MONDAY EV'NG. NOV. 9, 1868. Grand Trunk Matters. A few days ago we copied a notice, in reply to a letter published by Judge which one of the Grand Trunk organs Marshall in the Halifax Chronicle in had received by cable, of a meeting which he commented rather severely on of the shareholders of the Railway, in the course Mr. Howe had pursued in rewhich it was asserted that the direc- gard to this question for some months tors had been sustained by a large back. The letter in question is nothing majority, had been re-elected, and less than a formal annoucement to all that an able statement by Mr. Bryd. concerned that Mr. Howe has reached the ges in regard to the position of the conclusion that it is useless to continue railway was admirably received. The the struggle for Repeal. As the leader full report of the meeting, however, goes to prove, that if the foregoing piece of intelligence were not taken current and the struggle for negative forms and is the struggle for negative for the Repeal party, Mr. Howe had a difficult task to perform, and he has performed it with consummate skill. He could not admit that he had been wrong cum grano salis, it ought to have in seeking Repeal; and he argues at been. But it came at a time when people were prepared to believe it. Had not the Managing Director of Union with his abandonment of the Re the Grand Turnk been appointed a Commissioner of the Intercolonial; any change in his views; but professes a in that capacity had he not power to willingnes still to go for Repeal if any serve the Grand Trunk shareholders one can show him how to get it. more effectually than he had ever served them before, and what so na- sees no way of getting it, and consequenttural as that Mr. Creak should cease ly no use of making further effort in croaking and be amiable and accept as gospel all that Mr. Brydges, the Railway Commissioner, who would Most of the "Antis" denounce the letter probably have a hand in negotiating in unmeasured terms. They say that Mr probably have a hand in negotiating the sale of the Quebec and Riviere du Loup section, might say in regard to the prosperity of the Grand Trunk? This was the line of argument which first suggested itself on reading the flattering announcement, and it was certainly natural enough, for was it not a little too much to expect that the mere improvement in the management of the Grand Trunk since the previous meeting of the shareholders was sufficient of itself, without the aid of any collateral circum stances, to induce Mr. Creak to alter his spirit, and take under his protecting wing a gentleman towards whom his language was anything but complimentary a few short months ago?

Serious Accipent.—On Saturday af-

he reminded the directors of a promise they had made at the last meeting, to show reductions in three points —vizin wages, materials and fuel. He went on to show that for a rise of 6 per cent in the traffic, there had been a rise of 6 per cent-in the wages, that the cost of materials was reduced only 4 per cent, while the cost of fuel was £2,000 in excess of what it had been and the therefore asked the Board to fulfil its pledge and withdraw Mr. Brydges from the management. He had a few questions to ask Mr. Brydges. One was as to the condition of the road, and what per centage was in good working order? What was the condition of the rolling stock, and what was the number of engines were in hospital, and a large number of their cars were useless. He would ask Mr. Brydges what was the amount likely to be yet required to put the line in good order? He contended that no one should leave the room that day without they knew what they had yet to pay on this score, He had been told that £100.000 after this would do it; but he never yet had seen an estimate of the Grand Trunk verified. Altogether Mr. Creak was most unamiable and uncompromising, and he wound up his invective by asserting that a change in the manage-and he wound up his invective by asserting that a change in the management must and ought to come.

Mr. Brydges most decidedly made a speech, but we have no other assurance of the manner of its reception than that given in the cable despatch referred to above. He spoke of the renewals, and charged a heavy amount of damages to the climate. He told of the loss on greenbacks, and said that for this there was no remedy, as in order to compete with other lines it was necessary to charge the same rates, in order to compete with other lines it was necessary to charge the same rates, and advised the Company not to think of substituting coal for wood as fuel. He denied having an interest in any company working for the Grand Trunk other than that which owns the Kingston Locomotive Works.

The formal resolution for the passing of the report and the accounts having been put by the Chairman, Mr. Creak then brought forward his motion of want of confidence in the Directors, which on a show of hands was declared carried, but a poll was demanded, and the result was adverse to Mr. Creak, though it could scarcely be called complimentary to the Directors.

Another Letter from Mr. Howe on the Repeal Movement.

Considerable excitement has bee used in Halifax, and throughut Nova Scotia by the publication of another let er from the Hon. Mr. Howe on the repeal movement in that Province. It is same time, he makes it very clear that he that direction. Unionists are highly pleased with it, and say that it indicates

But the report makes the whole matter clear, and enables us to dispense with conjectures. Mr. Creak is not satisfied—that is certain. The meeting was held on the 22nd ultimo, Sir E. W. Watkin, M. P., in the chair. The Chairman made a lengthy statement, in which he showed the disadvantages under which the Company laboured in working the line, the distance trains have to run without taking up a single passenger, and the increasing prosperity of the business notwithstanding all these drawbacks. Altogether the speech was one that might have been quite solacing to any company, and the worthy chairman concluded his remarks by intimating his intention of withdrawing, and by giving the shareholders a little parting advice, of which, there is no doubt, these gentlemen would gladly avail themselves if they were sure that the admonition would dowhat he who gave it failed to effect, namely, secure them a dividend.

Then Mr Creak is turn came, and he reminded the directors of a promise they had made at the last meeting, to show reductions in three points—viz: in wages, materials and fuel. He was turned, weather is most unfavourable for build-Tushielaw, with sullen determination bent upon keeping the troth he had pledged to his dead foster brother, continued to soour the country round in search of Kirsty Hyslop; but still without avail. He had also despatched Eddie Craig and another to Edinburgh to act under the orders of Barras in finding Elliot and settling with him. As has been related, the timely warning of the page Crawford rescued Gilbert from the first attempt of his two assasins.

Elliot and setting with him. As has been related, the timely warning of the page Crawford rescued Gilbert from the first attempt of his two assasins.

So the border chief fretted and fumed and hunted his human quarry with his dark purpose still unachieved.

Meanwhile the gipsy youth Kaza, although regarded with little else than scorn by the greater number of the borderers for his lack of strength and hardihood, was pitied by the others on account of being a natural or sort of harmless idiot, rapidly grew in favour with the chief.

None could divine how this favour was obtained; but, probably, even the rude nature of Tashielaw was affected by the weakness and friendless condition of the lad. Besides, little wit as Kaza might have, he appeared to have enough to know that his condition would be improved in the ratio of his service to the chief. Accordingly, he was always ready at his beck to run anywhere or do anything for him, and in return Tushielaw, in his rough way, liked the lad, finding him seful.

With another person Kaza had found favour, and that was none other than his captor, the dwarf Horne. Although the latter Jiked rarely to play some trick on the young gipsy for the amusement of his master, the deformed man and the half wit were great friends.

in out-of-the-way nooks of the tower, playing at hide and seek, as Hornie explained on being questioned.

Eon one occasion, when Yetholm Will was passing the south turret chamber, the door was slightly ajar, and he overheard the voices of Hornie and Kaza in what appeared to be carnest converse. Now, this chamber was specially devoted to the use of the master; the door, which had recently been renewed, was a double one of strong oak and studded with broad-headed nails. He always carried the key about his person, and never permitted any one to enter the chamber save when he was present.

Curious to know how the dwarf and the natural had got into the secret room, and what they were talking about, Will listened.

'If it be not here, mistress, then it is not in the tower,' said Hornie in a tone of respect such as Will had never known him to use before.

'Then all my labour will be vain,' sighed Kazs, more like a woman, Will thought, than a half-wit gipsy lad.

'The chamber would ne'er have been guarded so well had there been no secret to guard. Make use of the time and seek high, seek low, seek roof and floor and walls. I hae kenned a bit of tapeatry hide rare treasures.'

At this Will burst into the room, his dull mind grasping only the commonest notion that the pair were attempting to rob the master. This notion was engendered chief, by the last word Hornie had uttered—''I breasures.''

He found Kaza in the act of raising a portion of the dust-covered tapeatry, which he

"treasures."
He found Kaza in the act of raising a portion of the dust-covered tapestry, which he dropped as if in alarm the instant the man appeared. The dwarf was on his knees on the floor sorutinizing every seam and chink.
His attention was attracted by the noise Will made in entering, and twisting his head over his shoulder to see who came, he salut ed him with one of his loud hoarse laughs. He did not betray the least fear or confusion

Capt. Elmhurst, 53rd regiment, now in Quebec, received a blow on the head with a stick, from a Mr. Le Mesurier. A challenge followed. Le Mesurier had the good sense to decline putting himself up for a target to be shot at, and the gallant captain publishes him as a "coward."

At Eric, it took a Justice of the Peace, two lawyers, six jurors and about twenty witnesses the whole afternoon to try a case in which a little girl, about nine years old, had slapped the face of a play mate.

As a memento of the Czar's recent visit to Poland, he has issued an imperial ukase, forbidding the males to wear mustaches, and the women to wear the Polish toquet.

There is every reason to believe that fr. Gwynne has received the Puisne adgeship, rendered vacant by Mr. Dra-er's retirement.
