How he saw the Pope.

(By John Kendrick Bangs, in Harper's Weekly.)

Whatever difficulties may confront the illustrious American travelling abroad in securing an audience with the Pope, certainly the plain, everyday, common garden citizen of this republic, like myself, finds access to His Holiness not only easy but courteously accorded.

Within a very few weeks of the so-called "Fairbanks incident," and in the midst of the Vesuvian eruption that followed in its train when the American descendant of the Caesars passed through the Eternal City, application was made by a friend of mine and myself to Monsignor Kennedy, rector of the American College at Rome, for the privilege of calling at the Vatican to pay our respects to the present occupant of the throne of St. Peter. We hardly expected, in view of the lightning in the air, that anything would come of it, but, finding ourselves in Rome, it seemed worthwhile, at any rate, to make application. Faint heart never won fair lady, we reasoned, and by the same token no man can see His Holiness who has not the courage to ask for the privilege. Hence, while all the world was echoing and re-echoing with the sounds of the conflict between Theodore Africans and the representatives of the tenth of the name of Pius, we drove up to the doors of the American College in the Via Dell' Umilta (the Street of the Humble) and sent in our cards. It was long after the rector's hours and Monsignor Kennedy was at luncheon, but the courteous attendant at the door intimated that if we were disposed to wait a while doubtless somebody having authority to receive us would be available.

Finding ourselves so disposed, we seated ourselves on a wooden bench in the cloisters of the college building and passed a delightful half-hour contemplating the beauties of the gardens in the courtyard about which the arcaded corridors ran. All was silent. Not even a rumble of the prevailing thunders broke the stillness of the place, and one sitting thus could not but reflect upon the vast difference between this American college and other American colleges one had visited in the past. There was no case of 1914 rollicking about the green of the enclosed campus, and one looked in vain for inscriptions upon the walls of the edifice indicating the one-time presence of classes of bygone years, such as one finds everywhere in the American colleges in their native habitat. An atmosphere of meditation was over all, and one was glad of the half-hour of aloofness from the haughty sounds of commerce in which to adjust oneself to a novel and so truly novel.

Suddenly a confused murmur of voices fell upon the ear and a straggling line of students appeared dressed in the priest-like garb of their condition and began a post-prandial promenade of the corridors, gradually resolving themselves into an informal parade, walking two by two, some of them reading from their prayer-books, many more engaged in an animated discussion of their studies, all earnest-looking young men unmistakable American in style and feature. Looking at them even casually, one found them somewhat more grave and reverend of port than their paralytically secular brothers, the undergraduates of a university, as was indeed proper, since these young men were here to fit themselves for the priesthood and were not merely taking a finishing course in the humanities for the purpose of becoming lawyers, bank clerks, editors, and managers of automobile factories.

Not long after came the rector himself, a tall, well-set-up man of portly build and kindly countenance, carrying himself with dignity and presenting an interesting picture in his laces and red and golden raiment. His greeting was courteous and cordial, and as he ushered us into a chamber adjoining the corridors cloisters he inquired our business, wasting no time in coming to the point.

With equal promptness our desires were made known, but there were obstacles. Insurmountable obstacles they seemed, too. In answering the rector's second inquiry, it transpired that we had no letters either of identification or introduction to the Monsignor, and consequently it was all off. The rector was delighted to meet us personally, but passing us on into higher realms was, under the unhappy circumstances, impossible.

I ventured the casual observation that I had once been introduced to Archbishop Ireland on an elevator after a public banquet in New York, but Monsignor Kennedy did not consider this a sufficient guarantee of my character to warrant affirmative action, adding, however, that if at any time I could produce a letter from the archbishop acknowledging the intimacy suggested all would be well.

I was about to observe that if I had known this before leaving my hotel I would have written such a letter myself and later have applied to the archbishop for absolution, when my companion announced that he had in his pocket a letter from the State Department at Washington commending him to the tender mercies of any consular or ambassador whom it might concern. This document the rector, with a winning smile, announced was quite good enough for him, and he stated that if we would appear at his office on the following morning at half past ten o'clock he would provide us with the necessary credentials for the desired presentation. As to conditions, none were imposed save that we were to wear full evening dress and were to kiss the ring of the Holy Father, kneeling as he passed by. This the rector informed us was a part of the required etiquette of the ceremony, and we were nothing loathe to comply, indeed, I should have accepted even more difficult conditions rather than miss so agreeably conceded an opportunity to pay my respects to the head of a great Church, even though I belonged to another.

Nothing was said about our subsequent behavior. We were left entirely free to address the Harvard and Yale clubs of Italy wherever we might encounter them, and no restrictions of any sort were either placed or even suggested bearing upon our religious freedom in attending divine service at the Christian Science Opera of Siena or being seen hobnobbing with the Baptists at Sorrento or other Italian watering-places. Indeed, I found here quite as much religious toleration as I have found anywhere in my own country, the only intimation of any kind being that in case I accepted the hospitality of the Pope I was expected to behave like a gentleman and not go out of my way, after having been his guest for a few moments, to consort conspicuously with those who were making faces at him and trying to destroy his work.

It is the real truth that no conditions to which any American citizen can properly object are imposed upon those seeking the privilege of looking upon or talking to the Holy Father, although there are occasions when, because of the immediate clashing of interests between the Roman Church and hostile bodies, one is required to choose between alternatives. Perfect freedom of choice is cheerfully conceded, and one has here as elsewhere only to play the game according to the rules, a course of procedure as frequently insisted upon by Presidents of the United States and imperial kings as by Popes and their advisors.

It is a characteristic provincialism of your American citizen to feel uneasy in full evening dress at breakfast time, unless perchance he has worn it all night, and I found myself no exception to this rule. When, at nine-thirty on the following morning, I stood in my hotel room waiting for the arrival of my carriage, I appeared to myself to lack only a bill of fare and a white napkin under my arm to present the perfect picture of "the hand some waiter" so often called for in our public refresheries. But the end in view of all this sartorial splendor seemed to be well worth the uneasiness superinduced by the temporary usefulness of my apparel and I was patient.

A short drive brought us once more to the American College, where Monsignor Kennedy again accorded us his kindly welcome and, providing one of us with a permesso, started us off on our way to the Vatican.

I have met a number of distinguished persons in my day, including several Presidents of the United States, a large number of newly elected Congressmen, authors and poets without number, and one Boston book reviewer. I have also been presented to the captain of a winning college football team, but in no case was my sensation quite the same as when on this lovely morning I passed through the curiously picturesque streets of the Eternal City for the purpose of meeting the Pope. Somehow or other I seemed to be on the verge of meeting one who was more than a mere personage. We have so many kinds of distinguished persons in the United States, and so many of each kind that, that encountering such at home imparts no thrill. One no longer has cold chills corrugating his back at the thought of meeting a Cabinet officer or the editor of a magazine, for instance; but here was a case in which a real personage was to be met and to be touched not only with the hand, but with the lips as well. There was just a little touch of awe in the sensation that came over one's spirit, and when, in addition to the thought that the personage was unique, one realized that in the eyes of millions of good people the world over he embodied in his own person something of the infinite, a feeling of reverence too great to find expression in any forms of speech swept across the inner man. Consequently, that drive of twenty minutes from the college to the Vatican was a silent one, in which fruitless efforts were made to discern with some degree of exactness precisely what one's own personal relation to the universe might be. The only conclusion reached by myself at least was that I was a very much interested atom and was glad that I was alive.

The first truly visualized picture of the morning came in the setting in which the Holy Father is placed, when our carriage emerged from the narrow little street into the broad and splendid arcade of the Piazza di San Pietro, described to me once by an American friend as an "elliptical square," enclosed in the marvellous colonnades which this wonderful city owes to the genius of the Neapolitan sculptor Giovanni Lorenzo Bernini, whom the sophisticated in art speak of slightly, but who appears to the lay mind to have accomplished all that a lifetime might reasonably be expected to produce in this one monument to his memory. Back of these the wondrous dome of the greatest church edifice in all Christendom reared its majestic splendor into the gloriously blue vault of heaven, leaving only the glory of the sun itself, smiling brilliantly down upon it, to speak of greater wonders in the way of things visible. At the end of the right-hand colonnade we descended from our carriage into a mob of vendors of postal cards. Brushing them away as one would "shoo" a flock of over-persistent chickens into their coop, we proceeded to the Porto Bronzo, the great bronze doorway opening into the corridors of the Vatican. Stationed here, an insupportable, motionless figure clad in fine raiment silently bade us leave democratic simplicity behind.

The Swiss Guard, with his be-feathered helm, his massive spear, and his lovely bloomers, the latter, in their square-like out and loose ribbon-like stripes of red and yellow, somewhat resembling the raiment of a summer awning after a heavy blow, said, and said, I hope, mendaciously, to have been designed by Michael Angelo, struck the first note of ceremonial formality we had encountered. Meeting a person of such appearance on a dark highway, one's first inclination would be to turn and hasten away, but here he was quite a picture.

We passed on to the Scala Pia, a massive stone staircase leading up by a series of easy treads to the Papal apartments. At the top of this we came upon an even more gorgeously arrayed personage than the Swiss Guard, a gentleman dressed in a suit of clothes that reminded one very much of the sofas in the drawingrooms of the newly rich—an invisibly crimson silk broadsword woven into patterns that in the United States go more frequently with gold-legged armchairs with tidies on them than with human beings. Just what this gorgeous individual is called in the parlance of the Vatican, or who designed his marvellous costume, we were not informed, nor had we time to inquire, for now began as interesting an hour from a human point of view as I ever remember to have passed.

It transpired at this point that we were not the only persons who were so fortunate as to secure the privileges of the day. Other pilgrims by dozens began to arrive, and when some forty or fifty of us had divested ourselves of our overcoats and wraps in the beautiful Bramante Loggia we were ushered through a handsomely decorated ante-chamber into the regally splendid Sala Dell' Consistoro, there to await the pleasure of the Holy Father.

It was an international gathering. There were French, English, Dutch, Spanish, Russian, and German pilgrims the last, by the way, comporting themselves here with all those graces of manner which distinguish them above all other travellers in Europe, shoving ladies aside, shouldering their way through groups of silent pilgrims. The Sala Dell' Consistoro is a room of noble proportions, splendid (Continued on fourth page.)

"Yes, the chickens have tasted everything, and they are perfectly enthusiastic."

"Mav I see my father's record?" asked the new student. "He was in the class of '77."
"Certainly my boy. What for?"
"He told me when I left home not to disgrace him, sir, and I wish to see just how far I can go."

Minard's Liniment cures Dandruff.

Troubled with Heart

NERVES WERE ALL UNSTRUNG

Mrs. Oscar Hamilton, Forest Glen, N.S., writes:—"I can truthfully say that Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills have been a great friend to me. A few years ago I was very much troubled with my heart and my nerves were all unstrung. I had terrible pains all through my body. I was weak and had frequent and severe dizzy spells, and was continuously having to consult doctors. I had Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills recommended to me and after having taken a box they appeared to help me so much I continued to take them, and was soon able to do my work again. For this I am very grateful and would advise all people with weak heart or unstrung nerves to give them a thorough trial."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are the original heart and nerve cure and are sold at all dealers for 50c per box, or 3 boxes for $1.25, or will be mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Records Compared.

The Patriot has undertaken, during the hot weather, a most difficult and unenviable task. It has undertaken to cover the Provincial Government with a coat of slime that might possibly pass for whitewash in the eyes of the electors of the Cardigan district. It starts out with the statement that "The record of the Liberal Government, since their accession to power in 1891 is one to be proud of." Let us see what there is in this record to be proud of. They came into power with the promise that revenue and expenditure should meet; that the era of deficits would cease and that the day of taxation was far off. These were the solemn promises made to the electors; let us see how these promises were fulfilled. Instead of making revenue and expenditure meet, they increased the expenditure $735,000 over the revenue; that is to say they added that amount to the Provincial debt. Is that a record "to be proud of?" Instead of relegating deficits to the dead past they have had them every year of their official existence, ranging all the way from $12,000 to $100,000 annually. Is that a record to "be proud of?" Instead of keeping the day of taxation far off, they had scarcely secured themselves in office when they started to tax the people and they have kept on taxing them ever since until they have extracted about a million dollars from the pockets of the electors in taxes of different kinds. Is that a record "to be proud of?"

The Patriot says "The electors have acquired the healthful habit of comparing records." Very well, let the electors take up these comparisons, as furnished by the statements in the Government blue books: When the Liberals came into power, in 1891, the Provincial debt was $128,000; now it is, according to the Government's own figures; $863,000, in round figures, an increase of $735,000 during their years in office. Is that a comparison "to be proud of?" The interest charge on the Provincial debt, for the last year of the Conservative administration, prior to 1891, was $2,697.44. The interest charge under the Liberal Government, for 1909 was $34,155.63; $31,458.19 more than that for the last year of Conservative rule. Is that a comparison "to be proud of?" During the twelve years the Conservatives were in office prior to 1891, they collected only about $82,000 in taxes; but the Liberals, during their administration, have collected a million dollars in taxes. Is that a comparison "to be proud of?"

Grown bold, by reiterated misleading statements, the Patriot insults the intelligence of its readers by presenting the most preposterous statement of the Provincial debt that could well be imagined. As evidence of the straits to which it is reduced for something damaging against the Conservatives, it trots out that venerable chestnut, the $200,000 borrowed from capital. It is about a quarter of a century since that transaction occurred and almost everyone in any way connected with it has disappeared from the public arena. It is now considered so much a matter of ancient political history that no one except those hard up for something that may be misconstrued, refers to it at all. But the Patriot, at its wits ends for some specious argument, does not hesitate to employ it in the most scandalously misleading fashion. It is not necessary to enter into any explanation of the withdrawal of the $200,000; the matter has been explained over and over again. But the Patriot certainly presumes on the ignorance of its readers when it undertakes to make a point against the Conservatives by adding the $200,000 to the debt, of the Province and then compounding interest on this amount from that day to this. That is altogether too bare faced.

When the Liberals came into power in 1891, the debt of the Province was $128,000; or as Chalmers and Davison put it the debt and liabilities were $171,000. For the sake of argument let these figures be put in the worst light possible, still they are the most that can be made of the Provincial debt and liabilities. This was the condition of things that had to be met by the new Government. From this point the new financial departure had to be made, and was made by Mr. Frederick Peters, the Liberal Premier. In order that there may be no mistake as to the ability of Mr. Peters to grapple with the situation we will quote the Patriot's estimate of the new Premier. Here are its words: "In 1891 a strong Liberal Government led by Hon. Frederick Peters, who was an able financier, undertook the task of straightening out the finances of the Province."

How did this "able financier" go about his work; what declaration did he make regarding the Province's finances? He took the maximum amount reported by Chalmers and Davison, the Commissioners appointed by himself, as the whole debt and liabilities, viz. $171,000. This "able financier" did not go beyond his commissioners; he did not have recourse to the contemptible subterfuge of the Patriot, and drag in $200,000 that had no business there. He took the $171,000, and added $14,000 which he said were for repairs to the Provincial Building, making in all $185,000. This much, he said, was to be met immediately, in order that a fresh start could be made. This attended to, there was to be no more debt; we were henceforth to have a clean sheet. This was the declaration of the "able financier" leading the Liberal Government. To effect his purpose he asked the Legislature for power to issue debentures to the amount of $185,000. This was granted and the Provincial debt was funded. We had then the clean sheet asked for; all the debt against us was the debentures issued, amounting to $185,000, now reduced by sinking funds to $132,256.50 as shown in the Public Accounts. All that debt does not belong to the Conservatives, as we have shown; but even charging all this to them who is responsible for the remaining $731,000 of the Provincial debt? Surely not to Conservatives; for they have not been in power since the line was drawn between the old and the new financial systems and the debentures were issued by the "able financier" of the Liberal administration.

No amount of sophistry on the part of the Patriot will remove the damaging evidence of wrong doing and extravagance on the part of the Liberal Government. No matter how much the Patriot may attempt to gloss over or conceal the operations of the Government; no matter how much it may try to pull the wool over the eyes of the electors or to divert public attention from the real issues before the public the Government stand condemned on account of their debt, deficits and deception.

When they came into power, there were no taxes, the Provincial debt was only $128,000, and the annual interest charge was only $2,697. Now we have a debt, according to the Government's own showing, of $863,206; an annual interest charge of $34,155 and a million dollars have been collected in taxes. We have all this in the face of their solemn promises to the contrary. The Government have broken every promise and violated every pledge made to the people and have proved themselves absolutely unworthy of the peoples confidence. Let the electors of the Cardigan District bear these facts in mind on election day and roll up a big majority for Mr. Dewar.

The London (Ont.) Free Press remarks that the revelation of rottenness that break out forth periodically at Ottawa give a hint of what remains well covered up.

The majority of Premier Roblin in Manitoba's last election was 171. In this election almost the entire political fire of his opponents was directed at him and the result was that his majority has grown to 438, the largest majority obtained by any one in the province. Some times a man's enemies are more valuable to him than his most enthusiastic friends.—Ottawa Journal.

In the Spanish Cortes a Socialist deputy named Iglesias has openly threatened that if Maura, the ex-premier and Conservative leader, is returned to power he will be assassinated. The political tyrants of this age are the extreme Liberals. They have in their own minds such confidence in their policies that they will not allow people to differ from them.—Montreal Gazette.

In view of the immigration difficulties it is proposed to protect Canadian travellers by furnishing them with "certificates of identity." This is a first rate scheme. But why not call them passports and be done with it? A passport system such as prevails in Europe would prevent nine-tenths of the difficulties experienced both in Canada and the United States.—Ottawa Citizen.

The government leaders have no intention of bringing on a general election at an early date, according to Sir Wilfrid Laurier's latest statements. The Opposition chiefs will give this all the attention that it deserves by seeing that the decks of their party ship are not encumbered with what would prevent its being quickly made ready for action. Sir Wilfrid Laurier's mind like his policies, is subject to change.—Montreal Gazette.

Basing the objections on the considerable expense for dress en-tailed, and on the use in their preparation of time which should be given to regular school work, the School Boards of several dioceses have this year passed resolutions asking school authorities to eliminate elaborate and formal closing exercises. Simple programs made up of short addresses and exercises which do not require too much preparation are urged in their stead.—America.

Brazil, for whose navy what is believed to be the world's most powerful fighting ship was recently launched, has ordered a new super-Dreadnought, which is to have a displacement of 39,000 tons, and will carry a main armament of twelve 14-inch guns. A 12-inch gun is the maximum with most countries. It is not known what country Brazil thinks it has to fear when it starts into the navy business at this rate. It looks, though, as if some one had better get ready for eventualities, or else make up its mind to be civil.—Exchange.

The Patriot admits the debt of the Province was $863,206.45, at the end of the last fiscal year; but says $829,908 should be charged to the Conservatives. Very well, the Provincial auditors reports on the public accounts for the years the Liberals have been in power show that the Liberals rolled up deficits amounting of $747,788.76. These are the figures of the Government's sworn officials and certainly will not be denied by the Patriot. That being so we have this condition of things: The Liberals during the last nineteen years of office have added $747,788.76 to the Provincial debt. But the Patriot says the Conservatives, although in opposition have increased the debt during those years to the extent of $829,908.00. If that is so the debt of Province is now $1,544,398.76. Perhaps it is. Either that or the Patriot is uttering a scandalous deliberate falsehood, intended to deceive the people. Which is it?

ceiling and mural decorations, a delight to the eye, and telling of its dignified purpose in every lovely line. At its far end stood a massive throne, heavily gilded, bearing the name and insignia of the present Pope in its ornamentation, while around the other three sides of the apartment were ranged not less than two hundred comfortably upholstered chairs upon which the candidates for the honors of the hour were requested to seat themselves.

We now find ourselves with all of an hour to wait, the audience being set for mid-day; but, in spite of our impatience, we were not sorry, for the constantly arriving stream of visitors, made up of all sorts and conditions of men, women and children, was most entertaining to watch. Our first impression of what constitutes "full evening dress" at a Papal reception was rather confused.

At the outset it seemed simple enough, for with characteristic enterprise the Americans were the first contingent to arrive, every man among them wearing the conventional swallow-tail coat, trousers sharply creased down the front, lofty collars, white shirts, and immaculate lawn ties. But later on, when (to us) foreign contingent put in an appearance, we discovered that in some countries a black sack-coat over a pair of "kneeys" blue trousers was de rigueur after sundown.

There were others who wore frock-coats and brown trousers, while one gentleman, evidently from some fashionable resort along the Rhine, had arrayed himself in a dark business suit; but he had been shaved and wore a white tie and seemed to feel that he had complied with the "rigid requirements," for in his behavior he took no pains whatever to conceal the fact that he was present. It was he that gave us the key to the sartorial situation, the white tie. The white tie was the one point of agreement in the costumes of the men present, except in the case of monks and priests, of course, of whom there were a goodly number on hand, wearing the now sombre, now picturesque robes of their several orders.

The women, on the other hand, came more closely into the line of type, the only difference in their appearance lying in their manner of wearing their black, the texture and cut of their gowns, and the size and quality of their mantillas. The men in the mass suggested a convention of delegates representing the cafes and restaurants of almost any cosmopolitan city, but the women and children were a picture of grace and fitness, the boys and girls wearing pure white, and the women in the always impressive dignity of black. Nearly all carried rosaries and medals to be blessed. Some held several of these in their hands, while one man, who may have been a dealer in rosaries de luxe, had both hands and wrists fairly dripping with festoons of beaded chains.

For an hour we waited thus, studying one another and our surroundings with an over-increasing interest. Some of those present, I regret to say, seemed to have come to this function very much for the same reason that the average tourist goes to a picture gallery, and from their demeanor none would have guessed that His Holiness was anything more than a curious bit of sculpture that was about to be placed on exhibition for a brief period; but there were others who, by their devout behavior and reverent attitude toward the passing hour, more than compensated for the shortcomings of the frivolously inclined.

As the hour of twelve approached, a spirit of unrest came upon the gathering. Those who were seated found themselves shut in by several lines of others standing in front of them and ere long this restlessness manifested itself more strongly by the crowding of at least a hundred persons about the little green baize door through which His Holiness was expected to enter the salon.

No one seemed to know exactly what the course of procedure was going to be, and many began to grow fearful lest, in view of the large number of those present, somebody was going to lose something. I was somewhat oppressed by that thought myself. The gentleman from the Rhine, with the clean shave and a white necktie, had twice trodden upon my toes and courteously shored the little lady in my party back from her place in the line, and, feeling that remembrance with such a person in such a place could be other than unuseful if it were to be at all appropriate to his particular case, I had to a more favorable spot near the entrance myself, so that when, a few minutes later, a tall, priest-like master of ceremonies in conventional evening attire opened the green baize door and bade some of us proceed into an inner series of apartments we were fortunate enough to find ourselves in the first apartment into which His Holiness walked at the appointed hour. Here the visitors were arranged in a single line about three sides of the chamber, leaving plenty of space at the doorways for the Pope to enter and to depart—and then he appeared.

A slight gesture from the master of ceremonies bade us kneel, and the long-awaited figure entered—a sad-faced man arrayed in a simple white robe, expressionless of feature, but giving a striking impression of sweetness and intense weariness combined. He walked along the line, holding out to each pilgrim as he passed a listless hand, on the fourth finger of which was the ring of St. Peter.

At first glance everything appeared the embodiment of age and of physical weakness, and it must be confessed that the impression was disappointing; but as he came nearer, and one was able to look more closely into his saddened eyes, one discerned in them not so much of weakness as of loveliness of character, strength of soul, toned by a strange pathos that brought with it the conviction that the people of his beloved city of Venice, among whom as Giuseppe Sarto he had once dwelt, and loved him for reasons that were good. One longed to be able to rise up and give him a more affectionate and no less reverent salute than the cold, formal greeting to the golden signet prescribed by the etiquette of the ceremony.

I pressed his hand with a sincere and earnest feeling of reverence for his office and of respect for the man, and was surprised to find, as a little lamp manifested itself in my throat and a suspicious moisture dimmed my eyes for the moment, that I had awakened rather into an intensity of sympathy for the prisoner of the Vatican than of awe and reverence for the successor of the Apostle. There was, indeed, no lack of the latter quality, but the former was from the heart, and I am glad to feel that that is truly the American of it.

In spite of the splendor of his surroundings and the loftiness of his station, one could not escape the conviction that the office carries with it not only responsibilities which are onerous and exacting, but involves as well such sacrifices of life and liberty as would stagger most men, even those rigorously trained for a life of sacrifice as the Church trains its priests. I have sometimes thought it would be pleasant to be the King of England or the Emperor of Germany or the President of the United States, but I look upon Pius X. with no feelings of envy in my heart.

I am told that His Holiness was accompanied by a suite of his noble officers, but I did not remark them. The one commanding figure of the group was the man we had come to see, and it is his face that is the most

Summer Cruises in Northern Seas

In connection with the inauguration of the Grand Trunk Pacific Steamships on the Pacific Coast on June 12th, the Company has issued a very handsome and interesting booklet describing the new boats and the scenic grandeur of the trip from Seattle, Victoria or Vancouver to Prince Rupert.

There are thirty-two pages of text matter, full of information and new material, carefully prepared after a recent trip over the route. The publication is profusely illustrated with Grand Trunk plates made from direct photographs, and include pictures of the new boats, scenes in Seattle, Victoria, Vancouver and Prince Rupert, forest scenes on Vancouver Island, Indian villages on the routes, pictures of the majestic scenery of the inside channel, and a series of beautiful scenes on the Skeena River. In addition, there are diagrams of the steamships and a new and complete map of the North Pacific Coast, showing in a clear way the steamship route.

The cover of the booklet is a striking one, printed in four colors. Copies of this publication can be had free on application to J. QUINLAN, D. P. A., Montreal.

A $5.00.00 Challenge.

An interesting controversy is being indulged in on the Upper Lakes in connection with the relative speed of the S. S. Hamonic, of the Northern Navigation Co., and the S. S. Keewatin, of the C. P. R.

It is claimed by the latter that it has been demonstrated she could speed faster than the S. S. Hamonic, and the Sarnia (Canadian) has challenged two of their contemporaries that the steamer Hamonic, the first time she comes across either the Keewatin or the Assiniboia, of the C. P. R., will pass these vessels and in good faith have deposited a certified cheque for $500.00.

Some Reasons Why

Farmers and Gardeners should buy CARTER'S Tested Seeds!

We have been in the seed business for thirty years. It is no side line with us. We are here buying or selling or making contracts for growing different varieties in different countries all the year round.

We sell only such seeds as are best adapted to our soil and climate, and our long experience has gained for us this knowledge. Our supplies of seeds are carefully tested for Germination and Purity by competent persons before sending out.

Our supply of No. 1 Clover and Timothy, Wheat, Oats, Barley, Corn, Buckwheat, Turnip Seed, etc., etc., is procured from the most reliable sources. Many varieties are grown especially for us.

We do the largest Seed Business in the Maritime Provinces. We do not sell cheap seed of inferior quality. "The Best and only the Best" is our motto.

Buy "Carter's Tested Seeds" and you are safe. Over one hundred and sixty reliable merchants sell them. Our prices are as low as seeds of equal high standard can be bought for in Canada.
