The scene on the Downs has been so often described, and is so nearly indescribable, that I will make no attempt at such a task. DERBY DAY.

Bright Sun and a Rollicking Race Going to Surrey Downs-Money Makers and Money Spenders-The Victor-A Sporting Iron Master-The Return-Derby Day by Gas

LONDON, May 29, 1873. DERBY DAY. Once more the prophets are nonplussed, the famous jockeys "jockeyed," and fortunes have been lost and won by a surprise. How long it is since the "favorite" has really won on the Downs of Surrey, I know not; but I cannot remember case within late years when a horse in whose favor the betting books have turned has justified the calculations of the the winner of 1878, was at least third or fourth in the estimation of the professionals, "Gang Forward" having been first favorite, "Kaiser" second, and "Montargis" or "Suleimann" third. But yesterday's Derby was, in its aspect of a great national holiday, a glowing success. What is it that, year after year, entices these thousands of Englishmen and First. these thousands of Englishmen and Englishwom n to Epsom, to see the same sights, make the same noises, hear the same hoarse shouting and tramping, and be overcome with the same dire fatigue?

although the Marquis of Salisbury and a few of the haughtie t peers, will not receive even so illustrious a commoner as Benjamin Disraeli under their roofs, the whole tendency in England is towards gradually obliterating hard and fast social frontiers. Mr. Merry has long been be overcome with the same dire fatigue?

ded to the infecti hich comes from a vast multitude, who which comes from a vast multitude, who are determined to be good-natured and have a good time. It is indeed the English carnival—only the carnival is held with a purpose, and has, which the Continental carnivals have not, a definite nucleus in the race for the Derby stakes. I have awaked in London on many a Derby morning, and although each time I have seen the same sights and heard the same sounds, it is ever a new and inspiriting atter caravan passing along in the dusk, sometimes with horses, wagons, hand-carts, sometimes tramping briskly off on foot. These are plebians—the moneymakers—thousands of boys, from ten to fourteen, thousands of men, of women, of young girls; miniature menageries; Punches and Judys by the dozen; amburgatory confectionery shops; garblers latory confectionery shops; gamblers, footpads, acrobats; horse-holders, boot-Stock of Groceries, &c., to blacks, fortune tellers; the halt, the blind, the dumb. An army of the ragged and the toiling is cucamped beneath hedge and beside ditch throughout the thirty odd miles which separate Epsom from Loudon Bridge. And the money spend-ers—even noble lords and ladies—are astir by the dawn of Derby Day. Picca-dilly at 6 a. m. is the strangest of carni-val-like medleys. The evening before there has been a series of aristocratic sporting dinners. Throughout St James's and Whitehall the aristocratic restaurants have been uproarious with dinner parties. In spacious mansions at the West End, patrician patrons of the turf have enterpartician patrons of the turn have enter-tained companies of famous stud owners and Derby champions; the most brilliant, perhaps, being the dinner party given by the Earl of Wilton, uncle of the Marquis of Westminster, who annually gives a "Derby Dinner" at his palace in Grosvenor Square. This year there gathered round his board people as familiar on the turf as the jolly and rubicund Marquis of Aylesbury, Lords Coventry and Bradford, gray old Admiral Rous, Sir Watkin Winn, Sir Paket Leal and his replact words the gray old Admiral Rous, Sir Watkin Winn, Sir Robert I cell and his gallant uncle, the General, Mr. Chaplin (winner of the last year's Derby), Mr. Crawford and the Earl of Westmoreland. This was only one of many such preliminary festivities; and good old Lord Zetland was sadly missed from the gatherings. Comparatively few go down to Epsom by train, for the railway stops some miles short of the Downs, and conveyances are desperately uncertain on this day. There are, as perhaps you know, carriages especially constructed for going to the races, which, of course, only the weathy can afford; these are big, two-story ar-rangements, and carry ten or a dozen people, and have boxes for hampers and seats on top whence to view the moving

It was true uncertain English weather on this year's Derby morning-gray and lead colored; and the excursionist to Epsom knew not whether it would be safer to dress in black, and carry a spring overcoat, or whether to come out boldly THIS new and comm dious house, situated in light trousers and straw head gear. The time made by Doncaster, the winning horse, on the three-mile course, was 2.50—not quite so good as in some previous years. But, excepting those who lost—and there are ruances of leases by the way was tables as without the season of the ors of losses by young nobles as ruinous s those of the "Hastings era"—the victory was a most popular one. In the first place, Doncaster is a home thorough ored, and comes from the "horsiest" of all English Counties, Yorkshire; and is owned by a gentleman who is universally liked on the turf. It is a noteworthy fact that Mr. Joseph Merry, who is this year's victor, is a great Scottish iron master. "Trade" has invaded the traditional sporting ground of the nobility and gentry. Is it, as M. Taine would have it, a mere turf, and has won some time or love of "noisy amusement," "the outlet of a year of repression" only? In London itself, the thousands who must remain at home are fain at least to make a holiday, and as you approach the town through its seemingly interminable southwestern suburbs, you see crowds on every hand, curiously gazing at the myriads who are in their eyes heroic as having just beheld the sight of sights. I think there must have been twenty thousand drunken people in London on Wednesday night; the streets were almost crowded with staggering groups, and the taverns overflowed with indiscriminate crowds of men, women, and even beardless boys, and girls in their teens; while the theater, concert-halls, dancing-rooms, and Cremorne, sent forth hilarious sounds, and gave a spirited ending to what is emplatically the most mixture and entirely.

It is more than a respectable length of the development of the development of his character. than a respectable business man's credit is worth to be known as owner in St. John tug-boats under their present management, and the management will out. No honest man ever consented to allow a steamer in which he was interested to join a combination for the purpose of compelling ship owners to employ none but the members of the association that has done much and is doing much to injure the shipping business of the port. The combination was ostensibly for the purpose of securing uniformity in the rates of towage sive ritual of the requiem mass, as they and stopping unprofitable racing beand stopping unprofitable racing between the boats. Respectable owners allowed their boats to enter the union for these legitimate purposes, and no other, and they were more surprised than the public at the revelation that the managers of the Tug-boat Union had disgraced all concerned by a conspiracy with the Luborers' Association for forcing shipowners to accept laziness and impudence at $3 a day. On Monday, June 2nd, three women ararived in Halifax from Boston in one of the steamers, intending to go on in the Allan steamer to St. John's, N. F., the next day. They obtained lodgings in a house in Upper Water street. One of the women, whose husband is in St. John's, however, gave birth to twins—a boy and a girl—about three hours after landing. The boy died the same evening. Of course the mother and the surviving child could not go on the next day, and their friends proceeded, leaving them behind. The woman and child were carefully attended by the family with whom they were stopping, as the mother had some money and expected to receive more as soon as her husband should hear of her state. Friday evening, however, the little girl died, and the mother followed at 2 o'clock next morning.
