

"SONS OF THE PINE."

Stirring Scene at Windsor Castle When Queen Thanked Royal Canadians.

They Bore Themselves Well—Passed Their Sovereign Like Men Conscious of Having Done Their Duty Well.

(London Daily Express.)

"I am very glad to see you here to-day and to express my warm thanks for the admirable services rendered in the war by the Canadian troops."

"I wish you all a safe and happy return to your homes."

In these words the Queen thanked Canada at Windsor Castle yesterday for the magnificent services in the field of the Royal Canadian Regiment of Infantry.

The valor before Orange's laager, the stiff fights, the memory of the fallen and tender solicitude for the wounded were all concentrated in the few womanly words which the Sovereign spoke softly to the hardy men of the western flank of our far-flung battle line.

The scene was memorable even for Royal Windsor.

The magnificent quadrangle within the gate of St. George was filled with martial mankind, representative of Canada's best and bravest, and certainly the smartest colonial section ever seen in the home country.

The Queen, who is a keen judge of militant worth, especially marked her approval of the men with that pleasant nod of the head which has always been the outward and recognized sign of her royal pleasure.

The Canadians—255 strong—left by a special Great Western train from Addison road, and reached Windsor at 11.20.

As the train steamed into the station the Grenadier Guards' band saluted the men to the strains of Canada's patriotic song, The Maple Leaf.

Colonel the Hon. H. C. Legge welcomed Colonel Otter on behalf of the Queen, and the mayor of Windsor tendered a few words of welcome ere the Guards played the men up Castle Hill amid a wild scene of enthusiasm.

PAARDEBERGERS IN LINE.

Passing under St. George's gate with martial swing, the battalion formed into line on the quadrangle facing the York and Lancaster Tower, where Colonel Sir Arthur Bigge and Lord Edward Pelham-Clinton received them.

The long brown line of warriors looked strikingly picturesque amid the gray towers round about, and moved with a swing and a rhythm worthy of the finest regular troops.

"The bayoneted" cried Colonel Otter, and with a flash and a rattle the little "cheese knives" which charged at Paardeberg leaped into a long line of glittering steel to the rifle tops, and all was ready.

The Queen was helped into her carriage by the Queen's private, a Highland gillie, and accompanied by Princess Henry of Battenberg and the beautiful Princess Alice of Albany, drove into the quadrangle as the big clock chimed noon.

"Royal Canadians! Present arms!" The mandate rang through the old square of St. George, which is so reminiscent of the legions of the past, and the new legion of a greater era came down to the "present" with a "click" of Guards-like precision.

A great volume of sound swelled on the air as the national anthem thundered forth from the band.

It was, indeed, a splendid scene—a scene which has never been surpassed under the shadow of the York Tower, where the Queen has so often honored her sons of the sword.

The battalion moved to the right and passed the Queen in column of fours, with arms sloped and bayonets gleaming. The battalion passed to the air of "Vive la Canadienne."

These stalwart Manitobans and ranchers of the Northwest strode past their sovereign with splendid mien, like men conscious of pride of birth and origin, and of duty done for freedom and the flag.

A WOUNDED WARRIOR.

Corporal Armstrong, minus a leg, hobbled on his crutches alongside his comrades, and the Queen immediately gave an order to have the wounded soldier presented later.

The battalion formed in quarter-column and advanced towards the royal carriage in review order.

They swung up, a solid phalanx of strapping khaki-clad figures, with sun-tanned faces, crowned with a forest of glittering steel, and halted with the front company close to the carriage.

A grand spectacle they presented, and seldom, if ever, has a more warlike body stood at attention before royalty.

Colonel Otter was presented, and commanded to dine, and the other officers were brought to her majesty's notice. Her majesty then addressed Colonel Otter as follows:

"I am very glad to see you here to-day and to express my warm thanks for the admirable services rendered in the war by the Canadian troops."

Tells the Sun Something About His Success As a Trapper—Sells His Pelts in St. John.

(Tuesday's Globe.)

According to letters received, the Constantinople incident referred to in Monday's Globe passed off without any serious consequences, although at one time it looked as if the little band of British travelers were going to be plucked against the whole Turkish nation.

There is a strong antipathy among the Turks at present to the English, owing, it is said, to the control of Egypt by the latter; hence the Turkish makes it very disagreeable for British travelers to travel, as any moment he is liable to be insulted.

One redeeming feature about the Britisher is that, no matter what the consequences may be, he will not stand without taking a hand in defence of his country.

One of the party, in writing of the incident referred to, under date of Constantinople, Nov. 6, says: "The English are being treated as if they were the enemy."

When in Cook's office this morning a Turk struck an English lady in the face. I immediately knocked him down, and for a time it looked as if we English had got into a bit of trouble. There are six of us with Cook's party, and although we have for three days made repeated applications to the Turkish embassy for our passports (or permission to travel), the same has not been granted to us.

The Americans and other nationalities have been granted their passports. We are all going to the English consul to demand assistance."

Under date of Nov. 11th, on board the steamer, the same writer says: "When I first wrote you we were going to the English consul for assistance."

The writer then goes on to describe his interview with the consul, and it would seem, too, that that official was imbued with the regular Oriental excuse of "honour" for no matter how the party argued with him and pointed out how they wanted to catch the boat that was going to depart in an hour or so, he had some excuse for delay.

Finding it impossible to get him, a request was made to send a small escort of gendarmes with the travellers from the hotel to the boat. This was promised, and the travellers, without further mishap, passed on to Constantinople, and no doubt they shook the dust off their feet as a menace to the place. The writer tells many interesting things about his visit to Rhodes, and describes many of the relics of the Crusaders now to be seen in that historical place.

FISHING SCHOONER LOST.

GLOUCESTER, Mass., Dec. 12.—This city of fishermen is again mourning for the loss of several of her hardy sailors, this time for the captain and crew of 12 men of the fishing schooner Sigfrid, which has now been absent from this port for nearly 13 weeks, and it is believed the vessel has fallen prey to one of the terrific gales which for the past six weeks have been sweeping the North Atlantic.

While the owners of the vessel, Cunningham & Thompson, have not formally given the vessel up as lost, there are but few people in the city who ever expect to hear any further tidings of the craft. The Sigfrid sailed from this port on Nov. 14th, and since that time she has not been reported.

DIED IN EACH OTHER'S ARMS.

Ideal Ending of the Lives of a York Co. N. B. Couple in Anacosta, Montana.

A double funeral took place at Anacosta, Montana, Dec. 3rd, when the mortal remains of Thomas Marshall, aged 32, formerly of Hanwell, York Co., N. B., and Susan, his wife, aged 71, were borne to their last resting place.

The old couple had been married nearly half a century, and since removing from New Brunswick had lived with their son, John Marshall, a well to do contractor.

On the night of Nov. 30 the aged couple were found dead in bed, locked in each other's arms. Testimony at the inquest showed that Mr. Marshall had died from old age and natural causes, and that his wife, awakening and finding her partner cold in death, threw her arms about his lifeless body and then passed quietly away.

"Coming down Washington street, the two hearse, one containing the aged husband and father, and the other all that remained of the old partner of his joys and sorrows, moved alongside each other, suggesting the thought that even death was reluctant to separate the aged couple.

When the entrance to the church was reached and the caskets removed to the altar railing, a wealth of floral tributes was disclosed, one magnificent piece surmounted by a dove with outstretched wings attracting most attention. The church was nearly filled with friends of the family and those drawn thither by the remarkable and ever romantic occurrence.

Solemn high mass was sung by Father De Siere. His assistants were Father Callahan, deacon; Father Harrington, sub-deacon; Father McGlynn, cope bearer; William McGovern, master of ceremonies; William Walker and John Duggan, acolytes. Mrs. Rooney presided at the organ, and Mrs. Donnelly sang two solos, one of them being that sweetest of all funeral songs, "Nearer My God to Thee."

The pall-bearers were: Chas. McDonald, James Berry, James Leyden, Wm. Harrison, Geo. Frederick, J. A. Henry, Peter Kelly, C. A. Lindsay, John Layton, Jos. Croter, M. G. McSherry and P. S. Harrington.

The pall-bearers were all Canadians, eight being native of Fredericton or the county of York.
