POETRY.

To-Day and To-Morrow.
What did the west wind whisper,
As I stood on the beach to-night,
Watching the gold and crimson
Faded to an amber light?
What did my heart keep saying,
As it leaped the waves' sweet hum?
To-day is the time for working,
To-morrow may never come.

What did the pale stars, dreaming,
Tell of their thoughts to me,
As I watched them glow and dazzle,
From my nook by the sounding sea?
"Scatter the roses of kindness,
Scatter them, love to-day!
To-morrow is in God's own wise hand—
To-morrow is far away!"

To-day is the time, my ladie,
To do this action of love;
To-day is the time my lassie,
To stay the feet that may rove,
To-day is "the time of small things,"
Make those a name that will shine
As one who improved the important to-day.

For to-morrow may never be thine.
—Jessie M. Heiner in Ohio Farmer.

SELECT STORY.

Just How It Happened.

The farm was a very well kept one, I thought, yet, as we walked across the fields, my host picked a wisp of wool off a silver on a fence rail, two stones the size of a man's foot off the ground and stopped two minutes to pull a piece of a root out of the ground.

The stones and piece of root he deposited on a pile of such things at the side of the field as we came to the fence, and the wisp of wool was carefully deposited in his vest pocket.

"I like to keep things picked up," he explained, as he straightened a fence corner that had gone awry. The fellow that used to own this place was broke up by leavin' a broken fence rail layin' where it hadn't orto be.

"How was that?" I asked.

"It's quite a story," responded my old friend, as he walked on. "Sam Quinon, he owned this place afore I got it, an' he was drefully careless, though a better fellow never drawed breath.

One day he was a baulin' in hay his way t'ree come off 'cause he hadn't tended to it in time, an' he went to the fence an' got a rail to pry it up with. In doin' the job he broke the rail an' when he got through he jest left it a layin' right where he had used it, an' it laid there till the next spring, when he was a plowin' for corn. He run into it then and to get rid of it he chucked it into the furrow an' plowed it under, an' it was out of sight for a year.

"The next spring when he was plowin' in' for oats he run into the rail ag'in an' broke his plow and had to stop and go to town to get a new one. This put back his plowin' a hull day, and the consequence was that a rain came on afore got his oats in and put him half a week and he didn't git more'n half a crop.

"That fall he run onto the rail ag'in and ag'in he plowed it under, thinkin' that it would be rotted afore the ground was plowed ag'in, and he 'lowed to seed it down for meadow.

"Along in the spring his horse got out of the stable on account of a hinge bein' off the door, and in wanderin' around they found the low place in the fence where the rail had been took off of, and they got into the wheat and one of em eat enough of the green stuff to throw it into the colic—she was inclined that way naturally—an' afore she could be helped she died. On this account he had to put a colt in to do his work with, and that colt proved to be the worst piece of horse flesh I ever did see in all my born days. But he managed to get along somehow, for Sam was a shifty fellow, and would come near workin' without no tools at all than any man I ever knowed.

"All this time the rail was a layin' there biding its time, and when harvest came it got in its work. I don't know how it happened that it came to the top, but as near as I can make out one of the horse's stepped on it when they got in the time the one I was telling you of died, and the ground bein' soft one end went down and left the other stickin' up a little. Anyhow, when Sam got ready to cut his wheat, and it was a mighty promis' crop, he drove into the field and started out on the shape, but he hadn't gone more'n four or five rounds till he run ag'in that same identical rail, and something about the binder gave way with a snap like a gun goin' off. This scared the colt, and it gave a lunge, and before the hands knew what was the matter, Sam was thro'owed off the machine and his collar bone broke and the team was a tearin' across the field like mad, and they never stopped till the hull thing was knocked into kindling wood and scrap iron, and the colt was broke short off.

"This was luck ag'in me to be sure, and I told some of the neighbors that we would make a bee and get our own wheat just as soon as we got our own work done, and we set the next Monday to do it, but Sunday night there came the biggest hail storm we ever see in this section and jest riddled Sam's wheat. It was as flat as if it had been rolled, and thra-had as clean as if it had been failed, and it was a dead loss.

"Sam was in pretty deep and he been countin' on the wheat to let him out, but after he had his run o' luck he kind o' give up and kep' goin' from bad to worse till finally he busted flat as a flounder, and when his place was sold by the assisnee, I bid it in.

"Cur'ous, ain't it; low a little thing that could a been tended to in half a minute, kep' right on till it broke a man up? I allus was to'le careful about havin' trash layin' around, but now then, I've 'lowed 'em to pile up, I pick up one like that place. I ain't got this one clean yet, but I'm gainin' on it.

"Won't you jest shove that rail into place while I lift the corner?" my friend asked, suitin' his action to his words. "Seems as if it's impossible to keep a fence from rackin'."

"What became of Sam Quinon?" I asked.

"What's bred in the bone can't be beat out in the flesh, they say," he replied. "He went west with what he saved out of the wreck, and went to farmin' on the shares, and the last I heard o' him he started to town with a load o' corn, and forgot to fasten one o' the horse's checks and a train start his team and it got away with him, and he was killed then and there."

CANT.
BY M. C. LOCKWOOD, D. D., CINCINNATI, OHIO.

Thomas Carlyle defined "cant" as organized hypocrisy. Probably he meant by that the substitution of formulas for duties. Cant is the affectation of superiority by which we ignore truth and circumvent its application.

Cant is not limited to religion; it prevades our whole Anglo-Saxon civilization. The Teutonic races are not as great liars as the Latin races, but they have cultivated cant instead.

Every department of our activities is full of it. You will find it in the reports of medical associations, in the criticism of literature and art, in the chambers of commerce, in the assembly of workmen, in the architect's specifications and in school-teachers' institutes: the press cultivates it as a fine art, and the churches are not exempt.

Jeremy Bentham wrote on "Fallacies" and any of them of which he treated would come under a definition and serve as illustrations of cant. But cant includes more than fallacies, for a cant phrase may often be the truth in speech which is made to serve instead of the truth in life.

The subject is so large that this will be the first of two articles concerning it. One of the familiar forms of cant is found among people who pick up a little superficial knowledge of literature. They read a bit of criticism here and another there and strive to pass themselves off as well-read and literary people.

"What do you think of Browning?" asked a woman to whom Longfellow would be obscure.

"I think a great many things of Browning, madam. To what in particular do you refer—his style, or his philosophy of art and religion?"

She looked dazed for a few moments, and then gathers up her courage and asks: "Isn't he very difficult?"

"Yes, sometimes. Where do you find him difficult?"

"O," she said, cornered at last, "I don't pretend to understand him; I just thought I would ask you."

It was her shortest way out. The recent discussion in Cincinnati concerning the Bible furnish ample illustration of the tendency to cant. The newspapers and the mouths of the people were full of it. Men discussed higher criticism who had never read a word of it.

The names of Strauss, Bauer, Volkmar, Rous, Keunen, Wellhausen, and Pfleiderer and Weiss were known—in fact, one woman wanted to know if that German critic Strauss was trying to break down the Bible was not the man who wrote those wicked waltzes. People took sides for or against Dr. Strauss entirely as a matter of cant, a matter of pretence of knowing what they knew nothing about.

Letters were written to the papers with cant about the Bible which revealed a total ignorance of the real merits of the question. They were for effect, and written with affectation. Some who knew the least about the Book and its history were zealous in its defence, and talked about the original manuscripts when they knew not the difference between a Greek and Hebrew letter.

There were infidels who thought that the Bible was being assailed by the accused and so they sided with him, and they caught about the mistakes in the Book, not perceiving that if these were admitted and accounted for they were in a measure disarmed. Prof. Huxley is more wily. He always acts as the champion of ultra-conservatism in theology, and is vociferous in his opposition to any restatement of the theory of inspiration, but our Cincinnati infidels picked up the cant of their sectarianism. And on the other hand people who imagined that Dr. Smith was assailing the truth of the Bible, proclaimed their belief in every word and letter, and some of these with their professed allegiance knew little of its contents and practiced less of its precepts—men who were filled with the money-loving and selfish spirit of our age; men whose religion was only a form of argument rather than the spirit of a life; men to whom the Bible is only an arsenal out of which to get weapons with which to fight their neighbors. And so the cant swelled to a great noise about our ears.

The number did not seem to be great, but the conflict was a discussion between men holding different theories of inspiration, and that both sides expressed a reverent belief in the authority of the Bible as "a rule of faith and practice."

I picked up a paper the other day and read: "There is dignity in labor, for honest toil never degrades." Now this was a choice idea if we only had made it true. We as Americans are doing our utmost to render work a degradation. Why is it that so many of our American youth prefer to become half-starved clerks rather than learn a trade? American mechanics are becoming scarce as the years go on, and are being supplanted in the great industries by the foreign element. The pay is no better; only, by becoming a mechanic a young man imagines that he cannot appear like a gentleman. If he cannot only get a place in a store and go well dressed he is content. And so with our girls: instead of being willing to enter a home and have a good place to sleep and abundance to eat and money enough to be comfortably dressed, they choose rather to be half-starved and to pinch and scrape because they desire lady-like employment. In the efforts of our young men and women to be gentlemen and ladies they fail to understand that the only vulgarly is ignorance mixed with impertinence and self-sufficiency.

A prejudice against work is drilled into us from infancy. Mothers teach their children to believe in their superiority to those who serve them, and teach them to despise those who labor for a living. The blame is not so much to be laid upon our young men and girls as to the cant which talks about the dignity of labor and which then teaches children that it is a degradation. We are bred in the spirit of exclusiveness, and class superiority is built here on the meanness of foundations.

And the result of this is, that those who are looked down upon naturally desire to rise higher, and hence there is restlessness and discontent. We do not honor good labor as we should and are paying the price of our folly in incompetent service and in lack of intelligence and skill in every department of labor. If we believe in the dignity of labor, if we are honest when we say that labor does not degrade, then let us not seek to degrade and oppress it.

A first-class mechanic is better than a quack doctor, a good machinist more honorable than a police court slyster, a gentle and well behaved nurse girl more admirable than a dandy, rag-tag, and imperinent shop girl. A good carpenter is worth a dozen feeble minded little ministers. Let us not cant about work not degrading and then bring our children up to feel that it is a degradation and that to live without work is a gentleman.

"For a long time I suffered with stomach and liver troubles, and could find no relief until I began to use Ayer's Pills. I took them regularly for a few months, and my health was completely restored."

—D. W. Baine, New Berne, N. C.

He has more papers now than he can read.
He has no time to read, except nights, and his eyes are so poor that he can't see them.
He can't afford to take all of them, so takes none.
He doesn't think much of your paper anyhow. "It never has no news nor nothin' else much."
He can get a city weekly four times as big as yours for the same price, and "it's got lots of readin' in it too."
He doesn't like the politics of your paper.

He got mad with the editor seven or eight years ago and wouldn't take his paper if it was the last one on earth.
He likes to see a paper that has sand enough to be on one side or the other and not on the fence all the time.

How quickly some of our churches of to day would have bunched Sampson for heresy because he used the jawbone of an ass instead of a spear with an oxidized handle.
The Value of Imagination.
Heaven's gift is the imagination, that flashes its way where reason often painfully gropes—the faculty that gives form, clearness, distinctness of outline, vividness of coloring to man's ordinary conceptions. The generalization of science cannot be made without it; and without it all the elements of religious truth cannot be harmonized. Imagination is the power of larger vision, a penetrative and interpretative power, seeing into the heart of things. It pierces the veil of sense and reads spiritual truths. The poet, in states of intense feeling, rises to grander and facter larger and truer than those of common hours, and bodies forth the dim and intangible visions that at times haunt all men.

THE ACADIAN.

WOLFVILLE, N. S., MAR. 31, 1893.

The Name of our Town.

As will be seen by reference to another column, the question of changing the name of the town is to be submitted to the meeting of citizens next week. We are glad the matter is to come up for decision. For some years the subject has been discussed. If a change is ever to be made the present is the occasion for making it. We are now entering upon our history as an incorporated town, and the new era affords opportunity for a new departure.

We would therefore urge all our citizens to attend the meeting and take their share of responsibility in this matter. In some cases heretofore when public movements have been undertaken, the citizens have kept away at the beginning and afterwards been loud in their complaints about the action of those who attended the meetings. There will be no excuse for such a course now. If the people wake up some morning and find they are not living in Wolfville, they will have no persons to blame but themselves; and if they find they have lost an opportunity to start their town on a new career, they will not find much sympathy from those who favor the change.

But should a change be made? The name we bear does not commend itself to strangers. It suggests only the town of wolves to them. It is not connected in any way with the historic associations of the place. Loupville would be just as suggestive. There is a loss in not having a name which connects us with Evangeline's land and story. We are in the most classic scenery in Nova Scotia, indeed in all Canada. No other part is so famous in romance. Yet our name suggests nothing of all this.

On the other hand the name, Wolfville, has life-long associations for many, and would be surrendered with regret. A new name would sound harsh at first and perhaps no better than our present one.

Then if a change should be decided upon, what would be the best name to give our town? We have heard several mentioned—Evangeline, Minas, Acadia and others. It will be for the sake of a body to settle this matter, and we hope it may be done satisfactorily.

First Meeting of the Town Council.

The council held its first meeting on Saturday evening, March 25th. The following minutes have been furnished us by Mr. C. H. Starr.

Councillor Geo. Thomson was elected deputy Mayor or presiding councillor.

Walter Brown was appointed town clerk and treasurer.

The salary of the town clerk and treasurer was fixed at $300 per annum, and this official is required to furnish a guarantee bond from a reliable guarantee company for the sum of $5,000.

Institution for the Deaf and Dumb.

The thirty-fifth annual report of the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb at Halifax has just been issued. The past year has been one of success and progress to the institution. The total attendance of pupils for the year has been seventy-two, of whom forty-five were boys and twenty-seven girls. The health of the pupils was good and the work of the schoolroom progressed satisfactorily. In closing his report of the year's work, Principal Fearon states that the institution is now in need of a new building with modern conveniences and ample grounds where the pupils may benefit from recreation and outdoor exercise. The expenses of the institution for the year amounted to about $30,000.

Correspondence.

There is no question that a good newspaper, though founded by private capital, is essentially of a co-operative nature. The subscription price in any case is very small compared with the expenditure of money, time and labor. In view of these considerations, we need not apologize for soliciting the contributions of our most talented and best informed readers—in the shape of brief and pithy articles and letters on all topics of public interest. Thus a mutual and incalculable benefit may be secured to all.

The Supreme Court of New Brunswick has granted a new trial to C. B. Welton and Dr. Randall, convicted of conspiracy in the graveyard insurance case. They have been in St. John jail since their conviction.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Mr. Editor.—A few summers ago there appeared in the columns of the ACADIAN a very suggestive letter from one Edgar L. Wakeman, a gentleman referred to editorially in the same issue as correspondent of several leading journals in the U. S.

Mr. Wakeman seemed to have been greatly impressed by the marvellous beauty of this country, and pointed out that this town should be the objective point of a vast number of summer tourists. He seemed to have been equally impressed by the incongruous name of Wolfville, and made some very pertinent suggestions with reference to the advisability of changing the same, pointing out some of the advantages to be obtained by so doing.

These suggestions were favorably received by many of our citizens at that time and have not altogether been lost sight of. The ACADIAN has referred to the matter from time to time since and many of our citizens have had the subject brought prominently to their notice by strangers, here and abroad, asking, "Where did you get the name Wolfville? What does it signify?" or "Are there still wolves in the vicinity?" and such like questions.

Even an explanation that the name was in some way connected with one of the oldest and most respected families of the place would hardly suffice to satisfy the stranger that visitors to the Acadian land might not still be in danger of being attacked by wolves should they happen to be out after dark.

Now, Mr. Editor, is not the present crisis in our history the time to consider the propriety of changing the name of Wolfville to something more in harmony with our position as the centre of this region made famous by history and the pen of Longfellow?

Should we not now step to the front prominently as "The Town of Evangeline," with our streets and public places named after the several characters so familiar in this connection. Already we have Grand Pre, Gasperon, Acadia, Minas and Blomidon all in the immediate vicinity and surrounding this centre. What more appropriate or significant name could we have? Certainly none so widely known and yet so far as known to the writer, unappropriated in this way.

While the railway and steamship companies are basking in the glory of a town to fall into line with this movement and let every citizen vie with each other in making this the centre of attraction as well as the centre of the land of Evangeline.

I am glad to know this subject is being discussed at the present time by many of our citizens, and I hope the discussion may result in some definite action by the people. Let there be a requisition asking the Mayor to call a public meeting for the purpose of discussing the subject, and take a vote of the ratepayers. If a change is deemed desirable, now is the time; if not, no harm will have been done. In either case, I trust the new town council and every citizen will unite in promoting the best interests of the town by each and all doing what they can to improve our streets, fences, buildings and premises generally, thereby greatly adding to the attractiveness of the place. Yours, CITIZEN.

Renaming Our Town.

Mr. Editor.—For some years the renaming of Wolfville has been seriously advocated by those who have felt the inconvenience and insufficiency of the present name. But a crisis has now come. The council must provide themselves with a seal bearing the name of the town, and if any change is to be made it should be done at once. Several names have been suggested: Acadia or Acadie, Acadia, Evangeline, Minas and Basil. The following requisites are desirable in a name: It should not be too long, one or two syllables being preferable; it should be easily pronounced and easily understood (our present name is very faulty in this respect); it should be of Indian or French origin and in some way associated with our local history or traditions. We are in the centre of the Acadian region and our name should suggest this to tourists. The council will doubtless soon call on us to decide this question, and we should be prepared to choose wisely.

What's in a Name.

There is, I understand, considerable agitation in our newly-fledged town as to the name we are to bear in the future. Shall it be the old one or a new one, and if a new one which of the ones proposed shall carry our renown to the far corners of the earth. There seems to be insuperable objections to "Acadia" as it is already appropriated by the college and its application to the town would make endless confusion besides having a tendency to detract from the interpretive character of the Institution. Acadia College is the college of the Acadian provinces and not of a small town. "Evangeline" has been proposed, and has some things in its favor but it seems too long and too feminine. On the other hand, the old name is in possession which is much in its favor. It is very widely known through its long association with Acadia College and latterly through Skoda's circulars and newspaper advertisements so that it would take some time for the world to adjust itself to the new condition of affairs. In view of these considerations, until a name is proposed that will meet with general favor it would be well to proceed with "Acadia."

Canada and American Aggression.

The United States has always been an aggressive power. Its patriotism has been fed upon strife with Britain, its ambition has been stirred by the idea of one day possessing the whole continent. The inexorable law of its existence seems to have been the absorption of new territory, or at any rate the desire to obtain it. The great Republic coveted Florida and promptly seized it; coveted Texas and Mexico, which ended in the acquisition of California. Had it not been for British power it would have obtained Canada long ago; as it was, the Republic had the fair valley of the Ohio, a great stretch of Canadian territory on the Pacific, and the state of Maine on the Atlantic.

This ambitious desire for the expansion of territory was founded on two principles—a sort of national inherent earth-hunger and a jealous hatred of Great Britain. Yet the Mother Country by its defeat of France upon this continent and its influence in holding the Indians in check, really enabled the Thirteen Colonies to hold their own after independence had been finally granted them. A great French Canada would have been far more dangerous to their early struggles after autonomy and a united existence than were the peaceful and conciliatory British provinces. But this was never thought of by them.

From the time when Washington, through the medium of Arnold's invading army, addressed the loyal people of these Colonies down to the present day, the Stars and Stripes floated from the Gulf of Mexico to the North Pole. "We rejoice," said General Washington upon the occasion referred to, "that our enemies have been deceived with regard to you; they have persuaded themselves—they have even dared to say—that the Canadians were not capable of distinguishing between the blessings of liberty and the wretchedness of slavery. By such artifices they hoped to bind you to their views but they have been deceived. * * * Come then, my brethren, unite with us in an indissoluble union let us run together to the same goal." And this has been the actuating spirit of their warfare, military, commercial or political, so far as Canada is concerned, from the days of Washington to the signing of the Declaration of Independence.

In 1812 the smouldering ashes of hostility originating in the war of the revolution again broke into active flame. Great Britain was still engaged in that life and death struggle with Napoleon in which the liberties of Europe, and it may be, of the world were bound up. The right of search claimed by Britain was more or less necessary to her in the contest going on, but was of course offensive in the last degree to the sensitive American Republic. Occasion was speedily found for action. An attempt to overhurl the U. S. frigate "Chesapeake" resulted in a conflict and its capture by the British ship "Leopard." The set was at once disavowed and reparation offered. But it was useless, and a proclamation was immediately issued excluding from all United States ports His Britannic Majesty's ships, while admitting those of France. England's difficulty had become America's opportunity, and from that time forth, as Sir Archibald Alison, the historian says: "The object was to wrest from Great Britain the Canada, and in conjunction with Napoleon, extinguish its maritime and colonial empire." Then followed the American destruction of the "Little Belt" ship of war under utterly indefensible circumstances, and the subsequent declaration of war on June 18th, 1812. And Sir Isaac Brock, writing six years before this date, describes the Americans as "being employed in drilling and forming their militia and openly declaring their intention of invading the Provinces the instant that war is determined on." Two years later he states that Jefferson and his party, though anxious to do so, dare not declare war, "and therefore endeavor to attain their objects by every provocation. A few weeks ago the Garrison of Niagara fired upon seven merchant boats and actually captured them." No reparation appears to have ever been made for this high-handed act.

But war had finally broken out and General Hull invaded Canada from Detroit on the 12th of July, 1812. The result of that invasion may be told in a few words. One month later General Brock was himself crossing the Detroit River, and on the 16th of August articles were drawn up by which the whole of Michigan territory, Fort Detroit, a ship of war, thirty-three pieces of cannon, 2,500 troops and a stand of colors were surrendered to about 1,300 British and Colonial troops. It is not necessary to go into any details of a war so well known as that of 1812-14. Suffice it to say that the Canadian militia and volunteers did their duty as nobly as the British soldiers and

"Have left their sons a hope a fame They too would rather die than shame."

From MRS HENRY OUTHOUSE, TIVERTON, N. S.

About three years ago I was sick with consumption, which was brought on by a heavy cold. I employed a doctor who advised me to use emulsions. I did so but they did me no good. I was growing weaker fast—my cough was very bad—with night sweats; in fact my parents had given me up as I belonged to a consumptive family. Two of my sisters and one brother have already died of that dread disease. As my appetite was very poor, a friend advised me to use Dr Norton's Dock Blood Purifier. I got six bottles, the use of which soon gave me a craving for food. Soon my cough was better, and I began to gain in strength. I used twelve bottles of the medicine and by that time had gained forty-four pounds in flesh with good health. Have had no return of my lung trouble since and believe that Dr Norton's Dock Blood Purifier saved my life.

As there has been quite a difference of opinion as to whether the meetings of our "city fathers" should be open to the public or not, we quote from the law on the subject as follows: We think the matter is quite plain:—

"Notices of all meetings of the Town Council of any incorporated town, except emergency meetings, and all committees of such council, including the school board, shall be posted in the office of the town clerk, at least twenty-four hours before naming the date, place and hour of such proposed meeting or meetings; and all such meetings shall be open to rate payers of the town."

Presentation and Address.

On Monday evening last at the termination of the services in Long Island church, Rev. F. H. Wright was present. He was accompanied by a purse containing the sum of forty-three dollars. The presentation was made by Mr Edward Gould, in a few well chosen remarks appreciative of the services rendered by Mr Wright during the past three weeks of special services. Mr Wright replied in suitable terms.

Suggestions on Spraying.

The following paragraph from a circular just issued by Prof. John Craig, of the Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, may be of profit to our fruit growers. We regret that our space will not permit a publication of the whole circular:—

HOW TO SPRAY. As the treatment is entirely preventive, in order to make spraying effective, it must be commenced early. All parts of trees or plants must be reached with the preventive agent. Draining is not necessary and is expensive. A thin film upon the foliage will prevent the development of the spores as well as a complete soaking; but it is important that all the leafy surface should be wetted, at least on the upper side. For orchard work a good force pump, which may be fitted into a barrel-side or end—will give satisfaction. It must be of sufficient strength, and fitted with a nozzle which will project the spray in a fine state of division, yet with sufficient force to enter the deeper recesses of the foliage. More expensive pumps, drawn and operated by horse power, may be purchased, but are seldom necessary except for large orchards. The Vermorel nozzle is a very satisfactory instrument for distributing the liquid.

CO-OPERATIVE SPRAYING. Some factors which act as deterrents to the progress of spraying may be enumerated as follows. This work, like the introduction of spraying for the prevention of insect enemies, on account of involving new lines of thought and action, is sometimes regarded by the farmer as impracticable on a large scale. It must be done at certain periods of the year—otherwise it is ineffectual. It involves the purchase of implements and materials which are sometimes difficult to obtain just when required. The success of the work depends also on intelligent adaptation of the treatment to the climatic conditions existing during the spraying period.

To obviate some of these difficulties I would suggest the adoption of a co-operative plan of spraying.

First, where orchards are not large, a few farmers might combine and purchase a spraying outfit, which would serve the community, and if it were possible to have it continuously operated by the same individual, whom practice would lend superior facility in using it, an additional advantage would be gained. Another arrangement could be made as follows:—

A complete spraying outfit, including chemicals, might be purchased by a person who would be prepared to spray under contract, by the acre, or at a stated figure per tree. If this system of combating fungous and insect enemies was introduced, it would obviate much of the prejudice and inconvenience now connected with the work, and spraying would probably in a few years, to the great benefit of orchardists become the general practice.

A Remarkable Dinner.

"I have eaten apples that ripened more than 1,800 years ago, bread made from wheat grown before the children of Israel passed through the Red Sea, spread with butter that was made when Elizabeth was Queen of England, and washed down the repast with wine that was old when Columbus was playing barefoot with the boys of Genoa," said a gentleman in a Chicago club the other day.

The Crinoline Spectre.

I am told on what should be good authority, that all this talk about the revival of the crinoline arises from a stray remark of M. Worth's. That great genius seems to have let fall some dictum implying that the new style of skirt would be "as it were crinolined."

Queens at Work.

Many of our Queens and Princesses, like Solomon's paragon, "sought wool and flax and worked willingly with their hands." Katherine of Aragon introduced fine stitching of black silk upon linen called Spanish work; Queen Elizabeth made a smock for her brother Edward's christening when she was six years old.
