COUNTY-COURTED.

Doctor Andrew Threipland seated himself in his surgery and passed his fingers thoughtfully through his heavy brown hair.

Perhaps the Doctor knew this. If he did not, his lady-patients did; and how ever they may have differed about other things, they were pretty generally agreed that there was not another man in all London who had such a head of hair as Doctor Threipland—or such a fine face either, many of them said—clear, refined and handsome. It was a determined face too, with at rest; but, when he smiled, with his clever gray-eyes as sweet as any woman's, those who understood—or thought they understood—anything of physiognomy said that such a fine face could go only with an exceptionally fine nature.

“Well, you must take them all to the County Court,” he said at last, taking his fingers out of his hair and leaning back upon his chair.

“I don’t think it would be any good to County Court Mr. Morris Capel. I have tried him a dozen times, and he won’t pay,” answered the other occupant of the surgery, a dark, shabby-looking man.

“Then he ought to be made to pay. I can’t afford to lose my fees,” rejoined the Doctor, with an expression on his face that would have astonished some of his patients could they have seen it.

“But he would most likely defend the case on the ground that he was not responsible for his sister’s debts.”

“Then let the sister pay her own debts—unless she is a rogue too.”

No wonder the Doctor felt a glow of satisfaction as he leaned back on his chair and reviewed the past seven years. And the record of this last day—the septenary—was satisfactory also. He had—as the children’s hymn says—finished his business with patients and care, and been good and obliging and kind, not only to the patients who repaid his kindness with gratitude, but also to those who looked upon their doctor in the light in which they did their tailor, and considered that, when they had paid him his bill with some grumbling, they had done their duty by him quite as fully as he had done his by them.

Even to those whom he hardly expected to pay him till pressure was put upon them the Doctor had not to-day been harsh, only cool and curt, or else brusque, and perhaps a trifle disrespectful, which was quite good enough treatment for those who were capable of treating him so shabbily.

“Oh, Andy, my dear, here is a letter that was left for you in the forenoon!” May took it in as the boy was out, and I might forget about it till now!”

“It was the Doctor’s sister who had broken in upon his reverie. She was a tall, fair woman, older than Doctor Threipland, and far from being as handsome. She had a large nose and a large mouth, and though her eyes were large too, they looked small, as they were in a chronic state of being half closed with laughter. Mab Threipland and her brother smiled affectionately on each other as he held out his hand for the letter which she playfully tossed to him.

“I’ll pay you the day after tomorrow, Dr. Threipland. I cannot promise it sooner; but I promise to pay you when—and you must come and see my brother now.”

“There are other doctors you can get to see him,” he answered, not willing to trust to a promise when he knew from experience how often such promises were broken.

“I have told him you were coming, and it would excite him to know that you had refused. He is very ill, and you must come!” she repeated, with a tight clenching of her unglazed hand, as a sudden passionate desire to seize him by the collar and drag him away without any further loss of time sprang up in her heart, her dark eyes glittering dangerously.

“She understands something of illness,” he said to himself; “and, though I shall most likely find myself a fool for my pains, I think I will trust her.”

“I was wrong; but I am now to London, and did not know it ought to be paid at once; and not wishing to trouble Morris, I waited till I should have some money of my own.”

“Well, I make it a rule, as I told you in my note, never to attend where my account is unpaid. You are complete strangers to me.”

“The voice was harsh, his tone was harsher, and his face was the hardest of all. He had risen, and was standing as if waiting for her to go, and the marked discourtesy of his manner stung Miss Capel to the quick. Before her there rose the memory of a quiet country home, where she had been hedged in by love and respect from the hard usage of the world, and of a kind old friend there who had never kept any account of the constant visits he had paid through long illness that had ended at last in the death of both father and mother. But she was just even in her resentment; she knew that things must be different in London, and that she ought to have remembered that; and so, in spite of a lump that was rising in her throat, she answered, as composedly as if wrangling with a doctor about his bill were quite a common occurrence with her—

“I will pay you the day after tomorrow, Dr. Threipland. I cannot promise it sooner; but I promise to pay you when—and you must come and see my brother now.”

“There are other doctors you can get to see him,” he answered, not willing to trust to a promise when he knew from experience how often such promises were broken.

“I have told him you were coming, and it would excite him to know that you had refused. He is very ill, and you must come!” she repeated, with a tight clenching of her unglazed hand, as a sudden passionate desire to seize him by the collar and drag him away without any further loss of time sprang up in her heart, her dark eyes glittering dangerously.

“She understands something of illness,” he said to himself; “and, though I shall most likely find myself a fool for my pains, I think I will trust her.”

“Then, on your promise to pay me the day after tomorrow, I will go. When was your brother taken ill, and what is the matter?”

“I don’t believe she’s going to pay me tomorrow,” he said to himself.

“He was sure of it when he came on the following day. Miss Capel’s eyes fell when he looked at her, and with an air of embarrassment she sat turning the turquoise ring on her finger all the time he was there. She had her face to the right, so that he could not see his expression—the Doctor himself always sat with his back to the window that he might make his observations without his own face being too closely scrutinized. When he rose to go, she sat still instead of following him into the hall, and when he looked full at her, she did not raise her head.

“So much for trusting to a woman’s promise,” he muttered, as he let himself out and strode away.

“And Miss Capel, watching him from behind the window-curtain, cried in her heart, ‘What shall I do? What can I do? He will lose all respect for me unless I pay him, and no man ever treated me with disrespect before.’”

The next morning Doctor Threipland had a note from Miss Capel apologizing for the non-fulfillment of her promise, and begging him not on that account to give up his attendance on her brother.

“The Doctor was very angry when he read it—angry that she had not kept her word, and angry that she should seem to suppose that money was a primary object with him. In the afternoon, when Miss Capel opened the door for him, she raised her eyes deprecatingly to his face.

“I was afraid perhaps you would not come,” she said.

“I would have come at any rate,” he answered; and, if his tone was ice before, it was ice and steel now any everything else that was cold and hard and repellent.

“More apologies, I suppose,” he said, with a sneer, as he lifted it from his desk; and then he found that there was money inside the envelope.

“Surely this cannot be the same!” he thought. “They have no appearance of being in such poverty as that.”

“The Doctor’s brow flushed as he read it; he was beginning to feel that he had been needlessly harsh with one who perhaps deserved kinder treatment.

running one horse against another than there is in running one boy against another, but you have no right to improve the breed of horses by spoiling the breed of men.”

At this point one of the congregation, who became excited, exclaimed: “That’s very true!”

The pastor misunderstood the remark for the opposite. Turning toward the speaker rapidly he impetuously demanded: “What’s not true? I say it is true, and I speak it with thundering emphasis!”

A tremendous burst of applause greeted the rejoinder.

Wheeler’s Tissue Phosphates. WHEN MAN ARRIVES AT MIDDLE AGE it is time to take stock of the resources of energy remaining to see the machinery of the body. Many hard workers at that period find their system impaired or stand up from the wear and tear incident to the active struggle for life. Examination may disclose some latent disease requiring immediate attention to secure the vital forces from rapid waste. Wheeler’s Phosphates and Calceola possess special power to repair damaged and inveterate weak organs, and its timely use may prevent much suffering and greatly prolong life.

A Banker’s Testimony. For a Cough, Cold or any Bronchial Affection. “Pectoral” in my opinion, is just the thing. I have used it in my family for Coughs and Colds for the past four years with the most unvaried success, and today my opinion of it is that I continue to think still more of that which I began thinking well of. PEACE PROBABLE.

Present Situation of the Afghan Frontier Trouble.

LONDON, March 21.—The prospect of maintaining peace between England and Russia is becoming brighter. A special Cabinet Council was held today, and it was in session two hours. It is reported that the Ministers drafted a new set of instructions to General Sir Peter Lumsden regarding the Afghan-Turcoman boundary, and that these new orders virtually empower him to accept the frontier fixed by Russia. This, of course, would end the difficulty for the present, and it may be many years before Russia will choose to make a further advance toward India. The principal interest in regard to Afghan affairs centers just now in the approaching interview between the Ameer of Afghanistan and Lord Dufferin, Viceroy of India, and its results are expected to have an important bearing on the situation. The interview is to be held at Rawal Pindi, a town of the Punjab, in the northwestern corner of India and less than 100 miles from the Afghan Indian boundary. According to the invariable custom in Oriental palaces, each potentate will be accompanied by a brilliant retinue and an escort, comprising a few thousand troops.

HINDOSTAN OFFERS AID.

LONDON, March 21.—Earl Dufferin, Viceroy of India, has received assurances from the Government of Hyderabad and Sindh that each Province desires to send contingents to Afghanistan to fight against any further Russian advance towards India.

Sidar Dillar Jung, political secretary to the Nizam of Hyderabad, states in a letter containing that Province's offer that "all native India chiefs are eager to save India from Russian despotism."

RUSSIAN AGENTS BRIBING AFGHAN CHIEFS.

It is reported that Russian agents are engaged in distributing money among the disaffected Afghan chiefs for the purpose of inducing them to support Ayoub Khan in the movement to have the latter substituted for Abdurrahman as Ameer of Afghanistan.

A RUSSIAN MILITARY ORGAN'S VIEW.

The Russian military organ Neft, which reflects the views of the Russian commanders, Gen. Komaroff, Gen. Tcherneyeff and other of the war party of Russia, is at present urging the seizure of Herat before the English can fortify the place. The Neft argues that if Herat is permitted to hold the Russian position beyond the Caspian will be perilous. "Besides," says the Neft, "to allow England to hold Herat would be showing great weakness before the Turcomans." Continuing, this military organ says: "The English must be chased out of Turcoman territory. Russian diplomats conceding one inch of country, England will not risk war for Herat. She knows her defeat might involve India, whereas Russian defeat would mean nothing more than the maintenance of territorial status quo."

READY TO SEND A FLEET TO THE BALTIC.

LONDON, March 21.—The United States Standard states that the British Admiralty has completed every preparation to send, if necessary, a powerful fleet to the Baltic within a few days.

NO TROUBLE IF THE AFGHANS WITHDRAW.

LONDON, March 21.—De Giers, Russian Minister, has given his official promise that Penjdeh will not be occupied by Russian troops if the Afghans withdraw their garrison.

RUSSIAN AGENTS STIRRING UP STRIFE.

Gen. Sir Peter Lumsden informs the British Government that the Russian commanders on the Afghan frontier are fermenting a rising in Penjdeh, with a view of making that a pretext for annexation.

CALECUTTA, March 22.—It is reported that orders were received from England Saturday to concentrate 20,000 to 30,000 men at Quetta and Allahabad. Orders were issued Saturday to mobilize two army corps aggregating 25,000 men, with two strong divisions as reserves. The London Post understands that Russian officials on a furlough have been ordered to rejoin their regiments.

A LUXURY.

"Father, what a luxury!" asked little Johnny the other night as he gazed himself around the parlor stove. "A luxury? Why, it's something we don't really need, you know—a thing we can do without." "Well, then," replied the logical youth, "what a luxury a mosquito net must be in winter."

Women Who Won't Marry. Men marry the rattle brains of society. They choose the pretty, good-for-nothing girls, for that is the kind they like; they run after and marry the liveliest girl at a picnic or ball, though she may be a "holy terror" at home; they may after the belle and the heiress, though she may be selfish and spoiled, etc.

But, brethren—we wish to break it to you gently—there are women right here at home who have their own money to use as they please, who have their own pleasant homes and congenial occupations who can, if the fancy seizes them, pack their trunks and take a jump to New Orleans, slip off to Washington for a few weeks, take in the cream of New York, or the balmy airs of Florida; in short, have a royal time in any way they choose who call no man master, and who would marry the best man that ever stepped in shoe leather.

Fun and Fan

Life is too short for it to wear long faces. Good spirits are often to nature; yet nothing diffuses insensibility being generally the former, and sensibility the latter.

The young man who gets away with the girl, and who is least talked away with the Cabinet poet, said a dandy to head. "I have got a head," replied the girl, "I don't cherish it with pride for the want of company."

Girls look out! Young men who wear it and nearly break their heads now a days. "You other, I find it is far more dangerous."

Why don't you get young lady to a batch who was on a visit. "I for the last year, who would be silly or have not yet succeeded. "Then you have way," was the instant.
