Andrew Logan, deputy warden of the Central prison, produced Luckey's record while there.

Government Detective William Grier was next called. He detailed the steps he had taken to work up the evidence of the case. The most important part of his evidence was as follows: At Irish Ansley Stewart, another of the neighbors who was present at the fire, gave important testimony, particularly with reference to the shoes which were found in prisoner's possession at the time of his arrest in Smith's Falls on the night of the tragedy. The boots were of a peculiar pattern, and Stewart says that to the best of his belief they were those worn by the prisoner's father on, the day of the murder.

An attempt will be made to prove that the prisoner will be required for their examination. Mr. R. C. Clute of Belleville, is acting as crown prosecutor, and Mr. J. R. Lavell, of Smith's Falls, is defending the prisoner.

Brockville, April 20.—When the prisoner was brought in yesterday morning very little change was noticed in his appearance. He takes great interest, however, in the proceedings, and not a word of the evidence escapes him.

Salas Hitchcook was examined. He was one of the threshers, and said he saw His Stepmether and Sister.

BEOGEVILLE, April 18.—With the closing of the civil case of the Peck v. Bay of Quinte Railway and Navigation Company came the principal event of the astress, the trial of Charles Luckey for the murder, on October 8, of his father, sister and step-mother at the villages of New Bliss, in Kitley township, some 25 miles morth of this town. Lackey, the prisoner, it will be remembered, was sent to the Central Prison for a term on a charge of larceny at Ottawa, and was released on the morning of the 7th of October. It is claimed that after his release he proceeded to Smith's Falls, then walked to his old home some six miles distant, and after murdering his relatives set the house on fire, the bodies of his victims being burned to a crisp. It is generally thought that the question of the prisoner's guilts or innocence will hinge largely on the ability of the prosecution to show whether or not a murder was committed, the bodies of the victims being burned to such an extent that Coroner Vaux, of Brockville, who conducted the inquest, was unable to discover any wounds. As a matter of fact, it would seem that the whole three bodies were burned to such an extent that a bushel basket would have contained them all.

When Luckey was brought into the dook it was seen that the had shaved off the luxuriant beard which he has worn since being incarcerated, and looked the least concerned man in the whole court be expected the detence will put up the plea that no evidence exists to show whether the victims were murdered or not.

Dr. Reeve saw the remains after they had been taken from the fire. They were all without limbs and headless. The chest of the girl was burned away, as was also part of the viscera. Mrs. Luckey's chest or abdomen was not opened. The frontal bones and arbital cavities in the upper jaw and lower jaw, with tongue protruding, of Mr. Luckey were there. So far as he knew, no regular post mortem was held.

Coroner Vanx said he carefully examined all the bodies, but could not say that the lungs appeared to have been congested before or after death owing to the burned condition of the bodies. No attempt was made to see what appearance the internal organs had. The fire was not hot anough to spon the general outline of Mr. Luckey's features.

The work of tracing the prisoner from the chains he was released from the Central prison on October 7th up to the hour of his arrest was then taken up. Guards Frank and James and Storekeper Jeffries, of the prison, testified as to Luckey's entrance to the prison, his release, the amount of money he had when he left, and what he wore. He had no money except $12.65 given him by the prison officials, though when arrested he had something like twenty dollars on his person. The pair of boots given him at the prison were not the ones found on his feet when arrested, and the inference is that the ones he wore were taken from his father.

John Hanna, now of Winninge, testified to meeting Luckey in Toronto on October 7th, and travelled with him to Smith's Falls, and head on for Carleton Place. Witness stayed at his uncle's in Smith's Falls, and head the clock strike five after he got to the latter's place. On cross-examination witness said Luckey told him before leaving Toronto that, he had won $10 on a bet about his weight. They both drank from a bottle on the way down, but he would not consider Luckey under the influence of liquor.

cution, and the defence then called their witnesses.

Charles Parker, Thomas Brown, George Morton and Andrew Mercier testified regarding the size of boot worn by Mr. Luckey, all declaring that he usually wore sixes, while those found on the prisoner were savens.

James Robinson, a Quebec traveler, testified that he sold boots for G. Bresie, of Quebec; that he sold them in Smith's Falls, but those found on the prisoner were not Bresie's boots, as the arrangement of the nails was different.

Oven River of Ottawa, the missing witness, turned up in the afternoon and was put on the stand.

Witness was a prisoner with the accused at the Central prison and worked in the same shop. He was brought forward by the defence to explain away the possession by Luckey of considerable money when arrested, and did it to some extent by detailing how the two 'used to peddle tobacco among the other prisoners. Witness sold the tobacco to Luckey at four plugs for 35 cents, and Luckey paid cash. Had seen Luckey with $\frac{1}{2}$. Witness said he caume out of the prison October 29, 1891, and had in his mouth at the time $13.05, which he had made on the tobacco deals. He had seen as high as $100 in the possession of a prisoner.

The court adjourned at 6 o'clock, the jury again being locked up for the night.

BROCKYBLE, April 92.—One of the most sensational murder trials ever held in the Brockville court-house was finished here about half-past eight o'clock last evening, when twelve good and true men filed into their places and rendered a verdict that Charles Luckey was 'not guilty'' of the murder of his father on October 8th last, on which occasion the prisoner's father, step-mother, and sister were found dead in their burned dwelling at New Bliss. The verdict had not been unexpected, and though the great majority of those who have watched the case closely seem to be of the opinion that the prisoner was guilty, all are equally willing to admit that the evidence against him. was purely circumstantial, and that nothing had been shown which would definitely established practically nothing. In fact the attempt made to show that a tramp wearing red stockings was seen in the neighborhood of the Luckey place on the defence continued from yesterday established practically nothing. In fact the attempt made to show that a tramp wearing red stockings was seen in the neighborhood of the Luckey place on the dorest witnesses testifying that the party referred to passed through villages several miles from the Luckey place on the forenoon of the day the fire took place.

dress to the jury. He spoke over three hours.

Mr. Clute followed for the Crown, speaking an hour and a quarter, making an almost complete chain of circumstantial evidence; but, of course, failing to establish death by violence.

Justice Falconbridge's address occupied an hour and five minutes in its delivery, being finished at 6.05, when he left the court-room and went to his hotel for tea. His remarks were on the whole impartial, but leaning perhaps a little in the direction that a strong case had been made out against the prisoner. At in the direction that a strong case had been made out against the prisoner. At 8.06 a messenger was sent to the hotel, and at 8.17 the jury returned with a verdict of "not guilty." As soon as the judge left the bench considerable applause was heard from a section of the audience. It had previously been announced, however, by the crown prosecutor that the prisoner would be held to answer the charge of murdering his sister and step mother.

BROCKVILLE, April 20.—Yesterday the grand jury returned a true bill against Thomas Shipman for the murder of John Fitzsimmons at Daley's Landing, on March 24th, and against Albert Joels, Emma Joels and Thomas Shipman, for aiding and abetting the crime.

Brockville, April 21.—While the Luckey Trial was proceeding yesterday, Mr. Clute, Q.C., crown prosecutor, drew the attention of the judge to the Shipman case, which he thought could not be completed in a day. In view of the large number of witnesses on the Luckey case it would not be finished before tomorrow night and in that event it would be scarcely possible to finish the Shipman case this week. He also called the judge's attention to the Napanee Assizes next week.

Justice Falconbridge accordingly post-poned the Shipman case till May 3 next and ordered the release of all the jury-men not on the Luckey case.

To-day the trustees mourn his departure, for he has gone with about $200 of this section. He worked the scheme this way: The trustees had a note for $50 at the bank for three months and when it came due gave Louis instructions to go and pay this note and also to pay the teacher, but instead of doing this he, Beaudoin, forged names of the trustees, renewed the note, and never paid the teacher.

Mr. Tait then took up the cudgels for the Government, and Mr. McCleary answered the Toronto member. Mr. Waters resumed the debate after recess, and the debate was continued by Messrs. Toronto, 2 pril 20.—The tid-bit in the proceedings resterday was the debate on Mr. Cirk, s motion declaring against the minority system of representation which was obtained in Toronto. The debate was spirited, and was participated in by Messrs. Clarke, Davis, Tait, Mowat, Meredith, Hardy, and Wood. Mr. Ryerson moved the adjournment of the debate. Sir Oliver Mowat's remarks were short; but they created a mild sensation. He admitted that the system was an experiment and that it had been a failure in Toronto. He also said: "If see no reason why we should continue or extend it. Goderich, April 21. — The severest windstorm ever remembered here broke over Goderich yesterday. Fences were laid flat, trees were blown down and uprooted, windows were driven in, awnings torn down, and a general topsyturvy state of things has existed all day. The Town hall was partially unroofed, two of the chimneys at the east end having been blown down, and shingles, rafters and plaster carried into the clerk's office. Injury was also done to the roof of the Goderich organ factory, Davis block and other buildings, the most prominent of which was the G. T. R. round house. Several of the large windows of the court house were also blown in, and the court reem was littered with broken glass.

for which Niagars is famous. During the summer season, when the parks and islands are crowded, there is soarcely a day that the body of some man or woman who has leaped into the river and been dashed to death on the rocks 165 feet below is not picked up by the fishermen about Lewiston and Youngstown, five miles from the falls. The river here is as smooth and as placid as a mill pond, and most of the remains of the suicides are found at these places while drifting alowly toward the lake. Not only in summer does Niagars grind out the lives of the weary, but in winter also, amid snow and ice, many fling themselves into these jaws of death seeking eternal rest.

No one will dispute, either, that Niagara is not a good place for a person contemplating suicide to carry out his plans. It is claimed by people who have made the subject a study to be the finest place on earth to extinguish the fiame of life. People go these from points thousands of miles away to take their lives. A bullet may not find the heart and thus cause untold suffering, a blade may not sink deep enough or the point of the steel may not reach the vital spot expected; but with Niagara—one leap and it is all over. There is no turning backward, no suffering. Before the journey to the rocks below has been fairly commenced all sense has flown, life has been crushed out by the water.

The bodies of half the people who go over the falls are never secovered. They drift to the whirlpool, dive down into the twirling waters and disappear forever. It is known there is a subterranean channel connecting the whirlpool and Lake Ontario, but where this undesgrand atream strikes the lake is only guess work. Huge logs have frequently been seen to be ased one and and the next moment sucked down out of sight.

A Soke Costs Two Lives.

Not only is Niagara noted for its suicides, but tragedies, bloody and mysterious, and appalling accidents, as well. One of the stream and when looking up at the tumbling waters appears as if it must the next instant be swept away. On this MR. JUSTICE SEDGEWICK-

Four years later he was called to the Ontario bar, and shortly afterward to the bar of Nova Scotia. This was in 1873. The next year he embarked in the forlorn hope of carrying Halifax County for the Legislature in the Liberal Conservative interest. The year 1874 was a bad time for such a candidate, and Mr. Sedgewick, being defeated, devoted himself axclusively to law and soon reached the front rank in his profession. He was made a Q.O. in 1880, in 1885 was chosen recorder of the city of Halifax, and on the establishment of the Dalhousle law school became its lecturer on equity jurisprudence. In 1885, when Mr. Burbidge was appointed to the position of judge of the Excheque Guut, Mr. Sedgewick became Deputy Minister of Justice. properly holled if properly pared or washed, and placed in water that has just reached the boiling point. The water should again be brought to boiling. This requires from 15 minutes to half as hour, according to the size of the potato. Then drain the dish of water, take it to the air, shake it up and down a minute, and put if on the coolest part of the stove. This is to dry the potatoes and keep them from being 'soggy'.

"Now, with a cold boiled potato you can do almost anything. A very tasteful dish is made by cutting the remnants of potatoes into small slices and arranging them on a hot skillet, greased first with lard and then with a little butter. This makes saute potatoes, but it is easy to spoil them. Nothing can be browned unless it has a hot, greasy surface to brown it, and crisp, golden brown potatoes can be head if too many are put in the skillet at once. And of course they must have salt and pepper.

"Cold potatoes chopped into dice, fried in the same way with a little more butter and some shallots and parsley chopped fine and mixed with the potato make lyonnaise. The fried potato is not greasy, indigestible or unhealthy. Potatoes should be fried in boiling fatthat its, sweet, white lard melted, and carefully drained. For this use a deep wire ladle, or a spoon in the hands of an experienced cook and a platter or pan lined with the kind of coarse brown paper that is used for wrapping packages by butchers or bakers. This careful draining unkes the difference between an unwholesome greasy dish and a wholesome, dainty and artistic one. The fried potatoe is needed. And chey must be eaten when needed. Whe's Are the Clothes?

Is a wife's clothing, which she has purchased with her husband's money, the property of the husband or the wife! This question has been raised in a London polyes court by a Mrs. Watte, who is living apart from her husband under a separation order obtained by her. It is 'm' what Mr. Watts has retained in his kering a large amount of clothing which his wife had purchased with money he gave her for the purpose. Mrs. Watt's lawyer contended that the property in the money passed from the husband when he handed it to the wife, and thus the articles which she purchased thereupon became part of her separate, but Mr. Watts and his legaladvisors refused to accept this view of the case.

Unfortunately this delicate question was not set led. The case was withdrawn upon the discovery that the articles were worth more than £15, which is the limit of the magistrate's jurisdiction. Proceedings are to be resumed in another form, however, and Canadian as well as English wives will watch the result with interest.

New York Ideas,

The newest flounce is from two to six inches wide, doubled, bias and cut to fit the skirt so that it sets close at the upper edge and flares below.

Lining a skirt with canvas even half-way up to make it flare ought not to be countenanced; it makes it too heavy forhealth and causes the outside to wrinkle. Skirts must escape the ground, as the desire to sweep the streets with demitrains has vanished, beyond recall, it is to be hoped.

A FOOLISH RESOLVE.

His doom had been spoken, and he was to die very soon. It was the kind-hearted, gray-haired physicians who had told him "the worst," with a voice inflected by altogether unprofessional emotions; and as he recalled the scene Wilfred Devereux smiled grimly, Wilfred Devereux had led a selfish and altogether useless life, but he had found the world fairly amusing until it had begun to bose him, and of late it had bored him profoundly; so he did not care so very much if he was "going out," as he phrased it.

He was to avoid excitement. The doctor had said so. Again he smiled as he recalled this advice, For years his life had been a restless search after fresh distractions and excitement, and the sated worldling thought how entirely superfluous the connect tendered by his physician had been.

Well, he was following out the prescription to-night, at all events, idly lounging in the luxurious little smoking-room.

mance of the young man's life had ended.

Devereux thought of all this as he gazed into the dark flowing Thames. Heavens how well he had kept his word about squandering his life! But he did not blame Mary now.

"Mary is in town to-night," he reflected, as his cab bowled down the embankment and under the towers of Westminster toward Kensington. "I wonder if she has changed much, and if I shall come across her before I die?"

And now he had reached his destination, and was walking up the carpeted stairway, while the music sounded above him. He could not dance. The doctor had forbidden it, so he strolled aimlessly out of the ball-room.

Sometimes one seems to know by premonition what is to happen next. So it was with Deversaux, and he scarcely started when the girl of whom he had so recently been thinking about appeared before him.

Nothing to my credit, I feer, he said lightly. "You see, Mary, I kept my word, and wasted my life, as I forefold I should."

She made no answer.

"Do you think, Mary, that I was really so bad as you believed me to be?"

"As one grows older," she said gently, "I think one's creed grows less narrow. I treated you badly."

The last part of her reply was barely audible, but he leaned forward and caught her hand and held it lightly, while his frame thrilled, with a feeling he had thought he could never experience again.

As she was thinking sadly of him whom she had cast adrift years before, of a young man, careless, worldly, perhaps, but with many possibilities in him of good, who had, however—she knew it only too surely—since chosen evil.

Her old narrowness of mind had been lost with fuller knowledge. The girl had led a sheltered life and was ignorant of the world and its temptations. The woman who sat in the gloom of the balcony told herself that she had been worn.

had led a sheltered life and was ignorant of the world and its temptations. The woman who sat in the gloom of the balcony told herself that she had been wrong. That was all. But it had spoiled a man's life.

He was a weak man, to be sure, to have fretted over the loss of a gir's worthless heart; but she sat in the darkness conscious that she had made agreat and grievous mistake.

And Devereux sat there as in atranee, drinking in every line of her face, dimity in every line of her face, dimity in every line of her face, dimity gin every line of her face, dimity gin every line of her face, dimity gin every line of her face, dimity in every line of her face, dimity in every line of her face, dimity with the sweetness of the only pure loveit had ever felt. Life had been a fever of late, a hot delirium, but he had found he was not worn out and weary of it as he had believed.

Neither spoke for a few minutes. At last Devereux said; "Mary, could you love me now?"

"Hush!" she said; "you must not speak so. I am married."

"Then I hope you are happy," he said very gently.

She was silent.

"Oo you know, Mary, I am to die very soon?" he said.

"To die?"
