles. He has become a member of a great international society dedicated to the belief that ordinary people can co-operate in managing their own economic and social affairs.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that that is the basic differentiation between the co-operative movement and all other organizations and business ventures. It believes that ordinary people can manage their own economic and social affairs.

> A co-operative is an open and voluntary association in which the members organize to supply their needs through mutual self-help. The motive of production and distribution is service.
> Like families, co-ops are groups of people sharing advantages and responsibilities. Co-ops form a broad "community" engaged in marketing, manufacturing, distributing, consuming, finance, service and education.

This legislation introduces something new, and the minister is quite correct in believing that the time has long been overdue for a bill of this kind which recognizes that the co-operative movement is basically different from the ordinary business concern.

From talking to people in the co-operative movement some of us have learned that the absence of federal co-operative legislation of this character has meant that the pattern of co-operative development in Canada has gone along provincial and local lines rather than federal. Now, the movement has grown to the stage where it needs co-ordination, and where it is ready for the federal umbrella which this legislation will provide. Co-operatives are not an end in themselves. They are a method to help those who participate in them to grow and mature, to improve the quality of their lives, and to strengthen their freedom and independence. The role of the government should be to help co-operatives achieve these important objectives.

I believe that the scope and consequences of this legislation will go far beyond what we may foresee at the moment. For instance, I think this legislation will help people to run and direct their own affairs. All decisions made by the members of a co-op are made by them and no one else, after discussion of the facts. One of the needs of which we are terribly conscious in Canada is to have people participate in the running of their own affairs at the local level, and all the way up to the federal level. The co-operative movement can encourage people, through practical participation in co-ops, to learn this particular skill.

In the second place, and I think this should be dear to the heart of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the co-operative movement can become an even greater force than it is now in helping people become intelligent consumers. The minister, quite rightly, is always giving advice to consumers, telling them that if they do not want to be taken in by various marketing practices they should become intelligent and sharp consumers.

Members of co-ops learn to do this not just merely by comparing prices on shelves but by participating in group discussions on their own affairs where they learn about marketing practices, buying practices, and good consumer practices. The minister wishes that we had more Ralph Naders in Canada. By promoting co-operatives we can help with the birth, development and maturing of Ralph Naders all over Canada.

Co-operatives could help Canadians in other ways. When they are strong enough they can be an effective factor in controlling prices. These days the minister worries about methods of doing that without appearing to effect direct control.

Some years ago when I was on a visit to Sweden I learned how Swedish co-operatives, in a number of instances, had been able not only to hold prices constant but to reduce them. One specific example was that of General Electric which had a monopoly to manufacture electric light bulbs in that country. The Swedish co-ops decided to break that monopoly. They built a factory which they called Luma. Even while the walls of the Luma factory were rising, the price of bulbs began to come down in Sweden. By the time the Luma factory was producing its own light bulbs, the prices of bulbs had been greatly reduced. Other successes like this have been achieved by the Swedish co-operative movement.

The co-operative movement has been acting as a brake or steadying factor on run-away prices, and a factor in reducing prices of goods and services to the ordinary consumer.

Mr. Speaker: Order, it being five o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions and public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' NOTICES OF MOTIONS

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

SUGGESTED CHANGE IN STANDING ORDERS TO PERMIT RECORDED VOTE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River) moved:

That the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization review Standing Orders dealing with Private Members' Public Bills with a view to making a report to the House with a recommendation that such changes be made as will allow a recorded vote on some of such bills.

He said: Mr. Speaker, before I launch into the few remarks I want to make, I wish to point out that while the motion which I have placed before the House is of fairly limited application, if there is a disposition on the part of hon. members and the House generally to think that there is a good case to be made for a review of the principles and the Standing Orders under which we now deal with Private Members' Public Bills, I would be quite prepared to consent to any form of change or amendment which might mean that the whole subject of Private Members' Public Bills could be considered by the Standing Committee.

I am reinforced in my view on that because last session, during the course of an exchange, Your Honour had occasion at one time to refer to this problem and to indicate that it might well be a subject of discussion for the committee. I am always glad to call upon profound authorities to support my views. Mind you, I do not always agree with profound authorities but most of the time I do. I recognize that without the co-operation of the government members this matter will simply be discussed briefly now and vanish into thin air, possibly to be revised at some other time. Speaking generally, Mr. Speaker, may I say that I have a great belief in the contribution that individual members may make to this House through their proposed recommendations. What I have to say now is said without animosity and is a general statement, but it is because governments tend to stupidity, to deceit and procrastination that the affairs of mankind move slowly. I make these observations with regard to all governments, the aggregation of people. I realize that in the very nature of government this must happen, but it is because of the capacity of individuals to do better things that mankind moves at all. It is in that sense that I feel there is an opportunity in this House for private members to do much to improve the role of this House of Commons in dealing with the problems of society.

Mr. Speaker, let us not delude ourselves. Today in this country, as in others where there are legislative groups which meet and which constitute a forum for the debate of the problems of the people they represent, there has been an increasing feeling of the irrelevancy and the failure of these legislative assemblies to do the work for which they were designed. I do not agree with this altogether, but there is enough substance to it to give us all fear and grounds for concern.

Certainly, the opportunity for the private member to make proposals which can be advanced to the stage where a decision can be made in this House, is slight. These proposals may deal with people who are racially disinherited, the economically deprived, the young, people who suffer from inequality of any kind. There is a feeling amongst many of these people that Parliament does not faithfully produce, in a form which is acceptable to them, an opportunity to discuss, to debate and to decide. I am sure that in the United States there must be the same feeling with regard to their Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I think my motion has a remedy for this situation and I ask the House to look at it carefully. At present I have this hour available, and tomorrow there will be another hour devoted to some other aspect of a private member's business. This is a useful means of bringing forward subjects for discussion but it is highly unsatisfactory in that it does not provide that at least some of them may be brought to a stage where a decision is made. This does not necessarily mean a decision binding upon the government—I do not seek that—but an opportunity where the government may feel that what is proposed is acceptable to them; securing a decision of this House and possibly of the Parliament. There is a desperate need to do something about this, Mr. Speaker. I am not charging hon. members, but there is a measure of over-all hypocrisy in our approach to private members business. I hope we can do something about this and I have some suggestions to offer.

If we are to make ourselves useful, relevant and believable, we must make some provision in this House for a meaningful debate so that the people I have mentioned will have their day in court, that court being the court of Parliament, the greatest court of last resort in this country. Though I might feel that what I bring forward on behalf of people in my constituency is a valid case, I might not be successful in persuading even my colleagues in my own party to accept it. However, I am convinced in my experience of human nature that if the case is presented well and a decision taken, these people will have had their day in court and even vicariously there will be a measure of satisfaction. This is not the case at the moment, Mr. Speaker. What I propose, of course, is only one method of achieving this type of reform; there are many others, and it might be well to look at some other jurisdictions.

In the United States, there are a great many opportunities for Senators and members of the House of Representatives to tack on to appropriation bills measures which can not only be voted on by the House or Senate, but which can carry with them a measure of spending. In other words, under the system which prevails there, it is possible to approve expenditure on a private members bill in the Senate or House of Representatives. Of course, such is impossible here because of our constitution and because under our parliamentary system the government has the responsibility with respect to the expenditure of moneys as well as the initiation of legislative proposals. What is done so easily and so frequently in the United States under their congressional system cannot be accomplished in Canada.

In New Zealand, Australia and some of the other commonwealth countries, there are procedures by which private members public bills can be brought on but this does not happen more frequently than in Canada. The United Kingdom, however, has a different system. For example, over the last 18 years, according to my calculations, some 170 private members public bills have been initiated, brought forward, adopted and enacted, becoming the law of the land. This is an average of slightly under ten bills per session. Obviously the government of the United Kingdom has found a formula which works. It is very interesting, Mr. Speaker, to consider the names of some of the bills and the importance of some of those measures passed in that country, all private members public bills.

I have two lists which can be secured from the research department of the parliamentary library. These show that starting in 1949 a private member was able to secure the passing of the Adoption Act, the Married Women (Maintenance) Act, the Law Reform Act, Slaughter of Animals Act, Small Lotteries and Gaming Act, National Insurance Act, Advertisements (Hire Purchase) Act, Matrimonial Proceedings Act, Divorce (Insanity and Desertion) Act and amendments. Of course, hon. members will recall that the divorce law which made the first breach in the walls of solidarity in the grounds for divorce was brought on as a private members public bill by Sir Alan Herbert. This list also includes the Fatal Accidents Act, the Clean Rivers Act, the Consumer Protection Act, the Rural Waters Supply Act, the Landlord and Tenant Act, the Oil and Navigable Waters Act, the Antarctic Treaty Act and the Clean Air Act. These are a few of the 170 statutes I have cited, which indicate the importance of some of the legislation that private members have brought forward. That legislation was debated and passed by the Commons and the Lords, and has become part of the laws of England. England has not fallen by the wayside; England has not desolved in ruins because private members have been able to bring into the house public bills which have become law. Why cannot we do the same thing here?

Although my time is limited, I wish to give some indication as to how this is accomplished in the United Kingdom, not to suggest that we slavishly copy the Standing Orders they have in the U.K. but merely to show that it is feasible, without loss of government time, for this to be done, as it is in the U.K. Over there they have 20 days allotted to private members. There are 20 Fridays, ten of which are set apart for private members public bills and ten for private members notices of motions. Polling takes place there, as it does here, but the polling is for members really, rather than for bills. If I am fortunate enough to secure a position of priority on the ballot, even though I do not have a bill, I can go to the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell), who may have a bill, and say "Take my place." As a matter of fact, that is how Sir Alan Herbert brought in the divorce bill which was such an innovation in the laws of the United Kingdom. He was not successful in the ballot, but one of his friends was; and he was persuaded to bring forward Sir Alan Herbert's bill on divorce.

Of those ten days set apart for private members public bills, six days are devoted to second reading. Twenty members draw, in a ballot, for positions on those six days. The first six drawn of course have the first slots on Friday. The seventh man has the choice of second place on another Friday, if he so wishes, and so on. The last four days are set apart for the final stages of a bill. The whole day is devoted to the bill. Having passed second reading, the bill will then go to committee, to the Lords, and then back. The last four Fridays are set apart for the final stages of dealing with the legislation. In the result we find that seven, eight or nine bills every year are enacted into law.

It seems to me that although it is very nice for us to have long lists of private members public bills on the Order Paper, and this was commented on by Mr. Speaker, I should think that most members would be prepared to sacrifice the opportunity of putting 10, 12 or 15 bills on the Order Paper in exchange for a reasonable opportunity to have one bill brought forward at least once during the four sessions of Parliament, in the gamble that it might, with reasonable expectation, become law. I am satisfied, without in any way disparaging the efforts of the government which must initiate and bring forward legislation, that the effectiveness of this Parliament in dealing with the problems of this country will be immeasurably advanced if some members are given the opportunity to bring forward matters for debate and decision which, in their view, ought eventually to become the law of the land. I am suggesting, Mr. Speaker, that the matter should be referred to the committee in order that it may examine all aspects of this proposal.

Under our system we are limited to 40 one-hour periods, plus additional time after the 40 days have run out. When I first came to this House, we spent a full day discussing private bills. I forget how many days there were then. We faced the same problem then as now; the bills and motions were talked out. Why is it that governments are afraid to listen to useful, intelligent and reasonable proposals that are brought forward by private members on both sides of the House. The government is protected. The constitution says that the consolidated revenue fund cannot be raided with respect to costs incurred by measures introduced by private members. But where social problems are concerned today, there is every need for private members who draw on their knowledge and experience—since they are the pipelines to their constituents and the people of Canada—to bring forward reasonable proposals with respect to matters of which it may take years for the bureaucrats who live in the high ivory towers of the bureaucracy to become aware. I would therefore urge that this matter be given some consideration.

Before sitting down, I wish to say that in the United Kingdom there are other means for dealing with private members public bills. Members there can, of course, bring forward private members public bills which will not be balloted on but which will be simply exposed to public scrutiny, as is often the case here. In addition, there is what is known as the ten minute rule. Every Tuesday and Wednesday, any member who has given notice for at least one week before that date, may introduce a bill. If he has given the proper notice he may debate it for ten minutes after the question period. Any member who seeks to speak in opposition to it may also speak for ten minutes. The bill, therefore, is debated for a total of 20 minutes. If the bill appeals to hon. members, they either put the legislation through or make sure that it can be dealt with at a later stage if time permits. In other words, in addition to the balloted bills, two of these ten minute bills are available to the House each week.

Instead of our present system, there might be one under which we might limit the number of bills that are brought in so as to permit members who are given this opportunity to have the proposal which they feel is worth while brought forward, discussed and adopted. I must say that if this were to happen, Parliament would be given credit for trying to persuade the people of Canada that private members have some useful and effective role to play in this House. I say that, Mr. Speaker, because the events of the last two or three weeks in this country, and events that have taken place in the United States and elsewhere, have caused people, and particularly young people, to say, "Is democracy functioning as we think it functions and as we believe it ought to function?". I am not saying that what I propose is, by itself, the answer; but it would give this House and Parliament a meaningful opportunity to bring forward issues and decide on issues which private members think are important, and that would be done without in any sense infringing on the rights of the government. I think that would be one of the many things which would persuade people that the processes and instruments of democracy have an effective place in our lives.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Baldwin: I should be delighted to.

Mr. Jerome: I wonder if the hon. member would address himself to this question. Instead of bringing a specific proposal of this sort before the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, does he not think, expecially since the matter is further narrowed by the allusion to voting, that it would be better to empower that committee to deal at all times with all aspects of the rules instead of with this particular aspect?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The time of the hon. member for Peace River has expired. Does he have the unanimous consent of the House to answer?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I should like nothing better than for the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization to be given terms of reference entitling it to deal with all aspects of the rules and for this reason: the first "attempt" we made at changing the rules two years ago was at the request of the government. It was to enable the government to expedite its business, and the result brought considerable loss, in my view, to the democratic process. It is high time that those rules were looked at which deal with the rights of private members. I would be delighted if this were done. However, my fear is, and I base it on experience in the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, that unless these general terms of reference are also clarified by requests to look at certain specific problems, it is likely that those things which concern the private members most may not be dealt with.

I am prepared to have the motion amended to provide that the committee be authorized to look at all aspects of the existing Standing Order, but with special reference to priority of certain items. If not, I am convinced that many members from both sides of the House will feel that those matters which are important will never be dealt with or discussed.

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to see this motion brought into this House by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) dealing with the subject of the private members' hour and handling of private members' public bills. I am sure all members of this House share with him a feeling of frustration with regard to the way the business in the private members' hour is handled. Too often we see bills talked out on the floor of this chamber which seem to have merit and which should perhaps have received a better fate.

I think when some younger members of this House first listen to the private members' hour they come to the decision that it serves no real purpose because when the government business is completed, they disappear from the chamber. They do not take part in the discussion during this hour. Nevertheless, over the years it has been an excellent opportunity for new members to get to their feet and find out what it is like to debate in this chamber while members talk to each other, pace back and forth, read their newspapers or disappear from the chamber.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deachman: That is a very unnerving situation for a young man entering this House. Up until that time the few people he is able to gather in his constituency to listen to his speeches, mostly his solid supporters and many of them pensioners, listen to his words avidly. They meet him at the door and shake his hand afterwards. They tell him they hope he will repeat that message when he gets to Ottawa. When he gets to Ottawa he faces a phalanx of empty chairs. Therefore, the private members' hour is an excellent opportunity for the young parliamentarian to rise to his feet to speak.

Mr. Whelan: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I point out to the hon. member that the only person now in the press gallery is reading a paper.

Mr. Deachman: I suppose they sometimes have to read them if they are going to write for them.

The private members' hour is not all futility. Many propositions in the form of bills have been debated in the private members' hour and, although they have been talked out session after session, they have gradually molded opinion in this chamber and played a role in molding opinion in the country.

When I first came to the House of Commons in 1963, I think it would have been impossible to have a divorce bill passed. At that time, the divorce was the basis for various private members' public bills and motions, and they were debated in this chamber. At that time the private members' hour was a public sounding board. It was one way of hearing a topic debated and of testing public opinion. From time to time, these debates provoked newspaper articles, comments and editorials. They gave light to a proposition again and again as this subject was debated in this chamber. The private members' hour was as instrumental as any other device in the molding of public opinion which eventually led to the passage of reformed divorce legislation in Canada. It served a very useful purpose in that instance.

Although technically it did not take place within the private members' hour, it was a private member's bill which was used to introduce the subject of reform of capital punishment in order that members of the House of Commons on both sides might have an opportunity to have a free vote on that subject. It was a private member's public bill, introduced by an individual member during the private members' hour, which changed the name of Trans-Canada Air Lines to Air Canada.

When the Canada Elections Act was massively overhauled last session, the subject matter of a considerable number of private members' public bills dealing with various amendments to the Canada Elections Act were referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. One bill for which I was responsible was referred to that committee. The bills were not referred to the committee, only the subject matter.

By this device a member was able to appear before the committee to debate a particular point of change that he wanted brought about in the Canada Elections Act. I was interested in students who had been disenfranchised in the 1965 election due to a peculiarity in the act. A change was made and this will not happen again to students. This resulted directly from a private member's public bill.

Despite some of the frustrations we may see in this hour, it is not entirely futile. It serves a good purpose. It would indeed be a worthy improvement to our rules if this hour could be made more effective. Perhaps the vast number of private members' public bills could be reduced to a meaningful number which could receive more debate and progress from second reading to third reading in the manner described by the hon. member for Peace River.

The hon. member referred to the number of bills passed in the United Kingdom parliament. I understand that these bills tend to be non-contentious. The government allocates ten days in the course of a year for debate on private members' public bills. It is apparent that a subject that is non-contentious in nature and which, for example, amends a piece of government legislation in a manner that in the eyes of the government is desirable, stands a very good chance of moving through during the private members' period. In fact, by letting such debate take place the government is extending its own time; it is using the private members' period to carry a bill that otherwise it might have desired to place on its list of government orders. So in reality one wonders how many of the bills that go through the British House are really bills that are initiated by a private member to explore new areas of legislation, or are simply a device to permit a private member to carry through in private members' hour a bill that might otherwise have to be handled under government orders and in the government's own time.

I think we should look carefully at the very great value there is to be had from exploring, in private members' hour, new ideas—new ideas in social legislation, new ideas that need testing in the House before they become law. Of particular interest, of course, is the current concern over the subject of amending the law of abortion. This is a sensitive area in the mind of the public, for many reasons, and is one well worth exploring in private members' hour. The idea of a guaranteed annual income is another subject of considerable sensitivity, one that needs exploration in debate by private members. One can think of many more subjects worthy of debate and of broad consideration by private members in this hour.

It is therefore worth while this afternoon to consider the motion of the hon. member for Peace River, which moves in the direction of suggesting that we should find better ways of employing the time used in this chamber to carry on debate in our own way without the guidance of a motion by the government. I would welcome any suitable reference for sending on to the Committee on Procedure and Organization leading to a general consideration of the way to handle this period more effectively. As the Parliamentary Secretary mentioned a moment ago, I think the motion now before the House may be on the narrow side and that what we should look for is a general reference to enable us to discuss in broader terms the rules of the House and our evolving procedure in a way that can make private members' hour more meaningful.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to commend the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Deachman) on his catalogue of achievements that have resulted from the use of private members' hour by the members of this House. I think he gave a legitimate defence, though I confess I should like to add a few items to his list.

Mr. Whelan: So would I.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): So would another hon. member. Legislation respecting motor vehicle safety is a good example of a subject that has been brought forward for discussion by private members in private members' hour in the form of bills or resolutions. I would also point out that for many years the Order Paper had on it bills respecting all the various aspects of the Labour Code. I hasten to add that they were not all my bills; there were bills moved by Liberals and Conservatives too, depending on which party was in power. In this way we have through the years popularized several ideas in the area of establishing a federal Labour Code.

In addition to this, we put through income tax deductibility for trade union dues some years ago through the use of private members' hour. We also had accepted the right for recipients of unemployment insurance to continue to draw unemployment benefits once they became sick—provided, of course, they had started to draw the benefits before the sickness occurred. This is a matter we are now trying to extend in committee.

I am not suggesting, any more than the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra was, that the bills or resolutions brought in in private members' hour were passed; when it came to legislation it was usually in the form of a government bill. But I think it is fair to say that through the use of this hour, private members popularized an idea which it sold to Parliament generally and to the government in particular.

Many pension matters have been dealt with over the years in this way. Hospitalization was one subject, and so was medicare. A few bills did not succeed: I have yet to get rid of the Senate by means of a private member's bill, though at least last year we had a vote and a few good men and true from the other side joined us on the vote. So at least we are on the way.

I do not wish to take more time since other members want to speak, but I give my wholehearted support to the motion put forward by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). I appreciate the goodwill and the good intentions of the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome) and the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra in their suggestion of a broader reference; but judging from my own experience on the Procedure and Organization Committee during the last two or three years, I do not think this would work. We had a broad reference last time, and under this broad reference some of us raised the question of doing something about private members' hour. However, we were told that other matters had higher priority. I am afraid that on a committee with a government majority and with a reference that covered everything, we would again be told there are proposals of the government that take top priority.

I would not mind my hon. friend's resolution being broadened to include further matters of concern to private members; but I think I speak not only for the members of the opposition but also for the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart), the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Whelan) and others when I say that in addition to bills and resolutions we could do other things under the rules to strengthen the position of private members.

We are not trying to take away the power and initiative of the government in so far as the introduction of legislation is concerned. But we do think that something better than just talking out private members' bills in this hour should be found. I am glad the hon. member for Peace River did not put specific proposals in his motion, though he did indicate some of the things that might be done. It seems to me that at this point, rather than giving a general reference which would result in priority being given to matters of concern to the government, in the name of the private members on both sides of the House we should have a study made by the Committee on Procedure and Organization on ways and means of improving the lot of private members and improving the chance of getting their proposals properly considered by the House of Commons.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to speak to this motion because I had understood via the "grape vine" that it was going to be accepted. It now appears the motion is going to be talked out, though I stand to be corrected on that. The fact it is going to be talked out is, surely, proof in itself of the futility and the failure of private members' hour. Here we are, discussing a motion that all hon. members who have spoken so far seem to agree with, yet it is not going to be accepted on any terms. As I say, that in itself is an indication that private members' hour is not working.

I am not going over the history that has been very well outlined by previous speakers. Members on both sides of the House have been involved in the private members' hour and there is a record of some success in respect of various subjects that have been introduced not only in bills but in motions. I deplore the lack of attention that is given private members' hour by ministers of the Crown. I recall the day when a certain minister—I do not think I should hesitate to mention his name; he was a former Minister of Justice, Hon. Stuart Garson—never failed to speak on a motion that had any connection with justice. We all gave him considerable credit. In many cases he talked the bills out, but it showed the importance he attached to private members' hour.

During the years, this hour has fallen into a different position of importance here. I gave the government considerable credit last year when it started to refer some of these bills to committee. I thought this was a step in the right direction. It was rather mysterious that most of the bills seemed to be from the government, but nevertheless it was a move in the right direction. I only hope that this very commendable motion does get before the committee in a very forceful and definite way.

There are just two brief suggestions I have to make. I was quite surprised that the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart) put so many bills on the Order Paper this session. This brought home the fact that there should be a limit on the number of bills a member can put on the Order Paper. The table knows I have campaigned for three or four years for such a limit. There should perhaps be a limit on the position that each member gets in the draw, similar to as the practice in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question? I wonder whether he would agree with the suggestion that each member should have the privilege of submitting two bills for what we euphemistically call the ballot, and that any other private member's bill should go to the end of the list. In other words, there would be a maximum of two for any individual member that would be in fact assigned to come up for debate.

Mr. Bell: I think this suggestion has some merit. Perhaps we could make a choice as to which suggestion is acceptable. I am not an authority on the British House, but I think in some way these measures are brought forward by unanimous consent. I think if there ever was a time when there was unanimity in this House, it was when these matters of interest were brought forward. This would have to be done by unanimous consent. I know there is disagreement as to the final outcome of this procedure, but it is worthy of consideration. A bill of current and important interest might in some way be brought forward.

If we adopted this suggestion the interns we have in the House could work very well. They are really conscientious young fellows. This system came about through a private member's motion and I think it is worthy of commendation. There has been discussion about the interns, or a group of them, interesting themselves particularly in the private members' hour. It might not be very thrilling to pass this subject off to some of them, but they might take it on as their special interest. There might be one from each party to see that we do a better job, by giving us a little of their thinking of the situation as viewed from the gallery. In other words, by appointing them to study the private members' hour we might ourselves benefit.

I commend the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) for having the fortitude, perseverance and insight to bring forward this motion. I am quite sure the luck of the draw was involved, because it was one of the first to come forward. That is the only good sign I can see, because as I look across the Chamber I sense that the motion will be talked out.

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to be able to speak on this subject, but it is unfortunate I have to do so during private members' hour. We are wasting an hour of private members' time, just as we wasted an hour on Friday talking about procedure, when private members have all kinds of ideas which should be brought before the House. This is a matter which should be discussed by the committee. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) says he has been sitting on the Committee on Procedure and Organization for years. I cannot help wondering why this subject has not been discussed in the committee before now. I cannot understand why a number of these questions have not been discussed by that committee.

The fact that a young upstart from Cochrane put 40 private member's bills on the Order Paper seems to have upset the whole applecart around here. It seems that up to now nobody thought these ridiculous rules needed to be changed. They not only need to be changed with regard to the number of bills each private member may have; they also need to be changed with regard to the number of bills put forward per party in the House. This was something I was trying to offset because of the silly unbalance we had before.

It seems to me that in respect of this question of private members' bills and their number there have been some very good suggestions by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). If there is an allotment and a limitation according to the number of members in the House, it could not help but be in line with the number of members in each party. In that case, I think this is a good suggestion.

What I cannot understand is why there is so much consternation among some members of this House, and even on the part of the Chair, when a number of private members' bills are introduced according to the rules. I cannot understand why the rules have not been changed before. Why should it take a young upstart to bring this matter to the attention of the House? How long will it take and how many more upstarts will have to get up and speak about the ridiculous spectacle of a Speech from the Throne being made to a half empty Senate, with 264 Members of Parliament fighting to get through the door, before something is done?

How many other stupid rules do we have in this House just because some of the old fogies who sit here feel they have to continue with the old traditions of Parliament? There are 100 young members in this House—I have raised this matter on a number of occasions—who did not come here to sit and look at the old-fashioned ways of doing business. We came here with the intention of bringing forth ideas to reform this place.

Just as the leader of the Liberal party said during the last election, we are going to reform the rules of Parliament. There are some of us who want to reform those rules. I wonder if it is necessary to go to the extremes we have had to in order to bring about reform. I suggest that a subject such as this should be constantly before the Committee on Procedures and Organization. There are any number of rules of this House that should be changed. Why do we make statements on motions? We call them motions, but they are statements. We call public bills private bills, and private bills public bills.

There are any number of things which to the uninitiated who might walk in here would cause them to say that we in the House of Commons are a bunch of nuts. How many Canadians come here and say that, because of the illogic of some of our procedures? We say we maintain these rules and procedures because of tradition. That is a lot of nonsense. We are more British than the British. The British change their ways, but we do not. This is like being more Catholic than the Pope.

It seems to me that subjects such as this should not be debated during private members' hour. Private members' hour is a time when we should be able to bring forth good ideas. When I had my 40 bills covered, 38 on one subject, at least one of my reasons was to show how stupid these regulations are. Another reason was that we must use every means at our disposal to bring a good idea before this House. This is almost impossible to do. As other hon. members have said, whenever a member comes forward with a good idea, it is talked out.

I remember an occasion when I had a good idea which had a good deal of support in this House. It had to be brought forward in a way in which it could receive a little more attention. Another idea I put forward during private members' hour was that our flag be presented in this House of Commons. There again it was a matter of a young upstart coming forward with an idea which nobody had thought of before, and therefore no attention was paid to it. That particular question is one which I am sure would receive the approval of just about every member of this House. I refer to the placing of the flag of Canada in the House of Commons, as is done in the legislatures of other countries.

This idea is now away at the bottom of the list, where it will remain, never to be discussed. Such a suggestion should not have to be made in the form of a private member's bill. It could be done without a private member's bill. If Mr. Speaker wanted the flag in the House, he could have it put in. But oh, no; this is an idea originating with a young upstart who has been here only two years. I believe it is time we changed our rules, because some of us are becoming fed up with this situation and with some of the snide remarks that are made when one attempts to take the bull by the horns. I am fed up, and there are many other members who are fed up. I suggest it is time the few people holding the reins in this Parliament decided to take the bull by the horns so that discussion might be opened up on some of these ideas. Something certainly should be done about the basic rules of this House so that they might be more meaningful to the individual member.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I enter this debate merely to support the motion put forward by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), and the remarks made by the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart). I do not want to talk out the motion, and therefore I shall sit down right now if I have the assurance of this House that the motion will be permitted to come to a vote.

An hon. Member: Then sit down.

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Essex): Mr. Speaker, as members do we have not the right to grant unanimous consent to this bill maintaining first place on the list? I think it is too important a subject for a member having to stay seated in order to not take up time discussing it. I remember what I went through in an effort to have a private member's bill discussed in this House. If we can have unanimous consent, I shall not say anything further.

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, for perhaps 4½ minutes let me add my views to those already put on the record. As I indicated earlier in my question, the particular aspect I wish to discuss for a few moments concerns the powers of the Committee on Procedure and Organization to explore the rules of this chamber. I particularly address myself to hon. members who participated in this debate and spoke about the subject of reform of the rules of this chamber, because that indeed was one of my major objectives in coming here as a new member in 1968.

I felt very honoured indeed to be appointed to the special committee which sat during the first session of this Parliament under the very capable chairmanship of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair). That committee worked very hard during long hours. The sponsor of this motion was a member for the committee as was the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who has participated in this debate.

I think any member would support me when I say that the accomplishments of that committee were numerous and very significant. In fact, the only change recommended by the committee that met any serious opposition in this House was in connection with the rule dealing with the programming of debates in this chamber. There was a very searching examination and full recommendations by that committee which brought about changes in several of the fundamental functions of this chamber, not the least of which was the approach to money resolutions and the elimination of the resolution stage which all members embraced as a worth while amendment.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question? Would he not correct that sentence? Did we not agree to some rules affecting the programming of the business, and was there not just one particular aspect about which we did not agree?

Mr. Jerome: The answer to that question is a little complex. The hon. member who asked the question sponsored a compromise position on the programming rule which set up the possibility of a decision in respect of the business of a committee of the House being made on a majority basis. One of the difficulties that has been widely discussed in this House since that time is that within the special language of the rule it does not contemplate that the government must be a member of that majority, although the hon. member has graciously accepted in the past that that was his intention at the time. I know he does not now associate himself with that position.

Within these limits, the hon. member is perfectly right. It is just that aspect of programming that has raised itself as a difficulty and an impediment to some of the package which the government wanted to see introduced in the House of Commons in order to expedite the business of this chamber as well as the business of the Standing Committees.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hour for the consideration of private members' business has expired.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PUBLIC ORDER (TEMPORARY MEASURES) BILL—REFERRAL TO COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might have the leave of the House to deal with this matter. In the question period I stated it was the intention of the government to send the emergency powers bill to Committee of the Whole. No objection was taken at that time, but in order to clarify the situation I should like that to be made an order of the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that this be made an order of the House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is so ordered.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADA CO-OPERATIVES ASSOCIATION BILL

INCORPORATION, ARTICLES OF ASSOCIATION, SHARE STRUCTURE, GENERAL POWERS AND DUTIES, ETC.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Basford that Bill C-177, respecting co-operative associations, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, when this debate was interrupted at five o'clock I was outlining some of the conditions in Canada that might be affected by the co-operative movement coming under the umbrella of this new federal bill. I was going to mention the fact that nowadays we are greatly concerned about people in low-income groups, including people in our urban centres and native peoples, and about ways and means in which they can be helped to control their living conditions and their financial situation. We do not want these people to live in poverty and despair and to depend upon social allowance for their livelihood.

The Co-operative Union presented a brief to the Senate Committee on Poverty earlier this year, in which they pointed out the value of the co-operative movement to people in these groups. I know that in my own city of Vancouver—which is also the minister's city—there is among low-rent housing tenants in one project, at least, a co-operative buying club which is applying the co-operative principles. The tenants of the housing project are taking part in this co-operative endeavour, with very good results in reducing the cost of their groceries.

Also in this brief which was presented to the Committee on Poverty, the Co-operative Union of Canada mentioned the good co-operative work that is going on among the Eskimos, the Indians and the Métis. I do not intend to deal at any length with this matter, but I just wanted to mention the fact that co-operative associations will have an ever-increasing impact on our way of living in Canada. Their purpose is not merely to reduce the cost of consumer goods but also to help the people who are using the co-operatives to gain control of their own affairs.

There is one further aspect of this question that I would like to mention. We are greatly concerned today about the question of participation in the processes of democracy and how we can keep them alive and vigorous. I do not think we have begun to realize what the co-operative movement can do in that direction, what its nature is and how it can grow under this new bill which will deal with nationally incorporated co-operatives and ones that do business in more than one province. I do not think we have begun to realize the effect this can have on democratic processes and on furthering them in this country.

It would be far better to put this point in the knowledgeable language used by a leading member of a co-operative association. Some time ago an article was published by J. T. Phalen of the Co-operative Union of Canada. I want to read a couple of paragraphs of it, because he describes so well the way in which co-operatives can help to handle the question of the tight, monopoly control of industry and also the importance of the participation of people in our democratic government processes. The article reads in part as follows:

> We insist on democracy in dealing with each other in political terms but we are slow to accept the fact that democracy in economic dealings also has validity and purpose.
> The present trend toward greater and greater economic power in the hands of fewer and fewer people must certainly be a source of concern to all of us. Our neighbours to the south are now facing a situation where each of a number of giant American corporations controls more wealth than the United States government. A spokesman of one of these is reported to have said what is good for my corporation is good for the United States.

The co-operative movement's answer to this is that the ownership of productive assets should be in the hands of the users. This will result in a diffusion of earnings among the people and the democratic nature of the organization will put the power in the hands of members. In this case it might be said that what is good for the organization is good for the country. If it wasn't, the people have the method and the right to change the situation.

Further on he says the following about participation:

Each of us must answer for himself an important question: "Am I satisfied to let others plan for my welfare—deciding what is good for me, how much money I should make and how I should live. Or do I wish to participate in and thereby influencing the whole range of activities that have a bearing on my well-being?" In political terms a benevolent dictator decides all of these things for the citizens and by definition in their best interests. In our society we reject "out of hand" the idea of turning so much power over to one or a few individuals. We prefer to deal with the political situation democratically. We haven't been as careful about our position in the business world. Here we are allowing tremendous power to pass into a few hands and not necessarily into the hands that might be described as benevolent. Most of their decisions are based on how to get more out of the public rather than how to help meet the needs of people. Are we to be spectators in our world—at best, orchids that depend upon the gardener for protection and pampering or at worst objects to be exploited and hoodwinked by those who have their own selfish interests at heart?

The co-operative structure provides the method by which people can participate in the economic decisions which have an important bearing on social conditions and personal well-being.

There is one more short paragraph that I would like to quote. It reads as follows:

The reasons for supporting co-operatives and encouraging others to understand and participate are complex and at the same time quite simple. In political terms our total society subscribes to the principle of democratic action. We are simply saying that the same principle is valid in economic activities which in turn has a direct bearing on our social system. We wish to have power of all types controlled democratically. The democratic system demands participation and responsibility. If we are not prepared to accept responsibility, the system is not the right one for us. If we do accept the responsibility, the economic and social opportunities are unlimited and the opportunities for personal development will unfold like the pages of a book as we go about the task of meeting human needs as brothers rather than as competitors.

This is something of the philosophy underlying the co-operative movement, and this bill is designed to further it. As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, the co-operative movement feels that this bill represents a good starting basis for federal legislation. In Great Britain special co-operative legislation was introduced a long time ago, in fact as far back as 1852, but at the outset it simply gave co-ops a legal status on which to exist and there was a long struggle before the distinctive characteristics of co-operatives were recognized in law. It will probably take a long time before this legislation in Canada is made to fit exactly the needs of the co-operative movement.

People connected with the co-operative movement are worried about several points in the bill. This afternoon the minister stated that under this legislation, as a rule no member of a co-operative shall have more than one vote. But the interpretation given in clause 3(1)(d)(i) is as follows:

—except in the case of an association the charter by-laws of which otherwise provide, each member or delegate has only one vote—

In other words, a large exception is written right into the legislation. A few years ago the Co-operative Union of Canada laid down the principles which it stated were important for incorporation into any forthcoming federal legislation. They said quite clearly that the principle of one member, one vote should apply and that the legislation should provide for a system of delegate voting with all the usual provisions required by co-operatives. This is a cornerstone of the co-operative movement. I contend that the co-operative movement is justly worried about this legislation, which breaches the principle of one member, one vote by providing:

—except in the case of an association the charter by-laws of which otherwise provide, each member or delegate has only one vote—

This definition will require a great deal of explanation in committee. The matter of proxy voting is also worriesome to the co-operative movement. Again today the minister explained that no member as a rule shall vote by proxy, but in the interpretation section of the legislation we find the following provision:

no member may vote by proxy except that a member of an association may vote by proxy for the election of directors if the charter by-laws of the association so provide—

The Co-operative Union of Canada recommended that voting by proxy should be prohibited. This is one of the matters to which attention must be directed when the legislation gets into committee. The co-operative movement is very pleased to see safeguards provided regarding the use of the words "co-op" and "pool" where they form part of the name of a co-operative association. Other features of the legislation fall in line with co-operative thinking. When the legislation goes to committee I hope the committee will hear representations from the co-operative movement on a large scale.

In conclusion, I appeal to the minister to change the referral of the bill so that it may be sent to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs instead of to the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee. We do not have a consumer affairs committee. Let him do with this bill what he has done in recent times with the subject matter of his other legislation, namely, send it to the health and welfare committee. It is true that that committee has a lot of work to do, but co-ops essentially deal with people; they come under the heading of consumer matters. Sending the bill to the health and welfare committee would save the minister the trouble of taking all the lawyers off the legal committee and putting consumers on it.

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-177 is certainly extremely detailed and very interesting to read. But there is no need to study it in depth to see that it should make it possible to control quite well the operations of these associations.

[English]

It was interesting to note the comments made this afternoon suggesting that reference of this bill be to another committee. The minister has stated he does not have a committee under his department, but the minister on his left tonight, whose responsibilities have been greatly reduced, could put half a committee at his disposal; and, really, consumer and corporate affairs seem to be much more important. It is also interesting that there are four ministers in the House tonight, Mr. Speaker. It is not very often we see so many here.

It is my understanding that the Co-operative Union of Canada has had consultations with officials of the department urging passage of legislation of this general type. I understand there are some objections concerning its details, but these things can be ironed out in committee. As was pointed out by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) and others, basically we have no objection to this bill. I understand that co-ops in general now fall under provincial legislation, and if they operate in more than one province they come under the Corporations Act. Bill C-177 deals with the interprovincial co-operative movement. I am glad that the bill will provide protection to co-operatives which use the word "co-op" in their title. Many so-called co-ops have sprung up in recent years, such as housing co-ops and other, but they really are not co-operatives in the true sense.

This bill provides the framework within which the co-operative movement can expand, but as I read the 107 pages of the bill I see the word "minister" far too many times.

Mr. Basford: But he is a good minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: That is the overstatement of the year.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Mr. Comeau: The minister has to stick up for himself; nobody else will. What bothers me a little is that the word "minister" seems to be in there too many times. The bill appears to give to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs—not particularly this one, but whoever it may be—detailed powers and, quite frankly, I do not understand why all the regulations have to go through the hands of the minister. In that sense the bill is too dictatorial and this aspect of it must be well scrutinized in committee. I will give the minister the benefit of the doubt and hope that this will be exactly the type of legislation that the co-ops want, but it seems to me that the minister has too much control under the bill as it stands.

I should like to know whether the existing co-ops have the choice to opt out. I know there is a clause in the bill about transmission, and so on. As I understand it, at present the co-ops operate under the Corporations Act, and I wonder whether they can still do that and whether there are any real advantages in operating under this new bill. It would be interesting to see the type of bureaucracy set up to deal with a bill as detailed as C-177. Although the word "minister" appears in every second paragraph, I am sure the minister cannot be expected to attend to every little detail. Therefore, it will be interesting to see exactly the type of body established to deal with this legislation. I hope it can be done without too many civil servants.

Mr. Baldwin: Don't kid yourself.

Mr. Comeau: The hon. member asked me not to kid myself, but I just mention this to warn the minister not to set up the type of bureaucracy we see so often around here.

Mr. McGrath: The fastest growing empire in the west.

Mr. Bell: Like the Prime Minister's office.

Mr. Comeau: I have very high regard for the co-operative movement, which is certainly important to the community life in Canada—to the Atlantic area, the west and indeed to all provinces of Canada. The Maritime Co-operative, for example, which is involved in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland, has done a tremendous amount of good in the communities and has been very successful. The United Maritime Fishermen has also done an effective job and I hope it will be able to continue its good work under this bill. I have a very high regard for these co-operative movements and hope this bill will give them a boost and generate the interest of the public.

As was pointed out this afternoon, the co-operative movement was started in Nova Scotia. We have now a very extensive program at St. Francis Xavier University in Antigonish, Nova Scotia, and the work being done there is to be praised. A few Canadian universities offer courses on co-operatives and some conduct extension work in this field. None of these, however, offers a course as extensive as that of St. Francis Xavier. Since the early 1930s it has offered an extension program to organize and assist co-operatives, and in more recent years a variety of courses have been developed to train people in the work of co-operatives. Some of these are short courses for directors and managers of existing co-operatives and credit unions; others are offered as an integral part of university work. In addition, special courses are offered for visitors from other countries who wish to learn about co-operatives in Canada. There is the Coady International Institute, for example.

I believe that the co-operative movement is to be encouraged, but we must be careful about the type of bureaucracy set up to deal with this legislation. I hope the committee will scrutinize the bill and make sure there is not too much control by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, whoever he may be at the relevant time. An interesting point was brought out by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacIn-nis). That is the well-founded rule, when dealing with co-operative movements, of one member, one vote. The hon. member pointed out exceptions to this rule on page 2 of the bill, and also raised the matter of proxy voting. These are questions that will have to be answered by the committee.

In general, however, Mr. Speaker, I think that the objectives of the bill are good and we will support it, but I hope the minister will be very careful in administering this type of legislation.

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the minister for bringing forward this bill on co-operatives. It is another important measure to bring social justice and economic power to the people of Canada. During the twenty-seventh Parliament I sat on the Joint Committee of the House of Commons and the Senate on Consumer Prices with the minister who at that time was one of the joint chairmen.

Mr. Bell: He was never there. Senator Croll did all the work.

Mr. McGrath: The minister just took the credit.

Mr. Allmand: Someone said that the minister was not there. I should like to make it very clear to this House that the hon. member who was the joint chairman of the committee with Senator Croll was there morning, noon and night working persistently—

Mr. Baldwin: How many nights?

Mr. Allmand: —with the committee to bring out what I believe to be one of the best reports of any parliamentary committee. During the hearings before that committee there were many requests from consumer groups in Canada for legislation to assist co-operatives. One of the principal recommendations of the committee report was instrumental, I believe, in leading to this bill.

Ever since my days as a student at St. Francis Xavier University in Antigonish, Nova Scotia, I have been an enthusiastic supporter of the co-operative movement. I note that the hon. member who spoke before me referred to that particular university. In Antigonish I had the good fortune to observe the work of Coady, Macdonald, Boyle, Laidlaw and many others who worked with fishermen, miners and farmers in Nova Scotia and taught them, in the words of Monseigneur Coady, how to be "masters of their own destiny" through the work of the co-operative movement. As the hon. member who spoke before me pointed out, in Antigonish at the Coady International Institute people from all over the world are being taught about the co-operative movement. I found it a thrilling experience going down there two weeks ago.

• (8:30 p.m.)

An hon. Member: Nova Scotia is always great.

Mr. Allmand: I agree with the hon. member. I was there with the Committee on Constitution and at that time I had an opportunity of examining the work of the Coady International Institute. I was thrilled to see that a movement begun by the people of Nova Scotia to help other people had spread to the far corners of the world.

May I also say that several years ago I had the opportunity to be involved in a study program in India. We visited a small town in India where they decided to show a group of students from all parts of the world a film on the co-operative movement. The film they showed us in that small town had been prepared in Antigonish, Nova Scotia. The film was being used in that village project in India to teach people how to gain economic power for themselves through the co-operative movement.

I think that the pioneers of Rochdale and those of the Antigonish movement to which the hon. member referred, as well as those in Scandinavia and many other parts of the world, have proved that through co-operatives people can to a great extent be masters of their own destiny. They can have greater influence over their economic circumstances through means of their influence over production, marketing, investments and savings.

Co-operatives have been extremely effective in breaking monopolies and in keeping the opposition honest, to use a football phrase. They do not always need to correct injustices. Merely by being there they keep those with whom they work "on the level" and keep the market honest. Co-operatives in Canada and elsewhere have been successful in the area of production. This is particularly true in respect of farmers, fishermen, people with orchards and others engaged in basic types of production. They have been extremely successful in the field of the consumer, right in my constituency in Montreal. There, many people with low incomes are organizing consumer co-operatives in an attempt to overcome ever-increasing prices of consumer goods. I have personally encouraged them to carry on their work, although it is difficult at this time for people in cities to organize and keep the co-operatives together.

I have also been impressed with attempts that have been made over the years to establish co-operatives in the field of housing. Again, one should look at examples in Nova Scotia where I believe there have been successes in the field of co-operative housing. Credit unions are another type of co-operative venture. Caisses populaires in Quebec have also done much to help their people in this regard.

On the whole, Mr. Speaker, I think this is very good legislation. The co-operative movement in Canada has been requesting it. Many of its details will be examined in committee, but in principle the basis of this legislation is sound. I do not wish to speak too long; I merely wish to say that I am gratified the bill is before the House, because I worked for some months with the Joint Committee on Consumer Prices in 1966 and 1967 and I have been waiting for this legislation to come forward. I congratulate the minister for bringing it forward at this time.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to have the opportunity to participate in the debate on the federal co-operatives bill because I feel that this is a historic day for the co-operative movement in Canada. There are many people in my own constituency of Regina East who are very much interested in the success and future of the co-operative movement. I might say that one characteristic of the co-operative movement which is present in my constituency, and which has been present in the co-operative movement all across Canada, is that it has gained support from many quarters of the community. It has gained support from all ethnic groups, from different religious groups and from people of varying political philosophies and outlooks.

The co-operatives, in this sense, have served as a unifying force throughout the community. They have been the vehicle for a useful and important role in furthering community action and in bringing about better conditions and improvements in communities across Canada. My interest in the subject of co-operatives is well known as an active member of co-operative organizations and as a former director and one-time employee of a co-operative organization.

I found it of interest, Mr. Speaker, to refer back to my first speech in the House of Commons, my maiden speech in this chamber on September 23, 1968. Speaking in the debate on the Speech from the Throne, the reference I made to the federal co-operatives bill was as follows:

> There are, of course, some items in the Speech from the Throne which I welcome.

That reference is to the 1968 Speech from the Throne. I continued as follows:

> The long-awaited federal co-operatives act will be welcomed by most people in Regina East. This act, which has been just around the corner for so many years, will enable co-operatives to play a more adequate role in the national economy. I trust that the promise of such legislation in this session will not meet the same fate as similar promises for such an act on numerous occasions in the past.

As a matter of fact, that promise in that session met the same fate as the promises of previous years. Nevertheless, since we now have the bill before us we can say, "Better late than never". I certainly hope that it will be carried through to final passage and royal assent.

Co-operatives, Mr. Speaker, have played a very important role in the development of my province of Saskatchewan. The story of the co-operative movement is part of the very fabric of the history of the province of Saskatchewan. Indeed, as was pointed out by the previous speaker, the movement played an important role in the province of Nova Scotia. I mentioned that it is a unifying factor in the province. It has welded together people of varying political outlooks, varying religious outlooks, varying ethnic outlooks as well as people with widely diverse backgrounds. The co-operative movement has brought them together. Thus, it has made a very material and important contribution to the development of my own province, Saskatchewan, and to Canada as a whole.

Throughout the history of the development of the co-operative movement in my province, it has concentrated much of its activity in the rural scene. This is where much of the original impetus for the development of the movement took place; and this was probably quite natural because of the nature of the problems that were faced on the rural scene in Saskatchewan. However, in recent years we have seen a transition to a greater interest and participation in urban affairs. I think it is quite evident that the change in population patterns in Canada, the influence of technology and economic developments have all forced co-operatives to change and to develop a new, broader and more extended outlook.

Some reference has already been made, Mr. Speaker, to the length of time it has taken to introduce this legislation into the House. Finally it is now before the House, and I should like to make a passing comment on that matter. I think it is a tribute to the co-operative movement that they very rigidly adhered to the democratic process in terms of their demands and request for this type of legislation. I think it has been stated, and stated accurately, that co-operatives are the very bulwark of democracy and that they enhance and further democracy. I think it is well to remember this particular point during these times of stress in Canada. I think there are lessons to be learned from the patience that was shown by the co-operative movement in pressing for this very important piece of legislation that was so important to them. The lesson is that they have faith in democracy.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, we should take note that there is a need to show a quicker response to economic and social needs in Canada in dealing with our problems at the present time and in the future. Nevertheless, I think it can be said, to the full credit of the co-operatives, that they have adhered and will continue to adhere to the democratic process in carrying on their activities within Canada.

I hope that this legislation will be passed before too long. It will, of course, pose new challenges to the co-operative movement. They will be called upon to fill a wider role in Canadian society and to come up with some answers regarding the needs of society. They must grow correspondingly in areas of need and in terms of their own efficiency of operation. I hope that the bill now before us is evidence of a growing federal interest in the co-operative movement and the role that can be played by co-operatives in dealing with our social and economic problems.

We should examine the present role of co-operatives in Canada and the new role that we see for the co-operative movement. As I mentioned earlier, the co-operative movement has played a traditional role on the rural scene. That is where some of the roots of the movement are, particularly with respect to those people engaged in the agricultural and fishing industries. Today there are new roles that have to be played by the co-operative movement. They illustrate why this legislation is necessary and overdue. In the area of urban needs and today's consumer economy there are many needs that can be filled more effectively through the activities of the co-operative movement.

We also have to consider the situation and the condition of the urban poor. There are many things which need to be done. The co-operatives are interested in playing a role in dealing with the problems of the urban poor. They have placed proposals before the government of Canada and various committees and agencies stating how they might help in tackling the problems of urban slums, and so on.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) referred to the role played by co-operatives in dealing with the problems of our native peoples. I think it is to their credit that co-operatives have pioneered in certain work among the Indian and Eskimo peoples of Canada. It might be noted that the philosophy of the co-operative movement and approach is very amenable to people with Indian and Eskimo backgrounds.

Thirdly, I refer to the role that can be played by co-operatives in international development. This matter has already been referred to by the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand). Co-operatives are suitable for many types of activity in the job that must be done on the international scene—helping to erase inequalities that exist among nations of the world. Overall, co-operatives have a very fundamental and important role to play in dealing with the whole problem of poverty. They can play a crucial role in eliminating many of the conditions of poverty in the world today. After all, the co-operative movement works with people. As well, the co-operative movement can help to overcome much of the alienation that is so prevalent in our society. It is important to remember that the co-operative movement is based upon service, not upon profits.

In my view this bill establishes a very important principle. We must keep in mind that co-operatives are a different way of doing business. That principle is recognized by the very existence of this bill. It has been correctly concluded that co-operatives cannot be dealt with adequately, in terms of public controls and the legal framework within which they have to operate, through ordinary company law embodied federally in the Canada Corporations Act. A special act is needed. This special act must be suited to the needs and principles of the co-operative movement. It should be parallel to company law with respect to some of its mechanical provisions and with respect to various questions of public interest. It should be adapted to the special nature of the co-operative movement so that co-operatives can carry on their operations without being unduly restricted and without having to give in on points of principle about which they feel strongly.

If the principle is established for the legal framework of operation such as we have in this bill, I hope it will establish a principle with respect to other areas of law, such as tax law. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) has pointed out that tax law is not involved in this bill. I note that co-operative representations have been made both in respect to company law and tax law. They are not asking for special favours. They are only asking that they be allowed to operate as co-operatives consistent with their principles and within the framework of a determination of the public interest. This is set out in some of the material prepared by the Co-operative Union of Canada wherein it is stated:

> Generally speaking, what co-operatives want is legislation that will permit them to conduct business by well recognized co-operative principles and methods, which the present Canada Corporations Act does not provide for. Entrepreneurs and investor-oriented groups applying for incorporation based on joint stock company rules have appropriate legislation in the Canada Corporations Act. Canadians who wish to incorporate a business based on co-operative rules and practices do not have a legislative vehicle appropriate to their needs.

I wish to refer briefly to the study of tax law made this year by the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, of which I am a member. This committee considered certain proposals made with respect to the co-operative movement, taxation of co-operatives and also some of the proposals placed before them. I will quote briefly from one section of the majority report of this committee. This point was approved by all members of the committee. I mention this matter because, as is known, the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) and myself submitted a minority report with respect to the white paper study. All members of the committee approved of this one sentence. It illustrates the principle involved in dealing with this legislation, although applied to another area. It reads as follows:

> The committee recommends that the basic principle to be followed should be that co-operatives, caisses populaires and credit unions should have no tax advantage in the tax system but that adequate provision be made to ensure that the operations of such organizations are not unfairly hampered and to ensure that they do not suffer a tax disadvantage.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway has already raised several points with respect to the bill now before us. Many of these points can more adequately be considered in the committee. I wish to deal with a couple of the very important and fundamental points involved in this bill.

Under the list of definitions in clause 3 of the bill, reference is made to "co-operative basis". Subclauses (d) and (d)(i) provide as follows:

> (d) "cooperative basis" means the carrying on of an enterprise organized, operated and administered in accordance with the following principles and methods:
> (i) except in the case of an association the charter by-laws of which otherwise provide, each member or delegate has only one vote—

• (8:50 p.m.)

As correctly pointed out already, this deals with one of the fundamental points of operation for the co-operative movement—one member or one delegate, one vote. I suggest it is a very poor principle when you are writing this very fundamental feature into the definition to leave a wide-open door to any association, at its discretion through the passage of a bylaw—subject, of course, to certain controls—to vary its rules from this particular provision of the legislation. It seems to me that if a case can be made for an exception to the rule of one member, one vote, that exception should be spelled out in this clause of the bill.

The only possibility that occurs to me is that there may be instances where co-operative organizations are completely owned, or principally owned, by other co-operative organizations. I have in mind organizations such as a central co-operative organization or a manufacturing plant which is jointly owned by a number of different co-operative organizations. There may be some room in such circumstances for making an exception to this particular rule, but it seems to me that any such exception should be spelled out in the legislation. The second qualification in defining "co-operative basis" reads as follows:

(ii) no member may vote by proxy except that a member of an association may vote by proxy for the election of directors if the charter by-laws of the association so provide—

As pointed out, this feature of the subclause is contrary to the request of the co-operative movement that no proxies be provided for in the legislation. As noted, there may be room for providing for a system of delegate voting; but it seems to me that this is different from providing for a proxy structure within the farmework of this legislation. The third qualification in the definition of "co-operative basis" reads:

(iii) interest or dividends on share or loan capital is limited to the percentage fixed in the articles of incorporation or application for continuation, or by-laws of the organization—

Again, it seems to me that here is a very important point to keep in mind. One of the very important principles of the operations of co-operative organizations is that there be a limit on the amount of dividends or interest paid on share capital. Possibly loan capital requires other considerations. It seems to me there is a need for further widening of this particular clause to spell out the maximum interest rate in the legislation, as is in fact the case in some provincial acts, though I concede there is a case against spelling out a specific figure of 4, 5, 7 or 8 percent. One alternative might be to give the minister discretion to set a maximum rate. But it is important that a maximum rate be spelled out, particularly with respect to interest or dividends paid on share capital.

I suggest one possibility is to authorize the minister to set a maixmum rate based on a formula such as that used in establishing rates in certain other legislation, such as the Farm Credit Act, fisheries legislation, and so on, where the maximum rate is related to the bank rate through a suitable formula. One further point I should like to make with respect to the definition of "co-operative basis" is that we underline the importance of the fourth subclause, which begins with the words:

(iv) the enterprise is operated as nearly as possible at cost after providing for reasonable reserves—

The subclause then goes into detail. This is an important feature of co-operative organizations which needs to be kept in mind. There are other aspects of this legislation which will be considered in the committee study. I certainly hope this bill meets with a better fate than previous attempts to pass a federal co-operatives act. I have been pleased to see the degree of support for the measure that is present tonight on both sides of the House. I hope the bill does not meet with the same fate in the other place that was the case on one or more previous occasions.

[Mr. Burton.]

Allusions have been made to the reference of this bill to the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee. I am open to discussion on this particular point. I think there is no need for rigidity in referring the bill to the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee. I do not need to remind the minister that last year the Canada Corporations Act was referred to the Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs Committee of the House. I am not raising this point in terms of myself, as a member of the committee, looking for any further work. However, it seems to me that the important thing is to get on with the job and put this legislation through the House as rapidly as possible in a committee composed of hon. members who are quite prepared to see this type of enterprise or business given its place in Canadian society and recognized by the laws of Canada. That is an important point. I hope that everything possible will be done to expedite passage of this bill.

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to add a sentence or two in support of this bill. This past weekend I was in my constituency and while in Saskatoon I noticed a sign at a service station which read "100 per cent Canadian owned". This station was a co-operative service station. I should like to deal with this aspect of co-operatives in my support of the bill.

I feel that co-operatives are one way to deal with the problem of foreign ownership in Canada. We have in Saskatchewan today industries that have become big business because little people have joined hands to build collectively a business of which they can really be proud. I have in mind the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool which is one of the largest grain handling organizations in the world. There are many retail and wholesale outlets in Saskatchewan. Saskatchewan also has an oil refinery built by the businessmen of the province. Credit unions and other co-operatives function in the province very well. Dividends from these organizations are paid to Canadians. There are no arguments about money leaving Canada in the form of dividends to foreigners, and I think this is one reason we should encourage the growth of co-operatives in Canada.

One other problem that arises when foreign companies in Canada decide to close down their plants is what to do with the employees who worked for them. These co-operatives have evolved a pension plan under which an employee, after five years, service with a co-operative, will receive a share of his employer's contribution to the plan should he decide to leave. In effect, this means a truly portable pension. After the employee has worked with the co-operative for ten years, he receives not only the total amount contributed by his employer but his own contribution as well should he decide to leave his employment. I think this idea could well be used by other industries in Canada. It has proved quite effective and is a scheme that a Canadian co-operative has evolved.

This is a system we should consider in connection with firms which decide to close down a Canadian plant. In an age of automation and change, this is something which should be considered in connection with all industry. Many people would move from one industry to another readily if they knew they could take their pension, which they no doubt earned, from the company. I do not want to belabour the matter but, rather, just to mention the Canadian ownership angle which is good for all of us. For this reason, we in this group will support the bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I must advise the House that if the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) speaks now, he will close the debate.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I just want to say a few words in closing the debate. First of all I think hon. members who have contributed to the debate, for the points they have raised. In so far as the technical points raised very ably by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) are concerned, I think it might be better if I deal with those points in the Standing Committee, where they can be discussed back and forth with answers given in detail, rather than on the floor of the House.

I do want to make reference to the fact that much has been said during the debate about the appropriate committee to which this bill should be referred. First I want to say that I, of course, do not determine this question or say to which committee a particular bill should be referred. That is a job for my colleague, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen).

An hon. Member: You mean its all his fault?

Mr. Basford: I am not blaming him at all. I am giving him credit for this decision. Having listened to the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton), I know that if the bill gets to the committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, he is so fond of talking that it will never get out. Surely there is merit in having it go to the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. This is the decision of my friend the President of the Privy Council, and as House Leader for the government I think he has made a very wise decision. We have heard much this afternoon about the Antigonish movement and the co-operative movement at St. Xavier. We heard from a number of distinguished graduates from St. Xavier. I wish we could have heard from one of the more distinguished graduates we have in this House, and perhaps the most distinguished lecturer, the Government House Leader.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Basford: That hon. member has throughout his life exhibited sympathy for the co-operative movement as well as support and great leadership. We do not do this very often, because we cannot, but I compliment him for the support, guidance and friendship I have had in steering this bill through interdepartmental and cabinet discussions. It was the decision of the House Leader that this bill should go to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

I would agree with the remarks of my very close friend, the hon. member for St. John's East, that we should have in this House a standing committee on consumer affairs. I should like nothing better than to have such a committee, but there are a number of committees of the House now and they are determined by a committee of this House. We have had numerous committees considering the rules of this House. They have been all-party committees and they have come in with recommendations. Not one of those committees has recommended the establishment of a standing committee on consumer affairs.

I wonder where the members of the Conservative party were when these committees studied the rules of the House. Where were the members of the NDP when these committees considered rule changes? These committees never recommended a committee on consumer affairs. Were these members sitting silent on those committees? Do we only hear from them here on the floor of the House? I wish they would get busy on the committees which study these matters and bring in a recommendation. I assure them that—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I take it that the minister's references to the committee are relevant to the question of to which committee this legislation is to be referred. If I am not correct in that assumption, I think the minister might very quickly bring his remarks back to relevancy.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your bringing the House to order, and I appreciate the fact that you did not have the benefit of hearing the debate this afternoon. It was suggested that this bill be referred to a standing committee on consumer affairs, but there is no such committee. I was addressing myself to the suggestion that there should be such a committee and why there was not, namely, because the opposition members have not done their job on the various committees. This House has had a considerable number of revisions to the rules, and it is a House committee that decides what committees we should have.

I am quite happy with the motion before the House that this bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. There have not really been any valid arguments presented as to why it should go to another committee, or which suggest there is any greater expertise on co-operative matters in any other Standing Committee. The Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, for which we must all have the greatest esteem, has no greater expertise on co-operative matters than has the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. The Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs has no greater expertise in these matters than the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee. We do not want to get into competition between committees as to where bills should go, but I do want to point out—

Mr. Baldwin: Why not the External Affairs Committee?

Mr. Basford: It could well go to the Committee on External Affairs as suggested by the House Leader for the opposition. If he had been listening to the debate he would have learned about the great contribution the co-operative movement has made to developing countries. This would be a matter of very great concern and interest to the External Affairs Committee.

We all know that in this House it is the party whips, of whom there are four, who determine the membership of committees. I hope this bill will be referred to the committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. If the official opposition whip wants to change the party membership on the committee in order to have some members with expertise in the co-operative movement on the committee, he is free to make that change. To effect such a change, all a party whip has to do is table a piece of paper. This applies to the NDP, the Ralliement Créditiste and the government party.

We have to select the committee for the bill to go to. I feel the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs is a good one. Let me point out that last spring that committee dealt very expeditiously with a bill proposing a change in the Bills of Exchange Act which came into effect yesterday, November 1. This has changed the rights of every consumer who has signed a time-payment contract. I think that committee can deal expeditiously and equitably with Bill C-177. If there are any problems about the membership on the committee from the opposition's point of view, then the whips should change the membership on the committee.

I want to make only one other point before I sit down. It is with reference to some remarks by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) who suggested that the co-operative movement may well have some amendments to suggest to the bill. That movement may very well have such amendments to propose. We have tried to consult them. We have had working on this question various lawyers who are expert in advising the co-operative movement.

We hope the bill meets generally the wishes of those who are involved in the co-operative movement, concerning the kind of general legislation we should have at the federal level to govern the incorporation and operation of co-operatives. No bill is perfect and the government does not suggest that this bill is perfect. Every bill can be improved. I am not the judge, nor do I govern the committee; therefore, I do not know whether or not the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs will call witnesses.

I would hope that I, as the sponsor of the bill, would not be surprised by any amendments which might be brought forward. If people have amendments and changes to suggest in respect of the bill, concerning how it might be improved in any way—I hesitate to suggest this would be probable, knowing those who drew up the bill, but possibly it can be improved—I would ask, as I think anyone sponsoring a bill must ask, for sufficient time to consider such changes so that we are not taken by surprise.

For example, there are very complicated constitutional issues involved in this bill. If there should be suggested changes which involve these constitutional issues, we should have time to consult the law officers of the Crown and consider whether as a government we can accept or reject them. So I would go along with the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre in respect of his suggestion that there may be improvements which could be made to the bill.

I do not know whether the committee will hold public hearings. That is up to the chairman and the members of the committee. However, if changes are to be suggested, or if improvements are to be made, I hope those changes and improvements will be discussed with me and my officers so that we will not be taken by surprise and will have time to consider them carefully and in depth to determine whether we should accept them.

With these remarks I commend this bill to the House and the committee with the confidence, unlike the feeling of some members of the opposition, that it will be dealt with equitably and expeditiously.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING AGENCIES BILL

ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL MARKETING COUNCIL AND AGENCIES

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill C-176, to establish the National Farm Products Marketing Council and to authorize the establishment of national marketing agencies for farm products, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

He said: Mr. Speaker, Bill C-176 to establish a National Farm Products Marketing Council and, hopefully, marketing agencies is essentially the same—indeed, almost exactly the same—as the bill that was considered by this House during the last session. Then, of course, it was Bill C-197.

A great deal of discussion took place during the last session concerning this new departure in respect of federal government legislation. For a number of reasons I do not intend to repeat the arguments advanced during those debates in this House and, indeed, in the Standing Committee on Agriculture during the last session. However, there have been some very useful discussions—and I appreciate the discussions I have had with spokesmen of all parties in this House—concerning the need that is becoming more apparent every day, to set up the kind of structure that is envisaged under Bill C-176 in order to resolve some of the very severe marketing problems in relation to agricultural products in the country.

A great deal of evidence was given by witnesses who were called by or volunteered to appear before the Standing Committee on Agriculture during the past session. While the committee during that period did not reach the clause-by-clause study of the bill, I believe the time spent, even while the House was not sitting, was very useful. I again wish to express my appreciation to the House Leaders and to the agricultural spokesmen of all parties for the kind of attitude they have shown me in respect of getting on with the passage of this bill.

During the discussions which have taken place on this subject I have been asked how some of the marketing plans that would be set up may or, indeed, could operate. Mr. Speaker, I have had prepared in some detail the principles that would be involved in the marketing plans that would be proposed, not only for the members of the Standing Committee on Agriculture but also for the provincial governments which also have a great deal of interest in this bill, because it is designed in such a way that the marketing agencies that would be established under its authority could also receive similar, delegating legislation from provincial jurisdictions.

I wish to advise hon. members that when Bill C-176 reaches the committee I will be prepared to give a detailed outline of how we anticipate some of these marketing plans could operate. In addition to that, I would advise that I have agreed to some suggestions that have been made by some of the farm organizations across the country, as well as to some of the suggestions made by members of the opposition. First, I am prepared to accept amendments to this bill respecting the provisions in the clause which deals with the definition of agricultural products to the extent that cattle and calves would be excluded from the provisions of the bill.

I am also prepared to consider and, indeed, accept amendments to certain other clauses to make much more explicit the appeal procedure that producers would have in the event they felt aggrieved or wished to complain about marketing orders made by the marketing boards that would be set up under the legislation. I am also prepared to consider favourably amendments to other parts of this bill that would provide statutory provision for membership and the relationship of that membership to certain interested groups, particularly the producers, on marketing boards, commissions or whatever other structure is set up under this bill in the clause that deals with membership of these boards.

Mr. Speaker, as I have said, there is a great deal of direct interest by the provincial governments in this bill. It may be useful for the committee to consider some method by which various types of provisions are provided in the legislation relating to specific commodity marketing boards. I say that because I do not believe the marketing boards and, indeed, the regulations would be identical for all commodities. I realize that it may be necessary to have different kind of structure and perhaps different types of rules contained in the regulations with respect to marketing agencies that are dealing, for example, with potatoes, honey, maple syrup, tobacco or any other agricultural product that may be involved.

It seems to me that we should have enough latitude in drawing up those regulations, which will really be the by-laws of any particular marketing agency, so that there can be an input by the provincial governments, which have an important role to play in this marketing legislation, as well as by producer groups that are particularly interested in a specific commodity. I think that is necessary because in practice until this year, 1970, many types of marketing structures have been set up for various commodities. In my view, they should at least be respected as we move forward in trying to co-ordinate the provincial legislation so that it is applied reasonably and uniformly across the country for a specific commodity.

I want to suggest, also, that we reinstate the evidence respecting marketing legislation that the committee heard in the last session. This evidence was heard from the witnesses only about four or five weeks ago, and in my opinion it is still valid. I hope hon. members will feel disposed to reinstate that evidence in this session of Parliament so that we can achieve two things: first, save time and, second, save the expense of the witnesses who travelled long distances to Ottawa to give that evidence.

I conclude by expressing the hope that we will send this bill to the committee very soon, and that we will get down to the clause-by-clause discussion of it which we did not achieve the last time. Then we can amend some of the clauses that members have expressed an interest in amending and bring the bill back to the House for final approval.

Then we can discuss specific marketing plans for particular commodities with the provincial governments and the farm organizations involved, so as to put these plans into effect as soon as possible. This should be done as quickly as possible because in my view, while a number of suggestions have been made on how to come to grips with some of the very severe marketing problems that we have today, by putting into effect the provisions of this bill and by beginning to solve some of the problems through agreement between the provincial and federal authorities, we will find the most useful and productive way of dealing with those problems in the interest of the producers.

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the minister for having put forward Bill C-176 in this session, and I commend him for his part in the consultations which have taken place among all parties in the House. We all realize that this is a very important measure and that it could serve as a useful tool in some of the trying circumstances in which agriculture finds itself today.

The fact the minister has indicated that the government is prepared to accept some major amendments to this bill is, I think, a vindication of the stand taken in this House when the bill was introduced in its original form and when opposition members said it should not have a hasty passage because of its complexity and the necessity of giving ample time to various agricultural commodity groups, not only to study the regulations contained in the bill but to study the implications it might have on the entire agricultural industry.

The minister has been very optimistic about the bill and the power which it would give, as well as the answers it would provide to many of the problems facing Canadian agriculture today. The various groups that appeared before the Standing Committee on Agriculture during the summer varied in their approach from almost complete support of the minister and his contentions to the other extreme, almost total opposition to this bill. Although the bill has a great deal to offer the Canadian producer, I have grave reservations whether it will provide all the answers so earnestly sought today.

I am particularly interested in the fact that the minister has indicated both inside and outside the House that the reason the bill should receive speedy passage is to help solve, in the immediate future, the pressing questions of today regarding overproduction of two or three commodities in two or three of our major provinces. He has indicated that this measure will in itself provide a ready answer to what we consider to be a constitutional problem, that is, whether the provinces or the federal government control interprovincial trade.

We are well aware that under the terms of the BNA Act, trade between provinces comes within the federal purview, but as a result of recent action taken in various provinces, the provinces—through the powers that are inserted into the regulations—have seized, to a large extent, control of interprovincial trade and have in some instances erected effective barriers against the free flow of trade between provinces. We on this side of the House are curious why the government has not immediately referred this matter to the Supreme Court of Canada in order that there might be an early determination regarding the power of the provinces to stop or restrict this free flow which we consider to be an erosion of federal powers.

To rely on a bill of this nature to solve such a constitutional problem leaves many questions in the minds of the official opposition. Indeed, together with the assurances of the minister that this bill could be a vehicle by which to settle these perplexing problems, there has been tremendous pressure exerted by two or three of the main commodity groups in Canada, and by some provincial governments, for speedy passage of the legislation in order to arrive at a solution to this problem.

We have grave reservations, on two counts: first, that this bill could provide any kind of solution to this perplexing and legal problem and, second, that the very complexity of the bill will make it almost impossible, once the bill is proclaimed, to set up the necessary machinery to put the bill into effect and to provide ready aid to agriculture.

The bill as presented to Parliament today is, in the minister's own words, an almost exact replica of Bill C-197. No doubt there are many very pertinent facts which have made it necessary for the bill to be introduced in its present form. But I, and many of the leaders of farm organizations across Canada, wonder why the minister did not take advantage of the recess and of all the information of a highly technical nature that was so ably presented to the Standing Committee on Agriculture by commodity groups with years of experience—information which they presented after months of preparation. We wonder why he did not direct his department to take advantage of this pertinent information which outlined the weaknesses in the bill and the areas where it was thought the bill would cause hardship to producer groups, and so bring in a brand new bill that would solve many of the perplexities that were presented to us when the original bill was introduced.

There may have been good and sufficient reason why the minister did not follow that course of action. Perhaps time was a factor; perhaps there was not sufficient time to redraft a bill of this nature. But if time was a factor, that makes it all the more necessary for us to take time in committee when dealing with the bill. This bill is so serious and important to the agricultural industry of Canada that it must be the very finest bill that the government, backed by its civil servants and with all opposition parties working together, can produce in order to try and solve some of the perplexing problems of present-day agriculture. This is a necessity, and therefore the bill will not have rapid passage through the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

The minister indicated that he would like to have all the evidence presented to the committee last session referred to the new committee. I have no opposition to this, provided one or two safeguards are put into effect. The first safeguard must be that the government does not intend to shut off the presentation of evidence, based on the contention that we already have the evidence before us. If a commodity group or an interested party that has not made a presentation requests an opportunity to do so, they should have their voice heard. The second safeguard is that if an interested group which has already presented evidence thinks it has something further to add, or wishes to change some of its recommendations, it should be allowed to do so. If there is no restriction in these two areas, we on this side would have little difficulty supporting the minister in his request to have the evidence that was presented last session made available to the committee.

I was encouraged to hear the minister speak of some of the amendments that he is prepared to consider. Some of the basic objections that we had are in part met when an attempt is made by the government to allow some—I do not say in total, but some—primary producer representation on the agencies. It may not be possible to have direct primary producer representation on the council itself, due to the fact that the membership must be limited and that all sections of Canada must be represented on it. But this does not hold true for an agency which may be dealing with a small region or regions. In that case we could expect active representation by the producers.

We should never lose sight of the fact that when we are dealing with agriculture we are not dealing strictly with the primary producer. We are dealing with all the marketing facilities that must be taken into consideration; and when we discuss food we must never forget that other segment of Canada's population that is so important in this context, the consumer segment. We must see to it that the consumer has something to say about the way these proposals will control and distribute food in Canada.

One of the things we were very upset about in connection with the previous bill was that it did not seem to put any direct power in the hands of primary producers in making decisions as to whether there should be agencies set up dealing with the product with which they were concerned. But when listening to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) I gathered the impression that he was prepared to consider ways and means by which it could be ascertained whether or not a major portion of the primary producers concerned did require an agency, and a determination on how the agency should be set up.

The minister also indicated that his department had been working very seriously to incorporate appeal procedures in the bill, through which any primary producer, or group of producers, could appeal against any regulation made by an agency which seemed to be working a deliberate hardship on that producer or group of producers. This will meet a major objection of producers. Although such a procedure may have existed in the original bill, it was so skilfully hidden by legal verbiage that the ordinary producer was not convinced that he had recourse to appeal. This part of the bill will require intensive examination. If it shows that an appeal can be taken against direct government action, the bill will have less difficulty before the committee.

In my opening remarks, Mr. Speaker, I said I was not optimistic that this bill will provide everything that the primary producers and the agricultural industry in general feel they need, because in the main one of the basic purposes of the bill is supply management. I think this is necessary. I think the bill was introduced to try and obtain a better and more regular price for goods and services provided by the agricultural industry.

Mr. Danforth: This seems to be the entire basis of the bill. In order to do this it will be necessary, and it has been proven necessary in the Wheat Board and the National Dairy Commission—the forerunners of this council—to introduce supply management. But here again, Mr. Speaker, grave doubts arise. In order to introduce supply management successfully in respect of a primary product in Canada, it is only natural and logical to believe that the agency or farm council will direct its attention to a forecast of domestic consumption and normal international trade and consider this a goal for total production. This is a prime objective. It would indeed be Utopia, because then we could allocate production on a quota system, although there could be tremendous problems in trying to allocate quotas interprovincially. But once we knew the amount necessary for domestic consumption and the international export picture, the government would know what could be allocated to the provinces.

The thing that could upset this principle is the fact that we have no indication of any power in the bill to control imports. I am well aware, Mr. Speaker, that there are powers in other bills and in other sections of government management with regard to the control of imports. However, experience has shown it to be very difficult indeed to create an impediment to the flow into this country of imports of food, because immediately you come into direct conflict with consumer hopes. This is because you may be creating a managed market and a price fixing market, and because nations which trade with Canada and buy Canadian products normally take a very dim view if there is any curtailment imposed upon the products they ship into Canada.

We are very vulnerable in this country, Mr. Speaker, because even with our major resources for production we import anywhere from $800 million to $1 billion worth of food. To curtail this importation would be extremely difficult because then we would be running contrary to the GATT agreements and to what might be considered the best interests of the consumers of this country. Nowhere in this bill is there an indication of implicit power in an agency, council or even in the minister himself, to control imports. This is a major weakness. If you cannot control imports, it renders almost valueless attempted supply management, and when you do not have supply management you must wonder how much can be accomplished under the terms and provisions of this act. I see this as one of the basic weaknesses.

The second basic weakness is the fact that one should have supply management, and once you have an indication of the total supply that would normally be necessary in Canada you come up against the very difficult problem of allocating quotas either provincially or regionally. It is all very well for the minister to state that this can be done by arbitration and agreement among provinces or regions, but there are other extenuating circumstances which enter into the picture which make such agreement almost impossible.

Province "X", if I may use that designation, having been delinquent in the production of a certain product over the years has through economic necessity found that it must do something about it and has in the past poured tremendous sums of provincial money into the production of that commodity. These are the very products we can be in trouble with today, Mr. Speaker, and there is no indication that such a province or the representative of such a province would easily or voluntarily accept restriction in the production of the commodity in the face of their efforts to increase it. Therefore, it seems very difficult to appreciate that any progress whatsoever could be made. This is another of the weaknesses of the bill.

The third weakness—I hesitate to call it a weakness but it is one of the pivots on which the bill must turn—is that because marketing has been, and is, under provincial jurisdiction, in some instances there cannot be any national marketing agency unless with the complete co-operation of provincial governments. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, it may be that they will have to turn over much of their legal jurisdiction to federal authorities. Through the years experience has shown that provincial governments very jealously guard their provincial jurisdictions and are loath to turn them over to federal agencies. There are many provinces in this country, and it would require the abstention or opposition of only one of the provinces concerned with the major production of any primary product to almost invalidate and render the agency useless on a national scale.

So, Mr. Speaker, we have this very precarious position: the success of this bill must hinge upon co-operation of the provinces and proper utilization of their powers. It is further complicated by the fact that the provincial legislatures differ greatly, and there would have to be a meeting of minds and uniform legislation among the provinces before a national agency or even a farm council could function.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, I think you have some indication of the complexity of this bill. It is not a simple piece of legislation, and the powers envisaged under the regulation are great. Indeed, in his evidence before the committee I think the minister indicated it would be necessary to negotiate a contract, almost, between the federal government and the provinces with respect to some commodity groups in order to achieve any success.

Since the success of the measure hinges on the voluntary entry by a province into the terms and regulation of this bill—there is nothing compulsory—you see how nebulous a vehicle we are dealing with and how precarious and long the negotiations could be. The negotiations must be done by men of good will, Mr. Speaker, men with the determination to make an agency work; and they must be done on a provincial basis, almost setting aside provincial aspirations.

I am rather inclined to follow those who believe that the enactment of legislation of this type, rather than solving on a national scale the marketing problems of primary producers today will have the opposite effect. I think it will almost force provinces to become ever more self-sufficient in regard to production within their own borders. If this takes places, Mr. Speaker, the bill will bring about a result exactly opposite to that intended.

As legislators, it is not for us to determine whether the agricultural industry of our country should have this legislation; that should be determined by the primary producers themselves. I believe that our responsibility is to see that if the majority of the producers of this country wish this type of vehicle to promote their ends, then by close scrutiny, by inquiry and questions we must provide the best possible bill that we can, with the least possible government interference into the normal course and trade of the agricultural industry.

[Mr. Danforth.]

Mr. Danforth: We must have the end in view of solving some of the problems facing the commodity groups today on a national scale. We will not be able to accomplish all this, of course. It is impossible under a single vehicle to deal with the majority of products in many provinces with different conditions. It is impossible to bring about Utopia. But if we make some progress we shall have served our end as parliamentarians and rendered a service to the industry.

We shall try to work, in co-operation with the government, to produce as fine a piece of legislation as we can. We know, after we have done this, that the bill will not be perfect and that it will need to be brought back to the House in future for amendment. We hope we can provide this service to the agricultural industry, to our consumers and marketing agencies. It is an experiment which must be undertaken. It must function in order that we may see where the weaknesses are, and so we may either cure those weaknesses or eliminate this type of legislation altogether. Whether it will serve its purpose we do not know. It appears to me and to my colleagues that the legislation must be enacted, that its powers must be illustrated, so to speak, and brought to bear on the industry for a period perhaps of several years in order that we may determine whether it is successful.

We feel that we are gambling with the future of the agricultural industry by bringing in legislation of this type. But we also feel that if the primary producer is seeking this type of legislation, he ought to have the opportunity of working under it. We therefore hope that along with other parties of this House we shall be permitted to bring in amendments before the Standing Committee on Agriculture. We want the opportunity to bring in amendments, in a solemn and serious manner, which will be designed to make this legislation workable. We shall co-operate with all other parties in their amendments when they have the same goal in view as my party. I was very much impressed when the minister said tonight that the government is prepared to accept this type of approach to the bill.

An hon. Member: He is learning.

Mr. Danforth: He feels that perhaps amendments are necessary and that the government should consider them. With an approach such as this, I think we shall see a measure of success in the committee stage of the bill.

Mr. Thomson: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question? When he referred to management control of farm produce, was he suggesting that the federal government should become involved and should control produce through these boards, in the way it has become involved with the Canadian Wheat Board and the National Dairy Commission?

Mr. Danforth: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to hear the minister set out some of the changes which he would welcome to this bill when it is considered in committee. Some of us are quite prepared to reinstate, as you might say, the submissions that were made to us in the previous session with regard to how the bill should operate. Those submissions came from many organizations and individuals who expressed their point of view and their position with regard to the commodities they were producing.

I would also say that if it appears to the committee that there are reasons why one or other of those witnesses should be recalled, that should be done. If it appears that there are others who have something new to offer, who have new points of view to place before the committee, the committee ought to be willing to consider hearing them. We for our part will be placing considerable emphasis, when the bill is in committee, on the necessity of seeing that the producers are adequately represented in respect of a bill such as this which will become marketing legislation.

I believe one can scarcely justify giving powers as wide the very real protection of being in control of what the agency does and how it does it. I do not accept the philosophy that is becoming current, that farmers and those in the agribusiness, packers and consumers, are all as these to a marketing agency unless the producer has one big, happy family and that the farmer should be quite willing to sit down, pretty much like a sheep among the wolves, and be prepared to be a good fellow. The sad thing about the farmer and the producer is that he has been a good fellow for too long and now he is being plucked like a chicken.

An hon. Member: The vanishing American; that's what he is.

Mr. Gleave: The vanishing American is a good term for the farmer. You find this situation is the butter industry and the egg industry. The rapid transition of the industry has taken it out of the farmer's control. We are also very concerned about another aspect of the bill, that is, the method of setting up commodity marketing boards and the question of how effectively they will operate. One matter we ought to have concerned ourselves about in the bill, and on which we have not touched at all, is the question of a marketing agency such as this bargaining directly with the government for support prices or price maintenance. We have not dealt with the point at which the government comes in; we have left this to the Agricultural Stabilization Act.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, that there does not seem to be disposition to continue any longer tonight.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, before the House is adjourned may I ask, on behalf of the opposition House Leader, what the business is for tomorrow and Wednesday? There was a hiatus in that regard in last Thursday's announcement.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I gather that one or two more members wish to speak on the bill that we have been discussing. If that is the case, we would call it first tomorrow and then continue with the business I have already announced, which is the packaging and labelling bill. On Wednesday we would call the emergency powers bill.

At ten o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

PRIVILEGE

MR. KAPLAN—DENIAL OF SPECIAL KNOWLEDGE OF REASONS FOR IMPLEMENTING WAR MEASURES ACT

Mr. Robert P. Kaplan (Don Valley): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. Last Friday during the question period while I was absent from the House the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) attributed to me a statement to the effect that ministers had given me information not available to the public about the reasons for the implementation of the War Measures Act. Over the weekend I spoke to the hon. member and he referred me to an article which appeared in one edition of the Toronto Telegram reporting on a public meeting at which I spoke in Toronto. The hon. member's comment was justified by the headline of the article. In fact I made no such statement. On the contrary, I said at least twice that I had no special knowledge that was not available to the public, and I was quoted to that effect in the body of the article. I might add that I made no reference to caucus that evening.

STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS ACT

PROVISION FOR EXAMINATION, PUBLICATION AND SCRUTINY

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (for the Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-182, to provide for the examination, publication and scrutiny of regulations and other statutory instruments.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

NATIONAL SECURITY

PROVISION OF PERMANENT LEGISLATION TO DEAL WITH EMERGENCIES—SUCCESS OF EFFORTS UNDER WAR MEASURES ACT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Yesterday the Minister of Justice introduced a bill of a temporary nature of which I approve, as the right hon. gentleman is well aware. Can he inform the House what the intentions of the government are with regard to permanent legislation relating to emergencies of a somewhat different nature, perhaps, than that for which the War Measures Act would be appropriate? Can the right hon. gentleman inform the House whether the government intends to introduce a bill to change the permanent law of the country in this regard?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it will be necessary to consider this question and settle it in due course. In the present circumstance, one in which tensions are not quite abated and one in which the recent events in Quebec have caused, shall I say, emotion and passion to come into the debate, the government has found it advisable to wait until this period is over, until in a moment of relative calm Parliament could look at longer term legislation which would be somewhat stronger than the Criminal Code and somewhat weaker than the War Measures Act.

Mr. Stanfield: Arising out of the right hon. gentleman's answer, could the Prime Minister or an appropriate minister make a statement tomorrow about the progress of efforts under the War Measures Act with regard to the situation in Quebec and the success of these measures? I may say that this question arises out of the right hon. gentleman's answer in which he indicated that a period of tranquility is required to enable a permanent measure to be introduced. Would the right hon. gentleman make a progress report tomorrow?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe I understand the intention of the Leader of the Opposition. When the debate begins tomorrow on the legislation to replace the regulations we will, of course, explain the situation as we see it now. I am not quite sure what else the Leader of the Opposition wants.

Mr. Stanfield: Would the right hon. gentleman make a report or have a report made tomorrow on where matters stand, including what charges have been laid and the reason why more charges have not been laid? I think there is considerable apprehension on the part of the public arising out of the fact that some 400 people have been picked up and apparently very few charges have been laid. I ask the Prime Minister whether he will say something tomorrow to allay the general concern of the public in this regard, or have an appropriate minister do so?

Mr. Trudeau: I will take that into consideration, Mr. Speaker.

WAR MEASURES ACT—COMPENSATION TO THOSE ARRESTED AND RELEASED

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister.

In view of the fact that the Quebec and federal governments have offered some $150,000 in rewards to informers on the criminals who kidnapped Mr. Cross and murdered Mr. Laporte, I would ask the Prime Minister whether the government is considering establishment of a fund to compensate those persons who have been arrested without cause under the War Measures Act, in order to vindicate their reputation with public opinion and with their employers.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I must admit that we have not considered such a step for the present. The hon. member knows that the subject of compensating persons arrested under any legislation has already been brought up in the House and elsewhere. I will just repeat that in most instances such compensation is a matter to be looked into by provincial governments responsible for the administration of justice and consequently for any errors which might be perpetrated, generally speaking.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Has the Prime Minister contacted the provincial authorities to find out whether, following errors made, they were ready to offer compensation to persons arrested and detained?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker. I did not contact any province in that regard nor about compensation which could have been paid following arrests made under the Criminal Code or any other legislation. I do not think this is a particular case. In any administration of justice, errors will happen and I think that some provinces or countries have provided compensation. But, I repeat, this does not come essentially under the federal government and I do not intend to take the matter in hand.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question.

Does the government intend to make a definite and explicit statement so that the people who have been arrested may clear their names and no longer suffer serious damage from certain Canadian citizens?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I believe that the hon. member is somewhat late in asking his question. The other day in reply to a question from the hon. member for Matane (Mr. De Bané) I gave a definite and concrete reply which I repeated on a televison broadcast over the week-end. Therefore I do not feel it is my duty to say any more for the moment.

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Shefford wish to ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Rondeau: No, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

REPORTED FLIGHT FROM COUNTRY OF THOSE SOUGHT FOR MURDER AND KIDNAPPING

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Is the Prime Minister in a position to tell the House whether any or all of those for whom warrants have been issued for their arrest for murder and kidnapping have left the country, as was reported last evening by the British Broadcasting Corporation when it was stated that the Canadian government had communicated with all the 107 nations that are associated with Interpol? Can the Prime Minister give us some information on this point?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not have any such information. I take it that it is a normal police precaution, when they are looking for suspects of this kind, to communicate with Interpol just in case the suspects might have left Canada. I have no particular information to the effect that they have.

MURDER OF PIERRE LAPORTE AND KIDNAPPING OF JAMES CROSS—EFFICIENCY OF POLICE INVESTIGATIONS

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister.

Considering the time it is taking our police forces to find the kidnappers of Mr. Cross and the murderers of Mr. Laporte, do the Ottawa and Quebec governments intend to call upon other police forces, such as Scotland Yard or the F.B.I.?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): We have not considered such an action, Mr. Speaker.

APPREHENDED INSURRECTION—CRTC REQUEST TO OTTAWA PRIVATE RADIO STATIONS TO PROVIDE CERTAIN TAPES

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is really for the Secretary of State who unfortunately is not here today. I would ask the Prime Minister to take it as notice or, if he knows now, to tell the House if there is any relationship at all with the telegrams from the CRTC to four private radio stations in Ottawa requesting them to deliver to the CRTC, within two weeks, 12 days of 24-hour tapes during the relevant period when this unfortunate crisis developed? If he does not know, could he find out whether the Secretary of State would make a statement tomorrow in view of this rather unusual request by telegram?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe it is the object of the CRTC to monitor the performance of radio and television in various parts of Canada on various events. It is possible that they have sent these telegrams. I will transmit the question to the Secretary of State and if he sees anything that can be answered I am sure he will.

QUEBEC—INFORMATION CONCERNING ALLEGED DISCUSSIONS ON ESTABLISHMENT OF PROVISIONAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Yesterday the Prime Minister said that all last week members of the opposition had been spreading rumours—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): —with respect to the discussions regarding the establishment of a provisional government in the province of Quebec. Last night a number of members of the Press Gallery appearing on a television show said that rather than getting these rumours from the opposition they got them from persons highly placed in the government. In view of the serious nature of these rumours, is the Prime Minister prepared to have either an investigation by a committee of this House or an independent inquiry made into the source of these rumours in order that we may know who is actually responsible for disseminating them?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Listening attentively to the question, it would appear to me that last night the press began spreading some more rumours, and the hon. member is now repeating them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact there is a growing suspicion that these rumours were disseminated in a clumsy attempt to explain the government's imposition of the War Measures Act, may I ask—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that the hon. gentleman is now making a speech. I appreciate that he may have a supplementary question and I would invite him to put it.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in view of that may I ask the Prime Minister if he can assure the House that none of these statements have come from any of his colleagues in the cabinet?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not know if the hon. member is asking me seriously to control everything which is said, not of a secret nature, by all my ministers, but that is not my way of proceeding.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SOUTH AFRICA—EMBARGO ON EXPORT OF ARMS—REPRESENTATIONS BY CANADA TO GREAT BRITAIN

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, I should like to put my question to the Prime Minister.

Following Canada's decision announced yesterday in the House to no longer sell aircraft piston engines and spare parts to South Africa on account of its apartheid policy, has the government considered the possibility of making representations to the British government to ensure that it will abide by the United Nations policy towards South Africa?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the House knows of course that I was in touch with the British government some months ago in respect of this matter.

Mr. Rondeau: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Could the Prime Minister tell us whether or not he has received any reply from Great Britain in this connection?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have been told in quite a general way that my representations would be taken into consideration.

IMMIGRATION

ADMISSION TO CANADA OF BLACK PANTHER MEMBER, RAYMOND HEWITT

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. It has to do with a revolutionary by the name of Hewitt who describes himself as minister of education in the Black Panthers. He is to speak in Winnipeg later this week to a group within the University of Manitoba, and objection has been taken by various officials of the university to the admission into Canada of this person. In view of all the circumstances existing today, is the minister prepared to direct Hewitts' return when he arrives at the frontier instead of allowing him to come into Canada and stir up potential bloodshed by his advocacy of revolution?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in reply to that question I think I should say two basic things besides saying that I am not sure that the events of these days should too much colour our judgment in regard to all of these matters. First, it would be one thing in any case to be sure how the minister could direct such a thing in terms of practical possibilities while at the same time welcoming the many American visitors who come to this country. Second, it has tended to be the policy of the department and the government not lightly to turn away people who are coming to this country at the invitation of a responsible body, which in this case I understand to be the Student Union of the University of Manitoba. On the basis of the information known to my officials I do not think it can be said that the gentleman in question is in a prohibited class.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This is one time that the minister speaks the language of the NDP. May I ask the minister whether it is a fact that the RCMP got in touch with the Department of Immigration with a view to having this man prevented from entering Canada?

An hon. Member: How did you find that out?

An hon. Member: Never mind; he did.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I cannot confirm that as a fact. There may have been some contact by some police officer with the department, but I am not at all certain that it was the RCMP. I have checked and have been informed that there was no such request from the Attorney General of Manitoba.

An hon. Member: The city police, then?

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): As a supplementary question I should like to ask the minister if someone entering this country from another country, particularly from the United States, who fitted into the picture of the new crimes created by the War Measures Act would be treated any differently than a Canadian is treated today?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me the question is a question of principle—

Mr. Woolliams: It is a good question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member suggests it is a good question and it probably is. However, the hon. member is asking a rhetorical question and in that sense it is not in order.

Mr. Woolliams: I wonder if I might rephrase it, Mr. Speaker, because I was not trying to put a rhetorical question, with the greatest respect. We have already had some of these people enter Canada so it really is a practical question. I am asking this simple question: Does the law apply to those people coming in who fit into the picture the same as it would apply to a Canadian who has been detained without right of counsel and without being charged?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, while the hon. member has tried, I think he has rephrased his question in another form of hypothesis. All I can say is that there is the law and there are the regulations and these are what we seek to apply.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for St. Boniface rising on a supplementary?

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (St. Boniface): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

I should like to ask the Minister of Immigration whether he has been in communication with the Attorney General of the province of Manitoba in regard to this Black Panther and whether the Manitoba minister approves the policy of the federal government to allow Ray "Masai" Hewitt into the province of Manitoba to speak on Friday?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, as far as I know there has been no communication to us from the government of Manitoba.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ASSISTANCE TO RYERSON PRESS TO PREVENT TAKEOVER BY UNITED STATES INTERESTS—POLICY RESPECTING TEXTBOOK PUBLISHERS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Did the government entertain a request from the Ryerson Press publishing house for assistance which would have prevented that company having to sell out to United States interests?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that question was asked yesterday. If I am wrong, perhaps the minister can reply to it.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, with great respect, the question was not put in the same manner yesterday. My question is, was a request for assistance made to the government and why did the government not entertain such a request?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I can only say that such a request did not come to me. I will find out if other ministers received one.

Mr. McGrath: May I ask what stand the government is taking in view of the alarming number of takeovers by United States companies of Canadian publishing houses involved in the publication of Canadian textbooks?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has asked the minister to make a statement of policy. I do not think he can do this at this time.

Mr. Baldwin: He has no policy.

FOREIGN OWNERSHIP OF CANADIAN COMPANIES—AMENDMENTS TO COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Government House Leader. Can the President of the Privy Council indicate when the amendments to the Combines Investigation Act will be introduced in the House in order that we might give further consideration to steps to prevent the takeover of firms such as Ryerson Press by foreign concerns?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot indicate the time when that legislation will be brought forward.

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of the great importance that school texts in particular have in the thinking of young Canadians, would the government give immediate consideration to putting the publishing industry in the same category as banking and broadcasting in terms of requiring Canadian ownership?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should know that banking and broadcasting are within federal jurisdiction and that therefore we have a particular responsibility toward the policies developed therein, but this is not the case, obviously, with publishing.

WITHDRAWAL OF TAX EXEMPTIONS GRANTED TO CHURCHES

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. In light of this further example that Canadian churches operate according to normal commercial practices, may I ask the Minister of Finance whether he intends to withdraw the tax exemptions which organized religions enjoy in his country?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

NUCLEAR PLANNING GROUP MEETING—CONCLUSIONS REACHED ON CONTROL AND OPERATION OF WEAPONS

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Can the minister give the House any information as to the conclusions reached by the group of ministers and chiefs of staff of a number of NATO countries who met here last week to study the control and operation of nuclear weapons within the NATO alliance?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member will recall, although when he himself was Minister of National Defence the Nuclear Planning Group did not exist, it has not been the practice for security reasons to indicate the specific conclusions arrived at. There was, however, a discussion at that meeting of the political criteria which should apply to any decisions by Governments concerning possible defensive use of nuclear weapons. There was a further refining of these criteria and, in particular, there was a consideration of atomic demolition munitions, the point being clearly made that their use would be preceded only by a political decision.

Mr. Harkness: Was any consensus arrived at as to a greater share in the control of the use of nuclear weapons by the alliance as a whole instead of having that control rest, as it does at the present time, almost entirely in the hands of United States?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, one of the purposes of the Nuclear Planning Group is to exercise broader political control over these weapons. The basic terms of the agreements remain unchanged. However, this particular group provides the basis upon which general political criteria governing their possible use can be worked out.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister whether there was a reaffirmation of the general principle that the seabed will not be used for the proliferation of nuclear instruments of any sort?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, as to whether that particular question was discussed or not I do not think I can say, because of the generally accepted principle of not discussing individual items.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. During the meetings, was there any discussion concerning the use of the surplus CF-5 aircraft? If so, what decision was reached?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I might remind the hon. member that the name of the group is the Nuclear Planning Group, which of course would not deal with aircraft with conventional support capabilities such as the CF-5.

GRAIN

SUBMISSION OF PRODUCTION AND RECEIPTS POLICY TO AGRICULTURAL CONGRESS—REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. In view of the fact that the second agricultural congress is scheduled to meet in Ottawa, later in November, and in view of the fact that the proposals for a grain production and receipts policy for the western grains industry in some ways conflict with and in some ways complement the proposals of the task force, is it the intention of the minister to put this policy before the congress at that time?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the congress is essentially within the responsibility of my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture. However, I understand that the proposals which I laid before the House several days ago are likely to come before the congress in one form or another. I will certainly welcome discussion of them on that occasion.

Mr. Gleave: In view of the wide implications of these proposals, is the minister prepared to refer them to the Standing Committee on Agriculture so that farm organizations and other interested parties can appear before the committee to discuss these proposals in advance of their implementation?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, we will certainly welcome extremely wide discussion of these proposals. It is our hope that before very long they will be presented to this House in the form of legislation. At that time there will be an opportunity for detailed examination before the committee.

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): My supplementary question is in connection with the timing of such legislation. Can the minister give a date when such legislation, based on the announcement made the other day, will be introduced in the House?

Mr. Lang: No, Mr. Speaker. We do not have a specific schedule in mind, although the matter is of some urgency if the proposals are to be in the form of concrete legislation and in effect for this crop year.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PRODUCTION AND RECEIPTS POLICY—PAYMENT OF STORAGE DURING CURRENT CROP YEAR

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): In view of the proposals the minister tabled in the House, is it the intention of the government to continue to pay storage on grain during the current crop year as provided under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the proposals indicate an intention to eliminate the payments being made under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. The exact form of elimination will appear in the legislation when it is brought forward.

AGRICULTURE

ESTABLISHMENT OF INCOME STABILIZATION PROGRAM FOR MILK PRODUCERS

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

Following the announcement made by the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board that effective August 1, 1970, the government would propose a stabilization program through which producers would be paid the difference between their eligible returns and the average eligible returns for the five previous years—the equivalent of providing western producers with a guaranteed income—is the minister in a position to state before this House whether the government intends to set up a similar program for stabilizing the returns of dairy producers of Eastern Canada?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Not in exactly the same terms, Mr. Speaker, although I am sure the hon. member will agree that the $115 million that we now provide to the dairy industry promotes the same cause in many respects.

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture.

Since the amount mentioned by the minister concerning the grant made to the Canadian Dairy Commission is insufficient at present, does the minister intend to reexamine that question in order to give a stable income to milk producers as he did for western farmers?

[English]

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, there is a great deal of consideration and review now going on with respect to the future types of dairy policy which will be most useful to the dairy farmers. I am sure these are well known to the hon. member.

[Later:]

DAIRYING—REVISION OF POLICY RESPECTING GRANTS

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Agriculture.

[Mr. Lang.]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lotbinière wants to ask a supplementary question. Is it about the previous question?

Mr. Fortin: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture.

Since the minister stated recently in this House that the balance is established between production and consumption of dairy products and that he intended to carry on studies in order to review this policy, could he say whether he expects a real change in this policy in the near future?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not recall saying that a normal balance has now been established. What I did say was that the policies or amendments to the policy that was introduced on April 1 of this year had been helpful in restoring the balance, in other words, decreasing overproduction. There is a great deal more that needs to be done with the co-operation of the provinces so that the over-all production of both manufactured and fluid milk will be in balance with domestic consumption.

FINANCE

CANADA SAVINGS BONDS—PURCHASE BY BANK OF CANADA

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Can the minister inform the House what portion of the current issue of Canada Savings Bonds is being or has been purchased by the Bank of Canada?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Bank of Canada does not purchase Canada Savings Bonds.

Mr. Thompson: Will the minister explain to the House why in advertisements which have been appearing in recent weeks in the newspapers it is indicated that a certain percentage of these savings bonds have been reserved for the Bank of Canada?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I would like my hon. friend to show me the advertisements to which he is referring. When Canada Savings Bonds go through the Bank of Canada, it is a redemption of bonds coming back to the treasury.

Mr. Thompson: Can the minister inform the House how soon he expects to reduce the current interest rates charged by the Bank of Canada?

An hon. Member: After the next election.

Mr. Benson: I presume the hon. member is referring to the bank rate which has been reduced three times in the last four or five months. The decision as to the reduction of the bank rate lies with the Governor of the Bank of Canada.

POLLUTION

GASPÉ—LEAKAGE OF OIL FROM TANKER "ESSO KOBE"

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

Has he been advised that the tanker Esso Kobe is now experiencing some difficulties at the Mont-Louis wharf in the Gaspé area, after striking a reef, and that oil is escaping from one of its compartments? If so, are the officials of the Department of Transport supervising pollution control operations?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, a preliminary inquiry began yesterday into this particular oil spill. The evidence so far indicates that some oil leaked from the vessel while it was being unloaded. Divers discovered that there was a rupture in one of the tanks. That tank was emptied. The oil that actually seeped on to the surface was destroyed by chemicals.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

SUGGESTED REFERENCE OF AMENDING BILL TO COMMITTEE ON TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): May I ask the Minister of Transport what success he has had in connection with the undertaking he gave to the House to have Bill C-2, amendments to the Canada Shipping Act dealing with pollution, referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications instead of the Special Committee on Environmental Pollution as it now stands?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I think this is a matter for the House or House Leaders to discuss. I have not been personally involved. I indicated that I am quite prepared to have it go to either committee.

NAVIGATION

SEABED OUTCROPPINGS IN NORTHWEST PASSAGE—LIMITING OF USE UNTIL INSTALLATION OF MARKERS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the newly discovered outcroppings from the seabed which extend to within 50 feet of the surface in the Northwest Passage, will any steps be taken to limit navigation in these waters until some new type of suitable navigation marker is installed?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): At the moment there is no indication of any sizeable increase in the amount of traffic through the Northwest Passage. I agree that this has created an additional hazard. The officials are examining it. Obviously that portion of the passage will now be marked, but there is a necessity for a much more comprehensive hydrographic survey of that region in order that these unknown obstacles will be identified if and when the passage is used on a regular basis.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REMOVAL OF BUDGET FREEZE—COMPLETION OF DESTROYER CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. I welcome him back to the House. I hope he had a good trip west. Has the minister either directly or indirectly requested the government to release the current freeze on the budget of the Department of National Defence?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for his kind remarks. I want to say how much those of us who attended the Nuclear Planning Group appreciated the hospitality we received in the west, which I am sure would have been matched in the east. As to the hon. member's question, the answer is no.

Mr. Forrestall: I have a supplementary which is of some consequence, Mr. Speaker. Since the minister is apparently not in a position to tell us the result of the review of the DDH-280 program, would he indicate how in God's name he will be able to pay for it unless he gets some more money?

Mr. Speaker: Order. To the Chair, at least, that sounds like an argument—the initiation of a debate.

Mr. Forrestall: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, when it comes to this important matter the minister has my full support. I want him to have more money.

FINANCE

SUGGESTED INTERIM INCOME TAX CHANGES TO ASSIST PENSIONERS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Having regard to the delay which is being experienced in bringing in over-all income tax changes, is the government giving consideration to an interim measure which would remove some of the anomalies and unfairnesses faced by persons whose only income is their pensions?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): If there are to be changes in taxation they would, of course, be the subject of a budgetary statement in the House. If there are to be changes in other measures affecting older people, they would be announced in the House in due course.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMITTEE TO EXAMINE STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS AND REGULATIONS

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Privy Council. In giving credit to the government for bringing in legislation dealing with the scrutiny of regulations and statutory instruments, I should like to ask whether it is the intention shortly to introduce a proposal making effective the committee's companion suggestion to set up a scrutiny committee of the House to examine regulations?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): This matter is alluded to in the bill mentioned by the hon. member and presumably we shall act on it further.

Mr. Baldwin: In view of the fact that the objectivity of such a committee might be enhanced if its chairman were not from the government side of the House, and in view of the obvious fondness of the government for governing by Order in Council, will the government consider appointing an opposition member as chairman of such a committee or, at least, recommending that an opposition member be appointed?

Mr. MacEachen: If it were possible to find an objective opposition member.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Wellington rising on a question of privilege?

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILES—CANADIAN AND UNITED STATES PRICES

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In this period of adjustment of the prices charged by car manufacturers for 1971 models, can he assure the House that Canadians will be able to buy Canadian made cars at the same prices as Americans buy these cars?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I would hope it would be a lower price, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: When is Christmas?

Mr. Hales: Is the minister assuring us by his answer that Canadians will be able to buy these Canadian made cars at the same prices as Americans?

Mr. Pepin: On a number of occasions, in answer to questions, I have spoken about the reduction of the gap which exists between American and Canadian manufacturers' prices. I have drawn attention to the fact that this gap was slowly decreasing. I also recall saying that expectations that it will disappear altogether are not in existence at the present time because, apparently, there are costs in Canada which are special to our situation here.

Mr. Speaker: We are running short of time; perhaps the Chair might recognize the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby, and then we could go on to another subject.

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To go beyond the frivolity of the answers we have been getting from the minister for the past two years—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I mentioned a moment ago that we were running out of time. The hon. member has taken more than his share already.

Mr. Broadbent: I will come right to the point, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister inform the House whether he has held discussions with the automobile industry within the last two months on this question?

Mr. Pepin: I would have to check before I could give the hon. member the date of the last occasion on which I met with representatives of the industry to see if it is a little more or a little less than two months. But it is well known that I meet with the industry regularly to discuss this and other matters.

NATIONAL PARKS

POLICY RESPECTING PERPETUAL LEASES

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

A month ago the minister promised to make a statement on motions regarding the policy on leases in national parks. He then asked for a 15-day delay. As we have been waiting for a month, could the minister tell us if he will make it this week?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I hope to make a statement on leases in national parks this week.

NATIONAL REVENUE

INQUIRY AS TO CLOSING OF SYDNEY TAXATION OFFICE

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): My question is for the Acting Minister of National Revenue; I hesitate to raise this type of question now, but I do so because there is an urgency attached to it which may not be obvious to Your Honour. Can the minister advise us whether his department plans to close the national revenue taxation office at Sydney?

Mr. Speaker: Obviously the hon. member can well understand that the urgency of the matter is not apparent to the Chair. However, the question having been asked, perhaps the minister might reply quickly.

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Acting Minister of National Revenue): I should like to point out that the Minister of National Revenue will be in the House tomorrow.

POWER

SKAGIT RIVER—ACTION TO PREVENT FLOODING OF VALLEY

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): My question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Is he or some other minister planning to announce any government action in the near future relating to the flooding of the Skagit Valley in British Columbia?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The matter is under consideration by the government but no announcement is planned for today. If an announcement is to be made it will be made in the House in the normal and proper fashion.

Mr. Rose: Since west coast news sources indicate that a judicial inquiry is imminent, can the minister tell us whether such an inquiry is, in fact, contemplated?

Mr. Greene: The entire matter is under review, including any aspects in which the federal government has a proper constitutional role which it might or should take under consideration. If any action is contemplated, it will be announced in the proper manner.

FINANCE

REDUCTION IN DEPARTMENTAL PUBLIC RELATIONS BUDGETS BECAUSE OF OPERATIONS OF INFORMATION CANADA

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board. In light of the announcement yesterday that Information Canada will be taking over the organizing and developing of each individual public relations program in the various government departments, can the minister tell us whether he expects there will be a reduction in the individual budgets of each department accordingly?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What do you think?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): As a consequence of setting up Information Canada it would be expected that economies would be achieved in the operation of individual departmental information units.

An hon. Member: You are not serious.

Mr. Bell: Will the minister check? Will he make certain that he gives us the size of the reduction within each department, because everybody in the Press Gallery who wants a job in the government is now getting one?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING AGENCIES BILL

The House resumed from Monday, November 2, consideration of the motion of Mr. Olson that Bill C-176, to establish the National Farm Products Marketing Council and to authorize the establishment of national marketing agencies for farm products, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, when the House adjourned yesterday I was commenting on some of the amendments which the minister suggested might go forward in connection with this bill. One of the most important suggestions was that the bill might be amended so that any possibility of marketing beef cattle or calves under this legislation would be removed. It seems to me rather strange that the minister would indicate he is in favour of emasculating the bill by removing from it the potential to achieve the very objectives which he has repeatedly said in the committee and in this House are the objectives of the legislation.

On being questioned in the committee, the minister stated that one of the objectives of this bill is to correct the present balkanization which is taking place and has taken place in agricultural trade in this country. He said it is designed to correct the situation where one province can say to another: You cannot bring this product into the province. When he was asked about taking this problem to the Supreme Court for decision, he said he did not propose to go to the Supreme Court to correct the situation.

The minister has deliberately brought in a piece of legislation which eliminates one of our main agricultural products, and informs the House that he has the answer to the situation which exists. How do we know whether a year or two years from now one of the provinces of Canada will not decide that it does not choose to allow the sale of beef cattle or calves from other parts of Canada in that province? Should that occur, there would be no possibility of dealing with the situation under this act if the proposed amendments are made. These are the clear implications of this amendment.

I refer to a copy of the proceedings of a press conference in which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) stated the policy of this government in reference to the possibility of solving the present problems of marketing agricultural farm products between provinces. The prime minister said:

> I don't have the reference to what Mr. Olson said, but the federal position is that of course we have no objection to a reference to the Supreme Court as a matter of principle, but we don't think it would be the right solution in practice, because the reference would take a lot of time and if the bill on marketing legislation which is now before the federal parliament, and which was prevented from passing by some opposition members before the summer adjournment, if we can get it through when parliament reconvenes, it will be much better than going through the Supreme Court—

This is an awkward alternative presented not only by the minister but by the Prime Minister and the government. The government expects the opposition, which it has condemned in this statement and charged with obstructing the bill, to seriously consider this bill in committee if and when it is referred, although the government has emasculated and hampered it and will have made it partially inoperative before it even receives the sanction of this House. The government expects us to seriously consider its honest intent to bring the marketing of farm products in Canada under the control of marketing agencies in order to enable producers to do an effective job of marketing. I wonder who is being kidded. Anyone who is aware of the implications and interactions in respect of the marketing of farm products knows the various exchanges and the competition that exists between the producers and the consumers in the marketplace.

Following a constitutional conference there was a communiqué which indicated there was a consensus among the provinces that beef cattle and calves would be excluded. Yet following that communiqué the minister of agriculture for the province of Manitoba appeared before the Standing Committee on Agriculture and stated clearly and without equivocation that his government was opposed to the exclusion of beef cattle and calves under this legislation. The minister also said as follows:

> It is our understanding that in the opinion of the government of Canada the current frictions between provinces over interprovincial trade in agricultural products will be more speedily resolved through speedy passage of Bill C-197 than by reference to the Supreme Court of Canada. In our opinion the act will only achieve that goal if the proposed legislation is amended to clarify and reaffirm the principles which shall govern interprovincial trade in Canada.

The brief goes on to say that they are in favour of a system of orderly marketing of farm products and are in agreement with the intent of the legislation proposed in Bill C-197. The brief states:

> We are concerned, however, about recent statements that amendments to the act are being considered to exclude cattle from the jurisdiction of the proposed National Farm Products Marketing Council. The fact that the chaotic conditions prevailing in the marketing of some farm products are not present in the marketing of cattle is not sufficient reason for explicitly excluding cattle from a national marketing act which is, after all, enabling or umbrella legislation. Beef is an important farm product which is produced, marketed, and consumed in competition with other farm products; it cannot be said that there are no problems in the marketing of cattle which, at some future date, producers may want to tackle through action under a national marketing act. It is fairly well agreed that as long as producers do not express the need for a national marketing agency for cattle, no such agency will be established under the act.

That is fair enough, but the decision as to what products will come under the act will, hopefully, be made by the producers of those products. Let us hope this will be a decision of the producers rather than of provincial governments. This act is designed so that the producers, in co-operation and co-ordination with governments, can make the decisions. If this act becomes nothing more than a sort of convenience for provincial governments to solve internal differences in marketing between provinces by setting up quotas and regional areas within which they shall function, it will not accomplish very much.

The minister, speaking last May to the Canadian Food Processors Association, as reported in the Globe and Mail for May 14, said:

> —without "some form of intervention in the marketplace, the farmer does not have fair and adequate power."

• (3:00 p.m.)

Now, does this apply to all products except beef? Is the minister, by virtue of excluding it, saying we need not be concerned. The packing companies now have substantial feed lots which they can use effectively in two ways. The packing companies can go on the market and purchase feeders and then, when those cattle are in condition, they can be brought back on the market in periods in which it would be advantageous to do so, thus enabling the companies to stay off the public market? Is the minister not aware that this is part of the picture? He apparently is aware that the situation exists because he so stated in May when he was speaking to the Canadian food processors. But is he saying to this House that this situation does not exist in this particular part of the farm industry and will not exist. That is what he is saying because he wants to rule out even the possibility of the producers of beef products coming under this legislation. He wants to place them in the position where, if they do have difficulties, they will have to come to whoever happens to be the minister at that time and ask him to open up the act and go through the exercise all over again.

I tell the minister that it is altogether unacceptable to our party that a measure as important to the farmers as this is should be dealt with in this shabby manner. Speaking at that same meeting the minister said:

> Thus, while many food processors have objected to marketing agencies and their powers, they themselves have in effect adopted different techniques to much the same ends.

The minister says that this situation exists. Then he says, let us go ahead, but let us not make it possible for one of the major sectors of the agricultural industry to participate in this marketing agency. I think the minister, and possibly his government, are aware that there are presently rapid changes going on in the farm industry; that is, we are accelerating the trend toward larger units. The trend toward integration is also being accelerated and a situation where the processor integrates with the producer, where controls are exercised over the market place and where the ordinary free marketing system can not effectively operate. So long as a free marketing system operates effectively, the farmer then is in a position to obtain the price the demand creates and to get what may be termed a fair market price. But once certain interests are powerful enough to influence that market, to control the rate at which the product goes to that market as well as how it goes to the consumer, then we are in imminent danger of both the producer and the consumer getting a pretty raw deal.

When this bill reaches the committee, Mr. Speaker, I assure the minister we will require answers to the questions I have posed. If the minister can assure the committee there is no possibility of a need for cattle and calves coming under this bill, then of course we will be satisfied. However, I should like the minister or officials of his department to appear before the committee and tell us what percentage of that product now goes through the public yards, what percentage of that product comes under the auctioneer's hammer and what percentage of that product goes direct to the packing houses and bypasses the public yards altogether.

I am concerned when a broker at the public yards in Saskatoon, the third largest market in western Canada, informs me that the volume of product coming into those yards is becoming less every year. It is not impossible that we may see a time when those yards will not be able to effectively establish a price and where the percentage of livestock going around the yard is a bigger factor in establishing price than the amount going through the public auction. These are the situations with which we need to be concerned. We do not consider the passage of a bill here as an exercise. This bill, if and when it comes into force as an act, is supposed to be able to do a job for the farmer. It is supposed to permit the farmer, rancher or producer to do a job for himself. It is the responsibility of the committee and this House to see that when the act is finally passed it is adequate to do this job. If it should be merely a façade, a structure which does not permit the effective intervention of the producer into the market so that he can act effectively on his own behalf, then this bill and the act which will follow it will be a failure and we will have wasted our time.

I do not wish to carry on any further, Mr. Speaker. I have made the points which I think are important in this House. The further discussion of these points can take place during the meetings of the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I pointed out a number of times the anxiety existing among farm people, especially in Quebec. And at the present time, this feeling not only remains but increases on account of the dangerously deteriorating situation.

In fact, almost 6 per cent of the Quebec workers, namely the farmers, get only 2 per cent of the Quebec income, which is much below the essential minimum. Moreover, this very small income is very badly divided, which explains why many farmers survive only through chronic debts and social welfare allowances.

A detailed analysis of the many reasons for the gap between the farm workers' income and that of urban people would be difficult. Let us point out only that it was far too long considered as the result of a low level of education. Yet, within 20 years, that so-called inferiority did not prevent the Quebec farm workers from increasing their production capacity by 300 per cent.

The level of education does not give the reason for the level of income and schooling is not everything, I believe, especially in the agricultural field. Knowledge and know-how can often be learned more rapidly through other means when people are open to progress, even when such progress does not provide them with an adequate compensation.

The statistics of the governments of Ottawa and Quebec, as well as the Economic Council of Canada data, which set at $4,000 the income required not to live in squalor, make us realize that only 13,000 of our 80,000 farms allow farmers to avoid poverty and enjoy an income comparable to that of other workers.

From 1951 to 1956, in Eastern Canada, 31,000 family farms were abandoned or sold for ridiculously low prices, which barely allowed second, third or fourth generation farmers to pay off their debts.

From 1956, the phenomenon was accelerated, the seriousness of which goes far beyond the tragedy it represents for the farmer who is forced to abandon his forefathers' farm. Those people who knew only one way of life, that of their own village, have no trade and cannot provide for the needs of a large family. However, they are nonetheless good workers, honest and respectable, and without a doubt mainstays of our social economy.

Agricultural conditions, because of the present system, force them to move to the poorer city neighbourhoods, and therefore to add, though they want to be useful, to the number of unemployed and ill-paid labourers, with all the social implications the situation entails, especially when it is not deserved.

It is unfortunate to see the farmers, who as a group fulfilled their role well and fed humanity, being relegated to the rank of herds sent from one pasture to another, increased or decreased, according to the whims of certain financial controllers.

Today, by introducing Bill C-176, the government is seeking the authorization to establish a National Farm Products Marketing Council which, in my opinion, will do nothing but add to the list of the Canadian government agencies, which are costly, heavy, cumbersome, and which take away the time, the energy and, especially, the freedom of citizens.

Under the flood of laws, boards, commissions, councils, the free enterprise system goes under. Referring to page 13 of the bill, one can read, and I quote:

> The objects of an agency are to promote a strong, efficient and competitive production and marketing industry for the regulated product or products in relation to which it may exercise its powers, having due regard to the interests of consumers of the regulated product or products.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that to promote competitive production, privileges will be granted to those more clever in securing certain grants, namely big businessmen, those who can offer a return to certain political organizers. Thus, the weaker will fall and will have to leave their land.

The bill makes no mention at all of compensation in these cases and one knows that the government has no appropriate employment to offer at the present time.

I come to that premature conclusion because other agencies of the government give us that proof at this time.

• (3:10 p.m.)

And the best example of this is provided by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, which gives peanuts to small firms and preferential grants to large companies which could easily do without them.

The same applies to the field of housing. The Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, which had been created with the best of intentions, now practices discrimination by charging high rates to people who want to build homes for themselves and reduced rates to people who build apartment blocks.

Clause 23 of the present bill, under "Objects and Powers", reads as follows:

Subject to the proclamation by which it is established and to any subsequent proclamation altering its powers, an agency may

(a) purchase any farm product, wherever grown or produced that is of the same kind as the regulated product in relation to which it may exercise its powers, and package, process, store, ship, insure, export or sell or otherwise dispose of any such product purchased by it;

Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of this clause, the government has become a merchant and these are alarming powers since it does not amount to an experiment or to the expectancies before an experiment but merely to the implementation of a method which is in force in Communist countries.

As I said, the government has become a merchant. We know what were the results of such measures in other countries. I have visited Poland, other members have seen Egypt and others Russia. We all know that governments make the worst kind of merchants for they replace the efficiency which stems from work and private initiative with the carelessness and hesitations of civil servants.

We can see further on in Clause 28 a provision which is no less disturbing and reads as follows:

The Minister of Finance may, out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, on the requisition of the Minister, make grants to an agency not exceeding in the aggregate one hundred thousand dollars to enable the agency to meet initial operating and establishment expenses.

Then the farmers will have to foot the bill, meaning that once the one hundred thousand dollars have been spent to allow the establishment of the agency, farmers will have to pay levies on their products for the upkeep of the bad tradesmen who will have been selected by the state.

This may not be 100 per cent totalitarian, Mr. Speaker, but I feel this is just short of it. It may happen that incompetent purchasers put in bad orders which will require changes at the producers who will automatically be squeezed between order requirements and the obligation to obtain expensive new farm equipment. And the more so because for the majority of them the changes required will be practically impossible to make since their present equipment is not yet all paid for.

Another matter that we should not overlook, Mr. Speaker, is importation. Unless a revision is effected in this sector, the few results expected from this bill will simply be obliterated. If the government absolutely wishes to impose a control, it should not start by planning production but by controlling imports.

[Mr. Godin.]

At this stage may I quote a few excerpts from a brief submitted to the Standing Committee on Agriculture and printed in Minutes of Proceedings No. 50 of September 30 last—by representatives of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the Catholic Farmers Union and the Agricultural Federation of Ontario.

On that occasion the executive secretary of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture stated as follows:

The point that Mr. McMaster and Mr. Harris made to us over and over again was that legal experience with these acts which are regulatory acts is that the courts will not presume intent. They will not regulate unless it is laid down exactly what the act is intended to do, with a considerable amount of precision, and that is really the thing that we are after. It is not to change the intent of the proposed act. I think that the wording of the proposed act... makes it clear that the intent is to regulate, but we are worried that we will be able to do what the proposed act intends.

I continue with my quotation:

We are not trying, however, to define rigidly the exact representational system to be set out in the proposed Act. We think that, in fact, with commodity questions and the kind of institution you are setting up, and the purposes which it is to serve, which I will come to, can vary, it is very important not to have inadequate flexibility in approach under this proposed Act.

The view of our organization is that it would be better to leave the authority to appoint agencies and council members with the Governor in Council, but with the requirement that the rules and procedures for this be officially set out, and that there be a legal legislative requirement that these be developed in consultation with producers, so that the thing is dealt with in an orderly way and the methods by which membership is achieved in these agencies and in the Council are set out in a public way.

Let us now refer to page 5 of this brief for a more accurate study. A rather short article can be found here on the purpose of the bill. It is outlined that paragraph 17 of the proposed bill is absolutely essential. This quite accurate article describes the aim of the bill within the framework of the provisions relating to the regulations and further on Mr. David Kirk, the executive secretary, says:

This is regulatory legislation in most of its purposes, and we are advised that there should be, in fact, a place that says:

> The purpose and intent of this Act is to provide for the promotion, control and regulation in any or all respects of the transportation, storage and marketing of farm products in interprovincial and export trade including the prohibition of such transportation, packing, storage and marketing in whole or in part.

We think it is very important that this fundamental section go in and I should make the general statement so I will not have to repeat it over and over again, that a great many of these recommendations really have more to do with the precise definition of the powers.

Further on he adds, and I quote:

With respect to the powers of the agency under Clause 23 (1) (d), where there is the power to:

(d) undertake and assist in the promotion of the consumption and use of any regulated product... the improvement of the quality and variety—

We are all in favour of this, but we think it should be promotion of the "production, marketing and consumption". We think it very possible that in some commodities there will be a place for an agency that does not market the product and does not regulate the product, but serves as a very good means of carrying on fundamental industry programs of promotion, development, improvement, market development, and we want this Clause 23 (1) (d) broadened to be sure that things that are useful for the industry can be done by an agency outside the regulatory field.

All these statements referred to the bill tabled last year.

And the secretary of the Federation goes on to say:

Paragraph 40, page 21—there must be a power, we are advised, that specifically says that an agency may make regulations and orders—may make them; you have to actually say that. That is what we are advised, and it is not precisely said in the act.

Mr. Speaker, on the whole, the farmers, through their officials in various organizations, are informing us of their wishes. This legislation interests them but they request more details. The bill now before the House is a two-edged device. In order to avoid any misunderstanding and dangerous application of this legislation, I hope that the people who drafted it will take into consideration the remarks that were made before the Standing Committee on Agriculture, which will be re-examining this bill.

• (3:20 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Speaker: If the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) speaks now, he will close the debate.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I wish to deal only briefly with some of the matters raised by hon. members who spoke in the debate on this bill. One of the concerns expressed by the hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth) was that there would be a great deal of difficulty in attempting to regulate the supply of any particular agricultural commodity with respect to domestic producers unless we were to provide authority in the bill for a marketing agency to impose equal or perhaps even more severe regulation on importations into Canada of the same commodity.

In my view it is not a proper function of this Parliament or of the government to transfer automatically to any board that may be set up the right to impose duties or in fact erect non-tariff barriers with respect to international trade. There are a number of reasons for that. Of course one reason is that there are some international agreements to which Canada is party, which the government has an obligation to respect, and in doing so we have made certain commitments. One is that we will not impose restrictions, for the kind of purposes outlined in this bill, on imported goods if we do not apply the same restrictions on our domestic production. I am sure the hon. member for Kent-Essex is well aware of this principle.

I can also advise the hon. member, and I am sure this will relieve some of his anxiety with respect to the matter, that under these international agreements as I understand them, although there is some complexity about this, we can impose the same kind of supply management provisions on imports as are in fact applied to our domestic producers. That is the case with respect to some of the international agreements. It seems to me that here is a balance which allows us, first of all, to take into account the interests of our domestic producers and also allows us to respect the international agreements we have made.

I am not suggesting that it will be easy to do this in all cases, because of course different points of view are taken from time to time depending on a country's own interests. However, I would like the hon. member to understand why it would not be possible to transfer automatically to a marketing agency, set up under this bill, the authority to deal with imports. It must remain the responsibility and prerogative of the government to change tariffs, or to change the impediments if you wish to call them that, to trade coming into Canada. I suggest that one can be made compatible with the other.

I was very interested in the remarks made by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave), even though he expressed a great deal of dissatisfaction with the remarks I made last night respecting the exclusion of beef, calves and beef products from this bill. I must say to him that as far as I can tell, although there is provision in existing provincial statutes to set up beef marketing boards, there are no beef marketing boards in existence and there is no agitation anywhere in the country to set up beef marketing boards.

What the hon. member says is true, that if the majority of beef producers in the country indicate to us, or to the council that will be set up under this legislation, that they wish to have a national beef marketing board or agency established, then the legislation would have to be amended. He is correct in that assumption, but I think he will respect the assertion I made that the exclusion of beef from the provisions of this bill at this time does not really do any damage to the immediate purposes we have in mind. When I say "immediate" this could mean extending over two, three, five years or more, because until and unless such time arrives as there are beef marketing agencies set up under provincial legislation then this enabling legislation, to co-ordinate the operation of those agencies, would not become operative.

I can understand the problem. I can tell the hon. member that in the province where I am producing beef, the producers some years ago demanded to be excluded from the statutory provisions under provincial law because they did not want any beef marketing board. But when they wanted a beef marketing commission so that they could make some levies for the purpose of promoting the sale of beef and that sort of thing, they went back to the provincial government of Alberta and asked to be included in the legislation so that they could do that.

It is valid to suggest that beef producers would want that kind of marketing commission all across the country, but there is no authority given under this bill to co-ordinate the activities of such commissions set up under provincial legislation, and to that extent the bill is a deterrent to having them set up on a national basis. But if this were desired by beef producers, they could seek a simple amendment to the act after it has been passed.

To bring my remarks to a conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would advise the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin) that there is provision in the bill for only $100,000 for each commodity agency that would be set up, or $1 million in total. That means that there could be ten different commodity agencies established. It has been very clearly stated, at least in the remarks I have made before the committee and before the House, that this is for the purpose of establishing the marketing agencies and from there on their activities will be financed by their own operations. If Parliament and the government decide or suggest further subsidies, that would be another decision separate and distinct from the decision we would be making in passing this bill. He called for a flexible attitude with reference to the members of the agencies. Certainly, producers and other groups will be consulted with respect to nominations to the agencies. I agree with him that flexibility is needed, at least in the initial stages of setting up a marketing agency, so that we can, without legal impediment, seek out and appoint to these boards people with the competence to do a good job on behalf of the industry all the way from the producers through retailing and to the consumer as well.

I was pleased to hear him speak of the need for consultation and also the need for the promotion of markets and that sort of thing. This is provided for in some of the clauses of this bill. It is my hope that such will be a major function of some of the agencies that are set up—in fact a far superior function to that of imposing some of the mandatory quotas that are objectionable to some producers. I hope that we can now send this bill to the committee and deal with the amendments that I suggested which were considered very favourably in committee.

In conclusion I wonder, inasmuch as there was support from the other members who have spoken, whether I could ask to have the evidence taken in the last session with respect to Bill C-197 before the Standing Committee on Agriculture, taken under advisement or reinstated for the purpose of considering Bill C-176.

Mr. Baldwin: We would be quite agreeable to that, Mr. Speaker. I can see no good reason why all the time and money thrown away in connection with proceedings in the committee should be repeated. However, I think the order should be made without prejudice to the rights of members of the committee to pursue any examination of witnesses or briefs that were presented. This might not be necessary, but in an attempt to facilitate the passage of that bill in order that it could be brought back in the dying days of the last session, we did hurry through some of our examinations. If the order is without prejudice, we are perfectly willing that this should be done.

Mr. Speaker: It is my understanding that these are the terms of the order proposed by the hon. Minister of Agriculture. The order would be to the effect that the evidence already presented to the committee would be reinstated, without prejudice to the right of the committee to call further witnesses either with respect to new matters or matters already covered by the evidence which will then be before the committee as a result of this order. Is it agreed?

[Mr. Olson.]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

CANADA GRAIN BILL

ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMISSION, PROVISIONS RESPECTING GRADING, LICENCES, ELEVATORS, ETC.

On the Order:

Second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Agriculture of Bill C-175, an Act respecting grain—The Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, may I first give notice that I am going to raise a point of order with respect to this bill being proceeded with at this time because of certain technical objections. However, before doing so, and on a general point of order, I think I should be entitled to say on behalf of members of our party—and I say this without in any way disparaging the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) who is discharging his obligations as Government House Leader most effectively—that it was indicated last night we would be proceeding with another bill. For reasons which are quite obvious, that bill was not circulated so that hon. members could not proceed with it at this time.

We have indicated our willingness to proceed with this bill, but because of the change in plan some of our members who are interested in this subject are not here today. I am not blaming the President of the Privy Council; he is just unfortunate in his choice of colleagues. However, if we are to discharge our responsibilities in processing the business of the house and the government, then the government will have to learn to bring in at an earlier stage in any session all the bills it should have ready, so that when second reading is called we will have had an opportunity to evaluate the legislation and to decide upon our position. After all, the period of gestation has been quite lengthy and the government have had ample time to draft the bill. There really is no valid excuse for this state of affairs today.

Having said that, we are ready to proceed, but I thought I should make that statement. I repeat, I am not putting any blame upon the minister. Indeed, I shall probably have other opportunities during the session to blame him more effectively for matters for which he is responsible. I hope that he will persuade his colleagues to bring in bills well before the date when this House proposes to deal with them so that we can make arrangements to proceed.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill C-175 respecting grain, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Baldwin: Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a point of order which is related to, and directed at, this particular bill. With great regret, I am compelled to point out to Your Honour that I doubt very much if this bill should be proceeded with at the present time because it fails to comply with Standing Order 62, which is related to section 54 of the British North America Act.

Your Honour has had some occasion in recent weeks to consider this point. My distinguished and learned colleague, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), on two occasions recently called to Your Honour's attention this predilection of the government to include in the recommendation from the Governor in Council, which is required by Standing Order 62, a number of details with regard to what should be the financial aspects of a bill. With the great perspicacity which usually marks your judgments, Your Honour pointed out to all and sundry, but particularly directed your remarks at the government, that it would be much simpler and safer to have simple recommendation with regard to all aspects of the bill.

Having laid the groundwork, I would refer Your Honour to the recommendation which appears on the flyleaf of the bill and which reads:

> His Excellency the Governor General has recommended to the House of Commons the present measure respecting grain; to provide for the constitution of the Canadian Grain Commission, for salaries and expenses and accountable advances to the commission; for the objects and powers of the commission; for the establishment of grades of western and eastern grain; for grain standards committees, for the grading and inspection of grain; for the constitution of grain appeal tribunals; for licences and licensees and for charges by licensees; for elevators and grain dealers and the handling of grain licensees and other persons and the carriage of grain; and to make also further provisions in connection with the administration of the act.

When the government has seen fit to itemize a number of instances with regard to which financial aspects prevail, then I think they must cover all of them.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, if you would turn your attention to clause 108 of the bill you will find that it purports to repeal section 11 of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. Clause 108 of the bill provides for a levy of 1 per cent to be deducted from the purchase price of grain purchased from elevators. It then provides for that money to be paid into what is known as the Prairie Farm Emergency Fund. From that fund certain other payments shall be made. In addition, that same clause provides that certain licensees who fail to comply with certain subsections of the bill may have to pay a penalty of one-thirtieth of one per cent. That money goes into the same fund, and provision is made for appropriations out of that fund by the commission that is to be established by the bill.

I point out, Mr. Speaker, that this is an appropriation of public moneys for certain purposes, and the Governor General's recommendation simply does not cover it at all. This matter was dealt with, although not in the same sense, when this bill was before the standing committee in the previous session. The hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) proposed an amendment to clause 15 of the bill. The amendment read as follows:

> ...Where by reason of an order made under this section a person suffers financial loss, the Commission shall compensate that person in the amount of his loss; the Federal Court shall have original jurisdiction to determine the liability to compensate and the amount of compensation, if any.

At that time, the vice-chairman who was presiding over the committee, acting upon an opinion given by the law clerk and parliamentary counsel, ruled the proposed amendment out of order. I am not suggesting that those opinions are binding on Your Honour. I am simply citing them to show that my point has validity, because it relates to a set of circumstances that are precisely similar. The vice-chairman ruled the amendment out of order because the amendment proposed that compensation, or an award, should be paid to a grain producer. That is precisely the same as the proposal contained in new clause 108. Where the producer has suffered loss, there is to be a financial appropriation and, therefore, I submit, it is out of order.

May I read what the law clerk and parliamentary counsel had to say about that matter, as recorded at page 66 of the proceedings:

> ...I do not think a private member could do it. I will go further than that. I would say that a Minister of the Crown could not do it in this Committee. If he wanted to do it, he would have to do it at the report stage in the House by moving an amendment there, and to that amendment the recommendation of the Crown would have to be annexed.

I say this is a valid opinion. I approve it. I cite it to Your Honour, not because it is binding on you but because it is on all fours with the situation to which I am referring. The government, having brought down a recommendation from the Governor General setting out in detail various aspects of the bill which are subject to financial considerations, has included in its legislation a provision that a 1 per cent levy shall be paid into a fund, and from that fund the commission which is to be established will be authorized to make certain awards. What can that be except an appropriation of public funds?

Then, of course, there is the additional aspect of the fine of one-thirtieth of one per cent, which goes into the same special fund out of which awards can be made. Consequently, if you examine the bill in its entirety, you will find that there is no provision in His Excellency's recommendations to the effect that this special financial provision is authorized. I am sure that was not in there. I am also sure that if I were to move an amendment to this effect, as the hon. member for Crowfoot did before the committee, Your Honour would have no hesitation in ruling that I could not do so, or that a minister of the Crown could not do it either unless he had come to this House with an amendment to the recommendation approved by the Governor General.

I do not need to say anything more. Your Honour is well aware of the nature of this type of objection. You have pointed out the dangers which are inherent in the government's proceeding in this way. I point out that, under these circumstances, the bill is defective and, until the government can produce the required amendment to the recommendation, the bill can hardly be proceeded with in its present form.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has raised a very interesting procedural point with respect to clause 108 of this bill, claiming that its provisions are not covered by the recommendation. I am afraid I could not fully understand his argument. Certainly, there is a continuation of the activities that were carried on by the Board of Grain Commissioners, and there is a continuation of the responsibilities which were given to them under another act, in this case the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. Clause 108 of the bill repeals section 11 of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. That clause was included so that there would be a mechanism, the Board of Grain Commissioners, that would collect a levy that this Parliament decided ought to be collected, and those moneys are to be disbursed under other sections of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. I, therefore, suggest to Your Honour that the provisions for the disbursement of the fund collected for the purposes of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act are already included in that act.

Mr. Baldwin: In the Prairie Farm Assistance Act?

Mr. Olson: In the Prairie Farm Assistance Act.

Mr. Baldwin: Which the government is repealing.

Mr. Olson: The hon. member is saying that when we re-write and modernize the whole of the Canada Grain Act, an act that has not been revised in a substantial way since 1930, and when we adopt some amendments regarding the responsibilities which have been laid on the Board of Grain Commissioners under the Canada Grain Act, we are acting improperly. I suggest it is well known in this country that the activities of the Board of Grain Commissioners, which will now be called the Canadian Grain Commission, in matters such as collecting the 1 per cent levy and disbursing the money through other provisions of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act constitute a long established practice. It is a practice that was established in 1939, if my memory serves me correctly. Clause 108 of the bill attempts, very simply, to put onto the shoulders of the Canadian Grain Commission under the Canada Grain Act all the responsibilities which formerly rested on the shoulders of the Board of Grain Commissioners.

I know that it is difficult on many occasions for the recommendation of His Excellency, the Governor General, to spell out in detail all the authority that may be vested in the application of this act. This is not something new, that every single detail of expenditure is not indicated in the recommendation. But, I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, with great deference, that it has been a long established practice for the Board of Grain Commissioners, which will now become the Canadian Grain Commission, to collect a 1 per cent levy for the purposes of funding the PFAA fund. The hon. member knows that. He also knows that, by a long established practice, it is one of the administrative functions of the Board of Grain Commissioners to collect that levy and turn it over to the Prairie Farm Assistance Act administration or indeed to collect it on behalf of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada. It is from that fund the PFAA payments are made from time to time.

I find it rather difficult to understand why the hon. member is trying to hang a procedural point on something that has been practised in Canada for at least 30 years, notwithstanding the fact that authority for the Board of Grain Commissioners to collect that levy is now going to be contained in the Canada Grain Act rather than the Prairie Farm Assistance Act.

The other point relates to the amendment with respect to paying compensation to grain companies which was moved in committee by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner). This, in fact, was a new departure. It was not envisaged when this bill was drafted.

Mr. Baldwin: It was not in the recommendation.

Mr. Olson: It was not in the recommendation. In my view, the legal adviser to the committee quite properly ruled that it was beyond the recommendation and therefore out of order. I suggest that the hon. member is objecting to a long established practice. To base his argument on the fact that a member was prevented from introducing a new departure in expenditure under the authority of this bill because no provision for it was contained in the recommendation is not making a valid comparison.

Mr. Baldwin: Will the minister permit a question? Even if the minister is correct in his assumption that the financial authority granted to the Board of Grain Commissioners under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act carries over automatically to the new Canada Grain Commission—and I do not accept that with respect to the 1 per cent levy—does he not agree that according to clause 108, in addition to the 1 per cent levy, there is a further financial provision to take care of one-thirtieth of one per cent of a certain licence fee which is set aside as a penalty, the benefits of which are payable from the fund in respect of certain awards. Is it not true that particular provision was never in the Prairie Farm Assistance Act? It is a new financial provision which was never contemplated, discussed or apparent in the other legislation.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer that question without a bit of research and perhaps some advice. I am sure the hon. member realizes that while there may not have been a penalty provided for failure to collect a 1 per cent levy, there was a legal obligation on all of the grain companies to collect the levy and turn it over to the Board of Grain Commissioners for and on behalf of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, when one gets into a procedural debate, he usually has a point he wants to make. He usually knows where he wants to come down at the end of his remarks. Since I was called on short notice to take part in this debate, I hope Your Honour will forgive me for doing a little thinking out loud. Maybe I will come down some place before I am through.

Mr. Baldwin: That is more than the minister did. He is still up there.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am extremely sympathetic to the concern of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) that the government not get away with anything. We have both been here long enough to know that we have to be on guard against that kind of practice.

However, I wonder whether we have really sorted out what is supposed to be involved in the recommendation of the Governor General with respect to a money bill. In the few minutes since the hon. member for Peace River raised this point, I have been attempting to collect a few musty volumes to check some matters. I have also been wracking my memory.

Years ago there had to be a resolution preceding a money bill. When that resolution was first called in the House of Commons, a cabinet minister rose and stated "The Governor General having been made aware of the terms of this resolution recommends it to the consideration of the House". That is all there was to the recommendation at that time. The minister did not say, "On behalf of the Governor General the following are the details", when making a recommendation. He just said, "His Nibs has seen the bill and he says it's okay". I hope it is not sacrilegious to use that language in this place. We then had the debate on the resolution and proceeded from there.

There is a reference to the terms of a resolution at page 216 of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition. This reference reads:

—care must be taken that the terms used are sufficiently wide to cover the whole of the Bill which will be subsequently introduced.

I could read the whole of that citation, Mr. Speaker, but it is not necessary to do so. It is clear that the reference is to what we then called the resolution.

I can recall occasions when we complained because the resolution did not go far enough. I also, recall when the Hon. Paul Martin introduced a resolution to increase the amount of the old age pension. I believe that was in 1948. He did not put the amount of the increase in the resolution. Because there was a resolution with the approval of the Governor General which did not name an amount, we were permitted to move amendments involving a larger amount than Mr. Martin proposed. I am reminiscing more than I should, but the point is there is certain jurisprudence and there are certain rules which governed a resolution preceding a money bill. The rules were very clear that the resolution had to be wide enough to cover everything.

In December of 1968, a report was presented to alter the rules. I am now looking at page 432 of Journals for 1968-69. We recommend that the resolution stage be abolished. Nothing was said in that recommendation regarding the recommendation of the Governor General. In that report, spelled out in long paragraphs, we just said, "Let's do away with the resolution and the debate thereon." Then, since the Governor General's recommendation had been attached to the resolution, we were, of course, leaving a gap. So, as reported on page 458 of the Journals for 1968-69, we recommended that what was then Standing Order 61 be amended. It is now Standing Order 62. I shall not read it out, but I have compared the two versions. The previous one was a rule which required a resolution to precede a money bill. Since we were doing away with the resolution, we thought we ought to do something about the Governor General's recommendation. So, we wrote a new Standing Order No. 62, which says there must be a recommendation from the Governor General.

The point I am arguing out loud must be obvious by now. Is there not some danger we are confusing two things? We have done away with the resolution and the debate thereon; that is clear. But we have kept the requirement for a recommendation—we are bound to do so because it is required under the British North America Act. Under the old regime, the solution had to cover all the details of the bill. But there was nothing which said that the recommendation had to contain the same kind of detail. Perhaps we are getting into this trouble because we are now asking the Governor General to give us a recommendation the terms of which are a substitute for what used to be the resolution.

It seems to me the ruling which Your Honour has been called upon to make is an important one and possibly it should not be made on short notice, even though Your Honour has had the point before you for consideration on a number of occasions. Maybe we should discuss the matter in the Committee on Procedure and Organization. I might say in passing that the committee made a start on its work this morning. As I was saying, I wonder whether we are not confusing two things. The old resolution had to be very complete, but the recommendation of the Governor General, in those days, was contained in a simple sentence. It said he was aware of the bill and that it was in order for us to consider it.

I do not detract for one moment from the argument that it is necessary to watch the government, to see it does not get away with things. But I am also very conscious of the fact that we decide things here, and that the role played by the Governor General is a ceremonial one as distinct from that played by the government in this actual forum of legislation. I think we should be going too far if we wanted too much handled outside of this House.

The purpose of the so-called Royal recommendation is to make sure that it is only Ministers of the Crown, the cabinet, who can bring in a money bill. These, at any rate, are my views, Mr. Speaker. The question is one for you to decide. What I really wanted to do, I have done, namely, to draw attention to the possibility of there being confusion between the old resolution, which had to be very wide and precise in its scope, and the old recommendation, which was a simple statement. Perhaps we ought to do away with the recommendation altogether. Then, of course, the Governor General could not make mistakes and leave out things which should be in the recommendation. But if we want a recommendation which takes the place of a resolution, I think we should say no. We do not say so at the present time in Standing Order 62. Its terms have not been read today, but presumably someone will do so before this debate is over.

It is clear that a bill involving the expenditure of money cannot be proceeded with unless it has been recommended to the House in a message from the Governor General. Nothing more is required. This carries out the provision of Section 54 of the British North America Act. The Act does not say that the recommendation has to go into the details. Thinking about this matter, I wondered whether we might have said something on the subject in our lengthy report tabled back in December, 1968, but I have gone through it, and we do not seem to have dealt with it there. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for listening to me. The decision is up to you.

Mr. Speaker: I see that the Minister of Agriculture wishes to contribute further to the debate on the point of order. He can do so only with the consent of the House. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Olson: I simply wished to reply to the question which was raised by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). I have been advised that section 11(4) does, in fact, deal with levies. The hon. member asked whether or not this one-thirtieth of one per cent per day was provided for in the old act. The provision reads as follows:

> All licencees shall pay to the Board of Grain Commissioners for Canada for the credit of the Receiver General, monthly, as provided by regulation, all moneys collected hereunder, and any licencee who fails to comply with the regulations is subject to a penalty of 1/30th of 1 per cent of the amount due for each day that such payment is in default.

May I clear this up by adding that as far as I am aware the provision with which the hon. member is concerned contains nothing new. There is perhaps some updating of the wording and a renumbering of the subsections, but section 108 is almost identical with section 11 and the ten subsections contained in the Prairie Farm Assistance Act.

Mr. Baldwin: That applies to most government legislation.

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me there are two points which the Chair should consider at this time. The first is the relatively narrow point raised by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) to which the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) has replied, namely, whether a new charge is created by section 108 of the Canada Grain Act.

The hon. minister argues that in fact there is no new charge on the treasury because we are simply re-enacting a provision of a former statute, the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. The minister assures the Chair, that a similar provision was included in the previous statute. I am not too sure of the argument of the hon. member for Peace River that there is a new charge being created at this time which might require an alteration of the recommendation of His Excellency. That should be my ruling for the time being. I have to take into account, also, and I do take into account, that it would not be a matter of great moment to have the recommendation changed if the Chair considered a change should be made. I recall that when a similar matter was brought to my attention some days ago I agreed with the hon. member who had raised the point that the recommendation ought to be changed, and as a result of a sudden and speedy action on the part of the minister responsible for the bill then before the House, a new recommendation was obtained and accepted by hon. members.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has raised a much wider question which is one of greater interest. He may remember, if he was in the House, that when a similar point of order was raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), I did say—unfortunately, I do not have the text of my statement here—I had often thought that the only thing which might be required as far as the recommendation was concerned was a general statement from His Excellency to the effect that His Excellency had looked at a bill, and recommended it to the attention of the House. Substantially, it seems to me this was the form of the recommendation which was received by the House as part of our practice before the change in our rules.

I have an example before me dating from some years back; the minister introducing a bill simply said that His Excellency the Governor General having been made aware of the subject matter of the resolution, recommended it for the consideration of the House. This may be all that is really required from a constitutional standpoint. The Crown must retain the financial initiative and this is done through a recommendation from His Excellency. It may be that His Excellency having looked at the bill and having noticed that there were financial implications, might recommend the proposed measure to the House.

As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has very clearly said—and I am very strongly inclined to go along with his reasoning—we appear to be confusing the resolution stage of the bill, which has now been discontinued, and the recommendation. It may be that before we changed the rules these were two separate matters, the recommendation made in the terms I have just indicated, and then a resolution which delineated the four corners of the bill which would come before the House but which was not then known to hon. members and, indeed, not known to His Excellency as his recommendation was directed to the resolution. It may be that His Excellency should see the bill and then recommend it to the House. It may well be that this is all that should be required to allow hon. members to proceed with consideration of a measure advanced for study by the Government. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has suggested this might be a point which could be considered by the Committee on Procedure and Organization. I agree with that. If I were asked to make a ruling now, I would tend to make a ruling that all that is required under our rules and Standing Order 62 is to have a recommendation come forward: it might not be necessary to have it in detail but, the regulations and our Standing Orders, in particular Standing Order 62(1) and 62(2) might be entirely satisfied by a recommendation in general terms as submitted to the House.

This would be obiter dictum at the present time because I have not ruled that, and in my view it may be that the explanation given by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) is sufficient and that the recommendation as it stands, if it were required to be in detailed form, is sufficient.

If the matter were raised again it may be at that point a decision would have to be made by the Chair as to whether a detailed recommendation covering all aspects of the bill should be necessary, but this would be a matter which could be considered at that time. Hon. members are now on notice, in any event, that this is a matter of importance and of interest, I am sure, to the whole House. If the point of order is raised again, I would expect to hear further from the hon. members who have taken part in this debate today and, I am sure, from other hon. members who have been placed on notice, as a result of which they will give this matter serious thought. For the moment, I would suggest that we proceed with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, a great deal of public discussion throughout the grain growing areas of this country and, indeed, in this House has taken place in respect of the provisions now envisaged in Bill C-175. There have been several days of debate in this House, which I considered to be useful debate, as well as a great deal of discussion in the Standing Committee on Agriculture when the predecessor to this bill, that is Bill C-196, was under consideration by that committee.

If my memory serves me correctly, there were 26 amendments made to Bill C-196 by the committee on agriculture. I suggest this was a very useful exercise because there is no doubt that when a government proposes to introduce a bill of the size of the one that is before us, which is really a re-writing of the whole of the Canada Grain Act, and this is done after a period of nearly 40 years, it is perfectly understandable and indeed desirable that there be a great deal of debate, that there be far-ranging discussions in the industry from the producers all the way through, and that all of these discussions should be taken into account. I suggest this has been done.

There were many people from producer organizations who appeared before the committee. There were a large number of trade associations as well as individual companies which made their views known to us in respect of a number of proposals in Bill C-196. In addition to that, a new dimension has been added to the consideration of the Canada Grain Act since the last time it was revised, that is the organization known as the Canada Grains Council. As you know, this council is made up of producer organizations involved in co-operative wheat pools, other grain companies, the railways, the terminals and everyone else involved in the business. The council undertook the responsibility of examining the details of Bill C-196 and then presented its recommendations to various people involved in a series of different procedures.

First, there were a great number of discussions carried on between the Board of Grain Commissioners and the people involved in the trade. Then, there were discussions certainly with Members of Parliament and other people respecting revisions to the Canada Grain Act. Of course, to highlight and perhaps summarize all of these previous discussions, the Canada Grains Council did in fact appear before the Standing Committee on Agriculture giving their considered opinion in a very detailed way as to what was desirable and perhaps what ought to be changed slightly in the proposal that was before the committee at that time, namely Bill C-196.

I can never claim that a bill is perfect. I suggest there may be some minor amendments, perhaps even some major ones, that will need to be taken under consideration when Bill C-175 gets to the committee. In fact, there never was any doubt in my mind that when we undertook to completely re-write the Canada Grain Act, which contains in its new form some 116 clauses as well as the schedules and the annexes that are added thereto, it would be a miracle if that were written in perfect terms the first time.

What has happened has been that the bill before us now is the result of the best efforts of the Board of Grain Commissioners, in consultation with their advisers, both legal and experts in the trade. These drafting instructions were presented to this House and the standing committee. I believe the number of amendments made by the committee was 26. There were more proposed but there were in fact 26 amendments made. There may be more needed. In fact, I am prepared to consider favourably some amendments which may be considered technical by some, or matters of substance by others. For example, I have been advised that there was a provision in the old Canada Grains Act which dealt with matters respecting insurance, and that the companies indicated that "acts of God" or the "Queen's enemies", which are not provided for in this bill, ought to be put in because there could be a substantial difference in the insurance premiums to be paid if these two exemptions were not made. It seems to me this, in fact, could be done when we reach the committee stage or even at the report stage. I would be happy if we should be able to have this bill moved along to the point at which it was at the last session.

I understand there is also a small problem related to special bin grain that has been drawn to our attention. I am advised that, in the opinion of a number of grain companies, Bill C-175 does not properly identify this. In the new bill the implication is that the terminal owns the grain and that the terminal, under all circumstances, must be able to deliver this against a warehouse receipt. There is confusion concerning whether or not a warehouse receipt is indeed exactly the same thing as the kind of ticket one receives for special bin grain, special bin grain being grain that is kept separate from other grain. If one receives a warehouse receipt designating a certain grade and quality of grain, the terminal is not obliged to deliver the same grain but can deliver grain equal to the grade indicated on the warehouse receipt that any individual or company may hold.

We are prepared to consider some changes in these items, but I advise the House there may be more. I do not deny that there could be other changes that would be necessary from time to time. I would hope, however, the House would be disposed to move on with the passage of this bill, the rewriting of the Canada Grain Act, even though we may not find every one of the flaws in it in the first instance. There are some principles involved in the grain handling business that ought to be changed. Indeed, in my view there has been too much delay now, but that is only my own personal opinion. I refer to such things as the statutory grades, including a protein factor, in setting out the schedule for certain grades and other mechanisms in respect of the grain handling system. These should be modernized for the benefit of everybody involved. So, I would hope, with the assurance I am prepared to give the House and the committee, that after the application of this new bill for any specified length of time, be it one year, two years or however long, we will be prepared to consider amendments based on the experience we gain in attempting to apply this act—

An hon. Member: I hope you will not still be the government.

Mr. Olson: Some members opposite hope we will not be the government. They do not need to advise me of that because I am aware of that every day of the week, but the people of Canada do not agree with them and so long as it is that way it is fine with me. Whether I or somebody else occupies this position, I am sure he will be prepared to reconsider any defects that arise as a result of applying this new act to the grain trade and will come to this House seeking amendments to improve it on the basis of that experience. But what I cannot accept is the holding up of anything of a major nature because we might not have thought of all the details. I can guarantee to hon. members in this House that no matter how well we examine this bill and try to anticipate every difficulty, since the grain trade today is changing there will be other changes we will have to deal with even four or five years from now. Hopefully even then, much to the chagrin of hon. members opposite, we will still be administering this country at the very high level at which it is being administered today.

I wish to conclude my remarks, Mr. Speaker, by saying to hon. members opposite I hope they will give favourable consideration to a suggestion I wish to make that this bill be reinstated in the same position—that is at the report stage—in which it was when the last session was prorogued. I might say that while there has been discussion there has been no commitment by members opposite that we do this. I plead with them now, for the sake of the producers, to agree to this proposal so that we can get on with bringing in what everybody agrees is a useful structure. If they fail to agree to that, then I hope they will send this bill to the committee bearing in mind it is a bill which has been given a great deal of consideration by the whole of the industry and indeed by the members of this House who are members of the Standing Committee. As I said there have already been 26 amendments since the original version was introduced in this House.

There may be a possibility that some discussion could reduce the number of amendments before this House. So far as I am concerned, however, I am not worried about that. What I am very concerned about is that the members of this House and of the committee, after having heard the amendments and arguments in support of them at least once or twice, will allow a vote to be held so that no further time will be lost. I think every member of this House and every member of the committee ought to be able to move the amendments they wish to move. However, I believe it is also a basic right of the members of the committee, after the argument has been heard once or twice, to have a decision made as to whether or not the amendments are in fact acceptable. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that if we approach the procedural requirements involved in getting this bill from a bill into the law of this land in that spirit, we would be doing the farmers and the rest of the grain industry in Canada a great service.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture, in his best tone of voice, has tried to leave the impression that the bill that is being presented here is an amended version of the bill presented last session and that those of us in the opposition who have had some doubt about its original intention should drastically change our minds. We should simply go along with him and, because of the lapse of time, should find ourselves in a position where we can revise our thinking simply in order to accommodate him. I am not prepared at this time to give him such an assurance because I had some reservations about the original bill and I still have some reservations about the bill before us now. May I point out first that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) plays second fiddle to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang), who is also responsible for the Wheat Board. Unfortunately, the Minister of Agriculture has not been able to convince either his colleague or the rest of the cabinet that this bill is in the best interests of Canadian agriculture. Six months ago the Minister of Agriculture rose in the House and said: "We cannot sell any wheat because we cannot give an assurance to our customers that we can produce wheat of a certain protein quality". A few months ago we found ourselves in an entirely different situation. Is there a credibility gap? Where has this statement come from? It came right from the minister.

The Minister of Agriculture does not know what he is talking about. He was trying to sell us a bill of goods, and we, as members of the opposition, are expected to swallow that. I have asked the farmers to whom I have talked on street corners, in little grocery stores and everywhere else, and I find they know better because the situation is different today compared with three or four months ago when the minister first introduced this bill. If we had allowed ourselves to be sucked in by this minister, then the original bill would have been passed. Is protein grading selling our wheat or is it something else? I see the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) sitting opposite. I want to give him all the recognition that he deserves. He gets a lot of press recognition from the pool. All of a sudden he seems to have advance notice of what is going to happen. Six months ago he said that another statement would be made. We all read the newspapers and the pool reports, but all of a sudden the pools are to be used by this government.

I am not asking for a fight, but if that is what is going to happen I am quite ready to accept a fight. The pools are going to be used by this government, and all of a sudden that has become necessary. I say to the country and I say to the pools that it is certainly not necessary for us. The minister who introduced this bill is being ridden by the other minister who is obviously a step closer to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), because he can tell the Prime Minister that he needs to introduce the bill. He made a statement the other day, and it is very interesting that everyone has fallen for it all of a sudden. As a result of his statement what happened? We lost something. This is typical of the Liberal government. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) throws out a big proposal. Then, everyone bucks against it, and the leader of the Liberal party in Manitoba objects to the whole thing. Everyone in the country is objecting.

Of course, the government will withdraw certain proposals but we will not have gained anything. The farmers in my area are in a difficult position. I will not say anything more about it because I spoke on the subject when the bill was first introduced several months ago. We are going to sell only low grade wheat because we are told that we are in a low grade wheat area. The minister tells us that this measure is advantageous to us. How can it be advantageous when the storage has been reduced. What have we? All we have is low grade wheat. Instead of introducing the bill to the House, the minister should have held discussions with the minister from Saskatchewan. I know that my farmers are going to count their pennies. Until the minister from Saskatchewan made the announcement, we were under the impression that even though the initial payment was to be dropped we would receive a final payment. What will our final payment be now? We will not get it and we do not expect it from this government because when they disguised this whole thing as an equalization payment they left the impression that they were doing something for us.

The minister smokes behind the curtains and grins, because that is all he has left to do. He does not know how much longer he will stay in the cabinet unless he puts these bills through the House. He will not stay in the cabinet long because the Prime Minister does not have much use for western farmers.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Olson: That statement is wrong.

Mr. Korchinski: He told us that himself when he was out west. What did he tell us when he went to Regina? Why are they piling up all that wheat in Saskatoon? Why did the hon. member for Assiniboia have to take him into his own back yard to hide him from the rest of the people?

Some hon. Members: Ha, ha.

Mr. Korchinski: That is right, ha, ha. I want to relate my remarks to the statement of the minister from Saskatchewan, because he wants to get rid of the elevators. We have had evidence to the effect that there is no better system of handling grain than through the existing elevators, yet this minister wants to get rid of them. The Minister of Agriculture smiles and laughs. I want that to be on the record.

Mr. Olson: I am laughing at the foolish statement.

Mr. Korchinski: The minister can laugh all he wants, but it was the minister from Saskatchewan who made the foolish statement when he said we could handle our grain with 40 elevators in the west. That is how foolish he was. I am challenging the Minister of Agriculture, and the minister in charge of the Wheat Board, to contradict me right now. The Minister of Agriculture will not do this. I say to the House and to the country that that is what the government wants to do through their system of elimination.

As soon as they remove the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, every farmer in the country will cry to high heaven because it will cost him money. The farmers will say that the elevator companies will receive all the money, and that is exactly what these fellows want. Let us not be fooled by that suggestion. At one time farmers were getting $2.12 per bushel for their wheat. What are they getting now? I asked the question the other day. I said to the minister, "The price is 50 cents lower than we were getting a few years ago." Sure, there will be a period when you will pay in, but then all of a sudden it is finished; it is gone forever.

On top of that, every farmer is to be responsible for every storage payment that is going to be made to every elevator. This provision is in this bill, because that is exactly what the government suggested. Evidence was presented by all the elevator companies that they could handle that grain cheaper than any other method that has been conceived of until now.

Then, this minister comes in here. He is a kind of second-rate minister anyway. He comes in only at the behest of the minister from Saskatchewan, in order to maintain his status as a minister, and he says, "I have got to get this bill through." Why are we raising these objections? It is because it is going to cost us money. Some $70 million that was paid into the grain storage business is not going to be paid any more, and this bill indicates we are going to get rid of the elevators.

I used to deliver a little bit of grain in my day. When I first started trucking, a half cent a bushel per mile was what I charged. I don't know if that is the normal rate now. I am not in that business any more and perhaps I am behind the times in that regard. This was the normal rate we charged years ago, and I imagine some of the truckers today charge something like that, or probably a progressively bigger rate. But a farmer may have to deliver 25 or 30 miles because you must remember that this bill gives authority to get rid of the elevators all the way down the line. That is just one step. The next step is the elimination of the railways, which means the elimination of communities.

This minister asks us to go along with this omnibus bill. There are pages and pages of it. I am not ready at this particular stage to tell the minister that we in the opposition are going to destroy all these communities that he would like to destroy. He has a master plan, or perhaps it is the other minister who obviously has much more power than he has. Mr. Speaker, sometimes there are frictions within cabinet that are not too obvious to many people. But this minister is on the way out. This minister slid in quietly, and the Liberals accepted him. We wished him luck. We thought he was really going to do things for us. But I tell you, Mr. Speaker, this minister is quickly slipping out because he has not got a path into the Prime Minister's office. He has no way by which he can convince the Prime Minister that this bill is what he wants because he does not want it himself. How can he convince the Prime Minister when he is told by the other minister that this is what is necessary? It is the other minister who is making the speeches on the subject.

I have watched the performance—I have had to because this is my business—as I think most of the other members of the House have. Whatever regard we had for him as an individual, we are seeing the erosion of his power by the other minister who is gradually working himself up because the other minister does as the Prime Minister tells him.

Of course, what does the Prime Minister tell him? He told him, quite simply, "Why should I sell your wheat"? Put it in terms like that and anything can happen from there on in. He is not going to sell your wheat because he is not going to give you any more money for the production of that wheat. If in the process we were led to believe that this bill was in our interests, then we would be the first to be accused.

The other day I voted for the invocation of the War Measures Act. I believed this was necessary government action, but after a few days the Prime Minister pointed an accusing finger at the opposition and said, "You voted with us, so what do you want"? I tell you, Mr. Speaker, I have to be very critical. In fact this is my job as an opposition member, particularly when I see other flaws in this bill. I will vote with the government if I think that is necessary, but the other day the Prime Minister tried to humiliate me for voting with the government. Whenever I think the government is not adopting the right approach, I am going to speak out against it at every opportunity.

What about our rapeseed position? This is a grain that is gradually being accepted in the world market. We are not being told how the government is going to deal with it under this bill, whether storage will be provided or anything like that. The minister has indicated that he is ready to accept certain amendments, but he told us last spring that we were doing a disservice to the country because we objected to the predecessor of this bill. He told us they could not sell any wheat if this legislation was not passed. Protein grading was emphasized. We now find that this is not the story at all.

At that time, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) rose in the House and asked, "Would you be prepared to accept a proposal whereby we agree to introduce protein grading into the existing bill, and from there on in we will argue the difference"? The minister was the first to object to that, because there was more to the legislation than appeared on the surface. His big argument was protein grading, and now all of a sudden we have to swallow this whole bill.

I tell you, Mr. Speaker, the farmers are not as stupid as the minister thinks they are. They know that the minister could have introduced a short bill without any debate in this House, and if that was what they needed that was what they could have had. I give him my word right now that I have the assurance of every one of my colleagues that they would agree to that, and I am sure the other members of the opposition would see the wisdom of that course. But we are not going to sell all these towns down the drain, which is exactly what is intended.

I know how these elevator agents work. I have talked with them. I am sure the minister has occasionally stopped in at elevators and watched some of their operations. Small towns collect perhaps half their taxes from elevators, and if these elevators were eliminated that would mean the end of such towns. In an area such as that which I represent, which depends wholely and solely on such establishments, this bill will write finis to whole communities. Surely, the minister does not want nor expect that. If he wants protein grading, then let him say so and we can argue the other point. But he wants more, and I am not willing to give him more. When the minister from Saskatchewan says he can sell 700 million bushels of grain, good luck to him and to the rest of the farmers. I hope they sell a billion bushels. This would be the greatest thing that ever happened, for the economy though it would mean defeat to some of us. But we must be very careful that this country does not fall headlong because of a one shot deal. Though we sell a billion bushels of grain, we must not lose whole communities in the process and it looks as if this is what the minister is trying to do here.

In submissions made earlier this year, the elevator companies indicated that they could handle that grain about as cheaply as is possible and as quickly as possible. Though I have reservations myself, the block system has demonstrated to some people that it will work in getting out certain grades of grain. This system is still in its growing stages, but I am willing to give it a try.

I think the minister will agree that the elevator companies must fully co-operate with him. If you are not going to pay the elevator companies, then who are you going to pay? Maybe the treasury of Canada will save $71 million or $72 million if the government is not going to pay these charges in another year. If the system which was recently announced is introduced, it will mean this amount will have to be taken out of the total income of farmers. The hon. member for Assiniboia had better start asking for farm storage payments for grain stored on his own farm because he will have to keep it there. If he does not want to keep it in elevators he is going to have to store it on the farm.

Although there were good and fruitful discussions in committee, Mr. Speaker, because of the ramifications of this measure, I think we must ask the minister to remember that whole communities will be affected. Much as I am unhappy with things that have happened in the past, I am not ready to sell these towns "down the river", if you wish.

An hon. Member: If you wish.

Mr. Korchinski: No, your town too, along with mine. It has been going down very rapidly through no fault of ours. I say it is all wrong to set up a central terminal system of elevators under this bill and somebody is going to be hurt in the process. This is a disruption which we cannot allow at this particular time.

I am not happy with what has been happening. If the recent announcement made by the minister from Saskatchewan was his own work, then he should have been handling this bill because it goes along with his line of thought. I am sure our present Minister of Agriculture does not agree with him, but apparently he does not have very much to say about it. He is doing the chores because the Prime Minister says he will either do them or get out of the cabinet. He has to push this bill through or get out, though he disagrees with what is happening. I am sure he does because I can remember a time when he sat three seats away from me here on the opposition side. He was a Social Credit member and when we discussed these things we were in agreement on a lot of them. What has happened to him since then?

Mr. McCleave: Money.

Mr. Korchinski: Just for a handful of silver he left us. It is a sad day, Mr. Speaker, when a minister finds himself in the position where he does not want to introduce a bill, knowing the consequences of it, but in order to stay in the ministry he has to go along with what has been directed from above.

I call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It being five o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, private bills and notices of motion.

MATERNITY LEAVE ACT

On the order:

Second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration of Bill C-6, an act respecting the employment of women in federal jurisdiction before and after childbirth. (As reprinted by order of the House Friday, October 30, 1970)—Mrs. MacInnis.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The House is surely aware of the fact that Bill C-6, was reprinted as the result of on an order of this House passed with unanimous consent on October 30. It is the feeling of the Chair that the motion should be put again which shall be done immediately.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway) moved that Bill C-6, respecting the employment of women in federal jurisdiction before and after childbirth be read a second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

She said: Mr. Speaker, this is the third session in which I have endeavoured to bring this matter to the attention of the House. In previous sessions it has been too far down the list, but this time by the luck of the draw it was more fortunate. Now, thanks to the co-operation of members on both sides of the House it has been possible for the bill to be altered so that I could bring it here for debate this afternoon. I should like to thank all members for their courtesy.

This is a very important issue. The principle of maternity leave has been supported by women's organizations across Canada in growing numbers, and by women who recognize its far-reaching significance. The bill is not as broad as I could wish but under the rules of the House it must be limited to women in employment under federal jurisdiction, that is federal undertakings of various kinds as well as employment covered by the Public Service Employment Act. This matter of providing protection for women through maternity leave is a test of our sincerity. If we are sincere when we proclaim our belief in equality for women in employment, we must do more than concern ourselves merely with equality in wages, hours, working conditions and promotion, important and necessary as these may be. Rather, we must take legislative steps to provide equality of employment where pregnancy is concerned. This is not merely a women's problem. She certainly did not create it by herself. This is not merely an individual's problem. It is a family problem and a community problem, and must be met as such.

The Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) is to be congratulated for having recognized this social responsibility by including provisions to deal with the problem of pregnancy in the new white paper on unemployment insurance. I wish to offer him warm congratulations for it as far as it goes, but I would point out that its proposals fall far short of providing complete maternity leave protection. I will return to that a little later. I surely hope the white paper will come through the labour committee unscathed; we have seen what has happened to other white papers in committees, notably to the white paper of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson). We can only hope. This one is running into heavy weather from a number of powerful employer organizations which all believe that motherhood is a very good idea, but not at the expense of the unemployment insurance fund.

In providing protection for women in employment where pregnancy is concerned, we are up against years of basic social organization and assumptions which have built a barrier of discrimination against women in the labour force. According to these traditions, woman's main permanent responsibility is marriage, a family, and taking care of the home. When a woman seeks employment, she is expected at the same time to fulfil her primary responsibilities of home making. Ideally, a woman starting a family has the protection and income of a man to support her during pregnancy, childbirth and early child care. Men are supposed to support their wives and children. Women are supposed to provide care.

Of course, today's facts do not support these suppositions; but myths die slowly—and painfully for women, I may add. Many women today have turned to gainful employment outside the home because their husband's paycheque is insufficient to provide a modern standard of living. Many others are the sole support of their families. It is instructive to note that of all female employees under the Public Service Employment Act, 57.4 per cent have children and 46.3 per cent of these are the sole support of their children. Yet, in spite of these facts, women are treated as though they were temporary accidents in the labour force, and as though, if conditions were sufficiently uncomfortable, they might go away. They are employed in the temporary and lower paid, less skilled positions and are viewed as supplementary employees both by their employers and, I might add, by themselves. Nowhere is this more evident than in the matter of maternity leave in both public and private industry and occupation.

Fortunately, more and more people are coming to realize that women have the right to continue to keep their employment, in the same way as men have that right. The purpose of maternity leave, the purpose of this bill, is to make this right more secure.

[Mrs. MacInnis.]

Some people argue that providing maternity leave legislation discriminates against some employees in favour of others. Such people, perhaps, do not realize that the Public Service Employment Act now provides special benefits for some of its employees, benefits which are not extended to all. These include: special leave, with full pay for an employee who has a death in the family, a serious illness in the family or a family or household emergency; leave with full pay for military reserve force training, attendance at court, veterans' medical treatment or examination, marriage and paternity leave for the father. Surely, no one could claim that such provisions discriminate against those who do not encounter any one of these emergencies. Why, then, should maternity leave be regarded as any more discriminatory than paternity leave?

The provisions of my bill, Mr. Speaker, are quite simple. They provide for seven weeks leave of absence for a woman before the probable date of her confinement. Should the certificate of her doctor recommend more time than that, it can be given. The same length of time can be granted after her confinement but there is nothing to stop the woman from returning to her employment earlier than that should she desire to do so.

These periods before and after the birth of her child are more flexible than those proposed in the white paper, which gives a straight nine weeks before confinement and six weeks after, a total of 15 weeks. My bill would provide greater attention to the needs of the individual woman concerned. My bill states categorically that an employer shall not dismiss an employee for any reason arising out of her maternity leave absence until, and unless, she has been absent for a period of 16 weeks. There is nothing, of course, in the white paper on unemployment insurance to prevent her dismissal for reasons arising from her pregnancy.

The great value of the unemployment insurance proposals is the fact that during her 15 weeks of absence due to pregnancy the woman will receive two-thirds of her previous earnings. I should very much like to have been able to bring in a similar proposal in this bill, but the rules did not permit me to do so. However, I shall content myself with congratulating the minister and supporting his proposal fully.

My bill has two other very important provisions. The first is that the employee's job shall be held open for her should she wish to return to it after the birth of her child at the end of her maternity leave period. The second is that she shall suffer no loss of her seniority rights because of her absence during the maternity leave period.

These are the terms of my bill, which is in line with the International Labour Organization Convention that was passed in 1919 and revised in 1952. That is a convention which, I should point out, we have been unable to sign in Canada because of our peculiar constitutional set-up and because all our provinces are not yet ready to accept it. It is my hope that the federal government, as the largest single employer of labour in this country, will adopt this bill, or at the very least, send its subject matter to the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare for study. I hope that this bill will not be sent to the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. I think the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare could more appropriately deal with it. I really feel that the time is right for this bill to be sent to that committee.

The federal government should, in my opinion, act as a model for other employers in this regard. Up to this point, only two provinces, British Columbia and New Brunswick, have maternity leave legislation of any kind on their statute books. In private industry only a small fraction of employees are covered by any sort of maternity leave legislation. Of course, when I say that, it will be obvious that Canada lags far behind many countries in this regard. A survey carried out by the federal Department of Labour in 1967 mentioned such countries as France, Britain, Sweden, Australia and New Zealand.

The proposals of this bill represent a considerable advance from the situation now existing in federal government legislation. I should like to reiterate that the bill does not propose merely to cover employees under the Public Service Employment Act. This is a broader proposal than that. It proposes to cover women whose employment comes under federal jurisdiction which means, of course, that the employment need not only be under the Public Service Employment Act; it may also be connected with all forms of federal works, undertakings or enterprises such as transportation, communications, banking, etc. Therefore, it is a much broader bill than the present legislation, and covers more. As I say, the proposals of this bill represent a considerable advance from the situation now existing in federal government legislation. Employees covered by the Public Service Employment Act are allowed to take time off for pregnancy, but they receive no pay during their period of absence. This may be an improvement over being fired outright when they become pregnant, but this unjust condition still exists in many areas of Canadian employment. For example, there was the recent case in Ottawa where the Public Library fired a woman for pregnancy. Being forced to take time off without pay is really being punished for being a woman; it is being punished for becoming pregnant. I cannot see it in any other light. At the very time when the economic needs of a woman are increasing, she is forced to leave her job.

The present situation in the federal service is that an employee must resign at least two months before the birth of her child unless a medical certificate is provided or the agreement of the department concerned is obtained to permit the woman to continue working. The employee must return to work within six months of the birth of her child. This leave is granted without pay. During this time the woman is required to pay both her own share and that of the government toward her superannuation and medical insurance plans. It is hard to believe that this situation exists in our Public Service Employment Act. It is manifestly unjust at the time a woman is laid off that she should have to continue to pay both her share and that of the government toward both superannuation and medical insurance plans.

My bill is necessarily limited to cover women whose employment comes under federal jurisdiction. Of all persons under federal jurisdiction 26.5 per cent are women. It is estimated that 36 per cent of these women are between the ages of 20 and 34, which can be roughly classified as the child-bearing years. As far as I can understand this is how they are classified by the Women's Bureau.

In the general work force the participation of women of child-bearing age is increasing. This was shown by a report issued in the last day or two. It is, therefore, entirely likely that such is also the case in those positions under federal jurisdiction.

Thousands of women today have to face the double job of looking after a family and holding a position outside of the home. It might be better if such were not the case. I have no doubt that if they could find alternative sources of income such as a husband, some kind of family allowance or a guaranteed income, many of these women would not be in the labour market. Those who are forced to be there are having a difficult time making their way against customs and social organization which no longer fit in with today's needs and realities.

We, as Members of Parliament, should be doing all that we can to place these women in a position of greater equality to enable them to carry their double burden. After all, it is not their burden alone, but the burden of society. I urge the government to look carefully at these proposals with a view to adopting them or similar proposals to provide adequate maternity leave protection for women employed under federal jurisdiction. If the government is not prepared to do this, then, the least it should do is to have a committee thoroughly study and make recommendations on maternity leave. The time is now ripe, particularly in view of the fact that pregnancy is covered under the Unemployment Insurance Act. The very least we can do is to refer the subject of this bill to the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare for study and report.

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, it is incumbent upon me to congratulate the hon. member on presenting this bill. I think the male members of this House can also take a pat on the back because we saw fit to leave this bill in its place of priority, notwithstanding the offending section, and allowed the hon. member to delete this section so that the matter could be debated this afternoon.

The attitude concerning women in the work force has undergone considerable change, particularly in the past 10 or 20 years. May I be so bold as to suggest that this change in attitude has been healthy? It is interesting to note that we have moved from ridiculing the suffragette to the present position where a royal commission has been appointed to study the status of women. It is, therefore not surprising that a Member of Parliament should be introducing or suggesting the kind of legislation we are debating today.

We were not taken completely by surprise when the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) in his white paper entitled, "Unemployment insurance in the 70's" saw fit to suggest that payments be made to those whose income has been interrupted due to sickness or pregnancy. Although it is not surprising that such a provision is contained in the white paper of the Department of Labour, those of us who sit as members of the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration have found that there is a considerable amount of opposition to have included in the unemployment insurance plan such a benefit for pregnant women. The mover of this bill indicated that she is concerned about what is going on and made reference to other white papers. I suggest with respect that she should also consider the white paper on veterans' legislation that was studied by the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs to see how much stronger that particular white paper was when the committee was finished their study of it. I do not think very many members of that committee were sidetracked from this very good recommended legislation. Paragraph 4 on page 10 of the White Paper "Unemployment insurance in the 70's" reads:

> In order to fill the gaps in the present system, payments will be made to those whose income has been interrupted due to sickness or pregnancy. In both cases benefits will cover a fifteen week period and will be available to anyone whose earnings cease due to pregnancy or sickness and who has been in the labour force twenty weeks or more during the previous 52 weeks.

As all members are aware, under the present act pregnant women are presently disqualified for benefits six weeks prior and after confinement. The plan to cover income lost due to pregnancy recognizes the particular status of women in the labour force. It is a step toward eliminating some of the hardships they experience, as outlined by the mover of this bill.

I believe it was two days ago when all members received a copy of the news bulletin from the Canada Department of Labour. The bulletin indicates that the Women's Bureau of the Canada Department of Labour has released a new publication entitled, "Facts and Figures: Women in the Labour Force 1969". It then states:

> Data contained in the publication shows that 35.2 per cent of Canadian women were in the labour force in 1969 compared with 26.7 per cent in 1959. During 1969, of the total labour force, 32.2 per cent consisted of women, compared with 25.7 per cent in 1959.

It is also stressed in the white paper on unemployment insurance that in the case of both pregnancy and sickness the proposed scheme will not replace existing public or private programs in this field, but will complement them within specific limits. I mentioned to the Minister of Labour this morning that if we cannot have an over-all guaranteed income for the most significant portion of the Canadian population, the work force, that maybe here at least we can look toward a guaranteed annual income. We must walk before we run. I think this is a move in the right direction.

The government has of course recognized that there are many women who are covered under private and public programs and in fact are probably well covered, but I venture to say that the vast majority of women in the work force who become pregnant are not covered under any present federal legislation. This is certainly true of the over-all work force. I suggest it is particularly true of women in the work force.

As the hon. member indicated, steps along this line have been taken by various provinces. Unfortunately, time does not permit me to go into the statutes of each province, but I have noted that under the Minimum Employment Standards Act of New Brunswick there is a clause which reads:

> An employer shall not employ or keep in employ a female employee during a period of six weeks from the time of being delivered of a child or a longer period on production of a medical certificate.

Section 12 reads:

> An employer shall permit a pregnant female employee to be absent from her work for a period of up to six weeks before her time of delivery on production of a medical certificate stating her delivery will probably take place within six weeks.

• (5:20 p.m.)

And in clause 13, it is provided that—

> Where a female is absent from her work in accordance with sections 11 and 12, her employer shall not give notice of dismissal for reasons arising from her absence until the employee has been absent for a maximum period of 16 weeks.

The enlightened province of British Columbia has passed a bill entitled "An Act Respecting the Employment of Women before and after Childbirth". This bill became law on April 1, 1966. The wording of the British Columbia statute is very close to the wording used in Bill C-6, and no doubt the hon. member has used these forms as her precedent. In my own province, the Province of Ontario, there exists an act entitled "An Act to Prevent Discrimination in Employment because of Sex or Marital Status". Although the bill received Royal Assent on June 26, 1970 it is not yet in force, although it will be in force on the day proclaimed by the Lieutenant Governor. This statute, in section 9, advises that:

> An employer shall not terminate the employment of an employee because of her pregnancy but the employer, before or after the commencement of the period referred to in subsection 2, may require the employee to commence a leave of absence at such time as the duties of her position cannot reasonably be performed by a pregnant woman or the performance of the employee's work is materially affected by the pregnancy.

I would hate to be the civil servant who had to make that particular determination.

The statute of the Province of Ontario has one further section to give some protection to the employer in that it advises that the section does not apply in respect of an employer unless he employs 25 or more employees. To this extent, it seems to me there is a measure of discrimination involved.

Hon. members may wonder why I am interested in this particular area. First, I would say my interest was aroused by the government's white paper entitled "Unemployment Insurance in the 70's." I noted that it is the intention of this government that since under the present act pregnant women are generally disqualified for benefits six weeks before and after confinement, the unemployment insurance scheme for the 'seventies should fill that gap and authorize payment to those whose income had been interrupted due to sickness and/or pregnancy. Realizing that the government had this intention, I examined the statute, together with the bill presented earlier by the hon. member, Bill C-160, I believe, in the second session of the 28th Parliament. I also read a booklet prepared by the Canadian Department of Labour, entitled "Maternity Leave Policies". The book states, on page one:

> Maternity leave linked with security of employment is a relatively new addition in most provinces to the expanding list of employment benefits in Canada.

As yet, as I have indicated, it is the subject of legislation in only two provinces—British Columbia, where the original Maternity Protection Act dates from 1921, and New Brunswick which added legislation on this subject to provincial labour standards requirements in 1964. Its growing acceptance is no doubt related to the steady increase in the participation of married women in the work force which we have experienced particularly in the last decade. Although much of this increase is due to the return of married women to employment when their children reach school age, between 1957 and 1967 the participation rate of women of childbearing age rose from 47 per cent to 57 per cent in the 20-24 age group and from 26 per cent to 34 per cent in the 25-34 age group. The report makes it clear that an attempt was being made to give a descriptive summary of the results without attempting to draw conclusions, and concedes that a number of areas which might warrant more probing in depth had been revealed. In my view, the bill now before us is indicative that the conclusion is warranted by the statistics presented in this booklet.

I was interested to note that although, according to the report, "The most important provision required as a condition of eligibility for maternity leave is length of service with the employer", the hon. member's bill is silent on this aspect. The government's proposition is that in a pregnancy situation benefits will cover a 15 week period and will be available to anyone whose earnings cease through pregnancy or sickness, and who has been in the labour force for 20 weeks or more during the previous 52 weeks. If this bill were to be voted on today, I submit the hon. member might wish to give it more credibility by placing some similar requirement in her own bill. It is perhaps understandable that the hon. member should not include such a clause in her bill, because the report by the Department of Labour states, and I quote:

> The length of service required for eligibility varies not only between industry groups but within the industry group and between office and non-office employees, so that no clear pattern emerges. A majority of office employees in ten industry groups are required to have three to six months prior service, and in seven industry groups from seven to twelve months service. For non-office employees the period required tends to be shorter. In all but three industry groups a majority of non-office employees must have six months service or less and in half of these the requirement is three months. There does not appear to be any relationship between the length of service required and the size of the reporting unit or the presence or absence of a collective agreement.

Mr. Speaker, I think I have covered the points I wish to examine. I wish to congratulate the hon. member for having brought this bill forward. I would have welcomed a few more statistics as to the number of women likely to be covered by legislation of this kind, but no doubt other speakers will deal with this aspect.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): First of all, I should like to support the principle of this bill. Second, I should like to assure the hon. sponsor that I do not do so from any Victorian attitude. I suspect the hon. member who preceded me did, because it seemed me there lurked within the framework of his speech the awful notion that somewhere, somehow, a dewy-eyed young lady would present herself for work and, having duly registered for employment, would declare her pregnancy to the company doctor. This seemed to be a possibility which in itself was enough to cause grave doubts as to the virtue of the bill.

I see no problem about this at all. The woman is very much a part of the working force today, and the woman carries with her the possibility of pregnancy. So, may I say to the hon. lady who is sponsoring this bill that when she looks down her nose at the possibility that it might wind up before the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee she might be far better off in my tender embraces than she would in the embraces of some hon. members opposite who help constitute the Committee on Manpower and Immigration. I think the justice committee, especially the Tory members thereof, could do her a great deal more justice.

Mr. Speaker, we should never fall into the school of thought that the last speaker mentioned where, as in New Brunswick, you can do one of two things to obtain your desserts under the legislation. As I understood his reading of the act, you can produce a child or you can produce a medical certificate. I would suggest to our colleague that she should bring her measure before the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee, where we would clearly have that matter straightened out.

Mrs. MacInnis: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCleave: I am glad to hear that she agrees with me. I do not know why we should have this God-awful emphasis placed upon statistics in respect of this problem. Whether it happens to 1 per cent of the female working population, or 99 per cent, surely is not the reason for this Parliament to take action: the fact that it happens at all—and this is one of the very natural things that will happen to a woman employee—should be sufficient reason for it to engage our attention. It is not the extent of the problem as it affects womenkind as a group that is important. The effect this has upon any woman who is working and finds herself in this position should define the direction in which our hearts and heads should lead us.

Perhaps it is strange that I, as a mere male, am discussing this matter but once in a while I trespass in somewhat trembling fashion into these problems. The other day I tried to strike a blow for a nursing mother who, according to the Toronto Globe and Mail, had been deprived of certain rights by the Unemployment Insurance Commission. It turned out that the Globe and Mail report was incorrect and that the problem had been rectified. That fact was not reported in the Globe and Mail. I think it was not reported because I once had the temerity to stand up in the House of Commons, surveying that vast brood known as the editorial board of the Toronto Globe and Mail, and state I thought they had solved their housing problem very neatly because every two of them required only one seat in the editorial room. Ever since that deep criticism I have been put on the black-list of that noble publication.

Be that as it may, Sir, I support my colleague from the NDP in her endeavour to bring before us a very sensible point of view. It is one that can be referred to a committee of the House of Commons. In principle we are not being asked to accept everything, holus-bolus, that is set forth in her bill. That is no longer the purpose of second reading. We do not have to accept everything in principle; we simply say it is a matter that we should at least refer to a committee for study and consideration. Let the committee look at it, make changes and report back. When we see that product we will decide whether we accept it in principle. That is what we now do on second reading. It is not what we did before.

If there are imperfections in the way the bill is drafted—and I for one would niggle about some of its language—I would not say that was an imperfection. I simply say as a lawyer, and I am sure any other lawyer in the House would agree, that no two people would ever draft a bill in the same way. The bill is there, with reasonable certainty and clarity, and the important thing is that it catches a principle which could be put into the law of this country. The principle is that a woman should not be penalized for what women very naturally do. Women, very naturally, do have children from time to time. Quite apart from the element of statistics—and I would never approve or disapprove a bill like this because there was an overwhelming statistical or no statistical need for it—I say that we should look at its principle. I would not accept a statistical argument in any way, shape or form as a reason for approving legislation.

During the last 30 or 40 years more and more women have joined the labour force. I am sure that employers would tell us that you could not find any greater degree of loyalty, efficiency and job stability among employees than you find among females. Therefore, they should not be penalized in any way. We should not take from them their given right to have children and to carry on the race. I hope that not only this matter will be referred to the committee but that in addition to the two provinces which already have legislation in this field, the new women's division which is playing a great part in the Department of Labour will initiate action through the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) so there is more action at the provincial level and a sort of standard provision dealing with this important right at the federal level.

My final thought on the subject is that the Bird Royal Commission has not yet been heard from. Presumably it will report during this session. I think the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) expressed the hope last June that these ladies would put their views before us soon. I hope this will occur very shortly. I do not think we have to hold up this measure until we receive that report. It could go to the committee, and in due course when the Bird Royal Commission makes recommendations they could be sent to a committee where this very important topic could be discussed. In any event, this subject should be dealt with by a committee on its merits and a report sent back to the House. In short, I support the idea and suggest that we should not wait for months but should get on with it right now.

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the director of the women's bureau of the Canada Department of Labour delivered a speech to the Women's Canadian Club in Toronto the other day. It was a very good speech. The lady's name, of course, is Sylvia Gelber. She asked the question, "What do women want?" She answered her own rhetorical question in the words of the report of a task force on women's rights and responsibilities submitted to the President of the United States a few months ago. Her answer was, "A matter of simple justice". It seems to me that is what we are talking about when we talk about the need for a maternity leave policy in Canada. It is a matter of simple justice, and perhaps overdue justice.

For ten years in Canada women have had the statutory assurance that within the federal jurisdiction there will be no discrimination on grounds of sex in connection with the right of the individual to equality before the law, a principle embodied in the Canadian Bill of Rights. For the past ten years efforts have been made to give meaning and substance to these technical statutory guarantees under the Canadian Bill of Rights. It is painfully clear—this fact has been pointed out by speakers in this debate and on many other occasions by spokesmen of all parties in all parts of Canada—that women do not enjoy full equality before the law and that there is not equality for them in many other areas of activity in this country.

In the area of justice, it is hoped that when the new law reform commission is established and operating, the women of Canada will have the opportunity to bring to its attention certain of the present sections of the law relating to women which might well be re-designed, if not eliminated. This is progress. But progress certainly cannot stop there, as has been pointed out by hon. members who have spoken on this bill which has been brought before the House this afternoon.

There are certain sections of the law in Canada which still reflect the attitudes of another era, an era in which it was assumed that all married women were wholly dependent upon and supported by their husbands, and problems relating to the responsibility for surviving dependents were viewed as problems solely affecting the male provider. Times have changed, and changed dramatically. I know that during election time when we go door-to-door in the process of canvassing our respective constituencies, so often we find there is no housewife at the door. She is out working, trying to earn money to put food on the family table.

I am sure hon. members realize full well the dramatic differences between the Canada of today and the Canada of 25 years ago. There are in this country today several hundred thousand women who are the sole supporters of their families. Some of these women are widows, others have been deserted, others have been divorced and thousands are married women who must work because their husbands are unable to secure enough income to provide a decent standard of living for the family. This is the situation we are talking about.

Today more than one out of every three women is in the Canadian labour force. There are now in Canada 2.5 million women employed. This represents one million more than there were 10 years ago. More than half of these women are married. In other words, of the 2.5 million women employed, more than half are married. There are 1¼ million married women in the Canadian labour force. In 1951, 11 per cent of all married women went out to work. This figure has now risen to over 30 per cent, and all of the analyses available to the government indicate that this trend will continue and that there will be an even higher percentage in the future.

All of us should bear in mind the following figures. In August of 1970 the total Canadian labour force was 8,720,000. The total number of women 14 years of age or over was 7,601,000. The number of women in the labour force was 2,733,000, 36 per cent of the total population of women or 31.3 per cent of the total labour force. This is an incredible figure. Not only is it significant from the sociological standpoint, but we see increasingly the importance of women in Canada's general drive toward greater productivity. The GNP in very large measure is the result of the work of women in the labour force.

Let us compare these figures with the figures for 1931. The total labour force then was 3,921,833. The total number of women in Canada 14 years of age or over was 3,481,089. The total number of women in the labour force was 665,302, 19.1 per cent of the total population of women or 17 per cent of the total labour force. So we have seen an increase between 1931 and 1970 from 17 per cent of the total labour force to 31.3 per cent of the total labour force. Against this background it seems clear that legislative standards governing maternity leave are both necessary and desirable. The government in no way quarrels with this concept. Against this background it seems equally clear that other legislative reforms are needed to assist the women in Canada's work force.

The White Paper with the "golden cover", entitled "Unemployment Insurance in the 70s", is a remarkable document and deserves to be given far greater publicity by all members of the House. It is perhaps one of the most advanced documents relating to social legislation to come before Canada's Parliament. This document states with validity:

> The rewards of economic growth should be directed not only toward the individuals who have had the opportunity for a good education, a well-paid job, a two-car garage and a home in the country... They are also for the widow or divorcee working long hours.

I think it should be added that society's concern must be extended to those who have been cruelly deserted and to those married women living on the economic margin. We talk a great deal about the just society. Indeed, this goal should be the object of all our activities in the House. In a truly just society the rewards of economic growth cannot, and must not, be denied to those married women who because of economic circumstances must go out to work in order to put food on the table and help raise their families in human dignity.

This country and the party which the people of this country chose to be the government in 1968 have built a remarkable record of social legislation, and there are those in other parties who are similarly concerned about the need for improved social legislation. No one claims a monopoly of interest in that field. Much of this reform has taken place over the past 35 years. That legislation has been geared to meet a whole spectrum of human needs. Despite this good legislation, the need for reform continues.

One area of need has been outlined today by the sponsor of this bill and by others who have participated in the debate. It must be obvious that a need for maternity leave exists, particularly in view of the increasing numbers and importance of women in Canada's work force. For anyone to suggest that the government and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) hold a contrary view, represents a distortion of fact. Surely no one in this House would ever attempt to distort facts. The Minister of Labour has distinguished himself as a strong supporter of women's rights, including maternity rights. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) may have been in the House on November 25, 1968, when the minister said:

> The idea of maternity leave is certainly not an original one. It makes sense and it should at least be part of the provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act, if nothing else, when unemployment insurance comes up for drastic overhaul early in the new year.

This document "Unemployment Insurance in the 70's" reflects the real concern by the government of the need for action in this area. Admittedly, it talks in terms of compensation during the period of pregnancy, but it must be obvious that the two concepts of maternity leave and compensation during a period of maternity must go hand in hand. I want to assure this House that the government's and the minister's determination is still to correct at the earliest feasible opportunity the injustice of women facing possible loss of employment because of pregnancy. As one speaker stated, maternity is a perfectly natural and, indeed, in so far as the future of this country is concerned, desirable phenomenon.

Let no one make the erroneous assumption that the problem of maternity leave has been tucked away in some governmental cubbyhole. Hopefully, the report of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women will be tabled in the House next month. I think we will all welcome the tabling of that report by Mrs. Bird and the other commissioners. It may well be that this document will contain explicit recommendations not only for maternity leave but for other benefits associated with maternity leave. It may contain recommendations for new measures which would provide maternity leave as a matter of right for women employed in industries under federal jurisdiction. It can be argued that any action which the government may contemplate in the area of maternity leave should await that report. I think there is some logic in that position. As well, there may well be other recommendations contained in the Bird Commission Report which should be included in some wide-ranging, omnibus measure.

Let me reiterate one salient fact: there is strong and enthusiastic support on this side of the House for new measures which will be more favourable to the female labour force in this country. When this measure is brought forward by the government in whatever form it takes, it is encouraging to know the degree of support which exists in this House, not only on the part of government members but also on the part of the official opposition and members of the NDP.

In this regard I would remind hon. members that the proposed changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act will provide substantial new benefits for the women of this country. Under the act as it stands now, a sick person receives no benefit unless he or she becomes sick after entering the benefit structure. If pregnant, a woman is now generally disqualified for six weeks before and six weeks after the birth of her child. Personally, I find that kind of regulation indefensible. In the context of today's social situation, this denial of benefits to employees who become sick or pregnant is indefensible. Both sickness and pregnancy are natural phenomena.

I am sure that even opposition members will embrace with enthusiasm the proposal of the Minister of Labour that these anomalies be removed. The working women of Canada must be provided with benefits based upon a realistic appraisal of what their particular interruption of earnings means in the context of the work force of today. It has been pointed out by others who have discussed this point that when we adopt the concept of maternity leave we will not be wild-eyed revolutionaries in the process, that many other jurisdictions moved long ago to help women faced with this particular problem.

Under the proposed changes set forth in the unemployment insurance white paper, which goes hand in hand with the idea of maternity leave, if a woman has had 20 or more employment weeks in the previous 52 she will be entitled to UIC benefits nine weeks before and six weeks after her confinement, after a two-week waiting period. When we are thinking in terms of planning new legislation to bring into force a program of maternity leave, we should keep in mind these limits. There should be a standard relationship between UIC benefits and maternity leave benefits.

In the white paper entitled "Unemployment in the 70s" it is proposed that provision be made for the payment of benefits in the event of unemployment due to maternity. Financial benefits totalling two-thirds of earnings will be available, after a two-week waiting period, to women with 20 or more employment weeks in the previous 52 weeks and whose loss of income is due to pregnancy. Generally, the benefits will be available for a period of six weeks after confinement and nine weeks before. Similarly, there are many persuasive reasons why employers should be required in defined circumstances to reinstate them following leave and to protect their continuity of service for purposes of pensions and other employee benefits.

I agree with my colleague who spoke earlier that the limits should be defined and that rules and regulations should be provided. My colleague made a very valid point when he said that reference should also be made to the type of work which is available after maternity leave. If an employer proposes to provide employment after the leave has expired, but it is not the same type of employment, that is a very important factor. No one will dispute the fact that the period of eligibility for maternity leave should be long enough to embrace normal periods of probation, the period that a new employee must complete before achieving permanent status. These periods vary from employer to employer, but one to three months is common for non-office workers, and up to six months for office workers.

Surely, the period of eligibility should be long enough to counteract any tendency on the part of employers to introduce undesirable hiring practices such as requirement for a pregnancy test—this has been suggested as one of the stratagems which could conceivably be employed—which would suggest a minimum of at least nine months. Together with my colleagues on this side of the House I have no difficulty whatsoever in supporting the principle contained in this bill. It is a good principle. I am happy to see the official opposition joining the government in the desire to see reform in this area.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hour for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair to resume same at eight o'clock p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADA GRAIN BILL

ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMISSION, PROVISIONS RESPECTING GRADING, LICENCES, ELEVATORS, ETC.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Olson that Bill C-175, respecting grain, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, we in this party favour the reintroduction of Bill C-196 as it was known, or Bill C-175 as it is now known, at the level at which it was last dealt with by the House. Certainly, we do not think it is necessary to return it to committee. We feel the bill does some good and essential things. For example, we feel it provides for the protein grading of wheat so that importing nations and the markets of the world will be in a position to purchase Canadian grain on a guaranteed protein basis. This is a good thing. The bill also provides for mixing at terminals or, if you will, tailor-making samples of grain for export. This will have some advantages: one is that we will be able to mix grain to the order of the buyer.

We on this side of the House, and I think most farmers, have long argued that something more specific should be done in the directing of boxcars on the Prairies. This has been a complaint for as long as I have been farming, and certainly for some time before that. I think these three aspects of the bill should have been introduced at least ten years ago. I recall that when I was a wheat pool delegate in the 1950s, farmers, wheat pool delegates and farm organization people were talking about them then. I only wonder why it has taken so long to get them before Parliament and passed in this form.

The important issue to be remembered when dealing with this bill is the selling of grain. Getting markets for our grain has always been a problem for as long as I have been farming, and we must be alive to changes in the markets. Too often we have been complacent. We have accepted the fact that our wheat and other grains were the best in the world and expected buyers to come to us. This is no longer true. Now we are in a buyer's market and we must do something if we are to sell our grain in competition with other countries.

I would like to mention just a few items which illustrate what I mean. A new milling process is being used to turn wheat into flour. It is known as the Chorley process and it requires a specific protein level of wheat. Bread can be made with a lower level of protein, but there must be a certain consistency to that level so the miller will not encounter difficulties. As I say, this bill would allow us to sell grain on a guaranteed protein basis.

Another matter I wish to mention is that other countries have been experiencing problems in agriculture, particularly with respect to agricultural trade. Some of them have been introducing tariff changes which may work against us. I wish to quote from a news clipping headed "Canada's wheat problems with U.K. begin." It reads in part:

> The British budget brought down last week signalled export problems for Canadian wheat much sooner than anyone here had expected.
> The budget indicated that the British government plans to start protecting its farmers with tariff walls even before it joins the European Economic Community.

In effect this is going to start now.

> Under the present British system, food is imported free, the government pays subsidies to the farmers, and consumers are given the benefit of lower prices.
> Under the new scheme, subsidies will be gradually abandoned, and Britain will switch to a system of import levies.
> That will make imported food more expensive and allow the British farmer to raise his prices.
> The important question now is who will suffer most. Will the British consumer bear the whole cost of the tariff? Or will the Canadian exporter have to accept lower prices in order to maintain his sales to Britain?

It is the reference to the Canadian exporter that I am worried about, because we export grain. If we are not awake to the problem posed by Britain joining the European Common Market, we may completely lose our sales of wheat to Britain, which we cannot afford to do. We have a surplus of grain. Our country's economy depends upon selling this grain. Much of western Canada's welfare depends upon the export of wheat, and we do not want to lose any sales if we can possibly avoid it.

I would like to mention a different matter in connection with this bill. Last summer we held hearings for several weeks in connection with Bill C-196, the Canada Grain Act, and I was very unhappy at the attitude of the grain companies in presenting their briefs to us. I was particularly unhappy with the Canada Grains Council. I felt its members did not give the leadership in this area that they might have done. I speak both in sorrow and in anger. I am sorry they did not give leadership and I am angry because the Canadian taxpayer pays for the Canada Grains Council; he pays $50,000 through the Department of Agriculture and another $50,000 through the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In my opinion, their reaction to the bill was a negative one. I feel we deserve better than that from the Canada Grains Council.

Had the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) expected this reaction, he might have had second thoughts about the people he appointed to the Canada Grains Council. We saw his creation, the Canada Grains Council, making a negative response to his bill. It makes me think of the man who has been bitten by a dog, and the worst part is that it was his own dog. The Canadian taxpayer deserves better than that. The Canada Grains Council has been very disappointing in so far as giving any leadership in this area is concerned. They have ignored the marketing needs of Canadian farmers and grain producers. Their concern has been with their own problems and what is happening to the grain companies, with hardly a thought given to the export market.

I suggest that this bill is concerned with the export market. I hasten to say that some grain companies had a much better approach to this problem than had the Grains Council, but on the whole I was disappointed with the presentations. The Canada Grains Council should give leadership and bring forward new ideas regarding the problems experienced in regard to western Canadian grain. They should be looking for new and better varieties of grain, for cheaper methods of handling and transportation. They should be looking for future markets, finding out where they are and what kind of grains they need.

The possibilities for trade should be examined from the point of view of credit arrangements. I think there needs to be a shake-up within the council, because I do not think they have the leadership necessary to accomplish these things. The Canada Grains Council should be looking at the shifting emphasis in the market from the primary products of grain to secondary products such as meat. They should investigate the possibilities in the world meat market, and whether it might be worth while developing a market which would provide more employment than the growing of grain. This is just one of many areas that should be investigated.

The Canada Grains Council is a creature of the government, Mr. Speaker, and we should demand that they do better or be fired. The council should consider the value of grain, particularly wheat, for food. Just recently I read in the press that enriched bread was only good enough for rats to starve on. I suggest that whole wheat has much more value than this. If there is something wrong with the bread, it is because something is taken out of the wheat to start with, because wheat is rich in vitamins, minerals, protein and starch. As a country of grain producers we should be looking for improved foods and new uses for our wheat. Within the terms of this bill there may be room for such investigation.

We do not wish to belabour the point, Mr. Speaker. As we have said on a number of occasions, we are in favour of the bill and feel that it should be dealt with now. Therefore, we are quite prepared to support it.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I think it could be expected that the member representing the constituency which includes the wheat city of the west, the city of Brandon, would be concerned with the implications of Bill C-175 as it has come before the House. I followed the debate during the course of the afternoon and was glad to learn that the minister has modified his position considerably since this measure was first introduced during the last session as Bill C-196.

Within the limitations of time available today I have re-read the debate on that occasion. The minister's emphasis at that time was on the necessity for haste because fundamental amendments to the Canada Grain Act were of the utmost importance if we were to deal with the problem that had reached crisis proportions by last spring, namely, the difficulty caused by the drastic drop in wheat sales in particular and grain sales in general. As was pointed out by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) who spoke for the official opposition, the minister was on a slightly different wicket today. The thesis previously propounded by the minister was that the grain export situation depended upon the quick passage of the bill. That thesis no longer holds water.

As I remarked earlier, as the representative of a constituency still closely tied to grain for its continued prosperity, I feel it is of the utmost importance that the contents of this bill be examined carefully and in detail. This is the first time since 1930 that any major amendments have been made to the Canada Grain Act. The general state of the Prairie economy demonstrates that wheat is still king in the maintenance of prosperity. The situation which has developed over the past two years, the growing spirit of western alienation, has largely arisen from the fact that this government has been completely out of touch with the fundamental position of wheat in the well-being of the Prairie economy. Policies have been initiated that are incomprehensible to most Prairie farmers and producers.

I have attended many meetings where various attempts have been made to grapple with the growing crisis in the grain trade. Last spring I attended several meetings in connection with the Lift program, the Lower Inventory for Tomorrow program as it was described by the government, and the Lower Income for Tomorrow program as it was dubbed by the unhappy farmers.

At that time the criticism was that the federal government, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson), and the minister from Saskatchewan responsible for the Wheat Board had failed to appreciate that Lift would do nothing to solve the grain problem; in fact, in the long run it would aggravate it. This has been demonstrated recently by the report of increased grain sales with the reopening of the market in mainland China and the prospects of substantial sales of grain, primarily wheat, to the Soviet Union. Indeed, we find that the government so badly miscalculated in connection with the Lift program that perhaps by creating an artificial crop failure, or a government-directed crop failure as it is described by the farmers, we have placed our future sales position and prospects in jeopardy.

Therefore, I would urge very strongly, Mr. Speaker, that instead of acceding to the minister's request to reinstate the bill before the House at the level it had reached in the previous Parliament, we move very carefully and cautiously in order that we may make a fundamental revision of the Canada Grain Act and deal with the critical problems of our grain industry. It has been demonstrated by the changes that have taken place in the last few months that there is no need for haste. Exports are opening up, notwithstanding our dealing or not dealing with the matter of protein content. Therefore, from that standpoint there is no excuse for hasty action on the bill.

There is before us at second reading stage a bill that is a rather complex and weighty document. I do not intend to go into detail with respect to particular items except to point out to the minister and the government that the enlarged powers to be given to the Canadian Grain Commission, which will be its new designation, should be carefully reviewed. The previous speaker criticized the reservations of the Canada Grains Council in this respect. But that is not the only representative body of the grain producers which has expressed reservations concerning the powers that are to be given under the revisions to the Canadian Grain Commission. Some of the leading publications representing the farmers of the province of Manitoba, for example, have expressed the same anxiety. The Manitoba Co-operator, a paper that followed closely the discussions that took place in committee and in Parliament with respect to Bill C-196, said as recently as last June 25:

> It is equally apparent that if Bill C-196 is delayed until the next session of Parliament that the Conservative opposition will be charged with being obstructionists. The government will say that Canada's ability to compete in the world wheat market has been damaged by the delay caused by the opposition. That, of course, is patently false, since as we have said, the matter of protein grading could be dealt with promptly, and with the full blessing of the opposition, if so many other strings had not been attached to the bundle.

One of the strings that has been attached to the bundle in this impressively large bill is the new powers that will be given to the Canadian Grain Commission which is replacing the old Board of Grain Commissioners. We shall need to consider under the terms of the legislation the whole question of the transportation of grain to export markets. Apparently, the entire problem of box car allocation is to be dealt with in the bill before us. In other words, it would appear that the legislation will provide the legislative basis for the block system which is already operating on the Prairies on an experimental basis. It appears that the bill will empower the Canadian Grain Commission to become the authority in the matter of the transport of grains.

In the latter part of the 1950s and the early part of the 1960s, when grain exports increased at a tremendous rate under the then Conservative government and the problem of providing or allocating boxcars at the right place and at the right time in order to bring out the required quantities and grades of wheat that were urgently required or the export market grew enormously, it became necessary to appoint a transport controller. This ad hoc provision of course was quite inadequate to deal with the upsurge of grain sales in the last few years. There was some delay in appointing a transportation controller, the result being that we suffered some unfortunate tie-ups both at Thunder Bay and at the western ports. It appears that the placing of this authority in the Canadian Grain Commission, under this legislation, will be a step in the right direction in this regard. Again, since these matters are fundamental there should be no haste in coming to definitive conclusions about them until there has been an opportunity to hear from all the representative groups engaged in the grains export industry.

One of the problems of our grain trade arises from its dependence upon the export market for its prosperity. The very fact that the export market is a fluctuating and difficult market to maintain is all the more reason for our having the best possible legislative framework for dealing with this matter. Fundamentally, Mr. Speaker, the bill is catching up on the years of neglect on the part of Canadian governments. The minister has made the point that there is a great and growing need for a new grading system of grain that will emphasize its protein content. Canada is one of the last major grain exporting countries to bring its legislation up-to-date in this regard. Australia and the United States have already provided the legislative procedures for this difficult problem.

In dealing with the problem of the protein content of wheat, we are merely dealing with a sympton of the over-all difficulties and not with a cure-all that will solve all the problems of the grain trade. For example, one of the major difficulties in the Canadian wheat and grain trade stems from our failure to upgrade the yields of wheat. This difficulty has arisen because of our failure to cope with improved technologies. There will be fundamental changes in the grain trade during the next few years because of the new varieties of grain that are being developed, particularly as a result of experiments that are going on in Mexico under the direction of Dr. Borlaug, who has been the director of the Ford Foundation research in that country for the past 20 years.

It is interesting to note that among the Nobel Peace Prize winners announced this year was the name of Dr. Borlaug for his breakthrough in dwarf wheats. This is the first time that an agronomist has been recognized by this award. It indicates the vital nature of work that has been going on in that country under the direction of that distinguished American who, incidentally, is strongly supported by Canadian researchers. One of the chief researchers for those programs is Dr. Frank Zillinsky, formerly with the Canadian Experimental Farm service. These are matters that have to be discussed when the legislation is before the committee. The more time and opportunity we have to grapple with all the complex phases of the industry, the more effective the new legislative framework will be.

Those of us who are concerned with the continuing problems of the grain trade agree that we should concentrate on the problems of selling grain as much as growing and distributing it. It has been demonstrated that the sales are there if the Wheat Board, on behalf of the government, carries out an aggressive sales program. There have been announcements regarding the sale of substantial amounts of wheat, for example, to mainland China amounting to approximately 98 million bushels. We are not sure about the price of the wheat that is involved. It is suspected that it is at the level of fire sale prices. If this is so, it will not solve the problem of the wheat grower. After two years of drastic decline in sales he is faced with accumulated debts of cash advances and all the other sources of credit that have been made available. In order to recover his financial position, he will require an extended period of time with the maximum price for his grain.

There have been rumours to the effect that there has been a miscalculation in the demand for barley, so much so that it has been placed under export embargo. As it has been euphemistically explained, it is not an embargo on exports but, rather, a refusal on the part of the Wheat Board to receive any further export orders for barley. This is another way of saying precisely the same thing. I mention these matters at this stage of the discussion merely to point out that what we are grappling with in Bill C-175 will have a tremendous impact on the continuing progress and future health of the grain industry in Canada. This industry is fundamental to the prosperity of the Canadian Prairies.

The fear so often expressed at the various public meetings to which I have referred was this. There is a strong suspicion that behind this bill, as well as some of the other initiatives in agricultural legislation that have been put forward by the government in recent months, the government is attempting to deal indirectly rather than directly with the continuing problem of railway line abandonment on the Prairies. The question of railway line abandonment or continuation is intimately bound up in the whole stituation of the grain trade on the Prairies, involving the transportation facilities, the collection of the grain and the eventual transfer to export positions. We know that there has been only a temporary freeze on railway line abandonment for a certain period of time.

Some of the implications of the legislation are that there will be a rationalization of elevator facilities. What the government has in mind in some of its amendments is very closely related to the whole problem of railway line abandonment. This in turn relates to the process that has been going on not only in western Canada but in all rural parts of Canada. There has been a gradual diminution of the role of the rural community with the decline of the rural population. The population shift from the rural to the urban community goes on apace. In recent months much concern has been expressed because of the implications of this continuing shift of population from rural to urban communities.

The major problem area in Canadian society today is in our large complex urban communities—the booming, buzzing confusion of urban life. In this regard the government has not done anything to discourage the trend. Indeed, it has gone along with the trend, particularly with reference to the closing of post offices, our fundamental means of communication. Over the past two years in particular we have seen the ruthless, wholesale closure of rural post offices. In many instances this has meant the failure of community stores in small towns. When the country store goes, that is the end of that rural community as such. Since the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Coté) who is responsible for the Post Office has assumed this responsibility, there has been a change of government policy in this regard. He has declared there will no further elimination of rural post offices until the whole matter can be reviewed. I suggest that the same thesis applies with respect to further rationalization of country elevators.

Anyone who has experience of the Prairies knows that the dominant characteristic of rural communities on the Prairies is the two or three grain elevators that stand starkly on the horizon. They are fundamental to the economic life of rural areas of the Prairies. They are also a very integral part of the whole problem of the decline of rural communities, with the consequent upsurge of urbanization and all the social and economic problems that arise therefrom. There is no need to belabour the point further. These considerations will have to be borne in mind when the legislative proposals are reviewed in committee.

Already some 20 amendments have been accepted by the government. These amendments could not have been made, of course, had the official opposition not stuck to its guns and delayed the passage of this legislation. A further 40 amendments or so not yet taken into consideration in connection with the new bill before the House have already come forward and, no doubt, as we hear from spokesmen from various sectors of the grain industry others will be set down for consideration. Eventually, we hope, after 40 years we shall come up with a new or completely rewritten Canada Grain Act which will be adequate to deal with the contemporary problems of the grain industry.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak in this debate may I say I am well aware that this is the second time around for a bill which is essentially similar to Bill C-196, on which a great deal of effort was spent in order to bring about changes to the Canada Grain Act. It now appears that a great many valuable improvements are to be expected.

It is 40 years since the Canada Grain Act was substantially amended. In my opinion, the bringing forward of that measure was a task which had to be undertaken and a great deal of effort was required to arrive at reasonable legislation. Ostensibly, the enactment of Bill C-175 is considered urgent as a means of bringing protein grading to Canadian wheat. It has been said we are losing sales because protein grading in specific percentages is required by some importing nations in order to satisfy new milling and baking practices. No doubt this position is accepted by all, but it is interesting to note that we have succeeded in increasing our sales of grain this year to a number of overseas countries—for the most part, perhaps, to the less developed countries where the subject of protein grading is not of such importance and where price is a more dominant factor.

I have in mind markets such as Red China, to which the sale of some 90 million bushels amounted to slightly more than exports in the previous highest year, but at a price considerably below the minimum set under the International Grains Arrangement. The farmers' position is further worsened by the rise in value of the Canadian dollar, representing a price reduction of 6 or 7 cents. Then there are the sales made on extended credit, some of which perhaps fall in the category of give-aways and were possible only in the light of long-term credit.

Our main success in selling wheat in the absence of protein grading seems to have resulted from more aggressive selling by the Canadian Wheat Board in circumstances which called for more wheat to be imported into countries where a short crop had set the stage for this to happen. The government made much of the argument that the need for protein grading justified their insistence last session that the bill should be passed without much scrutiny. If protein grading had been so important at that time, amendments to the act would have received speedy passage in the House. Even so, we heard responsible people testify before the Standing Committee on Agriculture that protein segregation could be carried out under the existing system. They gave evidence that our customers could have been assured of protein grading although it would have been impossible, as I understand it, for this effort to have been reflected in the amounts paid to individual farmers.

It is to be hoped the introduction of protein grading will, in fact, as has been suggested, increase the acceptance of Canadian wheat in areas where such grading is desired. There is, unfortunately, one cloud on the horizon which threatens our sales of high quality protein wheat, especially to the United Kingdom. The other day, in an imaginative and bold budget, the Conservative government under Mr. Heath instituted a cut in both income and corporation taxes, while increasing social charges directly to citizens. The budget also included a plan to increase tariffs on food imported into the United Kingdom, while reducing subsidies paid to British agriculture. This is in preparation of the suggested entry of the United Kingdom into the European Common Market. This reverses the position traditionally taken by the British government since 1846, when with the repeal of the corn laws Great Britain embarked upon a policy of importing cheap food and providing subsidies for agriculture.

The United Kingdom has been one of our best and most consistent markets since the earliest days of the grain industry in this country. Although exports fell somewhat last year, exports to Britain amounted to 54 million bushels, mainly of the higher-priced grades, bringing a better price in dollars. So the introduction of protein grading should be welcomed as a means of securing markets in the United Kingdom and other countries of the European Common Market.

I turn now to the subject of barley, where a peculiar situation has arisen. A year ago, barley sales were almost non-existent. In September 1969, the Wheat Board lowered the price of barley from approximately $1 to 78 cents a bushel. This resulted in some sales and we began to sell barley on the world market. Subsequently, the Wheat Board initiated an aggressive selling program which produced sales in the present crop year amounting to at least 125 million bushels, though at prices considerably lower than those the market can command at this time. In other words, the board sold at cash prices and not in futures. This was perhaps unfortunate, especially since some of the sales were in respect of barley which has still to be sown.

Another special situation has arisen with regard to rapeseed, called by some the Cinderella of the grain trade. Transportation and movement of rapeseed to the ports has not been effectively managed and indeed there has been little free rapeseed in west coast ports—not enough, in fact, to take care of the demand which this grain is generating.

The bill touches a very sensitive area to which producers, the government and the grain trade will have to give serious consideration. Modernization of handling and transportation are the inevitable results of changes in technology. This is brought into sharp focus by the fact that the price of grain per bushel on world markets has hardly risen in 20 years; indeed, it has fallen in recent years. The grain farmer has been able to survive only by increasing his productivity, with an almost stationary or declining dollar value per bushel.

The costs of handling and transportation have not stood still. During the long years of oversupply, with large wheat storage costs being paid out of the public treasury and with large payments out of the farmers' pool, the grain handling companies have tended to obscure the actual cost of handling and the necessity of a more rational approach to the problems of handling and transporting grain. The original bill, C-196, seemed to give the government a blank cheque and complete power to move in on the grain handling industry, 60 per cent of which is owned by farmers, wheat pools and the United Grain Growers, in order to carry out their so-called rationalization at will. Perhaps the government made the original bill severe without intending to do so, but it certainly seems that this would have been its effect.

The committee heard many objections from farm organizations and from the grain trade at large to the effect that this power was much too sweeping. I think the amended bill probably will remove many of the objections. Another note of anxiety is that the grain trade and the private grain companies could well diminish their activities in the grain handling field and move into the apparently more lucrative agribusiness. This is the business of selling many different farm items to their customers. This perhaps stands to reason, because when handling charges are so rigidly set by the government it leaves little room for manoeuvre or expansion. With this in mind it seems likely that the grain handling business will have to be carried out by farm grain organizations.

It is no secret that in the minds of those who appeared on behalf of the Manitoba and Saskatchewan wheat pools before the parliamentary Committee on Taxation, in Regina, this was a real worry. They need the income and capital to carry out rationalization because they feel that as farm organizations they are much more able to do so than the government. This is a program we will have to consider for the future.

What is troubling many farmers in western Canada is the constant report that the system may be rationalized so there will be only a few terminals, perhaps 30 or 40 throughout western Canada. This will mean farmers hauling grain for 100 miles or more. This might be considered to be in the interests of efficiency. There is considerable fear that the government might, through its backroom boys, bring forward this rationalization system. This is not necessarily the answer. When a farmer has to haul his grain too far, it is a very expensive proposition. Even though the terminals may be very efficient in themselves, this extra cost to the farmer is substantial.

I was glad to see that an amendment to Bill C-196, to the effect that the producer would have the right to load grain over the platform, was accepted. This is a very important and basic right that the individual producer should have. In the matter of rationalization of the movement of grain, we must consider the railways. There is some talk about unit trains, and so on. This may be envisaged for the future, but we must remember that the facilities on the west coast, where much of our grain is handled, are inadequate to handle the volume that will probably be involved in the future. There does not seem to be any doubt about this. Government authorities will have to increase the amount of grain storage and the grain handling facilities on the west coast if the industry is to function at anything like the level of efficiency necessary.

The minister, in his explanation to the House on clauses 108 and 109, discussed the 1 per cent levy for the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. Needless to say, this is an interesting item. This 1 per cent levy has been in existence for many years and it seems to have drawn a mixed reception from many farmers. In my experience, many of them feel this levy may have outlived its usefulness and little practical use is made of it.

It is my impression that the PFAA has provided a very useful means of providing disaster relief to those farmers who usually do not carry crop insurance. I have found that many farmers have decided that crop insurance is too expensive, unsuited or unfitted to their particular circumstances. There are still many farmers who to some extent need to be treated as social cases when circumstances make it impossible for them to become operators of good, economic units in a so-called economic sense. It is important that at their age they continue to do what they have been doing all their working lives.

The Prairie Farm Assistance Act has provided a measure of relief to the low-income farmer who for various reasons does not wish to take out crop insurance. Unfortunately, the PFAA has not been upgraded since its inception in 1939 when it was designed for the era of the horse and buggy. It could stand some upgrading in order to become a more useful tool to help farmers who are in real distress. This measure has rarely cost the federal government more than has been collected through the 1 per cent levy. On only two occasions during 30 years were substantial payments made out of the federal treasury. I believe that as a means of government subsidy in times of severe crop failure, this is one of the most efficient ways of providing assistance in areas where it does the most good.

Regarding the announcement of the minister in charge of the Wheat Board, with his so-called proposals for a production and grain receipts policy for the western grain industry, the suggestion is that a 3 per cent levy be charged against the grain sales of producers which, on top of the 1 per cent for the PFAA, makes quite a formidable charge. When it is considered that payments to the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act amount to $50 million to $70 million per year, and that this will be transferred out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund as a charge to the farmers' pool, it can well be seen that a levy of 4 per cent to grain trade producers on delivery of grain to the elevator will be severe. In the coming months this matter will receive a great deal of considerations and discussion. I do not think the 1 per cent charge in respect of the PFAA should be discontinued unless there is an adjustment in other levies.

Having been a member of the Committee on Agriculture during a part of the discussion last year on Bill C-196, I am glad that 26 amendments were incorporated into the new bill. I think this will go a long way in meeting the objections of the producers and the grain trade both privately-owned and farmer-owned. There are further amendments that can be made to improve this bill. I hope the bill will be referred to the agricultural committee for the purpose of improving it.

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to unnecessarily prolong this debate, but I feel I should place my remarks on the record concerning the desirability of getting the revised Canada Grain Act into operation at an early date. While it is true that wheat sales will be somewhat higher in this crop year than they were last year, they may still be far short of the total exported in the peak years from 1963-64 to 1966-67, inclusive, when our wheat and wheat flour exports from Canada averaged 522 million bushels per year. I would point out in passing that those were all years under a federal Liberal government.

Mr. Dinsdale: And so are the present years.

Mr. Douglas (Assiniboia): The current level of exports is still far below the productive capacity of our Prairie farmers. In 1966-67 we produce 827 million bushels of wheat in Canada. Even with the improved outlook for wheat sales we are experiencing, farmers are being asked to hold wheat acreage down to 20 million acres in 1971, which could mean a production of about 500 million bushels.

The improved sales which have taken place have been mainly to countries that do not yet require a guaranteed protein level in the wheat they buy. However, an increasing number of major wheat importing countries demand a guaranteed protein level in the wheat they purchase. We are at a disadvantage in these markets. Most of the farmers in the Prairies are heartily in favour of moving quickly to protein grading. Even though they may not be sure the wheat they produce individually is high in protein, they know that if we can maintain and expand our wheat exports to these sophisticated and growing markets, our total wheat exports will increase and there will be more opportunities for the sale of their grain whether or not it be lower in protein, or barley, oats or rapeseed.

To suggest, as the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) did a short while ago, that there was no longer urgency in the matter of protein grading because the minister in charge of the Wheat Board has done such a good job in promoting grain sales, is unacceptable to the western farmers, to say the least. We cannot be complacent. We must cultivate all our markets to the maximum. There is no doubt that we must put ourselves in a position as soon as possible to supply wheat to meet the specifications of the growing number of countries which require high quality wheat. After all, this is our best and most reliable market.

Members of the Conservative party are doing their best to convey the false impression that somehow this bil is designed to radically reduce the number of grain elevators on the Prairies. The Board of Grain Commissioners has always had the power to license or not to license grain elevators. If the government had made up its mind about this matter, drastic steps could have been taken before now. The fact is that there is a study going on at the present time to determine what savings, if any, could be achieved through various types of grain handling and transportation systems.

When this study is completed, the information will be made public and the farmers and other people concerned will indicate whether they prefer to retain the present system or move more quickly toward another, and the government no doubt would be guided by their wishes. In the meantime, the grain handling system has not remained static. The grain companies have been doing a great-deal of reorganization on their own. Dozens of elevators are being closed out each year and, through a process of exchanges between companies, regrouping is taking place making better utilization of our elevators and elevator operators. I expect that this sort of thing will continue and there will be no sudden and dramatic speeding up of this process. The point I want to make is that the movement toward a rationalization of our grain handling system is completely independent of this revision of the Canada Grain Act; it proceeded under the old act and could continue under it.

Most people will agree that the Canada Grain Act is due for a general revision. There has not been one for 40 years. There is no great change in the basic concepts of Bill C-175 from those enshrined in the old Canada Grain Act. One important thing that is new in Bill C-175, in addition to protein grading, is the provision which gives the Governor in Council power to regulate the supply and allocation of boxcars, which it does not now have. It seems to me this provision could be every bit as important and urgent at this time as protein grading.

If it is in order, Mr. Speaker, I should like to read three subclauses of clause 97 which deal with this matter. They are as follows:

> The Governor in Council may by order, (a) where he considers it necessary in the public interest to do so, require a railway company to supply to and to place at any point at which the railway company supplies a service, railway cars for the carriage of grain;
> (b) notwithstanding anything in this act or the Canadian Wheat Board Act, authorize and direct any minister of the Crown or any agency of the government of Canada to exercise the powers in respect of the allocation of available railway cars contained in any provision of this act, other than paragraph (a) of this section, or of the Canadian Wheat Board Act;
> (c) direct that any allocation of railway cars be guided by the principle that the producer should have the right to select the elevator of his choice or to load directly—

All these are very important powers. Two of them are new and with the very heavy movement of grain anticipated in the next year or two I think these powers could be very useful. I suggest there are many reasons besides those I have enumerated for getting on with this bill and having it made part of the law as soon as possible. I offer my greatest co-operation to those who would assist in bringing this matter to a conclusion at the earliest possible date.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take very few minutes to comment not only on this bill but on what has been said by a few hon. members. First I wish to say that one aspect of the bill which the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) just mentioned, concerning the allocation of boxcars at the elevator of the farmer's choice, is something that members of this party and members of the official opposition were espousing on the Prairie provinces in the days prior to, and since, the Bracken commission. At long last a Liberal speaker has stood upon and advocated support for this provision. I have heard little mention of this matter from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) or from any other government member; therefore, I was glad to hear the hon. member for Assiniboia speak on it. I hope the hon. member for Assiniboia, the Minister of Agriculture and other government members realize that if they in fact implement fully and completely this measure in the bill, the private grain elevators in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta will all be out of business.

If the government is prepared to go along with that proposal, it will have the full support of the New Democratic Party. It it is not prepared to go along with it, it should quit kidding the troops and the farmers, because there is no question that if boxcars are really allocated to the elevator of the farmer's choice, the United Grain Growers, the National Grain Company, the Pioneer Grain Company, Mr. Heffelfinger and all those who sit on the Canada Grains Council will be out of business. The government had better quit kidding the farmers and this Parliament.

Allocate boxcars to the elevator of the farmer's choices! I dare the hon. member for Assiniboia and the Minister of Agriculture to implement what this bill provides. Their colleague from Winnipeg, the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Richardson), will be very unhappy when the subsidiary companies of James Richardson and Sons are out of business in the country elevators. They had better quit kidding, because every indication from the time of the Bracken commission until now is that if you deliver boxcars to the elevator of the farmer's choice, a bunch of your friends will go broke. I dare you to implement this provision. I hope you do. I am going to vote for this bill to see whether or not you do it. It will be interesting to find out.

It will be interesting to see what kind of excuses these hon. gentlemen give their friends in the private grain trade when they allocate boxcars to the elevator of the farmer's choice. It will be interesting to see what excuses the hon. member for Assiniboia will give in the sundry communities with which he and I are acquainted, when some of his friends in the elevator companies that are sitting there go belly up. I am waiting to see this, and I have to vote for this bill for that if for no other reason.

There is another reason why I have to vote for this bill. The Liberals are on the spot after 30 cotton-picking years of waiting. The Tories had six years. They had their chance and they blew it. Now they run around the Prairies saying they are friends of the farmers. They talked about elevators of the farmer's choice and they talked about parity prices: then they blew it. Now the Liberals have put it in writing in a bill.

I am dying to see what will happen with this clause on page 69 of the bill regarding the direction of the allocation of boxcars and the ordering of the railways. I am dying to find this out now that the Liberals have put it in writing. They are now putting in writing what they have been mouthing for all these years. When they do it, they and the Tories will lose the grain business and their grain business friends. It seems to me that if the government implements this bill as and when they say they will, the member of the cabinet from Winnipeg, who is part and parcel of the Winnipeg grain exchange and the private grain business, will have no choice but to resign.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Benjamin: Either that, or these people are still kidding the farmers like the Tories did. All of them are the same breed of cat.

Some hon. Members: Oh, no!

Mr. Benjamin: Yes, they are all in the same bag.

An hon. Member: The same old gang.

Mr. Benjamin: It's damn funny, Mr. Speaker. I might have been elected for a lot of crazy reasons, and perhaps the voters in my riding were "had" for a while; but there is one reason why they were not crazy—and I may have been elected by accident or by default—and that is that they were bloody tired of being taken in by these flannelmouthed people from places like Assiniboia, Crowfoot, Medicine Hat and Red Deer who only talk to the farmers. Will they bring in amendments to the Canada Grain Act and changes to the farm marketing boards for people who have never believed in farm marketing boards?

While the Liberals and the Tories have been in office we have watched 300,000 farms being lost to Canada. While these people talked about legislation when they were in office we lost another 100,000 farms.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, since I have been included in the noble group which the hon. member just named, could he tell the House whether he is referring to the former or to the present member for Assiniboia?

Mr. Benjamin: I am referring to both. I am also referring to Red Deer, to Ethiopia or to any other place when it comes to the number of people that rural Canada has lost, to the family farms and to compounding the felonies that they have perpetrated on urban Canada because of the people we have driven from the land. These people who have betrayed rural Canada now sit as government members. The member who used to sit on SARM, and who has been active in the wheat pool movement, now betrays family farms. Now that it is in writing I want to see the production, and that is why I will vote for the bill.

We have lost over half of the family farms in Canada since 1945. The proposals made by these experts, whether it be the Minister of Agriculture or the minister in charge of the Wheat Board, are nothing more than further contributions to the elimination of rural Canada and the elimination of communities such as the one from which the hon. member for Assiniboia comes and about which he talks out of both sides of his mouth. He talks one way and votes another. We are fed up with it. I tell hon. members that I am going to spend a great deal of time and cross many miles asking the people in his riding where the hon. member for Assiniboia was when their communities were dying, their post offices were being closed, their railway stations were being closed, and now that their elevators will be closed.

Mr. Speaker, we have had enough of this damn double-talk on farm bills from these dinosaurs and these old parties who talked about family farms out of one side of their mouth and who said and did everything they could to promote the Winnipeg grain exchange and to defeat and destroy public compulsory marketing of farm products. They do everything they can to give aid and comfort to the railways which should be a public service, and they do everything they can to give aid and comfort to these outfits that have robbed the people of Canada in general and the farmers in particular.

The hon. member for Assiniboia and the hon. member for Medicine Hat, as well as the dinosaurs in the Tory opposition, will have to answer. I would like you fellows to show up this weekend in Lisgar. You can pick the towns and I will go with you. You name the rules, and you name the place of meeting and invite all your friends to it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I remind the hon. member that although his remarks are interesting, he should confine himself to the subject under discussion, namely, Bill C-175.

Mr. Benjamin: I appreciate your reminder, Mr. Speaker. I would point out that the Canada Grain Act has to do with boxcars, with selling grain, with grades of grain and with the amount of money that farmers get. Since the leading speaker for the official opposition spent most of the time dealing with proposals of the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt (Mr. Lang) this afternoon, it seems to me that the debate is fairly wide open. In spite of that, I shall adhere to your admonition.

I say to hon. members of the official opposition, "If you really mean what you say, you will support this bill on second reading. If you really mean that farmers should have the right to deliver their grain to the elevators of their choice, you will make sure that that provision remains in the bill when it becomes law. You will also make sure that the Minister of Agriculture enforces this law, because when he does it will mean that the National Grain Company, the Pioneer Grain Company and the Federal Grain Company will be out of business"—and I suspect he will not hold still for that. The hon. member for Medicine Hat will not hold still for that, because if he does the Canada Grain Council will be out of the window. All his friends who sit on the Canada Grain Council, these experts who would not know a quarter section from their backsides, will quit. These are the people he needed to reinforce him in the elimination of rural Canada, so he has to have the Canada Grain Council. As a result, we cannot do anything but help implement this law to make sure that the farmers get boxcars to the elevators of their choice.

The hon. member for Medicine Hat, the hon. member for Assiniboia, the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson), the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) and the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) cannot have it both ways: they cannot be half pregnant, Mr. Speaker, because there is no such thing. I hope that all hon. members in the opposition will vote for this bill on second reading. Then we will do everything we can to ensure that the hon. member for Medicine Hat, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt and the hon. member for Assiniboia answer our questions—and it will be fun finding out what their answers are. The hon. member for Assiniboia, while he might be doing a great job of reading everything he has said in this House since he came here, will have to answer our questions. I hope every member now will vote for second reading, and let us call these dinosaurs' bluff.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I came into the House in a quiet and peaceful mood prepared to let bygones be bygones and have this legislation passed, but I was inspired by the very fiery speech just made by the hon. member who sits to my left—to my far left, you might say.

An hon. Member: Right.

Mr. Baldwin: An hon. member says I am right, that he is to my left. He is to my left, but I am not too far to his right. Mr. Speaker, before we leave the bill to the tender mercies of the minister who is going to deal with it in its final stages, I want to say that we are in favour of many of the proposals made in the bill.

I see the minister taking notes. No matter what notes he takes, he will not be able to contradict the truthfulness of my statement because this is on the record. We in the official opposition suggested last session to the government that what it should do, because of the serious situation that then prevailed with regard to the sale of certain grains, was to take the old legislation and provide, by a very simple amendment, for protein grading. That matter could have been dealt with and disposed of, so far as this party was concerned, in one half hour. One speaker was all we needed, and we would have consented to an arrangement of that kind. The government would have had what it asked for, and what I think the country has wanted for a long time, that is, a change in the regulations with respect to this type of grading. But the government did not want that. Members of the government wanted everything; they were not prepared to compromise. As a result, we have had to wait, unfortunately, for this period of time for the change to be brought about. The minister may say what he wants to when I have sat down, but the record will bear out that I am correct.

When my hon. friend to my left speaks as he has, I point out that one of the things we object to in this bill is the extent to which it places in the hands of the government a great extension of powers. We are afraid of the government, Mr. Speaker. We are afraid of its abuses of the past and those it will be guilty of in the future in respect of powers which this Parliament grants to it. It is all very well for my good friends in the NDP to accept this situation. They are a party which predicates their position on the increasing of bureaucracy. The only way a Socialist party can survive is by having the bureaucracy extended, with powers granted to operate by Order in Council and short-circuit the powers of this House. We do not believe in this. We believe the people of Canada elected us to come here to deliberate and to make the decisions, and not to pass this power over to any government, particulary not to this government.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Baldwin: Anybody who has seen the government operating in the last three weeks will see that this is not the kind of government that should be vested with the powers that it is asking for now.

Mr. Mahoney: Explain.

Mr. Baldwin: I do not need to explain; it is very plain, as it will be plain to the people of Canada. This is a power-hungry government which craves authority to deal with issues in its own way, secretively, without coming to the House of Commons. I am terribly ashamed of my friends on my left who apparently bought this approach to the politics of today. We say this is the place where decisions are to be made. If there is authority to be given, it is to be given by this House and not by the members of the bureaucracy opposite. That is why we have held this bill up, so that it could be debated effectively, so that the people of Canada will know what it is that the government is asking.

We are not going to object to the bill going through tonight. We will have a chance to examine it in committee. We will have a chance to offer amendments. We offered a number of amendments before; we may have some more to offer. The 40 amendments we have had before the House may well be increased. Or it may well be that as a result of discussion between ourselves and the government we will be able to combine them and come back to the House at the stage at which the bill was before, that is, with a number of amendments which will receive the attention of the House and which might restrict the kind of debate which there ought to be.

However, we are not prepared to make such an offer without some objection, without our taking the position that this is a government which we must treat with a great deal of caution when it seeks the kind of powers it is seeking now. We are afraid of it. The people of Canada will learn to be afraid of it, having in mind what it has done and what it intends to do. It is for that reason we have insisted that this debate be held up to the stage where we can make known our points of view. We serve warning right now that when the bill comes back to the House for amendment we will see that every effort is made so that the government will be stripped of the powers it does not really need, and that authority will not be left with the minister but with the House of Commons.

If my hon. friends to my left want to go along with the government, that is fine. I would just call their attention to a section of the Criminal Code which provides a penalty for seduction under the promise of marriage. The kind of seduction the government is going to practise on the NDP is something they should bear in mind before this bill comes back to the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I should advise hon. members that if the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) speaks now, he will close the debate.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am greatly tempted to comment on the irrelevant remarks of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) respecting the Canada Grain Act, but I think that is hardly necessary because the great flaw in his argument is that he could not persuade the people of Canada that there was any validity to it in spite of the attempts he made.

Mr. Baldwin: Wait until the by-elections.

Mr. Olson: I certainly hope he is not advocating that the government, which was elected by the people, should not govern the country, because if he is I suggest he needs a lecture on democratic processes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Olson: The rest of his comments and remarks I found very interesting, if indeed not entertaining. We will certainly give them consideration in the committee and when the bill returns to the House. A number of points were raised by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) and the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. Thomson) that I intended to deal with, but it seems to me that the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) dealt so well with their arguments that it is unnecessary for me to do so now. For example, a number of assertions were made that in my view had no validity to debate on this bill, such as with reference to the closing of elevators, starving communities of their economic well-being and that sort of thing. They are simply not valid when debating this bill and, as I pointed out, the hon. member for Assiniboia dealt very well with them.

The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) also made some very interesting remarks, but I believe the only thing I can agree with in his entire discourse was the suggestion that everybody in this House should support the bill. Other than that I find no agreement with any point that he raised. There was one serious point, in spite of the rather entertaining way in which he delivered it, respecting farmers delivering grain to the elevator of their choice. If this whole argument were based on the fact that farmers will choose not to deliver grain to all the companies he named, he is not in tune with the fact because farmers have had that option open to them for many years and they make the choice. Boxcars will be allocated to those elevators where farmers have indicated they wish to haul their grain, and that indication is endorsed by the fact that they have done it.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I wish to express my appreciation to hon. members of the House for the way they have handled this bill today. I thank them for the very genuine expressions of view that it is desirable that the passage of this bill be expedited, not only for protein grading but for a number of other provisions that modernize the whole system of handling grains in Canada. I hope that this same spirit will be in evidence when we get to the committee.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask the House for consent to reinstate the evidence taken in the Committee on Agriculture in the last session of this House when Bill C-196 was under consideration. There have been informal discussions through the usual channels, and I believe there is general agreement among all parties to reinstate this evidence, with the same reservation that was expressed by the hon. member for Peace River respecting Bill C-176, that is, that in reinstating the evidence we do not in any way prejudice the right of the committee to call witnesses and to take whatever additional evidence they feel is necessary.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The minister has indicated that there is consent to reinstate the evidence heard by the committee during the last session, with the reservation the minister has mentioned. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

CONSUMER PACKAGING AND LABELLING ACT

PROVISIONS RESPECTING PROHIBITIONS, LABELS, STANDARDIZATION, INSPECTION, ETC.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs) moved that Bill C-180, respecting the packaging, labelling, sale, importation and advertising of prepackaged and certain other products, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is with great personal pleasure and some personal pride that I rise to move the second reading of Bill C-180, the consumer packaging and labelling act. In my view this is one of the most important pieces of consumer protection legislation that this new department has introduced to Parliament. In a short time, Mr. Speaker, we have introduced some valuable and important legislation to this Parliament for the protection of the consumer, but so far I think this is undoubtedly the most important.

Earlier in the spring this Parliament passed an amendment to the Bills of Exchange Act, which was the first time an amendment had been made in this important field of consumer credit in some years. I refer to the amendment which became effective on November 1. The main feature of this was that finance companies which discount the promissory notes or bills common in consumer finance or time-payment transactions can no longer claim their right to collect from the purchasers under these time-payment contracts in absolute terms, but their claim against the consumer-purchaser is subject to all the rights and equities for a counterclaim which the purchaser might have against the original vendor. This important amendment in the field of consumer legislation, which received the wide acclaim of this House, came into effect only a few days ago.

Shortly before passage of that legislation this Parliament approved the Hazardous Products Act which I placed before the House. In my view this is the strongest piece of consumer product safety legislation in the world. As a Canadian I was very proud that with my officials this spring I was asked to go to Vienna to explain the operation of the Hazardous Products Act to the International Organization of Consumers Unions.

The National Commission on Products Safety in the United States, a presidential commission which only wound up its work a few months ago, called upon my officials to go to Chicago to testify in front of that commission as to the operation of the Hazardous Products Act. As a result of this, I understand and hope that the American authorities will adopt the methods we are now using in Canada under this act to label hazardous and dangerous household chemicals.

As hon. members know, the Hazardous Products Act placed an immediate ban on the importation, advertising or selling of a number of highly dangerous consumer products and made provision for prescribing the circumstances and conditions under which a number of other products, hazardous if incorrectly used, could be sold, advertised or imported into Canada. Regulations issued under this act have established a nationwide and consistent system of cautionary labelling for a wide range of household products in everyday use. It is a new system which I think other nations are now becoming interested in, and some of them are likely to adopt consumer products safety legislation.

Thousands of individual household products will be covered by these regulations. In the department we are carrying out active research under the Hazardous Products Act which, over the years, will bring more categories of products under the control of this legislation. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I hope to be able to announce by Thursday or Friday some more regulations that we have passed under this legislation to protect the consumer against unsafe products.

In a somewhat different field, early in 1970 this Parliament passed the Textile Labelling Act. Under its authority there will be mandatory labelling of the content of fibres used in clothing and in household textiles, and this will be combined with the fabric care program which I announced early in September. The two programs of textile labelling and care labelling for textiles will go a long way toward solving problems of consumer bewilderment caused by the multiplicity of textiles available in the modern market.

This evening I take pleasure in bringing in another piece of consumer protection legislation along the same lines but in a different field, Bill C-180, the consumer packaging and labelling bill which I suggest should be read with the bill presently before the Senate, Bill S-5, the weights and measures bill which provides for a complete revision of that act. Bill C-180 is designed to afford greater protection to consumers by way of information on the products they buy. It is also designed to make legislation more relative and meaningful in terms of current protection in the world in which the consumer now acts and should remove sources of consumer confusion and discontent, thereby making consumer actions in the marketplace less difficult.

If we can go back in history, we see that people have been concerned for a long time about the weight of things and the measure of things. Consumers have wanted correct information about the products they have bought. I know, Mr. Speaker, that hon. members of this House are all biblical scholars. I would quote, for example, from the book of Deuteronomy, chapter 25, verse 15:

• (9:40 p.m.)

But thou shalt have a perfect and just weight, a perfect and just measure shalt thou have: that thy days may be lengthened in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee.

Mr. McGrath: Amen.

Mr. Basford: I also quote from the book of Proverbs, chapter 20, verse 23:

Divers weights are an abomination unto the Lord: and a false balance is not good.

Mr. McGrath: Hallelujah.

Mr. Bell: Is that from the old testament?

Mr. Dinsdale: That is the King James version.

Mr. Basford: We see, in more recent days than biblical times, references to the subject. For example, I quote article 35 of Magna Carta:

Mr. Dinsdale: We are really for it now.

Mr. Basford: It says:

There shall be standard measures of wine, ale and corn ... throughout the kingdom.

Mr. McGrath: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dinsdale: We are getting lots of corn.

Mr. Bell: Explain.

Mr. Basford: It goes on to say:

There shall also be a standard width of dyed cloth, russett, and haberject, namely two ells within the selvedges. Weights are to be standardized similarly.

I have quoted these extracts, Mr. Speaker, to show that throughout all history people, whether they were biblical consumers or consumers in the reign of King John, have been anxious and concerned about weights, measures, proper labelling and proper information about products available to the consumer. This evening I am putting before the House a modern consumers' Magna Carta by which consumers will be entitled, once this bill is passed, to full, accurate and complete information about the consumer products they buy.

An hon. Member: But you can't smell a package.

Mr. Basford: As hon. members know, there has been in recent years a rapid change in packaging and merchandising methods used in modern business. There has also been an equally rapid increase in the number of prepackaged items appearing on the market. The trend has been to the supermarket type of operation, not only in the food field but in many of the retailing fields. While this bill refers to many things other than food, it is illuminating, I think, for us to know that in a modern supermarket there are approximately 7,000 different prepackaged items. Estimates says that in four years there will be between 15,000 and 20,000 different items in this category.

One only has to go into a modern department store to realize what a huge array of consumer products the consumer is faced with. One result of this development has been that the package has replaced, to a great extent, the live salesman. The consumer must now rely on the package to give him the basic product information he once received from the merchant. In days gone past we knew the corner grocer or butcher; we went down to him and discussed the products that we wanted to buy. That is not the case now. Modern packaging has revolutionized retailing methods and has contributed significantly to the cleanliness, appearance and convenience of many consumer goods.

An hon. Member: Without profit to the consumer.

Mr. Basford: Undoubtedly there have been improvements and consumers have derived some advantages from this development. Nevertheless, despite those obvious advantages there has been a considerable measure of consumer discontent about packaging practices. For one thing, packaging often conceals some essential qualities of the goods and makes consumers dependent upon labels for information about what they are buying. You cannot taste boxes. You cannot see, taste, feel and smell the product when it is sold in tins, cardboard boxes, wrapping-paper or plastic. Actually there may not be anyone in the store who can tell you the qualities of the product.

The situation is not the same for all classes of products. For some, particularly for pre-packaged food and drugs, the labelling requirements are fairly comprehensive under existing, modern food and drug laws in this country. Although these laws are good, there is a variation in requirements as between one class and another and I suggest that is a source of concern both to producers and consumers. For others, labelling requirements are minimal or even non-existent. The result is that the consumer is often misguided and confused, and perhaps even deceived, by a vast array of poorly labelled items which makes a rational purchasing decision virtually an impossibility. There is therefore, in my view, a serious need to fill the large legislative vacuum which now exists in many areas and to bring some uniformity and coherence into those areas where there is now a bewildering variety of labelling requirements.

This may be regarded as the prime objective of this bill. It is designed as a comprehensive labelling and packaging bill of general application and is to apply to all consumer products. As the regulations passed under its authority are brought progressively into effect, it will go a long way toward facilitating choice among consumer products by providing better information and helping to reduce confusion in the marketplace. Consumers on the whole, and I am referring to modern consumers, are demanding the right to know what they are buying. They want full, factual and complete information about the products they are buying. They are given that right in matters of advertising. We have the right to truth in advertising, the right to truth in packaging, to truth in labelling, and so on. All these rights are aimed at giving consumers a chance to make a rational and intelligent purchase.

The inability, Mr. Speaker, to make a rational buying decision in regard to consumer commodities is not a reflection on the consumer. We are all fairly familiar with the problems we encounter upon going into a modern supermarket. If you want to choose between competing products and make the best buy, you almost need a degree in mathematics or calculus to figure out the best buy. I submit that this inability does not reflect on the consumer. It reflects, in my view, rather on the packaging and pricing patterns in the marketplace, which often have very little rationale. The consumer must act on the assumption that packaging and pricing are rational. If consumers did not act on this assumption, if all consumers insisted on weighing packages, examining contents and challenging the validity of prices in the many sizes of packages, the whole system of mass distribution would break down.

If it is to function efficiently, modern marketing requires that the buyer must be able to trust the package to give relevant, sufficient and accurate information. This, at present, he cannot do. Modern marketing, with the packages acting as salesmen, has created problems not only for the consumer but for the ethical business firm. It has fostered, as an unfortunate side effect, a form of unfair competition which can be seriously prejudicial to business rivals who do not engage in dubious practices.

Mr. Benjamin: When did the minister learn that?

Mr. Basford: Legitimate business can act in its own interest and in the interest of the consumer only if competitive conditions permit.

Mr. Benjamin: When did the minister find this out?

Mr. Basford: This requires laws and regulations to establish a framework of competition prohibiting deceptive and confusing practices and protecting the legitimate competitor from the unfair tactics of less scrupulous rivals.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bell: Terrific.

Mr. Basford: I am glad that the whip of the official opposition thinks so highly of the bill. Perhaps that means it will obtain easy passage through the House.

Mr. Bell: I was talking about the speech.

Mr. Crouse: Let us have some more quotations from the scriptures.

Mr. Basford: I am sure that the critics of Parliament will be delighted to know how welcome biblical quotations are in the House of Commons of Canada. Mr. Speaker, I return to the bill before the House. On the basic premise that the consumer has the right to full, accurate and relevant information, the bill before this House seeks to achieve the following objectives. The legislation will increase the efficiency of the average family as a spending unit. They will be able to spend their consumer dollars better and, as a result, live better. It will promote effective price competition by minimizing the capacity of packaging to confuse or deceive the buyer, and permit buyers to purchase more intelligently and more rationally. It will assure a quality of competitive opportunity for all producers and distributors. Small businesses are especially vulnerable to irrationality in the marketplace. Because of its limited resources, the small business has a vital need for competitive standards that permit the focusing of attention on price and quality.

When this bill is passed, the regulations will enhance the integrity of markets in order that they may accurately direct the productive activities of the economy by making it more likely that profits will be channelled to the more efficient producer rather than the inefficient. One of the effects will be to promote sound and effective competition by eliminating unfair or deceptive packaging in commerce and thereby upgrading the economic value of the fair packaging and labelling practices followed by the majority of our businessmen.

It seems that quite apart from this economic rationale for full, accurate and relevant information, the consumer is entitled to the truth about a product for truth's sake. Truth surely is a virtue in itself, and should therefore be sufficient reason for the requirements concerning packaging and labelling which are contained in this bill. We are sometimes told by marketing men that the consumer should and does "vote for the product with his dollars". The inference is that this act of consumer free choice is basically all that is required in the marketplace. I contend, Mr. Speaker, that the voting process—and that is what goes on in a marketplace—is more effective to the extent that full and accurate information is available to the voter, the consumer, and to the extent that he has not been misled. That destroys the operation of a marketplace. Some people who appear before the consumer affairs committee say we do not need labelling legislation because the consumer goes into the market every day and votes for his product. This bill assures us that the voting process is completely unfettered and that the voting is on the basis of complete information.

In adopting these objectives and in drafting this bill, as I indicated earlier, I paid close attention to the representations made by concerned individuals and by organized consumer groups such as the Consumers' Association of Canada. I am grateful to them for their representations over the years in the field of packaging and labelling. I have also been influenced and guided by the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Consumer Credit on which Senator Croll and I served as co-chairmen and by the more recent report of the Batten commission on the cost of living and inflation in the three Prairie provinces. I wish to quote from the interim report of the joint parliamentary committee which was published on December 20, 1966. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis), who was very active on that committee, will remember this observation which the committee included in the interim report:

> Product information must be provided. Consumers must be informed about physical properties of products they are buying such as weight, volume, quality and number of units and this information should be immediately available at the time of purchase and should be expressed clearly and unequivocally . . .
> It is essential for the government to take all measures within its power to foster the welfare of the consumer. In particular, the government has a responsibility for protecting the consumer against all forms of exploitation.

I believe that the essential recommendations of that committee, in so far as they apply to packaging and labelling, are met by the consumer packaging and labelling bill. If I may, I would refer to another source of information and inspiration for this bill. The criticisms of the Batten report in the field of packaging and labelling are summarized as follows:

> In the area of labelling this commission has found that present practices fall short of consumer requirements in a number of important ways. First, even where legislation applies, it is not consistent between products. In effect, it contributes little more than voluntary standards would. Second, the commission has found that many manufacturers hold the belief, and act on it, that consumers do not want accurate, or even any, technical information about many of the products they buy. Third, information is presented in different ways about different products to such an extent that what there is cannot be effectively compared. This is especially true of heavy appliances but prevails everywhere. Fourth, some product lines provide the consumer almost no information at the point of sale. Textiles are particularly to be noted in this regard but other lines have been called as strongly to the commission's attention.

The textile labelling bill which we passed last session will, of course, correct that situation.

> Fifth, some packagings carry labels which are actually depictive of things which are only somewhat like the product, but are not exactly the product inside.

That is, the pictures on the packages and labels are not descriptive of what is inside; they are deceptive.

> Sixth, many labels continue to carry terms which purport to be descriptive of contents, such as "jumbo", "giant", and so on, but which are not. All of these defects persist despite the widely acknowledged view by manufacturers that "the package is a salesman" of which the label is a critical part".

May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, there might be disposition on the part of the House to allow the minister to conclude his remarks if he can do so in the next ten minutes.

Some hon. Members: Ten o'clock.

At ten o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, November 4, 1970

The House met at 2 p.m.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

LEGISLATION DEALING WITH ROYAL AND/OR NATIONAL ANTHEMS

Question No. 21—Mr. Forrestall:

Is it the intention of the government to introduce legislation dealing with the Royal and/or National Anthems during this session of Parliament?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): See Hansard, November 2, 1970, page 780.

"HMCS RAINBOW"—COST OF REFIT

Question No. 30—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. What was the estimated cost for the refit of HMCS Rainbow?
2. What are the total expenditures to date for the refit?
3. On what date did the refit commence?
4. On what date was it completed, or is it due to be completed?
5. Were tenders called for the refit?
6. What companies bid for the work?
7. Who did the work, or was awarded the contract?
8. Was the contract awarded on a cost-plus basis?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): 1. In March 1969, $1,940,000.

2. $2,490,000.

3. September 8, 1969.

4. The refit, including trials and inspection, was completed July 17, 1970.

5. No.

6. Not applicable.

7. The Canadian Forces Ship Repair Unit, Pacific, in HMCS Dockyard, Esquimalt.

8. Not applicable.

NUMBER OF MERGERS OR TAKE-OVERS RECORDED

Question No. 42—Mr. Saltsman:

1. For each year 1963 to 1969, how many (a) foreign (b) domestic industrial mergers or take-overs have been recorded by the Combines Investigation Branch of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs?

2. Do the figures cover the Canadian service sector and, if not, to what extent are they understated regarding the extent of merger activity in Canada?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. The number of mergers recorded by the Office of the Director of Investigation and Research under the Combines Investigation Act for each of the years 1963 to 1969 inclusive is set out below:

| | Foreign[1] | Domestic[2] | Total |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1960 ..... | 93 | 110 | 203 |
| 1961 ..... | 86 | 152 | 238 |
| 1962 ..... | 79 | 106 | 185 |
| 1963 ..... | 41 | 88 | 129 |
| 1964 ..... | 80 | 124 | 204 |
| 1965 ..... | 78 | 157 | 235 |
| 1966 ..... | 80 | 123 | 203 |
| 1967 ..... | 85 | 143 | 228 |
| 1968 ..... | 163 | 239 | 402 |

[1] Acquisitions involving a known foreign owned or controlled acquiring company (the nationality of the controlling interest in the acquired company prior to the merger could have been foreign or Canadian).

[2] Acquisitions involving an acquiring company not known to be foreign owned or controlled (the nationality of the controlling interest in the acquired company prior to the merger could have been foreign or Canadian).

This table both updates and revises the figures reported last year. The compilation is based upon information published in the major financial news media including daily and financial newspapers, trade journals, business magazines and other publications of Canada, the United States and the United Kingdom. When similar information was tabled in the House of Commons on December 15, 1969, certain companies involved in mergers drew attention to inaccuracies they found in the table. Accordingly, a review of the information recorded in the register, which depended upon the accuracy of press reports, was undertaken, but not to the extent of mounting a substantial research effort for which resources were not available. The examination of the recorded information revealed a number of problems. In some instances a division or group of assets capable of sustaining an independent firm in business had been acquired rather than the listed company itself. In others, the reported acquisitions of voting shares of a company, although substantial, did not necessarily amount to control. Some consolidations reported in the press as mergers were actually a reorganization of companies previously associated with one another by way of common ownership. Reported multiple acquisitions sometimes involved companies that were already associated with one another by way of common ownership and sometimes the acquired companies were, prior to the acquisition independently owned. The extent of the foreign ownership in some Canadian acquiring companies was less than a majority of the voting stock. Certain acquired companies turned out to have been foreign controlled before the reported acquisition. Finally, in many instances there was no factual evidence available to indicate whether the particular acquired company was, prior to the reported merger, Canadian or foreign controlled.

This examination of the evidence indicates that although the register does reflect a fairly comprehensive coverage of published sources of information there is a great need of more adequate continuing sources of information about mergers. The register should, therefore, not be regarded at present as more than an initial review of public information, with no guarantee of its accuracy.

2. No. The Director of Investigation and Research has sought to record all reported mergers that have taken place only in those sectors of Canadian industry which are subject to the Combines Investigation Act. Accordingly, firms in the service sectors of the economy, except for transportation (of articles) are largely excluded, e.g. financial institutions, most utilities, advertising agencies, real estate companies, etc. The Director of Investigation and Research is therefore not in a position to estimate the extent of merger activity in the service sector of the Canadian economy.

PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION PERSONNEL

Question No. 52—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Who are the present members of the Prices and Incomes Commission and what are their respective annual salaries?

2. In each case, what are the specific functions of each member of the Commission?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I have been informed by the Chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission as follows: 1 and 2: (a) Mr. J. H. Young, Chairman, is paid a salary in the range of a D.M. 3, $37,000-$40,000. (b) Mr. P. Gérin-Lajoie, Vice-Chairman, is paid a salary in the range of a D.M. 3, $37,000-$40,000. (c) Mr. B. G. Barrow, who is responsible for the Price Review Program, is paid a salary in the range of a D.M. 1, $28,000-$33,000. (d) Mr. G. E. Freeman, who is responsible for the Research and Current Analysis Programs, is paid a salary in the range of a D.M. 1, $28,000-$33,000. (e) Mr. G. V. Haythorne, who is responsible for the Information Program and relations with Economic Interest Groups, is paid a salary in the range of a D.M. 1, $28,000-$33,000.

CANADIAN COMPANIES EXEMPT FROM LIABILITY FOR CUSTOM DUTIES ON IMPORTS FOR MILITARY CONTRACTORS IN UNITED STATES

Question No. 60—Mr. Broadbent:

1. What companies in Canada are presently exempt from liability for custom duties on imports used in making components for military contractors in the United States?

[Mr. Basford.]

2. In each case, when did the custom remission order become effective and for what period of time?

3. In each case, what is the estimated value of the remission of custom duties?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): 1, 2 and 3. Order in Council P.C. 1960-1600, November 25, 1960, provides for duty and tax remissions for goods that are or will become the property of the United States government and will be used solely and exclusively in joint Canada-United States projects. The Order remains in effect until formally revoked. Companies extended the benefits of the Order are:

TASK FORCE ON INFORMATION RECOMMENDATION

Question No. 92—Mr. Mather:

Has the government accepted the Task Force on Information recommendation regarding government advertising and, if not, is the government giving consideration to establishing a Crown corporation or agency for all government advertising?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister without Portfolio): Cabinet has approved in principle the major Task Force Recommendation on agency selection procedures for government departments and agencies and is now considering the best means of implementing that recommendation.

MOTOR VEHICLE SAFETY REGULATIONS

Question No. 94—Mr. Mather:

On what date does the Minister of Transport, under Canada's Federal Motor Vehicle Safety Regulations, intend to announce standards regarding (a) front and rear bumper construction (b) rear window defrosting standards (c) trunk penetration, side-impact and door crash resistance standards (d) standards limiting the horse-power of vehicles made in or imported into Canada?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): In relation to (a), (b) and (c), research on these aspects of vehicle safety is currently being undertaken but, until such time as the results of these studies can be translated into safety standards, it is impossible to forecast the date on which they will be covered by the Motor Vehicle Safety Regulations.

With respect to vehicle horse-power, (d), the question of power/weight ratio for vehicles is under review.

In accordance with Section 9 of the Motor Vehicle Safety Act, all regulations will be published initially in Part I of the Canada Gazette as proposals so that manufacturers and other interested persons shall have a reasonable opportunity to make representations. In all cases, publication of the proposed regulations is the initial announcement of the Government's intention to issue and enforce standards.

INFORMATION CANADA

Question No. 95—Mr. Mather:

Have any private consultants undertaken any study for Information Canada and, if so, in each case (a) what is the nature of the study (b) was there a competitive tender for the contract (c) what is the name of the firm undertaking the study (d) what is the dollar expenditure of the contract (e) when is it anticipated that the study will be completed (f) is the study expected to be made public?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister without Portfolio): 1. (a) citizens' advisory bureaus; (b) no; (c) Mrs. G. Stewart and Miss K. Starrs; (d) $100 per person daily not to exceed $5,000 each; (e) early next year; (f) yes.

2. (a) A study of federal department and agency logos; (b) yes; (c) Communication Arts Centre Inc., of Montreal; (d) $24,000; (e) the study is complete; (f) yes.

3. (a) A survey of public opinion on design in relation to the federal identity program; (b) yes; (c) Contemporary Research Centre, 18 Grenville St., Toronto 189, Ontario. (d) $1,250; (e) the study is complete; (f) yes.

SNOWMOBILES—SAFETY REGULATIONS

Question No. 112—Mr. Skoberg:

1. Were public tenders called by the Minister of Transport throughout Canada to conduct a detailed examination on snowmobiles from a safety point of view and, if not, for what reason?

2. If public tenders were called, how many bids were received and from whom?

3. What were the terms of reference given to the successful firm?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. As the work involved expert professional services normally provided at established rates, public tenders were not called. The contract was awarded to Hovey and Associates Limited, Ottawa, as this was the only independent firm known to the Department possessing the required expertise and facilities to undertake the required study in an acceptable time period.

2. Not applicable.

3. Terms of reference specified a two-phase program. Phase I required the purchase and detailed examination of vehicles to identify potentially hazardous features which must be rectified at the point of manufacture and and to evaluate the engineering and economic impact on the industry of proposed safety regulations. Phase II of the program will entail rigid testing of vehicles under actual operating conditions to identify problems for which additional standards may be necessary.

HIGHWAY SAFETY

Question No. 113—Mr. Skoberg:

1. Were public tenders called by the Minister of Transport for an inventory of research in highway safety and the organization and conduct of a seminar to discuss safety research in Canada on future programmes that should be organized and, if not, for what reason?

2. If public tenders were called, in what way, and in what locations in Canada were they tendered?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Public tenders were not called by the Department for executing the inventory of highway safety research as public tenders are not considered an acceptable means of engaging professionals to provide expert services. In this case, five engineering consulting firms, known to possess the capability to undertake this project, were invited to submit proposals. The successful firm was selected by a committee within the Department on the basis of the firm's appreciation of the problem, the proposed methods of investigation, time scheduling, costs, and experience of personnel in similar work.

2. Although public tenders were not called, proposals were received from firms located in Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg and Fredericton.

Questions

RESEARCH ON TRAFFIC SAFETY WARNING AND CONTROL DEVICES

Question No. 114—Mr. Skoberg:

1. Did the Minister of Transport call for public tenders throughout Canada for a contract into research on traffic safety warning and control devices and, if not, for what reason?

2. If public tenders were called, how many bids were received and from whom?

3. Were public tenders called throughout Canada for the evaluation of the effectiveness of safety campaigns awarded to Peat, Marwick and Company, of Toronto and, if not, for what reason?

4. If public bids were called, how many bids were received and who made the decision on the successful tender?

5. What firms, individuals or associations make up the Traffic Inquiry Research Foundation of Canada, Ottawa, that is preparing a study to review the type of knowledge in Canada concerning the role of alcohol in road vehicle safety?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Public tenders were not called by the Department for providing research on traffic safety warning and control devices as public tenders are not considered an acceptable means of engaging professionals to provide expert services. In this case, five engineering consulting firms, known to possess the capability to undertake this project, were invited to submit proposals.

2. Although public tenders were not called, proposals were received from firms located in Montreal, Toronto, Willowdale and Edmonton.

3. Six consulting firms, known to possess the capability to undertake an evaluation of the effectiveness of safety campaigns, were invited to submit proposals. Proposals were received from five of those firms.

4. The successful firm was selected by a committee within the Department on the basis of the firm's appreciation of the problem, the proposed methods of investigation, time scheduling, costs, and experience of personnel in similar work.

5. Traffic Injury Research Foundation of Canada is a non-profit chartered foundation supported by donations including grants from the Department of National Health and Welfare and several Provincial Governments. Founding members include, among others, the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons, Defence Research Board and Medical Research Council. Individual members include professionals from many disciplines.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE—MAN-HOURS SAVED BY UTILIZATION OF COMPUTERS

Question No. 182—Mr. Robinson:

How many man-hours have been saved as a result of the utilization of computers by the Department of National Defence during each year since computers have been used?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): It has not been possible to maintain meaningful estimates of the man-hours that have been saved as a result of the utilization of computers by the Department of National Defence during each year since computers have been used.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE—LAY-OFFS DUE TO UTILIZATION OF COMPUTERS

Question No. 183—Mr. Robinson:

As a result of the use of computers by the Department of National Defence, how many employees have been (a) laid off (b) hired?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): No employee has been laid off as a direct result of the use of computers. Records are not maintained in a manner which would indicate the number of employees hired as a result of the use of computers.

HALIFAX AND YARMOUTH HIGHWAY SERVICE MAIL SERVICE

Question No. 211—Mr. McCleave:

1. What tenders have been received for the Halifax and Yarmouth H.S. mail service, by name and amount?

2. To whom was the tender awarded?

3. Who held the contract previously, for what length of time and for what amount?

2. Charles W. Giffin.

3. J. R. Fletcher, five years, $36,459 per annum.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE—MONTREAL EXPOS' BASEBALL TEAM

Question No. 224—Mr. Saltsman:

1. Has the Department of National Revenue ruled that the Montreal Expos' baseball team can depreciate the value of initial player contracts over a ten year period?

2. Is the total estimated cost allowed by the Department of National Revenue for deduction purposes estimated to be $9 million and, if so, will the Montreal Expos' baseball team pay no tax each year on the first $900,000 of their profit?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): 1 and 2. This information is confidential and cannot be divulged.

HALIFAX AND PORT HAWKESBURY HIGHWAY MAIL SERVICE

Question No. 230—Mr. McCleave:

1. What tenders have been received for the Halifax and Port Hawkesbury H. S. mail service, by name and amount?

2. To whom was the tender awarded?

3. Who held the contract previously, for what length of time and for what amount?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister without Portfolio): 1. James Hubert Beck, $22,000; Peter Werenka, $23,444; Edward N. Smith, $23,972; Casino Taxi Ltd., $25,080; John R. Fletcher, $26,400; Arthur W. Armitage, $27,261; Denton Roney Ehler, $28,375; J. S. Culligan, $29,265; Donald L. Lutz, $33,000; J. E. San Cartier, $36,000; J. S.

2. Peter Werenka.

3. Peter Werenka, five years, $24,645 per annum.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE—LAY-OFFS DUE TO UTILIZATION OF COMPUTERS

Question No. 241—Mr. Robinson:

As a result of the use of computers by the Department of National Revenue how many employees have been (a) laid off (b) hired?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): (a) No employees have been laid off as a result of the use of computers. Normal retirements, resignations, and transfers have reduced staffs where clerical and other tasks have been eliminated or reduced through computer use. (b) As at October 26, 1970 the department employed 207 computer systems analysts, programmers, and computer operating personnel in its permanent staff involved in all areas of activity using computers. Very few of these were hired from the outside because of the introduction of computers. Most were transferred from other duties and trained in computer technology. In addition, several hundred temporary key-punch staff are hired each year to provide necessary input for systems involving the department's computers. The number employed at any one time varies widely with the season of the year. Many permanent staff, as well as temporary key-punch staff, are employed on computer work for departments other than National Revenue, Taxation.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE—MAN-HOURS SAVED AS RESULT OF UTILIZATION OF COMPUTERS

Question No. 242—Mr. Robinson:

How many man-hours have been saved as a result of the utilization of computers by the Department of National Revenue during each year since computers have been used?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): Records of man-hour utilization are not kept in the detail which would be required to give a precise answer to this question. In general reply, it can be stated that the use of computers has eliminated or reduced the man-hour requirements for certain kinds of clerical and returns examination work but has increased them for other activities in the area of enforcement. The computer system's ability to detect errors in returns, disclose cases of unreported income, and find instances of non-filing, has generated substantial extra work of an enforcement nature which can only be resolved by people. On balance, it can be said that the use of computers has required more man-hours of staff utilization but the resultant extra costs have been far less than the extra revenues generated. Also inhibiting comparisons of man-hour requirements before and after computers is the fact that the department has had to undertake several new, major programs since it acquired its first computers in 1962. Examples of these are the collection of tax for nine provinces and the provision of their statistics and other data and the collection of contributions to the Canada Pension Plan. These programs, to be effective, required the use of computers and imposed additional demands for both manpower and equipment.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call Notices of Motions Nos. 5, 10, 16, 21, 27, 28, 32, 33, 34, 35, 80, 132 and 137.

CORRESPONDENCE, ETC., BETWEEN DR. LLOYD BARBER AND INDIAN ORGANIZATIONS ON TREATY CLAIMS AND ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

Motion No. 5—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between Dr. Lloyd Barber and the Native Indian peoples organizations across Canada regarding the matter of Indian land and treaty claims and aboriginal rights.

Mr. Barney Danson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this rather interesting motion is identical to motion No. 370 by the hon. member in the last session. The position taken at that time, as reported in Hansard of March 11, 1970, at page 4665, has not changed. I would therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Nothing else has changed either, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate?

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Not on my request, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacEachen: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

REGULATIONS OF THE OWNERSHIP AND CONTROL OF THE URANIUM INDUSTRY IN CANADA

Motion No. 10—Mr. Saltsman:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all correspondence, memoranda, etc., between the Government of Canada and industry in Canada since January 1, 1970, regarding regulations on the ownership and control of the uranium industry in Canada.

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources that correspondence received from uranium producing and exploration companies contains information specifically requested by the government and given with the assurance that it would be treated as confidential. In view of this, I trust the hon. member will agree to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Saltsman: That is not acceptable, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacEachen: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

INTERIM REPORT OF TASK FORCE ON OIL POLICY

Motion No. 16—Mr. Saltsman:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the interim report of the Task Force on Oil Policy (Northern Development), as mentioned by the Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in Hansard on April 25, 1969, at page 7956.

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources that the task force on northern oil development is an interdepartmental group of officials reporting on an interim basis directly to ministers on developments as they take place. It is not customary to release such communications but when a final report is made consideration will be given to making it public. I would therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Saltsman: That is acceptable.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

• (2:10 p.m.)

SUBMISSIONS TO ECONOMIC COUNCIL ON COMPETITION

Motion No. 21—Mr. Orlikow:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of the nearly forty submissions presented to the Economic Council of Canada for its review of Canada's competition policy, as referred to in the Council's report of July 1969 at page 4.

Mr. Barney Danson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this very thoughtful motion is similar to motion No. 10 by the hon. member in the last session. I am informed by the Economic Council of Canada that the stand taken by them in response to that motion, as reported in Hansard of December 17, 1969, at page 2084, has not changed. I would therefore ask that this motion be withdrawn.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, my views have not changed. I still believe in open government and the tabling of reports, and I would like to have them.

Mr. MacEachen: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

DISCONTINUANCE OF PUBLICATIONS DUE TO INCREASE IN POSTAL RATES

Motion No. 27—Mr. Orlikow:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all letters received by the Postmaster General from churches, professional organizations, trade unions, co-operatives, credit unions and private organizations, indicating that as a result of the increase in postal rates they intend to discontinue or curtail their publications.

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I think this is the third time this motion has been presented, and the reply to it will be the same as on the last occasion, namely, that the motion is not acceptable as the information requested would necessitate a review of over 5,000 files. It is estimated that several hundred man hours would be expended in drawing files and searching for the desired correspondence without taking into consideration the time expended in copying such correspondence.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): I would therefore ask that the motion be withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I take the liberty to bring to the attention of the minister, and of other ministers and parliamentary secretaries responding on behalf of the government, that there should be an indication given as briefly as possible on the part of the government whether a motion is accepted or whether it is the wish that it be transferred for debate. I gather that the minister has asked that the motion be dropped.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I cannot agree to that. Since the Post Office does not seem to be delivering the mail it might do this instead.

Mr. MacEachen: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is transferred for debate.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND CAUSEWAY—REPORT BY C. B. HAVER

Motion No. 28—Mr. Orlikow:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the report by C. B. Haver of Montreal for Northumberland Consultants Limited regarding a review of the cost-benefit evaluation by Stanford Research Institute for a Prince Edward Island causeway as mentioned in answer to Question Number 1,832 reported in Hansard July 21, 1969 at page 11374.

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am informed by the Minister of Public Works that as stated in reply to question No. 1832 reported in Hansard on July 21, 1969, at page 11374, this report was prepared for internal use only and is therefore a privileged document. Under these circumstances I would ask the hon. member to consider withdrawing his motion.

Mr. Orlikow: I cannot agree to that. I thought Information Canada would help us get reports and not deny them to us.

Mr. MacEachen: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is transferred for debate.

STUDY BY PIUS DENIS FOR DEPARTMENT OF MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION

Motion No. 32—Mr. Orlikow:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the study of Pius Denis, Regina, undertaken for the Department of Manpower and Immigration regarding the "Analysis of the information derived from the Longitudinal Study of the Economic and Social Adaptation of Immigrants".

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Pius Denis did early research work on the first questionnaire for the longitudinal study but he did not produce a written study or report. As there is no report, the hon. member may wish to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Orlikow: I will do that, but I will try to find out how much he got paid for doing nothing.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion is dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

STUDY BY FARIZA HASAN FOR DEPARTMENT OF MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION

Motion No. 33—Mr. Orlikow:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the study by Fariza Hasan, Ottawa, undertaken for the Department of Manpower and Immigration regarding the "Analysis re the development of cost-benefit models and other studies conducted by the Quantitative Methods Group".

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, Miss Fariza Hasan provided consultative services to the department. She was engaged on a contractual basis to carry out statistical analysis and no written report was produced. Since no report exists, the hon. member may wish to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Orlikow: I will agree.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

STUDY BY LEO MES ON ANALYSIS AND PREPARATION OF COST ESTIMATES ON PROJECTS

Motion No. 34—Mr. Orlikow:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the study by Leo Mes, Ottawa, undertaken for the Department of Manpower and Immigration regarding the "Analysis and preparation of cost estimates on projects".

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Leo Mes of Ottawa was engaged as a consultant by the department to provide specification and programming services for computer work being carried out in the Planning and Evaluation Branch. No written report was ever produced. In view of this, the hon. member may wish to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Orlikow: I will agree.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

STUDY BY PAUL MOREAU REGARDING ANALYSIS AND PREPARATION OF COST ESTIMATES ON PROJECTS

Motion No. 35—Mr. Orlikow:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the study by Paul Moreau, Ottawa, undertaken for the Department of Manpower and Immigration regarding the "Analysis and preparation of cost estimates on projects".

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this motion asks for a copy of a study by Mr. Paul Moreau of Ottawa who was engaged as a consultant by the department to provide specifications and programming services for computer work carried out in the Planning and Evaluation Branch. A written report was not produced. The hon. member may therefore wish to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Orlikow: I will agree at the moment.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

CONSULTANT REPORT REGARDING INFORMATION MEDIA RELATIVE TO WAR ON POVERTY 1967-68

Motion No. 80—Mr. Skoberg:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the consultant report by Hewart, Newman and Associates and Julian, Hebert and Associates, Montreal, regarding information media relative to the war on poverty undertaken in the year 1967-68, for the Privy Council Office, as mentioned in answer to Question Number 1323 of the first session of this Parliament.

Mr. Barney Danson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this quite challenging motion was dealt with in the last session as No. 212 in the name of the hon. member. The reasons stated at that time, as reported in Hansard of January 14, 1970, at page 2378, still pertain. I would therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Skoberg: We cannot fight the war on poverty in the Privy Council office, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacEachen: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

CONTRACT REGARDING SALE OF A NUCLEAR RESEARCH REACTOR

Motion No. 132—Mr. Gilbert:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of the contract between the Atomic Energy of Canada, Ltd. and the Atomic Energy Council of Taiwan regarding the sale of a nuclear research reactor.

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited advises that the contract between Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and the Atomic Energy Council of Taiwan is a commercial contract and it has not been customary to make public documents of this class because of the confidential nature of their contents. I would therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Question.

Mr. Gilbert: Question.

Mr. MacEachen: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

STUDIES REGARDING CONSIDERATION TO CONVERTING PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT INTO CROWN CORPORATION

Motion No. 137—Mr. Gilbert:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all studies, reviews, etc., that have been undertaken by the Government of Canada regarding the consideration being given to converting the Public Works Department into a Crown Corporation.

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am advised by the Minister of Public Works that as stated when an identical motion was called during the previous session, all studies on this subject are of a confidential nature and intended for internal use only. Therefore the hon. member might agree to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining notices of motions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining notices of motion stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

NATIONAL SECURITY

KIDNAPPING AND MURDER OF PIERRE LAPORTE—POLICE SURVEILLANCE OF PAUL ROSE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on Monday I asked the Solicitor General a question relating to the surveillance of one Rose, a prime suspect in Quebec, and why he had not been picked up. Has the Solicitor General had an opportunity to review the answer he gave, which was to the effect that there was not sufficient evidence to arrest Rose at the time, inasmuch as a report has since come out of Montreal that the Montreal police believe there was sufficient evidence to arrest Rose and, in fact, at that time a number of people were, I believe, being picked up without very much evidence in any event?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, after hearing about the CBC broadcast last night I first of all tried to procure a transcript of it and its references to this question. I was advised by them that it would take at least two days before they could give me the transcript.

An hon. Member: Call the CRTC; they will get it for you.

Mr. McIlraith: In any event, this morning I carefully reviewed the question asked by the hon. Leader of the Opposition on Monday and my reply to it. I have no changes whatever to suggest to that answer.

An hon. Member: You never have.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, to avoid any misunderstanding, does the minister mean to suggest that he consulted again with the people on the spot to ensure that the information on which he based his opinion was correct?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, the minister consulted the authority whom he normally consults on this type of question in the House, the federal authority, the only authority we have, and his answer given today is made after detailed consultation with them on this point.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I have a question for the Minister of Justice, Mr. Speaker. Is he now able to give me the information which I have sought four times, I believe, namely, how many of those who have been detained under the War Measures Act have been detained for longer than seven days at the request of the Attorney General of the province concerned?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I hope there is no implication in the question asked by the Leader of the Opposition that I did not try to get the information for him and for the House as quickly as possible. The number of persons arrested and detained as of 11.40 this morning under the regulations pursuant to the War Measures Act is 424, the number of persons released, 359, and the number of persons still in custody, 65. Of the 65 persons in custody 46 are in custody in Montreal and 19 are in custody in other parts of the province.

A total of 228 orders were issued by the Attorney General of Quebec pursuant to subsection 2 of section 9 of the emergency regulations authorizing detention beyond seven days. The breakdown is as follows: Montreal, 148; Quebec City, 54; Rimouski, 8; Sherbrooke, 2; Hull, 11; Victoriaville, 3; St. Jerome, 1 and Thetford Mines, 1, for a total of 228.

Of the 65 persons presently in custody, 43 have been held beyond seven days. The breakdown is as follows: 30 in Montreal and 13 in other parts of the province.

With respect to the question, how many persons were arrested, released and then arrested again, the answer is one, and that person is still in custody. The number of persons still being sought is 43. I expect, from my conversations with the office of the Attorney General of Quebec, that further charges will be laid today, tomorrow and on Friday.

WAR MEASURES ACT—CHARGES AGAINST THOSE DETAINED OF BEING MEMBERS OF FLQ

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In view of the statements made in the House by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion to the effect that there are about 3,000 FLQ members in vital posts in the province of Quebec, can the Minister of Justice say how many of the 65 who are still detained have been charged under the War Measures Act regulations with being members of the FLQ?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, none to date.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask how many will be charged?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REPORTED REDUCTION OF RCMP PERSONNEL ENGAGED IN SEARCH FOR KIDNAPPERS AND MURDERERS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Solicitor General a question regarding reports from the Montreal police that 150 men of the RCMP Intelligence and Security Division have been withdrawn. Can he tell the House why this number of men has been withdrawn from the search for persons who are alleged to be responsible for kidnapping and murder?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I cannot possibly accept the premise on which the hon. member bases his question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister then whether he will confirm the statement by Montreal police sources to the effect that the number of RCMP members attached to the Intelligence and Security Division who are at present engaged in the search for the persons being sought has been reduced from 200 to 50?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I will not confirm any such rumour or statement, nor will I deny it. If the hon. member is prepared to ask a substantive question, I will immediately try to obtain the information as to what, if any, number has been withdrawn from that work.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a substantive question. Has there been any reduction in the number of RCMP personnel engaged in the search for the persons responsible for the crimes of kidnapping and murder in the Montreal area?

Mr. McIlraith: I believe not, Mr. Speaker, but I will verify that before the end of the question period.

[Translation]

WAR MEASURES ACT—PRESENCE OF CYC MEMBERS AMONG THOSE ARRESTED

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Justice.

Could he tell the House if any former or present members of the Company of Young Canadians were among the persons arrested under the War Measures Act?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): I do not have that information, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

CHARGES UNDER WAR MEASURES ACT AND CRIMINAL CODE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): In order that the House may continue proper surveillance over the powers granted under the War Measures Act, will the minister indicate, whenever he can, how many charges under the Criminal Code will be laid, with respect to the people detained, how many will be charged in respect of alleged infractions against the regulations under the War Measures Act and, possibly, how many confessions were made while these people were being detained in jail?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to furnish the hon. member and the House with the details of the charges as, if and when they are laid. The discretion as to whether they are to be laid rests with the Attorney General of Quebec.

WAR MEASURES ACT—REASONS FOR DELAY IN INTERROGATION OF THOSE DETAINED

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Justice a question. Since a great many of those arrested were kept in jail for quite a number of days and in many cases were not interviewed until the second last day of their stay in jail, on the sixth, twelfth or fourteenth days, and so on, and were then interviewed for a very short time, ten to fifteen minutes, may I ask the minister whether he has discussed with the Attorney General of Quebec the reasons for the delays in interrogation while persons were kept in prison incommunicado? If he has not done so, is he prepared to discuss it with him?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to accept the various preambles, allegations and insinuations in that question.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I will say, however, that of course there were delays because of the great number of people arrested at the same time and the necessity of carrying out this process by skilled interrogators. In certain cases that did result in delays. As for the rest of the preamble, Mr. Speaker, I do not think I need to deal with it.

Mr. Lewis: Is the minister prepared to inquire and report to the House, as to how many of those arrested were kept for many days in jail incommunicado before even being interrogated, how long the interrogations lasted and what kind of questions were asked?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

WAR MEASURES ACT—INDEPENDENT COMMISSION OF REVIEW

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I have a question for the Minister of Justice. In view of the number of detainees—185, I believe—held longer than seven days and then released without a charge being laid, will the minister take some steps—to allay any concern in the minds of the public—such as urging the government of Quebec to appoint a commission of review, not necessarily to make a public report but at least to assure those in authority and this House that there were no abuses of due process within the limits of the intention of the measure?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the Attorney General of Quebec has already appointed a committee drawn from members of the Civil Rights Association of Quebec, the staff of the Archbishop of Montreal and other members. I would imagine that might be within their terms of reference. I see no point in going further in that regard at the moment because I think that committee is well qualified and I am sure it will pay due attention to the factors raised by the hon. member.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): In view of the answer of the Minister of Justice, what authority do the members of the committee in question have to enter the places where these people are detained and incarcerated?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Under the authority of the Attorney General of Quebec, Mr. Speaker.

WAR MEASURES ACT—NON-PROSECUTION FOR ACTS COMMITTED PRIOR TO PROCLAMATION

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Can the Minister of Justice inform the House whether or not the federal government has requested the Attorney General of Quebec not to prosecute under those sections of the War Measures Act regulations which make actions which were not criminal before the implementation of the Act criminal offences?

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): I have confidence that the Attorney General of Quebec will exercise properly the discretion given to him by law and by the authority vested in him properly.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY INTO NEWS SERVICE

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister on my favourite subject, namely the CBC.

On May 1, 1970, the Prime Minister gave me the following reply:

For my part, I am busy dusting my Chinese vases.

Today the journalists' union of the CBC is requesting a public inquiry into the news service in order to shed some light on the Corporation's information policy.

Does the Prime Minister intend to carry out this pious wish so that we may know exactly what goes on within the CBC?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I was not aware of this request, Mr. Speaker, but I will be pleased to discuss the matter with the Secretary of State to see whether it is in the public interest to initiate such an inquiry, as requested by the people concerned.

BROADCASTING

SPECIAL CBC INSTRUCTIONS RESPECTING NEWS PROGRAMS—CRTC REQUEST TO PRIVATE RADIO STATIONS TO PROVIDE CERTAIN TAPES

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): My question is also directed to the Secretary of State. On November 2 I asked the hon. gentleman if he would inform himself, through the CBC, whether special regulations or instructions were issued by the CBC respecting news coverage both on Radio-Canada and on the English-speaking network. Is the minister now in a position to reply?

While I am on my feet, may I ask whether the Secretary of State was able to take notice of a question I directed to the Prime Minister yesterday about the CRTC and the telegrams which were sent to various private stations?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Secretary of State might answer one question at a time. I think it would cause confusion if he attempted to deal with two different questions at the same time. The Secretary of State might refer to the first question asked by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley.

Mr. Nowlan: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, from time to time ministers take the opportunity to answer two questions while they are on their feet. I followed a similar practice because yesterday I directed a very current question to the Prime Minister involving the communications media of Canada, and I was hoping that the Prime Minister had referred that question to the Secretary of State so he could reply to both at once.

Mr. Speaker: I still abide by the ruling I made a moment ago. I do not wish to be unfair to the hon. member, but I am suggesting it complicates the question period when two or three different questions are asked at the same time.

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question is that at the beginning of the Cross-Laporte matter, the directors of the news service of the French network were issuing oral instructions to senior editors, producers and reporters asking them to show continuous and increased vigilance over news on that matter, to check and double check any information on the subject before releasing it, in order to avoid creating a feeling of panic, and to always show restraint.

After the emergency measures were adopted, the authorities gave the people in charge of radio and television news programs a copy of the regulations passed by the federal government and they were in constant touch with the legal advisers of the Corporation about the interpretation of the regulations.

The English network has instructed its agents to observe moderation and caution when releasing information related to the crisis, particularly when dealing with conjectures. It has also issued directions as to the legal aspects of reporting under the War Measures Act. Such instructions are usual in cases of serious crisis.

Mr. Speaker, I don't know whether I would be transgressing the rule you have just laid down—

Mr. Speaker: Order. It might be in order to determine whether the hon. member wants to ask a supplementary question related to the Minister's reply.

[English]

Mr. Nowlan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do. Would the Secretary of State be kind enough to obtain these directives and have them tabled, if possible? Would he also tell us whether he has been informed by the CBC, either the English-speaking or the French-speaking networks, that pursuant to this directive certain news reports were, in fact, changed before they were broadcast?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member has missed an important word in my reply. I did say "oral instructions", which means obviously that I cannot produce any document.

As far as the second question is concerned, it was not contained in the first one. I shall therefore inquire from the Corporation and prepare a reply for the hon. member.

While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, I should like to answer the question asked yesterday when I was not here in connection with the tapes requested by the CRTC. The hon. member is well aware that, according to Section 4(5) of the CRTC Regulations issued under the Broadcasting Act, radio and TV program tapes or transcripts are to be kept by the stations for 30 days. It happens quite often that the CRTC, as a result of a complaint or on its own initiative, asks a station for tapes or transcripts of certain programs.

In the case referred to by the hon. member for Annapolis-Valley, I am told that the CRTC sent this request to broadcasting stations because the 30-day period is about to expire and the tapes concerned may be destroyed.

The CRTC thought it had the responsibility of recuperating and preserving those tapes for reference, study and research purposes. Indeed it is a well known fact that newspapers covering the lifetime of many generations are available in libraries and archives but such is not automatically the case with electronic news media.

[English]

Mr. Nowlan: I thank the Secretary of State for his answer regarding the CRTC. Is the House to understand that this request by telegram, which went out to some 20 stations across Canada without explanation, was sent on the initiative of the CRTC? Or was it done on the initiative of the government, or of the RCMP?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: The CRTC took this initiative, Mr. Speaker, and I should like to point out to the hon. member that if any police service had wanted any tapes, they could have asked for them without going to the CRTC.

[English]

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State relating to the remarks made by the Solicitor General a few moments ago about the difficulty in getting a tape of last night's news broadcast. Inasmuch as CRTC regulations require such tapes to be held, why should the Solicitor General experience difficulty in getting this tape from Montreal today?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: I believe the answer to this question is quite simple, Mr. Speaker. When requesting information of this type, you don't ask for a piece of tape, but for a transcript. The transcript has to be made from the tape and that requires a certain amount of time; therefore, a delay is inevitable.

[English]

Mr. MacInnis: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. My point of order arises from the fact that the minister is not well informed about CRTC regulations or about what he, as the minister, can do. The fact remains that these tapes can be made directly available from the station which makes the broadcast. For that matter, I have a tape made by the President of the Privy Council—

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is a debate between the hon. member and the minister.

INFORMATION CANADA

SUGGESTED DUPLICATION OF SERVICES—REDUCTION IN DEPARTMENTAL PUBLIC RELATIONS BUDGETS

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I wish to direct to the Minister without Portfolio who answers for Information Canada. Can the hon. gentleman say whether representations have been received from the Public Libraries Trustees Association of Canada objecting to the duplication of its public information services which would be caused by the establishment of additional public Information Canada offices?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister without Portfolio): No such representations have been brought to my notice, although I have received expressions of strong support from librarians for the concept of Information Canada and for the plan to establish, as recommended by the task force on government information, regional inquiry centres which librarians see as a valuable complementary element in a public information system. We are anxious to co-operate with libraries and I think libraries are anxious to co-operate with us.

While I am on my feet I might refer to a question which was asked yesterday by the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster indicating that Information Canada would be taking over programs of departmental information branches. As I think the hon. member knows, this is not the case, and there was no such announcement.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, while the minister is in an expansive mood—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have just seen illustrated, for the benefit of hon. members, the difficulty which arises when two questions are asked or answered at the same time. The hon. member for Surrey has a supplementary to the first question and the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster has a supplementary to the second. The hon. member for Surrey.

Mr. Mather: Would the minister check with Information Canada to make sure that no such representation as I mentioned has been made?

Mr. Stanbury: Certainly, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Bell: Will the minister give the House an assurance that there will be definite reductions in the information services and budgets of individual departments now that he has taken over, in the way he has explained, a $150 million budget?

Mr. Stanbury: As the hon. member knows, I am sure, there is no budget of $150 million. If he reads the report of the task force on government information he will see that the figure he mentions includes such things as application forms—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

NATIONAL SECURITY

WAR MEASURES ACT—PAYMENT BY QUEBEC FOR SERVICES OF ARMED FORCES

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Since the Quebec Minister of Justice is greatly concerned because Quebec could be compelled to pay the cost of the armed forces stay in that province, could the Prime Minister answer that question to-day?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the beginning of the question is true, but if it is I will simply say that the Quebec Minister of Justice has no reason to be greatly concerned.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ARREST OF CERTAIN NEWS BROADCASTERS UNDER WAR MEASURES ACT

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, on Monday I asked the Secretary of State a question concerning three or four members of Radio-Canada who are news broadcasters. I asked the minister whether or not they, having been picked up, had been released, and he said that he would find out the answer to the question.

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I said to the hon. member—certainly not yesterday, since I was not in the House—that I did not have any such information and that I would try to get it. I have not yet obtained it; as soon as I have it, I shall transmit it to the hon. member.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion gave to the minister the information that he himself made public, namely, that several members of Radio-Canada who were broadcasters apparently had a code which they used to communicate with the FLQ? Did his colleague give him that information and did he make any investigation in regard thereto? Can the minister give the House some information on that matter, because at the time the information was given by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, he was still free to speak?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, this piece of information, whether it is accurate or not,—I have not checked it—is one that I have read also in the newspapers, like the right hon. member. But the right hon. member for Prince Albert has had a tendency in the last few weeks to repeat constantly the same mistake. He seems to believe that the Secretary of State is the minister in charge of a specialized police force. I want to inform him that such is not my role. I have no jurisdiction over any police body as the right hon. member for Prince Albert seems inclined to think.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that is scarcely an answer to the question. I never took the minister to be other than a nonentity.

POST OFFICE

ISSUE OF STAMP IN HONOUR OF PIERRE LAPORTE

Mr. Ian Watson (Laprairie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Postmaster General.

Does he intend to issue a stamp in memory of Pierre Laporte?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, even though the 1971 commemorative stamps program has already been published the department is considering the possibility of issuing in 1971 a stamp in honour of Pierre Laporte, which would mark Mr. Laporte's 50th anniversary.

IMMIGRATION

ADMISSION TO CANADA OF BLACK PANTHER MEMBER, RAYMOND HEWITT

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In light of the conflict arising from the statement of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion equating the FLQ and the Black Panthers as fellow revolutionary terrorists, and in light of the permissive attitude expressed by the Minister of Immigration yesterday with reference to the visit of Black Panther Ray Hewitt to a university campus in the province of Manitoba, would the Prime Minister clarify the government's position on this matter to allay the concern of many responsible citizens in the keystone province?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration stated the government's position perfectly adequately yesterday.

Mr. Dinsdale: Do I take it from the Prime Minister's statement that it is the policy of the government to detain under the War Measures Act visitors to Canada who belong to movements committed to the overthrow of law and order by terror and violence, or does the policy apply only to Canadians?

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question which is similar to the question the Prime Minister did not answer. When the government considered this matter of the Black Panthers, did it take into consideration the new statements made by the fugitive Black Panther leader, Eldridge Cleaver, contained in the New York Times for November 1, wherein he openly advocated political assassination, the killing of Richard Nixon and encouraging people all over the United States to kill police? If so, why did the government make such a decision?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, my reading on terrorists is not as adequate as that of the hon. member—

Mr. MacInnis: That is your problem.

Mr. Trudeau: —but I am glad his party is at last getting around to realizing that the government did right in invoking the War Measures Act.

With regard to the previous question, which I did not answer because I did not understand the last words of the question, even though I am being asked for a legal opinion I think I can be permitted to state my opinion on the matter. We would treat aliens in the same way as we treat Canadians if they fall under the definitions in the War Measures Act regulations or the new law. If the hon. member reads the regulations he will find they were directed at a special circumstance, but were not limited in regard to the nationality of people who might be accused under the regulations.

Mr. Dinsdale: A further supplementary question to the Solicitor General. Could the minister inform the House whether any aliens fitting into the category of revolutionary terrorists have been detained up to the present moment?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I would have to get more information to answer fully on that point, but there is one such case with which I am familiar.

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Solicitor General give serious consideration to having everybody wearing a pink shirt arrested?

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

NON-PAYMENT OF MINIMUM WAGE—RETIRED EMPLOYEES PENSIONS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Taking into consideration the well received stand last week by the Minister of Labour in connection with payment by the CNR of less than the federal minimum wage, would the Minister of Labour inform the House what action has now been taken in this regard?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have not changed my opinion that Crown corporations should pay minimum wages, as should all industries that come within federal jurisdiction. I expressed this opinion two weeks ago and gave my department the authority to proceed in the matter in the usual manner. I refer to the application of the rules and regulations under which the Department of Labour normally proceeds in such cases. I presume that advice is now being sought from the appropriate department in regard to proceeding further.

Mr. Skoberg: A supplementary question to the minister in connection with CNR labour-management policy. In view of the present wage and rules movement now going on with the CNR, and in view of the unanimous report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications in regard to the CNR pension plan, would the Minister of Labour tell the House whether or not he is interested in intervening in this particular case and drawing the attention of the CNR to the importance of settling this dispute?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I do not make a practice of interfering with the principle of collective bargaining. The hon. member has referred to the report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications pertaining to pensions. I think this is required reading not only by the CNR but also the unions since there are some very far-reaching recommendations in the report applicable to both parties to this dispute.

WAR MEASURES ACT—PAYMENT BY QUEBEC FOR SERVICES OF ARMED FORCES

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, my question follows from the answer given earlier by the Prime Minister to the hon. member for Shefford, in which he said that payment for the services of the Armed Forces in Quebec should not "greatly" concern the Justice Minister of that province.

Does the Prime Minister wish to indicate thereby that the central government has decided to pay the whole cost of such services?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, no, Mr. Speaker. The detailed answer I gave the other day to the hon. member for Shefford was based on the fact, which had, I think, given rise to his question, namely, that the Canadian press had spread the rumour lately that I had stated that Quebec would definitely have to assume the cost in full, whereas it is not at all the position I have taken. It is possible that Mr. Choquette in saying that he was afraid Quebec would have to pay based his assumption on this position which is not at all ours.

I have repeated to the House what I have said today, Mr. Speaker—you are impatient and I am too—that Premier Bourassa and myself had decided to deal with the question in due time as it is not the most urgent matter at the present time.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question.

Did the Premier of Quebec request that the federal government pay the entire cost of troops stationed in the province of Quebec?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Mackasey.]

NATIONAL REVENUE

INQUIRY AS TO CLOSING OF SYDNEY TAXATION OFFICE

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I wish to address to the Minister of National Revenue. Is he in a position to reply to the question I posed yesterday?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to tell the hon. member that the department is not giving consideration to closing the Sydney district taxation office.

NATIONAL SECURITY

IDENTIFICATION OF OWNER OF CAR IN WHICH BODY OF PIERRE LAPORTE WAS FOUND

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct to the Minister of Justice the question I asked him on October 26. It is one I have been asked about a great many times. Has the green car that was used in the kidnapping of Mr. Laporte been identified and the owner of the licence number established? Is this information in the hands of the provincial and federal governments, or was the licence number changed on the green car in which the body of Mr. Laporte was unfortunately found?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to give the evidence in the hands of the police concerning the criminal charges which will be laid and the warrants that are out.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

EMPLOYMENT AND UNEMPLOYMENT FORECASTS BY ECONOMIC COUNCIL CHAIRMAN—GOVERNMENT REACTION

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance and arises from the speech to the British Columbia Federation of Labour by the chairman of the Economic Council of Canada about employment and unemployment forecasts. Does the government agree with these projections?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen them at this point. I will take a look at them.

Mr. McCleave: When the minister answers that question, will he also say what the government expects the unemployment situation to be if he differs from the chairman?

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

APPEAL OF DECISION IN STAFFORD SMYTHE INCOME TAX CASE

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, this question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Is it the intention of the minister to appeal the order of His Honour Judge Kelly who stated that the Crown had no legal right to proceed against Stafford Smythe by indictment with regard to charges under the Income Tax Act?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have instructed the department to take mandamus action against that judgment.

PUBLIC WORKS

EGANVILLE—PROGRESS TOWARD NEW FEDERAL BUILDING

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works which I hope is in order because I gave him notice of it. What progress is being made by his department on the project for a new federal building in the town of Eganville?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would think this is a question which normally should be on the order paper. I regret I have to suggest that to the hon. member. If there is urgency the matter could be debated at the time of adjournment.

SOCIAL SECURITY

REQUEST FOR PRESENTATION OF WHITE PAPER BY END OF YEAR

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, this question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that the Minister of Labour has every intention to bring in legislation regarding the Unemployment Insurance Commission by July, 1971, in light of the fact that witnesses had difficulty presenting briefs and pointing out their position because they did not know where the government was going on social policy, and in light of the fact that the committee will probably have that same problem in presenting a report, can the minister give us any indication when he expects the government's white paper on social policy will be brought forward? If not, could he assure the House if this white policy—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: This white paper on policy. Mr. Speaker, it has never been my policy to say that white is not beautiful.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Alexander: I wonder whether the minister can possibly assure the House that he will bring his policy down before the end of the year because that would certainly assist the committee.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I would say to the hon. member, as has been stated several times in the House, that the matter is under active consideration by the government and when a decision has been made it will be announced in the House.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kootenay West.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I have been patient in that regard—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I will allow the hon. member a supplementary, but we have only a few minutes left.

Mr. Alexander: Could the minister be more definite in that regard and assure the House that there is a possibility he might have the policy before the House before the end of the year?

Mr. Munro: I would like to accommodate the hon. member, but I cannot add anything further to what I have already said.

WAR MEASURES ACT—DESTRUCTION OF PHOTOGRAPHS AND FINGERPRINTS OF THOSE RELEASED WITHOUT CHARGE

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. Has any move been made to have the photographs and fingerprints destroyed of the 359 individuals who were arrested under the War Measures Act and released without charge?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): No, Mr. Speaker, not that I know of.

ISSUANCE OF INSURANCE CARDS TO NON-CANADIANS

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Labour.

Is he in a position to reply today to the question I directed to him on October 29, and I quote in part:

—whether the Unemployment Insurance Commission has the authority to issue social insurance cards to individuals who are not recognized as Canadians, such as American Army deserters, or to other classes of individuals who have entered Canada illegally?

Mr. Speaker: I think such a question should be put on the order paper. I apologize to the hon. member if, so to speak, I lost the question since it was asked earlier. On thinking it over, however, I think it would be better to put it on the order paper.

TRANSPORT

FREIGHT RATE LEVEL IN PRAIRIE PROVINCES—ACTION TO REMOVE DISCRIMINATION

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the very high freight rates prevailing in the Prairie provinces and particularly in northern Alberta where the freight rate structure is now at the peak for North America, what plans, if any, has the government in mind to rectify this discriminatory situation?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I could answer that question without more definitive information.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I had some doubt as to the question. Perhaps the hon. member might make it more specific. It seems to me he is inviting the minister to make a statement of a very general nature. If he could make the question more specific it might be easier for the Chair to allow it.

Mr. Southam: Then, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister if he would consult with his colleague the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs with a view to looking into what appears to be discriminatory rates in a captive freight rate area since this is a matter of deep concern to the people of western Canada?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I would go further than that. I might advise the hon. member and the House that I have initiated talks with the officials and the premiers of the prairie provinces with a view to obtaining their general reaction to the current freight rate situation and to see what recommendations they might have for improvement.

REPORTED REDUCTION OF RCMP PERSONNEL ENGAGED IN SEARCH FOR KIDNAPPERS AND MURDERERS

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I would like the permission of the House to supplement a reply I made earlier to a question asked by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands concerning the number of RCMP in the Montreal area working on the current case. There has been no reduction of manpower working on this matter by the RCMP.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order affecting the business of the House for tomorrow. It is the intention of the government, if the item of business now to be called is not completed today, to continue with it tomorrow. Therefore we will not call an opposition day tomorrow.

Mr. Baldwin: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister whether he has given any thought, if the consideration of the bill which we are to consider today and possibly tomorrow should not be completed, to whether or not the government is prepared to sit throughout tomorrow until the business is concluded?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, we would be happy to consider that.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PUBLIC ORDER (TEMPORARY MEASURES) ACT, 1970

PROVISION OF EMERGENCY POWERS FOR PRESERVATION OF PUBLIC ORDER

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice) moved that Bill C-181, to provide temporary emergency powers for the preservation of public order in Canada, be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

• (3:00 p.m.)

He said: Mr. Speaker, we are beginning the debate this afternoon upon a bill which fulfills the commitment given by this government and made before the final vote was taken upon the resolution of this House which endorsed the proclamation by the government of the War Measures Act. The commitment given by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen), the government House Leader, was that within a month of that date, October 19, we would bring in the bill. We have brought in the bill within two weeks of that time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): This bill is designed to replace the regulations made pursuant to the War Measures Act on October 16. It is directed toward meeting the continuing threat of the Front de Libération du Québec in Quebec and to the relationship of Quebec within Canada. It is a temporary measure designed to meet what we hope will be a temporary phenomenon. The measure before the House is precise in its terms. If adopted by Parliament, it will revoke the proclamation which activated the power of the War Measures Act, a power that, I hasten to add, was not totally exercised under that act but was exercised only in a limited way.

The burden of what I have to say today will relate to the reasons for this bill and the threat that the bill is intended to meet. The purpose of the bill is to replace the regulations passed under the War Measures Act. During the two-day debate on October 16 and 17, the House of Commons debated whether or not the government had reason to invoke that act. This House has already, by an overwhelming vote, endorsed the proclamation of that act.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Subject to conditions.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I submit that the debate on this bill should not be a mere resurrection of the previous debate but that we should concentrate upon the nature and terms of the bill now before the House and the purpose that the bill is meant to achieve.

During the past two weeks the government has repeatedly been asked by members opposite to reveal the factual basis upon which the government acted. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) stated on Friday, October 23 in this House, and as he has reiterated on several occasions since then in the House, the country already knows the facts upon which we based our decision. We received written requests from the government of Quebec and from the civic administration of Montreal for immediate assistance in the face of what they called apprehended insurrection. A Quebec minister and a British diplomat had been kidnapped and governments had been held to ransom. Large amounts of dynamite had been stolen, were ready for use and had been used before. Arms and ammunition were in the possession of terrorists.

All this was against the background of an erosion of public will and confidence in the ability of the institutions of government and law enforcement agencies in Quebec to respond to this crisis. We do not have to explore plots or allegations of provisional governments to appreciate the acute sense of apprehension and fear in Quebec in those days preceding the proclamation of the War Measures Act.

Those who still continue to suggest that our decision had to be based upon some sort of tallying up, some sort of mathematical summary of the number of sticks of dyanmite that had been stolen, or the estimate of the number of terrorists involved with the FLQ and the number of specific instances of violence that had taken place, operate, I submit, from a misleading premise. Let there be no mistake: the government recognizes that the decision involved a value judgment, it involved an assessment by the government of all the available facts, but the decision of the government must be viewed against the total background of events in Quebec, events that form a continuum of change in the social fabric of that province.

I submit, Your Honour, that the state cannot be reasonably required to measure danger in the "nice balance of a jeweller's scale". These are words used by a Chief Justice of the United States, pronounced in the case of Gitlow v. New York in a statement that was later approved by Mr. Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes. The Chief Justice went on to say:

> A single revolutionary spark may kindle a fire that, smouldering for a time, may burst into a sweeping and destructive conflagration. It cannot reasonably be required to defer the adoption of measures for its own peace and safety until the revolutionary utterances lead to actual disturbances of the public peace or imminent or immediate danger of its own destruction; but it may, in the exercise of its judgment, suppress the threatened danger in its incipiency.

[Translation]

The government recognized and, from the beginning, expressed the opinion that the War Measures Act was "too blunt an instrument", to repeat words I used previously.

We recognized the need for more definite but flexible statutory instrument and we must review exactly what was involved when the War Measures Act was invoked.

Some of the criticisms aimed at the government in some circles were absolutely irresponsible and irrelevant. When the government invoked the War Measures Act, it changed the law of the land only to the extent of the change brought about by the regulations made under the act. Nothing else was law. The War Measures Act is only an enabling statute giving the government the power to make orders and regulations dealing with various number of matters.

But only the regulations are law and those defined by the government increased the powers of authorities charged with the application of the law or reduced the common rights of citizens to a very limited extent.

As a result of the regulations, arrest and investigation powers of the police have been extended in very specific circumstances and for a very limited period. These extended powers are solely procedural: the power to arrest without warrant, to detain for a limited period without indictment, to search without warrant and to suspend bail upon request of the Attorney General.

I am not underestimating these powers, nor will I deny that they restrict some of the procedural guarantees embodied in our regular criminal law. However, these powers have been vested in the authorities responsible for application of law, under control of a provincial Attorney General, with a specific purpose. They were created for a specific objective and aimed at the FLQ, which has been declared an illegal association, in regard to which new crimes have been defined as coming within the provisions of the law. But the other laws which, in Canada, govern other areas of activities have not been suspended.

After the horror, shame and disgust that Canadians experienced last month when confronted with the acts of the FLQ came a period of deep reflection on the part of millions of our fellow countrymen. We have witnessed the deep attachment of Canadians for Canada and their affection, their faith in a very special social order which is part of the Canadian soul.

This feeling of solidarity first revealed itself in the massive support given to the government and in the endorsement of its policy by this House. Others expressed a feeling of sadness and bitterness that in our country our most cherished liberties had to be suspended, even temporarily. I appreciate all these tokens of support such as the Prime Minister has foreseen them in his statement to the House on October 16.

• (3:10 p.m.)

[English]

This deep concern of Canadians everywhere is proof that we have in Canada a sensitive yet resilient society, a society capable of defending itself, yet not unaware of the costs that are associated with this defence, a society which does not permit itself to confuse the illness with the symptoms. I am proud, as a member of this House, that the expressions of steadfastness, of sadness and of questioning which have been heard in this chamber during the past two weeks have largely reflected the attitude of most Canadians. The vote recorded on October 19 makes it clear how responsive and basically reflective of public opinion is Parliament—as it should be.

But, Mr. Speaker, there have been a few other voices as well. Not confident voices. Not sad voices—hysterical voices, shrieking voices. We have heard them in this House, we heard them from Winnipeg, we heard them from Toronto. They said that the government acted out of emotion. They said this, and they shouted it emotionally. They said that the government acted for base political purposes. That is what they said, and they shouted that, again, emotionally. These voices, I submit to Your Honour, are yelling for their political lives.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I say to Your Honour that this shrillness is a hollow shrillness and that their thesis is preposterous. They say the government of Canada was wrong, the government of Quebec was wrong, the government of Montreal was wrong, that 190 members of this House were wrong and that every member of this House, of whatever party, elected from a Quebec constituency was wrong. They say we all overreacted.

Mr. Peters: Is this not possible?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I leave it to Your Honour and to this House to decide which party overreacted and which parties have been acting responsibly.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Fortunately, the hysteria, the forgetfulness—the forgetfulness of the facts that brought the train of events into motion—and the attribution of base political motives by these persons are not widespread nor have they the agreement of two many people. They did not even convince the Premier of Manitoba on Sunday and they certainly will not convince the millions of Canadians and people everywhere who have applauded Canada for standing up against terrorism and making terror a less credible device in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, to say, as these gentlemen have done, that the proclamation of the War Measures Act amounted to a suspension of all civil liberties in this country, as the leader of the NDP (Mr. Douglas) has said, is just not true. He talked of censorship, he talked of deportation, he talked of the wide powers of expropriation, he recited all the potential powers in the War Measures Act as if they had all been brought into force. Yet he ignored the fact that only the regulations have the force of law. He and the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) talked of the totalitarian powers invoked by the government. By describing the potential in the War Measures Act instead of directing criticism, which might have been constructive, to the regulations that alone have the force of law, they were misleading the Canadian people and I suggest to Your Honour they were being intellectually dishonest.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We have all read the reports of what went on in Winnipeg. The leader of the NDP drew a parallel between the implementation of the War Measures Act in Canada and the rise of the Nazis in Germany.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I do not know what interpretation to place on that parallel. I shall place as charitable an interpretation as I can on it. Perhaps he was comparing the terrorist tactics of the FLQ with the terrorist tactics of the Nazis in the thirties. But one thing is sure—history has recorded what happened to the Weimar republic. That republic, that democracy, did not know how to protect itself. I suggest that the Canadian government does know how to protect the people of Canada and we do know how to protect democracy in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The people of Canada understand and the people of Canada will remember.

Mr. Peters: Oh, shut up.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): This government, Mr. Speaker, accepts responsibility for what it has done. I submit to the House that to have refused a request from the government of Quebec, in the terms in which it was made and under the circumstances in which it was made, would have been gross irresponsibility. The action of the federal government was in response to written requests from the government of Quebec and the administration in Montreal. The army is deployed in Quebec because Quebec called for the army. Increased powers of apprehension and investigation are operating in Quebec because Quebec called on the federal government to equip it with these extra powers to deal with the FLQ. The three governments, federal, provincial and municipal, were acting in concert, acting within the respective mandates given to them under the Constitution by the people who elected them, and acting properly within the contours of a federal state.

This government has the confidence, and I believe in the last two weeks has enhanced the confidence it enjoys, of the Canadian people. The Premier of Quebec and his government recently received an overwhelming mandate from the people of Quebec. The mayor of Montreal won an overwhelming victory at the polls a week or so ago. To say, as the hon. member for York South has said, that this government acted for political motives is an insult not only to the members of this House but to the people of Montreal, the people of Quebec and the people of Canada.

Some hon. members may feel that the circumstances did not warrant that request from Quebec or that response from Ottawa. That is within the legitimate range of argument. That is their right and I submit that if they believe it, it is their duty to express that feeling. That I respect. But I believe that it is worth noting that to date not one of the members of this House from the province of Quebec has challenged either the necessity for what was done by the government nor the way in which it was done.

[Translation]

The legislation that we have presented in the form of this bill is intended to meet the present threat of the FLQ.

The events we went through make us aware of the vulnerability of our democratic institutions. To the extent that violence breaks out in a democracy, it indicates the failure or weakness of that system. But, as members of the House, we cannot accept the suicide of democracy by remaining passive before violence. Rather we should act—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We should not shrink even from using force in a legal and constitutional way in order to check the threat and to restore that atmosphere of stability and control that is the primary condition of any social progress. Only when we have achieved that stability shall we be able to tackle and solve efficiently the problems facing this nation.

• (3:20 p.m.)

I have already mentioned the genuine concern for civil liberties in these past few weeks. I share that concern. The enduring existence of those rights and freedoms enumerated in the Canadian Bill of Rights, the very essence of our democracy, is beyond dispute. For that reason their existence must be cherished and protected. However, it is not, and never has been, part of the democratic process that society should refrain from taking such steps as are necessary to protect itself and protect its citizens from being deprived of those very liberties and freedoms by organized criminals and anarchists. The most fundamental right of all, without which no others can be enjoyed, is the right to life itself. In this regard we must not lose sight of one paramount fact, and that is that the members of the FLQ have demonstrated beyond doubt their willingness to kill, no matter how innocent their victims might be.

Pierre Laporte was not the first person to die at the hands of the FLQ. Only a short time ago and within a few hundred yards of this House, an innocent woman, Madame Jeanne-d'Arc St-Germain, was killed in a bomb blast at National Defence headquarters in Ottawa, for which the FLQ claimed credit. There have been other similar tragedies; I shall not recite the unhappy catalogue.

For a government to refrain from taking the required action to deal with an organization like the FLQ would be the height of irresponsibility and folly; indeed, it would be the very negation of the concept of civil liberties as we have come to understand that concept. There are no civil liberties where there is no democratic government to secure them. Mr. Speaker, I cannot state this too strongly: No government entrusted with the security of its people and with the protection of the liberties of the people who conferred the mandate, the temporary power, upon them could have acted otherwise.

No government has a mandate to negotiate away its own existence or surrender the rights of its people. If it did, it would be acting treasonably to its own people while betraying itself. And to suggest, as some members of the opposition have, that because an insurrection did not occur, therefore it could not have been apprehended, is an exercise in false logic.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The FLQ is a revolutionary conspiracy. We do not have to read extensively to learn what men like Vallières and Gagnon really stand for. We need examine only brief passages from "Les Nègres Blancs d'Amerique" and copies of the publication of the comité central of the FLQ to understand what their tactics are. This FLQ literature lays out a pattern of revolution, escalating through different levels of action, violence and confrontation to the ultimate overthrow of the established order in Quebec and Canada. By their actions they deny the legitimate means of reform available to the political process. By their words and deeds they repudiate the rule of law. And as they do so, they seek its protection and seek to take advantage of it.

I have heard people say, "Don't overreact; you'll drive the FLQ underground."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: We heard that two weeks ago.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Drive them underground? They are already underground. This is already a clandestine movement of terror and anarchy.

An hon. Member: But you cannot find them.

[Translation]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Some revolutionaries like Vallières and Gagnon have rather strange attitudes as was noted by Hon. Justice Brossard of the Quebec Court of Appeal, in the case Vallières vs. Regina. Vallières had lodged an appeal to the Quebec Court of Appeal in connection with his conviction for manslaughter following the death of a woman killed in a Montreal bombing. The court granted him a new trial, because wrong instructions had been given the jury, but Justice Brossard said, and I quote:

> I take the liberty of pointing out the contradictory nature of the situation created by this appeal. The appellant owes those days of grace to legislation which, as can be seen from his writings, he looks down upon and which could remain a dead letter should the use of violence he is advocating in his writings be followed. It is so to speak without his co-operation and in disagreement with some pernicious ideas that he seems anxious to spread around that the principles of justice, the administration of which he puts in jeopardy, assure him the benefit of a nonsuit with respect to his conviction for manslaughter, his lawyers having appealed in his favour.

[English]

The regulations under the War Measures Act, Mr. Speaker, and the bill now before you and the House provide that their provisions shall be enforced by the provincial authorities. This is consistent with what is now, and what has been since confederation, the basic position in this country with respect to the enforcement of the criminal law. The enforcement of the Criminal Code, which embodies the largest part of our criminal law, is left to the provinces. The regulations which were brought into force on October 16 are in their nature criminal law, as are the provisions of this bill.

It has been suggested by some in this House and outside the House that the enforcement of the regulations and these special laws should not have been left to the provincial authorities. I disagree. In large measure, the police resources in the province of Quebec are provincial and municipal resources. In the main, the crown attorneys in the province are employed by the provincial government. Furthermore, the FLQ is largely and peculiarly a menace within Quebec. To hear some who object to provincial enforcement of these laws, one might be led to think that the government of Quebec is an irresponsible government rather than a government elected by the same electorate and by the same democratic processes as are 74 hon. members of this House.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I say that kind of talk and that kind of mentality is calculated to sow and nourish seeds of distrust and disunity in this country. What I have said applies to the province of Ontario and the province of British Columbia just as it applies to the province of Quebec. It is a fundamental principle of the enforcement of our criminal law.

In the course of the preparation of the bill now before the House, consideration was given to including in it legislation of a permanent nature that would permit the government of the day to deal with emergencies of the kind which we are now facing without having to resort to the all-embracing authority of the War Measures Act. As hon. members know, the War Measures Act confers upon the federal government the broadest powers to enact laws.

There is, I believe, some feeling that special laws should be enacted so as to permit the government of the day to deal with lawlessness or violence of an organized nature which extends beyond the ambit and the control of the ordinary criminal law. After a good deal of thought and consultation across Canada, within this House and within the caucus which supports the government, it was decided that the government should defer action on proposed permanent legislation in the hope that it would speed up consideration of the measure now before the House, so that the War Measures Act might be withdrawn as soon as possible.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

Mr. Peters: Why?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Because we wanted to introduce this bill which was more precise in its provisions than one that circumstances forced us to introduce in a time of emergency and crisis.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We also had the thought in mind that proposals for permanent legislation might receive better and more mature consideration on another occasion because, Mr. Speaker, a climate of crisis does not nourish the calm deliberation that the delicate balance between collective security and individual liberties and rights requires.

[Translation]

Hon. members have had a chance since October 16 to familiarize themselves with the Regulations which because of their significance they certainly examined at length. In view of the circumstances, I do not wish to take too much of your time in going back over them. I merely want to point out a few differences between the Regulations and this bill.

The bill was phrased in such a way as to limit further its application. It deals specifically with the Front de libération du Québec and its attempts to resort to force and crime as a means to operate a change in government in Canada, and especially with regards to the province of Quebec or its relationship to Canada.

The bill is aimed at reducing to some extent the presumptions of affiliation with the illegal association as compared with those provided for in the Regulations; furthermore, the periods of detention pending the filing of an indictment have been reduced significantly as compared with those specified in the Regulations.

On the other hand, we have clarified the way the Canadian Bill of Rights will apply to persons who have been arrested, held in jail or convicted under the new law, and it is provided that the rights stated in paragraphs (a) to (g) of Section 2 of the Canadian Bill of Rights will apply with two exceptions. Among the rights which will still apply to arrested or detained persons is the right to retain counsel without delay.

I have to mention also that this bill, like the Regulations, provides for expediting the trial of a person charged with an offence and detained in custody without bail. Indeed, this is a special legislation because it is not generally offered to persons charged with an offence under the ordinary provisions of criminal law.

I should like to make another remark about this law. Once it is implemented, the government intends to repeal it as soon as the threat to freedom and to the constitutional government of this country is brought to heel and settled.

Hon. members will see that the last clause of the bill gives much freedom and flexibility in that field. The government very much hopes that circumstances will soon allow such action.

• (3:30 p.m.)

[English]

Why the need for special legislation, Mr. Speaker? What are the inadequacies in our existing criminal law? The existing criminal law is not designed to cope with a group or groups of persons organized on a continuing basis with a fanatic dedication to achieving governmental change by resorting to the commission of crime which, of course, is the nature and purpose and organization of the FLQ. While the Criminal Code deals with treason and sedition, it does not do so in relation to an organized group of the kind mentioned. It deals only with the criminal conduct of individuals, which is not necessarily related to the existence of an identifiable group such as the FLQ.

It follows that no matter how criminal in nature an organization might be, membership in itself may not be unlawful. For obvious reasons, the government would not under ordinary circumstances seek to make membership in any organization a crime in itself. There must be severe limitations on that kind of approach because it is one that can easily lead to unwarranted abuse. We recognize that. On the other hand, it must be self-evident that a point can be reached where that course of action is both necessary and justified—and in the view of the government it has been reached with respect to the FLQ. I say that because unless an organization like the FLQ is made illegal, its ability to exist and function is largely unimpaired. The reason for this is that the FLQ can and does, in addition to the criminal behaviour of its membership, pay lip service to causes that are perfectly legitimate; causes such as unemployment, inadequate housing, grievances of taxi drivers, and so on. In the result, persons can with impunity identify with and support the FLQ financially or otherwise by simply pointing to legitimate causes of the kind just mentioned.

Unless, therefore, it can be shown beyond reasonable doubt that an FLQ supporter has stolen dynamite, committed robbery, murder or some other crime, he is beyond the reach of the ordinary law. That is why the organization itself is being made unlawful. When the conclusion is reached that society must defend itself against the very existence of an organization like the FLQ, then that group and support of it must be outlawed. This is what the emergency regulations did, and that is what this bill proposes to do. The aim of outlawing the organization is to render it ineffective to the greatest extent possible by placing its membership in jeopardy, eliminating sources of support, crippling its ability to make propaganda, making communication on its behalf criminal, and so on.

There are two other special measures in the emergency regulations and in the bill which do not exist in the ordinary criminal law. The first is the authority to arrest without warrant where there is reason to suspect that a person is a member of the unlawful association or has committed, or is about to commit, any of the offences prescribed in section 4 of the regulations or clause 4 of the bill. This requirement is less stringent than that contained in the Criminal Code, which requires the existence of reasonable and probable grounds to believe that an indictable offence has been committed.

Secondly, under the provisions of the bill, law enforcement authorities will be allowed a maximum of seven days—which is a reduction from the 21 days in the regulations—to develop any leads they may acquire against a person arrested on suspicion. Under the ordinary rules of the criminal law, a person who has been arrested and detained must be charged and brought before a justice within 24 hours.

Mention should also be made, Mr. Speaker, of the special provision regarding search and the provision relating to the refusal of bail. These special measures undoubtedly facilitate investigations into suspected violations of the emergency laws and, just as important, suspected violations of other offences under existing criminal law. They permit law enforcement authorities to detain suspected FLQ members and supporters who would otherwise be completely out of reach. They also give law enforcement authorities more time to develop a case against a suspect who by reason of his detention is not in a position to take steps to frustrate the investigation. There are risks involved. There are potential abuses. We have weighed them carefully and we have attempted, in so far as we can, to be of assistance to the Attorney General of Quebec and to ensure that these abuses are kept to a minimum. Those are the main arguments I wanted to submit for Your Honour's attention and the attention of the House.

October, 1970, was a watershed for this country. Canada changed. We have experienced what Toffler might call "future shock". It is not easy for a people unaccustomed to violence, seemingly secure in the belief that "It can't happen here", to sense that finally it has happened here. We are no longer immune from the contagion of violence that plagues parts of the world. Canada, someone said, has lost its innocence—and that may well be true. But it is a sad and even tragic commentary on our times that the experience of violence seems to be regarded as the final entry permit into the family of nations.

If Canadians were philosophically unprepared, if we were psychologically complacent, so was our law. After all, the law of a nation is the measure of its civilization. Our laws were moving, and will continue to move, toward giving individuals in this country more personal options, more equality and more appeals against those who govern. In a time of peace and tranquility, the impetus of law reform holds forth great promise; but I suppose it tends to leave us vulnerable in a time of violence or insurrection. Our criminal law was unprepared, both in substance and procedure, both operationally and philosophically, to deal with the kind of terrorist activity and violence which we have witnessed in recent weeks. It was not meant for a society wherein terror and violence suddenly became synchronized.

The criminal law, as we have it now, assumes that a crime is primarily an individual act or is committed by a single individual. Our criminal law is not equipped fundamentally to deal with organized group violence or organized terrorism. Extra powers were needed to deal with this new phenomenon in Canada. The invocation of the War Measures Act and the present bill in more precise form represent the first and second response, by a society determined to protect itself and determined to preserve a climate in which individual liberty can flourish, to this new threat of violence.

I say to Your Honour that those of us in the government did what we had to do with great reluctance. We did what we did because it had to be done. Some of the measures we have had to adopt in the short run and for a short term are philosophically abhorrent to us. We intend as soon as we can to turn once more to the road of law reform and the continuing enhancement and protection of civil liberties. Perhaps this experience will prompt us to accelerate our priorities in social and economic justice, to humanize our institutions and to democratize the process by which our decisions are made. We have become aware of the fragility of a democratic order. The very strengths of democracy are also its weaknesses. The very liberties we strive to enshrine can become, by excess, the licence that can destroy. There is no freedom without order under law, and there can be no order under law without freedom.

The causes of violence run deep. The sources of the alienation that provokes such violence run deeper still. What we did to meet violence in the short run, which we do now with continued determination, must not deter us from what we need to do in the long run; rip out the social and economic abuses that breed the frustration and anger that brings out the worst violent streaks in men and women. Only if we pursue diligently the search for a new social and economic order will we achieve the fundamental purpose of this bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner). In his opening remarks he stated he hoped that all members who participate in the discussion of this bill will keep their minds focused on the bill and not spend too much time on the events of the past. He then launched into an inflammatory attack on some members of the House, not members of my party, who disagreed with the position he took.

This bill will replace the reliance the government has placed upon the War Measures Act. It is undoubtedly a vast improvement. From the beginning we demanded temporary legislation to provide the necessary powers to fight terrorism, but limited to that purpose. To say the least, the government was very reluctant to commit itself to such legislation. With all due respect to the Minister of Justice, I tried to get such an assurance from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

An hon. Member: That was the first day.

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

Mr. Stanfield: The Prime Minister made a very general statement that meant very little and which did not commit the government to anything. The second day, when I asked the Prime Minister whether he would make a firm commitment, he refused to do so.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: It was not until over the weekend that the government House Leader gave assurance that such a bill would be introduced within a month. The government has now in effect accepted our leadership in this matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: This party will support the bill on second reading although we will be introducing amendments to improve it. I remind the government that this does not absolve it from its responsibility to take the people of Canada into its confidence, and that government by rumour must stop. I accept the need for special measures of a temporary nature, as long as there are proper safeguards, to fight terroristic revolutionaries in Quebec. However, I wish to emphasize one point the minister dealt with but in my view did not bring into close focus, and that is that this bill will not stamp out threats of future terrorism. I believe the great majority of the people of Quebec realize this only too well. It is only through long-range attacks upon fundamental problems, including those of law and order, that we can hope to do this.

I believe that during the last two or three weeks we have seen Parliament react in an appropriate manner in showing its wares in a time of crisis. We believe there has been a demonstration of responsible opposition in attacking this crisis.

Mr. Stanfield: As a consequence of opposition insistence we have now before us a bill, although admittedly imperfect, which has unusual powers. However, they are certainly very restricted compared to the vast powers which the government had when it invoked the War Measures Act. These new powers will be much more limited than the excessive powers given to the authorities under the regulations of the War Measures Act, where there was no provision for an effective review of the exercise of the very extensive powers given under those regulations.

The minister again raised the question of the provinces exercising responsibility. I do not want to go over that ground again, but I do want to say that a federal government which creates exemptions from the traditional procedures of the criminal law must surely accept some responsibility in connection with the exercise of those exempted powers.

There were some faults in the initial regulations adopted by the government. First, they were in force throughout Canada. Second, they provided for long periods of detention without a charge being laid. This afternoon we learned that 228 people were detained for more than seven days, of whom 180 were eventually released without a charge being laid. This is too lengthy a period of detention without a charge being laid. There was no provision for review and no provision has been made except for a group of persons interested in civil rights who have been authorized to visit the prisoners. I have not yet seen a report by that committee, but I understand they were not too pleased with the conditions in one city where persons were being detained. It was found that the only person still detained, although he tried to see his lawyer and to communicate with his family was refused that permission. Apparently, the group that visited him was able to make the necessary arrangements. But that is a very far cry from an independent review board authorized, really, to review everything that is going on in connection with these detentions.

Fourth, there is the broad definition of illegal association in the initial regulations which has been very substantially narrowed in the new bill. Fifth, there is provision for retroactivity in the regulations: one can be convicted on the basis of evidence related to a time before the regulations came into effect. Unfortunately, this provision prevails in the bill, although its rigour has been lessened to some extent, and this constitutes an improvement.

So, with regard to the new bill there are a number of improvements. The definition of illegal association has been narrowed, a substantially shorter period of detention has been authorized in the absence of a charge being laid, there has been some improvement with regard to the provision about evidence and, as I understand it, there is a clearly assured right to counsel. These represent substantial improvements.

When we reach a later stage it will be more appropriate to talk about the specific defects of the bill, though I might mention one or two now. There is still no provision for a judicial or independent review. There is still provision for retroactivity to prevail, and there is still provision for a prisoner against whom a charge has been laid being detained for 90 days before there is any requirement to appear before a court and have a date set for trial, perhaps at some distant time in the future. It is not very obvious why such a provision, as it now stands, is essential to an effective fight against terrorists.

It is important to bear in mind that this bill is not based upon any assumption of apprehended insurrection. It is based, rather, upon recognition of the existence of an organization of ruthless terrorists whose purpose it is to try and change the government, or certain relations between governments, by force or criminal acts. We should all understand that this bill is not based upon an apprehended insurrection. I think it is now clear that the sooner a bill like this one was brought down, the better—a bill designed to provide the powers necessary to fight terrorists, but powers limited to the extent required to do the job which needs to be done.

The horror resulting from the kidnapping of James Cross, and from the kidnapping and murder of Pierre Laporte, was overwhelming. Not only was there horror but, obviously, real fear as to where the terrorists might strike next. There can be no doubt about this. There can be no question as to the necessity of tracking down these terrorists. There can be no question as to the authorities being given the tools necessary to do that job. This bill, in my view, provides those powers, although as I have suggested it lacks a few safeguards of a kind which would in no way impede the authorities in the effective prosecution of their duties.

I said a few minutes ago that government by rumour must end. This bill, as I have pointed out, is not based upon any apprehended insurrection, but the government invoked the War Measures Act on the basis of apprehended insurrection. While the Minister of Justice said he would concentrate on the future in the terms of this bill, he spent a good deal of time—and I do not object to that—going over the ground with respect to apprehended insurrection. However, I do not think he said anything new. I believe it is clear that when the government invoked the War Measures Act, the vast majority of Canadians put their trust in the government. I do not dispute that for a moment. They believed the government had facts which justified the action which it took. Indeed, they clearly applauded the government for taking this action, especially after the murder of Pierre Laporte. Clearly, the vast majority of the people of this country were fed up after years of terrorist activity culminating in the horror of that week or ten days. There is no question at all as to the need for vigorous action against the terrorists. Indeed, many of those who applauded the government for its action asked why more effective action had not been taken earlier.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Certainly, as the Minister of Justice has reminded us this afternoon, the plans of the FLQ did not flower overnight; the Minister of Justice and his associates did not discover these revolutionary documents just on the eve of invoking the War Measures Act. There were warnings, Mr. Speaker. I believe there were abortive attempts to kidnap diplomats in Montreal on two occasions earlier this year, and a great many people in Canada have been seriously concerned that no effective action was taken earlier. They were concerned as to how effective our security service is; concerned whether the government was warned, or not warned, by our security officers.

Unquestionably there was kidnapping, unequestionably there was murder, unquestionably there was terrorism and the most profound feeling of personal insecurity in the province of Quebec but, as I say, none of this amounted to grounds for apprehended insurrection. But the act having been invoked, the ministers of the Crown immediately began to create confusion as to exactly what constituted the insurrection which the government apprehended. The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) started it off on the Friday afternoon of the debate by talking about all sorts of dangers which existed in Montreal and Quebec.

The Minister of Justice, either then or shortly afterwards, said the government might never be able to disclose all the facts which moved it to act. Then the Prime Minister began the process of insisting that the public knew all the facts which had motivated the government's action, as the Minister of Justice repeated here this afternoon. Then, of course, came the intervention of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion in the Montreal election, an intervention which, however one might regard it and however charitable one might feel toward that particular minister, can only be described as a catastrophe of the first order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: As a result of this confusion created by conflicting statements made by ministers, journalists and others, people in opposition began to have doubts in their minds as to what really had motivated the government. This uneasiness was not restricted to those outside the government or outside the ranks of those supporting the government. It is clear that people in high places spread the rumour of a plot to overthrow the duly elected government of the province of Quebec. Mr. Speaker, I say categorically it is very obvious now that no such plot ever existed. I want to say to the Prime Minister in his presence that I am very disappointed he should have allowed the impression to continue that such a plot might have existed when he knew perfectly well there was no such plot in existence.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Whether this was designed as a distraction, or whether someone was out to get Claude Ryan, I do not know and I express no view. But when there is no solid information and when conflicting statements are issued by ministers, what we have is government by rumour. There is a very ugly aspect to this business, Mr. Speaker, because on Monday, in Toronto, after I am sure it must have been apparent to every member of this House that no plot existed, the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Wahn) is reported in the press as follows:

> Mr. Wahn said the question facing the government then was whether the FLQ was moving into the fourth stage. He maintained that the government had then some evidence to indicate that it was.
> He cited "the evidence of treason or near treason of certain intellectuals in the province of Quebec".
> "A group of 16 or 17 leading intellectuals urged the government to accept all the terms of the FLQ," Mr. Wahn continued. "The object was to destroy the democratically-elected government of the province of Quebec".

Mr. Trudeau: What is wrong with that?

Mr. Stanfield: Did the Prime Minister ask me what is wrong with that? I disagreed with the opinion expressed by that group, including Claude Ryan, which urged that there should be some arrangement worked out involving the release of prisoners from Canadian jails, and I agreed with the stand being maintained by my right hon. friend and his colleagues. But to describe in that way the suggestion made by this group of men in Quebec, or to suggest that the editorial conference in the offices of Le Devoir or the conversations between Mr. Ryan and Mr. Saulnier are "treason or near treason" is—I was going to say McCarthyism, but I think it goes even beyond McCarthyism.

Mr. Fairweather: Unworthy of the Prime Minister.

Mr. MacEwan: It is Trudeauism.

Mr. Stanfield: No, it is not Trudeauism but it is unworthy of the Prime Minister and I hope he will do all he can to see that that sort of thing stops. As a result of all this and as a result of the rumours that have been spread, it is clear that there is an increasing demand for unequivocal information in regard to the apprehended insurrection. It is clear that some feel they have been taken in by the government, but I am not yet in that category. As far as I am concerned, despite the confusion created by conflicting statements made by ministers, and despite the red herrings about plots to replace the government of Quebec, I am still prepared to accept on trust that the government apprehended insurrection. However, like the people of this country I am still waiting to get the facts.

I expect the government before long to produce evidence, or at least indications, not of terrorism, not of kidnapping, not of murders, not of revolutionary plans, not of an intense feeling in Quebec of individual insecurity—all of which clearly existed—not simply to say that it has the confidence of the majority of the people of the country and that the majority of the people accept the fact that the government did apprehend insurrection, not merely to ask the people to continue their confidence in it, but to take the people of Canada into its confidence.

Mr. Stanfield: As I shall explain in a minute or two, I think this is particularly important as far as young Canadians are concerned. I repeat, there is no question about the need for action in connection with terrorism in the province of Quebec. The extraordinary thing to most of us here and to most of the people of the country is why this massive drive, this apparently massive effort against the terrorists seems so far to have produced so little in the way of results. I think Canadians are seriously disturbed about this.

I think we still need to know why Rose was not arrested when he was under surveillance before the Laporte murder. The Solicitor General (Mr. McIlraith) says there was not enough evidence to arrest him, and I have to accept his word for that. But why was no reward offered until nearly a month after the kidnapping of Mr. Cross and nearly two weeks after the invocation of the War Measures Act? Again, the Solicitor General says there was good reason for not doing so. All I can say is that there had better be good reason. At the proper time the people of this country are due for a full accounting in this regard.

The bill we are now considering is not based upon an apprehended insurrection, though I dare say the government would be quite happy if everybody forgot about the apprehended insurrection. The bill is based upon the recognition that the FLQ is the kind of organization that the Minister of Justice described—and I will not take the time of the House to go over that. Some may say that the special procedures referred to by the Minister of Justice and as set forth in this bill, special procedures that are much more restrictive than those in the regulations, are not necessary and will not be effective. At the moment we do not know whether this kind of measure is effective; we have to take a certain amount on faith. Certainly we have no evidence at all that terrorism in the province of Quebec is under control, even for the moment.

Some may say that the measures adopted in the bill will not stamp out terrorism in Quebec, and I very much agree with that. However, I hope they will help to catch the people involved in these atrocities and will help catch others who are actively engaged in FLQ activities. But these provisions will constitute no remedy for terrorism, no assurance that terrorism will not continue after the bill expires on April 30 next, or earlier if the government terminates the measure earlier. I believe that is a correct statement, and as I understand it, so do the people in the province of Quebec to whom I have talked. To say that the present threat of terror in Quebec justifies measures of the sort contained in the bill, provided that they are subject to adequate review, I think is only to state the obvious. These measures are required.

I believe the powers in the initial regulations were excessive, but I say there is sufficient insecurity in Quebec today to justify something along the lines of what is proposed in this bill moved for second reading by the Minister of Justice. However, I repeat again that the bill will not, and cannot, be expected to root out further terrorism in that province. Something like the present bill is necessary because the situation was allowed to get out of hand, but certainly something more is required for a solution in the longer term—perhaps better detection, perhaps better police work, perhaps a redefinition of crimes such as sedition.

Certainly, measures are necessary which are designed to remove serious social conditions and serious causes of dissatisfaction. One way in which the government could show the good faith the Minister of Justice was talking about earlier is by trying to do something real about the unemployment anticipated in Quebec this year, which may run as high as 15 per cent. This is the way the government can show it means some of the thoughts it has been expressing through the mouth of the Minister of Justice.

The point to emphasize today is that we cannot expect measures like those in this bill to be anything more than a temporary method to deal with terrorism, the threat of which is very likely to continue. When we deal with and consider this bill we cannot feel for a moment that we are solving the problem of terrorism in Quebec. We must consider what is necessary to ensure a reasonable degree of law and order in the province of Quebec in the future. Anything the government has done under the War Measures Act, or anything that may be done under this bill when it is enacted into law, will not guarantee that there will be no threat of terrorism in the future. If we are not careful, indeed we may increase that threat.

I do not support this bill because I believe it will root out all actual or incipient terrorists. I support it in principle because terrorism in Quebec is surely out of control, and to preserve the balance of security and democracy to which the Minister of Justice referred. This certainly requires a measure of this sort with some safeguards. The people of Quebec surely deserve this emphasis upon security, perhaps especially because those in authority seem to have been hardly competent in coping with terrorists to date. But a bill of this nature is not a permanent solution; it will not root out terrorists. I say that this government, this Parliament and the government of Quebec have to face that fact. There is no simple solution, but there is an old-fashioned virtue that might be helpful and the absence of which will do a lot of harm: I refer to the virtue of frankness and good faith.

Mr. Stanfield: I say this because it is important and it is necessary in avoiding the sort of disillusionment that can lead to radicalism and slippage into terrorism. We have not had that degree of frankness and openness from the government. The government resorted to the War Measures Act. I am quite prepared to accept the fact that the great majority of the people in Quebec do not question the rectitude of the government in invoking the War Measures Act and do not question that there was an apprehended insurrection. They do not care whether there was an apprehended insurrection; I am quite prepared to believe their main emotion was relief that the government acted. I fully accept that.

On the other hand, I say that many people, especially the young who tend to question the good faith of governments in any event, will ask questions. The claim of apprehended insurrection was a striking and dramatic move that evoked a fervour of approval in Quebec and throughout the country. But I suggest there are a great many young men and women in Canada, perhaps in Quebec especially, who question the establishment, especially after the sort of thing the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion did just before the election in Montreal. These young men and women will ask whether there was an apprehended insurrection or whether the establishment has once again put something over on them.

Mr. Speaker, I dare say the Prime Minister is quite entitled to believe that most Canadians accept his explanation. But that is not the main point for consideration when we are discussing this bill. This is a bill designed to deal with terrorism, and when we are talking about terrorism we are interested in trying to increase security within the rule of law. I say that the Prime Minister and the government therefore cannot be content today with the number of those who are content.

I say the government must remove the confusion and produce the evidence to clearly justify the finding it made, a finding not of terrorism, not of kidnapping, not of murder or intense insecurity but of apprehended insurrection. The government must produce that evidence. It has an obligation to the country, in the fight against terrorism, to make an honest effort to convince those who doubt, especially the young, that the government really did act with good faith and did not invent something. The government has this obligation particularly to those who might well become disillusioned and embittered toward the democratic process. Many of them readily become convinced that the establishment has perpetrated some sort of fraud, particularly, I say again, after the unfortunate intervention of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Unless there is frankness and such an attempt to convince, the government may well increase the fertility of our soil for future terroristic activity for more than this bill will reduce the likelihood of future terroristic activity. So, I support this bill on second reading. I am pleased the government has introduced the bill, but I suggest the government will not have discharged its full responsibility to Quebec and to Canada until it not only asks the people to have confidence in it but takes the people fully into its confidence.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question?

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Is the right hon. Prime Minister rising to ask a question?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, if I may.

• (4:20 p.m.)

[English]

I would ask the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) if he would answer a question that I wanted to ask him, but did not want to interrupt his speech. He stated that he would support this bill—I believe I am quoting him—because terrorism in Quebec is sufficiently out of hand to require extraordinary measures. I ask the Leader of the Opposition if, in his opinion, it was sufficiently out of hand on October 15 or thereabouts to require extraordinary measures. If his answer is in the affirmative, could he tell us what extraordinary measures he means, and how would they have been brought about if he had the choice?

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I think there clearly was evidence involved in the kidnapping of Mr. Cross and Mr. Laporte of a need for extraordinary measures even before that. I am not aware of what intelligence the Prime Minister had prior to that time.

Mr. Trudeau: Let us assume I had none.

Mr. Stanfield: I think there is pretty good reason to believe that the government should have taken some extraordinary measures, perhaps something of the sort introduced here today, in anticipation. I do not know what information the Prime Minister or his associates had.

Mr. Trudeau: I am sorry the Leader of the Opposition did not understand my question. He said that today he will support this bill because today terrorism in Quebec is sufficiently out of hand. He is not doing so on the basis of rumours or of anything the government may have said; he is doing it today on the basis of his knowledge of the situation. I am asking him, on the basis of his knowledge of the situation—nothing the government might have said or believed, secretly or otherwise, on the basis of rumours, but on the basis of his information on October 15—does he think terrorism in Quebec is sufficiently out of hand to justify the introduction of this type of measure?

Mr. Stanfield: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I certainly would.

Mr. Woolliams: He said that in his speech.

Mr. MacInnis: It is not that the Prime Minister cannot answer the questions, but that he cannot ask them.

An hon. Member: He should have done it two years ago.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the legislation now before us, to place on the statute books the Public Order (Temporary Measures) Act, 1970, represents another chapter in a series of events that began with the kidnapping of the British diplomat James Cross on October 5, followed later by the kidnapping and obscene murder of labour minister Pierre Laporte.

At that time the members of the New Democratic Party in the House recognized the government's predicament. We gave it our support in refusing to accede to attempted blackmail by the FLQ, and we concurred in the federal government's decision to give to the provincial authorities all the help necessary to apprehend the guilty and to bring them to justice. Our quarrel with the government was when, in our opinion, they overreacted, panicked and invoked the War Measures Act and enacted public order regulations for which the government asked the approval of the House on October 16.

In his opening speech today the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) appealed to the House to forget past events and to deal with this measure, and then he spent three-quarters of his time defending the government's decision to invoke the War Measures Act and attacking those of us who had dared to vote against the government's motion presented to the House on October 16. I have no hesitation in saying that those of us who voted against that motion did so for two reasons: first, because we have not been given any evidence that there was a state of apprehended insurrection in this country and, second, because we could not approve the regulations enacted under the War Measures Act because they deprive Canadian citizens so extensively of basic civil liberties.

Let me deal briefly with those two questions. I said that we voted against the motion because we had no evidence that a state of apprehended insurrection obtained in this country. I want to say that now, more than two weeks since the war Measures Act was invoked, the government has not produced one shred of evidence, either publicly or privately, which would lead me to the conclusion that a state of apprehended insurrection existed in Canada on October 16. This is the kind of situation in which one cannot be dogmatic. It may be that when the government some day produces information which we do not now have, they may prove to be right; but as a Member of Parliament standing in my place I have no right to restrict the liberties of 21 million Canadians without adequate proof that a state of apprehended insurrection exists in this country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The Minister of Justice says that we have not managed to convince anybody. I tell my friends on the government side that they have not been able to convince their party. I wonder if they have read the statements of Professor Pauline Jewett, a former Liberal member of this House. I wonder if they have read the statements of Hon. Judy LaMarsh, a former member of the Liberal cabinet.

An hon. Member: Who is she?

An hon. Member: Rumours, rumours!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I wonder if they have read the statements of the Canadian Civil Liberties Union which has stood for years in this country as defenders of civil liberties. I wonder if hon. gentlemen opposite even take the trouble to read the daily press—

An hon. Member: We even listen to you.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): —and particularly to read the press which normally supports the Liberal Party. I wonder if they read the Toronto Daily Star, the Ottawa Citizen and the other papers across this country which normally support the Liberal Party but which have been extremely critical of two things: first, the government's refusal to give any information to the people of Canada which would substantiate their conclusion that there was a state of apprehended insurrection and, second, the severity of the regulations which they passed under the War Measures Act.

When the government introduced this motion asking the House to approve the invocation of the War Measures Act, the Minister of Justice, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) hinted darkly that the government possessed information which they could not give us at the time but which, when disclosed, would justify their action. Later, on October 21, I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) if we could have some of this information either publicly or, if it could not be given publicly at the moment, privately. The Prime Minister said the country has all the information there is. This, of course, seemed to contradict the statements of the Minister of Justice, and being an obedient servant the Minister of Justice told the House today that the country has all the information, that the House knows that there were kidnappings and a foul murder and that there was an anticipation of civil disorder. But that is not what the minister said to the House on October 16.

An hon. Member: You are a real doubting Thomas.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): What he said appears at page 215 of Hansard. The Minister of Justice said:

> It is my hope that some day the full details of the intelligence upon which the government acted can be made public, because until that day comes the people of Canada will not be able fully to appraise the course of action which has been taken by the government.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Where is this information which is some day going to be made known and which will fully justify and vindicate the government's action?

An hon. Member: Stanbury has it.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): We certainly do not have it. The people of Canada do not have it. All that the minister tells the House now is only, of course, what is common knowledge. There were these tragic kidnappings, and murders.

An hon. Member: And bombings.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): And some bombings, not only going on for the last few weeks but for the last few months. All of these were situations that could have been dealt with under the Criminal Code of Canada. If the government required more extensive powers under the Criminal Code, it could have come to this Parliament, which is the proper place to come, for the necessary powers to deal with the situation which it felt it could not deal with under the existing criminal law of Canada. The minister is only coming to do now what he should have done weeks ago or months ago, if the situation is such as he has described to the House today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Government members are still struggling vainly to find some answers for the press who almost daily have been asking the government, "Where is the evidence of this apprehended insurrection?" The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion tried to help out. He went on a Vancouver radio program. He had told the House that there were between 1,000 and 3,000 supporters of the FLQ who had worked their way into vital posts in Quebec, and that the FLQ possesses thousands of machine guns, rifles and bombs. Yet, Mr. Speaker, after nearly three weeks and having all the powers under the War Measures Act, so far as we know they have not found any cache of arms. They have arrested only 424 persons, of whom 359 have been released.

If the government knew there were these thousands of guns, bombs and machine guns, if they knew there were 1,000 to 3,000 FLQ people in high posts, they must have known who they were and where they were. But what has happened? Was the minister simply drawing on his imagination? Are the forces of law enforcement in this country so incompetent that they have not been able to apprehend any of the people referred to by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion?

Then the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion went one further. In order to explain this unusual procedure of invoking the War Measures Act for the first time in Canada's history in peacetime, he said this was done to prevent bloodshed on the eve of the Montreal municipal elections, and he linked the FRAP municipal political organization with the FLQ. Not to be outdone, the mayor of Montreal next day described FRAP as being a haven for terrorists, criminals and revolutionaries. Mr. Speaker, this is Canadian McCarthyism. This is guilt by association. All Canadians abhor the things which have been done by the FLQ, and so a minister of the Crown and the mayor of Canada's largest city immediately smear some political opponents by linking them in the public mind with the FLQ.

Mr. Pepin: Some of them linked themselves.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): This is the worst kind of McCarthyism. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald) had another alibi. He said that the reason for invoking the War Measures Act was that there were several stages to revolutions in other countries and that in Canada the final stage of a planned revolutionary timetable was about to begin. Revolution was about to break out in this country; the fourth and final stage was at hand. I ask, where are these revolutionaries? The combined police forces of Canada, of the province of Quebec and of the city of Montreal have been at work now for almost three weeks. Where are these revolutionaries? The Minister of Justice tells us today that out of 424 people who have been detained, 65 are still being held. If these 65 can start the revolution, they must be supermen or the government is trying to mislead the House and the people of this country.

Then, of course, in desperation the government found the final explanation for their unprecedented action, a plot for a coup d'état in Quebec. They said there was a plot to set up a provisional government in the province of Quebec. When I asked the Prime Minister about this, he said these were rumours started by the opposition and the press. But, Mr. Speaker, members of the press on television the night before last said they were told these stories by people very high up in the government. I asked if we could have an investigation to see who was telling the truth, but the Prime Minister did not seem to take kindly to that suggestion.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) has already quoted from the speech made in Toronto by the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Wahn), a supporter of the government. He is not in the opposition; he is not in the press gallery. I will not quote all of it because the Leader of the Opposition already quoted it, but I quote the last paragraph of what the hon. member said:

> As we now know, there was some evidence of a parallel government waiting in the wings, including members of elite groups such as the Estates-General.

Surely the government has a responsibility to produce such evidence. There is a hint of treason here. If the government knows those in Quebec who were planning unconstitutionally and illegitimately to take over the government of Quebec, it has a duty and a responsibility to apprehend them, bring them before the courts and charge them with treason. But if the discussions were about the possibility of forming a coalition government to meet a crisis, surely this is within the purview of the members of the National Assembly of Quebec. Are we to take it that the federal government invoked the War Measures Act in order to make sure that only a Liberal government continued to rule in the province of Quebec? If so, that represents a major intervention in the political affairs of a province.

Mr. Pepin: You will be quoted on that.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): We have been trying for nearly three weeks to get the government to give us some evidence of the apprehended insurrection. We shall continue to try to get that evidence. I think the fact that the government has dropped any reference to a state of apprehended insurrection in this legislation is proof positive that it is not prepared to substantiate its contention of October 16.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I think they have found that the Canadian people cannot be fooled about this.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): They have found that the newspapers cannot be fooled.

An hon. Member: You have been trying to do that for 30 years.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): This government should either put up or shut up. On the question of apprehended insurrection the government apparently has decided to shut up. I suggest that the government has failed to demonstrate that kidnappers and terrorists could not be dealt with under the wide powers now contained in the Criminal Code. Perhaps the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion can explain why the government did not consider the criminal law adequate. On the program to which I referred a few moments ago he said:

> It is not the individual action we are worried about now. It's this vast organization supported by bona fide organizations who are supporting, indirectly at least, the FLQ.

That is a serious statement, Mr. Speaker, and one which gives rise to many questions. Has the War Measures Act been used to settle political scores and to intimidate groups like the CNTU and the Quebec Federation of Labour? I think it is significant that to date most of those detained seem to be members of either FRAP or the Parti Quebeçois. Although I disagree with the separatists, it is not a crime to be one as long as they do not seek to use violence and unconstitutional means to advance their objectives.

The fact that the government felt it necessary to invoke the War Measures Act rather than come to Parliament and ask for any additional powers needed under the Criminal Code leads one to feel, from the statement made by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, that the motive is a much more serious one than we had appreciated on October 16. The second reason for our opposing the motion on October 16, Mr. Speaker, was that we considered the regulations enacted under the War Measures Act deprived Canadians of some of their most cherished, basic human rights. This afternoon the Minister of Justice said I had spoken frequently about the potential of the War Measures Act. Wherever I have discussed this matter I have spoken exclusively of the regulations which the government had passed under that act. In my opinion they are horrendous regulations, taking wide and sweeping powers.

As the persons who have been released get an opportunity to tell their story, I think it will become increasingly apparent that this wide net which the government spread under its regulations gathered in a great many more innoncent people than guilty people. We in the New Democratic Party recognize the need for prompt and energetic steps to stamp out terrorism, but we have insisted from the beginning that in the process of stamping out terrorism we must not abridge the freedoms that our people and our forefathers have won for us over the years.

One of the things that concerned us when the government brought in these regulations was the fact that while the government drafted them, the administration of them would be in the hands of the provincial Attorneys General and local police officers. What has been the result? The result is that day after day the Minister of Justice stated in answer to questions that this matter is under the jurisdiction of the Attorney General of the province of Quebec. When we asked whether the detainees were being held incommunicado, whether their families will be notified, whether they will be given the right of counsel, he said that he would be glad to take up this matter with the Attorney General of the province of Quebec.

I say to the Minister of Justice, through you, Mr. Speaker, "You cannot wash your hands of this responsibility. You drafted these regulations and you must accept responsibility if they were so all-embracing that they allowed those administering them to violate basic freedoms of the Canadian people."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): We need to know, and we are going to find out, how many persons were wrongfully arrested and detained. Will there be any compensation for those who have lost time from their employment? How many have lost their jobs as a result of being arrested? How many were held for days and then questioned for only a few minutes? How many were held incommunicado throughout the entire period of their detention?

The minister told us today that none of the 65 still detained have been charged. When we asked how many will be charged, the minister said he did not know because any charges will be laid by the Attorney General of the province of Quebec. This government has nothing to do with that. That is why it is such a serious matter for a government to pass regulations of a sweeping restrictive nature such as those now in effect, when the administration is in the hands of those over whom the government has absolutely no control. That is why the New Democratic Party opposed the sweeping powers contained in these regulations.

An hon. Member: Some of them opposed.

An hon. Member: Not all of them.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I say to my friends in the backbench of the Liberal party that they may not understand but our members are allowed to vote according to conscience.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): We do not have a regiment of trained seals who just get up when the Prime Minister does. This is something that my friends across the way may find difficult to understand.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Quiet, seals.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): We recognize the need for the government to deal with this serious crisis but, as I have already said, we believe it could have been handled under the Criminal Code. We believe that Parliament would readily have extended the powers of the Criminal Code to deal with the emergency. When the government failed to do so, we pleaded with them to bring down specific legislation and, as members know, on October 17 the Prime Minister wrote to party leaders with two suggestions: first, that the government was considering a new statute that could be used in the future if civil disturbances or an apprehended insurrection were in prospect and, second, proposed legislation which would deal with the present specific situation arising out of the terrorist activities of the FLQ.

I agree with the Prime Minister's decision that the proposal of permanent legislation ought to be left until the excitement has abated so that such legislation may go to the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee. At that stage, all kinds of organizations should have an opportunity to present their views. When that legislation is put on the statute books of Canada it will be permanent legislation which can be invoked at any time, so it ought to be carefully considered.

On October 22, in reference to this bill I had delivered to the Prime Minister's office a letter setting forth our views on what we thought ought to be contained in permanent legislation. It also set forth our idea of the protection of civil liberties that ought to be incorporated in any emergency legislation to deal with the present situation.

In view of statements that have been made by the Minister of Justice on television and elsewhere, that there have been consultations with authorities across Canada and with parties in the House, I want to make it clear that the only consultation that has taken place—if it can be called a consultation—is the letter which I sent to the Prime Minister's office. We have not been consulted with respect to the legislation that is now before us. I am not saying that we should have been; I am simply making it clear that we were not consulted, to prevent any misunderstandings which might arise out of the statements made by the Minister of Justice.

I now wish to say something about the Public Order (Temporary Measures) Act, 1970. It represents a very considerable improvement over the War Measures Act regulations. In the first place, it is much more precise; it limits the powers contained in the legislation to the FLQ, to any successor of the FLQ or to any organization which advocates or promotes the means adopted by the FLQ. It is an improvement in that it reduces the length of detention before a charge can be laid from 21 days to seven days.

I think the greatest improvement, however, is that it brings within the ambit of the legislation section 2 (a) to 2(g) the Bill of Rights, with two minor provisos. This means that it guarantees the right to counsel, that it guarantees a fair hearing and that evidence secured by coercion in the period during which a person is detained cannot be used as evidence against him. It preserves the right of habeas corpus. All this is important. But what I wish to say to the minister is that the improvements which he is introducing now could have been in the regulations which were enacted under the War Measures Act on October 16. The fact that he has had to change these regulations when bringing down this bill is proof positive that we were right when we said the regulations under the War Measures Act were too sweeping, too restrictive and abridged too many of the basic freedoms of the Canadian people.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member is aware that as the regulations were and are drawn, the Canadian Bill of Rights is not excluded, except in the way I mentioned, and that this bill merely clarifies that situation. It is quite clear that the right to counsel and other rights were always maintained. I have said this in the House.

Mr. Orlikow: Tell that to the people who are in jail.

Mr. Woolliams: Then the law was broken.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): If those rights were retained, the minister ought to tell that to the Attorney General of Quebec, who said at a press conference that persons to be detained were to be held incommunicado. Surely, that was a violation of the Bill of Rights.

Mr. Fairweather: Why were injunctions needed when some persons wanted counsel?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): If the minister is correct and the Bill of Rights was in force even under the War Measures Act, the Attorney General could not have held people beyond 24 hours. Nevertheless, he has been holding them for about 21 days. Surely, the minister is not now telling us that the Bill of Rights continued to be operative despite the regulations under the War Measures Act? Certainly, if he does tell us that, he took no steps at all to make sure the provisions of the Bill of Rights were fully recognized and lived up to.

Mr. Woolliams: Don't blame the Attorney General of Quebec.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): We approve the changes which the government has effected, Mr. Speaker. We say this bill is an improvement over the War Measures Act regulations. Yet the bill is still an arbitrary and repressive measure and we view it with some misgivings. It still allows for 90 days of detention before the trial date has to be set. Bail can be denied if the Attorney General of the province decides to intervene.

Mr. Woolliams: Not for Hal Banks.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): One of the worst features of the bill is the retroactive provision that makes a person liable for punishment by reason of his membership in an unlawful organization even when that organization was not unlawful. This means that a young man who five years ago attended meetings of the FLQ but who has had no association with them since can, under clause 8, be arrested—and the onus would be on him to prove that he was not a member of the FLQ. He may be liable for five years imprisonment.

This retroactive feature I submit, Mr. Speaker, is in complete contravention of the declaration of human rights passed by the United Nations, a declaration to which Canada is a signatory. In article 11 of that Declaration of Human Rights, clause 2 says that no one shall be held guilty of any penal offence on account of any act or omission which did not constitute a penal offence under national or international law at the time when it was committed. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, in view of the editorial comments which have been made in newspapers right across Canada, that the minister would be well advised to re-examine this retroactive feature in the legislation. I can assure the minister that if he does not, we in this party will bring in amendments to give the House an opportunity to express itself on that question.

The legislation still retains the reverse onus which requires a person to prove, under certain circumstances, that he was not a member of an organization. That is in violation of the customary legal provision that everyone is considered innocent until proven guilty. This legislation—let us face it—provides for detention without charge, custody without bail and search without warrant. These are serious abridgements of civil liberties. We have asked repeatedly in this party, as have other members, that there be some provision for a commission of non-governmental people who would have the right to see those detained, make sure that their rights were being safeguarded, that they were obtaining the services of legal counsel and that they were not being ill treated or subject to coercion or duress.

I think we have to question whether such restrictive legislation is required in a situation which the government itself contends no longer constitutes an insurrection. I think Parliament should grant the police the powers necessary to apprehend terrorists and kidnappers, but I do not think the government has shown us that it needs powers as wide and as repressive as those which are contained in this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, we recognize the need for legislation to deal with the situation arising out of the terrorist activities of the FLQ. We are prepared to vote for second reading of this bill, for three reasons. First, it is the only way to revoke the War Measures Act. After all, we are not faced with the choice of this legislation or no legislation; we are faced with the choice of this legislation or continuing under the War Measures Act and the regulations enacted thereunder.

Second, although this legislation still contains some features to which we object strongly, it certainly is an improvement over the regulations under which we now operate. Third, we are prepared to vote in favour of this bill on second reading so that it can be dealt with in Committee of the Whole. We hope at that time the government will be prepared to accept amendments that will modify some of the more arbitrary and restrictive provisions of the bill.

I appeal to the Minister of Justice not to take an adamant position. Bearing in mind the comments that have been made by reputable writers across Canada, the law faculty of Osgoode Hall and by civil liberties organizations, I hope the minister will be prepared in Committee of the Whole to at least look sympathetically at any amendments which may be presented. In our opinion this measure should be of short duration. It will not do anything to resolve the basic problem which is posed by the existence of the FLQ. The sooner this kind of legislation is revoked, the better for Canada and for relations between the people of Quebec and the rest of Canada. Canadians have an uncomfortable feeling that these powers have been abused.

The Prime Minister said "repressive measures can be a dangerous trap". I fear that the government has fallen into that trap by lumping the FLQ, FRAP and separatists in the public mind. These groups may well have been lumped together in their own minds. How many young separatists who believed that separatism could be brought about peaceably now agree with the FLQ? How many members of FRAP who sought the Prime Minister's invitation to indulge in participatory democracy in Montreal are now disillusioned and convinced that the democratic process will not be allowed to operate? I think that the late Maurice Duplessis, the father of the padlock law, would laugh if he could see his former critic producing the legislation which is now before this House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent that the hon. member be permitted to conclude his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I thank the House for its indulgence. I will take just another few minutes. I believe that extra powers are necessary to ensure public security, but neither police nor troops are the final answer. Terrorist groups like the FLQ cannot flourish in societies where social justice and economic equity hold sway. Revolutionaries flourish where unemployment, social discontent and poverty degrade human life to the point of desperation.

There is an old saying: You can do anything with a bayonet but sit on it. The answer to the problem of the FLQ lies in prompt and effective measures to remove the frustration and sense of hopelessness that holds the alienated and disadvantaged in their grip. The test this winter will be what the government does about unemployment. If the government sits on its complacent assumption that all is well, then I believe that more police and more stringent laws will do little to prevent the spread of revolutionary movements.

This bill is designed to safeguard public order, but public order cannot be protected by force alone. The nation most secure is the one whose citizens are enabled to live useful and meaningful lives and to enjoy the benefits of their collective endeavours.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): This government and Parliament have the responsibility to deal with the causes of social discontent. The government must not content itself merely by passing repressive measures to restrain those who resort to unlawful means to express their frustration. To date there has been no indication that this government is going to remove the causes of social malaise which are prevalent in the country. Unless it does, we shall have more crises than we now have. They will become prevalent, not just in Quebec but in other parts of Canada.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great attention to the explanations of the hon. minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) regarding Bill C-181 which gives the government temporary emergency powers for maintaining public order in Canada.

I have also listened carefully to the comments of the hon. leader of the official opposition (Mr. Stanfield) as well as to those of the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Douglas). The three hon. members, without exception spoke about the need to protect order in Canada, to prevent a repetition of actions such as those we have been witnessing for three weeks. The three of them concluded their speech in the same way.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) spoke for 46 minutes and 30 seconds, of the merits of the legislation and for 1 minute and 30 seconds, towards the end of his speech, he told us about the need for economic and social reforms so as to prevent a repetition of what is happening now. The Leader of the Official Opposition said the same thing as well as the leader of the New Democratic Party.

Therefore, let us begin at the beginning. Let us establish the necessary economic and social reforms and then let us pass laws to protect public order. When there is no security and no liberty within the social order, the political order or the economic order, how can we protect the public welfare and order?

And, Mr. Speaker, I do not agree at all with the point of view of the NDP's leader, who just said: It is because there are poor people that we have to face the present situation. Let us look at the ones we are looking for today: Is Paul Rose a poor man? No, he is a professor who taught in Montreal and in Hull, a well-educated man rebelling against any established order.

Whether the country is governed by a Créditiste government, a tory government, an NDP government or the present Liberal government, there will aways be unruly people like Rose, Chartrand, Vallières, Gagnon, Lemieux and company. We must protect ourselves from such people. They are not destitute people, Mr. Speaker, but scoundrels, which is different. Only this does not prevent us from realizing that social ills exist.

A while ago, I saw government members from Quebec applauding the minister. It is all very well to applaud a statement to the effect that we need social and economic reforms, but they should also be implemented. For thirty years now, I have been clamouring high and low in the province of Quebec: The present system will be reformed by people of order, or else it will be destroyed by the others.

When I said that, 30 years ago, I was laughed at. To some I even sounded revolutionary. But today the revolution is with us. The ministers must be accompanied by soldiers to move about in Canada and in Quebec. Even the leader of the Ralliement créditiste has soldiers at his door, and that, in the province of Quebec!

Mr. Speaker, that is fine, but let the reforms be introduced! What reforms are needed in the province of Quebec where there are over 200,000 unemployed and over 100,000 families on social welfare, living off allowances of $125, $130, $140, or $150 a month? This year, some 300,000 students asked permission to earn a living, in their own country, but they could not find jobs. Employment was found for 300,000 of them but not for the 300,000 others; if those young people cannot find a place in Canadian society, what will they do? They will revolt. They will hitch-hike, drop in at the "Maison du Pêcheur" in Gaspé where they will meet Mr. Paul Rose, Mr. Vallières or Mr. Gagnon who will tell them: Get your bombs ready, get this or that ready, and go ahead.

Mr. Speaker, we deeply regret the kidnapping of Mr. Cross and the vicious murder of Pierre Laporte. However, I will say one thing: if last year, the government had acted when Mr. Lucien Saulnier disclosed to them not rumors, but facts which were taking place in Quebec, Mr. Laporte would still be alive today.

But no, they waited. They waited until there had been six deaths, bombs, assassinations. Indeed, until there had been violent demonstrations and, finally, they said: This time, the government of the province has asked us to act. One year ago, the federal government could have suggested to the province of Quebec and the city of Montreal to ask for assistance. In fact, the Montreal municipal authorities got help from the armed forces at the time of the policemen's strike.

You cannot forever refuse to assume your responsibilities. It has been a month since all the police forces of Canada have been put into action, and nothing has yet been found. They do not know who kidnapped Mr. Cross or who murdered Mr. Laporte. What is happening?

A Toronto Star newspaperman found Gerda Munsinger in Austria when all the police forces of Canada could not find her. That newspaperman had met Mrs. Munsinger. Would it not be a good idea to use that newspaperman to find those who have kidnapped Mr. Cross and who have murdered Pierre Laporte? The same newspaperman spent an evening on Hal Banks' boat in New York, but we could not find him when he was here. Indeed, we have a well organized judicial system! Not much is being found, and some say that to improve society, we must dry up the sources from which dissatisfaction springs.

Mr. Speaker, I voted wholeheartedly for the application of the War Measures Act. I do not regret it, for if I had to do it over again, I would do exactly the same thing. When the Prime Minister asked us leave to introduce his motion to revive the War Measures Act, I agreed 100 per cent and I do not withdraw my agreement. However, following some research, I think that we could well have had recourse to the Criminal Code.

Section 4 of the bill now before the House reads as follows:

A person who

(a) is or professes to be a member of the unlawful association—is guilty of an indictable offence—

Mr. Speaker, there are five or six paragraphs in that respect.

No provision refers to vicious murders such as that committed against the person of Pierre Laporte. Which punishment shall we impose to the offenders: life imprisonment or 20 years? Bill C-181 does not mention it. I believe that we should impose capital punishment in such circumstances.

We do support the bill, although we do not agree with all its provisions. This does not mean that we are proud of this government, since it waited until two political personalities had been kidnapped and held by revolutionary elements before doing something. Also it was very slow to act.

Mr. Pierre Laporte, Quebec Labour Minister and House Leader in the Bourassa government, has been viciously murdered by FLQ revolutionaries. Revolution in Quebec did not start yesterday. The revolutionaries have been known to the police forces for several years. They have proof of the existence of revolutionary movements since at least 1963.

It was the time of Pierre Bourgault and company and the time of the RIN. Violence also existed. When we talk of revolutionaries and revolution, we are not starting on a witch hunt as maintained by some people. This is no McCarthyism as said this afternoon by the NDP leader an expression which originated in the United States and which is abundantly used here by NDP members.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, I heard those people say that the War Measures Act deprived us completely of our liberties. I do not think any member, not even of the New Democratic Party, has been arrested, questioned or has felt his rights or liberties have been denied since the implementation of the measures.

Although Montreal has been held up as an example because of the last municipal election, I say that it is the first time in years that the people have felt secure enough to go and vote for the candidate of their choice.

Was any FRAP supporter molested or prevented from voting? They all went. However, Montrealers said no to the FLQ, to those of their kind, to those whom they have reason to doubt. That is what the people of Montreal did. Those in favour of FRAP, voted for it. If not any more voted for FRAP, it is because they did not hit it off. It is as simple as that. Fifty-two per cent of the people voted, more than ever before in the past 30 years. People felt secure. Not one voter was molested by any soldier, member of the RCMP or the provincial police. No telegraph. Usually, in peace time, when people enjoy freedom, baseball bats are used to keep voters away.

Nobody mentions that. No. They talk about the security of the people to vote. They claim it is a denial of individual freedom. How sensible! It is enlightening sometimes to hear people argue! They sound like an empty drum. And then, they wonder: How is it that people don't understand? It's simple.

In Montreal people who understood have shown it. They had the courage to stand up and get going. I do not very much appreciate the attitude of the 48 per cent who stayed home quietly and who will then say: Well, democracy is going to the devil. Of these 48 per cent some could not go to the poll, they had valid reasons for abstaining, but there are also cowards and others easily frightened who sit in their easy chairs at home because they do not have the courage to express their opinions. But 52 per cent of the voters—which was nevertheless a 30-year record in the history of Montreal—exercised their voting right giving a pat answer to agitators.

The revolutionaries have been publishing manuals since 1963, they publicly incite people to revolt and distribute literature expounding their revolutionary strategy. Everybody knows that.

During the last provincial election, I read a newspaper published by the students of the Limoilou CEGEP, in which they blamed the students of the Sainte-Foy CEGEP for not following in their footsteps. They did not mince their words.

Under the present legislation, those people could be arrested, because there was nothing to prevent it. Besides, the Prime Minister himself admitted it the other day, when he said that two phases of the FLQ revolution had been carried out and that some action was now needed to prevent the third phase, the one now in progress, from turning out to the advantage of the revolutionaries.

The first phase was aimed at stirring up social agitation. Social agitators first attempted to capitalize on the distress of the unemployed. It is always in the name of the workers, the poor and the destitute that such people operate. They always emphasize the labour power. It does exist throughout the world. In Cuba, it is in the name of the labour power that Castro made the revolution. Just go and see if the worker lives much better down there.

I went to Russia, where six million workers live in fear of the police. So much for the labour power! It is applied and controlled by those who stir up the workers, and then they are shamelessly exploited.

In Moscow, which has six million inhabitants, there are not as many cars as in Rouyn-Noranda. It is true, however, that there are no finance companies in Moscow. But the people in Moscow do a lot of walking, believe me. I saw it for myself.

Mr. Speaker, there are people who would want to enforce that system in Canada, people like Michel Chartrand, Marcel Pepin and Laberge. The other day, I heard Messrs. Pepin, Laberge, Charbonneau and Claude Ryan—the wax figure from Le Devoir—speak against violence and say they are afraid of violence.

During 1970 there has been a strike in the building industry in the province of Quebec. At a certain time, Montreal bandits were paid to come in my area, Rouyn-Noranda, Val-d'Or, Malartic, to cause trouble among workers, ordering them to stop working on the construction site or else they would be murdered! They were people from the CNTU and the QFL: Laberge and Pepin! Have you heard them speak against violence? That is why I said in Quebec and I repeat in the House that Pepin, Laberge and Charbonneau are hypocrites, people who take advantage of the workers in Quebec and in Canada.

Socialists, Communists, whatever they are, they lie to the workers. They are the ones who at a certain time met with Mr. Ryan to see whether it would not be the right time to set up a provisional government. They can't get themselves elected through a democratic poll, so they hold little in camera meetings where they say: "Should Mr. Bourassa not be able to hold out, don't you think it would be well for us to form a government. René Lévesque, just like the others, hurriedly disavowed the FLQ as soon as things got out of hand in the province. There's one thing for sure: on April 29 last, all the FLQ members in Quebec voted for René Lévesque's party and worked for it.

Mr. Speaker, we know those social agitators. They were the "animators" of the Company of Young Canadians. Those fanatics even came into my region, and not only in one area. What did they sow? Hatred! Well paid by Ottawa—we were footing the bills—they sponsored telecasts at Rouyn-Noranda entitled "Le bloc". It will blocks, because they are there yet. I believe they still get money from the federal government, not in the name of the Company of Young Canadians but under some such scheme. Again this year taxpayers are forced to give two million dollars to subsidize programs such as that where people try to arouse workers against the more affluent, the "bourgeoisie" as they are called. Even people from the New Democratic Party call that bourgeoisie. A small shopkeeper at the corner of the street can make from $10,000 to $12,000 a year. One says: "This is a little bourgeois; let us crush him!" But if the member for York South (Mr. Lewis) earns $75,000 a year, that is fair enough, he is not a bourgeois. But the small wage earner who gets $10,000 or $12,000 a year is a bourgeois who must be crushed.

Others earn more than $10,000 or $12,000 a year within the New Democratic Party. People rise against the petits bourgeois, against the capitalists, saying they must all be downgraded so that poverty can be everywhere and the poor be given power to administer poverty in the country.

Mr. Speaker, the despair of young people unable to find adequate employment today is a ground for their upsurge, as everybody acknowledges it. They become members of organizations that will take extreme ways to change the present system.

This first stage, which began in 1963 with the explosion of FLQ bombs, continued with bloody manifestations organized by the Front de libération du Québec, by the Front d'action populaire and by the Mouvement pour l'intégration scolaire, headed by Mr. Lemieux, in Montreal. These groups specialized in propaganda, agitation, the ideological indoctrination of militants, and the creation of cells, citizens' committees, workers' committees, committees against the war in Viet Nam, committees for strike action, and underground and armed FLQ cells.

The government could not help knowing about what was going on. The Canadian government can not pretend it was not aware of this situation. During the famous Montreal police strike, the newspaper Le Devoir of October 14, under the heading "Police continues raids and search", said this:

Messrs. Paul Rose—

—that is the one who is being sought now—

—and Jacques Beaulne, who set up La Maison de Pêcheur, stated that their organization was in the process of setting up several such houses in various places in Quebec so as to continue their Percé experiment and that on Sunday—

—that is, the following Sunday—

—eight organizers from different areas of the province had met to talk about the future houses. These eight organizers have been arrested, said M. Rose, and we have not heard from them since.

We could say the same thing about what happened this year. The first messages received from the FLQ were typewritten. Have you noticed that since the first FLQ leaders or suspects have been arrested, typewritten messages have given way to handwritten notes? That means that those who used a typewriter were arrested and are now in jail. Those who can not type write by hand.

The same Paul Rose who talked to reporters of the newspaper Le Devoir is actively being sought by the police forces of Canada in connection with the killing of Pierre Laporte. As for the eight directors of the Maison du Pêcheur, they were undoubtedly leaders or founders of FLQ cells throughout the province of Quebec.

Moreover, the chairman of the Excutive Committee of the City of Montreal, Mr. Saulnier, made pathetic appeals to the central government last year, urging that it stopped financing the FLQ through the Company of Young Canadians. Here is what Mr. Saulnier had to say on October 11, as recorded on page 124 of the proceedings of the Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts, dated 27 November 1969. What are the avowed aims of the organization, of the Company of Young Canadians and the FLQ? I quote:

1. To agitate and organize marches in the educational institutions which bring forth—

—no desire in young people to study, no, but to skip classes.

—the interruption of academic pursuit;

Once the pupils have been delayed, let us stir them up so that teachers and the educational system will take the blame! Well thought.

2. To publish and distribute the names, addresses and phone numbers of industrial workers, thereby identifying them as targets;

A worker was told: Old boy, if you don't follow us, look out for your eight or nine year old kid; he may be kidnapped. Constant threats and intimidation. And those facts were well known in 1969!

3. To infiltrate situations which can develop into major conflicts;

—Stir up conflicts, hate, pit people against one another! If someone owns something and another has a little more, pit the former against the latter.

4. To promote social and political strife by teaching the methods of defining inaccessible demands with the admitted purpose of shaking the present social system from its roots;

5. To promote methods of action, and I quote, "which quickly bring about a revolutionary showdown";

6. To encourage the occupation of plants during strikes, in order to create "confrontations"— by workers. We witnessed this last summer, during the construction strike. Workers fought against one another. Some were called "scabs" because they did not want a strike. Pépin, Laberge and others are ths ones who say: "Respect the minority. Respect us, we are the minority." And how do they deal with the minority of employees who do not want to strike? Sometimes it is the majority who do not want to strike. They force a strike however with a majority obtained by working up union members. Pépin and Laberge know the trick. These people accuse me on television. They accuse me because I tell them in the face what their workers are afraid to tell them. These workers think exactly as I do and the union leaders know it.

When a strike is called, people who usually work together start fighting each other. One group wants to strike and the other does not. In the meantime, the leaders keep drawing their pay. They say: This is democracy, we have to protect our union rights. Then the rank and file are punished in the name of the union movement because they did not want to strike. Neither big Pépin nor Laberge actually suffer from a strike. It is the workers who must bear for months the consequences of a costly strike.

I continue with Mr. Saulnier's statement:

7. To distribute written information on Communist action in other countries.

After all that I was not surprised by the proclamation of the War Measures Act. Among I do not know how many hundreds of letters I received there were two letters of protest one of which bore the signature of the Communist party of Toronto whereas the other one was signed by the labour leaders Laberge and Pépin from Montréal. Two others were unsigned: one from Montreal and one from Québec, which makes altogether four protests.

However, I received letters of congratulations from everywhere. I even received letters which I could show to my hon. friend, the leader of the New Democratic party. One of them came from a former member of his party who ran three times as an NDP candidate in British Columbia. He has just sent back his membership card because the leader of the NDP would not take a stand to maintain law and order in the province of Quebec. He says it bluntly in his letter. Moreover, the leader of the NDP has certainly received this letter and also the membership card!

Mr. Caouette: Last year, Mr. Saulnier called for a royal investigation in this respect so he would be able to state all the facts and provide names. He was denied this opportunity. I directed questions to the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) and to the Prime Minister but both replied that they could see no reason for it. A parliamentary committee was set up which established beyond all doubt the existence of seditious and subversive activities and of a terrorist movement operating in the province of Quebec. There was no reaction on the government's part. They waited until the terrorists had abducted Mr. Cross and murdered Pierre Laporte before introducing appropriate legislation.

Mr. Speaker, the government obviously could very well have invoked Section 46 of the Criminal Code to deal with the terrorists.

Let us see now what punishment is provided under the Criminal Code for acts of treason. Paragraph (b), subsection 1, Section 44 of the Criminal Code reads as follows:

47. (1) everyone who commits treason is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable—

(b) to be sentenced to death or to imprisonment for life if he is guilty of an offence under paragraph (d)—

—that is if he—

—(d) uses force or violence for the purpose of overthrowing the government of Canada or a province;

So, it was the Criminal Code that was in question and not some provincial legislation, if Ottawa could take a stand without consulting anyone.

That is why we do not understand why the federal government has not invoked the sections of the Criminal Code concerning treason to carry out its fight against FLQ terrorists. It was treason since they resorted to violence to overthrow the government and destroy the established order.

The FLQ manifesto said among other things:

The Front de Libération du Québec wants the total independence of Quebecers.

Further on, the FLQ appealed to the workers asking them to revolt, to take over plants, machines, schools and universities. Here is what the manifesto said and I quote:

"Workers in production, in mines, in the forests; workers in services; teachers and students; take what belongs to you—

It seems to me it was obvious enough:

Workers of Quebec, start from today to take what belongs to you.

That is what the members of the FLQ are shouting. But instead of trying to destroy what belongs to others, why have they not tried to start building something themselves? They were too lazy to build anything. They are only interested in destroying what others build, what others have built. That was known, it is included in their manifesto. And I quote the FLQ:

Make your own revolution in your districts, at your places of work—

Revolt, club, kill! That was known, Mr. Speaker. But did the provisions of section 47 not enable us to arrest those people? This is what the manifesto said:

—an appeal to overthrow governments, to destroy the established order, an appeal to set up a revolutionary government in Quebec.

The government of Canada should have acted swiftly and used the powers granted by Section 46 of the Criminal Code.

We feel, Mr. Speaker, that the government had the necessary means to meet the emergency that prevailed in Montreal.

We recall previous situations when the terrorists, in October 1969, launched attacks in various places in the city of Montreal, and especially used violence against private property and the Murray Hill drivers, when a man lost his life.

More recently still, there was the Lapalme affair in Montreal. Who stirred up the Lapalme workers, who prevented them from reaching an agreement with the Postmaster General here, in Ottawa, when they were offered more security than they had ever had before? As I said not long ago in the House, Lapalme Inc. is unwilling to renew its contract. However its employees are losing their jobs. The union leaders tell the government: You should hire them. If I were to close my garage tomorrow morning, the union leader of my employees would say: Listen, Caouette has closed his garage, Ottawa is going to hire you! People would say that is ridiculous! In the circumstances, I feel that the government was quite generous when it offered all Lapalme employees a job in the civil service. They would have enjoyed greater security. But no! They would rather be driven to rebellion against the postal administration, the minister, G. Lapalme Inc. to the point of destroying postal trucks, beating truck drivers, breaking windows, slashing tires and destroying public property.

Did you hear Michel Chartrand, Pépin or Laberge protest against violence? No! Instead of advising the employees to join the public service—this would have been normal—they again used hatred to save face. But it did not help the workers, in fact they are still looking for jobs. Are those people defending our country? I doubt it.

The government had the necessary means to deal with the emergency situation in Montreal. Speaking of Murray Hill and Lapalme drivers, it was at the request of Montreal and Quebec authorities last year that our armed forces intervened and got the situation back to normal. This year, the armed forces were called in to deal with the situation. They were not told to go everywhere. No scandal arose because 400 out of six million people in Quebec have been questioned and detained. Not even 100 of them are still in jail. Some will be charged by the end of this week. They cannot all be charged at the same time. However, all of them have been questioned. We find unfortunate that it takes so long. We know that innocent people have been arrested. Quite so. But did anyone think that when Pierre Laporte was kidnapped he too was innocent? He had done no harm and he was viciously murdered. Mr. Speaker, Pierre Laporte did not ask to be killed!

Why then weep for those who are questioned? I do not like to see innocent people being arrested. No! But let us remember Mrs. Laporte and her children. Did anyone ask them permission to kidnap the head of the family? Was Mrs. Laporte's consent sought before the kidnapping of her husband? Was Pierre Laporte brought to trial before being so viciously and abominably killed? Was James Cross brought to trial to be kept in captivity? Is anyone commiserating with those families? Are we only going to talk here of those who have been arrested, did nothing and had nothing in common with the FLQ, etc.? No!

If those people were questioned, arrested, it is because there was something in the wind. It does not mean they are killers. I think that it is all right to question them.

What did the CBC do in those circumstances? I hope there is a CBC reporter in the press gallery. What were we shown on TV, in the evening, after a few suspects were released at Quebec? Two young girls, I think, were introduced to say that they had been arrested in the most shocking way, that they had only been questioned on the third day following their imprisonment! How shocking! Was the CBC seen to interview either Mrs. Laporte or her children? Did the CBC interview Mrs. Cross, or still, those in favour of the search for the bandits responsible for the kidnappings and the murder? No. They call upon the poor victims, those who have been spending four days in jail, questioned on the third day and realeased on the fourth, fifth or sixth. That is terrible.

Mr. Speaker, I say that there is still a clean-up to do in that field. And it has not started yet! This goes to prove that last year at this time the government had the necessary powers to intervene efficiently, yet nobody blamed the government or started a debate in the House, as was done during the last weeks by the two parties sitting on my right.

The government could also have availed itself, besides the War Measures Act recently enacted, of other acts which are part of our defensive weapons against those who would destroy our institutions, who attack public figures elected in a democratic way, who defy established order and attempt to overthrow existing governments.

I am referring to sections included in our Criminal Code under the general title of "Offenses against public order". I mean section 46 pertaining to treason, section 51 and 52 covering prohibited deeds and finally section 60 and 62 bearing on sedition.

About treason, section 46 states:

Every one commits treason who, in Canada,—
(d) uses force or violence for the purpose of overthrowing the government of Canada or a province;

In paragraph (f), the legislator has added:

Every one commits treason who, in Canada,
(f) conspires with any person to do anything mentioned in paragraphs (a) to (d);

—that is—

—(d) uses force or violence for the purpose of overthrowing the government—

So, such an act already existed! Finally, paragraph (g) of the same section 46 states that every one commits treason, who:

(g) forms an intention to——overthrow governments, through violence, and who—

—manifests that intention by an over act;—

We have had such manifestoes, such overt acts by the FLQ people and others before them.

Mr. Speaker, the sections of the Criminal Code I have just mentioned could have been immediately applied during the troubled period we are unfortunately going through.

Sections 51 and 52 of the Criminal Code which deal with prohibited acts, did enable the government to intervene more promptly and crush the revolution. Section 51 reads as follows:

Every one who does an act of violence in order to intimidate the Parliament of Canada or the legislature of a province is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for fourteen years.

Mr. Speaker, the FLQ manifesto which the authorities received, that was published in newspapers and broadcast over some radio stations were actually acts designed to intimidate and to fool the Canadian and the Quebec governments following the kidnapping of Messrs. Cross and Laporte and finally after the murder of Pierre Laporte.

Finally, the federal government and the Quebec government, who must enforce the provisions of the Criminal Code, had also other means of thwarting the moves of the terrorist elements, namely, all the sections of the Criminal Code dealing with sedition.

Sub-section 4 of section 60, of the Criminal Code gives the following definition of "seditious intention". Every one shall be presumed to have a seditious intention who:

(a) teaches or advocates, or

(b) publishes or circulates any writing that advocates the use, without the authority of law, of force as a means of accomplishing a governmental change within Canada.

In some of our colleges and universities, there are professors who are teaching revolution to our students.

The FLQ manifesto was surely a document of this type and it would have been reason enough for the governments to intervene quickly. All the more, Mr. Speaker, as the federal government, the RCMP, the Quebec government, the authorities of the city of Montreal, following raids conducted last year in the quarters of the FLQ and of the workers' committee of Saint-Henri, in the homes of some terrorists who were later indicted and convicted, had in their possession documents which clearly set forth the revolutionary policies of the FLQ and of the workers' committee of Saint-Henri, as well as their desire to overthrow the established order by force, and which provided technical information on the manufacture of bombs, Molotov cocktails and other weapons to fight police forces, police horses, etc. The Canadian government knows all about those documents, copies of which are actually in the hands of some hon. members.

Now, Mr. Speaker, section 62 of the Criminal Code—

• (5:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but I do so to advise the House that his time has expired. Does the hon. member have the consent of the House to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Public Order Act, 1970

• (5:50 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I will need only a couple of minutes more. I am grateful to my colleagues for their courtesy and will continue my remarks.

Mr. Speaker, section 62 of the Criminal Code provides the following penalties in cases of sedition:

> Every one who
> (a) speaks seditious words,
> (b) publishes a seditious libel, or
> (c) is a party to a seditious conspiracy, > is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for fourteen years.

It can therefore be said that the federal and Quebec governments had the necessary powers to deal with the FLQ revolutionaries and should have resorted to them earlier, last year, or two or three years ago.

We now have before us Bill C-181 purporting to grant emergency powers for the preservation of public order in Canada. I will say only a few words about this bill.

Our party would like that the provisions relating to treason, prohibited acts and sedition be incorporated into the new bill and also that the penalties for revolutionary elements be more severe and even that the death sentence be applied to those who will kidnap, seclude or murder people who do not share the revolutionary ideal of the FLQ or a similar group.

But that is not the most important thing. As I said at the beginning, in spite of our use of the army, the police and adoption of restrictive laws in order to maintain law and order, the same consequences will appear again if we tolerate the causes of the present bills.

These ills have an economic as well as a financial aspect. The Canadian government must propose bills tending to eliminate the misery produced by unemployment and poverty. And, by the way, I am saying that this will not yet eliminate completely the dangers which are threatening us. It is not because fellows like Rose and company are living in poverty that they rebel; it is because they wish to resort to violence as a substitute to the democratically elected governments.

It is all they want, it is all they aim at, regardless of the type of government we may have here. Let us put them in Eden, Mr. Speaker, and I think they would do exactly as Adam and Eve did: they would rebel against God, and would start to play with the apple.

Mr. Speaker, those ills have economic and financial causes, as I have said. The Canadian government must come up with legislations that would eradicate the destitution created by unemployment and poverty; the Canadian government must enable all the segments of the population to be properly housed, fed and clothed. The whole population, and not only the priviledged ones, must share in the assets and the riches that Canada and our economic system are in a position to supply to each and everyone.

Each and every Canadian citizen should feel free in his own home. Freedom is independence, freedom from want, and financial security.

We ask the Prime Minister, the government, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) and all members of this House to please consider frankly whatever reforms are needed and not merely beat about the bush and try to put poultices on wooden legs by stealing from those who own something to help those who own nothing because this is no solution to the problem.

And let me quote these words from a former President of the United States, Thomas Jefferson, and I think they would apply today just as they did in his own days:

[English]

> I believe the banking institutions are more dangerous to our liberties than standing armies. Already they have raised up a monied aristocracy that has set the government at defiance. The issuing power should be taken from the banks and restored to the people to whom it properly belongs.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the people of the province of Quebec did not ask for Pierre Laporte's death. The people of the province of Quebec, our poor, our destitute, our unemployed did not ask for the kidnapping of Mr. Cross and Mr. Laporte. They do not want their neighbour's death, no! They do not ask for the right to kill but for the right to live peacefully in their province and their country. These people, our poor in Montreal, for instance, who live in downtown slums and who are literally devoured by rats, do not ask to kill their fellow citizens, but to live decently in such a country as ours.

And at this stage, Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out that for the last two years the government has been telling us, for the sake of inflation and the financial system, but not for the sake of the human person, the right to live, the poorer Canadian, the housewife, the unemployed: Tighten your belt, accept privations. At the same time, it tells financiers: Raise your rates, keep exploiting misery, poverty and even man. The government is responsible for this situation. And we hear, in the name of inflation: We have no money to carry out this work, to erect these buildings or to provide services to the people. Then an emergency situation builds up in the province of Quebec: two abductions, bombings, etc. The Army is called up immediately and occupies the province. I approve this move. However, I wonder why inflation has not been invoked when it came to sending troops to Quebec. Have we heard the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Justice or even the Prime Minister say: We cannot afford to send you the Army, this is a time of inflation, we must tighten our belts. No! Once the Army pulls out of Quebec and the new legislation is in force, these people will keep on shouting, with reference to inflation: Tighten your belt. When the government says that, the government members applaud. That is logical. And then, when the members from the Montreal area return home, they are escorted by the Army, because they are afraid. Oh yes! They tolerate the causes of what they are afraid of. They say they are scared, and yet they tolerate the reasons for their fear. That is a little too much!

Mr. Speaker, the Créditistes have this to say: Instead of trying to reform individuals and institutions, how about beginning with a reform of the financial system of our country. Let us put money in the pockets of the citizens. That is what the poor people of Montreal want in order to buy food, clothes, a decent house where they could be happy, feel they are important, human beings. And when we will have tamed finance, we will put an end to revolutions, we will prevent revolutionaries from destroying a country like ours which I consider as one of the finest in the world. But let us try at least to recognize it and to act accordingly in order to save not only our country but the people who live in it and build it.

Public Order Act, 1970

Some hon. Members: Hear. hear.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock p.m.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

CANADIAN CITIZENSHIP ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING PERSONS FORMERLY MEMBERS OF ORGANIZATIONS CONSIDERED SUBVERSIVE

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-183, to amend the Canadian Citizenship Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Badanai: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is the granting of citizenship to persons to whom citizenship has been denied because of membership in organizations considered subversive but who have not been involved in any subversive activities and have no criminal record against them, and provided they can qualify for citizenship in every other respect.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ACTION TO ALLEVIATE PREDICTED WINTER UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister, now that the President of the Canadian Labour Congress has joined the Chairman of the Economic Council of Canada in painting the most dismal unemployment picture this winter for many years, whether he can tell the House what action the government proposes to take to alleviate unemployment during the coming winter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, first, the government has already adopted a number of measures aimed at stimulating economic expansion and reducing unemployment following progress in slowing price increases, as outlined by the Minister of Finance in the throne speech debate. Second, the March budget acknowledged that higher unemployment was a probable consequence of restraint measures adopted to deal with the inflation problem, which the Economic Council recently acknowledged represented a most serious shortfall from national goals. Both the OECD and the IMF have recently indicated that inflation is the most critical national and international economic problem, as well.

An hon. Member: What chapter is that?

An hon. Member: Read the new edition.

Mr. Trudeau: Third, the CLC also told the government in its March brief that it could expect a slowdown in the rate of wage and salary increases as a result of the restraint program, of which there is still no evidence. Organized labour's unrestrained efforts to obtain higher wages and salaries intensified the need for federal policy restraints—

An hon. Member: You are a good reader.

An hon. Member: Get a new speech writer.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the right hon. Prime Minister but I would think the statement he is making now is of a general nature. Of course, I appreciate that the question was also of a general nature but I believe this is the kind of statement that ought normally to be made on motions.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, am I right to assume from the answer given by the Prime Minister that he is resting upon the measures already taken, which it has been estimated will result in extraordinarily severe unemployment this winter? Can the Prime Minister say whether he intends to announce any additional measures? I ask this question with great emphasis at this time, Mr. Speaker, because it will obviously take some time to translate new measures into action that would have any effect. Is the Prime Minister prepared to announce new measures at this time or is he prepared to have the people suffer the degree of unemployment now predicted for this coming winter?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt whether this is a question. I am sure the Leader of the Opposition will appreciate with me that the latter part of the question makes it an argument. The first part, of course, is a legitimate question, and perhaps the right hon. Prime Minister would like to reply.

Mr. Trudeau: Any such announcement will be made in due course by the government, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I ask the Prime Minister in all sincerity whether the fine words, uttered by the Minister of Justice yesterday were simply words that are to be taken as such and to be followed by no action?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I would direct my supplementary question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the considerable trouble the Prime Minister has taken to prepare the statement he was reading from, I wonder whether he might wish to continue reading in case he might have something to say farther on about the interest rates of banks and the exorbitant profits they are making?

Mr. Trudeau: I would gladly read farther on—

Mr. MacEwan: He has his money in a sock so he wouldn't know.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

DISTRIBUTION OF NATIONAL DIVIDEND

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

In view of the government's intention to give fresh impetus to the Canadian economy, would the Prime Minister consider distributing a national dividend which would increase the purchasing power of Canadians?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the House would unanimously agree to the national dividend theory, the government would be glad to adopt it.

QUEBEC—ACTION TO ALLEVIATE UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Considering the high rate of unemployment in the province of Quebec, is the Prime Minister, in co-operation with the premier of Quebec, contemplating special action to provide jobs for the unemployed in Quebec, in order to counteract any further terrorist activities in that province?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will appreciate that his question is somewhat along the same lines as the one asked by the Leader of the Opposition. Thus, I do not think it is in order.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, I most respectfully suggest that my question applies more specifically to the province of Quebec and that the Prime Minister was preparing to make a reply which I would be happy to hear.

Mr. Speaker: That is exactly what I was afraid of.

[English]

UNEMPLOYMENT—PROVISION OF WINTER WORKS PROGRAMS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. In view of the estimate of the president of the Canadian Labour Congress that unemployment will reach 11 per cent of the total working force this winter, is the government giving consideration to co-operating with provinces such as Manitoba which have already announced substantial winter employment programs, in order to promote winter works programs to take up some of the slack?

[Mr. Saltsman.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North is asking a question much the same as that asked by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe. I was afraid that the question might be asked for all the provinces of Canada and that is why I thought I ought to intervene when the first one was asked. I do not want to be unfair to hon. members. The Prime Minister may wish to reply to both questions, the question asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North——and the question put by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Ricard).

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker—

[English]

—with regard to the latter question, it is based on false premises. I cannot blame the hon. member because he is basing himself on Mr. Macdonald's statements. But that, of course, is no assurance of veracity.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I am talking of Donald Macdonald of the Canadian Labour Congress.

That Mr. Macdonald appears to be confusing actual and seasonally adjusted unemployed figures. The seasonally adjusted rate for September was 6.9 per cent; the actual rate was 4.7 per cent. No responsible source, of course, which does not include Mr. Macdonald, has predicted a seasonally adjusted rate of 11 per cent or even 9 per cent this winter.

Mr. Orlikow: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Prime Minister whether the government is giving consideration to a winter works program, supplemental to the regional development programs, in order to help to alleviate some of the very substantial unemployment we have and will have this coming winter?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, as I have pointed out before, the winter works program totalled something less than $50 million. We have replaced it by manpower retraining and mobility programs to the tune of several hundreds of millions of dollars. It is typical of the NDP that they would want to go back to solutions which were discarded and discredited some time ago.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Stanfield: It is also typical of the government to do nothing.

SUGGESTED REPEGGING OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Is the government giving consideration to immediately repegging the Canadian dollar at approximately 95 cents? Otherwise, there will be really massive unemployment during the coming winter.

ACTION TO ALLEVIATE UNEMPLOYMENT IN CORNWALL

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In light of the fact that an additional 300 people have been laid off in the city of Cornwall by Courtaulds (Canada) Limited, this action adding to the already excessive rate of unemployment in this area—I ask Your Honour to be indulgent with me, especially for this question—and particularly since these lay-offs are a direct consequence of the unpegging of the dollar, may I ask the minister what steps the government intends to take to alleviate this very serious situation in the Cornwall area?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, this is something we are looking into right now.

Mr. Baldwin: How about putting up a provisional program?

Mr. Woolliams: The government has been looking for 3,000 FLQ members, and we have not seen them yet.

NATIONAL SECURITY

WAR MEASURES ACT—ARRESTS, RELEASES, CONTINUING DETENTIONS AND CHARGES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice. How many of the 65 persons who are still detained under the War Measures Act are to be charged today? Can the minister tell us how many will be charged under the War Measures Act and how many will be charged under the Criminal Code?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, perhaps by way of preliminary I can bring the hon. member up to date on the figures. As of 12.05 p.m. today, 429 people had been arrested, 372 have been released, 57 are still detained and one has been rearrested. My information is that at 2.30 this afternoon 28 persons will be arraigned and charged—27 in Montreal and one in Granby. There will be charges under the regulations and charges under the Criminal Code.

WAR MEASURES ACT—ABILITY OF RELATIVES TO VISIT PRISONERS—REPORTED MISTREATMENT OF THOSE DETAINED

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I ask the Minister of Justice if his attention has been drawn to the report of Mr. Jacques Hebert, the president of the civil liberties group in Montreal which has been investigating the conditions among the detainees and his complaint that few relatives have been advised that they can now visit the prisoners despite the assurance to the contrary of Mr. Choquette? He reports that there have been victims of psychological and sometimes physical methods that are absolutely unacceptable. Has the minister had an opportunity to look into this matter? If not, does he intend to look into it in order to see that the rights of persons who have been detained have been properly safeguarded?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): I am aware of the report to which the hon. member referred. The primary responsibility, of course, lies with the Attorney General of Quebec. I will be discussing that report with him.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Since the minister has the primary responsibility for drafting the regulations under which these people have been detained and the government has the sole responsibility for passing them, following his discussions with the Attorney General of Quebec will the minister make a report to the House on the alleged treatment of those who have been detained by the police authorities?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I will consider that suggestion, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): When the minister is making inquiries of the Minister of Justice of Quebec, will he ascertain whether a man named Manolesco, who is alleged to have been caught in the great sweep made under the War Measures Act, is being charged under that Act or is he simply being charged under the Criminal Code for practising witchcraft without a licence?

PUBLIC SERVICE

PARTICIPATION OF EMPLOYEES IN ELECTION CAMPAIGNS

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Could he tell the House if a public servant may, in the course of his duties state openly and officially that he is for a political party-during a campaign prior to a general election or a by-election?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is asking the Prime Minister for an opinion. He is asking him if a federal public servant may take part in an election campaign.

Obviously, he is asking him to express an opinion or to interpret an act. The question, in that sense, is out of order.

Mr. Rondeau: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

I apologize for having expressed myself badly, but I would like to know if there are regulations prohibiting a public servant from taking part officially or openly in the campaign of a political party during an election.

Mr. Speaker: Here again, I doubt that the question is in order. The hon. member is asking for a legal opinion. I do not want to be unfair to him, but if he is interested in a particular case and wishes to consider it at the time of adjournment, he can give the Chair notice to that effect.

QUEBEC—PRECAUTIONS AT PORTS OF DEPARTURE TO PREVENT ESCAPE OF MURDERERS, KIDNAPPERS AND OTHERS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. As the figures change rapidly from day to day I do not have the exact figures, but it has been stated there are 43 persons who cannot be found and at least those who committed the murder and kidnappings have not been found. Have there been any restrictions placed on the ports of departure in the province of Quebec to prevent these people leaving that province to go to another country where charges cannot be laid against them and from where Canada would be unable to extradite them?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): I cannot provide any details of that at the moment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Woolliams: This matter is very important with reference to the competent administration of the law. In view of the fact the minister does not have those details, will he take my question as notice and make a statement later in that regard?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I did not say that I do not have the details, Mr. Speaker, but I suggest it might not be in the interests of trying to apprehend the people involved if I were to reveal them.

Mr. Woolliams: Possibly I can narrow the question so that it does not involve the matter of security. Have any restrictions been placed on the ports with regard to people leaving the province of Quebec? Surely that would not affect security and it might even assist the police.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I can assure the hon. member that precautions were taken, Mr. Speaker.

TRADE

EFFECT OF PROPOSED NEW BRITISH TARIFFS ON CANADIAN EXPORTS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): I should like to direct this question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the announced intention of the British government to create new tariff rates to protect British farmers, a course which even precedes Britain's entry into the European Common Market, will the minister consider making an early statement to the House dealing especially with the effect such action may have on Canadian food exports both to Britain and to the ECM countries and, in addition, outline possible government action to protect Canadian interests?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The British have, indeed, announced such an intention, but it is understood by every country involved that discussions will take place within the context of the five-power agreement which provided for wheat imports by the United Kingdom. These discussions will now take place.

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): I should like to apply the preamble of the question which has just been asked to the particular subject of British Columbia lumber. Will the discussions the minister has mentioned cover exports of B.C. lumber to the United Kingdom market?

Mr. Pepin: One of the purposes of my recent trip to Europe was to establish optimum channels of communication with all the parties involved—the United Kingdom, the members of the European community, the new applicants and all countries concerned with the process of élargissement. This has been done. One thing which is of particular interest is that the British have identified 12 sensitive items; in their own view it would be damaging to the British economy if these were put under the exterior tariffs of the community. It so happens that eight or nine of these sensitive items are of great importance to Canada. We are already at work attempting to develop a sense of community of interest between Canada, the United Kingdom and the E.E.C. itself, trying to convince the community that maximum access, on the lowest possible tariff or, hopefully, no external tariff at all, would be in the interest of everyone involved.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I wonder when the minister will make the statement on the European Common Market and Canada's relations with it that I understood him to promise in reply to a question I asked him some weeks ago. I should like to know when the minister proposes to make a full statement instead of these spasmodic comments on partial aspects of the question.

Mr. Pepin: I have already told the Leader of the Opposition personally that I had some difficulty in bringing my report to the attention of my colleagues because of recent events. This has now been done and I shall be working in the coming days on a speech on this subject. I shall use the first opportunity to deliver it, either in the House or outside.

Mr. Rose: Since the minister did not tell us, may I ask him directly whether the 12 sensitive items he mentioned include lumber, plywood and pulp?

Mr. Pepin: I was trying to dodge the issue, Mr. Speaker, because I am not sure of which items in the forest product area are included.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pepin: Speaking from memory, I believe these items are included. Most of the items on the list have to do with basic products, the sort of thing the British economy needs to acquire at the best possible terms for transformation and conversion into its own exports.

Mr. Stanfield: Can I have an assurance from the minister that his statement will be made in the House, where,

I understand, he promised to make his statement in the first place, so that there may be some discussion in response to what he has to say?

Mr. Pepin: One of the possibilities open to the opposition is to provoke such a debate—I have in mind an occasion when the opposition might wish to chastise me, or the department, or the government with regard to an export situation which is now such that Canada expects a $2 billion surplus this year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, this is exactly the abuse of ministerial position and the rules of the House to which I am objecting.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Whether or not the minister thinks that we are attacking him or wishing to have a discussion on the difficulties confronting this country is not for him to decide. I should like him to give the assurance for which we asked.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the minister rising on a point of order?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to know which article in the rules forces me to make a speech on any subject.

Mr. MacInnis: Your own words do.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Annapolis Valley has a supplementary.

EUROPEAN COMMON MARKET AND CANADA'S AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS—DISCUSSION AT CONGRESS

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Is the question of the European Common Market and the position of Canada's agricultural products going to be a specific item for discussion when the agricultural congress meets at the end of the month? As a supplement to the question, may I ask when hon. members are going to receive their invitations to the congress which is only two weeks away?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the first part of the conference, which is the outlook conference to be held on November 23 and 24, will deal with the outlook for all agricultural products, taking into account such specific items as the hon. member mentioned. The second two days of the congress are specifically designed to deal with the recommendations contained in the task force report, and members of the agricultural committee will receive within the next day or two, if they have not received already, an invitation to attend that portion of the congress.

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I should like to ask the minister whether before this debate takes place, either on his own volition or otherwise, he will pay a visit to the province of British Columbia in order to discover that in fact lumber, plywood and pulp are important export commodities in the Canadian economy?

CASH POSITION OF FARMERS AT END OF 1970-71 CROP YEAR

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. Would the minister agree with the statement made by Mr. Runciman, president of United Grain Growers, that the cash position of the prairie grain farmer will not be any better at the end of the 1970-71 crop year than it was at the end of the present year?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows that a question asked in those terms is not in order.

THE LATE PIERRE LAPORTE

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO FAMILY

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to the Prime Minister. Is the government giving any consideration to presenting to the House of Commons a special vote to provide funds to give financial assistance to the Laporte family in view of the tremendous sacrifice that they have made for all Canadians?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question of the need of Mr. Laporte's family has been discussed privately between the government of Quebec and the federal government. At this time there is nothing more I can add. I hope that the suggestion made by the hon. member will not prove to be necessary.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister received a telegram from Liberal provincial member Timothy Reid, of Toronto, demanding that the federal government—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that this sort of question is not in order. I would not think that a question asking whether the Prime Minister had received a telegram from a member of a provincial House could be asked at this time.

Mr. McGrath: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: There cannot be a supplementary to a question that is out of order.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REACTIVATING OF DISBANDED INFANTRY BATTALIONS TO MAINTAIN INTERNAL SECURITY

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the necessity, as demonstrated during the past three weeks, of maintaining adequate numbers and suitable types of troops, particularly infantry, in order to maintain internal security and to render aid to the civil power in Canada, is consideration being given to reactivating the infantry battalions which have been disbanded during the past year?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, we are going to study very closely the outcome of the current activation of the forces in connection with their support of civil order. We will see to what extent the response has been adequate—I feel it has been fully adequate—and if any changes are indicated they will be announced in due course.

INDUSTRY

TEXTILE COMMISSION—COTTON AND POLYESTER FIBRE INQUIRY—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Mr. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Does he intend to make a statement in the House concerning the establishment of the Textile Review Board and the inquiry into the importation of cotton and polyester yarns?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker. All this is in agreement with the policy which I announced on May 14. Today I have issued a release giving the names of the three appointed commissioners who are: Messrs. Annis, St-Laurent and Campbell. One of the first tasks of the board will be to look into the cotton and polyester yarn situation.

TEXTILES—POSSIBILITY OF INCREASED COMPETITION FROM PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): At present Canadian textile producers are facing serious difficulties due to foreign competition. My question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is: Will Communist China be taking over Taiwan's quota on textiles, and will Canadian manufacturers be faced with increasing competition from imports from both countries?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker. The government of the People's Republic of China has its own voluntary restraint agreement with us with respect to some textile items and this will continue; no change is being made. There is no thought of transferring the Taiwan so-called quota to the Republic of China.

GRAIN

PLAN TO CONSOLIDATE PRAIRIE FARM UNITS—SUBMISSION TO AGRICULTURAL CONGRESS AND HOUSE

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): May I direct a question to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. Can the minister indicate to the House whether his general plan on the consolidation of farm units in the Prairie region, mentioned in his statement tabled in the House last week, will be ready for presentation to the coming agricultural congress which will meet in Ottawa?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I expect not, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gleave: Given the basic importance of such a farm consolidation plan, as mentioned in the report, can the minister indicate when it will be ready for presentation to the House?

Mr. Lang: No, Mr. Speaker.

INFORMATION CANADA

FEDERAL IDENTITY EMBLEM—CONSULTATION WITH DEPARTMENTS ON DESIGN

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the minister responsible for Information Canada. It is based on an answer tabled in the House on Monday of this week wherein the minister stated that the sum of $24,000 had been disbursed by his department to Communication Arts Centre Incorporated of Montreal for the design of the special emblem that departments are to use. Did the minister give consideration to soliciting the very valuable help that is available in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce in the designing of this new emblem?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister without Portfolio): There were consultations, Mr. Speaker, with that department as well as others.

GRAIN

WHEAT—FINAL PAYMENT UNDER ACREAGE REDUCTION PROGRAM

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Minister of Agriculture but he has apparently slipped into oblivion or gone somewhere. Perhaps the Minister of Manpower and Immigration might be able to answer it. Could he indicate when the final payment under the "lower income for tomorrow" program will be made?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think I can provide some information in that regard. I was informed last weekend that approximately 2,600 cheques had gone out and that the office was expecting to be mailing cheques at the rate of 2,500 a day starting last Monday, with the hope of having 80 per cent of the final cheques in the hands of the farmers by December 18.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EFFICIENT COMMUNICATION BETWEEN DEPARTMENT AND CANADIAN DELEGATION AT UNITED NATIONS

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

TAKEOVER OF RYERSON PRESS BY UNITED STATES COMPANY

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. What steps does his department propose to take to prevent the takeover of Ryerson press by a United States company?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am wondering whether this question was not asked before, though it may have been in other terms. If it was not, perhaps the minister might want to reply.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I pointed out in the House the other day that the only law in my department that might have any application at all is the Combines Investigation Act. I pointed out to the House that there was no evidence which indicated to me or my officials that the sale of Ryerson Press was made under circumstances which contravene any provision of the Combines Investigation Act. It may well be that we should have a new Combines Investigation Act with different provisions. That is why this subject was mentioned in the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister could inform the House if the government is contemplating the introduction of legislation which will protect other publishing firms in Canada from suffering the same fate in the future?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I do not think that question should be addressed to me. If the government has any such intention it will be announced in due course in the proper way.

Mr. McGrath: By that time there will be no companies left.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SOUTHEAST ASIA—REPORTED REQUEST BY MALAYSIA THAT CANADA APPROACH CHINA ON GUARANTEE OF NEUTRALITY

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. How has Canada responded to Malaysia's request that Canada should sound out China about joining other big powers in guaranteeing the neutrality of Southeast Asia, and does the government support such a solution to the difficulties in that part of the world?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think this question is based upon a misleading news report about an interview given by the Foreign Minister of Malaysia in which it was suggested he had made such a suggestion to me. He has since corrected that statement. We did talk about the situation in Southeast Asia but all the minister said was that he hoped that when Canada established relations with China we could discuss the problems of Malaysia with that country.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister directly whether or not he looks at the suggestion favourably?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I was not asked to express any view and I do not do so now.

APPOINTMENT OF PAUL GERIN-LAJOIE AS HEAD OF INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT AGENCY

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs when the appointment of the new head of CIDA will be announced, and whether it will be Mr. Gerin-Lajoie?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it was my understanding that the announcement had been made. Certainly the appointment has been made and the new head of CIDA is Mr. Paul Gerin-Lajoie.

LABOUR RELATIONS

RAILWAY WORKERS' WAGE DEMANDS—POSSIBLE WORK STOPPAGES—EXCESSIVE TRANSPORTATION COSTS

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. In view of the recent reports that labour unions representing some 85,000 railway and transport workers are demanding wage increases ranging up to 40 per cent, what steps is the minister or the government taking to prevent these demands from escalating into work stoppages and excessive increases in transportation costs, to the serious detriment of our national economy and especially of the farming industry?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should know that the railway unions in Canada are among the most responsible in the country, and I have no fear at all that their demands will lead to any wildcat strikes.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

COMPLETION OF DESTROYER CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM—EFFECT OF COST ON BUDGET

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Is he in a position to indicate what the future is for the DDH-280's, and can he assure the House that the program will be completed as near as possible to the original capability or role determined for these ships?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give a full indication at the moment about the program, but I can respond to the hon. member's earlier question by indicating that work is continuing on all four ships.

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I am sure we all remember the Bonaventure and I am wondering whether the minister can indicate what the cost over-run of this program will be?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am wondering whether that question is in order. If members wish, perhaps I should allow the minister to respond, but it seems to me this is the kind of information that normally should be sought by a written question.

Mr. Forrestall: Because this is important, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister could indicate that the defence budget will not be impaired as a result of an increase in the cost of this program?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): My understanding is that it will not be, Mr. Speaker.

AGRICULTURE

INCREASE IN DEPARTMENTAL STAFF ENGAGED IN PESTICIDE RESEARCH

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of a recent report printed in the Ottawa Journal on October 31, 1970, to the effect that the agricultural department's pesticide unit is vastly understaffed to meet the sharp increase in research needed on pesticides—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will allow the hon. member's question in a moment but I wonder whether it would not be more procedurally correct to ask the question directly rather than basing it on a newspaper item. I know this has been done before but I should like to encourage hon. members to ask questions directly rather than by quoting from newspaper reports. The hon. member may proceed with his question.

[Mr. Mackasey.]

Mr. Harding: I just have one more line.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Harding: In view of the sharp increase in research needed on pesticides and their effects on our environment, has the minister's department any plans to increase the professional and support staff required to do this essential research?

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am informed that progress is being made in locating and hiring additional staff. Plans are also being developed that could affect the organization as well as the number and composition of staff assigned to the administration of the Pest Control Products Act. It is easy to speculate on what changes might be made in an area of work that is expanding and very much in the news.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PROVISION OF JOBS FOR UNEMPLOYED PROFESSIONALS

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Labour.

Since the Professional Employment Council indicates that the number of jobs affecting directors, accountants, engineers and other professionals has declined by 29 per cent in the last 12 months and that the number of professionals looking for a new job has increased by 14 per cent during the same period, could the minister tell the House what he intends to do to reduce the number of educated unemployed people and to create stable jobs for the youth who wants—

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon. member will admit that his question is essentially the same that was asked today by the Leader of the Opposition, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe and others. I believe this question should not be asked again at this stage.

HUMAN RIGHTS

EFFECT OF QUEBEC BILL ON DOCTORS' CIVIL LIBERTIES

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice whether he is aware of the interference in the civil liberties of the medical profession by Quebec Bill CF-41, and does the Bill of Rights protect the individual liberties of doctors in that province?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Obviously the hon. member's question seeks a legal opinion from the Minister of Justice and I would not think it is in order.

REVISED STATUTES OF CANADA, 1970

AVAILABILITY BEFORE END OF YEAR

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice. In view of the fact that in a number of bills before us this session there is a precise reference to the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, can the minister say whether these Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, will be before us in this calendar year?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): I am optimistic that they will be, Mr. Speaker.

MANPOWER

SUCCESS OF RETRAINING PROGRAM IN PROVIDING JOBS

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (Southwestern Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and is supplementary to an answer given by the Prime Minister a little while ago. Can he make a statement to the House explaining whether the training and retraining program carried out by the department has been successful in providing jobs after these people have been retrained?

Mr. Speaker: I assume the hon. member is asking whether such a statement can be made on motions. It cannot be made now but the minister might want to reply in those terms.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am sure I could make a very effective speech, following the example of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the minister should not do that now. Orders of the day.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to rise on a point of order to ask the President of the Privy Council about the business of the House for the rest of this week and for next week.

Mr. MacEachen: The business for the remainder of today and until its completion will be the emergency powers bill, followed by the statutory instruments bill, the statistics bill, the packaging and labelling bill and the Buffalo-Fort Erie bridge bill. On Tuesday, November 10, the business of supply will be called for an opposition day under the auspices of the NDP. As the hon. member knows, Wednesday November 11, is Remembrance Day and the House will not sit on that day.

Mr. Baldwin: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister able to elaborate on his answer to my question yesterday about the government's intention with regard to the bill now before the House and the times of sittings with respect to that bill?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, it would be the intention of the government to suggest, after consultation, that today's sitting be extended if there were a real possibility of the bill being completed. However, it is difficult at this moment to anticipate what progress will be made this afternoon and it might be better if we reviewed the question informally shortly after eight o'clock this evening.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PUBLIC ORDER (TEMPORARY MEASURES) ACT, 1970

PROVISION OF EMERGENCY POWERS FOR PRESERVATION OF PUBLIC ORDER

The House resumed from Wednesday, November 4, consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) that Bill C-181, to provide temporary emergency powers for the preservation of public order in Canada, be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, it is frustrating and discouraging to note that there are still some persons and I emphasize "some persons" because the majority are with us inside and outside of this House who have not yet grasped the seriousness of the Quebec situation and who continue to doubt the need for this bill as well as for the emergency measures adopted on October 16. They continue to discuss the situation as if it were an academic exercise, an opportunity for political rhetoric, or a chance to score political points.

Yesterday the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) started off by triumphantly stating that "the government has now in effect accepted our leadership in this matter". What does that kind of statement add to a matter as serious as this? If the Leader of the Opposition has truly shown leadership, the Canadian people will recognize it, but I submit that leadership is shown by action and not by words. While the Leader of the Opposition accepted the bill in principle, he repeatedly attempted to pick at the government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). One minute he seemed to favour the bill and the next minute he did not. The Canadian people, and in particular the beleaguered people in the province of Quebec, are not concerned at this time with the winning of political or debating points. They expect us here, in Parliament, to take the situation seriously and to work together to find a just and peaceful solution to this problem.

I said there are those who are not convinced of the need for this bill and the emergency measures that were taken. They continue to demand evidence of the apprehended insurrection. For those of us who live in Quebec the evidence is obvious. I should point out that my home is in Montreal and my wife and children are still living there. We, in Montreal, have lived with the evidence and have known it intimately. We have heard the bombs blasting in the mail boxes, we have walked the streets where the blasts took place.

An hon. Member: Why don't you do something about it?

Mr. Allmand: We have worked and lived in the buildings which were partially blown apart. Some of us from Montreal knew Mr. Cross, and many of us knew Mr. Laporte. We did not know him as an image on television or as a name in the newspapers, but as one of our colleagues. We have also lived with, listened to and looked at those who call themselves the FLQ. We have heard their hate; we have felt their hostility, and not from a distance, as if we were watching a drama on cinema. We felt it at the St. Jean Baptiste parade riot in 1969, at the McGill Français march and at the riots at St. Leonard.

An hon. Member: Why did you not do something then?

Mr. Allmand: The opposition members are asking why we did not do something about it. We have been doing something about it. I wonder what they would have done if they had had the responsibility.

Mr. Orlikow: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member who has the floor should be allowed to continue his speech.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, many of us—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand the hon. member for Winnipeg North seeks permission of the hon. member to ask a question.

Mr. Allmand: Yes, Mr. Speaker, let him ask the question.

Mr. Orlikow: I wonder if the hon. member has any information for members on this side of the House as to what was the increase in the number of personnel in the RCMP assigned to the province of Quebec to look into this matter in the last three or four years since the bombings began.

Mr. Allmand: I am not sure of the answer to that question but I do know that this government has been concerned and has tried to act within its powers. There is a very thin line on either side of the question as to whether one goes too far or whether one does too little, but of course that is the problem with which we are dealing. Many people have said we have over reacted, while others have said we have not gone far enough. I say we have been concerned.

I am trying to impress on the House that those of us who live in Montreal and Quebec know at first hand what it is like to live with terror. The Leader of the NDP (Mr. Douglas) has repeatedly stated that the people of Canada are still waiting for the evidence that the War Measures Act and this bill were necessary. He asked whether we have read the remarks made by Pauline Jewett and Miss LaMarsh and articles which appeared in the Toronto Star as well as those published by the Civil Liberties Union of Canada. He gave us a list of names of people from Toronto, Ottawa and other places, but he mentioned none from Quebec when he spoke yesterday. I should like to ask him whether he has listened to the remarks of Frank Scott, for example, one of the most eminent civil liberties lawyers in Canada or of the "Ligue des Droits d'Hommes" which is the Montreal group concerned with civil liberties, or any Quebec newspapers. Many of these groups and people are not our political partisans. I am not a member of the cabinet and the government might have evidence that I do not have or that I am not aware of, but the evidence that I do have, which is public to all who wish to examine it, is sufficient to my mind to support what the government has done and what the government is doing.

I will repeat this evidence. First of all, we have the expressed intention by the FLQ to engage in terrorist activities including assassination. We have this in their printed literature, which includes instructions on how to create revolution, how to make Molotov cocktails and many other things that are related to violent terrorism. We have also heard these intentions expressed in their speeches. Second, we have information that the FLQ had adequate fire power and personnel to proceed seriously towards its stated goals. Third, we have actual cases where terrorist activities were carried out through bombings, kidnappings, and murders. So, we have their expressed intention in writing and words; we have information that they have the means, and we have cases, in which these intentions have actually been carried out. To me, this is adequate justification for what the government has done.

Nevertheless, some keep asking, where is the revolution? Where is the attempt to overthrow the government? They keep on expecting some type of spectacular uprising, some coup d'état, some kind of open revolution or civil war. It may be that there is such a plan, but I do not know. It is not what I would expect at this stage. If the FLQ came out in the open to stage that type of uprising or a coup d'état, they would be easily dealt with; our superior police and armed forces would easily rout and capture them, and the revolution would be finished.

This is not their method. It is not their method even as they describe it in their manual for urban guerilla warfare, or their method as it is carried out in other countries. No, Mr. Speaker, these new revolutionaries hide in their holes and hovels, coming out occasionally to bomb, to kidnap, and to murder at times which best suit their purposes. Their goal is to disrupt society persistently, to keep it off balance, to break its will to continue. This type of urban guerilla warfare is not aimed at the immediate overthrow of the government but at the will of the people to maintain their institutions, their way of life.

This type of terrorism is aimed at the will of people to serve in public office. It is aimed at the will of the people to speak out as they would like to speak out. It is aimed at the will of the people to write what they would like to write, at their will to serve as a judge or on a jury, their will to invest in Quebec, their will to plant their roots in Quebec and to continue to live there. That is what the terrorism is directed at but, Mr. Speaker, these terrorists have miscalculated the will of the Quebec people, the Quebec government and the Canadian government.

We are not ready to let our institutions deteriorate. We are not ready to let terrorists take away those liberties that our ancestors fought so hard to win. It is true that this bill and the regulations introduced on October 16 do limit some civil liberties, but I suggest to you that many others more expert in these matters than I am say this limitation is not very wide.

I attended a teach-in on the present measures with Frank Scott who, as I have already said, is known to be a great civil liberties lawyer, and he stated that the measures that have been introduced are very mild and very limited. As the Prime Minister has said, as the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) has said, nobody really wanted this type of legislation or this type of measure. But, Mr. Speaker, it was the lesser of evils in the situation in which we found ourselves.

We must remember that in democratic societies there is no such thing as unlimited rights. In Quebec, we have the doctrine of "abus de droit", abuse of rights, where one's rights are limited when they come into conflict with the rights of others. In our legal system we have the doctrine of the balance of convenience, through which we allow courts to grant an injunction against the rights of others where we feel there may be a conflict of rights. We insist that the rights of individuals must be limited with respect to the rights of the collectivity, the rights of society.

But let us examine who interfered with civil liberties in what I consider to be a major way. In my opinion, the terror and the violence have been the real cause of restricted liberties in Montreal. Since the commencement of the violence there has been a limit on the liberty of movement enjoyed by the people of Montreal simply because of fear. There has been a serious drop in consumer sales. There has been a cancellation of public social events. Children's events have been cancelled. The children of Montreal no longer may enjoy a Santa Claus parade like children in other Canadian cities. Political meetings in Montreal have been cancelled. There have been many instances where people living in this situation of terror and violence have not been free to do the things that they ordinarily would do if they were not living under such threats.

The new bill before us continues many of the things that were in the regulations, but it removes those parts which were most abhorrent, and it introduces greater protection for those who are accused. The principle object of the bill is to make the FLQ an unlawful association, and those who are members or supporters of it guilty of an offence. Those who are accused under the law will still not have bail unless it is agreed to by the Attorney General, and they still may remain in jail for 90 days before a trial date is set. On the other hand, the period during which they can be held before being charged is reduced from 21 days to seven days.

The measures in the bill are restricted to the FLQ and its successor organizations, which means they cannot be used to weed out and prosecute other types of people who may not be considered desirable by provincial governments, especially governments outside Quebec. The bill provides the right to counsel. It specifically refers to that right, although it is the opinion of the government that that right was not interfered with under the emergency regulations.

Another important provision, with respect to the evidence which can be used to prosecute people under this bill, is the clause which states that a person must have attended several meetings or many meetings of the FLQ, instead of one, before being considered a member of the organization. A serious defect in the regulations under the War Measures Act was the provision that if a person attended even one meeting of the FLQ that fact could be used as evidence against him. The provisions in the regulations dealing with arrest and search without warrant are also continued. To a great extent, the bill is an enactment of the regulations which were made under the War Measures Act.

There has been some discussion about the retroactivity of offences under this bill. Mr. Speaker, I submit that there is no retroactivity of offence under the bill. The offence set out in the bill is that of being a member, or a supporter in various ways, of the FLQ, and that means being a member or supporter after the bill is declared to be in force.

It is true that in the bill there is reference to events, which can be used as evidence, before the bill has come into effect, but these things, of themselves, are not offences. It is not an offence to have attended a meeting or meetings of the FLQ within the past month. Under the bill, it is not an offence to have done things on behalf of the FLQ prior to its introduction and the enactment of the regulations on October 16.

These things raise presumptions against an accused that, as of the day the bill is proclaimed, he is a member of the FLQ. But according to our laws of evidence and legal procedures that presumption can be overturned by casting doubts on it. If a person shows he has taken steps to disassociate himself from the FLQ after the meetings that have been referred to and the evidence brought before the court, then the presumption is rebutted and then the Crown must prove beyond reasonable doubt that the person was a member of the FLQ when the bill was proclaimed. So, the offence is not a retroactive offence. The offence is that of being a member or supporter once the bill comes into effect.

Some people, Mr. Speaker, have stated that this bill cannot deal with the deep causes which lie behind the terrorism and unrest and, therefore, it is not the proper measure to deal with such problems. We all realize that this bill is meant merely to deal with terrorist activities and I do not think anyone would suggest that it is meant to deal with the causes which lie behind terrorism and unrest. It is interesting to note, however, that during the crisis which arose in Quebec the principal occupation of the Quebec government at that time was to put into effect the medicare program and that they were fighting against stiff political opposition to do this. At that time the Quebec government was fighting for a measure to benefit the people who were supposed to be oppressed. This was not a measure to benefit the establishment but one that favoured the less fortunate citizens.

In this House yesterday a question was asked what the governments of Quebec and Ottawa were doing to alleviate the situation for this group of people. There are many examples, Mr. Speaker, but a good one is what was taking place during the month of September and all through the summer months. I refer to the medicare issue. The government was trying to deal with something that would help the people of Quebec and that would relieve a severe economic and social condition. Whilst these discussions on medicare were taking place, other officials of the Quebec government were outside the province trying to encourage investment in the province and negotiating with people who were prepared to invest in order to provide more jobs.

There are many examples, both in the program of this government and the Quebec government, of efforts which were aimed at the problems which are the cause of unrest. But the real cause of the terrorism, Mr. Speaker, is not the social and economic conditions of the people. I submit the real cause of this terrorism is something which is based on hatred and hostility. A psychiatrist of the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary, who has dealt with some of these convicted terrorists, has stated, as a result of his examination of them, that they did not have any social or economic goals as a result of their terrorist activities and that they did not really understand the problems of Quebec.

We will continue to work for the economic and social betterment of the people of Quebec but we will do it through the democratic system. If we fail to do the right thing, the people will vote against us in general elections and put us out. We will accept the verdict just as the governments of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick have done in the past months. There have been general elections in those provinces and when it was obvious what the people wanted, immediately the leaders said to Lieutenant Governors, "We are prepared to give up the government to those who have been elected by the people." We believe that governments should be changed through democratic elections in this country, and that is the way that will persist.

Mr. Baldwin: Did you hear that?

Mr. Allmand: When the Leader of the NDP was giving his speech yesterday, he suggested that members of this party did not vote on October 18 according to their conscience.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Allmand: Many times the Leader of the NDP has made this insinuation against members of this party. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that there are examples of members of all parties of this House, both in committee and in the House, voting against their party. I know several members of the government caucus have, and indeed on one or two occasions I have done so myself. I do not think that voting according to conscience is something that only applies to members of the NDP. When legislation has been presented in Manitoba, there have not been too many mavericks voting against the NDP majority in that particular legislature. I want to assure the House that we in this party will all vote according to our conscience on this measure and I, for one, will support it with a very clear conscience. Montreal is my city, Quebec is my province and Canada is my country. No group of terrorists will take them away from me.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: Nor will any fuzzy-headed procrastinating politicians, more concerned with partisan politics whittle away our ability to defend these things.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand the hon. member would like to ask a question of the member who has just resumed his seat. Does the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) agree?

Mr. Allmand: Certainly.

Mr. Gilbert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the hon. member knows where the 1,000 to 3,000 FLQ members referred to by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) are, and if he can indicate the names of the institutions into which these people have infiltrated?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, this is the kind of question which has been asked continually and with which I attempted to deal. I do not know whether there are 100, 200 or 3,000 members of the FLQ, but I submit that is not important. I want to make it clear to this House that the new type of urban guerilla warfare is not aimed at immediately overthrowing a government but to break the will of the government to continue to support its institutions, to break the will of the people to serve, and the right to speak. To do this all you need is 50 or 100 terrorists who are well organized. If they continue to assassinate and kidnap periodically they hope to upset the balance in society by throwing into confusion all those who serve in positions of authority. If they can really break the will of people to serve in Parliament, to serve as judges, to serve as jurors, to write, to speak, then they have gone a long way toward accomplishing their goals.

These are the things they are trying to do. They do not come into the open. Three thousand or 5,000 people could not act openly to overthrow the government, but with a very small number of guerillas they can accomplish something far more important, and that is break the will of the people to defend their democratic institutions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I think it is of some historical interest that today is the 365th anniversary of the Gunpowder Plot whereby Parliament was to be blown up.

An hon. Member: Were you there, John?

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. gentleman heard of this for the first time when I mentioned it just now. It is a coincidence, too, that in those days and for a period thereafter, Members of Parliament in Westminster were accompanied by armed men to protect and preserve them against a group of unknown conspirators, other than Guy Fawkes and four or five others who were immediately arrested.

We meet in this House to deal with a bill that is the outgrowth of action taken by the government several weeks ago. I knew Mr. Laporte. The suggestion was made that since he became, by his death, a national martyr, some fund might be set up. I give that my unqualified support.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I believe that all of us, as Canadians, lost something by his death. Hearts were deeply touched when word of his death was brought to this House around midnight on the seventeenth of last month. It is well, as we approach the matter before us today, that we should think of James Cross and the terrible period of the last few weeks through which his wife and family have passed. I know that the hearts of all Canadians are with her and the family and we all hope that, providentially, James Cross may still be alive.

I listened to the last speaker with interest, as I always do. He came into the House with a message that was obviously from the heart. This House listens to those who display that attitude of mind. I want to add that, however much I may disagree with the views that are expressed by some hon. members in this House on this question, I resent to the limit the kinds of attacks being made upon hon. members, and the suggestion that they are political hacks bent on securing political benefits. This is Parliament and there must be, in the nature of things, disagreement. There must be the give and take and thrust of debate; because only in debate can this institution bring about those changes which the composite viewpoint of the House wishes to achieve. I repeat: there is no reason or justification for the kinds of attacks that are being made on a political party to which at no time have I been other than an opponent. It is of interest that some of those who themselves have attacked the NDP the most viciously saw the light only a few years ago and left that party for the seats of mighty across the floor.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yesterday I, unfortunately, was unable to be in the House to listen to the remarks of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner, Ottawa-Carleton). However, I have read them. Even reading them indicates to me that they were eloquently delivered. But, Sir, there is nothing more difficult for a lawyer of distinction than having a case that is difficult to argue, if not almost impossible to justify.

An hon. Member: Be careful.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Everyone of us in the courts has faced that. I wish I could have heard the minister yesterday as he endeavoured to explain the unexplainable and to explain why information has not been given to this House. Nevertheless, I thank the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce for clearing up doubts. We now have it from one who knows.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: We have it from one who has lived in Montreal amid the dangers and perils of the last couple of years. He says the reason the government had not done anything was that it was so busy with medicare and so anxious to bring foreign investment into Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I wish to make it clear to the House that at no time did I suggest that during the last three years the government was working on the matter of medicare. I mentioned that it was so engaged during the period of the crisis of the last few weeks, and during the summer. One of the most important measures it was trying to bring forward was medicare, for the benefit of the lower income people of Quebec.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If that is an explanation, I accept it. I understand the feelings of the hon. member. In grappling with that problem, that terrible thing, that instrument of social change known as medicare, it was almost impossible for the law officers of the Crown and for the police forces to act. They must have known the extent of the danger since the hon. member knew. He has been able to tell the House all about the dangers of bombings, threats and plans. On the fifteenth of last month I placed before this House the indictment made by Mr. Saulnier on behalf of Montreal. In its 45 or 50 pages that were placed before a committee of this House, there was set forth the peril to freedom that the FLC constituted—

An hon. Member: That's a new one.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They want to be the FLC for all Canada, but they will not be. The government did not act and now we know why. With their heads full of medicare and their hearts filled with the desire to improve investments to the tune of millions of dollars, they had not had time to think of a matter such as the FLQ. I am glad the hon. member has cleared the air in such an effective, terse and interesting manner.

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker—

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: If any hon. member who wishes to interrupt will rise, I will be happy to answer him.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order or on a question of privilege?

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, it is simply to repeat to the right hon. member what I said, that—

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I can say to the hon. member and to those who have recently been elevated to the exalted position of Parliamentary Secretary, that if the hon. member makes a few more interruptions like that he will yet take the place of one of the other ministers.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, we, in our party, through our leader placed our views clearly and definitely before this House and country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: During the debate on the sixteenth and seventeenth of October we took a strong stand, pointing out that the action being taken under the War Measures Act was something that had never been contemplated. Indeed, if one were to go back to 1960 and read the contribution of the Prime Minister of Canada at that time, the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson, it is clear that the War Measures Act could not be considered for use for any purpose except war, or in that period which is, as it were, a twilight before the actual beginning of war. During the period when Mr. Bennett was prime minister there were many hon. members who disagreed with him when he said the War Measures Act should be abolished. But that is all in the past. We took our stand. We pointed out what we saw wrong in what was being done. We suggested amendments and improvements. The Liberal press across this country generally supported the need of the War Measures Act regulations being kept in effect for only the immediate period of time. The Winnipeg Free Press used the expression "No longer than necessary". The editorial concluded as follows:

• (3:30 p.m.)

Its powers must not be used more than is needed; and it must not be kept alive a moment longer than necessary.

This morning the Globe and Mail set out its views in an editorial. The heading covers the viewpoint of that paper: "No case to continue rights suspension". I am not in agreement with that viewpoint.

We in this party stated our views very clearly. We said that there should be a statute limited in its application to a certain period and that, when passed, the War Measures Act should cease to be used as the instrument for prosecuting these individuals.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That was the view of the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition and that was the view I expressed when I spoke. I suggested there should be a reward offered. I have great respect for the Solicitor General (Mr. McIlraith) as a parliamentarian. He loves Parliament. The other day I watched him squirm, twist and turn mental somersaults. After having stated no reward had as yet been determined, a few minutes later a reward was announced in Quebec and he suddenly stated in this House in effect, "Yes, we decided two weeks ago". I will come back to that matter with quotations because the minister was not his usual, effective self. I felt sorry for him.

Mr. McIlraith: Maybe he will come back to it and it will be someone else again.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I must not miss any of those pearls.

Mr. McIlraith: Maybe you will come back to it and it will be someone else again.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I still do not know what the observation is, but I will read it in Hansard.

I suggested that a committee should be established to ensure that unnecessary injustice is not committed against any Canadian. A committee has now been established, apparently as the result of the initiative of the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Montreal, two or three days after he advocated it was needed. As an example, what about Bernard Lortie who was arrested when he gave himself up because he had the same name as an individual that was being sought? When he gave himself up the police looked over his record. They stated they were 80 per cent sure he was the dangerous criminal. They were 100 per cent wrong, and they must have known it. He gave his complete record. At the end of 24 hours the police must have known that he was not the man for whom they were looking, yet they incarcerated him for several more days. This is what happens when absolute power is placed in the hands of any man or group of men. We placed our views before this House and the country. Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, if it discharges its responsibility, must always be the conscience of the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I repeat, an opposition that discharges its responsibility is the conscience of the government. The hon. member who preceded me said that members of the government can vote according to conscience. I am not going to argue that. However, there was a look of dubiety on the faces of the Solicitor General and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) when I mentioned the dangers a moment ago.

I am now going to quote an authority that no member opposite can challenge. I do not know how many hon. members have read this "Appeal for Realism in politics". This document was produced by various individuals, including the present Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau). The manifesto was translated into English by Mr. Pitfield so there will be doubt as to the correctness of it. After all, Mr. Pitfield has fallen into no pits lately.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I quote:

> Democratic progress requires the ready availability of true and complete information. In this way people can objectively evaluate their government's policies. To act otherwise is to give way to despotic secrecy.

Who can describe in more effective terms what has happened in this House during the past several weeks? We have not been able to pry out any information. Two or three cabinet ministers, in their perambulations have given information outside the House that turned out to be misinformation.

I have great respect for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand). I do not think I have heard a better speech in the last two or three years than the speech the minister gave when he spoke on this debate. It was a remarkable effort. Then, apparently carried away by his press notices, he opened up his heart. He told the Canadian people of the dangers of a group of 3,000 to 5,000 individuals in the FLQ in Quebec with a population close to 7 million. He also spoke of FRAP. There is something signally wrong in the fact that after all these weeks of investigation the law officers and investigators have not come up with any cases. They have taken 400 people into custody and released 340. We have not found out whether the CBC gentry and Radio Canada have yet returned to the protection of their positions. I endeavoured to find that out, but as the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) pointed out, in effect, "Do you think I know about things like that? All I do is report."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I now ask the Minister of Justice to find out if there has been any communication regarding these men? According to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, there is an inference that these three or four individuals engaged in subterannean communication by code. By interspersing code words in the news items, these thugs and murderers were given the information they needed. Are these gentry and Radio Canada still in there? They were guests of Her Majesty for a short time. Now that they have been released, are they again in their positions in the CBC? The Minister of Regional Economic Development stated that this philosophy of the FLQ had found its way into all levels of society. One wonders, did it find its way into the provincial police of the Province of Quebec? Did it find its way into the city police of Montreal? Certainly, the government knows whether this be so. How can the government explain, with the multitude of police officers who are searching for the kidnappers, what has happened? It is a frightening condemnation of Canadian investigation into crime that nothing effective has been done up to this moment.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Why would not the government let the Canadian people know the position concerning Mr. Cross? Is there any hope he is still alive? Surely, information like this should be made available to the Canadian people. I repeat what Mr. Pierre Trudeau, as he then was, said, along with Marc Lalonde, Maurice Pinard, Ivon Gauthier, Claude Bruneau, Raymond Breton and Albert Breton—the committee for political realism—that the opposition is the conscience of the government. I would suggest this for reading by the cabinet. I do not intend to deal with the various recommendations contained therein but they are interesting. They banish nationalism for all time. I presume this is the reason the Armed Forces have been reduced today to a trickle of the needed requirement. It says that Canadians are not to be nationalistic any more. This may be the reason NATO finds itself in danger of Canadians being withdrawn. Then it deals with political leadership. This is in 1964. Here is a striking phrase—"We deplore the absence of leadership in public affairs". What an indictment of the preceding Liberal administration. Then it says: "What is needed is a realistic policy." Today, the government speaks of the dangers of foreign investment, and intends to set up all kinds of arrangements to ensure that Canadians invest in Canada. But listen to this:

> We are not any more impressed by the cries in some English circles when American financiers buy Canadian enterprises than we are by the adoption in the Province of Quebec of economic policies based upon the slogan "maîtres chez nous".

So I could go on. It says that what we need above everything else is realism. The constitution? It says it is worthless to monkey with that; it is only an excuse.

> The derangement resulting from nationalism is particularly revealed today by the exaggerated importance given by our leading citizens to constitutional problems. Constitutional problems in Canada are far from being so serious as some would have us believe.

I could read on, but I shall not. I suggest to members of the cabinet that from now on this should be their primer, because it represents thoughts from above.

I again speak of the stands we have taken on the War Measures Act. We were opposed in our stand; we were misinterpreted. I have noticed a tremendous change in Liberal members during the past few days. They have been droopy for the last year, but they have found something now in the tragic events of recent days. And are they happy!

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh no, not because of what is happening, but by reason of the fact that people have for the moment forgotten about unemployment; the problems of agriculture have passed into desuetude and labour problems are out of the way. Suddenly, we hear whispers that we might have an election.

Mr. MacEachen: I haven't heard that one, thank God.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Ah well. Is that the minister himself speaking? The minister doesn't say that over television or over an open line. He will be in difficulty if he does.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: You are scaring Tommy Douglas.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have never been one of his followers. I have never been as closely associated with him as was the Prime Minister. But I know one thing about him. I have never found him to scare too easily.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We placed our views before the House on the Friday and the Saturday, the 16th and 17th of October. The Prime Minister, through his House Leader, agreed to our suggestions, which were ridiculed at the time we made them. When the government did agree to changes regarding the regulations we thought were necessary, every member of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition voted in favour of the resolution. Let me underline this once and for all. I say to the Minister of Justice that he has a greater regard for Parliament than some of his colleagues have shown. In bringing in this abridged form of the War Measures Act Provisions and in fixing a term and placing this bill before Parliament, we of this party are united in its support. At the same time, we are placing ourselves clearly on record that in committee we will advocate that one or two of the terms in the new measure should be materially altered, and, above all, that each of us want to assure that no injustice such as was done to the young man I mentioned shall be repeated in other cases.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I turn, now, to the next matter I wish to discuss. This is something I cannot understand. Why did the government refuse to provide a reward? They have not been able to explain their failure to do so because there is no excuse which can be given. I remember the days when to be a member of the communist party was an offence. I prosecuted one or two of these cases; it was one of the reasons I changed my views concerning the outlawing of a thought, or of thinking. When rewards were offered evidence was forthcoming. I am interested in one change that the minister made in the regulations. Originally the provision, which is still in effect, was made that if one attended one meeting of the FLQ, one was thereby guilty of an offence, or at least there was a presumption of being a member of the FLQ against each person. I do not know who found himself in danger, but I now see they have changed the wording to "several meetings".

After four weeks the government finally decided on November 2 to announce a reward. No one can relive those dark and fearful days of the incarceration of Mr. Laporte, terminating in his death. I think on the night we heard of his death the hearts of Canadians everywhere beat in unison. That night Canada was a cathedral. Why was no reward offered? During the days when I prosecuted I found rewards always—and I say always—brought forth information. An individual who is a conspirator, with no money in his pocket and no principle in his head, is always willing to talk. No one but the government can tell us why a reward was not offered, but the government does not enlighten us.

I raised the matter the day after the kidnapping took place. It was also raised several times thereafter. But strangely enough nothing was done. Then, on October 6, as reported in Hansard at page 8801, I raised the matter by asking whether the government was giving consideration to offering a substantial reward. The Prime Minister replied:

> I intend to answer the question whether any consideration has been given; the answer is yes.

Finally, some businessmen in the Toronto area decided that if the government was not going to offer a reward, they would. The businessman who communicated with the government on behalf of some fine person did not want his name used, or those associated with him in Toronto, and for obvious reasons. However, he has now agreed to have his name used. I raised the matter in the House, and I will be frank and say that when I asked the question the telegram that was sent confirmed that the Prime Minister had not yet received it. The making the offer wire was sent on October 7. It was clear, it was definite, it was final.

What was the reaction to this telegram? It was addressed to the Right Honourable Pierre Trudeau, Prime Minister of Canada, and read as follows:

> I, Andrew Davidson,—

Then, his firm name appears.

> —represent a group who is prepared to put up $50,000.00, on a strictly confidential basis—

I mentioned what that meant at the time.

> —to anyone for information that will lead to the release of Mr. James Cross.

The telegram was signed by Andrew Davidson.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This was the offer of a man who was uttering the thoughts of Canadians everywhere, yet the government still did not offer a reward. In the last few days there have been other offers. I know of one from a Mr. Jack McDowell, a former member of the Manitoba legislature, who offered $1,000. I do not know whether he had an acknowledgement.

I should like to read the acknowledgement to this act of patriotism by Mr. Davidson and those associated with him. On October 8 a communication was sent to Mr. Andrew Davidson at his address at 1125 Dundas Street East, Cooksville, Ontario which read as follows:

On behalf of the Prime Minister I acknowledge receipt of your October 7 telegram. Kindly be advised that your message will be brought to Mr. Trudeau's personal attention.

That was signed by Henry Alan Lawless, secretary. Not even a letter of acknowledgement was sent to this man who was prepared to put up this money, which to me shows a disregard for the proprieties that cannot be justified. It is like telling him to go to the hot place without compliments. Not a word of appreciation has been sent to him since.

I am not going to put the Minister of Justice in an invidious position by asking him whether this matter was ever brought to his attention. I am sure it came to the attention of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion because he had knowledge that no one else had, as did the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien), who also spoke out of turn. The minister of regional affairs was not in the House when I referred to him a moment ago, but I see he has just come in.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): What did you say about me?

Mr. Diefenbaker: What I said was a most warm-hearted congratulatory wish.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: This is why I felt so sorry for him when he was publicly spanked by the Prime Minister.

I now come to one other matter, and I am watching my time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have been doing the same thing. The right hon. gentleman has just about reached the time allotted to him by the rules. He may continue with the agreement of the House. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I thank the members of the House. I will not burden them with quotations from the "minister of economic reconstruction", but I would suggest to him in all seriousness that from now on he stay out of the field of reciting events which the Prime Minister does not want the country to worry about. This is a course that he ought not to take.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): You know me very well.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am glad to hear the minister say that. There is nothing to take the place of experience.

I conclude with one other matter. Mention has been made today by the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce of the awfulness of the experience that was his and the people of Montreal's in recent weeks. Yet no prosecutions were taken; nothing was done. For a year the government of Canada had the Saulnier report. According to Mr. Saulnier, there were two ministers of the cabinet who were opposed to a royal commission being set up to investigate the tyranny that was being perpetrated and the callous rebellious conduct that was taking place. There were two members of the cabinet, one originating in Montreal and the other is now in Ottawa. He said these two members were against the investigation.

On March 17, 1970, I think it was, the Prime Minister had a letter from Mr. Saulnier setting out the situation but nothing was ever done about it. Now what is this government doing? As if we had not had enough experience with revolutionaries, we are still continuing to let individuals from the United States come into Canada to disrupt and defy Canadian law and ridicule the police force, and to preach terror, murder and bloodshed.

A question was asked today, I think by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), as to what was being done on the frontier to keep these individuals of the FLQ from going abroad. I am interested in finding out what is being done to keep these people out.

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Dollard on a point of order.

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order merely to correct the right hon. member on certain facts—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I should like to point out to the hon. member that he may not rise on a point of order merely to correct the statement of another member. He may, however, do so in the course of his own speech. I feel this is not really a point of order.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: That's no point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, would the right hon. member allow me a question?

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Not from a person showing such ignorance to the House as displayed by the hon. member up to the present time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

An hon. Member: Disrespect for Parliament.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am always willing to answer questions from responsible members.

An hon. Member: Name them.

Mr. Baldwin: That is difficult to do.

An hon. Member: There are very few over there.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Why are these revolutionaries from the United States allowed to come into Canada to advocate revolution and having the benefit of the national CBC to spread their poison across this country at the expense of the Canadian people?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am told that they are paid, but if I ask the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) he cannot give that information because that might cause competitors to take advantage. What about Hewitt who comes to Winnipeg tomorrow, the minister of education of the Black Panthers, one of the most threatening—

An hon. Member: You can think of the words.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, I can think of a lot of words to describe him and they all begin with "b". He is coming in, and when I ask these ministers over and over again why let these revolutionaries in, what do they say? They knew what was happening in Montreal and in the province of Quebec. The answer to objections being taken to keep out these people is, in effect: After all, if they speak to selected groups we should not keep them out. Freedom of speech must be upheld. Freedom of speech does not include the right to incite revolution.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: These people should not be let in to Canada. In the United Kingdom, with generations of experience of liberty and freedom, one of these revolutionaries was kept out. They said, in effect: You cannot come in here. It is time this government acted to protect Canadians from the insidious influence of these people who openly advocate destruction of the government of Canada by force. I hope, and I have hoped, that the experience of the last few weeks would have caused a change of view on the part of the government. The other day the answer given respecting Hewitt was that he is going to Winnipeg to speak to a responsible group. That is no justification whatsoever for permitting United States thugs to come into Canada and act in a way that constitutes an offence against the Criminal Code of this country. They should be prosecuted. That is the welcome they should receive if they do come.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. Minister of Regional Economic Expansion rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Yes. Mr. Speaker.

Since yesterday, a good number of hon. members, especially the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), have spoken about the alleged number of FLQ members. They repeat what I am supposed to have said in the House but their figures are wrong. They do not quote the right figures.

I will simply quote the words of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. minister, but there is no question of privilege here. The hon. minister should—

[English]

An hon. Member: He doesn't know the difference either.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

I would like to suggest to the hon. minister that he could rise to speak when his turn comes and in due time, if only for a few minutes, in order to set the record straight. The hon. Secretary of State. (Mr. Pelletier).

[English]

Mr. Peters: This speech will shed a lot of darkness on the subject.

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I have just heard the remark of the hon. member and I am afraid I shall never be able to enlighten him or see through the darkness of his mind.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pelletier: Having given up on that utopic objective, I should like to comment on the bill generally, on its timeliness and on some speeches heard in the House since the legislation has been before it.

I have nothing to add to what has been said until now on the substance of the proposal which, in the circumstances—I repeat, in the circumstances—is readily acceptable by those willing to face reality.

As concerns the procedure for implementing the legislation, I know that time has not yet come to deal with it and that remarks concerning one clause or an other will be in order during the committee stage only.

I also believe that by and large most objections from the leaders of the Progressive Conservative Party and the New Democratic Party have been well disproved. I shall make only one exception. I can hardly understand that the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) would state: "We hear whispers" about a forthcoming election. Mr. Speaker, I submit that if he hears such rumours at the present time, the case has to do not with parliamentary debates but with a medical branch that I shall not name.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pelletier: It might also be remembered that in the remote past someone heard similar voices, and though he said in this House that he holds me for a nonentity, I would be most aggrieved to see the hon. member being burnt on the Prince Albert market place.

But my purpose, Mr. Speaker, is mainly to deal with a certain number—

• (4:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Mackenzie King had monopoly rights on that.

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: I too, Mr. Speaker, listen only to the remarks of responsible members. The right hon. gentleman can therefore go on making his own; he does not bother me at all.

Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to say that at times a government can be more upset by the arguments put forward in favour of a piece of legislation it has introduced then by the arguments against it. This will lead me, as you have no doubt guessed it, to talk about many interventions of the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) and, in particular, about the speech which he delivered yesterday afternoon. I regret that he is not in his seat—I was not here either when he made against me some rather virulent accusations, which I have just picked up in Hansard. Besides, I often find it somewhat difficult to get in touch with the hon. member for Témiscamingue. For instance, I remember waiting seven weeks to reply to a question he had asked me, so that if I were to postpone my remarks today until he were here, this could take long.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member for Abitibi on a question of privilege.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Secretary of State, if he wants to be honest, to tell the House whether, during the seven weeks he mentioned, he was here himself?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I am not sure whether this is a question of privilege. I would however suggest that it is contrary to our rules to allude to the presence or absence of hon. members and I do not think this is contributing to our proceedings.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pelletier: Very well Mr. Speaker. I assure you I will comply with this advice most diligently.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: Nor his personal attacks.

Mr. Duquet: That is what you do all the time.

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I was about to say that I find quite upsetting the arguments used yesterday by the member for Témiscamingue to support this measure.

I wish to add that, for some time now, the leader of the Ralliement créditiste has expressed similar views to support the War Measures Act being invoked. I congratulate him for having seen the danger that was threatening the province of Quebec and Canada because of the present crisis; unfortunately my congratulations must stop here. I must also tell him, through you, Mr. Speaker, that I am not the only one who has been deeply troubled about some of the stands he took. When, for example, he suggested that, without trial, presumed members of the FLQ, already detained, should be placed before a firing squad and that ten of them should be executed for each one of the hostages held by the FLQ, I do not think that he was speaking in a responsible manner, nor in a manner worthy of a civilized nation.

If we followed the advice of the hon. member for Témiscamingue in that matter, we would be using the same monstrous methods of which we are the victims at the hands of the FLQ, we would lower ourselves to the level of the terrorists whom we are fighting.

At best I can only ascribe to thoughtlessness the remarks of the hon. member for Témiscamingue. But I am astonished that thoughtlessness could last so long, as it is well known that he has repeated this suggestion several times, apparently without realizing that it pertains not only to a police state, which in the same breath he meant to condem, but also to the Nazi and Fascist states of the thirties. On reading these suggestions I could not help but recall, Mr. Speaker, an admission made by the hon. member for Témiscamingue several years ago to the effect that in his youth he had greatly admired Hitler and Mussolini.

At that time I was a newspaperman and I remember having stood up for him against certain Toronto papers which had taken his statement seriously and because of it, thought the member for Témiscamingue was a Nazi who would not shy away from assassination. I stood up for him at the time; I must admit that in the last few days I have been wondering whether I did the right thing.

I should also like to point out that the member for Témiscamingue has twisted the truth, when he stated many times, without any evidence or foundation, and I quote:

> The government knows who are the FLQ leaders.

This statement not only flies in the face of facts, but I dare say that it is utterly ridiculous. In times such as those we are now going through, the ridiculous easily takes a tragical turn.

Just yesterday, speaking to the House, the leader of the Ralliement Créditiste made the following assertion, which was echoed—not at all to my surprise—by the rt. hon. representative for Prince-Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) who, by chance, is leaving the House as I say these words.

This is what the leader of the Ralliement Créditiste said:

If last year, the government had acted when Mr. Lucien Saulnier disclosed to them not rumors, but facts which were taking place in Quebec, Mr. Laporte would still be alive today.

That accusation, Mr. Speaker, has been reiterated many times by the leader of the Ralliement Créditiste. It has been brought forward again in the House this very afternoon. I believe it is absolutely essential that the facts be clarified and replaced in their true light. First of all, when the hon. member for Témiscamingue says that the charges laid at that time by the chairman of the executive committee of the city of Montreal did not bring about any initiative on the part of the government, his statement is not based on facts. I should like to point out that all the details then submitted to the attention of the government were carefully considered by the government and that the latter felt at that time that there was not enough evidence to take proceedings against the said individuals. It has also been established—which was known by everybody—that had there been enough evidence the Quebec authorities had all the freedom they needed, had even the responsibility to institute the said proceedings.

With respect to the suggestion that a royal inquiry on security be appointed, it must be said that this also was discussed. And the replies given about it were far from evasive, no matter what the right hon. member from Prince Albert said a while ago. On the contrary, the reaction was most specific. As for the references and insinuations he also made on the particular role played by the two ministers, I wonder whether the right hon. member from Prince Albert has realized it, but his allegations are far from reflecting the facts.

When one says that the government has not taken any action, in my opinion, he is deluding the people of Canada because actually the government did do something. Indeed, there was action taken concerning this whole problem by having recourse to the police forces. And as regards the Company of Young Canadians, some sort of control was exercised. This House has even brought in basic changes to the Company of Young Canadians Act through a government bill.

Of course, facts do not greatly disturb the hon. member for Témiscamingue who, in his speech yesterday said:

What are the avowed aims of the organization of the Company of Young Canadians and the FLQ?

One would think that the hon. member is not aware of the reforms that took place. He certainly is not aware of the change in orientation within the Company, and I am terribly surprised. As a matter of fact, when he puts the Company on the same level as the FLQ in 1970, at the time I am speaking, the hon. member for Shefford, (Mr. Rondeau) his seatmate, was asking less than a month ago, for two more volunteers from the Company of Young Canadians to serve on a project undertaken in his riding because he feels that this project will help the citizens he represents.

The hon. member for Témiscamingue also said that the special law was not required and that the provisions of the Criminal Code are sufficient. This will be my last comment, Mr. Speaker, but I will venture to say—and I do not think the hon. member for Témiscamingue will be offended—that as I do not consider myself as having in judicial matters the ability to judge such a delicate subject, I am not inclined to recognize that he has any either.

I believe that we are facing a sad but real need. I was sick at heart when I agreed with the government's decision to proclaim the War Measures Act. I will not be happy, either, to vote in favour of the bill now under study. I will do it only because I believe that criminal attempts, extraordinary situations call for extraordinary measures and, with a clear conscience, however painful it may be, the party in power cannot shirk its duties.

As for me, I respect very deeply the views of those who oppose this bill. I envy them to have been able to persuade themselves that the terrorist threat does not require emergency measures, which inevitably limit the personal freedoms that, for my part, I consider fundamental, if not sacred.

Had I arrived at the same conclusions, I should benefit from a moral comfort which I envy them. But such is not the case. They have the courage of their convictions. And as we see how seriously terrorism is threatening freedoms and even human lives, we must also have the courage of our own convictions.

And we formulate but one wish, Mr. Speaker: that the need for these special measures disappear as soon as possible, that freedoms should be not only restored but strengthened, that we should get out of the present nightmare the tragic paradox of which is that the rights of the individual are threatened from all sides, that is to say, on one side by terrorism and, on the other side, we have to recognize it, by the very abuse of measures that terrorism makes necessary.

[English]

Mr. Nowlan: Would the minister permit a question?

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Will the hon. minister allow the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) to ask him a question?

[English]

Mr. Nowlan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was very interested in the remarks of the minister. I should like to know if the minister could tell the House whether he was one of the ministers, presumably along with the Solicitor General (Mr. McIlraith) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), who reviewed the evidence given to the committee to which he referred in his speech, and referred to in the Broadcasting Committee report? I draw particular attention to the last sentence in that report, which was tabled in this House on December 5, 1969, which specifically recommended that Mr. Saulnier's evidence be submitted to the appropriate ministers for consideration and review. Before the Solicitor

General speaks to the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier), may I ask the Secretary of State, was there any formal review of that by a cabinet committee or by any individual minister, and was there a formal reply sent to Mr. Saulnier outlining what the appropriate ministers of the government thought about that evidence at that time?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that the allegations have been submitted to the minister in charge. Not being the minister in charge, I cannot say what transpired by way of reports and exchanges of correspondence between a cabinet member and the Chairman of the Executive Council of the City of Montreal.

[English]

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to begin my remarks this afternoon with two fairly short quotations from a well known Canadian author. They are in French, and are as follows:

[Translation]

As a consequence, when a man is unjustly treated by a given form of authority, all other men are guilty, because they have led the authority to such abuse by their silence and their consent. If they ceased to approve, the authority would fall down.

[English]

The second short quotation, particularly for the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), is:

[Translation]

Democracy acknowledges that one person may be right and 99 wrong. And this is why in a democracy freedom of speech is deemed sacred: that lone person must always have the right to proclaim his truth in the hope that he can get the 99 others to change their minds.

[English]

As hon. members may have guessed if they did not know, these two quotations are from the writings of Pierre Elliott Trudeau and are contained in articles in a weekly called Vrai—True—Published in 1958. They were relevant and right then; they are relevant and right now. It is the man who has changed, and the views of that man have changed. Those of us who stand by the views which he then expressed ought to have at least the ear of people who may disagree instead of the loud, shrill tongue which the Minister of Justice used yesterday. I want to remind hon. members of the House right at the outset that there have already been abuses in the application of the War Measures Act and the regulations under it, great abuses.

• (4:30 p.m.)

The Prime Minister, who was a teacher and citizen, wrote that when one man is unjustly treated all other men are guilty. This was the kind of consideration we had in mind when we wanted to be convinced with much more than the government then gave us, that there ought not to be a situation permitted where men could be unjustly treated

As the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) informed us, Mr. Speaker, as of today 372 Canadians have been incarcerated, swept into jail, kept there incommunicado from six to 16, to 18 days and then released. In most cases they have been unable to speak with their wives. After the first few days of their incarceration, they were allowed to write a note which the police or some jail guard read to their wives over the telephone. I am not guessing when I say this because I have spoken with quite a few men who were in jail and who came out. According to my information, all of them have been finger printed, photographed and now have a police file. I understand some have lost their jobs. All of them find it difficult to explain to their neighbours and their children why they were incarcerated for days and not interrogated for any more than ten or 15 minutes. Yesterday when I asked the Minister of Justice a question along this line he looked sort of disdainful—I hope he looked as disdainful about the fact that it was done. Those I have spoken to inform me that they were asked questions, the most stupid and irrelevant questions imaginable, that had nothing to do with the situation for which they were arrested and taken out of circulation.

These 372 men and women have no remedy, Mr. Speaker. One of them is a famous singer who has already suffered loss of contracts. There were authors, as well as ordinary workers, but none of these 372 Canadians who suffered this abuse of the law has any recourse or remedy because of the immense and unnecessary power the government insisted on taking on October 16, 1970.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to note that among those arrested were people whose job was that of community worker. There were people who organized the poor to protest against their condition, people who, as a matter of fact, were in the pay of the provincial government of Quebec to do just that and who did nothing other than that, because they were released without charge after a ten minute irrelevant interrogation. It is important to note that these leaders of the poor, of the unemployed and of welfare people in the communities, were among those arrested.

Why were they taken out of circulation if it was not for the purpose of making it impossible for those organizations to continue to serve the poor people of Quebec?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lewis: The minister shakes his head but facts are facts. They were jailed; they were released, and there were no charges. They were hardly interrogated, so there could have been no reason in the minds of the police for arresting them. I am not saying that the Minister of Justice or even the Attorney General of Quebec is responsible. One of the great disadvantages of these excessive powers is that they come eventually into the hands of the police. Day to day and hour to hour, it is the police who administer these powers, not the Minister of Justice or the Attorney General of Quebec. I am not saying that the police are not as good citizens as anyone else, but they are a group of men mainly concerned with criminals and crime. They ought to be concerned with the members of the FLQ, and I will come back to that in a moment, but they are not people who can appreciate the work done by the leader of a group of poor people. The moment these leaders say something against the government, which no doubt they do and I hope they continue to say such things but for good social reasons, they are hauled into jail.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: Members opposite can groan as much as they like. If they have the courage to see things as they are they will recognize that there was abuse, instead of groaning at what I say.

An hon. Member: Phony.

Mr. Lewis: I say, Mr. Speaker, that as these facts of the unnecessary and unjust treatment of 372 Canadians today—by tomorrow it may easily be 380, 390 or closer to 400—become clear, then I am confident that the sense of decency and justice of all the people in Canada will overcome the panic and hysteria which the Prime Minister of this country deliberately created by some of his speeches made over television to the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Let the people of Canada decide.

Mr. Lewis: When they look at the situation more closely they will want to know, as we do, all the facts, if indeed the government ever had any more facts. I will come to that in a moment, too, but they will want to know all the facts that led to the proclamation of the War Measures Act.

I ask hon. members, and if I may through the galleries I ask the people of Canada, to look at what the results have been of the imposition of these extraordinarily repressive powers.

An hon. Member: No more terrorism.

Mr. Lewis: Three hundred and seventy-two people have suffered, but what have the police accomplished? In my speech on the first day, October 16, I said that I doubted whether this step would be efficacious for the purpose intended and, unfortunately, I proved to be right. I will come to the reason I said that in just a moment. One did not have to be a genius to see that it would not be efficacious. The fact is that what we have had over many years is a total failure of all the police forces involved to do a job that should have been done before the crisis landed on the people of Canada and the people of Quebec. I said that on October 16 and I repeat it. The federal police, the provincial police and the Montreal police knew of the FLQ for eight or ten years. I have read a report which states that they even know how many cells there are in the FLQ. The report says 22.

An hon. Member: You know more than the rest of us.

Mr. Lewis: There was the brutal murder of Mr. Laporte after the War Measures Act was introduced, but there were some half dozen murders before that over the last number of years. There have been bombings since 1962 or 1963. The dynamite and ammunition and arms that were stolen were not stolen just last year. There have been suspicions for years now that the FLQ had stolen them.

As a member of this House and a citizen of Canada, I think I have a right to ask the government, where was the Royal Canadian Mounted Police? What did the government do to strengthen that force? What did the government do to increase the number of French speaking members in that force to deal with this particular situation in Quebec? What did the government do to increase its security arrangements in Quebec in order to avoid the deaths, the kidnappings and the crisis that was later created? So far as one can tell, Mr. Speaker, little indeed was done.

I read a report in the Toronto Telegram on October 26 by a writer, Robert MacDonald. May I be permitted to put several paragraphs on the record. The story begins this way:

> Montreal's combined anti-terrorist squad failed dismally to infiltrate the terrorist FLQ because it had no money in its budget for that purpose, according to some police sources here.

The next paragraph, in quotes, reads:

> 'That lack has been the major weakness in our entire investigation of the Cross and Laporte kidnappings,' commented a police official.

The next paragraph, also is in quotes, and reads:

> 'Oh, we will be getting the money now but it is like closing the barn door after the horse has been stolen,' he said.
> The squad, known as The Combatters, has been in charge of the FLQ investigations. It had a pre-crisis hard core of about 30 top men which has been swelled to over 100 at present.
> Montreal police predominate its membership but other key men are from the RCMP and Quebec Provincial Police.
> 'No wonder much of our information on the FLQ is about two years out of date. We had almost no one working from within the terrorist cells,' said one official.
> The squad had some members moving about the city in hippie-type attire with long hair and beads but simply had no money to have special agents move in completely with the FLQ organization and the same lack of funds applied to paying informers.

Of course, I do not know whether the story is true. I do not know whether the officials who spoke to this reporter related facts. I am not saying they are facts. I am saying, however, that the fact police officials said these things to this reporter is important. I have read the same kind of thing in the reports of many other reporters in a number of newspapers.

If it is a fact, as I believe it to be, that through all the years when we knew of the existence of the FLQ and of the bombings and murders that have taken place this government sat back and hoped that the organization would disappear, then I say, Mr. Speaker, this government carries a very great responsibility for what has happened in Quebec, and that is so even from the point of view of police responsibilities and police work. There is no excuse for the government's facing the crisis in October, 1970, if, as has already been said, one year ago it received the report on security wherein the dangers in Quebec were emphasized. But again, nothing was done to deal with this situation.

I am raising this subject, Mr. Speaker, not only because it is important for the people of Canada to know what was done to get rid of the terrorists and criminals in Quebec before October 16, 1970, but because the government is responsible for its omissions as well as for all it has done, and because the failure shown by all police forces with regard to this particular situation is frightening. Anyone who has no illusions about this situation will admit, if not to me then to himself, that the present action will not necessarily rid us of the kind of activity the FLQ has carried on in Quebec. Whether or not the government is successful in putting the FLQ members behind bars,—and it has not been so yet—the situation in that province and in other disadvantaged areas of Canada is such that one cannot be certain this sort of activity and criminality may not recur. The failure of all our police forces to deal with the situation before October, 1970, makes one concerned about the future. That is why I have risen to speak this afternoon.

The Minister of Justice in his speech yesterday began by saying to us, "Let us not rake the past; let us deal with this bill." Then, having salved his conscience on that point, he went on to spend most of his time raking the past and attacking the NDP, particularly my leader and myself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, why did he do that? I sat and listened to him, and wondered. There were 16 of us in this House who voted against that measure. And I want to say, Mr. Speaker, without raising my voice that I am proud we had the depth of conviction to make a stand for the principle we believed in, even in a moment of panic and hysteria. I make no apologies for that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: But we were 16 members of this House who voted against the measure, and the minister said that the vast majority of the people in Canada supported what the government did.

An hon. Member: True.

Mr. Lewis: Somebody says, true. One hundred and ninety Members of Parliament voted for the measure. What was it really that needled the minister's conscience and that required some 30 minutes in which to attack those 16 people who voted against his bill, when he had the support of all the people in Canada? I will suggest why that was, Mr. Speaker: first, because the minister himself was uncomfortable about what had happened. I give him credit for that kind of conscience.

Mr. Greene: Now, the hon. member is being a psychologist.

Mr. Lewis: Second, he knew that questions were being asked across this country by many people who had originally supported the government's step, and third, he had seen a large number of newspaper comments which questioned the necessity even of the bill now before us.

An hon. Member: Which way will the hon. member's party vote?

Mr. Lewis: So, he did the usual thing that I suppose we all do in politics. Instead of dealing with the matter he ought to have dealt with, namely, the bill and what he had said, he set out on a shrill attack. I am not complaining about that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lewis: I was rather flattered that the minister took the time. But I want to underline that he would not have had a reason for so doing if he were not, in his conscience, concerned about what had been passed by his government and by him—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: —and if he were not aware of the fact that increasingly more people in Canada are questioning the rightness of that action.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: I wish to ask the minister a question. I shall ask some of the other ministers questions, too. It is about a matter he ought to have dealt with yesterday. He said on October 16:

> It is my hope that some day the full details of the intelligence upon which the government acted can be made public, because until that day comes the people of Canada will not be able fully to appraise the course of action which has been taken by the government.

I ask the Minister of Justice, Mr. Speaker; was he telling the truth when he said that?

An hon. Member: Sure, he was.

Mr. Lewis: When he said that, were his words based on information or was he deliberately writing a scenario to justify an action which could not be justified until then?

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Lewis: That is what I ask the minister directly. Did he have information for that very important statement? I repeat: what the minister said was that until the people of Canada have the information which is in his possession we will not be able to appraise the real reasons for the action. Let me tell him that we are still not able to appraise it—not the members of this House and not the people of Canada. If he had information, he had a duty to give it to us. He has not repeated that kind of statement since the Prime Minister set the line by saying that all the information is now public and nothing else counts.

An hon. Member: Pipe down.

Mr. Lewis: The minister shut up, as every member of the cabinet does, when the Prime Minister nodded his head. He has not repeated this very important statement. When he made that statement, either it was a statement of fact, or it was a statement of fiction. If it was fact, the minister ought to tell us what he was talking about; if it was fiction, then the Canadian people were taken in, in a way that is dishonourable in politics and in this Parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: I ask the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand, Langelier) this question.

An hon. Member: It is his turn now.

Mr. Lewis: When he said to the House that there were between 1,000 and 3,000 FLQ members who had infiltrated the highest places in Quebec, was he talking fact or was he talking fiction?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please.

• (4:50 p.m.)

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. Does the minister wish to ask a question of privilege?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, this is exactly the sentence that was quoted by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas). I have never in this House stated what is purported to have been said.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Here are the words which—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. It is the duty of the Chair to point out once again to the minister that he cannot disprove what has been said by an hon. member unless he takes part in the debate. Otherwise, questions of privilege would be too numerous, which would delay the business of the House.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Strictly speaking, Mr. Speaker, the minister is right about what he said.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: Don't yell "hurray" so fast. Strictly speaking, the minister is right about what he said in this House, although I was not far off even at that. I will read that in a moment. Over the air he said, from 1,000 to 3,000 members. I have seen that in reports.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lewis: If the minister says he did not say that in this House, he did say it outside the House. What the Minister did say in the House is recorded at page 224 of Hansard and reads as follows:

> But, from the moment when threats are caried out, then the danger increases. And by whom are they carried out? By two or three men with guns who have kidnapped one or two people? No, Mr. Speaker!
> The situation is much more serious than that. Any person having knowledge of the FLQ organization in the province of Quebec at the present time cannot but be aware that the state of Quebec and the federal state are truly in danger in Canada.
> Why? The most pessimist say that the FLQ has some 3,000 members.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): "Most pessimist".

Mr. Lewis: The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion was a trade union leader. I say to him that in my long experience I have not heard any lawyer be quite as tortuous as the minister is now being about what he said on another occasion.

Mr. Greene: Of course, you were not much of a lawyer.

Mr. Lewis: Why should the minister have said, "The most pessimist"?

An hon. Member: You are the accuser.

Mr. Lewis: That's right, and if you will keep quiet I will prove it.

Why did the minister refer to what most pessimists say if not to frighten the people of Canada? Why did he not refer to what most optimists say?

Mr. Greene: Why did you misquote his statement?

Mr. Lewis: Why did he refer outside the House to 1,000 to 3,000 members? The next part is equally or even more important:

> I do not know if that figure is accurate, but I am aware that there are quite a few.
> And I know something else; these people have infiltrated every strategic place in the province of Quebec, every place where important decisions are taken, and without giving complete details let us say that at the present time they are in a position to cause the Quebec and the federal governments, as well as the city of Montreal, irreparable harm, with the support of outside organizations which are not necessarily in agreement as to the measures taken because it is well organized.

Was the minister telling us something that he knew was fact, that there were FLQ members who infiltrated every strategic place in the province of Quebec, every place where important decisions are taken, and that they are at the present time in a position to cause Quebec and Canada irreparable harm? If it is fact, the minister has a duty to tell this House and the people of Canada those facts. If it is fiction to frighten the Canadian people, as I suspect in fact it is, then I say that is as reprehensible as the former.

When the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) says there are facts which the people of Canada may never know, I say to him and to this government if what he said is true we are entitled to know. The minister has no right to hide behind it. If what the minister said is not true, he is misleading the people of Canada in a way which is too serious in a situation like the present.

I ask the Minister of Justice what he meant by the phrase "erosion of will"? To what was the minister referring? What did the Prime Minister mean by, "confusion in the province of Quebec"? Where they talking about the fact that some people in Quebec believed there should be negotiations with the terrorists? If that is the extent of the erosion of will, I ask the Minister of Justice whether that justifies bringing the War Measures Act into operation?

I wish to make clear, Mr. Speaker, that I do not fault the government for refusing to negotiate with the kidnappers. No one in our party raised any such question during the first week that Mr. Laporte, and Mr. Cross were in jeopardy, because they were in jeopardy. I agree that it was impossible for the federal government or the government of Quebec to start on a course which meant giving in to a terrorist organization. Let me make that clear. However, if they were not merely referring to a number of men who, in their judgment, felt that two lives should be saved by negotiating or to the confusion in the cabinet of Mr. Bourassa, and it is well known there was division, what was it? Since when does confusion and erosion, whatever in heaven's name those words mean, provide reasons for proclaiming a statute such as the War Measures Act? I wish to state that all the statements to which I have referred were not made by members of the opposition. We did not make accusations against FRAP. It was the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): May I ask the hon. member a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The Chair feels that if the minister wishes to direct a question to the hon. member for York South, he should direct it to the Chair so that the Chair can decide whether the question is in order. At the same time, the Chair might also know the answer.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, you are always in my mind. I was directing the question through Your Honour to see if the hon. member for York South would accept it. The hon. member just said that no members of the opposition have made statements. I wonder whether he did say to the students at Carleton University that there was:

—probable infiltration by the FLQ into the Quebec police forces—

—for which he blamed the failure to recover kidnap victims James Cross and Pierre Laporte.

That was reported in the October 24 issue of the Ottawa Journal.

Mr. Lewis: As a matter of fact, and I did not speak from notes, I do not recollect that those were the words I used.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Misquoted again.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. The hon. member will have an opportunity to pursue the answer after the supper adjournment.

Message from Senate

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed the following bills to which the concurrence of this House is desired:

Bill S-4, an act to implement an agreement amending the Trade Agreement between Canada and New Zealand.

Bill S-7, an act to repeal the Leprosy Act.

[Translation]

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, Private Bills, Notices of Motions (Papers), Public Bills.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I believe that if we were to proceed with the private members' hour, one of our motions would be called. We are quite prepared for this hour to be given to the debate now in progress.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I am quite ready, in the normal course, to co-operate with the hon. member. It was not possible to negotiate such an arrangement earlier. We are prepared to go ahead with the private members' hour or to continue with this debate. I suggest that in future the hon. member consult through the normal channels in order that we on this side may be prepared.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The minister's memory must be failing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. At this time the Chair can only ask if there is unanimous consent.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise on a question of privilege. I ask the minister to check his memory. Earlier today I discussed with him the possibility of giving up the hour between five o'clock and six o'clock. I am only suggesting now what has already been discussed and agreed to.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. MacEachen: All I can say is that I have totally forgotten that conversation, but I accept the hon. member's word. If he said those things, I must have forgotten. I do not remember that at all, but I accept the hon. member's suggestion that he did. I know he talked about what we might do later tonight. But it is not very important in view of what has been said.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The House has heard the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. Is there agreement that we dispense with Private Members' Hour and pursue the study and debate of Bill C-181?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Public Order Act, 1970

PUBLIC ORDER (TEMPORARY MEASURES) ACT, 1970

PROVISION OF EMERGENCY POWERS FOR PRESERVATION OF PUBLIC ORDER

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) that Bill C-181, to provide temporary emergency powers for the Preservation of Public Order in Canada, be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Lewis: The Minister of Justice questioned me and I told him, as far as my memory went, these are not the words I used. However, I did suggest, as I did in this House on October 16, that there had been such infiltration and this was one of the difficulties the police faced. I was talking about what the ministers have said, and I was questioning the reason for the statement made by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) about FRAP, a statement which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) immediately rejected, saying he did not approve of it. This statement smeared a lot of innocent people, and could not but have been designed to hurt FRAP in the municipal elections. The minister said at the time he did not want to enter into the municipal elections, and having said that he entered them with both feet. Not only he, but his friend the Mayor of Montreal, Jean Drapeau did so. According to members opposite, this Mayor of Montreal, who does not have the reputation of being the most progressive man in Canada, is now a great hero. He followed the minister in making the same kind of statement against FRAP.

An hon. Member: What is wrong with it?

Mr. Lewis: What is wrong with it? It happens to be untrue; the minister knew it and he retracted it as did the Prime Minister. That is what was wrong with the statement. It happens to be untrue. It happens to be true that there were many people in FRAP, most of them having nothing to do with the FLQ, who believed in the democratic process and who entered into the municipal election in Montreal democratically for the purpose of breaking the one party state which now governs Montreal. Anyone who set out to smear this organization, anyone who set out to smear all the people in this organization, has a great deal to account for in terms of proper democratic procedure.

Then, we heard rumours about a plot to upset the government of Quebec. The Prime Minister kept on saying they were rumours. Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that I know from completely reliable sources that at least two members of the government spoke to other people and told them about this plot before I saw stories in the press. If the Prime Minister does not know this, he can easily find out. It is not for me to name the ministers, but I say on my responsibility as a member of this House that I know from the most reliable sources, the people directly concerned, that at least two ministers spread this rumour long before I saw it in the press.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel).]

Why was this rumour spread? Why did the Prime Minister not deny it when he knew it was not true, that there was no such plot, that there was only a lot of chit-chat in the editorial of Le Devoir and a lot of chit-chat between Mr. Ryan, Mr. Saulnier and Mr. Bourassa? When this matter was raised in the House, the first day, I telephoned Mr. Ryan, Mr. Laberge and Mr. Pepin. I spoke to Mr. Ryan; I could not get the other two gentlemen. He told me what happened, exactly as it appeared in his editorial in Le Devoir last Friday. The Prime Minister knew of these facts. The members of the cabinet knew of these facts. They knew perfectly well that as long as these rumours were allowed to continue, two things would happen. One was that Mr. Ryan and the group of men with him would, in the minds of the rest of Canada, be discredited and seem like traitors. They also knew that if the people in Canada from coast to coast read that there was "a plot to take over the government of Quebec" the only thing they would think about would be the FLQ using force to take over Quebec.

This is what I said over the air. This is what the Minister of Justice took exception to yesterday. I will say it again in this House in his presence, that I believe from the facts that the reason no one in the government denied these rumours about a provisional government was that the government liked the idea that these false rumours were going about because they hoped it would underpin their War Measures Act in the eyes of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Lewis: This is the only possible reason why honourable men, men honourable in all other respects, would want to see other honourable men smeared and regarded as traitors. There can be no other reason why they would not deny those rumours, because they knew the facts, except that they liked a rumour which helped them to fool the people about the kind of thing which is taking place. The fact of the matter is that those of us who opposed the imposition of the War Measures Act are now proved to be entirely right by the bill which is before the House today.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Lewis: This bill merely recites the reason for the War Measures Act having come into force as having been apprehended insurrection, but no longer are we dealing with apprehended insurrection as far as this bill is concerned; we are dealing with public disorder, and the facts I have already recited show that the powers which the government took were far too wide even in the regulations under the War Measures Act. It may be very well for the Minister of Justice to say that when we emphasized that the War Measures Act gave the government total power we were not being intellectually honest, or something like that. Well, when I have to take lessons in that line from the hon. gentleman or from any other member of the Liberal party, I shall quit politics.

An hon. Member: Quit now.

Mr. Lewis: I am tempted to say to the minister that a Liberal preaching intellectual honesty is like a street-walker preaching virtue. When we said the government was given power under the War Measures Act I always added, and my leader always added, that we knew it was implemented by regulation and that there had been only one regulation. Although I hope the War Measures Act will be withdrawn within a few days, the point I made as long ago as October 16 was that no man should be given the kind of power that the War Measures Act gives. If the act had remained in force, as was the intention of the government, until April 30 next, I shudder to think what other orders in council we might have had, had the situation in certain parts of Canada, in the mind of the government, so required.

My leader explained yesterday the reasons we felt we should vote for this bill on second reading. I agree with the reasons he gave, as do, so far as I know, all my colleagues. But I want to make it clear that, as far as I personally am concerned, I am not entirely convinced that these extended, extraordinary powers are in their totality needed. However, it is the only way we know to get the War Measures Act revoked immediately; certainly, this is what we wish as quickly as possible. It is the only way we know whereby we can bring this bill to committee of the whole and there try to improve it.

I understand that not only members of the opposition but members in the government ranks have some amendments to propose. If the government is going to be adamant in this regard, its action will be entirely inexcusable. If the government insists on retaining the retroactivity provisions in clause 8 of the bill, if it refuses to accept an amendment that seeks to set up what I call a supervisory commission, if it refuses to include in the bill an amendment that I expect a member of the official opposition to present in regard to an independent committee, if it refuses to take away some of these unnecessary powers now contained in the bill, then I will have reason to wonder what it is the government wants, merely power or power for a purpose.

I will suggest in debate in committee of the whole that the bill need not be weakened in the slightest; that it can be improved by interfering less with the civil liberties of people yet be entirely sufficient for the task the bill intends to tackle. We do not weaken the bill when making suggestions from the point of view of its purpose; we seek to improve it from the point of view of the rights and liberties of people. This is why I expect the government to pay attention to what we say.

Since my time is almost up, may I conclude by repeating what I and my leader said on October 16. My reading of history leads me to the conclusion that no group of people consisting of perhaps 30, 50 or 100 men and women only—certainly this is what police work indicates is the size of the group in Quebec—no group of terrorists, can possibly threaten democracy unless social and economic conditions are such that it feels strengthened by the frustration of the young, the despair of the old and the resentment of the many. It is this kind of condition in society that strengthens subversive, terrorist elements. Without this condition these elements would not even attempt the things they did. And if they did attempt them, they would be easily caught.

As far as I am concerned, naming the FLQ as an illegal organization in the bill does not worry me because, in my opinion as a lawyer, they are not a political organization. They are a criminal conspiracy, a seditious conspiracy. They are in fact an organization against the law. Therefore, if you want to call them illegal in an act, I do not get upset about it because obviously they are an unlawful, criminal, seditious conspiracy, and they have been for eight years.

Mr. Woolliams: And they are contravening the Criminal Code of Canada.

Mr. Lewis: They are contravening the Criminal Code and have been for eight years. But this little group could not have constituted a threat in Montreal and Quebec in the way they did were not the conditions of the people in the province so dire and regrettable.

Let me repeat what I said on October 16. The government that was supposed to unite Canada has created a situation where separatism in the province of Quebec is stronger today than it ever was in my knowledge of the province, and I have known it well for many years.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I realize the hon. member indicated that he was moving to the conclusion of his speech, but I must advise the House that his time has expired. Is there consent among the members of the House that the hon. member conclude his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lewis: I will not be long, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacEachen: We want a strong and eloquent conclusion.

Mr. Lewis: You have had it already; don't ask for too much. If I get started again, I shall have something to say to the house leader as well. However, I will not take the time. I was speaking of certain conditions but I did not say they produced the FLQ. I am not saying, as the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) thought I was saying two weeks ago last Friday, that these social and economic conditions produced the FLQ. They do that, too, because terrorists grow in that kind of soil. Criminals and terrorists are produced in a wide variety of psychological ways that I am not competent enough even to try to understand. What I am saying is that they would be no danger to Montreal, to Quebec or to Canada were not the government, indeed all of us together, responsible for social and economic conditions that in many parts of Canada, including the constituencies of the house leader and the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen), which are unforgiveable.

These conditions are particularly bad in the province of Quebec.

May I emphasize what I said. This bill will not guarantee, any more than would the War Measures Act, that there will not be terrorism in the future. It is not going to guarantee that terrorists may not receive sympathy from some people, as was the case with the FLQ. It is not going to guarantee that there will not be serious disorders in the future. The only thing that can make this less likely—though nothing is certain in this life—is a program that is directly aimed at the province of Quebec.

As a member of the House I would not raise any objection to such a program, assuming that it was sensibly planned for the people of the province rather than for foreign corporations, as has been the case until now. If it were sensibly planned for the people of the province of Quebec, as a member of the House, I would feel the future unity of Canada deserves special sorts of measures as the NDP suggested three or four years ago, special arrangements to meet a dangerous situation in that province. Some little time ago I may have hoped that the government would take a positive, constructive attitude and produce some really progressive plans. Mr. Speaker, I regret to say that the more I watch our Prime Minister and the rest of his cabinet in action, the less faith I have in their grasp or even in their understanding of the real problems.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. T. Lefebvre (Pontiac): Mr. Speaker, I have listened carefully to the speech delivered by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) on Bill C-181, entitled "An Act to provide temporary emergency powers for the preservation of public order in Canada," and I will come back to it later on.

On October 16 last, we were informed of the government's decision to invoke the War Measures Act for the first time in peacetime. On that occasion, the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) asked the unanimous consent of the House to introduce his motion. He told us that such powers were absolutely necessary to deal with a state of apprehended insurrection in the province of Quebec, following a message received from the Quebec government and the Montreal civic authorities, as reported on page 193 of Hansard.

There was unanimous consent, and the Prime Minister stated precisely the reasons why the government had decided to enforce the War Measures Act. Furthermore, he made it clear that he was truly sorry and deeply worried that the situation called for such action.

Mr. Speaker, I also supported that measure reluctantly, but being convinced it was the only logical step to take in the circumstances, I voted for the enforcement of that act. I am still convinced that this was the only adequate solution left to the government.

The Prime Minister promised the same day, as reported on page 194 of Hansard, and I quote:

Following the passage of enough time to give the government the necessary experience to assess the type of statute which may be required in these circumstances, it is my firm intention to discuss with the leaders of the opposition parties the desirability of introducing legislation of a less comprehensive nature.

Later on, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) made the same promise. He stated specifically that a new act would be introduced in the House within thirty days.

Mr. Speaker, the minister kept his word and, on November 2, he introduced, to replace the War Measures Act, an act whose short title is Public Order (Temporary Measures) Act, 1970.

I wish to congratulate the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice for having kept their word, and I am more proud than ever for being a government member.

The present situation in Canada and more particularly in Quebec is very serious. Let us hope that we shall soon be able to forget that period of our history and pursue together the unification of this country so that it may be the most peaceful in the world.

Mr. Speaker, it is my intention to support the government and to vote for that new legislation, for I am still convinced it is not yet time to give ground. We must give the police forces the necessary powers to perform their most important duty, namely to destroy the FLQ once and for all, bring back to Quebec and the whole of Canada peace and quietness and dispell the fear spread by bandits whose aim is to destroy our society.

I am not afraid at all to support that new piece of legislation because I am convinced that should the police arrest innocent people by mistake, they will still be far better in the hands of the police than in those of the FLQ bandits.

[English]

How does a member of this House feel, Mr. Speaker, when he is confronted with a law such as we were confronted with a short time ago, giving wide powers to our police forces for the first time in Canada's history in peacetime? Like our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and most other members of the House, I abhor violence in all its forms, and dread removing liberties from any citizen, unless it is proven to me that the situation is such that no other way is open to us. That proof was given, Mr. Speaker, and the citizens of Canada by a wide majority supported the government in its decision. Every person in my constituency who either wrote to me on this subject, or spoke to me by telephone or in person, supported the Prime Minister and our government.

No one in my constituency, Mr. Speaker, as far as I know, has lost his or her liberty by our actions, except possibly their own Member of Parliament. Like many other members of this House my residence in the Ottawa area and at Davidson in Pontiac county are under guard by the army, or watched over by the RCMP. As a result, my movements have been restricted and I cannot move about as freely as I have been accustomed to doing. I am quite sure that no one in my family likes the atmosphere created by armed forces personnel standing guard over us. However, Mr. Speaker, I must say that we have found these guards to be perfect gentlemen and very impressive in carrying out their duties. They are a credit to the Armed Forces and to the RCMP. Let us hope that the present situation will soon change and that our family life will return once again to its normal state.

I believe that the new law introduced by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) will give the necessary powers to our police forces in order that they can carry out their duties and, at the same time, protect those persons arrested. Under this bill, persons arrested must be charged within a maximum of seven days rather than the 21 days stipulated in the regulations under the War Measures Act. They will have a right to counsel and jury trial, rights which are not mentioned in the present regulations. Some innocent persons may be picked up and this would be very regrettable, but we must think of our society as a whole, and this new law is the only means by which we can protect the individual as well as our total population in these troubled times.

In supporting this legislation, Mr. Speaker, I would also like to emphasize to my colleagues the importance we must attach to removing the causes for dissatisfaction among some segments of our population. We cannot convert the members of the FLQ because I think they have embarked on a road of no return, but we should show the average citizen in poorer circumstances, who may harbour some sympathy for the FLQ manifesto, that we are taking steps to remedy his situation.

It is an enormous task, but I am convinced that this government can do it with the co-operation of all hon. members in the House, and that all the citizens of our country will reap the benefits. The Minister of Justice, who made a brilliant speech yesterday on this bill, explained why new measures are needed to combat new problems as they arise in our ever-changing society. We must meet this challenge, Mr. Speaker, and meet it now. Canada has perhaps lost her innocence, as the Minister of Justice said. I am convinced, however, that she has not lost her wisdom and her determination to bring about the just society. The legally elected government of Quebec and the municipal government of Montreal concurred in a request that special measures be taken. The federal government accepted their request and proclaimed the War Measures Act.

This new act will replace it and will liquidate itself on April 30. Let us hope that the situation will change before this date. Let us hope that even this new act will never be proclaimed again; but let us forever be ready to invoke it if the need arises. The Canadian people have the right to expect and demand this of us, and our duty is to accept it and fulfil our mandate for Canada.

[Translation]

Before concluding my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a suggestion to the cabinet. I wish that more funds be appropriated for the economic development of underdeveloped areas. We will thus contribute greatly to improve the living conditions and to decrease the feelings of frustration among many young Canadians and fathers.

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, all members know that it seldom takes me long to express my opinion.

After hearing the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) flinging abuse at the member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) and at the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), perhaps I am entitled to take at least a few minutes and reply to such nonsense.

I do not intend to stoop down to his level but I quite regret that, after attacking the members for Témiscamingue and Prince Albert, he forgot to say what he thought about Bill C-181, whether he is for or against it.

He could also have told us briefly his opinion, if he has one, on the necessity of this measure. I am afraid that the Secretary of State did not dare express his opinion about it because he is feeling himself somewhat guilty about the situation now prevailing in Quebec and elsewhere in Canada.

The Secretary of State blamed the member for Témiscamingue for wanting to bring before the firing squad the FLQ leaders who apparently remain unknown only to the government.

If an attempt by some individuals to overthrow a government by the means we know is not what is commonly called treason, I do not know what it is. Canada may be the only country or one of the few countries in the world to consider acts of treason almost as news items. I myself sometimes wonder if the present government is not satisfied with the situation and if in a sense it did not bring about the present conditions in Canada.

As for me, Mr. Speaker, I think that the hon. member for Témiscamingue and leader of the Ralliement créditiste was right in demanding that those who are officially known as leaders of the FLQ in Quebec be brought before the firing squad. Following the statement by the Créditiste leader, we received a great number of messages expressing satisfaction, not only from people in Quebec but from all over Canada.

The hon. Secretary of State also took pleasure in recalling the constant accusations levelled against the Créditiste leader because of his alleged admiration for Hitler and Mussolini in the past. However, the Secretary of State was careful not to tell the House exactly what the same leader had stated, in 1962 or 1963 I believe. But a man like the Secretary of State is always wont to recall such things.

The Secretary of State has been repeatedly accused of irresponsibility in the House, because whenever he was asked to do something about the CBC, he answered that he was not responsible for it.

Several hon. members, including myself, the mayor of Montreal, Mr. Saulnier and many others have asked the Secretary of State and the government to bring some order to what has been called the "pink babies", that is the Company of Young Canadians, following acts of violence in Montreal on or about October 7, 1969. Once again, the Secretary of State answered that he was not responsible, that he was "irresponsible" one might say.

Mr. Speaker, if the evidence produced by Mr. Saulnier was not enough to prompt the government to take some action in order to prevent the present situation, I wonder what could have then.

Mr. Saulnier made the following statement that I quoted on December 15, 1969, as reported on page 1992 of Hansard:

We now know that in Canada, individuals and groups are working actively to implement a plan which will carry the destruction of freedom of our form of democratic government and, in this plan, the people's will, as expressed in the ballot box, is excluded—

• (5:40 p.m.)

—These individuals and groups are inspired and financed, in many cases, by foreign political powers related to an "International" that does not share our notion of man's fundamental liberties.

And Mr. Saulnier states further:

In other cases, the same ideas and the same plan of action are supported by the government of Canada through the Company of Young Canadians.

It is not me who says that, but Mr. Lucien Saulnier, chairman of the Executive Committee of Montreal. I go on with my quotation:

For many months now, we have seized a substantial quantity of documents which justify me to put forward the previous assertions, and with the greatest certainty. It is enough today, and it is my duty to do so, to raise publicly a corner of the veil.

The partial disclosure to which I will limit myself today are but a small example of the things I know and of which I have privately informed the Prime Minister of Canada a few times.

This government could not plead that it was not aware of the facts, since it knew exactly everything the Company of Young Canadians was teaching in its clubs or organizations, namely, how to prepare Molotov cocktails, how to grow marijuana, how to organize a defence against the police forces. The government knew all that.

And Mr. Saulnier added that if the government wanted other evidence than what he had offered, on behalf of the city of Montreal, he could fill the committee room with witnesses.

This was not enough evidence for the government to undertake any action against terrorists and revolutionaries in Canada, who were often financed through public funds.

Mr. Speaker, we have before the House Bill C-181 entitled "an Act to provide temporary emergency powers for the preservation of public order in Canada."

Mr. Speaker, never would I have believed that in a country like Canada, abounding in possibilities of all kinds, we would have to vote such legislation to protect our security and our liberties. Even so, this is presented to us as provisional legislation. First we had the War Measures Act. Now we have an interim piece of legislation, to be replaced by another, probably a permanent one, for the preservation of order. I wonder a little to what extent this act to provide temporary emergency powers will be observed.

Previously, we had other legislation in our country, Mr. Speaker. The Criminal Code included provisions for the preservation of public order in Canada.

The death penalty existed for treason and capital murder and, in 1967, the present Prime Minister who was then Minister of Justice had that penalty abolished. In cases of treason and kidnapping without assassination, maximum penalties of 14 years of penitentiary were then imposed. Under the new proposed legislation, these penalties will be reduced to five years.

Thus the bandits, the revolutionaries, the scoundrels of all kinds can get away with almost anything under Canadian law.

If the legislation for the preservation of public order in Canada is not better enforced, I wonder what will happen.

There is an act dealing with seditious words. We have not used it often. A book was published by the RCMP in 1952. So, it dates back some time. It states with respect to sedition that if we had always applied that act, we would have avoided many things. Here is what we read on page 129:

—Thus, persons waging an open war on the Crown are guilty of treason, whereas those who commit less violent offences, but promote resort to force as a means to overthrow the established institutions are guilty of sedition.

Mr. Speaker, several persons in Canada have been guilty of sedition these past years, and I am thinking in particular of Michel Chartrand who on several occasions has committed such indictable offence.

And there are many others like Pierre Vallières, Charles Gagnon who have been engaged in seditious activities in Canada in recent years. And what has been done about it? Nothing. Let me quote a little further in this same section:

It is also the responsibility of all citizens to help prevent crime because disorder could easily lead the state into confusion.

Is this not the present situation, Mr. Speaker? Because no action was taken against those persons who voiced seditious statements, the government and many citizens of Quebec and in the rest of Canada are now in the midst of confusion. This section reads on as follows:

—However, where sedition is concerned, the responsibility of each individual is still more involved because seditious action seeks to overthrow by illegal means established order and government. Because of the tremendous effects of sedition on the state, it cannot be repressed merely by the efforts of public servants employed as peace officers, attorneys, etc.

Each citizen must realize that his country requires him to do everything in his power to avoid committing acts of sedition and to reveal to the appropriate authorities all information he may have regarding acts of this nature.

This, Mr. Speaker, is an appeal to the citizens to co-operate with our police forces so that those who are a cause of disorder in Canada may somehow be arrested.

But strangely enough, the Canadian people do not seem as anxious to help the police forces put an end to such disorder in Canada as one would like them to be. There must be some reason for that—

An hon. Member: Why?

Mr. Laprise: Why? There must be some reason, Mr. Speaker, and I believe that if the Canadian people were satisfied with their government, with the system under which they live, they would be anxious to help the police forces by giving away those who violate law and order. I will come back to that later on, because such is not the case.

Many people may have reasons for not co-operating and for not being satisfied with the system under which they live.

There are precedents with regard to sedition. In 1918, one Mr. Russell, informally recognized as a Communist, because there was no Communist party at that time, made seditious remarks during public meetings. I will quote one which he made at the Walker theatre on December 22, 1918, as reported in the book from which I quoted a moment ago:

> Blood is shed in Russia and it will be shed also in Canada, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, or else we will get our rights. We will not hesitate to walk in blood in order to obtain what we believe are our rights.

Mr. Speaker, Russell was found guilty of sedition after that statement.

For years, and mainly in the province of Quebec, statements have been made at least as seditious as Russell's in 1918. Nevertheless, nothing has been done about it. I wonder why we always wait until the last minute to do something.

The bill now under study is designed to replace the War Measures Act which it has been necessary to proclaim because of the October events in Quebec. In fact, it was necessary to put this act into force because of Mr. Cross's and Laporte's kidnappings and because of the sadistic murder of the latter on October 16.

The theft of arms in huge quantities and of thousands of sticks of dynamite, some sixty bombings which caused the loss of several lives and thousands of dollars of damages, that was not enough to wake up the government. The death of families or fathers of families as a result of acts of violence, does not seem so bad to the government. The matter is discussed for two or three days, and that is the end of that. I am thinking of what occurred not very far away from here, on June 24 last, near Parliament Hill, when a woman was killed by a bomb that exploded at the National Defence building. People talked about it for two or three days, then no more was heard about it.

Apparently, everything was forgotten as if it were nothing but a commonplace incident, a collision between two cars.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that we should now enact legislation to restore order. However, much more is needed. Force will not be the answer for some 200,000 unemployed workers in Quebec, nor for hundreds of thousands of families living with crumbs granted with all kinds of humiliating formalities, by social welfare. Force will not be the answer for the blind and the disabled who have to put up with an income of $55 and sometimes of even $45 a month. Force will not be the answer for thousands of young people without jobs, most of them well-educated, having a profession or a trade, but insecure as regards their future. Force will not satisfy workers of all categories who see a substantial part of their pay cheque being forfeited to the state.

Mr. Speaker, force may succeed in subduing criminals, political or otherwise, provided it is used with intelligence and, in the present case, this has not been obvious. However, peace and order in Canada can only be brought back when all members of society in this country will have been given the right to economic freedom that industry, agriculture and our various services can provide them with.

The leader of the Ralliement Créditiste has been claiming for a long time that our economic system shall be either reformed by the men of order or destroyed by the others.

Times have not changed. This is not the first crisis we experience. There were many others, including that of 1919, which was characterized by uprisings that strongly worried the authorities at that time.

One also remembers the no less famous crisis of the thirties, in which a very large number of our best men were forced to hitchhike from Halifax to Vancouver looking for a job that would enable them to live decently.

Mr. Speaker, during a debate on January 18, 1937, as reported on that day in Hansard, Lionel Chevrier, who was then Liberal member for Stormont, shortly after the Liberal party was put back in office, said:

> Today the working masses are suffering; in nearly every country in the world they are the victims of individualism with its doctrine, its utilitarianism and its unrestricted competition which has degenerated in economic dictatorship, the people are ready to believe that the only remedy to their evils lies in a complete overthrow of the social order.

Do we realize that it is about the same thing today? I go on with the quotation:

> It is necessary to prove to those who suffer and are embittered against society that the remedy does not reside in the destruction of the existing order, but in its reform, for otherwise it will be impossible effectively to defend society against the assault of revolutionary forces.

If Mr. Chevrier were still a member of the House today, he would repeat the same words because we are in a situation much similar to the one that prevailed in 1937.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair to resume same at eight o'clock p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

Public Order Act, 1970

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, when I called it six o'clock, I had just quoted what the member for Stormont said in 1937, in order to prove to what extent the present situation resembles one we have already witnessed.

Still, each time, the effects are more and more harmful, and the dangers of disorder much greater, to the extent where we wonder whether it is not already too late, whether the administrative structure of our country is not in the process of crumbling.

The same conditions prevailed in Russia, China, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Hungary, Cuba and elsewhere. The same methods were used there, that are now being used in Canada to stir up the people: subversion, sedition, uprisings, contestations, terrorism, kidnappings and murder. There were even times when government institutions were used to achieve those ends.

For instance, I feel that the CBC was used as a stepping-stone by all the leftists and revolutionaries in Canada, Europe and Asia. An FLQist revolutionary was so well situated at the CBC that employees and announcers, paid by public funds, were passing messages between FLQ leaders and cells.

Never have so many misleading news later been denied by the same announcers! Never have we seen so many false rumours broadcast over the waves as between October 5 and 16! And the Secretary of State was not aware of this? Come on!

Because of the bad turn of events, steps had to be taken. The police intervened and several personalities disappeared from the CBC. No one seems to feel the worst for it, since October 16. On the other hand, those who were removed from the CBC as a result of their subsersive activity are now bawling.

Recently we heard a union leader of CBC speakers and employees ask for an inquiry into his dismissal.

The Montreal newspaper La Presse issued an article on the facts I just mentioned, namely that the FLQ had infiltrated the CBC. A senior CBC executive wrote to La Presse management to complain about their accusations. On November 3, 1970, Jacques Tremblay replied in his editorial, and I quote:

> Don't you think that during the two weeks before the proclaiming of the emergency measures some individuals, well-known for their verbal violence and their advocacy of all kinds of hatred, have had the first place in your so-called information features?
> Why were all their declarations unfailingly treated as of national importance? And if those people known for their hatred-filled statements and their advocacy of violence have been so often seen on your screens, is it not normal to say that your network has been a forum for them? At least this is our impression.

This was the impression of La Presse and several others too who have been able to see that on television.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

And I, for one, on the Thursday night before the proclamation of the War Measures Act, on the eleven o'clock CBC news, I saw one Jean-Claude Devirieux, cut abruptly a bulletin he was reading to tell us he had heard a rumour which he had no time to control, but was giving as such. And then he resumed his reading of the bulletin.

Mr. Speaker, I believe it is not proper for an announcer, whether from the CBC, Télé-Métropole or any other television or radio news service, to take it upon himself to cut a news bulletin to broadcast rumours from all quarters. Mr. Speaker, if this was not a message sent to some FLQ cells or leaders, I wonder what it was.

Thus, it is not surprising to hear people complain of the low quality of the services offered by the CBC and of the too great independence given to the corporation with the complicity not only of the present Secretary of State, but also of his predecessors.

Bill C-181 has some deficiencies which will need to be corrected when it is considered in the committee of the whole. We are facing murders and murderers. However, I do not want you, Mr. Speaker, to think that I am aiming at those at your right. No. I simply say that we are confronted with events which have happened in the province of Quebec.

No provision in the bill tends to punish murder carried out following kidnappings or bomb explosions. The bill is retroactive, but it does not state to what extent. That will have to be determined.

A person may be found guilty for having participated in or having been present at a number of meetings. Here again, I think this is too vague. Two meetings may be enough to convict a certain person while for another one, several meetings, perhaps even eight or ten, will be necessary. Those, Mr. Speaker, are a few points that will have to be spelled out during our discussion of Bill C-181 in the committee of the whole.

As for me, Mr. Speaker, I do not like to have to discuss such a bill at the present time, when there would be so many other things to do to improve the standard of living of the citizens we represent. I hope this bill will enable us to work efficiently and that the government will pass the measures required to ensure the distribution of consumer goods among all Canadians and to improve the standard of living of the Canadian people, so that they may live in peace and freedom.

• (8:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Hyl Chappell (Peel South): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): Filibuster!

Mr. Chappell: I have been around this House long enough to know that personal attack does not improve debate.

Mr. Woolliams: Why don't you sit down and let us get on with the debate?

Mr. Chappell: I have been in the courts long enough, I am sure for as long as the hon. member who has interrupted from the other side, to know that it does not improve an argument. But there are times when things that are said are so off course that they must be corrected.

When the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) was describing the interrogation of those arrested and later freed, he pictured the interrogation as incompetent. He thus attacked the police and the Attorney General of Quebec. Although it is possible he may be right, I ask whether it is fair for the police force of Quebec and the Attorney General of Quebec to be attacked in this House on the basis of something allegedly said by one or two of these people, when they have no opportunity to answer those allegations.

The hon. member spoke at length about the number arrested and eventually freed without charges being laid. He was critical, also, of the action of the authorities in taking their fingerprints. I ask you, Mr. Speaker: How could the Quebec police force know which of the 29 were to be charged until they had taken the fingerprints of each to ascertain which, if any, matched fingerprints on documents and articles seized?

An hon. Member: Why don't they fingerprint everybody?

Mr. Chappell: I say, also, that some very serious charges have been laid. These charges may be against the leaders. Would it be wise to lay charges against those on the fringes in these circumstances? In any event, there is no evidence at all that some of those who have been set free may not be charged in the future. The hon. member also attacked the RCMP. Why, he asked, has the RCMP not caught these people? In fairness, I must point out that the RCMP are not responsible for policing Quebec with respect to ordinary law enforcement; their numbers are not sufficient to enable them to do so, in any case, and it is not right that it should be implied they have this duty and ought to have carried it out.

He also quoted Pierre Elliott Trudeau, the author, and adopted his statement that if one person felt he was right he should continue to maintain his stand even though 99 opposed it. I do not disagree with that. Then he said the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), by bringing this act into force, had done more to separate Quebec from the rest of Canada than all other actions to date. I say this: if the hon. member is serious in his remarks, I will expect him to try to convince us next week that every tomcat carries a marriage licence.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Chappell: I consider the subject now under debate to be as serious as any we have discussed in Canada for some time. On October 14 I spoke of the need for democracy to demonstrate that in time of emergency it can quickly produce the teeth and muscle necessary to defend itself against those who would destroy our way of life and force their will upon us. I refer to the group of people who call themselves le Front de Libération du Québec. I have observed from history that terror can succeed if there is vacillation—

Mr. Woolliams: And procrastination. I will help you with that one.

Mr. Chappell: —and undue softness on the part of the authorities in dealing with it. At such a time the people must be reassured that democracy can guarantee protection and preserve freedom from mob violence, or in panic and confusion they may be stampeded into a lower form of government. But if democracy moves firmly and quickly, confidence can return just as quickly. It is the duty of the government to take such action when necessary.

I supported the introduction of the War Measures Act on October 16. Although somewhat cumbersome and broader in scope than was required, it was the only tool immediately available. To those who still criticize its proclamation in spite of the overwhelming support in favour of this action from the Canadian people, I say that if one is about to be stabbed in the back one cannot spend too much time looking for the exact defensive weapon. I support the bill before us and congratulate the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) and the government for having been able to consult with the provincial Attorneys General and the leaders of the opposition parties and still bring it in within two weeks.

Freedom consists of freedom of the press, freedom of speech with the right to criticize and protest, freedom of movement, which includes the right to carry on one's chosen activities without fear or interference. It does not include the right to destroy the basis of the society which is our guarantee of freedom. Mr. Laporte died as a Canadian in a national emergency. He died in an attack against Canadian freedom. I urge this government to forthwith join with the Quebec government in providing full compensation for his family, and in undertaking to do the same for any other person in Canada who suffers the same fate at the hands of this group. I think all Canadians wish to share in this responsibility.

To those who doubt my statement that there was overwhelming support for what the government did on October 16, I say I have received a multitude of letters, telephone messages and telegrams and less than 2 per cent disagreed with the government's action.

• (8:20 p.m.)

The FLQ, with its savage attitude and ruthless means, has done more to unite the people of Canada and to show that democracy can work in its own self-defence than any other single incident in our history. The people of Canada realize that with the FLQ we are not dealing with ordinary criminals, but with individuals who have jointly and severally audaciously established a format of terror for terror's sake. Their crimes are not attacks against individuals but against the values of an entire nation. On that basis, their behaviour approximates a state of civil war rather than a state of crime. They are, in essence, outlaws owing no allegiance to anything but their own vices.

I cannot believe that these people are offshoots from poverty. They do not direct their efforts toward improving the lot of anyone. Their activity is not spontaneous or activated for the good of anyone. They have taken training both outside and inside Canada. They have studied the means of insurrection and have spread the teaching of how to kill, disorganize and terrorize. They have their killing cells, their criminal financing cells and their propaganda cells. This last is the most insidious and dangerous of all.

For the past several years they have been infesting some Canadian youth. We all know that during the last decade youth has been challenging the establishment, that physical violence has become the daily companion of protest, with rock throwing replacing debate. In this atmosphere this group, with its well disguised propaganda cells, has infiltrated and gathered recruits from the radical wings of university students and other groups where they have found dissent and dissatisfaction. They have used these youthful converts to infiltrate further into the teaching profession, labour unions and communications.

This group chose the name Front de Libération du Québec hoping for some popular appeal among those who are uniformed and do not appreciate that their aim is to attack society itself. By espousing causes that appear to be related to their aims, they gained outspoken support from some of the leaders of labour and the Parti Quebecois. Some of these supporters even sought recognition of this group as a political force.

I cannot accept that they seek to help the people of Quebec. These people are gangsters, a new type of fanatical outlaw who desires power at any cost. While moving to implement their plans to destroy freedom, they and their supporters moan and scream about any interference with their freedom. A few members of the civil liberty groups—and I say only a few—and their fellow travellers, and some who should know better, have said that this legislation is not necessary, that it will interfere with the freedom of ordinary people. What a deception! Law abiding, ordinary Canadians need have no fear. Those of us who served during the last war should be more conscious of the effects of the War Measures Act than others. Most of us lived under it for years without even knowing it existed.

Recently we unanimously accepted a gross invasion of our freedom by introducing the breathalyzer law; yet we all agreed to accept it in order to preserve a greater freedom—the right to drive on our highways in safety. Under the Combines Investigation Act a supplier of merchandise can have his premises invaded and his papers taken without warning. He can be required at a preliminary hearing to make disclosures under oath, including the names of all possible witnesses, and in some cases he can even be required to give evidence against himself at his own trial. The reason for this law is to protect the public from unjust increases in prices. Surely, if we can go this far to protect ourselves from improper price increases, we can go just as far to protect ourselves from terrorists. The critics of this new legislation overlook the basic principle that such laws are not weapons to punish but are, rather, a shield to protect the people and their freedoms.

What good are criminal laws unless criminals are caught? What good is there in apprehending offenders unless there are charges to fit their crimes and justice is quickly but surely meted out? I believe that the greatest deterrent to crime is the near certainty of being caught and punished. If our laws are not effective and criminals are not brought to justice, then they and their sympathizers ignore the laws even more. They become bolder and, in a sense, heroes among themselves and their sympathizers. Their lawlessness increases.

I believe that there was and still is a very real danger in the present situation to persons and property, along with a serious disruption of freedom of movement and speech. Decent, honest, ordinary people are afraid of retaliation, afraid that when they stand up to speak, or when they listen to someone else speak, what they want to say or hear will be drowned out by the interference and static of those who seek to harass them. The War Measures Act will be returned to the shelf. However, we must still cure this social sore before it becomes a fatal cancer. These people to whom I refer must be excised from our society.

Neither Quebec nor, in fact, any other province can bring in such legislation which is in essence criminal law. It is supported by all members of the House from the province of Quebec, the great majority—in fact, an overwhelming majority—of the members of this House, and by the provincial premiers, including Premier Schreyer who in a sense is the only really responsible NDP member in Canada in that he is the only one who holds elected responsibility.

I say, how could we claim to be responsible and not introduce such legislation when it is requested by the responsible government of the province in question?

I agree with the Minister of Justice that we should take two steps. The first is to deal with the specific problem to see how this new legislation works and what is needed for the long term. Before taking the second step there should be time for debate and an opportunity to hear representations from legal and social thinkers from across Canada. We require time to clean up and redraft scattered, diverse and in some cases outmoded descriptions of criminal activity.

This bill increases the power of search, arrest and detention. The detention gives time to complete the investigation. Police should not lay charges unless there is sufficient evidence. If they do, they are criticized. They must have time to find the evidence before the accused can hide it or escape the jurisdiction. Thus, there is need to detail them for a few days. Too often people think of police as a foreign element. They are not; they are enforcing our laws for our protection. Of course we need to watch the police, but for God's sake let us give them reasonable powers to carry out their work, and let us not stand and abuse them as they have been abused in the House today.

Clause 4 of this bill makes it a crime to be a member of the FLQ. Needless to say, they do not have an office, a secretary or membership lists. Membership will be most difficult to prove, at least in the very early stages. But the clause has much merit because it signifies to all that the representatives of the Canadian people will not tolerate this type of activity. I am more concerned about whether the bill goes far enough, and I was somewhat disappointed with respect to the long time which the opposition spent on the problem as compared with the short time which they spent on the solution and the best means to deal with the situation.

An hon. Member: Let us hear your solution.

Mr. Chappell: As the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) said, we must give them the tools to do the job. I ask: Should we not create offences from their criminal acts of behaviour and legislate that certain acts in themselves carry a presumption of membership in the FLQ and an intent to overthrow the government by force? I shall not attempt to list them all, but under the circumstances that exist today could there not, and should there not, be a presumption in respect of one who has a machine-gun in his possession, or one who has dynamite or detonating devices in his possession, or one who has FLQ literature, not a single copy for his own consideration but an amount that is obviously for distribution, or those who associate with these people who are known to be involved?

Should we not also consider forcing them to become compellable witnesses in certain limited circumstances, and thus require them to disclose the names of people obviously with them at the time the crime was committed but whose identity cannot be established? If we do some of these things now, we may once and for all rid ourselves of the greatest attack on Canadian democracy.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that I would have participated in this debate had it not been for the attack made yesterday by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) on the leaders of this party.

An hon. Member: Here he comes now.

Mr. Woolliams: How many leaders have you?

Mr. Brewin: We have at least two.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, you have 20.

Mr. Brewin: We have many potential leaders but only two actual leaders, and now I am referring to the two actual leaders and I am saying that the attack upon them yesterday by the Minister of Justice is what provoked me to add a few remarks to this debate.

The Minister of Justice invited the House to participate in a constructive debate on the actual measure before us. I am not quoting him exactly, but I think he deplored the rehashing of the controversial issue as to the appropriateness or otherwise of invoking the War Measures Act. Having done this, he then devoted almost all his speech to an immoderate and partisan attack upon the leaders of this party. What was their offence? Their offence consisted of opposing the invocation of the total powers conferred upon the government by invoking the War Measures Act. When I say total, I mean total.

The Minister of Justice tried to make it appear that my leader had made some misleading remarks when he referred to the powers existing under the War Measures Act. I point out to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the House that the powers under the War Measures Act are in fact vast and unlimited. They are not confined to any particular regulation that may be made under the War Measures Act. The power to make regulations and orders is as widespread as you like and includes censorship, arrest, detention, exclusion, deportation and appropriation, control and forfeiture of property.

These are the powers that are conferred by the War Measures Act, but in this particular instance the government has only seen fit to employ one part of these powers which they conferred upon themselves by invoking the War Measures Act, namely, the particular regulation that was in fact enacted. But I point out once again to the House and to the minister that the wording of section 3 of the War Measures Act gives the Governor in Council the power to do and authorize such acts and things, and make from time to time such orders and regulations as he may, by reason of the existence of the emergency, deem advisable. It is not only the power to make orders and regulations that was taken by this government when it proclaimed the War Measures Act, but the power to do any other thing and authorize any other thing or act that it saw fit.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): May I ask the hon. member a question? Would he be good enough, after he finishes reciting that section, to move on to section 4 or section 5 where it says that only orders and regulations passed under that act have the force of law.

Mr. Brewin: I am looking at the act itself and I do not see the passage to which the minister refers. I am aware of the jurisprudence, as I am sure he is, which has made it clear from time to time that the powers under this act are virtually unlimited. The act speaks for itself. We in this party stand firmly behind our leaders and we reaffirm our conviction—

An hon. Member: All of you?

Mr. Brewin: There is a slight difference of opinion.

Mrs. MacInnis: And there is freedom of expression here.

• (8:40 p.m.)

Mr. Brewin: We have no totalitarian tendencies in this party. We have differing convictions and we express them. We express our differences. We are not afraid of voting according to our conscience. I do not have to agree with the rather small minority of my colleagues who took a different view, but I respect their right to do so. I notice the government party has always claimed the same freedom of conscience, but I have seldom seen it expressed. I am waiting for the day the Liberals express their own convictions by doing otherwise than voting for the party which they support. That will be the day, Mr. Speaker. I have not seen it yet, and I have been here quite a few years.

An hon. Member: You should be in the House more often.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, there was an exception. Mr. Ralph Cowan at least sometimes voted against his party, but he did not stay here very long. He did not get the nomination again.

Mr. Lewis: He was read out.

Mr. Brewin: Yes, he was read out. However, I reaffirm our conviction that the invoking of the War Measures Act should only be occasioned by the circumstances and conditions stated in it, and they are the existence of real war or civil war. Insurrection is a civil war. I say that these conditions have not been demonstrated to us in any way at all. I tell the Minister of Justice that there are many thoughtful people in Canada who believe our leaders—I am referring specifically to the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) and the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis)—showed an admirable courage and sound conviction in fighting against what they considered to be a serious danger to the fundamental rights of Canadians. I believe that when history comes to be written, more and more Canadians will come to share this particular conclusion.

Certainly we acknowledge, and there is no doubt about it, that there has been evidence presented to us of grave and serious disorder created by the FLQ through its odious actions in Quebec, serious disorder which required action. But since this matter came up, we in this party have always made it clear that we were ready, and we are ready today, to support appropriate action to strengthen the authorities in order to deal with this crisis. However, in all the weeks since this matter arose, no evidence has been produced of the existence of the conditions which alone justify the invoking of the War Measures Act. We have had rumours, we have had dark hints galore, we have had phony plots—but a complete absence of hard facts and evidence to justify what has been done.

What are the results of all the searches? Of the 450 people detained, only 40 are to be charged. Do 40 people without arms—there has been no evidence that any of these people have had caches of arms—indicate insurrection? I do not think anybody but the most nervous type would say that it indicated insurrection. I agree with what the Minister of Justice said, that the meagre result of the searches and arrests is not in itself proof that there was not a serious crisis; but it does create doubts as to the existence of a crisis of the sort that could properly be described as insurrection. It does not look as though the insurrection was a very real threat. Alternatively, one must come to the conclusion that the searches were not competently carried out. One or other is the inevitable conclusion.

The production of this bill which we are discussing is itself evidence of the lack of necessity for taking the extreme step of introducing the War Measures Act. The minister himself said the present bill is in much more precise terms. I am glad to agree with him: it undoubtedly is. Why could not this bill have been introduced weeks ago? Is the government's drafting capacity so small that we must wait for weeks while innocent people are detained and then released? Surely it was possible to produce this bill sooner. I suggest it could have been produced and brought down sooner and, subject to certain amendments that we are ready to propose, we would have passed it promptly and it would have sufficed, instead of invoking the tremendous powers of the War Measures Act.

I now want to turn to the legislation that is before us. In my view it is—and I only repeat what has been said by the leader of my party—a very great improvement on the regulations introduced under the War Measures Act and by the invoking of that act. Mr. Speaker, I want to spend a moment saying why it is such an improvement as to justify, subject to certain amendments, our supporting it on second reading. First of all, the bill is temporary in its nature and does not confer such sweeping and extensive powers on the Governor in Council.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. There are many private discussions and conversations taking place in the chamber and the Chair has difficulty hearing the hon. member. I wonder whether hon. members who are engaged in conversations would continue them outside the curtains.

Mr. Brewin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sometimes it is a little difficult to compete against a number of voices speaking in the chamber at the same time.

An hon. Member: It is hard listening, too.

Mr. Brewin: I know some hon. members find it very difficult to listen. They have never been very good listening types. Mr. Speaker, I was going to give—I thought hon. members opposite might be pleased to hear it—the reasons why in my view this legislation is a tremendous improvement upon the invocation of the War Measures Act and the regulations orginally passed. The first point I want to make is that it does not confer such sweeping powers on the Governor in Council. It expressly introduces—which did not exist before—many of the protections provided by the Canadian Bill of Rights, including the right to counsel which in practice has been ignored during this operation, whatever the legal niceties may happen to be.

I think it is important that the legislation now before us does in fact introduce many of the provisions, and I think it should introduce more of the provisions of section 2 of the Bill of Rights. The definition of "illegal association" has been very much restricted and narrowed, and the period of detention without trial abridged. Above all, this bill revokes the War Measures Act. In view of these very real improvements, for which I think the whole House can take credit—I do not think any one party should take full credit for it, because the vigilance and the concern of all Members of Parliament have had something to do with it—I think the fact is that this is a vastly narrower, more reasonable and more appropriate measure than was presented to us before, and on that basis I think it deserves some sort of support.

However, Mr. Speaker, in my view it is absolutely essential that certain parts of this bill be amended, because it still contains provisions that are intolerable in any country that values its fundamental freedoms. One thing that should be odious to the Minister of Justice, his government and party, is the provision that in effect calls for the retroactive operation of the law. The minister shakes his head. I have heard him say outside this House that these provisions are not retroactive. I say that clause 8 clearly has a retroactive effect because it refers to proof of membership, and presumed proof of membership is not based upon what one has done since this act came into effect. It is based upon what one did before and after the act came into effect. So that if five years ago or ten years ago, if the FLQ had been in existence then, you had attended a couple of meetings of the FLQ, perhaps quite ignorant and innocent of what it was, you could be hauled before the courts and told, "This is prima facie evidence of your membership. Now prove you are not a member and have not been a member. We are not satisfied with your proof of ignorance, so you are liable to five years in jail."

I say it is contrary to the jurisprudence of civilized countries to make actions criminal on the basis of things that were legal when the actions themselves in fact took place. The Universal Charter of Human Rights makes it perfectly clear that acts that were not criminal by national or international law before their commission are not to be punished. Here you are perhaps talking about membership today. Technically you can argue that membership today is not retroactive. If you prove membership today by relation to acts in the past and then say, "The onus is on you to get rid of the acts of the past", I say you are giving effect to ex post facto criminal law and no civilized country will recognize the validity of this. The international community of nations has made it clear that this is prohibited and wrong and is not in accordance with the fundamental rights of justice as recognized throughout the world.

Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned before, I am very pleased that the new bill reintroduces large sections of the Bill of Rights. But it cuts out one that is in the Bill of Rights and which I think should be preserved. This is the right to have bail fixed, not by an official of the government, not by police officials and not by an attorney general but by the courts of this land. That is what the courts are for. We propose to urge the Minister of Justice and this House to remove from the bill this provision which deprives a few persons of the right to bail which is conferred by the Bill of Rights and in the manner which has been traditional in our courts. Again, the right to bail is recognized in international law.

Mr. Speaker, we in this party do not propose to delay or obstruct passage of this bill. We are prepared to accept it on second reading, but we propose to do our duty in examining the legislation as carefully as we can. Where we find provisions we consider offensive to fundamental freedoms and fundamental rights, we shall ask that they be amended. I hope that this government will show its confidence in Parliament by taking seriously the amendments which will be proposed by members of the opposition in this and other parties, to see whether we cannot get a better bill and one which has less danger of being oppressive. If they do not, it will be an indication of their unwillingness to take Parliament seriously.

It has been my conviction that the highest and most important function of Parliament is vigilance in regard to fundamental rights and democratic freedoms. I hope this Parliament will prove worthy of the trust that the people of Canada put in it to be defenders of their liberty, to be defenders of their fundamental rights and to make sure that at this moment of grave trial in Canada we do not abandon time-honoured principles which are so important to all Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Paul-M. Gervais (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, listening to the previous speaker, I realized that he said in the same sentence that the government acted too late, but on the other hand, that the measures invoked were extreme. I must say I find it difficult to reconcile the two statements.

In any event, because he is a former prime minister, I regret having to say that the words of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) were ill-advised; he took the opportunity to indulge in bombast and made vain attempts at humour.

Mr. Speaker, I can assure the House that the people of Quebec and of the other provinces of Canada cannot see anything pleasant or funny in the distressing and serious situation we are facing.

As for the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) and the previous speaker, I understand why they speak as the champions of civil liberties without giving a thought to the vast majority of Quebecers and other Canadians who willingly submit to inconveniences, searches and even temporary arrests so that we may see the end of this anguish and terror which prevails in Quebec.

An hon. Member: Hear! Hear!

Mr. Gervais: These people are willing to undergo hardships, to forsake some of their liberties partially and temporarily so that may be stopped the activities of terrorists who want to deprive them of these freedoms and force on them later their totalitarian doctrine, which we reject.

Talking of the freedom of all individuals, Mr. Speaker, it is a lovely philosophy. We heard about that when we were in college. However, what do we hear about Mr. Cross and Mr. Laporte's freedom and about the murder of the latter?

Mr. Lewis: We have the Criminal Code.

Mr. Gervais: We shall come back to that.

What should one think about the innocents who are threatened? I appreciate the fact that hon. members who live in the shadow of the Rockies may find it difficult to read the Quebec newspapers; nevertheless they could come closer to that province, where the crisis is the most obvious at the present time, by reading the newspapers and by consulting with their colleagues here, regardless of their party affiliation to find out what is really happening in our province.

There is much talk about civil liberties but the victims are forgotten. There are many of them at the present time. I think of Cross, Laporte and other innocent people who are threatened. I think of the citizens of Montreal who are afraid even to go to the movies at night. I think of those who have stopped going to night clubs. I think of those who must abstain from attending social or political events of all kinds. That is what is going on in the province of Quebec. Perhaps that in the shadows of the Rockies they are not aware of it right now but I hope that such tragic events never happen there. Today it is FLQ but maybe later on it will be the FLBC—

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: Why are you filibustering your own bill?

Mr. Gervais: I am not filibustering my own bill. My hon. friend is often enough on his feet, so I think he should give me an opportunity to speak. We know him very well.

• (9:00 p.m.)

[Translation]

Children in schools, in CEGEPs, in universities, are threatened by other children who incite them to resort to blackmail, even though their parents make every effort to educate them properly. Here is an example: The hon. member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) and myself went to the University of Sherbrooke to explain federalism to the students. By the way, the second issue, first volume, of the Estrien Rouge, published in the province of Quebec on April 3, 1970, with a picture of Mao on the front page and sold for 10 cents, contained, as the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) reported previously, the following which I quote:

> The stand taken by those traitors, Ouellet and Gervais, who represent the colonialists, clearly proves that only the power of the people can drive them out of Quebec.

[Mr. Gervais.]

And then, it will be argued that there was not sufficient evidence to proclaim the War Measures Act.

I think that perhaps the time has come to proceed with the study of the bill and to stop rehashing old stories, as we did this afternoon. The aim of this bill is to extend the powers of the Attorneys General or of the Minister of Justice, as we say in the province of Quebec, those powers being delegated to the police forces in order to allow them to work more efficiently.

Those who claim that civil liberties are impaired will not approve, of course, in principle, a special act but taking into account the present context and such a complex situation, I do not think that it is so restrictive.

There is the matter of bail, of arrest, search and seizure without warrant. But, on the other hand, if one refers to the preamble of the bill now under consideration, one can see that if an individual has done nothing wrong, he has nothing to be afraid of.

Some people are acting out of political expediency, such as our friends from the New Democratic Party, who do not really know Quebec—there is not even one in the House who represents a riding from that province—but they could have consulted us. Anyway, the vote was eloquent enough to show them that other members were perhaps more enlightened than they were. In spite of these facts, I suspect they are not aware of the situation and after discussions, telephone conversations with people from other provinces, I submit that these members do not even represent the views of their constituents.

The people of Canada almost unanimously, support action taken by the government since the emergency measures have been in force.

As the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) has pointed out, there might be some abuse in the application of the legislation. That is unfortunate, but in the present circumstances we must apply it, and it is the responsibility of the Attorney General or the Minister of Justice of the province to see that the law is observed and that arbitrary measures are curbed to the greatest possible extent.

Others criticise the government for not having acted soon enough, as the previous speaker said. I should have liked to see how the same people would have reacted had the government taken action, say six months or a year ago. What would have been their attitude, had the government taken action before the kidnappings, before the assassination of Mr. Laporte, before the violent deaths caused by acts of terrorism? Then there would have been a terrible filibuster. The government would have been accused of taking fascist measures, whereas today we must act in that delicate and painful situation we have now.

In Canada we were not prepared to face a situation such as this one. The events followed in rapid succession whereas we were accustomed to live in an orderly way, in peace and in tranquillity. As they say in English: "We were smug, we felt smug." Unfortunately to defend one's liberty it is necessary to accept sacrifices and restrictions of that liberty. It is in this spirit that the bill is introduced.

As for those who will say that there was no reason for proclaiming the War Measures Act, I answer them by quoting some excerpts from a document submitted to the committee which inquired into the Company of Young Canadians last summer:

[English]

Inevitably, Quebec revolutionaries will come to group themselves in a single movement without, however, losing their own identities.

That they fight today in the FLP, the FLQ, the citizen's committees, the MLT, the MIS, the Vallieres-Gagnon committee, and the unions makes little difference. They all participate in the same strategy.

There are not 50 strategies. There are only two: electoral and revolutionary strategy.

Is this not evidence, gentlemen? I will go on.

An hon. Member: We heard that a year ago.

Mr. Gervais: It is time you remembered it. I quote again as follows:

Here in Quebec the fight for the destruction of the capitalist system is inseparable from the struggle for national independence. One will not go far without the other.

Another quotation from the same article reads as follows:

Plan of Action: In the immediate future we must continue and increase the agitation, propaganda and permanent contestation at all levels of society so we can unmask, expose, demystify and weaken the cogwheels of the system which imprisons workers and students in stifling slavery.

Excellent work has already been done in this area; it must continue—

Inevitably this will lead to violence and breaking the law. But it is absolutely normal for a revolutionary to operate outside the law—

The FLQ Manifesto ends this way:

It is easier than denouncing the system, easier than protesting, to make the FLQ a convenient scapegoat for everyone.

But one must remember that it is all Quebec revolutionaries who, through their actions and determination, have brought forth the FLQ.

And the FLQ will endure as long as there are revolutionaries in Quebec who are determined to conquer.

There again, if some hon. members suspect that there is no evidence, I could give them more literature in private.

[Translation]

Like the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), I agree that the enforcement of this bill obviously will not kill terrorism once and for all, but it will provide the Minister of Justice of the province of Quebec with an instrument which will enable him and his police forces to carry on their investigations and arrest this pack of criminals.

The mere mention of some crimes in the Criminal Code will not eliminate them but, on the other hand, our police forces are thus empowered to rid our society of criminals.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, let me say that we must all support this piece of legislation and instead of indulging in sarcasm and being nasty to our police officers, our duty is to offer them whatever co-operation and support we can provide in order that we may once again find this atmosphere which we long for and cherish heartily.

[English]

Mr. Douglas A. Hogarth (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Filibuster!

Mr. Hogarth: Mr. Speaker, I realize how anxious hon. members of the House are to get into Committee of the Whole on this bill.

Mr. Woolliams: Is the hon. member trying to justify himself?

An hon. Member: Why does the hon. member not sit down, then?

Mr. Hogarth: I realize that this is a matter of urgency and that we are anxious to complete it.

An hon. Member: Why not sit down, then?

Mr. Hogarth: During the course of this afternoon I heard that the opposition in this House is the conscience of our nation and the conscience of the government.

An hon. Member: The hon. member must be the government's mouthpiece.

Mr. Hogarth: If this feeble group is the conscience of this nation, we are going to go to hell for sure. So far as I am concerned, I have never in all my life seen such waffling and indecision in an opposition.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hogarth: I have never seen such an opposition.

An hon. Member: And how long have you been here?

Mr. Hogarth: It goes one way one day, and another way the next day. You cannot tell which way they are going.

Mr. Dinsdale: Is the hon. member trying to speak as a hatchetman?

Mr. Hogarth: I can tell hon. members that we in the backbenches of this party—

Some hon. Members: Trained seals.

Mr. Hogarth: If we are called trained seals, I do not know what words one could apply to the members of the opposition in this House.

An hon. Member: Be careful, now.

Mr. Hogarth: Here we are in a moment of crisis, and we are abridging civil liberties. It does not matter whether you abridge them by one day or one year, the traditional and fundamental civil rights of this nation are being abridged. It is either right, or wrong, under the circumstances. It does not matter whether we are doing it under the War Measures Act or the bill before us tonight: the question is, are we right?

• (9:10 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hogarth: Little or no argument can be raised against the proposition that every civil right that we enjoy is subject to the supremacy of Parliament. Parliament has jurisdiction over all civil rights. Acting within the scope of its authority and according to the exigencies of the situation which face the nation, province or municipality at the time, it is the supremacy of Parliament that counts. There is no such thing as an absolute civil right. There is no such thing as the right to liberty that is not subject to the supremacy of Parliament. There is no such thing as the right to security of the person and the right to the enjoyment of property. Any of these rights can be taken away by the due process of law. That is expressly stated in the Bill of Rights. It is something that Canadians should not forget.

The right to equality before the law, protection of the law, freedom of religion, speech, assembly, association and of the press are all subject to abrogation, variation and change by the process of law.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hogarth: The due process of law can mean the passage of a statute such as the one we are discussing today, an order of a court of an appropriate jurisdiction, or a regulation passed pursuant to authority delegated to the Governor in Council by Parliament, such as happened with the War Measures Act.

It has been suggested that the War Measures Act has just been proclaimed. In fact, it was proclaimed in 1914. It has been on the statute books ever since, and now we are merely acting under it. To suggest that we acted with the full force and effect of the act is absolute nonsense. The only right which approaches an absolute civil right is the right to habeas corpus, mandamus, certiorari or the right to prohibition. None of these rights have been abridged by the regulations under the War Measures Act or the bill with which we are now dealing.

Mr. Woolliams: How can you exercise certiorari when there is no charge?

Mr. Hogarth: There will be charges. It is provided in the regulations and the bill before us. We live in changing times, Mr. Speaker. It is time we realized that we live in very troubled times. We can no longer put our heads in the sand. We live in a world where the old values, the status quo and authoritarianism of the past are rapidly being replaced by concepts which have yet to be truly formalized and structured into acceptable political philosophy.

The people in our community today have been emancipated by superior education. They are knowledgeable by virtue of the vast progress that has been made in the field of mass communication. They are conscious as never before of the needless poverty in our country, the decadence and the intolerable bureaucracy with which we are faced at all levels of government. Young people in particular are testing and rejecting many of the concepts which the authoritarians cling to like a young baby clings to a tattered baby blanket. They have had enough. Such testing can by no means be considered to be among only the young people. There are many adults who have seen a little bit of everything, experienced a little bit of everything and seen the slowness of it. We see how long it takes to have the most minor reforms passed in this House. There was a 16-day filibuster on the omnibus bill dealing with abortion. There were 16 days of nothing but talk, the same thing over and over again. The reactionary forces are holding fast; the activists and reformists are anxious to get ahead.

Mr. Peters: The bill was the only abortion.

Mr. Hogarth: I will tell you about that in a moment.

Mr. Peters: I did not ask you that.

Mr. Hogarth: In encouraging dialogue, encouraging young people to get into the political institutions which we represent, and encouraging them to make changes we must have a peaceful transition and reform. In a rebellious world there is no room for violence. We cannot tolerate violence. When a government fails to act, refuses to change and refuses to see the causes of violence in its community, there is every chance the extremists, megalomaniacs and psychopaths will become terrorists. To a large extent, this is what happened in our community today.

This is not the occasion to discuss long-term solutions for what has happened. It is not the occasion to consider what has happened in our universities, among the working people, the unemployed and our ethnic groups such as the Métis who are dissatisfied. Today is not the time to discuss this, but it must be discussed soon. Nor is it a time to dwell on transformation and change of the government. It is not the time to blame, accuse or confront. We all carry, in a sense, a certain amount of the blame. What we must consider today is the legislation before us, its necessity, its provisions and hopeful effect. Regardless of what might have been said about rumours of the takeover of the government of Quebec, in my view there was ample evidence upon which this government and the province of Quebec were entitled to act, not only entitled but obligated to act to preserve social order. I am only surprised that we acted with the restraint with which we did.

Much has been said to the effect that the government had no basis and no ground on which to introduce regulations under the War Measures Act and that there was no evidence of apprehended insurrection. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) has said that we should have acted earlier and taken effective action. These are two points I would like to discuss. Obviously, before October 16 we did not have a request for assistance from the government of Quebec. The government of the province of Quebec did not write to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) asking for such powers. Hon. members will recall in hearings before the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts that this matter was dealt with. There was never a request from the Government of Quebec for assistance.

Does the Leader of the Opposition suggest that the government of Canada should have acted in the absence of such a request? Should we have demonstrated that the government of the province of Quebec had no power to enforce the law in that province? That is contrary to the Constitution. Surely, it was the request of Mr. Bourassa and others, coupled with other evidence, that brought about the invocation of the regulations under the War Measures Act. Should the federal government have refused to act when the Premier of the province of Quebec requested assistance?

Consider the facts which we have heard. I will deal with them very briefly. In the last ten years we have witnessed bombings, we have witnessed riots, obviously organized, in the city of Montreal. There have been crimes of murder extending even to the city of Ottawa, last June. There have been robberies so that these people could gain their financial ends. There have been thefts of dynamite, thefts of weapons.

• (9:20 p.m.)

Hon. members can read today in the Globe and Mail about the discovery of a cache of weapons including carbines, machine-guns and a bazooka. Mr. Speaker, these are not for shooting ducks. They were to be used for one purpose only, and that is to destroy the social order. Twenty-three persons are in jail as a result of crimes perpetrated in the name of political power. If we can attribute these acts to the FLQ and its related associations, in these circumstances it would appear to me that we have been modest in our actions.

Consider the evidence which was produced before the Committee on Broadcasting last year. We heard about the infiltration of terrorists into the Company of Young Canadians. We were told by the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Douglas) in that committee that we were not to go on a witch-hunt, that we were confined in our terms of reference to dealing with the CYC. No request was made by the government of Quebec for assistance at that time. We heard from Mr. Saulnier, we heard from Mr. Coté. They were convinced then that there were grounds for apprehending an insurrection; not the next day, but they said it was coming, it was on its way. And they showed us the documentation which had been seized throughout the city of Montreal, obviously designed for distribution throughout the whole of Quebec. Mr. Coté, in evidence before the committee on November 27, 1969—

An hon. Member: Almost a year ago.

Mr. Hogarth: Almost a year ago. There was no request from the province of Quebec for assistance.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hogarth: All right. Should we have invoked the War Measures Act a year ago?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Hogarth: You are right. Consider the documents and the evidence.

An hon. Member: Too late.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I find it a little difficult to follow what the hon. member is saying. Members of the House should allow him to complete his remarks.

Mr. Hogarth: Mr. Coté was reading from one of the documents which was seized. This is what one of them said:

> The organization of the exploited classes on a vast scale must be brought into effect, when the time comes, with a direct view to popular insurrection which will be characterized by the armed occupation of factories, universities, schools, public services and the national territory.

Another document contained the following:

> Since 1963, ever since the explosion of the first FLQ bombs, we have been in that first stage of the revolutionary struggle which will be pursued until agitation becomes widespread and culminates in a general political, social and economic crisis. We are now approaching this crisis very rapidly, and this has been particularly the case in the last six months.

It goes on:

> This is the sort of struggle which is conducted daily, each according to his means, by the FLP, MIS, FLQ et cetera. This many sided action, which pursues the same objectives everywhere, is dominated by propaganda, agitation, ideological training of militants, and the progressive organization at the basic levels, of active cells, whether it be FLP cells, citizens' committees, political action unions, committees, strike committees, clandestine and armed FLQ cells, et cetera.

I do not intend to go through all this evidence tonight, but there is ample documentation here to show that the FLQ did plan an insurrection. Passages in these documents explained how to make Molotov cocktails, how to put ball-bearings beneath the feet of horses in a riot so that the police forces would stumble, how to use military weapons, machine-guns, carbines and the like, how to protect oneself with safety devices against anti-riot equipment. This clearly showed the purport of the FLQ.

It might be said that the committee dealt lightly with this evidence, that its members buried their heads in the sand. But, I repeat, there was no request on the part of the government of Quebec at that time for any action in this field. But the kidnappings of Mr. Cross and Mr. Laporte were obviously the last straw; it was obviously indicative to the government of Quebec, with the totality of its police force engaged in trying to apprehend those who had committed these acts, that the existing measures governing law enforcement were inadequate. It was obvious that special powers were required, and they decided to act. It could not be said that insurrection was about to take place, because nobody knew. But, certainly, it was properly apprehended in the true sense because all these acts were committed pursuant to the basic manifesto, parts of which I have read out—a manifesto which indicated that at some future date, very soon, an insurrection might take place.

The action of the government, directed to stopping this terror, has been to sweep up all those suspected of any connection with it. I agree that this is an infringement of the civil rights usually enjoyed by Canadians. I do not like it. It required an awful lot of soul-searching to conclude it was necessary. But when one considers the overall picture, the fact that the Bourassa government is a young government, a government which had yet, really, to formulate its policy, it is apparent that the action we took was absolutely necessary and justified in the circumstances. The whole pattern indicates a format of insurrection, and if hon. members opposite cannot see that I suggest to them, with the greatest respect, that they are blind. This bill is quite moderate, considering what it might be.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hogarth: It is fair and it is just. I repeat my statement. A government acting in panic would surely have imposed censorship. The suggestion that there are retroactive provisions in the bill are not well-founded. Any experienced lawyer will confirm this. It is only the circumstances surrounding proof which are given retroactive effect. In the last analysis, the burden of proof remains upon the Crown. The Crown must prove its case beyond reasonable doubt. I should like to hear some of the lawyers in the opposition discuss the question of rebuttable presumption and what happens to the burden of proof. It does not change. Within 90 days a trial date has to be fixed. I am not too sure I would not rather be charged under this bill than under the Criminal Code, because under the Code there is no obligation to fix a date for trial within 90 days.

An hon. Member: What about Lortie?

Mr. Hogarth: If Mr. Lortie was unlawfully picked up, if there was no reason to suspect him, he still has a right to sue for damages. That possibility exists.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hogarth: No criticism of this bill is really possible, considering the exigencies of the situation we face. But having said this, I agree that repressive legislation of any kind can only be of a temporary nature.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mr. Fairweather: Would the hon. member permit a question?

[Mr. Hogarth.]

Mr. Hogarth: When I am through. We have to find the cause. It is clear to me, as it must be clear to all hon. members, that as long as we encourage dissent, as we do by participatory democracy and the like, we have to be more conscious than ever before of the security of this nation. We must have some introspection at all levels of government in future programs. We must consider changes in the criminal law dealing with group liability, sedition, treason and the like. We must be able to erase the basic structure upon which terrorists rely for their support in riots, and so on. We must consider our traditional concept of civil rights in a changing society and give it very close scrutiny. Greater freedom means greater responsibility. We have to examine civil rights in the light of a changing world.

I am satisfied that we can solve these problems in the future. I agree with the government that now is not the time to introduce such long-range, profound and deep legislation pertaining to civil rights. If we take our time in the sense of studying the question during this session of Parliament, hopefully we can come up with something that will be beneficial to the people of Canada in years to come.

Mr. Fairweather: Would the hon. member now permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. Hogarth: Yes, sir.

Mr. Fairweather: Is the hon. member seriously saying that attendance at a meeting of the FLQ before October 16, 1970, is not an offence; that clause 8 of the bill is not retroactive? If he can assure me of that, it may have some—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether it is in order at this point to get into a detailed discussion of this type.

Mr. Fairweather: The hon. member just stated that.

Mr. Speaker: I realize that perhaps the hon. member did give his own interpretation of the clause to which the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) is now referring. I was, unfortunately, not in the chair at the time and am in no position to say whether he did or not. In any event, the hon. member based his question upon a statement made by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Hogarth), who might be allowed to reply. Nevertheless, I suggest there should be no detailed discussion of the individual clauses of the bill.

Mr. Hogarth: As briefly as I can, Mr. Speaker, let me say that clause 4 creates the substantive offences. There is no substantive offence in clause 8, only a presumption dealing with evidence.

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, this evening, as always, I am pleased to follow my bellicose, former municipal council colleague whom I always admire for his volume, his tone and his remarkable dramatic ability. I hope that for his dramatic ability he will ultimately be awarded an Oscar, or a suitable reward perhaps in the form of a seat in the cabinet. I ask everybody to note that I have not specified into which cabinet I should like him to resume his seat.

I think we are passing through times of extreme tension. These are times of very high feelings. At this point of the debate I should like to change the tone of our discussion. I hope that what I have to say will not be taken as frivolous in view of the grave circumstances we are facing tonight, but perhaps I may be excused, especially in view of the speech we have just heard from the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Hogarth).

If I may comment briefly on what the hon. member for New Westminster said, may I observe that he spent an extremely large amount of time dealing with the Saulnier testimony last winter before the committee studying the Company of Young Canadians. I rush to point out that in his reply to the statement on motions requesting the House to send this serious issue to the committee, my leader said at the time that this matter was serious enough to place it before, not simply a parliamentary committee but it required a judicial inquiry or royal commission. We objected strongly to the government's action at the time, and I think events have proven that to shunt this particular issue off to a parliamentary committee was merely to invite either a whitewash or witch-hunt. We had neither, Mr. Speaker; we had a washout.

For at least eight months from the time of the hearings very grave things have been happening in this country, and I for one am extremely depressed about our future at this time. I am confused by the statements made by the hon. member for New Westminster and I do not know whether he was speaking in favour of or against his government. He cited the bombings of 1963. He could have gone on to mention the robberies of armouries since that time, as well as the tremendous but necessary security surrounding the visit of the Royal family to Expo'67. It seems to me the hon. member was criticizing his own government for not acting during this period. In fact, they did not act at all until the kidnappings took place.

Perhaps the War Measures Act was a very successful distraction from the many other issues facing the country today, such as unemployment, poverty and pollution. I am not suggesting for a moment that the serious issues at the time of the kidnappings were not extremely grave, but our country abounds with other serious issues and I do not think we should forget them.

I mentioned earlier that I should like to change the tone of this discussion a little, though this is very difficult having heard the last speaker. For some, what I am about to say will be regarded as frivolous, though I hope not because what I have to say I mean deeply. I take refuge in a phrase by a seventeenth century English essayist by the name of Sydney Smith, who some 300 years ago said:

Do not think me foolish because I am facetious, and I'll not think you wise because you are grave.

It seems to me that it would be interesting if we looked at the speech made yesterday by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), not as a verbal presentation but as a musical one, and with your permission, Mr. Speaker, I shall assume the role of the music critic or adjudicator who listened to the performance of the Minister of Justice.

Yesterday in this hall the ears of music lovers were affronted by an exceptionally inept rendition of the composition "Variations for French Horn and Backbench Percussion" as performed by the Minister of Justice. This composition is reminiscent of works in the Nixon-Agnew tradition. It began competently enough with what the listeners were led to assume was the main or principal theme. The initial statement to which I listened could be described as andante tranquillo sostenuto, but regrettably this lasted but a few bars.

It was quite a pleasant opening theme, I thought, harmonious, lyrical, logical, eminently capable of further development and fascinating interpolation if placed in the proper hands. Our meditations, however, were much too soon shattered by an abrupt change of tempo and mood to allegro furioso, followed by an almost endless sequence of deceptive cadences, a monotonous repetition on the three-note motive—N-D-P—rising in pitch and intensity of attack—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): But no harmony.

Mr. Rose: —until the soloist was creatively drained and his listeners exhausted. The members of the percussion accompaniment in the back rows nevertheless seemed untouched by the stridence and volume and remained enthusiastic to the end, some beating not only their hands but even their heads, each contributing generously to the cacophony.

One critic, a friend of mine, asked the pertinent question as to what might possibly lie behind the performer's excessive preoccupation with the notes N-D-P which had not previously assumed great thematic importance, at least during the introductory section of the piece. Of course, one can only guess about this and a number of possible explanations, and a variety of interpretations remain extant.

The first one is that because of the timing of the concert there were insufficient rehearsal opportunities for the performer to alter his composition; in other words, he could not change his tune because he did not have the time. Therefore, he had to be content with changing his emphasis. Another possibility exists that the soloist just does not know any other tune, or even that he was specifically forbidden by his maestro to change his tune, the maestro of course being convinced that the piece "Variations for French Horn" continued to enjoy its former popularity with those out in radio and TV land.

The third possibility, and perhaps the most impressive reason that special teatment was given to the notes N-D-P is that the Minister of Justice was advised that many critics have charged that his selection lacked depth, profundity and musical integrity; and that while this harsh melody might be on everyone's lips for the moment, there was no real evidence to conclude that its popularity could prevail for long, in spite of the cleverness of its construction and the elaborate polyphony of its texture, and finally, that it would certainly never stand the test of history as a masterpiece orchestrated, as it was, by the Department of Public Works.

Other critics agree that the whole composition was a badly balanced one from a structural point of view. The pianissimo introduction, though pedestrian, was lulling enough to suit most tastes. Following the introduction, the development section was belaboured, intense and far too long, bearing but little reference to the principal theme. After such an extended development section the coda, naturally, was awaited anxiously by all. When it came, an immense gasp of relief was heard from the audience, undoubtedly because, as in common with all audiences, this one identified with and shared the embarrassment of the soloist. A minor aside really, Mr. Speaker, but apparently the percussion section members were not paying sufficient attention to their scores, because many players tended to proceed with the rythmic ostinato long after it was quite plain to everyone else that the piece had ended.

I would like to turn at this point and give some attention to the technique displayed by the French horn soloist, the Minister of Justice. It was quite evident that yesterday's concert did not rank with his best. While the listeners had little reason to expect virtuosity from him, it saddens me to say that at least they could expect virtue. Perhaps serious music is not the best field for the talents of this young man. With his inborn personal attractiveness and his carefully acquired charm, he might do extremely well in the pop field. Others have abandoned classics for pop with no discredit to them. I mention only two to support my thesis, Xavier Cugat, who was once concert master for the New York Philharmonic, and Lorne Greene, who forsook Shakespeare for "Bonanza."

I think that in discussing technical matters it would only be fair and kindly to point out to the minister that delicate nuances of tone capable of being produced by the French horn are better accomplished by the player inserting just his right hand rather than his whole right wing into the bell of this delicate instrument. Perhaps, though, this extravagant employment of the right wing was a not so subtle appeal to the nostalgia of the good old days when people were offered less dissonance, and a total acceptance of what was musically good prevailed throughout the land.

It must be said, too, that I was extremely disappointed by the way in which the performer handled the relatively simple triple-tongueing passages in the cadenza. Most agree that this particular soloist is superbly equipped for triple-tongueing and has displayed this ability remarkably on numerous previous occasions. Yesterday, alas, was not his day.

[Mr. Rose.]

Typically, however, his reliance on the staccato style remains unimpaired. A series of short, detached bursts followed by deep-furrowed silences—believed to indicate thinking—have been a trademark of the minister's style for some years. Musicologists have theorize that his delivery has developed over many years in a valiant effort to overcome a childhood impediment caused by his efforts to speak clearly without the necessity of removing the silver spoon.

To conclude, let me say that regardless of what field of musical endeavour the soloist might find in the future satisfying and rewarding, it is obvious to me that he has directed far too much of his studies exclusively to the works patronized in aristocratic chambers. It is this critic's view that the soloist would do better to develop a greater acquaintanceship with composers such as Sibelius, Aaron Copland, or even the Beatles who have used as a stimulus for their creativity the melodies reflecting aspirations of little men living in a free society. And above all he must remember that when playing the French horn the best results by far are achieved if one keeps a stiff upper lip at all times.

Some hon. Members: Encore.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I rise to make one of my shortest speeches in this House, for which many members may be thankful. I rise merely to say that I feel this House is on the verge of committing itself to legislation that is very much against the best interests of this country. I will not go into all the arguments that I raised on October 16 and 17 when we discussed the War Measures Act, but they would apply equally to the legislation that is before us tonight. What we are dealing with is, in effect, just a revised standard version of the War Measures Act regulations. For that reason I have decided to place my vote against these regulations and against this new act.

I am sure that many people will recall that I supported the move of the government on October 18 or 19 to enforce the War Measures Act and its regulations. I did so, not without a great deal of thought and with some uncertainty on my part but basically in good faith, believing that the government had rightly apprehended the situation as it existed in the province of Quebec and was taking what at that time seemed to be a reasonable step. I now believe, 2 1/2 weeks later, that step to have been unwise and one that I can no longer support.

I cannot support this legislation and I certainly cannot support the War Measures Act. I will, as a member of this House, use every opportunity that I have to see it removed as quickly as possible. I think what we have done to the country has been amply proven here in the last few days by the kind of intemperate remarks, most of them irrelevant, and the fact that we have not been given, even to this day, sufficient justification either inside or outside the House to warrant the government asking for and producing the kind of legislation that I feel will, and has, very detrimentally affected this country.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Turner, Ottawa-Carleton) which was agreed to on the following division:

The House met at 11 a.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. WAHN—INTENT OF REMARKS MADE AT PUBLIC MEETING

Mr. Ian Wahn (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. In an interview last night on the program "Encounter", the interviewer may have implied that certain remarks which I made from the floor at a public meeting in Convocation Hall of the University of Toronto last Monday suggested dishonourable motives or illegal conduct on the part of the person or persons named in the interview.

I wish to make it entirely clear that that was not my intent.

At that meeting I did defend, to the best of my ability, the decision of the government in proclaiming the War Measures Act. I reviewed in some detail the situation prevailing at the time that the decision was made, including the statements urging the government of Quebec to accede to the terrorists' demands which, if acceded to, might in my view have led to the breakdown of the civil authority of the elected government of the province of Quebec. I wish to make it entirely clear that I did not accuse or intend to accuse any individual or specific group, other than the FLQ, of dishonourable motives or illegal or dishonourable conduct. If anything I said at what was at that point a somewhat noisy meeting has given that impression, I sincerely regret it and I extend my sincere apologies to all those who may have been affected by my remarks.

Finally, I wish to make it entirely clear that I spoke at the meeting entirely on my own initiative and not at the request of any member of government, and my remarks were not based upon any private information but only upon reports which had been published in the press or referred to in this House.

FISHERIES

CONSERVATION OF MARINE RESOURCES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTIONS UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I ask the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion in a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

This matter involves the management and conservation of our marine resources on both our Atlantic and Pacific coasts. The depletion of our marine resources by foreign nationals, especially by the Soviet Union, necessitates that Canada assume its responsibility under the articles of the Law of the Sea and initiate an international conference on fish conservation and management.

With the unanimous consent of the House, I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), the following motion:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government must take the initiative in convening an international conference of the fishing nations of the world to discuss the conservation and management of marine resources in the waters adjacent to Canada's territorial seas.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: As the hon. member knows, under Standing Order 43, the unanimous consent of the House is required to proceed with the motion.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and therefore the motion cannot be put to the House at this time.

ATLANTIC PROVINCES—FORECAST OF SEVERE ECONOMIC CRISIS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I ask the unanimous consent of the House—

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Macquarrie: —to present a motion in a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

The Atlantic Provinces Economic Council yesterday forecast a severe economic crisis this winter in the eastern region of Canada where already the male unemployment rate this year is averaging at least 10 per cent. This crisis will not be prevented by the government's slight easing of its restrictive economic and fiscal policies. This government must co-operate with the Atlantic provincial governments immediately on crash programs that will be of immediate effect to diminish the force of this crisis.

With the unanimous consent of the House I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave), the following motion:

That this House expresses its concern at the effect of the government's economic and fiscal policies upon the Atlantic region where an economic crisis with drastic unemployment is imminent and urges that the government take immediate action to alleviate the effects of this crisis.

• (11:10 a.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As the hon. member knows, this motion cannot be put under the terms of Standing Order 43 unless there is unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no unanimity in the House and the motion cannot be put at this time.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think it should be pointed out that two members of the government party said no before the hon. member for Hillsborough had even read his motion.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Peace River knows that is not a point of order. That is debate. I would hope that when motions under Standing Order 43 are proposed to the House there would be no debate and that we would limit our consideration thereof to an inquiry whether or not there is unanimity.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

MEASURES TO ALLEVIATE WINTER UNEMPLOYMENT CRISIS FORECAST BY ATLANTIC PROVINCES ECONOMIC COUNCIL

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether, in view of the warning of APEC that the Atlantic provinces face crisis conditions of unemployment this winter, he proposes to adopt any new measures, or whether he considers APEC to be exaggerating inasmuch as he suggested yesterday we could have no assurance that Donald MacDonald was telling the truth?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, without agreeing with the insinuation the hon. member made about APEC not telling the truth, I might say that the government has been taking a series of measures which will have the effect of alleviating that situation. As the House remembers, in the March budget we announced that the government's cash requirements would undergo a swing of about three-quarters of a billion dollars from the previous year. This certainly is a new posture which is meant to help the unemployment situation. Last June it was announced that outlays to the provinces would increase by some $300 million to cover accelerated transfer and so on, and later it was announced that equalization payments to the provinces were to be increased by $50 million. The House knows that the student summer employment program, launched by the government, added another $73 million to current expenditures. Then, an additional $100 million was announced a month or two ago for moderate income housing. Also, in the throne speech debate the Minister of Finance announced plans for new expenditures of $60 million. All these measures, of course, add up to a serious expenditure by the government to meet these unemployment situations.

On the monetary side there has been an easing of restraints, and the money supply in private hands has increased at a seasonally adjusted annual rate averaging 12.1 per cent. I think it should be obvious to any impartial observer, Mr. Speaker, that the government is doing a great many things indeed in terms of money, money supply and fiscal measures to meet this serious unemployment situation in Canada.

Mr. Stanfield: I thank the right hon. gentleman for his review of what has taken place. However, any impartial observer would agree that it has not taken us very far forward. In view of what the Prime Minister stated, is it the position of the government that it is now doing all it reasonably can to reduce anticipated winter unemployment, that while the government may have made a mistake and gone much too far in slowing down the economy there is nothing further it can do to relieve this approaching crisis?

Mr. Speaker: It appears that the question of the Leader of the Opposition is somewhat argumentative in tone, and I wonder whether it should be accepted as a supplementary question. However, the matter is important and the Prime Minister may wish to reply.

[Translation]

UNEMPLOYMENT—PAYMENT OF COST BY GOVERNMENT IF RATE EXCEEDS FOUR PER CENT

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister.

Will the government implement this winter the policies outlined in the white paper on unemployment insurance, that is, will it assume the whole cost of unemployment if the latter exceeds the 4 per cent rate by 1 per cent?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member is aware, this proposal as included in the white paper is before the House at the present time and the government has announced its intention to introduce legislation during the present session following consideration of the white paper.

[English]

SPECIAL WINTER WORKS PROGRAM TO LESSEN UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. David Lewis (York South): As the Prime Minister knows, there is always a time lag between the kind of policies to which he has referred and their effect on the employment situation. Is the government giving consideration to some special works this winter in areas of particularly sharp unemployment, such as building works or other projects of that sort to lessen unemployment in those areas?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the member is correct that with some of these measures there are time lags which are fairly substantial, but in others the time lags are much shorter. They have already had substantial effect. For instance, the actions of the government in the area of housing have given the very surprising and welcome result that seasonally adjusted starts rose to an annual rate of 270,000 units in this last month. That is 70,000 units above the annual rate of 200,000 units which is the average that the government has been looking for.

Mr. Lewis: In view of the fact that everyone is agreed that there will be a much higher rate of unemployment this winter—I appreciate the seasonally adjusted figure but that does not help those who are unemployed—particularly in Quebec and the Atlantic provinces, and in view of the fact that there will be a critical situation from various points of view, including that to which we have been giving attention in the last two or three weeks, can a program be introduced this winter to accelerate job creating work in those areas?

Mr. Trudeau: All these actions I have recited, beginning with the swing of three-quarters of a billion dollars which was announced last March, are obviously going to take effect this winter and have been taking effect.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Will the Prime Minister consider delegating to one of his more responsible ministers the task of making a statement on motions to explain why these measures have been such a dismal flop?

INTERIM MEASURE TO INCREASE UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): May I ask the Prime Minister a further supplementary since I do not think the Minister of Labour is due to be here? It follows upon the question asked by the hon. member for Shefford. I realize that the white paper on unemployment insurance is now before a committee, but in view of the heavy unemployment which is expected this winter is the government considering introducing a special measure or an interim measure to increase unemployment benefits to meet this situation, whether on a 4 per cent basis or on any other basis?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, but if the House wishes to co-operate and get this white paper considered and the legislation introduced early, we will be very happy.

ATLANTIC PROVINCES—APPLICATION OF SELECTIVE FISCAL AND MONETARY POLICIES

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): My supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Does the government intend to announce the selective fiscal and monetary policies which the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council says are immediately required?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): The government has already announced these policies. I should also point out that this government and the previous Liberal government put some teeth into the development of the Atlantic region allocating money for regional development.

An hon. Member: False teeth.

Mr. Stanfield: One further question to avoid any misunderstanding. Is it the position of the government that it has taken all measures which could reasonably be taken with regard to unemployment this coming winter and that it does not propose to take any further new measures of substance?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do not know whether the hon. gentleman is suggesting that we should take no further measures—

An hon. Member: Oh, come on!

Mr. Trudeau: —but I recited a few moments ago a series of measures which have been taken from month to month. Of course I would not say no further measures will be taken. They will be taken if they are needed and if we have the money to implement them.

Inquiries of the Ministry

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON RECOMMENDATIONS BY COUNCIL ON RURAL DEVELOPMENT

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Would the Prime Minister discuss with the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion the third report of the Canadian Council on Rural Development, which I gather was made available to the minister in July and which has now been made public, recommending firm measures which the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion should take to alleviate the rural poverty that stretches across this country from coast to coast? I appreciate that the Prime Minister cannot comment on it, but could the minister, who has had this report in his hands since July, come into the House early next week and tell us what he intends to do about the strong recommendations made by this independent body?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Obviously the hon. member is making a speech. If he wants to ask a question of the minister, he will have the opportunity to do so next week.

Mr. Nowlan: I appreciate that the minister will be here, but because of the importance of the subject, the clear and comprehensive nature of this report, and the importance of this whole problem as it affects Canadians, both employed and unemployed, I had hoped the Prime Minister would give an undertaking to discuss this matter with his colleague so that a statement could be made by the minister concerned.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond.

Mr. Nowlan: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister rose as you rose—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will agree, of course, that when the Speaker rises he has the floor.

Mr. Nowlan: I would be the first to agree with Your Honour, but the fact is you were looking toward the ebullient member for Cape Breton-East Richmond—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I was looking both ways, but I am recognizing the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): A supplementary question to the Prime Minister following the question asked by my hon. friend from Peace River in which he indicated that programs in the Atlantic provinces had flopped. Would the Prime Minister agree that this has come about because of the lack of administrative ability on the part of Mr. Blackmore in Cape Breton and Mr. Addison in New Brunswick?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order please.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

NATIONAL SECURITY

QUEBEC—DELAY IN LAYING CHARGES OF SEDITION

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

As several charges were laid yesterday against some suspects under the Criminal Code provisions on sedition, could the Prime Minister tell us why the charges were not laid before since the presumed offices go back as far as January 1, 1968?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am obviously unable to answer this question. The accused are now before the courts. The reason why the charges were not laid sooner is a matter that is naturally relevant to the administration of justice which comes under provincial jurisdiction.

REPORTED REDUCTION IN RCMP PERSONNEL ENGAGED IN SEARCH FOR KIDNAPPERS AND MURDERERS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, in order to clear up some confusion that I felt the Solicitor General left yesterday, and in view of the fact that there appears to be some new evidence with reference to Mr. Cross, could I ask the Solicitor General whether any RCMP officers have been withdrawn from Quebec of late and, if so, who made that decision?

Mr. Speaker: Order. My understanding is that this question was asked and answered. However, perhaps the minister might like to clarify the situation further.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad of the opportunity to confirm the answer that I gave two days ago to that question. No RCMP have been withdrawn from Quebec province or from the Cross-Laporte case.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

BANKS ISLAND OIL EXPLORATION—AGREEMENTS BETWEEN GOVERNMENT OR COMPANIES AND ESKIMOS

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and arises from a question I asked him on October 13 in regard to oil exploration on Banks Island and agreements between the government and the oil companies and the government and the Eskimos. On October 21 he tabled copies of the agreements between the government and the oil companies. May I ask the minister whether the fact that he tabled these agreements means that there are no agreements between the government and the Eskimos or the oil companies and the Eskimos?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, there has been no agreement signed with the Eskimos. We discussed the conditions set forth for the company involved with the Eskimos' legal adviser who seemed to find them satisfactory. Seismographic work has begun, the Eskimos are accompanying the groups involved and all seems to be going well. At no time have the Eskimos requested the companies to interrupt their work and everything seems to be running smoothly just now, which proves that the agreement between the three parties was adequate.

[English]

Mr. Barnett: Does that mean that in the minister's view the Eskimo people on Banks Island have no property rights in that area?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the lands located inside the Territories are the property of Her Majesty the Queen, and it was on behalf of the government and of the Queen that we signed an agreement with the company.

[English]

GENERAL DEVELOPMENT OF THE NORTH—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT AND REFERENCE OF CERTAIN REPORTS TO COMMITTEE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, as a preface to my supplementary may I compliment the minister on the speech he made in Edmonton, and I do so quite sincerely.

In light of the views the minister expressed there in regard to bringing economic, political, ecological and social development in the north into harmony, may I ask the minister whether or not he would consider making a statement on motions in regard to the government's intentions in this regard, and possibly referring to a committee the report of the Mackenzie Delta group which investigated the very serious conditions there, as well as the report of the committee which is investigating conditions in the Peace-Athabasca Delta?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I hope that the chairman of the committee will look into the hon. member's suggestion and if this matter is studied by the Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, I would gladly appear before that committee and explain in detail the government's policy on the two issues raised by the hon. member.

[English]

RESERVATION OF LAND FOR ESKIMOS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): In view of the minister's answer that all the land in the north and the territories belongs to the Crown in the name of Her Majesty the Queen, and in view of the fact that development is now taking place in the north and people from other parts of Canada are moving in, may I ask the minister whether any thought will be given to reserving a certain amount of land for the Eskimo people?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, this question is very complex. We consider that all the land in the North belongs to the Crown and, in any event, we have taken the necessary steps in order that the land required by the Eskimos and Indians will be available for their usual activities.

TAXATION

WHITE PAPER ON REFORM—CAMPAIGN AGAINST CAPITAL GAINS TAX

Mr. Pierre De Bané (Matane): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Finance.

I wonder whether he had time to consider the point I made a month ago about the campaign which the Quebec Association of Private Broadcasters, in co-operation with the provincial Chamber of Commerce, had launched against taxation of capital gains, a measure which evidently would turn out to the advantage of the underprivileged classes. Would it be possible for the latter to be allowed free broadcast periods to start their own campaign?

Mr. Speaker: Apparently the hon. member is taking this opportunity to launch his own campaign. I would suggest that he allow the Minister of Finance a chance to answer his question.

[English]

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am informed that free time public service radio broadcasts during October over various Quebec radio stations, including CKBL, did oppose a capital gains tax for Canada. While there is no regulation requiring it, there is a well established principle that a station broadcasting these messages must ensure that any person or group wishing to express differing views be given an opportunity to do so free of charge and in an equitable manner. Should the application of this principle give rise to any difficulty, the interested parties may communicate with the CRTC to clarify any misunderstanding and state their point of view.

TRANSPORT

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL COMMITTEE ON ATLANTIC PROVINCES TRANSPORTATION PROBLEMS—APPOINTMENT OF NEW FEDERAL NOMINEE

Mr. Charles H. Thomas (Moncton): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Now that the winds of change are blowing in the Atlantic provinces, would the minister contribute his share by advising the House if a successor to Dr. McClure as the federal nominee and chairman of the federal-provincial committee studying Atlantic transportation problems has been named? If so, can the minister now announce the name of the nominee?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I am afraid I cannot give the name because I am not sure whether the gentleman has been appointed as of today. There have been consultations with the provinces concerned to obtain their agreement, but I can assure the hon. member that the appointment will be announced within a very short time.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): When the minister is pursuing this course of action, would he also use his good offices to persuade the committee to resume the study of the premiers' report and the twelfth report of the standing committee with a view to making some early recommendations for a new transportation policy for the Atlantic region?

Mr. Jamieson: I do not think we need to wait for the appointment of that gentleman to do that. Work has been going on steadily during the summer months and since the report was received. As the hon. member knows, portions of it have already been implemented, including recently a reduction of the full 25 per cent in truck rates in and out of the two island provinces.

TRADE

PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA—PROMOTION OF CANADIAN WOOD PRODUCTS

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Having in mind, on the one hand, the unemployment situation in British Columbia and, on the other hand, our improved trade relations with China, will the minister undertake to encourage his department to develop the trade potential for Canadian wood products, including plywood, in the Chinese market?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): We will do that, Mr. Speaker. We will leave no stone unturned when it comes to developing trade opportunities with China.

ITEMS INVOLVED IN BRITISH REVERVATION CONCERNING APPLICATION OF EEC COMMON TARIFF

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, may I complete the answer I gave yesterday on the subject of the 12 industrial materials for which the British feel that application of the common EEC external tariff would result in an excessive increase in costs for their domestic industry. Nine of these items are of interest to Canada. They are: phosphorus, silicon carbide, plywood, wood pulp, newsprint, ferro-silicon, aluminum, lead and zinc. The three remaining items are: alumina, ferro-chrome and wattle extract—I have no idea what that is. Lumber is not included in the list of sensitive items, although I said yesterday it might be, since the common external tariff of the EEC is already free of duty on rough, sawn lumber.

PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA—COMPOSITION OF PERMANENT CANADIAN MISSION

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): I would like to ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce whether he is sending a permanent trade mission to China and whether, when that mission is assembled, he will consider including a member of the Tobacco Producers' Marketing Board?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The Secretary of State for External Affairs announced on October 13 what the plan was with respect to our representation in the Peoples' Republic of China. I think it was said at the time that the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce would send two trade commissioners to Peking. There is no intention at this time to hire people from any one of the specialized industries in Canada for the purpose of special representation.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I want to put a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Is he aware that his special assistant, the former member for Champlain, who is paid $13,000 a year plus a certain amount for his expenses, is presently in the motel La Provence at Thetford Mines where he is organizing the election campaign of the Liberal candidate in Frontenac?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question is not in order.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The minister on a question of privilege.

Mr. Chrétien: It is true that Mr. Matte is working in my office. He is on leave right now and I understand very well that the Ralliement créditiste members are afraid of losing the Frontenac constituency within ten days.

Mr. Speaker: The question of privilege is out of order as well as the question of the hon. member for Shefford.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Témiscamingue on a question of privilege also.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I must say to the minister as well as to his private secretary that they have been blundering in the Frontenac constituency.

FINANCE

ISSUING OF UNSOLICITED CREDIT CARDS BY BANKS—SUGGESTED REPEGGING OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. A few days ago I asked the minister about the rights and privileges of the commercial banks in sending out gratuitous Chargex cards which create a liability on those receiving them. I wonder whether the minister is in a position to answer this question, and at the same time could he give the House any indication if, when, and at what amount he intends to repeg the Canadian dollar?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member may ask only one question at a time. He might indicate now which one he would like the minister to answer.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Speaker, I did ask only one new question. The other question I asked the other day, and I felt that perhaps Your Honour might permit both.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I looked into the question raised on October 27 and I find that the situation is as follows: First, as the banks issuing Chargex cards extend this operation into additional places in Canada, these cards will not be mailed to the public until the bank concerned has been advised that the card is wanted. Second, the banks issuing these cards have not held anyone legally responsible for the improper use of a credit card which was mailed but not received by the proper person.

My reply to the second question is no.

AIR TRANSPORT

NEGOTIATIONS WITH PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Transport to seek some information which I think would be of interest to all members of the House. In view of the new status of our relations with the Republic of China and the apparent opportunity for a tremendous expansion of our air transport to that country, can the minister state whether the necessary negotiations will be initiated and pursued by the government or whether this will be left to the air carriers subject to ratification by the government?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): The procedures for negotiations toward a bilateral air agreement with any country are well laid down. These negotiations are carried on between countries rather than between airlines, although naturally there is an input by the airlines because of their direct interest. At the moment there are no bilateral negotiations under way with the government of China, but presumably if there were to be any they would follow the establishment of proper recognition in both capitals.

INSTALLATION OF RADIOS AND HOMER BEACON DEVICES ON PRIVATE COMMERCIAL PLANES

Mr. Mark W. Rose (Fraser Valley West): My question to the Minister of Transport relates to the helicopter pilot who was lost for 30 days and miraculously found in the Baker Lake area north of Saskatchewan. In view of the fact that thousands of man-hours and thousands of dollars are spent annually by the Department of National Defence on search and rescue operations, is the minister considering the institution of regulations requiring radios and homer beacon devices to be installed on all private commercial planes?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are. I have answered this question in various forms over the last year or so. The real difficulty is in getting general agreement as to the technical standards for such equipment. If it can be shown that these are useful, the department and the government would be quite prepared to require them, certainly in those cases where there is danger of loss of an aircraft in a remote area. The difficulty is that at the moment there is no such assurance of proper standards and we would not want, for example, to require their installation and perhaps give people a false sense of security which, indeed, the equipment now available might not be able to provide.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, would the minister be kind enough to tell the House what steps are being taken by his department or other agencies to validate the usefulness of such equipment?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would think such information should be given the House by way of a statement on motions. With respect, I suggest it should not be done at this time.

NATIONAL PARKS

POLICY RESPECTING PERPETUAL LEASES

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address this question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Is the minister in a position to inform the House as to government policy with respect to perpetually renewable leases in light of the Supreme Court judgment in the Walker case and, further, what action is being taken with regard to applications for assignment or renewal of such leases?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I already have been asked this question by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and I am pleased to answer it.

In answering the question of the hon. member I would like to say that all the requests for renewal or assignment of perpetually renewable leases under consideration now are in process of settlement. I approve and I will continue to approve all requests for renewal or transfer unless there is clear evidence that I have to refuse in the public interest.

It is nevertheless my duty to stress that we do not have given up definitively the idea of eliminating perpetual leases gradually. Our policy regarding lease renting and other matters involving the interests of persons living or doing business in our national parks is the subject of—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must interrupt the minister and remind him that such a lengthy reply should normally be made by way of a statement on motions.

[English]

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, may I say that we are prepared to agree to the minister reverting to motions. When there is such an obvious rehearsed arrangement, I think that should be the proper procedure.

Mr. Mahoney: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. What is the government prepared to do to reimburse the 750-odd leaseholders who over the past 10 to 12 years have been obliged to surrender perpetually renewable leases they held and accept 42-year leases in order to secure the minister's consent to transfers or renewals?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, we have not examined this aspect of the problem, and though we cannot give an answer now, we are studying the matter.

[English]

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I have raised this question in the House on many occasions. In light of the fact that a number of people, 700-odd or at least a great portion of them, were told they could not transfer to a second party unless they gave up their equity and rights, will the minister now consider restoring the rights that were denied these people by duress?

Mr. Chrétien: I should like to say to the hon. member that this policy was established in 1958 by the previous administration.

Mr. Woolliams: That is hogwash.

Mr. Dinsdale: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, may I say that the policy established in 1958 was a moratorium on any further perpetual leaseholds. There was no interference with existing perpetual leaseholds.

[Mr. Mahoney.]

NATIONAL SECURITY

KIDNAPPING OF JAMES CROSS—INFORMATION AS TO WHEREABOUTS FOLLOWING OFFER OF REWARD

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. Since the announcement of a reward, has the Prime Minister any information to give the House concerning the whereabouts of British Trade Commissioner, James Cross?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, I have none, Mr. Speaker.

POST OFFICE

DISCOVERY OF MISSING MAIL BAGS

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister without Portfolio from Longueuil, based on the fascinating document he has just tabled, concerning the rediscovery of 140 mail bags which have been misplaced since Holy Thursday, March 26. Can he advise whether his department has reason to believe that other mail bags are still missing and that there is hope of reclaiming them?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I was very upset by this report from some of my officials that 140 bags of mail had been found in two trucks that had been in storage since last March. That is why I did not wish to conceal any of the facts and that I made them known as soon as possible.

Therefore, I tabled the report this morning and I informed the press. We intend to carry out a thorough investigation and to take any action required against the persons responsible for this negligence.

I wanted to reveal all the facts as soon as possible. There is no excuse for this sort of thing, Mr. Speaker, especially when the post office is trying very hard to improve its services.

FINANCE

LOWERING OF INTEREST RATES BY INSTITUTIONS OTHER THAN BANKS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance this question. Following his successful consultations with the chartered banks as the result of which they did reduce their interest rates, has he had consultations with lending institutions other than the chartered banks to see whether they might also conform with the general trend established by the chartered banks?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker, but I have noted that in some instances there has been some reduction by other financial institutions.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

REFUSAL TO COME UNDER PENSION BENEFITS STANDARDS ACT—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I also have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the Canadian Pacific Railway maintains that it does not come under the provisions of the Pension Benefits Standards Act in so far as its pension plan is concerned, would the minister give some indication to the House of what action is being taken against the Canadian Pacific Railway in regard to its refusal to come under the requirements of the Act?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, may I take that question as notice in order to get detailed information.

NATIONAL PARKS

PROVISION OF POLAR BEAR REFUGE SOUTH OF CHURCHILL

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Can the minister say whether any discussions have taken place between the federal government and the government of Manitoba in relation to the establishment of a national park or a provincial game preserve in the Polar Bear denning area south of Churchill in order to improve the chance of survival of these animals?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I do not know if there were discussions in that respect. I am aware that federal wildlife service officers are now looking into that situation in order to maintain this very important sanctuary for the reproduction of polar bears. I therefore take the hon. member's suggestion as notice and I shall see if there is any possibility of reaching an agreement with the Manitoba government in that connection.

GRAIN

PRODUCTION AND RECEIPTS POLICY—STATUS OF PAYMENTS UNDER TEMPORARY WHEAT RESERVES ACT

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board arising out of the tabling of the proposed grains policy last week. In light of the proposal to discontinue government payments under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, can the minister say whether it is the intention of the government to redirect such funds into other areas within the grain industry or is this proposal primarily an austerity move at the expense of the western farmer?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): It is clearly not an austerity move, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. member had read the totality of the proposal he would have seen there is an indication of government support in the stabilization fund and also in the market development fund in addition to the three-year program for diverting further acreage to forage.

Mr. Mazankowski: With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, there is no assurance of a corresponding amount being paid into the stabilization fund. Since $655 million has been paid in lieu of storage charges since 1956, can the minister give any indication whether a corresponding amount will be channelled into funds to promote and provide a stronger grain industry in western Canada?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the exact figure which will be involved will, of course, have to wait for the further development of the details of the program. But it certainly is envisaged that a significant contribution will be made, and if the plan had been in effect over the period of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act perhaps a little more money would have been involved than under that Act. Naturally I would hesitate to be too precise about figures while I am still urging further discussions with the producers about various aspects of the plan, including a maximum limit on grain deliveries by each producer which should be included.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PUBLIC AFFAIRS PROGRAMS—PROVISION OF EQUAL TIME FOR DIFFERING POINTS OF VIEW

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance which is really supplementary to the question raised by the hon. member for Matane regarding equal time privileges. Does this same principle apply to public affairs programs on the CBC and other media, which so often spread messages of disunity and anarchy, in order to allow the rest of us to present a more healthy point of view?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have to defer to the Secretary of State for an answer to that question.

MANPOWER

QUEBEC—RETRAINING GRANTS TO NURSING STUDENTS

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Can the minister inform the House of the progress of the discussions between the Department of Manpower of Canada and officials of the adult education service of the Department of Education of the province of Quebec with regard to the retraining allowances which have been promised to male and female nurses who have been waiting for an answer since September?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take as notice the question of where the specific discussions referred to by the hon. member are. I should say, of course, that there are programs by both governments in this area, with the federal government not being involved in regard to certain of the nurses training programs to which I think the hon. member referred in a question some weeks ago.

HOUSING

ACCEPTABILITY OF MOBILE HOMES UNDER NHA REGULATIONS—CONTINUATION OF SPECIAL EXPERIMENTAL FUND

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the minister in charge of housing. Prior to rising for the summer recess we had some discussion about the acceptability of mobile homes by CMHC under the NHA regulations, and the minister indicated he was looking into this matter. Has he come to any firm conclusion yet in this regard?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, we did initiate a study of this concept in order to assess fully the potential of this technique as a cost saving project. We have one or two pilot projects under way—I believe one in London, Ontario—where we are assessing the infrastructure necessary for mobile home use, and I am optimistic about the possibility of bringing certain types of mobile homes under the banner of the National Housing Act. However, one of the requirements for this is municipal acceptance regarding the provision of the necessary sewage, water and other service components of the infrastructure that must go along with it.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the minister's remarks and I do hope that at the earliest opportunity as soon as this study is completed he will make a statement on motions indicating to the House just what the situation is. In view of the relative success of the $200 million special fund which he implemented, is it his intention to carry this matter through in next year's budget also, in order that we can acquire the necessary innovations and new techniques for housing?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to the hon. member for his kind words about the program, and it would be my intention to ask for some reasonably similar form of program authority to carry on this excellent approach in the 1971 season.

POST OFFICE

WHITE PAPER ON DEPARTMENTAL REORGANIZATION

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister without Portfolio in charge of the Post Office. When will the minister be tabling the white paper on Post Office reorganization promised by the previous Postmaster General?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the question.

Mr. Thomson: When will the minister be tabling the white paper on Post Office reorganization promised by the previous Postmaster General?

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): In due time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

PUBLIC ORDER (TEMPORARY MEASURES) ACT, 1970

PROVISION OF EMERGENCY POWERS FOR PRESERVATION OF PUBLIC ORDER

The House in committee on Bill C-181, to provide temporary emergency powers for the Preservation of Public Order in Canada—Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)—Mr. Honey in the Chair.

On clause—Definitions.

The Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I would like to raise—

Mr. Woolliams: Could I just raise a point of order to start—

The Chairman: Order. Would the hon. member resume his seat, please?

Mr. Woolliams: I was wondering—

The Chairman: Order, please. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Woolliams: On a point of order.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Calgary North.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that we are moving into committee of the whole House, a procedure we do not use very often, could we have some clarification and direction from the Chair? I appreciate that in the committee of the whole a member may speak for 20 minutes at a time. It would shorten our proceedings if we could reach agreement on our method of proceeding. Members of this party, and myself in particular, will lay what amendments we have in mind before the committee, so that we may set them out en bloc. I was wondering could we speak in a general way, a practice that we followed in the past, which I think would save time?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, we agree with that. I have already received the courtesy from the hon. member for Greenwood of an indication of what amendments he intends to put. I, myself, intend to propose a clarifying amendment to clause 7. I think it would be very useful for the committee if we were to introduce the amendments at this stage and allow everybody to consider them over the lunch hour. That might be, as the hon. member for Calgary North suggested, quite an expeditious way to handle them. It is good to get back in committee of the whole, something we have not had for some time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I am sure we will all be prepared to agree to this proposal if it means that during the discussion on clause 2 members who are speaking, for themselves or for their parties, will be permitted to indicate the amendments they are going to move when we get to the other clauses.

I believe that we have to observe the rule that we do not actually move the amendments on the specific clauses until we get to those clauses. What the hon. member for Calgary North is requesting is latitude on clause 2, and particularly for that latitude to include the right to indicate amendments to be moved later. We would agree with that, but I trust it is understood that hon. members are not required at this point to indicate what their amendments might be.

The Chairman: Is the hon. member for St. John's East rising on this point of order?

Mr. McGrath: No, on another point of order.

The Chairman: As I understand hon. members who have spoken on this point of order, spokesmen for the parties in what we might call their initial speeches on clause 2 would indicate, or may indicate if they wish to do so, the amendments which their particular group wish to advance. They will read them but they will not put them in the formal sense. They will read them in the sense that they will make the House knowledgeable of the particular amendments they will be moving. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I would like to raise a point of order at this stage of our proceedings. It has to do with a question I directed to the Solicitor General regarding the bill that is now before the committee. On Friday, October 30, I asked the Solicitor General, in his capacity as acting Minister of Justice, as recorded at page 740 of Hansard:

> Have the provincial Attorneys General been shown a draft copy of the government's proposed legislation to replace the War Measures Act? If so, can the Acting Minister of Justice tell the House when Parliament will also be granted this privilege?

The Solicitor General replied:

> Mr. Speaker, the Attorneys General of the provinces have not been shown any such draft bill.

In today's issue of the Globe and Mail there is a report concerning the Attorney General of Ontario, which reads in part, and I am quoting:

> • (12:00 noon)
> Arthur Wishart said the provincial government made "strong representations almost immediately" after receiving the first draft of the bill, intended as a long term replacement for the War Measures Act.

In addition to that, Mr. Chairman, I might point out that the Attorney General of Newfoundland, a week ago yesterday, also made a public statement to the effect that he had received a draft copy of the bill. In the light of this statement of the Attorney General of Ontario I wonder whether the Solicitor General might want to correct the record.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I will be glad to correct the record. There was no draft bill in that sense circulated to Attorneys General across the country. There was a discussion draft of the general tenor of what the federal government had in mind. After those discussions, and indeed after discussions with the Leader of the Opposition and after receiving communications from the other two parties and after discussion with members of my own caucus, the bill was then drafted.

The only draft bill, and the only bill for which I take responsibility, is the one before the House. It is true that we indicated in general terms the options we had in mind, and those options were in the form of papers which were left with the various Attorneys General.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Chairman, if I may I will say on that point of order—

The Chairman: Is the hon. member rising on the same point of order?

Mr. Alexander: Yes, Mr. Chairman. Referring to that same article, I notice that the Attorney General for the province of Ontario has indicated that we could follow the Criminal Code regarding matters of sedition and treason, but he questioned the propriety of this new bill before the House. I wonder if the minister could advise whether he has any other information of similar tone from other Attorneys General throughout the country?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I will want to have further communication with the Attorney General for Ontario because that position really was not indicated to us. We received general approval for what we had in mind from the provinces all across the country.

The Chairman: Is the hon. member for Calgary North rising on that same point of order?

Mr. Woolliams: No.

The Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I will try to put our position clearly as to what amendments we will be moving.

First of all, because there seemed to be some confusion at the beginning, I should like to ask what the position of the government is as far as this bill is concerned. There seemed to be an impression left that when the Prime Minister spoke on October 16 he promised a special bill.

I just want to clarify the position of the official opposition. This impression affected the official opposition yesterday because if the record is consulted—and I may digress for a few moments—it will be seen that, outside of one short statement properly made by the hon. member for Egmont in reference to how he intended to vote, we had one speaker while the Liberals put up five or six speakers during the debate on second reading of the bill.

An hon. Member: A government filibuster.

Mr. Woolliams: It seemed to me they were filibustering their own bill because we were then dealing with the principle of the bill, and they all voted for it. Maybe they were conscience stricken, Mr. Chairman, and had to explain why they were supporting the Prime Minister. So, there was delay yesterday, in spite of the fact the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice had indicated there was some urgency to get this bill through and thus get rid of the War Measures Act because it was so all encompassing. I was rather surprised to have to sit through a long debate whilst the government hurled reproaches and recriminations at the NDP because they took a different position. I will say that where everybody thinks alike there is no thinking at all, and that is apparently what the government wants.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: A letter arrived on my desk this morning containing this statement: "Be thankful of the opinions of others; there are three sides to every question." Well, maybe that answers that.

Now, I want to go to where the Prime Minister stood when the War Measures Act was brought in at four o'clock in the morning. I want to emphasize again that when we met in Parliament on October 16, we met when this law was in effect. We were not debating the law, we were debating then the question of whether or not the government should receive the confidence of Parliament or the confidence of the Canadian people through Parliament, because the law had been brought in at four o'clock in the morning. A law that was not in effect when we went to bed became effective at four o'clock in the morning. This was what the Prime Minister said:

> The government recognizes that the authority contained in the act is much broader than is required in the present situation, notwithstanding the seriousness of the events. For that reason, the regulations which were adopted permit the exercise of only a limited number of the powers available under the act.

I pause there. He reminded the House that they were dealing with the administration of justice as far as the War Measures Act was concerned. At that stage they apparently did not intend to use any of the other sweeping powers which would have dealt with economic factors in Canada. I say that when the War Measures Act was proclaimed by the government, in fact the whole constitution de facto and de jure was set aside. The Prime Minister continued:

> Nevertheless, I wish to make it clear today that the government regards the use of the War Measures Act as only an interim and, in the sense mentioned above, somewhat unsatisfactory measure.

That is, in the original proclamation that set out the time limit on the operation of the War Measures Act. At no place in the debate and no place in the Prime Minister's statement—and let us get this straight—did he ever promise to bring in a bill such as the one we are debating today in committee. That is why the Leader of the Official Opposition in the debate on second reading said that this government needed some leadership on this bill. Where did that suggestion come from? The opposition gave that leadership to the government.

I should like to return to page 196 of Hansard, Mr. Chairman. I have read what the Prime Minister said. He talked about an interim measure and that meant the War Measures Act was only going to last for a short time. This is what our leader said as recorded at page 196:

> I assert that, rather than coming here this morning and seeking the approval of the House for a measure for which the government must accept the responsibility for having taken, the government should have concentrated on bringing before the House a bill—

Meaning a temporary bill such as the one we have now. The leadership that this suggestion gave—and the government capitulated—came from this side of the House and, to be fair, I mean all the opposition parties took that position.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Woolliams: If you would only listen for a few moments. I listened very attentively to your filibuster yesterday and I wish the hon. member would give me the same privilege today.

I should now like to read from page 239 of Hansard. At that stage the Minister of Justice was in the House and I said:

This would contain the powers they felt they needed to cope with the situation. I ask the Minister of Justice whether he will stand in his place and say that the government intends to bring in a bill which will give them the powers they feel they need to deal with this crisis, and that this bill will supplant the regulations passed early this morning. Is that the government's policy?

I put that question to the Minister of Justice, Mr. Chairman, but he would not answer. Why? The Minister of Justice was concerned, if not frightened, that he might overstep the instructions given by the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: That is why the Minister of Justice would not answer the question at that time, so this bill was necessary, and I would like to re-emphasize this, after the government capitulated their position. Indeed, they did capitulate their position to bring in the bill in question.

An hon. Member: Oh, go on, you are just stick handling.

Mr. Woolliams: Well, I don't know about that, Mr. Chairman, but when I hear these people talk about stick handling I must say that a lot of them are so slippery they would do very well on ice.

Now, I want to read on:

Does silence indicate it will be? Of course it does not. This Order in Council is the law, and it will be the law...

• (12:10 p.m.)

It will be the law unless it is changed by a bill. If the Minister of Justice, who was speaking for the government, had said that in place of the War Measures Act the government would bring in a bill such as we are considering, and said "Yes" to our inquiries in that regard, that would have shortened the debate because that was the position we took. We voted as we did on the question of the War Measures Act because we understood certain promises had been made. After the deals had been made with our house leaders we said, "In view of your undertaking, we will support you." Now, we are debating the bill in question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: I have outlined what our position is. And what did the Liberals do in the debate yesterday? They embarked on a filibuster in which we heard many reproaches and recriminations aimed at the NDP. It was a political debate, and not the sort of debate you would expect in a time of crisis when it is necessary to take extraordinary measures such as these.

Mr. Baldwin: It was not even a good filibuster.

Mr. Woolliams: I do not know whether or not it was the Minister of Justice who stimulated that debate on the government side of the House. At any rate, he could not get government supporters to keep silent so that we could bring this matter before the committee.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mahoney: Nobody tries to silence us on this side.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, what, therefore, is our main amendment?

An hon. Member: Ah!

Mr. Woolliams: I want now to deal with a number of amendments.

An hon. Member: Wonderful.

An hon. Member: Let us get on with it.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, our position is that we go along with the principle of the bill, but that there are certain mechanical aspects we are concerned about. One of those pertains to review. I want to deal with this for a few moments, because this bill speaks of the same kinds of regulations as were brought in under the War Measures Act. May I point out how the War Measures Act regulations were enforced during the last war. I have before me the Defence of Canada Regulations which were in force between 1939 and 1942. You will find that even in the time of emergency, when the War Measures Act was in force, there was provision for a judicial review. I wish to read briefly from page 36 of the Defence of Canada Regulations. Subsection 26(1) reads:

Any enemy alien who has been interned under the provisions of this Part, may within thirty days of such internment, appeal against such internment to the nearest person designated by the Minister of Justice for the purpose of hearing such appeals, hereinafter referred to as 'the Tribunal.'

That was standard procedure. I continue:

(2) A written notice of appeal signed by the appellant, shall be filed with the Tribunal by the person having the custody of such appellant, who shall transmit a copy thereof to the Registrar General of Enemy Aliens.

It is clear that a tribunal was set up, of which the trial judge was the chairman. Since the tribunal was overburdened with work, it was empowered to set up subboards headed by county court judges. What took place at that time? The special judicial board was set up and it had so many hundreds of cases to review that it was necessary to set up subboards presided over by county court judges. According to information that I finally obtained after checking with the Public Archives History Section, the Department of Justice, and with a friend of mine who formerly was a distinguished member of the RCMP but who is now retired, there were approximately between 1,800 and 1,900 detainees who applied for release; and more than 95 per cent of these were released after their applications were heard.

What I am saying is this: this bill would preserve some of the law contained in the War Measures Act regulations. It is to provide for temporary emergency powers for the preservation of public order. But there may be abuses, as I have said previously, as other members have said, and as my leader has said. Once the law is passed it will not be the Minister of Justice who will administer it; it will not be the attorneys general of the various provinces. There will be 10,000 policemen who will interpret this law as they see fit. Under those circumstances, there are bound to be abuses.

Mr. Baldwin: Also the armed forces.

Mr. Woolliams: As the hon. member for Peace River says, we ought to include the armed forces. There are bound to be some abuses. Our amendments would seek to deal with these and other problems to which I shall refer. If a proper review board could be set up, there could be safeguards. We have already seen that about 438 people have been arrested; a great many have been released. Now, a few are being charged. Those few who are being charged, after having been detained incommunicado for a long period of time without the right to counsel, are being charged with crimes under the Criminal Code. I say that is proof that what is really wrong is that this government would not act for two years; nor would the Liberal government of the province of Quebec take its responsibilities. If these governments had shouldered their full responsibilities, these extraordinary remedies being asked for today might not have been necessary. It would not be necessary for the government to implement these extraordinary powers at this time.

So, I say that the first function is to set up a review board. That is what we suggest. We are, therefore, proposing that Bill C-181 be amended by inserting therein, next after clause 14, on page 9 thereof, the following:

15. (1) The Governor-in-Council, as soon as possible after the coming into force of this Act, shall appoint a person holding judicial office under Her Majesty in right of Canada, who shall be called the 'Administrator', and who shall inquire into and report to Parliament from time to time upon the administration of this Act and of the Public Order Regulations, 1970.

What we are suggesting is that a superior court judge in the province of Quebec be appointed as an administrator to administer these reviews. If he were to find that the board can not handle the number of cases coming before it, he could set up subboards, as was done during the war, so that people charged would be able to have their reviews heard. Then, if there were abuses under the act—we have already heard about abuses, and I will not name names because they have already been mentioned in the debate—those abuses could be corrected by way of application to these boards. Under the bill, even if people are charged they can be held for 90 days.

We also propose:

(2) The Administrator shall have the powers of a commissioner appointed under the Inquiries Act and shall continue as Administrator for such period after the expiration of this Act, whether by effluxion of time or by proclamation, as the case may be, as is necessary for the carrying out of his duties under this Act.

Subclause (3) would be as follows:

(3) The Administrator shall have power to review and confirm, vary or revoke a certificate filed by an Attorney General of a province under subsection (1) of section 7 or an order made by an Attorney General under subsection (2) of section 9, and to make an order for fixing a date for trial.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Surely, whatever regulations our jurisprudence may deal with, there will be abuses. There must be abuses. Already we know from those people who have been released that mistakes have been made. Perhaps many more mistakes have been made than we are aware of because people who have been detained for a long time may be afraid to speak out now in view of the powers the government has at present. Therefore, we say that in an application before the board a date for trial should be fixed, so that justice may be done. That, to me, is the essence of a just society. What I have read constitutes our main amendment in that regard.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I wish to say something about clause 8. Actually, I wish to deal with several amendments. If clause 8 is to remain as it is, and if the minister takes an adamant position and refuses to accept amendments to this bill, I suggest that he is in for a lengthy debate. Let us face the facts. This is Friday. As this bill has to go through the other place, it cannot be proclaimed until next week. This is not like other occasions when bills are sent to a standing committee and, therefore, I hope the minister will take a charitable and sympathetic position. We are sincere when presenting our amendments. We feel they are for the good of Canada, the Canadian people and the administration of justice.

• (12:20 p.m.)

I now wish to deal with clause 8 which reads as follows:

8. In any prosecution for an offence under this Act, evidence that any person, either before or after the coming into force of this Act,

(a) participated in or was present at a number of meetings of the unlawful association or of any branch, committee or members thereof,

(b) spoke publicly in advocacy for the unlawful association or

(c) communicated statements on behalf of or as a representative or professed representative of the unlawful association, is, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, proof that he is a member of the unlawful association.

I have not checked this, but I think I am correct in stating that for all crimes under the Criminal Code, with the exception of murder and possibly a few others, there are statutory limitations. These regulations create a new offence. It is illegal to belong to the FLQ or an unlawful association. I do not think it is confined to the FLQ. I will have something more to say about that. Carrying it to the extreme for purposes of argument, if I had attended a meeting or meetings of the FLQ in 1926 I could be charged with an offence because there is no statutory limitation. Once there is evidence, such as some letter or signature on a register when I walked into a hall, I then may be charged. That evidence having been presented, I must go on the stand. I know what the argument of the Minister of Justice will be. He is going to say that it is a matter of evidence only. However, there must be no mistake that this is an offence and that provision may apply retroactively. The clause reads:

8. In any prosecution for an offence under this Act, evidence that any person, either before—

That probably refers to before four o'clock in the morning on that particular Friday or after this act came into force. The section then sets out what the offender might have done. The onus is then on the accused.

The Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but I must advise the House that his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Chairman: Is there unanimous consent that the hon. member continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Woolliams: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, I think this will shorten the debate. I have quite a lot to say concerning our position on this bill.

Returning to clause 8, except for the Income Tax Act and a few other acts that put the onus of proof on the accused, this is the only bill that is contrary to any jurisprudence in our system of justice. If someone signs a register that such-and-such a person attended a meeting or meetings, that person must go on the stand to make a denial. Not only is this contrary to the jurisprudence of our system, but it is not a rule of evidence. Allegorically, it may be regarded as a rule of evidence, but basically it is substantive law and no one can get around that. I wish to emphasize what the clause states:

8. In any prosecution for an offence under this Act, evidence that any person, either before or after the coming into force of this Act,—

After subsections (a), (b) and (c), the clause reads:

—is, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, proof that he is a member of the unlawful association.

That is substantive law according to the rules of evidence. If we analyse that part of the bill, it will be seen that if there is no change we will need a review board because there have been, and will be abuses. As I stated earlier, the worst cannot be remedied with an evil. I now wish to deal with another part of this bill.

The preamble is very beautiful. It lays a beautiful bed for what is to come. It reads:

Whereas the Parliament of Canada continues to affirm that men and institutions—remain free only when freedom is founded upon respect for moral and spiritual values and the rule of law;—

When you read this bill, that does not mean anything. It is straight declaration. As I stated at a meeting, it is like handing someone a sucker. After you eat the candy, all you are left with is a stick. The preamble is like the candy. The preamble continues:

And whereas the public order in Canada continues to be endangered by elements—

It then states what is happening. The next paragraph reads:

And whereas the Parliament of Canada, following approval by the House of Commons of Canada of the measures taken by His Excellency the Governor General in Council pursuant to the War Measures Act to deal with the state of apprehended insurrection in the Province of Quebec—

I am sorry that the hon. member for Calgary South is not here. Throughout the election campaign he talked about a two-nation policy. At that time I did not know what he meant, but I know now. This policy was brought in by the Grits. There is one law for Quebec and one for the rest of Canada. I ask the Minister of Justice to think about this. The minister has attended law school and has written a book about the interpretation of statutes. This means very little in this debate, but it means a lot before a court. As the minister knows, the preamble cannot be used for the interpretation of sections. It can only be used as a guide. Some cases do go that far. If the minister has any question about that I will give him the authorities, but I do not intend to cite the interpretations given by Mr. Driedger, Q.C. and Mr. Maxwell. The preamble of this bill cannot be used in interpreting the substantive law contained in the section. This is why clause 3 must be looked at very carefully.

I now wish to deal with clause 4 on page 3 of the bill which reads in part:

4. A person who
(c) communicates statements on behalf of or as a representative or professed representative of the unlawful association,—

Basically, the government is trying to say that the only association is the FLQ. I question that. Any association that recommends, promotes, advocates crime or uses violence in order to gain political advantage is an illegal association. Basically, under the Criminal Code, that is criminal conspiracy. The minister must answer our questions when dealing with the clauses. I ask, what does the bill mean when it refers to: "communicates statements on behalf of"? Does it mean that the personnel of those radio stations which carried the communiqués of the FLQ with regard to the kidnappings, the tragic murder of Mr. Laporte and the still unknown whereabouts of Mr. Cross, are liable to five years imprisonment? Surely, here is a question which must be answered. There is another clause which is almost on all fours with the example I have given. Both need to be looked at carefully. The precise meaning of clause 4(c)—"communicates statements on behalf of"—must be fully explained by the minister. Does this mean that a radio station which carries a communiqué will be committing an offence? The same applies to similar words used on page five of the bill. I pause for a moment—

• (12:30 p.m.)

Mr. Anderson: Get your notes in order.

Mr. Woolliams: I don't know what the hon. member means by that. I know the Minister of Justice would be sympathetic; if I were in his position, I would certainly need to have my notes written out. In my own case, I have made careful notes. I do not know why the hon. member wants to be so illiterate and so ignorant today, when we are dealing with a subject of such importance.

Mr. Anderson: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. We listened with great interest to the hon. member's allegations of fillibuster when members on this side rose to speak yesterday.

Mr. Woolliams: That is not a point of order or a question of privilege. Why doesn't the hon. member sit down?

The Chairman: Would the hon. member resume his seat, please? The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich rose on a point of order. I did not have the opportunity, before the hon. member for Calgary North rose, to determine whether or not he was in order.

Mr. Anderson: The point I wished to raise was this: all hon. members here suffered some insults in the course of the hon. member's speech but agreed to an extension of his time, despite the fact that last night he accused us of filibustering. My interjection was strictly directed to getting this debate carried forward in an orderly manner, as he himself evidently approves. So, I suggested he should get his notes in order.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Calgary North.

Mr. Woolliams: I do not intend to listen to that kind of nonsense. As far as I am concerned, my notes are in order. The Minister of Justice will be sympathetic in this regard. I wrote them myself; I do not have a staff behind me and I probably was up this morning long before the hon. member was out of bed preparing my speech and carrying out the research needed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: The hon. member can laugh and giggle. It means nothing to him. He will vote with the government no matter what they do.

Let me get back to the question of the general principle of the bill.

An hon. Member: The debate on that is over.

Mr. Woolliams: I take the position that generally, with one exception, this bill does not create any new crimes. It is true that membership of the FLQ is outlawed and that the procedure in our courts is reversed in the measure before us, but I still maintain that the criminal law of Canada contains all the power the government needed. All the government had to do was to stop playing politics and be pragmatists for right rather than pragmatists for opportunism, and administer the law, because they already possessed sufficient power under the Criminal Code.

What are some of these powers? Well, there is power to deal with criminal conspiracy. Criminal conspiracy means entering into an unlawful agreement for an unlawful purpose, or even a lawful agreement for an unlawful purpose. The bill before us spells out that the FLQ is an unlawful association. The clause reads:

> The group of persons or association known as Le Front de Libération du Québec and any successor group or successor association of the said Le Front de Libération du Québec, or any group of persons or association that advocates the use of force or the commission of crime as a means of or as an aid in accomplishing the same or substantially the same governmental change within Canada as that advocated by the said Le Front de Libération du Québec, is declared to be an unlawful association.

Mr. Chairman, that association, basically, whatever its motivation and purpose, is already within the scope of the Criminal Code. The persons who recommended, permitted or defended violence of any kind or, who, in fact, committed violence, could have been charged with criminal conspiracy. Then, there is the crime of sedition. We find, now, that people are being charged with sedition. When a crowd gets out of hand, provision is made for the use of the riot act from which certain consequences follows. Criminal conspiracy, sedition, counselling to commit an offence—all these offences are covered by the Code.

Let me get down to describing what the new bill really does. Apart from making certain that the FLQ is an unlawful association, it gives added powers to the police. I am not being critical of that at the moment, nor do I believe members of other opposition parties are critical in this regard, bearing in mind the emergency which prevails. It gives the police power to detain people without bringing charges, to interrogate them, to hold them incommunicado, to hold them without counsel. What is the purpose behind this? Normally, when a person is arrested, a charge is laid. Many times, before an accused gets the advice of counsel, he makes a statement to the police. He is generally warned, but a warning is really not one of the ingredients which go to determining whether or not such a statement is admissible at trial, subject to certain other rules which I shall not attempt to discuss at the moment. But the arrested person is generally warned and often he makes a statement. If, in the course of that statement, he incriminates himself and the court agrees that the statement was made voluntarily, the statement is admissible as evidence before a judge without jury or a judge with a jury.

Under the terms of this bill no charge need be laid immediately. The normal rights of an accused person are set aside. What really happens when a person, particularly someone who has never been in detention before, is held incommunicado for a number of days? The police have really got him in a sweat box. Along comes a police officer who asks: What information have you to give? If a person does not know when he is likely to get out of goal and there is no limitation on the time during which he can be held, what happens? He starts to tell stories.

I am not being critical in this regard, but that is the real power which this bill confers. Safeguards must be set up. We know that many people have been detained already under the War Measures Act which the bill now before us is to replace, interrogated and then released; their families did not know where they were. An independent body should be set up to minimize the possibility of this extraordinary measure being misused, bearing in mind the unusual powers which it entrusts to the police force. What the bill really means is that any door in Canada can be kicked open by the police and a man can be taken from his family, or, for that matter, the whole family can be taken away. This is why a review board is needed. This is why amendments to the mechanism of this bill are so necessary. But, I repeat, we went along with the bill in principle.

Now, I turn to a theme which has been mentioned by every member of my party who has spoken; it has been dealt with by spokesmen for the New Democratic Party and by spokesmen for the Creditistes, also. You cannot prevent revolution by a bill of this kind or by the War Measures Act. If I might be personal for a moment, I want to tell two stories. Every two or three years they sent Lenin and Stalin in chains to Siberia because they were disturbing the peace, advocating violence and so on. Then, under that particular government of the day they were released, but in another two years back to Siberia they went in chains.

• (12:40 p.m.)

The point I want to make is that sending Lenin and Stalin and even Trotsky away did not stop the revolution. That is why I interrupted the Minister of Labour when I mentioned there was 10 per cent unemployment and he said I was a millionaire.

An hon. Member: Do you deny that?

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, I do, but I do not want to get off the track. I want to tell another story. I am sure my hon. friends in the New Democratic Party will appreciate this story because it is in their favour. Hon. members opposite may think this is funny, but it is not funny at all, because the same thing is now taking place in Quebec. In 1930, the bottom fell out of everything in western Canada. There were farmers in Saskatchewan who received 16 cents in total, after deduction of freight, for 1,000 pounds of beef shipped from Rosetown to Winnipeg. The price of wheat dropped to 19 cents a bushel. Machinery on the farms was repossessed. I went through that experience.

Then one day Mr. Coldwell, former leader of the C.C.F., spoke at a place called Valley Centre which has a population of around 100. About 5,000 people turned out to hear him, and I was there as a young boy, along with my father. He made a great speech. I had always thought that Mr. Coldwell was a near conservative socialist, but when it came to dealing with grievances at that time he spoke with that kind of responsibility that we would expect the leader of any party to speak with, whether or not we agreed with what he said.

His words excited, and even incited to violence, because either at a nomination meeting or shortly thereafter when he was running for my home town constituency of Rosetown-Biggar, a murder was committed. This murder was committed in the heat of a political argument by a man who was respected by the community. He was found guilty of manslaughter and served time. However, this did not change people's feelings. There was a Liberal government in the province of Saskatchewan at that time, what we called the Gardiner machine. We now have the Trudeau machine. In 1944 the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, to his credit, turned out the Gardiner machine and became premier of the province of Saskatchewan.

The point I want to drive home is this, that until government improves the social and economic conditions of the people of the province of Quebec and other provinces in Canada, the revolution will go on. All the acts and the powers of the law will not stop that revolution. Nor will they stop change. Nor will they quiet people who suffer grievances. Having been raised in this sort of sad environment, I could use some very intemperate language today, particularly with regard to the powers contained in the bill. However, I am not unsympathetic to the fact that the government, and the Minister of Justice in particular because of the position he holds, realized that there was a crisis in the province of Quebec.

The strange thing is that outside of one case I have read about—though the government may have additional information that we should have in this regard—there have been no FLQ members charged under the act; the others have been charged under the Code. I should like to know what the Minister of Justice, the Solicitor General, who is filled with words, and the Prime Minister have been doing for the last two years when they had evidence before them. The answer is that they were procrastinating. They were doing nothing. They started the fire, and now having put wood on the fire they cannot put the fire out. This is why we are standing in our places today debating extraordinary measures.

May I end with this. Revolution will not end with this bill. There has been talk about millionaires, though I am not going to get personal here. I would say to the cabinet that some were born in riches, some had a rich education and some have lived a rich life. I make a special plea to the Minister of Justice to consider seriously some of our amendments. Because if the government fails us now, it fails not only the province of Quebec and the people of Canada, but also the role of the opposition.

Somebody has said that we are the conscience of the government. At times like this, it is our job to take what may even be unpopular positions. For example, what the hon. member for Egmont did was unpopular, but I am sure one thing he did not lack was courage to vote as he did, whether his judgment will be proven to be right or wrong. This is why I ask the minister to give us a chance to suggest to him and his officers amendments to the bill. Particularly, give people the right to a review. Do not suppress or silence them. Do not hold people without giving them the opportunity to state their grievances.

We have all read in the morning papers what happened when people who were detained came before a court of justice. They were frustrated and vehement because they had been held incommunicado without the right of expression. Without the right of expression, you have oppression. This is why we feel a review board should be established. We want to be given the chance, intelligently and to the best of our ability, to suggest the kind of law that should be passed. We for our part will support the government and show that kind of responsibility that a government should expect from the members of this party and other parties.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take the opportunity of re-echoing the plea just made by the hon. member for extremely serious consideration on the part of the Minister of Justice and his government of the amendments that we are going to propose. I believe all members of the House are uneasy about this particular bill, but we have almost unanimously agreed that some measures are necessary to deal with the disorder created in the province of Quebec by the FLQ. Although we have acknowledged that necessity, we say that it is of the utmost importance that the steps taken to deal with disorder are not such as would unnecessarily deprive Canadian citizens of their fundamental rights and civil liberties.

The series of amendments that we have proposed is designed to remove vague and dangerous words from the bill; to remove principles that are not in accordance with the ordinary, recognized rules of justice. Our whole aim is to improve, make more workable and adequate what is done, not taking away from the effectiveness of this bill but taking away from it certain features that we think are dangerous to the liberty of Canadians. We have seven or eight amendments—not very many in number because this is not a long bill—which will be introduced by different members of my party. I will leave it to them, as they introduce these special amendments, to explain them in detail. However, it might be useful for me to make a rather brief summary of the amendments to be proposed.

We propose an amendment to clause 6 of the bill which deals with the responsibility of an owner of a building or premises to permit meetings of the unlawful association. We say it is important to take out some of the vague words about assemblages of persons so that this clause will only deal with the owner who encourages meetings of the illegal organization, and so that it cannot be applied, owing to the vagueness of the wording employed, to, perhaps, a gathering together in classrooms or universities or other places which are not meetings of the association but at which perhaps someone in a theoretical way advocates some of the doctrines of the unlawful association.

The second amendment deals with the question of bail as it appears in clause 7 of the bill. As I think I mentioned yesterday, we propose that the granting of bail be handed back where it belongs, that is to the judiciary of this country. We do not think there is any need to distrust the judiciary. They will be advised by counsel representing the law enforcement officers of the province concerned. However, they will have a final right to say that they are not content with a mere general statement from the Attorney General that everybody should be held without bail. They will have the right to say: "We want to know why you are holding a person and depriving him of his liberty pending a hearing which may be postponed for a considerable period of time." We also think that subclause (2) of clause 7 should be amended, that holding a person for 90 days before letting him appear to have a date fixed for trial is much too long. We propose that it be changed to 30 days.

The next amendment is to clause 8, and is of crucial importance. I particularly invite the attention of the Minister of Justice to this amendment. This is the clause that creates the retroactive application of the penal provisions of this bill. It is not itself a penal provision, it deals only with the evidence. However, by making the provision retroactive as to evidence so that acts permitted before the passing of this measure, acts which at that time were perfectly legal, can be taken as evidence upon which a conviction is made, is in effect to give retroactive effect to the bill. I will speak later with more detail on this, but I say that all across Canada, in the press and in the comments of informed people, there has been an urgent plea that this be not done. This retroactive legislation, which runs against the principles of the United Nations Universal Declaration of Human Rights, is offensive to those who say that a person who commits an act not defined as a crime cannot have criminal intent, and surely criminal intent is basic to criminal responsibility.

Mr. Hogarth: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question to clarify what he is saying? Let us say we took clause 8 out of the bill. Is it his view that no evidence of having attended any meeting of the FLQ or of speaking publicly in advocacy of what the FLQ stands for, none of these things that took place prior to October 16 would be admissible as evidence to show that on that date the prisoner was a member of the FLQ?

Mr. Brewin: I am not saying any such thing. What I am saying is that there should not be a presumption of guilt, which is included in clause 8, by reason of something which, when it was done, was perfectly innocent. If there are acts which take place after October 16, and light can be thrown on this by previous associations, that may be perfectly all right.

Mr. Hogarth: That is all that this clause does, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Order, please. I think the hon. member for New Westminster has asked his question. I believe more progress would be made if the hon. member for Greenwood continued uninterrupted.

Mr. Brewin: I will certainly deal with this question in detail when we come to this clause. All I am saying now is that this clause, which provides that evidence that a person either before or after the coming into force of this act participated in a meeting, and so on, shall be in the absence of any evidence, proof that a person is a member of the unlawful association, is an offence against basic principles and should be taken out of the act. That is our amendment to clause 8.

We then propose that clause 12 be amended by striking out the exception to the Canadian Bill of Rights. The Bill of Rights provides that no person who has been arrested shall be deprived of the right to bail. I do not have the precise wording in front of me, but that is in the Bill of Rights. The effect of clause 12 is to incorporate the provisions of the Bill of Rights in this act—and naturally we welcome that—with the exception of paragraph (f) of clause 2 dealing with bail. The provision in paragraph (f) is that no law of Canada shall be construed or applied so as to deprive a person charged with a criminal offence of the right to be presumed innocent until proved guilty, and so on, or of the right to reasonable bail without just cause. We believe that that constitutional guarantee should be maintained because it is important, and that "without just cause" is a matter that can be properly reviewed by the courts. The removal of that paragraph from clause 12, plus the operation of clause 7 to which I have already referred, will have the effect of depriving a person of the right to go to a court ultimately and say: "I am being detained without the reasonable opportunity of obtaining bail". We think that should be granted. May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair to resume at two o'clock this afternoon.

The Committee took recess at 1 p.m.

AFTER RECESS

The Committee resumed at 2 p.m.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Greenwood on clause 2 of Bill C-181.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, before the committee adjourned for lunch, I was summarizing the amendments which different members of this party propose to move. I had reached the point of our last but one amendment which proposes that the Minister of Justice appoint a supervisory commission of three persons, not employees of the federal authority, of any provincial government or any police force, with the authority to interview persons arrested under this bill to assure they are treated according to the law, have had access to counsel, do not continue to be detained without adequate ground and have been given opportunity to be contacted by their families. It is proposed that the commission be given an opportunity to publish its findings as frequently as deemed necessary.

It would seem to me that the events of the last few days or weeks have clearly demonstrated the need for such a commission. It is all very well to say that the Bill of Rights gives certain rights, but unless there exists adequate machinery to see that these rights can be exercised then they may not be exercised. The appointment by the Minister of Justice of such a commission composed of people of the nature of special ombudsmen to deal with this particular situation which arises out of these emergency acts, and out of these perhaps necessary interferences with normal procedure, is a very important matter. I know the minister may possibly say that this can be done by voluntary organizations. Of course, voluntary organizations can help, but they would not have the authority of a commission appointed under the direction of this Parliament, requiring that it perform this very necessary function. I believe the hon. member for York South proposes to introduce this amendment. I have no doubt he will have more to say about it at that time.

The last amendment we have on our list at the moment is an amendment to clause 15 of the bill. This would give the right to Parliament, through a motion by 10 of its members, to pray that the operation of this act be terminated and would provide that the motion would be heard at the first convenient opportunity. This amendment is in accordance with the provision now in the War Measures Act, and introduced by the Canadian Bill or Rights in 1960. It proposes the very same power for Parliament to discuss whether the time has come to end an emergency measure. It may never have to be exercised. Under clause 15, as it is presently drawn, the government by proclamation, and both houses of Parliament by joint resolution, can call for the ending of the application of the emergency measure.

I think it is important that Parliament itself be given the machinery to review these things. The authorities that are conferred here, affecting the rights of the subject, are matters that are particularly the concern of Parliament. I suggest this amendment would be a reassertion of the authority and responsibility of Parliament as to the duration or expiry of the emergency provisions of these measures which affect the liberties of Canadians.

I am going to conclude my remarks more or less in the same way as I spoke to the minister when opening my remarks. I believe that Parliament is very much on trial here, and that if the minister can see fit not only to consider seriously the amendments that are proposed but to indicate that he accedes to some of them, he will do a lot to vindicate the parliamentary process. I am not asking him to approve of something without merit or that, in his view, endangers some of the measures proposed in the bill. It would be ridiculous to ask him to do that. But I am asking him to lean over on the side of freedom, freedom of Canadians, when he comes to consider these proposals made by a responsible opposition. If he can do that, if he can see fit to accept some or all of the amendments proposed, he will be doing a lot not only to vindicate the processes of Parliament but to re-assure the Canadian people that Parliament is still in control of these things. It is not the fiat of government which alone must be used to deal with a crisis such as we face, but it is Parliament itself, the representatives of the people, whose voices are taken into account in this Parliament.

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Chairman, clause 1 of Bill C-181 affords us an opportunity of making general remarks on the substance of the bill before proceeding to the examination of each clause.

Judging by the almost unanimous vote that was given last night, I believe all hon. members are aware of the importance of this bill that provides for measures to replace the War Measures Act.

The object of this bill is to prohibit any revolutionary activity on the part of the FLQ, especially in Quebec.

I agree with the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), that this bill will not remove the remote or real causes of a revolutionary movement in Canada and particularly in Quebec.

Should this bill work out, and we hope it will, it could curb the activities of the revolutionaries by enabling us to punish them. But if Parliament does not, now or in the future, take the economic steps that would be necessary to remove the underlying causes of such activities, we shall not be able to check the revolutionaries in spite of Bill C-181 and of all the good will shown by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner).

Mr. Chairman, at the opening of each sitting, you say a prayer from which I quote the following words: Give us our daily bread. Now if the present Minister of Justice and the governments that have administered this country since Confederation had put those words into practice, we would not have to pass a bill to check the revolutionaries or outlaw revolutionary ideas in Canada.

Of course, the revolutionaries of today perhaps are not looking for their daily bread only. In fact, they have some economic or political goal to achieve. However, I believe that the majority of them have been putting up with economic conditions which, normally, should not exist in Canada and which we should seriously consider removing in the future.

I was amused on reading the speech delivered last night by the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier). He attacked those who have always supported the goverment with respect to this bill, as well as those who, as do the members of our party, realize that order and justice must be respected. I find it strange that he would not blame those who have political interests to safeguard, for we know that the disappearance of the FLQ people from Quebec might be prejudicial to some political parties which have promoted, up to now, if not revolution for the sake of democracy, at least theories which could lead to the establishment of a socialist and totalitarian state.

• (2:20 p.m.)

Some right-minded and honest government members do not approve the position of the Secretary of State who is responsible for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and who has been acting quite irresponsibly in the House for a number of years. This is a very important Crown corporation: it controls the thoughts and information of Canada. When we express grievances to him in the House he acts in an irresponsible manner and answers: I shall inquire. I do not know. I shall make an investigation. I shall tell the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation about it.

We realize that for many years, the CBC information policy has revolved around infiltration and revolutionary ideas. Indeed, terrorist activities in Canada are unfortunately highlighted every day. Furthermore, great attention is given in programs to the speeches of those who create the political atmosphere of our country.

If indeed the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) intends to complete the clean up that he has undertaken, he should first of all consider the minister responsible for the CBC.

Mr. Speaker, we must create a favourable economic climate so that this bill does not have to remain in force for too long a time. We have felt, in this House, from the day when we have been made aware of the existence of revolutionary groups in Quebec, that a democratically elected Parliament could not give in to blackmail from some minorities. As far as we, Créditistes, are concerned, we have been challenging the present system for the past 30 or 35 years. In our opinion, reforms are needed and changes are necessary. We have offered some solutions and have not become impatient. We hope that through the democratic election process the present government and the Créditiste government which will succeed it will be able to change the present system without resorting to revolutionary methods. And this is the reason why we accept the bill introduced by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), so as to safeguard the freedom of the majority.

Some might holler about the liberty of those who will be inconvenienced by the judicial process, who will be questioned and searched, who will have to spend a few days in jail, but I am convinced that the number of people so affected will be small as compared with the rest of the Canadian people who want to continue living in peace.

As a matter of fact, we cannot ask that, in the name of the freedom of the few, the legislation be insufficiently precise and severe. We must safeguard the majority. We have been elected for that purpose.

I have some recommendations to make with regard to the amendments we have submitted to the Minister of Justice. We deplore the fact, contrary to hon. members of a certain party sitting at my right, that the bill is still too lenient towards revolutionaries and anarchists.

This is why we will bring in some amendments. As for clause 4(g), we suggest that it be replaced by the following:

> A person who advocates, promotes or engages in the use of force or the commission of crime as a means of or as an aid in accomplishing the same or substantially the same governmental change within Canada as that advocated by the unlawful association, > is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to life imprisonment.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment tends to replace clause 4(a) of the bill now under study.

The punishment provided in the bill is "not exceeding five years". The amendment extends also the scope of the bill.

Indeed, clause 4 (a), is thus drafted:

> Is guilty of an indictable offence a person who a) is or professes to be a member of the unlawful association...

We maintain that not only "being a member of the unlawful association" is indictable under the law but also "the use of force, the commission of various crimes or the recourse to the commission of crimes".

Therefore, clause 4 would be replaced by Section 4A and Section 4B would be added. It would then read as follows:

Is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to be sentenced to death or to life imprisonment a person who uses force or violence for the purpose of kidnapping, keeping in seclusion, mutilating, torturing or injuring with the intent to bring about death, one or more persons, as a means of or as an aid in establishing the same government change within Canada as that advocated by the illegal association.

Some hon. members or the Minister of Justice might answer that the Criminal Code already provides for that. It does not! This amendment makes the people responsible for kidnapping and other crimes liable to be sentenced to death. According to the Criminal Code there is no more capital punishment, except for the murder of prison guards and other persons.

This amendment calls for the return to capital punishment for political crimes. In other words, kidnapping, torture, mutilation or murder, when committed for the purpose of bringing about in Canada a change such as was advocated by the FLQ, are crimes calling for the death penalty. Kidnapping, torture or murder committed in other circumstances are not punishable by death.

If our amendment were adopted, clause 5 would become clause (5) and clause 5(b) would read as follows:

A person who, knowing or having reasonable cause to believe that another person or other persons are guilty of an offence under Section 4(a), gives that other person any assistance with intent thereby to prevent, hinder or interfere with the apprehension, trial or punishment of that person for that offence, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen years.

Mr. Chairman, our amendments are mainly aimed at making the law more comprehensive. In fact, we all know that a five-year term of imprisonment is often reduced to 20, 24 or 25 months. These sentences are too light in view of the crimes we have enumerated and which are not mentioned in the bill. I am alluding to the crimes committed by the FLQ in the Cross-Laporte case.

In the case of political murder, capital punishment should be applied. At the moment, such criminals are liable to life imprisonment.

The Criminal Code provides for capital punishment in the case of the murder of a prison guard, a peace officer or a policeman. In my opinion, in the case of political murder such as that of Pierre Laporte, hon. members, and particularly the Ralliement Créditiste members, are right when they want to re-establish capital punishment, since who can say today who will be the next politician to be killed? Life imprisonment is too lenient a sentence for political murder.

When reading the revolutionaries' manifestos, including that of the FLQ, it is obvious that the first two steps towards revolution have already been made and that the third one will be the selective murder of politicians. This is the reason why I find it urgent to vote for the re-establishment of capital punishment for political murders like those we unfortunately witnessed recently and which we did not expect.

Because we were warned by the revolutionaries and the anarchists, we cannot plead ignorance and say there is no danger, that we need not restore in our statutes the death penalty for political murders.

Mr. Chairman, I know we will deal again during the debate, with each of these sections, in an effort to have our amendments accepted; to my mind, the bill is still not clear nor specific enough, and especially not severe enough in the light of past events and future threats.

Let us not be so naïve as to think that the danger is past, because the police forces, the army, the R.C.M.P. have performed a formidable task in the last month or so; as to think the bill need not be more severe.

I feel the government is trying to please too much certain friends who, unfortunately, I know, were former friends of the Secretary of State and whose activities were more or less questionable in the past.

Mr. Chairman, we have writings that are not new, that were published throughout Quebec, that warned us of the events we know and those that could happen. Those people will not let go for they have pledged themselves to a revolutionary ideal and if the law is too complacent towards them, all the more problems will crop up.

Even if the law were stricter, as we suggested, if the government does not take concrete steps from the economic standpoint and does not stop setting up royal commissions to delay by three, four or five years the solution of problems, all along handsomely rewarding some persons to study problems of which we are already aware, the Canadian people and unfortunately, young anarchists, will become impatient again and will arouse the population, and this will create events like those which we have recently known in Canada, particularly in the province of Quebec.

• (2:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Hogarth: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Shefford has suggested that members of this House and, certainly, the people of Canada should not be so naïve as to believe that this bill will wipe out the FLQ in its entirety or terrorism in the province of Quebec and elsewhere. I suggest that he should not be so naïve as to think that capital punishment will be of aid in any way because, for every one of the FLQ who is hanged, the FLQ will make sure that three or four members of this government or of the government of Quebec will be assassinated.

Mr. McCleave: How does the hon. member know that? Who told him?

Mr. Hogarth: I draw to his attention section 47 of the Criminal Code which provides for capital punishment for certain offences. That section is not confined to the sort of homicide the hon. member mentioned.

May I speak generally about the suggested amendments brought forward by the hon. member for Calgary North, the hon. member for Greenwood and the hon. member for Shefford. I cannot see in this legislation a retroactivity provision in the true, legal sense; there is nothing that one could consider in law as retroactive legislation. That is to say, the provision in question does not create an offence that antedates the proclamation of the regulations under the War Measures Act. It appears that some hon. members have argued that if clause 8, the presumption section, were removed, we should thereby remove that element of retroactivity which is said to exist in the bill. This just does not stand up to scrutiny at all. If my hon. friends are concerned about retroactivity in its broadest sense in the bill, the only solution available to them is to attempt to bring in a clause providing that no evidence of any activity prior to October 16 can be admitted to prove membership in the FLQ.

What will happen is this, you see, if you remove clause 8 and if there are no presumptions: A man will be charged that on or about October 16, 1970, he was unlawfully a member of the FLQ. That will be the indictment. To prove that indictment, the Crown certainly cannot show any activity on the part of the accused after that date, because he would have been in jail after October 16. The Crown would naturally have to rely on the very things that are set out in clause 8; that is to say, it would have to rely on prior activity and any other evidence of that type it could obtain. It would have to show that the accused attended meetings, and that he participated in some way in FLQ activities; there would need to be shown enough evidence, circumstantial or otherwise, from which a conclusion could be drawn that the accused was, on October 16, a member of the FLQ.

All that clause 8 does is this: in the absence of evidence to the contrary, it entitles the judge to conclude that the accused was a member of the FLQ. Certainly, I doubt very much if we will ever be able to hand any judge a registered list of FLQ members. That a man was a member of the FLQ can only be inferred on the basis of circumstantial evidence, and therefore clause 8 is no more than an aid to proof. The burden of proof in this bill remains on the Crown. It must prove its case beyond a reasonable doubt. Those of us who have participated in the criminal courts know very well that the presumptions put forward in clause 8 are not unusual. The unique part of this bill is this: under clause 4, a person who on October 16 was a member of the FLQ is guilty of an offence. Being a member on October 15 does not make him guilty of an offence; that is the unique part of it. It is his activities prior to October 16 that will prove his guilt as of that date.

I suggest that if hon. members are concerned about retroactivity, and think that the bill is bad because of that, they should never, never have supported this bill in principle. I say that, because when you take out clause 8, the alleged retroactivity will still be there.

[Mr. Hogarth.]

The hon. member for Calgary North suggested that there be set up a board of review. Let us just take a look at that suggestion.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. Will the hon. member resume his seat. It is the impression of the Chair that at this stage we are getting away from clause 2. I thought there was some kind of agreement whereby we could allow representatives of the different parties to list possible amendments and speak generally on the different clauses of the bill; however, it is still my impression that if at this stage we are to let hon. members enter into a detailed discussion on these clauses or the possible amendments, we shall repeat at a later stage what has been said. I should like to hear the opinions of those hon. members who were involved in the agreement this morning, so that I can make up my own mind and decide how far the Chair can permit hon. members to go into a detailed discussion.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, may I speak on that matter, because I participated in what led up to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Calgary North. As I understood it, hon. members would be free to give notice at this stage of amendments they intended to produce, so that everything would be before the Chair and before the other parties of the House, and that we should embark on the sort of discussion we used to embark on under clause 1 in committee of the whole. In other words, we agreed that there would be a rather general discussion, with the hope—and this would be more than a hope, because we think it will be realized—that the remarks to be made in the debate on later stages of the bill would be more specifically tied down. I think those two suggestions were the basis of the general consensus of the committee when the hon. member for Calgary North proposed them this morning.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I agree with that, Mr. Chairman. I know that under the new rules there is a practice of the committee to bypass clause 1, which used to be the general clause, and deal with clause 2 in order to preclude wide debate, reserving that until the last when clause 1 is called. My understanding of this morning's general consensus of the committee was to allow rather wide play for those hon. members intending to present amendments, and for those members who want to make some general statement they were unable to make on second reading, in order to allow the bill to be dealt with by the committee. That leeway having been properly given to members opposite, I think perhaps the Chair might want to look a little kindly upon members on this side of the chamber who want to address themselves in a general way.

Mr. Lewis: I am not attempting to curtail anyone, Mr. Chairman, but I wish to point out that there is a difference between a general statement and what the hon. member for New Westminster was doing, dealing with the amendments that have been mentioned and which will be presented again later.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is all very well, Mr. Chairman, but in presenting an over-view of the amendments, the hon. member for Calgary North, the hon. member for Greenwood and the hon. member for Shefford, did not only give a view of the amendments, they argued them pretty widely. I think the Chair might be fair to both sides.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Of course the Chair will try to be as lenient as possible, but I must caution hon. members not to go into the details of clauses or possible amendments, otherwise we might need to revert to second reading and deal with the whole bill.

Mr. Hogarth: If the hon. member for York South prefers, I will deal with the situation on the Prairies in the 30's, as was done by the hon. member for Calgary North this morning, relating stories about the dust and depression. I prefer to stick to the suggestions made this morning regarding amendments to this bill.

A rather attractive suggestion was made that there should be a citizens' board of review to investigate the imprisonment of various people arrested under this bill. I do not see how an accused is being deprived of the right of habeas corpus. We have fixed 90 days as the longest period of time for which an accused can be imprisoned without having a date fixed for his trial. I do not understand how such a board of review would serve any cogent purpose. After all, it is a general principle of criminal law.

Why should persons who cannot raise bail or persons charged with crimes such as homicide, where bail is rarely granted, have a board of review? Why should we go out on a special limb for these people, although admittedly the Attorney General can deprive them of bail? If that is to be the case, why not have a board of review to deal with every person who is charged with a serious offence? The hon. member for Greenwood suggests that bail should be the responsibility of the judiciary. The protection under section 7(2) with respect to fixing a date for trial will resolve that. My understanding of that section is that once a date for trial has been set, there could not be an adjournment because it would be by statute.

Mr. Woolliams: That is ridiculous.

Mr. Hogarth: I beg your pardon, but the ordinary provisions in the Criminal Code, which are in the regulations under the War Measures Act, have not been included in this bill. If an accused asked for an adjournment after the trial was set, the judge would have to ask the Crown to produce.

The hon. member for Shefford suggested that instead of five years' imprisonment, the penalty should be life. With the greatest of respect, I feel that would be very tragic for a young, hot-headed, political minded person who found himself involved in the FLQ, although he had never participated to any extent in violence. Even though he had attended many meetings and, as some young students do, advocated getting involved, I think it would be rather tragic for that person to be imprisoned for the rest of his natural life.

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Chairman, I think that the hon. member has not understood the amendment, for we do not want to change the five year penalty for subclauses (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), (f). We agree on the way to press those charges and with the penalty, to which we would like however to substitute a penalty of life imprisonment, for the considerations we have made. Therefore, as it is plain the amendment, in subclause (g)—

[English]

Mr. Hogarth: I thank the hon. member for the correction. He wants life imprisonment for political kidnapping, or is that the death penalty?

Mr. Rondeau: You read the amendment.

Mr. Hogarth: I apologize if I misquoted the hon. member. In any event, I do not think that the drastic measures that he has suggested should be necessary under these circumstances.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, usually on Friday afternoons the exercise in which his House engages is not always enlightening or entertaining, but on this gray November day we are dealing with an exceedingly important issue. It is good to see the cabinet represented by some of its most distinguished ornaments. We are also graced with people gazing down from the heights of Olympia. I think it is a credit to Parliament that on this occasion we are able to gather in this way to discuss this particular issue.

I have a great deal of respect for the hon. member for Shefford. He is very sincere. He is from the province of Quebec where this problem is concentrated. I respect his views and judgment. He speaks from the heart. However, his proposals indicate that a great many Canadians, including some in this chamber, have not grasped the nature of the phenomena which has recently appeared in political life, not only in Canada but in the United States and other parts of the world. The solutions proposed by the hon. member for Shefford, and to some extent proposed by the government, might well have had their place in the world of yesterday, but not in the world of today. Increasingly large numbers of young people have become disillusioned with the democratic process and the opportunity to achieve those types of reform for society which are so sadly needed.

I am not going to deal with the problems that face this country which were so eloquently dealt with by the leader of my party; by the right hon. member for Prince Albert, the hon. member for Calgary North and members of the New Democratic Party. They also dealt with the problems which face the province of Quebec, the absolute need to deal with causes as well as with effect. I wonder about the Prime Minister. I hope that he is not too intellectually caught up with this problem, and involved in it, in the sense that he does not see the forest for the trees. Apparently, from the answers he gave during the question period today and yesterday, a great need lies with him to change his views as to what needs to be done to remove the causes which have brought upon us much of the difficulty which has involved this House in days of discussion during the last two or three weeks. I shall not say any more about that aspect, because it has been dealt with before.

We have seen this phenomenon over and over again in the United States and elsewhere. We have said to ourselves often that Canadian society could never have evolved in its bosom this violence, these attempts to change the processes of society and reintroduce by force social reforms which have not been brought about in other ways. When it happened here, the reaction of the Canadian people and, to some extent, of the Canadian government, was illuminating. It was a reaction of fear, of anger, of determination to stamp out these acts of violence and terrorism. I think it was an emotional outburst which took the Canadian people out of their accustomed phlegm and into a view of the situation which does not permit calm and rational judgment. This is one reason I am glad to see the subject debated here.

I give credit to the Minister of Justice and to the leader of the House for acceptance of the proposal that the matter be debated in this Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): On a point of order; it was our proposal.

Mr. Baldwin: That is what I said. I gave you credit.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): For accepting your proposal.

Mr. Baldwin: If the Minister of Justice is going to approach this legislation in the light of his interpretation of what I have said, then God help all those who try to bring amendments before the House.

This phenomenon is something which is completely new, and it involves the continued alienation of young people completely disillusioned with society as we have understood it, completely prepared to opt out of democratic processes which far too often fail to bring about the results which are needed but which are essential if any society is to work out government by consensus. It is in the rejection of this philosophy by increasing numbers of young people that we face such a grave threat today. Fortunately, at the present time most of the disillusioned young people have restricted their confrontations to reasonably peaceful means. This involves violence in words, confrontation in the streets and confrontation at meetings.

It gets hectic, it gets hot, but by far the greatest number have not yet adopted the view that terrorism, savagery and brutality, if exercised on various parts of the social anatomy of the country, will result in the changes they desire. So, when we come to deal with this phenomenon we have to make certain that we do not drive the young people, the disillusioned and the disaffected, those who can justly say they suffer deprivation under our social system, into the arms of those who advocate violence and who practice violence as a means of bringing about quickly the reforms that they demand.

If the history of the world teaches us anything, and this was made very clear by my hon. friend from Calgary North in his address this afternoon, it is that civilization is but a thin crust over the volcano of revolution and anarchy. To work out a proper balance, to contain that volcano, but not, in our effort to contain it, to pierce a hole through the crust and let through the forces of anarchy and violence within, is the task which faces the government. I give them my sympathy. It is not an easy problem; not one in which they are helped by precedents, because most governments in the past have not had to face it.

I sympathize with the government in the difficulties they have faced during the last few weeks, and realize how difficult are the decisions they have been called upon to make. I, personally, have not attempted to make matters more difficult for them by my conduct either here in the House or outside it, but I do suggest that in their approach to this problem there are two main tasks which need to be undertaken. The first is rapidly and firmly to stamp out violence, savagery and brutality as a means of government. But they must be careful not to do so in such a way as would drive more and more young people and others into becoming recruits for those who promote and practice savagery. Just a few weeks ago a group of the Weathermen in the United States, young white militants who are dedicated to savagery, brutality and violence in their way, as are many of the Black Panthers, were involved in a bank robbery in Boston, or were alleged to have been so involved, resulting in the brutal killing of a watchman and the theft of $90,000. Several of the young people concerned were brilliant university students who had recently been engaged in the advocacy of a greater measure of university reform. What is it that caused them to go over the brink? What caused them to change from being people who thought there were peaceful means of settling problems into becoming advocates of the sort of violence we saw in this country recently?

I am inclined to agree with what the Prime Minister and others have said. We have not seen the end of this situation. It might be suppressed now, but there will be outbursts all over the country in due course as more and more people become involved in this means of settling disputes. It is an object lesson for us in this House to ensure that the procedures available to us will permit greater opportunities to ventilate and solve in an honest, objective way, the problems facing society. I was encouraged to see the results of the elections in the United States. I think they were evidence of the sound, common sense of the American people as a whole. Here, faced with two alternatives, the American people rejected the extremism proposed on the right, an extremism which has to some extent been evident in proposals made in this House, and rejected also the views of those who thought there should be a freedom given to the extreme left to determine all problems by the use of violence. I think this was an example of an electorate showing more common sense than is suspected, sometimes, by the government or by members of this House generally.

I wish, now, to make one or two statements of our position in relation to this bill. In view of what the Minister of Justice has said, I will direct them to him. Our position, which has been consistent throughout, is this. On Friday, October 16, we as a group stated that we saw a number of things which were wrong in the way in which the War Measures Act was introduced as well as with the act itself. The day previously I had spoken in the House and said that there was another alternative, and during the course of debate we put forward that alternative. I had an opportunity to meet with the House Leader for the government and I am very happy to say that his views in this regard were the same as mine. He said, representing the views of the government, that there was an alternative so that we could approve the proclamation. It is that alternative that has brought us to the point we have arrived at today, namely, the opportunity to legislate.

When we are dealing with problems of this kind it is much better to expose and to ventilate the issue publicly in this House than to deal with it secretly by Order in Council. I know it has been argued on the government side that it was necessary to have the opportunity to make this great sweep at four or five o'clock in the morning and to pick up the suspects, but I do not think the facts bear this out. When we examine the record of the arrests, the releases, the charges laid and the names of the people who were charged, it is quite obvious that in most cases the people who were picked up and charged were not affected in one way by the proclamation made under the War Measures Act, and were picked up without any difficulty.

It was a well known fact both in Montreal and in this city that the government was toying with these two alternatives: first, invoking the War Measures Act and, second, introducing legislation. It was a very difficult decision to make, and I recognize that. I was not privy to the secrets of the Privy Council, and I am glad I was not. My suspicion is that the government was on the horns of a dilemma. Knowing the calibre of the members of the Privy Council, many members of the cabinet did not want to impose the War Measures Act but felt there were other means of achieving what was required. On the other hand, there were those who felt something should be done. There was a feeling among the people of the country that something had to be done; the people wanted some kind of action, some display of movement. There was also another, overpowering reason, which was that the authorities in Quebec obviously required additional assistance and manpower for the purpose of pursuing their investigations in an attempt to solve the crimes, capture the kidnappers and obtain the release of the two people involved. I accept these as valid reasons for taking some action.

There is no doubt that at that time the receipt of the letter written by the 10 or 11 people in the province of Quebec tipped the scales in favour of imposing the War Measures Act. I know this has all been gone into to some extent, but as I see it the government of Quebec was in difficulty. The surge in public opinion, which might have been led by these 10 or 11 people, might have brought such pressure to bear on the government of Quebec that they would have found it difficult to resist, and might indeed have caused the collapse of that government. I do not subscribe to the absurd suggestion that there was a plot to overthrow the government; I think that is nonsense. But the government of Quebec might have been put in grave difficulty. So I think the first two reasons for taking some action are valid ones. The third reason is not valid.

I suspect that all future governments of Canada will have cause to rue the day when there was what appeared to be an intrusion into the affairs of a provincial government in this particular way. I am not saying that something did not need to be done; I am saying that the other method I suggested is the proper one. If a request had been made by the government for a debate of two or three hours, we would have met that request immediately. We were facing a crisis, one that could only be dealt with if the House met and acting hopefully, in unanimity agreed to invest the government with powers in excess of what it then had to meet the particular situation. Although I cannot speak for my hon. friends of the New Democratic Party, I should like to think that if a reasonable request had been made for some specific powers to meet the current problems, they also would have agreed to have a short debate so that these powers could have been given to the government.

Mr. Brewin: We said that.

Mr. Baldwin: I am glad to hear from my hon. friend that they did say that. That was where the mistake was made, a mistake that many in this country, I am afraid, will live to regret.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee give the hon. member unanimous consent to complete his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I will not take advantage of the good nature of the committee and I shall conclude very shortly. I do not know how the government will answer the people of Canada or what the people of Canada will have to say, but I am convinced that when the history of this period is written and the developments that will spring out of this situation are recorded, the Prime Minister and the government will have a great deal to answer for.

Finally, had this intermediate course to which I have referred been taken and the government had been given these powers, the government would still have been able to act promptly, exercising the strength it required to deal with the problem. It was not a national problem. This has been said over and over again, but let us not deceive ourselves: it was not a national problem. Anybody who reads the War Measures Act would be convinced that the basis on which the act was originally brought into the House and passed lay in issues involving war, invasion, insurrection or apprehended insurrection—conditions going to the heart of the survival of our system of government and society in Canada.

I am reinforced in that view by the European Convention on Human Rights, which is a fascinating and interesting document written by nations of Europe, whom we often affect to despise, gathered together to pass a number of motions in respect of which, I might add, there have been a number of charges. For example, just a short while ago the government of Greece was charged in respect of certain abuses that had been perpetrated on its citizens under the dictatorial government now in power in that country. I refer to article 15 of the convention, which I think indicates the sense in which the War Measures Act was intended to be used. Article 15 commences:

> In time of war or other public emergency threatening the life of the nation any High Contracting Party may take measures derogating from its obligations under this convention—

I say this should have been done in this case, and I am convinced that had it been done it would have been a great deal more beneficial for the country.

• (3:10 p.m.)

We are now prepared to support this bill. We think we can improve it. I hope that the Minister of Justice will listen to the more moderate side of his character—and he has a very reasonable and moderate side—and will accept some of the changes proposed by the hon. member for Calgary North. I do not want to go into detail and against your implied injunction, Mr. Chairman, but when we give these particular and strong powers to any government, whether it is done in this form or in the form of the right to act and govern by Order in Council, we must always retain some means of accounting. What the hon. member for Calgary North suggested is a very reasonable and moderate step by which this can be done.

I therefore hope that the Minister of Justice, when he goes to his retreat over the weekend, will take with him the amendments of the hon. member for Calgary North and those brought forward by my friends from the NDP and will not reject them all out of hand. I have a feeling that as he sits here and faces us today, he has rejected them. I hope I am wrong and that he will correct me when I sit down and say he is not rejecting them out of hand and will, in fact, be considering some of them over the weekend.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

[Translation]

Mr. De Bané: If I am right, Mr. Chairman, we have been asked to give a general impression of the remarks and amendments we want to propose.

As far as subclause 2 is concerned I will probably introduce an amendment to restrict the definition of peace officer because, as you know, according to the Criminal Code, a peace officer can only arrest without a warrant a person who, in his belief, has committed a crime, not an infraction.

According to the Criminal Code a peace officer is not only police, but also the mayor, the warden, the sheriff, the justice of the peace, the deputy warden, the instructor, the gaoler, the civil servant, the pilot... So, as according to the bill we are studying those people may act on mere suspicion, I believe that we should limit the number of persons empowered to enforce the present measure to those who depend on a hierarchical authority, and exclude people who may act at their own discretion, because there is no claim possible against them.

As to clause 3, I think it is in apparent contradiction with the statement of the government that the bill is directed against the FLQ restrictively, or to its successors. The clause goes on to say that it applies also to any association that advocates the use of force or the commission of crimes in Canada. And I think that to hold that this bill would apply only in Quebec and not in other provinces is to misread what are the same or similar goals as those of the FLQ.

The goals of the FLQ indeed are not only to achieve the independence of the province of Quebec through the use of force, but also to use force in order to deal with any social malaise, be it the rehiring of G. Lapalme Inc. employees or any other cause. Then I do not think the government is justified in stating that the bill now before us is aimed exclusively at the FLQ or its successors. It should equally be directed against any other group in Canada which has recourse to similar methods.

Concerning clause 4, I feel that the press release of the Department of Justice, to the effect that the legislation prohibits the communication of statements in favor of subversive movements, is much better than the present wording which says "communicates statements on behalf of. ." All the more since clause 8 says that if a person has communicated statements before October 16, he is presumed at the very most to be a member of the association.

Now, if there are organisations or individuals which did communicate statements "on behalf", all the information media in Canada are concerned.

Then, I think that in clause 4, the following should be added: "without legitimate grounds the onus of which lies upon the said person".

Of course, it can be argued that these words are not absolutely essential but since the bill is, in my view, an exceptional piece of legislation, we must include those words which are required to avert any ambiguity. Indeed, on October 16, we placed our confidence in the province of Quebec to uphold the rights of prisoners to legal counsel. But they procastinated for two weeks. We had to wait for the provincial bar association, the federal government and the judicial body to issue statements in this regard before the government of Quebec recognized that the regulations proclaimed under the War Measures Act did not infringe upon a right enshrined in the Bill of Rights.

I believe we should take good account of this experience and include in the bill before us the words "A person who, without legitimate grounds the onus of which lies upon the said person".

To my mind, clause 5 should be amended so as to maintain the existing privilege in favour of the spouse. You will recall that the Criminal Code says: section 5 deals with complicity after the fact. The Criminal Code makes exception for the spouse who helps her husband to escape. And I do not think we have the right to cancel this provision of the Criminal Code which is centuries old.

In clause 6 there are, I believe, two different concepts. Lines up to 20 prohibit meetings of FLQ cells, and the second part prohibits meetings by other groups for a very definite purpose and not only meetings per se.

Clause 7 as it stands now I believe is unacceptable, and I would also draw the attention of the minister to a legal error in clause 7 (2) of the bill. Under the bill, and particularly under clause 7(3) as well as under the amendment introduced today, it is impossible to issue an order to a judge of the superior court of criminal jurisdiction in the province of Quebec because in our country it is absolutely unthinkable for a judge of the appeal court, Crown side, to set the date of trial—and as I was saying, it is impossible to give orders to a judge of the court of the sessions of the peace other than by mandamus or in resorting to control power.

Section 8 requires clarification and some remarks on section 9, paragraphs (2 and (3) would be in order.

In respect to sections 10 and 11, concerning search, I wish all the rights recognized in the Criminal Code to the owner of the seized belongings were safeguarded. There is even no provision for an official entry to be made of the seized items as a matter of record.

Concerning section 12, I submit that interference of politics in the judiciary seems an unfortunate way of settling the problem. I shall have other solutions to suggest.

Finally, I would suggest to the minister that the logical order of the sections following section 6 should be as follows. After section 6 should come the basic sections 10 and 11 on search, then section 9(1), concerning arrest without warrant, and afterwards, sections 9(2) and (3), concerning appearance before the court. Following that should come section 7, dealing with detention, and section 7(2) regarding directions for expediting trial, and lastly, section 8, concerning the rule of evidence.

These are roughly the remarks I intend to make. Besides, I shall suggest amendments to improve the French wording of the bill.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, the crisis we are now going through and are trying to deal with goes beyond political considerations, and I believe we should strive to find solutions without playing politics with such a serious question.

It is in that spirit, Mr. Chairman, that I would like to make a few remarks, for it is not my intention to keep the House very long.

Mr. Chairman, when the war measures were put forward by the government, this party put all its confidence in the government and we all supported the government's efforts to strike at the root of evil.

My Quebec colleagues and I had warned our party that regardless of the position it would take in this regard, we felt duty bound to vote for the War Measures Act. We did so because we believed without question what the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) had told us. We did not want to question his word and acted accordingly.

Bill C-181 is now before us. I do not wish to discuss the sections of that bill. Thank God, there are enough lawyers to do so and I do not believe I should venture in such a complex field. I shall leave it to the disciples of Themis to make the best legislation possible out of the bill now before the House.

Mr. Chairman, it is understood that this bill is imperfect. Having been conceived by human beings, the contrary would be astonishing. Still we must make every possible effort to make it more explicit so as to meet the needs which concern us at this time.

It is therefore, Mr. Chairman, in the common interest of the Canadian people and especially of the people of the province of Quebec, that the government pay special attention to the suggestions made by the members of the opposition.

I should like to insist on this: the amendments proposed by the members of the Ralliement créditiste, the New Democratic Party or the Conservative Party have but one goal—to make the act as efficient as possible.

On various occasions, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has also held the opposition responsible for applying the war measures. Time and time again he said that we had given complete support to the government and that, because of this, we had to accept our responsibilities.

If it is true, Mr. Chairman, that we have assumed some responsibility by approving the implementation of war measures, it follows that the government should go half way and show a disposition to accept amendments which, I say it again, are as generous and as well intentioned as possible.

In introducing those amendments, we do not seek any political aim or capital. We are seeking only the common welfare of the population. So I would like to make a special appeal to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) so he will take into serious consideration the amendments presented to him.

Knowing what those on the government side may be thinking, it is clear that they do not have—any more than we do for that matter—the monopoly on science. Now, I think that they should give appropriate consideration to the amendment presented by my colleague from Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) as well as to those introduced by other parties.

I could yet say many things in that respect. For instance, I could say that, having heard certain speeches by certain members of the government, including the hon. members for New Westminster (Mr. Hogarth), for Sherbrooke (Mr. Gervais) and for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand), according to whom the danger of revolution was hanging over the province of Quebec, I could say that if it is true that the government knew all the aspects of the situation which existed in the province of Quebec, one can only wonder why they did not act before.

It will be said, as the hon. Minister for Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) is probably going to say, that it was necessary to wait for the province of Quebec to ask the assistance of the federal government. I wonder how long the federal government, aware of the danger and of the various aspects of this situation, would have waited before taking the necessary measures.

It is the duty of any government to see that the security of its citizens is maintained in all occasions. I would ask my hon. friends opposite to stop making such statements because, by doing so, they confirm that we are right when we urge the government to reveal to the population all available and relevant facts so that we can judge their value ourselves.

Mr. Chairman, I would conclude my remarks by asking once more the Minister of Justice to accept the amendments proposed to him since they only have one purpose: facilitating the elimination of the present crisis.

• (3:20 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Chairman, like a number of other members in this House yesterday, I voted for the bill before us with a considerable degree of hesitation. The bill before us is intended to deal with a matter which is unique in the history of our country. Never before have Canadians really had to deal with terroristic politics. For the first time, in a very serious and fundamental way, we face the problem of dealing with the conflicting objectives of freedom and orderliness, that is to say, conflicting at times but conflicting certainly when there is a terroristic group in society.

[Mr. Ricard.]

The FLQ have been active in Canada for at least eight years. They have committed murder. They have committed acts of bombing. They have caused the derailment of trains. They have committed a number of other acts highly objectionable in any civilized, democratic society. Therefore, there is no question in anyone's mind that such a group and, such politics must be dealt with in a very serious and concentrated way. This kind of activity in recent weeks culminated in two kidnappings, one murder and the intimidation of government.

During this time the federal government declared that there was an apprehended insurrection in the country. It was the judgment of at least 16 members of this House that this was not the case. It is our view that there is indeed a serious malaise in the political culture of Canada. There have, indeed, been reprehensible and serious kidnappings, but there was not an apprehended insurrection. Therefore, we voted against a measure which proclaimed that there was such an insurrection. And we found, in terms of the regulations that came with that proclamation, that there were taken away from Canadians basic liberties acquired over hundreds of years of history. We did not believe this was necessary to deal with what was admittedly a very serious situation.

I am not going to go over the whole ground as to whether or not the government was right in what it did. As I say, a number of us believed it was wrong. History will be the judge of that. But I think what we have to face today, and what this bill proposes to face, is the question: What do we do now? It is not what do we do now in terms of welfare legislation, regional development programs or providing linguistic justice, all of which remedies are indeed necessary to deal with the very serious problems of French Canada and Quebec, but: What do we do in terms of the Criminal Code? That is really what is at issue.

What do we say is to be criminal activity? What can be done to deal with the very serious problems associated with Quebec, in terms of criminal law? In the law books of this country we have laws pertaining to sedition, conspiracy, intimidation and kidnapping. If you look at this bill with care, you will find there are no changes at all made there. The government, instead of arguing that some improvement must be made in these areas to deal with terroristic politics, has said, "Really what we need to do is, first of all, ban the FLQ." That is one central, specific part of the bill. Further, the government proposes to extend the powers of arrest, detention and search.

In the view of a number of hon. members, certainly in the view of a number of members of this party, whether or not we support this measure on third reading will be determined by the flexibility of the government and its willingness to accept reasonable amendments. It is our view that we must deal with terroristic politics and, therefore, that we must make some changes in the criminal law. But the frame of reference for us is the broad one of how we deal with criminal politics, on the one hand, and preserve freedom on the other. It is our view that no limitation on Canadian freedom—none whatsoever—is justified beyond that which is necessary to deal with the politics of the FLQ.

Let us begin by asking what are the existing powers of arrest, detention and search. The first point that can be made is that a man in Canada can only be arrested if he has or is about to commit a criminal offence. Secondly, such a man must be taken before a justice of the peace and be charged within 24 hours. Thirdly, police in this country at present can conduct a search only with a warrant, and there must be reasonable and probable grounds for conducting such a search. What does the new legislation propose? There are a number of changes, but in my view the most important and most basic to this question are, first, an extension of the powers of arrest and detention, second, an extension of the powers of search and, third, clause 8 which is the provision of ex post facto law. These are serious changes in the fundamental rights of Canadians acquired over hundreds of years of our history, and they are not to be discussed or dismissed lightly. The question we must answer is: Should we make the changes in these three areas to deal with the FLQ?

As I mentioned earlier, one thing has been decided. In the bill we have in effect declared that the FLQ is an illegal, violent conspiracy. The bill makes its kind of politics illegal. Therefore, the other changes in basic law as they affect our Canadian rights, changes concerning arrest, detention and search, must be intended to do one of two things—on the one hand, to prevent crime by the FLQ or associated bodies or, on the other, to catch those involved in a crime that was committed in the past.

The question then is: Do we need the extension of powers in these areas to deal with this situation? I put it to the Minister of Justice, not as a rhetorical but as a genuine question: If we now assume that there is no state of insurrection, that there is no impending riot in the immediately foreseeable future, but there is a terroristic group with which we must deal in a serious way, could this not be done merely by extending the present powers of search? If we consider what is involved in the present powers of search, in my view all that is required is to extend those powers. At present, as the Minister of Justice well knows, before you can search a Canadian's home there must be a warrant and there must be reasonable and probable grounds for searching it. The bill provides for an extension of these grounds, and in my view perhaps that is all we need at this time, if the grounds could be further changed from reasonable and probable to mere suspicion.

Let us accept the time period for this bill, until the end of April. If it were declared that during this period whole areas of Montreal, some other city, another part of the province or, indeed, any other part of Canada needed to be systematically searched, this could be done under the proposal I make of extending the powers of search and no warrant would be needed. Then when a search was made, instead of arresting people and bringing them in without laying charges and keeping them in jail for long periods of time, no such arrest could be made unless there were evidence of past criminal activity or intended criminal activity. In other words, the existing provision of the Criminal Code would have to be used. If we are really interested in preserving freedom in Canada, particularly in Quebec because that is where this activity is located, this is the kind of provision—the first step, if you like; the first, minimal erosion of our freedoms—that we should be considering. It is up to the government to prove that something else is required.

I assert that there is no insurrection now, and the government has acknowledged that by the title of this bill for the preservation of public order. If it has reasonable grounds for believing that before the end of April a riot is going to take place, a kidnapping or any other kind of criminal activity by the FLQ, a successor body or a body sympathetic to the FLQ, it could move through these extended powers of search. What would be the advantages of taking this much more limited approach, Mr. Chairman? Obviously, the first is that the existing freedoms would remain unchanged, with the exception of the power of search. Secondly, a well equipped, dedicated and hardworking police force, in my view, would be able to deal quickly with FLQ actions or intended actions. Finally, and this is really an elaboration of the first point, such limited kind of change in our law would enable us to maintain a basically free society and yet deal with the kind of malaise that we all wish to exorcise.

I would like the Minister of Justice to depart from the kind of partisan politics in which he indulged the other day and address himself, at some point in the debate, to the very serious question as to whether or not there is a need to extend governmental power beyond that which I am proposing.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I want to make clear at the outset that I support the measure before us, just as I supported the invocation of the regulations under the War Measures Act, for the simple reason that had we not acted this Parliament would have fallen into utter disrepute with right-thinking Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCleave: So, Mr. Chairman, I justify our action in that sense. We have to take critical action to meet a critical situation, one on which the public conscience demanded action. I shall never look back at myself in that respect and wonder why I voted as I did, and as I will no doubt vote in the next few days. Nonetheless, in what I say this afternoon I shall pose the question of whether the government could have taken a better course than the one it has followed. A better course would have been to follow the sensible suggestions that have been made, not only in recent weeks but for some time. Had the government taken that action, I suggest we would not now be engaged in this debate.

May I present a sort of philosophical postscript to all this, Mr. Chairman, before I get into the meat and potatoes of my argument. I look at the people involved, the inner-circle of the government, the people before the courts in Quebec, the people being hunted, the people whose names are in the news at the very heart of today's tragic drama in Canada, and it reminds me of Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables". In that novel, all the great characters came together in the last few chapters, arrayed on one side or other of barricades erected in the streets of Paris. Some were on one side of the barricade when they could have been expected to be on the other. Such is the kaleidoscopic way of change in which lives are moulded in our times.

Much has been made of the way in which this legislation was initiated. I think the answer is clearly to be found in statements made by the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition early in this story, on October 16. The Prime Minister's position would not have led to legislation being considered here today because, as he said then as reported at page 194 of Hansard:

> Following the passage of enough time to give the government the necessary experience to assess the type of statute which may be required in these circumstances, it is my firm intention to discuss with the leaders of the opposition parties the desirability of introducing legislation of a less comprehensive nature.

But there the Prime Minister is referring to what has still to be produced, the long-term measure. I think that is a fair reading of everything the right hon. gentleman had to say on that page. A few minutes later, the Leader of the Official Opposition said, as reported at page 196 of Hansard:

> Nevertheless, I urge that the government instead of seeking the approval of the House for the measure it has already taken, the invoking of the War Measures Act, should heed what is said in the House today and should at the earliest possible date bring in a bill with much more restricted powers, many more safeguards with regard to review, and of a much more limited duration.

Mr. Chairman, that is the legislation we are considering today. When we talk about the conscience of Parliament, this shows that the leadership has indeed come from Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. It seems strange that we should be discussing a situation in which so far approximately nine out of every ten people arrested should not have been. In normal times, those of us familiar with the background of English common law would quote the old saying that it is better that ten guilty men should go free than that one innocent man should be punished. That is the philosophy that guides us in more sober and less dramatic times.

There are those of us on this side of the House particularly, and I imagine there are those on the other side of the House too, who are concerned that there is such a large number of arrests. Under the arbitrary provisions of the War Measures Act, people can suddenly be arrested and deprived of their liberty in the middle of the night. After several days they may be released. This is an abuse, and it is to prevent abuses that we on the opposition are suggesting certain amendments to the Minister of Justice. We shall be fighting for the adoption of these amendments next week when we resume consideration of this bill.

I join in the eloquent pleas made by others to the Minister of Justice. He should pay due regard to what we are trying to do. We are not trying to discombobulate him. We are not trying to embarrass him in any way. We are trying to satisfy the feelings of Canadians and make sure that, as far as possible, criminal elements shall be dealt with in a just way. There are many in this House who fought against the horror that our planet experienced only three decades ago, a horror in which the jackboot rang on cobblestoned streets in the middle of the night and in which people disappeared, some never to reappear. Some went to the gas ovens; others reappeared as impoverished refugees if they were lucky enough to escape.

We ask: Why cannot that happen here if we have arbitrary action on such a scale and when so many errors have been committed? One can only assume that our government, which is supposed to be civilized and to represent our civilization, harboured no effective forethought for dealing with this emergency. All this while these Maoists, Marxists and other extreme leftists in the province of Quebec have been preaching their doctrines. They are economic doctrines, but these people are smart enough to use the political wagon of separatism in furthering their idea. They have been around for some time.

Last night on television the Prime Minister used two words. I will not mention them now; I will merely ask: To whom do those two words the Prime Minister uttered apply? For years the members of the Conservative party have asked for a royal commission to look into the causes of crime in Canada. Our large cities, and Montreal in particular—the city which is bearing the brunt of these awful times—have been faced with the problem of the Mafia. Latterly, Montreal has been faced with the problem of terrorism. The combination of the Mafia and terrorism has been more than the police force of that city could handle without outside help. That outside help has now been provided.

This situation is not new. For seven years we have asked for this royal commission. The present Prime Minister, as well as preceding prime ministers, when asked about this matter just shrugged it off. No action was taken. How would you describe a person who makes that sort of decision? One year ago Mr. Saulnier of the city of Montreal, who knew of the terrible problem that city's police forces were facing, who knew that those men were literally being driven beyond endurance in their fight against terrorism and the war against the Mafia, requested of the government a royal commission to look into certain matters pertaining to his city. That very sensible request on the part of the most important public servant to serve outside the federal and public services of Canada was not acceded to. What was the response to that request? It was a shrug. I ask: How would one characterize a person who makes that sort of response?

Let us consider the statement made in this House on the day before it was decided to send forces into Montreal early on the morning. How would one characterize a person who makes such statements? What sort of adjectives could one apply to that sort of person? What would one call a man who proclaims himself as an apostle of instant action, yet does nothing? Good God, Mr. Chairman, this government has waited for years and years before acting; the crisis piles up and now it asks us to give our approbation and blessing for what it has done. The government will gain approval, because steps must be taken. But we will not trust the government to administer these measures efficiently, because innocent people may be dragged in. After all, that is why we are fighting as best we can, to bring safeguards into the legislation that is before the House.

Sir, I meant to leave to the end of my remarks the adjectives that the Prime Minister of this country used when speaking on television last night. He tried to suggest that the words would apply to what others would do in this situation and that they do not apply to himself. Considering the way in which he dealt with the request for the appointment of a royal commission, and the way he acted in certain matters a couple of years ago, the adjective that should apply to him, that he said should apply to others, is "wishy-washy".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Chairman: Order, please. It being four o'clock, it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the House.

Progress reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being four o'clock, the House will proceed to consideration of private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, Notices of Motions.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNITED NATIONS—MORE EFFECTIVE ROLE IN PREVENTING MILITARY AGGRESSION, ETC.

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should take initiatives for United Nations reform to make that institution a more effective instrument for the prevention of military aggression, for the settlement of international disputes, and to promote co-operation, peace and prosperity in particular, to:

1. provide that the decisions of the Security Council be enforceable;

2. provide that the unused provisions of the charter be activated;

3. provide that the International Court of Justice be empowered to interpret the United Nations charter;

4. provide for universality of membership;

5. provide for the establishment of global authorities related to the United Nations to deal with serious global problems such as the environment, population, development of seabed resources, and economic and social stability;

6. provide for a United Nations stand-by peace force.

He said: Mr. Speaker, on October 24 this year the peoples of the world commemorated the twenty-fifth anniversary of the ratification of the United Nations charter. On that occasion many of us suggested that we should not at that time merely celebrate that anniversary in the sense of commemorating the setting-up of the United Nations but, rather, that we should take steps to reform the United Nations, to correct its failings and to make it a much more effective organization.

During the previous session I had the honour to sponsor a private member's motion in this House asking for the reform of the United Nations charter. That motion was debated in the House on February 9, 1970. Since the debate on that motion several speeches have been made which have given me great encouragement. One of the those was made in New York by U Thant, Secretary General of the United Nations. The second speech was also made by U Thant, here in Ottawa during August when he was addressing the Conference of World Federalists. As a result of various remarks and the speeches of the Secretary General of the United Nations, I have brought forward the motion we are discussing. It sets out six points. These six points are the same as those put forward by the Secretary General of the United Nations.

When I put forward my resolution last year, many people participated in the debate. They said that my proposals were unrealistic and unacceptable. The six points which I am now putting forward are the same as those put forward by the Secretary General, a man who has served the United Nations since its inception, and as Secretary General for many years. He put forward these proposals because he thinks the United Nations needs reform and that these proposals will help bring it into the seventies to do the job it must do.

These six proposals are as follows: First, the decisions of the Security Council must be enforceable; second, the unused provisions of the charter should be activated; third, the International Court of Justice must be empowered to interpret the United Nations charter; fourth, steps should be taken toward universality of membership; fifth, there should be established under the United Nations, global authorities to deal with serious world problems such as environment, population control, development of the seabed resources, and economic and social stability; sixth, the United Nations should have a stand-by peace force.

I refer to some of the remarks made by the Secretary General in a speech in Ottawa. He said as follows:

In a very important sense, the United Nations is in a transitional stage. Effective and sensible world approaches to world problems are urgently required. The United Nations, for the reasons mentioned, has not yet been charged with that full responsibility of adequate authority to discharge it. But the United Nations has to be the active and vital process within which world policies are made or changed, within which agreement and consensus must be reached on major issues among member states, and where agreed decisions must be carried out on behalf of the world community. That process is only embryonic, in comparison with the needs, but we know that it must be fully developed...

I recently said that strengthening the United Nations should be not just a desire but an obsession... I would like to summarize very briefly the immediate steps I see as indispensable.

He then deals with the six points which read as follows:

First and foremost, the decisions of the United Nations, particularly of the Security Council, must be enforceable.

Second, unused provisions of the charter, which can add greatly to international peace and security, should be activated.

He then refers to subsidiary bodies for fact-finding and conciliation, as follows:

Third, the International Court of Justice must be empowered to interpret the United Nations charter. Our goal should be the acceptance by all member states without exception of the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice in all international legal disputes.

Fourth, I have mentioned earlier that I consider the idea of the universality of the United Nations the priority item of this year's agenda for world affairs.

Since U Thant delivered that speech, Canada has established diplomatic relations with China. This matter will soon come before the United Nations for a vote to determine whether the People's Republic of China should be admitted to the seat now held by Taiwan. If we are to properly act upon the request of the Secretary General which would make the United Nations a universal body, Canada should support this admission to the United Nations on a full basis. This is what our government said they would do, but we do not yet know in which way they will support it or whether they will vote in favour of the matter being a serious question.

The fifth proposal the Secretary General made to the delegates in Ottawa is as follows:

Fifth, I have urgently recommended that global authorities related to the United Nations be established to deal with serious global problems.

He then dealt with the threat to our environment and the need for an international agency to deal with world pollution and conservation problems. He said:

It is my sincere hope that the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment, which is to meet in Stockholm in 1972 on the invitation of the government of Sweden, will take the first steps toward the establishment of such an agency.

As hon. members know, the Deputy Secretary General, who will head the world conference on environmental problems, is a Canadian, Mr. Maurice Strong. He is the former head of the Canadian International Development Agency. We wish him luck in his new task. I hope the Canadian government will fully support him and the conference in the work to be done.

The Secretary General, referring to resources of the seabed, said:

—I hope that steps will swiftly be taken to establish the proposed international regime to administer the resources of the seabed, generally recognized as "the common heritage of mankind".

Sixth, the United Nations urgently needs a standby force a recommendation I made to the General Assembly some years ago. Progress in the Committee of 35 may be encouraging, but we have a long way to go before such a force becomes an actuality. In my view, a ready, trained, standby force is a prerequisite for effective maintenance of international peace and security.

These are the six points that U Thant feels are necessary to reform the United Nations in its twenty-fifth anniversary year. Why is change needed? As I attempted to point out last year, the United Nations was formed following World War II. There was great hope that it would be the proper institution to handle problems of international conflict and to deal with the terrible problems of war such as confronted the world from 1939 to 1945. Unfortunately, that has not been the case. Although there have been no world wars since World War II, there have been 48 major and minor wars. There has hardly been an occasion since 1945 when there has not been some type of war going on somewhere in the world. Even though they have not been atomic wars, the people who die as a result of them are dying just as cruelly and with as much terror as in a war on a world scale. The only difference is that in a world war, more people die.

We should take preventive measures before there is another world war. We should not wait until we are involved in another world conflict before thinking seriously about these matters. The present situation is almost one of world anarchy. In the past week we have been discussing the need for systems of order in this country and laws to deal with terror and criminals. We see this need within our national boundaries but we have not reached the point where we have effective institutions to deal with anarchy, terror and war between nations or on a world level.

The United Nations must be elevated to a higher level so that it can properly negotiate settlements with effectiveness when world disputes arise. One of the greatest threats to world peace at the present time is the situation in the Middle East. There have been temporary ceasefires, but unless we deal with the cause of that war it could be the spark that would once again develop into a world conflict. As I say, we should not wait until these things take place but we should act now, while we have time, to strengthen our world institutions, our world court and our United Nations so these things cannot happen.

I do not suggest that the United Nations has been a failure over the last 25 years. I think that if the United Nations had not been in existence, the world would be in a much worse state. The United Nations, even as it stands, is valuable, but it is not yet adequate. However, because I do not want to leave the impression that the United Nations has failed in all areas, I would point out that it has been a very real success especially with respect to the specialized agencies, the World Health Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization and ECOSOC with respect to economic and social questions.

It has also been a very real success in the area of decolonization. Many countries in Asia and Africa have been released from colonial status and have been set up as fully independent states which are today members of the United Nations. Great progress has been made in this field since 1945. There have also been successes in connection with peacekeeping, especially in Kashmir, Cyprus and the Congo and, for ten years, in the Middle East. I would hope that these minor successes in some areas would bring home to us the great successes we could achieve if we improved and reformed the United Nations so that in other areas it could act more effectively and with teeth.

It is for this reason I have brought this motion before the House in the twenty-fifth anniversary year of the organization, in the hope that the House will approve it. This is not a private member's bill; it is merely a resolution which I am putting to the House. It would be a set of goals to which hon. members could subscribe, goals which we in this country should try to reach. I understand that not all of these six items can be put into effect immediately if we approve this resolution. Even if all the nations of the world approve these points, these things could not be done this year. But if we start by accepting and approving these goals, it means the first step has been taken. We have to set goals for ourselves so that we can work out means of achieving them.

I earnestly ask the House and the government to accept these goals. A year ago when I made a suggestion like this, people thought it was too idealistic, but now these things are being said by the Secretary General of the United Nations and by many other people in the world. I hope we can go forward and make the twenty-fifth anniversary year of the United Nations a year when we do not merely raise flags and say a few nice words in favour of the United Nations, but one in which we look at the past, examine the shortcomings of the institution and take steps to correct them.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, the trouble with the hon. member's resolution is that it covers such a wide field that it is difficult in the hour in which we are permitted to discuss world affairs, rather than domestic affairs, to give precise consideration to any one of the six items he mentions. I say this not in any way to be critical but merely as a warning that the remarks I intend to make may not be as incisive as they should be.

James Reston, surely one of the most thoughtful commentators of our age, in an August birthday message to the United Nations which appeared in the New York Times of August 12, said the soldiers had been dominating world events for the past few years but that the diplomats were now stirring again. The diplomats have always been in the awkward position of seeking to anticipate the future, and they are now beginning to think they can at least talk about the world beyond the present wars.

Whenever I become discouraged at the futility of some of the debates which go on in the General Assembly, I console myself by thinking that at least some of the issues are being discussed and that discussion is better than violence. I propose to discuss briefly two or three of the issues in this speech in support of the hon. member's resolution. One of the issues that I think the hon. member is right in asking us to reflect upon concerns the essential need for universality of membership in the United Nations. Usually, when discussions on this subject take place we think, quite understandably I suppose, of the substitution of the government of the People's Republic of China for the Nationalist Government of China. I, with others, believe that this is inevitable and that the sooner it takes place, the better. But there are other parts of the world which remain outside membership.

I do not intend to go into the merits, but if we are frank about this question of universality, we have to consider a formula to provide for the "split" countries, the Koreas, the Viet Nams, north and south, and the two Germanys. I also believe, though I have got into trouble at times for saying so, that there are many people, particular in Africa, particularly in countries like Rhodesia and the Republic of South Africa, Angola and Mozambique who, because of the authoritarian nature of the regimes under which they are forced to exist and the obscenity of apartheid and other measures which frustrate, to use a somewhat eloquent phrase, the flowering of their citizenship, are not in any meaningful sense represented at the United Nations. So when we talk of universality, let us be very clear that there are still a large number of people in the world who have not yet been able to enjoy the membership we seek for them.

The peace force proposal can be discussed briefly. I hope hon. members will agree, modestly. The idea of a peace force is not a new one but its usefulness has been underlined, I am sure, by the report of the subcommittee of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence which reported some months ago. I trust the report was the subject of urgent consideration by the government on this very point. In other words, we have a somewhat up-to-date and, if I may say so, thoughtful, well documented report of a subcommittee of a Standing Committee of the House of Commons which provides all the information and forward thrust that I think we will get at this stage for the usefulness of a peace force.

The last point I want to make, since I am sure other hon. members will want to indicate their support for this resolution, relates to the large item that is covered in paragraph 5 of the resolution before the House. I refer to United Nations authority to deal with serious global problems such as the environment, population, development of seabed resources, and economic and social stability. I think so much is encompassed in this paragraph that it rather diffuses the proper emphasis that must be placed on one or two other items.

Surely the world has had all the warning it needs by now of the serious danger that man is doing to his environment and the very precious balance that it is our obligation to keep. In some parts of the world we know that this balance has been drastically upset. Indeed, in some areas there is doubt whether there is in fact remedial action that can be taken to save the dead seas, not of biblical times but of the present day. Having said that, I welcome the proposal in regard to the Stockholm conference on pollution. My only reservation is that it takes mankind so long to get around to organizing these conferences; and this one will not meet, I think, until 1972.

The second item in paragraph 5 has to do with population. I think here we must be realistic too. While it should never be part of the policy of the government of Canada to impose birth control methods on peoples of other cultures and other countries, nevertheless we should not resist making available, hopefully under UN auspices, both funds and technology to meet the situation so that we will not be faced with another encroachment upon the quality of life, as it were—a world where there are in fact too many people. I do not suppose that I will be around in the year 2000, but I am satisfied that I do not want to be if the world does contain the 7 billion people that present population projections indicate.

When people talk of the great open spaces of the world and say that all we have to do is to fill these spaces with people, they cease to get to the central issue. If the people of the earth are put into these now empty spaces, what type of lives will they live? I think there are techniques that man in his wisdom has evolved to find answers to what could be a very terrible disaster. I hope there will be set up, I do not like the word "commissioner" but certainly somebody in the United Nations responsible for dealing with the problems that man faces because of a rapidly escalating population.

The last issue I want to speak about very briefly is the technology man now possesses to exploit the last unexploited part of the earth, the seabed. Here I hope man does not fall into the trap that he fell into during the great escapades of exploitation in the last few centuries which have culminated, I think, in the quite irresponsible exploitation of the last 100 years. This is an area where man, if he is to exploit, must exploit together. Man has to exploit, remembering that these resources do not belong to any one country but belong, surely, to all men. He has to remember that because this country, for example, has been blessed, through an accident of geography, with a large coastline—I believe the largest coastline in the world—there are other people in landlocked areas and in undeveloped parts of the world who, surely, have rights equal to those which belong to all men—those resources which are on the ocean floor, the seabed and below the seabed.

Therefore, I think it is essential that some regime be set up to deal with the techniques, with all of the "terrible engines", if I may call them that, of exploitation which could be unleashed unless all man's wisdom and generosity is used to harness them for the benefit of all men. Without this regime we shall be in for serious trouble.

I am sure all hon. members are delighted to note that some forward steps have been taken. It is peculiar that when technology demands that man find a solution that is apart from ideology, man is often able to do this. I for one think that the curse of this and other ages has been the ideological dogmas that influence men to take certain positions. When man can separate himself from ideology and deal with what I might call the real problems, he usually succeeds in finding an accommodation.

I cite just one or two examples of this. I am advised that one of the most useful initiatives that has been taken in this regard is the North Pacific convention on halibut. The four or five countries of various political stripes that harvest the seas have something in common: they need to be assured of a constant supply of resources from the sea. This is why such a convention is essential to them. It does not really matter whether a man is a citizen of the U.S.S.R., Japan, Canada or the United States, or whether he is a Liberal, Progressive Conservative, Republican or what have you; the resources of the sea must be conserved. This is the impetus that has made such a convention possible.

I think this sort of action to protect the seabed is essential, and I must say I look forward to debates in the UN to evolve regimes for exploitation purposes—or for harvesting, if that is a better word—for the benefit of everybody on this earth. This matter is urgent because if man exploits without regulation, he will pollute. It is urgent because it is essential to co-ordinate research and to supervise the exploitation. It is urgent because unless we have a regime under international auspices, surely we will have only licensed entrepreneurs who have only national ambitions—and this I think would be tragic. I warned the House that the very general nature and the very wide number of issues covered by the resolution that we are discussing today means that members do not have the opportunity that they might perhaps like to have to hone and sharpen their comments. Therefore, I am making this apology for being somewhat general.

Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson said—I am paraphrasing his words—that the United Nations was in danger of sinking on a point of order. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), in his speech to the UN General Assembly last year, warned the UN about the proliferation of reports and of paper. I think that we, too, might take warning from these words. I hope that a committee of United Nations will deal very seriously with the problems raised by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

I think it is a very happy fact that this year the distinguished President of the United Nations is a very wise and knowledgeable gentleman, Mr. Eric Hambro, who does not put up with some of the niceties of the lateness and proliferation of committees' reports and, if I may say so, of the nonsense encountered in diplomatic forms that unhappily have scarred an otherwise rather good record of the UN.

The last thing I wish to say on this subject is that when some of us think of the 25 years of the UN and are frustrated about its thrust and its effectiveness, we should remember, as the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) reminded us, of the tremendous work of the specialized agencies. If there had been no UN, it is doubtful that the World Health Organization, the Food and Agricultural Organization, UNESCO, the specialized agencies dealing with international development, and so on, could ever have reached their present degree of helpfulness to man.

Therefore, when we get upset about sterile debates—as we often do when we listen, for instance, to the old debate on China coming up again—we should take encouragement from the specialized agencies and their work and remember, as the hon. member said, what might have happened if the UN itself had not been established 25 years ago. Someone reminded us that our world is too small for anything but truth and too dangerous for anything but brotherhood. I suggest that this is the birthday greeting that should be very much part of our thoughts when we think of the 25 years of the United Nations.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I share the difficulty of the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) in that I, too, find the subject so broad as to encompass the whole future history of mankind. It is a motion that rather lends itself to generalities. Nevertheless, I too want to say that the motion before us is both forward-looking and, in my view, realistic and it has our enthusiastic support.

I think it was the late President Kennedy who said that in the nuclear world, peace is the rational end of rational man. It sometimes seems to me that it should be our first preoccupation, although it is often our last. In the type of age in which we live, survival depends upon an orderly world, an orderly world in turn depends upon some system of world law or order and this depends upon the evolution of a world community. It is trite to say that technology has made the world into a neighbourhood, but it is a neighbourhood in which there are immense areas of poverty and immense gaps in race, where there is instability and threat of instability.

We are threatened, not only with the possibility of a nuclear war but, as the hon. member who preceded me said, by the threat of environmental pollution and population explosion. These are matters that can only be dealt with effectively on an international scale; therefore, the primary object of our policy in the international field—perhaps our total policy—should be the strengthening of the UN and its member organizations. This is at least the first and the only effort that is now available to us to create the world community of which I have spoken.

There are many people responsible for diplomacy in the day-to-day conduct of foreign affairs who are, naturally, preoccupied with these day-to-day problems and sometimes have a feeling of cynicism and despair toward the United Nations. I do not blame them. There is sometimes in the UN debates a sense of futility, as has already been mentioned. I suggest that in the longer term point of view there is no reason for this sense of hopelessness.

There has been a forward marching of mankind toward a more effectively organized society, and there has been evidence that within this universe the spirit of creative evolution does produce the changes that are necessary. What is the Canadian contribution to this evolution? I would mention, as the hon. member for Fundy-Royal has done, the Canadian contribution to peacekeeping and to the available permanent peacekeeping forces. Canada is in a unique position to contribute in this way. We have the expertise, we are not a great power, we have the experience and we also have a degree of security from immediate aggression because of our position on the North American continent which frees us for a major effort in peacekeeping. I hope this fact will never be forgotten or disregarded because of the difficulties inevitably inherent in the development of new international institutions.

The task of the UN has only begun after 25 years. I express my gratitude to the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) who produced this motion and set these goals before us. It is easy for us to become immersed in the regional and local problems that now face us. Part of our task, however, is to look at the picture as a whole. I therefore thank the hon. member for putting these goals before us. We must not forget them.

I join the hon. member for Fundy-Royal in stressing the importance of the universality of the UN, to which reference was made by the Secretary General of the UN when he brought forward the propositions embodied in this motion and said that these things should be done now. Canada, having recognized the Peoples' Republic of China, should now urge not only the admission of China to the UN but the admission of other nations which through wars and difficulties in the past have been excluded from this world body. I hope Canada will take a clear initiative in that field.

I noticed that in the speech made by the Secretary General of the UN, U Thant, he said that to strengthen the United Nations should not be just a desire, but an obsession. I hope that many Canadians will take his words seriously and that the strength of the UN will be the centre of their policy in international affairs, one of their main purposes. That is one reason I was disappointed in the policy statement of the government respecting international affairs, namely, that it seemed to me to overlook the centrality of the development of the world community through a strengthened UN.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution has so far been supported by spokesmen for three parties—I cannot speak for the other party in the House—who have expressed their approval of the resolution which I believe embodies suggestions put forward recently by the Secretary General of the United Nations. I wonder why, instead of the resolution being talked out—which would seem to be the usual procedure during this hour—we could not pass it. I think this would be a healthy and useful exercise and one that would show the direction in which all members of this House, regardless of party, wish our Parliament to move.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the motion before the House this afternoon, proposed by the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) is most fitting because it deals with the United Nations and initiatives which the government should take in reforming that body. This motion is being debated a few days after the UN completed a quarter-century of existence. With reference to the twenty-fifth anniversary of the United Nations, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said:

> Over the past 25 years disillusionment and failure has not been a stranger to the UN but there has been as well substantial progress in efforts to achieve peace, justice and progress—the theme chosen by the United Nations for its anniversary year.

He also paid tribute to Canada's efforts in these words:

> I am proud of the efforts that Canada and Canadians have made in support of the United Nations in the past. We have made a substantial contribution to its peace-keeping efforts, the gains that it has made in economic and social progress, its achievements in the field of human rights.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of the UN, which was celebrated on October 24, was more of a time of stock-taking than a time for celebration. The motion of the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce suggests many areas of responsibility which could well be reformed. I believe that many of these reforms are necessary and desirable. However, when we consider the problems of governing within a single nation, we realize the difficulties of bringing together a world assembly like the UN. The wonder is that it functions at all when one considers the immense complexity of national positions represented there and the diverse objectives of its members. In many ways it has been a success. Consider its membership. Now, 126 countries are members, whereas in 1945 there were only 51 countries. This is a move toward one of the objectives of the hon. member's motion, that is, universality of membership.

In its role as peacekeeper, the UN has provided a diplomatic meeting ground for conflicting nations where their disputes can be aired under the bright lights of world public opinion. This is probably the greatest value of the UN in world peacekeeping. Because of the development of instant world communication and international interdependence, every country now is concerned with its international image. The UN provides, also, a forum for other countries to use their prestige and influence on countries in conflict with one another to "cool" the situation. Usually this involves the two super powers, the U.S.A. and the U.S.S.R., using their influence on the conflicting nations. However, sometimes it works in reverse when the superpowers are in conflict. Then their positions in a dispute are held up to the scrutiny of world public opinion.

It is important to note how much emphasis the two superpowers place upon gaining world support for their actions. If this were the only value of the UN, to provide a world forum to air conflicts between nations, it would be well worth while. Consider some of the conflicts which have been handled in its 25 years' history. Nearly every one of these confrontations would have had far worse results without the influence of the United Nations.

First, the Berlin blockade was settled at an earlier stage than would have otherwise been possible. Second, the six-day war, in 1967, in the Middle East was stopped much sooner by a public airing at the UN. Third, it has hastened the transition to independence of virtually the whole of Africa south of the Sahara, and much of Asia as well. In other countries the break-up of colonial empires has resulted in far more bloodshed than in these. Only in the Congo did the transition to independence threaten to trigger great power conflict. But if there have been many successes, there has also been some decline in the authority and influence of the UN. President Nixon appointed a commission last July to propose recommendations on the course of future United States policy toward the world body. The report said that the UN is becoming increasingly incapable of dealing with issues facing the world.

The report went on to say that the failure of member nations to make the world body the paramount means for maintaining international peace and security, and its misuses into becoming an ineffective debating society and a propaganda platform, has caused the United Nations to fall short of the world's hopes. The governments of too many nations have either given lip service to the principles of the UN charter or have interpreted them for petty advantages and narrow self-interest.

The report indicated four major areas in which imaginative initiatives could revitalize the world body and make US participation more effective. First, strengthening of the UN peacekeeping machinery and improving conciliation procedures, which is particularly important in light of the Middle East situation. Second, reforming UN institutions to reduce inefficient procedures of the General Assembly, eliminate red tape, apply the rule of relevance to debate and improve the personnel selection for the secretariat. Third, developing international policies, regulations and machinery to make the United Nations capable of dealing with the worldwide effects of environmental changes brought about by accelerated scientific and technological developments. Fourth, strengthening international law and co-operation to deal with drug abuse and the hijacking of commercial airplanes, which the report described as the two current, critical problems of modern society.

Needless to say, agreement on reform of the machinery for settling international disputes will be slow and difficult, but should be pursued just the same. The right of veto by one of the permanent members of the Security Council has immobilized this body. I think this should be changed so that a single member cannot frustrate the will of the minority of representatives on the Security Council. The overriding influence of the U.S.A. and U.S.S.R. creates a balancing-act situation in many disputes, with the free world countries lining up against the Communist world countries.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has recommended universality of membership in the United Nations. Doubtless, this would include Communist China which has 700 million people. There can be little doubt that China will eventually be seated in the United Nations. Canada has extended diplomatic recognition this year, the second country to do so in the western hemisphere. We should also support her membership in the world body. Then this government, which represents such a large percentage of the world's population, will be subject to the same responsibility as other members of the United Nations. There can be little doubt that this will further complicate the negotiation of international disputes at the United Nations. However, the Chinese influence will be direct, with the other superpowers, and will not be felt through intermediaries and through other voices outside the United Nations.

Another area of increasing concern is the method of financing the United Nations. The Secretary General, U Thant, said recently:

> The UN's financial situation is worse than ever before and steadily deteriorating. Certain governments continue to withhold contributions . . . The amounts owed by slow payers continue to rise. At certain times this year the United Nations did not have enough funds to meet salary payments earned by the UN staff.

It is interesting to note in passing that the world's military budget last year came to $185 billion, foreign aid throughout the world came to $8 billion, while the budget for the UN and its agencies came to less than $200 million.

I have mentioned some of the problem areas of the UN, but there are many activities which have been notable successes, and new areas of responsibility in which I think this organization can give leadership. The hon. member's motion has outlined these. The social and economic programs of the UN have been the most successful in the past. Millions of people in underdeveloped countries have benefited from these programs. Perhaps if these programs are expanded on and developed, and the disparity between the rich and the poor nations of the world decreased, there will be fewer international disputes to be settled in the Security Council.

I am optimistic that the UN can be a positive force in influencing international control over pollution and the preservation of the environment. In 1972 a conference is to be held in Sweden to deal with this very problem. Other problems of the future, like airplane hijacking, control of development of the seabed and world population control are especially appropriate for the UN to deal with because their effects cut across national boundaries. The history of this organization leads me to believe that the UN can do a great deal in coping with these problems.

My feelings about the future of the UN, Mr. Speaker, are similar to those in a statement made by the former Prime Minister and Member of Parliament for Algoma East, Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson, who recently said:

> The United Nations has now survived 25 years of international tension and cold war. With all its faults, but also with its achievements, it remains the indispensible international institution.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, this is so vast a subject and we have so little time, but I of course agree that we must look toward a more effective instrument when we look upon the United Nations. The motion as set out might be realistically described as something of an overexpectation, and yet we do tend to grasp beyond our reach; and that is the inner part of wisdom down through the ages.

Speaking on the question of universality, the countries which are out are those which are divided, and their problems are not those that seem to be susceptible to United Nations resolution. Would we gain much if it should eventuate that the People's Republic of China should become a member of the United Nations, and at the same time the Nationalist Chinese be sent out into limbo? This would not be a contribution toward universality, and I hope something is being done by the Canadian government—which has been so active in working toward diplomatic recognition of Red China, something with which I do not disagree—to find a way whereby the Taiwan regime may find its place in the diplomatic community, and certainly in the United Nations. This is my comment on the question of universality.

With reference to peace forces, it is terribly important as the years go by, for instance in Cyprus, that we move away from the military or paramilitary aspect of the question and turn more to the realm of mediation and conciliation. I wonder, too, with respect to some of the organizations already activated—for example, the UNWRA meetings year after year after year, voting sums of money to the Palestine refugees but year after year after year the problem becoming more acute and painful—whether new approaches should be taken. As well as thinking of activating new areas, we must energize ourselves more in those areas which are already technically active.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, all hon. members naturally have the right to express opinions on this important notice of motion put forward but the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand).

The hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) took 12 to 14 minutes to express his views. However, at the end of his speech, he said that all other members should remain silent and approve the member's resolution.

As for any initiative to be taken regarding the United Nations, it is important to remember how fragile the organization is.

I do not share the pessimism of such as believe the United Nations headquarters to be merely a place where speeches are made. The United Nations have a role, if only that of giving politicians of the world an opportunity to meet on neutral ground. When undertaking initiatives, one should always make sure they have a chance of succeeding. If they are not welcome, they will not achieve universality, as the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) mentioned. In fact, unwelcome initiatives could result in withdrawal of some member of the organization, which would almost immediately lead to an uninterrupted chain of withdrawals. This would undermine the very basis of the United Nations principle of universality.

For initiatives to be taken, they must be welcomed. This reminds me of a latin dictum: si vis mittere, mitte grantum, which could be translated into English as follows: If you dispatch messengers, be sure they are acceptable.

[English]

If you ever send ambassadors, make sure they will be acceptable; that they will be welcome.

[Translation]

I suggest initiatives of that kind—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baldwin: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, no cabinet minister being in the House I have to address my question to the two parliamentary secretaries who together might make up one cabinet minister. It was originally contemplated that we might be progressing in the expectation that the government would have facilitated the passage of the bill we were debating earlier today.

This not having happened, there is now some doubt in our minds about what we will be doing on Monday. As a result of discussion which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and I had with the Minister of Justice, we in this party are assuming, unless there is notice to the contrary, that we will continue the debate on the bill which was before us prior to private members' hour. I thought I should make that as a public statement on behalf of our party.

There is no minister present. I understand the cabinet is sitting. One of the parliamentary secretaries might like to make a statement on the development which took place earlier. Barring that, I limit my comments to saying that we expect to be debating Bill C-181 next Monday.

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member's assumption is correct and that is what is intended.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is our understanding, too.

At five o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, November 9, 1970

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

WATER RESOURCES

ASSISTANCE FOR CONSERVATION PROJECTS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I ask the unanimous consent of the House to propose a motion in the following case of urgent and pressing necessity. I refer to the situation that has developed in western Ontario, particularly along the Grand River, since the repeal of the Canada Water Conservation Assistance Act which provided federal and provincial assistance to municipalities wishing to carry out conservation projects so necessary for pollution control, projects which would assist municipalities faced with mounting unemployment and welfare costs.

Therefore, with consent, I intend to move that the Canada Water Act, 1970 be amended by the addition of a formula for assistance to municipalities similar to that incorporated in the Canada Water Conservation Assistance Act and that the House refer this matter to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works for consideration and report.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo. The motion may be put to the House only if there is unanimous agreement.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Under Standing Order 43 there must be unanimity. Is there unanimity?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the hon. member that the motion cannot be put at this time.

MERCHANT SEAMEN COMPENSATION ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING PROTECTION, COMPENSATION, PAYMENTS TO WIDOWS AND DEPENDENT CHILDREN

On the order: Introduction of Bills:

November 5, 1970—The Minister of Transport—Bill intituled: "An Act to amend the Merchant Seamen Compensation Act and to amend an Act to amend the Merchant Seamen Compensation Act".

Questions

Mr. MacEachen: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, this bill ought to stand in the name of the Minister of Labour rather than the Minister of Transport. I ask that that correction be made.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-188, to amend the Merchant Seamen Compensation Act and to amend an Act to amend the Merchant Seamen Compensation Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

| Boeing 2707 SST | | | 6 | Approx. Spring 1980 |

[Mr. MacEachen.]

*STE. SCHOLASTIQUE AIRPORT—PROPOSED ANNUAL EXPENDITURE

Question No. 16—Mr. Kaplan:

Has the government estimated its proposed expenditure on the Ste-Scholastique airport on an annual basis and, if so, what is the proposed expenditure for each year from and including 1970 for which such projection has been made?

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the latest forecast of net expenditures, completed in the spring of this year for inclusion in the five-year plan for Ste-Scholastique, is as follows: 1970, $54,681,000; 1971, $89,912,000; 1972, $97,022,000; 1973, $79,815,000; 1974, $10,813,000; 1975, $12,406,000.

COST OF LIFT PROGRAM

Question No. 31—Mr. Mather:

What, in dollars, to date has been the cost of the Lift program?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): As at October 15, 1970, $27,878,298.51.

RICHARD MORANDINI

Question No. 34—Mr. Paproski:

1. Is Richard Morandini a Canadian citizen?

2. Is the government investigating the disappearance in Italy of the said Richard Morandini of Toronto?

3. Was he seized or compelled by the Italian military authorities to undergo military callup and, if so, has the Canadian Government launched a protest in strong terms to the Italian Government protesting this treatment of a citizen of a NATO ally?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of the Secretary of State and the Department of the Secretary of State for External Affairs as follows: 1. There is no record of one Richard Morandini having applied for citizenship or having applied for a certificate to show that he is a Canadian.

2. No.

3. The check which has been made of Citizenship, Passport and Immigration records has disclosed no record of anyone named Richard Morandini and the Canadian Embassy in Rome, which has received no approach either directly from him or on his behalf, has no knowledge of him.

INDIAN CONSULTATION AND NEGOTIATION SECTION PERSONNEL

Question No. 85—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

Who are the staff members of the Indian Consultation and Negotiation Section of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and, in each case, what is their respective annual salary as of October 1, 1970?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): The list below indicates the names and salary range of those officers who are engaged full time, in the Negotiation and Consultation Group: J. W. Churchman, $22,000-$27,000; C. I. Fairholm, $20,000-$25,000; L. L. Brown, $19,100-$21,700; G. E. Bell, $13,403-$15,229.

In addition, the following employees of the Indian-Eskimo Bureau provide assistance to the Negotiation and Consultation Group, as well as to other Branches and Divisions of the Department: Mrs. M. Blanchard, $15,565; W. A. Gryba, $15,229; C. F. Kerr, $15,229; H. G. Sprott, $14,304; A. T. Fuller, $13,731; W J. Fox, $14,304; L. G. Smith, $13,403; J. G. Couture, $11,638.

An additional 20 persons are on support staff.

HOME MAIL DELIVERY SERVICE

Question No. 93—Mr. Mather:

1. Up to October 1, 1970, which Canadian communities presently have the population to qualify for home mail delivery, but are not receiving such a federal service?

2. What are the reasons for this, and when is it expected that the above communities will be given home mail delivery?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister without Portfolio): For the Post Office 1. Amherstburg, Ont.; Arnprior, Ont.; Bridgewater, N.S.; Castlegar, B.C.; Chatham, N.B.; Coaticook, P.Q.; Courtenay, B.C.; Delhi, Ont.; Fergus, Ont.; Gander, Nfld.; Hanover, Ont.; Hespeler, Ont.; Lac Mégantic, P.Q.; Mont Laurier, P.Q.; Perth, Ont.; Sherwood Park, Alta.; Sidney, B.C.; Terrebonne, P.Q.; Whitehorse, Y.T.; Windsor, P.Q.

2. The establishment of letter carrier service at the above centres would increase expenditures by approximately $1,050,000. per annum on a continuing basis. Because of this, the introduction of letter carrier delivery service has been deferred as a result of the Government's economy programme which became effective on the 1st March 1968. The inauguration of letter carrier services in the aforementioned communities is dependent on the relaxation of the existing economy measures.

PURCHASE OF CF-5 AIRCRAFT

Question No. 104—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. When was the decision made by the Department of National Defence to purchase the CF-5?

2. Was this decision unanimous among the Chiefs of Staff?

3. Who, if any, were the dissenters?

4. Was the decision based on the actual requirements and needs of the forces at that time and in the future?

5. Was a thorough study made, prior to the commitment, of such a requirement by the forces and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): 1. The decision to purchase the CF-5 aircraft was announced by the then Minister of National Defence and the then Associate Minister of National Defence on July 15, 1965.

2 and 3. See Hansard of February 28, 1966, page 1845.

4. Yes.

5. Yes.

HALIFAX INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—INSTALLATION OF AIR CONDITIONING SYSTEM

Question No. 131—Mr. Forrestall:

Will the government proceed this year with plans to install an "Air Conditioning" system to (a) alleviate the, at times, extreme heat conditions at the Halifax International Airport (b) ensure humane conditions for both employees and users?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Ministry has no plans to install additional air conditioning equipment at Halifax. The policy of the Ministry has been to install air conditioning where it can be economically justified and there is a continuous comfort need. This is generally in areas where exterior humidity index equals or exceeds 75° for 3 per cent of the time during the summer season, where there is high people occupancy or operational equipment demands mechanical cooling. These conditions do not exist at Halifax to justify any large installation.

EDMONTON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Question No. 144—Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West):

1. Is it proposed to expand the facilities of the Edmonton International Airport to prepare it for jumbo jets and supersonic aircraft and, if so, what is the nature of these proposals?

2. What is the estimated cost of such modifications and how are these divided?

3. When is it proposed to commence such modifications and what is the estimated time of completion?

4. Is any intermediate purpose, such as training air and ground crews, to be made of such facilities before the introduction of jumbo jets and supersonic aircraft in Canada's domestic air service, by whom and under what conditions?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Yes. It is proposed to expand the Air Terminal Building by the addition of a finger with the capability to accommodate B747 and L1011 (Jumbo) type aircraft.

2. Estimated cost is $1,266,000. It is planned to make expenditures of $400,000 in 1972/73; $400,000 in 1973/74 and $466,000 in 1974/75.

3. It is planned to start construction early summer of 1972 with a projected completion date of mid 1975.

4. Air Canada has tentatively indicated to the Ministry their intention to use Edmonton International Airport for flight crew training on the Boeing 747 aircraft during the period previous to placing this aircraft in commercial service early in 1971.

Due to the uncertainty of the supersonic aircraft entering commercial service, the Ministry has not any active programs specifically tailored to its individual needs at the present time for Edmonton International Airport.

INFORMATION CANADA CONFERENCE

Question No. 150—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. Did the Director of Information-Canada call a conference of top government information officers for October 4-7?

2. Was this conference called to coincide with the Opening of Parliament?

Questions

3. (a) Where was the conference held (b) who authorized it (c) was it held in Ottawa and, if not, for what reason?

4. What was the total cost of the conference?

5. How many people were involved?

6. What was the purpose of the conference?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister without Portfolio): 1. Yes.

2. No.

3. (a) The Conference was held at the Gray Rocks Inn, Saint-Jovite, Quebec; (b) The Director General of Information Canada; (c) No. As is the practice of other government departments and much of industry, the conference was held outside the city in order that delegates could work efficiently, day and evening, without official or personal interruption.

4. The total cost of the conference may be split into two parts: (1) Common conference costs paid by Information Canada such as conference room rental, sound systems, coffee, copying services, etc., $740.75; (2) Room and board charged to each individual at $23.50 per night.

5. Fifty-two.

6. The aim of the conference was to bring together information heads of all departments and agencies to outline existing and proposed programs of Information Canada, and to obtain their views and proposals on these programs. Common problems, most of which were outlined in the report of the Task Force on Government Information, were discussed with a view to resolving them through coordinated effort.

STEPHENVILLE, NEWFOUNDLAND—NEW FEDERAL BUILDING

Question No. 155—Mr. Marshall:

1. What progress is being made in providing a new federal building at Stephenville, Newfoundland?

2. Is a site acquired and, if so, where is it?

3. What is the expected date for construction of such building?

4. What departments will be housed in the federal building?

5. Will a new post office be located in it?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): 1. Planning is under way.

2. No.

3. It is anticipated that construction may start during 1971-72, if funds are voted by Parliament.

4. Departments of Manpower and Immigration, National Revenue (Customs and Excise) and the Post Office Department.

5. See answer to Part 4.

INFORMATION CANADA CONFERENCE

Question No. 174—Mr. Mather:

1. Which persons were invited to attend the conference sponsored by Information Canada at Gray Rocks Inn, St. Jovite, Quebec, October 4 to 7?

2. Which persons attended this conference?

3. What was the purpose of this out-of-town conference?

[Mr. Dinsdale.]

4. Was this conference open to the press and, if not, for what reason?

5. What is the estimated cost of this conference by (a) Information Canada (b) departments and agencies?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister without Portfolio): 1. All Directors of Information of federal government departments and agencies.

2. All those invited with six exceptions: Canadian Transport Commission; National Capital Commission; National Health and Welfare; National Revenue (Customs and Excise); Defence Research Board; National Arts Centre.

3. The aim of the conference was to bring together information heads of all departments and agencies to outline existing and proposed programs of Information Canada, and to obtain their views and proposals on these programs. Common problems, most of which were outlined in the report of the Task Force on Government Information, were discussed with a view to resolving them through coordinated effort.

4. No. It is not the practice for the press to attend departmental and interdepartmental meetings in the Public Service.

5. The total cost of the conference may be split into two parts: (1) Common conference costs paid by Information Canada such as conference room rental, sound systems, coffee, copying services, etc., $740.75. (2) Room and board charged to each individual at $23.50 per night.

USE OF DIRECT DIALING FOR POLICY STATEMENTS

Question No. 181—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. How many radio stations have made use of the offer of direct dialing for policy statements made by the Minister of Communications in speeches or press conferences as offered to news editors in a letter from Frank Howard, Director, Information Service, Department of Communications?

2. For each month since October 1970, how many recorded statements have been telephoned to the radio stations of Canada?

3. Has this service been extended to television stations?

4. Have other Ministers made use of this service and, if so, which Ministers?

5. What is the estimated cost of this service?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Minister of Communications): 1. Since the recorded statement is played back automatically by a device called a code-a-phone and since there is no monitoring of radio stations in connection with this service it is impossible to say how many radio stations have made use of this device; however a survey conducted in December, 1969 showed that some five out of 42 radio stations had used the service.

2. There have been five recorded statements in French and English since October 1969. Three have been prepared in November 1969, one in January 1970 and one in June 1970.

3. This service has no video equivalent in our department.

4. No.

5. The estimated cost of this service is $40 per month.

LOANS UNDER PIDA PROGRAM

Question No. 193—Mr. Saltsman:

1. What firms have applied for loans under the Pharmaceutical Industry Development Assistance Program (PIDA) administered by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, up to September 30, 1970?

2. What firms have received loans under PIDA, and what is the amount of these loans?

3. What firms have been refused loans under PIDA, and what reasons were given for these refusals?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1, 2 and 3. The names of specific firms and the amount of assistance applied for cannot be released in order that the commercial confidentiality assured each applicant is preserved. The following information can be made available: As of September 30, 1970, two loans had been approved for a total of $296,000 and 22 applications or preliminary inquiries had been received of which five have been declared ineligible under the regulations.

The reasons for ineligibility were as follows: One applicant did not manufacture or plan to manufacture prescription drugs in dosage form. One applicant obtained the required financing from another federal government agency. One applicant could obtain all needed funds from its parent organization and two applicants proposed plans beyond their financial capabilities.

PARTICIPATION OF PROVINCES UNDER SALTFISH ACT

Question No. 222—Mr. Comeau:

Do all the provinces affected by the Salt Water Fish Marketing Board participate in the Salt Water Fish Marketing Board and, if not, which ones do not and what are the reasons given by the provinces for not joining?

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): No. Draft agreements with the provinces of Nova Scotia and Quebec are under consideration by the governments of those provinces. Consideration of an agreement has been deferred for the present by the governments of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island on the ground that production of cured fish within their jurisdictions is relatively insignificant.

BUREAU OF CONSUMER AFFAIRS

Question No. 225—Mr. McGrath:

1. How many consumers written inquiries are received daily by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs?

2. Where and how many information officers does the Department have to handle phone inquiries?

3. Is this staff multi-lingual?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. The Bureau of Consumer Affairs currently receives 135 written complaints and inquiries daily through its Box 99 service and its regional offices.

2. The Bureau has ten officers in Ottawa whose principal duties concern the handling of complaints and inquiries, including telephone inquiries. An additional five officers are attached to the Bureau's regional offices in Halifax, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg and Vancouver to handle telephone and other inquiries.

3. Six of these officers are bilingual.

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES AND FORESTRY—MAN-HOURS SAVED BY UTILIZATION OF COMPUTERS

Question No. 258—Mr. Robinson:

How many man-hours have been saved as a result of the utilization of computers by the Department of Fisheries and Forestry during each year since computers have been used?

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): No direct estimate is possible of man-hours saved as a result of use of computers, because a large proportion of the worthwhile analysis of data done by computers in the Department of Fisheries and Forestry could not have been undertaken by manual or desk calculator methods if the computer had not been available.

*SASKATCHEWAN—SECOND NATIONAL PARK

Question No. 263—Mr. Southam:

1. Has the government reached an agreement with the Province of Saskatchewan for a second national park in that Province and (a) if not, what are the reasons (b) if so, when will the development of the park commence?

2. Where will the park be located?

Mr. Judd Buchanan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the answer is as follows: 1. No formal agreement has been signed yet. (a) It is believed that all major difficulties have been resolved, which means that the way should now be clear to reach formal agreement. (b) Development of the park might commence 1½ to 2 years following signing of an agreement provided that lands have been transferred to the Canadian Government by then and provided the necessary funds are available.

2. The proposed park would be located in the Val Marie-Killdeer area of southwest Saskatchewan.

LIFT PROGRAM

Question No. 264—Mr. Southam:

1. To date, what sum has been paid out to western farmers under the Lift Program?

2. How many farmers have received payments to date?

3. What have been the administration costs to date under the PFAA office in Regina and branch offices over the Prairie Provinces?

4. What was the cost of the aerial survey as a separate item?

5. Who were the aerial survey firms engaged and how many planes were used in each case?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): 1. $27,653.006.

2. 94,525.

3. $1,055,249.86.

4. $270,000.

5. Spartan Air Services, three planes; Lockwood Survey Corporation—one plane; Northwest Surveys, two planes; Range Survey Co., 1 plane.

USE OF COMPUTERS BY TREASURY BOARD

Question No. 267—Mr. Robinson:

As a result of the use of computers by the Treasury Board how many employees have been (a) laid off (b) hired?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): (a) None; (b) eight.

TREASURY BOARD—MAN-HOURS SAVED BY UTILIZATION OF COMPUTERS

Question No. 268—Mr. Robinson:

How many man-hours have been saved as a result of the utilization of computers by the Treasury Board during each year since computers have been used?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): The Treasury Board Department does not employ computers on the kinds of tasks in which the saving of man-hours would be involved.

NUMBER OF "SEPARATISTS" EMPLOYED IN FEDERAL PUBLIC SERVICE

Question No. 343—Mr. Robinson:

How many "separatists" are there employed in the federal public service?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): The information which is required to answer this question is not available to the government.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

PAYMENTS UNDER CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN

Question No. 38—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How much money was paid to each province under the provisions of the Canada Assistance Plan in each of the past three years for the period from January 1 to September 31?

2. How many people in each province were receiving assistance under the provisions of the Canada Assistance Plan in March of 1968, 1969 and 1970?

Return tabled.

ADULT TRAINING PROGRAM BUDGET

Question No. 158—Mr. Hales:

1. What amount was budgeted for the Adult Training Program in Ontario by the federal government for each year since the start of the Program?

[Mr. Olson.]

2. What courses were covered in these budgets?

3. Have any courses been discontinued and, if so, for what reasons?

4. What amount is left or overspent of the budget for each of the courses in this present year and, if budgets have been spent, what plans does the department have in mind?

Return tabled.

NORTHERN COMMUNICATIONS CONFERENCE, YELLOWKNIFE, NWT, SEPTEMBER, 1970

Question No. 160—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. What department or departments sponsored the northern communications conference held at Yellowknife NWT in September, 1970?

2. What other groups or organizations joined in sponsoring and/or arranging the conference?

3. What was the purpose of the conference?

4. What are the names of the people invited?

5. On what basis were the invitations extended?

6. How many of those participating are residents of the Northwest Territories or Yukon Territory?

Return tabled.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

WAGE DEMANDS—SUGGESTED MEETING OF PRIME MINISTER AND LABOUR LEADERS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. As the heads of the principal business organizations have stated recently that their members will not continue price restraints past January 1 unless organized labour agrees to limit wage demands, and as the leaders of organized labour have recently restated their refusal to do so, does the Prime Minister intend to meet with the labour leaders to discuss with them the need for their co-operation if price restraints are to be continued next year?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do not think I would completely agree with the hon. member's premise. I do not believe business leaders have turned down in such a categorical way as he implies the suggestion that some kind of moderation should be continued. As to the question itself, I can say there have been meetings at various levels between officials of the federal government and labour leaders, and there will be more.

Mr. Hees: As the reports which the public of Canada receive concern meetings that are being and will be held between the chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission and the heads of the business organizations, not with the leaders of organized labour, would the Prime Minister not put the good of the economy ahead of his fear of a rebuff by these labour leaders and meet with them, because it is vitally important that this matter be resolved—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member's supplementary amounts to debate, I would think.

APPOINTMENT OF VICE-CHAIRMAN OF PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Could the Prime Minister tell the House whether at this critical time he can announce the replacement for Mr. Gérin-Lajoie as vice-chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission, and not leave the commission half-staffed or continue this game of musical chairs?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am glad to see support from the opposition side for the important work of the PIC. The question of a suitable replacement for Mr. Paul Gérin-Lajoie is being discussed now with Mr. Young, the chairman of the commission.

EFFECT OF POSSIBLE RAILWAY STRIKE—SUGGESTED MEETING WITH UNION LEADERS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Since it would now appear there is likely to be a breakdown of negotiations between railway management and railway workers which could lead to a serious strike and a serious dislocation of the markets for grain and other commodities important to western Canada and elsewhere, would the Prime Minister consider meeting the leaders of the unions in an attempt to avoid an economic setback of this kind?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Whenever possible I have the federal Minister of Labour engage in those meetings; he is generally more effective than I could possibly hope to be.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps I will allow the hon. member to ask a supplementary, although I have some doubt whether it is supplementary to the question asked originally by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings. It seems that from supplementary to supplementary we get away from the original question which was raised. In any event, perhaps the hon. member should ask his supplementary now.

Mr. Woolliams: Thank you for your graciousness, Mr. Speaker. May I now put this question to the Minister of Labour; no doubt he was listening very intently to the question that I put to the Prime Minister. Has the minister met with the union leaders in an endeavour to prevent a complete economic collapse, as far as western Canada is concerned, which would result if there is a railway strike which hinders the movement of grain?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I think it is time to remind the House, particularly the hon. member who has a legitimate concern about movement of grain, that it was only a few months ago that the unions in British Columbia showed their responsibility, at a time when management would not, in regard to moving grain for the western farmer despite the fact that at that particular time they were quite legitimately on strike. I imagine that the trade union movement in the railways will be just as responsive as any union in any other sector to the problems that are facing Canada, and I have no intention of interfering with the free, collective bargaining process at this moment.

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Central Nova): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the Minister of Labour advise whether some of the special mediators who he announced some time ago had been appointed are now working on this very important problem?

Mr. Mackasey: Yes, Mr. Speaker. They have been working with both railways and unions for some considerable time in particular areas that could affect the ultimate outcome of the collective bargaining which begins at the end of this coming year.

NATIONAL SECURITY

WAR MEASURES ACT—ARRESTS, RELEASES, CONTINUING DETENTIONS AND CHARGES

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice whether he can bring us up to date as to any new arrests or releases since last Thursday, which I think was the day of the last report to the House. If the minister does not have a breakdown since Thursday, could he inform us of the total number of arrests, persons released and charges, as well as those still kept in custody without charge, under the regulations pursuant to the War Measures Act?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the last figures I have from the office of the Attorney General of Quebec as at 11.30 this morning are to this effect: 439 were arrested; 378 have been released; one was rearrested, and there are 62 detained. Of these 62, 40 have been charged with 63 offences, of which 19 are offences under the Criminal Code and 44 are offences under the regulations issued pursuant to the proclamation of the War Measures Act.

QUEBEC—SUGGESTED USE OF IDENTITY CARDS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question in the same general area to the Prime Minister. Has the Attorney General of Quebec been in touch with the government or any other federal minister or department regarding a study by the Department of the Attorney General of Quebec concerning the introduction of identity cards for residents of that province? Could the Prime Minister also inform the House whether the federal government is studying the constitutional implications of the introduction of such a system for the residents of only one province in the country?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, if I may be allowed to answer the question directed to the Prime Minister, I have not to date been made aware by the provincial authorities of the details of any scheme of identification cards that they may have under consideration. In any event, the federal government has not given any consideration to a scheme of registration for the purposes of identification. While the legal requirement that citizens be in possession of clear means of identification through identification cards may facilitate investigations by law enforcement authorities, it is my view that we must bear in mind that consideration of any measure of that kind must be tempered by other factors. We are, of course, looking into the constitutional implications of that suggestion.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Justice a question supplementary to the one put by the hon. member for York South regarding the introduction of identity cards as advocated by the Quebec Minister of Justice.

When he examines the constitutionality of this matter, could he also consider the possibility of using a card which would have the same value throughout Canada?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I cannot add anything to the answer I gave earlier to the hon. member for York South.

[English]

WAR MEASURES ACT—TIME SPENT IN CUBA, ALGERIA OR JORDAN BY THOSE CHARGED

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Justice whether any of the people arrested and charged under the War Measures Act have spent any period of time in Cuba, Algeria or Jordan during the last two years?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): I cannot pretend I can answer that question, Mr. Speaker.

WAR MEASURES ACT—DYNAMITE, ARMS AND AMMUNITION RECOVERED

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Justice a supplementary question. Has he any information as to the amount of dynamite, other explosives, ammunition and weaponry seized as a result of the raids under the War Measures Act following the proclamation of that Act? Further, could he give us some precise details about the quantities and whether they bear any relationship to the knowledge that the government has of the quantity and type of such material stolen over the last while?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to give those precise details, nor have I really assessed the problem of whether I should.

[Mr. Lewis.]

STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE ON PROCLAMATION OF WAR MEASURES ACT

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, this supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister inform the House whether the Minister of Agriculture was expressing government policy on Thursday night in Manitoba when he said it would have been impossible for the government to produce documentary proof that the proclamation of the War Measures Act was necessary, and that the act was "too severe... unnecessary, under the circumstances..."?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, I myself admitted that the Act was too severe the very day I brought it into the House and I explained to the House that very shortly we were going to bring in another Act to replace it. However, under the circumstances even all opposition parties agreed there was a state of terror in Quebec at that time and that it needed exceptional measures which are not in the Criminal Code, and therefore this was the only way we could act with any expediency. I cannot vouch for what the minister said. He can do that for himself, but for that part of it, it is no great news. As I say, that was the government's position from the outset.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Would the Prime Minister address himself to the first part of the question and indicate whether or not the government now believes it is not possible to prove it was necessary to bring in the Measures Act?

Mr. Trudeau: It may be difficult to prove a negative, but it seems to me we now have the admission of all parties sitting opposite, in their very own words, that there was a state of terror in Quebec around the middle of October which needed extraordinary measures. There was some disagreement, I understand, about whether the Act was not too strong an extraordinary measure, but we conceded that from the outset. From the point of view of the need for extraordinary measures the opposition is conceding that even by voting for the new replacement legislation a full two weeks after the worst of the crisis is over. Therefore, retroactively, surely they must admit emergency measures were needed at that time.

AVAILABILITY OF WEAPONS—TIGHTENING OF CONTROL—PASSING OF ORDER IN COUNCIL

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Justice regarding the availability of weapons. Considering the evidence of Mr. Lortie at the coroner's inquest on Saturday that he and his fellow kidnappers were able to go down to Notre Dame Street and obtain several machine guns and/or repeater rifles a few hours before the kidnapping of Mr. Laporte, is the government considering the introduction of further legislation regarding the control of guns, or tightening the administration of the present legislation?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, before I answer that question I would like to review the circumstances in more detail. I do not know whether it is the law which is at fault or the enforcement or application of the law.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the minister. I am sure he appreciates that last year we passed new section 82(e) of the Criminal Code dealing with restricted weapons, stipulating that they could be restricted by Order in Council. Did the government measure up to its responsibility and pass an Order in Council setting out that machine guns such as were sold to these people are restricted weapons?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): As I said earlier, I would have to take a look at the facts of the situation to see whether it was covered by the type of provision to which the hon. member for Calgary North referred.

WAR MEASURES ACT—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DETAILED CHARGES

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister of Justice give consideration to obtaining the detailed charges that have been laid to which he referred and perhaps table them in the House?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): I will give consideration to it, Mr. Speaker, but it is a rather unusual procedure although these are unusual times.

GRAIN

PRESENCE OF RUSTY BEETLE IN WHEAT SHIPMENTS—EFFORTS TO ELIMINATE

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

Has the Wheat Board or the Canadian government received formal complaints from the Soviet Union, China or Poland concerning wheat shipments in which insects have been found? If so, as a result of those claims, by whom will the losses be incurred, the Canadian Wheat Board or the farmers themselves?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, a number of complaints have been received by the Board of Grain Commissioners not only from the Soviet Union but from other countries respecting what is referred to as rusty mites in wheat shipments, but we are now engaged in a concerted effort in co-operation with the provinces to have this eradicated from the damp wheat that went into storage in the fall of 1968.

Mr. Speaker: Is the right hon. gentleman rising on a supplementary?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Yes, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that this situation has been known for some time to exist and that Poland, China and Russia, among other countries, have pointed out that this rusty beetle is to be found in the wheat they are purchasing, and in view of the fact that shipments through Vancouver of wheat containing the beetle have been discontinued, would the minister say what action has been taken in the past three weeks and whether an all-out effort is to be made to meet this situation, however costly the undertaking may be and not at the expense of the western wheat farmer?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, not only will a great deal of concerted effort be made now but, indeed, last February 5 a seminar was held at the Department of Agriculture research station in Winnipeg to look into all aspects of the problem and in March of this year the Board of Grain Commissioners issued a bulletin to all country elevator operators to provide them with information in respect of identification and extermination of these beetles. There are many other publications which have gone out from the Department of Agriculture alerting farmers to the possibility of such a problem arising and giving some information and instructions on how to deal with it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In view of the fact that action has been continuing since February, and has increased in the last few days as shown by the statement of the chief of the Board of Grain Commissioners, would the minister say that the concerted effort, whatever it may cost, will not be charged back to the western farmers, because it is not their fault that the wheat was not sold?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar on a supplementary.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, may I ask whether or not the farmers are to get hooked on this.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps the minister might reply to both questions at the same time. The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar had already begun.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, in view of these reports of infestation may I ask the minister whether he can assure the House that measures are being taken to increase the inspection of rail cars of grain en route to terminals so that contaminated grain will be spotted before it reaches the terminal elevators?

Mr. Olson: Yes, we are attempting to do that in so far as it is possible to do so.

In reply to the right hon. member for Prince Albert, I should like to say that we intend to do everything we can to co-operate with the farmers but I am sure he knows as well as I that the management of the farmers' operations, with their own granaries on their own farms, bears some responsibility too.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is the farmer going to get hooked for these expenditures?

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, could the minister inform us whether the Board of Grain Commissioners has reinstituted the automatic inspection of all shipments of carloads of grain as they go through the Winnipeg yards, which was previously in effect some years ago?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that every car is inspected as it passes through Winnipeg but I can get the hon. member statistics concerning the number of cars from which we do in fact take samples.

Inquiries of the Ministry

POST OFFICE

ESTABLISHMENT OF CROWN CORPORATION

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Now that the Post Office Department seems to be in the news again, can he advise whether the government is still considering the conversion of this department into a Crown corporation and, if so, may it be proceeded with during this session?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when the Minister without Portfolio responsible for the Post Office took over I discussed this question with him. He undertook to study the matter and make a report in due course. I did not encourage him to have legislation ready for this session.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

PUBLISHING INDUSTRY—FOREIGN OWNERSHIP POLICY

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In light of fears concerning the Canadian publishing industry and the continuing sales to United States interests, is the government reviewing the situation and does the Prime Minister expect that a statement concerning the government's attitude will be made shortly?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this question has been dealt with many times in the past several weeks. I have nothing to add. I have told the House we expect to have a general statement on our policy in respect of foreign ownership rather than proceed on an ad hoc basis if it would be possible to do so.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, is the government aware of any further pending sales of publishing businesses to United States interests and, if so, is any action being taken in this regard?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I personally am not aware. It is conceivable that some other minister, particularly the Minister of National Revenue who has been entrusted with the study to which I just referred, might be aware if such a state did exist.

REPORTED TAKEOVER OF CINEPIX INCORPORATED BY FOREIGN INTERESTS

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. I would ask him whether the government intends to take any action with regard to the reported takeover of Cinepix Incorporated, a film company which it is understood received assistance from the federal government, or will this be another case of the Canadian people being skinned?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Mr. Olson.]

INFORMATION CANADA

ACTION TO REDUCE FLOW OF UNSOLICITED MATERIAL FROM DEPARTMENTS

Mr. Rud L. Whiting (Halton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister without Portfolio responsible for Information Canada. In view of the fact that the task force on information reported that the information apparatus used by most departments of government and Crown corporations was characterized by incompetence and duplication, is the government planning to take corrective action soon on the large amount of unsolicited material which is being sent out to the news media by departments of government and various Crown corporations?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I noted the hon. member's comments on this subject during the debate on the Speech from the Throne, as well as the criticism in the report of the task force on government information. I am glad to be able to tell the hon. member that the government has decided to act on these criticisms. All federal departments and agencies are being required to institute an annual review of mailing lists for information material and confirm these lists by March 31 next. Any persons who do not indicate a desire to remain on these lists must be deleted from them by that date.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

TORONTO—OPENING OF NEW OFFICES TO RELIEVE CONGESTION

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. I would like to remind the minister through you, Mr. Speaker, that some time ago I asked him a question regarding the congestion in the unemployment insurance offices in metro Toronto, with consequent delay and inconvenience to the public. Has action been taken to remedy this situation?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): The hon. gentleman is quite accurate in saying that he brought to my attention some months ago the congestion in unemployment offices in the greater Toronto area, as well as a series of articles in the Globe and Mail on the subject. As a result we have opened five new offices and to take into consideration the problem of many new Canadians and the additional need of personnel with a knowledge of more than the two official languages of this country. These are in effect walk-in offices. There are now five of them across Toronto, and I thank the hon. gentleman for his original suggestion.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Labour. I would ask him to draw to the attention of the Prime Minister the worsening unemployment situation in this country which requires his department to open five new offices in Toronto.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

APPEARANCE BEFORE STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I have a question for the Secretary of State. Would the minister, in his capacity as spokesman for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, use his good offices to arrange for that Crown corporation to appear before an appropriate committee of Parliament so that its activities may be thoroughly examined by members of the House? I ask the question in view of—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has asked the question. I doubt whether it is in order to give an explanation for the question after the question has been asked. Perhaps the hon. member might allow the minister to reply and then make his explanation by way of a supplementary question.

Mr. Nesbitt: I thought, Your Honour, that it might help the minister in answering if a brief reason were given for the type of investigation to which I referred.

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I think that as usual the management of the CBC will be summoned to appear before the parliamentary committee as soon as the latter gets down to work, namely, as soon as the estimates are referred to it by the House, if I remember correctly. However it is up to the committee itself, as the hon. member knows, to summon the witnesses it wishes to hear, and I have no doubt that each year it will feel the need to call in the CBC management.

[English]

Mr. Nesbitt: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the many rumours and stories concerning the activities of some branches of the CBC regarding the present FLQ situation in Quebec, I thought it might be a good thing if this were done somewhat earlier.

SPECIAL INSTRUCTIONS RESPECTING NEWS PROGRAMS

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): I wonder if the Secretary of State has a report from the CBC on the question I asked on November 4 as to what news broadcasts, if any, on either the English or French-speaking networks were changed, before they were broadcast over radio or television, by direction either of the CBC or officials of the government?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): No, I have not yet received the answer, Mr. Speaker. I do not remember if the hon. member had mentioned what period his request for information covered. If not, I would ask him to let me know or to write to the CBC.

[English]

PUBLIC AFFAIRS PROGRAMS—PROVISION OF EQUAL TIME FOR DIFFERING POINTS OF VIEW

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): My supplementary question is obviously directed to the Secretary of State.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Last Friday I raised a question regarding equal time provisions on radio and television which I addressed to the Minister of Finance. He referred the question to the Secretary of State. I wonder whether today when he is in the House he would be prepared to answer the question.

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member has only to read section 2 of the Broadcasting Act which states that the CBC's information and public affairs programs must be balanced. This, I think, should allay the concern expressed by the hon. member.

[English]

MONTREAL—ALLEGED CENSORSHIP OF WORK OF NEWS STAFF—DISMISSAL OF PERSONNEL

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I would like to ask the Secretary of State whether he has inquired into allegations of censorship by the CBC management of the work of its news staff in Montreal and the dismissal of one or more of the news personnel in that city by the CBC because of the censorship charges?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have followed developments. I know the matter is not, strictly speaking, a sub judice one. However, the union has appealed against the CBC management decision and reliable sources have informed me that it is not customary for a minister to reply to questions on matters which, while not really sub judice, have been brought, or are to be brought in the immediate future, before an arbitration board.

[English]

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): When the minister thinks it would be appropriate to make a statement on this matter, would he do so, particularly in the cases of Mr. Denis Vincent and Michel Bourdon? Would he inquire of the CBC the reasons for their suspension and make a statement to the House as soon as possible as to the CBC position on this matter?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I might say that I already know the reasons why the CBC has taken action. I have just given the reason why I do not think it is advisable to comment on it at present. But if the advice I have received proved to be wrong and if it became my duty to report to the House, I shall do it with the least possible delay.

[English]

ARREST OF CERTAIN NEWS BROADCASTERS UNDER WAR MEASURES ACT

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I wonder whether the Secretary of State is now in a position to advise whether those three or four members of Radio-Canada who were picked up under the War Measures Act and who, according to one or another minister, were believed to be communicating by a code with the FLQ, having been released are now back in the service of the CBC?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the CBC has no answer for that since absences in a corporation employing thousands of people can happen for various reasons. It would be up to the Justice Minister of Quebec to say if some persons already arrested or detained under some charges have stated they were CBC employees. Since I have not received a reply from the Quebec Justice Minister, I am unable to give this information to the right hon. member.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister get in touch with the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and secure from him the names of those whom he had in mind when he said they were connected with the FLQ, and having those names could he have the records of the CBC looked up to ascertain whether these gentry are back in its employ again?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

SOCIAL SECURITY

INQUIRY AS TO TABLING OF WHITE PAPER

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the minister now able to give us the assurance that the white paper on social security will be tabled during the present month?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I cannot do so, Mr. Speaker. As I have mentioned last week, the matter is under consideration by the government. When a decision is taken, it will be announced in the House.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is the government considering the possibility of introducing legislation rather than waiting for the white paper?

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, all these matters are under consideration at the present time and when a decision has been arrived at on either of the aspects the hon. member has brought forward, it will be announced in the House.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROGRESS TOWARD HOLDING OF THIRD INTERNATIONAL FISHERIES CONFERENCE

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the decline in our fisheries resources, what progress has been made toward calling a third international conference to deal with the convention on the territorial sea and contiguous zones, the convention on the high seas, and the convention on fishing and conservation of the living resources of the high seas?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would have to check my records to see what progress has been made but both the Department of Fisheries and Forestry and the Department of External Affairs have been pressing very hard in this direction. We agree with the hon. member that the fisheries resources should be conserved not only in the interests of Canada but of the world at large.

Mr. Crouse: In view of the importance of France and its ownership of the Islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon and the fact that it was not present at the discussions in Geneva in 1958, will the Secretary of State for External Affairs make every effort to see that this nation is invited to the next international conference?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is making a representation.

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON MARINE RESOURCES

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): I wonder whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs can indicate whether Canada is giving consideration to a specific conference on marine resources in view of the fact that the law of the sea conference could very well take five years to be convened, according to Canadian representatives at the United Nations?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be desirable that these matters should be discussed together as they are closely related. However, if the prospects were to be so poor we would certainly be very happy to consider moving on to a discussion of the marine resources themselves. Of course, there are many things we will be able to do ourselves that I think will be helpful.

DISCUSSIONS WITH FRANCE ON TREATY FISHING RIGHTS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the minister could tell us whether Canada is continuing to hold bilateral talks with France with regard to that country's treaty rights on the south coast of Newfoundland, especially in view of the provisions of Bill C-2 now before the House with respect to pollution of the sea and the fishing zones which are set as jurisdictional limits by that bill?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not know that the discussions are going on at this very moment but there have been discussions recently and we will be having more not only in the context of this subject but of many others.

DECLARATION OF CANADIAN FISHING ZONES

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs, Mr. Speaker. Inasmuch as the government made a clear commitment to Parliament during the last session that the passage of the bill to amend the Territorial Seas and Fishing Zones Act would mean that fishing zones in Canada would be declared almost forthwith, could the minister tell us what steps or plans the government has to so declare these fishing zones?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the subject is under active discussion. I think the hon. member will realize it is related to many other things that Canada is trying to achieve. I am sure he will agree that we should act in the best interests of the fisheries industry as a whole, of which this is only one part.

AGRICULTURE

DAIRYING—DELAY IN PAYMENT OF GRANTS

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

As several milk producers have written us to find out why they have not yet received the subsidies for their end of July deliveries, could the hon. minister order the Canadian Dairy Commission to send to the producers involved a statement of their account in order to explain to them why the penalty they have been charged with under the current regulation was higher than the amount of subsidies they expected?

[Translation]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if there has been any undue delay in the payment of subsidies to any individual producer I would be very happy if the hon. member would provide me with the names and addresses and I shall ask the Dairy Commission for a report on why the payments are being held up, if that is the case.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

ATLANTIC PROVINCES—ADDITIONAL ACTION TO STIMULATE ECONOMY

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister advise the House, in light of observations by the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council that while his department is doing much the Maritime provinces are still falling behind the national average growth rate, whether his department or the government is giving any consideration to other innovations under this program so that this serious slippage might be overcome this winter?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, we make uninterrupted efforts to improve our programs in order to help the underdeveloped regions.

[English]

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister for Regional Economic Expansion would indicate whether he plans to visit Atlantic Canada to say hello to the two new premiers and hello to the outgoing premier, Mr. Smallwood?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON RECOMMENDATIONS BY COUNCIL ON RURAL DEVELOPMENT

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the minister is prepared to tell the House, or perhaps make a statement on motions, what his department plans to do with the third report of the Canadian Council on Rural Development which has been in his hands since July, was made public last week, and recommends firm changes in government policy in different regions, particularly the Atlantic area?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The report is in the hands of department officials. It is being studied at present and, if necessary, we will make a statement in the House about that matter.

INFORMATION CANADA

OBTAINING OF EXCERPTS FROM CBC SCRIPTS

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the minister responsible for Information Canada. For the purposes of Information Canada, is the CBC now regarded as an agency of government and is it necessary for citizens desiring to secure excerpts from scripts aired on the CBC to secure them through Information Canada?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister without Portfolio): No, Mr. Speaker.

HEALTH

LEVELS OF LEAD AND CADMIUM IN FOOD—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF INFORMATION

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): My question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, Mr. Speaker. In light of the revelations about dangerous levels of lead and cadmium in Canadian diets, can the minister assure the House that the conclusions and data gathered by the Federal Food and Drug Directorate monitoring program into this danger will be tabled in the House and, if so, when?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I shall be pleased to consider the tabling of that information in the House and I shall let the hon. member know when.

NATIONAL SECURITY

EMERGENCY POWERS—STUDY BY LAW REFORM COMMISSION

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Have the chairman and the members of the Law Reform Commission been appointed? If so, would the minister refer to them the study of the emergency powers for the preservation of public order in Canada so that we may have their report prior to the passing of permanent legislation by this House?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker, they have not been appointed. If the subject is dealt with perhaps it should be dealt with by this House.

GRAIN

PRODUCTION AND RECEIPTS POLICY—FARM CONSOLIDATION PROGRAM

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture and arises out of the recent grain policy proposal tabled by his colleague which proposes a program of adjustment aimed a creating consolidation of existing farms into more efficient sizes. Can the minister indicate to the House when such a program will be introduced and whether it will be in the form of a proposal or legislation? Also, will the details be made available in good time so that the whole matter of the grains policy can be discussed in unison with the policy of consolidation of farm units?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has raised far too large an area for me to reply during the question period.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

PUBLIC ORDER (TEMPORARY MEASURES) ACT, 1970

PROVISION OF EMERGENCY POWERS FOR PRESERVATION OF PUBLIC ORDER

The House resumed from Friday, November 6, consideration in committee of Bill C-181, to provide temporary emergency powers for the Preservation of Public Order in Canada—Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)—Mr. Honey in the chair.

The Chairman: When the committee rose on Friday, November 6, 1970, clause 2 of the bill was under consideration with certain amendments. Shall clause 2 carry?

[Mr. Munro.]

On clause 2—Definitions.

• (3:00 p.m.)

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, may I raise a point of order. It may shorten the debate on one of the main clauses of the bill. I wonder if the Minister of Justice would answer a question. I did not wish to take up the time of the House with it during the question period. Can the Minister of Justice say categorically that there has not been any censorship, either under the War Measures Act or under any other authority, with respect to the news media in the Province of Quebec?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I think the best way I can handle that question is by saying that in the opinion of the law officers who report to me, and according to the opinion which they gave to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation which receives its legal advice from the Department of Justice, there is nothing under the regulations currently in force pursuant to the proclamation of the War Measures Act that provides in any way for censorship. I had the opinion expressed to me which was relayed in turn, on my instructions, to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, that the regulations do not prohibit broadcasts in the course of ordinary news or public affairs coverage of statements which, when originally made, could have been made on behalf of the FLQ or by the FLQ for that matter. In the opinion of the law officers, only when the news media allows itself to be used as a propaganda vehicle for the FLQ and communicates statements of the FLQ would there be an offence. The key words are, "on behalf of", which are meant to establish an agency, express or implied. So, the answer is that there is no such provision within the regulations or within the bill currently before the House.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister one further question, and it may shorten the debate. In view of the minister's answer on the law, will the minister take the committee into his confidence and say that there has not been, in fact, any direction by any department of the federal government or of the Quebec government with respect to censoring the radio, the television or any other news media?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, that is not what the hon. gentleman asked me. He asked me what the position is under the regulations, and I have answered that.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I should like—

The Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for Regina East.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make some comments on this bill as we begin the detailed study of it clause by clause in committee of the whole. First of all, Mr. Chairman, I should like to draw to the attention of the committee the fact that we have had emergency situations in Canada before now. I say that as a member from the province of Saskatchewan where we had what was known in Canadian history as the Saskatchewan rebellion in 1885. That, of course, predates a good deal of the modern history of the province of Saskatchewan and, indeed, of much of Canada. Nevertheless, that was a very important episode in the history of Canada in which a group of people who had a set of grievances against the government of Canada, and against many people in Canada, felt that they had to take strong action in order to try to rectify the situation. I think it would be fair to say that there are many people who today acknowledge that harsh and repressive steps were taken at that time. There were unnecessary steps taken at that time in dealing with the problems that existed. It must be acknowledged that some action must be taken when problems such as these arise. Nevertheless, unnecessary and harsh steps were taken. Unfortunately, some of the unhealthy effects, some part of the legacy of these steps, can still be seen in the pattern of events in Canada today, some 85 years later in our history.

I think this particular point can be best illustrated by some words that were uttered in Regina on October 2, 1968, on the occasion, I believe, of the unveiling of a statue in memory of Louis Riel who was hanged in 1855. The words of the statement are as follows:

> How many other Riels exist in Canada, beyond the fringe of accepted conduct driven to believe that this country offers no answer to their needs and no solution to their problems? How many of us understand the loneliness, the sense of futility of such a man? How many of us are willing to concede that future historians, in chronicling the events of our lives, may choose to emphasize and applaud the activities, not of the privileged majority but of some little-known leader of an unpopular minority?
> For me this is the lesson of Louis Riel. For me this is the reason why we are here.
> A democratic society and system of government, while among the grandest of human concepts, are among the most difficult to implement. In a democracy it is all too easy for the majority to forget the rights of the minority, and for a remote and powerful government to ignore its protests.
> It is all too easy, should disturbances erupt, to crush them in the name of law and order. We must never forget that, in the long run, a democracy is judged by the way the majority treats the minority. Louis Riel's battle is not yet won.

Those word were uttered by the present Prime Minister in Regina on October 2, 1968.

This bill is extraordinary legislation and as such it imposes a special responsibility on legislators to examine both the general purposes and thrust of the bill as well as its specific contents very carefully. It imposes a special responsibility on the minister; this, I think, has to be said in view of the minister's credible record on many aspects of civil liberties.

Right now, I suggest, the minister's record is being put to the test. I hope that the minister will not take a rigid stand with respect to this bill. I hope that he does not even leave the impression that he has orders simply to hold the line with respect to this bill. I hope that he does not exhibit a non-flexible stand in dealing with the various proposals that will be put forward. The House has approved the principle that special legislation may be required to deal with situations such as this. We are prepared to consider the principle and to examine the bill based on that principle; but the contents and nature of the special powers contained in the bill still require close scrutiny. It does not necessarily follow that the particular provisions requested are justified merely by reason of the decision that special legislation is required. Thus, Mr. Chairman, I hope the minister will be responsive to proposals made by the opposition. I think, if the minister is truly concerned about national unity, this concern will be reflected in a serious sensitivity to the many objections which have been registered both inside and outside the House about this legislation and about the previous actions of the government.

I certainly hope that we do not hear any more statements such as those the minister made on Wednesday last. I say this, Mr. Chairman, out of sadness and concern for what is happening rather than in anger. The minister first of all said that, certainly, it is the right of anyone to question the government's actions; but then he seemed to brand those who chose to question the government's actions. We even find that he accused those who were arguing against his stand of intellectual dishonesty. How can the minister take such a stand when he admitted in his remarks last Wednesday that the government's position represented a value judgment? Why is he so concerned about the fact that there has been opposition when he admitted that the government had taken harsh measures and when it was also admitted that not all of the facts have been made public? That is what the minister said on October 16. I suppose the minister had to defend himself, but I suggest he did himself no credit in his performance last Wednesday.

I think we are prepared to grant that the minister is human, as we all are. We hope, now that he has got this matter off his chest, he will be prepared to be both responsive and responsible. I do not have to remind the minister that not only is he responsible for carrying out the letter of the law and the letter of his duties as set out in the statute establishing his position and his department, but he has to ensure that justice is done, with all its implications and ratifications in Canada. I am sure it is not necessary to remind the minister of that.

There are a number of serious questions which must be answered when considering this legislation. The first question I wish to ask the minister is whether there is still a need for this sort of legislation, taking into account the events as they have developed up to the present time. As expressed by their vote, some members approved of the action taken by the government and others disapproved. I am one of those who disapproved. However, that is now a matter of the past. We are looking at current events, the situation as it is today, and attempting to determine where we go from here.

In his remarks last Wednesday, the Minister of Justice indicated that there was still a continuing need for this sort of legislation. I accept that as an expression of his view, but the minister did not back up his statement with an adequate explanation of why he considers powers of this sort are still required. The minister owes this House such an explanation.

I wish to refer to what has occurred up to the present time. During this afternoon's question period the minister reported that 439 people had been arrested; that is approximately ten more than were reported last Thursday. Of these 439 people, 378 have been released; one has been rearrested and 62 are under detention at the present time. Charges have been laid against 40 of these 62 people. Last week the minister indicated that there were still approximately 40 people to be arrested. That is a small number.

The one reasonable point made by the government is—although I think there is an effective answer to the point—that the element of surprise was required when the government invoked the War Measures Act. However, that is now a matter of the past. The cat is out of the bag. The situation is being dealt with in the open. The government should be able to deal with most of the problems that remain through the provisions of the Criminal Code.

I suggest that hon. members have a responsibility to examine the implications of this bill and its consequences. Most members reluctantly conceded that there may be occasions when special powers are required, but I think most members would agree that special powers which infringe on the rights of people must be kept to an absolute minimum. We must demonstrate that our problems can and will be dealt with within the framework of responsible democratic government which safeguards human rights. If existing problems are responded to with repressive legislation, and it must be admitted there are repressive features in the bill now before us, that will reinforce the arguments of those against whom the government wishes to act and to whom we must answer in the long run in Canada's political development.

I wish to deal with a point raised on Friday by the hon. member for Calgary North. He recited an incident which occurred near his home in the early 1930's. A shooting occurred at a meeting being addressed by Mr. M. J. Coldwell. This resulted from the pressure created by discussion of the problems that existed in the 1930's. I have attended many of Mr. Coldwell's meetings, both as a boy and as an adult I have know him personally for most of my life. I can state that there is no more non-violent man in all of Canada. I do not wish to suggest that the member for Calgary North left a different impression, quite the contrary. However, it must be pointed out that men such as M. J. Coldwell, and the present leader of the New Democratic Party, succeeded in keeping hope alive in Saskatchewan and the rest of western Canada in the 1930's at a time when we were faced with difficulties as great or greater than those with which we are faced at the present time. That is important to note. These men kept alive the idea that things could be and would be better, and that changes and improvements could be brought about through the democratic process.

During the past week or two there have been many quotations from the book published, or about to be published, by Pierre Valliere, one of those arrested and against whom charges have been laid. He has been quoted in a number of newspapers. This man points out the deplorable conditions under which he was raised. I can point to many examples I have witnessed of people who have been raised under conditions as bad or worse than those described by Mr. Valliere. The important point is that for many of those people who lived under such conditions, hope was kept alive that changes and improvements could be made. That is a critical point. I think most people will admit that hope has been snuffed out for some people in Canada today. Those with that feeling will be joining groups such as the FLQ. We must demonstrate our faith in the democratic process and show that it will work. By keeping repression to a minimum and by tackling the social and economic problems that exist, we will show that democracy does work.

There has been a good deal of discussion on various sections of the bill. I do not intend to repeat all of the comments which have been made. At the present time we are debating clause 2 of the bill which sets out the definitions. When we note the definitions in this legislation, we realize the far-reaching implications of the bill before us. A wide definition is given to such terms as "communicate", the group which may be classified as peace officers, statements, and unlawful association. I wish to deal briefly with one of the definitions. I hope the minister is listening from behind the curtain because this point must be dealt with. It is the definition of a peace officer.

The hon. member for Matane made some points with respect to this definition last Friday. I wish to raise one further point. The definition of a peace officer is extended beyond that provided in the Criminal Code to "include the members of the Canadian Forces". I am prepared to acknowledge that under emergency situations, when legislation such as this may be put into force, there may be a need to give members of the Canadian Forces the powers of a peace officer. However, as the subsection is worded at the present time, it is open-ended. It automatically gives a member of the Canadian Forces the power of a peace officer. This is my interpretation of the problem as a layman, although I have discussed the matter with other people. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that a safeguard needs to be placed in this particular extension of the definition of a peace officer by adding certain words in relation to members of the Canadian Forces. I suggest the following words might be added after the word "Forces"—"when assigned to perform the duties of a peace officer under the authority of a competent civil authority". I would be interested to hear the minister's comments on this proposal. When we are dealing with special legislation of the kind before us, I believe we must be doubly careful to see there is adequate legislative provision to ensure maintenance of civil authority over the military. I am not suggesting there is any present danger involving the situation or position of the Armed Forces, but we should not leave the door ajar when such an issue arises.

One of the main thrusts of this bill is to be found in clause three which outlaws the FLQ. I think all of us would agree without argument that there are undesirable aspects to the activities of the FLQ and that some action should be taken to deal with them. The question is, what kind of action is best suited to meet the circumstances. First of all, how wide a net does the government intend to cast upon the basis of its definition of FLQ or associated organizations? Is there a significant danger that innocent people will be caught in such a net when this bill comes into force? Second, there is the point which has already been discussed by various speakers in this debate, as well as on second reading, concerning the effectiveness in practice of any provision outlawing a particular organization. Is this really the way to get at the problem in the long run? Many people hold the view, that it is not.

There is also a curious circumstance which arises as a result of the termination date which has been inserted in the legislation. Clause 3, as I say, provides for the outlawing of the FLQ, but there is also included in the bill a termination date.

The Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but I do so in order to inform him that his time has expired.

Mr. McCleave: Carry on.

Mr. Burton: Just a few more minutes, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. McCleave: Agreed.

Mr. Burton: I thank the committee for its indulgence. I assure hon. members that I shall not take too long. As I was saying, provision is made for this legislation to terminate on April 30. After that date, presumably, the FLQ will no longer be an outlawed organization. The government has spoken about bringing in some form of permanent legislation. Is it intended that the FLQ shall continue to be outlawed after April 30? It seems to me we are faced, now, by a curious feature which requires further examination.

I further suggest that attention be paid to the wording of the preamble to the bill. The second paragraph contains a description of what it is about the FLQ that we do not like; as to a good many points contained in that description, there will be no argument, but I wonder whether this is sufficient background to establish the need for this legislation. Again, in the third paragraph of the preamble, reference is made to the invocation of the War Measures Act. It is, of course, true that this took place and that this particular step was approved by a vote in this House. Nevertheless, I question whether it is necessary to make this particular reference in such a way as to imply there was over-all approval of the action of the government up to this particular point in time. Possibly the wording should be reconsidered.

In conclusion, I submit that the amendments proposed by my hon. friend from Greenwood, and outlined by him on Friday, should be most carefully considered by the House if we are to handle this legislation in a responsible way. It involves our approach to the issues of civil disorder, of terrorism, to the extent it exists, and to the protection of citizens' rights throughout this country. The legislation before us has political and social consequences which go far beyond the impact of this particular measure. Each of us has a heavy responsibility. In my opinion, members of this House have dealt with this matter in a responsible way so far. The opposition has responded by its vote on second reading, a vote which indicated it was prepared to consider further a measure which provided special powers to deal with the situation which the Minister of Justice and others have described. It has been introduced on the basis of certain facts which are known, and others which have had to be deduced or assumed; we certainly need more explanation of this aspect. But I maintain the opposition has responded. It is now up to the government to respond, in turn, to the opposition's proposals. History will judge us on the basis of our sensitivity and adherence to democratic principles during this difficult time for Canada.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to speak at any length but I was struck by certain words used by the Minister of Justice a few moments ago. I shall await his return to the House before dealing with them in connection with the subject of censorship.

Today, we are considering an extremely serious matter. The subject of the bill before us is of paramount importance and the question whether its terms are to be preserved or amendments made should be, I would think, a challenge to ministers of the government and parliamentary secretaries to be present in the House. At this moment, in point of fact, there are two ministers in the House and there are, if my count is correct, three parliamentary secretaries. A minister finds it necessary, from time to time, to attend cabinet meetings, and that is understandable, but parliamentary secretaries are not in that category. The fact that there are so few of them in the seats of the mighty indicates that the debate is, to all intents and purposes, worthless and ineffective.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I know that the right hon. gentleman would wish to be fair. He, and other members of his party, have suggested that the opposition is the conscience of the House. The conscience, also, is somewhat ill-staffed at the moment.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am glad to note that my remark that the opposition was, indeed, the conscience of the House, has struck home and that the Minister of Justice has imbibed and inhaled it. But the conscience can do nothing if the heart is absent. In this case, the heart of the government is gone.

The minister made a statement this afternoon, and I have to depend upon my memory as to what he said, in connection with censorship. He was entirely correct in saying that censorship within the meaning of the War Measures Act is not in effect. In fact, various sections of the War Measures Act which people sometimes consider as being in effect are not in effect. I wish to make this clear immediately. A question was asked concerning whether there was any censorship of radio and television, and the answer given by the minister was that there was not within the terms of either the regulations or the present bill before the House.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): With the indulgence of the right hon. gentleman may I, through you, Mr. Chairman, make sure that we understand each other. I said that there was nothing in the regulations or in the terms of the present bill, which in this respect duplicate the regulations, to authorize censorship.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, there is no misunderstanding at all; we are clearly in agreement on this point. However, there is censorship today, and therefore it is censorship that is being illegally applied. Across the country various radio stations, or at least their representatives, have been advised, informed, made aware, that the publication of certain material would not be in the public interest. Indeed, as far as certain universities are concerned, the student bodies who edit university papers have been given to understand that they are subject to censorship, and that censorship applies today despite the fact that the minister stated clearly, unequivocally and properly that legally it could not be applied.

This is the most dangerous form of censorship, the subtle kind that determines what I shall read, what I shall see, what I shall hear, without there being any legal justification for such censorship. The minister used these words—and I give him the opportunity of saying whether or not he actually used them. He said that there was no censorship of the news as far as radio or television stations and the like were concerned. Unless they were being used as propaganda agencies, he said, there would be no interference.

I should like to know who determines whether they are being used as propaganda agencies. Is not that the essence of censorship—that somebody determines for me what is propaganda and what is not propaganda? On this basis, certain ministers of the Crown should have kept their mouths shut, for some of the statements made by them indicate an irresponsibility that is not in keeping with membership on the government benches.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, and again with the indulgence of the right hon. gentleman, may I clarify what I said. The crucial words in the regulations, which are repeated in the bill, are if the statement is made "on behalf of"; and then there are the words "as a representative or professed representative of the unlawful association". This means that the crucial element in distinguishing between the valid reporting of news and fair comment on the one hand, and its being used as a propaganda vehicle on the other hand, is the idea of agency. Is the journalist allowing himself to be used as an agent?

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is what I like about a debate in this House, Mr. Chairman, with opinions being exchanged. I am glad to have that statement from the minister, because accepting his view we have censorship in Canada. It is censorship not legally brought into effect, but rather left to certain individuals who determine whether a radio or T.V. station or the press itself comes within the definition of the words just enunciated by the minister. I suggest this is a dangerous proposition. It is of the essence of the imposition of censorship without accepting the responsibility of having censorship put into effect either by Parliament or, as under the wartime regulations, by order in council.

I pass on now to the next phase. For several days I have been trying to get some information regarding certain individuals who were alleged to be with Radio Canada—news broadcasters, commentators and the like. There were three or four of these people. This is not a matter picked out of the air; rather it comes from the confines of the mind of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. On many occasions he stated that several people were involved, and in every phase. One began to look at ministers of the Crown, even at parliamentary secretaries and Members of Parliament. He said that the dangerous permeation of this philosophy through the various strata of society had undermined everything. As a matter of fact, the minister used some very big figures. In Ottawa, the minister stated be thought the FLQ had 3,000 members. When the minister appeared on a television program with Jack Webster, he was reported to have said that the figure was twenty-five to fifty thousand. The minister spoke of thousands of weapons and masses of dynamite. Then he went on: "We can't tell you everything because if we did the security of the state would be undermined".

Then, the minister of Indian affairs joined in, and he drew a horrid picture of fear and danger. He said: "We can't tell you. We know, but if we were ever to tell it would bring into focus men high in public life, and we can't do that". This is all nonsense, Mr. Chairman. Like every member of the House, I have been following the evidence given at the inquest last Saturday in the city of Montreal. If you read the evidence given by the man Lortie, it is the most infantile example of amateurism that could have been put together. The government said that these were professional wrongdoers. In my view, if Lortie's evidence is accepted, their whole conduct indicates they were a bunch of novices.

To return to the people employed by Radio Canada, according to one minister, and by inference another, these people were actually engaged in using a code for the purpose of passing on information to FLQ members while pretending to be giving the news. They interpolated certain statements, observations or letters in one way or another into their reports. Three or four of these people were picked up, and that is what should have happened to them.

However, I have been trying to find out what has happened to these gentlemen. The Secretary of State has had several days to find out. Can you imagine the colossal wisdom inherent in the statement that he made today? He said: How do we know who they were? How do we know which ones were released? I am not going to designate what I consider that statement to be, but I think that even the Minister of Justice will know what I have in mind.

• (3:40 p.m.)

These people were traitors to this country. They operated within Radio Canada to undermine the state; to ensure that the FLQ conspirators would be successful in their aims. It must be taken that they were trying to cover up the tracks of those who kidnapped Mr. Cross and the minister of the Crown of the province of Quebec. They were passing out information and then they were picked up. Where are they now? The very fact that the minister, in the last few days, refused to give information in that connection would seem to indicate that they are back on the job. That is what we have been trying to find out. They are paid by the taxes of the people of Canada, and on the basis of a statement made by one of the ministers of the Crown in the present government, they were actually engaged, not only in a seditious operation but in something even close to treason itself.

They are picked up. They are taken into custody. They are released. Where are they now? I would like to know. Is the minister in a position to advise as to whether or not these people are back on the job? That is all I am trying to find out. I was surprised the ministers did not have some communication between themselves in that connection and ask, "These quadruplets of treason and treachery—where are they"? They were on the job with Radio Canada. They were engaged in nefarious and treacherous work. They were picked up. Where are they? Have they been released? It has been stated that they have been. Where are they now? If they are back in the CBC, the people of Canada as a whole will be able to conclude a great many things.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I just wonder if I could ask the right hon. gentleman a question. Suppose there were employees of the CBC who were picked up. Suppose they were detained. Suppose they were thereafter released. Is the right hon. gentleman entitled to make any assumptions from this, or should the assumptions be made only after they are charged, if they are charged? I am asking this in all seriousness because it may be that, if charges are not laid, the police found there was no connection. I think the right hon. gentleman has to be very careful when he is dealing with this sort of thing.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am pointing out that they were not in that position. They were picked up and, according to a minister of the Crown, they were engaged in giving information to the people in the FLQ to undermine the state. He would not have made a statement like that unless he knew.

Mr. Lewis: Wouldn't he?

Mr. Diefenbaker: They are not in the position of others who were picked up on suspicion and then released. The minister said they were engaged in this activity, and no minister of the Crown would make a statement like that without knowledge. If anybody wants to disavow that minister, I am willing to accept the disavowal.

What the Minister of Justice has done has been to refer to the general case of the person who is picked up, and I cannot disagree with that. You can be picked up by mistake and misunderstanding, but these men were not in that category. According to a minister of the Crown, they were guilty of treachery. He was shocked into a state of deep concern, and worry was apparent on every line of his face as he spoke of the danger to the state.

These people are not in the category to which the Minister of Justice has referred. These are treacherous people who are known to have done these things, and the man who actually designated them as being such is a minister of the Crown. That bothers me, and I don't suppose we will ever get the information because, after all, it is a very difficult thing for the Secretary of State to find out which members of Radio Canada were taken into custody and which ones have returned to the haven of their former positions.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Diefenbaker: I don't mind questions, but I have dealt with the point raised by the Minister of Justice. I will now deal with the point he has just made, of how careful one must be in picking up these people, that they be not unfairly and unjustly treated, or designated as potential wrongdoers by reason only of the fact that they have been taken into custody under the regulations.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Exactly.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The fact that he points this out indicates he realizes what terrible mistakes can be made, and that brings me to the need of protecting such people. The hon. member for Calgary North has an amendment to the effect that there should be a board of review set up. I have not seen any rush on the part of the government to accept it, but in view of the declaration just made by the Minister of Justice I take it he is giving it serious consideration, believing as he does in the dangers of innocent people being picked up. With his dedication to justice I am sure he will give it that consideration. You see, Mr. Chairman, that is what discussion does. You actually clear the atmosphere. I am so glad the minister has taken that position.

In the meantime, while this board is being set up, may I recall a suggestion I made, I think it was on October 15, that something in the nature of what was done in 1940 and 1941 might be valuable at this time. Without going into a lot of detail, Mr. Chairman, it was not a commission that was set up, but a group of Members of Parliament with some knowledge of the law. Everyone who is a lawyer is presumed to have that, because ignorance of the law does not excuse anyone, even a lawyer. This group met. They were sworn to secrecy, and they were shown the files. There was a most interesting thing. Not one leak ever took place from the day to day or the week to week meetings of this group.

We looked over the records. I do not want to designate anyone because, even though years have gone by, it might do him harm, but I will mention one man as an example of a person against whom there was no evidence whatever. In fact, he afterward became a Member of Parliament. There was not one scintilla of evidence against him, but it took him a long time to show that. There was a Canadian contractor who was incarcerated and held for months. There was not a suggestion of anything that approached evidence against that man.

The Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the right hon. member. I do so to advise the committee that his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Chairman: Is there unanimous consent that the right hon. member continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We looked over the evidence. I remember that case very well. Do you know what his offence was? Some employee, some maid in the house, was present the night Italy declared war and she saw this man dump some papers into the fireplace. She did not know what the papers were, but she felt sure they must be very self-incriminating. That was the entire case. We looked it over, and it wasn't long before he was out of jail. That is why I am again suggesting that procedure. We have so many Members of Parliament who would like a job to do, and the greatest job of Parliament is not to turn out legislation but to preserve and ensure freedom for even the humblest in the land.

This would in no way interfere with the provincial government of the province of Quebec. We cannot slough off our responsibility on the province of Quebec, although whenever things go wrong I have seen a tendency on the part of the government to say, "You better get in touch with the Bourassa government because, after all, we are not an agency. We are just looking after the things of the state, and the responsibility falls on the province."

Let Parliament assume that function. Let Parliament pick out nine or ten members of this House to determine whether or not any of these people have been held without justification. There may not be any basis for their being held. I know the minister entirely agrees with that. That is my suggestion. I give support to the setting up of a board of review although, from the attitude up until the minister interjected a while ago, I was not very hopeful this would be accepted. Certainly, this would give Members of Parliament an opportunity to look into this matter. Set up such a committee. It cannot embarrass you in any way. If such a committee were set up, we would be able to follow the peregrinations of those people from Radio Canada who were designated by a minister of the Crown as criminals and dangerous to the state. If they should be let out, we will find out whether they go back to the sequestered and protected position of broadcasters for Radio Canada.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, as one who supported the implementation of the War Measures Act, I should like to speak on this clause. A number of weeks have passed and we have had an opportunity to look at the events and at the public evidence, some of the not so public evidence, and some of the inferences and circumstances surrounding the events of that time. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, I have no reason at this time to doubt or regret the decision I then took. I still feel it was correct to implement the War Measures Act and if I had it to do over again I would support it. Others, of course, had doubts to begin with and at least one member had reason to express his doubts just the other day. The decision concerning whether or not the introduction of the War Measures Act was correct will not be decided at this time. History will decide it or it may very well be that this debate will never be resolved because all the people involved obviously gave their actions a great deal of thought. They had to make decisions based on their judgment of the situation.

Today, however, the issue before us is whether the War Measures Act should be replaced with a more circumscribed measure and, on this occasion, I find I cannot support the government. I had hoped that some legislation could be introduced that would meet the needs of emergency situations but would not contain the dangerous provisions of the War Measures Act. I have looked at the bill before us. I have even looked at the amendments my party is offering to this bill as well as the amendments of the official opposition. Even if all these amendments were accepted, I do not think I could support the bill. I do not see how a bill could be drafted, containing some of the powers asked for, which could be considered safe or satisfactory. If we look at our Criminal Code, we will realize it has been developed over hundreds of years so we have been able to place certain safeguards in it. The minute you remove any of those safeguards you depart very sharply from the traditional concepts of freedom, which is an aspect of our society I like.

Therefore, any emergency legislation that departs from the present provisions and safeguards in the Criminal Code in my view is dangerous. This brings me to the point of view that the only time such emergency powers can be justified is during extreme conditions, and then only for a short period. I can see no justification for prolonging legislation of a dangerous nature beyond the immediate circumstances that call for the implementation of such legislation. In some ways, I believe the legislation before us is more dangerous than the War Measures Act. I am not saying this from a legal point of view because I am not in a position to make that kind of a legal judgment. I do not have a legal background. I say this from the psychological point of view. Whatever the dangers may be of the War Measures Act, it has one advantage. This is an argument that was first advanced by the hon. member for Skeena. This legislation is so terrible in its implication, and so jeopardizes every one of our civil liberties, that its very danger is its safety. We know its dangers and what could happen if it should be prolonged. Since, we are aware of this—and the government obviously is aware of it—we are on our guard and are careful about how it should be used.

Everytime someone starts talking about using the War Measures Act, whether in respect of hippies or school teachers, one becomes aware of the real concern of the members of this House. We realize how dangerous an instrument the War Measures Act is, and how careful we must be with it. Now, we have a bill before us which says, in effect, that the War Measures Act is too broad, too dangerous, and therefore we must bring in legislation which, to some extent, can deal with the problem in a more specific manner and remove the difficulties with which we are trying to deal. I am suggesting that once we take this attitude, once we think we can curtail civil liberties in a mild way, we are on the road to finding ourselves in serious difficulty. We are pretending this course is not dangerous. What is worse, there is an additional danger of isolating the problem to the province of Quebec and the FLQ because many people will say this legislation is better since it takes us off the hook and places on the hook those who should be there.

I am suggesting it is not possible to curtail the civil liberties of any group in this country without curtailing the civil liberties of everyone. I think whenever we see this kind of curtailment we must all continue to be on guard in respect of how it may affect us personally. It is a great mistake to try to isolate one group and pretend that the civil liberties of this country are not in danger. We just heard a very moving address by the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert. He pointed out the difficulties that are already arising as a result of the implementation of the War Measures Act. We have had admissions from the Minister of Justice that people may have been picked up who were not guilty and who have been released. What does this mean? It means we are living with an enormously dangerous instrument and it is not possible to design an instrument that is in harmony with our traditional concept of liberty in this country. The only safeguard, if there is a safeguard, is, first, that we are constantly on guard against the implications of such emergency legislation and, second, that we remove it as quickly as the emergency disappears.

I want to suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that in my view the implementation of the War Measures Act did accomplish some useful objectives. If there was an apprehended insurrection—it does not appear to be the case now—in some respects we have achieved a short term gain. However, there are many things that we have not accomplished. We had hoped to save the life of Pierre Laporte. The War Measures Act was not able to do this, and neither will this legislation. We may still be able to save the life of Mr. Cross, and all of us are hopeful that this will be possible. If the War Measures Act will in any way contribute toward this objective, then it will be helpful.

It seems to me that the chief advantage of the implementation of the War Measures Act is that we have, in some ways, won a psychological victory. For years now, people in Canada have been very concerned about violence in our society. This violence is not limited to Quebec. People have been concerned about violence in the world, violence in North America, and they have been worried that the government would be unable to cope with it. Now, I think they have to be told that violence has deeper causes than can be cured by legislation alone. But they have to be reassured that, to the extent that legislation is helpful or can be useful, the Parliament of Canada has that legislation at hand and is prepared to use it on their behalf. It seems to me that this is an important thing to say to the people of Canada. We must say to them "Don't be frightened; don't panic, Parliament can and will act if it is necessary". We have made that point.

Whether or not this bill passes, the War Measures Act will still exist. The Parliament of Canada can invoke it in an emergency if it is required. It seems to me that we will lose that short term psychological victory if we continue this or any subsequent act beyond the period of the immediate emergency. At any rate, there can be no justification now for continuing emergency legislation, let alone for contemplating writing a new piece of legislation. Rather than look back or hang on to something which in my view has done some good, we now have to direct our attention to the long term problems associated with violence in our society. Unless we do that, and unless we act quickly, we can lose the advantage we gained through the implementation of the War Measures Act.

What are those things about which we should be thinking? I do not believe legislation is the answer. It is useful up to a point, but it will not solve the problem. Although there are people who objected to the position that my leader took when he talked about the underlying root causes, the economic problems of Quebec—there are people who say that the revolutionaries are middle class, they are not poor—let there be no mistake that this is where the problem really lies. It may be that we could solve the economic problems of Quebec, and Quebec might still wish to separate. It may be that we could solve these economic problems, and there might still be violence. But let us be sure about one thing, there is a chance of success in this course. The other course, that is the use of emergency legislation, offers no chance of success. Either we solve the deep rooted problems, many of them economic, many of them social, that afflict the people of Quebec, that are real grievances in the minds of people who are not revolutionaries or fanatics, who are not terrorists, or we will have gained nothing. The turmoil and soul searching that this House has been through will have been for no purpose at all.

I think there are dangers if we continue with emergency legislation. We are going to create a whole new set of martyrs. I cannot see how you can have legislation that asserts guilt by association and say it is fair legislation or that it is an improvement over the War Measures Act. This is just not possible. Even if you remove the retroactive features of the legislation, which I think would probably make the whole bill pointless, you would still be left with legislation that is not fair. The minute you say that membership per se, or the support of any organization per se, constitutes a crime, you violate one of the basic premises on which our freedom is based. I do not think I have to demonstrate this. I am quite prepared to be tough in defence of democracy. I think that the defenders of democracy can make a mistake by being excessively permissive, but I think they are also wrong if they are tough and unfair for no good purpose.

Therefore, I think it would be a mistake for us to use the War Measures Act to charge those who are now held, and thus to create a set of martyrs. The longer they are kept in prison, the greater will be their martyrdom. Sooner or later, they will have to be let out, and sooner or later the memory of the atrocious murder of Pierre Laporte will recede from people's minds; their grievances will come to the forefront. People will forget the terrible violence and remember only their present unhappiness. This is a danger. One only has to look at the history of violence in other countries to see that many of the leaders came to their positions as a result of the martydom of imprisonment. It is difficult to think of these people as martyrs, but it is even more difficult to think of them as leaders now. However, let us learn something from the past.

There is also the danger that if we prolong this measure beyond the immediate and specific emergency, we will discredit the ability of the democratic system to operate at all. For instance, when will this legislation be withdrawn? It is becoming a crutch. The legislation will be in effect until April of next year. Is the FLQ going to go away by April? Are the difficulties in Quebec going to disappear by April? Will violence stop in Canada, in North America, in the world, by April? I do not think so. Whenever you try to withdraw this legislation, there may be some event, a death, a kidnapping, a bombing, that will prevent its withdrawal, and people will learn to live with this legislation. They will learn to justify the injustices. They will learn to forget about those who have been in prison and released, and will learn to accept this as a measure which had to be adopted, although it was unfortunate. It will become a great crutch. The police will say "we cannot operate without it". It will become more and more difficult rather than less and less difficult to remove this legislation as time goes on. Let us do it now.

To a very large extent, the House of Commons has shown its willingness to be the conscience of the nation, as some members decided to be; to be tough, as other members decided to be, but it has acted. No member in the House has stood in the way of Parliament acting decisively. Therefore, I think we could take this opportunity to withdraw this bill and withdraw the War Measures Act along with it.

The other danger is that we are going to drive the FLQ underground. The minister will probably say they are underground anyway. It is true that murderous activities are always underground, but we can deal with them through the Criminal Code. Most criminal activity that can be dealt with by the Criminal Code is underground. But let us look at the situation. Who has been picked up? The people who were underground were not picked up, but the people who were above ground, who spoke publicly and who could be identified. If you drive the FLQ underground, then you will not know who to pick up the next time; you will have to do everything in the dark.

It is important to bear this in mind. We made other organizations illegal and drove them underground. I can go along with making the FLQ illegal by implementing the War Measures Act for two weeks or ten days, because you have to act quickly when men's lives are at stake. Beyond that, you have nothing more to gain. When you have reached that point it is wise to say "We shall do what we have to do, so let's do it now".

To sum up, Mr. Chairman, I think the defenders of democracy have their point. They have proven that they can not only be fair but understanding. They have also proven they can be tough in defence of democracy. The public has been reassured by this act, and Parliament has shown that it can move quickly. It can move as quickly in the future if it has to do so.

The War Measures Act has not been repealed; it is still in effect and that should be most reassuring. Now is the time to withdraw that act, and now is the time to stop thinking of short term legal approaches. We should commit ourselves to an honest attempt at solving the long term and significant problems of the province of Quebec because those are the problems which create conditions on which violence feeds.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Chairman, during the course of this discussion on clause 2, members have attempted to point out some of the real dangers inherent in introducing the legislation that the government has brought in during the past few days. Last Thursday, when the vote was called, I was the only person who would not accept the government's justification for bringing this legislation forward.

I think I could begin by saying there is one point of complete unanimity in this House: all members would like to see an end to the problem as it has existed in the province of Quebec. What has not helped the resolution of the problem, however, has been the fanning of emotional discussion concerning the sometimes naïve interpretation of events in that province, and the simplistic and misleading suggestions that have been put forward as to the exact nature of the problem. The very fact that the problem is one of terror and disquiet has unsettled many hundreds of thousands of Canadians. To some degree or other, most people in this country, seem to believe that we have not been able to deal with the problem because it is not easily understood. The emotions of people were fanned very easily at that time with the kidnapping of Mr. Cross, and later with the kidnapping and brutal slaying of Mr. Laporte.

One of the greatest disservices of this government was that, instead of attempting to quiet down the substantial emotions in this country during this period, it has in fact done exactly the reverse. The government has fanned the flame of emotion, as the Prime Minister said last Friday night, by polarizing public opinion in this country.

Since the early days of this crisis we have been treated to a round of interpretations as to the exact nature of the problem. Viewed officially as insurrection, it has been described variously as terror, revolution, social unrest, anarchy. A whole variety of other terms have been used in an attempt to explain, not through a reasonable process of presenting facts but through an emotional charge as to the nature of the situation. Indeed, if one takes an over-view of the past five weeks, one can see that there has been a trilogy of explanation by the government.

In the early stages, particularly when the government introduced the War Measures Act, we were told both inside and outside the House by the Prime Minister and ministers of the Crown that at root this problem was so sensitive, and the apprehension of some of the key people so imminent, we could not be given all the facts. At first, it seemed that it would only be a matter of days before such facts might be available. Then, the Minister of Justice remarked, outside the House I think, that some of these facts might never be known, and if they were to become known it might not be until some time after 1972. Why he would fix on the date of 1972 one cannot but wonder.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I never said that. I think the question might have been framed that way, but I did not say it.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I am sorry if I have inadvertently misquoted the minister or if the newspaper has misquoted him. I think I am right that he said it was impossible to give the facts at that time and that he did not know when the facts would be available. Since the minister does not disagree with me, I assume he agrees.

This is the first rationale we were treated to in the light of the government's invoking of the War Measures Act. This seemed to have great credibility, and I think it had great credibility for the opposition members of this House in the early days of this crisis, that because of the difficult nature of the situation and the problem of security all the facts could not be told. Even during the debate on the War Measures Act, I questioned that assertion. I did so because I think that is always a very cute argument to allow an authority to do pretty well as it pleases. I think the parliamentary system is not well served by that response! It was not well served even in the public mind, because shortly afterwards the Prime Minister brought forth the second argument in this trilogy by a statement to the effect that the facts were well known.

There was a rehearsal of the kidnappings and other deaths attributed to the FLQ over the past seven years; the capture of a large cache of arms and dynamite; the uncertain situation in Quebec; rather veiled suggestions about some parallel power and the need for some kind of sweeping powers such as these. The story was repeated so that the people would accept it; a neat package of obvious events supposed to prove sufficient to justify the government's action. That has been the response of the Prime Minister and other ministers until recently.

However, Mr. Chairman, in the last day or so the Minister of Agriculture has decided to play his part. Last Thursday night in Manitoba, as reported by the Winnipeg Tribune on Friday, he said:

> Federal Agriculture Minister Bud Olson said here Thursday that it would have been impossible for the government to furnish documented proof that the proclamation of the War Measures Act was necessary.

Now, we come to the third stage in this trilogy of explanation and that is, that really it is not a matter of not being able to make the proof public because that would endanger the apprehension or arrest of individuals, nor that the facts are well known, but basically that it is the kind of thing you can never prove anyway. Having heard this third argument, through his answer to me this afternoon, the Prime Minister has supported it as being a cute way to round out this argument.

I hope the country will not be fooled by a later coming to terms with a basic question that has faced this government, both in the implementation of the War Measures Act and the necessity for this legislation. The fact of the matter is that it has not been shown, and this will be of increasing concern to the people of this country, that the War Measures Act regulations and this legislation are what is required in dealing with the situation in Quebec. No one in this House disagrees that steps must be taken to deal with the kind of fear that has led to the sort of paranoia we are witnessing in Quebec. That is the real effect of what has been happening. But whether the answer is that we must extend amazing powers to the police and judiciary in Quebec is something that I do not think has ever been faced by the government. The damage that will result from this legislation, as has already been said by other members of the House, has very serious implications for us.

• (4:20 p.m.)

If one needs further proof of the dangerous leadership that the Prime Minister has given to this country, one has only to look at what the Prime Minister said last Friday night on the CBC program "Encounter" when he answered questions by Mr. Pierre O'Neil. Mr. O'Neil asked the Prime Minister this question:

> Does the polarization of public opinion make it easier or tougher for you to fight separatism?

The Prime Minister replied:

> In my opinion it makes it easier. I like a country where people have to stand up and be counted. I don't like wishy-washy thinking on anything. As much as possible I like people to have clear choices. That's the way I am and that's the way I will remain. Now if Canadians prefer some more wishy-washy type of government which won't fight separatism so hard, they can elect it next time around.

There, in a capsule, we have the essence of the Prime Minister's philosophic approach to one of the most difficult problems we have ever faced in this country. It was the height of dishonesty for him to suggest on the public media of this country that this kind of problem can easily be resolved by resorting to strong opinions, to disagreements, or to simple answers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): If this question is so simple I ask why, in God's name, did the government not solve it during the past seven years instead of bringing out this kind of response to what I consider to be the most basic problem this country faces today. The Prime Minister wants people to stand up and be counted. Well, I for one have stood up and been counted.

An hon. Member: You are the only one.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I may be the only one in this House, but not the only one in this country; let no one in this House make that kind of mistake.

An hon. Member: The hon. member does not believe in democracy.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Yes, I believe in democracy. That is why I cast my vote against the measure.

Mr. McGrath: That is why the hon. member stood up.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I will let the people be my judge. I, for one, had no doubts, especially after hearing the Prime Minister suggest that simply by polarizing public opinion we could resolve this most difficult human problem.

What does this legislation do, Mr. Chairman? Notwithstanding the proclamations and window dressing of the Minister of Justice and others, it does pretty much what the War Measures Act does. Basically, it is the same sort of legislation. The chassis of it is the War Measures Act regulations, but its body has been made a bit more attractive. The government has been trying to make the measure more palatable for those who are not willing to go to the heart of the problem, for those who believe that the problem can be dealt with by outlawing membership or support for organizations such as the FLQ, by providing for a detention period not of seven days but of 90 days, and by introducing a retroactive provision involving people who may or may not have been active members of an organization half a dozen years ago. I, for one, feel that this bill will do the country great damage.

I am also disturbed because this will not be the final discussion that we shall have on legislation of this sort. For reasons that are not fully explainable, I think the Prime Minister has set himself on a new course. The defender of civil liberties of ancient days will not be seen acting as he has acted up until now. I say that because of another reply the Prime Minister gave on the program "Encounter" after having been question by Mr. Charles Lynch. Mr. Lynch asked:

> Are you ready for a renewal of the situation that confronted you a month ago?

The Prime Minister replied:

> I think all Parties in the House are, and that's why they've agreed to consider the introduction eventually of something a little short of the War Measures Act,—

We are to have something a little short of the War Measures Act. I find it passing strange that people who greatly treasure their liberties—and within a day or two we shall commemorate the sacrifices of our men in two great world conflicts who fought in order to protect our basic freedoms—should publicly accept a government statute which will inhibit and greatly limit the freedoms and responsibilities that have existed in this country. If this legislation is but a prelude to what the Prime Minister calls "something a little short of the War Measures Act" then I for one will not accept it and will not vote for it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Supporters of the government have suggested that there has been much fuzzy thinking in this House. There may have been much fuzzy thinking in many parts of the House, but that is what happens when solid information is lacking. I think there has been much fuzzy thinking by government benches with respect to what is required in the law.

Perhaps at the risk of stepping into an area in which I have no professional experience, I may be allowed to read two sections of the Quebec Coroners Act. As I understand it, this law is in force today. This act, brought into force on June 29, 1967, sounds like a fairly inoffensive piece of legislation. Allow me to read section 22, to show what powers are available to the authorities of Quebec in dealing with some of the very real problems that exist:

> 22. When the coroner is of the opinion that a person whose testimony he deems necessary will fail or refuse to be present at the inquest, he may order such person arrested, with or without a warrant, and brought before him within twenty-four hours after his arrest or, if that is impossible, within the shortest possible delay; the coroner may then, in order to ensure his presence at the inquest, require bail of such person or direct that such person be detained in a common gaol.

Mr. Woolliams: Every coroners act includes a clause like that.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I have used the Quebec Coroners Act as an example.

Mr. Woolliams: A death must take place before that section can be operative.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): A death has taken place. I say that the temporary emergency powers bill goes beyond what is needed. The second paragraph of the Coroners Act reads:

> No person shall be so detained for more than eight days without being brought again before the coroner;—

The Coroners Act provides that a man shall not be detained for more than eight days; that goes a good deal farther than the provisions of this legislation.

By citing this act, I am not trying to say that it is the answer to our legislative problems; I will not go into all the ramifications of the legislation, because this has been dealt with by other hon. members. I am simply saying that we have been badly misled into thinking that the only answer for dealing with terrorism, sedition and the sort of violence taking place in Quebec is new and massive legislation. I think government members suffer from some sort of absentmindedness when they forget the kind of federal and provincial legislation exists in this field.

Later we shall have the chance to discuss the ramifications of specific parts of the bill. The clause we are considering contains definitions. According to those definitions almost anyone may be apprehended. For instance, clause 2 (c) reads:

—'statements' includes words spoken or written or recorded electronically or electromagnetically or otherwise, and gestures, signs or other visible representations;—

One wonders at the limits of the definition; there is a possibility of arrest, charge and conviction for almost anyone.

I will not enter into details at this point. I want to say something about what this bill obviously does not do, and what is so desperately important about the problem we face here this afternoon. The Minister of Justice may have indicated, in an answer in this afternoon's question period, how difficult this problem is. One of the basic problems is not even dealt with in this bill. I refer to the degree of the effectiveness or otherwise of police detection and the over-all effectiveness of the courts and prosecution. The different stories that have been presented over the past four or five weeks show that there is some need for farreaching adjustments to the present police work being carried on in the province of Quebec. To try and masquerade that problem by hiding behind this kind of legislation, which gives more farreaching powers to an agency that may not be effective, seems to be compounding the difficulty and not alleviating it.

As pointed out in the popular press, there has been little willingness on the part of this government to consider its own Royal commission report on security. That report clearly sets out that there must be some major changes in our security provisions if the country is not to be endangered. I do not know how serious the government took that report, but by and large it chose to ignore it. The time has now come for the government and Parliament to seriously consider it. I also point out that the security aspect is not covered in this bill.

As pointed out by some members of this House and a number of perceptive commentators in Canada, underlying the problems of Quebec is the serious economic situation in that province, something which is not new. In addition, there are the more recent and grave implications involving unemployment and labour unrest. It is the duty of this government to address itself to those questions with the greatest possible urgency and concern. The Prime Minister sometimes gives the impression in this House that all of these problems are minor in nature and have been more or less dealt with to his satisfaction. They have not been dealt with to the satisfaction of the people of the province of Quebec. Unless the government realizes that fact, they are not going to stamp out the root causes of terrorism and unrest in Quebec or anywhere else. This cannot be done by the use of more repressive legislation. Fourth, we have to realize—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee give unanimous consent to the hon. member completing his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I thank the committee. I will try to be reasonably short. Fourth, there was a very great loss of public morale, in the city of Montreal particularly, and in the province of Quebec generally. I find it odd that the Prime Minister never questioned the reason why hon. members from Quebec on both sides of the chamber so willingly voted in support of the steps being taken. His interpretation is that what he is doing is absolutely right. That is his privilege. Looking a little deeper, I suggest that the unanimity on the part of the Quebec members was an indication of the tremendous sense of fear, indeed the word fear is too weak to indicate the panic that existed amongst the people of the city of Montreal and the province of Quebec during the past few weeks.

It could be argued that by adopting these sweeping measures the government has, in effect, restored the loss of public morale. That may be true on the short term, but I fear for the long term. One can only reflect on the extent to which it would be very easy, if indeed acts of terrorism were to recur in one month, three months or three years, for the people of Montreal and the province of Quebec to have a much better understanding of the problem, if they could see that root causes of terror were being removed. The response of massive police and military intervention is immediate and effective, but it carries with it great dangers. Its successful termination of the problem may be shallow.

We must recognize that there has been a substantial body of opinion in the province of Quebec that has been increasingly alienated, not only from the federal system of government which we have in this country, but from the total operation of government. We must not accept that kind of feeling passively or simply react with hostility. We must try to understand and resolve those frustrations in the best interests of the country, not by appealing to the worst instincts of men, violence, prejudice and hatred, but by appealing to their best instincts, idealism, humanitarianism and participation. If we do that, we will have no just cause to fear. If we place our inner and physical security on repressive legislation, we will do little to deal with the root cause of violence which is what this debate is all about.

How are we going to deal with the problem of violence? Through invoking the War Measures Act regulations and by introducing this bill, the government has indicated that these are the necessary laws to deal with violence. By reading this bill and the War Measures Act regulations, I, not being a lawyer, find that they state what is to be done after the violence has occurred. Are we incapable of responding in some fashion and only able to deal with situations of such proportionate violence after they have occurred? We must address ourselves to the causes and prevention of violence in our country. That is our basic responsibility. If we do not do that, it may appear by the repressive measures that we are taking, and the publicity included in the process, that we are giving some aura of attractiveness and even martyrdom to those who least deserve it. Not only must justice be done, but it must appear to be done so that violence will not occur in our society.

The right hon. member for Prince Albert described one process that would balance the tremendous powers the government feels are necessary with the responsibility it has to the people of this country. The government is again hoping to have these powers accepted through this temporary public order bill. If the government, in good conscience, feels such legislation is necessary, it has a duty to provide some kind of balance to these sweeping powers. We have heard about the possibility of parliamentary committees. Indications are there will be amendments suggesting judicial commissions.

Shortly following World War II there was a national crisis in this country. The then Prime Minister came into possession of a network of intelligence that was being communicated to a foreign nation. There was the great danger that there had developed a very elaborate spy system in this country. At that time the Prime Minister decided to take extraordinary powers to arrest and detain certain individuals. He also appointed the Taschereau and Kellock Commission, which reported to Parliament on an interim basis, and on the termination of the commission made a final report. I am speaking of course about the Gouzenko affair.

The Gouzenko affair was not exactly parallel to the present situation, but it was a national crisis. It was recognized that the government required special and sweeping powers. The Liberal government of that day felt that it was not sufficient to simply say, "We know what is best. We have the facts, but the need for these powers will be difficult to prove; just give us the powers." They said: We shall take these powers but we shall ensure the public welfare by setting up an independent judicial commission which will report to Parliament. It must surely seem reasonable to members of this committee, and to citizens of this country as a whole, that any government which seeks such powers as have been exercised for the past three weeks should also be ready to commit itself to a role of public stewardship, and the only means by which I see this being done is the establishment of a judicial commission of the kind suggested. I wonder whether the government of the day can really believe it is exercising a public trust unless it accepts this kind of discipline and this kind of stewardship on behalf of the people.

[Translation]

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Chairman, regarding clause 2, I would have three remarks.

First, concerning clause 2 (d), one might, at first sight, find it purposeless. As a matter of fact, it is not so, for its main purpose, I think, is to make an equivalence in English between "the unlawful association" and "an unlawful association", and in French between "l'association illégale" and "une association illégale". I feel this is deplorable. Indeed, it is because of this clause 2 (d) that, in the remainder of the bill, there will be no further reference to "an unlawful association" but only to "the unlawful association". In other words, this clause is used to conceal, psychologically so to speak, the fact that this bill not only affects the FLQ, as stated earlier, even in the preamble, but also other associations.

Clause 4 says that it is prohibited to be a member of the unlawful association. Well, under clause 2 (d), it should be "an unlawful association", and I will show that in clause 3, it cannot be defined. In fact, each time the expression, "the unlawful association" appears in the bill, it should read instead, "an unlawful association".

Accordingly, I suggest first that clause 2 (d) be simply removed.

My second comment has to do with the logical sequence in the wording of the bill. Clause 2 is entitled, "Interpretation", and it defines some words. Then, I do not see why clause 3 could not be included in clause 2 where phrases such as "communicate", "peace officer", "statements" and "the unlawful association" are defined. I think that clause 3, which gives a definition of "unlawful association" should replace the present clause 2 (d).

I propose to introduce the following change, which is only editorial and does not alter the substance of the wording:

"Unlawful association" means the group of persons or association known as the Front de Libération du Québec, any successor group or successor association thereof, as well as any group or association that advocates the use or force or crime to accomplish or as an aid in accomplishing the same or substantially the same governmental change within Canada as that advocated by the said Front de Libération du Québec.

Again, I propose to substitute the wording of clause 3 to clause 2 (d) and later on I will deal with the substance of clause 3.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, here is my most important comment which refers to clause 2 (b). When you look closely for the purpose of this act, you notice that obviously it is not to decree heavier sentences. As a matter of fact, sections 60 and 62 of the Criminal Code stipulate that a person who advocates, without using it, the use of force to overthrow the government is liable to 14 years imprisonment, while under the present bill, the person who not only advocates, as stated in the Criminal Code, but effectively engages in the use of force, as stated in clause 4, (g), is liable to imprisonment of only five years.

Therefore, the bill under study obviously does not intend to prescribe heavier sentences. Thus, we must look elsewhere for the characteristics of this bill.

Nonetheless, in my opinion, if this project does present basic features which provide a unique and exceptional character that is reflected in the powers it bestows on policemen under the authority of clause 9(1), to arrest without warrant any suspected persons.

That is the main thing, and I admit it with humbleness and vigour, so true is it that all Canadians agree to punish those who are guilty of the worst crime of all, to threaten this freedom of ours.

• (4:50 p.m.)

So the argument is elsewhere; the danger of clause 9(1) is to arrest innocents on mere suspicion.

You may answer that this misfortune is inevitable. I then shall answer: let us make it a little less inevitable. According to section 2 of the Criminal Code the expression "peace officer" includes:

(a) a mayor, warden, reeve, sheriff, deputy sheriff, sheriff's officer and justice of the peace;

(b) a warden, deputy warden, instructor, keeper, gaoler, guard and any other officer or permanent employee of a prison.

(c) a police officer, police constable, bailiff, constable or other person employed for the preservation and maintenance of the public peace or for the service or execution of civil process;

Many of these people do not come under police authority at all, and, in this specific instance, under the Quebec Police Act. The implication is that those many individuals will be empowered to make arrests on grounds of mere suspicion under clause 9(1) and keep people in jail up to seven days, or up to three days without the consent of the Attorney General who, evidently, cannot personally study each prisoner's file.

All the classes of persons I have just enumerated are peace officers, as defined in clause 2. They will be empowered, under clause 9(1), to arrest people because of mere suspicion and this without being liable to any suits for damages. The fact that arrest per se is a denial of justice is borne out by the Criminal Code's stipulation that arrest without warrant cannot be resorted to in the field of what are called, in our jargon, "criminal offenses". As a matter of fact, it can be used only if a person is caught red handed. Then, to arrest without warrant, the police must see the person really committing the offence. Only in the matter of crimes, he may arrest without warrant if he has reasonable and probable grounds, according to Section 435 of the Criminal Code.

Now, I suggest that precisely because it is a law of exception, this power should not be granted to an officer of the peace, under subclause (1) of clause 9, that is the power to make an arrest without warrant merely on suspicion. Too many people fall in this category.

Here is an example out of a thousand: The mayor of a small municipality is suspecting three bearded men who have just arrived. He will be able to put them under arrest merely on this suspicion.

Here is another example: During a municipal election campaign, the mayor suspects that his opponent wants to use "telegraphers", according to the familiar term, meaning impersonators on election day. He could then under such suspicion and without any recourse, under clause 9(1) and under one subclause in clause 4, subclause (g) in particular, arrest and detain his opponent during the last three days of the campaign.

Thus, honest people cannot help thinking that Dr. Bellemarre's arrest at the last municipal elections in Montreal was motivated by such considerations.

I therefore conclude as follows. I move that clause 2(b) be rewritten so as to limit this power of arrest without warrant—which is one of the main points of this legislation—to the limited classes of persons specified in the orders in council of the Governor General or of a Lieutenant Governor in council.

Finally, I remind the House that peace officers who for weeks have prevented some prisoners from seeing their lawyers—a right which is recognized in the Canadian Bill of Rights and which is not abrogated by the invocation of the War Measures Act—may have violated sections 408 and 107 of the Criminal Code.

In short, I wish to propose three amendments. First, subclause (d) should be struck out. In my view, it changes the whole aspect of this bill in which the words "unlawful association" are often repeated. Under that subclause those words cannot be used. Second, there is no logical order in the bill. In clause 2, "unlawful association" should be defined. Third, I propose that the definition of "peace officer" in subclause (b) of clause 2 be restricted to a category of persons, the list of which to be proclaimed by an order of the governor in council or the lieutenant-governors in council.

This is all I have to say about clause 2, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please, I would draw the hon. member's attention to the fact that if he wishes to propose his amendments at this stage, it must be done in writing so that the chair may get acquainted with the precise contents.

Mr. De Bané: I can submit them immediately, Mr. Chairman.

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: Was the hon. member for Timiskaming rising for the purpose of participating in the debate?

Mr. Peters: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: The chair will recognize the hon. member for Timiskaming while looking at the amendments that have been put to the committee.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I have been very concerned, as I am sure have other Canadians, over the situation that has developed in the last month in our nation and how the government reacted to the events in the province of Quebec. I think everyone would agree that as the picture in the province of Quebec unfolds, less and less light is being shed and more and more confusion is being created about what the government knew to warrant such sweeping powers as those in the War Measures Act being invoked.

I have had the opportunity of reading the newspaper report of the evidence given by Lortie at the inquest, and the whole thing sounds to me very much like a play. Everything had been rehearsed, and more was being left unsaid than was actually said. I think as more people take the opportunity of studying the evidence that is adduced, they will come to the conclusion that the longer the matter is before us the less likelihood there will be for thinking Members of Parliament to consider extending the terms of this type of legislation in a situation that obviously does not warrant the consideration it previously received.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. In order to permit the House to proceed to the consideration of private members' business, it is my duty to leave the Chair.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. Forrestal), the Canadian economy; the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), regional economic expansion; the hon. member for South Western Nova (Mr. Comeau) manpower.

It being five o'clock p.m. the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely notices of motions, public bills.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

CHANGE IN OPPOSITION ALLOTTED DAY

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think it is generally known that there is mutual agreement to have our opposition allotted day on Thursday rather than tomorrow. However, in order that the Order Paper may reflect this agreement, I think something has to be said about it in the House. In fact, I think it is necessary for a minister of the Crown to withdraw the designation of Tuesday as an allotted day and make a new designation for Thursday. Perhaps the Minister of Justice will oblige.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is perfectly correct. Discussions have been held, and if the House agrees we would designate tomorrow to continue the present debate on Bill C-181, if the debate is not concluded by ten o'clock this evening, to be followed, if debate is concluded tomorrow on Bill C-181, by Bill C-182, an act to provide for the examination, publication and scrutiny of regulations and other statutory instruments, which is also under the name of the Minister of Justice. The rest of the business to follow will be that originally indicated by the Government House Leader.

On Wednesday the House will not sit, and Thursday will be designated as an opposition day, the subject of which is at the option of the members of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions along these lines and, while we would like to see this debate concluded tonight, I understand the arrangements are made in the event it does not. We concur in them.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The House has been informed of the work program for the rest of the week. I do not think there is need to ask for agreement unless somebody else wants to comment. I will now call Private Members' Business.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If there is no disagreement, it is agreed.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): You are perfectly right, Mr. Speaker, it is agreed. That is the way it is.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I don't need to ask if the House is agreeable, but is there agreement to the suggestion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' NOTICES OF MOTIONS

CREDIT RECORDS

REQUEST FOR MEASURE TO PROTECT PRIVACY

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of introducing legislation to protect the privacy of every person against the improper disclosure of credit rating records and to protect the reputation of every person against misinformation contained in such records.

He said: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I hope you will pay attention to the fact that five minutes of private members' hour today have been taken up with government business, and I hope that provision will be made today to make up for that lost time because this is a very important motion. I know that many members of the House would like to participate in this debate. I know a number of hon. members opposite, including the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis), are very anxious to participate in it. I know it is a subject upon which we are all in agreement. I know they are just as anxious as I am to have the government bring down legislation to protect the consumer.

I am sorry the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) is not present because I was going to quote him as an authority on the need for protection of privacy. At the outset, I want to make it clear that I shall not take up all the time allotted to me because I believe there is agreement that a decision should be taken on the motion. All my motion asks is that the government give consideration to the advisability of introducing legislation. As I say, I know most hon. members are just as anxious as I am to have the government do that.

The Minister of Justice, in a very interesting paper which I am sure all hon. members have read, delivered at a seminar at Queen's University in May of this year, said:

> The erosion of privacy is the beginning of the end of freedom.

He also said in the same paper:

> The orbit of privacy will be an ever-shrinking one, but the need for privacy will become more paramount than ever. The law must ensure that the right to privacy remains sacrosanct.

I believe that this is a very serious matter. I think that 1984 is almost here. In this age of computers and data banks the citizens of Canada have no protection against false and misleading information which is often fed into computer banks and data processing centres—

Mr. Gibson: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. McGrath: No, I will not permit an interruption from the hon. gentleman who can make a speech on his own time.

Mr. Gibson: I just want to a ask a question.

Mr. McGrath: I am sure that the hon. member, who is so anxious to interrupt me, has never had this problem because he was brought into this world with a silver spoon in his mouth and he doesn't know what we are talking about. But, if he does, perhaps he will favour us with a contribution to the debate before the hour is over.

There is a growing concern in this country over the question of the invasion of privacy, particularly with regard to commercial reporting agencies which gather information from peoples neighbours and friends, and sometimes from competitors, in order to report on individuals to credit card plans, to industries, to retailers, to banks, and in many cases to government agencies. When I think of the information, stored by computers of all sorts, on personal matters I just wonder whether the government or the private sector is going to win the race to 1984, which I believe is almost here.

I can accept the existence, indeed the need, for these reporting agencies. I believe that in many instances they perform a very useful and necessary function in helping to facilitate the business and commerce of the country, and in helping to avoid bad debts. However, what I object to is the fact that these agencies are allowed to function in a completely unregulated fashion. The time has come when we should give consideration to bringing in legislation which would make it necessary for these reporting agencies to apply for federal licences and to operate under the terms of those licences.

I know that hon. members will agree that this is an area of growing concern. It is one we read a great deal about. Indeed, many of us are becoming growingly concerned over the widespread use of computers and the techniques that are being developed to assimilate information about every single one of us, and about our private acts. While individuals may have partial rights to checking the information in these information banks, as legislators it is incumbent on us to ensure that the individual has complete rights in this particular regard. Most Canadians frequently voice a claim to the right to privacy as a basic right in our society. If we were to ask for 20 definitions of what we understood by that right to privacy perhaps we might come up with 20 different definitions. However, I am sure we would all be in agreement on one thing, the right of the individual to have his reputation protected from unscrupulous credit reporting, reporting against which he has no redress.

It is an awesome thing to consider that in this computer age with techniques so sophisticated that computers can store every minute detail of every piece of information. Already in California, a new model laser has been developed which is capable of providing 645 million items of data on a single square inch of magnetic tape. This means that this technique could efficiently store data in respect of every single citizen of Canada. Robert Merton, in his book "Social Theory and Social Structure" said:

> Privacy is not merely a personal predilection; it is an important functional requirement for the effective operation of social structure. Social systems must provide for a portion of the self which is kept apart, immune from social surveillance.

We must act now, I believe, to protect the individual whose rights and whose reputation could and, in many instances, often are taken away by false and misleading information without the individual concerned having any redress whatsoever. When we consider the enormity of this at a time when we are approaching what has been termed a cashless society, a society of credit cards, data information and computerized systems, then obviously the need exists for action to be taken soon.

I know hon. members will raise the question of jurisdiction. I know some hon. members who are very anxious to participate in this debate, and who are anxious to see the resolution brought to a conclusion by having a vote on it, will raise the problem of jurisdiction and the constitutional limitations placed upon Parliament. I would point out, however, that the Parliament of Canada has already acted in many areas by bringing in legislation which requires consumer protection from unjust, false credit reports. For example, the Small Loans Act, the Bank Act, and indeed some provisions of the Income Tax Act come to mind. But apart altogether from these specific areas in which the government already has acted in a legislative way, recognizing the rights of the provinces in the area of proposed changes, what rights do I as a Canadian living in the province of Newfoundland enjoy if that province has no legislation in respect of credit agencies. In the province of Ontario there may be such legislation or, if not, it certainly is contemplated. But I would not enjoy the protection of the Ontario legislation if I did not live in that province.

For this reason, I believe as a federal Parliament we have a responsibility to act in this particular area. I believe there are many and ample constitutional precedents for doing so. Mr. Speaker, I know hon. members are becoming impatient to make their contribution. Before I conclude, however, I should like to refer hon. members to recommendation No. 18 of the Special Joint Committee on Consumer Credit. This committee did not make many very specific recommendations, but one specific recommendation it made concerned the setting up of a federal-provincial committee on consumer credit. Here, surely, the need for such a committee is manifest because the federal government must take the responsibility of protecting Canadians from being victimized by these computer banks, these data processing agencies and credit agencies, which go around collecting this information and selling it in many cases to the highest bidder. In many cases these agencies destroy the reputations of individuals involved without their ever having had any knowledge of it. Mr. Speaker, I commend this motion to members of the House. I ask that they support it and allow it to come to a vote.

Mr. Colin D. Gibson (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, may I say very briefly that if there are any silver spoons lying around this chamber, I would be very glad if someone would give one to me. They are rather scarce so far as I can tell. My hon. friend raises a very interesting problem, but I submit there is really no substance to his motion. I do not say that disparagingly because I think it is a provocative motion and a subject matter into which we should all be looking, along with the subject of wiretapping, eavesdropping and the general problems created by the invasion of privacy. However, I question whether in law there is actually a specific right to privacy. We have invasions by the media, by the telephone, and by all types of people who interfere with our lives to some extent. It is a question of just where the line should be drawn. I submit it would be very easy for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) to bring in very stiff regulations and restraints against improper disclosure of credit information, but how does one enforce these things? Would our time as parliamentarians not be better spent in seeking...

Mr. McGrath: Licensing.

Mr. Gibson: Please; do you want to ask a question?

[Mr. McGrath.]

Mr. McGrath: I was answering your question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I remind both hon. members that they might address their remarks to the Chair.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I apologize for taking up the hon. member's time. I am sure he is anxious to proceed.

Mr. Gibson: Mr. Speaker, I am interested in proceeding, but I question the value of bringing in a lot of words which would look great in print, and probably help win a few votes, but which would do little to alleviate the situation until technology has advanced sufficiently to take care of these breaches of which my hon. friend complains. I have not heard any evidence from my learned friend concerning a number of flagrant breaches or abuses of these credit reports. There does not seem to be any mass outcry from anyone. I do not know whether my friend has received letters of complaint from Canadian citizens. I have had none, and I have heard of none having been received by members either on my side of the House or on his side of the House.

With great respect, may I say that I think the hon. member is really drumming up an issue which does not exist as an enforceable matter. We could pass regulations and make long impassioned speeches about the right to privacy which is not inscribed in any textbook on common law or in any statute. What is the right to privacy? There are the offences under trespass, assault, libel or slander. I really submit the law on libel and slander is probably the most efficient law by which to approach these wrongs. If it is possible to trace the person who maliciously or unfairly promoted an improper credit rating, there is action in the courts. The courts will find the damages. I say, leave it to a jury. A jury is composed of men who are very fair in sizing up the parties and in considering the merits of a situation. The jury would give consideration to the specific type of abuse to which my friend refers.

I suggest that basically the subject matter would be found to come within the purview of civil rights rather than credit and security regulations and, therefore, would come under the law of libel or slander rather than under any special legislation on credit which would normally come within the provincial sphere. If the House should find that the matter should be referred to a committee for consideration, I suggest that it be dealt with not in isolation but in the broader context of abuses by way of eavesdropping, wiretapping and the other so-called breaches of privacy, upon which I think legislation is needed.

• (5:20 p.m.)

The individual needs to have protection from abuses of this type, and the whole trend of our modern living is an attempt to catch up with the tremendous technological advances made by science. We have computers and we are worried in Canada today about whether we have control over our sources of information as a result of foreign computer industries entering the country. We have to look at these problems in the context of a changing society, the post industrial era.

I submit that my hon. friend's motion has a lot of merit because it stimulates thought. I do not criticize him for it at all. I think it is great that we have this kind of discussion and research, and we should plod on with it. However, I would rather have seen some constructive ideas advanced regarding how he would propose to enforce the regulations. Does he envisage a sort of control board of counter-detective agencies or counter-electronic devices checking on officials? We might end up in a quagmire of electronic spying wars. This may be what it will come to, but I hope it never does. I hope that our teaching process will somehow develop the kind of Canadian most of us know, the kind of person who does not believe in snooping and backhanded methods. We will get there eventually, but we are certainly a long way from being able to control this situation.

My hon. friend did not specify what committee would deal with this matter if it ever gets to a committee. The Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs dealt with the problem of wire tapping and eavesdropping. In spite of having had the Bell Telephone Company before it, and having had a demonstration of the type of electronic eavesdropping devices and wire tapping devices that are used, no conclusive legislation has been advanced to date.

We are hoping that the government, with the research staff it has available and, I hope, with its friendly relationship with the computer industry, will be able to find some practical answers. But then, we still have the unanswered question of enforcement. Will this be left in the hands of the police force or will it be left to the Attorney General? There are advantages one way and the other.

If my hon. friend's motion were to succeed, what department of government would undertake the administration of this measure? What sort of tribunal would be set up to enforce it? What sort of administrative group would work under the agency? What sort of cost would be involved? I submit that you would perhaps inhibit the value of having any creditable reports, and you would end up with an expense that would be positive but a result that would be negative. For those reasons, I am opposing the motion.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): The hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Gibson) who just finished made a typical speech, the kind he usually makes. Whenever a subject is discussed or a proposal made that something be done to alleviate the difficulties of ordinary citizens, one can be certain that the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth, if he is in the House, will rise, and in his own inimitable way, will defend the rights of those who are privileged to exploit those who are being mistreated in our society.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Orlikow: I wonder if the hon. member has followed the work of his own government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Gibson: I suggest that this is the type of second rate, lowbrow, personal insinuation—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Orlikow: I wonder if the hon. member has followed the work of his own government? Has he gone back to the studies and reports of the Joint Committee on Consumer Credit, the co-chairman of which was the present Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford)? I wonder whether the hon. member has followed the work of the government department concerned with credit problems. I do not have my files with me today but the minister has spoken on more than one occasion, as have other members, about the need to protect the rights of ordinary citizens. I suppose the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth, who was born with a silver spoon in his mouth, does not have to worry about having to live on credit. He is in that privileged 1 per cent of the population that does not. But the rest of the people of Canada have to worry about buying a house with a mortgage, about buying a refrigerator, a stove, a car or television set on credit; very few people in Canada, even people in the middle and upper income brackets, can pay cash.

If they do not pay cash, somebody has to do a review of their credit. One cannot blame the company which is making the sale for wanting to get some assurance that the person who wants to make the purchase will meet his payments. So retailers, mortgage companies, carry out credit checks on people who want to make purchases, and I do not fault them for that. How do they do it? We know something about that. A lot of studies have been carried out about it. The hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth obviously has not read any of them because he is not interested, but many studies have been made and the information is pretty clear. Retailers go to other retailers, as they should, to find out if the person who wants to make a purchase and who wants credit has been paying his bills.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth is rising again on a question of privilege.

Mr. Gibson: The hon. member has implied that I did not attend committee meetings. I attended them all, but I do not recall one occasion on which he was there, and if he was, he has not made any contribution whatsoever.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I think hon. members would make a better contribution to this debate if they tried to stay on the subject matter rather than on such ancillary matters as committee meetings.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not think the hon. gentleman should be allowed to take up the limited time in this debate on pseudo questions of privilege.

Mr. Orlikow: I am discussing the question which is down for debate. May I say, for the information of the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth that I was on that committee only in the years before the member came to this House. When he says I was not there; that is the kind of stupid thing which I would expect from the hon. member. It may be the hon. member was there. If he was there, he certainly sat there with closed ears because he absorbed nothing.

I will now come back to the problem of the motion which is under discussion. What the hon. member who moved the motion is saying is that the person who wants credit should be told—I presume, and I listened to him very carefully—about the adverse things which may be said about him by certain people. That is all that is being proposed. I say that retailers and other people who are making sales go to other retailers for information. They also go to neighbours and to supposed friends. Let us suppose the neighbour does not like the person who wants credit and says that that person has a reputation for being drunk, for moving too frequently or for living with somebody who is not his wife. All these are examples which have been documented again and again in newspaper stories in every part of Canada. That information goes on the credit report, and a company decides that it will not extend credit to the person who wants to make a purchase because of these allegations.

• (5:30 p.m.)

The hon. member makes the ridiculous suggestion that one can go to court and sue. Of course one can, if one knows the misdemeanour, the mistake or the allegation made against the person. But if it sits in the credit file, unsupported and unknown, how is the person who has been adversely affected by misinformation to go to court? Of course he cannot, and the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Gibson) knows that; he is not stupid. But he does not want them to have the protection which would be given under this proposal. It is as simple as that. He is fronting, as he so often does, for the interests that do not want that kind of disclosure.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: That is unadulterated nonsense.

Mr. Orlikow: The hon. member has already spoken, and I enjoyed his remarks. The record tomorrow will prove how ridiculous he is. If one can be serious with that member, Mr. Speaker—and that is difficult—I tell him that before he speaks out criticizing a member of the opposition, he should take a look at what his government and ministers are proposing. If he did that, he would see that what is proposed in this motion is four square with what the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is moving toward, and that is that we have more and more disclosure of information for the consumer and that the consumer be given the protection which he has not had in our society all these years.

If the hon. member would listen to his own minister and follow the course which the minister is moving toward, he would not attack members of the opposition who are in fact, by making a proposal like this, endorsing and supporting the views so frequently expressed by the minister. Mr. Speaker, I close by saying to the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth that with friends like him, the minister does not need enemies.

Mr. Douglas A. Hogarth (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, this is the first opportunity I have had this session to speak in private members' hour. It appears to me that of all the rules of the House which require reform, private members' hour should be looked into first. It must appear to be a hopeless task to the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) to put before the House a resolution with the validity of this one, knowing that the whole matter must be considered within one hour with only a remote hope that the government will ever adopt it. Only in that remote hope is there any value at all in putting forward this resolution.

Those of us with bills which have been discussed in private members' hour have given a great deal of thought to reforming the rules of the House, perhaps by the creation of a committee on ways and means or some of the many other methods available, so that this hour, with the good ideas so often projected in it, should have some meaning and purport.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hogarth: I am equally concerned that both members opposite have made an attack upon our friend, the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Gibson). I do not think that those who suggest they have been born in poverty—and I do not think there is much poverty among them—should attack a person because from birth he has been more fortunate. I have always found the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth to be most concerned with people from all walks of life, regardless of his own background.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hogarth: I am surprised that the hon. member for St. John's East did not present this motion in bill form. I find the motion to be extremely restrictive. It provides that the government should consider the advisability of introducing legislation to protect the privacy of every person against the improper disclosure of credit rating records and to protect the reputation of every person against any misinformation contained in such records. First of all, there is no suggestion by the hon. member for St. John's East that a person cannot be investigated without his knowledge, and it appears to me that this is where a great deal of the evil arises out of records of this nature. When a person is investigated without his knowledge, hearsay evidence creeps into such a report, he is never presented with a copy of it, and for reasons never made known to him his contractual ability is affected. I think that, per se, is grossly unfair.

More and more we are coming to consider the protection of the privacy of the individual, making it the subject matter of modern legislation. More and more we are aware of the fantastic and overwhelming power of not only government but of bodies corporate acting in the commercial field within our society. Certainly, last year in the Justice Committee we spent a great deal of time on the invasion of privacy by electronic devices. Many provincial governments have passed legislation dealing with the subject. It is interesting to note from the Speech from the Throne that we can anticipate legislation along that line from this government.

In conjunction with this matter I would like to consider the problems pertaining to the storage of information about the person, the ability of machines to consolidate tremendous amounts of information about one person or many persons and to make it readily available throughout the world. Control of these machines and the organizations behind them must be a matter of great concern. One frightful aspect of this which is in the minds of us all is that of "Big Brother". As George Orwell wrote in "1984", the concept of government completely overshadows the privacy and right of the individual. The prospect of international corporations and multiconglomerate corporations having access to these data banks and the like which could so affect the individual in his daily life, is rather frightening. I think it is something with which we are concerned now and must be concerned about in the future.

As I have suggested, this resolution is relatively narrow in that it deals only with a very minor problem in relation to the whole issue. I have doubts about several aspects of the resolution. First of all, it has been suggested that it is a question that should properly be put in the hands of the federal government from a constitutional point of view. Certainly, it might be said to come within banks and banking, but it would not affect the many financial institutions which are subject only to the laws of the provinces in which they operate. Nor would it affect protective agencies which are under the law of the provinces and which so often find the information about which the hon. member complains.

It is certainly questionable whether it applies to the criminal law, though it is probably closer to that than any other aspect of the powers of the government of Canada. In that respect I am inclined to the view that it is far closer to provincial powers than to the Constitution. For my part, I am inclined to suggest that a resolution of this nature be left with the provincial government. In any event, the revelation of the material contemplated in the resolution might well be libellous and actionable if the motives of the person releasing it were not bona fide under the circumstances. I think it would be improper, under certain circumstances, to release such information even if it were the truth.

There are many circumstances which arise whereupon the disclosure of such information is very valuable to citizens of the community. For instance, somebody in the ordinary process of collecting judgment in the courts who wished to examine the ability of a judgment debtor to pay, would find this information of value, and surely it should be made available to the judgment creditor. I can think of many other situations that might arise which would limit this resolution in its present context.

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I too have sympathy for the hon. member's notice of motion and I commend him for bringing it forward. It is not too often that I disagree with the conclusions of the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Gibson), but in this instance I am at odds with some of them. That is one of the great things about being Liberals; we are not afraid to disagree among ourselves.

I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) might have said more on this motion instead of attacking an hon. member of this House. I suppose that since he is a member of one of the smaller opposition parties in the House, he and his group are seldom subject to criticism. As a result, they have become unduly sensitive. That has been demonstrated by the leadership contest, so called, that has taken place and powder puff fights that have taken place among leaders of that party.

The hon. member who introduced the notice of motion has not suggested that it is the be-all and end-all of this matter. I think he was probably right in not introducing a bill and in bringing this matter forward in the form of notice of motion. For the first time I have heard that hon. member admit that he does not have all the answers. That is quite right. I think he suggested that the problems raised by the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth ought to be given careful scrutiny, and that they should be embodied in a government bill.

I have found, in talking to former clients of mine, that many of them have experienced difficulty in establishing a good credit rating or any credit rating. They see nothing wrong with someone inquiring about their credit background and very often say to the inquirer, "Go and speak to my bank manager." Often they mention someone with whom they have done business.

The notice of motion we are considering is carefully worded. The hon. member suggests that the government should consider the advisability of introducing legislation to protect the privacy of every person against the improper disclosure of credit rating records. That is the part that appeals to me. Very often an individual with a poor credit rating is unaware of his rating. Very often his poor credit rating results from an incident that took place when he was a young man and new in business. Perhaps then he was unable to pay a bill. That incident shows up on his credit rating and he may be unaware of it.

The invidious aspect of this is that he has no opportunity to defend himself when applying for credit. The bank may say to him, "We are sorry but we cannot grant you credit," and the applicant is not in a position to defend his record. Then the applicant begins to wonder if the debt he could not pay some years ago has more weight than he suspected on his credit record. He may wonder what the reason is for his poor credit rating. Nevertheless, the information is not made available to him; it is given only to the individual seeking information about his credit rating.

Often, when clients come to me and say, "Apparently I have a bad credit rating," the first thing I say is, "Do you deserve a poor credit rating? Do you have debts?" On the other hand, a person may early in his career have been sued, and as soon as action is instituted against the man, the credit bureau immediately takes cognizance of the fact. What the man's credit record does not show is whether he had a good defence to the action. If he is sued for a debt, that fact automatically is included in his credit record. What is not indicated, very often, is how the matter was resolved before the courts. Very often a person applying for credit may feel that he had a bona fide defence to the court action.

There are many instances in which an individual has been asked to defend an action wherein he is sued in respect of goods he has bought on credit. He may have bought the goods and signed a promissory note, and on refusing to pay on the promissory note because the goods were defective or not delivered, he is sued. The court will say to him that his defence is not a good defence in view of the promissory note; that his claim or counterclaim must be directed against the establishment which sold him the goods, but so far as the promissory note is concerned he owes the money and must pay.

Sometimes an individual in that situation will thumb his nose at his creditors, or perhaps leave the community. I remember one such incident. The individual returned two years later. The finance company sued him. By way of defence we alleged that the kind of interest the finance company was trying to collect was unconscionable. We were successful in our defence against the interest claim of the finance company. All too often such companies claim an usurious amount of interest on debt.

Another situation in which an individual is named as a defendant in a court action arises in the following manner. A person has bought a home, placed a first mortgage on the home and has paid regularly, say for five, six or seven years, on that mortgage. Then he has sold the house. The individual who has bought the house from him has made regular payments for a considerable time, then he has suddenly gone into default, possibly because of unemployment or other reasons. He has not kept up the payments. In that case the mortgagor sues, not only the individual who presently owns the home and who is responsible for making the payments but also the first owner because the name of the first owner is on the convenant under the terms of the mortgage. That person, of course, has a perfectly good defence; he has paid his money. Surely, therefore, his credit rating should not suffer.

Because an individual has no opportunity to defend his credit rating, because he has no way of knowing whether he deserves his rating or not, I support the motion of the hon. member. It is not complete in its proposals. The hon. member does not say it is. It lacks many, many things. The hon. member is only suggesting that, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of introducing—here I would add the adjective "appropriate"—legislation to protect the privacy of every person against the improper disclosure of credit rating records. Therefore, I support the motion of the hon. member, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I should like first to commend the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) for introducing this motion which I think is quite necessary.

The hon. member is not the first one to object to the disclosure of facts concerning the private life of individuals. I remember reading, a few years ago, a book written by an American, Vance Packard, entitled Naked Society, where the activities of American credit bureaux were described in detail and which contained several cases where the life of an individual had been publicly revealed and scrutinized by those agencies.

Personally, for the last four years I have been closly associated with a large insurance company. I have had the opportunity to look at credit reports and I have often noticed, with disgust, that some of those credit reports contained information which had nothing to do with the financial situation of the persons involved. I read, in those credit reports, sentences such as these: "This individual is often intoxicated. He is a shady character and goes with several women."

I would say that those famous little pink reports often contain similar information and that they are handed to dealers, or any person who is in business and who regularly requests information of this kind from the credit bureau, information which have absolutely nothing to do with the financial situation, the steadiness and solvency of the individual involved.

Those are the reasons why I think the member for St. John's East is quite right in presenting his motion and I will support it.

I would like to offer two constructive solutions along this line, mainly intended for the Minister of Consumers and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) whom I invite to introduce soon in the House a piece of legislation aimed at protecting individual privacy.

This legislation should at least have two characteristics. First, a copy of any credit record should be sent to the individual concerned. I see no reason why a bill should not be submitted to the House including such a provision and ensuring that the individual who has been inquired upon be sent a copy of the report. If this report is true, what is wrong with letting the individual involved having a copy of it? The individual is supposed to know the content of the report. Why not let him know the content of a report that will be circulated on request to several financial organizations?

And now my second recommendation: the individual receiving a copy of his report should be entitled to request the deletion of erroneous information contained in it.

I myself have checked the contents of certain reports with the people concerned. They contain, for unknown reasons, information that is entirely false, that was collected by the agent entrusted with the inquiry who could question neighbours, the neighbourhood grocer on the habits of the person concerned. Still, that information is in the report and often gives a distorted picture of the life of the individual.

To my mind, when we deal with facts and not opinions, and the facts are erroneous, on receiving copy of such a report, the individual should be able to have the false information deleted.

I feel, it might be well to introduce a bill containing far more details than those I have just mentioned. Such a bill would surely please the hon. member for St. John's East as much as me.

In closing, I merely wish to add that I am very pleased with the initiative taken by the hon. member for St. John's East, and were the government to introduce such a bill, I would be the first to support it.

• (5:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Robert P. Kaplan (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in this debate, not only because it is five minutes to six o'clock but because of an observation made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). I support the principle of this resolution. Measures should be introduced which would adequately ensure that the reputation of individuals concerned is properly protected. However, I do not agree with the way in which the resolution is put forward, "to protect the privacy of every person". It is not specific enough. I object to the suggestion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North that my colleague, the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Gibson), raised this as a class objection. Measures of this sort make no difference to two classes of people, the very rich and the very poor, because they do not have to resort to credit. However, to most of us, the average Canadian, credit is extremely important.

I agree with the point raised by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) that we are becoming a cashless society. It is apparent that credit is very important. It is desirable that we become a cashless society. However, this can only be accomplished by great technological advances, improved communication and advanced merchandising techniques. When these goals are attained, it will be desirable for our society to use them. A cashless society will depend upon those who extend credit having ready access to the records of individuals who wish to buy from them. If dependable information is to be available, some sort of communications system will have to be devised whereby this information can be readily produced.

This brings us to the problem raised by the hon. member for St. John's East. It is not only in the interest of the purchaser, or borrower, that credit information be available. The vendor is just as anxious to have an opportunity to make a sale, but he must know the accurate and truthful credit position of his customer. I do not think there is any class factor involved in this question. I do not regard it as one in which sellers are pitted against producers. There is a common interest in all society that accurate information be available and that it can be verified.

I was impressed by some of the suggestions made, including that of the hon. member who proposed the resolution, that the important thing is not that this information be unavailable to the marketplace, people who want to see goods or extend credit, but that the information be available in a ready way to a person who wants to take advantage of his credit rating to buy or borrow. If this information is available to him, he can periodically check to see if it is accurate.

If we are to move into a cashless society, it is obvious that this sort of information must be available to all parties. For this reason I am pleased to support the idea behind the resolution. I congratulate the hon. member for having introduced it and in being fortunate enough to have it presented to the House at this time. I appreciate the discussion that has taken place. I have no doubt that it will be drawn to the attention of the government. Anything of value that is said this afternoon will be taken into consideration when legislation is being considered or introduced. I regret that the hon. member did not spell out in more detail the manner in which privacy could be protected. Nevertheless, our entry into the cashless society—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hour for the consideration of private members' business having expired, the House will revert to the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PUBLIC ORDER (TEMPORARY MEASURES) ACT, 1970

PROVISION OF EMERGENCY POWERS FOR PRESERVATION OF PUBLIC ORDER

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-181, to provide temporary emergency powers for the preservation of public order in Canada—Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)—Mr. Honey in the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

Public Order Act, 1970

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Peters: Before the committee rose, Mr. Chairman, I was saying that we have now had an opportunity to look at some of the reasons behind this bill.

One of the recent developments is the inquest which has just taken place in Montreal. As one follows the evidence, one appreciates the fact that only the information the prosecutor wishes to bring out is brought out during the proceedings. So the public is still left with an incomplete picture, despite the testimony of Bernard Lortie and Mrs. Rose. Nevertheless, reading the newspaper reports of this testimony one would be hard pressed, in my opinion, to find anything to be particularly scared of, though certain people were exercising a less than normal attitude toward human life in their treatment of individuals.

There is no indication that this was a great conspiracy, or part of a great conspiracy. The inquest proceedings showed that three of those directly concerned were down in Texas with the mother of two of them. They heard about the Cross kidnapping and then drove night and day to get back to Canada. They returned because they felt the others had kidnapped the wrong man, that they had no chance of securing the release of prisoners in accordance, I presume, with an FLQ decision made at a higher than cell level, that nothing could be expected from the kidnapping of Cross, a British diplomat, and that they would have to lay their hands on a political figure from Quebec. So they went out and captured Mr. Laporte.

The evidence at the inquest suggests that these were young people who acted on the spur of the moment, without planning. They took Mr. Laporte to a house where they had food enough for only one day. Indeed, they had to borrow from Mr. Laporte sufficient money for food for the next several days. This does not look like a grand conspiracy to me. It is more like a bunch of punks hell-bent on making a name for themselves in a very bad and nasty way. The testimony indicates that these young people made their decision on the way back. They were very surprised at the choice of victim for the other kidnapping, which was also an amateurish job.

Mr. Boulanger: May I ask the hon. member a question? The hon. member said this was decided at the last minute. Did he not read in the report that they had made up their minds, when they were at the Maison des Pêcheurs, to kidnap someone?

Mr. Peters: There is an indication that this is not the only kidnapping which has taken place in the past year.

An hon. Member: Or the only murder.

Mr. Peters: I suppose there were 50 or 75 murders. It is interesting that in Vancouver there are between 25 and 30 murders a year, most of which are not solved. There are many murders in Montreal, I am sure, because of the size of the city. Montreal to many of us is just a city to visit, but we must not forget that it is a very large city with some two millions inhabitants, and that murder is not unusual there. Four or five attempts, with plans or arrangements, had been made to kidnap other people. I believe the kidnapping of Mr. Laporte was probably more accidental than the evidence at the inquest would lead us to assume. I give some credit to the rumour, and it is only a rumour, that it was the Postmaster General whom they intended to capture and that Mr. Laporte was captured only as a substitute. This makes sense, in terms of some of the things which were said at the inquest. It appears to me to have been a very amateurish job.

There is no doubt that there is a problem with these young people. There is a problem in every country of the world with young people today. But to call this a conspiracy to destroy the whole fabric of our government and society is giving these people more credit than they really deserve. Condemn them all you like for the murder they committed and the kidnapping they arranged. At one time, my leader used the phrase that we were using a sledge-hammer to crack a peanut. The bill before us would be hard to justify on the basis of the evidence which came out at the inquest. This was hardly, it seems, part of a large conspiracy to destroy our democracy. It seems that more consideration was given to what was happening in Quebec City, inside the cabinet, and to its reaction to the situation than was given to the kidnapping and to the operations of the kidnappers.

For example, the government in Quebec city could have fallen apart. We could not have been too strong in our condemnation of this because it did not have time to gain experience as a government, and since this would have been a calamity that had never befallen a provincial cabinet previously, it could not have been anticipated in any way. The point has been made that it should have been anticipated, and I think this is a good point. We should be prepared for such situations.

The reason the Canadian public has been so shocked at the turn of events is that it believed this sort of thing could only happen in a banana republic; that it could not happen to Canadians. But our experiences on the Saturday and Sunday when Mr. Laporte met his untimely end were almost like a psychedelic trip for the entire Canadian public. Some Liberal members have stated that 98 per cent of the Canadian public supported the government, and I think that is true. This is a matter the broadcasting committee will have to examine and to which a great number of people will have to pay close attention.

I am sure that had the Prime Minister asked for the sort of powers that de Gaulle was given when France has been in serious trouble for years and years, the Liberal Party would have given the powers to him. So would the 78 members from the province of Quebec, without any question at all.

Mr. Woolliams: Seventy-four.

Mr. Peters: Seventy-four. To be fair to the Prime Minister, he was the only Liberal who had any qualms about applying this sort of measure; he was the only one who said it was a dangerous piece of legislation. Every other Liberal was willing to go along with the government.

We shall have to examine why this happened. Perhaps there should be some curtailment of the freedom of the news media to prevent their producing stories that have no basis in fact. For example, Mr. Chairman, if you cast your mind back to that Saturday night when we were debating the proclamation of the War Measures Act, you will recall that it was reported that three bodies had been found. One was at St. Hubert, one at Dorval or some community north of the city, and a third body on the back seat of a car in a parking lot in downtown Montreal—and all were reported to be the body of Mr. Cross. However, somebody must have spirited those bodies away, or something, because they were not factors in the discussions that followed the next day.

The Minister of Justice must concern himself about the presentation of facts to the public in a way that forced us to adopt such a strong position. Most Canadians are very staid people. We come from the northern hemisphere, the colder part of the continent, and we do not usually react in the same manner as the more hot blooded people in temperate climates. As a nation, we reacted to this situation as a bunch of sheep would react.

I attended recently one of those early November 11 Remembrance Day observances in the town of South Porcupine, and was interested to hear many veterans who had served their country and had spent four or five years in uniform defending the very freedoms for which they had fought. Yet I am sure that most of those people would be in favour of law and order to safeguard their liberties. Recent events have made us for the first time consider just what democracy means to us, what we owe to democracy and what democracy owes to us. No doubt there are limits to freedom. There are also certain rights for which we have fought over hundreds of years, which we should guard very sacredly and should be willing to fight very hard and long to maintain.

I suggest that television had something to do with the recent public alarm. It reminded me of the Orson Welles play which took place years ago at Halloween and caused a public stampede in New York city. People turned on the radio news and were told that Martians had landed and were attacking the city of New York. A number of people were killed. Some had listened only to a bit of the play and had not appreciated that it was a play. Most of the people in the United States listened to the play that night, probably because the program on the other station was so bad. As Members of Parliament we will have to consider recent events impassionately and, in my opinion, without political bias. This is the sort of situation that can be duplicated and could possibly stampede people into taking a position that has not properly been thought out and which might make it impossible for the nation to function as a nation.

One thing that has been clear throughout the whole episode which resulted in the invocation of the War Measures Act and in this bill now before the committee is the total failure of our police forces to operate efficiently. This afternoon I boarded a plane in northern Quebec and overheard several businessmen talking about this question. They were concerned about the police because they were connected with municipal politics. They discussed what might happen in their own communities in view of the inability of the police in Quebec to operate efficiently. For example, I am told there are 51 police forces in greater Montreal, most of which do not talk to each other and jealously guard their territory. In the main they are three or four-man police forces. I suggest that some arrangement will have to be arrived at for making police jurisdictions more national in scope. No policemen can better serve a small community than those who know the area. The trouble is that most of these policemen do not have proper training.

What of our provincial police? I am sure every Member of Parliament was amused and at the same time shocked to hear the commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police say in a press interview the other day that all we needed to do to wind up the whole matter was to make one telephone call and then have an emergency cabinet meeting. This reminded me of the first speech made by the commissioner shortly after he was appointed, which he was then told was to be his last speech.

• (8:20 p.m.)

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth on a point of order.

Mr. Gibson: Mr. Chairman, I submit that the conduct of the commissioner of the police has nothing to do with this amendment, and reference to it is out of order.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I would remind the hon. member that it was agreed by all hon. members that discussion on clause 2 of the bill would be of a general nature. That is why the Chair has been lenient until this stage.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I welcome the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth back to the chamber. I was pointing out that the police commissioner had originally got himself into trouble, and this is the second time for him to be in trouble. It reminds me of the little guy who went out to the station with his horse and buggy to pick up the wife he had ordered from Eaton's catalogue. When they were driving out to the farm, the horse tripped. The farmer looked at the horse and said, "That's once." They drove along a little farther and the horse tripped a second time. The farmer looked at the horse and said, "That's twice". They drove a little farther and the horse tripped a third time. Then the farmer hauled out his pistol, shot the horse—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret having to interrupt the hon. member, but I must inform him that his time has expired.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We can't leave the horse half shot.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, we just have to find out what happened to the horse.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member may continue his speech if he has the unanimous consent of the committee. Is there unanimous agreement to let the hon. member complete his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Peters: I thank the committee for their indulgence. Anyway, he shot the horse and the new wife immediately started to berate him. He turned to the wife and said, "That's once". This is the same story with the commissioner. He was told once. Now this is twice. I am looking forward to the third time.

The point I would like to make is that our Canadian police forces have not been properly trained in riot control or in preventing assassinations. Our police forces, particularly the RCMP, spend a lot of their time tackling our national drug problem. They have infiltrated the youth, underground drug market. They have trained their dogs to sniff out marijuana, but very few of their dogs have been trained to sniff out explosives, something with which we will probably be concerned for some time yet.

In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, it would be dangerous for the House to pass this legislation unamended. If the government was justified at all in proclaiming the War Measures Act, that justification lasted for only the first 24 hours. There is a retroactive provision in this legislation. It is like saying that if you belonged to the Kiwanis five years ago, and we now outlaw the Kiwanis, you could automatically be committed to five years in prison. The idea is frightening.

Freedom is an expensive commodity. It has to be safeguarded. I believe the Minister of Justice will be as glad to listen to the conscience of small minority groups as he is to accept the support of members of his own party. The minister could easily be stampeded into taking action that would cut the essential liberties of the Canadian people, unless it is pointed out to him that there are limitations on the amount of freedom we can forgo until the point is reached when we have lost freedom itself. Therefore, I hope he will consider favourably the amendments proposed, particularly those dealing with the retroactive clause. If he does not, he will find he will not have the support of many people in this House.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, I have listened carefully throughout this debate and have noted an assumption made by many people that economic problems in the province of Quebec have been responsible for the creation of the FLQ.

Mr. Gibson: Is that so?

Mr. Nesbitt: I wish the hon. member for Hamilton Wentworth would contain himself at least until I get started on my remarks. Economic conditions in parts of Quebec may well have been responsible for some of the motivation behind the FLQ, but there are many other factors that one has to consider in this regard. In a situation such as this we are dealing with fanatical people who are not often motivated by logic, and economic problems are things that give rise to logical motivations. I would not like this particular assumption to go completely unchallenged because we are dealing with an extremely serious matter, something we will have to consider for a long time. As the Minister of Justice indicated earlier, we shall have to deal with permanent legislation along these lines at a future date.

Dealing with the legislation before us, as has been pointed out by various ministers the situation at the present time in Quebec is an unusual one. It is dangerous. It requires special measures, indeed, extreme measures. In my view, the people of Canada support the government both with respect to the invocation of the War Measures Act and the introduction of this legislation. A number of amendments having to do with some of the details of the legislation have been outlined by my colleague, amendments which I support, but nevertheless in general I think the people of Canada quite approve the government's actions. More than that, Mr. Chairman, the people of Canada want terrorists, terrorism and terrorist activities stopped.

Three or four years ago there was a general attitude in this country of allowing people in Canada to do their own thing. This extended to freedom of expression, no matter how free it might be. It was thought people should be allowed to do anything they wished, no matter what violent means accompanied their activities. But after the recent events in Quebec, particularly the horrifying murder of the provincial Minister of Labour, people have had enough of this. There has been a great change of opinion in Canada, a great feeling of revulsion toward this sort of activity. There is no doubt about that.

Some of us try to get around a bit and talk about these matters. We are not entirely confined to the ivory towers in Ottawa. We try to find out what people are thinking. In my view, most people are completely disgusted at the recent actions of this tiny minority group in Quebec, and indeed of related minority groups holding similar ideas in other parts of the country. People wish this kind of thing to be dealt with. I have had a great many letters, as I am sure have all hon. members, on this subject. From the inquiries and observations I have made, I have the impression that about 85 per cent of the people of Canada wish this Parliament to bring in pretty severe measures to deal with activities such as murder, kidnapping for political purposes and threats to blow up airliners with passengers on board, such as the FLQ reportedly has done.

As I have indicated, a few years ago people were more inclined to be sympathetic toward killers and murderers. They seemed to take the position that perhaps it was not their fault and we should look after them. Now, however, people have come to the conclusion that we cannot go along with that idea entirely and that something must be done about people who, although they may be psychotic, are motivated to do these things. People are beginning to realize there should be some sympathy extended to the victims of murderers rather than to the murderers themselves.

The remarks I shall make in the next moment or so I indended to make at perhaps a later date when more permanent measures are brought in by the Minister of Justice, as promised. On second thoughts, however, it would seem that these remarks might be appropriate at the present time. This bill has a limited life. It is a temporary measure which is to expire next April. In view of the fact that it is a temporary measure, it would seem to me we might as an experiment introduce certain amendments. I would hope the Minister of Justice would give consideration to these.

Mr. Woolliams: He has made no statement concerning what he would agree to.

Mr. Nesbitt: As my colleague the hon. member for Calgary North has said, the Minister of Justice has not yet indicated what he might agree to. I suppose he is reserving his decision in this regard until he has heard all the representations. I hope this is the case. The present bill is more acceptable to, but reminiscent of, the regulations under the War Measures Act. It would seem to me that since we are in the middle of an experimental period regarding the removal of the death penalty in Canada, except of course in respect of a policeman or other law officer—apparently it is all right if the Governor General or a like person should be killed—the government might be well advised, because of the unusual circumstances which exist in Quebec, which on the government's own admission will probably exist until April, to reinstate the death penalty for murder during this period. In addition to that, since the FLQ reportedly has threatened to carry out bombings and kidnappings and has threatened death to victims, it might be desirable that capial punishment also be introduced as a temporary measure in respect of kidnapping where threats of death are made, or in respect of the hijacking of aircraft involving a threat to blow up the aircraft with passengers on board.

I would think these things might be introduced on a trial basis until next April. I do not wish to become involved in the argument concerning capital punishment versus non-capital punishment. Such arguments have been heard many times. We have heard that capital punishment is not a deterrent. In many cases capital punishment probably is not a deterrent when we are dealing with fanatical people. But very often it is a deterrent. If we were to follow the argument to its logical conclusion, we might ask why it is necessary to have penalties in law if none of them is deterrent. There is no doubt in my mind that capital punishment is a deterrent, and so long as it would prevent people being murdered or blown up I think it would accomplish something.

Thinking back to a time when I was very young, I recall a notorious kidnapping. I refer to the kidnapping of the son of Charles Lindbergh, the Atlantic flyer. This case received a good deal of publicity in the media which I do not think was very helpful. There was a rash of kidnappings throughout the United States at the time. Capital punishment was introduced for kidnapping and this put at stop to it right off the bat. In view of the unusual circumstances in Quebec and perhaps in other parts of Canada at the present time, I suggest that as a trial measure we might introduce the death penalty for murder and political kidnapping as well as hijacking of aircraft. Then we could examine the situation in order to determine the result.

In respect of the experiment we are now conducting concerning the removal of the death penalty, which I believe is to be reviewed in 1973, I think the statistics are somewhat misleading and confusing, but at the present time they would seem to indicate that the murder rate has just about doubled in Canada since the death penalty has been removed. It is more pronounced in some parts of the country than in others. This is a worrisome situation. The rate might have increased in any event. However, the fact is that the murder rate has since the death penalty was temporarily suspended.

I do not think there would be any harm in introducing these extremely harsh measures until next April. The government had no qualms about introducing harsh measures in respect of the province of Quebec, and possibly elsewhere, as has been suggested. It is true that since the troops have been around, the FLQ people have been playing doggo. They are lying low. But the moment the troops are gone, their activity may start again. I would hope the minister would consider putting some of these measures into effect until next April. Then if it should appear they have had a beneficial effect, well and good. If not, they can be reviewed. I believe this is a suggestion which should be considered and adopted.

[Translation]

Mr. Roy (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, the bill before us is the result of tragic events which happened in Quebec.

It is most unfortunate that this measure was not among the laws already existing and able to deal with the case of the FLQ. Such a law would have been much more suitable to the problem than the War Measures Act which the government had to invoke.

God willing, Mr. Chairman, I hope that we never have to invoke the legislation before us even if it is much less stringent than the War Measures Act.

This provisional bill it intended to replace the War Measures Act in this period of emergency. It is not a permanent bill, and I believe that the government deserves to be commended for dalaying the introduction of a permanent bill at a future date when calm has been completely restored and the judgment of individuals and Parliaments is more detached.

Hon. members opposite strike at details of the events. They desperately seek something on which to hang on to in order to defend untenable positions. They speak about the lack of information, while they already have supported much more stringent legislation with less information, as it were. They speak about the abuse of rights and repression, while they mention no name or no action to prove it. They speak about numerous rumours which allegedly come from sources inside the government, without having the courage to check those rumours and to reveal their authors.

Opposition parties say that they will support this legislation although they will submit amendments. Let us see what is suggested in this legislation.

It is asserted that our freedom is possible only to the extent that it rests on the respect of moral and spiritual values and on the supremacy of the law. I will never believe that one could deny this principle unless one is an anarchist.

It is also stated that the FLQ has exercised violence in Canada and that this movement is still dangerous. Certainly no one will deny that. In fact, that violence goes back to 1963 and continues with increased intensity.

It is stated that the Canadian Parliament wishes to take measures to protect society. Surely we will not be asked to wait for an insurrection before considering necessary legislation. In fact, the New Democratic Party blames the government for invoking the War Measures Act when other legislation was available. What other legislation, Mr. Chairman?

Even if the War Measures Act was secretly proclaimed, 40 odd persons are now being sought and remain undiscoverable.

It is said that the FLQ is an unlawful association. Indeed, all hon. members agree on that. One would have to be extremely naïve to believe that the FLQ is a lawful and commendable association.

It is said that if an offence is committed after this legislation is enacted, the past record of an FLQ member could serve as evidence against him. I cannot see that the FLQ members could not be identified as such before the coming into force of the legislation.

Some punishment is recommended for FLQ accomplices or supporters. Surely they are as guilty as those they help.

• (8:40 p.m.)

It is suggested that detention be much shorter than that stipulated by the War Measures Act. It must be recognized that detention is necessary in such circumstances.

Arrests are to be made without warrant. Of course such a proposal opens the door to abuse. But how can we fight the abuses of a revolutionary movement without adopting very severe measures?

It proposes entering without warrant any premises suspected of harbouring terrorists. Everyone will agree that such premises must be entered in order to find proofs and arrest the terrorists. A similar provision must also apply to the seizure of objects found on those premises.

[Mr. Roy (Timmins).]

Finally, the act is to apply for a set period of time. This shows that the government is intent upon avoiding abuse in the application of such severe and serious bills. While recognizing the seriousness of the situation, the government is anxious to normalize it and a definite duration is given to this bill.

I am convinced that the majority of my constituents will approve me when I have the pleasure of supporting Bill C-181.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Mr. De Bané: Are we going to vote, Mr. Chairman? Do you want me to read again the amendments?

The Deputy Chairman: Yes.

Mr. De Bané: I move that clause 2 (d) of Bill C-181 be deleted and replaced by the following:

(d) "unlawful association" means the group of persons or association known as the Front de Libération du Québec, any successor group or successor association thereof, as well as any group or association that advocates the use of force or crime to accomplish or as an aid in accomplishing the same or substantially the same governmental change within Canada as that advocated by the said Front de Libération du Québec.

And, finally, that clause 2 (b) be deleted and replaced by the following:

(b) "peace officer" means the limited classes of persons specified in the orders in council of the Governor General or of a Lieutenant Governor in Council.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I would first outline to the hon. member for Matane that it might be desirable to dispose of the amendment he is proposing in connection with clause 2 (b) since the Chair has some reservations as to the form of the amendment relating to clause 2 (d).

[English]

Is it the pleasure of the committee to adopt the said amendment?

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: Will those in favour please rise. Will those opposed please rise.

Amendment (Mr. De Bané) negatived: Yeas, 1; nays, 28.

The Deputy Chairman: I declare the amendment lost. Shall clause 2 carry?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to participate in this debate. I think that the speeches made by the leader and deputy leader of our party express my views and that it is sufficient for me to vote as I feel I should. However, I am impelled to say a few words in this debate because of the speech which the Minister of Justice made last week in which, having asked the House to consider this matter calmly and dispassionately, he then proceeded to spend more than half his speech in a bitter attack on the members of this party who voted against the government's War Measures Act.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): He was desperate.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I am not hurt by what the minister did, but I must say that I am a little puzzled. I do not think I need say that we in this group, as all Members of Parliament and an overwhelming majority of the Canadian people, are opposed to violence. We oppose assassination. Mr. Chairman, our party has very close association with labour and democratic socialist parties in Europe. We know what our colleagues in Germany, Norway, Denmark, Holland and Belgium, to mention just a few countries, have suffered as a result of violence and totalitarian methods from both the right and the left.

• (8:50 p.m.)

An hon. Member: Even Russia had trouble.

Mr. Orlikow: The hon. member for Calgary North mentioned Russia in his speech the other day, but I do not intend to get into that subject.

So, Mr. Chairman, we could do nothing but oppose the kind of actions in which the terrorists of the FLQ in Quebec have participated. We support every action that this government or any other government would take to apprehend, to charge, to try, to convict and to punish those people guilty of criminal actions. But we were and are disturbed by the tremendous powers taken by the government when it implemented the War Measures Act, and by the tremendous power which the government will still have if it passes the bill which was introduced by the Minister of Justice.

We are concerned about the fact that the power which the government took, and will take for itself under this bill when it passes, will not be exercised by this government, this Prime Minister or this Minister of Justice, but will in fact be exercised by another government, by a provincial Attorney General, by provincial and municipal police over whom the federal government and this Parliament have little or no control.

Another thing that concerns us, Mr. Chairman, is that of over 400 people who were apprehended, held in custody for up to 21 days and questioned, more than 350 were released. I ask the Minister of Justice to give some thought in the days, weeks and months ahead to what the effect will be on those people who were not involved in terrorism, kidnapping and assassination because of the kind of procedures that were followed—

An hon. Member: They are out already.

Mr. Orlikow: —in arresting them when they were not guilty of any criminal act. All, or most of the people who were apprehended and have since been released must have been innocent or else there was not enough evidence to convict them. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that it is extremely dangerous to arrest and hold people when they have not been guilty of illegal acts.

The government had tremendous support when it asked for endorsation of the War Measures Act. To my knowledge, not a single newspaper opposed the government, and as far as I know only one or two newspaper columnists opposed the government. The House voted 190 to 16 to support the government. We 16 who voted against the government knew that the government's action had widespread support. We knew that the vote which we were casting was unpopular but we took that action because we felt, and members of this House and the public may think we were wrong, that the government's measures went too far and that they could be used to harass innocent people.

Mr. Chairman, why did the Minister of Justice react so violently and bitterly toward the 16 members of the House of Commons who voted against the government's proposals?

An hon. Member: Read his speech and you will find out.

Mr. Orlikow: He knew and he said that we had no support. I think he was right two weeks ago, we did not have much support then. But he knew that and he did not need to spend his time attacking us. I do not mind that he attacked us, I am used to that, but as I listened to his speech I wondered why he carried on as he did. I gave it some thought and I think the reason he did so is pretty obvious now. The Prime Minister has had almost 100 per cent support of the press of Canada since he came to Ottawa, Mr. Chairman. While he was Minister of Justice—

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might rise on a point of order.

The Chairman: Order, please. Is the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka rising on a point of order?

Mr. Aiken: Yes, I am, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka.

Mr. Aiken: In rising on a point of order, I apologize to the hon. member for interrupting him but it is necessary to put this question under Standing Order 6(5) before nine o'clock, and the proceedings must be interrupted at this time. I am rising to propose, under Standing Order 6 (5) (a) (i), that the Committee of the Whole continue beyond the ordinary hour of adjournment for the purpose of completing the committee stage of Bill C-181.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: Order, please. The motion just put by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka is meant to be put to the Speaker in the chair, so I shall rise and resume the chair immediately.

Mr. Peters: The Chairman can't just do that.

The Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Peters: Order. He can't do that.

An hon. Member: Of course he can.

Mr. Peters: He had better ask about it.

Mr. Aiken: Certainly the Chairman has the right. The proceedings may be interrupted. Mr. Chairman, since I started this matter, may I point out Standing Order 6 (5) (a) (i) provides that the proceedings of the Committee of the Whole may be temporarily interrupted for the purpose of proposing this motion, and that it must be made to Mr. Speaker in the chair. Therefore, Your Honour should take the chair for the purpose of hearing the motion.

An hon. Member: That is right.

The Chairman: Order, please. It is the understanding of the Chair that this kind of motion is quite different from the one where the Committee of the Whole has to have permission to report progress. Therefore, I shall resume the chair at this time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, how can you leave the chair unless instructed to do so by the committee?

An hon. Member: It is in the rules.

Mr. Olson: It is in the rules we wrote, Stanley.

Mr. Bell: You had better be careful; the bill might go through. Even the minister is against the bill going through.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I might also point out, Mr. Chairman, that when the hon. member moved his motion—

The Chairman: Order, please. If hon. members of the committee would permit me, I would refer them to Standing Order 6(5)(a)(i), which reads as follows:

• (9:00 p.m.)

The motion must relate to the business then being considered provided that proceedings in any Committee of the Whole may be temporarily interrupted for the purpose of proposing a motion under the provisions of this Standing Order.

According to my interpreting of this Standing Order, the committee does not have to rise and report progress.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, it is quite clear from the portion of the Standing Order that Your Honour has read, that if the proceedings of the Committee of the Whole are to be temporarily interrupted, surely that would have to be at the direction of the committee. Surely, it is not the right of one member to say, "Mr. Chairman, please leave the chair". Your Honour does not have to leave the chair, surely.

I might also point out that at the time the hon. member moved his motion he was not in order, although he would be in order now, it being after nine o'clock. I submit he would have to move the motion again.

[The Chairman.]

Mr. Woolliams: Surely that is not so.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The motion must be proposed in the hour preceding the time at which the business under consideration would be interrupted. In this instance, the hour before ten o'clock is between nine o'clock and ten o'clock. The hon. member made his motion before nine o'clock. I am also suggesting to Your Honour that is is not a proper point of order when an hon. member who has not the floor interrupts for the purpose of bringing a motion. You can only bring forward a motion like that when you have the right to the floor. I think the hon. member did this the wrong way.

The Chairman: The Chair agrees completely with the last point raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. It is not permissible for an hon. member to seek the floor on a point of order and to put a motion of this type regarding the adjournment. The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka should seek the floor after the hon. member for Winnipeg North has finished speaking; otherwise we shall have all kinds of interruptions and all kinds of motions for adjournment. The Chair recognizes the hon. member for Winnipeg North.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I was trying to say, before being so summarily interrupted, that I think the Minister of Justice and the Prime Minister attacked the NDP so vigorously because they are not used to being criticized by the press. It is amazing that the press, which was unanimous in its support of the government when the government introduced the War Measures Act, has in the space of less than three weeks, turned so resoundingly to criticize the Prime Minister and the government. The Minister of Justice ought to have answered the kind of attack the press made on the Prime Minister: they were much more vicious, much more biting, than the attack made by any member of our party.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Orlikow: One columnist of a large and responsible newspaper headed a column with the words "Spiro Trudeau". I suggest that is why the minister took the time to attack the members of our party. He realized that it is not politically wise to attack and criticize the press; yet being disturbed by press criticism, he answered by attacking the NDP. The Winnipeg Free Press—and there is no more partisan Liberal in Canada—has in its editorials asked the Prime Minister to tell the people of Canada why he felt it necessary to invoke the War Measures Act. As I say, it was because of press attacks that the Minister of Justice attacked the members of our party so vigorously.

I said that we oppose violence; we oppose kidnappings and we oppose murder. We are, therefore, very pleased that one of the kidnappers has been arrested. We hope, as I am sure do all members of this House, that other arrests of the guilty ones will follow very quickly. If four, five or six people can kidnap, hold captive and then murder a person, whether he is the Minister of Labour of a province or anybody else, and carry out their actions with a mindless sort of violence, we ought to be disturbed. That is very disturbing.

Nevertheless, if I have interpreted newspaper reports of Bernard Lortie's evidence at the inquest held Saturday correctly, that evidence indicates to me that the kidnapping of Mr. Laporte, reprehensible as it was and creating the extremely difficult problems for this country which it did, was not what some had alleged it to be. That evidence indicated to me very clearly that although this country is facing trouble and was facing trouble, we are not and were not facing the kind of danger which we were warned against by a many members of the government.

I will not go into detail with respect to all the speeches made by the Prime Minister, the Minister of Justice, the Minister of Agriculture and—I could go on and on. I will not speak about what the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion may or may not have said outside the House on that famous hot line radio program. But I want to put on the record again a couple of paragraphs from the speech the minister made in the House on October 16. It is reported at page 224 of Hansard. Among other things, the minister said on that occasion:

> Any person having knowledge of the FLQ organization in the province of Quebec at the present time cannot but be aware that the state of Quebec and the federal state are truly in danger in Canada.
> Why? The most pessimists say that the FLQ has some 3,000 members.

An hon. member interrupted and said, "More". The minister continued:

> I do not know if that figure is accurate but I am aware that there are quite a few.
> And I know something else: these people have infiltrated every strategic place in the province of Quebec, every place where important decisions are taken, and without giving complete details let us say that at the present time they are in a position to cause the Quebec and the federal governments, as well as the city of Montreal, irreparable harm, with the support of outside organizations which are not necessarily in agreement as to the measures taken because it is well organized.
> Some say: Why have you not made it illegal? That is what we are doing under these regulations though it might not be the best solution. It is known that the FLQ is made up of cells of two or three persons each, cells that do not know each other, that do not necessarily work hand in hand and that are now in touch simply through coded messages broadcast free of charge by our radio stations.

I pause to make it clear that the minister said that coded instructions were going out over radio stations. He did not imply, as the right hon. member for Prince Albert this afternoon attempted to imply, that those people worked for the CBC. They may have worked for other stations. It is interesting that we have not heard the minister repeat these very serious allegations since October 16. What about those coded instructions that were going out? Have the people involved been apprehended? Have they been charged? What about the infiltration that has been alleged? Were the police of Montreal infiltrated? Were the Quebec provincial police, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and the armed forces infiltrated? We do not know, Mr. Chairman.

It seems to our members, as it seems to most newspaper reporters, that if these charges were based on facts, we should have been told this so we could deal with it. It is because we have not got any of the evidence which may or may not exist—it has not been given to us or the public—that we have our doubts about the procedures which the government has followed. I ask the Minister of Justice why the government waited until October 15 or 16 to take action. After all, the activities of the FLQ did not begin with the kidnapping of Mr. Cross and Mr. Laporte? Bombings by the FLQ began in 1963, and thefts of dynamite have been going on for years.

What steps did the government take to combat the subversive, illegal actions of the FLQ? Was the security and intelligence section of the RCMP beefed-up between 1963 and 1970? We do not know, Mr. Chairman. The police forces in Canada have not been able to infiltrate the terrorist organizations in Quebec in the same manner as the FBI—without the acts that the government of Canada has asked Parliament to pass—has been able to infiltrate terrorist organizations in the United States. Canadians have a right to know what the government was doing between 1963 and 1970 to eliminate the dangers which have arisen and which occurred previously, namely, the dangerous, illegal, terrorist actions of the FLQ.

I believe that police action is necessary. But that alone will not eliminate the causes which led to the feelings of frustration which produced the terrorists of Quebec. I am not going to discuss economic and social conditions in Quebec, but I suggest that the Minister of Justice should read carefully the statement made last week by the Quebec Welfare Council, which is certainly not a very radical organization, to the Senate Committee on Poverty. They described the kind of situation that exists in the slum areas of Montreal and Quebec, the lack of adequate housing, recreational facilities, medical and hospital services. Until we do something about this situation, we will not eliminate those feelings which permit the FLQ to get the support of a small percentage of the people of the province of Quebec. Until we do that, we will fail.

The people of Canada, especially those in Quebec, are upset, disturbed and frightened because of what has occurred in the province of Quebec during the past few years. It is not surprising they feel the way they do. It would be surprising if they could be objective about the situation. They want action. We support their feelings. We support the government in any action it takes to correct the situation and to apprehend those who are guilty. Some people, including some members of this House, feel that the danger is so great that in order to stamp out the danger it may be necessary to arrest some innocent people; that this is not too great a price to pay. Some have said that you cannot make an omelet without breaking some eggs. Although I understand that feeling, I do not agree with it. We have tried to read and understand history. We have looked at other countries and we have looked at the attempts of colonial powers to stop independent movements by imprisoning the leaders of those movements. All those attempts met with failure, Mr. Chairman.

I suggest to the Minister of Justice, who has some family relationships in Winnipeg, that he read the history of Winnipeg. In 1919, faced by a strike the government of the day passed an amendment known as section 98 of the Criminal Code which gave that government tremendous powers. Under that section of the Criminal Code they arrested and imprisoned six or more strike leaders. There is no similarity between the leaders of the 1919 strike and the leaders of the FLQ. The leaders of the 1919 strike believed, as we do, that changes in the system can be made democratically. However, Mr. Chairman, they were imprisoned because they led a strike.

The result of imprisoning those men has been that for more than 50 years the people of Winnipeg, at least that part represented by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and myself, in almost every federal and provincial election have elected representatives who are not members of the Liberal party or the Conservative party. The arrests and imprisonment of the strike leaders resulted in a feeling of hostility toward the establishment which still exists among a large group of people in Winnipeg.

I am opposed to the FLQ, their philosophy and methods of terror. I disagree with them completely. Although separatism would be a disaster for the province of Quebec and Canada, advocating separatism by democratic means is not illegal. When people who are not terrorists are arrested and imprisoned, we are creating martyrs and sympathy for the cause of separatism.

I would support this bill if I felt that it gave the government and the police authorities the powers they need, but I cannot support it if it contains provisions which drastically curtail the democratic rights of people, or if it contains provisions which would make its penalties retroactive. That is completely contrary to the basic premise of a democratic system. I urge the government to consider seriously and agree to amendments which will make the bill fair and acceptable to members of this House and all Canadians.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I apologize to the hon. member for unduly interrupting previously. Since Your Honour ruled that I should wait until the hon. member finished his speech, I now move, pursuant to Standing Order 6(5)(a):

That the sitting of the Committee of the Whole House continue beyond the ordinary hour of adjournment for the purpose of completing the committee stage of Bill C-181.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman, to ask whether the hon. member would give consideration to rewording his motion so that we sit for an additional hour beyond the time of adjournment, rather than the open-ended motion he is proposing. We would be quite happy to sit an hour beyond the normal time of adjournment, but we feel that to sit all night would not be the way in which to deal properly with this important legislation.

• (9:20 p.m.)

Mr. Aiken: If the intention is that the question be put after one hour, I would agree.

Mr. Forrestall: Which question?

Mr. Aiken: All questions.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Broadbent: I should like to speak against the motion. There are a number of serious—

An hon. Member: It is not debatable.

The Chairman: Order. Perhaps I should read the Standing Order which was cited as the basis of the motion put forward by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka. It reads as follows:

6(5)(a) When Mr. Speaker is in the chair, a member may propose a motion, without notice, to continue a sitting through a lunch or a dinner hour or beyond the ordinary hour for daily adjournment for the purpose of considering a specified item of business or a stage or stages thereof subject to the following conditions:

(i) The motion must relate to the business then being considered provided that procedures in any Committee of the Whole may be temporarily interrupted for the purpose of proposing a motion under the provisions of this standing order.

My understanding is that the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka has moved, under the provisions of this Standing Order, that the proceedings of the committee be temporarily interrupted for the purpose of putting his motion under Standing Order 6(5)(a). In these circumstances I think I should proceed to put the motion. Before doing so, I would read the relevant portion of Standing Order 6(5(b) which is as follows:

When Mr. Speaker puts the question on such a motion, he should ask those members who object to rise in their places. If ten or more members then rise, the motion shall be deemed to have been withdrawn, otherwise, the motion shall have been adopted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker resumed the chair and put the following question:

The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) moves:

That the sitting of the Committee of the Whole House continue beyond the ordinary hour of adjournment for the purpose of completing the committee stage of Bill C-181.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would ask hon. members who object to rise in their places.

And more than ten members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. There being more than ten members objecting and rising in their places, the motion is deemed to be withdrawn.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise on a point of order. Before Your Honour leaves the chair and we go back into committee, I wonder whether there would be unanimous consent for the committee to sit until eleven o'clock? We would agree to that.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not hear unanimous consent. I will now resume the chair in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Woolliams: Don't keep playing games, Stanley. If you don't want to sit, say so.

Mr. Lewis: You made a speech saying this legislation should be carefully scrutinized.

An hon. Member: They prefer the War Measures Act.

And the House having resumed in committee:

The Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

[Translation]

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Chairman, I moved an amendment to clause 2(d), so that it will read as follows:

(d) "the unlawful association" means the group of persons or association known as Le Front de Libération du Québec and any successor group or successor association of the said Le Front de Libération du Québec, or any group of persons or association that advocates the use of force or the commission of crime as a means of or as an aid in accomplishing the same or substantially the same political governmental change within Canada as that advocated by the said Le Front de Libération du Québec.

The purpose of this amendment is twofold. Firstly, I think that it in its present form, clause 2(d) tends to confuse the terms "the unlawful association" and an "unlawful association". Secondly, each clause of this legislation regarding public order should include the definitions of the terms used in that clause. Now, since clause 3 gives a definition of the term "unlawful association", I think that the definition should be included in clause 2 under the heading "Interpretation".

[English]

Mr. Howard (Skeena): With respect, Mr. Chairman, would you mind reciting the amendment?

The Chairman: I will ask the Clerk Assistant to read the amendment now before the committee.

[Translation]

And the Assistant Clerk (legal affairs) having read the following amendment:

Mr. De Bané moved that subclause (d) of clause (2) be deleted and replaced by the following:

"The unlawful association" means the group of persons or association known as Le Front de Libération du Québec and any successor group or successor association of the said Le Front de Libération du Québec, or any group of persons or association that advocates the use of force or the commission of crime as a means of or as an aid in accomplishing the same or substantially the same political government change within Canada as that advocated by the said Le Front de Libération du Québec.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, I only wish to ask a question. If I understood correctly, the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Matane (M. De Bané) is not intended merely to modify clause 2 but also to strike out clause 3. Am I right?

Mr. De Bané: Yes, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member is absolutely right. If this amendment is adopted, all other clauses must be renumbered. As you see, clause 3 as it now reads is a definition, so its provisions should be included in the clause reserved for definitions.

In clause 4 and all subsequent clauses, the words "the unlawful association" should be replaced by "an unlawful association", since, at the present time, the only function of clause 2(d) is to equate "the" and "a". So, as clause 3 deals with several sorts of associations, one would have to say in French "une" and not "la". These two words cannot be confused.

[English]

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Having heard the amendment read by the Clerk at the table, and listened to the sponsor thereof explaining it, I feel one could perhaps vote yes or no if it made any sense or if there were any real purpose behind it, that is, if it altered the force of the bill. But it seems to do neither and I think the best one can do is to sit quietly in one's seat and vote neither way.

Amendment (Mr. De Bané) negatived: Yeas, 4 nays, 40.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mr. Burton: Mr. Chairman, I rise to move a small amendment to clause 2. I discussed the matter earlier this afternoon and I had hoped the Minister of Justice would comment on it at some time, but since he has not chosen to say anything perhaps the best procedure is to move the amendment. I regret that I do not have it translated into French and I hope the copy I have will suffice. My concern is with respect to the definition of "peace officer" in paragraph (b) of clause 2. This paragraph provides:

"peace officer" means a peace officer as defined in the Criminal Code, and includes a member of the Canadian forces

On the assumption that this legislation will pass, I can see that the armed forces may be called upon to exercise a civil authority, and it seems to me that there is therefore need for some greater control. According to my reading as a layman, this provision would automatically make a member of the Canadian forces a peace officer. While it might be argued that there are provisions in other statutes such as the National Defence Act—which I have not had an opportunity to check—that cover the situation, it seems to me that when we are considering special legislation of this nature we should make certain we have adequate civil control of and authority over members of the armed forces and the way they are used within the scope of this legislation. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar:

That clause 2(b) be amended by striking out the semicolon and adding the following:

"when assigned to perform the duties of a peace officer by authority of the Governor in Council"—

Thus, the entire paragraph would read:

(b) "peace officer" means a peace officer as defined in the Criminal Code, and includes a member of the Canadian forces when assigned to perform the duties of a peace officer by authority of the Governor in Council—

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment (Mr. Burton) agreed to: Yeas, 31; nays, 28.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment carried. Shall clause 2 as amended carry?

Clause as amended agreed to.

On clause 3—unlawful association.

[Translation]

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Chairman, with respect to clause 3, I wish to suggest first a new French wording which I think renders the English text better, and which is somewhat more consistent with the French language. I suggest—

[English]

The Chairman: Order, please. Will the committee come to order. The Chair has some difficulty hearing the hon. member who has the floor. I ask the committee please to come to order and remain that way.

[Translation]

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Chairman, I suggest another French version of clause 3 which does not affect the essence of it but only the wording. In my opinion, legislation that, at least de facto, is directed primarily to French-speaking people must be written in a style more characteristic of the French language.

I suggest the following French version of clause 3:

Le groupe de personnes ou l'association qui s'appelle Front de Libération du Québec, ou tout groupe ou association lui succédant ainsi que tout groupe ou toute association qui préconise de recourir à la force ou au crime pour réaliser au Canada un changement de régime politique identique ou analogue à celui que préconise ledit Front de libération du Québec ou pour y contribuer sont déclarés être des associations illégales.

[English]

Although my English is not very good, I should just like to say I have attempted both in this amendment and in the other amendments, without touching the essence of the provisions, to try to draft a better French version. As hon. members know, the content of this legislation is in fact mainly addressed to French Canadians, and I think the French version is very bad. This is why I have tried to make a better translation, and I hope I have succeeded. At least the French version will be more readable and will not look like a colonial law drafted by the English for the French Canadians, without the French style. What I just read was my amendment, and if I do succeed in changing the wording of the clause in my second amendment it will at least be more readable in French. I will now continue in French to say what to me is bad about clause 3.

[Translation]

It must be noted here that three categories of associations or groups are declared illegal. First, the FLQ; secondly, its successors; thirdly, any other association which would advocate the use of force or crime to reach the same or substantially the same goal as the FLQ.

It must be noted that this clause is entirely different from the second paragraph of the preamble which is actually restricted to the FLQ. It is my deep conviction, in the first place, that clause 3, beginning at paragraph 5, is ambiguous, or, if you want, can be interpreted in so many different ways that it is totally inconsistent with the usual rules governing the wording of an exceptional law, considering that this legislation is characterized by quite excessive powers which must be counterbalanced by a scope of enforcement as clearly defined and restricted as possible.

I am prepared to believe that the subject matter of this legislation, as stated, is restricted to the FLQ. However, allow me to point out that whoever drafted this legislation has a very poor knowledge of the FLQ movement. What did he mean by:

—the same or substantially the same—

• (9:40 p.m.)

[English]

—in accomplishing the same or substantially the same governmental change within Canada as that advocated—

—by the FLQ. In Webster's Third International Dictionary, 1967, "substantially" is defined as relating to the main part of something". Then I would ask, what is the main part of the FLQ? Nobody can say what it is. That is why I say the words "or any group" at the end of line 5 give rise to any interpretation.

[Translation]

For instance, the communiqué No. 11 of the FLQ dated November 2—and it is known today to have been a fake—read in part as follows:

The FLQ does not aim at political power; we are determined to make the revolution, as it is the only way for the Quebec workers to come into power.

Such stupid and morbidly anarchic nonsense is not even original. It is typical of all movements which keep harping on anarchic concepts termed by Lenin as a pass-time for bourgeois.

Finally, it is essential to show that clause 3, as worded, especially paragraph 5, lends itself to unacceptable interpretations in an exceptional legislation. Once more, the good intentions are exemplar: in fact, the circumstances are not deemed favourable to the introduction of a comprehensive bill, but I say that the challenge was not taken up.

Indeed, if one carefully considers the third group to whom the legislation applies, any group whose goal would be "the same or substantially the same"—

Now, let us agree on terms. What is the aim of the FLQ?

I find regrettable that such tremendous powers are given to the police over groups or associations when the wording of clause 3 makes it impossible to determine what is the prevailing element in the FLQ. In this connection, I shall give only one example: If two Newfoundlanders conspire to kidnap a federal minister representing a British Columbia riding, are they pursuing the same or substantially the same goals as those of the FLQ?

Another example: when an hon. member states that violence is spread not only by those we suspect, but also by Messrs. Laberge, Pépin and Claude Ryan, adding in the same breath that such people should be shot ten at a time, without trial, as well as some ten FLQ leaders, is he not pursuing goals very close to those of the FLQ?

Here is another illustration: let us assume that by ill luck a few distraught hot-heads among the Lapalme ex-employees were to explode a bomb, and considering that the FLQ had also resorted to criminal acts in order to impose the solution to their problems, would they be pursuing an objective by advocating means fairly similar to that of the FLQ?

In short, it may be seen to what extent the second half of clause 3 may lead to all kinds of interpretations and, again, the person who has been arrested on mere suspicion has no recourse. If it is true that the wording of legislation in general terms is preferable, the situation is altogether different when it comes to a provisional and exceptional measure which provides policemen with practically unlimited powers and eliminates any recourse for the arrested persons.

What does clause 3 actually mean? Briefly, it deals with associations which advocate the same means for accomplishing the same objectives. Obviously, clause 3 thus summarized is not as restricted as mentioned in the preamble.

That is all the more serious as jurisprudence is constant: in case of conflict between the preamble and a section of the act, the latter prevails. The preamble reads as follows:

—within Canada with respect to the Province of Quebec—

—whereas clause 3 stipulates:

—within Canada—

So if a Newfoundlander, member of a secret organization, comes to Ottawa to kidnap a federal minister from British Columbia will he not also be pursuing "substantially the same" goal as the FLQ?

What is the FLQ's goal? I would be pleased if somebody would explain it to us. Violent anarchy? It may be, but the criteria to define it are very nebulous.

I propose a version of clause 3 which is at least French, and fundamentally I propose to delete in line 6 the words:

—that advocates—

—and to substitute therefor

"appointed or described in an order of the Governor General in Council".

Evidently, my proposal does not entirely solve the problem, but it leaves to politicians the task of making decisions which could be discussed. If the bill is passed without amendment, an individual could be arrested and detained without bail. Only after several months, the Court could rule that he belonged to an association which was not unlawful. In my opinion, it is essential that the associations coming under the legislation be clearly identified.

I move that at line 6 which reads in English as follows:

[English]

The clause refers to any group of persons or association that is enumerated in a special order. That means at least there could be a debate on the decision of the government to call it an unlawful association. By the other law, an agent of the peace might arrest somebody whose association, in his opinion, was unlawful and it would take months before the courts decided that question. Therefore, I think the "loi exceptionnelle" should be the clearest possible. C'est tout.

The Chairman: Before we proceed I will ask the Clerk Assistant to read the amendment.

[Translation]

And the Clerk Assistant (Legal) having read the following amendment:

Mr. De Bané moved that clause 3 be amended—

[English]

He said: If I may, I would ask that you first present the amendment relating to the French version, without touching the essence of it.

Mr. Hogarth: Mr. Chairman, I would like to raise a point of order. It was my understanding that we were to debate all amendments at the outset of our discussion.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Hogarth: I may be wrong. I notice the hon. member for Calgary North agrees with me on this.

Some hon. Members: No; clause by clause.

Mr. Hogarth: Yes, they were to be voted on clause by clause as they came up. But with the greatest respect, it is extremely difficult to vote on an amendment to clauses 3, 4 or 5 without considering what might be consequential amendments to clauses 7, 8 or 9. It is my submission that copies of these amendments should be distributed to every member of the House so they may be examined before we are called upon to vote on them. I think the present procedure is grossly unfair.

When I asked the Clerk earlier today for copies of the amendments that had been filed, they were unavailable. It is grossly unfair that we are called upon to vote on amendments that are not before us. I ask that copies of these amendments be distributed, so that we may have them to reflect upon. Then we could vote on them clause by clause at the earliest opportunity tomorrow.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order may I say that I find it difficult to understand the hon. member's difficulty, because we in the official opposition are not having any difficulty. We understand what is going on. Perhaps hon. members opposite would come over here and we could explain it to them.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member for New Westminster is perhaps confusing Committee of the Whole with a Standing Committee. In Committee of the Whole there is no rule which requires anyone to give notice of any amendment: we can move amendments as we go from clause to clause. It is impossible to arrange, every time someone moves an amendment, to have it duplicated and made available to all members in writing. I think such a procedure would be completely unworkable for all of us in respect of all bills.

This is not the only bill that has been before Committee of the Whole in this or in other parliaments. There have been bills just as complicated as this one. This is the way in which we have always had to proceed in Committee of the Whole. A little attention as things proceed makes it not too difficult to follow the amendments moved. The hon. member says it is impossible to vote on an amendment on clauses 4 or 5 without realizing its relationship to clauses 9 or 10. Of course, in such a situation it is the duty of the hon. member moving the amendment to indicate, if he knows, what its relationship will be to other clauses of the bill, if there is a relationship, and for other hon. members to agree to it or oppose it, indicating the effect it would have on some other part of the bill. I do not know of any other way it can be done otherwise.

I am under no obligation to give the members of this House copies of the amendments I propose to move. As it happens, we have given copies to the Minister of Justice because he is piloting the legislation through the House and we thought it only fair that he should see those amendments so that he could consider whether or not he agreed with them. But there is no obligation under the rules to do this. There is nothing to stop an amendment being brought to the floor as was done by the hon. member for Regina East earlier this evening. He moved it because he thought of something which ought to be improved. Should we not have voted on it, and should we have held up proceedings until it was duplicated?

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, this is an impossible suggestion, much as I appreciate the desire of the hon. member to have everything in writing before him. He might ask people who move amendments to read them slowly while he writes quickly, but that is about the only solution we could have to that problem.

The Chairman: Is the Minister of Justice rising on a point of order?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, at the commencement of the committee stage the hon. member for Calgary North suggested we ought to have a fairly wide debate on clause 2, so that those members who intended to move amendments could describe in general terms what they were and place them on the table for the benefit of other members and for the benefit of myself for which I am thankful since I have the obligation of piloting this piece of legislation through the House. Surely this has happened except for the amendment spontaneously introduced by the hon. member for Regina East, which on the face of it did not seem to complicate the bill in any way and which was voted on and carried. We accept that.

Mr. Burton: It was discussed.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I do not know who the hon. member discussed it with. He did not discuss it with me.

Mr. Burton: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, I should make clear that I did discuss this matter in the debate this afternoon.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The amendment that was submitted did not come to my attention in the ordinary way. I believe all other members have put their amendments before me, and I put the one amendment I intend to move on the table. Amendments to legislation as important as this should be given a bit of notice so that hon. members on all sides of the House have an opportunity to deal with them. I think the point made by the hon. member for New Westminster is properly taken.

The hon. member for Matane I believe introduced his amendment because he felt that the French version was inaccurate. I have checked the French version of the bill again and am advised that it is perfectly in order. It may be that from an artistic point of view he does not agree with it, but from a legal point of view it is perfectly accurate. It does not advance the position of the committee if members are taken by surprise, because we are dealing with a very important piece of legislation which we all want to consider.

The Chairman: Order. Will hon. members resume their seats. The hon. member for Matane.

Mr. De Bané: M. le président—

The Chairman: If I might interrupt, there are two minutes remaining and unless someone has a burning desire to make a further contribution I should like to rule on the point of order raised by the hon. member for New Westminster. My recollection is there was a general agreement at the opening of this stage of the proceedings that members would outline in general terms the amendments they proposed to move. I think, however, that was not binding on hon. members but was a general agreement among all parties.

As has been pointed out by the hon. member for York South, there is under the rules no provision that would require the giving of notice by hon. members, although it would seem to me and I believe to most hon. members, as the minister pointed out, to be a desirable practice. Nevertheless, there is no such requirement in our Standing Orders. While the point of order is well taken, I do not think the agreement was binding on all hon. members and we should proceed, as the hon. member for York South mentioned, in accordance with the practice of the House.

It being ten o'clock—

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, it is not quite ten o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Chairman: Order, please. Would the hon. member resume his seat.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY—EMPLOYMENT AND UNEMPLOYMENT—FORECASTS BY ECONOMIC COUNCIL CHAIRMAN—GOVERNMENT REACTION

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, it is always a great thing in one's life to see everybody fleeing as if they were—

Mr. Nesbitt: Just like the Grits did earlier.

Mr. McCleave: —being threatened by the plague, when one gets up to speak on the late show. None the less, I rise in an effort to do my duty. I do it for obvious reasons. The great question which brings us here tonight is the question I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) which may be found by referring to page 876 of Hansard. I am sure everybody has looked at it four or five times in the last hour or so. My question is the following:

Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance and arises from the speech to the British Columbia Federation of Labour by the chairman of the Economic Council of Canada about employment and unemployment forecasts. Does the government agree with these projections?

The minister replied:

Mr. Speaker, I have not seen them at this point. I will take a look at them.

I then posed another question to the minister:

When the minister answers that question, will he also say what the government expects the unemployment situation to be if he differs from the chairman?

• (10:00 p.m.)

Really, Mr. Speaker, that is the sum and substance of my being here tonight trying to press for an answer to what surely must be the most important question for Canadians at this time. It is not an esoteric question; it does not deal with anything that happens abroad. It deals with what I would call the lunch-pail question: Is somebody going to have work? Will somebody be able to go home to his wife and children with money and say, "This is what I have been able to earn"?

I had to go home in somewhat different circumstances myself when I was faced with certain facts in 1963. But the fact is that every cotton-picking man or bread earner among us has to assume a certain posture. That may mean nothing to the Minister of Finance, but to us it may mean a very important posture—the right to be a man or woman, or the right not to be. It was in the spirit of that sort of question that I asked what was the forecast. The Minister of Finance cast it off in a cavalier fashion over his left shoulder. In that respect he almost becomes an imitative shrugger of his boss, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). But he answered it by saying, in effect: Oh, well; in due course that question would come before us. When I presented the question I did so seriously and I expected a serious answer, and I still do.

I should like to read 143 words into the public record. They come from the report of the Economic Council of Canada. The group of people who presented the report to the Minister of Finance was composed as follows, as appears at page 15 of the annual report of the Economic Council:

The council is assisted by a staff of approximately 120 persons, including about 60 professional and administrative officers, drawn from a wide variety of former positions with the federal government departments, other federal agencies, provincial governments, universities, business firms, labour unions, and international institutions. The wide range of training, experience and knowledge of the staff reflects the wide terms of reference given to the council. In spite of these wide terms of reference, there has been a deliberate attempt to keep the over-all size of staff relatively small and to expand it relatively slowly in order to maintain strength and consistency in the work of the council.

In the spirit of finding strength and consistency I ask the question: Where are we going, employment or unemployment-wise, this winter in Canada?

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to be precise about the particular rate of growth in the economy that is required to give a given level of employment or unemployment, and the government is not prepared to comment on the projections made by the chairman of the Economic Council.

In his remarks during the Throne Speech debate, the Minister of Finance on October 13 dealt at some length with the present state of the economy, the difficult nature of the problems confronting us and the steps taken by the government thus far to deal with them. It may be recalled that the minister acknowledged, too, the fact that, as he put it, we shall need a substantial annual rate of real growth before any marked improvement in the unemployment rate will be forthcoming. These are the hard facts.

The minister also expressed his confidence that the economy is capable of returning to the rate of growth that will reduce the unemployment rate significantly over the next four or five quarters. He said:

We believe that our policy stand will guide the economy on this course.

The government will do the people of Canada no service if it rekindles the inflation by seeking to force an advance more rapid than productivity improvement and cost moderation will permit.

Before concluding, it may be worth reminding the House that in its last review the Economic Council itself stressed the extreme importance of moving the economy back toward its potential gradually, and with great care, so as to avoid the danger of renewed inflation.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

MANPOWER—SUCCESS OF RETRAINING PROGRAM IN PROVIDING JOBS

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, on November 5 I posed a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang) asking him to give a statement to the House regarding the effectiveness of the training and retraining program carried out by the department. I wanted to know specifically whether this program was successful, because on the same day in response to a question at page 904 of Hansard the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) had said:

> Mr. Speaker, as I have pointed out before, the winter works program totalled something less than $50 million. We have replaced it by manpower retraining and mobility programs to the tune of several hundreds of millions of dollars.

The Prime Minister was boasting about this, saying this is the type of thing the government was doing in order to alleviate the unemployment situation. But I simply want to know how effective is the program. I do not see the minister nor the Parliamentary Secretary here, but I am sure somebody will answer the question. This important question lies at the heart of the problem in order to deal with unemployment and poverty in Canada.

To my knowledge we have not had a real accounting of the effectiveness of the program. I do not wish to criticize the program out of hand or disregard its benefits, but I am concerned that the government seems to place practically all its efforts to deal with unemployment on this manpower retraining program, and I submit that it does not always work though a great deal of money is spent. Last year the government issued press releases about the amount of money spent, but there was no mention of its effectiveness in bringing people from these courses into the labour force.

An hon. Member: There were no jobs to go to.

Mr. Comeau: That is exactly the problem—there are no jobs. This is why I want to know how the program is being assessed. It is better to have a program than to simply pay unemployment insurance. At least it gives the trainees something to do, but in itself that is not good enough.

What relation is there between the training and the unemployment situation? If we have 1,000 people or 1,000 jobs, are the 1,000 people trained for the 1,000 jobs, or is it the other way around? If we have 1,000 people training for particular jobs, are the same 1,000 people being employed in the field that they have chosen? How do we assess the program? Is it by the employment or is it simply by the training that we give?

For example, I am aware of a program where 700 people applied but only 200 were accepted. This raises the question of whether it is a program for the elite, if I may use that term in this context. Naturally, the best people get the training but what happens to the other 500 who applied for training under this program? Do we send them to other courses? I do not know the answer and this is why I asked for a statement, because if we have to shift people to other courses it presents another problem.

Are we simply trying to offer a complete range of courses? That is a question I should like answered. For example, I know of one case in which a gentleman was told to apply for three or four courses. That does not make much sense. Either he is suited for one course or he is not. Perhaps he did not want to take three or four courses; he only wanted one course. The department did not want him to apply for only one course. Apparently they did not have that course to offer. Why do they not tell the applicant they do not have the course, and try to help him in some other way? Let us not shift these poor people around.

Many questions could be asked about this training program. I want to know how the government assesses it. After going through a training program, are the people suitable for employment? Also, is the government really providing incentives for employers to hire these people? The first thing an employer asks an employee is, "Have you had any experience?" We must do something to encourage employers to hire these people. For all these reasons I want to know how effective is this program.

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I hope the hon. member's receptiveness to enlightenment will be commensurate with his ingenuity for framing questions. In replying to the hon. member's question, I would say first that for the fiscal year 1969-70 alone some 320,000 persons were placed in training under the Canada Manpower Training Program. With reference to the success of this program, I would refer him to a survey tabled by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration on June 22, 1970, on adults who have taken Canada Manpower training courses. This survey involved 83,193 persons who completed full-time courses in public institutions between January and September 30, 1969, and indicates that graduates of Canada Manpower training courses have more than doubled their prospects of getting a job and increased their earnings potential by at least 12 per cent.

As these figures indicate, the results of this survey are very encouraging and demonstrate that the Canada Manpower training courses make a very positive contribution to higher productivity and income security for Canadian families. Specifically, the survey shows that 75 per cent of those who finished training and looked for work were fully employed within three to four months. Only 31 per cent were employed when they entered courses. Men increased their average earnings by $43 a month, and women by $47 a month. This was a gain of 11 per cent over pre-training earnings for men, and 24 per cent for women. Seventy-one per cent of those who took skill training found jobs in occupations closely related to their training.

I would also point out that this survey forms but part of the Department of Manpower and Immigration's continuing review and evaluation of the effectiveness of the training programs for adults. This review and evaluation is believed to be the most comprehensive of any country's. With reference to the higher proportionate wage gains for women, I would mention that one of the great virtues of the training program is that it is tending to equalize opportunity for women who prior to training had substantially lower earnings. This is true for both women taking skill courses and those in basic upgrading.

These results indicate that, particularly in the case of women, improvement in the basics alone can lead workers to a more rewarding job and bring about a substantial increase in productivity and earnings. None the less, trainees who go to further skill development can, judging from the results, expect an additional increase in earnings. Both men and women completing skill courses showed substantially higher earnings after training than those taking upgrading courses.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION—CORNWALL—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON STUDIES AND PROGRAMS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, on October 29, as reported at page 693 of Hansard, I directed the following question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand):

Will the minister give consideration to making a statement on motions outlining the results of studies made by the federal government and the government of Ontario into the heavy unemployment in the Cornwall area and an early start on various programs under the provisions of the DREA legislation?

My question was prompted by the continuing concern of many people about the situation in the Cornwall area. In December of last year the secretary of the textile workers' union in Cornwall wrote to the minister, I think, and to the leader of the NDP pointing out that 650 people had been given notice of permanent lay-off by the Courtaulds plant in Cornwall.

On April 13 of this year the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) directed a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, pointing out that in the area of Stormont-Dundas-Glengarry 13.7 per cent of the total labour force was unemployed. He asked what was being done. The minister replied that his deputy had visited Cornwall and they would be giving serious consideration to the question.

On May 25, 1970, the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Douglas) directed a question to the same minister pointing out that the unemployment rate in Cornwall was approximately 18 per cent. He asked what the results, if any, had been of the special task force studying the situation in the Cornwall area, whether a report had been received and what action would be taken. On that day the minister said that the task force had returned the week before, that he had not received a recent report but that he would inquire and inform the House of the results of the study within a few days. That was on May 25. It is now November.

If the task force made a report, it is still in the files of the minister. If the task force recommended any special measures to help establish new industries in the Cornwall area, nothing has been done about them to our knowledge. The minister replied to the leader of the New Democratic Party that he had inquired about the plight of the 650 people laid off at the Courtaulds plant and that they had been offered the opportunity of a retraining course. No one wants to downgrade the importance of retraining courses, but it is a rather desperate situation if that is all that can be offered to people in an area such as Cornwall.

If the result of the retraining is that they will be offered jobs in other cities, requiring them and their families to move, this is a very serious situation for the people concerned. I join the right hon. member for Prince Albert, the leader of my party and others in asking the government what steps are being taken to help alleviate the situation in eastern Ontario, particularly in the city of Cornwall.

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): For some months, Mr. Speaker, the federal government and the government of the province of Ontario have been working together to develop increased employment in the area of Cornwall. This effort applies not only to the Department of Regional Economic Expansion but to other federal departments such as transport, public works and manpower and immigration, which can help in making Cornwall more attractive to industry. There is a parallel and co-ordinated effort on the part of the various departments of the provincial government.

While I do not have concrete results that can be announced tonight, there is a likelihood that some positive results will occur quite soon. Everyone regrets that the problem is so difficult and solutions take time to develop. Every practical effort to bring them into being as soon as possible is being made.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.23 p.m.

THE LATE GENERAL DE GAULLE

EXPRESSION OF TRIBUTE AND SYMPATHY

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have learned with deep emotion of the death of General de Gaulle, one of the great figures of our time. I want to render homage to his genius as a soldier, and to the outstanding qualities of a statesman who, in his own lifetime, became an historical figure.

Even before the outbreak of the World War in 1939, Charles de Gaulle had shown an extraordinary understanding of the dimensions of modern war. But the defeat and occupation of France brought out in him, during long and hard years, the courage and pride of the patriot in exile, and the patience and authority of the politician. During the war he embodied for millions of men the hope of liberation; single-handed, so to speak, he sought to preserve, and afterwards sustain, the permanence of France, which owes to him the fact of having found once again its high place in the concert of nations.

Mr. Speaker, the departure of Charles de Gaulle calls up everywhere a great surge of memories. A great man has just died. To the French people and Government, I express our profound sympathy.

[English]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I join with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in his eloquent words concerning General de Gaulle. I knew the General very well. I met him on a number of occasions. One of my treasured memories will be that a few days ago I received from him a volume of his memoirs inscribed with a personal message, the acknowledgement of which he will never receive.

• (2:10 p.m.)

He was one of those personalities who are above age, who lived in his day and generation and made a contribution not only to freedom in his own time but for all mankind. He was, as the Prime Minister said, a prophet in the years between 1935 and 1939—a prophet without honour in his own country. Indomitable, incorruptible, inflexible—he stood for what he believed. In the dark days of war there were many who were pessimists when France was down, he was never one of them. He stood and in the clarion words of freedom predicted over and over again that victory would ultimately come.

Everyone, however great, is entitled to make mistakes. Many will recall his words in this country in 1967. This is no occasion to weigh those words. The moving finger writes and, having writ, moves on. But whatever mistakes he made he will always be remembered in the eternal books of history and will always have an overwhelming credit in those books.

With the approach of Remembrance Day I recall November 1958, when he asked me whether I would be willing to go to Verdun on November 11, Remembrance Day, and be in the saluting stand as the legions of France moved past. It was in the battle of Verdun that he was wounded. It was there, in the saddest charnel place in all the world, where some 700,000 Frenchmen and Germans met their deaths in support of those things for which they stood. The General said he himself could not be present because of his memories of those days of the Battle of Verdun. As I walked over that battlefield I could not but recall the awfulness of what took place during those dark years when he gave his dedication to devoting the rest of his life for peace for all time.

I recall him in Ottawa in 1960. He spoke in the most feeling terms of Canada's sacrifice. He was with Churchill, when freedom was under siege, when for a period of a year and a half we in the Commonwealth and France were alone. He never lost faith.

I remember him as an orator, a model for orators. Beset by blindness he would have read over to him a speech that was prepared by himself, and he would deliver it as it was written in the ringing words of freedom. The last of the titans of the second world war have now departed. He is the last of them. His memory will live for all time.

[Translation]

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the New Democratic Party, I wish to express our grief on the occasion of the passing of General de Gaulle. It is true that his relations with Canada were at times marred by his intervention in the rather delicate question of our national unity. However, he will remain a very famous man. As commander of the French resistance forces and leader of France during the Algerian crisis he ranks high among the great patriots in world's history.

He had an incredible moral fortitude and a very remarkable literary talent. His autobiography sheds light on an era in which he played a predominant part.

It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that even after his retirement as President of France, his influence remained and will probably diminish very slowly after his death.

Tribute to Late General de Gaulle

Some of us may have wondered about his preoccupation with grandeur, may have disagreed with him on some aspects of his social philosophy and may have worried about his nuclear policy, but we cannot deny that he was an outstanding statesman, whose devotion to France and French culture was unlimited.

We join with the Prime Minister in offering Mrs. de Gaulle and the French people our most sincere sympathy.

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, as the previous speakers, I would like to say a few words on behalf of the members of the Ralliement créditiste, and pay tribute to a man whose name will go down in history, since Charles de Gaulle has left his mark as the champion of democracy during the last world war, while working without respite for the recovery and stabilization of France seriously affected by that war.

The military strategists consider that General de Gaulle was probably one of the greatest thinkers of the French army, when he devised even before the war the setting up of a highly armoured and motorized army. His plans were brushed aside and France was caught off guard by the German invasion.

Instead of accepting defeat, on June 16, 1940, he left for London where on June 18, he called on the French to go on fighting with Great Britain.

Thus, he gave the people of France new hope, brought to his side what was left of the colonial French army, and free French forces fought with Canadian and British troops until victory, when he was acclaimed as a liberator first in Bayeux then in Paris.

De Gaulle was not merely a military man but also a great statesman, probably the one who did most to rebuild France's world prestige that had been diminished by the weakness and the divisions of its governments.

Once more, he saved France from disaster. Following the events in Algeria and the threat of a civil war in 1958, the French people called upon him, and the General agreed to form a government.

He prepared a reform of institutions and at the next elections, he was given a great majority. Elected president of the Republic by 78 per cent of the voters in France and overseas, he governed according to the spirit of the Constitution and left a definite mark on French politics. He solved the Algerian problem, gave France a striking force, and kept his distance with regard to NATO.

De Gaulle was a controversial figure and will doubtless be for years to come because the Memoirs he has written and which have yet to be published in full reveal new aspects of the man.

I have just read this tribute: the Memoirs of de Gaulle will go down in history and be compared to Caesar's Commentaries on the Gallic war.

We therefore join the Prime Minister and all hon. members in mourning the death of this great Frenchman.

[Mr. Lewis.]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN SPEAKER'S GALLERY OF PRIME MINISTER OF GHANA, OTHER MINISTERS AND OFFICIALS

Mr. Speaker: May I bring to the attention of the House the presence in the Speaker's Gallery of a number of distinguished guests. We are delighted to have with us for a few moments the Prime Minister of Ghana, the Right Hon. Dr. Kofi Busia, and Mrs. Busia. The Prime Minister is accompanied by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Tourism, the Hon. R. A. Quarshie, and the Minister of Foreign Affairs, the Hon. Victor Owusu, as well as a group of senior officials of the government. We welcome these distinguished visitors to Canada's House of Commons. I am sure that hon. members would want me to express their particular gratification that under Dr. Busia's leadership Ghana has returned to parliamentary rule and continues to play a leading role in the life of the Commonwealth of Nations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ELECTION EXPENSES

APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask unanimous consent of the House to name the members of the Special Committee on Election Expenses. If I have unanimous consent I should like to move, seconded by Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale):

That members of the Special Committee on Election Expenses be Messrs. Breau, Brewin, Chappell, Cullen, Deachman, Forest, Forrestall, Howe, Laflamme, Laprise, McKinley and Ouellet.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the President of the Privy Council. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

CONTROL OF PUBLISHING INDUSTRY—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43 there is provision whereby a motion may be accepted by unanimous consent if it relates to a matter of urgent and pressing necessity that has previously been explained by the mover. It is one of the few mechanisms that Parliament has available to it to deal with matters in a special way because normally Parliament has cumbersome arrangements for dealing with urgent problems. The sale or proposed sale of Ryerson Press to the McGraw-Hill Company of the United States has brought into very sharp focus the fact that we are perilously close to complete domination by foreign industrial and economic interests. What I propose by way of motion is to permit a parliamentary committee to examine this matter.

I might add as an aside that the request for unanimity also encompasses with it the idea that we do not seek to have any debate upon this matter if that is also unanimously accepted. Therefore I should like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) but with a companion and honorary seconder, the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald):

That the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs be authorized to inquire into the steps which may be necessary to maintain Canadian control of the publishing industry and to permit the said publishing industry to enhance and develop its position and that the said committee report its findings and recommendations on or before December 15, 1970.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Skeena. The motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such unanimity?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. Therefore, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 the motion cannot be put at this time.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

NATIONAL SECURITY

EXAMINATION OF POLICE METHODS OF INQUIRY AND SURVEILLANCE

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. When the present crisis is over, which we hope will be very soon, is it the intention of the government to examine carefully the methods of inquiry and surveillance which have been employed by our national police force and the other police forces with which it co-operates in respect of national cases such as the Cross case to ensure that they are the most up to date and the most effective known to modern police forces, in view of the fact that the greatest manhunt in peacetime history, backed by the widest possible powers, unfortunately has not been able in a period of one month to return Mr. Cross safe and sound to his family or to apprehend his kidnappers?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this type of review has been under way in the federal government as a result of the report last year of the Royal Commission on the matter of security. At that time we did introduce certain changes in the structure of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and since then on a continuing basis we as a cabinet have been examining the question of security. But the comments of the hon. member are well taken. We will continue this examination to see if there is some way to have a more efficient police force which would perhaps in the future dispense with the need to have recourse to such extraordinary measures as the War Measures Act. This being said, I think we do owe a vote of thanks to the police for the work they have done. That they should not have been a little more efficient is perhaps a reflection of the kind of society in which they and we live, a society which is not accustomed to dealing with terrorism and subversion of an underground kind.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hees: I thank the Prime Minister for his answer.

CONTROL OF RESALE OF ARMY SURPLUS AUTOMATIC WEAPONS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Supply and Services. Could he advise the House what steps have been taken or are planned for the near future to control the resale of army surplus automatic weapons in view of the ease with which these weapons can be purchased in Canada as described in the evidence of Mr. Bernard Lortie last Saturday?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to take that suggestion under consideration and report back to the House if any changes are contemplated.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Perhaps I might be permitted a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I asked the Minister of Justice if the particular section of the Criminal Code in reference to prohibited and restricted weapons had been proclaimed. I wonder whether the Prime Minister or one of his ministers, because of the importance of this matter and because these sales are still going on, could make a statement to the effect that this regulation has been passed and that these are now prohibited and restricted weapons?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the minister took notice of the question yesterday. He is not in the House today and I suggest it would be proper to wait for him to give the answer.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): I wonder whether the Minister of National Defence would take note of certain advertisements in "Armed Forces Review" which is very close to being a government publication? In recent months it has carried advertisements close to its editorial page, or in any event in a prominent place, for the sale of revolvers, .38 Enfields, Italian automatic pistols, shotguns, ammunition, and offering free catalogues, in fact, the whole bit in a publication that is so close to our Canadian Armed Forces as to be indistinguishable.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, first I should make it perfectly clear that "Armed Forces Review" is not an official publication.

As to the marketing of, for example, .303 Enfield rifles, the hon. member will recognize that they are not prohibited by the changes in the law, and it seems to me that there can be no objection to them on that ground. Parliament faced this question a year or so ago and decided not to outlaw them. It may well be that it should have, but there has been no change in the law in that regard.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I want to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Supply and Services. Would he be prepared to place a moratorium on the disposal of such automatic and semi-automatic weapons until a review of the whole situation has been made?

Mr. Richardson: No, Mr. Speaker, I have indicated that the situation is being closely examined. Until I report back I would not contemplate a moratorium.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

MEASURES TO ALLEVIATE FORECAST WINTER UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of Finance arising out of the unemployment situation in the country. May we expect from him or someone else in the government shortly, within days or weeks a statement of some new policies or new programs to deal with the situation?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as we have new policies to bring forward to Parliament, we will do it in the ordinary manner.

Mr. Lewis: I am not asking the Minister of Finance to do it in an extraordinary manner. I am asking him to tell the House whether we may expect such an announcement within days or weeks so as to deal with the winter unemployment situation.

Mr. Benson: My hon. friend will just have to wait and see.

Mr. Lewis: Can the minister inform the House whether any special attention is being paid, if some programs are being worked out, to the situation in the province of Quebec and the particular need to deal with unemployment in that province?

Mr. Benson: The matter of unemployment is a matter of concern to the government, and our economic policy and programs are continuously under review. I hope that if we do bring forward some additional programs my hon. friend will vote in favour of increased taxes in order to finance them.

[Mr. Forrestall.]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, we will wait to see what the program will be. I think the minister's answer requires another question, namely, whether he is being hypothetical about his programs or whether we may expect such a program before Christmas?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me the hon. member is now reiterating the original question asked of the minister.

SUGGESTED REPEGGING OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Among these programs that the minister is considering, is he giving consideration to repegging the Canadian dollar before the Canadian automobile parts industry goes out of business altogether?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I do not think there is any danger of that at all. If my hon. friend will take a look at the export of automobile parts under the automotive trade agreement he will find that in spite of his party's opposition to it it has been and continues to be of great benefit to Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

Mr. Hees:—let me point out that the automobile pact was started by our government when we were in power.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

Mr. Hees: You can bet your sweet life it was.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

HOUSING

USE OF URBAN RENEWAL PROJECTS TO ALLEVIATE UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I have a question for the Minister without Portfolio responsible for housing. Following the decision of the Conservative government in Ontario to go ahead now with deferred programs in order to meet the rising unemployment, can the minister inform the House to whether or not his department has decided to go ahead with urban renewal projects during the coming winter months which had been deferred earlier?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): The urban renewal projects which were authorized for implementation during the past year will proceed but additional ones will not be funded in the immediate future.

QUEBEC—SPECIAL MEASURES TO ALLEVIATE UNEMPLOYMENT AND SOCIAL PROBLEMS

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): I should like to ask the minister in charge of housing whether he intends to bring forth any special measures to deal with housing problems in Quebec so that the unemployment situation there may be alleviated as well as the social problems?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): We have in fact accelerated investment in housing in Quebec during the past several months. Some of the evidence is showing up in the housing starts statistics for October, and there will undoubtedly be a continuation of this kind of activity in that province.

[Later:]

INCREASE IN AMOUNT FOR URBAN RENEWAL

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I have a supplementary question for the minister in charge of housing. In view of the bleak picture shown in the rising unemployment figures and in the light of the fact that the minister has indicated that $25 million will be projected yearly for the next five years toward the urban renewal program, is the minister reconsidering this position at this time in order to help to alleviate the unemployment situation and increase housing starts?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): This year we will have invested through CMHC slightly in excess of a billion dollars in commitments for housing. The suggestion that urban renewal is the best or the only method of providing relief from urban decay or, in fact, providing employment, is one which I do not necessarily accept.

Mr. Alexander: I appreciate the minister's answer but in effect he has not answered my question. I was wondering whether the minister intends to increase the amounts allowed for urban renewal.

Mr. Andras: I think I answered that question in my reply to a question put by an hon. member earlier.

NATIONAL SECURITY

WAR MEASURES ACT—PAYMENT BY QUEBEC FOR SERVICES OF ARMED FORCES

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Since the Quebec government has just requested that the Armed Forces remain on duty for another month, could the Prime Minister say whether final agreement has been reached between the two governments as to who will foot the bill for the stay of the Armed Forces in Quebec?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, this question has not yet been finalized.

TRANSPORT

URBAN RAILWAY LINE RELOCATION POLICY—PROJECTS TO ALLEVIATE UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): My question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Could the minister indicate when the government's policy with respect to urban rail line relocation will be made public, and could he also indicate whether such announcement will be followed by projects that would be of assistance in overcoming the current unemployment problems?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I believe the House knows that last week an announcement was made of a three-way study under way in the city of Winnipeg with the co-operation of the government of Manitoba and the government of the city of Winnipeg with a view to making this a pilot project to determine the best means of dealing with these problems which exist in many parts of the country. I have no idea at the moment how long this study will take, although I have asked for an answer as quickly as possible. I hope that the recommendations will be such that we will be able to get under way with the project very quickly after the report is received.

POLLUTION

OTTAWA RIVER—AGREEMENT WITH ONTARIO AND QUEBEC

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Has an agreement been entered into by the federal government and the provinces of Ontario and Quebec on a plan to control pollution in the Ottawa river?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The ministers in charge of the water pollution questions and environmental management from the provinces of Quebec and Ontario attended a meeting here yesterday at which we reached an agreement to the effect that on the completion of the Quebec-Ontario study of the Ottawa River which will be completed early in the new year we will proceed to enter into a joint water quality management agreement pursuant to the terms of the Canada Water Act.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, I ask my supplementary question in view of the fact that members of this House for at least as long as I have been here, some 12 years, have frequently asked questions about this particular subject of the Ottawa River. Therefore I ask the minister why he did not make his statement in the House today rather than make it outside the House at a press conference?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, my counterpart ministers from the provinces were here yesterday and it seemed important that they join in the announcement as this is a provincial-federal agreement. When the actual agreement is entered into at the time the study is completed it will, of course, be tabled in the House and announced in the House in the normal manner.

Mr. Aiken: Then I assume from the ministers answer that there was no agreement entered into yesterday at all, and that this was just a P.R. job.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

EXTENT OF STUDY OF OTTAWA RIVER

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): May I ask the minister how extensive the survey will be in Lake Timiskaming, the headwater area for the Ottawa River?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I believe the study is a comprehensive one. I will take note of the question and answer the hon. member more completely, but I am aware it goes from the headwaters right to where the Ottawa River flows into the St. Lawrence, so the water quality management area will be a complete one for the Ottawa River.

DISCUSSION OF CONTAMINATION OF WATERS FLOWING INTO JAMES BAY

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Could he tell us if during his talks with his counterparts in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario there was any mention of polluted waters flowing into James Bay and threatening fishing in those regions?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): No, Mr. Speaker. We only talked about the Ottawa river.

INFORMATION CANADA

AVAILABILITY OF DIGEST OF RESPONSES TO GOVERNMENT ANNOUNCEMENTS

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I direct this question to the Prime Minister because of the over-all responsibility involved. Will the Prime Minister assure the House that the newly announced so-called digest of responses to government announcements will be made available to the House at the same time as it is made available to government departments?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am not sure what the hon. member is talking about, Mr. Speaker. I will take the question as notice.

Mr. Bell: When the Prime Minister checks into this newly announced so-called digest, will he make certain that those responses which may be unfavourable to the government, such as Le Devoir, are also included?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is now making a suggestion which he must presume will be taken into account.

[Mr. Greene.]

GRAIN

INTERNATIONAL GRAINS ARRANGEMENT—RESULTS OF MEETING ON RENEWAL

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. In view of the great importance to Canadian grain markets and pricing, is the minister in a position to report to the House, under motions, the results of the meeting just concluded in London in connection with the International Grains Arrangement?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be unnecessary to do it on motions. Agreement was reached at that meeting to hold a negotiating meeting in January.

Mr. Southam: Can the minister indicate in a more optimistic vein whether any agreement on floor pricing will be reached before next year?

Mr. Lang: This is the object of the negotiating meeting, to determine whether or not there is the possibility of an international arrangement. The meeting of the World Wheat Council which has just ended was intended to decide whether or not negotiations would in fact take place, and this was agreed upon.

PRESENCE OF RUSTY BEETLE IN WHEAT SHIPMENTS—NUMBER OF COMPLAINTS—REJECTION OF CARGOS

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, further to the questions asked yesterday about insect infestation in shipments of Canadian grain, can the minister responsible for the Wheat Board advise the House as to the number of complaints received from overseas customers in regard to insect infestation in shipments of wheat from Canada, and if there have been any rejections of cargos of Canadian grain?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I can add anything to the information given to the House on this subject yesterday by my colleague the Minister of Agriculture.

AIR TANSPORT

PROPOSED TRAVEL TAXES—APPLICATION TO DOMESTIC FLIGHTS

Mr. Charles H. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In light of the announcement that Canada is one of the countries proposing new air travel taxes, which appear to be endangering the international air fare agreement, will the minister assure the House that these new charges or any other new charges will not apply to the cost of domestic air travel?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is an extremely complex issue. I do not believe I could do justice to it in a reply of this sort. I will take the question as notice and see if I can prepare something comprehensive for the hon. member.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PROPOSED COLLECTIVE BARGAINING RIGHTS FOR ARMED FORCES MEMBERS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Has he received representations from the Public Service Alliance in favour of changes in the Public Service Staff Relations Act so as to permit collective bargaining on behalf of members of the Canadian Armed Forces, and will he give favourable consideration to this request?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have read news accounts of this particular initiative but as far as I know I have not received such representations.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of supplementary questions which I think should be asked at this time. Can the minister give some assurance not only to the House but to members of the Canadian Armed Forces that their views will be assessed before any decision is taken by the government in response to the Public Service Alliance request?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): At the moment as far as I know, Mr. Speaker, we have no such examination under way.

Mr. Forrestall: I direct another supplementary question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Has he had a chance to review the letter sent to him by the President of the Public Service Alliance, and can he indicate whether he has convened any meetings of his colleagues on the subject matter of that letter?

Mr. Barney Danson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): As a supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Do I understand the Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister wants to ask a supplementary?

Mr. Danson: My supplementary is to the Minister of National Defence. I wonder whether giving the Armed Forces collective bargaining rights would increase their strike capacity?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I attempted to ask the right hon. Prime Minister a question but apparently he is engaged on some other matter so I will direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence. Would he give consideration to giving those Members of Parliament who have Canadian Forces bases in their constituencies the right to seek out the views of members of the Armed Forces on the question of their unionization from outside?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): As far as I know no member of this House is under any inhibition in speaking to members of the Armed Forces.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Since the Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister has asked a supplementary question of the Minister of National Defence about the strike right of the Armed Forces, was he reflecting on the one that has just taken place recently in Quebec?

Mr. Trudeau: Explain.

Mr. MacInnis: See me after hours.

HUMAN RIGHTS

EFFECT OF QUEBEC BILL ON DOCTORS' CIVIL LIBERTIES

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Has the Governor in Council, acting under the authority of the War Measures Act, authorized the government of the province of Quebec to issue and enforce criminal measures against medical specialists of that province which permit trial and conviction in absentia, presumption of guilt without plea, and forfeiture of their property?

Mr. Speaker: I have some serious doubt about this question. I wonder if it might be rephrased to make it acceptable from a procedural standpoint, although I doubt whether that is possible.

Mr. Rynard: Then I would like to ask the Minister of Justice if there has been any consultation on this matter?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, that particular legislation, so far as the Department of Justice is concerned, lies within provincial jurisdiction. I do not know if there has been other consultation.

Mr. Rynard: Since Bill 41 will have the effect of regulating the conduct and behaviour of the individual, would the minister not refer this matter to the Supreme Court of Canada for a ruling?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): In connection with Bill 41 and also those measures which have been taken to stop the movement of eggs and broilers from one province to another, both of which orders are unconstitutional within the concept of confederation, has the government given any consideration to the disallowance of the legislation passed by the legislature of Quebec which denies to doctors the right to leave that province?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, Sir.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice. Has he considered whether Bill 41 passed by the legislature of Quebec contravenes the Canadian Bill of Rights? I ask that because it stipulates that fines between $5,000 and $50,000 per day will be levied against those who comment in such a manner as to influence any doctor to leave the province or to be absent from his practice.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have not reviewed the bill from that point of view.

INDUSTRY

PLANS TO ESTABLISH CORPORATION TO ASSIST PUBLISHERS

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister as the leader of the government. Inasmuch as we have a Canadian Film Development Corporation to assist in the development of the film-making industry in Canada, has the government, either by itself or in conjunction with the provinces, any plans to establish a similar corporation for publishing?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not heard of any.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

DISPOSITION OF CAMP IPPERWASH PROPERTY

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Will the minister assure the Indians of Stanley Point that when the Camp Ipperwash property is no longer required by the Department of National Defence it will be returned to the Indians and not transferred to the province of Ontario?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the government does not at the moment intend to give up this training facility on Lake Huron. I might indicate to the House and the hon. member that there is a fairly substantial quantity of unexploded ammunition on the grounds of Camp Ipperwash. That being so, I am not sure whether he would want me to transfer it to the Indians or to the province of Ontario.

HIGHWAYS

CONSTRUCTION OF CORRIDOR ROAD BETWEEN NEW BRUNSWICK AND QUEBEC

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Since the voters of the state of Maine have indicated that they are unwilling to undertake the full responsibility for constructing a corridor road between the provinces of New Brunswick and Quebec, will the Prime Minister given consideration to initiating discussions between the government of Canada and the governments of the United States and Maine to determine if it might be possible to develop this transportation link that would be of such tremendous value to the Atlantic area?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would have to ascertain first what the will of the Atlantic provinces is in this regard. I understand that they are not completely united in their desire to build this road.

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

Mr. Coates: Will the Prime Minister consult with the governments of the four Atlantic provinces to determine whether they wish such an initiative to be taken by the federal government?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, in my periodic meetings with the Atlantic premiers this question frequently comes up. I am sure it will come up again in our subsequent meetings.

TRANSPORT

STATIONING OF ICEBREAKER, "ALEXANDER HENRY"

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that navigation can be opened up in Georgian Bay and Lake Huron eight to ten days before Lake Superior, is it the intention of the government to winter the icebreaker Alexander Henry in Owen Sound or Collingwood?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would think that this question ought to be placed on the order paper or discussed at the time of adjournment if there is urgency.

NATIONAL SECURITY

AVAILABILITY OF WEAPONS—PASSING OF ORDER IN COUNCIL

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Justice and to thank him for breaking the roster system and coming here today. I wonder if he would answer the question I asked yesterday about restricted and prohibited weapons and about an Order in Council?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I understand that there were earlier questions on this subject. I should like to review them. Also, I have not had the opportunity to complete the investigation as I promised the hon. member I would. I will do that tomorrow or Thursday.

Mr. Woolliams: If the minister is going to check on this matter I just want to tell him that there were no answers. The Prime Minister just passed the matter over to him.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

NON-PAYMENT OF MINIMUM WAGE—DISCUSSION BY MINISTER OF TRANSPORT WITH PRESIDENT

Mr. David Orlikow (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the decision of his colleague, the Minister of Labour, to prosecute the CNR because of its failure to pay its hotel employees the federal minimum wage, could the Minister of Transport discuss this question with the president of the CNR since it is, to say the least, peculiar to have a government department prosecuting a Crown corporation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's question is in the form of an argument. I wonder whether it is in order. Perhaps the minister might be allowed to reply briefly.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I hope it will be appreciated that I am not falling back on a stock reply. The matter is before the courts and under the circumstances it would not be appropriate for me to refer to it at this time.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

EFFECT OF GAS WELL BLOWOUT ON PANARCTIC DRILLING PROGRAM AND ECOLOGY—SAFETY MEASURES

Mr. R. J. Orange (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development but in his absence I will direct it to his Parliamentary Secretary. I wonder if the minister will make a statement on the effect of the future drilling program of Panarctic as a result of the gas well blowout on King Christian Island. I should also like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary to bring this question to the minister's attention: what steps are being taken to cap this blowout and to alleviate the concern relating to the effect of this blowout on the ecology of that particular area of King Christian Island?

Mr. Judd Buchanan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to bring this observation to the attention of the minister.

Mr. Orange: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Speaker, in the minister's statement, if he makes one, could he indicate the cause of the blowout and what safety measures are required by the drilling companies in the high Arctic to ensure that there are no future blowouts such as the one which lasted a full year?

MANPOWER

ATLANTIC PROVINCES—SPECIAL TRAINING PROGRAM TO ALLEVIATE UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Does the minister intend to institute a special manpower training program over and above the program already announced in order to meet the anticipated excessively high rate of unemployment in the Atlantic province this winter?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as has already been announced, some additional training programs have been instituted to make courses available, especially in those areas where unemployment is high. We are at the same time examining the extent to which facilities are available for the courses which now can be provided.

Mr. McGrath: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the minister would be prepared to discuss with his colleague, the Minister of National Defence, whether armories and other national defence facilities could be made available for special manpower training programs this winter to meet the high unemployment?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I certainly would be glad to talk about almost anything with my colleague. But I think that in large measure the hon. member should know that the provision of these courses basically falls within the responsibility of the provincial governments in the areas concerned. So it might be more fruitful if I discussed this matter with them.

[Later:]

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Will the minister make a statement on motions on the disposition of his department's share of the $60 million mentioned in the contribution of the Minister of Finance to the debate on the Speech from the Throne?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, it has been my intention to make a statement, perhaps not on motions, in regard to this disposition. I will see about doing so at an early date.

[Later:]

Mr. McGrath: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I refer the matter I raised in my question to ten o'clock so the Minister of Manpower and Immigration will have an opportunity to make that statement.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

QUEBEC—ACTION TO ALLEVIATE UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary to the right hon. Prime Minister.

In view of the statement made last Friday by the premier of the province of Quebec, would the right hon. Prime Minister be willing to tell the House if the Quebec premier made him a request for greater financial aid to fight unemployment in the province of Quebec?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the premier of the province of Quebec knows that we have held discussions on a practically continuous basis for several months to arrive at granting supplementary substantial aids in the province of Quebec.

Effectively, it was after these discussions that we increased considerably assistance to low cost housing, regional development and construction of technical schools.

This involves a series of continuous programs, Mr. Speaker, which are continuously increasing in numbers.

FISHERIES

DEPLETION OF MARINE RESOURCES—DISCUSSIONS WITH SOVIET UNION

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. Can the minister say if he has succeeded in arranging talks with the Soviet Union concerning the depletion of our marine resources? If so, when will these meetings take place?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, no meetings are scheduled at the moment.

MANPOWER

ASSISTANCE TO CONSOLIDATED MINING EMPLOYEES TRANSFERRING TO NEW JOBS

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Some time ago I asked the minister about the position of employees at the potash plant of Consolidated Mining and Smelting near Saskatoon, and whether these employees would receive assistance under manpower when they transferred to new jobs. Can the minister inform the House whether or not arrangements have been made to give such assistance to these employees?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): There are several types of assistance available, Mr. Speaker. There is the type which can be offered by the Department of Manpower and Immigration under its rules and which is, of course, being offered to them. To my knowledge, no agreement has been reached with the company under another head of the manpower facilities.

Mr. Gleave: I did not ask the minister if he had worked out an agreement with Consolidated, I asked whether arrangements had been made to give assistance to these employees when moving, which comes under the manpower program?

Mr. Lang: As I indicated to the hon. member, the rules are certainly being applied. Such assistance as is possible under the rules is being made available to them.

SCIENCE

INQUIRY AS TO ANNOUNCEMENT OF POLICY

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board. In light of the conclusion of the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council that a broadened economic base for the Maritimes will substantially depend upon technology and innovation, can the minister inform the House when a science policy for Canada will be announced?

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): I hesitate to give a definite date, Mr. Speaker. I hope there will be a statement later on.

Mr. Comeau: In light of the APEC report, can the minister say whether science policy will directly encompass regional strategies for technology and innovation?

Mr. Drury: This will be dealt with in a peripheral way, Mr. Speaker.

GRAIN

WHEAT—ESTIMATED ACREAGE TO BE SEEDED NEXT SPRING

Mr. J. A. Horner (Crowfoot): I wish to direct a question to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. I understand that when the minister was in western Canada last week he advised the farmers that they could grow more wheat. Would the minister give the House the benefit of his wisdom and inform us the number of acres the western farmers can seed to wheat next spring?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I did that not long ago, Mr. Speaker, when tabling the proposals for next year. If the hon. member reads through the proposals he will see that at the back there is a table indicating a possible acreage system.

PRESENCE OF RUSTY BEETLE IN WHEAT SHIPMENTS—SOURCE OF CARGOS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that inspections were made of the grain shipped to various countries, and which is reported to have rusty beetles, has it been determined whether these cargos were from grain held at terminal elevators or from grain at country elevators which was trans-shipped?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I will look into that, Mr. Speaker. To the extent we are able to determine that, I will advise the hon. member when the information is available.

TRADE

POSSIBLE BRITISH ENTRY INTO EUROPEAN ECONOMIC COMMUNITY—CANADIAN CONTINGENCY PLANS

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): My question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It is in connection with the remarks the minister made to the effect there are serious risks that the eventual membership of Britain in the European Economic Community will lead to discriminatory arrangements that will affect Canada. Is the minister or members of his department making contingency plans against this eventuality? If so, when will he be in a position to announce these contingency plans?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what is meant by risks. If the hon. member is asking whether we are having discussions with the EEC or with the government of the United Kingdom looking for ways and means by which the damaging effect on Canadian trade of the enlargement of the community could be remedied the answer is yes, we are doing that. It is difficult to predict five, six or seven years in advance what will need to be done to accommodate ourselves to this event.

Mr. Saltsman: A supplementary question. I appreciate the discussions being carried on with members of the EEC. However, in view of the serious effects Britains membership in the community will have on Canadian trade, is the minister discussing contingency plans or programs on which Canada might embark in the event these programs do not meet with success?

Mr. Pepin: We will do that as much as possible.

TRANSPORT

NOVA SCOTIA—ACTION TO ENSURE CONTINUATION OF CNR SHORT LINE SERVICE

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Central Nova): My question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the importance of rail transportation to the government's regional development policies and employment in the Atlantic area, can the minister, who reports to Parliament for the Canadian National Railways, ensure that no action is being taken by the CNR to discontinue rail service on the short line in the province of Nova Scotia?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I will be glad to bring the representations of the hon. member to the attention of the CNR. I believe I will be discussing the whole matter with them next week.

REDUCTIONS IN RAILWAY SERVICE—REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the drastic reduction of rail transportation in this country, will the minister be kind enough to refer this entire subject, including the National Transportation Act as it now exists, to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker, not as such. Of course, there will be adequate opportunity for the appropriate committee to deal with this subject when dealing with the CNR estimates and in various other ways.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN REPRESENTATION AT FUNERAL OF GENERAL DE GAULLE

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I want to direct to the Prime Minister.

I want to know whether the Prime Minister intends to represent Canada personally at General de Gaulle's funeral as President Nixon said he would represent the United States?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are waiting for directions from France as to the level at which representations will be requested and only then shall I take a decision.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INTRODUCTION OF PENSION LEGISLATION

Mr. Murray McBride (Lanark-Renfew-Carleton): I wish to direct my question to the President of the Privy Council. In view of the fact that we are on the eve of November 11, is the minister in a position to advise the House when the veterans' pension legislation will be introduced?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): It had been our hope to introduce this legislation in the House before November 11, Mr. Speaker. We will have it very soon.

STATUS OF VETERANS HOSPITALS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): A supplementary question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Shortly after November 11, will the minister make a statement on motions as to the status of veterans' hospitals in Canada, particularly those in Saint John and Halifax?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, that will not be necessary.

Mr. Nowlan: A supplementary question. Perhaps the minister did not get the full purport of my question. I ask if we can expect a statement. It must be necessary because some changes are contemplated. These changes have been in the air for the last several months, if not years.

Mr. Dubé: When there are changes, Mr. Speaker, they will be announced in the proper way.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs if there is any reason why he cannot file notice of the legislation this afternoon so the country will know about it tomorrow?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Dubé: The country can now take notice that legislation will be introduced very soon, Mr. Speaker.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PUBLIC ORDER (TEMPORARY MEASURES) ACT, 1970

PROVISION OF EMERGENCY POWERS FOR PRESERVATION OF PUBLIC ORDER

The House resumed from Monday, November 9, consideration in committee of Bill C-181, to provide temporary emergency powers for the Preservation of Public Order in Canada—Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)—Mr. Laniel in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: When the committee rose last evening we were studying clause three of the bill.

On clause 3—Unlawful Association.

[Translation]

I want to remind hon. members that towards the end of last night's sitting the hon. member for Matane informed the committee of a proposed amendment which is in itself a new drafting of the French version of clause 3, which does not change its substance.

The Chair has some reservations about the amendment and would be prepared, at this stage, to hear the hon. member for Matane and allow him to set forth his motives for submitting the amendment.

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Chairman, I think that in Beauchesne's, in citation 400 or thereabout, it is stated that an amendment may be moved providing it does not alter the substance of the clause; that is plain common sense.

If a word is missing in a text and that, through this fact, it becomes impossible to enforce the law, one can move an amendment in order to add the missing word or letter, and this should not preclude a member from moving later a substantive amendment.

I tried to demonstrate that the French translation, while correct, was not in keeping with the spirit of the French language, then later, I moved a substantive amendment. I believe the two are quite compatible. We must start with the amendment dealing with the translation, then, I shall move another one dealing with the substance.

Then I think that if I am allowed to suggest to the House that there is a word missing in a sub-clause, this does not affect my right to introduce an amendment to that sub-clause.

[Mr. Dubé.]

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: Does the Minister of Justice agree that this amendment merely relates to a change in the translation, in which case every reasonable member of the committee would surely agree to it? If that is all the amendment put forward by the illustrious hon. member is about, we could surely agree to it and get it over with.

[Translation]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, as I said yesterday evening, perhaps the hon. member is not satisfied with the translation. This translation was examined on two or three occasions. Perhaps it is not as polished as the hon. member would like it to be, but I feel that, legally, it is correct.

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Chairman, if I may reply to the Minister of Justice, I shall say two things. The first one is that the bill—

[English]

I will try to say it in English. Quebec's problem is not a problem of language. As a French Canadian, I do not fight to say "cheval" instead of "horse". It is not a problem of language, it is a problem of culture. It is not a problem of poverty, it is a problem of dignity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. De Bané: While, as the Minister of Justice says, the French text is correct, I say we do not write that way in French. The laws which are made in the Province of Quebec are not written in that way. I have myself tried to put this into the French language because, in fact, this special law is so largely applicable to French speaking Canadians. I have prepared a translation of the whole bill and I have given it to the Minister of Justice. I am putting forward, without reference to the substance of the clauses, a better translation and one which has been checked by a specialist in these matters. While I agree that the translation made by the translation bureau is correct, it is not really correct French, because translation into any language is more than words—it is a way of saying something.

Mr. Deachman: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

An hon. Member: He is already speaking on a point of order.

Mr. Deachman: We have enough people in this House who speak English, but we do not speak as if we were writing a government bill. We speak English, but we would certainly expect to find different language used in writing a government bill.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I might bring to the attention of the hon. member for Matane and of the committee generally, the fact that we are not dealing at this stage with a translation. The French text and the English text are both official here and are original texts. If an hon. member wishes a text to be changed he should, in the opinion of the Chair, present an amendment to change an original text. If the committee attempts to become some kind of linguistic assembly with regard to interpretation or translation, I think we shall be here for a long time on all our legislation. This is the opinion of the Chair. If the hon. member for Matane wishes to put an amendment to change part of the wording, the Chair will be ready to accept it but, when we come to a clause of a bill, and he wishes to substitute one text for another, I think it would be very difficult to accept.

[Translation]

At this stage, I would remind the hon. member for Matane that according to Beauchesne, and I quote:

It is irregular to propose to leave out all the words from "That" to the end of a clause in order to substitute other words, as such an amendment is in the nature of a new clause.

According to Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Form, the hon. member for Matane may vote against clause 3 which is under consideration and if the clause is not adopted, then he may propose a new French version of clause 3.

At page 551 of the 17th edition of May's Parliamentary Rules and Forms—and I am making an attempt at translating the text into French—one can read:

Furthermore, an amedment may not be moved . . . to substitute in effect a new draft for an existing clause.

[English]

The English wording of May's 17th edition at the bottom of page 550 and the top of page 551 reads as follows:

Furthermore, an amendment may not be moved . . . to substitute in effect a new draft for an existing clause.

[Translation]

If I take these two reference as a guide it seems to me that at present the Chair cannot accept the amendment of the member for Matane as it is formulated now.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, I am in complete agreement with what you just said. Last night, I listened closely to the statement of the hon. member for Matane (Mr. De Bané), and I came to the conclusion that here in Ottawa, we had nothing left to envy the Quebec National Assembly: we now have our "Jean-Noël".

I agree with the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Deachman), who says that if we accept the French version proposed by the hon. member for Matane, we will have to reconsider the English version of the same clause.

At any rate, Mr. Chairman, whether clause 3 is worded in the jargon of the law or in excellent French, as stated by the hon. member for Matane, the fact remains that before the courts, we will witness unending quibblings by lawyers concerning the interpretation of this clause 3.

But right now, Mr. Chairman, I think that we are losing valuable time and that we should decide immediately on the matter.

• (3:20 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Chairman, I feel that the matter being raised here is one of some importance, particularly in view of the fact that the bill has direct and specific application to a problem that lies within the borders of the province of Quebec. Although the bill is a national statute, and obviously has application to the whole country, presumably the legislation will be read and understood primarily by the French-speaking people of this country.

If there is any danger at all that the French text is in fact a literal translation of the language used in the first instance in an English statute, then I think the minister has a very real responsibility, not only to the French-speaking people of the country but also to his own government and to this Parliament, to make sure that the text does not give the impression, as the hon. member for Matane has suggested, that the legislation is a sort of colonial statute. There is as much in the spirit of the law as in the letter of the law, and in dealing with the sensitive issue with which this House has been seized over the past few weeks I find it remarkable that the minister would not offer the benefit of the doubt to a member of this House whose mother tongue is, in fact, French.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The Chair does not feel that we are discussing the whole problem of translation but that we are discussing it in relation to a specific amendment. I do not think this is the time to question a decision of the minister. We are discussing the rules of the House, not addressing ourselves to the decision of the minister to accept such an amendment.

The basis for the decision of the Chair at this stage is that the amendments presented to the committee on the different clauses of the bill are not, in the opinion of the Chair, to be regarded as translations but are to be dealt with on the basis of their substance. It is for the members of the committee to decide whether they accept the substance or want to change some part of the amendment. It is difficult for the Chair to accept the argument that one text should be substituted for another text because linguistically it is better.

I do not think the Chair can entertain the other argument made by the hon. member as to the application of the bill to one province or another province. Some hon. members from that particular province are accepting the bill. We could have a debate that would move quite a distance from the subject before the committee at the present time.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Chairman, on a question of privilege, I very much resent the degree to which the Chair takes a debating position on a matter of substance.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The Chair also takes exception to the argument advanced by the hon. member and would ask the hon. member to revert to his argument on the amendment.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Chairman, I am fully prepared to discuss the substance of this amendment, not only for its own sake but also because I am fully aware, as are all hon. members, that these amendments are being put forward on each clause, so to speak, because in the view of the hon. member for Matane the translation does not effectively state the content of the clause in the French language. This is why, through you, Mr. Chairman, I am suggesting to the minister that he give serious consideration to the rewording of the text so that we will not produce a text that will have some counter-productive effects in its application.

I feel that there is an opportunity, during the early stages of this legislation, for the minister to make a clarifying statement in order that we do not have to face this question continually throughout the passage of the bill. I am asking for this kind of assistance in order to facilitate the passage of the bill, not to delay it. As the matter stands now, we are being forced to repeat this debate on each and every clause of the bill, which I suggest would be wasteful of the time of the committee. I believe the points raised by the hon. member for Matane to be well taken, and I ask the minister to give them very serious consideration.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, may I just reply to two great authorities on the French language, the hon. member for Matane and the hon. member from Prince Edward Island. I want to explain to them, as I have to the members of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs who have been made aware of the drafting process, that for the last three or four years there has been no such thing as a literal translation from one language to another language in the preparation of bills, either from French to English or from English to French. The policy memorandum is prepared in each of the two official languages, and they are both quite separate. One is prepared in the English language by a common law lawyer, the other in the French language by a civil lawyer from Quebec. The two versions are not prepared for literal comparison; each version grasps the concept that it is wished to insert into the bill. That being so, translations are not literal one from the other.

Secondly, I have heard no criticism from the attorney general of the province of Quebec, who has primary responsibility for administering the bill in the French language. He has had a copy of it ever since the bill received first reading.

I can only say again to the hon. member from Prince Edward Island and to the hon. member for Matane, who moved the amendment, that those charged with the responsibility for administering the bill have had an opportunity to review the legislation and are satisfied that, within the limits of human frailty and the literary boundaries of both languages, the bill does in fact do what it attempts to do.

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Chairman, I am ready to wager that this text was written in English only, and I would say that there is indisputable evidence of it, especially if the situation has not improved since I left the Department of Justice.

What I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, since there is a debate on a procedural point, is that, according to Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, citation 408, and I quote:

> The Committee can so change the provisions of the bill that when it is reported to the House it is in substance a bill other than that which was referred. A Committee can negative every clause and substitute new clauses, if relevant to the bill as read a second time.

So, once again, Mr. Chairman, the wording of my amendment, and I say this in all modesty, appears to me to be more French, if I may express it thus, and a closer translation of the official version. I had no intention, when I presented my amendment, to change the English version.

In any case, I would not want to delay unduly the proceedings of the House. If such is your decision, Mr. Chairman, I will only read the texts I have proposed, without tabling them, and I will be satisfied with making substantive amendments.

[Translation]

The Deputy Chairman: Considering the last remarks of the hon. member for Matane (Mr. De Bané), he does not intend to move his amendment. Therefore—

Mr. De Bané: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, but I said "If such is your decision".

The Deputy Chairman: I must point out at this stage that the Chair feels that the amendment tabled has not yet been put to the House and cannot be accepted as an amendment to the French version of clause 3.

If the hon. member for Matane wishes to put his amendment in another form, if he asks the House to substitute certain words after such and such a line, or the fourth word of a given line, I do feel the committee would not refuse him the right to do so; but he must base himself on the interpretation and substance. But he cannot do it, as he apparently intends to do now or later for several other clauses, on the basis of the translation. Then, if he moves an amendment to correct some lines or parts of a clause, the Chair has no other choice but to accept his suggestion.

Mr. Asselin: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

You are overlooking an important point of the Standing Orders. When an amendment to a legislation has been put forward by a member, it no longer belongs to the member but to the House. Even if the member wished to withdraw his amendment, Mr. Chairman, he would have to ask unanimous consent of the House. Otherwise, we would have to vote on it.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I must point out to the hon. member for Charlevoix that the amendment has never been put. It has not been presented to the House, but only tabled for the sole purpose of allowing members to read it beforehand. This somewhat complicates our procedure. It has been done as a result of an understanding among the parties, in order to facilitate consideration of the proposed amendments. The present one has not yet been moved as such.

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Chairman, I should like to move, if I am allowed to, the following amendment. In line 2 of clause 3, I move that the words "appelé le Front de Libération du Québec" and the following words be replaced by the following ones:

... qui s'appelle Front de Libération du Québec, ou tout groupe ou association lui succédant, ainsi que tout groupe ou toute association qui préconise de recourir à la force ou au crime pour réaliser au Canada un changement de régime politique identique ou analogue à celui que préconise ledit Front de Libération du Québec, ou pour y contribuer, sont déclarés être des associations illégales.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, once again the hon. member is changing the French text. I suggest that the committee should not accept the amendment.

Mr. De Bané: This is word for word what was said yesterday.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. At any rate, I must point out to the Minister of Justice that the Chair still allowed the hon. member to move an emendment to change the wording because, according to the rules of the House, he is allowed to change some words.

I must read at once the member's motion. It is moved by the hon. member for Matane that all the words following "association" which is found in clause 3 of the bill now under consideration be replaced by the following words:

—known as Front de Libération du Québec and any successor group or successor association of the said Front de Libération du Québec, or any group or persons or association that advocates the use of force or the commission of crime as a means of or as an aid in accomplishing the same or substantially the same governmental change within Canada as that advocated by the said Front de Libération du Québec, are declared to be unlawful associations.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I do not object to your courtesy towards the hon. member who has just moved a third French version of his amendment. However, I think that we should turn down this third version as we did the second and the first.

Mr. De Bané: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman.

What I have just heard is totally and completely invalidated by yesterday's Hansard. What I did, Mr. Chairman, was to move a change in clause 2 (d) which says that "the unlawful association" means "an unlawful association". I suggested that the definition contained in clause 3 should appear in clause 2 which already contains the definitions. Last night, I moved another definition. The Chair asked me not to read the whole definition but to start after the first three or four words, which I have just done.

The Deputy Chairman: However, the Chair should point out to the hon. member for Matane that the point raised was not a question of privilege but rather an exchange between the hon. member and the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Chairman, we must recognize that an amendment is before the House and that we will have to vote on it. It is hard for me, at this time, to reach a decision on this matter. I wish to ask the Minister of Justice whether this amendment allows the legislation to reach its aim. Indeed, if the new wording is actually good, I do not see why we would not vote for it.

I wish the Minister of Justice would tell us whether the aims of the legislation will actually be realized by the new definition or if the previous one would be more appropriate?

[English]

Mr. Skoberg: If I understood correctly, Mr. Chairman, the question was asked of the Minister of Justice. I am wondering whether the Minister of Justice has enough consideration for the House to at least acknowledge the questions asked of him in order that we may have the opportunity to assess the merits of the question.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I have already answered that question on two occasions. The difficulty here is that the hon. member for Matane does not understand the relationship of Section 3 of the bill to the second preamble, since it must be interpreted in accordance with the second preamble. Taken together, the texts in both English and French as they now read incorporates, in the opinion of those who advised me on those matters, the purpose of the bill.

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the Committee ready for the question? All those in favour will please rise. All those opposed will please rise.

Amendment (Mr. De Bané) negatived: yeas, 10; nays 44.

• (3:40 p.m.)

The Deputy Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Shall clause 3 carry? The hon. member for Matane.

[Translation]

Mr. De Bané: I should like to remind Your Honour that I have moved a second amendment which reads as follows:

That the words: ... that advocates the use ... be deleted in line 6—

—as well as the following words, and that they be replaced by the following words:

"Designated or described in an order of the Governor General in Council".

Mr. Chairman, allow me to say a few words about the meaning of this amendment.

Since the first amendment which I moved has not been carried, I refer to the wording which is proposed to us.

One can read on line 5 the following words:

—or any group of persons or association that advocates the use of force or the commission of crime as a means of or as an aid in accomplishing the same or substantially the same governmental change within Canada as that advocated by the said Front de Libération du Québec—

The French wording is as follows: "...identique ou à peu près identique..."; the English wording reads:

[English]

"The same or substantially the same". As I was quoting yesterday from Webster's Third International Dictionary, "substantial" means the most important part related to something. Then, the question arises, what is the most important part of the FLQ.

[Translation]

In reading the preamble, one finds that the legislation is aimed at the FLQ, while in section 3, one finds that three types of associations are singled out: The FLQ, its successors or any other group with the same or substantially the same views.

I tried yesterday to demonstrate how difficult it is to know which criteria should be used in determining whether an association is aiming at the same goals as the FLQ. First of all, what are the FLQ's objectives? To say that it is the independence of Quebec is absolutely wrong. To say that it is the welfare of the workers is utterly false. To say that they have been written in a formal document is also false. The content of the FLQ's manifestoes changes daily.

In view of the power given to the peace officers to arrest on mere suspicion an individual falling into one of those three categories, it is desirable to limit the scope of this bill. This is why I move that each association be mentioned in an order in council. Faulty as it might be, this procedure will enable us at least to debate the government's decision. Otherwise, we will hear from the court, after several months of proceedings, that an individual already arrested and detained without bail, was actually a member of an unlawful association provided for by this bill.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The Chair will put the motion first.

[Translation]

The hon. member for Matane (Mr. De Bané) moves to replace that part of clause 3 beginning on line 6 with the words:

—"that advocates"—

—up to the end of the clause by the words:

—"designated or described in an order of the governor general in council".

[Mr. De Bané.]

[English]

It is my interpretation that the hon. member for Matane wishes to replace all the words after the word "association" on line 6 by the following words: I shall read his amendment as it is in French.

[Translation]

—"designated or described in an order of the governor general in council".

The hon. member for Calgary North. Did you want to get up on this?

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say something, not only on the amendment but also on the clause. I wish to refer for a few moments to the royal commission on security because we have heard government spokesmen make frequent reference to the responsibility of the Attorney General of the province of Quebec. I should have thought the government at least would have followed the recommendations of the royal commission on security, particularly since the report was published in 1969. Not only do I wish to refer to the report because of the interpretations, but also in order to bring to the attention of members of the committee, the fact that it has been suggested the government might have taken some action as long as two years ago. I wish to read a paragraph which I believe answers any argument that the government acted in time when there was a crisis. This paragraph deals with unlawful associations. It deals first of all with the administration of justice generally and reads:

However, if there is any evidence of an intention to engage in subversive or seditious activities, or if there is any suggestion of foreign influence, it seems to us inescapable that the federal government has a clear duty to take such security measures as are necessary to protect the integrity of the federation. At the very least it must take adequate steps to inform itself of any such threats, and to collect full information about the intentions and capabilities of individuals or movements whose object is to destroy the federation by subversive or seditious methods.

Here, in paragraph 22, is the part I think we should remember.

Although the more moderate elements of the Quebec separatist movement have up till now been conducting a largely political campaign, it appears to us that there is in certain quarters a tendency to resort to activities that could well be regarded as seditious.

That was written two years ago by the commission which investigated security in Canada. It said two years ago that this problem, the FLQ and its seditious activities, existed. Then, all of a sudden on Friday, at four o'clock in the morning, the government moves and says there is a crisis when this situation existed before.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. It is the opinion of the Chair that the hon. member for Calgary North is discussing the whole problem and is not relating his remarks to the amendment we have before us which is quite specific. The amendment is an attempt to define associations other than the FLQ that would be designated by the Governor in Council. So, I think the hon. member's remarks are a little removed from that aspect.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, in his amendment my friend asks for a definition of the FLQ. I do not know what the FLQ is. I do not think the Minister of Justice can define it, and yet we are legislating on it. I should like someone to stand up in the House and define it. Nobody can define it. This is the point I am trying to make. Perhaps the royal commission on security defined it in paragraph 22. This may at least make his amendment sound, or make the clause sound or unsound. I should like to finish the few lines in question.

—it appears to us that there is in certain quarters a tendency to resort to activities that could well be regarded as seditious.

Listen to this:

What is more, there is no doubt about communist and Trotskyist interest and involvement in the movement. Both groups have established "autonomous" Quebec organizations as somewhat transparent attempts to exploit separatist sentiment; members of both have achieved positions of influence in at least some of the separatist groups and agencies, helped by the often bitter factionalism within the movement itself. For these reasons alone it seems to us essential that the Canadian security authorities should pay close attention to the development of these particular elements—

I am sure at that time the Commission was dealing with the FLQ.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Then paragraph 23 of the report reads:

Foreign involvement is more difficult to establish with any certainty.

However, it is clear that there is evidence to this effect, and it is time the federal government moved. They have not moved for two years. They cannot explain today what the FLQ is but we will have to vote on it. We may have to go along with the government, but I would like the Minister of Justice or one of his law officers to tell me what the definition of the FLQ is. I do not know it nor does anyone in the Committee. What does it mean? Does it mean communism? As I understand it, it is any group or association that suggests that crime should be the means of change or that violence should be the means of change. That, as I understand, is the amendment to clause 3. Does this just apply to the FLQ, and what is the FLQ? Is it an association that stands for the two things I have mentioned, or is it something more than that? If a court can convict a person for belonging to the FLQ, can communists also be convicted, if that is what communism stands for? I am not here to define communism. I think this is a most ambiguous clause and I can see why the hon. member is concerned about its interpretation.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Speaking to the amendment of the hon. member for Matane, I said earlier that the Committee should read clause 3 together with the second paragraph of the preamble. Clause 3 reads:

The group of persons or association known as Le Front de Libération du Québec and any successor group or successor association of the said Le Front de Libération du Québec, or any group of persons or association that advocates the use of force or the commission of crime as a means of or as an aid in accomplishing the same or substantially the same governmental change within Canada as that advocated by the said Le Front de Libération du Québec, is declared to be an unlawful association.

The second paragraph of the preamble reads:

And Whereas the public order in Canada continues to be endangered by elements of the group of persons or association known as Le Front de Libération du Québec who advocate the use of force or the commission of crime as means of or as an aid in accomplishing governmental change within Canada with respect to the province of Quebec or its relationship to Canada—

On reading those two together, one sees that the clause makes an unlawful association of the FLQ or of any successor or substitute organization or of any other association having substantially the same purpose and using substantially the same means, namely, attempting governmental change in Canada by aid of force or by the commission of crime with respect to Quebec or its relationship to Canada. Those are the perimeters of the definition. They are more narrowly drawn than they were under current regulations to make it precise that this is the situation we are trying to meet.

The hon. member for Matane suggests that we eliminate the words that begin with:

[Translation]

—"that advocates"—

[English]

which would mean in English the elimination of the words:

—that advocates the use of force or the commission of crime as a means of or as an aid in accomplishing the same or substantially the same governmental change within Canada as that advocated by the said Le Front de Libération du Québec—

He wants to substitute:

[Translation]

—designated or described in an order of the Governor General in council.

[English]

In other words, he wants to say that the FLQ or any other organization decreed by the Governor in Council is declared to be an unlawful association. This would be rendering illegal any association, no matter what it was, decreed by the Governor in Council. I do not think anybody in the House, except for the hon. member for Matane, would allow a crime to be created unilaterally by the Governor in Council or the cabinet.

For that reason, there is no way we can accept that amendment.

Mr. Woolliams: Would the minister answer one question before the hon. member for York South rises to speak? I hold in my hand a document by Mr. Elmer A. Driedger, Q.C., B.A., LL.B., assistant deputy minister and parliamentary counsel to the Department of Justice. At page 94 of his book "The Composition of Legislation" he sets out very clearly that a preamble can be used as a guide but cannot be used to interpret a section or sections of the act. Is the minister suggesting—and I am not dealing with the point he made in reference to the amendment—that the preamble should be used to interpret the section of the act and must be read with that section so that it can be interpreted? If he is, one of the officers of the Crown disagrees with him.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I can cite other statements of Mr. Driedger which bear particularly on the point, and which would substantiate the contention that the preamble is part of the bill. It is a well known rule of statutory construction that a preamble may be referred to to give meaning to any provision in the bill. If, at some later stage in the proceedings, the hon. member wants me to produce authorities to that effect in the United Kingdom, in Canada and in the United States, I would be pleased to do so.

Mr. Lewis: This is obviously one of the crucial clauses of the bill, and I want to say a few words on it if I may. First I want to express—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. Is the hon. member speaking to the amendment?

Mr. Lewis: I assure you, Mr. Chairman, that I am aware of the amendment and will speak to it. First, I want to express my doubts as to the value of making any organization unlawful, although, as I said in my remarks the other day, in my view this is a criminal conspiracy and against the law even now. But perhaps the minister could make some change to clause 3 that would make some of us less unhappy with the wording which now appears to go beyond what the minister wanted. Although obviously what the minister said with regard to the preamble is relevant, I wonder why he should leave it in doubt so someone will have to argue with reference to the preamble.

I cannot see how it is possible to accept the amendment of the hon. member for Matane. If I understand it, it means that the government will have the right to designate organizations as unlawful, against which there would be no appeal. No one dragged into court under that provision would be able to argue that the organization he belongs to is not unlawful, as he might if he were dragged in under this rather broadly worded provision. Under this provision he would at least have the right to argue that under the proper interpretation of the clause, the organization of which he is a member is not unlawful. If you give the government the legislative right to designate a list of organizations as being unlawful—I have not had a great experience in criminal law—but it seems to me to be simple logic that once the government has done that there is no argument about it. No one can argue as to whether or not the organization is unlawful if the government has so designated it.

I cannot think of any less desirable power to place in the hands of the government than this kind of power. Therefore, much as I sympathize with what the hon. member for Matane is trying to accomplish, I suggest to him with great respect that this proposal is a bad one and that it does the opposite of what he intends it to do. I believe that Parliament cannot give that sort of power to the government.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Now, if I may, I should like to turn to the Minister of Justice and ask him through you, Mr. Chairman, the following question in order to avoid any misunderstanding. As I will have occasion to say perhaps two or three times in this committee, and I do not intend to speak long now or at any other time, does he not agree that the difficulty about a bill restricting people's rights is that, in addition to any problem of the legal effect of the bill, there is the very real problem of the psychological effect of the bill, or the inhibitory effect it has on people's behaviour, the fear it arouses as to whether one can do this, that or the other thing? The fewer provisions you have in a bill such as this inhibiting people from doing perfectly proper things, the better the bill is. Therefore I wonder why, instead of leaving the interpretation to argument based on the second paragraph in the preamble, the Minister of Justice could not give consideration to placing those words right in this clause? May I just finish, Mr. Chairman, because that will take less time than for you to rise and tell me to sit down?

• (4:00 p.m.)

The Deputy Chairman: The Chair feels that the hon. member is out of order. The point he is making now could be made after the committee has decided on the amendment. There may be other hon. members who want to speak for or against the amendment. It is for that reason the Chair has interrupted the hon. member.

Mr. Lewis: I must admit you are right, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I pay tribute to the hon. member for Matane for attempting to deal with a very difficult problem in clause 3, although I do not agree with the method he has chosen. His amendment would give a wide power to this or any other government, and I do not think that would be wise. However, in presenting the amendment, he has brought forward a basic point to which the Minister of Justice did not respond when it was originally brought forward by the hon. member for Calgary North and referred to by the hon. member for York South. There is no substantive definition of FLQ, and using the preamble to do this is a debatable method. That is one of the weaknesses in this kind of legislation, or in the steps being taken by the government to outlaw the FLQ. I realize that is the substance of clause 3, and I will speak to that when we are dealing with the clause itself.

[Translation]

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Chairman, I only want to clear up a matter.

Obviously, it is complete nonsense to introduce a bill asking us to authorize the Governor General in Council to decree what associations are unlawful.

In its present form, the clause in question does not make sense. What I want to point out is that we are now experiencing a situation in which the government can, even today, if it so desires, pass orders in council.

[English]

While we are debating here this afternoon, the government has power, by virtue of the War Measures Act, to designate a lot of associations illegal by Order in Council. What I am suggesting now is that what the government can do by virtue of the War Measures Act be put in this law, which is to be in effect for a few months. What I am saying is that it should not be left to the court to decide whether somebody who has been arrested, who has been detained without bail because he is not entitled to it, is a member of an illegal association or not. Hon. members should remember that the Governor in Council already has the power to declare the association of which he is a member illegal. When the government decided the FLQ was illegal, it did so by virtue of an Order in Council passed during the night. Suppose that tomorrow people from Newfoundland were to kidnap a minister of the Crown, a federal minister whose riding is in B.C. Would their organization be similar or substantially similar to the FLQ?

The government might proclaim the War Measures Act a number of times and declare associations illegal by Order in Council. The government has this power already, and so I am saying, put it in the law which is to be in effect for three months. If the government decided one of the parties, especially the opposition, was illegal, then the government would fall before the opposition. We would have a debate in Canada about that decision.

Mr. Brewin: I wonder if I may ask the hon. member if that is not precisely one of the reasons we are hoping to get rid of the War Measures Act, because it does give such sweeping powers which now are taken away by this bill. However, his amendment would restore that power to the government, would restore that right to declare any organization in Canada illegal?

Mr. De Bané: If I may answer through you, Mr. Chairman, if we pass this bill it will be effective for three months, but the other measure is there permanently.

[Translation]

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. members have heard the amendment moved by the hon. member for Matane. Those in favour of the amendment will please rise. Those opposed will please rise.

Amendment (Mr. De Bané) negatived: Yeas, 1; nays, 55.

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 3 carry?

Mr. Alexander: May I ask the minister a question with particular reference to the answer that he just gave to the hon. member for Calgary North. I believe the minister indicated that he is placing great stress on the preamble in order to define the FLQ. Because of the ambiguity of this particular procedure, leaving the committee in a very peculiar position, I would like to refer the minister to Driedger on "The Composition of Legislation" at page 94 where we find the following:

If a preamble is intended to have legal effect—

I stop there. I think this is the minister's intention.

—it would perhaps be better to insert in the act itself a section that will produce that effect;

Could the minister indicate why he found it unnecessary to include within the definition clause the second statement of the preamble?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I am sure members of the committee appreciate that this was a very difficult section to draft, both in the regulations and now in the bill, because the FLQ does not have a corporate charter, nor does it set forth its objects and purposes in the way that the purposes and objects of an association are usually set out. I put the question that hon. members are now putting to me to those who advise me, who happen to be among the best legislation drafters in the country. They assured me that the best way to state the purposes, in so far as they can be rendered precise enough to deal with the organization we are trying to combat, but also general enough to deal with any attempt by that organization to disperse, or regroup under another name, or operate through allied organizations having the same purposes and using the same means, was to use the words that are chosen here.

The words in the preamble are left in the preamble to apply evenly throughout the act because the preamble applies throughout the act. If they were incorporated in this clause, then there would be an unevenness which would not achieve the result we are trying to achieve. I can assure hon. members that I, personally, went over this point very carefully with those who are charged with advising me, who are the successors of Mr. Driedger.

Mr. Alexander: But you cannot discount it.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am not discounting it, but I can read you other passages from Driedger to support what I am saying. I may add he is now retained by the Department of Justice in the Chair of Legislation Drafting that we set up last year in the University of Ottawa. I can assure hon. members that the results we have attempted to achieve will be achieved by the way the bill is now constructed. We rang the changes on the various ways so that this could be done.

• (4:10 p.m.)

First of all, as the regulations were drafted, they gave rise to a situation, as hon. members know, where attorneys general across the country might well have looked at words such as "having as its aim and purpose the overthrow of the government by violence, crime or force," and drawn certain broad conclusions. We had to indicate that the governmental change within Canada was to be accomplished by groups such as Le Front de Libération du Québec. The key words are, "governmental change within Canada". Those words are interpreted by that part of the preamble which reads, "... governmental change within Canada with respect to the province of Quebec or its relationship to Canada". As I say, those words are found in the preamble. It will depend on judicial construction. Of course, we can never be sure how they will be construed. Nevertheless, on the basis of the rules of statutory interpretation that have been given to me, I am assured that the purpose of the bill will be achieved.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I listened to the minister very carefully, and I have not the slightest doubt that he has given this very careful attention and is no more desirous than anybody else of widening the ambit of the law. But he has not persuaded me that it would not be of value to incorporate the words to which he referred in the second paragraph of the preamble in clause 3.

As the minister was speaking, I glanced through the bill quickly. I think I am not wrong in suggesting that every clause of the bill bears some relationship to the unlawful association, directly or indirectly. Therefore, the definition of unlawful association governs the entire bill, in my submission. I ask the minister, in what way would it harm the bill if clause 3 were to incorporate the words he read in the following way, so that the clause would read, ". . any group of persons or association that advocates the use of force or the commission of crime as a means of or as an aid in accomplishing the same or substantially the same governmental change with respect to the province of Quebec or its relationship to Canada . . ? Why could we not take out the words, "within Canada"? In themselves the words, "within Canada", add very little.

I have not written out my proposed amendment. If you will give me a moment, Mr. Chairman, I can write out my amendment, which would read that clause 3 shall be amended by deleting the words "within Canada" on line 10 of page 3, and substituting therefor, "with respect to the province of Quebec or its relationship to Canada." I beg your pardon. We should delete the words on lines 10, 11 and 12, beginning with "within Canada as that advocated by the said Le Front de Libération du Québec" and substituting the words I indicated. I will write out my amendment, if I may.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, perhaps we could stand the clause and go back to it when the hon. member has had time to finish his drafting. When you are dealing with this type of organization, drafting a bill is not easy as some hon. members might suggest.

Mr. Baldwin: That is what the Supreme Court says.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Before clause 3 carries, Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak on it.

Some hon. Members: It is to stand.

The Chairman: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause stands.

On clause 4—Offence and punishment.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I wish to move an amendment to subclause (c) of clause 4 of the bill. I wish to say a few words in introduction. In my remarks last Thursday, I said I was not quite certain whether this bill was any longer necessary. The report of the evidence of Bernard Lortie, as my colleague, the hon. member for Timiskaming pointed out quite properly last night, indicates that there appears not to be the kind of organized plan that some people in Canada thought there was. In any case, if Parliament is to give to the police forces extended powers, which this bill seeks to do, I suggest that those extended powers should be carefully limited to those that are absolutely essential to accomplish the purposes which the bill appears to have.

We should not go one iota beyond the most essential powers needed for the purposes of the bill.

I find the words, "communicates statements on behalf of" in subclause (c) very disturbing. The other day the minister dealt with this. He said that in his view those words mean that there would have to be an element of agency on behalf of the unlawful association before a person could be said to have committed an offence by communicating whatever he may have communicated. He gave us an example. I ought to look up Hansard to get his exact words. Perhaps he will forgive me for not having them; I have not had the time to look them up. I think he said that you must decide whether the journalist permitted himself to be used as an agent of the unlawful association or whether he was merely reporting something that was news about the unlawful association. I think that is the kind of statement the minister made. Why should anybody be put in that position? Why should you include language in the bill which makes a reporter doubt whether he has authority to exercise the freedom of the press? That is what we are talking about here. Why should those words be included, unless they are absolutely essential. Why should you have words in this bill, unless they are absolutely essential, that create censorship, whether the minister intended it that way or not.

There have been quite a few instances of this sort of thing flowing from the regulations under the War Measures Act. As I remember it, this clause is word for word the same as a similar clause in the regulations. As a result of that subsection in the act, a number of newspapers were interfered with by the RCMP. The editors of those papers wondered whether they should publish the manifesto of the FLQ as information for students at the university or whether they could publish certain comments with respect to the situation in Quebec. The RCMP went into the editorial offices of student newspapers and into the printing shop where those student newspapers were being printed, looked over the material, and said, "No, you cannot put that in; you can only put that in." According to my information, and I assure you it is accurate, in some cases they said, "You can print it, but not this paragraph and not this sentence". If that is not censorship, I should like to know what is. And by whom is there censorship? Not by the Minister of Justice and not by the Attorney General; it is exercised by the police. This will continue to happen.

As the minister may know, an association of journalists in Quebec met the other day and expressed concern about this particular wording in subclause (c). They had already experienced, they said—and I am merely referring to what they said—an interference with what they considered their right and duty as journalists to give information to the Canadian people. We have had examples of this kind of thing with radio stations and television stations. No matter how much the minister or anybody else may deny it, I have not any doubt in my mind that there has been interference and censorship of news that has come over the air and on the screen. If I thought that this power was necessary, if I thought that the purpose of the bill could not be served without these words, perhaps my attitude would be different. But it would require an awful lot of facts, as well as much argument, to persuade me that these words are necessary. What ought to be prohibited in this bill is communication by representatives or purported representatives of the unlawful association. Their work of communicating is clearly unlawful.

I repeat what I said earlier with respect to clause 3. It is not only what the legal effect may be, it is the moral inhibiting effect of a clause like this on reporters, people in universities, teachers and professors. They will constantly be asking themselves whether they can do this or that or whether it is against the law. As has been stated in many stories, publishers and printers are likely to seek advice from their lawyers. The lawyers are likely to reply that they are not quite sure, they have some doubt and therefore it is better to cut that portion. That is always safe advice for a lawyer to give his client.

The inhibiting effect of the words, "communicates on behalf of" is extremely dangerous. It is the same kind of idea to which we are objecting, and will be objecting, in a number of amendments which we will move, not for the purpose of weakening the essential thrust of the bill, but cutting out the unnecessary interference with civil liberties and rights which are not essential to the fight against the terrorists organization known as Le Front de Liberation du Québec. I therefore, move:

That clause 4(c) of Bill C-181 be amended by deleting therefrom the words "on behalf of or" so that the subclause shall read as follows:

(c) communicates statements as a representative or professed representative of the unlawful association.

Mr. Hogarth: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Order, please. The Chair will put the motion. The hon. member for York South moves:

That clause 4(c) of Bill C-181 be amended by deleting therefrom the words "on behalf of or" so that the subclause shall read as follows:

(c) communicates statements as a representative or professed representative of the unlawful association.

Mr. Hogarth: Will the hon. member for York South permit a question? At what university did the Royal Canadian Mounted Police exercise surveillance over the student newspaper?

Mr. Lewis: At the moment I cannot—my memory is—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lewis: Just take it easy. My memory is either the printers of the Carleton newspaper or that of some other university. I will find that out for the hon. member. I assure him that what I said is accurate, even though I cannot give him the name of the university at the moment.

Mr. Orlikow: May I be permitted to add to that, Mr. Chairman? The Ottawa newspapers, radio and television stations were very explicit that the issue of the Carleton University newspaper which carried the FLQ manifesto was not printed until after the RCMP were called in by the printer. I express no view of whether they should or should not have printed the manifesto. The RCMP instructed that there should be a paragraph printed on the front page making it clear that the manifesto was printed only as information and did not express the views of the editorial staff.

An hon. Member: What is wrong with that?

Mr. Orlikow: It may be that we are living in a time when censorship is necessary. I suggest to the hon. member who asked "What is wrong with that?" that if we are to have censors, it should be understood who they will be. The censor should be the Minister of Justice. I am not being critical of the RCMP, but in my view police officers are not competent by their education, training and experience to be censors of sedition, pornography or anything else. I am opposed to censorship, but if we must have censorship, it must be done by properly qualified people who have been designated by specific legislation. In answer to the question asked by the hon. member for New Westminster, in the case of the Carleton University newspaper the RCMP gave instructions as to what had to be added before something could be printed. I say that is censorship.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Do you have first-hand knowledge of that?

Mr. Hogarth: The hon. member for Don Valley and I happened to be at Carleton University on that day. We were advised by students closely connected with the newspaper that the printer, who is not in the university, was advised by his solicitor to have the RCMP look at the newspaper before being published. I want to make clear that the RCMP did not walk in just to look at the newspaper.

Mr. Lewis: I was at the same meeting. I think the hon. member is correct on those details. However, it remains true that the printer, publisher or someone was concerned about it because of the wording of the regulations under the War Measures Act, which is the same wording as in this bill. I submit we ought not to create the kind of situation where a publisher or printer is afraid of what may be published and, therefore, calls in the police for advice. For the purpose of this bill, that is completely unnecessary and undesirable.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I think that hon. members might concede that the purpose of clause 4(c) which makes it an offence to "communicate statements on behalf of"—and I will leave those words in abeyance for the moment—"or as a representative or professed representative of the unlawful association", if this bill is to be accepted, is a relevant offence. Anything that deliberately extends the seditious conspiracy is a part of the offence. These words are found in the definition of sedition, the communication of words. There will always be a situation where a line must be drawn. This will have to be drawn in every individual case on the basis of individual facts as to what is legitimate reporting of news and fair comment on the one hand, and participation in the seditious conspiracy on the other. That is always a question of judgment. There is no way we can codify this to anticipate all arguments that will arise. That is what the courts are for. There is no way the members of this committee will be able completely to resolve the problem.

The drafting attempts to separate fair comment and reporting of the news from statements that may be made by way of an agency relationship on behalf of the FLQ or any other "unlawful association". The word "representative" is used. That implies an agency relationship or professed relationship, he who is speaking professedly on behalf of someone else. The idea of representative implies an agency situation. If the word "representative" was the only word, I submit that the agency relationship would have to be proved as well, namely not only that the person acted as an agent but had authority to act as an agent.

Mr. Lewis: You also have the words "professed representative".

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): This is why the words "on behalf of" are used in addition, so that ratification by him who authorized the agency would not have to be proved. Obviously, that is beyond proof. These words "on behalf of" or "pour" in French are quite indicative of objective analysis and absolve the Crown from proving the ratification of the agency relation. I said yesterday, in answer to questions put on a point of order by the hon. member for Calgary North, that there is nothing in this bill which constitutes censorship. The legal advisers who report to me gave an opinion to that effect to the CBC who requested it. The reason we gave an opinion to the CBC is that we have a lawyer-client relationship with that corporation, it being a Crown corporation; we do not give legal opinions usually, but the corporation sought one. The hon. member says he is interested not only in the legal aspects of this, but in the moral aspects of it; a climate of fear has been set up, so he says. I wonder whether he could really explain to the committee how the withdrawal of the words "on behalf of" would change that climate, whatever it is, and I do not intend to concede that argument to him. It really would not affect the moral situation at all.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Faced with the extraordinary situation which confronts us, the FLQ, and the extraordinary remedy we are seeking to apply to it as precisely as we can, without casting the net too wide but casting it wide enough to immobilize the conspiracy we are attempting to immobilize, there is in this bill and in the regulations, some flexibility. We think we have probably profited from the experience we have had over the last two or three weeks. We have had the flexibility I mentioned in the speech I made supporting the proclamation of the War Measures Act. We are dealing now with regulations which one can amend, and which we are now, in effect, amending by this bill, on the basis of the experience we have gained and we think we are as precise as we can be.

I do not believe the withdrawal of the words "on behalf of" would cure the situation to which the hon. member for York South referred in his argument. I believe it is incumbent upon, sometimes in difficult circumstance, a newspaperman who may come into possession of an FLQ communique to ponder what he should do with it. He is free to publish it. There is nothing in this bill which says he cannot do so, but he has an obligation, probably, to give it to the police first in order not to put himself in a position where he is obstructing justice under the terms of the present provisions of the Criminal Code.

There is the question of how he responds. When, for instance, in connection with the photographs of Mr. Cross over last weekend, several photographs were sent to Quebec newspapers, they sought out the Attorney General of Quebec. After one of those photographs had been sent to the Associated Press in New York, and that photograph was published, the Attorney General said "Publish the photographs". I think what the Attorney General of Quebec is trying to do is get a bit of lead time on these communiques so that immediate publication will not impede or obstruct the legitimate investigation of sources of the FLQ. The legal effect here is as precise as we can make it. We want to impede communication only in so far as that communication may represent an agency or representative aspect. In order not to have to prove the agency as a complete concept, in which event we would have to seek out and prove the ratification by a principal, the words "on behalf of" are added to make it perfectly clear with what we are dealing. That was the mental process we went through.

Mr. Lewis: I am glad to hear there was one.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Thank you. I understand the difficulty, but I do not think the difficulty to which the hon. member addressed himself would be resolved by the omission of these words, and the effectiveness of the provision would be weakened by their elimination.

Mr. Baldwin: I have listened with great care to what the minister has said. I think that he has given us, unconsciously, the real reason for the inclusion of the words "on behalf of". I still believe this is a form of indirect censorship. The minister may shake his head. He may not think so. But he has indicated that people in the position of the newspapermen in Montreal, in order to make sure that they would not be caught by the terms of this clause, would be obliged to go to the authorities and ask for permission to do certain things. This is an indirect form of censorship. I believe this is what the provision is meant to ensure; it certainly is the result.

We support the amendment. We would have moved a similar amendment ourselves but we knew the hon. member for York South had put one down. The argument advanced by the minister would be fascinating if put forward before an appellate division, especially if the minister were arguing on behalf of the Crown that the words "on behalf of" were wide enough to catch people who communicated statements when they could not be proved beyond reasonable doubt to be representatives of the association. But there are two aspects of the bill which ought to be taken into account when evaluating the minister's statement.

It is not a question under this legislation of facing a charge, getting out on bail and then having a fine academic argument in a case where both the accused and the Crown are represented by counsel. In clause 9, we see what can happen to a person or an individual who is charged with communicating statements on behalf of an association. He can be picked up and detained for the period provided in the legislation. This takes him out of this fine, academic consideration of what the law is and whether or not he can be convicted. The second point is that in normal circumstances one could get into a fine academic argument concerning the burden of proof, mens rea, the necessity of an offence being proved beyond reasonable doubt, and the weight of evidence. But there is in this legislation an evidential clause which provides that communication "on behalf of" is assumed to be an offence though there is an opportunity for an accused person to prove his innocence. Clause 8 makes this provision beyond any shadow of a doubt. It reads:

> In any prosecution for an offence under this Act, evidence that any person, either before or after the coming into force of this Act... communicated statements on behalf of or as a representative or professed representative of the unlawful association... is, in the absence of evidence to the contrary proof that he is a member of the association.

So, there are two retroactive aspects to this bill. I understand that this may be necessary. This is extraordinary legislation and I recognize it as such, but when we come to consider the amendment before us, provisions of the type to which I have drawn attention must be taken into account. Obviously, the government did take these things into account, because when we look at the regulations which were promulgated under the War Measures Act we find precisely the same wording as to the definition of the offence in clause four. But when we come to the question of the evidential aspect, it appears that the government had second thoughts because the words "on behalf of, or" are omitted and we find in 8(c) of the regulations under the War Measures Act the words "communicated statements of the unlawful association as a representative or professed representative of the unlawful association." The words "on behalf of, or" are omitted.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That was an oversight. Those words are caught in 4(c) of the present regulations. That is a regulation similar to the subsection of the bill we are now bringing in.

Mr. Baldwin: I know that as far as putting the burden on the accused to prove himself innocent is concerned, those words were omitted from clause 8. The minister says that this was an oversight. I would hate to think that an oversight of that character would be introduced into legislation of this kind, with the effect that it might have.

I therefore suggest, on those two grounds alone, that since we are dealing here with people who are not associated or connected with the unlawful association or the FLQ, the minister should relent and accept the very useful amendment introduced by the hon. member for York South.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, before the hon. member for York South and the hon. member for Winnipeg North escape, I wanted to inform them that I recall either having read in Hansard or heard the Solicitor General deny that the RCMP had been censoring or attempting to censor student newspapers. May I say I have been advised by the RCMP that student newspapers across Canada are not being censored by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Application of the powers contained in the War Measures Act has been restricted by the RCMP to the activities of the Front de Liberation du Quebec. In the event that a publisher questions the RCMP as to the legality of printing matter involving the War Measures Act, the publisher's attention is drawn to section 4, along with the suggestion that he discuss the question with his solicitors. No university student newspaper editors were warned that action would be taken against them if they distributed newspapers.

That is the information I have from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and it is my recollection that the Solicitor General said something to that effect in the House.

May I suggest to hon. members that statements of the kind they made in the House are statements for which they ought to take responsibility. If there is evidence of censorship and they make that statement, then they have a duty both to the House and to this committee to disclose the details of the censorship and where it occurred.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister a question arising out of the statement he made. Is the Minister of Justice saying that the RCMP have informed him that they did not look over any editions of university newspapers; that on no occasion did they tell either the publishers or the editors of newspapers that certain texts must be eliminated or certain paragraphs or sentences added, or should be added, before the material is published?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I have made perfectly clear what the RCMP instructions were to their own people and what their advice was to me. If the hon. gentleman has evidence to the contrary, I would be grateful to have it, and I think the committee would too.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

The Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I would be very happy to follow up the matter. I was one of those who asked the Solicitor General that question, and he made the denial to which the Minister of Justice alluded. I put the question down for discussion at ten o'clock, and I have been attempting to get in touch with the university newspaper editors who have been mentioned. Let me assure the minister that I will get the information, and if the information is incorrect I shall say so. If the information is as alleged, then let me also inform the minister that he has not been given the full story by the RCMP.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am suggesting to the hon. member that before he alleges something he take some responsibility for his statement and do his checking before-hand.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I alleged nothing when I asked my question; I simply asked the minister about it. So far as taking responsibility is concerned, this question was discussed in some considerable detail on radio and television programs, including the CBC Ottawa. I suggest to the minister that he should not be so touchy. If he thinks I am wrong, then either he or the RCMP should long ago—this matter occurred several weeks ago—have been in touch with the CBC in Ottawa so that some correction could have been made. If the minister or the RCMP have not been in touch with CBC television in Ottawa, then I suggest it is because there is a good deal more to the story than the minister has told.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I have sympathy for what the minister is trying to do with these three or four contentious words, but for the reasons advanced by the hon. member for Peace River, as well as by the mover, I think I would have to support the amendment.

However, there may be a way out, and I suggest to the minister that perhaps my wording would commend itself to him. It seems to me the minister is trying to cover those people who fall short of being representatives or professed representatives of the Front de Libération du Québec. For example, they may be the sort of people who stand on street corners and try to muscle their way into the organization by being apostles for it yet do not know anyone in the FLQ with whom they can join up. In other words, they could be people who are preaching for a cause but are also putting forth the message of the FLQ and in that sense, though not a representative of the FLQ, giving it help.

It has also been very well argued that there is the danger that the minister is looking here for an intentional act but that the words "on behalf of or" can be taken in another way. Let me give a very obvious example taken from this miserable history of events leading up to this bill, namely when Radio Canada broadcast the FLQ manifesto as part of the bargaining going on at the time. This manifesto was broadcast because it was in the public interest to do so. It might also have saved somebody's life; at least that was the hope at the time. The fact was that while the broadcast was being made in the public interest, and while the newspapers were publishing it also in the public interest, the wish of the FLQ for publicity was also being met. In that sense, statements were being communicated on behalf of the FLQ. There was no criminal intent, no mens rea; nevertheless it served the purpose of the FLQ, though their own intention was to serve some other purpose.

Therefore, I suggest that instead of using words like "on behalf of or" some thought be given to using the words "with the intention of promoting the interests of", which I think is what the minister has in mind. Although I would support the amendment, it unfortunately leaves a vacuum in the type of behaviour at which the minister is aiming. Perhaps the simplest course, having advanced my argument, is to present an amendment along the lines I have suggested after we have voted on this particular amendment.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Chairman, after listening to this discussion, it becomes obvious that the supporters of this amendment are using the language to which they object to object to the policy—if it is a policy—of censorship or indirect censorship by the RCMP. I myself do not think the language is as objectionable as the practice to which they have referred. Perhaps the Minister of Justice would indicate that the RCMP have no authority at all to give legal opinions, which could be construed as a form of censorship or indirect censorship. Surely, it would be most objectionable for lawyers in Canada to direct their clients to the RCMP for legal advice. Certainly, this is not done in connection with any other matters. It strikes me as most improper for the RCMP to hold themselves forward or to be held forward as experts on the law.

As a matter of administration, the RCMP and all government officials should be told that they have no business whatsoever giving legal advice to members of the public. It can quite rightly be construed as a form of censorship, direct or indirect. I wonder if the minister could assure us that there is or will be a directive issued to law officers under the jurisdiction of the government to the effect that they are not to give legal opinions.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Certainly, I will confirm that, Mr. Chairman. The advice I received from the RCMP is quite the opposite. When they are faced with this problem they refer the particular publisher or printer to his own lawyer. I think it would be inappropriate that a lawyer, in reverse, should refer his client to the RCMP. The RCMP are not in the business of giving legal advice as hon. members know. When they get it and follow it, they get it from the Department of Justice.

Mr. Baldwin: That is why there are so many acquittals.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take a few moments to express my views on the amendment before the House. This bill applies to an organization that is rather difficult to define.

We are not here attacking a co-operative, a credit union, the Bar or the College of Physicians, for instance. The FLQists, as far as I know, do not have membership cards. It is therefore difficult for those who are responsible for applying the law to identify the members of the FLQ or those who strive to achieve its aims.

Mr. Chairman, that is why the following words were inserted in clause 4 (c):

—on behalf of or—

If those words were not included in the clause, some people could work for the FLQ without being liable to prosecution, since they would not be or profess to be members of the FLQ. Here, Mr. Chairman, some claim it is censorship. But I wonder if a different yardstick is not applied to the same thing.

I recall that not so long ago the House passed a legislation against hate propaganda and hon. members will remember whom was attacked by the so-called hate propaganda.

In such cases, censorship can be allowed. But if publishing texts, information orders or instructions such as those that were given between October 5 and 15 is forbidden, it is said that censorship is applied and that it should not be.

Mr. Chairman, I feel that some distinctions must be made. For example, if the RCMP forbids a university newspaper to publish the FLQ manifesto, as some of our large newspapers did, that could perhaps be considered as censorship, but if the board of the university prohibits the management of a university newspaper from publishing that text, I think that it will no longer be the same kind of censorship. Then, an organization which can allow or prevent the publication of such and such a thing is involved.

Mr. Chairman, in our Canadian universities and junior colleges, the publication of quite inflammatory articles has in the past been allowed and as far as I know, we have never heard protests from those who object to clause 4(c).

In my opinion, clause 4 (c) should be passed as such and I intend to support it.

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment (Mr. Lewis) negatived: yeas, 17; nays, 41.

The Deputy Chairman: I declare the amendment lost. Shall clause 4 carry? It is my duty to interrupt proceedings in order to proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, before you leave the chair I shall make a proposition which you can carry forward when you go to the chair. I should like to ask the committee, when they become the House, if they would be prepared to give up private members' hour—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Baldwin: —provided we agree to sit long enough tonight to end all questions put in the House.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles); Finance, suggested interim income tax changes to assist pensioners; the hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Alkenbrack); Eganville, progress toward new federal building; the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett); Industry, Trade and Commerce, European common market and Canada's agricultural products, discussion at congress.

It being five o'clock the House will now proceed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

USE OF PRIVATE MEMBERS' HOUR FOR GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, may I now formally put my suggestion forward as the representative of the official opposition.

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member for Peace River would withdraw the condition that we must finish tonight. Certainly, members in this party want to finish as early as possible. Yet at the same time, we intend to make what we regard to be serious arguments on serious amendments. If we have this hour now, it may be that we would finish tonight. However, I believe it would be unwise and undesirable from our point of view to make such a commitment.

Mr. Baldwin: With the type of flexibility we will display when we form the government, I am prepared to accept that condition.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent that the private members' hour will be dispensed with under the conditions outlined and agreed between the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and the hon. member for Oshawa Whitby (Mr. Broadbent)?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The committee will resume.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PUBLIC ORDER (TEMPORARY MEASURES) ACT, 1970

PROVISION OF EMERGENCY POWERS FOR PRESERVATION OF PUBLIC ORDER

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-181, to provide temporary emergency powers for the preservation of public order in Canada—Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)—Mr. Honey in the chair.

The Chairman: The committee is now on clause 4. Shall clause 4 carry?

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I made the argument before, so I shall simply read my amendment which I hope will find favour. I am sorry I do not have a French translation. It would involve replacing one French word "pour" by several but if my amendment should carry in English presumably the law officers of the Crown would draft the French version. My amendment is:

That clause 4(c) be amended by deleting the words "on behalf of or" and replacing them with the words "with the intention of promoting the interests of".

The purpose of the amendment, very briefly, is to show that the element of intent is clear.

The Chairman: Order. I shall put the amendment. It is moved by Mr. McCleave that clause 4(c) be amended by deleting the words "on behalf of or" and replacing them with the words "with the intention of promoting the interests of". Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Chairman: The question is on the amendment. Those members in favour of the amendment will please rise. Those members opposed to the amendment will please rise.

Amendment (Mr. McCleave) negatived: yeas, 14; nays, 41.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. McCleave: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I think there was a vote on the other side in favour of the amendment that was not counted.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, I wish to move two amendments to clause 4. I will start with the first one and when it has been decided upon, I will move the second one. I move that paragraph (g) of clause 4 be struck out and replaced by clause 4A which reads as follows:

A person who advocates, promotes or engages in the use of force or the commission of crime as a means of or as an aid in accomplishing the same or substantially the same governmental change within Canada as that advocated by the unlawful association, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to life imprisonment.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

Mr. Chairman, I move this amendment because we are dealing with an organization whose avowed purpose, according to its manifesto and all sorts of indications given to the Canadian public and to the government, was to overthrow, by force, the government of Canada.

So, Mr. Chairman, as this is an organization that advocates means that are not accepted in the free world, in Canada, we must take drastic measures to bring the revolutionaries to reason and to give cause for reflection to those who might be tempted to imitate or support them.

Mr. Chairman, that is why I propose that the wording of clause 4 be made a little more stringent, as a deterrent for those who would use violence to achieve their purposes.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise) moved:

That subclause (g) of clause 4 be deleted and replaced by the following:

A person who advocates, promotes or engages in the use of force or the commission of crime as a means of or as an aid in accomplishing the same or substantially the same governmental change within Canada as that advocated by the unlawful association, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to life imprisonment.

Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, I only want to say that this subclause should become clause 4A.

The Deputy Chairman: For clarification purposes, the hon. member for Abitibi tells me that his amendment is only designed to delete subclause (g) of clause 4 and to replace it with clause 4A which will read exactly as the amendment I put earlier.

Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I would like to reply briefly to the hon. member. The five year period with regard to the offences mentioned in clause 4 is the same as the one provided under the War Measures Act. According to section 4 of the latter, a term of imprisonment not exceeding five years may be imposed for violations of the regulations.

I believe that in this case, it is not logical for us to attempt to weaken the legislation altogether, any more than to substitute the five year penalty for life imprisonment.

Therefore, a person who comes under clause 4 (g) to which is related the amendment moved by the hon. member, may at the same time come under the provisions of the Criminal Code dealing with sedition and be liable to a maximum penalty of 14 years.

Thus, the Crown would be free to choose between clause 4 (g) of this bill or the provisions of the Criminal Code. That is why the five year penalty provided in clause 4 (g), compared to that of 14 years under the Criminal Code for sedition, is a little more consistent with the 14 year penalty provided in the Criminal Code than with the life imprisonment suggested in the amendment moved by the hon. member.

For these two reasons, I feel I must recommend to the committee that the amendment be rejected.

Mr. Laprise: Not being a lawyer, I find it difficult to follow the hon. minister. He suggests that when it comes to convicting those who are found guilty under clause 4—if I understood him correctly—it will be possible to use either Bill C-181 or some other existing provisions in the Criminal Code.

• (5:10 p.m.)

I wonder who will decide whether the five or the 14 year penalty will be imposed. I imagine that the Crown Attorney will call for a penalty of 14 years in certain cases, and that the defence attorney would rather be in favour of the five year penalty. You would certainly see, as we have seen before, unending battles between equally qualified lawyers.

This is why, in my opinion, the bill under study should be as specific as possible in order to avoid any controversy. This act should be strict enough and clear enough that those who would have to enforce it, or those who would intend to break it, know what to expect.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the House ready for the question? Hon. members have heard the text of the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Abitibi. Will those in favour please rise. Will those opposed please rise.

[English]

Amendment (Mr. Laprise) negatived: Yeas, 3; Nays, 45.

The Deputy Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

[Translation]

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Speaker, one of my colleagues was asking me why I voted in favour of the amendment. I did so because I feel that subclause (g) of Clause 4—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I must point out to the hon. member for Matane (Mr. De Bané) that no comment is permitted on a vote taken in the House.

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a statement which is one of the most important I will make during the debate. I submit that it is absolutely essential to add on line 14 the words "without justification or legitimate excuse for which the burden of proof is on him."

It will be replied that the adjunction of these words is not essential to prevent such offenses from being, in legal terms, offenses of strict responsibility. For my part, I submit that this argument is false legally, and I will explain.

First of all I wish to refer to page 454 of the first addendum to the treatise written by one of our most prominent authorities on criminal law, Mr. Justice Lagarde, and published in 1967. In this particular instance, I find an explanation of the concept of strict responsibility, or the actus reus without the mens rea. I quote:

> Strict responsibility or absolute responsibility obtains whenever the legislation makes an offence of the mere occurrence of an action or omission, i.e. the mere occurrence of an "actus reus" irrespective of the "mens rea".

The most common example is this: When you go through a red light, whether intentionally or inadvertantly so as not to miss the train or the plane, you still commit an offence.

What is important is not the intention.

And I continue to quote Mr. Justice Irénée Lagarde:

> 1. We can say that there is strict liability when
>
> (a) the statute which creates the offence indicates that there is absolute liability in express and formal terms, OR
> (b) after consideration of the object and the subject of the legislation concerned, one reaches the conclusion that there is a necessary implication.
> 2. Necessary implication:
>
> The word "implication" means that a notion gives rise to another, either under the guise of a necessary effect, or by experimental liaison.
> Generally, there is a strict liability offence by way of necessary implication in case of minor offences, punishable under summary conviction and which are classified under the general title of public welfare offences. These offences are related mainly, but not exhaustively
> (i) to provincial laws on alcoholic beverages, hunting and fishing, traffic regulations and stocks and shares;
> (ii) to federal laws on food and drugs, weights and measures, temperance in Canada and regulations under the War Measures Act.

One might wonder whether the opinion of Mr. Justice Lagarde when he says that offences to regulations under the War Measures Act are strict liability offences, is the personal opinion of a magistrate or whether it is based on judgments previously delivered.

In view of the authority of Mr. Justice Lagarde who, in Quebec, is the highest authority at the moment in criminal law and who, incidentally, is the only French-speaking authority, it would be ridiculous to suppose that his opinion is not based on judgments previously delivered by the Courts.

Doubtless this is the reason why at page 466 of the first supplement of his "Droit pénal canadien" published in 1967, Mr. Justice Lagarde refers to two rather recent rulings. He deals first with the case Rex vs Duquette (76 C.C.C. 304, Quebec) when one of Duquette's employees sold codeine without prescription. According to the judge, "such sale was made by the employee in the discharge of his duties but against instructions received. This is a strict liability offence which makes the employer responsible for his employee's action".

Mr. Justice Legarde summarizes the judgment in the case of Rex vs Rhyno, (1945,83 C.C.C., 186) in the following way:

> The sale of gasoline without coupons constitutes a strict liability offence. The service station operator is guilty by proxy of the offence perpetrated by his employee in the discharge of his duties.

This means that if Mr. Justice Lagarde refers to two important court orders, one from Quebec and the other from the Nova Scotia court of appeal, we must come to conclusion that the regulations proclaimed under the War Measures Act are strict liability offences. And since Bill C-181, except for a few alterations, is a mere carbon copy of the regulations proclaimed on October 16 last under the War Measures Act, in the legislation before us it is obviously a strict liability offence.

The regulations did not provide for sentences exceeding five years because the War Measures Act so prescribes. And while this legislation could have gone further, the existing provisions have been retained.

• (5:20 p.m.)

This means that under the very provisions of clauses 4, 5 or 6 of the bill, one might not even wonder about the intellectual apport of the accused, that is to say, his criminal intention or mens rea, since the very commission of the act laid down in the legislation requires that he be found guilty by the court and, consequently condemned to a penalty, the length of which is again to be determined by the court, within the stipulated limits.

Doubtless, in some cases, we see ridiculous sentences because the president of the court, perhaps feeling guilty for being unable to acquit the accused because of the law, considers it fair to impose minimal penalties such as an hour in prison or a 50-cent fine. This clause does not provide such penalties. It will probably be a matter of what Pope, a renowned authority in criminal law, called centuries ago, "pious perjuries."

Therefore, I hope I have demonstrated that it is wrong to argue that clause 4, as it now stands, is not a clause of strict responsibility.

Is it possible to imagine that a judge would give different interpretations of section 4 of the regulations and section 4 of the legislation, when a comparative study would reveal to him that the Governor in council and the legislator used the same words, and that even if section 4 of the regulations provided for the maximum penalty under the War Measures Act, the legislator conformed to the point of providing the same sentence, what he was not required to do.

Clause 14 of the bill states that sections 4, 5 and 6 of the regulations are deemed to be found in sections 4, 5 and 6 of the act.

Once again, jurisprudence is consistent. In the field of regulations promulgated under the War Measures Act, the mens rea is useless. I refer to the jurisprudence from which I have quoted a few cases.

Can one imagine the legislator in a field as important as that of public order and in legislation directly proceeding once again from the regulations under the War Measures Act deciding that the interpretation of the text should be different from that of the regulations?

Finally, if my proposed addition is useless, how come that section 395 of the Criminal Code provides that it is an undictable offense liable to imprisonment for 14 years to utter or offer to utter counterfeit money without lawful justification or excuse?

Secondly, section 366 provides that it is an offence to intimidate a person by "threats...or other injury" wrongfully and without lawful authority.

Thirdly, section 352 provides that it is an offence to dispose of an instrument designed to forge a trade mark and subsection (2) of the same section provides that no person shall be convicted of an offence where he proves that he acted in good faith.

Fourthly, section 269 of the Criminal Code provides that committing theft is to take fraudulently and without colour of right.

Section 46 reads as follows:

(1) Every one who commits treason who in Canada

(e) without lawful authority communicates or makes available to an agent of a state other than...

Section 86 of the omnibus bill reads:

—everyone who, without lawful excuse, points at another a firearm—

Another example from the omnibus bill, is to be found in subsection (2) of section 223 of the Criminal Code, as follows:

"Every one who, without reasonable excuse, fails or refuses to provide a sample of his breath—"

Section 224 makes it a strict liability offence to drive a car for a person whose breath contains a percentage of alcohol higher than .08 according to the breath analyser test.

I suggest then that it is necessary to add the following: "without lawful justification or excuse, the onus of which lies on that person" to line 16 of clause 4, so that the indicted person may be able to defend himself.

Besides, what is the present situation? Nobody seems to know exactly about certain subsections of section 4 of these regulations.

• (5:30 p.m.)

So, the papers refuse to publish the communiques they receive from the kidnappers of Mr. James Cross and, to crown it all, Saturday night the Quebec police provide all information media not only with the said photos of the hostage, but also with copies of the statement added by the FLQ which reads as follows:

"James Richard Cross learning politics, following the barbarous attitude of Mr. Trudeau—"

And to add to the affront, once again, there appears the signature of Mr. Cross. And it is the Quebec police that distributes such things, and I hope that I have proved that this is a case of strict and objective responsibility, such are the absurd results which could obtain.

First, the spy and the newspaperman could not, except in violation of subclause (a) profess to be members of an unlawful association.

Second, the information media could not transmit such statements, and to this I would agree. Further, anyone receiving a statement from the FLQ to the effect that they are completely willing to surrender and to release Mr. Cross would not have the right to communicate it.

Third, a citizen would not be able, without infringing subclause (e) and particularly the words:

"to anyone for the benefit of the unlawful association"

to supply funds for the services of a lawyer.

I therefore suggest that the following words be added to line 14:

without justification or legitimate excuse, the burden of the proof bearing on him.

I should like also to point out an apparent incoherency in the sentence. Indeed, clause 4 stipulates that the maximum penalty is five years for a person who resorts to the use of force, is a member of the FLQ, communicates information to the FLQ or advocates the use of force to attain the aims of the FLQ.

Clause 6 says that such a person is liable to a fine of five thousand dollars and to imprisonment for a term of five years. Since clause 4 specifies a maximum term of five years and clause 6 mentions a term of five years and a $5,000 fine, there is an apparent incoherence between the two clauses.

As far as I am concerned, I think both clauses 4 and 6 should provide the same penalty, and I quote:

—is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a fine of not more than five thousand dollars or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years or to both.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I think we should add to clause 4 two subclauses to cover the offence defined in clause 6, because clause 5 deals with an accomplice after the fact while clause 6 deals with another offence which should be included in clause 4 under subclause (h) which could read as follows:

An owner or lessee of any building, room, premises or other place or a person having the charge or the surveillance of any building, who knowingly permits therein any meeting of persons who violate one of the preceding paragraphs.

And as in clause 8—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Merely to assist the hon. member, I still feel he should limit his remarks to clause 4, which is now before us. I do not believe that it can be helpful, at the present stage, to put forward amendments to clauses 6 and 8.

I will point out to the hon. member that the Chair does not have in hand the text of the amendment to clause 4.

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Chairman, I would not want to discuss clause 6 before we get to it. However, it seems strange to me that clause 4 should list offenses, clause 5 deal with accomplices after the fact while clause 6 goes back to deal with persons who would encourage the FLQ or other unlawful associations to meet on their premises, or allow them to do so.

And that is why I said that it might be advisable to add clause 6 to the enumeration of offences already mentioned in clause 4. Subclause h) should be added to clause 4 and would read as follows:

takes part or is present at a meeting of members of the unlawful association

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that subclauses b) to g) read as follows:

b) fait ou déclare faire office de dirigeant d'une association illégale, c) communique des déclarations, soit au nom de l'association illégale, soit à titre de représentant réel ou déclaré de cette dernière, d) appuie l'association illégale, préconise ou encourage le recours à des moyens illégaux pour la réalisation des desseins ou la mise en œuvre des principes ou lignes de conduite d'un telle association,

e) fournit une contribution quelconque, sous forme de cotisations ou autrement, à l'association illégale ou à qui que ce soit à l'avantage d'une telle association,

f) sollicite des souscriptions ou contributions au profit de l'association illégale, ou

g) préconise, encourage ou pratique le recours à la force ou au crime comme moyen de réaliser ou contribuer à réaliser au Canada un changement de régime politique identique ou analogue à celui que préconise l'association illégale.

I want to say that I would support subclause (c) were it to be amended in such a way as to read "en faveur" instead of "pour le compte de". May I point out that the legislation read "pour le compte de" and in the press release issued by the department, it was "en faveur de". Here the word "pour" is used. The translation as it now stands is slightly ambiguous, I think. It should read instead, in subclause (c):

communique des déclarations, soit au nom de l'association illégale, soit à titre de représentant réel ou déclaré de cette dernière.

So I submit to you, Mr. Chairman, copies of all the amendments I propose.

• (5:40 p.m.)

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It is not easy for the Chair to find its way among the amendments. First of all, I should suggest to the hon. member that he cannot introduce alternate amendments to the House.

I believe that the Chair should now put the question on a series of amendments or an omnibus amendment. Thereafter, if the hon. member feels that the substance of his alternate amendments is not somewhat similar to the former amendments, he can introduce another amendment.

The hon. member for Matane (Mr. De Bané) moves that the last three lines of clause 4 be deleted and replaced by the following:

is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a fine of not more than five thousand dollars or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years, or to both.

The hon. member for Matane also moves the addition of the following phase at line 14 of clause 4:

"without justification or legitimate excuse, the burden of the proof bearing on him".

Besides, the hon. member—

Mr. Lewis: Which subclause?

The Deputy Chairman: Line 14, page 3. The first line of subclause 4 ends with the word "who" and the hon. member requests the addition of the following words:

"without justification or legitimate excuse, the burden of proof bearing on him".

Further, in subclause (b)

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order.

I should like to make some remarks on subclause 4. Two amendments have just been introduced. However, they seem to me somewhat dissimilar. I would be inclined to support the first amendment, which I quote:

Is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a fine of not more than $5,000 or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years—

—while I object to the second one, which adds to the text so that it reads as follows:

without lawful justification or excuse, the onus of which lies on that person.

I cannot see how anyone could justify his membership in the unlawful association, or act as an officer of this unlawful association or violate any other of the subclauses of this clause.

I wonder, Mr. Chairman, whether we should not vote separately on these amendments.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The Chair agrees with the point raised by the hon. member for Abitibi to the effect that the committee will proceed by stages, voting separately on each of the amendments. Therefore, I now read the first amendment moved by the hon. member for Matane, to strike out the first three lines of clause 4 and to substitute the following words:

Is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a fine of not more than $5,000 or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years or to both, anyone

Is the House ready for the question? I recognize the hon. member for Matane.

Mr. De Bané: I have moved this amendment because of the maximum sentence provided by clause 6 when someone permits at his place a meeting of the FLQ. This is the maximum sentence provided in clause 6. Clause 4 provides a lesser maximum sentence for anyone who uses force to overthrow the government than that provided in clause 6. This is an obvious inconsistency.

[English]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I do not want to go into this matter in too much detail. Clause 6 mentions the maximum because of the effect of section 622 of the Criminal Code. Those who compare the clause with this section of the Criminal Code will realize that there is a dinstinction.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment (Mr. De Bané) negatived; Yeas, 3; nays, 40.

The Deputy Chairman: I declare the amendment lost. I will now put the second amendment of the hon. member for Matane.

[Translation]

The hon. members have heard the amendment moved by the hon. member for Matane. Will those in favour please rise. Will those opposed please rise.

Amendment (Mr. De Bané) negatived: yeas 3; nays 40.

It is moved by Mr. De Bané that line 16 of clause 4 of Bill C-181 be amended by adding, after the word "who", the following words:

—without lawful justification or excuse, the onus of which lies on that person.

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Chairman, I would like to answer to the hon. member who asked me a while ago how one could have a lawful excuse or justification. There is under our law two kinds of offences: for the first one to carry an indictment, there must be an intent apart from the action, and for the other, the mere fact of committing an action, regardless of the intent, is enough to have the accused convicted.

In the second case, the action is sufficient to have the accused convicted, no intent being required.

I gave a while ago the example of going through a red light. Whether the person does it intentionally or by accident or because he was in a hurry, he has gone through a red light and is quilty ipso facto.

This is what we call strict liability. And for most of the crimes provided for in the Criminal Code, apart from committing the action, there must be a criminal intent. And I have quoted about ten sections under which even treason or the traffic in counterfeit money is a crime without lawful excuse or justification, the onus of which lies on the person who committed the act.

Therefore, in addition to committing the offence, one must have the intention of doing so. I have quoted some cases which demonstrate that this bill is creating strict responsibility offences. Fortunately those who legislate are not those who interpret the laws. This is indeed the basis of democracy. According to jurisprudence, the war measures regulations must be interpreted as creating offences of strict responsibility.

I gave the example of the employee who sold gasoline without coupon and without his employer's permission. The judge ruled that this was an offence against public order.

Clause 14 of this legislation states that sections 4, 5 and 6 of the Regulations under the War Measures Act are supposed to be reproduced here. Therefore the judge will interpret them as creating offences of strict responsibility.

I will give some examples of crimes which, in my humble opinion, are cases of "strict responsibility".

Subclause (e) mentions a person who "contributes anything as dues or otherwise to the unlawful association or to anyone for the benefit of the unlawful association".

Any lawyer that would give his time and that of his employees to defend an unlawful association would be guilty, in my opinion, unless were added the words "without legitimate excuse, the proof of which is incumbent on him" or, for example, in subclause (a), "if a police spy admits he is a member to infiltrate an unlawful organization", in my opinion both are committing an offence.

In subclause (b): "acts or professes to act". The same would happen to a spy and I could take all the other cases.

This is why according to the provisions of subclause (c), in my opinion it is forbidden with or without police authorization to pass a communiqué. Jurisprudence is categorical on this point.

The War Measures Act regulations are drastic. We are not interested in the intent of the accused. For my part, I would suggest that the onus lie upon the Crown. Obviously, when we say "being a member", it is impossible to have lawful justification or excuse but in other cases, such as the one I mentioned earlier in connection with subclause (e), an attorney cannot work without a fee and I will attempt to prove that the wording of clause 5 leaves no doubt about that.

I have quoted quite a number of sections from the Criminal Code and even from the omnibus bill passed two years ago which provide that a person who, without lawful justification or excuse, refuses to submit to a breathalyzer test or a person who, without lawful excuse, threatens someone with a weapon commits an offence. Such a law is therefore necessary, otherwise—again, I may be mistaken, but I have taught law at university and I have talked with prominent legal experts and with teachers of criminal law—we have before us a case of "strict liability" under section 14 of this act and in the light of statute law.

• (5:50 p.m.)

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment (Mr. De Bané) negatived: Yeas, 1; nays, 45.

The Deputy Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

[Translation]

Before submitting to the House the following amendment of the hon. member for Matane, I will take the liberty of asking him to say what he wants exactly. In the wording before me, a correction was made and I wonder if the hon. member wants to say "dirigeant d'une association illégale" or "dirigeant de l'association illégale"—

Mr. De Bané: —de l'association, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: If I understand the wording of the present act, I find that the amendment moved by the hon. member seems to be on all fours with it. Therefore I do not see how an amendment can be moved to a wording which is on all fours with subclause b).

Mr. De Bané: If you will allow me, Mr. Chairman, I submitted as a translation to subclause (b), not:

b) fait office ou déclare faire office—

—which is a translation of the English, but

b) fait ou déclare faire office—

The Deputy Chairman: It is moved by the hon. member for Matane to replace clause 4b) by the following:

b) fait ou déclare faire office de dirigeant de l'association illégale.

In short, the hon. member deletes the word "office", the second word of the subclause.

Mr. De Bané: Exactly, Mr. Chairman. My amendment reads as follows: change from (b) to (g) in the following manner according to the texts you have on hand.

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: Hon. members of the committee have heard the motion. Is it the wish of the committee that I repeat that amendment moved by the hon. member?

An hon. Member: Dispense.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

[Translation]

The Deputy Chairman: Those members in favour of the amendment will please rise. Those members opposed to the amendment will please rise.

Amendment (Mr. De Bané) negatived: yeas 3, nays 40.

It is moved by the hon. member for Matane that clause 4(c) be amended as follows:

Mr. De Bané: The amendment being similar to the one that was moved, it is withdrawn.

[English]

An hon. Member: By unanimous consent.

The Deputy Chairman: The amendment has not yet been put to the committee, so I do not think there is need for unanimous consent. We shall pass on to the next amendment.

[Translation]

The hon. member for Matane moves that clause 4(d) be amended by replacing it by the following text:

(d) supports the unlawful association, advocates, or encourages the use of unlawful means for accomplishing its aims, principles or policies,

Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Chairman, may I call it six o'clock?

The Deputy Chairman: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

[English]

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. When the committee rose at six o'clock it was considering an amendment moved by the hon. member for Matane which reads as follows:

[Translation]

The hon. member for Matane moves that subclause (d) of clause 4 be amended to read as follows:

(d) supports the unlawful association, advocates or promotes the use of unlawful means for accomplishing the aims, principles or policies of such an association.

Is the House ready for the question?

[English]

Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

During the taking of the vote:

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It is known to all hon. members that it is not permitted to enter the House once a vote has been called.

Amendment (Mr. De Bané) negatived: Yeas, 0; nays, 31.

After the taking of the vote:

The Deputy Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order.

[Mr. De Bané.]

I merely wanted to draw your attention to Standing Order 12(2) and I quote:

When Mr. Speaker is putting a question, no member shall enter, walk out of or across the House or make any noise or disturbance.

I noticed all afternoon, Mr. Chairman, hon. members walking in or out at will during the taking of votes.

I thank you for having a moment ago called the House to order, even if the noise during the taking of the vote seemed to drown your voice. However, I would be grateful to you if you would point out again to the House the provisions of Standing Order 12.

The Deputy Chairman: The Chair, as stated by the hon. member, has dealt with the matter during the taking of the vote, but this does not prevent a member, if ever it occurs again from raising the matter again.

[English]

The committee will now consider another amendment moved by the hon. member for Matane.

Mr. Lewis: He is not here to move it.

Mr. Deachman: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether it would facilitate the work of the committee if we grouped these amendments together and then voted on them.

The Deputy Chairman: With regard to the point of order raised by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra, it is very difficult for the Chair to put forward some kind of omnibus amendment on which the committee would vote, so the suggestion cannot be accepted. With regard to the other point that was raised, the committee has just voted on an amendment presented by the hon. member for Matane and moved by him before the adjournement. Since the hon. member for Matane has just come into the chamber I will put his amendment to the committee.

[Translation]

It is moved by the hon. member for Matane (Mr. De Bané) that subclause (e) of clause 4 be amended as follows:

(e) contributes anything as dues or otherwise to the unlawful association or to anyone for the benefit of such an association.

Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, what is the difference between the two clauses? What are we doing?

Mr. De Bané: I would answer that this is not the way I had moved the amendment. I had moved an amendment dealing with subclauses (b) to (g) of clause 4. Only a few words have been changed. At first I only read the translation.

With the unanimous consent of the House, Mr. Chairman, we could withdraw this amendment.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the hon. member for Matane have leave of the House to withdraw the amendment which I have just read and which is relevant to subclause (e) of clause 4?

[English]

Is there unanimous consent to allow the hon. member for Matane to withdraw his amendments to clause 4(e)?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendments (Mr. De Bané) withdrawn.

• (8:10 p.m.)

The Deputy Chairman: In view of the fact that the other amendments to clause 4(f) and clause 4(g) have not been presented to the committee, there is no need for unanimous consent to withdraw them. Is it agreed that the Chair will not put them?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: I have before me another amendment by the hon. member for Matane who proposes to add a new provision to clause 4, reading as follows:

(h) or (i) takes part in or attends a meeting of members of the unlawful association.

Mr. De Bané: So, that amendment, Mr. Chairman, provides for the inclusion in clause 4 of the provisions of clause 6 because, as can be seen, clause 4 lists offences, clause 5 relates to complicity after the fact and, with clause 6 there is a reversion for the purpose of adding an offence that was omitted from clause 4.

So, I asked that clause 6 be incorporated in clause 4, since clause 5 which relates to complicity after the fact, deals with a subject altogether different from that of clause 6.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the House ready for the question?

[English]

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, before the vote is taken I must say that I cannot take part in it because I do not understand the amendment.

The Deputy Chairman: Was the point raised by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka a point of procedure? The Chair did not hear what the hon. member said.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I merely said that I did not understand the explanation and I could not, therefore, take part in the vote.

[Translation]

The Deputy Chairman: It is moved by the hon. member for Matane that a new provision be added to clause 4, which would read as follows:

(h) takes part in or attends a meeting of members of the unlawful association.

[English]

Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment (Mr. De Bané) negatived: Yeas, 1; nays, 50.

The Deputy Chairman: I declare the amendment lost. The Chair has before it an amendment by the Minister of Justice which reads as follows:

That Bill C-181 be amended by striking out line 39 on page 3 and substituting the following:

"Canada with respect to the province of Quebec or its relationship to Canada as that advocated by the"—

[Translation]

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, I regret to say that I disagree with you at this time, but we have not moved any amendment up to now.

So clause 3 has been allowed to stand.

The Deputy Chairman: The Chair must nevertheless point out to the Parliamentary Secretary that it has in hand an amendment dealing with line 36 on page 3. And if I am not mistaken, line 36 is in clause 4 and not in clause 3. So I shall require some explanation from the Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, never to my knowledge have the Minister of Justice or myself officially moved an amendment to clause 3. It has simply been translated and this suggestion, which might be made later, was deferred for printing purposes only.

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The Chair was trying to make itself useful. Shall clause 4 carry?

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, I have here an amendment I should like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin).

Under clause 4, I propose to add subclause (a) which would read as follows:

4(a): A person who forcibly kidnaps one or more persons, confines them against their will, mutilates, tortures or injures them with the intent to kill or kills them, as a means of or as an aid in accomplishing the same governmental change within Canada as that advocated by the unlawful association, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to capital punishment or life imprisonment.

Mr. Chairman, as I said earlier today in an another amendment, I want this bill to be stringent enough to give cause for reflection to those who have committed such crimes or intend to do so.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, for clarification purposes, is this the amendment covering clause 4(b)?

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, since the amendments moved previously have been rejected, this clause would then become clause 4(a).

The Deputy Chairman: If the Chair has understood it right, the hon. member for Abitibi means clause 4-A with a capital A to differentiate it from clause 4(a) with a small a?

Mr. Laprise: No, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Abitibi moves that clause 4 be amended by adding the following:

4-A. A person who forcibly kidnaps one or more persons, confines them against their will, mutilates, tortures or injures them with intent to kill, or kills them, as a means of or as an aid in accomplishing the same governmental change within Canada as that advocated by the unlawful association, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to capital punishment or life imprisonment.

Is the House ready to vote on the amendment?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, if I understand the proposed amendment correctly, it aims at creating a new offence involving the death penalty or life imprisonment for anybody who:

—forcibly kidnaps one or more persons, confines them against their will, mutilates, tortures or injures them with intent to kill or kills them, as a means of or as an aid in accomplishing a governmental change within Canada as that advocated by the unlawful association.

If I may make a short review of the Criminal Code, I note that kidnapping involves at present a maximum life sentence as stipulated in section 233.

The offence consisting in mutilating, torturing or injuring with the intent of taking life or killing is mentioned in clause 210 of the Criminal Code and it involves a maximum life sentence.

Finally, to kill a person is murder, and the death penalty will be imposed if the victim is a policeman or a prison guard on duty at the time of the murder.

The amendment proposed by the hon. member raises the question of capital punishment, and I believe that, according to the resolution passed by the House in December 1967, with its trial period of five years, the House should have the opportunity to discuss once again this quite important subject before December 29, 1972, under section 4(1), chapter 15, of the Statutes of Canada, 1967-68.

Under the circumstances, I believe that the best way to handle the death penalty is not to amend this legislation which is quite general, but to give the House the opportunity to reconsider the question of the death penalty before the limit set under the present act, i.e. December 29, 1972.

For this reason, I think it would be more advisable to consider the whole question in general terms and not under this legislation.

• (8:20 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I say to the Minister of Justice that I do not follow his logic. I think he is confusing the issue. The legislation we are dealing with is the Public Order (Temporary Measures) Act. It is legislation designed to take care of a particular crisis; therefore it does not fall under the Criminal Code or relate to the legislation passed three years ago that put aside capital punishment for a trial period of five years.

[The Deputy Chairman.]

If we were to accept the logic the minister is using, the whole of the temporary measures legislation would be null and void because it would supersede the Criminal Code, and the argument is not on that point. It would seem to me that we want to put some teeth into this legislation. It is a temporary piece of legislation. There is to be permanent legislation, as I understand it, before the end of April that will amend the Criminal Code, and therefore this amendment as it relates to the Public Order (Temporary Measures) Act is in my opinion valid.

I cannot accept the argument of the Minister of Justice because it does not relate to this situation. If it does, then everything we are doing here is out of order. I believe it is public opinion throughout the country and in this House that there should be teeth in this bill so that it will be a deterrent to those who commit the heinous crimes to which the legislation refers. I believe this amendment should have the support of the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, I must say that I have had some difficulty in attempting to follow the minister's argument. In introducing this amendment, I did not want to reopen the debate on capital punishment which started in 1967. As the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) just said we are now dealing with temporary legislation which will expire on April 30, 1971, and which applies only to one or several specific cases.

May I ask the minister what would happen if Mr. Pierre Laporte's murderers were discovered tomorrow morning; what would happen to them? Would they be given a medal for good behaviour or are they going to be punished as they deserve? This is what I want to know and what I would like the bill to be more specific about.

[English]

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, I should like to speak briefly in favour of this amendment. I think the hon. member for Red Deer very correctly pointed out that this is a bill to provide temporary emergency powers for the preservation of public order in Canada. I emphasize the words "temporary emergency powers for the preservation of public order in Canada". There is no question in my mind about the need to have a strong deterrent in order to preserve public order at this time. This was the whole purpose of invoking the War Measures Act. The purpose was to create a deterrent and give the government the power necessary to deal with this emergency situation. There is no doubt in my mind that this amendment would create a deterrent in a society in which there is a great deal of unrest and concern.

In my estimation the Minister of Justice is very weak in referring to section 210 of the Criminal Code and suggesting that we have two degrees of murder, non-capital and capital, and that capital murder applies only to prison guards and policemen on duty. Every one of the 264 members of this House of Commons believes in his own mind that capital murder in respect of acts of treason or acts against the wishes of this or any other government in a lawful society, such as we have today in Canada, should involve the maximum penalty of death by hanging.

Mr. Deachman: I do not agree with that.

Mr. Horner: We have one member who does not agree. Now I see there are eight. I count eight hands up, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The Chair finds it very difficult to hear what the hon. member for Crowfoot is saying.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I noticed a number of raised hands. Someone has accused me of not counting him, so there are nine.

An hon. Member: The hon. member cannot count.

Mr. Horner: Nine members out of perhaps 150 members here tonight.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Horner: The Minister of Justice jokes about this matter. Will he allow a free vote on this amendment? Will he stand up and say that members of his party can vote any way they like? Will he stand up and say that every member from the province of Quebec can vote the way his heart and mind dictates? He will not. He knows the party whip has things in hand. The minister laughs and jokes about this matter. It is a very serious matter today in Canada. We are confronted with acts of terrorism. We know that the War Measures Act was brought in because of an uprising within the country for the purpose of overthrowing the democratic rights of the people.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. Because the record goes out to a great many people, I should like it recorded that I am not joking or laughing at the issue.

Mr. Horner: But the minister is laughing and joking at the amendment moved by an hon. friend to my extreme left. He is laughing and joking at this amendment.

• (8:30 p.m.)

An hon. Member: Tell the truth.

Mr. Horner: I am telling the truth right now. I wish that every member of the party of the hon. member who told me to tell the truth could vote truthfully according to his conscience and the wishes of his constituents.

An hon. Member: Come on, Jack.

Mr. Horner: But no, the whips are on. The Minister of Justice could not rise to speak when I asked him to. He shied away from that point because he knew that if he did not, this amendment would carry. There is not a member of Parliament in the House who does not agree with this amendment and who does not believe that most of his constituents agree with it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Horner: There are not nine members out of the 150 here tonight who can say, "We disagree with this amendment". Everyone here knows that their constituents agree with this amendment.

Mr. Francis: We want to hear how your side votes on it.

Mr. Horner: Now we hear great comments from the hon. member for Ottawa West. Let him make his speech after I am through. I would like to see the name of everyone opposing this amendment on the record, because their constituents will long remember it. They will long remember the government that brought in the War Measures Act.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: This is the government that said there is terrorism and there is an uprising that is going to overthrow democracy. But each and every one of them will be turning against his constituents in voting against this amendment; there is no question about that. The minister drags out the five-year trial ban on capital punishment that was put into effect in December of 1967. We know that on that particular date the whips were on. But that does not necessarily apply to this act, because the bill before us is to provide temporary emergency powers for the preservation of public order within Canada.

There is no question in my mind that 70 per cent, 80 per cent, 90 per cent of the people of Canada believe that if a person is prepared to commit treason, to kill and torture human beings, good, law abiding Canadian citizens, he should receive the maximum penalty of death. I leave it to the government to decide by what means capital punishment should be applied, whether it be by hanging, the gas chamber or whatsoever method may be decided upon.

There is no question in my mind that most of Canada wants this amendment accepted and that most members of the House want it accepted. It is a cowardly act of the government to try to slide this amendment under the carpet tonight by dragging out the Criminal Code and saying that capital punishment is on a five-year trial period, so this amendment does not apply. This is a temporary measure for the specific purpose of preserving public order in Canada.

There is no doubt in my mind that capital punishment is in fact a deterrent. The Minister of Justice was a great believer in the value of a deterrent when it came to introducing the breathalyzer test. He used the argument that a deterrent was very important for the purpose of safeguarding persons using public highways. Now he does not believe in the value of a deterrent. He would rather have soldiers standing at the corner of every street, guarding every public building in Montreal with loaded machine-guns in their hands and fingers on the trigger. Is that not a deterrent? You bet it is a deterrent—but it is one that affects every law abiding citizen as he walks by the soldier with his finger on the trigger.

This amendment would bring in an effective deterrent for anyone committing a murder or an act of treason in order to create public disorder in an emergency situation such as the one we are now experiencing.

Everyone who votes against this amendment will be duly recorded and will not be forgotten in the minds of the public or in the minds of the members of this House because, as the government has testified, this is an emergency situation which needs emergency action. I know some of my friends in the Socialist party to my left do not believe in capital punishment, but they accept there is an emergency situation in Canada today. At least, I believe they do. They also accept the fact that at this time the government must have some extraordinary powers. Therefore, maybe as a temporary measure they would support this amendment.

I conclude by saying that 80 per cent or 90 per cent of the people of Canada would vote in favour of this amendment. There is no doubt in my mind that the day will come when Members of Parliament will be elected to speak as their consciences dictate and to speak for their constituents. They will not be buying party favours by kow-towing to the wishes of the cabinet. Maybe we are five or ten years away from that day, but I say the day will come when this House will be directed by the consciences of the people who are elected and not by the wishes of the almighty party in power or the wishes of the almighty Minister of Justice who is afraid to stand up and say to his party, "You can have a free vote on this issue. Vote the way your conscience tells you".

An hon. Member: We are free to vote the way we want.

Mr. Horner: The day will come when members on this side of the House will register the true feelings of the people. When that day comes perhaps we will have less rioting in the streets, less turmoil in our society and perhaps more turmoil in this place where the feelings and wishes of the people are supposed to be voiced and reflected accurately. But today we are still under the thumb of the almighty party; the party must come before our country and we must vote the way the party dictates. That day is nearly ended. I agree with the youth of Canada who say it must be near its end.

The Minister of Justice will rue the day he did not rise and say to his people, "Vote the way your constituents want you to vote", because every person in Canada will be watching how Parliament votes on this emergency measure at this crucial time when public order must be restored within our country.

Mr. Hogarth: Before I make my point of order, Mr. Chairman, I want to make it abundantly clear that under no circumstances would I vote for the death penalty under this amendment or any other. Apart from that, it is abundantly clear that this amendment is entirely outside the scope of the bill. The bill deals entirely with le Front de Libération du Québec. Clauses 3 and 4 of the bill set forth the offences. The amendment which is proposed is actually an amendment to section 233 of the Criminal Code which deals with kidnapping. That being so, it appears to me that the amendment is completely outside the scope of the bill. It does not mention the FLQ.

Mr. Horner: It is too late. The Chairman ruled it in order.

[Mr. Horner]

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I must remind the hon. member that the Chair has already accepted the amendment. I also remind him that clause 4 of the bill is identified as relating to offences and punishment and that identification is not related only to the FLQ, although the bill might be. In any case, the Chair has already made the decision to put the motion, so it is before the committee. I recognize the hon. member for Greenwood.

• (8:40 p.m.)

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, I want to make it clear that at least some members of the House are perfectly prepared to vote against this amendment out of conscience and not out of any coercion by their party. I think it is a delusion for anyone to believe that you get a better deterrent by putting in capital punishment. The way to handle this matter is to have efficient police forces and to alleviate the social conditions which have led to the problems that exist. Of course, people have forgotten that when petty crime in England and other countries was punished by capital punishment, crime was more prevalent than at any other time in the course of history. I suggest that the whole theory behind this amendment is an illusion and a delusion, and we should not support it.

[Translation]

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Chairman, I must repeat what I have often said in the House in the last two years. In 1967, removing capital punishment was a disservice to the population. It was an error.

The first duty of members of Parliament is to protect society. During the last session, I said that considering the large increase of criminal offences in Quebec and in Canada, only one deterrent could prevent murder, namely capital punishment. I do not suggest a return to Middle Ages practices. One can be for or against deterrents.

I believe that—

Mr. Chairman, could hon. members be called to order?

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Asselin). It is rather difficult to hear his remarks. Perhaps the hon. members could allow him to complete them.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Chairman, the death penalty was retained for the murder of prison guards and police officers. In addition, the cabinet, using its prerogative to grant free pardon, ignores the decisions of Parliament to commute death penalties, with the result that we now have in Quebec a considerable increase in the number of crimes, because those people—

Mr. Boulanger: That is not true.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Asselin: Certainly.

Mr. Béchard: Would the hon. member give one instance where the cabinet ignored the wishes of Parliament with regard to capital punishment?

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Chairman, the recollection of this example is not fresh in my mind. I remember a case where no recommendation for clemency was made to the court and where the sentence was commuted by the cabinet. If I am mistaken, it cannot be helped, but I shall send my notes on the subject to the hon. member who just asked the question.

Two categories of people only are protected against murder: jail guards and policemen. Not even the Prime Minister of Canada nor members of Parliament are protected against maniacs who could come to the House of Commons, throw a bomb and kill perhaps 50 or 60 members. That murderer would be sentenced to life imprisonment and knowing the conditions of parole, he would stay in jail for 10 or 12 years and then be set free in society.

Mr. Chairman, it is time that Parliament—and I repeat it—should protect society. If some people do not want to be eventually given capital punishment they need only comply with the laws of a society wishing to live in peace and in order. This amendment is justified and should be given consideration.

I also urge the Minister of Justice, as did the previous speaker, that when this amendment will be put, to be broadminded to ask the hon. members to vote according to their conscience.

At the present time the population of Quebec lives in terror and in fear. It is revealed by the economic situation prevailing in Quebec. I do not say that we must do it in retaliation but capital punishment should be given at least until April 1971 to those found guilty by a competent tribunal of kidnappings, sedition and murder of innocent people. But this means was used as an attempt to affect the decisions of legitimate governments.

Mr. Chairman, in my opinion this amendment is warranted. It must be objectively considered, not as advocating revenge, but as a parliamentary means to protect the society in which we are living. We have to get rid of people living on the fringe of laws established by society.

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: Again I must ask hon. members to refrain from carrying on private conversations in the chamber, because these make it very difficult for the Chair and other interested members to hear the speeches being made. I hope hon. members will heed this request.

[Translation]

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Chairman, I must say I have much sympathy for the mover of this amendment.

When the House discussed the abolition of capital punishment a few years ago, I moved during the debate on second reading that the matter be referred to the committee on justice and legal affairs.

I spoke many times on the subject of capital punishment and my views are well known. I am not saying that I am in favour or against the abolition of capital punishment, but at that time, I was in favour of that legislation, specially as it concerns prisoners, who have rehabilitation problems.

Since this law is a temporary measure, I do not see why we should raise this problem at this stage, and I believe the hon. members will easily understand that if this amendment is accepted, in any event, it will lapse in a few months and become non operative.

Under the present circumstances, I do not think we should vote in favour of this amendment.

If the hon. member who moved this amendment believes that capital punishment must be meted out for similar crimes, he should move a separate legislation. As this bill is of a temporary nature. For this reason, Mr. Chairman, I do not think that this amendment should be approved now by the members of the House.

• (8:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I will repeat briefly in English some of the things I said in French. At the moment kidnapping bears the maximum punishment of life imprisonment. Kidnapping includes confining a person against his will. That is pursuant to section 233 of the Criminal Code. Everyone who mutilates or wounds a person with intent to deprive that person of his life in effect attempts to commit murder, and that is punishable by life imprisonment. I draw to the committee's attention section 210. Of course, everyone who kills a person commits murder, and that carries with it the penalty of life imprisonment.

Mr. Horner: Will the minister permit a question, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): When I have finished, Mr. Chairman, I shall answer the hon. member. Killing a person constitutes murder. Except in the case of the murder of a policeman or of a prison guard in the course of his duties, that offence constitutes non-capital murder punishable by life imprisonment.

We are dealing, therefore, with the three offences mentioned in the amendment of the hon. member, all of which already carry the penalty of life imprisonment. Now he wants to include the alternative of the death penalty. I suggest to him and to the other members of the committee that whatever their views are about capital punishment, this is no time for the House, within the context of a specific law of temporary duration to meet a specific purpose—as the hon. member for Lafontaine has said—to pronounce itself on the question of whether it will continue in force the abolition of the death penalty. That penalty was abolished three years ago.

I said earlier in French that the House will be given an opportunity in general terms to debate this issue fully before December, 1972. It will do so in general terms and the debate will apply to the full range of the Criminal Code. That is when the House ought to deal with the matter. I think it would be inappropriate for the House now, in dealing with this specific piece of legislation which is to last for a limited period of time, to consider this matter. I say this in all seriousness. Whatever the views of hon. members may be about the death penalty, I urge the committee to reject this amendment because Parliament is not addressing itself to the general subject at the moment and I do not think these are the appropriate circumstances in which to deal with so fundamental a subject.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister a question? He intimated that he would answer me. Will he explain to the committee what is meant by the term "life imprisonment"? Is it not a fact that on the average life imprisonment in the past has meant about ten years' imprisonment, and not more? Could he just explain that term fully, so that we may understand it?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It is a mandatory punishment—

Mr. Horner: Would the minister repeat that? I did not quite catch him.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It is mandatory in the case of non-capital murder. The sentence can only be commuted or the prisoner can only be paroled, as I understand it, by Order in Council. It is not automatic. I feel I ought to mention, that the offence of treason, as set out in section 46 of the Criminal Code, I think, carries with it the death penalty.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, is it not correct to say that life imprisonment on the average in the past has meant a sentence of ten years' imprisonment or thereabouts?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No.

Mr. Horner: Does the minister say it means more than ten years? I notice that he shakes his head negatively. His gesture will not appear on the record. I have described it for the record. Will he say whether life imprisonment means ten years, more than ten years, or less?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Before there is parole in the case of non-capital murder, an Order in Council has to be passed. Parole is not automatic.

Mr. Horner: But after what length of time, on the average, has the Order in Council been made effective in the past?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I cannot give the hon. gentleman that information.

Mr. Horner: I suggest that the period has been less than ten years.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I think the hon. gentleman is wrong.

Mr. Horner: Then why has the minister not said so before?

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for Crowfoot was seeking the floor for the purpose of asking a question and not for the purpose of starting a debate.

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to prolong this discussion but I wish to say that I think the Minister of Justice is being just a little unfair when he insists that this amendment relates to a general, over-all debate on capital punishment. It does not. We undertook a little research during the general debate on capital punishment, and throughout 1966 and 1967, and learned that life imprisonment has meant a sentence of about eight years, five months and two days. That has been the average sentence over the last 30 or 40 years. The amendment seeks to deal with an emergency situation and it relates to the very essence of the bill we are now considering.

There is no attempt on our part to open up a general debate on capital punishment. We are merely trying to provide a deterrent and to enact adequate punishment for the crime we are considering in this crisis. The Minister of Justice refuted his own argument when he told us that treason is punishable by capital punishment. If his argument holds water, treason ought not to be included so far as capital punishment is concerned. The Minister of Justice tried to leave the impression that the amendment was endeavouring to reopen the whole debate on capital punishment. As I said, this amendment is merely to provide an adequate deterrent and an adequate punishment for the crimes we are considering in this temporary emergency measure. Let that be clear.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Roy (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, almost from the beginning of the debate on this amendment I had made up my mind to vote in favour of it.

Mr. Peters: That is not surprising.

Mr. Roy (Timmins): But if I vote for the amendment—and I want to make sure my remarks are on record—it will not be because of the idiotic drivel spoken by the hon. member for Crowfoot. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, his remarks disgusted me to the extent that I almost wanted to vote against the amendment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: How often is the hon. member in the House? He is practically a stranger.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, since we are dealing with the question of penalty I wish to draw certain matters to the attention of the committee. One of the things that struck me throughout the entire tragic incident of the death of Mr. Laporte was that the police received very little information. I think the reason will become apparent when one analyses the Criminal Code.

The offences of capital murder and non-capital murder carry the same penalty of life imprisonment, and that is where the problem lies. We created the difficulty when we made certain changes in the Criminal Code of Canada. For instance, if a police officer asks a citizen to assist him in an arrest when there is a riot or violence, the person so asked must come to the aid of the police officer and if he fails to do so he is guilty of an indictable offence. If, during the process of assisting the policeman the citizen is shot and killed, the consequences are as follows. If the accused is convicted, he will be liable to life imprisonment. On the other hand, if the police officer is killed, the accused, if convicted, will be sentenced to hang.

Therein lies the root of one of the great problems not only in Canada but in the United States. People do not wish to become involved. In Canada they do not become involved, largely because we pussy-footed on this issue when it was before Parliament. If one were to go to Montreal and to the very place where the crime against Mr. Laporte was committed, one would see that people do not want to become involved. The reason for that, in my opinion, is the great mistake that we made in the law when we said that a person convicted of killing a police officer will hang, but if he is convicted of killing a person who is helping the police officer he will not hang. To me that was a very great mistake. I believe the argument, however, is relevant.

We are now dealing with a very sensitive problem, the problem of the permissive society. There must be some indictment and perhaps some reproaches in respect of our permissive society. As I pointed out this afternoon when reading from the report of the Royal Commission on Security, the government two-years-ago knew the situation was as bad as it now is, yet they did nothing. Because they vacillated and procrastinated we are now in this mess.

I shall vote for the amendment. I believe it is right to do so because the law as it now stands is discriminatory. I believe that every member from the province of Quebec, if they vote according to their conscience, will vote for the amendment.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Chairman, there has been a lot of heat in this debate. There is little doubt that it is a most serious matter. One member who has really tried to deal with it in a factual way is the hon. member for Greenwood, who made a brief statement of fact to which there has been no reply. Those of us who are seriously concerned about dealing with terrorist activities must present some kind of evidence. The hon. member for Greenwood referred to the fact, and there is evidence to support this, that capital punishment is not a deterrent. There have been many studies in the past—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: It would be appreciated if hon. members would listen. In the past capital punishment was not a deterrent. There are many stories about pickpockets being caught while witnessing executions of people convicted of pickpocketing.

If this has been the case in the past, what evidence do those in favour of capital punishment have to present to those of us who are prepared to listen? I emphasize that. If it can be shown that capital punishment will deter this kind of terroristic activity, I will be prepared to listen because it is a serious matter.

In terms of modern psychology, all available evidence is in the other direction. What type of person becomes involved in this kind of politics? There is the pathological type whom many psychiatrists say is looking for punishment, the man who is guilt-ridden. The more the punishment is increased, the more likely it is that he will enter into this kind of political activity. That argument cannot be dismissed. If members want to argue against it, they should provide evidence and not just an emotional, silly reaction.

The other type of person likely to become involved in such politics, although not pathological or sick none the less takes a very violent view of politics. Rightly or wrongly—and I think it is wrongly—some people believe that violence is essential for political change. If someone has that conviction, does anyone in this House seriously maintain that he will be deterred by capital punishment? My personal view is that the answer is no. A man who accepts violence as a legitimate form of politics will not be deterred by capital punishment. Because of these two basic facts, the pathological case on the one hand and the ideological commitment to violence on the other, I conclude that even on the ground of deterrence there is not a sound reason for a rational man accepting the reinstitution of capital punishment.

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Chairman, at the time of the debate on the death penalty a few years ago. I was against such abolition. I was discussing a few minutes ago with the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Béchard) the problem we have most at heart, namely the problem of the FLQ in the province of Quebec. I feel we should reestablish capital penalty when there has been kidnapping and loss or life, or when the explosion of a bomb results in loss of life.

I will therefore vote in favour of the amendment put forward by my friends of the Ralliement créditiste, although I am not in full agreement with it. I am not prepared to give unqualified support to the minister's arguments because I was and still am against abolishing the death penalty although, in conformity with democratic principles, I had to yield to the views of the majority who voted for the measure.

Recently, I have been making inquiries in my riding about the identity card which the Quebec Attorney General wishes to make compulsory. He has adopted my idea and I appreciate it.

I have also made a survey about the death penalty and, once again, my electors are ready to support my stand that we should have retained capital punishment. It may not be the perfect remedy for all the ills that are now being felt in Quebec, but, in the circumstances, I believe that I shall have to vote against the government and for the amendment before us.

This is a temporary measure, of course, as indicated in the bill itself, and when the revoking of the amendment to the Criminal Code is introduced, then of course we will have an opportunity to develop our arguments further.

I wanted however to express my opinion on the existing problem tonight.

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, I have been listening for some time to the views expressed by various members on the subject of the amendment and I think I may speak to it without reservation since I was one of those who voted for the abolishment of the death penalty.

I thus feel absolutely free about the issue, since at the time I voted to abolish the death penalty, I never suspected that exceptional circumstances would some day make me change my mind.

Mr. Chairman, in reply to the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner)—I would appreciate it if he would listen to me—and I wish he could understand my French just as well as he might understand my English.

[English]

I ask hon. members to listen carefully to what I have to say. I voted in favour of the abolition of the death penalty. Tonight I am prepared to vote against my own party, which will prove to those who have challenged the minister that this will be a free vote. That was the old story during the time of Mr. Diefenbaker and your gang, but today we are free. Since this means I can say what I think, I will say it.

• (9:10 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Horner: That is the best quote I have heard in a long time.

[Translation]

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I should like the hon. members to bear in mind that the hon. member for Mercier has the floor.

[English]

Mr. Boulanger: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. To make sure that what I have to say is exactly the answer you wanted, I am giving it now.

[Translation]

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. May I remind the hon. member for Mercier (Mr. Boulanger) that he must address himself to the Chair and not directly to the hon. member of Crowfoot (Mr. Horner). Moreover, he cannot call the member by his name, but must designate him as the member for such and such constituency.

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, I thank you. For the third time I tell you that I am addressing myself to you. When I voted for the abolition of the death penalty, I never would had thought that one day I would have to reconsider my decision. It is not necessary that I make a speech or describe all the circumstances that have existed for more than a month. It is a fact, Mr. Speaker, that if today a man is found guilty of treason, he can be hanged. Since we are ready to condemn to death a man who kills a policeman or a prison guard, I think that by adopting this temporary legislation today—because it is still a temporary legislation which will remain in force until the end of April 1971—we should inflict the same penalty on the person who, through a fanaticism that I am at a loss to explain, can kill one, two, three or four public men, Ministers of the Crown or other prominent figures.

I do not agree with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) and, in my opinion, the amendment moved, because of the temporary character of the legislation, should allow us to condemn the guilty persons to death. Therefore, I will vote in favour of the amendment.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Is the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice rising to put a question to the hon. member for Mercier?

Mr. Béchard: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Could the hon. member for Mercier tell me what will happen after April 31, 1971 to those who, on May 1st will kidnap a politician or someone else?

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, I never thought that some day I would have the pleasure and the privilege of answering a question put by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice. His question however is quite hypothetical. If this legislation is of a temporary nature, I think that it is because if on the 1st of May, there is still an apprehended state of insurrection, we will again introduce the legislation which we know and we will deal with it in the House.

[English]

Mr. Aiken: I intend to vote against this amendment. I do not intend to vote against it for the reasons put forward by the Minister of Justice, nor because of my views on capital punishment. It is my belief that the government by its own acts and on its own responsibility has elevated the present situation into an unreasonable state of hysteria. The government has yet to give this House a full and true statement of the facts concerning the events of the last month. They have not been totally honest with us.

If we were to accept the position of the government that the situation in this country, particularly in the province of Quebec, is as bad as they say it is, we would have no alternative but to vote for the amendment; but I cannot accept that position or believe that the situation is as bad as the government says it is. I believe the government is being inconsistent in playing the situation up on one hand and playing it down on the other, and in these circumstances I cannot support the amendment.

Mr. Haidasz: Mr. Chairman, I rise only to ask the Minister of Justice for an explanation of the word "crime" in subclause (g) of clause 4. In particular, I would ask him to tell the committee whether the word "crime" includes murder and, hence, whether a murder committed by a member of the FLQ or of another similar group in Canada would be punishable only by a term of imprisonment not exceeding five years.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We are talking hypothetically, because the hon. member put his question in abstract terms. If a murder were committed by a member of the FLQ the charge, obviously, would be murder, under the Criminal Code, rather than a charge under clause 4 of this bill. If a member of the FLQ were to kidnap somebody and the evidence were sufficient, he would be prosecuted for kidnapping for which the term is life imprisonment. The proceedings would not be under clause 4 of this bill.

If the victim was mutilated or tortured and death followed as a result, the person committing the offence would be prosecuted under the Criminal Code, which provides a life sentence as a maximum penalty. It is conceivable that if an attempt to overthrow the government were analagous to the crime of kidnapping or murder, the death penalty could result if a charge under section 46(1)(d) of the Criminal Code were sustained, that is, treason for which the penalty is death.

[Translation]

I take this opportunity, Mr. Chairman, to say to all my colleagues that this law is not aimed at raising the question of abolition or retention of capital punishment.

That question is raised by an amendment of an hon. member of the Ralliement créditiste. The House will have the opportunity before December 29, 1972 to make a permanent decision on the matter of capital punishment, and I submit to Your Honour that the time to discuss and to vote on abolition or retention of capital punishment is not during a debate on the passing of a provisional law.

The House of Commons has to be given the opportunity for a serious consideration of that very important question and must not try to deal with it now. I believe the question is much more important than that and it would be unfair either to the people of Canada or the people of Quebec to make a decision on so basic a question when the House has not at present the opportunity to make an exhaustive study of that question.

The opportunity will arise before December 29, 1972.

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Before I recognize the hon. member for Skeena perhaps the Chair should take a moment to remind the minister that the amendment before the committee permits hon. members to elaborate on the question of capital punishment, and the Chair has no alternative but to allow hon. members to do so if they wish.

• (9:20 p.m.)

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Chairman, it was interesting to notice the great attention that the Minister of Justice paid in his remarks not to all parts of the House but to one particular section of it.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I learned that from the right hon. member for Prince Albert.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I never saw the minister's face once. He was looking in the other direction, not at you, Mr. Chairman. Apart from that, I think the most telling argument presented to the committee so far in regard to the amendment before us was that made by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka. He levelled, I think quite properly, the accusation that the incendiary feeling which exists in the province of Quebec is to a large extent to be laid at the doorstep of this government, whose Minister of Regional Economic Expansion distorted the facts of the situation on more than one occasion for purely political reasons and inflamed feelings far in excess of those which one would have expected to be aroused. That is where the blame should lie.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I see hon. members opposite shaking their heads.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. May I remind hon. members that the hon. member for Skeena has the floor and should be allowed to make his speech as others have done up to this point.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Chairman, I do not really mind the interruptions from members like the hon. member for Mercier, but I would point out that if they are entitled to interrupt they should not object when others interrupt them. That is only fair.

Apart from the fact that the government is to a large extent responsible for the feelings that exist in Quebec, I think we are approaching the question of capital punishment from entirely the wrong angle. There are those who feel we should look at the question whether or not there should be capital punishment from the point of view of vengefulness, from the point of view of exacting a toll from those individuals who commit this crime. They subscribe to the view that in our decision we should reflect the desire for revenge on behalf of those who have been injured.

This is not the function of a legislator. The function of a legislator is to try to look at things rationally and dispassionately and not let his heart rule his head. To do otherwise would mean that every time he considered something that was crucial or heinous to society, the Parliament of Canada would be expected to move hither and yon as emotions developed. We have known since long ago that acting out of revenge does not solve the situation or help matters one little bit. In terms of the force of the law we know that capital punishment, or the threat of it, is no more nor less a deterrent to the commission of the crime of murder than some other penalty; and the penalty we impose at the moment for this crime is life imprisonment.

With regard to those who kidnapped Mr. Laporte and Mr. Cross, whatever the punishment that would have been imposed upon them—I think the Minister of Justice said the sentence for kidnapping was life imprisonment and that the penalty facing those who committed the heinous murder of Mr. Laporte was life imprisonment or hanging, depending on how they were charged—they were not deterred in any way by any threatened penalty of capital punishment. I suggest it was not even a factor.

People who have criminal intent, or are psychotic or unbalanced, are not deterred one way or another by the threat of capital punishment. In their own deluded minds they feel that they must commit the crime, and when they do commit it they convince themselves that they can get away with it. They gamble. True, they gamble with somebody else's life, but they also gamble with their own. I suggest that in that sort of situation exacting revenge from those who committed the crime of murder against Mr. Laporte is not a reasoned course of action to take. We might just as well exact the same revenge in the case of an individual who murders as the result of some emotional, love situation that exists in a family.

A number of hon. members have indicated that they intend to vote for this amendment. I hope that when they do, they vote not on the basis of vengeance but on the basis of what they truly believe is the proper detterrent in our society to the commission of such an offence. I think it is true that you can equate life imprisonment with capital punishment as a sentence. But it is not correct to say that the National Parole Board can with impunity grant parole to a person after he has served six or seven years without looking at the merits of the case. What we as legislators have before us tonight is the question whether or not we are enacting a law that will be a true deterrent against the commission of this crime. As I say, we should not look at it from the point of view of revenge, of hanging all individuals who commit such crimes.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, I only want to recall what the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) said a moment ago, namely that we were opening a debate on the abolition of capital punishment. I think that the Minister of Justice can speak better French than he understands it since I told him earlier, and others understood, that we were not trying to deal with the whole subject of capital punishment, either its abolition or its reestablishment, but to deal with specific cases.

I asked him a question a moment ago which I will ask again in a much more direct manner.

I would ask him what would have happened if instead of kidnapping Pierre Laporte, the kidnappers had kidnapped and killed a police officer? It is likely that the amendment adopted on December 21, 1967, to section 202A of the Criminal Code would have applied. This section reads as follows:

> Murder is capital murder, in respect of any person, where such person by his own act caused or assisted in causing the death of
> (i) a police officer, police constable, constable, sheriff, deputy sheriff, sheriff's officer or other person employed for the preservation and maintenance of the public peace, acting in the course of his duties, or
> (ii) a warden, deputy warden, instructor, keeper, gaoler, guard or other officer or permanent employee of a prison, acting in the course of his duties.

So, Mr. Chairman, if the kidnappers had kidnapped the director of the Montreal police department or a simple police officer or a gaoler and had killed him, the law could have applied capital punishment. But as for the kidnappers of a Quebec minister they can only be arrested, deprived of some of their freedom, but given shelter, heat, good food at the expense of Canadian taxpayers.

Mr. Chairman, I repeat that we are not trying to start a debate on the abolition or reestablishment of capital punishment but to deal with Bill C-181 which is temporary legislation.

• (9:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Deachman: Mr. Chairman, we are within half an hour of the closing of today's session. We are not in session of the House but are simply in committee. In the chamber tonight we have approximately 80 Members of Parliament, a little less than one-third of the total membership of the House of Commons, and we are discussing an amendment which would implement capital punishment through a clause of the single bill that is before us. A few moments ago this matter was smuggled onto the floor of the committee as a debate on capital punishment.

Mr. Thompson: It was not. I protest.

An hon. Member: That is not fair to the Chairman.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. When the hon. member imputes motives, as he is doing now, he is completely out of order. It was not an insidious way to enter into a debate on capital punishment; it was a legitimate—

Mr. Horner: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member for Vancouver Quadra said there are approximately 80 members in the chamber. In fact there are 50 members on this side, and as I look closely at the other side I see that there are well over 80 members in total. Therefore, that statement cannot go without challenge.

Mr. Deachman: If we were to introduce capital punishment through a clause in this bill, I feel sure we would be very ashamed of ourselves for toying with life and death.

Mr. Horner: They didn't toy with Laporte's life.

Mr. Deachman: Tomorrow, when we settled down to read our papers, we would find that we had...

Mr. Horner: They were teasing and torturing him.

Mr. Deachman: —passed a clause of great solemnity in this bill. I agree with those who have suggested that there is a place in this House of Commons for dealing with capital punishment, and that it is a matter which should be dealt with fairly soon. But members opposite, as well as members on this side of the House, would not want to see that subject dealt with, put into a statute and made the law of Canada as summarily as it would be if we were to pass it tonight. Many hon. members agree that this is a subject which should wait until the whole membership of the House is here and until Parliament has time to adequately reflect upon it. Surely, our task at the moment is not to address ourselves to bringing into this House, just 20 minutes before the end of the day's sitting, a clause to reinstitute with capital punishment.

If a vote is taken on this amendment tonight, I hope it will be soundly defeated not only by those who do not agree with capital punishment but by those who believe that Parliament ought to consider the subject in a more serious way when all the members of the House are here.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words—

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Battle River.

Mr. Downey: Mr. Chairman, what prompted me to say a few words tonight was that some members suggested that those who supported the capital punishment area of this amendment were doing so because of emotion rather than fact. The question of deterrence was raised. I suggest that the whole basis of our legal system is deterrence. Consider fines and imprisonment. What are these, if they are not deterrents? When one takes a life, to hang is the maximum deterrent. In connection with the FLQ kidnapping of Mr. Laporte we see there was no deterrence after the kidnapping. At one point it did not matter one iota to them whether he was released or murdered, because the deterrent was the same.

The member for Charlevoix stated that the first object of the law is the protection of the citizenry, and I suggest this—is the principle as it was originally conceived. I have figures here relating to some countries wherein capital punishment has been abolished except for treason. In the Netherlands war criminals were executed as late as March, 1952. Norway executed 25 prisoners for treason, and Belgium executed some well into the 1950s. Britain and West Germany are experiencing strong support for the reintroduction of the death penalty.

The figures I have here indicate that the murder rate has gradually increased since the death penalty has been abolished. In 1966 there were 1.3 murders per 100,000 of the population. The rate goes up to 1.8 in 1968, and a little over 1.9 in 1969. I think there is adequate evidence that over the years the death penalty has been a deterrent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak in response to the remarks of the hon. member for Crowfoot. He indicated that he thought most of the people of Canada would favour the reintroduction of the death penalty. I must admit that I have received letters from people recommending that the death penalty be reintroduced and I have been to many public meetings, some in my own riding, where people have spoken out in favour of its reintroduction. But, Mr. Chairman, they are far from the majority.

In any event, I would oppose the reintroduction of the death penalty whether on a permanent or, as suggested by the hon. member for Red Deer, on a temporary basis. The supporters of the death penalty argue that those crimes which society finds the most revolting should be punished by a maximum penalty, death. The hon. member for Crowfoot said that he did not care whether it was death in the gas chamber or by hanging. He said he would leave that to the government—

An hon. Member: Good old Crowfoot!

Mr. Kaplan: —but the maximum punishment should be imposed. I ask hon. members opposite this question: If we are to introduce the maximum penalty that society can impose, why are they asking for the humane penalty of death by hanging or in the gas chamber? These are the two most humane methods of killing people. Would the logic of their position not dictate that they should be driven to imposing the most painful method of inflicting death? Why are they satisfied with hanging and the gas chamber? Why are they not talking about drawing and quartering people?

• (9:40 p.m.)

Mr. Horner: Why don't you say what they did to Laporte? Let the people know the truth about what they did to Laporte.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Kaplan: What I am trying to point out in asking these questions, which I hope are rhetorical because surely no member would advocate a death penalty of that nature, is that there is a logical fallacy in their argument. I think it shows how absurd the argument is when we take it to its logical conclusion. It shows that the whole argument is without merit and that the death penalty would serve no useful purpose whatsoever.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Chairman, I tend to agree with the speakers who have said that this argument does not really belong in this discussion. We are discussing a measure which the government has chosen to bring before Parliament as an alternative to the War Measures Act. This amendment simply introduces a great deal of emotion which does not add to the discussion.

May I say, as has been said before, that this emotion-charged atmosphere is partially due to the government itself. When the Prime Minister of this country chooses to label those who oppose him as weak-kneed, bleeding hearts, what is he saying? Instead of using rational talk, he chooses to use the epithets of the intellectual gutter. I as a farmer would use the epithets of the gutter because I understand them and can use them very well. But the Prime Minister, having the advantage of more sophistication and so on, uses the epithets of the intellectual to label his opponents.

I am very much concerned about the hysteria and emotion that is evident in this Parliament rather than the rational approach we should attempt to take in meeting this most unfortunate situation. Having said that, Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the type of penalty we use to deter really has no place in the measure we are now discussing.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I fail to see any logic or reason in reviving at this time the arguments we heard ad nauseam three, four and five years ago in connection with the abolition of the death penalty. The chief reason there is no logic to it is that the death penalty exists in our law at the present time. It exists for treason and it exists in respect of the murder of a policeman, a penitentiary warden, and so on. Therefore, I find it difficult to understand why members should continue to argue about whether we should or should not have the death penalty. We have it now.

This amendment would merely extend the death penalty to the type of crime that has been committed by the FLQ and which may be again committed by members of the FLQ under the present rather difficult circumstances. It would seem to me that the reasonable thing to do is to stop arguing about whether or not we should have the death penalty, because we already have it for certain crimes. I think we should vote on this measure. I thought this bill was a matter of urgency which the government wanted to get through as quickly as possible.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Harkness: Certainly, the members of the official opposition are very anxious to get it through as quickly as possible. Therefore, I do not understand why we should take up so much time arguing about something which really has no application to the matter. I would hope we would have a vote on this amendment now and get on with the measure.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, I have tried for some time to get your attention. I have a few observations to make. The hon. member for Calgary Centre has said pretty much what I wanted to say. I am very opposed to the type of discussion I have listened to in the last hour or so. I am also very much opposed to the suggestions of gentlemen in this chamber who should know better, such as the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra, suggesting that this is not the proper place to discuss this question. Of course it is the proper place. Whether we are in committee or whether we are in the House, this is the place to discuss it and suggestions to the contrary are not fitting during a discussion of a matter so serious.

I cannot understand why in this chamber we cannot get on with the business before us in a much more efficient and orderly manner than we have in the last few days. The items we are considering were placed before us with some assurance, both quiet and spoken, by the government almost a week ago, but we are still debating this bill while other urgent matters are waiting on the sidelines. My suggestion is that we stop fooling around with a matter as serious as the sanctity of life, and get on with the amendment and the bill itself as well as the business of running this country.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Chairman, I shall speak briefly because I, too, would like to see this matter come to a vote. I think this whole discussion is misleading, in that we seem to be spending a great deal of time talking about deterrence when the real issue behind this legislation is detection. When the people concerned are not yet apprehended, I think we are putting the cart before the horse.

It strikes me that a discussion about reintroducing capital punishment is, in effect, a kind of counsel of despair. If this is the best way in which we can respond to the very serious situation and to what may exist in the minds of those who create terror, we really have not successfully entered the twentieth century. I think we have had ample experience to know that our system of social vengeance, instituted to its ultimate degree with capital and corporal punishment, has not been very successful. I suggest that all members in the committee should do their duty immediately and vote against the amendment.

Mr. Horner: I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, and the committee that I will not talk past ten o'clock. I now recognize the time as being seven minutes to ten o'clock. I assure you, Mr. Chairman, that I will allow this amendment to come to a vote tonight. I am prompted to speak again on this question because there has been much talk about vengeance, about the fact that those who moved the amendment and who spoke in favour of it are motivated by vengeance. I assure the committee that this feeling is not motivating me one bit. I am motivated by the fact that our whole system of justice is based upon the effectiveness of a deterrent. In fact, clause 3 of the bill outlaws a group of persons or association known as le Front de Libération du Québec or any successor group or successor association. So in a sense we are creating a deterrent against anybody joining the FLQ or for any group of FLQ members creating a new association with the same purpose in mind.

This bill in essence is a deterrent against anybody in the House of Commons or any citizen of Canada attending meetings of the FLQ. It is based on the principle of deterrence. I say that this amendment is also a deterrent against acts committed by the FLQ. What did the Prime Minister call these people? Did he say they were bleeding hearts? It seems to me, listening tonight to the bleeding hearts bleeding for the life of somebody who eradicates an honest, law abiding citizen of this country, that no sympathy can be felt for him. I have these bleeding hearts around me and they are also on the other side of the House. I am somewhat like the Prime Minister; I am not too sympathetic toward bleeding hearts.

Our whole system of justice is based upon the principle of deterrence. Once the members of an FLQ cell kidnap a person, it does not matter who he is, the punishment for them is life imprisonment, so the Minister of Justice tells us. If they release that person or if they take his life, the punishment is no greater: it is still life imprisonment; there is no additional deterrent. I hope that I live in a society which values human life and is prepared to so signify when we face a serious crisis. I agree with the hon. member for Skeena that the government has made all Canada aware of this crisis. We have to act upon it. The purpose of bringing in this bill was to deal with the crisis. It is a temporary measure, and we have to act upon it.

I urge all Quebec members to vote for this amendment. What will the people of the Labelle and Frontenac constituencies think when they vote in the by-election next Monday? What will they think of their federal government if it votes against this amendment at this time? The people in the province of Quebec know there is a crisis. They feel it far more than I do in western Canada, and they want a deterrent. Mr. Laporte's life meant something to them. They wanted him alive, not mutilated and quartered as the hon. member for Don Mills suggested. I want every member in the committee to weigh that issue when they vote. Do we need more, or less, deterrence? I say we need more deterrence in this crisis situation.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment (Mr. Laprise) negatived: Yeas, 27; nays, 72.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

FINANCE—SUGGESTED INTERIM INCOME TAX CHANGES TO ASSIST PENSIONERS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, November 3, as recorded in Hansard at page 825, I put a question to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) in the following words:

—Having regard to the delay which is being experienced in bringing in over-all income tax changes, is the government giving consideration to an interim measure which would remove some of the anomalies and unfairness faced by persons whose only income is their pensions?

The reply of the minister, if I may paraphrase what he said, was to the effect that if any changes were to be made, they would be announced in the House in due course. That reply, of course, has been taped and computerized; we get it fairly often.

I am glad to see the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Mahoney) here tonight to answer my question, and I look hopefully for a helpful answer. I trust he will not spend any time telling me that we must not deal with this problem simply by raising the income tax exemption levels on the ground that that does more for the rich than it does for the poor. I trust he will not assume that some of us do not know that. I trust he will realize that we are aware of tax credits and of other ways in which a problem like this can be solved.

In my question on Tuesday, November 3, I referred to certain anomalies. May I indicate very briefly three such anomalies. First I mention the gross unfairness that is involved in giving to some of our old age pensioners a guaranteed income supplement, the purpose of which is to bring their income up to a certain level, and then turning around and taking some of that income away by taxing that bit of extra money. The Parliamentary Secretary can tell me that this applies in some cases and not in others. I am concerned about the cases where it does apply. I am concerned about retired persons who have their position improved on the one hand and downgraded on the other. This must be corrected.

A second anomaly relates to the fact that persons 70 years of age and over are allowed an extra $500 income tax exemption which does not apply any longer at age 65; at least, it does not apply to anyone between 65 and 70 who is in receipt of old age security during any month in any calendar year. I know the arguments for and against all this, but the anomaly I would like to point out to the Parliamentary Secretary is clear and straight forward. There are people between the ages of 65 and 70 who have nothing else but their pension income—people who are retired, who are out of the labour market—and yet because they are in that age bracket their exemption level, for single persons, is only $1,000. On the other hand there are people over 70 years of age who have income other than the old age pension, even people who have income from employment or income from investment. There are some in that age bracket who might have quite a lot of income and yet they are permitted an extra $500; in other words, a total $1,500 exemption so far as income tax is concerned. This I think is quite unfair, and it ought to be corrected.

I also think it is an anomaly, or a case of adding insult to injury, that pensioners, people who are on fixed incomes, have no opportunity to get an increase in their income to cope with the rising cost of living, and yet it is argued that because rules must have general application they cannot get an extra tax exemption or an extra tax credit. Precisely because their income position is fixed, precisely because they are denied some of the advantages that are available to those who are in the labour market, I think there is a case for different tax treatment of those people who are retired, those people who are on pensions only. I urge the government to give favourable consideration to this situation.

I know I repeat myself when I say to the Parliamentary Secretary: Don't come back and give me that line about the unfairness of raising income tax exemption levels because it does more for the rich than for the poor. It can be done by a system of tax credits. These pensioners of ours, our retired people, are having a terribly rough time today. They have to wait for white papers and legislation and for all the time it takes the government to deal with these matters. I think pensioners should benefit both ways. I have argued on previous occasions in favour of increasing the old age security pension to $150 a month, and I shall continue to do so. They should also benefit through whatever can be done in the matter of tax changes in their favour.

The government has talked about tax changes; it has talked about a $1,400 exemption level for single persons, and yet we are having to wait for that. That, in itself, will not do the trick. Time is running out. I urge that in the present session there be some specific tax arrangements for our retired people, and I am speaking particularly and precisely of those who are on pension income only. I urge that there be tax rebates, special tax treatment and tax arrangements that will give them a bit of justice instead of the unfairnesses and anomalies they now face. Mr. Speaker, the position of these people is desperate. For God's sake, I hope the government will do something about it soon.

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like again to note with favour and approval the hon. member's traditional and continuing concern for those living on pensions and fixed incomes only. This concern, of course, is shared by the government and is one of the principal reasons why the government has been so determined to beat inflation. I think the hon. member is very well aware that a specific answer to his question must, in the tradition of this Parliament, await a budget speech or a minibudget.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) recently had a lengthy meeting with a group of retired persons from Toronto who have designated themselves as "Pensioners Concerned" and who are launching a national campaign to bring the attention of the public to the situation of retired persons, the specific situation which the hon. member has so well articulated. This group was very eloquent in its appeal and during a 90 minute session with the minister explained the problems of retired persons without ignoring the revenue problems faced by the federal government or, indeed, any government.

The Minister of Finance is sympathetic to their views but questions whether the government can legislate more favourably toward lower-income retired persons than toward any other lower-income group. He noted the $500 deduction for persons over 70 years of age, something which the hon. member mentioned. While it is acknowledged that not all persons over 70 require this exemption because they are not all persons with low incomes, nevertheless I think it is a truism that the vast majority of people over that age are on fixed incomes, be they adequate or inadequate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is sadly true, and most of them are inadequate.

Mr. Mahoney: Many persons and organizations have tried to divorce the issue of increased exemptions from the comprehensive issue of tax reform, but this is not possible. It may seem trite to mention, but the growing programs that the government now has under way cost money; and it is unrealistic to suggest that the government can get along with less total revenue and continue programs that are now in effect.

If pensioners are to be treated, aside from the special $500 deduction, no more generously than persons of any other age on low incomes, then one has to look at the cost to the treasury of $1 billion under the exemption increases proposed in the white paper. The cost of these proposals is to be paid for by the other tax reforms put forward in the white paper. The changes in the rates schedule which would place a slightly heavier tax on those in the upper middle and high income groups would raise an extra $1⅛ billion, approximately. Capital gains taxation and other changes in taxation of business would yield other revenues. There are other reforms, of course, which would cost the treasury money.

The hon. member urged action in the present session. The government intends to place tax legislation implementing reform before Parliament as soon as possible.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to advise the Parliamentary Secretary that his time has expired.

PUBLIC WORKS—EGANVILLE—PROGRESS TOWARD NEW FEDERAL BUILDING

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, last Wednesday afternoon during the oral question period I asked the following question of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Laing) as reported at page 877 of Hansard for November 4:

> Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works which I hope is in order because I gave him notice of it. What progress is being made by his department on the project for a new federal building in the town of Eganville?

Then, Mr. Speaker, you gave me permission because of the urgency of the situation to raise the matter at a future time of adjournment, which happens to be this evening. Last Wednesday the bulk of the questioning during the oral question period pertained to national and social security, mainly as a result of the unfortunate happenings in Quebec. These matters of national security were of such concern that the next day, November 5, the Ottawa Journal ran a lead editorial bemoaning the fact that at that time I asked a question about the need of a new federal post office in Eganville. I quote from the editorial:

> A Commons due to meet at 2.00 opened at 2.10 and spent until 3.02 fumbling along with the usual run of questions and motions, including a query about the need of a federal building in Eganville.

The Commons was not fumbling last Wednesday, Mr. Speaker. Why shouldn't I, as the federal representative for the village of Eganville, ask my question? There was a 40-minute open question period on that day. What was wrong with asking a question pertaining to the public service and economy of the community which I represent? I think in that part of the editorial the Ottawa Journal temporarily forgot about the importance of Ottawa valley towns, one of which is Eganville. Eganville, on the Bonnechere River, a tributary of the Ottawa River, is older than Ottawa. My records indicate that Eganville was founded in 1825. Bytown was founded in 1826, and Ottawa in 1854. Eganville, the surrounding community and Renfrew county have been supplying Ottawa for many years with men, mines and materials. I wish to remind the Ottawa Journal of this fact. The world will not come to an end because of the happenings in the province of Quebec. Eganville and Canada will continue to march onward.

My question arises from the fact that more than two years ago the federal government purchased the old Eganville town hall from the corporation of the village with the intention of building a new post office on the site. The village corporation, reeve and council moved their offices to the old Eganville high school which was vacated some time ago by the local board of education as a result of the new Opeongo high school built by the county of Renfrew board of education.

The abandonment of the old town hall has resulted in the building going into a state of disrepair and neglect. The sooner the new post office is built, the better it will serve the needs of the community. When one stands and looks at the old building in its disarray and its broken windows, he is not encouraged when he is reminded that it is owned by the federal government. In fact, it would form part of a worth-while winter works program if the government did what it could this winter toward demolishing the old building and being ready to pour footings next spring for the new office. The reeve, council and people of the village are patiently waiting word from the government as to when construction will begin on the new post office, and I say to the minister through you, Mr. Speaker, the sooner the better.

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Department of Public Works is presently planning to build a post office of approximately 2,500 square feet at Eganville. It is hoped that the more detailed planning for this post office can be proceeded with during the spring of 1971, provided sufficients funds are available for the project.

INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE—EUROPEAN COMMON MARKET AND CANADA'S AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS—DISCUSSION AT CONGRESS

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, the question I wish to discuss for a few minutes is properly noted at page 954 of Hansard as "Items involved in British reservation concerning application of the EEC common tariff". It arises from a supplementary question to one raised by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose) on November 5. His question arose from a statement made by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) in which the minister said he had recently made a trip to Europe to establish, as he described it, optimum channels of communication with all the parties involved—United Kingdom, the members of the European community, the new applicants and all countries concerned with the process of élargissement.

The hon. member for Fraser Valley West asked the minister if he could tell the House what forest products were among 12 items which the British had identified as being sensitive in the framework of the United Kingdom economy—items in respect of which they had some reservation as they entered into discussions with members of the European Economic Community. This subject matter is of great concern to the important forest products producing areas of British Columbia and, understandably, members of that province are concerned about the effect the latest British move toward close association with Europe will have upon the export position.

The minister was apparently unable to answer the question from memory and he indulged in one of those rather delightful, inverted ministerial phrases which make many of us enjoy his presence in the House. Most ministers would not willingly admit that they were trying to dodge an issue, but the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce said:

> I was trying to dodge the issue because I am not sure which forest products were included.

Immediately afterward, some hon. members were shouting "Oh, oh" and I did not catch the minister's further reply. There was some amusement behind the scenes on the part of the members from British Columbia who sit on the same side of the House as the minister because the hon. member for Fraser Valley West and I were raising this question on November 5. I think they knew that some of us had had lunch with a delegation from the Council of Forest Industries which was in Ottawa. It was because I had knowledge of the presence of this delegation in Ottawa that I was surprised the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce did not, apparently, know the details concerning items which are of such great concern to a delegation which had come to Ottawa primarily to discuss this matter with the government as well as with some private members.

Therefore, I asked the minister whether, before attempting to make a statement in the House as suggested by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), he would visit our province and find out at first-hand just how important these products are to the economy of British Columbia in particular and, indeed, to Canada as a whole. I realize that the following day the minister did come into the House and state that plywood, wood pulp and newsprint are among the 12 sensitive items. I appreciate that he gave this information to the House on the next occasion we were sitting. I know, too, that he told us lumber was not included among the items which the British considered to be most sensitive, although he added there might be a possibility of rough-sawn lumber entering the European Economic Community free of duty when Britain joins it.

I should also like to say that not only the members of the Council of Forest Industries but also the people of British Columbia generally have good reason for concern about the impact of the British move toward Europe. As has often been said—indeed, it is almost trite in British Columbia—something like 50 cents of every dollar in the British Columbia economy arises from the harvesting and manufacture of our forest crops.

If I still have a minute or two I should like to say that it is particularly important that in its discussions and negotiations with European nations, the Canadian government should not lose sight of the importance of the lumber export market, even though the British do not regard it as a sensitive area.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Bruce Howard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I think we are indebted to the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) for raising this very important issue. It is a matter of concern to the government and certainly to the people and industry in British Columbia. Perhaps it is not surprising that the genial and very capable Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) would not have at his fingertips all 12 items about which the British are particularly concerned, when one notices that the list includes not only plywood, wood pulp and newsprint, with which the hon. member was concerned, but things like ferro-silicon, ferro-chrome and even the esoteric item of wattle extract.

British Columbia lumber products do enter the United Kingdom market tariff free at the present time. Under arrangements that are expected to be made if the United Kingdom succeeds in joining the European Economic Community, it is anticipated, as the hon. member stated, that rough-sawn lumber will continue to enter duty free. It is expected that wood pulp would carry a tariff of 3 per cent, newsprint 7 per cent and plywood 13 per cent. At the present time, countries that are members of the EEC are importing wood pulp and newsprint for their own needs on a tariff free basis.

The United Kingdom has given notice that it intends to ask for special arrangements to be made with regard to wood pulp, newsprint and plywood. The government is in very close contact with the United Kingdom and countries of the EEC in regard to these arrangements. The minister was recently in Europe developing previous contacts and the government is kept aware of these important developments.

The government is also very closely in touch with British Columbia lumber producers and marketers. Last week, as a matter of fact, the minister and I had a meeting with one of the lumber industry representatives who was in Ottawa, at which we discussed particular arrangements concerning the promotion of British Columbia plywood. It is hoped that something can be worked out which will have special reference to our need for developing and maintaining markets for British Columbia plywood in the European Economic Community, and at such time as—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Parliamentary Secretary's time has expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 2 (3), this House stands adjourned until Thursday, November 12, 1970, at two o'clock p.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10:26 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. ASSELIN—CORRECTION OF NEWSPAPER ARTICLE

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Reporting on an address I delivered yesterday to members of Ottawa's Richelieu Club, the press quoted me as having said that resolving of constitutional problems should take place within two months.

I want to correct this error because, in fact, this is what I said: "If, within a few months, I would say two years at most, there is no sign of action in the constitutional domain—"

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this correction is to further clarify my position on the subject I was dealing with.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate to the effect that the Senate has passed Bill S-6, an Act to amend the Anti-Dumping Act, to which the concurrence of this House is desired.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE, WITH AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT AND EVIDENCE ADDUCED

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions through the usual channels and there is general agreement and, hopefully, unanimous agreement, concerning the following motion:

That the Public Accounts for the year ended March 31, 1968 and the Auditor General's Report thereon and the evidence adduced in consideration thereof in the previous session be referred to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts.

Mr. Baldwin: The discussions have been fruitful. We agree.

Mr. Speaker: The discussions having been fruitful and hon. members having heard the motion proposed by the Minister of Agriculture, is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

TIME LIMIT ON SPEECHES ON OPPOSITION SUPPLY MOTION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I report a second fruitful discussion. It has to do with the time limits on speeches in the debate which will take place later today on the motion that will be moved by my hon. friend from York South.

The agreement among the parties is that the mover of the motion and the principal speaker on behalf of the government shall each have 30 minutes, the principal speakers for the Official Opposition and the Ralliement des Créditistes 20 minutes, and all other speakers 15 minutes. It is also agreed that no speaker shall ask for an extension of time.

An hon. Member: Including you Stanley.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

Mr. Baldwin: No one will get it, you mean.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the suggestion made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I understand there has been discussion on this subject to that effect. Is it so ordered?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

NATIONAL MUSEUMS

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I ask the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. It has to do with maladministration of the National Museums of Canada as evidenced by the prolonged absence of highly paid museums' officials from their offices while touring foreign countries at considerable public expense. There is also the matter of contracts let by the museums branch for publications as far back as 1967 which to my knowledge have not yet been delivered.

• (2:10 p.m.)

I should therefore like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Scott):

That the Standing Committee on Public Accounts be authorized to inquire into the financial administration of the National Museums of Canada to determine whether all proper procedures are being followed and have been followed with respect to the expenditure of public funds.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Battle River.

[Translation]

The House knows that such a motion cannot be put without unanimous consent. I therefore ask the House if there is unanimous consent.

[English]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to advise the hon. member that there is no unanimity in favour of the submission of his motion. Therefore it cannot be put at this time.

Mr. Downey: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I impress upon hon. members that it would be much easier to facilitate an investigation by this means than by going through the ordinary process of questioning in the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that that is not a point of order. It may be an argument in support of his motion, but it is not a point of order.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

CONTINUATION OF MEN'S AND BOYS' SHIRTS SURTAX ORDER

On the order: Government notices of motions:

November 10, 1970—The Minister of Finance:—That this House, pursuant to subsection (1c) of section 7 of the Customs Tariff, do approve that the Men's and Boys' Shirts Surtax Order, being Order in Council P.C. 1970-959 of 2 June 1970 made under subsection (1a) of section 7 of the said Act, continue to have force and effect until the 29th day of November, 1971.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of Standing Order 21 this government notice of motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the House.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—BREAKDOWN OF PERIOD OF TIME IN DBS MONTHLY REPORT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who I believe reports to the House on behalf of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. Why is it that for the second month in a row the monthly report of DBS on employment and unemployment has omitted any breakdown of the period of time of unemployment?

[Mr. Downey.]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that the document published today—the press release—gives only part of the total picture. The procedure is that in a very few days another document—the main publication called "The Labour Force"—will come out giving further information, including data on duration of unemployment.

Mr. Stanfield: Then am I to understand that the minister is giving the assurance that this information will be forthcoming from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics and circulated in the same manner within a matter of days?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member who asked that question last month, the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings, made the same point. On the following day I sent him a note of explanation and he seemed to be satisfied. The new system has been in operation since August.

Mr. Stanfield: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I asked the question a month ago and I received no information from the minister.

Mr. Pepin: Then I can only apologize to the hon. member. I'll correct myself immediately.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Is the Leader of the Opposition rising on a further supplementary?

Mr. Stanfield: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

INTERIM CHANGES IN UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour whether the government has decided to make any interim changes or arrangements in regard to unemployment insurance, for example, in the length of time required to qualify or in the benefits payable, to come into operation some time during the winter, as opposed to the more definitive proposals that are included in his white paper?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, may I assure the House that if the government had come to such a decision I would have announced it by now or perhaps held the announcement for the debate later this day. However, it is not my intention at the moment to recommend an increase in benefits this winter. What I am hoping is that we can accelerate the already rapid pace at which we are converting the white paper's proposals into proposed legislation. Above all else it is more important that we create jobs.

MANPOWER

SPECIAL PROGRAMS TO PROVIDE TRAINING INCENTIVES

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration whether any special manpower programs are planned for this winter, aimed at effectively upgrading manpower resources by taking advantage of the slack in the economy to provide incentives to people to receive further training?

Mr. Speaker: I hope the minister will reply to the question briefly. It seems to me the matter is of such importance and so wide-ranging that perhaps it should be discussed by way of a statement on motions, but the minister might want to reply very briefly.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I can be very brief, indeed, because the question has been asked many times and has been answered in the House on several occasions by statements to the effect that additional programs in regard to upgrading and training have been made available and are being put into effect.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that Canadians across Canada are not aware of the changes in the programs to which the minister has referred, will he make a statement on motions to clarify the point so we will know what changes are contemplated?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I think that Canadians across the country are aware of the fact that additional money has been put into the program. Region by region, applicants are certainly aware of it. There has been no fundamental change in the program as such; rather, a far larger amount of money has been put into the program in order that the applicants who are applying may be accommodated. Therefore there is no difficulty in bringing this to the attention of people across the country.

NATIONAL SECURITY

WAR MEASURES ACT—ARRESTS, RELEASES, CONTINUING DETENTIONS AND CHARGES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of Justice. Would he be prepared to place on the table tomorrow a list of the persons who have been charged in the province of Quebec as a result of the recent situation there, together with a list of the offences with which they have been charged? Would he also indicate the number of persons who are still being detained without charge and the length of time these persons have been in detention?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, this would be a rather unusual procedure, but the charges are, of course, public and I will do the best I can to provide that information. The figures as of noon today are: Arrested, 447; released, 383; detained, 64, and 41 of the 64 have now been charged. I understand that four or five will be charged tomorrow and more will be released this afternoon.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, last week the minister indicated there were 43 persons for whom warrants of arrests had been issued. Since he made that statement, how many of that number have been apprehended?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I cannot give the hon. member that information, not because I do not want to but because I just do not have it on hand.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I ask the minister what amounts of arms, rifles, machine guns and explosives have been uncovered as a result of nearly four weeks of police investigation?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I may be able to find that information later in the afternoon.

HEALTH INSURANCE

QUEBEC—PAYMENT OF COST FOR INDIANS AND ESKIMOS ON RESERVES

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

In view of the fact that, because of their status, Indians and Eskimos earning their living on reservations do not pay income tax, can the hon. minister tell us who will pay hospitalization costs of Quebec Indians and Eskimos who will have no medicare card?

[English]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member is in fact asking for a legal opinion. As far as my information is concerned, if my memory serves me right I do not believe that any doctor who is in the plan in the province of Quebec can extra-bill.

AGRICULTURE

EXCLUSION OF HOGS FROM FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING AGENCIES BILL

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. In light of the submission by the Western Hog Growers Association requesting that the marketing of hogs be excluded from Bill C-176, can the minister indicate whether the government has reached a decision in this regard, and will consideration be given to their request to appear before the Standing Committee on Agriculture which is presently studying this bill?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is not up to the Minister of Agriculture to decide who shall appear before the Standing Committee on Agriculture. With regard to the substance of the question, however, I can say that inasmuch as there are several hog marketing commissions, agencies and so on set up under provincial marketing legislation at the present time, it seems to me it would be inadvisable to exclude them from the co-ordinating action we hope will flow from the application of Bill C-176.

NATIONAL SECURITY

QUEBEC—CONTROL AND DIRECTION OF INVESTIGATION OF CRIMINAL AND SEDITIOUS ACTIVITY—EFFICIENCY OF RCMP

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice a question of which I gave him notice. Either just prior to the implementation of the War Measures Act or shortly thereafter in accordance with the Quebec Police Act, was the investigation of criminal and seditious activity placed under the control and direction of the Director-General of the Quebec Provincial Police, Mr. St. Pierre, and was all police force assistance basically under such direction and control?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for the courtesy he showed me by giving me notice of his question. My understanding is that pursuant to the authority of section 79 of the Quebec Police Act the Lieutenant Governor in Council of the province of Quebec ordered that the Director-General of the Quebec police force assume, under the authority of the provincial Attorney General, the command of municipal police forces. I do not know if every municipal police force in Quebec was affected by the order. The RCMP could not, of course, be brought within the terms of such order, but the force has been co-operating throughout with the provincial law enforcement authorities.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, in view of the minister's answer, were the RCMP—we have had some talk about the RCMP of late—merely asked to render their skilful and knowledgeable assistance to the Quebec Provincial Police? Is it not correct that the RCMP, throughout the world of police forces, are recognized as one of the finest trained forces with the latest and most up-to-date scientific equipment equal to, if not better than, any other national police force in the world?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will appreciate that the question has not been put in the proper form. Perhaps it might be redrafted. If the hon. member wishes the minister to reply I suggest the question should be asked in other terms.

Mr. Woolliams: I agree with you, Mr. Speaker. I got carried away by my rhetoric. Let me put it this way. Would the Minister of Justice give us a report to the effect that the equipment, skill and training of the RCMP are equal to that of any other police force in the world?

Mr. Speaker: Again I would think that at this point the hon. member is asking the minister to express an opinion. I know it would be a very valuable opinion, but that is not what the Chair has to decide. I would think the question in those terms is not in order.

[Mr. Olson.]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. It has to do with the uncertainty in the answer he gave the other day in connection with the police work. As one who has known the mounted police since the days of the Northwest Mounted Police, although I fully share the opinion of my hon. friend from Calgary North, I accept your ruling, Mr. Speaker, and I put this question to the Prime Minister. Would he clear up the implication that there was inefficiency on the part of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police so that this great body of men will not be under any shadow in the days ahead?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I thank the right hon. gentleman for giving me the opportunity to do that, Mr. Speaker. I understand that as a result of my answer to the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings who asked me whether anything was going to be done to make the police more efficient there may have been some interpretation that I felt they had not been as efficient as they might have been. I am very happy to say, and I would have the House remember that in my answer I emphasized this, that the police deserve a very great vote of thanks for the way they have operated. This does not take away from my belief, and I believe that of the police themselves, that they are dealing with a new situation in Canada involving a form of terrorism which perhaps has been unknown heretofore and therefore they have not been as trained in the solution of that type of terrorism as we with hindsight might desire. This is in no way a criticism of them. I said it was our society which was unused to this kind of situation and that we had all been caught slightly off guard.

PENSIONS

OLD AGE SECURITY—ACTION ON INCREASE BEFORE CHRISTMAS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the right hon. gentleman's statement a short while ago that he thought old age pensioners might be able to get through the winter without an increase in their pensions, but that he hoped they would not have to, can he now say whether there will be an increase in the old age pension before Christmas?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, without agreeing with the premise of the question which is not exactly in the terms I put it, I can only say what the Minister of National Health and Welfare has been saying, namely, that in due course he will announce the government's policy on these matters.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In view of current news stories about white papers and committee reports, may we have an assurance that action on this matter will at least be started in the House of Commons before Christmas?

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Prime Minister is silent.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Was the Prime Minister not cogitating a reply?

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member knows better than anyone else that I am not in a position to say what will happen.

WATER RESOURCES

ASSISTANCE FOR CONSERVATION PROJECTS

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who, according to the roster system, should be here today. However, I can probably put my question to his Parliamentary Secretary or to the acting minister. It has to do with the fact that since the coming into force of the Canada Water Act any assistance that was given previously to municipalities for conservation projects has been stopped by the government. In view of the fact that a tremendous number of conservation projects in Ontario, particularly along the Grand River, are being held up because there are no federal funds available, I would ask the minister to give favourable consideration to restoring the 37½ per cent assistance provided under the former Act.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that this can hardly be termed a question. He is making a submission to the government and I suggest respectfully to him that he has to assume it will be considered.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

CLOSING OF LONDON, ENGLAND, OFFICE—MEETING IN UNITED KINGDOM

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): My question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Would the minister advise the House whether he met with the national advisory council of the Canadian Veterans Association of the United Kingdom during his trip to England arising out of their concern about the closing of the DVA office in London, and what were the results of the meeting?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Yes, I did meet with them. We had a very interesting discussion on the London office and I am sure that as a result of our meeting decisions will come forward which will be to their satisfaction and to the satisfaction of my department.

Mr. Marshall: Would the minister advise the House whether the department is still going ahead with the decision to close the office in March or whether, in view of the discussion which he had, the decision will be reconsidered?

Mr. Dubé: I always said the office would be gradually phased out. The office is not to be closed at present.

HEALTH

FAMILY PLANNING PROGRAM—AVAILABILITY OF INFORMATION

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare supplementary to a question I asked him some weeks ago. Will the minister make an early statement describing the projected birth control program which is being undertaken by his department?

An hon. Member: And how retroactive will it be?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I think I indicated to the hon. member at that time that the government program in the family planning area was announced in some considerable detail. If the hon. member wants me to repeat it or send her a copy of the announcement setting out the details, I will be pleased to do so.

Mrs. MacInnis: I should like to know when and in what form this information will be made available to the public?

Mr. Munro: As was indicated, Mr. Speaker, a consultative service is set up in the department, and we indicated at the time that this was a matter of choice for individuals but that information would be supplied with respect to it. That information is being formulated now and we expect it will be available through organizations, with their co-operation, in the fairly near future.

UNITED NATIONS

REFUSAL OF ISRAEL TO RECOGNIZE JERUSALEM AS SEPARATE ENTITY

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister.

In view of the refusal by the Israeli government to accept the UN's recommendation to the effect that Jerusalem should be considered as an entity separate from the Israeli problem, does the Canadian government intend to ask his UN representative to protest once more against the confiscations and expropriations which the Arabs have to suffer?

AGRICULTURE

INTERPROVINCIAL MARKETING—REQUEST FOR REFERENCE TO SUPREME COURT

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture a question. In light of the fact that there now seems to be some doubt that passage of Bill C-176 will deal with the problems of trade between provinces and as the litigation in the province of Quebec has not yet got to the Court of Appeal, or at least there has been no decision, will the minister not review with the Minister of Justice the question of obtaining, under section 55 of the Supreme Court Act, terms of reference from the Governor in Council so that the Supreme Court can deal with this very important matter?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt in my mind that the passage of Bill C-176 will improve this situation. Since the question was based on the premise that it would not, I would not think the other part of it is applicable.

Mr. Baldwin: Will the minister not discuss this matter and have either himself or the Minister of Justice make a statement, particularly having in mind the widespread view that one reason no action is being taken is that it involves litigation in the province of Quebec?

Mr. Olson: The Minister of Justice and I have had many conversations and discussions about this matter. The hon. member may assume what conclusions we reached.

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Agriculture, and I do this in all seriousness. Since there is some indication from governmental investigations of a provincial nature, and other investigations, that the broiler industry may in the main be under the control of a small number of companies that are in themselves part of larger industrial complexes, is this the influence behind the minister's decision not to refer this matter to the Supreme Court of Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question is not in order.

HEALTH

POLYCHLORINATED BIPHENYLS AS FOOD AND ENVIRONMENTAL HAZARD

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the results of a survey by the Food and Drug Directorate indicating that polychlorinated biphenyls, known generally as PCBs, are becoming recognized as a food and environmental hazard, is the government taking any steps to reduce the volume of this contaminant in the environment?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, that whole matter is under consideration at the moment and I will be pleased to advise the House and the hon. member what the results of our deliberations are.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

Mr. Aiken: Have there been or are there at present interdepartmental discussions on this problem?

Mr. Munro: I cannot assure the hon. member on how far interdepartmental considerations have gone on but, as I say, I know the matter has been given considerable consideration within my own department.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

PUBLISHING INDUSTRY STUDY—TAKEOVER OF RYERSON PRESS BY UNITED STATES COMPANY

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Has his department commenced a study of the publishing industry and, if so, when will that study be completed?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we have done that, and the study is now ready. It is being printed, and I presume that in the next three or four weeks I would be able to table it in the House.

Mr. Saltsman: In view of the seriousness of the fact that two of the major publishing companies in Canada are in danger of being absorbed by outside interests and as the study may not be completed in time to take any action, could the minister meet with his counterparts in the provincial governments and put a halt to sales of publishing companies until this study is completed?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, if the results of the study could be useful in the present discussions going on between Ryerson and the government of Ontario, I am quite sure we will find a way to communicate the information needed to the interested parties.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, can the minister tell the House whether or not he has received a submission from Ryerson Press or the government of Ontario with regard to the takeover of this company by American interests?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I was in correspondence with the Ryerson Press authorities about three, four or five months ago, but that correspondence was mainly of an informational nature. They wrote to me because they had heard that the study to which I have just referred was going on in my department and they wanted to contribute to it. They made us acquainted with the general difficulties that the company was experiencing, but there was no specific mention in their letter of the actual possibility that it was going to be taken over by U.S. interests or specific request for financial assistance. The man in question answered my letter in a very distinguished fashion, and contributed to our information. We wrote to each other—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the minister and the hon. member would like to continue this conversation after the question period.

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question and I am hoping for a little briefer answer. Is it correct for the House to infer from the minister's statement just now that if the government of Ontario does nothing to prohibit the takeover of Ryerson Press, the federal government does not intend to take action?

Mr. Speaker: I would point out that the hon. member's question as asked is hypothetical.

Mr. Broadbent: I will rephrase it, Mr. Speaker, in the following fashion. If the government of Ontario does not take specific action to stop the takeover of Ryerson Press, does the federal government at this time intend to take action?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member may have rephrased the question but it is still hypothetical.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the minister. In view of the fact that the Premier of Ontario has indicated his intention of meeting McGraw-Hill and Ryerson Press representatives in the hope that the Ryerson Press operation can be kept in Canada, has the federal government had any contact with the Premier of Ontario to indicate that it would be prepared to give financial assistance, if that were necessary, in order to keep Ryerson Press in Canada?

Mr. Pepin: I can only say I have no money in my budget for that purpose.

Mr. Baldwin: That has never stopped you before.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REPORTED EMPLOYMENT OFFER TO FORMER LAPALME TRUCK DRIVERS

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. In view of reports emanating from the minister's department to the effect that the government is prepared to provide employment for the 400 Lapalme truck drivers provided the CNTU gives up its demand that the union local be retained within the Public Service, can the minister say where these 400 jobs are available and how long will they be held in abeyance for the Lapalme drivers before they are offered to other unemployed people?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I read the same report in the newspapers but it was not given by the Department of Labour. It was through another department of government. I think the hon. member will have to address his question to the appropriate minister.

Mr. Simpson: May I ask the minister if he would care to read the latest news release from the Department of Labour which carries this report?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Mackenzie.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Mackasey: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, since this matter has been raised on half a dozen occasions I wish to point out that the particular bulletin to which the hon. gentleman refers is nothing more than a summary of reports from the various newspapers issued daily across Canada. The inference is that I, as Minister of Labour, should assert some form of censorship over the papers, which is something I refuse to do.

GRAIN

PRESENCE OF RUSTY BEETLE IN WHEAT SHIPMENTS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. The other day I asked him when he would be able to provide some information in regard to cargoes of grain found to be infested with rusty beetles. Since this may have an effect on potential world sales I wonder whether the minister is prepared to indicate to the House the amount of grain involved and whether negligence had occurred in inspections at the terminals?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I told the hon. member a few days ago that I would try to get all the information I could on the subject but he will realize it may take a little time. However, I can assure him that we have sufficient quantities of good grain of many grades in Canada, free from rusty beetles, to supply all markets.

Mr. Korchinski: Could I ask the minister whether his department is conducting investigations out in the country on the possibility of beetles in grain, other than the investigations being conducted at the terminals?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, we are making as many checks as we can with the staff that we have available. I repeat what I suggested to the right hon. member for Prince Albert the other day, that the farmers themselves have some responsibility for the management of their farms and for checking the bins for beetles.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The farmer always has to pay under this government.

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): Will the minister take steps to see that the parties responsible for this infestation of export wheat are required to pay for the cost incurred instead of assessing all the cost to the farmers?

Mr. Olson: The costs of doing this will have to be considered. If this grain is in one of the commercial positions we will have to take that into consideration, but a full assessment has not been made yet.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice is trying to catch your eye. I merely rise to give you an opportunity to recognize him but if necessary I can ask a question.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Agriculture if he will make a report to the House in due course on how it was possible for the infestation of this amount of grain while in transit to escape detection and arrive in export positions before it was detected?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's question is debate or argument and in those terms I do not think it is acceptable.

The Minister of Justice has now caught my eye.

Mr. Baldwin: Better make it good.

NATIONAL SECURITY

WAR MEASURES ACT—DYNAMITE, ARMS AND AMMUNITION RECOVERED

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): I thank the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants.

Mr. McCleave: Just don't forget it.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): This is an example of the co-operation of Parliament, Mr. Speaker. Earlier in the afternoon the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands asked about seizures of dynamite. From a public statement made yesterday by Inspector Melançon of the Quebec Provincial Police it is my information that the number of weapons retrieved in the anti-terrorist raids since mid-October included a total of 116 offensive weapons, 2,976 rounds of ammunition and 2,609 sticks of dynamite. Inspector Melançon said that more than 1,800 sticks of dynamite remained unaccounted for out of the 4,500 stolen in the last several months.

AVAILABILITY OF WEAPONS—PASSING OF ORDER IN COUNCIL

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, when the minister is dealing with weapons and the amount of dynamite stolen, I wonder if he would answer my question with respect to restricted and prohibited weapons and advise whether there was a prior Order in Council passed with regard to section 82(e) of the Criminal Code?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I want to be able to give the hon. member a full answer which includes not only an appreciation of the law but an appreciation of the facts and I will combine those when I give the answer.

Mr. Baldwin: If your law is no better than your facts you have a long way to go.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

QUEBEC—DESIGNATION OF SPECIAL AREAS TO ALLEVIATE UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

[Mr. Gleave.]

Considering the disturbing increase in the unemployment rate in Quebec, does the minister intend to designate other special areas in that province so that they may benefit from the provisions of the act, and so as to reduce unemployment?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, almost the whole of the province of Quebec is already designated under the act, even the hon. member's riding, and we shall certainly assist any firms wishing to settle in that province.

Mr. Asselin: I thank the minister, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

CORNWALL—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON STUDIES AND PROGRAMS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, in the month of April I asked the minister a question concerning a constituency not represented on the floor of the House, namely, the area of the city of Cornwall. That area had the highest unemployment rate at the time the question was asked and it has not changed since. The minister at that time assured me that the question would receive early attention but six or seven months have gone by. Could the minister today tell the House what has been done?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I believe I answered this question a few days ago. Since then, the federal government has decided to invest a large sum of money in the rebuilding of the Cornwall wharf and we will continue to study projects which will, no doubt, remedy the unemployment situation.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Why such a long delay?

[Translation]

SAINT-HYACINTHE—DESIGNATION AS SPECIAL AREA

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, does the minister want to say that he has finally reached a decision regarding the Saint-Hyacinthe region, which also suffers from unemployment?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps we have reached the point where we should draw the line. I have suggested to hon. members that it was not quite in order to go over every region of the country to determine whether it is designated. Having heard the question from the right hon. member for Prince Albert, perhaps this would be a good place to draw the line. I suggest to hon. members that questions referring to individual regions are not quite in order at this time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If I may rise on a question of privilege, I did not deal with Prince Albert but with Cornwall. Having been in Cornwall I felt that the matter should be raised in view of Your Honour's position of complete neutrality and inability to make representations here in the House.

COMBINES

ALLEGED MONOPOLY IN ALBERTA BROILER INDUSTRY

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Is the minister having his department investigate an alleged monopoly developing in the broiler industry in Alberta in view of the fact that 80 per cent of the industry is dominated by the Alberta Poultry Marketers Co-operative as outlined in a recent study released by the University of Alberta?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, thanks to the hon. member, I and my department are aware of the report and it is being examined for any possible breaches of the Combines Act that might be involved.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ARMED FORCES—INQUIRY AS TO PAY INCREASES

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence and is in respect of a pay increase for the armed forces. Have the minister and his colleagues in the Treasury Board any charity in their hearts now that it is about a month overdue?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker, my colleagues in the Treasury Board do have charity in their hearts.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister could indicate whether we might expect an announcement on pay increases soon?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I am afraid I cannot do that at the moment, Mr. Speaker.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I refer to an answer given to a question put by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka on November 10 at page 1043 of Hansard. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources at that time stated that the ministers in charge of the water pollution questions and environmental management from the provinces of Quebec and Ontario attended a meeting which reached an agreement to the effect that on the completion of the Quebec-Ontario study of the Ottawa River which will be completed early in the new year "we will proceed to enter into a joint water quality management agreement pursuant to the terms of the Canada Water Act."

My question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Would the minister please check into the authenticity of the raw sewage being flushed directly into the Ottawa River by the French Embassy, the British High Commission and none other than 24 Sussex Drive?

SOCIAL SECURITY

GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the Senate Committee on Poverty is going to recommend some form of guaranteed annual income and in view of the further fact that the Prime Minister will have the honour of presiding over the highest number of unemployed Canadians in history this winter, would he inform the House—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

ATLANTIC PROVINCES—MODIFICATION OF DEVELOPMENT POLICIES

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of reports arising from the discussions at the Atlantic Provinces Economic Conference pointing out that regional development policies require extensive modification, especially in the area of resource development, can the minister say whether such modification is contemplated? If so, will he make a statement on motions clarifying the government's legislative role in this area?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, we are continually analysing programs and projects and trying to improve on them. We certainly intend to go on with it if the House decides to allocate considerably larger credits for that purpose.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON RECOMMENDATIONS BY COUNCIL ON RURAL DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Patrick J. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday I asked the minister about the different methods he is studying for improving the program. Is the minister prepared to make a statement on motions this session as to the firm recommendations made by the Council on Rural Development which comes under his department?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I believe the other day I did reply that this report is being considered by my department and immediately we come to some conclusions, I shall make a statement in the House, if need be.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—FORECAST FOR NEXT FEBRUARY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Labour because he is always very frank and open. I assume the department has made an estimate or forecast of the rate of unemployment this winter, in particular the month of February. Can the minister disclose this forecast to the House now or in the debate later? It would be very helpful to the country and to that discussion.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): The only figure I can speak about with accuracy is the figure for the month of October which indicates that for the first time seasonally adjusted unemployment rates show a reduction in that serious problem. Second, there are more Canadians at work today than at any time in Canadian history.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems we are now embarking on the debate which will begin in a few minutes. The question period has expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baldwin: I wish to ask the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council the intentions of the government with regard to the business for this week and next week.

Mr. Jerome: Today, of course, is an opposition day. Tomorrow we will call the motion standing in the name of the Minister of Finance with reference to the surtax on shirts. That will be followed by resuming committee of the whole on the emergency powers bill. This will be followed by the statutory instruments bill, the CNR finance and guarantee bill, the Buffalo-Fort Erie bridge bill, the packaging and labelling bill and the statistics bill. It is intended that Thursday of next week will be another allotted day for the opposition.

Mr. Baldwin: In view of the fact that the debate which we were on on Tuesday and which it is proposed to continue on Friday overshadows all of the program, will the Parliamentary Secretary discuss with his minister and the Minister of Justice a proposal to limit speeches in committee of the whole to ten minutes, with one contribution in respect of each clause, and also consider whether steps could be taken by agreement to complete that bill tomorrow provided there can be some agreement among the members of the Liberal caucus?

Mr. Jerome: We would be delighted to pursue any efforts in that direction, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Marchand.]

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—LABOUR CONDITIONS—POLICIES AND PROGRAMS TO INCREASE EMPLOYMENT—INCREASED UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Mr. David Lewis (York South) moved:

Whereas there has been a relentless upward climb in the level of unemployment in all regions of Canada, and

Whereas a number of responsible economic authorities have predicted record levels of unemployment this coming winter, and

Whereas, unless special measures are immediately taken, the likelihood of serious increases in the level of unemployment in the Province of Quebec and the City of Montreal will add to an already critical situation,

Therefore, be it resolved that this House calls upon the Government to institute, in co-operation with provinces and municipalities, policies and programs that will increase significantly the number of jobs available this winter and, as a special measure of assistance to those who remain unemployed, to increase both the amount of unemployment benefits and the eligibility period provided by the Unemployment Insurance Commission.

He said: Mr. Speaker, we placed this motion for debate today because it is clear to anyone who looks at the situation objectively that our country is facing a crisis with regard to unemployment. Whether one uses the seasonally adjusted figures or the actual figures, the problem of unemployment in Canada now and the forecast for this winter suggest that the problem is extremely distressing and dangerous. I admit that the seasonally adjusted figures are more appropriate to use in terms of the trend annually, but they do not touch on the human beings involved. The number of people who are unemployed at any time must be of concern to those who want to see justice in our society. The actual figure gives the human story of frustration, idleness and distress. I am going to be concerned with the actual figures rather than the more theoretical seasonally adjusted figures.

When one says that there is an unemployment problem in this country he immediately hears the kind of remark made a few minutes ago by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey), namely that more Canadians are at work today than ever before in the history of our country. That is true, but it is as irrelevant and misleading as it is true. It is irrelevant because it does not touch on the fact that hundreds of thousands of people are unemployed. It is misleading because it ignores the fact that in our country at the present time there is, on an average, an increase of between—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for York South has the floor.

Mr. Lewis: I do not intend to waste any time on that comment. When the hon. member gets half his wits back I will listen to him.

What the minister fails to see, although I am sure he is aware of the fact, is that every year there is an increase in the work force in Canada of between 300,000 and 350,000. These are new job seekers. If the number of employed in Canada did not increase every year, unemployment would now have reached close to two million instead of 400,000. The relatively small increase in the number of people employed in Canada is to be expected in view of the increase in the total work force.

As the Economic Council of Canada has shown in table 3 of its September, 1970 report, instead of 300,000 or 350,000 new jobs, which would have kept Canada at the same rate of unemployment in 1970 as in 1969, and that was high enough, in 1970 only 77,000 new jobs were created in this country. There were about 77,000 new jobs created in 1970 in this country. So assuming the increase in the total work force is something like 300,000, there is already a shortfall of 225,000 jobs even for those who have been added to the work force, quite apart from the numbers who were unemployed before. The situation is serious and I hope no member of the government will try to hide behind the increase in the participation rate, as the economists call it, or the increase in the number of people actually at work, to fool themselves to the point of asserting that there is no unemployment crisis in this country.

In October of this year there were 419,000 unemployed, an increase of 21,000 as compared with the month of September. Unemployment showed an increase in practically all the regions of Canada with the exception of the Maritimes. The Quebec figures showed an increase as did those of Ontario, the Prairies and British Columbia. Some of these increases were very striking. Perhaps the most significant fact which emerges from these figures, and one which I believe members of all parties ought to look at with the utmost concern, is that 23 per cent of the unemployed in October, 1970, were young people between the ages of 14 and 19. If we add the number of people aged between 20 and 24, we find that 45 per cent of all unemployment in Canada come into this larger category, that is, it occurs among those under the age of 24. Young people leaving school, or leaving colleges and universities, are frustrated by their inability to find work, their inability to make a contribution to society and to fulfil their young, hopeful lives. Aside from terrorism, there could be nothing more destructive to the social order than to have hundreds of thousands of young people leaving schools and colleges confronted by the frustration and despair which unemployment produces.

The other significant fact which emerges from these figures relates to problems we have faced and dealt with in the last few weeks. Of the total of unemployed in Canada in October, 1970, 38 per cent were in the Province of Quebec. A province which has only about one quarter of the total work force has almost 40 per cent of the total unemployment. And these are average figures I am giving, something which always worries me; I suppose our statistics can never be perfect, but when we talk about the number of people who are unemployed in Quebec or the Maritimes or elsewhere, we are talking about the province as a whole. But when we consider eastern Montreal, for example, or the County of Gaspé, I have no doubt that unemployment in such places may well amount to 15 or 18 per cent. So, one finds a concentration of desperate people without work in certain areas of a province or in certain areas of the country. I will return to the significance of this in a few moments, although I am sure it is already clear to everybody. At any rate, the unemployment in connection with which we have the figures for October has risen sufficiently for it to be considered as an extremely serious situation.

But this is nothing compared with what every forecast for the coming winter tells us. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in an attitude which he so often and so unhappily displays, made fun of, or made an insulting reference to, the President of the Canadian Labour Congress who said there would be 9 per cent unemployment this winter and that the figure might climb as high as 11 per cent; the figure he forecast was 750,000. When a question was asked based on the statement by Mr. MacDonald, members of the House will recall that the Prime Minister made an insulting statement about his not being a reliable source from the point of view of veracity, or some such phrase. Well, the Prime Minister can make that kind of flippant remark as often as he likes; I suspect that the more often he does it the more the people of Canada will recognize it, and him, for what they are. The fact is, that what Mr. MacDonald said has been said by every reputable economist in this country—they are not labour people, either. Mr. Robert Crozier, an economist with the Economic Council of Canada, said as reported in an article in the Toronto Star, from which I quote, that by next February or March, unemployment will be up to 9 per cent, or maybe a little above. In numbers, he put the figure between 750,000 and 800,000. Mr. Forrest Rogers, economic adviser to the Bank of Nova Scotia—not a revolutionary institution, Mr. Speaker—said he thought there would be 8.5 per cent unemployed; 9 per cent, he thought, might be a little high, though he was not prepared to argue that the rate might not reach 9 per cent. Professor Sydney Ingerman, labour economist at McGill University said the actual rate of unemployment nationally would be in the area of 9 to 10 per cent. So, what the President of the Canadian Labour Congress said was supported by these and many other Canadian economists. Indeed, if I remember correctly, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) himself admitted there would be very heavy unemployment this winter. I cannot recall whether or not he gave a figure, but he said he expected very heavy unemployment.

If there are to be between 750,000 and 800,000 unemployed, this unemployment will, as usual, be concentrated in the depressed areas of the country. So even larger numbers will be in the Province of Quebec; even larger numbers in the Atlantic provinces, and even larger numbers in the depressed areas of the Prairies and of Ontario. So if we are talking about 9 per cent as a national rate of unemployment, it will be 12 to 15 per cent in the Province of Quebec, probably 15 to 18 per cent in the Atlantic provinces, and 20 per cent or more in the area where unemployment is concentrated in the Gaspé and the eastern region of Montreal.

This, Mr. Speaker, is the direct result of government policies which have been pursued for the last while in an alleged fight against inflation. It is the government which has deliberately slowed down the economy and which is responsible for this growing unemployment, as well as for an increasing number of business failures. They are responsible for the fact that many small businesses, even if they have not failed, find themselves under extreme economic and financial pressure.

The Prime Minister said some time ago that he was prepared to accept 6 per cent unemployment as a consequence of his policies against inflation. Well, on a seasonally adjusted basis he already has a rate of 6.5 per cent as of October and on an actual basis he is likely to get between 9 per cent and 11 per cent, and even higher in some areas during the coming winter. The so-called fight against inflation about which the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister have been talking has proved a disaster for hundreds of thousands of ordinary Canadian workers.

This disaster has also been felt by families. Everyone who has studied unemployment figures knows there are large numbers of people who are not taken into account but who are nevertheless out of work. For example, women who stop trying to get into the labour force; young people who give up in despair at trying to get a job. The likelihood is that this winter there will be not 750,000 to 800,000 unemployed but much closer to one million—certainly 900,000. Add to this the dependants of those who are unemployed, and this winter there will be without exaggeration between two to three million people who are either out of work or suffering from the loss of income of those who have no jobs.

We warned the government that their policy would result in this kind of disaster for the people of Canada. I suggest disaster is not too strong a term when we consider what we can look forward to this winter. All over the country welfare rolls have been climbing. In every major industrial city, the welfare budget has been exceeded. In Toronto alone $22 million more than was budgeted for has been spent on welfare. The same is true in the borough of York and surrounding areas. When I speak of Toronto in this context I am talking about metropolitan Toronto, not merely the city of Toronto. The same is true in other parts of the country, as some of my colleagues will no doubt point out. Again, the burden of the government's policy has been thrown on those who are least able to bear it, namely municipal governments who have to squeeze their provincial government for additional revenue to meet expanding welfare costs as a direct result of the policy of this government to increase unemployment.

All of this has direct relationship to the troubles in the province of Quebec that we have been discussing in this House for the last weeks. In one of the speeches I made I said—this was also said by my leader and other members in this House—that while no one has suggested that the people in the FLQ are concerned merely, as they claim, with social justice, it is nevertheless true that small groups of self-styled revolutionaries would not have dared do the kind of thing the FLQ did were it not for the social and economic circumstances in Quebec that gave them encouragement. We have all admitted these are twisted men and women with criminal psychologies, people who require the kind of attention the Police are giving them and ought to have given them a long time ago.

If I may quote my previous words, were it not for the frustration of the young, the despair of the old and the hurt of the unemployed, there would not have been the soil in which to plant the seed of the FLQ. If there had not been these conditions, the FLQ would not have evoked any sympathy at all; they would have been detested by everybody and would not have attempted what in fact they did attempt. When you have despair, unemployment and depressed economic conditions, you are inviting disaster and unrest of one sort or another.

This situation must be added to a history of economic distress and inequality. The young Quebecois can look at a history over a large number of years of being unable to get the same job as an English-speaking Canadian or to climb to the same heights; a history where the average wage in the province has traditionally been below that of the province of Ontario; where out of 77,000 jobs created in 1970, 49,000 were in the province of Ontario and only 3,000 in the province of Quebec. Now we have the prospect of unemployment this winter on an increasing scale. With such a history as this the government, indeed this Parliament, is just begging for trouble. This is why this subject is of such immediate and important concern to me, and I am sure to all members of the House.

I am trying to finish within my allotted time, so I shall not elaborate further on that subject. Let me pass on to another matter. The heartbreaking fact in the present situation is that there is not much one can do in November that will affect unemployment figures for January, February or March. As economies function, there is always a time lag of six months to a year before any investment begins to produce employment or an expansion of the money supply begins to improve the economy. The same is true of fiscal and other policies.

This government has sat back with the knowledge that there is not very much they can do at this time, in November, to ease the tragedy of the next several months. What is equally true is that the government's attention was drawn to this fact six or eight months ago. Indeed, I remember asking the Prime Minister about six months ago a question based on the proposition that he and I both knew that there would be a time lag before any improvement in the economic situation could be felt, and that therefore he ought to start to ease the money supply, lift the constraint on public expenditures, so that any action that he took then would have some useful and substantial benefits this winter for the unemployed. I remember my leader asked that question, and the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) also drew the attention of the government to this matter.

I suggest that even a child at school who had studied even to a slight degree the subject of economics would have known perfectly well last spring that unless the government took steps at that time to increase economic activity in Canada we would be in the fix that we are going to be in this winter. And believe, me, Mr. Speaker, we will be in a fix. I do not say that with the slightest degree of pleasure, but rather with profound regret at the government's failure to listen to what obviously is economic good sense. Even though the government wished to implement nineteenth, perhaps even eighteenth century economic policies, it should have had the elementary sense to start improving economic conditions six or eight months ago with the hope that by this winter the situation in the country would have improved. It did not do so. There was no plan and there never is. So you drift along and come to the winter with the kind of unemployment that is now being forecast.

• (3:20 p.m.)

I want to use my last two or three minutes to put the following suggestion on record. There are some things that ought to be tried immediately. They will not serve to cure the unemployment problem this winter and they will not even serve to reduce the number of unemployed very substantially, but they will serve to give jobs to perhaps 50,000 or 100,000 people. Saving the dignity and the lifestyle as well as the self respect of even 50,000 or 100,000 unemployed is important if you are concerned with human life and human dignity. It is worth doing these things to reduce unemployment by at least the number it can be reduced.

I propose first that the federal government should immediately call a federal-provincial conference on the subject of unemployment and none other, and that the federal government should encourage the provincial governments to bring to that conference representatives of the major municipalities in their provinces. I do not care whether these are ministers or officials, as I am not interested in protocol. I am interested in getting together spokesmen for the federal government, for the provinces and the municipalities, to sit down and work out some concrete things that can be done this winter to reduce unemployment, particularly in the major industrial centres of this country.

There are things to do. There are schools and hospitals which could be built. There are sewage plants required and there is some roadwork that in some parts of Canada could be done in the winter, although not in many areas. There are jobs of that kind that the three levels of government could arrive at, not with any exaggerated objective but with the perfectly practical objective of creating in each industrial centre in this country another few thousand jobs and thereby remove those people from the unemployment rolls.

I suggest secondly that special programs of this sort ought to be aimed at the highly industrialized centres of the province of Quebec. I said during our debate on the War Measures Act and at other times, and I say now, that as one member of this House and as one Canadian I believe it is vital at this stage of Canada's history to pay particular attention to the social and economic distresses of that province in order to remove at least some of the soil in which extremism can and does grow.

Third, I suggest there should be a real change in the way in which the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is functioning at the moment. My inquiries in several areas across the country from people in municipal office, people who are members of various advisory councils, committees and what not, have persuaded me that there now lie on the desks of officials of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion many projects on paper which have been prepared for municipalities in the provinces. These programs could be started tomorrow if the bureaucratic red tape were cut and if the Department of Regional Economic Expansion stopped bickering about little details that stand in the way of getting them underway. Perhaps more thousands of unemployed could be saved this winter.

I have only this suggestion and one other, then I am through. I suggest an immediate increase in old age pensions. The old age pensioner uses every penny he gets in consumption and he cannot save a thing. Therefore, any increase in old age pensions is an immediate increase in the demand for goods and services, and is an immediate stimulus to the production of those goods and services in the country. That is one of the best and most clear ways of making sure that every dollar given is a dollar that goes into the consumption cycle and therefore into the industrial and services production cycle.

Finally, I was heartbroken to hear the Minister of Labour say categorically earlier today that he does not intend to make any change in the unemployment insurance arrangements. This is a great and heartbreaking pity. I cannot see any reason, if we are to have large numbers unemployed this winter, why the government could not immediately increase unemployment insurance benefits to $100 per week, as is proposed in the White Paper, and extend the period of eligibility for those who have exhausted their benefits in accordance with the present rules, so that at least the months of this winter will be covered. This would not solve unemployment in the winter months, but at least some unemployed in the winter months would be covered and this would be doing the human and decent thing. It would make it possible for the unemployed to live more decently and also it would prevent the kind of despair that leads to unrest.

We placed this motion on the order paper not just to have a motion for debate, but because of our conviction that precisely at the time when the country has faced a crisis of the sort we have been discussing for weeks, it is necessary to bring ourselves back to the fundamentals in society and to look at the social and economic consequences of this very desperate problem of unemployment now as well as the greater unemployment during the coming winter.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, there can be no question but that we are confronted in this country with the prospect of a serious unemployment problem this winter. It is difficult, if not impossible, to get any prediction from government sources. Predictions from individual sources have indicated unemployment running up to 9 per cent, not seasonably adjusted but 9 per cent in terms of actual unemployment.

The figures for October are by no means reassuring. The hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) has already called attention to the percentage of the, 419,000 persons out of work during that month who are under the age of 24, and the bitterness and disillusionment which this must be causing. It is clear also that the percentage of unemployment which might be considered long term unemployment, that is persons who have been unemployed for several months, is substantially on the increase. At the end of September, for example, there were 390,000 claimants for unemployment insurance benefits as compared with 260,000 at that time in the previous year. This is the result, in part, of increased unemployment and, in part, the fact that those who were unemployed this year remained unemployed for a longer period of time than was the case a year ago.

Let us compare the figures for August, September and October of this year to the figures for the same period in 1961, when later on in the year there was approximately 9 per cent unemployment. We find for the month of October, 1961, the actual rate was 4.8 per cent whereas this year it is 5 per cent. In 1961, the seasonally adjusted rate was 6.5 per cent whereas this year it is 6.6 per cent. There is every indication, therefore, of a tough winter. It is going to be especially bad in some regions.

• (3:30 p.m.)

We must understand that while we should be particularly concerned about regions which are exceptionally hard hit, unemployment is a problem across the country. I believe in the great province of Ontario, for example, there are, according to these October figures, some 108,000 persons out of work or about 25 per cent of the total unemployed. So, we should not think of this as simply a regional problem, although we have to be concerned about the effect in some regions of the country. We are confronted with the prospect of an unemployment rate which will be dangerously high during this coming winter. Even the term "mass unemployment" should be used with care because it might lead us to think in terms of masses and statistics rather than in terms of the individual and the social reality of this kind of unemployment. Unemployment is not a statistic. It is degrading and represents a loss of dignity and self-respect in the individual.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: It is a disaster for the family and, incidentally, is also a blow to the economy. This is what this government seems to fail to understand. Surely, it is obvious that mass unemployment leads to stagnancy, leads to market loss, cuts, the demand, leads to a need to cut costs and hence more unemployment. It is a vicious circle, in addition to the terrible losses from the point of view of the individual. Today, in this discussion, we can only focus our attention on what we can do and recommend.

I should like to spend a minute or two, first of all, in considering what has brought on the situation as described by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) and others. It is of course a consequence of the deliberate slow-down brought on by the government as part of its fight against inflation. I am pleased to see that recent figures indicate the cost of living is flattening out. I am pleased to see this, although it remains to be seen whether it represents much success in respect of the root causes of inflation. For example, I question very much whether there is as close a connection between unemployment and the control of inflation as this government appears to believe.

Certainly, I repeat that the deliberate slow-down of the economy and the resulting creation of substantial or mass unemployment is an inhuman way to fight inflation. We are seeing some of the consequences of this inhumanity this year. The government has accepted unemployment much too casually. This can be seen in the complacency which was evident of the Speech from the Throne. One would have great difficulty in relating what the Governor General was talking about to the same country in which we live if one were to read the Speech from the Throne now. A few days ago, when questioned about what more the government would do to fight unemployment, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said that it would do more if it proved to be necessary. What proof does the Prime Minister require that more is necessary? What more proof is required than what has been forthcoming? Independent people who have no axe to grind forecast that three-quarters of a million Canadians will be out of work. Let me emphasize—and I have to put this interpretation on events because I cannot believe the government is completely callous—that the economic forecasting of this government must simply be deplorable. That is the only way I could explain what has happened unless I were to draw the conclusion that the government simply does not care and I do not choose to do that.

When one contrasts the kind of forecasts made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) in his spring budget, for example, with what is actually the outlook today, and when one contrasts what we now know is the real thing as compared to the kind of complacency that exuded from the Speech from the Throne, surely there can no longer be any doubt that the Economic Council of Canada was absolutely correct in insisting for a number of years that the government should take part in establishing an independent short-term forecasting unit. If the government had not been so stubborn, and had taken this advice of the Economic Council, the government might have been prevented from taking this horrible road which will cause the Canadian people so much suffering this year. Let us have no more of this kind of forecasting which leads to the kind of emergency we are talking about here today.

There is, of course, a short-term problem we are facing now and a longer-term problem, both of which are quite severe. I am not prepared to admit that nothing can be done with regard to the winter or that the short term and longer term problems are entirely distinct. I am not prepared to admit this, but I wish to emphasize that the government must be prepared in respect of its over-all approach and the methods it uses. We have the attitude of the Minister of Finance the other day when he said, I believe in answer to a question from the New Democratic Party, that if expenditures were increased he hoped the opposition would be prepared to support a tax increase to take care of them. Apart from anything else, this is an answer which would appear to indicate an attitude which is completely oblivious of the problem we are facing this winter. That type of answer was wrong-headed on three counts. First, it overlooked the need for expanded employment. Second, it implied the conviction and the assumption that tax increases are themselves anti-inflationary, whereas this by no means is apparent in view of the experience in this country during the past couple of years. Third, I believe the minister was ignoring the fact that if we use the technique suggested by the Economic Council of Canada, that is, the use of a full employment budget analysis. There is still some pretty substantial restraint in the over-all stance of governments in this country, particularly the government of Canada.

I suggest, without offence, that the Minister of Finance and his associates are living in the past, and that the massive number of unemployed this winter are paying a heavy price for this. Even this government must surely recognize now that it is confronted with a serious problem, that the outlook is substantially different from that forecast last spring, that more must be done to move the economy forward and that more must be done to meet the prospects of this winter.

I say there ought to be an autumn—or perhaps now early winter—budget. The Minister of Finance ought not to wait until spring to outline the fiscal policies and fiscal stance appropriate to Canada in this new context. This must now be obvious to the government.

An hon. Member: Do it now, why wait till spring.

Mr. Benson: I did it a month ago.

Mr. Stanfield: The minister said he did this a month ago. He presented a sort of resumé of the things he would do. That is far short of a statement of a budgetary nature including a forecast of conditions and including, in particular, a precise statement of the objectives and stance of the government. It is urgent that this government now set out clearly the course for the economy as it sees it and remove the ambiguity that exists, because the government keeps talking about restraints at the same time as it keeps talking about loosening the supply of money. As a result, Canadians do not really know today how much expansion in the economy and reduction in unemployment the government would really like to see brought about. The government must give leadership, it must set a clear course for the economy.

Employment Programs

The psychology of the situation is very important. As I said, I do not think that Canadians generally, including the business community, are certain in their minds just where the government would like the economy to go. The government must remove the uncertainties that are holding back decisions in the private sector with regard to investment. There is, first of all, the floating dollar which is creating great uncertainty because nobody knows whether it is going to be pegged for sure, when it is going to be pegged, or the rate at which it will be pegged. I realize that the minister cannot tell me this afternoon what his plans are in this regard. I realize he cannot tip his hand. But I do urge upon him the importance of removing the uncertainty that this creates as soon as it is possible to do so, because this is creating great uncertainty, especially for those involved in the export business, but also for those involved in virtually any business in the country.

Second, there is the uncertainty that exists today with regard to tax reform. People who are making decisions about investment do not know how much of the white paper on tax reform the minister will implement. They do not know whether the minister is going to accept the recommendations made by the House of Commons committee and which recommendations of the Senate he will accept. Here, we have another area of confusion and of uncertainty. It is important that the minister clarify and eliminate uncertainty in this area as rapidly as possible.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: I think also—and I make this recommendation very earnestly to the minister—that tax reductions would be appropriate in the present context. We in this party have urged for a long time the elimination of the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials. I urge that this be done in the area of housing because this would very substantially stimulate a good deal of employment in the near future, and quite quickly.

I suggest also that the minister should move to reduce income taxes, especially for those at the lower end of the income scale. I suggest it is not good enough simply to eliminate the 3 per cent surtax after January 1. It is simply not enough to drop that surtax after January 1 to achieve the necessary psychological effect. It would be like a number of changes that the government has made to date, and no doubt we will hear them repeated by the Minister of Finance as they have been repeated time after time by spokesmen for the government. These changes have not been enough to establish the necessary psychological climate in the country to support a healthy expansion.

I suggest that a reduction in income tax, especially, as I said, at the lower end of the scale, of at least twice the level of the surtax, which I hope will go in any event after January 1, will do a lot to help create the necessary climate for expansion. There is no reason at all to believe in this context that this would be an inflationary proposal. Indeed, it would be very interesting to see whether it would not work in the opposite direction and whether a reduction in some income taxes would not have the effect, for example, of reducing the extent that workmen feel the need to press for wage increases. Second, there is no reason to believe that by reducing taxation in this way at this time the government would be necessarily reducing its revenue prospects to any substantial extent, because if this tax reduction did have the effect of creating an appropriate climate for expansion, expansion in employment, the economy of the country would very promptly begin to generate additional revenues for this government as well as for other governments.

Then, again, there is the argument in terms of equity, of doing something in particular for those at the lower end of the income scale rather than waiting until the whole tax reform package is implemented. A reduction in taxation at this time, is, I think, a step well worth taking, well calculated to produce expansion, not calculated to create inflationary pressures. It might very well work in the opposite direction. It is quite consistent with any cooling off that the government might feel necessary in the future. Let us see the government establish a better forecasting system if they are going to talk about cooling things off again. It is obvious that they started to cool things off too late and it is equally obvious that they have cooled things off for too long.

The measures I have suggested today, including an efficient forecasting system, are intended to help out in this area. As regards the immediate problem, I agree with the hon. member for York South that the provinces should be called together. Every municipal and provincial government has projects on its books that have been deferred simply because of budgetary considerations. They could put them into effect very quickly.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) but I do so to advise him that the time limit fixed by special order today has expired. Is there unanimous agreement to allow the Leader of the Opposition to continue?

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Stanfield: I am reluctant to do that, Mr. Speaker. I will just say a few words more. A special order has been passed and I do not think I should speak longer. I think I made my point. Although I have not been able to end up with the proper flourish, I will defer that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles-Eugène Dionne (Kamouraska): Mr. Speaker—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I beg the minister's pardon. It was my understanding that the spokesmen for the opposition parties would speak first. However, since the minister is on his feet, I will recognize him.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I am quite willing to listen to the hon. member for Kamouraska (Mr. Dionne) if he wishes to speak at this time.

[Translation]

Mr. Dionne: Mr. Speaker, the motion now under consideration is, in my opinion, most important. Unemployment in Canada has reached such an alarming rate that it is useless to make provocative comparisons and try to establish facts with statistics which do not always reflect the real situation, since a great number of unemployed are not registered with Manpower Centre offices.

To undertake to prove, by juggling with figures, that there were more unemployed in 1970 than in 1969 or by going back to 1960, 1962 or 1963 to show that the number of unemployed was higher under another government will not solve the problem.

I have heard so many sterile speeches on this matter in the House that I have come to the conclusion that though figures probably do not lie, there are surely liars who juggle with them since there are always contradictions in this regard, depending on who is in power and who is in the opposition.

Thousands are unemployed in Canada and we must endeavour to find the means to reduce the demoralizing effects of that social evil.

During the depression from 1929 to 1939, those of my age realized that the governments were unable to solve the problem. Various plans were tried out: welfare, a type of concentration camp where people were paid 20 cents a day. The workers protested against the use of machines, mechanical shovels and others, which took away the work they wanted to do. And so, our administrators, Grits and Tories alike, proved their incompetence to a population that remained patient and courageous in spite of it all.

Their numerous study sessions only resulted in the adoption by the Canadian Parliament of the Unemployment Insurance Act, which went against the theories of the champions of full employment. The enactment of such legislation has helped many workers and has created employment for some officials—who could do better sometimes—to whom it was explained that their job was to help the unemployed faced with problems, which justified their full time employment.

The motion under study recommends that the unemployment benefits should be increased and the eligibility period extended. This is logical, considering the present situation. However, being aware of the mentality of the public service within the present financial system, which enjoys discretionary powers, I can imagine the groans that will come from those who seem to be commissioned to protect the fund before the unemployed.

Let us hope that they will show more realism in front of the present alarming situation.

It will no doubt be answered that the new legislation is still being studied and that it will not take effect before several months. This is no reason to delay a decision called for by the circumstances. Besides, the act has often been modified since it came into force.

In 1939, in the middle of an unemployment crisis, the government did not ask for delays before declaring war. Decisions were taken without hesitation. Let us hope that after the events which have taken place subsequently, our administration will finally understand that it is not normal to leave in destitution courageous people who are quite willing to have a decent living in a country they helped to build.

A convenient way for not worrying about this problem is to try to deny its existence. It is the first reaction one notices among some politicians, and in the press which is at their service. I want to point out the difference between this crisis and that of the thirties. This one is not approached with the same resignation as the other. Very few people knew the cause of the great crisis that happened before the war. Today, thousands of people know exactly that it is a purchasing power crisis, a money crisis.

Let me quote at this point part of a speech delivered by former president Roosevelt, in his inaugural address given during the crisis period of 1929. Here it is:

It is in this spirit that you and I have to face our difficulties. Only material interests are involved, thank heaven! Values have fallen to amazingly low levels; taxes have increased; we have lost our solvency power; all governments are confronted with an alarming reduction in their income; the exchange system is paralysed in the commercial traffic. A more serious situation still is an army of unemployed facing the problem of its subsistence, and a great number of other individuals who have but greatly reduced income. One must be a smug optimist to deny the dismalness of the situation...

The changers have given up their seats in the temple of our civilization. We can now restore and consecrate again this temple of ancient truths. The extent of the restoration will depend on how far we shall go in substituting superior social values to purely monetary motives.

Happiness does not consist only in the possession of money; it is found in the joy of work accomplished, in the emotion of the creative effort.

It must be recognized that material wealth is not a barometer for success.

No doubt the 1970 administrators will reply that the situation is not the same today.

I understand that the various programmes of pension, allowances, unemployment insurance and others have contributed to bring a little relief in an intolerable situation. But let us consult the reports of the Economic Council of Canada for 1969 and 1970, and the editorials of current newspapers. In its edition of April 23, 1969, La presse published an editorial entitled "Poor Man's Bread", and this is what it said:

We will never be ashamed enough, we will never be humiliated enough; the truth is thrown into our face: "four million Canadians live in a state of poverty!" You do not want to know anything about that because your personal comfort, your high standard of living, even the affluence which is common with many people must not be upset and then the problem of the have-nots does not concern you. This is what you think: think again!

Whether you like it or not, however annoying the shedding of light on harsh truths, the Economic Council of Canada has just given a lesson to the whole country in a brief introduced yesterday before a special Senate committee.

• (3:50 p.m.)

The tone is cutting and no one is spared. Here are a few examples: Poverty is a fact. Its victims are numbered in millions. Those who claim that there will always be poor people, are but disgusting egoists. To have so many underprivileged in an affluent society is a shame. To repeat that the evil can be cured once and for all is fallacious. The Senate committee was shocked. It had every reason to be.

In closing, the editorial writer added and I quote:

Pious wishes will not help much. When a society becomes "poisoned"—the phrase is taken out of the document—it has little use for verbal poultices. The most scholarly theories collapse. Alas! the Economic Council itself, frantic in the face of a situation which it dares not describe, has no other recourse but pompous words. Public understanding, enlightened humanitarianism, combined effort of institutions and governments. Of course, there is nothing more noble. However, the daily bread cannot be found in dictionaries.

In the official report of the Debates of the Senate for November 5, 1970, the hon. senator for Madawaska-Restigouche, speaking on poverty in Canada, stated this:

My colleagues on the poverty committee know what I am talking about because they too have heard these people. We have visited their homes. We have talked with them. We have talked to their children. It would be impossible for me to try to describe some of the scenes we witnessed.

Never before have I thought that in a country like Canada, a country so rich in natural resources, this Canada of ours where the standard of living is amongst the world's highest, I would witness such living conditions.

These people are furious because during the last fifteen years they have been running around the country to find employment, and when they succeeded in doing so and became established, they were soon displaced by so-called progress.

We have all this misery and poverty around us while we spend billions of dollars on social welfare. Just think for a moment what it would be like if those social measures were not in effect today. It would make the thirties, which we all remember, seem like years of good fortune.

And yet today we are so geared that we can spend up to $30,000 to create one job. What a price to pay, honourable senators! What a stupid price, I would say! And to whom is it paid? In most cases to people who are taking advantage of the loose legislation covering the tax payer's money to serve their own interests rather than the public interest.

And furthermore, in the same speech, the senator stated:

We are living in a sick society. I feel it is a sick society when freedom is abused every hour of the day, with no respect for the consequences. It is a sick society where respect for and cooperation with the authorities elected by a democratic system are gradually being replaced by obstruction, vengeance and, too often, by revolutionary action. It is a sick society with a monetary system whereby every dollar in reserve may be doubled in 10 to 12 years due to the high rate of interest.

This statement of fact can be made in Canada in 1970. You will agree that it is high time for the supporters of the "just society" to wake up and to find another remedy than credit restrictions and taxes on building materials to improve the situation.

Forced unemployment, with the physical and moral miseries which come with it and often follow it for years is a calamity; this is a truly modern curse which should have our society blush with shame, a society which is so proud of its science, of its civilization and of its democratic institutions.

The remedy to such unrest is, first of all, to find the causes and, then, to apply an efficient medicine.

It is found that unemployment prevails when products do not sell. Indeed, when manufacturers get fewer orders, they lay off personnel, which adds to the number of unemployed.

An ill-adapted production helps create unemployment. The Lauzon and Sorel shipyards are clear evidence of uneasy adjustments. Another reason for unemployment is machinery and automation. The worker becomes unemployed when the machine produces in his stead. Machinery has even been invented for that purpose. Unbalance between increased production and limited purchasing power worsens as fast as progress demands the installation of new machinery.

The solution to such an issue is distribution among people of profits due to progress. The more products become independent of the work of the individual, the more they should be distributed otherwise than through wages. This is the aim of the Ralliement créditiste when it asks that a periodical dividend be given to everybody.

Whether the problem is an accumulation of products due to lack of purchasing power or the replacement of workers by machinery, a dividend is the solution.

A wage increase would be absolutely useless to workers replaced by machinery. On the other hand, as any wage increase is reflected in higher prices for products—even if an increase of $1 were granted—if the merchant sells one more dollar for the same quantity of products for $1 more than in the past, the consumer cannot give a larger order.

Quite often the main cause of problems experienced by most Canadians lays in the mechanism employed for distributing goods; it operates slowly, whereas in this century speed rules supreme and means of production have undergone changes allowing maximum results in many areas; some politicians even feel alarmed and sometimes speak of overproduction.

They are not realistic enough to realize that we are dealing with underconsumption even though the reports of the numerous commissions they have set up prove beyond any doubt that a high percentage of Canadians live in poverty and lack all sorts of goods which the production system keeps displaying before their eyes by making use of all available advertising media while the consumer has to make do without these goods since he cannot afford to absorb this abundant production.

A specialized education is not required to realize that we are living in an upside-down world. Facts prove that we are able to produce but at the same time they show that we are not intelligent enough to distribute the goods we produce. It is the height of absurdity! Such a situation justifies the logical moves of those who advocate a distributive economy in order to bring back some order in a society whose leaders seem to have gone insame.

[Mr. Dionne.]

We recognize the difficulties involved in putting this system back on its feet, but since this is necessary we must act without delay if we are truly determined to prevent revolution.

Why could we not have—besides commissions on the public service, education, public utilities, unemployment insurance—a monetary commission comprising experts on figures and on love of the poor, responsible for developing the technique of balancing the production of goods with the need to provide each man with enough to live, and for working out payment and credit procedures in a spirit of reliability, foresight and honesty? Since it is the country which answers for currency, is it not its responsibility to benefit from it and regulate its exchange?

The endless studies on poverty will produce no practical result. It is necessary first to straighten the monetary system, a human institution controlled, monopolized and rarified when necessary by handlers of money and credit, exposed by the highest doctrinal authority in the world. In this respect, let us refer to the encyclical Quadragesimo Anno.

We should not linger on old methods which have produced the results we know: inflation, recession, ever higher taxes, an increasing national debt which is unpaid and unpayable under the present system.

Why continue to look for undiscoverable solutions in that upside-down system?

We of the Ralliement créditiste do not pretend that a monetary reform would be the panacea likely to remedy all evils, but we have good reasons to believe that it is one of the best means to find adequate solutions to the current problems.

[English]

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I was sorry that we were unable to hear the final flourish of the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). He got to the stage where he was going to increase exemptions, reduced taxes and with the additional money he found thereby was going to call the provinces together to spend it. I was wondering what he would do for a finale.

The motion presented by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) and his remarks to the House, provide further evidence of the tendency of his party to regard current economic conditions in a vacuum, as unrelated either to the past or the future. Neither the past nor the future can be ignored, however, if we are to consider current economic problems with some proper sense of perspective.

Let me point out at the outset that there is probably a very large measure of agreement among us about what should be our basic economic objective, that is, achieving the greatest year to year increase in production, employment and incomes that is possible without creating a self-defeating spiral of costs and prices.

Where we differ in a fundamental way is over the means that should be adopted to achieve this objective.

In sharp contrast to many in the opposition, the government came to the conclusion that the steadily escalating inflation which began in the mid 1960's posed a serious threat to the achievement of this objective over the long term. We were accused and continue to be accused of having a psychopathic obsession over the danger of inflation. We were accused of being prepared to sacrifice employment because of some academic attachment to price stability—as if the two were not directly related.

Let me emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that our deep concern over the problem of inflation has not reflected any lack of concern over unemployment. On the contrary, we were concerned about inflation primarily because it threatened to undermine the very foundation of our economy and thus prevent it from achieving its potential growth together with higher and more stable levels of employment.

In recent months, governments of most countries around the world have come to share our deep concern over inflation. It was one of the issues foremost in the minds in those attending the annual meeting of the International Monetary Fund in Copenhagen last September. In its annual report for 1970, published earlier in the month, the IMF pointed out that the performance of the world economy during 1969 and the first half of 1970 was marked by what it described as "severe inflationary pressures" and stressed, to use its words, "the central need for restoration of financial stability in the major industrial economies, and particularly in the United States".

During the Throne Speech debate, the Leader of the Opposition was inclined to dismiss rather scathingly the views of what he termed "international bankers" as being of no account.

Since he, himself, referred to the approach of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, it is of particular interest that in its mid-year review the OECD asserted that "price inflation is an old problem which has now acquired new dimensions and a new urgency" and emphasized the need for member countries to adopt the necessary fiscal, monetary and income restraint policies to bring it under control.

A few weeks ago, the Economic Council of Canada published a review of the Canadian economy. The report pointed out that recently the growth of the economy has fallen significantly below its real potential, but it also strongly suggested that inflation was the major cause of this development.

The Council said, and I quote:

> On the whole, but with the glaring exception noted below, the performance of the economy since we started to make such appraisals in 1964 has been relatively good—certainly good in comparison with the generally poor performance in the late 1950's and early 1960's.

The glaring exception to this generally good record cited by the Council has been, in its words, "performance in relation to the goal of reasonable price stability."

Over the past several months we have made considerable progress in overcoming the glaring defect in the performance of our economy referred to by the Economic Council in its most recent report. Only last week, the Dominion Bureau of Statistics reported that for the third month in a row the year-over-year increase of the Consumer Price Index in October amounted to only 2.8 per cent. On a seasonally adjusted basis, the increase in the index since last February has amounted to 1.5 per cent at an annual rate. This record of performance surpasses that of virtually any other industrialized economy and stands in particular contrast to that in the United States, where the increase in the Consumer Price Index for September amounted to 5.6 per cent over the previous year.

As I have acknowledged many times in the past, resolving the critical problem of inflation has been a long, arduous process and it has carried its own costs in terms of a temporary moderation in the rate of economic growth.

In this context, I think it is worth recalling the observation made in the 1970 annual report of the International Monetary Fund that, and I quote:

> —the experience of industrial countries in the recent period seems fully consistent with and bears out the well-known proposition that the maintenance of financial stability in the short-run will make for a better growth and employment record over the long-run.

Despite the clamour of members of the opposition, Mr. Speaker, we have not been prepared to sacrifice long-term benefits for the economy in order to achieve short-lived illusory gains because we are convinced it is not in the best interests of the Canadian people to do so.

At the same time, however, we have been deeply anxious to see the economy move ahead toward its full growth potential as soon as, and as quickly as, this could be done without severe risk of a renewed and destructive price and cost spiral.

In my remarks to the House on October 13 during the Throne Speech debate, I outlined in some detail the steps that have been taken over the past seven months to stimulate economic growth as the inflationary pressures slowly began to recede. It is not necessary for me to reiterate now all of those various measures we have taken to stimulate a faster rate of growth of production and employment. I would like to emphasize, however, that over this period fiscal policy has progressively become strongly expansionary.

The March budget itself proposed a significant increase in the stimulus from the federal sector, providing for an increase in cash requirements over the previous fiscal year of about three quarters of a billion dollars, not including requirements to finance policy exchange transactions. Primarily as a result of expansionary policy measures adopted by the government in the interval, the cash requirement for the current fiscal year has risen to $1.3 billion, with a further $1.2 billion being required to finance foreign exchange transactions up to October 1.

On a national income accounts basis there has been a shift from the surplus for last year estimated at $648 million to a deficit in the current year that is estimated currently at $450 million, a swing of more than $1 billion. In contrast to what the Leader of the Opposition has said, I think this is a very signficant move in fiscal policy in Canada.

Mr. Stanfield: You can't live on that.

Mr. Benson: And you can't live on your credit. In my speech of October 13, I indicated to the House that during this period there had been a shift of similar magnitude on the monetary side in the expansion of monetary policy, with the result that ample credit is available in the banking system to supply the needs of all credit-worthy borrowers. In the interval there have been two further important developments in the monetary field.

Toward the end of October, the chartered banks began lowering their prime lending rates from 8 per cent to at least 7½ per cent, providing a spur for a further increase in loan demand.

I am sure that all hon. members will welcome the announcement that effective today the Bank of Canada's bank rate has been reduced from 6½ to 6 per cent, reflecting the recent decline in short-term treasury bill yields to less than 5 per cent for the first time since 1967. Today's reduction in the bank rate is the fourth since May of this year and represents a decrease of 2 percentage points from the 8 per cent peak established in July, 1969. This lowering of the lending rate of the Bank of Canada, which goes hand in hand with a continued increase in the money supply made available by the central bank, is only one more in the series of measures adopted by federal authorities to promote increased economic growth as quickly and to as great an extent as circumstances and sensible economic management will permit.

In his motion, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for York South refers to the relentless upward climb in the level of unemployment in all regions of Canada and suggests that a number of unnamed—he named one or two recently—but allegedly responsible economic authorities are predicting record levels of unemployment this winter.

For our part, we have never sought to minimize our concern over the increase in unemployment to a level far higher than we would like to see. I am willing to refer to my budget statement of last March in this regard. At the same time, however, there is nothing to be gained by exaggerating the nature and extent of the problem, unless it is some brief political advantage.

Recently I suggested publicly that on a seasonal basis —the hon. member said this is the fair way to measure the trend in unemployment—unemployment had about reached its peak and expressed confidence that we could look forward to continued improvement. I am sure most members will welcome the report published today by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics and the Department of Manpower and Immigration that on a seasonally adjusted basis unemployment dropped from 6.9 per cent in September to 6.6 per cent in October. I might observe, in passing, that in the United States there was a further small increase in unemployment during October.

An hon. Member: Their rate is different.

Mr. Benson: The rate is different because the measurement is different. What makes this report particularly gratifying is the fact that the decline in unemployment during October to the level existing last June occurred despite an increase in the labour force of 10,000 on a seasonally adjusted basis, and despite the fact that the General Motors strike had been underway for five weeks at the time the survey was taken.

I should make it clear, Mr. Speaker, that while those on strike are not counted as additions to the unemployed, the shutdown of General Motors plants has led to the laying-off of a significant number of workers in associated industries which supply General Motors factories. It is because of this factor that reports of an impending settlement of the strike are all the more welcome. During October there was an increase in employment, seasonally adjusted, of 34,000, which was matched by a similar increase in September. While the importance of this expansion in employment over the two-month period should also not be exaggerated, the figures suggest that the economy may be becoming more robust than it was earlier in the year.

• (4:20 p.m.)

One of the important factors in determining how quickly economic growth regains a healthy momentum is capital investment, particularly in the private sector. As hon. members are aware, actual capital expenditures by business this year appear to have fallen significantly short of the large increase indicated by company investment intentions. Nevertheless, a strong underpinning to capital investment both this year and next has been provided by the marked resurgence which has taken place in housing construction as a result of the heavy volume of funds made available by the federal government. In October, housing starts were running at an annual rate of 270,000, which represents a very sharp increase from the annual rate of housing construction of 136,000 in the second quarter of this year. I think this is an indication of the effect government action has had with respect to unemployment.

Mr. Alexander: It will still be short.

Mr. Benson: Earlier this week my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) made public a survey of 200 of the largest companies in Canada indicating that they planned increases in capital spending next year of 11 per cent. While this expression of intention is a less than infallible guide to the expenditures which will actually be made, it is nevertheless encouraging that these major companies are contemplating a substantial expansion of capital investment in the year ahead.

The motion before the House, Mr. Speaker, makes special reference to the unemployment situation in Quebec, a problem about which we are very conscious. But to maintain proper perspective, I think I should point out to hon. members that the problem of unemployment in that province goes beyond that caused by slow growth of the economy generally. A few moments ago I referred to the importance of capital investment in stimulating economic growth and new job opportunities. Over the past four years, however, there has either been a decline or only a modest rate of growth in capital spending in Quebec as compared to the rest of Canada. In 1969, for example, private capital investment in the province per capita was only 62 per cent of the national average, compared to 84 per cent in the Atlantic region and 101 per cent in Ontario.

Notwithstanding the events of recent days, there has, I believe, been a significant change in the political climate in Quebec which is reflected in the election to office of a provincial government pledged to place a new emphasis on promoting healthy economic growth. It is for this reason particularly encouraging that the survey of large Canadian companies to which I referred earlier indicated an above average increase in the amount of capital investment planned for Quebec next year.

Mr. Paproski: A couple of million?

Mr. Benson: Hundreds of millions of dollars.

Mr. Paproski: What about Alberta?

Mr. Benson: This estimate would appear to be in line with reports of major capital projects expected to get under way in the province over the next several months about which Premier Bourassa said last week he would be making an announcement shortly. It is just such developments which will provide the strongest possible base for promoting the accelerated long term economic growth of the province.

At the beginning of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I noted that the International Monetary Fund, the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development and the Economic Council have all recently warned about the dangerous effect of inflation in undermining the strength of the world's economies. Before concluding, I want to underline the further warning from each of these organizations about the need to exercise caution in stimulating the renewed expansion of the economy after inflation has been brought under control because of the continuing danger of unleashing new inflationary forces.

In its most recent report the Economic Council emphasized that, to use its words, "great care must be taken to move in a more gradual way back to potential in order to avoid the excessive surges of inflation-creating demand such as occurred in the mid-1960's and pushed the economy hard against its potential". The progressive and far-reaching series of measures we have taken over the past several months represent strong and positive action by the government to stimulate economic growth. We remain more than ready in the future to adopt those further measures which are possible to promote faster expansion of production, employment and incomes without sacrificing the hard-won gains we have made in our crucial fight to restore economic stability, upon which sustained economic growth and high and growing levels of employment ultimately depend.

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, it is difficult, in a 15 minute speech, to advance a serious economic argument, especially when one has already made some notes for another speech.

To reply to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), may I say, first of all, that one of the central assumptions he made was that a direct causal connection existed between price stability on the one hand and long range growth and full employment on the other. This came out clearly in his speech. Yet he put forward not one shred of evidence to justify this contention. He is right in saying that relative price stability exists today, but if he wishes to argue that this degree of price stability is connected with economic growth why does he not present some statistics on which to base his argument? Why does he not take prices within a sector of the economy, show that they have been maintained at a relatively constant level and then, show, also, that there has been an expansion of employment in that sector? This would be significant information. But he does not attempt to do this. I have no time in which to elaborate upon the point, but I suggest he could not do so in terms of the economy as a whole.

There is a good deal of evidence to show that many countries have maintained price stability while experiencing high levels of unemployment, and there are numerous other countries which have maintained high levels of employment concurrent with a lot of inflation. It is this kind of information which has led such reputable journals as the Wall Street Journal to conclude that attempts to find a connection between price stability and economic growth should be abandoned because the evidence no longer warrants making the kind of assumption which underlines the hon. gentleman's policies. The minister has trotted out once again an essay in the conservative economic thought which has motivated the government; he has provided us with nothing more than the rhetoric we have heard many times in the last two years to support his position.

The other point I will make before getting into the ten minutes or so which remain to me concerns the minister's reference to the low rate of capital investment in recent years in the Province of Quebec. It is true there has been a low rate of capital investment in the past, and I, with other hon. members, are glad to know that this situation may be changed. What better reason for a massive introduction of public capital into the province? I will return to this point later.

The fact is that there are 419,000 unemployed in Canada, an increase of some 105,000 over the same time one year ago. Non-partisan economists have predicted that we may have as high as 9 per cent of the labour force unemployed this winter. In other words, the Prime Minister is in power at a time when there will be more unemployed Canadians than at any previous time in history, hardly a commendable record for one who is supposed to be a progressive politician. As the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) and the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) have indicated, unemployment is not simply a statistic: it means gross human deprivation for the men and women directly involved, and also certainly for their children. Something has to be done to remedy the situation.

Closely related to unemployment are welfare costs in the cities. I am informed that the city of Montreal is now spending $68 million a year on welfare. Toronto has exceeded its present annual welfare budget by $22 million. This year Edmonton has exceeded its budget by some $350,000. My own city of Oshawa, a much smaller community than the other metropolitan areas, has exceeded its welfare budget for this year by some 280 per cent, and this in a relatively prosperous part of the country.

As everyone knows, the federal government involves itself in many ways in urban affairs. Most of the unemployed in Canada live in our cities. The government could take action in many areas, such as communications, housing, transportation, postal services, pollution control and so on, which could stand an infusion of public capital.

I do not want to exaggerate the benefits that would accrue from such an infusion, for it would take time for the effect of such investment to pay off in full employment. But it would be paying off by next February, when the forecast is that we will have the highest level of unemployment this winter. I suggest a conference should be held soon between the federal government, the provincial governments and representatives of our major municipalities to make clear that unemployment is a serious issue.

Certainly I think there is need to do something about housing and urban renewal, both for its own sake and for the spin-off effect this would have on the whole economy. About 80,000 people today in metropolitan Toronto alone are on the public housing lists, a figure that exceeds the population of my own city. Yet the government spends a sum total of 3 per cent of its housing money in the public housing field. It is the poor people of the country who are waiting for public housing, yet 97 per cent of government funds for housing go into other sectors that need less help.

I have recited a number of areas in which the government could spend money beneficially, and housing as I say, is one of them. It is an area in which the government should spend even more money, after consultation with provincial and municipal governments.

Another step tnat should be taken immediately at the federal level is to increase the rate of unemployment insurance. This has already been suggested. If this action were taken now, thousands of people who will be unemployed this winter would receive help. In addition, the time for which unemployed people are able to collect benefits should be extended. In general terms, the government must also begin now to rid itself of its old ad hoc monetary and fiscal policy approach and to indulge in serious economic planning which is aimed at full employment. The government must get away from its preoccupation—and I emphasize that word—with price stability. Stable prices are important, but weighed against the priority of full employment that must take second place, as indeed is the case in all advanced countries of western Europe.

I want to speak briefly about the issue of Quebec. According to the most recent figures, 45 per cent of the unemployed of this country are between the ages of 14 and 24. In terms of what is taking place in the province of Quebec, I suggest this is a serious condition. Those who become involved in radical politics, whether of the FLQ variety or the democratic sort associated with the Parti Quebecois, tend overwhelmingly to be in that age group. This group consists of a curious mixture. On the one hand, there is the highly educated, young university student radical; on the other hand, there is the very poorly educated young person, for example, the taxi driver in Montreal. This is not a coincidence. What we are witnessing now in Quebec is a common phenomenon around the world, that is the young radical student discussing issues from his, in the case of the FLQ, terrorist point of view with the young unemployed worker. He attempts to "radicalize" the young worker.

What needs to be done, and done right away, is to solve the unemployment question, particularly among the young people of the province of Quebec. A study undertaken shortly after the last election in that province showed that some 50 per cent of the workers who lived in the east end of Montreal and voted for the Parti Quebecois did so not for separatist reasons at all but because they wanted social and economic reform. If we want to repair the damage that, in my view, has been done by the Prime Minister in recent weeks, we must reach these young workers of Quebec and provide jobs for them as soon as possible. Then and only then, in my view, will we have a chance of keeping Quebec in Canada.

At the same time, we must give a greater sense of participation to the young student who is not economically deprived, both within his own province and within Canada as a whole. It seems to me it is primarily this lack of opportunity within the country as a whole that has led to his decision to opt out of Canada. To deal with this kind of young person in Quebec, we will require much more sophisticated approaches than merely economic ones, though I do not have time to elaborate on this. Nevertheless, I cannot emphasize too much the need for something to be done about the young unemployed workers of the province of Quebec if we are to prevent Quebec from separating from the rest of Canada. Without their support separatist students would get nowhere.

• (4:40 p.m.)

In this regard, and this will be my concluding point, it seems to me once again that the federal government, because of its involvement with provincial and municipal governments in many aspects of policy, could be doing something. The mayor of Montreal has proudly suggested that his administration is going to spend some hundreds of thousands of dollars to build 3,000 new low income homes which will be made available to people with lower incomes after the Olympics. What he has not pointed out or emphasized is that the same city is going to lose 3,400 units now in existence during the preparation of that great extravaganza. This represents a net loss of some 400 housing units to the poor people of Montreal. What the federal government could do if it were really serious about involving itself with the concerns of the poor people, particularly those in the province of Quebec, is say to the mayor of Montreal he will not get one cent of federal money to put into that extravaganza unless this policy is changed and unless he begins to do something now about the welfare of these poor people.

The politics of grandeur are popular not only with the mayor of Montreal but, unfortunately, with many other people in that city. This approach must be abandoned if the real needs and interests of the average citizen in that city are to be met. The federal government has an important responsibility to not encourage the politics of grandeur by participating in this Olympic project of Mr. Drapeau. That is one act, symbolic if you like, of a number of similar practical moves the federal government could make in respect of municipal politics, not only in Montreal but elsewhere in this country. I will conclude with that suggestion, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Ovide Laflamme (Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the remarks of the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) and, although he delivered his speech in a very commendable way, I think it might be well to point out to the hon. member for York South that he spent 28 minutes out of his 30-minute speech bewailing unemployment, stressing its disastrous and unfortunate consequences. I feel that on that score, except for a few allusions he may have made, all hon. members agree.

And as time went by, I became very anxious to know what constructive suggestions he might make to the government to change the situation he so intelligently and learnedly put before the House.

For another minute, he spoke about the effectiveness of the measures and towards the end of his speech, he talked about the establishment of special programs of a general nature following a federal-provincial conference with the co-operation of municipalities, about changes of attitudes in the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and about an increase in old age pensions.

Mr. Speaker, the disastrous effects of unemployment cannot be denied. The hon. member for York South talked about the unemployment conditions in Quebec. I agree with him on that subject, but more so with the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) who just sat down and who said that something must be done to fight unemployment in Quebec.

In 1969, the hon. member for York South said, if those figures are accurate, that 45,000 new jobs had been created in Ontario. On the other hand, the federal government is blamed in certain areas of the country for overdoing it in Quebec, where only 3,000 new jobs have been created. Yet, the same federal legislation, the same measures of assistance are involved.

Mr. Lewis: It was not in 1969, but in 1970.

Mr. Laflamme: I thank the hon. member for his correction, but whether it is in 1969 or in 1970, the argument is basically the same, to wit under the same federal legislation, 45,000 new jobs are created in Ontario and only 3,000 in Quebec.

Why this anomaly? I do not agree with the reasons given by the hon. member. The real cause of the shortage of investments reported by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) and one which has yet consequences for which the federal government is required to take emergency action, so to speak, is the lack of stability and action which, for too long a time, have been a characteristic of politics in Quebec.

While nowhere else in our country was any disagreement possible on the basic structure of our society, in Quebec, this matter was challenged and the news was splashed all over the front page of all Canadian newspapers.

And while unfortunate events were taking place in Quebec, investors were being frightened away so that, as the Minister of Finance has just stated, capital investments in Quebec in 1969 only reached 62 per cent of the national average.

The hon. member for York South should understand that basically this terrorist action is not linked to unemployment. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby has just said that activitsts and terrorists are generally found among the unemployed who have lost hope. This is true. However, the agitators in Quebec who are mainly responsible for a drop in investments, and, consequently, more unemployment, have been led on by the political climate which prevailed for too many years. This state of affairs has been gradually disappearing, so we hope at least, since April 29, 1970.

I have no intention of singing the praises of Mr. Robert Bourassa, premier of Québec. The people of Quebec, in the last election, had no other choice but to vote for a party that was the only one, in the last ten years, to advocate keeping Quebec in the Confederation and putting an end to the sterile debates on constitutional reform and the carpet wars. The Liberal party wants to solve the economic problem and to take action in that area.

Almost all the people would have wished to cast their vote for it, except those who, cleverly stressing the problems obtaining in Quebec, tried to make the people believe that the Ottawa government is against the adoption of any legislation that may be helpful to the poor. This climate seems to be lifting and since Quebec has a government able to really understand the situation, it is our duty in Ottawa to say that the federal government is not against the province of Quebec, as we were told for 25 or 30 years.

I call the attention of the hon. member for York South—and I know that the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Asselin) has brought in a correction in this connection—to the heading of an article in Le Devoir. The hon. member for Charlevoix tries again to raise a problem of which the population is extremely tired. This heading is as follows:

Martial Asselin: Without a special status for Quebec, Canada is finished.

We have been reading such titles in newspapers for ten years. We have been saying over and over again for ten years that the Quebec people do not want the resumption of fruitless constitutional discussions but rather economic action.

In this regard, the federal government is doing presently what it ought to do. Indeed, it passed an act on economic development. This legislation is not perfect but since January 1, 1969, the federal government has contributed to the development or the establishment of 267 new industries in the province of Quebec. About $39 million have been paid to Quebec as incentives to economic and industrial expansion. In Ontario, 45,000 new jobs were created—as compared to 3,000 in Quebec—with only $10 million in aid to economic expansion.

If something is wrong in Quebec, it is attributable to the lack of investors, I think. As a matter of fact, they run away from political complications that some provincial politicians have kept up while pursuing their own purposes. Among the efficient measures the government has implemented, are the system of equalization payments and the aid to economic expansion which, according to some other provinces, constitute preferential treatment to words the province of Quebec.

Just recently, steps have been taken to solve problems in the textile industry, which creates many jobs in Quebec, particularly in the Montreal region and in part of my riding.

However, measures implemented or to be implemented by the hon. Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) will ensure better control of imports and a rational increase in the number of jobs in the industry.

Those are absolutely positive measures likely to bring about a more promising future for workers of Quebec. I do not intend to blame the hon. member for York-South for trying to establish a relationship of some sort between FLQ activities and the unemployment situation which prevails at present. Indeed, most FLQ members are connected with the Parti Québécois. They specifically advocate the destruction of Canada. I would not think that these same people would tackle the federal government.

While I agree with the hon. member for York South concerning the unfortunate effects of unemployment, I believe he could give a hand to his fellow members and especially those from Quebec and try to impress on the population that the federal government has done more than it could possibly do.

[Mr. Laflamme.]

It has been said that federal legislation sometimes favour Quebec sometimes the rest of Canada. Fifteen times more jobs have been created in one province than in another. This depends on the lack of capital and inaction on the part of the government at the provincial level.

It is essential during the following months that unemployment be reduced in our province, as well as in the other provinces where the rate of unemployment is entirely unacceptable. The support of the whole Canadian population is needed, as well as a common front, to preserve unity in the country by supporting the measures deemed essential by the government to ensure security of employment.

[English]

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I, of course, agree with my leader who began by saying that the matter of unemployment is not simply a regional problem. Of course it is not. Nevertheless, in my brief intervention of 15 minutes I shall try to call again for attention to the economic ills of the Atlantic area. To try in 15 minutes to discuss the neglect of a century is a challenge, sir. I wish it were not necessary for us here constantly to bring to the attention of this Parliament the problems of our regions. I would much prefer to be able to point to levels, statistics and satisfactions in the economic life of Atlantic Canada which would equal many of the non-economic aspects which are so much to be cherished in our part of Canada. Yet I do not apologize for declaring and reiterating the needs and inequities of the provinces by the sea. Confederation was a merging and sharing of many things. Certainly, it is a sharing of disadvantages, especially those which the act of confederation itself imposed or made more burdensome.

This country is not truly prosperous if any of its regions, or governments, or its people are seriously disadvantaged as a result of the acts of omission or commission of the national government. The resolution refers to the serious problems in Quebec. We all feel concern about such matters. Surely, all decent people want to help this province in its present travail. In many ways Quebec and Atlantic Canada have similar weaknesses, problems and disadvantages. While there have been dramatic, and sometimes I feel dangerous, reactions in Quebec that have not been in those the provinces by the sea, let us not think that the economic problems that concern us and the disadvantages that exist are less critical, less serious or less blighting than those which for too long have affected and inhibited the province of Quebec. In fact the difference, in a general way, may be that ours, sadly, have been of much longer duration. But because we have become accustomed to the role of being the Cinderella of confederation does not mean that we have grown enamoured of that role. In fact, we have long since grown weary of finding ourselves at the bottom of the favourable economic statistics and heading those which are unfavourable. The fourth report of the Economic Council of Canada set out vividly the continuing and deplorable situation.

I referred the other day to the latest report from APEC, a very important and dedicated body in Atlantic Canada. They pointed out on November 6:

> And the outlook for construction is bleak, with a 30 to 40 per cent fall in the value of construction contracts awarded in the first seven months of the year.
> "Most indications of the business climate in the region in the closing months of 1970 and the first half of 1971 are not good"—
> "Prospects for resurgence from the slowdown of the past few months are not favourable since there are few signs of significant federal or provincial measures to offset the current slowdown."

They go on to say:

> "It may be too late already to avert a severe economic crisis in the region this winter..."

The government of Canada cannot put into effect all remedial measures which are necessary, although I believe and affirm here that the prime responsibility is theirs. Other jurisdictions within the region must also accept their share of responsibility and must be called in for a massive assault upon the problems which for too long have inhibited our growth.

In fairness, I must say that something has been commenced by the government in Ottawa. Since the then Premier Smith of Nova Scotia raised the question of economic disparity to the level of agenda discussion at the Dominion-provincial conference, the question has at least earned a new level of constitutional respectability. What has been accomplished, however, is much less than what has been proclaimed. There has been a great deal of sounding of trumpets, and far too few advances. Plans, programs and projects have been plotted by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, a plethora of them, and of course we all accept the need for planning and innovation. We are not fearful of new techniques and new approaches.

But apart from studies, apart from long range plans, have we had a serious assault on the grave problems facing us now, this fall, this coming winter? The signs are, as I have indicated in the quote from the APEC report and others I could bring to bear, that the winter ahead down east will be once again a winter of discontent. These are grim forecasts. In considering the cold realities of the last many years, none of us is sufficiently optimistic to believe as we would like to believe that these statistical projections will be proven wrong in the actuality.

One especially disturbing and recurring problem is the high incidence of unemployment among the young in our region. It has grown chronic year after year and has been invariably twice the national average. The only reason it is not twice the national average at this moment is that the national figures have gone so bad. That is what happened to the statistics.

How long have we known down there that the basic problem was at its worst for those under 24 years of age, as indicated by the figures that the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) mentioned for the nation. Do we not realize that the figures are deflated somewhat by the constant and eternal outward migration from the region toward Toronto where our young people end up looking for what they think is the promised land, some of them even making the newspaper columns of some slick metropolitan daily which refer to the dispossessed Maritimers who wear white socks? Very clever!

A shocking figure with regard to housing came out the other day. Housing starts in the four Atlantic provinces for the first nine months of this year totalled 3,351, a drop of 39 per cent from the 5,509 starts recorded during the same period last year. In every province there is a drop in the figures relating to this very important matter of housing. There is a serious lagging in the construction industry. There is much that has to be done, much that demands action immediately. While we appreciate the fact that there are some plans under way by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, we ask that attention be given to the problems that face us this fall and this coming winter, before that which has long been bad becomes far worse.

One thing that has always troubled me, as the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) tries to do something for the region—and I believe he is trying—is that there is no pervasion into other departments of the government of the general concept of regional disparty. We find that as he tries to set up long range employment opportunities, some of his colleagues through their departments will be taking measures which result in under-employment and unemployment. Projects are cut off, personnel is diminished. Surely, if we are serious about the question of regional disparity, every department in the government should recognize the fact and govern itself accordingly, so that the dispersion of these disparities, if I may be alliterative, becomes the prime role and high priority of the government.

I think also that we must move quickly for concerted action by all levels of government. We must regionalize our assault upon the problems in the Atlantic provinces. I am doubtful if a Maritime union will come about quickly, but we must, we should and we can have a great deal more co-ordination and co-operation as we assault the massive problems which are shrinking the economy of the provinces by the sea.

I ask again for the government to show a little sensitivity to the immediate problem. I will give an example. In the province of Prince Edward Island there is one industry which is capable of great expansion, namely the tourist industry. It does not require a royal commission to go to the Charlottetown airport and count the number of seats in the aircraft and the number of seats in the terminal building to know that we need an extended airport. One does not need to be a genius to know that in my constituency, which is the smallest in terms of land and much smaller in terms of agricultural production, where we produce a million and a quarter pounds of blueberries, a freezing plant would be a good thing. You do not need a five year plan to realize this.

I can only cite these as some of the immediate aids to solve our economic problems. I bring these problems rather sharply to the attention of my colleagues because the government seems not yet seized of the compelling urgency of our regional problems. I give the government one very practical suggestion. It is one along with those excellent suggestions which my leader put forward, and he knows more about these problems in the Atlantic region than any man in this country. I say that it is time for a renewal, a recreation, a resurrection of the Atlantic adjustment grants.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macquarrie: In the province of Prince Edward Island we have a regional economic expansion plan. I wish it well, but when you see a little province like P.E.I. called upon to put up $2 for every $1 that the national government puts forth, you realize that that is not the kind of planning we need. The ratio should be reversed at least, but better still we should have the kind of thing which was extended in 1957 and 1958, an assistance which would enable the provinces to meet the needs of their people in these days when expanded social services are required. That is one suggestion I put to the government at present—bring forward new Atlantic adjustment grants. Use the same figure as before, but compute it in relation to the increased cost of living and you will see what happens to the $35 million.

We ask, sir, that statistics such as those which came out in the fourth report of the Economic Council of Canada be considered and the terrible economic disparity be diminished. If that is not the job of the national government I do not know what is. Looking at per capita income figures we see that in the province of Ontario the average income is $2,296, in the province of P.E.I. $1,370, and in the province of Newfoundland $1,173. Do we need to talk any more about disparity? If I gave figures for the cost of living, the disparities would be all the more. I call on the government to look seriously at this excellent resolution, thoughtfully worded and carefully presented, and to look very carefully at a place which has known more unemployment, more neglect, and more disparity than any other part of this great land.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Carter)—Fisheries—depletion of marine resources; the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—Canadian National Railways—non-payment of minimum wage—discussion by Minister of Transport with president.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—LABOUR CONDITIONS—POLICIES AND PROGRAMS TO INCREASE EMPLOYMENT—INCREASED UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lewis:

Whereas there has been a relentless climb in the level of unemployment in all regions of Canada, and

Whereas a number of responsible economic authorities have predicted record levels of unemployment this coming winter, and

Whereas, unless special measures are immediately taken, the likelihood of serious increases in the level of unemployment in the Province of Quebec and the City of Montreal will add to an already critical situation,

Therefore, be it resolved that this House calls upon the Government to institute, in co-operation with provinces and municipalities, policies and programs that will increase significantly the number of jobs available this winter and, as a special measure of assistance to those who remain unemployed, to increase both the amount of unemployment benefits and the eligibility period provided by the Unemployment Insurance Commission.

[Translation]

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to support the motion before us and I think that every member normally elected and free from any financial obligation should do the same.

The hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), who has introduced this motion, deserves congratulations because he wanted to draw the attention of the government to the unfortunate situation in which too many Canadians find themselves. The results of this government and of the previous ones are summed up in this motion, which tells quite a different story from that of the Canada Year Book, which gives the interesting side of the economy.

For instance, this valuable book points out the high rate of productivity achieved by wheat and milk producers. A wheat and milk surplus supports this contention. The same book interestingly notes that the country still ranks first as a world exporter of mineral products. Through that book, we learn that Canada remains the main world producer of nickel and zinc, is second for the production of asbestos and uranium and numbers among the great producers of copper, gold, potash, iron, lead and silver. It is also gratifying to learn that Canada comes third among the world producers of various minerals, after the United States and the Soviet Union. The book even says that Canada will become the greatest potash producer of the world. Third largest world producer of aluminum, large producer of oil and natural gas, Canada also meets 40 per cent of the demand for newsprint and asbestos throughout the world.

In spite of the large quantity of raw materials exported at extremely low prices, such as iron which in Quebec has a 50 to 70 per cent dosage, and which sells for 2 cents a ton, we hold a record, namely the equivalent of $850 per capita for exports. This record can mean a lot if it is compared with American exports of $370 per capita and the world average of $171.

In view of these results, how come we have so many poor people?

In our prosperous country, whose production this year will reach about $80 billion, that is $3,800 per person—which is the evidence of an overabundance of products and survival for the whole people—how is it that we tolerate so many people out of work, without income, and with all the resulting want?

How is it that the administration of the luckiest country in the world manages to create enough problems to justify the introduction of the motion before the House today?

How is it that the records I have mentioned a moment ago, have never brought us anything but trouble? Is it that this poor administration is the result of inflation or is it the inflation which is the cause of the poor results which result in an increasing number of victims?

One fine day, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) increased his expense account, and when hard times come he asks for the co-operation of the people by saying: Tighten your belt, we must fight inflation.

But who is responsible for inflation, Mr. Speaker? Has it come in through the back door or the front door? Assuming that the government could not have foreseen it, where have the experts been since 1950? What was the use of all the royal inquiries and task forces?

Is it not a fact that two inquiries were ordered in 1961, one dealing with health services and the other with taxation? It was decided in 1962 to hold an inquiry on banking and finance, and in 1963 another inquiry on bilinguialism and biculturalism was initiated. In 1964 the first report of the Economic Council of Canada was presented to the House. Was it not a statement on Canada's economic goals to 1970?

Since 1965, what have the reports of the Tariff Board been used for?

Since 1966 what steps have been taken following the tabling of the report from the special joint committee on consumer credit?

Since the setting up, in 1966, of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, what measures have been taken to help the consumer?

In 1968, the elections were supposed to solve our economic problems, were they not? Certainly hon. members remember that those economic problems were said to be the result of a minority government. The solution then was to elect a majority government to restore the balance. And now, where is this marvelous balance that this government was supposed to maintain? In 1970, what will the Prices and Incomes Commission, created in 1969, bring us? Will it explain why Canadians should tighten their belts even more when their Prime Minister is increasing his expense account?

What was the use of these commissions and inquiries but to create new jobs for some friends of the government?

Since 1950, 106 commissions gave us to understand that studies were made. However, one thing is sure: those commissions have cost $69,931,417.08.

That is the amount mentioned in a return tabled on October 22, 1969 in answer to motion No. 2685 in the name of the hon. member for Kamouraska (Mr. Dionne).

In the field of agriculture, for instance, four commissions which cost $1,255,000 did nothing more than to point to a glut of milk and wheat quite enough money has been spent just to learn that we have over produced.

Three commissions on finance have cost $1,865,000. They were charged to find, the means of hiding from the Canadian people the real causes of rising living costs. For the government only finance, the glorious, the devine finance, has priority.

Compared with the wishes and profits of finance, the life and the labour of the citizens are of very little importance. The life of the citizens is disregarded, their labour is overlooked and finance always comes first.

Citizens die, workers are unemployed, but finance brings profits. We remember that up to March 1967, the interest rate was frozen for banks, which are now authorized to lend ten times the amount of money they have.

We remember also that the wish of those banks to have this ceiling removed was fulfilled on March 22, 1967, when the Liberal government passed the act which freed them from those restrictions.

The results were not long in coming. Just have a look at some reports from those banks.

In the newspaper La Presse, for instance, on the 27th of November, 1967, we could read:

> 26.1 per cent increase in the holdings of the Bank of Nova Scotia.
> The final yield, a significant indicator of returns, reached—$3.30 per share—

When you know that the par value of the shares is $2, you cannot help finding out that the business is quite interesting.

The following applies to September 1969, and I quote:

> Increased earnings—Toronto Dominion Bank
> Final yields for the third quarter, before assigning losses and taxes, increased by 25.3 per cent—

The same newspaper also reports as follows:

> Total assets of the Bank of Montreal increased by 21 per cent.
> Net operating earnings of the Bank of Montreal, for nine months to the end of July, maintained the growth rate achieved in the first quarter of the current year; they are 33.1 per cent higher than earnings in the corresponding period last year.

The La Presse dated March 4, 1970, reported as follows:

> Net gains of 33.7 cents per Royal Bank share in the first quarter.

And here is what we could read in Quebec l'Action on June 19, 1970:

> Gains of leading Canadian banks . . . increased by 27 per cent.

The rest of the article said that in comparison with last year, the "champion" had been the Bank Canadian National whose assets increased by 60 per cent, followed by the Royal Bank whose assets were 42 per cent higher.

Thus, banks beat their own records. More and more, they pick in the pockets of people, with the results we know. Under the present legislation, indeed, a bank may get 9 per cent interest on $1,600, while it can loan that amount after a deposit of only $100 is made in an account. One has to admit that as an investment yield, it is hard to do any better.

There is also at the present time a housing shortage. In my opinion, slums should be cleared and rebuilt. We know that home building is an important factor as far as labour is concerned and that the financing of a house at lower interest rates would promote that sector of our economy.

The government which encourages certain countries by extending to them credit facilities at low interest rates should extend the same facilities to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation which could then meet the requests of customers interested in borrowing at less than 9⅜ per cent.

In my opinion, a new start in housing construction does not require a miracle. It is merely a question of doing for Canada what we do for other countries. Since the 11 percent tax on building materials is never charged on products shipped to other countries, I suggest that it be cancelled also in Canada and that instead a 10 percent discount be granted on all materials sold in this country.

In order to assist this government pull the people out of the present crisis, I feel that there is another area worth considering, and that is our merchant navy.

When one sees that Canada does not own more than two merchant ships, whereas Sweden, with a population comparable with that of Quebec, owns a fleet comprising 1,092 units, one cannot help wondering.

When we know that during the years 1875-1880 our country ranked fourth among those that had a merchant marine, it seems queer to see our lakes and rivers deserted now.

If theoretically I am against royal inquiries, knowing the present condition of our merchant marine I would be in favour of initiating one in order to determine who has stolen our ships from us.

All the countries of the world, even those with less shoreline than Canada, take much pride in building and operating ocean-going cargoes.

Considering that our country has 59,670 miles of shoreline—nearly three times the circumference of the earth, the longest shoreline in the world—and that we have tremendous quantities of oil, grain, paper, wood, ore, asbestos, stone, granite and other merchandise to transport towards the great international markets, I endorse the recommendations by the CNTU as follows:

> Build an ocean-going merchant fleet designed to carry at least from 40 to 50 per cent of our exports and imports.
> Increase subsidies to Canadian shipbuilding so that Canadian shipping companies may order new ships at prices comparable with those they would pay in the United Kingdom.
> Adopt legislation favouring in concrete ways Canadian shipowners, seamen, shipyard workers and all manufacturing industries supplying material and equipment.
> Promote replacement of obsolete ships with speedy cargoes that can face foreign competition.
> Change the Navigation Act of 1934 to take into account present conditions of sea transport.
> Denounce the Commonwealth Navigation Convention (1931) and abolish the extraordinary privileges granted to those countries in order to protect our shipowners against competition from ships carrying the flags of the Commonwealth countries.
> Levy a 50 per cent tax on repairs, purchases of ocean-going ships or equipment made in foreign countries, except in cases of emergency.
> Restrict exclusively to ships registered and built in Canada and to really Canadian undertakings the use of our coastal and interior waters.
> We ask for the immediate construction of a powerful ocean-going merchant fleet, by and for Canadians, to carry at least part of the foreign trade of Canada.

With regard to another matter, there are two quite important groups of Canadians who are neglected: manufacturers of textiles and of shoes.

The government pretends that it just became aware of the situation and in order to improve it a Commission was established. Mr. Speaker, I already doubt its result since if the government had been wiser and more responsible, it would have referred a long time ago to the figures of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics and it would have gotten itself acquainted with recommendations contained in briefs presented by executives of the textile industry.

But the government does not care for these briefs, whether they originate from the textile industry or other industries.

I have in hand a letter dated December 12, 1966, addressed to the government by the Canadian Footwear Manufacturers Association. This is what it says:

> Herewith a copy of a brief that we addressed to the Canadian Customs Tariffs and Trade Committee in order to inform the members of this Committee of the serious situation in which the footwear industry finds itself now.
> This brief is the fifth that we have sent to the Committee since May 15, 1964 and as you can notice, footwear exports are still increasing at an alarming rate.

Since then, this organization has been submitting briefs at a rate of about two each year, nearly always along the same lines, and as early as 1966 it was said that:

> Importation of footwear from low-wage countries and Communist states accounted for 47 per cent of our domestic production in 1966.

In order to help the Canadian shoe industry increase the number of jobs instead of reducing them, it is essential that the representatives of our government do not grant any tariff concessions in the trade discussions provided for under the Kennedy plan.

It is realized today that, under the Kennedy plan, some importers have been favoured by certain tariff changes.

Mr. Speaker, they have waited for the stores and warehouses to overflow, for plants to close their doors, and for thousands of workers to be unemployed, and now they hire three persons: Mr. Annis from Ottawa, Mr. St-Laurent, well known in Quebec political circles, and a person named Campbell.

Mr. Speaker, even if the name of the latter appears on soup cans, I still think that this commission's conclusions will be "for the birds".

Again, the government must stop questioning the value—

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but I must advise him that his time has now expired.

• (5:20 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, let me say at the outset that all of us share a desire to provide more assistance for the unemployed. I am sure that none of us would claim to have a monopoly on good will toward those who are seeking employment or who have lost jobs because of economic vicissitudes.

As the motion before us indicates, this is not the responsibility of any one level of government. It is not the responsibility of the federal government alone, of municipal government alone or of provincial government alone. Indeed, the responsibility to combat the current unsatisfactory levels of unemployment in society cannot be confined to government alone and it is fair to say that it goes beyond government. The responsibility extends to all organized and unorganized groups and to the entire population of the country.

For example, the great trade union movement has a responsibility to provide leadership to find satisfactory solutions to the problem of unemployment. Management, similarly, has a responsibility. Those in our farm community have a similar responsibility. Another point has been made very clear by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) over the past two years. He has emphasized repeatedly that the job of managing the economy in this country involves the balancing of alternatives and designing policies which are not only satisfactory in the short run but are likely to achieve the best over-all results.

I have been in the House all afternoon and have listened to the speeches of opposition spokesmen. I have been profoundly disappointed by some of the speeches by these members who would like to replace the present government. I commend certain opposition members for their acutely developed powers of hindsight. As well, some of them have told us what is wrong, without providing solutions. I have a pamphlet which was written by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) in 1943. This eloquent member has been an author in his day. He defined all the problems at that time. He said "we must increase wage levels," "destroy the control of monopolies," "provide guarantees for security," "abandon colonialism" and "bring dignity and a racial harmony to Canada." But not a suggestion as to how. It is strange that after so many years in public life this man still fails to advance specific ideas and solutions to the problem of unemployment and other difficulties which beset our economy. His ability to provide original ideas is as elusive as the quest for the mother lode or as elusive as a piece of pork in a can of pork and beans.

What was the "solution" which he advanced today? He started by saying that we should begin our fight against unemployment by scheduling a federal-provincial-municipal conference. That idea is hardly revolutionary. And then we heard from the financial spokesman for the official opposition. He said the situation in the Maritimes is very difficult and that this government does not have an understanding of the unemployment situation there. He is suffering from at least one type of myopia or loss of memory.

In 1958, when the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) was Premier of Nova Scotia there was a Conservative government in Ottawa. The rates of Maritime unemployment in Nova Scotia were 11.2 per cent in 1958, 11.1 per cent in 1959, 10.6 in 1960 and 12.1 in 1961. We must not forget the history of this country. Those who advance easy solutions in this debate should be aware of the fact that when they had responsibility for government they were not able to provide easy solutions.

I will not spend a great deal of time on the first part of the motion. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) in his policy statement of October 13 and in reply to questions since then has reviewed the alternatives which confront the government at this time. Stated in its essence, this government, like all governments, has to make choices. It has had to make some basic decisions to get the most permanent results out of the limited amount of new funds which it can divert to government purposes—to direct as many additional resources as possible to measures which will benefit permanently the growth of the economy.

Last June the Minister of Finance announced accelerated and increased payments to the provinces in the amount of $75 million. In addition, $150 million remaining to be spent under the technical and vocational school training program are to be disbursed to the provinces in this fiscal year and the fiscal year 1971-72. On October 13 the Minister of Finance concluded that "the effect of these measures was to add $150 million to our budgetary requirements and $150 million to our non-budgetary requirements, or $300 million in all—a very considerable figure."

At the time of that policy speech the minister further announced that he would "ask the approval of Parliament for the expenditure"—this figure should be borne in mind when we talk in terms of increasing unemployment benefits on a temporary basis—"of an additional $60 million to be directed very specifically to the allevia-tion of unemployment where the unemployment conditions are especially severe." This is being done. "Just under a third of this sum would be used by the Department of Manpower and Immigration in an extension of its manpower training program." Many of the programs involved in the $60 million are under way and new jobs are being created as a result of the funds which were allocated last spring and a month ago.

It is not correct to say that the government has been callously standing by while the unemployed have been suffering. The government has been investing enormous amounts of public money in programs which will give permanent benefits to the unemployed. The government is not merely adding a few dollars and saying its responsibility ends there; it has consciously designed programs to ensure that people will have employment on a continuing basis. In the Pacific region, where my home is, actual allowance payments and other training payments paid by Canada Manpower centres in 1968-69 alone amounted to $8,502,592—a substantial amount of money. This could mean not only long-term benefits for those who are unemployed—but long-term work opportunities and life incomes.

It is important to stress at this point the results which the government's fiscal and monetary measures have achieved. Consumer prices are now beginning to stabilize, as indicated by the fact that the consumer price index has remained stable for the last three months—not an insignificant fact. Investment and residential construction have risen to the point where housing starts are at a rate unprecedented in the history of this country. There is no need to emphasize further the very substantial reduction in interest rates which has taken place at all levels and in particular by the Banks of Canada.

It is strange how many critics blossom forth on the subject of so-called tight money and how little they say when those interest rates begin to decrease and the prime rate of interest eases. The silence is, to coin a phrase, "underwhelming." Yet, this process has been continuing for the past seven months but there has not been one acknowledgement today from the official opposition, although they should rejoice with us and the rest of Canada that interest rates are coming down. These are some of the positive results of the government's policy.

My main purpose for entering the debate is to discuss the second part of the motion which refers to increasing the amount of unemployment insurance benefits. All of us can understand the impatience which this motion implies. I can assure hon. members that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) shares their desire to increase unemployment insurance benefits at the earliest possible date. The government has been urged to do this. Countless editorials have urged the minister to initiate action to bring about immediate temporary increases in unemployment insurance. There have been many communications from the public since the white paper on unemployment insurance was tabled in this House on June 17, 1970. Yet, as has been indicated, one must deploy as effectively and as beneficially as possible the limited funds available to the government at this time.

This does not constitute the main reason why the government sees certain difficulties in attempts to increase unemployment insurance benefits at this time. It is important to realize that there are no precedents for raising benefits without raising contributions or, in other words, for raising benefits out of general revenue. Hon. members know that one of the main purposes of the Canada Assistance Plan is to provide supplementary assistance to the unemployed. In fact, one of the original elements of the Canada Assistance Plan was the Unemployment Assistance Act of 1956. There are still agreements by some provinces that are carried out under the terms of the Unemployment Assistance Act.

The minister and the government realize that by many Canadians unemployment insurance or assistance in any direct form is labelled welfare and has a bad connotation. I shall not attempt to identify the reasons for this, but hon. members should be reminded that this form of providing for the unemployed, where there is a basic insurance program supplemented by an assistance program, is the normal pattern in most European countries and in the United States. Be that as it may, no one on this side will deny the need for bringing unemployment insurance benefits up to date. This is certainly one of the basic reasons for the white paper which the Minister of Labour presented last June.

During the consideration of the white paper proposals there has been some excellent co-operation from some hon. members on the opposition side. I think it has been a very useful exercise indeed. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and others have made a constructive contribution to this dialogue. I think they appreciate more than anyone else how earnest the government is in its desire to bring in unemployment insurance reforms.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Perrault: I was dismayed to hear the hon. member for York South criticize the preliminary remarks of the Minister of Labour. He suggested there had been a less than frank disposition on the part of the minister to use certain unemployment figures correctly. This is the same Minister of Labour who has expressed his deep concern about the unemployed in the words of his white paper:

> People such as the hired hand on a wheat farm in Alberta; the fisherman casting his nets for cod off the banks of Newfoundland; the young Gaspé-born clerk working by day in a large corporation and taking college courses at night; the newly-arrived immigrant who knows little English or French and possesses few skills, but who is determined to make his way in a complex Canadian city such as Toronto or Montreal.

And then:

> The rewards of economic growth should be directed not only toward the individuals who have had the opportunity for a good education, a well paid job, a two-car garage and a home in the country. They are also for the widow or divorcee who has to raise her children alone on minimum wages earned working long hours in an inner-city garment factory; for the youth who has had to drop out of school to help his family and now finds his particular skill is no longer needed in a sophisticated economy; and for the man over 40 who is jobless, not because he is untrained, but because in our youth-oriented society he is considered too old.

The minister went on to say:

In the 70s, it is fully expected that temporary unemployment will be a possibility for a broader spectrum of the Canadian work force than ever before.

Some of the figures which have been placed before us today reflect the minister's views—these figures, which disturb members of all parties, reflect the widespread technological displacement of labour in this country. This is precisely one of the reasons we need the wide-ranging reforms in unemployment insurance which were brought into the House by the Minister of Labour—the minister who has been criticized unfairly, in my view, this afternoon. It is to be hoped all members of the House realize that no new program of the magnitude of the new unemployment insurance program can be put into effect without a great deal of thought and planning, and that it would be wrong to set aside the far-reaching and comprehensive plan now under review in favour of stopgap, short-term modifications. Surely the present arrangements require something more than patchwork. They must be replaced by an over-all plan which will provide new and meaningful benefits for the work force.

The plan which is now before the House and, specifically, before the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, is the product of two years of hard work and planning by the government. Yes, and now with the co-operation of government and opposition members. Of those two years, close to six months was required to review and approve the proposal in all its aspects, to write the white paper, print it and distribute it. The government in no way apologizes for the time required to achieve an adequate public understanding of the white paper and to enable Canadians to express their views. Additional time has been required for this review by the public and by the House committee. Certainly, the work of the Standing Committee under the able chairmanship of the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Weatherhead) deserves commendation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault) who sits with me on the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, presently dealing with unemployment insurance, has missed the purport of the motion before the House. The first part of the preamble to that motion reads:

Whereas there has been a relentless upward climb in the level of unemployment in all regions of Canada—

I do not think the hon. member will disagree with that. The motion continues:

Whereas a number of responsible economic authorities have predicted record levels of unemployment this coming winter—

I believe the hon. member will agree with that, too. Then there is a third paragraph, one which is of some concern to me, I should like to discuss it as it applies to the province of Quebec, the city of Hamilton and, indeed, to all regions. One thing which puzzles me is that a country which is so rich in resources, so rich in technical know-how, so industrially advanced and served by so many employable people who wish to work, should find itself in a position calling for a motion such as we have before us today.

I am not saying the government has intentionally and heartlessly followed a program designed to bring about the present state of affairs, but I do say the government is proving itself complacent and apathetic in the face of it. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) told us that he had been concerned ever since the sixties by the trend which showed there was an acceleration of inflation to an extent which threatened not only Canadian economic development but Canadian unity itself. It seems to me that rising unemployment also threatens not only the stability of our economy but the stability of the whole nation. A balance must be maintained. At present the scale seems to tipping away from the government in this regard.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) takes an attitude which can only be called complacent and apathetic. The Premier of Ontario says rising unemployment has been deliberately brought about by policies adopted in Ottawa. The answer given by the Prime Minister some time ago spoke of unemployment as being a regrettable side effect of government fiscal and monetary policy. Surely we must take note of the disastrous side effects of this policy on those unable to combat it successfully. I think it is time the government reassessed the regrettable side effects of its fiscal and monetary policies.

An editorial which appeared on Wednesday in the Toronto Telegram of October 11 stated:

In Quebec we are seeing how social unrest caused in part by chronically high unemployment has been a root cause of political extremism. If regional unemployment goes unsolved elsewhere no one can be sure violence will not be tried again in other parts of Canada.

It appears to me that the government is ignoring the frustration of the old, the anger of the young, the hopelessness of the poverty-stricken and the frustrated incentive of employables. It seems to me that the prospects of revolution will be determined to some extent by the social and economic status achieved by the groups I have just mentioned. It seems to me that we have been dealing with the effects. We must not let the War Measures Act and the temporary emergency powers bill cloud our vision and turn us away from a study of the causes. One has only to look back over the past couple of weeks to a policy adopted by politicians in the country to the south of us who tried to emphasize the need for law and order, a policy that was not accepted by the vast majority of Americans. They were more concerned, as I have often said, with the nuts and bolts, nitty-gritty issues, one of which of prime importance is unemployment.

We have found that those politicians who concentrated on attempting to alleviate the horrendous suffering from unemployment were, generally speaking, successful. It has been projected that this winter, out of a labour force of about 8,400,000 there will be a vast army of 750,000 to 800,000 men and women making a frustrating and disillusioning struggle for economic survival. In the Atlantic provinces the projected figure of unemployment is 18 per cent, in Quebec 12 per cent and Ontario is sneaking up to 6 per cent.

Donald MacDonald, president of the Canadian Labour Congress, has said that as far as he is concerned unemployment this winter will be around 9 per cent, or 750,000 people. It does not matter to the man who is unemployed whether we talk about the seasonally adjusted rate, the unadjusted rate or any other rate; all he is concerned with is that he will be one of the 750,000 people out of work in and around the month of February. This is the situation to which we should direct our attention. What disturbs me is that the Prime Minister has indicated that such a rate has not been predicted by any responsible source.

Mr. Olson: Stick to the facts.

Mr. Alexander: I repeat what was said by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis). He put on record some responsible views on this matter. For example, he mentioned Mr. Forrest Rogers, who is an economic adviser to the Bank of Nova Scotia. Mr. Rogers said that unemployment would be around 8½ per cent but he would not argue that we could not reach 9 per cent or even go beyond. Reference was also made to Professor Sidney Ingerman, a labour economist at McGill University, who said that the actual rate of unemployment nationally will be in the area of 9 per cent. The hon. member did not remember the prediction of Premier Ed Schreyer, but according to my information he predicted an annual unemployment rate of 9 per cent.

The Lord above did not give all the brains to members on the other side of the House. Many members of the House as well as people without the confines of this grand chamber have sufficient expertise and economic background to challenge the government and its bureaucrats. My leader referred to the unemployment figures, actual and adjusted, between the years 1960 and 1970. I should like to refer to another responsible paper, the Financial Times, which last month suggested that if this pattern of increasing unemployment, be it seasonally adjusted or actual, is not reversed, by February and March of 1971 there will be a rate of unemployment of 9 per cent to 10 per cent, or more than 750,000 Canadians out of work.

Reference was made to the rate of unemployment, adjusted and actual, in 1961. These figures led in 1962 to an actual rate of unemployment of 8.5 per cent in January, 9.1 per cent in February and 8.7 per cent in March. Therefore, unless the present pattern is reversed one can easily accept the statement that we might have 750,000 people out of work this winter or even as many as one million.

I see my time is running out. This has been a constructive debate. The hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour said that the NDP had nothing to say. Perhaps I am wrong and it was another member who said that the NDP had nothing constructive to say. I ask hon. members to refer to the speech made by the hon. member for York South, wherein he placed before the government many constructive ideas. In addition, I emphasize the points that were made by the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield).

When one listens to members who come from slow-growth regions of Canada, one must remember that Canada is divided into five economic sectors. These divisions are the Atlantic provinces, Quebec, Ontario, the Prairies and British Columbia. These regions differ in terms of employment, rates of growth and composition of output. I do not think the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson), who is looking at me, would disagree with that. I should like to know why the government implements policies meant for the over-all good of the country but which nevertheless have disastrous effects on certain regions.

In closing, may I say that this motion is an important one. We must continually press the government to take responsibility for this situation, because the projected level of unemployment for February and March of next year is unacceptable. I return to my original premise, that we must concern ourselves not so much with the effects as with the causes of revolutionary movement. Revolutionaries prey upon the discontented. They prey upon those who are without proper housing, those who feel there is no room for them in our established, democratic way of life. It does not matter to me how many of these people there are; as long as our programs are not geared to assist those who are frustrated, in my view we are in for trouble.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair. The House will meet again at 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

---

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. James Hugh Faulkner (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the debate so far has ranged rather loosely over various forms of criticism directed at the government's monetary and fiscal policies. I think it can probably be reduced to simply a judgment of our timing or fine tuning, to use the words of Milton Friedman. Basically, it is reduced to a matter of judgment as to the wisdom of the timing or fine tuning of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) versus the allegedly more accurate and more refined tuning of those opposite.

There has been little offered in support of the contention that their handling of the situation would have been any better. I shall not get into that area because it does not seem to be one that is very effectively dealt with by the opposition.

I should like to come to grips with what is, surely, part of the problem in respect of unemployment and specifically an industry which is of central importance to our economy, an industry that has over the past few years been living in a state of siege beleaguered by imports from low-wage countries, an industry which in my view should be a key sector of our economy, with policy developed accordingly. I am referring to the electrical industry. I propose to deal with it in two sections. I should like to relate the position of the electrical industry to two policy statements which have come from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, both of which I concur with and both of which I consider to be directly relevant to the situation in which the electrical industry finds itself. These statements offered some hope of reprieve from what otherwise might have been a very damaging and potentially dangerous situation.

I do not have to remind you, Mr. Speaker, of the importance of this industry because you know it as well as I. You know the range of engineers, draftsmen, workers and scientists employed by the industry and you are aware of the level of research and development carried out by it. You know its record in the field of nuclear research and atomic power development. Right now it faces some very serious threats.

I want first of all to deal with the potential problem of offshore concessional financing, specifically as this relates to mining contracts and projects. I am speaking specifically of the Iron Ore Company of Canada in the Sept Îles area and other mining projects which might also be affected by the situation in respect of offshore concessional financing. I begin by referring to a statement made by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) in the House on May 26, 1970, which appears in Hansard at page 7319. It was a statement on Motions under the heading "Announcement of program to alleviate adverse impact of concessional financing by foreign governments".

The minister in his statement recognized clearly that the manufacturing industry had been making representations to the government concerning what it considered to be highly attractive financing terms available to their competitors abroad. In his statement at page 7319, the minister on behalf of the government said:

> The government is satisfied that in several instances the availability to foreign manufacturers of export credit at lower rates of interest has resulted in substantial loss of business to individual Canadian companies which otherwise would have been competitive in price, performance and delivery.

The minister went on to recognize the difficulties or dangers involved in a full-scale credit race and concluded, prior to stating his policy recommendations, with this statement:

> —the government has decided to take a number of steps designed to mitigate the adverse impact of foreign government financing of exports to Canada which causes injury to Canadian industry.

He went on to mention four proposals, one of which relates to the invocation of the provision of the anti-dumping act. He said:

> First, Canada will use all available means consistent with its international obligations to curtail foreign government financing of exports to Canada in cases where it causes material injury to Canadian industry. In this context, consideration will be given to invoking the provisions of the anti-dumping act in specific cases.

One of the steps he suggests the government should take involves closer co-operation with the OECD to work out arrangements in respect of concessional financing in trade between developing countries. He raises other points and emphasizes certain proposals to deal with this problem.

I think all of us in this House strongly support the position outlined by the minister on May 26. All of us, particularly those who represent ridings which have industrial manufacturers within their boundaries, realize the importance of this statement. It so happens that right now one of the important industries, namely, the electrical industry, is faced with the prospect of offshore concessional financing which, if not matched by a Canadian equivalent, could lead to the loss of a large number of jobs related to mining projects in Quebec. I have in mind jobs that could be handled by Canadian manufacturers who are totally competitive. These jobs could be lost simply because the accounting is wrong, because offshore concessional financing is not matched by an equivalent in this country.

I refer specifically to the Iron Ore Company of Canada and a project there which could involve some $200 million. The part of the project which could be handled by Canadian manufacturers in the electrical sector amounts to at least $15 million, and the part in the mechanical sector—such as pelletizing equipment, grinding mills, etc.—probably runs in the area of $60 million. Canadian manufacturers are competitive in every sense of the word, in these particular areas and probably in others. At least in these areas there is no question at all about competitiveness. But there are competitive United States suppliers who would have available to them, through concessional financing, terms which could make the Iron Ore Company of Canada lean toward United States suppliers rather than toward Canadian suppliers.

What this mean in terms of jobs, and in this debate we are concerned about unemployment, I can only guess. My guess would be that in the electrical sector it would probably mean 750 man-years, but in terms of related industries such as steel and aluminum, plus the service industries, that figure could probably be tripled. This is a specific contract in respect of the Iron Ore Company of Canada where concessional financing is being offered, but there are other companies in respect of which it is not yet offered. However, if concessional financing is not matched in this case,—all subsequent contracts may well be affected.

My point is that until the principles laid down in the statement of May 26 are enforced by general agreement, or until through co-operation and consultation with the OECD ground rules are laid down governing concessional financing between developed countries, we in this country must match the sort of concessional financing that threatens the manufacturing sector. This clearly is not in our interest in the long term because it would become a full-scale credit war, which benefits no one. But until comparable terms can be made available or until agreement can be reached, we must offer comparable terms.

I am aware that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Finance know about this situation. The guideline in the May 26 statement is there and it becomes critical that through a consortium of our chartered banks comparable terms be offered so that Canadian manufacturers can compete with their United States equivalent. Otherwise the jobs involved, the technology, the drafting, the engineering and the whole range of skills in general will be lost to our competitors in the United States.

I see that I am running short of time. The second point I should like to raise concerns the Canadian electrical industry generally. It seems to me that what is needed now, and what has been argued for for some time, is a general review by the federal government and by the provincial governments—because some of their agencies are utilizers of electrical equipment, particularly the power utilities—plus the Canadian Electrical Manufacturers Association and the trade unions involved, such as the United Electrical Workers and others.

There should be a review of government policy as it affects the Canadian electrical industry. There are two fundamental facts available to anyone who reviews the situation. The first is that the industry has not realized its full growth potential. Second, areas of the industry are under a state of siege. In today's Globe and Mail there is an announcement to the effect that Philips Electronics Industries Limited of Toronto will close down its division. We have known that the Marconi Company has laid off 800 and intends to lay off another 700. The Canadian General Electric plant at Rexdale, and other companies, are involved in lay-offs.

This is an important sector of the industry which has employed a large number of Canadians and Canadian skills. As I said earlier, areas of the industry are in a state of siege. I think the only possible approach at this stage is not to try to balance out a particular sector in an ad hoc way, but to review the total electrical industry and make a decision concerning its importance to our economy. My argument is that this is a key sector of the economy whose importance should be assessed from the point of view of the technology it contributes, the engineering it contributes, the employment it provides and the growth potential it offers and its relevance to a science-based economy. On that basis I believe it can be declared an industry of national importance and one in respect of which a policy should be developed to ensure that its growth potential is developed.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw your attention to the textiles policy. The textiles policy is one which everyone cannot help but support. It is one of the most intelligent pieces of government initiative in the field of industrial policy which I have observed. What were the reasons for the review? I quote from the statement on textiles policy as follows:

> Firstly, major and fundamental changes in world technology, production and market demand are creating a new competitive situation ... Secondly, present policy designed to cope with the problem of "low-cost" imports have become increasingly difficult to administer. This has led to delays and uncertainties which have resulted in severe disruption and hardship to producers and workers.
> Thirdly, the textile companies, the unions and the provinces have expressed concern about the adequacy of the present policy in terms of future investments and employment in the industry ...

The position of the textile companies applies equally to the electrical companies. I suggest that the reasons for the review of textiles policy are on all fours with the situation about which we complain today in the electrical industry. The reason this very intelligent, progressive and in many ways imaginative textiles policy was evolved applies equally to the electrical industry.

In conclusion, I wish to repeat the electrical industry is basic and central to our economy. I consider others to be important, but the electrical industry has been in a state of siege from Japan, Hong Kong and a whole range of low-wage countries. The purpose of my intervention tonight is to stress the importance of this industry and the importance of a government policy vis-à-vis the industry. For these reasons I have raised the question and I hope the government will reappraise its policies regarding this particular industry.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I find the speech of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour, the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault), and the speech of the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Faulkner) interesting because both hon. members scold our party for moving this resolution. The hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour said we have offered nothing constructive and that there are more people working now than ever before. He ignores the fact that unemployment in Canada is higher than it has been for a dozen or more years, and that unemployment in British Columbia in October of 1970 was 69,000, compared with 40,000 in October of last year.

The hon. member for Peterborough says our criticism of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) is one of fine tuning. He disagrees as to when certain measures should be taken and then proceeds to lecture the minister about circumstances in the electrical industry. I agree with him, but why does he say this situation applies particularly to the electrical industry? It is a very large employer in his constituency and therefore he makes representations on behalf of the industry. I do not blame him.

We are not concerned only with the electrical industry. We are concerned about the high rate of unemployment throughout this country. It is now agreed by experts in federal and provincial governments, in the business community, in labour circles, among economists and in the academic community that the prospects for higher unemployment are now very great and that heavy unemployment will continue, not just through the winter but into and possibly through the whole of 1971.

• (8:20 p.m.)

I say to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour, who said that we had nothing concrete to offer, that we have said for the last two years that in choosing to make the increasing cost of living a more important issue than rising unemployment the government was making the wrong choice and we would wind up with both a higher cost of living and higher unemployment. In fact, we have been proven correct, as have the academic economists who have argued to that effect even longer than we have.

A very conservative estimate of the situation, made by a leading academic economist who I saw about a week ago, is that we will have this winter a seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment of more than 7 per cent and that the picture for the whole of 1971 will run at not less than 6 per cent, seasonally adjusted. Unemployment in Canada rose from 314,000 last year to 419,000 in October of 1970. That is an increase of 33-1/3 per cent. It is little comfort to the 419,000 unemployed to tell them that more people are working than ever before; it does not help them to meet the bills they have to pay in order to live.

In Quebec, unemployment rose from 135,000 in October of last year to 159,000 in October of this year. The economist whom I have consulted estimates that unemployment in January of 1971 will be 789,000 and in February of 1971 it will be 811,000—9.8 per cent of the labour force, or a seasonally adjusted rate of 7.2 per cent. That is not very far from the calculations which Mr. MacDonald, president of the Canadian Labour Congress, made recently and which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) derided so stridently the other day.

What do these national unemployment figures mean? We have been spending most of the time since the House reconvened this fall discussing the problems of Quebec. Every Member of Parliament is concerned about the violence, the bombings and the kidnappings with which Quebec has been afflicted. We in this party who have been critical of the government's reaction to the events in Quebec, and who have been told that we do not understand Quebec because we do not have a Member of Parliament from that province—and of course we do not—do know that a seasonally adjusted unemployment rate of 7 per cent nationally means 9 per cent unemployment in Quebec.

Quebec has consistently had 20 per cent to 50 per cent higher unemployment than the Canadian average and an unemployment rate about twice as high as that of the province of Ontario. Quebec, which contains 25 per cent of the Canadian population, has consistently had about 40 per cent of the unemployment. When you realize that four out of ten unemployed people in Quebec are under 25 years of age, you appreciate the dimensions of the problem.

The Prime Minister recently said in a television interview that one of his main objectives was to get the people of Quebec to choose between federalism and separatism. I say—and I say it with a good deal of regret—that given the unemployment among young people which I have mentioned, it is not surprising that the young people of Quebec in the last election seemed to opt so heavily for the Parti Quebecois. If we want to do something to maintain federalism, it is not good enough to say, as the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance have said so often, that heavier unemployment is just one of the side effects we have to face in dealing with the problem of rising costs.

What about the future of Quebec? Mr. Bourassa in his election campaign promised that he would produce 100,000 new jobs by the end of 1971. But this year only 3,000 new jobs were produced in the province of Quebec, compared with the fact which was pointed out by Dion Cohen, who writes a column in the Toronto Star every week, that in each of the next ten years the Quebec labour market will grow by 75,000 workers a year.

To cut unemployment in Quebec to 6 per cent, which is still intolerably high, Quebec would need to attract about $7 billion in investment every year for the next ten years. That is a goal hopelessly out of the reach of that province, on the basis of past performance, without very great assistance from the federal government. Yet we have a federal government which is concerned about federalism and simply says, "We cannot do anything about Quebec or about unemployment because we have to deal with higher prices."

The large increase in unemployment has meant sharp increases in welfare costs in cities in every province of Canada. It is true that half the costs are paid by the federal government, but this is of little consolation to hard-pressed taxpayers at the municipal level. Every city and every province in Canada which budgeted for sharply increased welfare costs this year has found that despite those increases in the estimates, they put much too little into their budgets to meet the increased costs of welfare. The skyrocketing costs of welfare are to a large extent the result of rising unemployment.

We have been told we have offered nothing concrete in the way of programs to deal with the problem of unemployment. As I indicated earlier, that of course is not true. We have said for the last two years at least that it is impossible for Canada to do much about the rising cost of living when inflation has gripped every country in the western world. Canada buys more from the United States and sells more to that country than any other country with which we deal, and when the U.S. is gripped by inflation it is simply nonsense to think that we can check inflation in Canada.

We warned the government that its policy of restraint and deflation would mean higher unemployment and difficult living conditions for the working poor and those on fixed incomes such as pensions and welfare. This, of course, is what has happened. We have been saying all along, and will continue to say, that if the government has to choose between full employment and a gradually rising cost of living, or no increase in the cost of living and heavy unemployment, it should opt for full employment. That is what we would have done and that is precisely the policy the government of Canada rejected, basing its policy on the advice it received from the head of the Bank of Canada, the Deputy Minister of Finance and the chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission. They opted for restraint and we are suffering as a result.

Provincial governments are becoming concerned. A few days ago the Conservative Premier of Ontario, Mr. Robarts, made it clear he was going to consider what programs his government could initiate in order to put people to work in that province. On October 30 the government of Manitoba announced a program to alleviate as much as possible the heavy unemployment expected in that province. It will draw on the $74 million capital fund placed in its estimates as a reserve against unemployment. It will go ahead as quickly as possible with a program to build schools, improve its university, provide public housing and a host of other projects. It expects to be able to gainfully employ in the neighbourhood of 10 per cent of those expected to be unemployed this winter.

We urge the government of Canada to join with the provinces and not wait for the provinces to come forward with proposals. The government should call a conference. That does not sound very revolutionary and in fact it is not; it is too late to be revolutionary about employment for this winter. The government should call a conference with the provinces at which the larger cities would be represented, to see what programs they have ready and to see what the federal government can do to finance those programs.

It is not good enough to say that we have more people working than ever before. It is not good enough to say that the percentage of unemployment is less than it was. The fact remains that this winter we will have 800,000 people unemployed; we will have a higher unemployment rate than any other industrialized country. That is something of which all Members of Parliament, regardless of party affiliation, ought to be ashamed. I close by urging the government to change its priorities, to make full employment a more urgent objective that the illusory goal for which it has been striving, that of holding the line on rising costs—a goal that can only be achieved and has only been achieved at the expense of the poor people of this country.

[Translation]

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, I spent the whole day listening with the greatest possible attention to the remarks of my hon. colleagues, and I come to the conclusion that though many of their arguments were brilliant, they have said countless useless things. Were businessmen from the various parts of the country—company directors, for instance—to attend our debates, they would be shocked to hear us jabbering away for days on end, to solve such matters as that before the House. They would tell us: "Solve the problem, legislate, instead of repeating the same things over and over again."

Naturally, that is part of the procedure and one must submit to it. That is why, in part, I am following the bad example and making a few remarks. I shall try not to repeat what has been said up to this point, Mr. Speaker.

I apologize for the looseness of my remarks but I do not want to repeat what has been said before. For instance, the government has been accused of implementing an unsound economic policy. I question the competence of those who say such things when in all countries, namely the United States, world renowned economists such as President Nixon's advisers, disagree about inflation and hold views diametrically opposed to those of experts as competent as they are. I wonder where my hon. colleagues who blame the government for having followed such or such economic principle in its fight against inflation, have collected their information.

After having read the notice of motion, I was satisfied and convinced that nobody would object to it. Since it justifies the action taken by the government months ago, why spend a whole day on it?

A whole series of measures are already in force. We could have devoted this day to pass some of them in order to speed up our business, but obviously this is part of the political tactics of the opposition. I noticed that some of my collagues opposite whose sincerity is apparent at times were reluctant to make certain bold statements.

As for me, I will simply point out what has been done in my area. Incidentally, I thank my friends opposite for showing a special concern for the province of Quebec in their notice of motion. It was time Parliament saw to it. In the last 100 years, there has been no excess of sympathy in this house for Quebec. On behalf of my province, I therefore wish to thank the mover for his thought which will certainly do no harm.

From 1968 to 1969 in my riding, the federal government paid $845,732 to retrain the unemployed. It is obvious that this is a worthwhile effort. Then during the same period, it granted the unemployed $995,800 in living allowances. Furthermore, from 1969 to 1970 allowances were granted to 1,260 people to help them retrain, improve their education, teach them new trades so as to enable them to earn a living. And the federal government spent the amount of $1,080,000 in my riding with a population of 150,000 distributed over three municipalities. I refer to my riding, but I imagine that the same thing applies in most other constituencies of the province.

In 1969-70, the federal government spent $12,058,000 for the building of technical schools or CEGEPs. In my view, that is an effort to reduce unemployment.

My colleague spoke a moment ago about the policy concerning the textile industry. That new policy has been of help to us because we have in our province an important industry, called Wabasso Cotton, which is nationally known. The new policy has not yet produced all the results we expected of it.

• (8:40 p.m.)

On behalf of the company, I thank the government for such a policy which has prevented unemployment on a large scale in our community since Wabasso Cotton employs thousands of workers.

Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to hear the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) tell us that next year millions of dollars will be invested in new industries across the country and I lost no time in inquiring to what extent my constituency will benefit from that. Charity begins at home.

I therefore found out that the Department of Regional Economic Expansion has received 22 requests from industries wishing to settle in my constituency, and which will benefit all, if their applications are approved, from government incentives, contributing thus to reduce the rate of unemployment, a realization much more efficient than any speech.

I am not talking about the substantial grants made, for instance, to composite schools, about the $4.5 million granted recently to the municipality of Trois-Rivières, under the designated areas program, for housing projects. Because of certain representations, this assistance has been considerably increased, with the result that today, we have in our region a fairly decent employment rate.

For instance, certain amounts were allocated to the construction of decent housing for some 3,000 or 4,000 students of our University of Quebec, and there were many more. Therefore, the government has done something, and if the opposition wanted to be efficient, rather than waste a day in yacking, it would say: We will study the next measure and try to adopt it as soon as possible in order to reduce the unemployment rate. I believe that this would solve many more problems than all the palaver we now have all day. I apologize for behaving as badly as some others, but it is very easy to be led astray, even with the best intentions.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a correction. It was said that the situation which exists in Quebec, this uprising of a few FLQ members, could be a movement of revolt from young people who are held in unemployment and who are dissatisfied with the government. Well, I have another explanation. I know a good deal about this matter, because I have been studying it for the last 25 or 30 years.

Young Quebecers have 200 years of frustration rankling in their mind. They are trying to eliminate them. It was only recently that our English friends from other parts of the country realized that Quebec has the right to live on equal terms with everyone. I am not a separatist, but a federalist. I had to fight for being a federalist, and I still believe in federalism. I remember when I first came to Ottawa, people would tell me to "speak white" whenever I used the French language. I could relate scores of such incidents where French Canadians, barely accepted, were insulted. We are now attempting to redeem two centuries of history and this cannot be done in a year or two. The government under the Right Hon. Mr. Pearson initiated this movement and our present government under the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is carrying on. I call upon all my friends of the opposition who, I am sure, are true Canadian patriots, to co-operate with us in order that we may achieve the understanding which is required to have all Quebecers accepted on an equal footing everywhere in Canada, in all fields of endeavour. Thus there will be fewer FLQ members and fewer unemployed people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, upon reading the motion of the hon. member for York South, it is impossible not to note three very important points.

First of all, there is an unrelenting escalation of the unemployment level in all regions of Canada.

Then, those responsible in the field of economy foresee a still higher level of unemployment during the winter months.

Finally, substantial measures should be taken immediately to eliminate that unfavourable situation in the province of Quebec and particularly in the city of Montreal.

Mr. Speaker, what is the present situation in the province of Quebec and throughout Canada? The government members, particularly the one who has just sat down, may attempt by their speeches to convince the people that everything is for the best, but it remains, nevertheless, that there were, throughout the country, 419,000 unemployed workers in October 1970. These 419,000 people have the right to work but they cannot find employment because of the lack of foresight of those sitting on the government side.

In October 1970, the number of unemployed persons in Canada exceeded by 105,000 the number recorded in October last year and by 21,000 the number recorded in September of this year. In fact 6.6 per cent of the labour force is unemployed.

There was a time when we were sitting on the opposite side of the House and when those now sitting there were on this side. We heard quite a lot about unemployment in those days.

There could not be a lay-off without the three most influential Liberals, namely Messrs. Pickersgill, Chevrier and Martin, rising to sympathize with the unemployed workers' fate. And the story we now hear from the former mayor of Trois-Rivières and from others is quite different from what we heard in those days.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. The hon. member for Trois-Rivières on a question of privilege.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend for whom I have a great deal of esteem and whom I know to be very honest, has just said that all those who sit on this side used to sit on his side. I have never sat on that side.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I shall point out to the hon. member for Trois-Rivières that there is no foundation to his question of privilege and that the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe has the floor.

Mr. Ricard: What is the situation in the province of Quebec, Mr. Speaker? In October 1970, there were 159,000 unemployed. This is a record which does not cheer me up. In Quebec, 8.8 per cent of the working population is unemployed.

It is the responsibility of the members of the opposition to call the attention of the government members to their responsibilities and to make sure that they assume them.

By looking at their previous speeches, it is clear that they are responsible for providing employment to those who want to work, but however 159,000 people are unemployed in the province of Quebec.

What is still worse, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that the forecast for the winter months is even darker. It is estimated, in some quarters, that there will be from 750,000 to 800,000 unemployed in Canada. Are we justified in protesting loudly and asking the ministers and the hon. members opposite to do something to alleviate unemployment, this cancer of our society.

• (8:50 p.m.)

It is also disturbing to realize that unemployment periods last longer. In October 1970, 74,000 people had been unemployed for a period of four to six months. This represents 18 per cent of the unemployed, in that category. For the corresponding period last year, there were 42,000, or only 13 per cent of the unemployed.

As to those who have been unemployed more than six months, there were 72,000 in October, that is 17 per cent of the unemployed, while in October 1969, 46,000 were in that category, that is 15 per cent, and fiery speeches, appeasement speeches from the other side of this House will not succeed in disproving those facts based on D.B.S. figures.

In the building sector, 34,000 jobs were lost in October 1970; among the bush workers, there are 10,000 fewer jobs than last September.

And who is responsible for that situation? It will be recalled that in order to fight inflation, this government found that solution, namely create unemployment and thus fight inflation at the expense of workers, farmers and low income groups. That is an inhuman way, I repeat it, following my leader who said so on several occasions in this House, and the government has no reason to be pleased. Instead of coming up with an expansion policy, the government has found nothing better than to implement restrictive measures in order to create unemployment.

Mr. Speaker, I would be angry with myself if I did not take advantage of the few minutes I still have to once more point out the situation prevailing in my constituency.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps for the twentieth time, I will say that 20 per cent of the labour force is unemployed in the Saint-Hyacinthe area. What are the reasons for such unemployment? I shall mention the closing of some plants a reduction of personnel on account of foreign competition and the adverse effect of the refusal of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) to recognize as a designated zone the Saint-Hyacinthe area, though all the required criteria for designation apply to it. The city council, the common front of Saint-Hyacinthe and I myself made representations to the minister, but we all met with a refusal.

A while ago I said that some plants had closed down in the Saint-Hyacinthe area. According to a study made last summer by the Richelieu-Yamaska Social Development Council, from 1964 to March 1970, we lost ten industries that were providing work to at least 494 employees.

In the field of shoe manufacturing, we have also lost at least one industry that employed several hundred workers. According to this study, we have lost the share that the Saint-Hyacinthe region had a right to expect, had it been fairly treated by the federal government.

I would like to quote a few excerpts from this study in order to put on record what our people think of the refusal by this government to make the Saint-Hyacinthe region a designated area. After considering the reasons why the federal government disregarded the Saint-Hyacinthe-Drummondville region for the development of an international airport, the report states, and I quote:

The federal government, for technical as well as economical reasons, did not comply with a request submitted by the province of Quebec on behalf of the Yamaska region.

We venture to think that no political consideration intervened in the rejection of the Saint-Hyacinthe region as the airport site and as a designated area.

And further, we can read:

In support of this hope, let us mention that the "Snow Jet" plant, which would have created 700 immediate jobs, chose to locate in Drummondville, not in Saint-Hyacinthe, for the only reason that the economic advantages were better there.

This is, in my opinion, and in the opinion of my people, an injustice to our region. I would again draw the attention of hon. members and, in particular, of the powers responsible, one of which is the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, to this fact, so that this injustice can be corrected as soon as possible.

It has often been repeated today that the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) had announced a series of measures which had already been put into effect to remedy this situation. It must be recognized that if these measures were actually taken, then they were inadequate, since the unemployment rate only keep rising month after month. It is the responsibility of those who sit on treasury benches to see that this situation, which is degrading for the workers, is eliminated as soon as possible.

Winter work subsidies must be reinstated to meet the requirements of municipalities, and the 12 per cent tax on building materials must be removed in order to give new impetus to the building industry.

Besides, arrangements must be entered into with the province of Quebec to give the premier of this province, who promised 100,000 jobs, an opportunity to keep his promise.

Mr. Speaker, the people will not be content with promises any longer, and disorders will keep increasing, unless the people are given what they have a right to.

[English]

Mr. Hu Harries (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, the motion addresses itself to the short-term future. It would be difficult to deny that in that time we will be facing some immediate and important economic difficulties, although we may well differ on our description of the magnitude and causes of the difficulties. Without belabouring the obvious, it may be useful to define three segments of the economy that should be considered.

The first segment is that which is continuing to undergo technological readjustment. I am referring to the farmers on the Prairies and other regions of Canada, fishermen, lumber operators and others involved in small-scale resource industries. These people are not restricted to any particular geographical region, but they do constitute a separate and important force in the economy.

Second, we must consider the special geographic areas where, due to a combination of labour force and capital circumstances, there is a failure to get the needed economic expansion. These areas, the most significant of which is Quebec, have been described as slow-growth areas. The third general group may be included in the description of those affected by a slowdown that extends all across Canada and is in response to policies, both business and government, and fiscal and monetary restraints. What is happening now is that these three segments, each of substantial significance, have gone on a strong downward trend all at the same time. Whether this could have been foreseen is not of much help in meeting the problem as it exists, although I belong to the group with the 20-20 hindsight that says we had ample warning.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Harries: What is the government doing? What suggestions can be made with respect to the problems of technological adjustment? I suggest that this government is pursuing good policies enthusiastically and with vigour. In my view, the technologically unemployed bear an unfair and unreasonable share of the cost of our affluent society. I hope the government will continue to do as it recently did, announce that more funds will be poured into retraining and into those programs which are directed specifically to meeting the needs of those who bear, as I have suggested, a completely unreasonable share of the burden of change in our society. In Edmonton alone, last year the government spent $2,880,000 on retraining and $3,305,000 on allowances incidental to this retraining.

• (9:00 p.m.)

With respect to the slow-growth areas, the government has recognized that federal investment alone cannot do the job. It is clearly folly to spend capital funds on projects which do not provoke revenue and can only result in the imposition of large annual service charges. Employment arising from expenditure of this type is economically cannibalistic. At the same time, capital contributions to private industry are not the answer, per se, to rising employment opportunities. Let us face the facts. The industrial projects undertaken by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion amount to a pretty mixed bag. Payments to build a cattle-feed lot in Alberta can by no stretch of the imagination be justified economically. On the other hand, assistance to develop new technology in the building industry could have a profound effect throughout the country and is the kind of investment which should be undertaken.

I would not want to be unfair to a new department which has an important and difficult job to do, but I suggest that capital funds, even when made available in co-operation with industry, are not likely to be the answer in the long term. Quite clearly, they are not the answer in the immediate future. More attention should be given, now, to encouraging competitive production through payment, if necessary, on a cash basis for specific production inputs. For example, there is presently a strong world market for ships. We have steel, we have men, we have yards. Surely we do not need to wait upon the Japanese, the Germans or the British to show us how to put these things together into tankers and cargo ships. There is no need for us to design the wheel, but what we need is some enthusiasm and some push. We as Canadians have an odd outlook which seems to demand that government be the only customer for major capital goods if government is providing some of the money. This is self-defeating paternalism which I hope we can cast off.

Lastly, on the matter of the general economic slowdown, it is clear that government policy has been workmanlike if, at the same time, unimaginative. Indeed, if the government can be criticized for its monetary fiscal policy it can be argued it has been too often persuaded by the plodding arguments of the opposition. The conventional wisdom respecting the position of the central bank, the budget and specific tax items is hard to ignore, but I for one hope we shall not have to wait too long before specific taxes are recognized not only as productive revenue sources but also as a key factor in economic policy. I see no reason, for example, to continue to impose the federal sales tax on building products.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Harries: Similarly, this tax applies to a number of other quasi-capital items. Surely at a time when we are looking for specific developments we can use or, if you wish, manipulate this kind of tax to the benefit of the economy. There may be sections in which specific taxes could be used to great advantage and I hope the government will consider the possibility, not only of using monetary fiscal policy but of being a little innovative in its approach to specific needs where we possess the technology and where what is required is some incentive of a kind which the government could rapidly and, I believe economically provide.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I want to take five or six minutes in which to discuss the unemployment problem in Canada generally and in my own province in particular, as a representative from the east coast. I suppose it would be a waste of time for me to repeat the statistics which have been quoted, to deal with inflation and the government's attempts to combat it or the ill-effects of mounting unemployment in various parts of Canada, particular in urban environments.

I have listened carefully to the observations of the leaders in the House of Commons today and have been impressed by their ability to present their case and advance positive suggestions for easing the unemployment burden. I was most impressed by the remarks of my hon. friend, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), his questioning of the present incidence of taxation and his speculation as to whether relieving the tax burden might not stimulate the economy to a tremendous extent. I think his contribution was most reasonable and rational.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lundrigan: It is difficult for me to convince Members of the House of Commons and, it seems, Canadians generally of the particular seriousness of the unemployment problem in my part of the country. Newfoundland is a small province with only half a million people, and we live a long distance from the centre of activity. For many years Members of Parliament from my province have been bemoaning the fact that severe crises have been brought on by heavy unemployment. I will be reasonable; I do not think the unemployment in my province is entirely the responsibility of the federal government.

Recently events have taken place in the province of Quebec which have driven home the fact that there is a serious social and economic crisis in that province. In recent weeks I have heard members of this House rise in this chamber day after day and argue, with insistence, that Quebec needs particular help in its economic and social problems. Although these, I suppose, have been developing since 1760, suddenly people have become very concerned about the serious crisis in Quebec. I agree there is a crisis in Quebec; but need the people of Canada hear about that kind of revolution and social unrest in my own province before they are convinced that we, too, face a serious economic problem?

[Mr. Harries.]

In a rational way we have been trying to show the Canadian people, and not only in the most sophisticated manner, that we on the east coast of Canada sometimes wonder about this just society, about confederation and the benefits we have received from this great union of Canada. Certainly unemployed Canadians are asking themselves this question. We are concerned because today there is in Canada 6.7 per cent unemployment, with a forecast high of 9 per cent. I believe in February of 1962 there was a 9 per cent unemployment situation in Canada. Using the same model, we are forecasting 9, perhaps 10 per cent at the end of this year or at the beginning of 1971.

How many Canadians fully realize that last year the Dominion Bureau of Statistics admitted that in February there was 15.3 per cent unemployment in my province? Not only that, but unemployment statistics do not truly reflect unemployment in the nation. There is an old expression that statistics can lie. They do not lie intentionally. Those who draw up these statistics are researchers, scientists—reasonable people all. However, the basis upon which they arrive at an assessment of unemployment is inadequate. For example, I could prove that when the Dominion Bureau of Statistics talked last year of 15.3 per cent unemployment, we had in our province perhaps 22 per cent. I further predict that we will reach the point between now and the spring of 1971 where one quarter of our people will be unemployed. Even during the great depression years in North America the unemployment rate was never as high as it is in the province of Newfoundland.

I am not a bit concerned whether the rate is actual or adjusted. How many unemployed Canadians worry over this distinction? What a lot of gobbledygook for us to debate in this House day after day! The unemployment situation is reaching critical proportions. As the Leader of the Opposition has stated, it is no longer a regional problem. For the last two decades the people of Newfoundland have had to leave the province and travel to Toronto in order to take advantage of the seasonal employment situation. As a result, they became skilled in various construction trades. They adapted themselves to urban Toronto life, a difficult adjustment to make. They also made a contribution. Their contribution was a great one because many Newfoundlanders distinguished themselves in the construction trades in various parts of urban Canada. Many of them returned to the province to take advantage of construction opportunities in recent years in my province. Nowadays most of these Newfoundlanders who went to Toronto are part of the breadlines that now form up in that great city. A serious unemployment situation in Canada as a whole affects every region of the country. The unemployment problem in Toronto is having a debilitating effect on the employment situation in the province of Newfoundland.

I should have liked the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) or his Parliamentary Secretary to hear what I have to say now, but I see neither is in his seat. I trust that someone will bring my remarks to the minister's attention. During the last two years a program has been developing in Newfoundland called the DREE program. That is not its real name; it is a compounding of the initials of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. The aim of the program is to bring about a change within 20 to 25 years from a rural economy to an urban economy, with 50 or 60 communities in Newfoundland instead of the thousand we presently have.

The basis for this regional development philosophy was the provision of an infrastructure, a word somebody dug up from somewhere which sums up the provision of public services, things like roads, water and sewer systems, schools, industrial parks and the like. The aim was to create an industrial economy in the province of Newfoundland, in the province of Prince Edward Island, in Nova Scotia and in that province which recently went through a period of political renaissance, New Brunswick. Although we have been made aware of this theory of regional development, the problem is that the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council in the last couple of days has taken very serious issue with the regional development philosophy, mainly because the department is de-emphasizing and overlooking the resource base of the provinces right across the nation.

Let me point out why I raise this point. In my province a fishing industry still survives, despite the downgrading over the years of the role of the fisheries. We feel that the Department of Regional Economic Expansion should seriously consider an input of funds to upgrade the fisheries in the province. For example, we feel that in addition to improving marketing, transportation, conservation and resource management and dealing with the problem of overfishing, which my colleague from St. John's West (Mr. Carter) will raise in a few minutes, we should have more sophisticated fishing facilities, bigger boats, better technology and more research in oceanography.

I admit, Mr. Speaker, that for me to suggest this evening that this policy should be revised would not be realistic. Nevertheless, I feel the government would make an excellent beginning by loosening-up its spending in order to provide efficient facilities and alleviate the unemployment problem. I am not one of those Members of Parliament who believe that this kind of emergency measure should be regarded as a long-term solution. I agree with those who declare that this is a band-aid policy. However, I would rather see tens of thousands of my fellow countrymen this winter at least given the dignity of being employed, with the government providing facilities that might in the long run be the stimulus for the development of one of the basic resources in my province.

If the minister were here I would issue a challenge to him. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Laing) has been a tremendous discouragement to the province in recent years because of his disinterest in fishing facilities. The Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis) is not in the House this evening, but he too should take a keener interest in this problem. These Canadians who occupy positions of eminence in the federal cabinet should heed my pleas. On behalf of 500,000 Newfoundlanders and my Maritime colleagues here, I plead for something to be done in the immediate future to alleviate the problem of unemployment, while at the same time providing worthwhile fishing facilities on the east coast. I am sure I would have the concurrence of all the members of the Atlantic provinces—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lundrigan: —as well as the agreement of the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault), who this afternoon tried to justify the government's position, coming as he does from the affluent province of British Columbia which is now also suffering a serious unemployment situation, when I suggest that a new input of funds should be made to provide efficient fisheries facilities in the province. I am not talking of a new deck on every little wharf in every little cove, but of facilities which have been required for years. I could give both the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) a list of a dozen justifiable projects which require immediate action.

For example, since the spring of 1969 the Department of National Defence has been waiting to call for housing tenders in the town of Gander so it can move in personnel to the $17 million communications centre. The tender has not been called because a bunch of bureaucrats and civil servants in Ottawa do not understand what hardship, poverty and unemployment really mean. I should like all hon. members to stand in their places, even if it means extending the debate beyond ten o'clock, and express their ideas on how the government should act immediately to deal with the unemployment crisis. The situation is getting chronic, though in my province it has been chronic for years. It does not make us feel any better to know that other Canadians are now faced with the same situation. We feel that perhaps we can make other Canadians a little more aware of our problems in Newfoundland particularly and in eastern Canada generally.

• (9:20 p.m.)

I know that hon. members have gone back to their constituencies and talked about the problems in Quebec. The Quebec people are aware of these problems. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) will not tell us what proportion of federal government money is going into the province of Quebec. I know what proportion is going into that province. I do not intend to expose this fact because I do not want to create the impression that I am against the idea that the bulk of the $60 million announced recently will be spent in Quebec. I am not going to indicate the exact proportion, between $2 million and $3 million, of that amount which will be going into Newfoundland, but it is not enough to build a good breakwater.

This minister, along with others, stands and talks about the efforts being made on behalf of the unemployed in Canada. I hope Canadians realize that we, too, have a problem in Newfoundland that is so chronic it is almost beyond description. This winter we will have a larger percentage of people unemployed in my province than the United States or Canada had during the great depression. Let us stop fooling around with great political jargon and speeches. Let us have action. I hope the Minister of Finance or some other dignitary will stand up tomorrow and announce an all-inclusive policy to deal with the problem of unemployment.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy LeBlanc (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, as several previous speakers, I also think it is time for action. It is through action that we will solve our problems and not through lengthy discussions.

However, as the old saying goes, since light comes from the exchange of ideas, and to bring my own contribution to the solution of those problems, it is my pleasure to express my opinion on this motion which relates to a most serious problem, as everyone says, namely that of unemployment. It is imperative to consider the measures taken by the government to help the unemployed and the poor as well as the new measures required.

About the general principle of the motion, when it is a matter of upward climb in the level of unemployment foreseen for this winter and steps to be taken to alleviate its consequences, we can only approve it. Indeed, we must congratulate the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) for the opportunity given to us to discuss this serious problem.

The situation, specially in the Rimouski riding, which I have the honour to represent, and in the area of the Lower St. Lawrence and Gaspé, is not very rosy either. It is quite clear there is work to do in urban centres and in small towns, but in the so-called marginal municipalities there is a lot of unemployment. A great many citizens in these hamlets and villages, live mostly on government sponsored social measures, either federal or provincial. If we consider for instance certain figures, we see that in 1969 the monthly average was 16,437 unemployed in that region or 18 per cent of the labour force on the basis of the whole population. This is a very high rate of unemployment. For all Quebec the rate of unemployment was 6.9 per cent in 1969. This means that the rate of unemployment in our area is between two and three times higher than the provincial rate. Needless to say several families are in distress because of that unemployment. All of us want to do our utmost to solve this problem.

The motion states that according to certain economic experts, a record unemployment level is expected during winter. In the light of that essential action initiated to eliminate inflation, the government had foreseen those difficulties, but in my opinion the government must not solely be held responsible for the increased unemployment rate. Indeed, the various strikes by construction workers, post-office employees and other workers encouraged by union leaders, some of who are very good friends of the mover, have certainly contributed to create some uneasiness, especially by unbalancing our economy and discouraging enterprise, especially since summer is over and that winter will soon be here.

We are all in favour of immediate steps being taken, of having the federal government come to as early an understanding as possible with the provinces and the municipalities with a view to reducing the unemployment rate during next winter. This is our ardent wish. However, it does not suffice to settle the unemployment problem, we have to solve various other problems as well to insure our financial and economic stability.

One thing has struck me in the speech of the mover whom I consider very clever and very competent: he has again referred to the terrorism in the province of Quebec.

It seems to me that we should take some action in that area and that we should give more objective consideration to the problems in order to achieve progress.

If I am not mistaken, he said a moment ago that unemployment is no more no less than the cause of terrorism and that the unemployed are terrorists. If we consider those who have or apparently have taken part in terrorist activities and those who have been arrested, we find that they are far from being among the unemployed.

One is a teacher, another an editorial writer for a well known magazine, a third a sociologist, another a taxi driver, another a lawyer and yet another an important union leader. I do not think the latter is unemployed as I know what salaries are paid to union leaders with the contributions of those poor workers and unemployed.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Some CBC announcers or moderators are far from being unemployed people from the point of view of their income. Some professors of the University of Quebec or other universities are equally far from being unemployed. Some of those born with a silver spoon in their mouths, certain students who can study thanks to the effort of governments and to the money of their parents are far from being unemployed people and it seems to me that those who promote all those terrorist movements in Quebec do belong to a privileged class.

In spite of all that, it can be said that the government took very serious action in order to reduce the unemployment rate and to check poverty. Let us simply consider the measures about unemployment insurance. Moreover, the government is soon to improve the lot of unemployed persons through the implementation of the recommendations of the white paper on the subject. It is expected that higher allowances will soon be approved. The Unemployment Insurance Act will apply across the board and benefits will be increased.

Some efforts at least have been made in the field of regional economic expansion. Members from other provinces have been upbraiding the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand). The minister is one of those who knows the province of Quebec and is eager to help his fellow-citizens.

The legislation on designated and special areas supplies two most useful weapons to fight the scrouge of unemployment.

In my region of Rimouski, the lower St. Lawrence River and Gaspesia, we benefit, as does all Canada, by the acts fostering updating and vocational training.

For instance, if we consider that for the year 1968-69 this retraining program has cost $1,231,692 for the district of Rimouski alone and that a further amount of $1,450,-244 was paid on allowances incidental to this retraining; if we consider for the year 1969-70, the allowances paid to the 1,260 persons who took those courses amounted to $1,509,000 and the federal government contribution to composite schools, we can say that the government has done its share to help alleviate the unemployment situation. As for the proposed measures, I feel that the granting of tax credits should be one of the first short term measures the government might take to encourage private enterprise and, but the same token, to create jobs.

The new measures designed to improve the Unemployment Insurance Act should be applied as soon as possible. Furthermore, in this fight against inflation, it would be advisable to gear those measures to particular areas, because we are all aware that in Canada some areas suffer from unemployment on account of their situation. Then, care should be taken so that the people of these regions do not have to suffer too much from the war we have to wage against inflation.

As far as Quebec is concerned, long-term social animation and education work should be done among our youth in order to encourage those who have chosen scientific or technical careers to create jobs instead of relying on the government, once they have completed their studies and earned a little money. Let them be self-reliant, depend on their own efforts. This would greatly improve the manpower situation in Quebec, particularly when we think that in the last few years, according to my information, 75 per cent of students majored in arts, literature and human sciences. It is necessary and very useful but 75 per cent is surely too high a percentage because those students will later be unemployed.

Finally, I think that the fight against unemployment must be considered very seriously by the government. On behalf of my fellow-citizens, I ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) to take the necessary steps in the next few weeks to lessen the danger of economic deterioration this winter, that we might live with a certain amount of pleasure and have the satisfaction of working towards better living conditions for our fellow-citizens.

[English]

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, as I listened this afternoon to the glowing words of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) in describing the government's anti-inflationary policy of these last months, I was reminded irresistibly of the famous medical bulletin "The operation was a great success, but the patient died."

An hon. Member: That is an old one.

Mrs. MacInnis: Yes, it is an old one, and so is unemployment. The fact is that while the Canadian patient is far from being dead, he is in a very critical state at this time in respect of unemployment, and the government's policy has contributed immeasurably to that state. The fact also remains that the government's own research people tell us that during this coming winter 700,000 people will be looking for work in Canada and that three million Canadians will face loss of income due to unemployment.

The minister quoted various experts to buttress his rosy opinions, but neglected to give us this quotation from the latest report of the Economic Council:

> We regard recent and current rates of unemployment as unacceptably high. Canada probably now has the highest rate of unemployment among the more industrialized, advanced nations, even after allowance for the differences for the basis of unemployment estimates.

He also neglected to give the opinion of the general public, the every day men and women, many of whom have experienced unemployment in a very direct way. A Gallup poll of November 7 asked this question:

> On the whole would you say the government is doing a good job, or not a good job of handling unemployment?

The following was the Canadian picture. Sixteen per cent said that the government was doing a good job of handling unemployment, 19 per cent said it was doing a fair job and 57 per cent said it was doing a poor job of handling unemployment. The highest level of disappointment was in the province of Quebec, where 63 per cent said the government has been doing a poor job. Quebec was closely followed by the west, where 60 per cent said the government had been doing a poor job.

We have heard a great deal about Quebec this afternoon. I shall say only a few words about it. What a tremendous job the Premier of that province is facing now in finding jobs. He promised 100,000 new jobs by the end of 1971. The Economic Council says that the total number of jobs created for Quebec in 1970 is 3,000; so he will have to provide 97,000 jobs in the coming year. Meanwhile, without federal assistance and federal programming neither the province of Quebec nor any other province will be able to cope with the unemployment problems they will face in the months immediately ahead because we are dealing with an immediate and urgent situation.

I agree with the member from Newfoundland who said he had no interest in talking about seasonally adjusted figures, because what we are dealing with is not figures but men and women and their families and the fact that they face deprivation and frustration in the period immediately ahead. In the meantime misery, insecurity and frustration abound in Canada and particularly, as we have seen, in the province of Quebec. We have seen the climate of desperation that has been created there and what a haven for terrorists has been created by this general climate.

• (9:40 p.m.)

I say quite seriously that if you were to arrest every FLQ member in the province of Quebec tonight and were to apply capital punishment to them, there would be a fresh crop there tomorrow morning until and unless you get rid of the economic conditions which make it possible for these people to flourish. They flourish in an atmosphere of social insecurity and social despair. The fact that 38 per cent of all the unemployed in Canada in October of this year were living in the province of Quebec adds immeasurably to the dangers and troubles not only of that province but of all Canada.

Now I want to turn my attention to the other side of Canada, my own province of British Columbia. This morning's issue of the Globe and Mail reported a rash of lay-offs in the softwood plywood industry in B.C. That province manufactures practically all the softwood plywood in Canada. These lay-offs are being carried out by the five big plywood companies in B.C. Reference was made by one hon. member tonight to a certain industry being a key sector in his riding. Well, I say that the forest industry is the key sector in B.C. It is by far the biggest industry and it provides more help to other industries and services, more jobs and security for people, than any other industries in the province.

The lay-off situation which the Globe and Mail reported this morning is the latest blow in a whole series of unemployment disasters that have overtaken B.C. these last few months. We are deeply worried in the province, particularly when we see the forest and lumber industry being overtaken by unemployment. We are appalled by the refusal of the government to reconsider its policies and try to study ways and means of providing immediate employment. This would not deal with the situation in a large way but could provide help for a great many families this winter.

Let me give the House the B.C. unemployment figures very briefly. In September of 1969 there were 33,000 unemployed people in B.C. and in September of this year there were 58,000. In October a year ago there were 40,000 unemployed in B.C. and in October of this year 69,000 were unemployed. Even those tragic figures do not tell the whole story. I am told that the unemployment figures do not include Indians. Evidently Indians are not considered persons when the unemployment figures are computed. I do not think women, either, are counted as persons because I know—reference was made to this matter by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis)—that when unemployment is bad there is much less chance for women to get jobs and a great many women, having tried in vain, stay home and give up in despair. This simply means that the standard of living in that family goes down, with all the unfortunate consequences for the family and the lack of opportunities for its children.

Some time ago the Economic Council told us that we in Canada could not tolerate a higher rate of unemployment than 3 per cent and still have an acceptable standard of living. We have almost 8 per cent unemployment in British Columbia today. We also have well over 100,000 people on welfare in that province. This means a great many things so far as a healthy situation in B.C. is concerned.

Taxes in Vancouver on ordinary family homes have gone up over 10 per cent every year for the past four years. They have increased in the past four years by nearly 50 per cent. What do the taxes go for in the city of Vancouver? The largest costs for the city of Vancouver are the police. The police union is suggesting an increase in pay, and already their costs constitute the largest single item in the city's operating budget at $10.5 million. The police commission is also asking for more policemen and more equipment. The total extra bill will be about $750,000. I want to say right now that increasing the number of policemen and their equipment will not do any more for B.C. to ensure law and order in that province than it will to do the same in the province of Quebec, if the economic situation is allowed to worsen.

Social assistance costs are another major item in the city of Vancouver's budget. They amount to about $7 million. This figure is four times what it was just four years ago, and it is going up. Even if the economic climate in 1971 improves, the city's share of social welfare costs will be much higher for the total year than they have been this year. The influx of young transients has added to the problem. I dealt with that matter earlier this year. The costs that were being added by the young transients—and even at that, the welfare department reports that less than 10 per cent of the assistance money is paid to people from out of town—have added to the problem still further.

I point out that a serious situation is being faced by Canada's third largest city, when over 100,000 people in the province are receiving welfare and when the welfare budget in the city of Vancouver has increased to four times what it was just four years ago. It is not surprising to find that the mayor of that city is longing to apply a similar measure to the War Measures Act, to divert attention from the fact that he is not dealing at all with the unemployment situation there.

I should now like to recapitulate some of the measures which we think should be taken. This afternoon the hon. member for York South spoke of the federal government calling together the provincial premiers with a view to seeing what could be done, not as a long-range measure but to get us through the winter. That is an eminently sensible suggestion and one with which I think the government would find it very hard to quarrel. The only point is that it must be done now, because very speedy action will have to be taken if people are not to suffer desperately, not only in Vancouver and in B.C. but also in the Maritimes and in Quebec this winter.

Various methods and schemes have been suggested. Comments have been made that while the government says they are not going to have a winter works program, there might well be similar programs under another name. All the municipalities have projects that could be proceeded with, many of them in the winter months. In our province most of these projects could be carried out in the winter because the weather is not sufficiently severe to prevent work from being done in the wintertime. We have mentioned construction of schools, hospitals, sewage plants and other projects such as pollution clean-ups.

Let no one say we do not have the money for it. All hon. members within sound of my voice, and a lot of other people across the country know that if a catastrophe like war were to break out tomorrow, the money would be found, just as it has been on previous occasions. To hon. members who are slightly amused at the idea that we could do this in peacetime, I say we ought now to consider that we have a war of another kind on our hands—a war against social injustice, a war which unless we tackle it now will lead to the insurrection kind of war which has already erupted in one part of our country.

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, for those of us who were looking for ideas and inspiration this, in many respects, has been a rather unusual and unsatisfactory debate. The leader of the party that chose to introduce this particularly important resolution did not participate in the debate although all the known candidates to succeed him certainly did. On the other hand, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) did participate, although none of the known candidates to succeed him did. In both cases, however, the financial spokesmen of the two parties, the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman), and the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), did not participate in the debate. It leaves one wondering just what the opposition expected from the debate. We have been left to deal with pretty well the same old generalities.

The most important and widespread criticism of government policies is that the degree of economic restraint imposed by fiscal and monetary policies, and the resulting increase in unemployment, are undesirable and unnecessary. The argument takes various forms, apart from those who contend that no purpose is served by restraints since there is nothing Canada can do to halt inflation generated largely from abroad. There are those who suggest that Canada can work its way out of inflation by vigorously expanded economic growth. This position has been taken by the Conservative and NDP spokesmen and it has also been taken by organized labour, particularly the Canadian Labour Congress. The Conservatives have suggested that voluntary guidelines are sufficient to prevent a renewal of inflation, the NDP has proposed price controls, while the CLC has advanced no alternatives.

While acknowledging the strong impact of inflation from abroad, the government has taken the position that much of the present momentum behind costs and prices has been domestically sustained. It has been argued that all nations must exert efforts to bring inflation under control. The fact that price increases in Canada have been substantially less than those in other nations appears to deny the argument that Canada can do little by herself to curb inflation. There are also those who have argued that inflation is a matter of no concern in Canada because the rate of domestic price increase has been running well below that of other countries. There appears to be an assumption, on the part of those who advance this contention, that the relatively better price performance in Canada is something that just happened rather than something that resulted from government policy.

The leader of the Conservative party has long advocated voluntary restraint as the only measure to bring inflation under control. But since the Prices and Incomes Commission launched its efforts in 1969 to promote such restraint, the Leader of the Opposition has contended that the government should have taken more initiative to promote guidelines and has accused it of failing to provide sufficient support for the commission. The only other alternative advanced by the Leader of the Opposition for dealing with the problem of inflation is the elimination of the sales tax on building materials, echoing belatedly a position taken earlier by the New Democratic Party.

The Conservative leader has provided no public support for a series of tax incentive measures proposed by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees), which were aimed at rewarding those who hold down prices and increase productivity. Today would have been an excellent opportunity for him to endorse the hon. member's public proposals, should he have seen any merit in them. The main thrust of the Conservative position has been to attack government policies on the ground that they were deliberately aimed at restricting the growth of the economy. That, of course, is nonsense.

The NDP has strongly attacked the government's restraint policies. It has contended that there is little Canada can do to control inflation because most of it is imported from abroad. Various spokesmen have alternatively suggested the necessity of comprehensive price and income controls, despite the fact that such controls have largely been rejected by organized labour. There is considerable inconsistency between the NDP's contention that inflation is largely imported and, its advocacy of controls, since such controls would have little or no effect in curbing inflationary pressures exerted from abroad.

The government has taken the position that while it does not reject the possibility of government controls, it would be most reluctant to impose them except as a last resort because of the problems they would bring to the working of the market economy, including their impact upon the collective bargaining process. The leader of the NDP has suggested that the anti-inflation fight in Canada is unnecessary because of the lower rate of price increases here compared with abroad. This, again, is a development that can only be attributed to the government's economic policies.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. It being ten o'clock p.m., it is my duty to inform the House that pursuant to Standing Order 58(11) the proceedings on the motion before the House are considered to have expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

FISHERIES—DEPLETION OF MARINE RESOURCES—DISCUSSIONS WITH SOVIET UNION

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, on November 10, as recorded at page 1048 of Hansard, I asked the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis) the following question:

> Can the minister say if he has succeeded in arranging talks with the Soviet Union concerning the depletion of our marine resources? If so, when will these meetings take place?

The minister replied that no meetings had been scheduled at least to that date, November 10. This came as quite a surprise to us because we were led to believe from a statement made by the minister, and reported in the St. John's Daily News, that efforts were being made by him to arrange some kind of meetings with the Soviet government with a view to arriving at some kind of management control and conservation of our marine resources. I am sure the House is aware that there is a very serious danger of depletion of the fishing resources in the territorial waters off the east coast of Canada. Scientists say, and the minister has gone on record as agreeing, that unless something is done in the next five to ten years to impose management control, the cod species could become a rare delicacy.

• (10:00 p.m.)

Mr. Bell: It is now.

Mr. Carter: The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) has raised this matter in the House on numerous occasions. We have urged the minister to get together with the member nations of ICNAF to agree upon some kind of management control. In the past ten years, despite improved methods the cod catch in Newfoundland has been reduced by 50 per cent. In the same period, from 1958 to 1968, the catch on the Grand Banks of Newfoundland increased by something like 700 per cent because of the increased capability of foreign nationals. This, of course, is to the detriment of the fishermen of Newfoundland and all those on the east coast of Canada.

Some time ago we learned that the minister was meeting with the delegation from the Soviet Union to discuss conservation methods and management control on the west coast of Canada and we raised the question of why the conference should be confined to that area. The minister has since stated that he does intend to have similar talks with the Soviet Union concerning the east coast.

Mr. Speaker, tonight I ask what this minister and the government intend to do about the present situation on the east coast of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Carter: Our marine resources are being raped; they are being depleted to a frightening degree. In Newfoundland, while our catches are decreasing the catches of the Soviet Union, East Germany and other European countries are increasing. Mr. Speaker, I realize that I only have seven minutes in which to make my point, so perhaps right away I should ask the minister this question: What is going to happen to the east coast fisheries unless something is done by the government to bring an end to this rape and plunder?

I know the minister has only three minutes in which to reply, so I ask him to make the government's plans and intentions known. I hope he will tell us if he plans to talk to the Russians, to the East Germans and the other countries of the world that are plundering our east coast fisheries. When are these meetings to take place? Will there be representation from eastern Canada? As I asked earlier: When will these representations be made? The minister will probably say there will be a Law of the Sea conference in the near future. We contend that this conference will not take place for another five years, which may be too late as far as the east coast fisheries are concerned.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Carter) is correct in his understanding that we are endeavouring to talk with the Russians in a bilateral way—that is, Canada and the U.S.S.R. only—about common problems in the North Atlantic, problems in the fishing industry and in particular the problem of overfishing.

I spoke to the Russian delegation that visited Canada after several preliminaries on our part to discuss the situation on the west coast at which time I suggested such a meeting. I received some indication from them that they would be prepared to discuss this matter specifically with us. We will of course be following this up. As of this moment I do not have a reply from the Russians saying there will be such a meeting. However, we will continue to press for a meeting of this kind.

As the hon. member knows, there is a commission, made up of interested nations, that meets each year on the North Atlantic. The annual meeting of the North Atlantic Fisheries Commission is attended by the Russians, West Germans, Poles, Americans and ourselves. The last meeting was held in St. John's, Newfoundland, in June of this year. Each year all countries fishing in the North Atlantic meet to compare notes with regard to catch over the years and their estimates of the sustainable yield of the North Atlantic.

I have stated on several occasions that we are coming perilously close to the point of overfishing, the point at which the total catch can drop dramatically. All the nations I referred to are aware of this fact. There have been negotiations which have resulted in quotas being established, particularly at Georges Bank, off Nova Scotia. We have yet to establish an agreed sharing of a sustained yield operation in other areas, particularly off the Grand Banks. This is another objective of ours. We have this commission and are talking to the Russians in that forum. We have been carrying out, particularly on Georges Bank, an investigation of the herring resources, for example, with the United States and the U.S.S.R. We are meeting them there as well.

The hon. member is quite right that the resource is under serious pressure. The typical catch of an inshore fisherman today is half what it was ten years ago. The only bright aspect has been an increase in the price of his product, otherwise he would be in very bad shape indeed.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—NON-PAYMENT OF MINIMUM WAGE—DISCUSSION BY MINISTER OF TRANSPORT WITH PRESIDENT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, Canadian National Railways, one of Canada's largest employers, is a Crown corporation; its assets are owned completely by the people of Canada. The CNR is managed by a board of directors who are quite properly independent of the government and parliament in their day-to-day operations of the company. I am sorry to say that in my opinion the officers of the CNR and the board of directors are rapidly giving the CNR the reputation, deserved, of being a cheap, chiselling company.

There has been specific legislation on the statute books of the province of Saskatchewan in the past few years. This says plainly that employers in the province are required to give employees who have worked for the company for five years, three weeks holiday with pay. The CNR is arguing in the province of Saskatchewan that its hotel employees are not entitled to this three weeks holiday with pay because it is a federal company and it does not, therefore, come under the jurisdiction of the province's labour laws.

In a number of provinces, including, Manitoba, Ontario and Alberta, where the CN has hotels, it has argued, since the federal Parliament enacted the $1.65 an hour minimum wage for employees coming under federal jurisdiction, that its hotel employees are not entitled to $1.65 an hour because the hotels are under provincial jurisdiction. I say that any private employer who advanced that kind of specious argument would be laughed out of any court in Canada and would receive the kind of condemnation which cheap, chiselling employers deserve. Yet this is precisely what the CNR is doing.

I raised this question on October 27 and again on November 10 after it had become clear from statements by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) that the department intended to prosecute the CNR for failure to observe the federal minimum wage laws. I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) if he would discuss with the board of Canadian National the desirability of their living up to the laws of Canada. The situation in which the Department of Justice, on behalf of the Department of Labour, prosecutes a Crown corporation is a ridiculous one. The Minister of Transport, whom I like very much, contented himself by saying that he could not comment on the case because the matter was before the courts.

Mr. Speaker, I am not interested in the minister's comments on the case publicly in parliament. What does interest me is that the Minister of Transport should discuss the matter with the officials of the CN. It is true they are independent. It is true we do not watch every single action they take. But it is also true that we are dealing with a Crown corporation whose president and directors are appointed by the government.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): And can be fired by the government.

Mr. Orlikow: And can be fired by the government.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): And should be.

Mr. Orlikow: I suggest to the Minister of Transport that he drop this false modesty and speak to the officials of the CN. I want to say to him and to the president of the CN that if this matter is still outstanding when the estimates of the company come before the Transport Committee, those officials will be spending an awful lot of time in Ottawa rather than in Montreal where they should be, conducting the affairs of the company.

Mr. André Ouellet (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my hon. friend from Quebec East (Mr. Duquet), who is unable to be here tonight, I should like to reply to the hon. member for Calgary North—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Winnipeg North.

Mr. Ouellet: —and say I appreciate the observations he has made. Obviously, I am not in a position to tell the House the whereabouts of the Minister of Transport and the various meetings he has. I should like to indicate to the hon. member, as previously stated by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) in reply to a question asked on Tuesday, November 10, I believe it was, that this question is already before the courts and it would be improper for me at this time to make any statement about it. I think all hon. members will appreciate that under the circumstances this is the appropriate manner in which to reply to the point and I shall say nothing about the possible outcome of the proceedings. Obviously, the minister and his department will be watching very carefully the outcome of the proceedings.

I would also inform the hon. member that the Jasper Lodge case, which in fact is a test case, is scheduled to be heard by the Supreme Court of Alberta within three weeks, I believe at the beginning of December. Thus, I think we can expect an early decision on the application of the law and I hope that this very important issue will then be finalized.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.19 p.m.

END OF VOLUME I
