Keeps Skin Soft and Smooth

Many men suffer from irritation of the skin as a result of shaving. With some it assumes a form of eczema and becomes most annoying and unsightly. By applying a little of Dr. Chase's Ointment after shaving the irritation is overcome and Barber's Itch and Eczema are prevented or relieved.

CHAPTER XVII.

"I wonder," thought Inez to herself, "if I shall ever see that face again." She had seen so few strange faces that a young and handsome one was sure to interest her. No visitors ever came to Serrano, Madame Monteleone had never even during her daughter's life-time visited herself, for she knew no one in or near Seville. The friends of her youth were all far away; most of them resided in Madrid. She had not cared to make new acquaintances when she brought little Bianca to Serrano so many years ago. She saw no use in it. There was no one there likely to help her in the object for which she lived. Isolated from the world, she had found her happiness in the discharge of her duty and in planning the restoration of the Monteleones.

Isolated from the world, Inez found her sole pleasure in longing for it and dreaming of it. This face that had smiled at her with such vivid admiration shining in the dark eyes, was the first of its kind she had seen. It was a dream coming true. The heroes she had made for herself were brave and courteous like him. Would he remember her? Would he ever think of her again? Perhaps not, for he saw beautiful ladies every day. "If ever he rides on the highway again, I wonder whether he will look for me?" she thought.

That wonder increased, until Inez felt it must be gratified. When evening came she went out to the boundary line. Up and down the hard road those beautiful, wistful eyes wandered; but there was no sign this evening of the gallant rider and his horse. She could not tell if she was disappointed; she had neither hoped nor expected to see him; she had only wondered if he would pass by again. Suddenly upon the calm evening breeze there came the sound of a horse's gallop. Even in the far distance Inez knew the plumed hat and dark face.

With a crimson face and heart beating loudly she concealed herself behind a group of trees. She heard how the rider slackened his pace as he drew near the shrubs where he had seen her. He drew rein there, and sat for some minutes looking over the grounds of Serrano. She could see the disappointment that clouded his face; then he turned and galloped back to Seville.

"He came on purpose to see me," she cried to herself. "He looked and waited for me. He has thought of me, just as I have of him."

"Where have you been, signorina?" cried old Juanita, when she saw the young girl entering the house. "How well you look! You have a color like a damask rose, and your eyes are as bright as two stars. What has come over you?"

"Is mine really a nice face, Nita?" asked Inez, simply. "Tell me, if you were to see my face once, would you think of it, and want to see it again?" "Listen to the child!" cried the old servant, in affected horror. "Did ever any one ask such questions. Your face is well enough, signorina. It is the mind, not the body, we must care for." Then, seeing something like disappointment in those questioning eyes, she said, "It is a bonny bright face, young lady. You will know its value some day," she added, smiling as she spoke.

It was a break in the monotony at last. There was something to dream about; a real incident had happened, more interesting and exciting than any she had ever dreamed of, and she was the heroine.

Impatiently enough Inez waited for the next day. It rose at last, bright and beautiful as its predecessor had been. Her first thought was, "Shall I see him? Will he come?"

Even Madame Monteleone remarked how bright and radiant the young face was that smiled upon her, how fresh the musical voice that gaily made her good-morning.

"How beautiful she is!" said the lady to herself, with a deep sigh; "more lovely by far than her mother ever was. If I were but well now, all would be safe."

When the hour's reading was ended, Madame Monteleone kissed Inez more tenderly than usual as she dismissed her.

"This long day," said Inez to herself, "I have this long day before me. Will he come?"

When the evening hour drew near, again she waited, and hearing once more the horse's gallop, she watched during the long pause the rider made by the shrubs, and heard his half-muttered exclamations of disappointment at not seeing her. Every day during that bright long week the same thing happened; and from behind the trees she watched the gallant young cavalier. She was too shy and timid to let herself be seen; but the day would have been blank to her that did not bring him past Serrano. One evening it was past the usual time; she had been reading for nearly an hour in her leafy hiding-place, but there was no sound of a horse's gallop. No words can describe the blank feeling of desolation that seized the girl's heart.

"He has forgotten me," she said; "he is tired of never seeing me, and will not come again."

She could not define the pain that made her heart ache. It had been so pleasant to gaze all unseen upon that dark, handsome face—to see the eyes fixed so intently upon Serrano, and know that the wish to see her had brought the gay young cavalier there. It was something to break the dreary monotony of the long summer's day. Now it was all over, hot tears fell from the dark eyes, when suddenly she heard the sound, not of one horse, but of two, coming swiftly along the road from Seville. Both riders paused at the well-known spot, and then Inez heard a deep musical voice, saying, "This is the place, Luigi, where I saw her, and I shall never forget her. I should lose my reason if I thought I was never to see that face again."

"What was she doing there?" asked his friend.

"Looking over the shrubs into the high road," was the reply. "When I bowed, she blushed. Why, to see such a blush is worth living for."

"Why do you not inquire what the place is?" asked the one called Luigi; "it looks something of a wilderness, but a very pretty one."

"I have," replied his friend, "The house is further down, and both house and lands belong to Madame Monteleone, and she in her turn, as I need not tell you, belongs to one of the noblest families in Spain. I made all inquiries, but no one knows much of them. They lead a very secluded life. This much I was told: that the young granddaughter who lives with her is the most beautiful girl in Andalusia."

"It was the granddaughter you saw, I suppose," interrupted Luigi; "she is matchless. I would go barefooted all over Spain to find her once more."

"It is a serious case, then," said Luigi, laughing heartily.

"Do not plague me," was the reply. "I tell you I love that young creature madly, and I will find her and make her love me, if I die for it."

"Well," said Luigi, "you must try again. You have no chance to-day; she is not to be seen."

"I will hunt the place," cried his friend, passionately. "I will stay here day and night, but I will see her again."

They went away and left Inez, her heart beating tumultuously, a new, vague, and delicious happiness thrilling her.

What romance had she ever dreamed of equal to this?—what "fair lady" in the gay world was ever loved so romantically and so well? He had seen her once, and then but for a few minutes, yet he admired her more than any one else,—ah, even loved her. Surely she must be beautiful, if once seeing her could inspire such love as that. How cruel it was that her youth and her beauty should be kept prisoners, as it were, in this gloomy old ruin. Oh if she were but out in the world! Love and happiness, pleasure and riches would all be hers.

All night the music of the words she had overheard rang in her ears and gladdened her heart. Had she been treated as other girls, had she been allowed a fair and proper share of girlish amusements, this first little romance would not have proceeded so deep an impression upon her. As it was, her heart, mind, and imagination were absorbed in it.

When the next evening came, Inez did not go near the "haunted spot." She could not tell, she did not know whether it was timidity, pride, or maiden bashfulness that restrained her,—probably all three.

on Wednesday the Great Attraction.
LONDON, June 2.—(By the Canadian Press)—Interest in flat racing has been very keen, with crowds attending the principal races and it will not be surprising to many people that ever before to Epom Downs Wednesday Derby Day, the most popular of the British Turf, racing may possibly be seen at Royal Ascot. Glorious and carnival spirit pervaded the afternoon and the racing was the Derby and the Epom Downs to the fore in many minds, so far as the racing is concerned at least. After days of racing, which opened on Thursday, and the opening day, Woodcock is one of the most promising colts of the season, and Dunlop, Sir John Robinson's colt, a year ago, is a candidate for the Derby Day. The Derby for two-year-olds and the Cup for three-year-olds on Thursday, while Friday's programme includes the Oaks, the St. Leger, and the Plate, for two-year-olds.

HOW DERBY ORIGINATED.
Wednesday's race will be the 140th renewal of the Derby Stakes, run for the first time in 1780, just one year later than the Oaks and four years later than the St. Leger. It takes its name from the originator of the race, the twelfth Earl of Derby, and the Oaks, the Derby course is about a mile and a half and both the Epom classes are run over this course. The Old Derby Course, which has not been used for three quarters of a century, was about a mile and a half, somewhat in the form of a horseshoe, with the first three-quarters of a mile considered as straight running, the bend in the course being very trifling and the width very great. The next quarter of a mile was a gradual turn and the last half mile straight. For the present Derby course, first used in 1852, the horses start at the New High Level Starting Post and run into the Derby course at the mile post, the actual distance being 1 mile, four furlongs and 22 yards. It is a left hand course and the first half mile is slightly on the ascent. For a quarter of a mile the track is level and then a descent sets in until 240 yards from the finish, when the ground again rises. The course is a difficult one and the rise in the ground in the last quarter has brought about the downfall of many a contender whose prospects appeared promising up to that time.

"Stranger Than Fiction" at the Nickel.

"Stranger Than Fiction," the Katherine MacDonald picture which is the feature attraction at the Nickel to-night, is a film full of surprises and novelty. In the plot you will see Miss MacDonald as herself, as Carmen, as a gangster in the Underworld, and as an aviatrix.

Diana Drexel, a wealthy society girl, is movie mad. She invites friends to see the projecting of Carmen, in which they have acted. She then tells the operator to show her original film, "Stranger Than Fiction." He is about to comply when the lights go out. When they are turned on again the guests discover they have been robbed by the "Black Heart" who has left his familiar mark. The police are unable to find a clue. To arouse her indolent fiancée to an interest in life, Diana tells him that she will not marry him until he has run down the notorious thief. Dick tries but is unsuccessful. One day while visiting in the slums, Diana meets Freckles (Wesley Barry) and the Shadow Her kindness to Freckles arouses the Shadow and he gives her his confidence. The remainder of the story can be understood better by witnessing the picture at the Nickel to-night.

Sing Sing is Not as Bad Says Tom Meighan.

Sing Sing Prison is not such a bad place after all, according to Thomas Meighan, Paramount Star, who comes to the Majestic Theatre to-day in his latest starring vehicle, "The City of Silent Men." Mr. Meighan and his company spent more than two weeks at the famous penitentiary, taking scenes for the new picture, and in many of these the warden and the guards and even some of the prisoners appear.

"Prison conditions are now different from what they used to be," said Mr. Meighan. "The men are treated more like human beings. They all seem cheerful, they are not compelled to have their heads shaved, or to wear stripes, and they can furnish and decorate their cells to suit their own fancies. They have their periods of recreation and their games, such as baseball, handball, etc.; have their own motion picture theatre, publish their own prison newspaper, and have many other means of diversion."
In his own production, Mr. Meighan plays the role of a country youth who is sent to serve a term in Sing Sing, and to secure the utmost realism, the scenes were taken in the exact locale of the story. The direction was by Tom Foreman and the supporting casts includes Lela Wilson, Kate Bruce, Paul Everton, George MacQuarrie and Guy Oliver.

Teacher of Chapel's Arm and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Kelley of Petty Hr., were united in the Holy Bonds of Matrimony. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Fr. Cullen, P. F. The bride looked charming in white satin trimmed with spangled net, with wreath and veil. The bridesmaid was Miss Gertrude Kelley, sister of the bride, who was neatly dressed in lawn silk, with hat to match. Mr. Lawrence Kieley, brother of the bride, performed the duties of best man. After the ceremony a reception was held at the future home of the bride, where quite a number of guests were present. The groom's present to the bride was a gold piece. She was also the recipient of many valuable and useful presents. The many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Smith wish them many years of wedded bliss.

Damages to the extent of several hundred dollars were caused salmon nets at Port aux Basques and other places down the Shore on Friday last owing to an exceptionally heavy undertow. The fishermen at Port aux Basques did well with the salmon during the past couple of weeks, and this loss coming now in the height of the season is a serious setback to them.

SEASON OPENS JUNE 14TH—JUNIOR TEAMS CLASH AT ST. GEORGE'S FIELD.
The adjourned annual meeting of the Newfoundland Football League was held on Saturday night last with the President, Mr. W. J. Higgins, in the chair. Owing to the fact that the B.I.S. won the League Cup outright last year, it was decided to place another one on order. The rules governing the new trophy are that it can be won outright by two successive years, or by the first team winning the cup any three years. The old cup will be won three years in succession before it became the property of any team. The application of the Junior League was read and considered. The members of the Executive recognized that in order to encourage the game the Juniors should be given every assistance. It was unanimously decided to allow them the use of the field on every Wednesday evening to play their schedule. Six Junior teams are now hard at practice and a meeting will be held shortly when their fixtures will be drawn up. The League decided to open the season on Thursday evening, June 14th, the first game will be played between the two rival teams, the B.I.S. and Cadets. The drawing of the fixtures for the first round resulted as follows:—
B.I.S. vs. Cadets.
Sainis vs. C.E.I.
Feldlans vs. Guards
Star vs. C.I.B.
Mr. Charles Quick was appointed official referee for the season. Mr. William Clance has been appointed caretaker of the field. The matter of the releasing of members from one Club into another came up for discussion, but as the hour was late a special meeting was called for Thursday night next, when this important point will be dealt with. It is understood that the field is not available for baseball this year.

in Poverty, forced as a Child to sell matches and Newspapers on the Streets, except for six years in a badly run Orphan Asylum, Aaron Sapiro lived to reorganize the Asylum, and to fight His way to the Leadership of the Greatest Agricultural movement of Present Times.

(By MERLE CROWELL, in the American Magazine.)
Sapiro is a lawyer with more than a million clients—comprising one-tenth of all the people in the United States who make their living from the land. Since most of the million are the heads of families, he may say that Sapiro is the legal guardian of three million human beings. It is even more extraordinary when you consider that two years ago this thirty-eight-year-old attorney was almost unknown to the public save on the Pacific coast, where he was recognized as the genius of a co-operative movement among fruit growers.

A typical scene was enacted a few months ago in Abilene, Texas, where twenty-five hundred farmers followed Sapiro for more than a mile through the streets, trying to find a meeting place big enough to hold them. When the arrangements were finally made to use the first Baptist Church, the biggest building in town, the crowd rushed there pell-mell for several blocks, so anxious was everyone to get a seat. Once the farmers were jammed into the church, they stuck there to the last man for three hours while Sapiro was expounding his gospel of co-operative marketing.

Sapiro does not claim to have originated co-operative marketing. California had a number of organizations of this sort when he was appointed counsel for the State Market Commission, in 1915. At that time he had been making a study of the subject for four years—as it operated both here and abroad. Taking the records of the California co-operative groups for a basis, he analyzed each of them to bedrock. By discarding the factors of failure and collecting the factors of success, he arrived at a "model plan." Under his guidance several groups of growers got together and organized marketing combinations.

Up to this time, nineteen out of twenty of such organizations had been failures. Those fathered by Sapiro turned out, however, to be uniformly successful. Just how successful they were may be indicated by the fact that in the season of 1920-1921, when one third of the apples in New York State were rotting under the trees, apples shipped by one of these associations were selling at three times the New York price. And to-day eggs sent East by the Pacific Egg Producers, whom Sapiro brought together, command a better price in New York than the native eggs sold by individual poultrymen—despite the fact that the Pacific product is eighteen days old when sold over the grocery counter.

Last year Sapiro went down into the Mississippi delta and organized a big group of cotton growers. This year the same growers have been getting from six to eight cents a pound—or from $30 to $40 a bale—more for their cotton than the unorganized producers in the same section of the country. In 1921 the burley-tobacco raisers of the South were getting from 8 to 11 cents a pound for their crops. Then Sapiro organized them. In 1922 they received an average of 23 cents a pound, which means that an added profit of some 280,000,000 was distributed among the 68,000 members of the association. A few months ago Otto H. Kahn, head of one of the most powerful international banking firms in the world, gave a dinner in New York for the purpose of creating a more intimate understanding between the financial and the agricultural leaders of the country. As spokesman of the great co-operative farming movement, Sapiro was asked to set forth the reasons why the California growers were running away with the Eastern markets—why more than three-fourths of them rung up tidy profits last year, while the average Eastern farmer was barely holding his own or else going more deeply into the hole. Turning to Judge Gary, head of the billion-dollar United States Steel Corporation, who sat opposite him, Sapiro said:

"The California growers are making money because we have studied the methods of the Steel Corporation and applied them to the marketing of farm products. The industrial system of the country is based on group production and group marketing. Your company is an excellent example. Hitherto, among the workers of the world, only the farmer and the artist have labored alone and marketed their products as individuals. Now, a good farmer is not necessarily a good salesman—and even if he were a good salesman he has long been handicapped by circumstances beyond his control."

"Farmers used to dump their output wherever it was grown, as soon as it was grown, and thus they created a glutted local market from which speculators could buy at their own price. That's bad business. Now it's a great company, Judge Gary, never dumps steel rails where they are produced and leaves them there to be taken away by the highest bidder. It studies the markets. It canvasses possible customers and ships products to them in the desired quantity."

"Now, the California farmers, by pooling their products and having a central business organization of co-operators to act them, have adopted the same methods you use. We know our markets; we have a complete outlet for our perishables; we store our non-perishables, and we feed them out in such quantities as the buyer will absorb at a fair price. And because we are a sound business organization we can borrow money from the banks, so that the farmer who has once pooled his crops does not have to wait for full payment until they are sold. During the last twelve years financial institutions have lent us more than a billion dollars. In 1921 the War Finance Board advanced $70,000,000 to co-operative organizations, and if there was a single loss, I haven't heard of it. . . . Yes, Judge Gary, we have become prosperous by taking a leaf from your own notebook."

Sapiro is the fastest and one of the most stimulating conversationalists to whom I have ever listened. He is a human cataract of enthusiasm. Even if you hadn't the slightest interest in co-operative marketing you would become a loyal router out of sheer deference to a man who can believe anything as hard as he does.

It was with some difficulty that I led the slender, brown-eyed enthusiast from his favorite topic over to the one in which I was immediately interested—himself. My reward, however, was more than commensurate. As I listened to his swift, simple recital of a boyhood of infinite pathos—particularly of the six starved and tortured years in an orphan asylum—I was constantly wondering how all that which was vivid in him could have survived the ordeal. This is a problem that I will pass on to you; for I shall tell you his story just as he told it to me. It needs no editing. "Very well—these are the facts," he said, leaning back in his chair and for a moment resting his thin, nervous fingers on his knee. "I was born in San Francisco thirty-eight years ago. There were six in the family. I was fifth. My father was a teacher and we were pathetically poor. When I tell you that I was born in my aunt's kitchen, because we didn't even have a roof over our heads at the time, perhaps you can guess how poor."

"When I was very young, we moved across the bay to Oakland. There our fortunes were worse, if possible. If my father had worked regularly and saved the money, he could have provided for the simple needs of his big family. But he didn't work regularly, and he brought home very little of what he earned. He was afflicted with certain unfortunate personal weaknesses that it hurts me to think about or talk about, so if you don't mind—"

"When I was six and my brother Philip was eight we had to start in selling newspapers and matches on the streets of Oakland. Otherwise we would have gone hungry. I rather liked selling newspapers. It was clean and interesting work. But peddling matches was awfully hard. In those days matches were made in large, square wooden blocks, solid at the base, and with several hundred in the block. We bought five blocks for a nickel and sold three for a nickel. They were so heavy that a load big enough to net a profit of fifty cents would weigh twenty-five to thirty pounds. It was about all I could stagger under—for I was puny and underdeveloped even for a six-year-old."

you wanted them to, and it's a wonder anyone bought them at all. I had to be careful in swinging them up to my back or the jar would make them catch fire. This happened once; and two or three times they broke into a blaze on my back, through friction or spontaneous combustion. Almost getting burned up didn't bother me half as much as losing the matches, which represented money that we needed so badly at home. They almost broke my heart."

By EDGAR A. GUEST.
THE HAPPIEST FISHERMAN.
Oh, it's good to go out fishing when the skies are blue above, and to hear his wide old man, you've learned to love. It's good to watch the clouds go by and hear the singing stream, it's good to give your soul a rest away from hissing steam. But when a man's father, then the utmost peak of joy is fishing in the river with a wide-eyed, happy boy!

Oh, I have fished with fishermen and waded brooks for trout. And I have heard the tales they tell when all the stars are out. And I have heard the wise old men, the grizzled men and gray. Who know the stories of the streams, and that was yesterday. But I'm a young boy's father now, and truth it is I tell, it's glorious to go fishing with the boy you love so well.

It's good to see his eyes glow and hear his shouts of glee, it's good to hear him want to know the name of every tree; it's good to watch him row the boat and see his muscles bend, there's joy in everything he does until the trip shall end. And happy is that fisherman, though luck be good or bad, who's had a day of honest sport and shared it with his lad.

There's something in a fishing trip which can't be told in rhyme. It seems to heal the hurts we've met and soothe the aches of time. The running streams and singing brooks and shining seas of blue restore the faltering strength of man and all his hopes renew. But when a man's father and his boy is at his side, then whether luck be good or bad, that day will long abide.

Johnny Kilbane Will Meet Criqui for Championship.
New York, May 31.—(A.P.)—John Patrick Kilbane, featherweight boxing champion of the world, who is to defend his title against Eugene Criqui, of France, in a 15-round decision contest at the Polo Grounds, next Saturday, won the title from Ave Attell in Vernon, California, in 1915, receiving the referee's decision after a 20-round management.

Then at the age of 21 and at the height of his career, Kilbane outfought the slipping Attell throughout the contest, blinding him with straight lefts to the face and an occasional right smash to jaw and ribs. Attell endeavored to draw his young opponent into a close-quarter jugging match but the wily Kilbane stood off, boxing his way to a win. In the following year Kilbane barely saved his title in a 20-round bout with Johnny Dundee, of New York, holding the little Italian to a draw. Kilbane easily disposed of other pretenders to the featherweight throne, but in 1917 he grew too ambitious and tried to take the lightweight title from Benny Leonard. Leonard knocked out Kilbane in three rounds.

Kilbane has not defended his title in more than a year. In an indifferent exhibition against Freddy Jacks in Cleveland in 1921 he received the newspaper decision. Later he knocked out Danny Frush, an Englishman, in seven rounds. In 1922 he failed to don a glove, demanding all sorts of money for fighting. He repeatedly was challenged by Johnny Dundee, but refused to meet him unless his demands for large purses were met. The New York boxing commission then declared Kilbane's title open in New York. Later Danny Frush and Johnny Dundee fought for it, and Frush being knocked out by the Italian veteran, Dundee was proclaimed champion. In so far as the New York commission was concerned, when Criqui came to the United States Dundee refused, at first, to relinquish his claim to the first engagement with Kilbane, but withdrew when promised a fight with the winner. Kilbane was automatically restored to good standing in this state when granted a license. Kilbane is a master boxer and a clever ringman. He has defeated every featherweight of note excepting Dundee since he won the title. He was born in Cleveland of Irish-American parentage April 18, 1890.

Pirates Busy
HONG KONG—While Chinese bandits in the Shantung region have been gaining international prominence by their recent activities, Chinese pirates on sea and river continue to annoy shipping along the coast and inland waters. The recent instances illustrate the daring and ruthlessness of the pirates. A trading vessel was overhauled by a three-masted pirate ship manned by fifty men. The pirates opened fire and the crew of the trading vessel returned a volley, but soon were forced to give way to superior numbers after four steersmen and a thirteen-year-old child had been killed. The vessel was boarded and about $5,000 worth of goods was taken. During the fighting two of the pirates were killed. In the other case the pirates took $3,000 worth of goods from a trader, two of their number being killed in a running fight, and several of the trader's crew wounded.

All that some people know about the Bible is that it is "made up mainly of words." The saddest thing about buying an auto is that you run into so many creditors.

A horse ran away on Broadway, New York. It saw another horse. Correct this sentence: "That will do, Willie," said the mother; "I don't care to hear what Mrs. Brown said to her cook."
