Apostleship for Men.

General Intention for February Named and Blessed by His Holiness Pope Leo XIII.

In latter times not a few steps have been taken to promote the spiritual welfare of men. Our own work from its inception made special provisions for extending the benefits of the Apostleship of men. Not many weeks ago was held at Chicago the first Convention of Catholic Federated Societies—national, benevolent and literary. Delegates assisted who represented, it is said, a million Catholic laymen. It has been thought, not without reason, that by union for the promotion of general Catholic interests not only would particular objects not suffer, but there would be awakened a spirit of faith and zeal that must react most powerfully on the several societies themselves and on the lives of the individual members.

In Belgium it has been mainly due to the clubs and organizations of Catholic men with influence extending to all spheres of action—mines, railways, factories, even to the saloons, that the Masonic sects were driven from power and succeeded by a Catholic government that has, for twenty years, made the little kingdom the most prosperous and progressive country of Europe. In nations on the contrary, in which the men have not been organized nor made the object of special care, disaster has overtaken the Catholic cause. Witness France, Mexico, and the South American Republics. Nor is the reason far to seek.

It is woman holds in her lap the promise of tomorrow, man carries in his hand the living of today. He wields the sword of authority in the home. He casts the vote that rules the city and the nation. His is the word that lays down the law and enforces its execution. A wise Providence has burdened man with chief responsibility in all fields of human life and social action. Head of the family for its spiritual as well as temporal welfare, he dictates the religion and the measure of its practice, he chooses the school in which his children shall pass most of the precious days of youth, the teachers who are to form their minds and hearts, the environment that must shape their characters. To him the growing up must look for guidance which best the path of the unexperienced when they first venture forth into a world full of wickedness and corruption.

It is man likewise who must shoulder the responsibilities of civil and public life, the making of laws and their administration, the creation and defence of civil and national institutions, of measures to secure the prosperity of all. In a higher order his is the office of the priest, to preach the word of truth, administer sacraments and lead the people on the way of salvation. If he should fail in any of those spheres of duty, shrink from his responsibility, pull down and destroy instead of building up how woful and far-reaching the consequences.

It was Adam's sin, not Eve's, that brought the human family to ruin, of itself irreparable. It is a wonder that the powers of darkness should put forth such efforts, set hidden snares, as well as make open attacks to encompass the ruin of man? O, spare the king and you have the kingdom.

Great are the responsibilities of man, even greater and more numerous are the dangers which accompany them, and how few do not succumb unless they are strengthened and braced by the aids which religion alone can offer! Every day tells its sad tale in the conduct, language, examples, ideas, lack of principle of so many men who in all ranks and conditions avert from truth and righteousness, neglect the practice of religion, and only too often despise its teaching and trample on its precepts. It was this contempt of God and His service that sprang from the heart of the Saviour His bitter lament and His warning: "Do you think when the Son of Man will come faith shall be found on earth?" Those every qualities with which the Creator endowed the man for the fulfillment of his destiny—strength of judgment, indomitable will, a powerful arm, are a danger if they are not guided and subdued by religion. They will develop into a self sufficient and independent spirit blind to the claims of God's revealed truth, rebellious to his laws, always ready to shake off religious restraints as so many shackles bin ting his liberty and impeding the play of his natural powers. How else can we account for the want of faith in so many men given to literary and scientific pursuits or engaged in a professional calling?

Then there is the struggle for existence, the rivalry the competition, the encounter and wrestle for the mastery of man with man and all nature's powers, which are the condition of life on this planet. Attention is arrested, thoughts are engrossed, interests absorbed by objects of sense and the tangible facts of every day life. What a strong hold must not supernatural truth have upon mind and will to prevent them being altogether carried away and totally absorbed by the grovelling cares of earth. In our days especially, steam and electricity, railroads and tramways, ocean and river navigation, the countless inventions of modern genius, all tending to foster laxations living and to stimulate the thirst for riches and enjoyment, deflect men from the higher purposes of life and deaden them to their obligations. Count if you can the multitudes for whom there is no Sunday rest to whom the regular practice of religion, by a kind of necessity is rendered, if not impossible, at least, they think, impracticable, who are detained from prayer, Sunday-Mass and Vespers, not to mention sacraments requiring due preparation and thanksgiving.

Greater dangers still lurk for men in passions and propensities strong and deep-rooted, which unless constantly curbed will rage like lions, nay demons, in oaths and blasphemy revel in drunkenness and impurity, in fraud and corruption, and wage open war on God and His Sacred Name. Add to these the network of oath-bound societies, Masonic sects in open hostility to God's Church and her institutions, spread over the world to ensnare the unwary, the countless associations, godless fraternities in which religious indifference poses as a dogma—and what wonder is it if men left to their own resources make surrender of their souls and through a kind of despair, resign themselves to what they look upon as the inevitable.

In presence of so many dangers and difficulties the apostle of the man is prone to faint-heartedness craves a glimmering hope in last sacraments. But it is the sick who are most effected with disease that lie in greatest need of the physician. It was the poor waylaid traveller, bleeding from the gaping wound—'the man half dead—who excited the compassion of the good Samaritan. The wounds were tenderly bandaged, he was gently lifted upon the breast and given over to the care of those in the inn. The Saviour of mankind who came to save sinners, did not do his work by halves. The Church he founded is not a one-sided Church. The Apostleship that busies itself only with woman stands self condemned. The true apostle in our days, be he priest or layman, will turn attention, devotion time, his best endeavors to the salvation and spiritual welfare of man. We have seen that all are called to be apostles. Let all, therefore, according to their state and opportunities help on this great apostleship. Let this be the special object of our prayers for the present month.—J. J. Connolly, S. J., in The Canadian Messenger.

The volume further contains the usages and discipline of the frater, the doctor, (or dormitory), and the chapter, also everything pertaining to the admission and profession of novices; to the infirmary; to the rules observed in visiting the sick, in extreme unction, and at death and burial; to the provision of candles and lights, both for conventual and church purposes; to the respective dignity of festival, and to the ringing of bells.

Altogether the volume gives a most interesting insight into the orderly, everyday life of an elite monastery.—S. H. Review.

Father Vaughan's Work Among the Poor.

From his beautiful church in Farm street, one of the best residential sections of London, Rev. Bernard Vaughan, S. J., has gone to the "slums" of that great city and is there engaged in a grand and noble work amongst their inhabitants. He has rented a room in the Commercial Road district, in which he lives, a poor man amongst the poor. For years, it is said, the reverend Father has thought over such a method of reaching the submerged masses, and now he has achieved his desire and is laboring with excellent results.

His unique methods are described in the following excerpt from a report in the London "Monitor and New Era":

"Father Bernard Vaughan, S. J., in continuation of his slim crusade, spoke at 4 o'clock on Sunday in a dark, grimy court off Periwinkle street and within halting distance of the Stepney Railway Station. As on previous Sundays, the Sisters of the Little Company of Mary acted as bell-ringers and collectors, and before the meeting Father Vaughan himself made a tour of the neighboring courts and alleys, ringing his huge bell and coaxing and exhorting all and every one to come to hear the Word of God. And in the drizzling rain what a grimy, woful aspect everything in this desolate neighborhood seemed to wear. Many of the mothers and children looked miserable and hungry and dirty; the houses are small and mean; the streets and courts are ill-kept and narrow, and the only sign of prosperity is in the palatial public houses here and there looking down contemptuously on the tiny abodes, from which they derive their sustenance and wealth. The East End poverty and want are at present very acute, but at the bottom it is in many cases but another phase of the drink question.

"Day by day hundreds of men, women and little children are going without, anything for dinner, and the last of the pots and pans, furniture and spare clothes—trivial treasures in which they took such pride—have gone the usual way of such things—to the sign of the three balls. The men are out of work, the women are hear-broken and ill and the children starve. All this is perfectly, bitterly true of the thousands who by force of circumstances dwell in those dreary, crime laden dens known as 'London's slums.' The people are totally unable to provide the things necessary to keep alive the body. Then what can be said of their spiritual welfare? Is it at all likely that the generality of these starving, miserable mortals will feel inclined, on the Sunday, for instance, to go to church, be it Catholic or Protestant? Is it likely that their spiritual life is being properly attended to considering the horrible neglect of their poor, half frozen, emaciated bodies? These are the questions which, presumably, the learned Jesuit, Father Bernard Vaughan—always the friend of the poor and needy—has been asking himself.

"The court in which he preaches is about fifty yards long; four yards wide, and the single-story little houses were all barred and shuttered externally and in friendly communication by a series of clothes lines extending across the street and not more than six feet high. The sermon was a simple, eloquent plea calling on all to go to confession and Holy Communion for Christmas. The court was packed and all listened with reverence to the beautiful moving words which again told the story of man's redemption and the love of our Lord for the poor. Several hymns were sung and the Litany of Our Lady recited before the meeting broke up."

Items of Interest.

Mgr. Schroeder, of the University of Munster, has been selected for the chair of dogmatic theology in the new faculty at the University of Strasburg.

The latest statistics concerning the Catholic Church in South Africa show that in the eight ecclesiastical divisions there is an estimated Catholic population of 47,333. There are six Bishops and three Prefects Apostolic, 338 stations, 176 priests, 228 lay Brothers, 582 nuns, 163 schools and 6,343 school children. The last returns are, however, incomplete.

The Emperor of Germany has conferred the insignia of the Crown of the First Class on Mgr. Gasparri, Archbishop of Caserta and Secretary of Extraordinary Ecclesiastical Affairs to the Holy See. His Majesty has refused to accept the dedication of a book by the Jesuit, Count Housbroeck. The work, which is entitled "The Papacy and Civil Union," is a diatribe against the Catholic Church.

The golden jubilee of the German Catholic congresses will be celebrated during the meeting at Cologne, from the 23d to the 27th of August next. The history of the congresses is practically the story of Catholic organization throughout Germany since the days of the Kulturkampf; and the reviews of the past which will be presented on that occasion by speakers and writers will be deeply interesting. "No doubt," says the "London Catholic Times," "visitors from many lands will be present in the ancient city on the banks of the Rhine, for there is much to be learnt from the German Catholics. They have disciplined their political forces so successfully as to be able to exercise a predominant power in the Reichstag; have established Catholic workingmen's societies and other associations for the benefit of the people on a sound basis, and are supporting a well-equipped and vigorous press. Hints at least will be given at the jubilee as to how progress has been achieved. It is hoped that the whole German episcopate will attend. A difficulty has arisen with regard to affording accommodation for the public meetings. Cologne has some large halls, but none big enough for the meetings that will take place during the congress. It is proposed, therefore, that a suitable tent capable of holding from seven to ten thousand people should be prepared, and that it should be of the character of a transerable wander-hall, so that it may be used for succeeding Catholic congresses."

Get the Most Out of Your Food

You don't and can't if your stomach is weak. A weak stomach does not digest all that is ordinarily taken into it. It gets tired easily, and what it fails to digest is wasted.

Among the signs of a weak stomach are uneasiness after eating, fits of nervous headache, and disagreeable belching.

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia for years, and tried every remedy I heard of, but never got anything that gave me relief until I took Hood's Sarsaparilla. I cannot praise this medicine too highly for the good it has done me. I always take it in the spring and fall and would not be without it." W. A. Newell, Belleville, Ont.

On Saturday morning the Minto started from Pictou to go to the relief of the Stanley, to free her if possible, and in any event to transfer the coal to her.

OPPORTUNISM MUST TERMINATE.

Frank Oliver, the Liberal M. P. for Alberta, has notified the government that, if it desires the actual support of true Liberals it must stop playing fast and loose on tariff questions.

In a strong editorial in his own paper, the Edmonton Bulletin, he lectures Sir Wilfrid and his party in this pronounced fashion:

"In view of the tremendous pressure that will be brought to bear on parliament at its next session to secure a higher tariff, it is in order for those whose interests are against such increase to make their minds known in good time. Apparently there is a belief amongst some self-styled Liberals that whatever the party will do, that should the party leaders decide for a prohibitive tariff, such a decision would strengthen the party in its hold upon the government of the country.

THE "MACHINE" IN THE WEST. The fight in Burrard, B. C., for first honors in the election was a lively one. Three Liberals, Messrs. McPherson, Foley, and McLean, were in the field.

SOMETHING ABOUT TAXATION. Hon. W. S. Fielding, in his annual statement of the Public Accounts of Canada, divides the total column to "taxes." From Confederation down to the present day "taxes" have occupied a prominent place in the pages of the Finance Minister's statement.

MORE CABINET DIFFERENCES.

The leaders of the "party of harmony" announce a further postponement of the opening of parliament to March 12th. The reason for the delay is not far to seek. When Hon. J. Israel Tarte left the cabinet disunion was to disappear.

LIBERAL SUPPORT FOR MR. FOSTER. Mr. J. A. Willison, who, as editor of the Toronto Globe, was the brightest and most forceful writer supporting the Laurier government, appeals to the electors of north Ontario to return Hon. Mr. Foster to Parliament.

LIBERALS THEMSELVES AGAINST THE PREFERENCE.

Sir William Mulock is working the British preference for all it is worth in North Ontario. He has neglected, however, to tell the people of the riding, that a fellow-cabinet minister recently granted an interview to the representative of the London Daily Mail, in which the preference was strongly condemned, and the British government was notified, that unless certain concessions were granted to Canadians, all privileges to British shippers would be cancelled.

ALL KICKING MR. TARTE.

Hon. J. Israel Tarte has served notice on Liberals, that he will be present in parliament to resent the insults offered him by the Liberal press.

Remnants—Such bargains in Remnants of Cottons, Cloths, Dress Goods, Flannels, Flannelettes, etc., were never before given in Charlotte town as we are offering to clear lengths from 1 1/2 yds. to 10 yds.

The Venezuelan Affair.

Herbert W. Bowen, Venezuela's representative in the peace negotiations at Washington on Friday signed with each of the allies' representatives there a protocol providing for the immediate raising of the Venezuelan blockade and for the reference of the question of preferential treatment of the claims of the allies against Venezuela to the Hague arbitration tribunal.

The fight in Burrard, B. C., for first honors in the election was a lively one. Three Liberals, Messrs. McPherson, Foley, and McLean, were in the field. The tablet will bear the date of his birth and death.

An unsuccessful attempt to burglarize the premises of Duchesne & Co., was made last Friday night. When the proprietors entered their office Saturday morning they found the handle and combination of the safe forced off, but fortunately the safe, which contained a large sum of money could not be entered. The burglars went through the desk also but nothing of importance has been missed. Entrance was effected through one of the rear windows.

The steamer Usher, owned by H. Cann & Co., Yarmouth, N.S., with 4,800 tons of coal, from Manchester, England for Providence, R. I., broke her propeller shaft, and after having been buffeted by heavy seas and drifting about helplessly for several days, was picked up a few days ago, 300 miles east of Boston harbor, and 150 miles south of Halifax, by the Canadian Sylvania and towed to Boston. The Canadian earned $40,000 by towing the distressed steamer to port.

In a bar-room conducted by two brothers named McCallum, a drunken row took place last Friday night, and William McCallum shot and killed John McAlister. In the fracas McCallum ordered McAlister and others out of the room. This led to high words and refusal to go out. Thereupon McCallum took a revolver and shot McAlister in the right thigh, the bullet glancing down towards the knee. All were then put out and McAlister broke several panes of glass in the window and door, cutting an artery and badly gashing his wrist. McAlister is married and has one child. He is about 36 years of age. He was taken to the hospital.

There was no crossing at the Capes yesterday. The foreign mails went out by the western train at seven o'clock this morning.

Tax writ for the North Ontario election for the House of Commons was issued on Thursday last. Polling takes place on March 10th.

If we mistake not this is the thirty-eighth day since the Stanley was caught in the ice off Sea Cow Head. The Minto has now been in the straits since Saturday morning.

MONDAY was continuation day for Mayor and town Council for the town of Summerside. Election takes place one week from Monday. Mayor McNeill is re-elected by acclamation.

A horse belonging to a citizen took flight Monday afternoon about 6 o'clock on Upper Queen Street and bolted. Coming round Hutchison's corner, the sleigh was upset and by the time the horse reached home the sleigh was badly battered.

We learn that early yesterday morning the Buffalo robe that was stolen on Friday night from a sleigh on Spring Park Road was left at the bank door of the house in front of which the horse and sleigh were standing at the time of the theft.

The storm yesterday affected to some extent the trails on the western line, but those east got through both ways with but little delay. The train for Tignish leaving the city at seven o'clock reached there at 11 P.M. The afternoon train from Tignish was cancelled. There was no train to the Capes last night.

The death of Patrick Keefe, a well known farmer of Kinkora, occurred suddenly on Monday about 4 p.m. of heart failure. Deceased had been in his usual good health up to a few minutes before his death, and was just finished feeding his cattle. He was for some years a resident of Summerside, and was a brother of Mrs. Mary Gillis, of that town. Besides a widow, three daughters and one son are left to mourn.

The storm of Thursday night and Friday morning greatly delayed the trains on the Intercolonial railway. The train for St. John which left Charlottetown in the morning was delayed all day, principally near Colville, and did not reach Summerside till six o'clock in the evening. Here it met the morning train from Tignish, which reached the city about 9 o'clock that night. There was no train from Souris; but the train from Georgetown came through all right. A train went to Souris in the afternoon reaching there shortly after 11 o'clock.

CHAMBERLAIN IN SOUTH AFRICA.

Chamberlain in his speech at Port Elizabeth on the 12th pursued the theme of the colonists' responsibilities toward the Empire. He said: "When the war began, the great Dominion of Canada, and the Commonwealth of Australia, sprang to the assistance of the mother country and made your cause their own. They were not directly concerned, but felt that the honor and interest of the Empire were at stake and showed readiness and anxiety to take their share of the responsibilities of the great Empire which privilege they enjoy." Chamberlain added, "The British race throughout the world are one people. No one in the Dominion of the King can be touched or harmed without a feeling of indignation passing throughout the whole empire. He arrived at the most difficult part of his tour on the 13th on reaching Townsraad Reiner, situated in a wholly Dutch district, which was open to operations during the war, but at the last moment the intention was abandoned. Nevertheless the welcome extended to the Colonial Secretary was anything but cordial. The Dutchmen held sullenly aloof from the receptions and functions, many of them openly paraded. The members of the British Colony and British traders called on Chamberlain and complained by calling all hands Dutch, and of the general system of oppression and intimidation which also extended to the natives, because of assistance they rendered to the British during the war. After receiving the Afrikaner's deputation, Chamberlain made a long speech, in the course of which he rebuked the Dutchmen in strong terms for their attitude, and frankly warned them it was inconsistent with the enjoyment of privileges of British administration. If they wished to preserve their liberty, he said, they must not allow liberty to degenerate into license.

They then passed into the corridor, and I went back to the kitchen, where the cook, who had a kinder heart than one would imagine from her rough exterior, likewise ascribed my woe-begone appearance to my having incurred her mistress' displeasure. The old skin-flit, she declared, was getting quite intolerable; then she advised me to go back into the city at once, and fetch my Obeast with my clothes. She gave me a pass, which had served my predecessor, exhorting me not to lose it, or I might have difficulty in getting in again, and above all to return punctually by four o'clock, as the gates were closed at that hour.

Whilst I was crossing the Tower Green, I saw a young man coming towards the house I had just left, between two sheriff's officers. His countenance was pale and haggard, his clothes torn and soiled, his arms were pinioned behind his back. I recognized him instantly, it was Babington. A pang went through my heart at the sight of him. What a contrast he looked to the handsome young fellow who espoused my poor sister? I hurried away with averted face, lest he should identify me, and unwittingly say something that would compromise me. Alas! I must be prepared for sad things in that terrible prison house, and must be most cautious to preserve my disguise.

That morning I had observed in Water Lane, close to the Tower, the shop of a dealer in second-hand clothes. Thither I now directed my steps, to purchase the linen and other clothes I should require in character of serving-woman. I also bought some yards of cambric and fine holland; last of all I procured a stout check, painted blue and adorned with birds and flowers, in which I packed the various articles I had purchased. The dealer, who was well content with the bargain he had made, sent a lad with me to carry the chest. Rachel, my fellow-servant, helped me to take it up to my chamber, and I then gave her the cambric and cloth, with all that was necessary for a bodice. She did not say much, but I saw that my gift had won her heart. And when, half an hour later, my mistress came into the kitchen, and began to rate me about something, Rachel stepped between us, and told her to her face that if she did not desist from her nagging, we would both leave her that same night. Thereupon the sour-visaged lady cast up her eyes, and expressed her wonder that a Christian maid servant under the Gospel should venture to rebel against just authority. Were we plotting a conspiracy against her, as the goodly Papists had done against the Queen's Majesty?

As soon as she had gone, I took the occasion to put some questions to my companion about the conspiracy of which Lady Hopton had spoken. "What," she said, "has nothing been heard of it in your village? Did you not hear how Babington and his associates wanted to murder the Queen, set Mary Stuart on the throne, deliver the country to the Spaniards, and uproot the Gospel everywhere. And as true as I am a living woman, no one would expect it of the lads, they look so young and good humored I will show them to you; they are brought here every day to the Council Chamber to be examined, in the hope that they will give evidence against the Scottish Queen. But hitherto they have not done so, though they have been mercilessly tortured, so the clerk told me. It is said the Jesuits have given them some charm which prevents them from feeling pain."

"I was told that some gentlewomen had been arrested with them," I said timidly, standing so that she could not see my face. She replied: "Yes, two; old Mistress Bellamy and her daughter or granddaughter, who is said to be Babington's wife. They are confined over there in the Old Harbor, that old weather-beaten tower by the White tower. You can see it from the kitchen window, and from your little chamber you can see the window of their cell. To-morrow we shall have to take them their dinner; they are both sick, the young one I think is the worst of the two."

be on your guard; you will find this a more dangerous place than the Thames. Yet our trip that night nearly brought me to the gallows. However nothing could be proved against me, so, as I am no Papist, I was let off with six months imprisonment for smuggling. I could not stand the confinement, so I offered my services to Sir Owen, and the arrangement suits us both admirably; he has not to pay a man, and I have the opportunity of earning many an honest penny. For this I must say: the Papists are very liberal with their money, when it is a question of helping their priests and co-religionists.

"You shall not find me less liberal," I said, slipping a piece of gold into his hand. "Take that to begin with. Now tell me what can be done, what you can help me to do for my poor grandmother, my sister, my uncle, and the other prisoners?"

The man, surprised at receiving from me so large a gratuity, promised to aid me to the utmost of his power, provided there was no attempt to release any prisoner, for he was bound by oath to help no one to escape. He promised at my request to acquaint my relatives with my presence; otherwise, when I went to carry their food to them the next day, my secret might be divulged. "For the rest," he added, "mark you, inside the Tower a golden key opens every door. I really believe, if one had gold enough, the gates of the Tower itself would unclose at one's bidding; but it would be a matter of great difficulty on account of the number of warders to be corrupted. But within the walls a yellow coin such as you have just given me is as good as a skeleton key. Good Heavens! I have learnt a good deal, since I have been here. Over there in the Martin tower, at the north-east corner of the inner enclosure, a Jesuit named William Oriclion has been imprisoned for years. Almost every night that man is conducted either to the good Earl of Arundel in the Beauchamp tower, or to some other dungeon, where he says Mass for the Papish prisoners, and administers the sacraments. He gave your uncle the sacrament and anointed him, at which time he was here in the Bell tower that he died, and the only means of access to it is through this house. Rachel was kind enough to open the doors for us, and she made a very good thing of it."

Here we were interrupted, and Bill went away, after repeating his promise to spy the prisoners in the Old Harbor of my proximity. That evening, when I looked from my attic window at the cell where my dear ones were confined, I could not sufficiently thank God for having so vividly guided and directed my steps during the past day. Long did I stand gazing at the gray walls and towers lighted up by the clear moonlight. Opposite to me on the green was the Church of St. Peter ad vincula, and on a slight elevation

Don't forget the old man with the fish on his back. For nearly thirty years he has been traveling around the world, and is still traveling, bringing health and comfort wherever he goes.

To the consumptive he brings the strength and flesh he so much needs. To all weak and sickly children he gives rich and strengthening food.

To thin and pale persons he gives new firm flesh and rich red blood.

Children who first saw the old man with the fish are now grown up and have children of their own. He stands for Scott's Emulsion of pure cod liver oil—a delightful food and a natural tonic for children, for old folks and for all who need flesh and strength.

in front of the Church I could see the block, where the unhappy Anne Boleyn paid the price of her evil deeds. What a record of deeds of horror surrounded me on all sides; but again, what heroic examples of Christian fortitude. With the thought of these I consoled myself as I lay down to sleep, and above all with the knowledge that almost every night the Holy Sacrifice was offered within the precincts of this cruel fortress, and fervent supplications ascended to Heaven from the lips of my Catholic brother.

I need hardly say how much I longed, on the morrow, for the time when I should have to carry their dinner to the female prisoners. But another piece of intelligence awaited me before then.

It must not be supposed that, although I have for so long said nothing about my betrothed, anxiety, as to his fate was not one of the bitterest drops in my cup of sorrows. I was however, completely impotent, for had I known with certainty that he had escaped, I should not have known where to seek him, I could do nothing but wait, and I was resolved to be true to him, and as I could not in my present character, wear on my finger the ring he had given me under the wonderful flower of Woxindon, I fastened it round my neck on a ribbon, and wore it on my heart. If on the other hand, he had been drowned in the Thames, as was generally thought, I could only weep for him and pray for him, hope to be united to him hereafter, and submit to the decrees, grievous though they were, of an all-wise and all-loving Providence. I prayed earnestly for resignation, for I believed that my dear Edward had found a watery grave, and thus escaped the terrible death that waited his associates only too surely. But I did not altogether give up hope, for youth and love do not readily despair.

And now quite unexpectedly, I was to learn what had befallen him. Bill Bell found an opportunity of telling me he had executed my commission, and if I was in a position to pay for it he could supply my relatives in the Cold Harbour with bedding, and other little indulgences. To this I gladly assented, and gave the old seafarer, who I knew was to be trusted, a good round sum for the purpose. Then he said: "Miss Bellamy, after I left you yesterday, it occurred to me there was something else you would like to hear." Dropping his voice to a whisper, he asked whether I was not betrothed, or perhaps married to Windsor, who had gone down the river to Gravesend with me? And when I eagerly answered yes, he told me that my lover was not drowned, as, fortunately for him, his enemies assumed, but had been taken out of the water in an unconscious condition, and concealed in a garret at the top of the house by his son, at great risk to himself, for, as the reader already knows, Topcliffe presently came to search the dwelling. Thus Windsor, alone of all the chief conspirators had been able to elude the vigilance of the pursuivants.

"Where is he at present?" I inquired, once more breathing freely. In the attic where my daughter Maud died. It would be impossible for me to see him, for he was confined to his bed, and I could not sufficiently thank God for having so vividly guided and directed my steps during the past day. Long did I stand gazing at the gray walls and towers lighted up by the clear moonlight. Opposite to me on the green was the Church of St. Peter ad vincula, and on a slight elevation

I reflected for a month, and then said no, for I thought the knowledge that I was being might tempt my betrothed to do something rash. But I thanked my informant for all he had done for him, as well as for having told me of his safety, and thereby taken a great weight off my mind. Rachel's voice called me into the kitchen, and for two or three hours I had to work hard. We prepared the tasty viands for our master's table and the meagre soup, made from peas of indifferent quality, to be set before the prisoners. Lady Hopton took good care that it should not be too rich or highly flavored; it was not good for those in captivity, besides they ought to eat their bread with ashes, especially the obdurate Papists, who were in the gall of bitterness and the bond of iniquity.

At length eleven o'clock sounded from the belfry, and Rachel told me it was time to take the prisoners dinner to them. My heart beat fast, as we began our rounds of the cells in the inner parts of the fortress; the prisoners confined in the towers which formed part of the walls were served by others. We crossed the green to the Cold Harbour, and after filling the basins of the women on the ground floor, we ascended by a narrow winding stairs constructed in the thickness of the wall to the upper story.

Price 25 cents a bottle. A HINT TO THE ORATORS. (A reader of the S. H. Review, a member of many societies, fraternal, social and educational, sends it the following poem which reflects a state of mind common enough, he says, among people who have to listen to after-dinner oratory. He avers that he would like to send a copy of this poem to all members of the A. O. H., K. of G. M. C. O. F., C. T. A. U., and other Catholic societies.)

Oh, gentle, gentle reader, Have you ever sallied forth To some big feed or other Which you thought was something worth, And listened to the speeches Of the orators, until You felt like going crazy, And you knew the worth was nil?

Oh, gentle, gentle reader, Have you ever heard them rave, The people with a mission To condemn or vice to save, The men who eloized their horror Or their favor in a shout— Until you wished to holler From your seat: "Oh, cut it out!"

Oh, gentle, gentle reader, Have you ever sat and heard The man who "came not thinking 'H'd be asked to say a word," The man who hems and haws until You're fairly fit to sneeze, The man who didn't really come Prepared to make a speech?"

Oh, gentle, gentle reader, Have you ever been compelled To listen to this fellow Till your intellect rebelled?— This modest mannered, diffident, Excruciating bore Who makes "a few remarks" For something like an hour or more?

Oh, gentle, gentle reader, Have you ever had to sit And listen to such counterfeits Of wisdom and of wit, Of all the dreary bores, does he Not the worst to you?— The lengthy winded fellow Who just said "a word or two."

F. E. B. We heard a man say the other morning that the abbreviation for February—Feb.—means Frezz: every body, and that man looked frozen in his ulster. It was apparent that he needed the kind of warmth that stays, the warmth that reaches from head to foot, all over the body. We could have told him from personal knowledge that Hood's Sarsaparilla gives permanent warmth, it invigorates the blood and speeds it along through artery and vein, and really fits men and women, boys and girls, to enjoy cold weather and resist the attack of disease. It gives the right kind of warmth, stimulates and strengthens at the same time, and all its benefits are lasting. There may be a suggestion in this for you.
