Mr. CHAUVIN. (Translation.) Yes, they were competent, let it be said to their credit. I only want to add, before resuming my seat, that I hope the Minister will see his way clear to carrying out his scheme, as I have no doubt it would prove a good means of educating the farming population. I think this scheme would be endorsed by the farmers, who would reap the advantages resulting from such practical illustration work. I believe, moreover, that a good deal could be done in favour of the farming community, by distributing in a fair way, throughout the province of Quebec, the benefits of the Ottawa Experimental Farm. On those grounds I feel it my duty to endorse the proposition made by the Minister, without, however, pledging myself absolutely, and reserving also the privilege of expressing my views, if this item comes up at a later date.

To promote dairying interests by advances for milk and cream, and for making butter and cheese, to be recouped out of the proceeds of sales of such butter and cheese, to be placed to the credit of the Consolidated Revenue Fund ..... $60,000

Mr. FOSTER. How did that work out last year?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We found we did not require so much as we asked, for the reason that the butter and cheese made in the creameries in the North-west Territories was sold to British Columbia and the Yukon. The consequence was that the return of the money was so rapid that we did not require as much as we did before, and we are able to reduce the amount this year by $20,000.

Quarantine—

Salaries and contingencies of organized districts and public health in other districts ..... $55,000

Mr. PRIOR. The Minister was not in the House the other night when I expressed the hope that he would take Dr. Montizambert with him when he visits British Columbia.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will take the matter into consideration.

Tracadie Lazaretto ..... $5,000

Mr. FOSTER. How many patients are there in the lazaretto now; is the number decreasing?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It has been about the same ever since I have been in office. At one time there were 16 or 17 patients, but a couple of other cases have gone there recently. Every now and then Dr. Smith persuades an afflicted person to enter the lazaretto, and just the other day I received a letter telling of a case and asking me to take him into the lazaretto, but of course we have no power unless the patients go willingly. Dr. Smith has for a long time been exercising a beneficial influence to induce those afflicted to go there.

Mr. FOSTER. When they once get in are they able to get out if they wish.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We have no authority to keep them there, but as a matter of fact when they once go in their relatives will not take them back, and that influence has enabled Dr. Smith to be successful in inducing them to go there.

Mr. PRIOR. Has the Minister yet changed his mind with regard to the necessity of compelling the lepers in British Columbia to go to Tracadie?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is such a new departure and one of such an important character that I would not, on my own responsibility, like to do it.

Winnipeg and St. Boniface Hospitals.... $4,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is the principle on which this aid is given now?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It has been given for years, because these hospitals are supposed to be utilized by incoming immigrants.

Mr. FOSTER. Are they?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I doubt very much if they are. This aid has been given for years. The hon. gentleman knows that it was established under his own régime. This is the amount that was there when I came into office.

Mr. FOSTER. Do they give you any return as to the number of immigrants that they treat there?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, there is a regular return of the number of patients and the countries from which they come.

Mr. FOSTER. It might be well for the Minister to let us see that.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will.

Cattle quarantine ..... $30,000

Mr. CLANCY. I think the Minister should give us some information with regard to this item. I see in the Auditor General's Report, on page B-56, that three gentlemen have been receiving large sums—one $1,204.80, another $1,255.30, and another $1,037.65—in connection with the cattle quarantine. One of these gentlemen is located at Chatham, another at Kingsville, and another at Wallaceburg.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What are their names?

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman ought to know their names. One is Mr. Kime, who lives in the hon. gentleman's own locality, and the hon. gentleman must be personally aware that Mr. Kime has drawn a very large sum of money. He was employed by the day, and he made it convenient always to be at work for the Government. I do not care to go into any minute discussion of this, because I do not think the Minister will require that to become thoroughly convinced that it was a mistake to employ any person on the terms on which Mr. Kime was employed. I did not intend to mention his name, but since my hon. friend (Mr. Campbell) was so anxious about it, I felt bound to give it to him. If my hon. friend wants me to go into the accounts in detail, hurried as this committee is, I think I could do so with a great deal of profit to the committee.

Mr. CAMPBELL. If you think it is in the public interest.

Mr. CLANCY. I think it is in the public interest to do so.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Would it not be better to take it up in the Public Accounts Committee?

Mr. CLANCY. My hon. friend knows that I can take it up there and here, too. We have the two places, and I thought it well to make the choice for myself, rather than let the hon. gentleman make it for me. I want to call the Minister's attention to the fact that these three gentlemen have been paid large sums of money, and, I think, without performing corresponding services. I find, from information brought down, that Mr. Kime is now employed at $600 a year,

Mr. FISHER.

Mr. Thorne, of Wallaceburg, at $600 a year, and Mr. Perdue, of Kingsville, at $1,000 a year, expenses being allowed. Now, to employ three men in a locality where there are local veterinary surgeons to do the work at very moderate charges, is not needed. While we should be anxious to spare no pains or expense necessary to stamp out disease, I may say that at present it is pretty well stamped out, and to place men on salaries is throwing away so much money. These are the only places in the province of Ontario where that is done. I will give an instance in regard to Mr. Kime. He is supposed to go when called upon, or when he has knowledge that hog cholera is in some person's herd. He goes and examines the herd, and if he finds disease in it, he orders it to be slaughtered, and performs all the duties which would be expected of a veterinary surgeon under the circumstances. I will give you a specimen of the monstrous charges he makes. He drove out about a mile from Chatham, and charged $5 for the day, $3 for his team, and 75 cents or $1.25 for his meals. I say that is an improper charge.

Hon. gentlemen will see that the inducement is great to make frequent visits and make up bills. Take the district of Dresden, where there is just as much hog cholera as at Wallaceburg, I find that W. H. Clapp, of that district, receives $160, but when you go to Chatham, just south of there, I find that Mr. Kime receives $1,204, and that at Wallaceburg, just west of there, Mr. Thorne receives $1,037. I do not know why the Minister of Agriculture selected those particular places because it is a very small district. All that Mr. Thorne has is a portion of Bothwell, which constitutes the townships of Chatham and Sombra. Then take the gentleman who resides at Dresden, he takes in a part of two other counties, so that the territory over which these gentlemen travel is very small. I do not wish to make any political capital out of this, but desire to call attention to it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The reason that these three men were appointed on salaries was that we found a very large number of cases in these particular localities. In the case of Mr. Kime, from June 1st to September 30th, 1897, he was paid $5 a day, for a period less than four months, and received nearly $400, and it was thought better to put him on a salary of $50 a month on condition that he was to treat any case of hog cholera that might arise. The county of Essex was also for a time very severely afflicted with hog cholera, and I think it was largely due to the energetic efforts of Mr. Perdue and the fact that he was specially detailed to do the work that this disease has almost entirely disappeared from that locality. Still cases do occasionally occur, and I thought I was quite justified in keeping up the employment of these gentlemen who had done such good work. I find that quite recently there were several cases in Mr. Kime's district, and it is a question quite open to discussion as to whether the disease has been so thoroughly eradicated that I can put that district under similar arrangements to others, where a man is not specially employed.

Mr. CLANCY. I would not like to make any charge that would be unfair.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not understand the hon. gentleman to make any charge.

Mr. CLANCY. I would not dare to make a charge when the party concerned is not in a position to reply, but the hon. gentleman has only to look at the accounts to know that the inducement is very great to make visits, when these men are paid so much per day and their travelling expenses.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The possibility of such a charge was what induced me to pay a salary instead.

Mr. CLANCY. There is no politics in this, the farmers must have a man called in when they find any disease in their herd, and the department cannot be too vigorous in stamping it out. Every one knows there is a disposition to conceal the disease, because the farmer does not care to sacrifice his herd, and always feels that he is not fairly compensated. Every effort should be made to sustain the department in stamping the disease out vigorously, but there is no reason why there should be three salaried officers in these districts more than others. If the practice is justifiable there, it must be justifiable very generally throughout the western part of Ontario.

With regard to some of the complaints that have come to my knowledge, one man, who had his hogs inspected by Mr. Clapp, and who had taken them all the way to Chatham, was ordered to take them home again by Mr. Kime. It is as well that there should be as little friction as possible.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is but one explanation which may be alleged for this, and which is probably the right one. We have to quarantine townships in which cases of hog cholera have developed and in such cases no hogs are allowed to come in or go out of these townships. Mr. Clapp, in an adjoining township, would have no desire or authority to prevent these hogs moving, but Mr. Kime, who is in charge of the township closely quarantined, would be called upon to refuse to allow these hogs to be brought into the township. I do not know that this is the case, but I think this may be the explanation. If the hon. gentleman will give me the names I will look into the details of the case.

Mr. CLANCY. That may be the explanation; I am not prepared to say.

Mr. MCGREGOR. I have listened carefully to the remarks of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy). I think the Minister is to be congratulated upon the appointment of these veterinary surgeons in our district. It must be remembered that corn is the important crop in the western districts. We have to feed the corn to our hogs, and if we cannot keep our hogs healthy it is hard for our farmers to do business. We had a gentleman on salary, but we found that did not pay, for he kept going up and down one township. We appointed Mr. Orchard, who has taken charge of our district for $500 and small expenses. Mr. Orchard is a very worthy man, understands his business thoroughly, as well as the gentleman who was here before him, and has done us great good. We were very much troubled with people having sick hogs, with nobody to report them to, and when reported it generally cost the men who reported them something; so the farmers used to get along by destroying a few, and probably the rest would take the disease, or it would get among the neighbours' hogs. Within the last year or two we have almost completely stamped out the disease. In Iowa, it must be remembered, they lost $15,000,000 worth of hogs in a single year. From North and South Essex, we ship something in the neighbourhood of one million dollars worth of hogs per year, so it will be seen that this is a very important industry with us and we cannot afford to trifle with the disease. As soon as I hear of anybody having a sick hog, I call up the veterinary surgeon and he goes out and looks up the case. When the disease strikes a locality, the veterinary surgeon may have to go there every day for a month before the disease is stamped out. Even though it may cost $500 a year or more, we find it pays to be vigilant in this matter. The men we have appointed in South Essex and in North Essex are doing and have been doing excellent work, and earn every dollar they get from the Government—I know it. The gentleman in charge at Windsor does more than look after the hogs. He examines animals coming from the other side. Windsor is a very important point. We have three lines of railways crossing from the United States, and cattle that are to be distributed anywhere in that neighbourhood are properly examined for disease and held over. Cattle crossing on the ferry—we have a ferry every five minutes—are examined in the same way, and the cattle are put in the barn until the tubercle test is gone through with. Horses coming in must be examined also. So these men are busy in more ways than in examining the hogs. I am satisfied that the department deserves credit for the way they have handled the disease in our county, and our officers appointed deserve credit for the way they have performed their duties and kept the disease down.

Mr. CLANCY. I have been waiting to find out what the hon. gentleman's (Mr. McGregor's) point of criticism was. I would like to know who has censured the department or said one word in criticism of the service? The hon. gentleman was so anxious to make an argument out of nothing that he left it to be inferred from his speech that I or somebody had been criticising this department. I made it clear that I thought good work had been done. If the hon. gentleman did not mean that, what could he mean? I have declared that this was a matter into which party politics should not come. But I pointed out that one man had received excessive sums, and I still contend that this is the case. Mr. Orchard, we find, does the work for $500, and, besides, renders very important service at Windsor. I have no doubt that Mr. Orchard is a good man and earns every dollar of what he is paid. But when the hon. gentleman tries to convey the impression that I advocated a looser system or found fault with the department, he is not fair. I simply called attention to this case, and I have no doubt the Minister will look into it, and, if unnecessary sums have been paid he will see to it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. As to the accounts mentioned by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy), I think they must have been incurred before the men were put on salary. Since then, the accounts have been much lighter. I think possibly some of these accounts have been a little excessive, and I have called the attention of the Minister to them. There is no doubt that Mr. Kime has a very large field there, and I think the hon. member for Bothwell was hardly fair to him. During last year there was hog cholera in a great many places. It is necessary that one man should give his whole time to it and I believe that the results will fully justify the appointments made. I do not think we could get a better man for this work than Mr. Kime. I am of opinion that it is better for the department to trust the work to one man and not to different men in different townships.

Mr. CLANCY. Why?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Because one man becomes conversant with the work and gives more attention to it and knows the cases occurring in different parts of the county.

Mr. CLANCY. Surely the hon. member (Mr. Campbell) must know, and if not, the Minister can tell him, that the veterinary surgeons on salary are at liberty to engage in the practice of their profession as before.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Certainly.

Mr. CLANCY. That shows that it is not necessary for them to give their whole time.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Of course, I mean all the time that is necessary for the work. You could not expect a veterinary surgeon to give up his practice for $50 a month.

Mr. CLANCY. I do not.

Mr. CLANCY.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The arrangement is satisfactory. I am sure the hon. member for Bothwell, like the rest of us, thinks that the best means should be taken to stamp out this disease, even if it does cost us a little money. It is most important to the counties of Kent, Bothwell, Essex and all that western district that there should be no blemish upon that industry. I believe the disease is stamped out, and that the result will fully justify the means taken.

Prevention of tuberculosis among cattle throughout the Dominion ..... $15,000

Mr. BETHUNE. I would like the hon. Minister to explain how tuberculosis is spread among cattle.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bethune) asks me a question which would almost require a medical disquisition to answer, but I think, perhaps, I can answer it shortly. The disease is transmissible by microbes or bacteria, which are grown within the diseased animals. These are given out at various points, and if they come into the system of any animal, especially if that animal is what is called congenial soil, that is to say, if the animal is specially subject to disease, then it is communicated. The same things might, however, create disease in one animal that would not create it in another. It is found that the most frequent cause of tuberculosis passing from one animal to another is the saliva, much the same as in man. The microbes are in the saliva, and when that dries, they are carried in the air and inhaled, or drawn in with the food, by other animals. The consequence is, that when animals are kept in a small barn in the winter time, the liability is strongest of the passage of the disease from one animal to another. I think it is rare for the disease to be carried from one animal to another in the open air, but damp and dark stables seem peculiarly adapted for the growth of these microbes, and the disease is very easily carried under such circumstances. Wherever the disease is found, it is strongly recommended that the animal should be isolated. If the Government tests the animal and finds it is diseased, we oblige the owner to isolate him and keep him away from other animals. We also publish all the information we can, dealing with this disease, and advise men to whitewash their barns and ventilate them well, keep the animals clean, and in a dry place, and in a healthy condition, so that they may be more likely to throw off the disease. This is the advice which is given by medical men in regard to the human subject. There is no doubt that in some instances animals are cured, but just what causes the cure, medical men have not yet reached a conclusion.

Mr. CLANCY. I would ask the Minister of Agriculture whether he has set his face against taking up the question of making some compensation to farmers whose stock is diseased, but who are not disposed to slaughter their animals themselves. In a very profitable debate here the other day, it was declared by some medical gentlemen that diseased cattle were a fruitful source of consumption in man, and that, therefore, the necessity of slaughtering the diseased animal was greatly enhanced. Now, if that be the case, and if it be necessary, in the interests of the lives and health of the people, to stamp out that disease in cattle as far as possible, it seems to me we must make some appropriation to do that. The reasons the hon. gentleman gave on a former occasion for not slaughtering was, that the department would become liable and would incur a very heavy expense. If it is worth an expenditure of money for the purpose of preventing the spread of disease, it seems to me of sufficient consequence to take some steps towards stamping it out altogether. But you will never stamp it out by nursing it in certain localities. If you permit an animal known to be diseased to be put in a state of quarantine, does not that mean that the animal ought to be slaughtered? There are but few cases that recover, and then the tuberculin test when repeated several times has been shown to defeat the purpose of that test, and deceiving the purchaser as to the diseased state of the animal. The hon. gentleman might make a small beginning this year. I would not advocate that he should launch out in a large way to encourage parties to hope for undue compensation. To take the ground that you should pay for none, when you know that they are diseased, is to take extreme ground; to take the ground you should pay for every one that is found diseased, even slightly, and slaughter them, is taking the other extreme ground. I think there is a middle course, and I think the hon. gentleman would do himself credit, if he would set about at least compensating the owners of cattle that are already in a state of quarantine, and who slaughter the cattle themselves. Whether the compensation should be full or partial, might be a matter to consider; but I think there is no more important question to-day affecting the life and health of the people of this country.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I fully appreciate the importance of the subject, and have considered it very carefully indeed. I appreciate the suggestions of the hon. gentleman, and would be glad if I could see my way to working them out. But, so far, I have not been able to find a method by which we could pay for some and not for others. Our experience in regard to hog slaughtering where we had to pay compensation, has not been a very happy one. We have had to take more and more money for compensation, and it is becoming a serious burden. Our experience in that direction is not such as to encourage us to give compensation in other cases. But I appreciate fully the importance of trying to minimize tuberculosis. We are doing what we can in every other way, and we think with some success. I would like to try present methods a little longer before plunging into what I fear would be a very large expenditure.

Committee rose and reported progress.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. PRIOR. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Finance what the Government intend to take up to-morrow?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think the right hon. Prime Minister intimated, a day or two ago, that to-morrow would be devoted to the Pacific cable, but he has not mentioned it to-day, and if not that, we will go on with the Estimates.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 12.10 a.m. (Tuesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 25th July, 1899.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PRAYERS.

THE QUEEN VS. SKELTON, ET AL.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the right hon. gentleman if he will have the report of the Minister of Justice to Council in this matter brought down? A few days ago I asked for a copy of that report recommending the release from prison of Skelton and Dewan, who had been tried and convicted, in October, 1897, of perjury, and subsequently sentenced to a term in prison. The right hon. gentleman's colleagues, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, said he saw no objection, but suggested that I should make a motion. I replied that it was too late and the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries then said: I am sure the Prime Minister will have no objection. I cannot say, however, whether the right hon. gentleman heard or not and probably he did not. If the right hon. gentleman would permit me, I will read the motion:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the report of the Minister of Justice on which an Order in Council was passed for the discharge from prison of J. K. Skelton and T. Dewan, tried and convicted of perjury before Mr.

Justice Wetmore, in October, 1897, and subsequently sentenced to a term of imprisonment, and also for copies of the affidavits supporting the application for the discharge of the aforesaid Skelton and Dewan.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). If my hon. friend says that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries agreed to the motion I will let it pass.

Mr. DAVIN. Then I beg to put the motion Motion agreed to.

POACHING ON PACIFIC COAST.

Mr. PRIOR. I wish to call the attention of the Government to some information placed in my hands with regard to the poaching that is going on within the three-mile limit of Canadian territory in the Pacific Ocean. The American fishermen are catching halibut, and not only catching the fish against the law, but are throwing out large quantities of offal into the sea, which will have the effect of driving the halibut away. These fisheries are of magnificent proportion. Vessels go out from Vancouver and in a day or two bring in 80 or 90 tons of the finest quality of halibut. Application was made the last three or four years for a fast cruiser, which is the only means possible of putting a stop to this poaching. At present there is only the Government steamer, the "Quadra," a very good vessel, but which has so much to do looking after the buoys and lighthouses that she has not sufficient time to give attention to these poachers. I would ask the Government whether they could not possibly put in a vote before the session is over for a steamer to look after these fisheries. These fisheries are of enormous extent and value and the poaching going on is far greater than anybody not on the spot can imagine. I think that $40,000 or $50,000 would be sufficient to buy a steamer to look after this smuggling.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I will call the attention of my hon. friend, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, to the suggestion, but I am afraid that if we were to take an appropriation this year for building a steamer, we could not have it in time for this season.

PREFERENTIAL TRADE.

Mr. McNEILL. Might I ask my right hon. friend what conclusion he has arrived at with regard to my resolution concerning preferential trade?

The PRIME MINISTER. I asked my hon. friend to give me the favour of an interview to-day.

Mr. DAVIN.

CONTROVERTED ELECTIONS ACT— REGISTRAR'S FEES.

Mr. CALVERT. I desire to draw attention to a question I submitted last year, and which I intended submitting this session after the return of the Solicitor General, but I am afraid that he will not return in time. I would like to know whether anything had been done with reference to amending the Dominion Controverted Elections Act in the direction I suggested last year. The Act empowers the judges to employ a stenographer in connection with election trials, and the expense is chargeable to the unsuccessful party. Section 43 provides that the trial judge shall forward a copy of the evidence to the Speaker of the House of Commons. Then by Order in Council, dated December, 1875, the registrar of the election court shall receive ten cents a folio for forwarding a copy of the evidence to the Speaker of the House of Commons. As an instance of the cost in these actions, in the London election trial last year the stenographer received for taking the evidence $796.20, and he also received $180.60 for twenty-one days, or a total of $976.80. This amount was ordered to be paid and was paid out of the $1,000 deposited by the petitioner. Then he made a number of copies, one of which he handed to the registrar of the court, who forwarded it to the Speaker of the House of Commons, and drew $751.10 for simply forwarding a copy of the evidence. As we are likely to have elections within the next two years there may be protests again and similar costs exacted.

I would suggest to the right hon. leader of the House or to the Government that something should be done, either that this should be amended or that it should be wiped out entirely. I would ask my right hon. friend whether anything has been done with reference to it?

The PRIME MINISTER. I will call the attention of the Minister of Justice to the remarks of my hon. friend (Mr. Calvert). That is the only answer I can give him to-day.

THE PACIFIC CABLE.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock) moved that the House resolve itself into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:—

That for the purpose of establishing direct submarine telegraphic communication between Canada and Australasia, it is expedient to authorize the Governor in Council to enter into an agreement with such of the Governments of the United Kingdom and Her Majesty's Australasian possessions as desire to share in the undertaking, for the purpose on their behalf of securing the construction, acquisition, laying, maintenance and operation of a cable between Canada and Australasia on the following conditions:—

(a) That a Board of Commissioners be created by or under the legislative authority of the Parliament of the United Kingdom, with all the powers requisite for the purpose aforesaid.

(b) That the proposed cable and all its branches, additions or extensions, and all property, real or personal at any time acquired for the purpose of the undertaking, shall vest and continue vested in such board in trust to carry out such undertaking for the benefit of the respective governments sharing in the undertaking, and in proportion in their respective interests therein.

(c) That for the purpose of obtaining money wherewith to carry out the undertaking, the board may issue debentures for such sums, payable at such dates not being less than years, nor more than years from the respective dates of issue, and bearing such rate of interest, and payable at such place as the board may determine, but the total amount of the principal money of such debentures at any time outstanding shall not exceed £ sterling.

(d) That, subject to the cost of operation, maintenance, management and the setting apart of such proper sinking fund as the board may deem advisable wherewith to provide for renewals, the said principal moneys and interest shall be a first charge on all the said property, real and personal, and earnings of the undertaking.

(e) That the cable shall be laid between Canada and Australasia via the Pacific Ocean, and may be in sections, but all points of its landing shall be on British territory.

(f) That the Commissioners shall have full power to administer the affairs of the board and the carrying on of the undertaking in trust for the benefit of said governments.

(g) That the total number of Commissioners and the nature of their tenure of office shall from time to time be determined by said governments, and each government, having regard to such total number, shall be entitled to appoint to such board, as near as may be, as many members thereof as represent the relative liability of such appointing government as guarantor, as hereinafter mentioned, and to fill vacancies, as same occur from time to time.

(h) That the respective governments joining in such agreement shall be interested in the profits and losses of the undertaking in proportion to the amount of their liability as aforesaid.

(i) That the Governor in Council is hereby authorized on behalf of the Dominion of Canada, to guarantee payment of five-eighteenth parts of the said total principal money of said debentures, limited as aforesaid, and interest as aforesaid on said five-eighteenth parts.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in moving this resolution, I feel that upon this subject, at least there will be no difference of opinion in this Parliament. The subject is not a new one. For many years it has engaged the attention of the Australasian colonies, of the mother country, of Canada—in fact of the whole British Empire. It has been discussed in the press, in public meetings, and at semi-official gatherings of representative men throughout the Empire, so that the British public are so familiar with the aims, and, I trust, now with the details, that little explanation and no argument is necessary to commend the resolution to the approval of this House. Before moving the House into committee, I may, however, briefly refer to the features of the resolution, in case some hon. gentlemen may not have carefully read it. The subject of establishing cable communication between Canada and Australasia attracted public attention in the colonies many years ago. As far back as 1887 the Colonial Conference in London dealt with the subject. A resolution was passed in that conference approving of practically the scheme as is involved in the resolution now in your hands. That scheme means a state-owned cable between Australasia and Canada, owned and operated by the various British governments, a cable the points of landing of every section of which will be on British soil; and it contemplates, of course, the operation of such a cable not for the purpose of earning dividends for the contributing governments, but for the purpose of promoting trade and more effectually uniting the various portions of this great Empire in point of interest and as well as of sentiment. That resolution of the Colonial Conference of 1887 bore some fruit, because it set the cause in motion. It was followed, at a later period, by a resolution passed at the Colonial Conference held in Ottawa in 1894. The resolution passed on that occasion was practically an echo of that passed at the conference of 1887; and the resolution now in your hands is practically an embodiment of the principles, and even of the details involved in these two informal resolutions. But this is the first time, so far as I am aware that the subject has been so far advanced as to appeal to a British Parliament for legislative sanction. Up to the present time, public opinion has been expressed generally in a favourable way, so that now we may almost assume that the expediency of the proposal to establish a cable commencing in Canada and terminating in Australia is accepted almost as an axiom amongst all British subjects. I need not dwell, therefore, upon the importance of the subject itself; we may, perhaps, begin by assuming that that point is conceded.

It is important in connection with such a matter as this, to bear in mind the geographical relation of Canada to the rest of the world. We have an Empire in extent, but if Canada is to be developed, it appears to me, we should endeavour to promote facilities for trade upon our Pacific front as well as upon our Atlantic front—a double front for Canada on the two great oceans, the Atlantic and the Pacific, and Canada in touch with the trade of the whole world. It may be argued that the construction of a cable between Canada and Australia does not give us cable communication with the Orient. A few weeks ago the country appeared to be startled by the information that Great Britain had given a monopoly to the Eastern Extension Cable Company, so that no other cable company could land in Hong Kong within a period of 25 years after 1893. When you come to read that agreement, I see nothing in it to cause us to doubt for a moment that we establish cable communication with the Orient when we establish connection by cable with Australasia. That agreement provides that the Imperial Government can purchase the line of cable, the second cable constructed between Singapore and Hong Kong for the sum of £300,000, which, I presume, fairly represents its cost. Once the English Government acquires that cable there only remains the connecting link between the mainland and Australasia, and you have direct cable and telegraphic communication via Australia between Canada and Hong Kong, China and Japan. And it is inconceivable that if the two great colonies, Canada and Australasia, have united themselves by cable communication—particularly in view of the fact that the colonies of Australasia own the telegraph lines across the Island Continent of Australia—any power could prevent us forcing our way by telegraphic communication into China and Japan. Nor would it be necessary. I think, that Great Britain should exercise her power of pre-emption in regard to the cable between Singapore and Hong Kong, because the Eastern Extension Cable Company, which at present owns that line, would recognize the irresistible force of the Empire and would be prepared to give fair rates and thus make the duplication of a line unnecessary, unless the increase of business should make such a step necessary for business reasons. Therefore, I regard the proposition, though it nominally provides for communication only between Canada and Australasia as practically completing cable communication between Canada, China and Japan. If so, it is for us to contemplate the usefulness to the trade of Canada of such a development of cable communication.

We see the action of various nations of Europe, straining every effort to obtain an entry into the markets of China and Japan, with a population of perhaps 400,000,000, a population equal to that of all Europe; we see the trading nations of Europe exerting their best efforts to obtain access into this market for their wares; and we have only to look upon the map of the world to see the geographical advantage that Canada enjoys in seeking entrance into these same markets. It appears to me, therefore, that whatever may be the interests of other contributing countries to this scheme, Canada has direct and most important interest for her own commercial advancement. Putting it upon that ground alone, I regard the scheme as one calculated to be of great benefit to us commercially. I leave it to those who are more able, to sing the advantages of imperialism, the sentiment of which I thoroughly appreciate, and to dwell upon the imperialistic side of the question. There has been a great deal of literature written by those high in the affairs of the country, men engaged in the consideration of matters, of the defence and protection of our mercantile shipping of the great scattered colonies of the Empire—there has been much written and spoken as to the advantage to the Empire in having such a communication as this, so that at all times the mother country may be kept in touch with every part of the Empire, and be at all times prepared not by permission of foreign countries, but by arrangements under her own control, to know the influences and agencies at work endangering or threatening to endanger, any portions of the great Empire. So I say I leave it to others to dwell upon that feature of the situation. I am now only dealing with that portion of the resolution that is to be submitted to a committee dealing with the financial phase of it. In that view, it is proper, I think, that Parliament should have some idea of the extent to which this scheme involves Canada financially. Upon that point there may be differences of opinion, and we can have nothing but estimates, but estimates by capable men are a safe guide, and in a matter of this kind are the only possible guide.

The first question that arises, then, would be the feasibility of such a scheme. I think that we may assume that admitted. The subject has been thoroughly considered by the ablest men, and a partial survey has been made of the Pacific Ocean; and cable manufacturers in England are so thoroughly satisfied that they offer to build a cable, taking the possibilities of the bed of the ocean as satisfactory, and to guarantee the safety of the cable for at least three years. That is, to my mind, a powerful proof that the scheme, those men being prepared to risk their money in it, is a feasible one. As to the style of cable, I would say that that has been carefully considered by a commission that sat in London, England, beginning towards the end of the year 1896, and who made a report, bearing date 5th of January, 1897, signed by Lord Selborne and the other conferees. That the public may understand that this is different from some other reports, I may say that this report is generally referred to as the report of the Imperial Pacific Cable Commission. This report was made by Lord Selborne, chairman, as a result of a conference of the following gentlemen: Lord Strathcona, the Hon. A. G. Jones, Mr. Saul Samuel, Mr. D. Gillies, and Mr. Geo. H. Murray. The commission took expert evidence, and probably had before them the best authority upon telegraphy. I refer to Lord Kelvin, and their finding follows the advice of Lord Kelvin. Various cable plans were proposed, cables of varying weights, of varying proportions, of copper, gutta-percha and other material. The first point to be determined was the correct specification for a cable suitable for the work involved. Lord Kelvin gave his opinion upon various styles, and that opinion this Imperial Cable Commission has adopted, Without troubling the House with figures, it will be sufficient to say that he finds, and the commission reports, that a cable in conformity with the specifications of Lord Kelvin, will be adequate for the purpose both of carrying messages and of standing the strain of laying. He also points out a very pleasing and gratifying circumstance, that although there is a depth of 3,000 fathoms in places, which exceeds the depth of any other cables at present in existence, still that circumstance is an advantage to the cable when once it is safely laid. Lord Kelvin's cable, then, will involve, according to the scheme that has been recommended, an initial capital expenditure of about £1,500,000 sterling. Hon. gentlemen will find the summary of their evidence on page 9 of the report. To be precise, they find that the cost of such a cable, guaranteed to remain in repair for six months, will be £1,422,000, allowing a margin of £78,000, call it a million and a half, and you have the cost of the cable as recommended by the commission in question. Since that time there has been an appreciation in the cost of manufacturing cables, and that appreciation, according to the opinion of Lord Strathcona, would amount to about £170,000. That added to the £1,422,000 would give us an estimated cost of the cable of £1,592,000. In the resolution which is in your hands I propose, when we are in committee, to move to fill up the blank with the figures £1,700,000, which would leave us a margin on the estimated cost, of £108,000.

Then, with reference to the financial result, hon. gentlemen will find, as I say, on page 9, a summary of the finding of the commission in question, which I may be permitted to read :

In consideration of the traffic estimated for the cable, and of the opinion expressed below, that a duplicate cable should be laid at the earliest possible moment, the commission have arrived at the conclusion that a core over the long section from Vancouver to Fanning Island of 542 lbs. copper and 368 lbs. gutta-percha, will be sufficient.

Those are Lord Kelvin's specifications.

On the assumption that this recommendation is adopted, and taking the total annual expenditure at £144,887, and the increase of business at 10 per cent per annum on 750,000 words in 1896, a Pacific cable would, if it came into actual work on the 1st of January, 1900, earn £178,437 in its first year of working, if the rate obtained by it per word were 3s. 6d.; thus leaving a credit balance on the first year's working of £33,550. If the rate per word were reduced to 2s., in the year 1900 it would earn £169,807; in 1901, £120,788; in 1902, £132,867, and in 1903, £146,153. It would thus become a paying concern during the fourth year of working.

That is upon the assumption that the rate was to be 2 shillings, instead of 3 shillings 3 pence, a word. I understand that the present cable rate between Great Britain and Australasia is 4 shillings 9 pence. Of course cable communication between Australasia and Great Britain, via the Pacific, would have to bear the cost of telegraphing across the continent of Canada and of the cable across the Atlantic, so that you would have to allow 1 shilling and 6 pence per word for that. Lord Strathcona and Mr. Jones, the Canadian representatives, took a somewhat more favourable view of the financial result. Their findings as to the earnings of this cable from the beginning are as follows: They were deliberating in January, 1897, and they were estimating upon the cable going into operation in 1900, or in three years. Of course, we will have to put these three years forward now, so that, instead of assuming that it would be in operation in 1900, we would have to make it 1902, or three years from the present time. Hon. gentlemen will find the estimate of Lord Strathcona and Mr. Jones at page 14 of the Imperial commission's report. They estimate a surplus from the beginning, and taking the annual expenditure, which is for maintenance, repairs, sinking fund and interest at £144,886, they come to the conclusion that the cable will earn in the first year of its operation, over and above these charges, a surplus of £1,114; in the second year, £19,389; third year, £39,923; in the fourth year, £68,014; fifth year, £94,626, and the sixth year £124,565; so that these gentlemen see nothing but profit in the scheme from the beginning. However, profit or loss, the proposal in the resolution involves Canada being interested to the extent of five-eighteenthths. For some time the scheme was delayed, owing to the various governments interested not having been able to arrive at the proportion they would be willing to undertake; but it has now been arranged that Great Britain will assume five-eighteenthths; Canada, five-eighteenthths, and the colonies of New Zealand, Queensland, New South Wales and Victoria, two-eighteenthths each, making in all eighteen-eighteenthths. Subsection G of the resolution contemplates the various contributing governments being represented on the board in proportion to their interests. But to accomplish that literally and with mathematical accuracy would involve a board of eighteen members. If the interests are divided into eighteen parts, Canada would then have five, but if limited to eight it would not be possible to give Canada her proportionate number, or Great Britain either. If there are only eight members on the board, it would be impossible to arrange the representation in mathematical harmony with the shares of the various governments. The Australasians, taking eight-eighteenthths, would, if represented on the board with mathematical accuracy, be entitled to a representation of three and five-ninths, Canada to two and two-ninths, and Great Britain to two and two-ninths, making in all eight members. As this scheme will be largely centred in Great Britain, and as the British Government will be largely interested in its management, it became necessary, in the first place, to arrange how the respective governments were to be represented. It was thought well, at the recent conference held between the Colonial Office, Mr. Chamberlain, the agents general of the various governments, and Mr. Tarte, the Minister of Public Works, who was present, to limit the number on the board to eight. That being the case, the question arose, how to deal with the fractional interest which each country would have over and above the number of representatives that each government might name. The Australasian colonies' interest in the scheme being three and five-ninths, they would be entitled to three and five-ninths members. Australasia has given over her five-ninths, and we our little surplus of two-ninths, and allowed Great Britain, which would also be entitled to two and two-ninths in the representation, the benefit of this surplus, so that Australia will have three representatives, Great Britain will have three, and Canada two, making eight in all. When we are in committee, therefore, I will ask the committee to amend one of these clauses to provide that the representation on the board shall consist of eight members, three to be chosen by the Imperial Government, two by the Canadian Government, and three by the Australian Governments. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I may be permitted to revert for one moment to the question of the earning prospects of such a scheme by reading a memorandum given to me by Sir Sandford Fleming a short time ago. Sir Sandford Fleming, as every one knows, has taken a deep and continuous interest in this scheme from the commencement, and perhaps there is no better authority in regard to its possibilities. When I observed in the press a statement to the effect, that cable communication cannot be assured between Australia and Hong Kong, because of the concession given to the Eastern Extension Cable Company, I was anxious to know whether the estimates of the Imperial commission as to the earning power of the cable included the earnings expected from Hong Kong or otherwise. And so, Sir Sandford Fleming in reply to my request has favoured me with the following memorandum:—

re

The probable revenue of the Pacific Cable, &c.
10th May, 1899.

The undersigned can state with absolute certainty that no estimate of revenue, yet made, that he has seen, includes any allowance for Asiatic business passing over the Pacific cable.

The estimates of the Pacific Cable Committee, Lord Selborne, chairman; those of the Canadian Commissioner, Lord Strathcona, and Hon. A. G. Jones; and his own Sir Sandford Fleming estimates are all based upon the existing business between Australasia and Europe. They do not even include, which they might very properly do, a considerable allowance for cable business which will most certainly be developed between Australasia and North America.

The exclusive landing rights at Hong Kong, which have been granted to the Eastern Extension Company, will, it is true, prevent Canada to Australasia establishing a branch cable to Hong Kong for twenty years. The Home Government can, however, as provided in the agreement of October 28th, 1893, by giving twelve months notice, and paying the Eastern Extension Company £300,000, take possession of the cable from Singapore to Labuan and Hong Kong, and a further expenditure of, possibly, £300,000 would connect that cable with the Pacific cable, and give Canada access through Australasia to the great trade centres of Asia. This telegraphic access can, however, only be secured through the Home Government in the manner described.

With respect to the probable revenue of the Pacific cable; the two great sources of telegraphic business are the United Kingdom and the Australasian colonies. In the course of a few years, after the laying of the cable, Canada and the United States will become a third sort of traffic; but for the present we may only consider the two first mentioned. It is obvious that all transatlantic cable companies would be interested in sending messages by the Pacific route, and not by the Eastern Extension route as every message from Great Britain passing by the Pacific would first have to cross the Atlantic. As a consequence the officers of the Atlantic cable companies, throughout the United Kingdom, would practically become collecting stations for the business of the Pacific cable.

Again, in Australia and New Zealand, as all the land telegraph lines are owned by the governments, and the post offices throughout the colonies are telegraph offices, each one of them would practically become an agency for the Pacific cable, and it would be in the power of the several governments, to a very large extent, to determine the route by which messages would be transmitted to Great Britain.

In view of these facts, there can be no doubt whatever that the Pacific cable as a state work, owned by government as proposed, would obtain a full share of all the Australia-European telegraph business. The undersigned obtained the written opinion of many Australian houses on this point. He would refer to parliamentary return of last session, No. 94, from pages 29 to 32 will be found the names of 24 of the best known mercantile firms of London, and the reply to questions placed before them. The general opinion of these merchants of the highest positions, and no men are better qualified to judge, is that the Pacific cable would be of immense public service; that it would be quite reasonable to count on the new line obtaining one-half the total business; and that it would be safe to reckon on the business continuing to increase at an average rate of 15 per cent per annum.

The estimates, based on this opinion, is that the revenue of the Pacific cable, after meeting all charges for working, renewal fund, interest, sinking fund to replace capital, &c., would leave a surplus profit as follows:—

In 1902, the first year, £114,157.
1903, the second year, £153,031.
1904, the third year, £197,735.
1905, the fourth year, £249,144.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that surplus?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I so understand it.

Mr. FOSTER. Are you sure it is surplus ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Well, Mr. Speaker, it would seem from the opinions of those who have studied the subject carefully, that it has no terrors for contributing governments.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. And as to Canada we have a special interest in it. For example, it is no mean thing to feel that a great public work of such Imperial importance as the Pacific cable is to have a terminus on Canadian soil. It is not unsatisfactory to know that it may be of some service to Canada in connection with our own inland telegraphic system. It will promote cable communication for Australasia across the Atlantic and through Canada. It will supply traffic for Canadian telegraph lines, and it will no doubt attract commerce to our Dominion and put us in a position to expand our trade abroad. We will become a carrying highway for trade from other countries, as well as being directly benefited ourselves. The part that electricity plays to-day in the promotion of trade is such, that we cannot judge of our interest in this scheme by a reference to the Canadian trade and navigation returns of the present time. It is true our exports to Australasia are greater than they ever were. It is true that for the year 1898 our exports to Australasia exceeded those of any other year, by, I think, about 25 per cent. I have seen the trade and navigations returns for the nine months of the fiscal year just closed, and I find there has been a marked increase in our trade with Australasia during these nine months, as compared with the corresponding nine months of last year, which were themselves the greatest we ever had before. But, Sir, I do not measure the advantage to Canada from this cable communication by our present trade with Australasia, because under modern methods of commerce, cable communication must precede trade ; not follow it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Therefore, I say, that we cannot form any conception of our commercial interests in this cable scheme by merely looking at our Australasia trade of to-day. Cable communication between Canada and Australia is now practically prohibited by the high rates. Owing to the roundabout route it would probably cost $50 for the simplest message and reply, a rate practically prohibitory to Canadians establishing trade relations with Australasia. Our separation from the sister colonies by this great ocean, and the absence of direct communication by cable, has prevented that development of our trade with Australasia that would have taken place had we a direct cable system, and that will undoubtedly take place I believe when such facilities are established as are proposed by this resolution now before the House. I do not intend to take up the time of the House at any further length, Mr. Speaker, but I shall be happy to give any information within my power.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). Mr. Speaker, some time ago when the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) placed these resolutions on the Order paper, I had the great pleasure of congratulating the Government upon the conclusion at which they had arrived in relation to this matter, and I now beg to add my hearty congratulations to my hon. friend the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) for the very lucid, able, and clear manner in which he has put this very important question before the House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This Pacific cable is a scheme to which from the outset I have attached the greatest importance, and I perhaps may on so important an occasion be permitted to occupy a few minutes in briefly recounting the history of the question as it stands before us to-day. In 1887 Her Majesty's Government invited a colonial conference to be held in London for the purpose of considering questions in which the Empire was interested. That conference was presided over by the Secretary of State for the Colonies, and the representatives of Canada on that occasion were, the late Hon. Sir Alexander Campbell and Mr. Fleming, now Sir Sandford Fleming.

I may say in the outset that I heartily endorse everything that my hon. friend the Postmaster General has said in reference to Sir Sandford Fleming. From the very inception of this question that gentleman has devoted his great abilities—and they are very great—to a thorough, careful and exhaustive examination of the whole question in all its bearings. He made himself so completely a master of the whole subject that he has been regarded in England, in Australasia, and in Canada alike, as a thoroughly accomplished expert in regard to the question of cable communication ; and if we are to-day occupied with the very pleasant duty of bringing this great and important question to a satisfactory issue, and are witnessing the project established upon firm grounds, I believe the Empire owes it more to Sir Sandford Fleming than to any other man living. On the occasion to which I refer the question was presented by our representatives, Sir Alexander Campbell and Mr., now Sir Sandford Fleming, with very great ability. Subsequently the Government of Canada sent the present Sir Mackenzie Bowell, who was then, if I remember rightly, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and Mr. Fleming to Australia for the purpose of discussing the question of steam and cable communication with the governments of Australasia. I may say in passing that these gentlemen were met at the outset there by what I regard as very hostile influences from the British Government. It would be almost impossible to overrate the enormous influence which the Eastern Extension Telegraph Company, then represented by the late Sir John Pender, as its president, was able to exercise in England. Its ramifications, its long arms, seemed to reach everybody. The Post Office Department, the Admiralty Department, the Colonial Office, in fact, all the departments, seemed to be, more or less, under the potent influence which that company was able to bring to bear; and no sooner had Sir Mackenzie Bowell and Sir Sandford Fleming reached Australia and engaged in their mission to promote this important work, than a communication was sent from the Colonial Office to the governments of Australasia, giving the views—most hostile and obstructive views—of the Post Office Department, and I think the Admiralty Department, in regard to the question. But very great effects were produced by that visit of Sir Mackenzie Bowell and Sir Sandford Fleming. It is well known to the House that that visit went far to bring about the great and never-to-be forgotten conference of 1894, held in the city of Ottawa, in which the Government of Canada, the Imperial Government, the governments of the colonies of Australasia, including New Zealand, and the Governments of South Africa, were all represented, and in which this question was taken up. In 1887, at the Colonial conference to which I have referred, the following resolution was passed:—

First,—That the connection recently formed through Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific by railway and telegraph opens a new alternative line of Imperial communication over the high seas and through British Possessions, which promises to be of great value alike in naval, military, commercial and political aspects.

Second,—That the connection of Canada with Australia by direct submarine telegraph across the Pacific is a project of high importance to the Empire, and every doubt as to its practicability should without delay be set at rest by a thorough and exhaustive survey.

Although this resolution was passed on that occasion, views hostile to the proposal were presented with great force by the Eastern Extension Telegraph Company. At the conference held in the city of Ottawa in 1894, the following resolutions were passed unanimously:—

1. That, in the opinion of this conference, immediate steps should be taken to provide telegraphic communications by cable, free from foreign control, between the Dominion of Canada and Australia.

2. That the Imperial Government be respectfully requested to undertake at the earliest possible moment, and to prosecute with all possible speed, a thorough survey of the proposed cable route between Canada and Australia, the expense to be borne in equal proportions by Great Britain, Canada and the Australian Colonies.

Sir CHARLES TOPPER

3. That it is for the interest of the Empire that, in case of the construction of a cable between Canada and Australasia, such a cable should be extended from Australia to the Cape of Good Hope; and that, for that purpose arrangements should be made between the Imperial and South African Governments for a survey of the latter route.

4. That in view of the desirability of having a choice of routes for a cable connection between Canada and Australasia, the Home Government be requested to take immediate steps to secure neutral landing-ground on some one of the Hawaiian Islands, in order that the cable may remain permanently under British control.

5. That the Canadian Government be requested after the rising of the conference to make all necessary inquiries, and generally to take such steps as may be expedient in order to ascertain the cost of the proposed Pacific cable, and promote the establishment of the undertaking in accordance with the views expressed in this conference.

I may say that before that conference was held, and after the return of Sir Mackenzie Bowell from Australia, I was instructed by the Canadian Government, as High Commissioner for Canada, to do all in my power to promote the two objects, the construction of the Pacific cable and the establishment of the fast Atlantic service between Great Britain and Canada, which was to be a part of that great scheme of communication between Great Britain and Canada, through Canada, and from our western coast to Australasia, both by ships and cable. In connection with the visit of Sir Mackenzie Bowell to Australia, a postal and telegraph conference was held at Wellington, in New Zealand; and that conference heartily endorsed the proposal for a cable from Vancouver to Australia, with the same unanimity that characterized the intercolonial conference held in London in 1887. This matter then began to assume an important position; and then the Eastern Extension Telegraph Company became alarmed. They went to the Colonial Office and entered a formal protest. They pointed out what they regarded as the fallacious calculations on which the project was based, and they took the ground that it was calculated to interfere with a private company which, unaided by public funds, had already established cable communication between London and Australasia. I felt it my duty, under these circumstances, to deliver an address before the Royal Colonial Institute, in which I urged, as well as I was able, the great importance of this direct cable communication which is now proposed, and also the establishment of a fast Atlantic service. I challenged on that occasion the statements made by Sir John Pender, controverting the position that had been taken by Sir Sandford Fleming and the telegraph and postal conference at Wellington in Australia. That led to the correspondence between Sir John Pender and myself in the "Times" newspaper, as I dare say hon. gentlemen opposite will remember. And I will draw attention to one single passage in that correspondence to show how it terminated. In my letter to Sir John Pender, published in the "Times" newspaper, 9th June, 1894, I said :

I am quite satisfied to leave all the questions at issue to the judgment of the public. Your admission that the "existing service" has already received over £2,000,000 of Government subsidies, that the life of a cable may be fairly estimated at twenty years—instead of fourteen—and that you are responsible for the statement that the existing service to Australasia is a "monopoly," is very satisfactory to me. I am also glad that I have been able to induce you again to revise your estimate.

Thus the position I took was sustained by Sir John Pender's own evidence, who admitted that instead of the Eastern Telegraph Company having accomplished their great work unaided by public funds they had received £2,000,000 sterling of public money, that instead of their being a private enterprise and not a monopoly they were a monopoly, and that the life of a cable was much longer than he had estimated in his communication to the British Government as the grounds upon which they had attacked this enterprise.

Without detaining the House longer with that I may say that in accordance with the resolution which I have just read and which was passed at the Ottawa Conference in 1894, the Government of Canada, with the approval of that conference asked for tenders tentatively to ascertain and set at rest the question of cost, because it was represented by the Eastern Extension Company, which, of course, spoke with the authority of great experience, that the work would cost much higher than Sir Sandford Fleming's estimate. It was thought by the conference that the best test would be to ask for tenders from highly responsible parties. The result was that tenders were invited by the Government of Canada, and it was then proved that Sir Sandford Fleming, instead of having under-estimated the cost, had altogether over-estimated it. They obtained, as my hon. friend the Postmaster General has already informed the House, from one of the most able, enterprising and distinguished cable companies in the world, the India Rubber, Gutta Percha and Telegraph Works Company, a tender for the construction of the work, to construct it at their own cost and to guarantee its complete operation, to take all the risk and responsibility, in fact, to conduct its operations for three years, for a sum vastly below that which Mr. Fleming had estimated, and completely set at rest all question as to the character of his estimates.

I may say that under my instructions from the Canadian Government, I pressed this enterprise in every way I possibly could. I communicated with the Marquis of Ripon, and it is only right that I should say that I found the right hon. gentleman, who presided at that time over the Colonial Office, most friendly to the enterprise. But I need not tell the House that the Government of which he was a member had a very small majority in the House of Commons, and were not in a position to grapple with great enterprises in the effective way in which governments supported by large majorities are able to grapple with them. No great progress therefore, was made with reference to either of these questions, the fast Atlantic service or the trans-Atlantic or Pacific cable, until the change of Government, when Lord Salisbury carried the country by a very large majority. When the Right Hon. Mr. Chamberlain became the Colonial Minister, I at once approached him and discussed the subject with him. He requested me to put in writing my communication on the subject of a fast Atlantic service and the cable, and I did so. He was just leaving for the continent. He wrote me a note from Grenada in Spain, saying he had put in motion both these questions before leaving London and immediately on his return would be prepared to take them up with me. On his return, I again waited upon him, and it was concluded that in the then state of public business it would be better to delay for a little the question of having an interview with the representatives of Canada, Australia and South Africa. That made a little delay, but as will be seen by the correspondence on the Table, Mr. Chamberlain changed his views shortly afterwards, and on the 11th November, 1895, Mr. Bramson, one of the Under Secretaries of State for the Colonies, wrote me saying that Mr. Chamberlain thought it was highly desirable no further time should be lost considering the subject, and some steps should be taken to dispossess foreign promoters of the idea that no competition was to be feared from the line recommended last year by the Ottawa Conference. That was in consequence of intimations given in the press of an attempt by other governments to take up this question of cable communication. We acted at once upon that, and I had the honour, in conjunction with the representatives of the colonies of Australasia—except those of West and South Australia, which had gone to such expense in connection with land lines and were so completely, therefore, identified with the Eastern Extension Company that we could hardly ask or expect their support—and the representatives of Natal and the Cape Colony, of waiting upon Mr. Chamberlain with a request from all the governments that we represented, asking for the appointment of a commission to take up this question of this cable communication, in order to arrange, first, the question of its practicability, and, second, the mode in which it should be undertaken. Nothing could be more satisfactory than the action of the hon. Minister. Mr. Chamberlain, who is known to be a man of great business attainments, said to the delegation that he had at all times satisfied himself that no serious financial liability would devolve upon any person engaged upon this enterprise. I mention that because it confirms entirely the view that my hon. friend the Postmaster General has presented to the House, that in the light of all the evidence and the investigation of the persons best qualified to judge of its financial aspect, no serious liability can possibly be entailed. On the contrary, there is every reason to believe, looking at the history of telegraphic enterprise throughout the world, that this great object may be accomplished, and that, instead of its being a burden, it will, at an early day, become a source of direct revenue to all the countries interested.

The committee was at once appointed. Mr. Chamberlain proposed that Canada should be represented by two, Australasia by two, and Great Britain by two, in order that the Colonial Office and the Treasury might both take part in the matter. As is known to the House, immediately on my return to Canada, as soon as I was called upon to form an Administration, Sir Mackenzie Bowell and the then Sir Donald Smith, now Lord Strathcona, were appointed, together with Sir Sandford Fleming acting as expert, to proceed to England and take up that question. They did so. And I may say they were a good deal disappointed to find that, through some influence—I have already hinted at the enormous power the Eastern Extension Company were able to wield—there was not the same eagerness that they had anticipated and had a right to expect from some of the representatives of Australia to take up the matter. And in consequence of the representatives of Australasia having gone to a conference with reference to another subject on the continent, no material result was accomplished. My right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), however, upon succeeding to power, reappointed Lord Strathcona as one of the delegates, and appointed also a gentleman known to have very great financial ability, Hon. Alfred Jones, of Halifax, to proceed with Sir Sandford Fleming to London. My hon. friend the Postmaster General has already stated to the House the result of that conference. It was most satisfactory. The conference was presided over by Lord Selborne, Under Secretary of State for the Colonies; and after a full and exhaustive examination and hearing of the statements made by Sir Sandford Fleming with reference to the whole project, they arrived at the conclusion that I fully expected they would arrive at, the only satisfactory conclusion that, in my judgment, could be arrived at: First, that the matter was entirely practicable; second, that its financial aspect, instead of having any terrors for any of the parties engaged in it, were most favourable, as the Postmaster General has said, and that, so far as this aspect is concerned, the project could be entered upon without hesitation; third, that the best mode of dealing with the matter was with the construction and operation of the work by the Imperial Government, the Australian Government and the Canadian Government. I may say that I felt that however important from an Imperial stand-point and from a number of other stand-points particularly from the point of view of having Canada used as the great thoroughfare of communication between the heart of the Empire and the Australasian colonies, the whole project was to Canada, yet the interests of Australia were undoubtedly greater than those of Canada. The instructions given to Sir Donald Smith and Sir Mackenzie Bowell, therefore, were that they should press for a larger contribution from Australasia than was given by Canada; but, failing to obtain it, Canada should not hesitate—rather than that the enterprise should fail—to become responsible for one-third of the expense connected with the undertaking. I always felt perfectly satisfied that if Australasia and Canada presented to the Imperial Government their willingness to shoulder two-thirds of the responsibility of this great Imperial enterprise, Her Majesty's Government could not possibly shrink from implementing the matter by contributing the other third; and I had every reason, from the communication with the Colonial Minister, to arrive at that conclusion. I may say, in passing, that it was very unfortunate, in my judgment—I am afraid we lost some time by it—that my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), through his over-caution, for I can hardly term it anything else, threw a little cold water on this great Imperial undertaking on the important occasion of the Imperial Jubilee. The "Standard" newspaper, which gave a report of the interview between the Premier and the Colonial Minister, said:

The Conference left the Pacific cable scheme in mid-air, and it is very unlikely that anything more will be heard of it for a considerable time. The position of it was entirely changed by a proposal by the Eastern Extension Telegraph Company to lay an all-British line from Western Australia across the Indian Ocean to Mauritius, thence connecting with the Cape and St. Helena Ascension. Under any circumstances, Western Australia and South Australia were opposed to the Pacific cable, which would divert traffic from their land lines, and Victoria was indifferent.—

For the reasons I have already stated.

—New South Wales, Queensland and New Zealand were, by reason of their geographical position, prepared to subsidize the Pacific line, and if the Home and Canadian Governments had been willing to pay their share, no doubt the scheme would have been carried out. But the Conference soon discovered that the Imperial Treasury was very unwilling indeed to subsidize the line.—

I have already suggested what powerful influence the Eastern Extension Company have been able, in this matter, to wield; but this seems now, fortunately, to have lost its power—fortunately for the good of Canada, Australia and the Empire. It thought that by presenting this alternative project, which would not have accomplished what is sought to be accomplished by this Pacific cable, they would throw the British Government, as it were, off the track, and, to a certain extent, render them less anxious than they had been.

—while Sir Wilfrid Laurier indicated that he mistrusted the estimates of cost, revenue and maintenance which had been submitted by the projector, and was not prepared to pledge Canada to bear a share of the burden.

If the Government in England have an organ, the "Standard" is, I suppose that organ. I do not hold my right hon. friend too closely to the terms of that report, because it has not the authority of the statement laid on the Table of the House of Commons by the Colonial Minister. But as the projector—as Sir Sandford Fleming may fairly be called—was the expert named by my right hon. friend himself, as well as by the Government preceding his, it was very unfortunate indeed that Canada should have shown the slightest hesitation or the slightest unwillingness. Had not this been done, I am inclined to think we should have had the Pacific cable in operation to-day. I am delighted to know, however, that my right hon. friend, who said he had not looked sufficiently into the subject to take decided action upon it, has become entirely satisfied from the calculations and that the evidence that no serious burden, no burden at all, is likely to rest upon the Dominion of Canada through this enterprise; but that, as stated to-day by the Postmaster General, who is the mouthpiece, and the very able mouthpiece of the Government on this question, there is every reason why Canada should view with supreme satisfaction the fact that this matter has been brought finally to a satisfactory conclusion.

I may say that after a notice of these resolutions had been given, I learned with great astonishment, and I may say with almost a feeling of humiliation, under the circumstances, that Her Majesty's Government seemed inclined to withdraw from the position which Lord Selborne, as chairman of that important committee, had reported in favour of, and which I had assumed thoroughly and satisfactorily closed all question as to what was the attitude of the Imperial Government. I was delighted, however, to read in the London press a report of an interview that took place when the Eastern Extension Telegraph Company, through their chairman, Lord Tweedsdale, made their last dying effort to obstruct this scheme. I was delighted to read the manner in which Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Mr. Chamberlain, Colonial Secretary, met those gentlemen and pointed out to them that it was too late for them to raise the question, pointed out to them the fact that while they had practically enjoyed a monopoly of this business, and had received two millions of public money, still, on a most important occasion, England was unable to have any communication with Australia because existing cables were cut or had broken down. I say I read that with extreme satisfaction, because I felt it was the death-blow to the last despairing effort of an obstructive monopoly to defeat a great Imperial enterprise, as well as Canadian and Australasian enterprise. I am delighted to know that my right hon. friend, in his statement to the House, has not hesitated to speak in the most unqualified way of the value of this enterprise to Canada, because no person can doubt that if we are to build up a large trade, and carry it on as we are now doing, with this great island continent of Australasia, nothing will tend more to establish and accomplish that, than the rapid telegraphic communication that seems now to have become absolutely indispensable to successful commercial enterprise. From an Imperial point of view, I feel that England would have dishonoured herself if she had lost the opportunity that was presented of taking her share, and of implementing the action of Australia and of Canada in bringing this to a successful termination. Why, Sir, it is not too much to say that at no distant date, in view of a possible conflict of European nations with England, the absence of such a cable would find the island continent of Australia surrounded by a hostile fleet and captured before England could learn anything about it, because as matters now stand, a continental force could destroy all cable communication, and prevent any communication with that vast portion of our great Empire. I say, therefore, that the importance of this enterprise to the interests of the Empire cannot be over-estimated, for, assuming that this enterprise would not be a commercial success, assuming that the entire expense was sunk without any prospect of return, still England might at no distant day be called upon to expend treble the amount in order to repair a disaster that could not occur if this Pacific cable were in operation. To Australasia it is a matter of the most vital import, it is a matter upon which not only their trade, but the security of their country might, at no distant date, absolutely depend. I am only too glad to know that by this means the heart of the great Empire, in the city of London, will be able to communicate intelligence across British territory on this continent, without any foreign country being able to know what is the communication, and that is a fact of vast import to a great Empire like that of Britain. It is of immense consequence to her that she should be able to hold secret and confidential communications of the most important character between the seat of government in London and Canada and Australia, without the possibility of foreign intervention, or of cable communication being interfered with.

Now, Sir this matter has been put before the House so ably and so succinctly by my hon. friend the Postmaster General that I will not say more than that I am delighted to know that the Government find themselves in a position to take the stand they have taken, and to exercise a most potent influence in inducing Great Britain, at the last moment, to take up vigorously and to secure the complete accomplishment of this measure. I congratulate my hon. friend and the Government upon the conclusion at which they have arrived, and I have no doubt that it will be a source of gratification not only to them, but to the Canadian people for all time to come.

Mr. JOHN CHARLTON (North Norfolk). Before you leave the Chair, I desire to say a few words in connection with the proposition now before the House which, I imagine, from the fact that it has been presented by the Government and supported by the leader of the Opposition, does not stand any chance of defeat. I do not rise in the sense of opposing this project. The scheme is a meritorious one, the construction of a Pacific cable on the terms and on the route proposed, is perhaps desirable. But I wish, Mr. Speaker, to submit certain points to the Government for consideration, to be considered for what they are worth, probably the worth will not amount to much. This is, I may say, the growing time for the Dominion of Canada. Our prospects are improving, our population is increasing more rapidly than heretofore, our wealth is increasing, we begin to be aware of our great natural resources, we know that we have a country capable of supporting an immense population, and a great variety of schemes are being pressed upon the Government for the purpose of developing this great country which we possess. Now, our resources do not permit that all these schemes should receive aid. There are many schemes, meritorious in themselves and deserving of promotion, that must necessarily remain in abeyance at present because the Government does not command the resources that are necessary to meet all these requirements that are urged upon it. The question, to my mind, is whether there are not schemes that have been presented, or may be presented, to this Government asking for consideration and expenditure that do not promise to serve more effectively to increase the greatness and prosperity of this Dominion, than the scheme under consideration. It is not in the sense of opposing this scheme, but in the sense of placing before the Government and urging upon the Government certain considerations, that I rise to-day.

Now, we have, I think, primarily resting upon us as a necessity at this stage of our existence and progress, the development of this continent. Continental development is the one primary and important thing for this Government to attend to to-day. For example, we have the necessity of securing an all-rail Canadian route to the Yukon. My hon. friends on this side of the House were fully aware of the necessity of doing that a year ago, and my hon. friend who has just spoken (Sir Charles Tupper), has lately awakened to the necessity of doing it. This is a scheme which is of primary importance, of pressing importance, and which will demand the expenditure of a large sum of money. Then there is the necessity of opening up communication with that great inland sea, the Hudson Bay, which has an area two or three times greater than the area of the North Sea. The North Sea furnishes fishery products to the value of $125,000,000 a year. Hudson's Bay is richer in fisheries than the North Sea, in cod, salmon and whale fisheries, and it has enormous mineral resources along its shore. Yet these are undeveloped, there is no communication with them at the present time, and if we are to promote our national growth, here is a scheme for connecting our seaports and our commercial centres with Hudson Bay which is of primary importance, of pressing importance. These two schemes of establishing connection with Hudson Bay and of establishing connection with the Yukon are schemes which demand immediate attention. Then we have the project of a ship canal passing up the Ottawa valley. If what is claimed for that canal be true, I believe that the creation of that line of communication is a work which must have an important bearing upon the future of this Dominion, upon its development, upon its securing great commercial and national advantages. We have all these three schemes, that I have outlined briefly, and many other schemes equally meritorious, that are pressing upon the Government, that the Government do not feel themselves able to aid at the present moment because they come piling upon them in an avalanche, which would require an outlay of probably $100,000,000. The business of the Government is to select from amongst these schemes those that are the most pressing, those that promise the greatest returns, to select them in the order of their importance and to aid them to the extent that the Government has means to promote them. The question as to which I have a little doubt, although my doubts may be shown to be unfounded, is whether the Pacific cable is a scheme so important and promising such returns, such national advantages as to take precedence over many other schemes that are pressing for attention. Our proportion of the cost of the Pacific cable will be five-eighteenths.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Our proportion of the liability.

Mr. CHARLTON. That will amount to $2,500,000 in round numbers.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Of a liability; it may not cost us a farthing.

Mr. CHARLTON. It may be a very profitable investment, as the hon. leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) says, and we may make a great deal of money out of it. I notice that governments usually find such schemes as railroad building, canal construction, and such other projects extremely profitable, and this may be one of the number. What is the extent of the trade between Canada and Australia with which we desire to secure telegraphic communication. Our exports of farm products last year amounted to $127,000, and of manufactures to $1,119,000, the total exports being $1,630,000. We imported from Australia $149,000 worth, of which $35,000 worth were dutiable goods, and $113,000 worth free goods. The duty collected upon these goods was a little over $9,000. That is not a very great trade and, in my opinion, it is not a trade susceptible of very great development. We have telegraphic communication with Australia today. We have two lines that afford communication with the Australasian colonies, and it would be interesting to see what amount of business these lines did last year. One line sent an average of about ten messages a month, and the other line did about the same amount of business. The total amount of business performed by these two lines, in communication between Canada and Australia, amounted to about $5,000 per annum, or about one per cent of the estimated receipts from the enterprise. It strikes me that if we were to review this matter we would come to that conclusion that a business of $5,000 a year was not a consideration sufficiently great to induce the Government to embark upon this enterprise when more important and more meritorious schemes are pressing upon their claims. That is what troubles me, not that I do not want to see the Pacific cable constructed, not that I do not suppose that this great Imperial work is important, but my belief is that we can employ the money to better advantage in promoting our own interests. I may be mistaken about this matter, but it seems to me that the securing of communication with the Yukon and with Hudson Bay, the building of the Ottawa Ship Canal and other schemes of that kind are entitled to greater consideration, that they promise greater results and should take precedence of the scheme we have under consideration. There is another consideration in connection with this matter. I suppose it is a foregone conclusion that the United States Government will build a line from San Francisco to the Sandwich Islands and from the Sandwich Islands to Manila, where they have communication with Hong Kong. We will be building a line to compete with another line that will be laid down almost simultaneously with the line that it is proposed to construct. These are the considerations that I deem it proper to present to the House. I know that my own constituents do not favour the Pacific cable; they think that the money that will be expended in this enterprise might be expended to much better advantage nearer home in the development of the great resources of this country. In pressing these views for consideration I would not have it thought that I disapprove of the Pacific cable per se, but I think we can make a little better use of the money at present at home than by devoting it to this enterprise.

Mr. T. D. CRAIG (East Durham). Mr. Speaker, I just wish to occupy a few moments in replying to what the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) has said. There is no doubt that some of the schemes he has mentioned are meritorious and a great many other schemes which were not mentioned are equally meritorious, but the point before us, at the present time, is as to whether this is a meritorious proposal. It commends itself to me. As I listened to the speech of the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock), in bringing this matter before the House, I was struck, as I have been for some time, with its great importance. The hon. member for North Norfolk has said that the United States will be building a cable that might take the place of this.

Mr. CHARLTON. No, but which would be a competitor with this.

Mr. CRAIG. The object of this Government is to have an all-British cable, which does not touch upon any foreign shore at all, but which is entirely confined to the limits of British territory. This has been the aim of Canadian statesmen for some years. This is not a matter which has been sprung suddenly on the people, but it is a matter which has occupied the attention of the leaders of different governments for a great many years. It is a matter which has occupied the attention of the statesmen of Great Britain who recognize its importance. And the leaders of different governments have not shrunk from the matter of the cost. In respect to what the hon. member for North Norfolk has said, we need not be afraid about the cost because the statements made by the hon. Postmaster General, and by the hon. leader of the Opposition, satisfy me, at any rate, that while, at first there may be some liability, in the long run there will be no liability at all. I believe that this will be a profitable enterprise. I think that the hon. leader of the Opposition said, at any rate it is my own belief, that suppose it were to involve Canada in some liability, we should support the proposal. We are not only here to develop this continent. I am proud to think, as I know the members of this House are, that we are not only Canadians but we are members of the British Empire. While the British Empire provides a navy, which may be our protection and which is our protection, she does not call upon us to contribute to its support.

Her army is at our service, if necessary, and we are called upon to do comparatively little in return. When we have an opportunity, as we have to-day, not only to benefit Canada—and I hold this cable will be of great benefit to Canada—but at the same time to benefit the Empire, we should not hesitate a moment; indeed, I do not believe we will hesitate a moment to embrace this opportunity. It is true, as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) said, that our chief duty, as Canadians, is to develop our continent, but I hold that this Pacific cable scheme will prove a benefit to the continent. It may be that our trade with Australasia is small to-day, but when we have this cable built, I am quite satisfied that trade will increase largely. We know that in the present day, telegraphic communication is necessary to all that concerns commerce. This is an age of rapidity, and in order to carry on extensive operations, the telegraph must be employed. I hold that the comparatively small trade now done with Australasia does not give us any idea of what may be done when this cable is completed. But after all, while it is true that this will help to build up the continent and develop the resources of Canada, at the same time I am prepared to support it as an Imperial policy, because anything we do in this way must tend to bind the different parts of the Empire closer together. Sometimes we talk about ourselves as Canadians, and talk about the Empire as something outside ourselves, but I am proud to think we are part of the British Empire. We are becoming a more important part of that great Empire every day, and it is pleasant to think that this all-British cable will extend around the Empire, will bring the Empire closer together, will make us realize that we are not a separated community, but that we are in fact part and parcel of the greatest Empire the world has ever seen. I have no hesitation, Mr. Speaker, in giving my cordial support to this resolution.

Mr. OSLER. I congratulate the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) and the Government, and I do so without any reserve upon the successful conclusion of the negotiations for the building of this cable. The Postmaster General has had two opportunities within the last year or two to confer a benefit upon Canada and the Empire, and I am glad to know that he has taken advantage of both. The resolution submitted to the House to-day is in every way creditable to his ability in carrying out the negotiations which have been necessary in this matter. I have no hesitation whatever in saying that I believe the cable scheme, as proposed in this resolution, will entail no loss and no cost whatever upon Canada. The utmost liability we assume is to guarantee interest upon something under £500,000 sterling, and any one who looks at the marvellous development in telegraphic and cable business, must be convinced that a cable company practically creates its own business. The rival cable companies across the Atlantic are to-day earning far more than it ever was contemplated it was possible could be earned in the cable business for many generations. In like manner, I believe that this Pacific cable will fulfil all the expectations of those who have brought it to a successful conclusion, and that it will not entail one dollar of expense upon Canada. I believe that its revenues will enable the various governments before long to substantially reduce the capital fund, even if they charge a reasonable rate per message. I again congratulate the Postmaster General and the Government.

Mr. BOSTOCK. This is a matter in which, of course, British Columbia is specially interested, for our merchants are looking forward to a great development of trade with Australia when we have this cable communication. The hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) has shown that the trade between Canada and Australia has increased very much in the last few years, but I believe that increase will be as nothing compared with the vast increase which we may expect when this cable is in operation. The difficulties in the way of the Canadian-Australasian trade are at present very great. The fact that a steamer leaves Vancouver for Australia, and nothing is heard of her until she reaches some port in Australia or New Zealand, is a great drawback to the development of the trade between the two countries. It is specially valuable to us in British Columbia that we should have a direct cable across the Pacific, before a cable is established by our neighbours to the south, as has been suggested by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). It is also most important, in the interest of the whole of this great continent and the Empire, that the cable communication between the different parts of the Empire should be in the hands of our own people. The great advantage we shall derive from the very fact that this cable comes to Vancouver is at the present time difficult to estimate. The people on the other side of the Pacific will be brought much more into touch with the people of Vancouver and the other cities on the coast, and they will be brought to look upon Canadian trade as a matter in which they are deeply concerned. The Government are to be congratulated on having brought this matter to such a satisfactory issue, and I believe that it will be found very shortly that the business transacted over the Pacific cable will be sufficient to pay all the expenses of operating it, together with the interest on the capital expended. It is practically impossible at the present day to carry on trade between two countries unless you have quick and cheap telegraphic communication, and the figures quoted by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) show that an ordinary message between Canada and Australia costs $20, so that a merchant in Canada, in order to obtain a cable reply, would have to pay $40. That, in the course of a year, amounts to a very heavy tax upon business, and the effect of the reduction of these rates must be to materially promote our commerce with Australasia. I am very pleased, indeed, and I am sorry that there are no other members for British Columbia here to express their satisfaction and gratification at the resolutions which have been introduced into the House to-day by the hon. Postmaster General.

Mr. PRIOR. Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman who has just sat down (Mr. Bostock) stated that he was sorry there were no other members here from British Columbia to congratulate the Government on bringing forward this measure. The hon. gentleman made a little mistake in that remark, for there is one member from British Columbia here, who is only too glad to offer his hearty congratulations to the hon. Postmaster General for bringing this scheme forward in the way he has done. I hold that this scheme is one of the grandest that has been brought forward in this House since confederation. It is not only good for Canada, but good for the Empire as a whole. If this scheme is carried through, I think we shall find the prosperity of Canada very materially increased. The cost of it may be large. I do not know whether we can be sure of the figures which have been brought before the House; but even if the cost be large, I think the people of Canada can afford their share, for the sake of the honour of assisting in carrying through so great a project. I think we can congratulate ourselves also on the fact that Canada has been to all intents and purposes the principal promoter of the scheme. For a time the British Government appeared to be lukewarm in regard to it; but it has lately been stirred up by Canada, and now the scheme seems to be in a fair way of being brought to a satisfactory conclusion. I may here be allowed to call the attention of the House to the magnificent offer that was made by the province of British Columbia to assist in this work—an offer which every one must admit to have been a very large one indeed for a province of her resources. I believe that offer had the hearty endorsement of every person in British Columbia. I do not want to take up the time of the House further than to say that I am sure the people of British Columbia are in hearty accord with this scheme as brought forward by the hon. Postmaster General.

House resumed at Three o'clock.

Mr. GEO. E. CASEY (West Elgin). Mr. Speaker, when you left the Chair I was about to say a few words on the proposition under discussion—one of the most important that has come before this House for many years. In speaking of it, I think I must use the same phrase as my hon. friend from Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Prior), who said he heartily congratulated the Government on the introduction of this measure. That phrase appears to me to be exactly appropriate. I think the Government deserve to be congratulated on the introduction of a measure which is statesmanlike, businesslike, and truly imperial. When I say Imperial, I mean that it is a measure thoroughly calculated to knit together the various members of that great British family which we, in a loose and general way, call the Empire—a family of nations which, I hope, we shall some day or other be able to speak of as a more organic unity than it is at present. When the British nations shall become organically united for development, and for defence, I think the day of peace for the world will have come, and a day of vaster prosperity for all of those peoples than they have yet dreamed of; and such proposals as the present are directly in the line of bringing about that grand and overwhelming consummation.

This is a proposal for which neither party in this country can claim the exclusive credit. The question became a subject of discussion and of preliminary action on the part of Canada under one regime. It is coming to perfection under the other. Hon. gentlemen now on the Treasury benches deserve congratulation that it is under their auspices that this, as well as some other matters of a like Imperial nature, have taken definite and successful form; but I do not think they desire or expect to be considered the sole originators of this idea. I think it is better that no such claim should be made, that no such idea should prevail. I think it better that it should go abroad to the world that the people of Canada, irrespective of party, are in favour of this great scheme, and are willing to lend it their aid. And it is due to the leader of the Opposition, and to such of his friends as I have yet heard speak on the subject, to say that their remarks bear out that idea. It is a grand thing to be able to say to the mother country, and to the other British nations, that the people of Canada are unanimous in supporting this great scheme for the development of the Empire, which has been proposed to them, which seems to be practicable, and which seems to be acceded to by the other parties to the contract.

The reasons why this scheme is a desirable one from an Imperial point of view, are not at all merely sentimental. Sentiment is a very good thing and a strong bond of union; but, after all, business advantage and cash profit are very serious factors in a proposal of this kind. It seems to me hardly open to argument whether or not a measure, which will open up direct telegraphic communication entirely through British territory, between nations so far apart as the Australia-sian colonies and Canada, will be a benefit to commerce. It seems to me on the face of it an absolute certainty that that communication will be the means of increasing commerce between those countries.

We have been told that the present commerce between them is small—that the messages passing between Australasia and Canada over existing lines are trifling in number and value. There are a great many reasons for that. The business is small, largely because we have no direct telegraphic communication. We have a line of steamers going to Australia, but their business has been hampered and very nearly ruined, by the lack of telegraphic communication. We have people who would do business in Australasia if telegraphic communication could be had at a reasonable figure, but when it comes to paying 4s. 9d., considerably over a dollar a word, a great deal of business remains undone that would be done if we had telegraphic communication at a reasonable figure. For that enormously high rate, we have to thank two conditions. In the first place, the natural consequence of transmission over a long, roundabout route, over which the message has to be repeated at Gibraltar, Malta, Alexandria, Suez, Aden, Bombay, Madras, Penang, Singapore and Java before it gets to Australasia. When a message has to be repeated so often, going over different telegraph lines, it must necessarily be costly, and still more so when these lines and their connections are practically all controlled by one great monopoly, the Eastern Extension Telegraph Company. These two conditions of affairs, we have to thank for the enormously high and practically prohibitive rates at present existing between this country and Australasia, and the small amount of telegraphic and other business that is done. It seems to me evident, on the face of it, that commercial benefit would accrue directly to Canada by the completion of this line, in the increase of business between Canada itself and Australasia. Still more, by the construction of this line I am certain that Canada would secure a great part of the business which now passes between Europe and Australasia by other routes. With a telegraphic line passing through Canada to Australasia, with a freight and passenger route from Canada to Australasia, a great deal of business would come this way that now goes by longer and less convenient routes.

The benefit to the Empire I think also goes without saying. Apart from the strengthening of Imperial sentiment, there would be the great advantage of having a safe line for the transmission of messages between all parts of the Empire, no matter in what state of war the world might find itself, so long as Great Britain was able to control the sea, and consequently the points at which this cable would touch. When we see such unexpected events happening as the seizure of the Philippine Islands by the United States, and the consequent control by that country of all the cable business going from there, this consideration must be a very important one from an Imperial point of view.

As regards the business advantage, from the Imperial stand-point, the chief advantage to other parts of the Empire besides Canada would arise from the competition in cable rates and the consequent cheapening of communication. The rate is now 4s. 9d. a word, and it is thought by the experts that with a new cable, operated so much more cheaply in comparison with the old one, the rate could be reduced to two shillings a word, or considerably less than one-half the present rate, and still pay a revenue.

From all points of view, then, the thing seems to be desirable. Now let us come to the actual scheme proposed by the Government. The first point that strikes me as admirable is the fact that it is not a subsidy to any company, that there is no private gain to be made out of the construction of this cable line, all possible profit going to the Government themselves who contribute their credit, though not their cash, to securing the money for its construction. The cable is to be constructed by trustees representing the mother country and the different colonies that come into the scheme. These trustees will raise the requisite money on bonds, guaranteed in the specified proportions by the different governments, so that no private party is going to make a cent out of this proposal. It therefore is not, and cannot, be made what is called a deal, and that of itself is a great recommendation, to my mind. I do not say that deserving enterprises should not be subsidized by this House, even though private parties make something out of them. I think that public benefit is secured by doing that in many cases, but an international affair of this kind can only be properly carried on in the way proposed.

Then, a great advantage will arise to the separate countries and the Empire at large from the mere co-operation of the different governments in the management of this cable. We will have a board composed of Australian, New Zealand, South African, Canadian and British representatives, managing a large business concern of this kind, and you will have a small kind of Imperial confederation or Imperial unity, which may lead to vastly greater and more important results than merely the satisfactory management of this particular cable. It will lead to a unity of feeling between the different colonies, and the interchange of views on business matters, and to the interchange of commodities, and the mutual making of profits, which no other conceivable arrangement probably could bring about.

On the purely financial aspect of the case, I would not have thought it necessary to say anything, were it not for the remarks of my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), who assumed, in the first place, that this scheme is going to cost the country a lot of money, and who says that much more useful employment for that money could be found within the boundaries of this continent, than in seeking the enlargement of our trade and commerce outside the continent. He instanced several Canadian schemes that he thought were much more deserving, and he spoke as if it were impossible to assist those and do what the Government are now asking us to do. He spoke, for instance, of a railway to Hudson Bay as one on which money could be expended to greater advantage than in the construction of a Pacific cable. I am convinced that a railway to Hudson Bay is a desirable thing to secure, and I should endorse the Government in securing that connection by means of liberal assistance, but I do not see that the two things are at variance. I do not see why the granting of a subsidy to a road to Hudson Bay should interfere with the use of our credit in enabling the joint board of all the colonies to build this cable line. Then, he told us that this cable was not needed because the United States were probably going to build a cable to the Philippine Islands, connecting with Hong Kong, and at Hong Kong with somewhere else, and so on to Australasia, and that we could send our messages that way as well as by a cable of our own. But if we want to telegraph to Australasia via Hong Kong and the other places, we can do that now, and why should we go four-fifths around the world instead of one-fifth in order to get to Australasia? Why use four telegraph lines when one would suffice? So that, as a business proposition, the idea that the United States cable to the Philippine Islands and its connection with other places would take the place of this cable is a contention which is utterly absurd as a business proposal. That scheme would not give us any cheaper or readier or better communication than we have now, or one freer from foreign influence.

What struck me most in this proposition of my hon. friend from North Norfolk is the fact that he does not seem to have grasped the Canadian idea on the subject of telegraphic communication. That he should propose to this House a cable having its terminus in the United States, built by United States capital and controlled by the United States Government in substitution for an all-British route terminating in Canada, in the management of which Canada would have her share—all shows that he is not Canadian in sentiment. I cannot put it in any other way. I am sorry to have to say it, but it does not appear that the hon. gentleman has even yet acquired the faculty of looking at these matters from a Canadian, not to say an Imperial, point of view.

Then he objected to the financial aspect of the case on the ground that it was shown that only ten messages a month—I think that was the number—went by one cable route from Canada to Australasia at the present time. He did not give us the figures of the other cable route which he said existed; but he said that the sum total of cable business between Australasia and Canada only came to $5,000 a year, and this was not a sound basis for the construction of an all-British line across the Pacific Ocean. Of course it is not. Nobody was so thoroughly absurd, so puerile, as to say that a cable should be built to accommodate the existing traffic between Australasia and Canada. The hon. gentleman simply set up his man of straw and then knocked him down. He forgot to tell us that the two routes that exist, part of the way at least, for telegraphing are now under one control, in the pool of the Eastern Extension monopoly, which has done its best to fight this project before the Colonial Minister and was at one time successful in obtaining great delay. But I am happy to know that the Colonial Minister has seen the object of the delay asked for by the monopoly and has given them what we call the cold shoulder, and has decided to go on with the scheme already agreed upon. Now, my hon. friend from North Norfolk tells us that his constituents do not approve of this scheme, but that they disapprove it on the grounds that he has given to this House. If his constituents have obtained their ideas of the scheme from the hon. gentleman, I do not wonder that they are opposed to it—any body of rational men would be. But the presentation of the scheme made by the hon. member for North Norfolk is utterly inconsistent with the facts and theories of the case: and so the opinion of himself and his constituents based on that presentation, is worth absolutely nothing.

Let us come at once to the true financial aspect of the case. We are told by the hon. gentleman and his friends, the Eastern Extension monopoly, that this cable would not pay. Now, there are some other people who know something about that. There was an Imperial Commission on this subject in 1896 in London, composed of Canadian, British and Australasian representatives. It prepared the figures up to the latest date previous to its own sitting and came to the following conclusion; I read from the report:

On the assumption that this recommendation is adopted, and taking the total annual expenditure at £144,887, and the increase of business at 10 per cent per annum, on 750,000 words in 1896,—

—which, I ought to say, was estimated to be one-third of the traffic of the present cables in that year—

—a Pacific cable would, if it came into actual work on the 1st of January, 1900, earn £178,437 in its first year of working, if the rate obtained by it per word were 3s. 3d.,—

—which was a reduction from the existing rate—

—thus leaving a credit balance on the first year's working of £33,550. If the rate per word were reduced to 2s., in the year 1900 it would earn £109,807; in 1901, £120,788; in 1902, £132,867, and in 1903, £146,153. It would thus become a paying concern during the fourth year of working.

That was the estimate made in the summer of 1896. But since that time, two years have passed, and the business of existing cables between Australasia and other countries has increased even faster than the commission estimated that they would, having run up from 1,272,000 words in 1892 to 2,340,000 words in 1897, an increase of considerably over a million words, or more than 80 per cent in the five years—or at the rate of very much more than 10 per cent a year. Now, in reference to the figures put forward by that commission, it may be said that they are professedly extremely cautious figures. But it will be seen that the estimated profit is on the basis of the Pacific cable securing only one-third of the gross Australasian-European traffic, and including nothing for Australasian-American traffic. So that to sum up, the Imperial Commission in 1896, assuming that the Pacific cable got only one-third of the total business between Australasia and the rest of the world, and supposing we reduce the rates from 4s. 9d. to 2s., and suppose it did not get any trade between Australasia and America, estimated that it would become a paying concern in the fourth year of its operation. That does not look a very bad proposition on the face of it. But the estimates of the committee really go to show that, at 2s. a word, the actual expenses would be covered a year earlier than the time they set down as an absolutely sure thing.

The special report of Lord Strathcona and Mount Royal and Mr. A. G. Jones made out a little better case for the cable; and taking into account the rapid increase that had taken place since that time a still further reduction in the time before it would pay may be made. I may as well quote the figures showing the increase since 1892:

The number of words transmitted were—

In 1892 .....	1,275,191
1893 .....	1,303,336
1894 .....	1,381,400
1895 .....	1,450,446
1897 .....	2,349,901

It is not probable that the cable would be completed within three years from the present time; and assuming that the same rate of progress were to go on and that the cable were to get only one-third of the business that would be due to accrue by the year 1902, and if the rate were reduced to 2s. instead of 4s. 9d., it would appear

In the first place, it is not imperative to reduce the rate down to this very low figure; a somewhat higher rate would still be lower than the present figures, and would attract business to the cable, and make certain that it would pay expenses. In the second place, the assumption that they will only get one-third of the traffic between Australasia and the rest of the world is too low. The most important point in the whole negotiation is the fact that the land lines of the Australasian colonies belong to the governments and are operated by the Post Office Departments, and the land lines determine the route to be taken to Europe by the business which originates in these Australasian colonies. And, the Australian colonies being joint owners of this cable with Canada and with the Empire, you may surely rely on the promptings of business human nature to make it certain that they will despatch a sufficient quantity of their business over the new cable to make it pay from the day it is opened. One-half is Sir Sandford Fleming's estimate of the proportion of that business we should get. I do not think it necessary to go into particulars as to what percentage of it we may get, but I think we may safely assume that in self-interest, in order to save themselves from having to pay towards the guaranteed bonds of this line, the Australasian governments in whose jurisdiction and over whose lines this business originates, will send enough of it over this cable to make it a paying concern.

Now, we are asked by some people, though I have not heard it brought out to-day, why it is that if this thing is to be such a paying business, private capital does not take it up. In the first place, a private cable constructed from here to Australasia would not have the last great advantage that I have spoken of; it would not be sure of getting any definite share of the business originating in the Australian colonies; the governments there would have no inducement to send their business over that cable rather than over another. In the second place, private capitalists could not get money at a low enough rate to build this cable as a paying speculation. The opposition of the Eastern Extension Company, which is so powerful that it even seems to extend to the north riding of Norfolk, is extremely offensive in Great Britain in preventing a private company from getting capital at all for competing lines. If they did get it, they could not get it, probably, under 5 per cent at any rate, and the shareholders of that company would not be content with less than from 5 to 10 per cent profit on their investment. So that, taking all these considerations together, it does not seem at all possible, not to say probable, that private enterprise should build this route in such a way as to make it a paying speculation. But it is certain that the Government, borrowing money at 2½ or 2¼ per cent, and guaranteed sufficient business at the Australian end of the line, can build it, and that it will cover its expenses, and in a very few years pay a certain amount into the treasury of this country; or, if it is preferred, a reduction might be made after a certain number of years in the cable charges. I find that I have taken a great deal longer time by the clock than I intended to take in speaking on this subject, not being able to condense as well as I intended these statistics, which I have been picking up as I went along, out of the blue-book. I will close, then, reiterating only three points: In the first place, I think it is evident, from the tone of the discussion here to-day, that the people of Canada, looking at this question in a Canadian spirit, as distinct from a party spirit, are in favour of this proposal. In the second place, the proposal is a businesslike and workable one, and one certainly not involving a payment out of pocket of any money by the Government of this country. And thirdly, the scheme is one which, in its Imperial aspects, in its tendency to unite the Empire and promote intercolonial commerce, deserves that wide and general support which it appears to have.

Mr. A. McNEILL (North Bruce). This question has already been very ably discussed, and at this late period of the session I only wish to make one or two remarks. I will not refer to what fell from the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), because my hon. friend who has just resumed his seat (Mr. Casey), has sufficiently dealt with that matter. I will only say, however, that I was not at all surprised at the course he took and the line of argument he pursued, because, since I have had the honour of a seat in this House, now seventeen years, the hon. member for North Norfolk has invariably taken a similar line. Whenever any great Canadian question arose, any question which could in any degree conflict, in his judgment, in the most remote degree with any American undertaking, he was always prepared to side with the American and oppose the Canadian interest, and still more has that been the case, when the question was one of an Imperial character. The hon. gentleman's mind seems necessarily opposed to all movements making for Imperial unity; therefore, what he said I only expected that he would say, when he rose to his feet; I was only surprised by the moderation of the hon. gentleman's remarks.

I do not like, Mr. Speaker, to allow this discussion to close without putting myself on record in regard to it, and saying that I am not prepared, with the information that is at present in my possession, to join in any condemnation of the course that has been pursued by the Imperial authorities in this regard. I have every reason to believe that if this matter had been pressed upon the Imperial authorities during the Jubilee celebration, we would have by this time advanced far in the direction that we all wish to go. What the cause may have been for the course which was adopted by the Imperial authorities on a very recent occasion, I do not know; but I am not, as I have said, prepared to condemn them without knowing what motives actuated them. I think it is only fair, when blame is being apportioned, that we should state what we know, at all events, about the facts; and, just as I cannot absolve my right hon. friend from blame with regard to the preferential trade movement, neither can I absolve him from blame with regard to the Pacific cable in the course he took in England during the Jubilee celebration in 1897. My hon. friend the leader of the Opposition has referred to a statement made by the "Standard" newspaper. If it were only a statement made by the "Standard" newspaper that we had to go upon, I do not think that I should be inclined to refer further to the matter than to endorse the remarks made by the leader of the Opposition. But when I find a statement of this kind made in a document which has been laid on the Table of the House, I think it is only right, before blaming the authorities at home, that the people of Canada should understand just how this matter stood in 1897. The Prime Minister of Queensland writes to Sir Sandford Fleming a letter, which was laid on the Table of the House last year, in which he says:

The matter was, as you are aware, discussed at the conference between the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for the Colonies and the Premiers of the self-governing colonies held in London last year, and it was with some surprise that I heard Sir Wilfrid Laurier announce during the course of the proceedings that his Government was not yet prepared to give practical effect, so far as the Dominion of Canada was concerned, to the proposal that the colonies interested should guarantee their shares of the cost of the construction of the cable.

I do not at all wish to emphasize that matter, and I shall not say more than call attention to the fact. I want to say that I am delighted to find that better counsels prevail to-day, and I want to join with those who have already complimented the hon. Postmaster General on the course he has taken in this respect. Of course, I wish to include the Government in this, but I think the hon. Postmaster General especially, by the course he has taken, in reference to Imperial penny postage, and by his course in reference to the Pacific cable, has done solid work for the Empire, and I am glad to be able to bear testimony to that fact. I was glad to hear from him to-day the statement he has made and which shows that this great Canadian-Imperial work is in a fair way of becoming an accomplished fact.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into committee on the resolution.

(In the Committee.)

On the preamble,

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose the hon. gentleman knows what governments are going into that agreement.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, the United Kingdom will go into it to the extent of five-eighteenths, New Zealand, to the extent of two-eighteenths, New South Wales two-eighteenths, Queensland two-eighteenths, Victoria two-eighteenths, and Canada five-eighteenths.

Mr. FOSTER. Tasmania does not come in?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No; the hon. gentleman will find the communications and all the information on the subject in the blue-book. Of course, we have nothing binding.

Mr. FOSTER. Then all this is practically agreed to?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We are so advised; we have a cable to that effect.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Your resolutions are based on the understanding and an intention, of course.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, that is in the return laid on the Table. There are one or two changes in the preamble that I desire to make. I do not think that the words "on their behalf," in the fifth line, are necessary. Therefore, I beg to move:

That the words "on their behalf" in the fifth line be struck out.

Motion agreed to.

On subsection (a),

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Since this resolution was laid on the Table, there has been the conference that I referred to a short time ago, between the Secretary of State for the Colonies and representatives of the various colonies, and they have agreed upon the number that should compose the board. Therefore, it is advisable to name the number, and for that reason I propose to put in the number eight in subsection (a), and to strike out subsection (g). However, we will come to subsection (g) in a short time. I beg to move:

That subsection (a) be amended by inserting after the word "commissioners" in the first line, the following words: "To be composed of eight members."

Subsection, as amended, agreed to.

On subsection (c),

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I beg to move:

That the blanks be filled in as follows:—In the third line, after the words "not being less than," by inserting the word "twenty-five," and in the fourth line by inserting the word "fifty"; that after the word "interest," in the fourth line, the following words be inserted: "not exceeding 3 per cent per annum"; and that the blank in the last line be filled in with the figures £1,700,000."

Subsection, as amended, agreed to.

On subsection (d),

Mr. FOSTER. There is no sinking fund set apart for extinguishing the capital.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In the estimate that I read this morning, a sinking fund is contemplated. In the annual expenditure of £144,000 is included a sinking fund, and that will renew the whole line in fifty years.

Mr. FOSTER. I see that, but it is renewal.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. But, in that, is included capital as well; it is covered by these figures.

Mr. FOSTER (reading):

Subject to the cost of operation, maintenance, management and the setting apart of such proper sinking fund, &c.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Imperial scheme already given to the House contemplates a sinking fund.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, but there is no mention of it in this resolution. Why do you not provide in the resolution that there should be a sinking fund?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is covered by the word "renewal."

Mr. FOSTER. But that does not extinguish the debentures.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. As long as you renew you do not have to pay off the debt.

Mr. FOSTER. But you are paying interest. If your profits were sufficient as on that last calculation they would be—a very florid calculation, I think—it will not take a great many years to extinguish the debentures and then you would not have to pay any interest. Here is your sinking fund for renewals and the profits ought do that according to that scale, and pay the original issue. Of course I suppose the commissioners would have power to do that.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They might; I suppose it would be like an insurance company.

Mr. BRITTON. I suppose the commissioners would have power to purchase the debentures.

Mr. FOSTER. There is no power given them here.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think we will not be troubled for a while about that. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) intimated that the life of a cable is twenty years, but I think it is now estimated that the life of this cable in the Pacific would be about 50 years, and, therefore, if you renew 2 per cent per year, in 50 years you would have the whole renewed. If the business over the line increases, no doubt any surplus earning for a good many years would go towards the reduction of the rate, or perhaps be invested in a larger scheme of duplicating the line.

Mr. FOSTER. It could be altered by legislation at any time.

On subsection (e),

Mr. FOSTER. Is the route fairly well defined now ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We know nothing more about it than the report which says that the probable route will be from Vancouver to Fanning Islands, five degrees north of the meridian, then to Fiji, thence to Norfolk and then two branches, one to New Zealand and the other to some point in Queensland.

On section (g),

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I wish to substitute for section (g), as printed in the resolution, the following :—

The Governor in Council may pass regulations respecting the tenure of office of any members of the Board of Commissioners appointed by the Governor in Council, and shall be entitled to appoint two members of the Board of Commissioners and to fill up any vacancies arising by reason of the death, resignation or removal from the board of any commissioners so appointed.

The two commissioners so appointed by the Governor in Council and their successors shall, together with remaining six members to be appointed, three by the United Kingdom, and three by the other contributing governments and their successors, from time to time constitute the membership of the said board.

Mr. FOSTER. Has each Power a representative ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know how the Australians will divide their representatives because there are four contributing parties and they only have three representatives.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. They will be federated by that time.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No doubt.

On section (i),

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think perhaps the best plan would be for the Imperial Government to guarantee the debentures, and then the other parties indemnify the Imperial Government.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. This clause will allow you to make a guarantee to the British Government ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes. I do not wish of course to be understood as saying in the slightest degree that the Imperial Government intend to do that. They have no legislation yet.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have no doubt they will ; the money could be raised cheaper than in any other way.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister (Mr. Mulock) is in a position to say that the policy of the Government would be to have it conducted on that line ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Oh, yes.

Mr. BELL (East Prince (P.E.I.) Is South Australia included amongst the contributing colonies ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We have no advice that either South Australia or West Australia are contributing ; only the four I have named contribute.

Mr. BELL (East Prince, P.E.I.) In what position is the claim of South Australia for damages on account of diversion of business from the line they built across the continent of Australia ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I only know from what has been stated here that such a claim has been advanced. It appears they have taken an interest in establishing a cable connection with the mainland and also in local telegraph lines, but the talk about a claim is an idea in the air. Moreover, it does not enter into the consideration of this question, because they are not as far as we know going to be parties to this scheme.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. For the information of my hon. friend (Mr. Bell), I may state that at the meeting between the representatives of all the colonies and Mr. Chamberlain, the question was asked : Whether there would be any compensation for the Eastern Telegraph Extension, or for South and West Australia in reference to the expenditure they had made, and the reply of Mr. Chamberlain was in the most emphatic terms, that there would be no question of compensation for anybody if the British Government were concerned in it.

Resolution reported ; read a second time.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 176) to provide for the establishment of direct submarine telegraphic communication between Canada and Australasia.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SUPPLY—INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself in Committee of Supply.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to call attention to the fact that a return which was ordered in reference to the dismissal of Messrs. Michaud and Belanger, of Trois Pistoles, has not been brought down. I also wish to call attention to the fact that none of the papers in reference to the Ryan claim have been brought down except simply the award of Mr. Shanley.

Mr. PRIOR. I wish to ask the Minister of Customs whether they have brought down Mr. Ogilvie's report in regard to the valuation of vessels, which was promised yesterday?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I have not.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would like to ask whether Mr. Ogilvie's final report, together with the evidence taken by him, has yet been brought down. If not, I think no time should be lost in laying it on the Table and having it printed.

The PRIME MINISTER. That has been brought down, and a motion has been carried to have it printed.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Customs—

Nova Scotia ..... $107,250

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). I want to call the attention of the House and of the Minister to some cases of fraud on the customs. As the Minister knows, the wholesale dry goods trade of the country has been very much exercised during the past year over frauds that have been perpetrated on the Customs Department. It appears that a New York firm of dry goods men have been in the habit of selling their goods to merchants in Toronto, Montreal and other places in Canada, and have been invoicing them at lower prices than the law permitted; and, not satisfied with that, they have been bringing them in under the preferential tariff, though they are goods not of British, but of German manufacture. The facts of the case were brought before the Customs Department, and a seizure was made. The facts have also been brought to the attention of the boards of trade, and the boards of trade have called the attention of the Minister of Customs and of the Government to the gross dishonesty practiced in these cases, and to the great injustice done to the honest trader in Canada. The honest trader in Canada has a reputation to sustain, he has his capital invested here, and he takes a risk if he does wrong; while these men in New York, having no capital here, and no reputation that they value very highly, have been fraudulently imposing on the Government in order to have their goods brought into Canada at a low rate of duty. The one case to which I shall specially call the attention of the House is the case of a dealer in Toronto, who is supposed to be the firm of John Macdonald & Co., an old and highly respected firm doing a large business in that city. The goods were sent to them invoiced at $4,170, with a request to put them through the customs-house. When the firm looked at the customs entry they refused. The customs entry was only for $2,100, whereas they were charged $4,170. They called the attention of the importers to this fact, and the importers got a customs broker to do the work for them. These customs brokers can only act on the information that is given to them, and the customs officers are not bound to accept the information unless it complies with the law. This firm had sent their goods to New York. When they found that they could not get them in under the British preference, they had them sent back to Liverpool or London, and had them shipped from England to the firms in Canada to whom the goods were consigned; and the firm to whom the goods were consigned, I think, went to the Customs Department and made the necessary affidavits that the Customs Department requires for the obtaining of a British preference, and to my mind it shows how easily a wholesale defrauding of the customs is effected when these parties can come in and get a British preference for goods not of British manufacture at all, and which never would have been sent to Britain except for the purpose of obtaining that preference. I think that the hon. Minister would do well to inquire into those matters. In this case the invoice was for $4,171, and the invoice used by the customs broker was only $2,100, or at least an undervaluation of $2,000. In this case there was a double fraud. There was first the undervaluation and then the representation that these were British goods. The Customs Department got on to the fraud and the officers made a seizure. The information that I have here, as set forth in the report of the Board of Trade of Toronto, is that these frauds have been compromised by the department for the sum of $418. The honest traders in the country are naturally very indignant. The Board of Trade says:

The firm in question has no stake in the country beyond an office, and as it was their deliberate intention to defraud the revenue and enable them to make a profit out of such fraud to the detriment of regular trade, it is a matter of great regret to us that such a compromise has been made.

I think that the whole country will join in that regret. That statement of the Board of Trade was, I understand, not denied by the Minister of Customs in the correspondence which the Board of Trade had with him.

In the first place, the Customs Department should endeavour to build up the trade of this country and have the business of this country go into the hands of honest traders. That is their duty. In this case, where two palpable frauds were perpetrated, the guilty parties should have been severely punished, and not let off with a penalty of $418. It could not be pretended that it was a mistake on their part. The very fact that the attention of this firm was called to it by the firm of John Macdonald & Co., which, I think, is the firm, and that on the refusal of this firm to make the entry, they then got their broker to make an entry for them, and that when they found they could not send the goods from New York without paying full duty, as they had no proofs of British identity, it would be to their advantage to send them back to England and have them shipped to Canada from England, so as to get the British preference, they took this course—all this is proof positive of a most dishonest effort to defraud the Government.

The duty of the Government is to protect the revenue, in the first instance, to see that each one pays his share of tribute to the Government involved in customs duties, and to see that honest traders are protected. But if you give a premium to dishonesty, you destroy all legitimate business in the country, you drive business out of the hands of honest men, who will become ruined by such unfair and dishonest competition, and into the hands of rogues, scallawags and rascals. The Government should consider that they are bound in duty to protect the honest importer. It is no difference to the importer whether he pays 10 per cent, 20 per cent or 30 per cent, as long as the other importers pay the same duties on the same valuation for the same goods. These are the two things to which the Government should pay attention, but in this case, apparently, they violated both. They have disregarded the fact that honest importers should be protected, in the first place, in the valuation of their goods, and, in the second place, by not giving the 25 per cent preference on goods which are not entitled to it. In this case the penalty of $418 imposed is a penalty not at all fitted to the crime. The Board of Trade of Toronto says further :

If aliens, having nothing at risk in the country, can pass entries to a broker, giving only two-thirds of the proper dutiable value, and escape the full penalty of the law, the extra profit to be thus made can only have the effect of encouraging others to do the same, and within a measurable time put all the importing into the hands of dishonest men, as the next time it will not be so easy of exposure, they taking care that the goods shall have passed the customs before the invoices are furnished to purchaser of the goods. It is, therefore, only in justice to ourselves, the revenue and all honest traders that we call upon the Government to let the law take its course and effect no compromise.

But, apparently, the Government failed to do their duty in this matter, and effected a compromise, if the statement of the Toronto Board of Trade is correct, and it has gone without public contradiction from the hon. Minister.

Here is another case in which the same parties, I presume, are implicated, taken from the Montreal "Herald" of October last :

Information is laid in the Exchequer Court against Michael Fitzgibbon and Frederick Schafheitlin, doing business in Montreal, for customs duties due the Government. It is alleged that between May, 1895, and February, 1896, the defendants imported into Canada goods to the value of $59,286. There were duties to the extent of $17,785 on the goods, and the firm only paid $15,200, leaving a balance due the Government of $2,584. Prior to 1895, it is said, that the firm imported $59,284 on fraudulent invoices, thereby forfeiting to the Government double this amount, or $118,568, and becoming liable to a penalty of $200 in respect of each of said invoices, such penalties amounting in the aggregate to $23,200, and defendants besides becoming liable in respect to each of said invoices to one year's term of imprisonment. The said forfeitures and penalties are incurred under section 192 of the Customs Act. The claims made by the Attorney General of Canada are as follows :—

Balance of customs duties .....	$ 2,584
Value of goods forfeited .....	59,284
Additional value of goods forfeited..	59,284
Penalties .....	23,200
Total .....	$144,352

Another Information.

Another information in the same case is taken against Thorrel, Fitzgibbon & Co., which, without penalties, may be summarized as follows :—Balance of duties payable on goods imported from the 1st of January, 1892, to 30th April, 1895, inclusive, $9,694 ; duties payable on goods imported previous to 1892, $34,272 ; making a total of $43,921, with interest to be added from the respective dates of the importation of the goods.

So that these firms' robberies of the Government have been going on for an extended period. Perhaps I had better not refer to the matter further until we hear from the Minister of Customs what he has done about these cases to obtain justice for the people of Canada and the honest importer. The information I have is, that efforts have been made by the parties interested, and by very strong friends of the Government to get the matter settled. I would like to know from the Minister of Customs whether this has yet been settled or not ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Patterson). With reference to the last matter, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) mentioned, it is before the courts, and, of course, he will see that I can hardly be expected to say anything more on that point. The merits of the case will be determined by the courts.

Mr. WALLACE. What court is it before ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The matter was handed over by the Department of Customs to the Department of Justice, and they are taking steps in the matter, I suppose, before the Exchequer Court. At any rate, it is wholly in the hands of the Department of Justice.

Mr. WALLACE. The statement I have does not corroborate that.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I say it is in the hands of the Justice Department.

Mr. WALLACE. That is very indefinite.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. You mean with reference to the courts?

Mr. WALLACE. Yes; before which court is it now?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am not prepared to say; it is in the hands of the Department of Justice, and they are attending to it. With reference to the other case the hon. gentleman has mentioned, and in which he has read—correctly, as far as my recollection goes—the communication of the board of trade, perhaps the hon. gentleman has already seen that the department replied to the board of trade, answering their question, and pointing out our desire to conserve the interest of the revenue, as is our bounden duty. I think I have seen in the press also that an action for libel has been entered by the gentlemen alluded to as having defrauded the revenue, against the parties who signed that letter. I suppose, if that action goes on, the facts in that case also will come before the courts. I do not know that it would be proper for me to say more than that, in that case, as in other cases, the department has followed the law as closely and as fully as their judgment would enable them to do. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) has administrated the department, and he knows that where it is charged that there is undervaluation, and so on, if a seizure is made, an officer under the Commissioner of Customs goes into all the facts and collects the evidence. That goes to the Commissioner of Customs, who must go carefully into it, weigh the evidence, and present his report to the Minister. The duty is then imposed upon the Minister of deciding the case, and also deciding what penalty shall be inflicted—whether a mitigated penalty or the full penalty. That has been done. I can say quite confidently, with a desire on the part of every officer to do what is just to all parties and to protect the interest of the revenue. As I stated, if the case is to go into the courts, I think the hon. gentleman will see it may be better to let it remain until a decision is given. I might venture to say this, however—as I said in the reply of the department to the representation of the board of trade—that, as to one of the main allegations in one of the cases the hon. gentleman mentioned, we had testimony in the other direction. With reference to the other matter, I think that if the hon. gentleman were in possession of all the facts, he would agree that the department had done what was substantially just. There might be a difference of opinion, of course; but I think, if he were in a position to weigh and to know all the facts, he would agree that the decision was not very widely wrong. The department are fully alive to their duty. Where cases of deliberate fraud are discovered, they are punished, and punished severely. But the hon. gentleman knows that if a case of undervaluation brings an importer within the scope of the law, and the Minister is convinced that the wrong is not intentional, but is due to ignorance of the law, it has been the custom, ever since there was a Customs Department, to impose only a mitigated penalty.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand the hon. gentleman is speaking of the Levison case. Perhaps he would give us some idea of the case and of the decision of the department.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I should have no objection, as Minister, to give the facts of the case; but the question arises in my mind as to whether it would be right for a Minister to open up a case for investigation here, in view of the action that has been entered, and is yet to be tried, in the courts.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. As I understood the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), he made a statement and receded from it to a very considerable extent. Otherwise I could see more force in what he said. He said that the case was before the courts, that his department had sent it to the Department of Justice. But I wanted to ask whether the Department of Justice has taken proceedings against the parties, and my hon. friend was unable to say that they had. We have nothing to do with the fact that the parties have brought suits for libel against certain newspapers. That is an entirely different case, it has nothing to do with this question. Here is a matter which the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) has referred to the Department of Justice. With what report? Has the Minister of Justice reported, stating that he believed the law had been violated, and that he had taken the necessary steps to vindicate the law? If that were the case, then provided the Department of Justice had entered action, it would be before the courts, otherwise I do not think it is. I think it is a case concerning which the Minister is perfectly justified in stating all the facts, and the view he has taken upon it, and has submitted to the Justice Department.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). Perhaps the hon. gentleman was not in all the time I was speaking. A little difficulty arose from the late Controller bringing up two separate cases. The first case he mentioned was in the position stated by the leader of the Opposition.

Mr. WALLACE. Which case is under the libel?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That of Fitzgibbon, Shaftlein & Co., the case to which the leader of the Opposition has referred. That seemed to be a very involved case, running over a number of years; and instead of determining the penalty, as the statute gives me power to do, as Minister, upon the report of the commissioner, there is an alternative in the law providing that the case may be referred to the courts. As it was an involved case running over a number of years, and as the papers connected with it were very extended, I thought it was better to hand it over to the courts to deal with; so it was handed over to the Department of Justice, who have entered suit, and it is before the courts now. The other case transpired in Toronto. That is a case in which the dry goods section of the board of trade, through information, I suppose, furnished to them by one of their members, thought that the department had not fully secured the ends of justice, or had not sufficiently punished the parties for what the members of the board of trade thought to be a fraud. From knowledge which I suppose they possess, they seem to think it rather a gross fraud, which had not been punished to the extent the offenders deserved. After we had the statements that were made, and the defence that was put in, the department were unable to see, from all the information we had before us, and some of which the dry goods section of the board of trade could not have had before them—we were not able to see that the charges of fraud were sustained. That being the case, the view the department took was that there had been an irregularity, and that a penalty should be imposed for that irregularity. But we were unable to take the view, and did not take the view, that fraud had been perpetrated in the manner which was understood by the dry goods section of the board of trade. We did not think that was proved by all the evidence that was before us, at least as concerns one of the charges on which we had testimony. I have spoken thus freely so far, because the department have made that manifest in their reply to the board of trade, and it has become a matter of publication in the press. Manifestly the department cannot enter into a discussion with the public press, it would not be expected; we have just to do our duty as the law prescribes to the best of our ability and our judgment. Now, having referred to this matter, hon. gentlemen who sit opposite me and who have been Ministers themselves, know just how far we could go. I have seen in the press that these parties against whom charges of fraud are alleged feel that they have been wronged, and they have entered suit for libel therefor. If that suit goes on, I suppose the whole facts will be brought out in the courts. Whether it is my duty to state fully the facts or to make statements in reference to this matter now, I leave it in a measure to the hon. gentlemen themselves to say, as I am in a little doubt about it. But so far as I myself am concerned, or any officers of the department are concerned, we would not have the slightest objection that all the papers should be laid upon the Table; it would be I think under the circumstances, especially as the member for West York (Mr. Wallace) has mentioned it, in the interest of the department so to do, but I question if it would be a proper thing for me to do it. I submit to the leader of the Opposition whether, under the circumstances, it should be done. These are not the only cases that have occurred, similar cases are coming before the department continually. I would not venture to say how many cases come up during a week or a month, involved cases, where questions of valuation are concerned, and where it is difficult to determine where the line of fraud has been passed, and where the Act contemplates that the department should exercise its discretion in fixing the penalties. All I can say to the hon. gentleman in reference to this matter is that the department did impose the penalty that it considered sufficient, that they considered these parties deserved to be visited with for the irregularity in the transaction. Now, if I do not say more, I beg to assure hon. gentlemen opposite in the most positive manner that it is not because the department have anything to conceal, because, owing to the action taken by the dry goods section of the Board of Trade, we would be placed in a light more favourable, perhaps than would otherwise be the case.

Mr. WALLACE. The Minister has spoken quite a long time, but I do not know that he has said anything. He has multiplied words without giving us any information, and I presume that was the object of his repeating over and over again his desire to act fairly and honestly, and do justice to everybody, and so forth. But specific statements were made, and those statements have not been replied to. Specific statements were made that this firm, Levison Bros., had sold an invoice of goods to a firm in Toronto, John Macdonald & Co. I shall presume is the name, for $4,170, that they presented the invoice to the customs and had it passed through for $2,100. You add the duty, freights and profits, and it would not bring it up to $3,000, a manifest fraud. Macdonald & Co. refused to enter the goods, then these parties took the manifest and passed the goods through the customs. Macdonald & Co. saw it was a fraud, and refused to pass them through the customs, and told them so. Then they took these goods—because this is only one of a number of cases—and brought them to New York where they have an agency, as well as in Portland. They shipped the goods back to London, Eng., and thence to Canada in order to make it appear they were British goods. Now, these were the facts alleged by the board of trade, they were proved by the board of trade, and the Minister of Customs does not give us a particle of information. I would like to ask the Minister of Customs whether these goods were entered as British goods?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think so.

Mr. WALLACE. Duty was paid, a forethought, and it shows that the Government permit these Germans in New York to enter as goods of British manufacture what never have been British goods, were not manufactured in Britain, and were never owned there. The Minister has not a word to reply to that.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. To what?

Mr. WALLACE. As to the fact, as I have charged, that these goods had been sent out to New York, that they had been taken back to England and shipped to Canada in order to be labelled as British goods and get the one-quarter preference, or as the hon. Minister calls it, the 25 per cent off.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Does the hon. gentleman say that they were not goods of British manufacture?

Mr. WALLACE. Certainly.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Well, then, the hon. gentleman is not in possession of the facts.

Mr. WALLACE. The Minister himself just said a moment ago that these goods were not of British manufacture. I understood him to say so.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No.

Mr. WALLACE. Does the hon. Minister say now that these goods were of British manufacture?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I say that they claimed to be goods of British manufacture, and as far as the evidence before the department went, they were goods of British manufacture.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. Minister is not prepared to say that they were of British manufacture. All that he says is that they were claimed to be goods of British manufacture, and that, as far as the evidence before the department went, they were.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. What more could I say?

Mr. WALLACE. What did the evidence of John Macdonald show?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. In the case to which the hon. gentleman has referred, and that is one of the points that we must consider, a libel suit has been entered against the dry goods section of the board of trade. We have arrived at this point, that these parties have charged that there has been fraud committed. The hon. gentleman can do that with impunity in this House, but these other gentlemen must assume responsibility for their statements, and the information that may be given here may be used in that suit. It is a question whether I ought to give such information or not. I have gone so far as to state that the charge was that the goods were not of British origin, and that the department, on the evidence before them, thought they were of British origin.

Mr. FOSTER. Does my hon. friend take the ground that he is not to give information to Parliament, because, either at the present time, or at some future time, a libel suit, or a suit of any kind, is, or may be, brought by the party who has been before the Customs Department, and because the information that is given here might be used in the suit one way or the other? I do not think my hon. friend will take that ground. I am afraid the hon. Minister's conscience is just now a little bit too tender. If it were as tender always we might not have some of the transactions coming before the House of such a doubtful character as we have had. The hon. Minister has had a customs case before him; he has investigated it, given his decision, and as far as the Customs Department is concerned, it is settled. Parliament has a right to know the rights of the case. The hon. Minister has only to give the facts; the facts cannot injure any innocent party, and can have no appreciable effect on the courts. In this case two charges have been made. One is that a preference on the goods of supposedly British manufacture has been given, and the other, which is a more patent conclusion, is that there was undervaluation. I would like to know, if that undervaluation was a patent conclusion, why the Minister let the parties off with a fine of $418?

Mr. WALLACE. No fine at all.

Mr. FOSTER. Why do we not seem to be able to get the facts?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It is just a point as to how far a person would be justified in bringing up matters and in speaking about transactions that are coming up before the courts.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. Minister knows that this is not the first case under these very items. There is another libel suit.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster), has taken the ground that there has been undervaluation. We had this charge before us. It was charged that there was fraudulent undervaluation, in effect, and there was also the claim that these were not British goods. The department consider that the evidence they had before them justified them in believing that the goods were bona fide of British manufacture. The department also, from the evidence they had before them, felt that they could not come to any other conclusion than that there had not been a deliberate fraud or intent to defraud.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that all the hon. Minister has to give us?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. What more do you want?

Mr. FOSTER. Cannot the hon. Minister give us the facts of the case? Is he going to close his mouth and take the ground that, because a libel suit is going on somewhere, he will not give us any information about it? Cannot the hon. Minister give a simple relation of the facts of the case. Perhaps there are some hon. gentlemen in this committee who have a little common sense which they may be able to bring to bear upon them. There is an idea prevalent in the country that there is a liability to gross frauds and unfair competition, in the matter of undervaluation, and in reference to the preferential clause, as to whether goods are really made in Great Britain or not. The Minister may refine, but he cannot refine that feeling away, and it is a feeling that should be allayed if it has no foundation. A simple recital of the facts of the case would give hon. members an idea of them, and they may be allowed to draw their own conclusions. Surely the tender conscience of the hon. Minister does not go so far as to refuse information to the committee because there may be a libel suit against the board of trade. The board of trade are big enough to take care of themselves. Anyway the facts of the case never can prejudice anybody.

Mr. WALLACE. Besides that I may say that Fitzgibbon, Shaftlein & Co. brought a libel suit against the editor of the "Shareholder." There was a good deal of investigation about it; the Government sent their man, Mr. Russell, apparently, to Berlin to see about it. But, the libel suit never was prosecuted; they knew better than to bring the editor of the "Shareholder," Mr. Smyth, into court. They dropped the suit, and they will not bring Mr. Macdonald into court. Men who have been thieving and stealing are not quite brazen enough to take an honest man into court because he exposes their thefts and dishonesty. Yet the hon. Minister of Customs says that he is not going to say anything about the case because he might be brought into court as a witness. Such an excuse will hardly stand water.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I did not take that ground.

Mr. WALLACE. If the hon. gentleman has any evidence to give, the fact that he has made a statement in Parliament will not prevent him from being called as a witness because the parties to the suit know what he has done in connection with it. It will not protect him. Here is a statement of this case that I have received. It says:

That the amount of the invoice presented to them by Levison Bros. was \$4,179. This, of course, included duty and freight, and they also say that the invoice presented to the customs by W. C. Irwin, broker, was \$2,100. Assuming that the duty on the goods was 35 per cent, less  $\frac{1}{2}$ , or 26 $\frac{1}{2}$  per cent, as they were passed as British, and allowing 6 $\frac{1}{2}$  per cent for freights and charges, which is about what it costs us, 26 $\frac{1}{2}$  plus 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ , or 32 $\frac{1}{2}$  per cent, you see that \$3,100 plus 32 $\frac{1}{2}$  per cent is about \$4,179, so that \$3,100 would be about the proper amount for duty, i.e., the price at which the goods are sold in the country of export, so that those facts are about right.

If that is the case there was $1,000 worth of goods which did not pay any duty at all. The Minister (Mr. Paterson) shakes his head, but I am reading the figures. At the preferential rate there would be $262 duty unpaid on that one invoice. But this business extends all over the country, and has been for many years, and if these men have been doing wrong they have been doing wrong continually. The theory is that if you do wrong you do it knowingly, and that is truer with the customs law than with anything else. An ordinary man might plead he did not know such and such a law was passed, but it is the special duty and business of the importers to see what changes are made in the customs law. The great opening for fraud is that these men invoiced to themselves. This is a German-New York firm, and the invoice was made to them in this country, and there is always cause for suspicion in a matter of that kind. There is always suspicion of wrong-doing when a firm invoices to itself, and I remember several cases that arose in that way. This firm sends several hundreds of invoices into Canada; they invoice every one of these lots of goods to themselves, and the Minister is bound to make an investigation. In this case he made an investigation, and he fined or inflicted some sort of a penalty on this firm amounting to $418, when he discovered they had committed wrong. Is that correct?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I can only speak from memory at this moment, but I dare say these figures are correct.

Mr. WALLACE. Was that a penalty or what was it?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. As far as I remember, the penalty was that they did not receive the preferential rate, and I think, perhaps, double that amount, because of the irregularity they committed, but which we did not view as a deliberate fraud. The department believes that they were British goods, and it does not believe that they were fraudulently undervalued.

Mr. WALLACE. Were they undervalued at all?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We thought they were undervalued in this way. The goods were bought originally at an inland port and they were shipped from Liverpool to here, but they were valued at the cost in the inland port, and we added to the value the cost of the transport from the inland port to Liverpool. We held that the value of the goods should be taken at the port of shipment, and this being the irregularity, there was the penalty inflicted, that they did not get the benefit of the preferential tariff, and a mitigated penalty of an amount equal to the reduction on the preferential tariff was added to it. That is what I remember about it.

Mr. WALLACE. Was this the only penalty on Levison Bros.?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think that is all, speaking from memory. The department came to the conclusion that the goods were not fraudulently undervalued, and that they were of British origin. We held that the fraud alleged by the dry goods section of the board of trade did not exist, and the department came to that conclusion with all the evidence before them, and the defence that was put in. There was, as we thought, an irregularity not amounting to a fraudulent undervaluation at all, and this mitigated penalty was imposed.

Mr. WALLACE. The Minister speaks of a fraudulent undervaluation. Was there any undervaluation?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. An undervaluation to the extent I have explained as to the difference between the freight from the inland point to the seaport.

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot understand. Would the Minister give the House a brief recital of the circumstances of the Levison case.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I have not the papers before me, but I will speak from memory, and I think I may be pretty nearly correct. Levison Bros. are a firm in New York having connections in Britain as well, I believe. It shipped over to the New York firm several cases of goods, perhaps eight or ten, and those goods were placed in bond in the United States. One, or perhaps two, cases, had been taken out of bond, and had been entered and duty paid in the United States. They re-shipped those goods from New York to Liverpool, and the American Government refunded the duty to them on the case or two of goods which they took out of bond. The fact that they had passed the customs in New York at the valuation at which they came in here, was, as I understand it, one of the proofs as to the correct valuation, for they are very particular about their valuation in the United States. These goods were sent back to Liverpool, and they were re-marked and then shipped from Liverpool over to John Macdonald & Co. I am not sure whether they were shipped to the address of John Macdonald & Co. or to Levison Bros. themselves.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there a Levison Bros. in Toronto?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. They are there now, I think, but I do not know if they had a firm there at that time. They were shipping there, at all events. I think what the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) says is correct, as far as I remember, that they asked John Macdonald & Co. to pay the duty and pass the goods. They had sold these goods to John Macdonald & Co., but they were to be delivered duty paid, and if John Macdonald & Co. paid the duty, that, I suppose, would be allowed when it came to a settlement between them. They had sold the goods to John Macdonald & Co. for very much more than the invoice that was presented at customs; the invoice to John Macdonald & Co. included the duty and the freight on the goods sold. As the hon. member (Mr. Wallace) says, I suppose the firm of John Macdonald & Co. thought there was too big a discrepancy.

Mr. WALLACE. A thousand dollars.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That left a thousand dollars difference between the invoice they presented at the customs and the invoice they had given to John Macdonald, and the Macdonald firm arrived at the conclusion in their own mind, I suppose, that there had been a fraud committed upon the customs to this extent of $1,000. Now, the department, with the evidence they have before them, do not believe that to be correct. If you ask me how to explain it, I shall not say that they made $1,000 profit out of John Macdonald & Co. on the transaction. I have no doubt that when Levison Bros. sold the goods to John Macdonald & Co., they did not sell them at what the goods cost them in England. They would have their profit on them. Whether they had a large or a small profit, I cannot tell. What the department had to satisfy ourselves of was, whether the goods were of British origin, and whether they were entered at the correct valuation; and upon both of these points the department were satisfied. Something should be added for freight from the inland town where the price was fixed, to Liverpool, where they were shipped.

Mr. FOSTER. And they came in under the preferential rate.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I forget at the moment whether they passed at the preferential rate or not; I believe they did. At any rate, in the penalty imposed upon them, they were not allowed the preferential rate, because of this irregularity.

Mr. FOSTER. What irregularity?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We considered that it was an irregularity that the full price of the shipment was not stated. The price given was the price fixed at an inland town, whereas they were not shipped from there, but from Liverpool, and an amount should have been added for freight between those two points. We did not regard the valuation as fraudulent, but as irregular. There was a question, too, as to whether they might ship these goods from the United States, or whether, having taken them out of bond in New York and shipped them back to England, and then shipped them from England to Canada, they would be subject to a provision in the Customs Act which requires that goods lying in bond in a foreign country cannot be shipped to Canada without adding to the valuation the duty of the country in which they lie. But these goods were not shipped from the United States, but from England, and on that point the Department of Justice was consulted before a decision was arrived at.

Mr. WALLACE. If the Minister of Customs was as much mystified, when he was giving that decision, as he is to-day, I do not wonder at his giving this decision and practically exonerating these men from defrauding honest dealers in the country; because that is what it looks like from the admissions made. The Minister says that we are not to suppose that these men did without a little profit in the transaction, and he says: "I am not going to say what profit they received." Well, we can easily compute. They entered these goods at $2,100. If you add 6½ per cent to the 26½ per cent which my correspondent says would cover freight and expenses, you have 32½ per cent on $2,100, which is $682.50, making a total of $2,782.50. That $2,100 includes Mr. Levison's profits. He is selling the goods at that price, and he has no right to add 5 cents for profit after making that entry. He is bound to enter the goods at the price at which he has sold them, which, I presume, is the selling price in the country from which they were exported. The goods were invoiced in Toronto at $4,179, and we assume that they were worth that in Toronto, because Macdonald & Co., and all the other dry goods dealers who are buying goods in the English and German markets, and who know what the prices are, estimated the goods to be worth $4,179 delivered in Toronto. That price was made up by the price in England and Germany, plus the freight, plus the duty. The man who sells to them does not sell without a profit; so that, if an honest entry had been made, $3,100 would have been the price for duty. This writer says:

Assuming that the duty on the goods was 35 per cent, less one-fourth, or 26½ per cent, as they were passed as British, and allowing 6½ per cent for freights and charges, which is about what it costs us, 26½ plus 6½, or 32½ per cent, you see that $3,100 plus 32½ per cent is about $4,179, so that $3,100 would be about the proper amount for duty, i.e., the price at which the goods are sold in the country of export, so that those facts are about right.

Now, $3,100 was the correct price for duty in England, if $4,179 was the correct price for the goods delivered in Toronto, and $3,100 is about the price at which they should have been entered in Toronto; but they were entered at $2,100, so that there was a fraudulent attempt to defeat the customs out of the duties on $1,000 worth of goods, which were practically imported free into Canada. The Minister says they have a right to have any profit they like. So they may; but the goods have to be entered for duty at the fair, open market value in England, or in the country from which they are imported. That was not done. The Minister says that these goods were in the city of New York, and were taken back to the old country. So that both the charges that have been made in this matter have been practically admitted to be true by the Minister: first, that these goods were taken to New York and then brought back to England in order to be shipped from England to get the benefit of the British preference. That was known, apparently, to the Minister, because he has stated it to the House. These were United States goods; they were in the warehouse in New York, and they should not have been allowed the British preference. But they got the British preference, and they were undervalued to the extent of $1,000. So that the country was defrauded, in the first instance, by permitting these goods to come in 26½ per cent, and in the second place, by $1,000 worth of goods being allowed to come in without paying any duty whatever.

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose there were a lot of goods landed in New York, that they paid duty in New York, and that they were distributed to private warehouses there. Suppose those goods have been brought from the continent to New York and the importer, who had not been successful in making sale, ships them back to Great Britain, stores them in Liverpool, and then sends them from Liverpool to Toronto as British goods and claims the preferential rate. Do these goods lose the privilege of the manufacture of the country from which they come, when they are taken into New York and distributed there in private warehouses and the American duty paid?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. If the duty is paid in the States and the goods distributed there, they would not likely be sent back to England again and pay double freight.

Mr. FOSTER. If these goods were entered at New York for home consumption and the duty paid on them, does the department recognize that they can be shipped back again to England and reshipped from England to this country and entered here at the preferential rate?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We took the advice of the Justice Department on that point, and the decision was that when the goods were of British manufacture and shipped direct from Great Britain to Canada, they had to be recognized as entitled to the preferential rate, even if they had been previously shipped to New York.

Mr. FOSTER. How does the hon. gentleman propose to make sure that these goods are or are not of British manufacture? The incentive of the reduction of one-quarter of the duty is a strong one, which did not previously exist, so that what was not customary, under the old tariff, might now become a matter of steady business. Supposing a lot of goods from the continent went into New York. The Customs Department there would know whence they come and apportion the duties accordingly. The duties are paid, but these men then reshipped the goods to England and got a refund of the duty from the United States. It does not matter how they got this refund but they did. They are then shipped from Liverpool to Canada, and there is nothing to show that they come from Germany or any particular place. What machinery has the hon. gentleman to make sure that he can decide whether those are of British origin or not?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Of course we have to take the declaration of the shipper from England as to whether there is 25 per cent of British labour in them or not. As a rule, we have no reason to believe that the shippers will make a false declaration. If they do, and it is proved, they come under the customs law.

Mr. FOSTER. All that my hon. friend requires is a statement that these are of British manufacture, and in 99 cases out of 100 his customs officer will not go behind that statement. Is it an affidavit or what is it?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It is a declaration.

Mr. FOSTER. The customs officers accept the declaration?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the rule?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The appraiser may use his judgment.

Mr. FOSTER. We are not talking about the appraiser. We will suppose the value is correctly given. What these men are looking for is the reduction in duty on the preferential basis, and in 99 cases out of 100 the customs officer does not go back on the statement of the British shipper.

Mr. FOSTER.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We can go back in every case.

Mr. FOSTER. But in 99 cases out of 100 you accept that statement. It is only when some suspicious circumstances arise and your officers get on the scent of something wrong that an investigation takes place, but unless that happens there is no investigation. Consequently it amounts to this, that you can carry on the largest possible trade in continental goods by the simple device of sending them, first, to New York and then reshipping them to Liverpool, then getting in Liverpool a statement that they are of British manufacture, and then shipping them to this country and getting the advantage of the 25 per cent preferential reduction. In 99 cases out of 100 where there is no suspicion or surmise of anything wrong, these will come in to the detriment of the honest importers, who are at the mercy of that sort of thing. That is what makes the Toronto Board of Trade and almost every large Board of Trade in this country so emphatic with reference to those representations, and so indignant, when a man is caught making false representations, that a compromise should be arrived at instead of imposing on him the severest penalty possible under the law.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. What did he do wrong? Were they not British goods?

Mr. FOSTER. What did he do wrong? In the case of which I am speaking—

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No, in this case.

Mr. FOSTER. In the case of which I am speaking, we have gone on the assumption that they are German goods.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. But they are not; they are British goods.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Paterson) is evidently determined not to accept the conclusion on the general subject to which his own argument leads, so I will go over the whole thing with him again. Now, assume that there is a firm unprincipled enough to profit by the 25 per cent reduction, and, to do so, is ready to carry on an operation of a kind that my hon. friend admitted could be carried on. He commences by making a shipment of German goods to New York—consigning them to his own firm or a firm allied with him in New York. By some means they do as my hon. friend admitted had been done in this case—they get the bulk broken and get goods re-shipped to Liverpool and get a refund of duty. In Liverpool the same firm puts upon them the statement that they are of British manufacture, and so they leave the warehouse in Liverpool and come to Toronto. Now, my hon. friend says that unless there is something apparently wrong the customs officers do not go behind the simple declaration as to the origin of the goods. The goods are entered on the basis of the 25 per cent preference and are so sold in Canada, and every honest merchant and importer in the Dominion is liable to the unfair competition of those who carry on operations of that kind.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Could not that be done without sending the goods to New York?

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose it could.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Why should they send them to New York, then?

Mr. FOSTER. There might be less likelihood of detection than if they are sent direct; the origin of the goods might be less easy to prove if they are exported to one country, re-imported into Great Britain, and then sent out to Canada—in such a process you necessarily lose trace of the goods.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). What then?

Mr. FOSTER. I rather thought my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) could see it. What takes place is that the honest importers are liable to competition of this kind, to take away 25 per cent of their profits by means of this manipulation of goods in relation to duties. That is what makes honest traders mad; and when a case of this kind comes up, they are angry and think they are not treated fairly if the utmost penalty is not exacted—and they claim that it has not been exacted in this case, but that there has been a compromise and a light compromise.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Let me ask my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) a question—

Mr. FOSTER. Wait a moment.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Where would they get—

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to ask you to keep my hon. friend quiet for a moment, and then we will answer his question. I call attention to this matter to show that this preference may be used to bring in foreign goods to almost any extent, and so to militate against the interests of the honest importers in that respect, and also to show that, in proportion as it does that, it is a fraud upon the face of it, and does not justify the claim that the 25 per cent reduction inures entirely to goods of British manufacture. It shows the hollowness of the claim that has been made that British trade is helped by this 25 per cent reduction. When the hon. gentleman himself says that in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred there is no way by which you can detect foreign goods marked as British goods and brought into the country under this 25 per cent reduction.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman is departing from this case altogether.

Mr. FOSTER. So I am.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. He is arguing that this 25 per cent preference may be claimed for goods which are not entitled to it. When this preference was proposed the hon. gentleman and his friends took strong ground and said it could not be worked. They demanded to know how we were going to know which were British goods, and seemed to think it was beyond the wit of man to devise any means by which this preference could be given only to those goods for which it was intended. I can only say that the department have used such intelligence as they have and have prepared rules and regulations which they believe secured to British goods and to British goods alone, the preference in this market to which, under the law, they are entitled, and which the hon. gentleman and his friends thought it was beyond human power to secure. Take the case the hon. gentleman has mentioned. What is the use of supposing that a man, if he is going to defraud the customs, will ship his goods to New York, then back to Liverpool and then to Canada? Why should he pay for freight to New York and back? Why not ship the goods from Great Britain at once? And if he sent German goods from New York to England and shipped them from there, how is he going to get his certificate of British manufacture? Who is going to make the declaration? We would not take the declaration of British manufacture from a man in New York or in Germany.

Mr. FOSTER. Where do you take it from?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. From the exporter in Great Britain, the manufacturer who is to certify that these goods are bona fide.

Mr. WALLACE. Allow me to call the hon. gentleman's attention—

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Allow me to finish.

Mr. WALLACE. The broker in Toronto put these goods through and the Government accept them.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, but on the declaration of the British exporter that they were British goods.

Mr. WALLACE. I thought it was the British manufacturer.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The exporter of these goods.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it the British exporter or the British manufacturer of these goods?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It must be the British exporter.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. Minister said it must be the manufacturer.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. They are shipped direct from the British manufacturer if he is the exporter.

Mr. FOSTER. But this man Levison is the exporter from Liverpool after the goods have come back from New York. Levison is in New York and he ships his goods to Levison at Liverpool—let us say Levison, but that does not make any difference. Levison in Liverpool ships them to Toronto. Whose statement as to origin is taken in that case? It is Levison's, is it not?

Mr. WALLACE. Anybody can be an exporter and take that kind of affidavit. It is only the manufacturer who can know of his own knowledge whether these are British goods.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I have just consulted the Commissioner of Customs, who was up here to see me on another matter, and he tells me that in this case of Levison, the certificate declaring these to be goods of British origin was made by Mr. Labatt, the British manufacturer, from whom he bought the goods. The declaration is not made by Levison.

Mr. FOSTER. But that does not answer my question. I am asking for information. Suppose that a man in New York reshipped goods to Liverpool, to his own warehouse or any other person's, and they are shipped from there to Toronto, who makes the affidavit or statement that these are goods of British manufacture? Is it the exporter?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. That answer makes it plain. Then my hon. friend (Mr. Paterson) is entirely dependent on the honesty of the person who makes the declaration. As my hon. friend says, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred the customs officer does not go behind the statement of the man who makes the declaration. It is possible, then, for any man to send his goods in.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If my hon. friend can suggest any way of preventing it—

Mr. FOSTER. That is just the difficulty that we pointed out when this preferential tariff was brought down. Now, I am not discussing this from any point of advantage to be gained, except that I want to see where we are, and if we really do have any safeguard against that kind of thing. I put this and that together, that the exporter from Liverpool, we will say, is the man who make the declaration, if he is unprincipled he will make an unprincipled and false declaration, and in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, when they come to the customs on this side, the Minister himself has said that the customs officers do not go behind the statement.

Mr. FOSTER.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I say he can in every case.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not say that he could not, and what I said the Minister says was that as a matter of fact he did not, and that is the point I want to bring out, that in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, he does not go behind the simple statement as it appears, and in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred fraud is possible with reference to that. Therefore, the preferential tariff is one which is beset with the cardinal difficulty that you are at the mercy of people who can impose upon you with 99-100 of these imports.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman is perfectly correct as to the possibility, yet he will, of course, bear in mind that in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred the exporter is a well-known and reputable British house. Nine-tenths of the business, I fancy, that comes in of that character comes from well-known established houses, and the presumption is that they are houses which will keep faith, and so their declaration should be received. I admit the possibility of what my hon. friend says, but he must recollect—he claims to be as much as we are, though in a somewhat different form, in favour of preferential trade—that he will have the very same difficulty under the system of trade that he recommends. His argument rather tends to the conclusion that preferential trade is an impossibility, because these difficulties might arise, and we might be the victims of fraud.

Mr. FOSTER. But in our case we get a quid pro quo.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. But getting the quid pro quo will make no difference so far as concerns the fraud in entering goods in Canada; everything my hon. friend complains of would still remain. The very possibility that occurs under the present condition would occur if my hon. friend's views prevailed.

Mr. CLANCY. I would ask the hon. gentleman if the declaration that is made by the English manufacturer or exporter, as the case may be, requires him to state that the goods were of wholly British manufacture, or partly so, because there is a great deal of what may be raw material in one man's hands, while the finished article may be in another man's hands?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No, the declaration requires that there shall be 25 per cent of English manufacture, that the goods shall be enhanced in value that much by British labour.

Mr. CLARKE. I understand the Minister to say that if 25 per cent of the value of the goods exported was of British origin and 75 per cent of foreign origin, these goods would come to Canada from Great Britain and obtain the advantage of the preferential tariff; is that right?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. They are to be enhanced at least 25 per cent in value by British labour.

Mr. CLARKE. Then, three-fourths of the value of these goods may be foreign, that is, if 75 per cent in value is German, or Belgian, or French, and 25 per cent is British, and these goods are imported into Canada from England, they obtain the advantage of the preferential tariff; is that right?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. But the hon. gentleman must remember that Britain usually imports all the raw material, three-fourths of the value of that would probably be raw material imported from the wide world, and British labour entering into it makes it a British manufacture. If my hon. friend would make it more restrictive than that, then he would prevent the British preference amounting to anything at all.

Mr. CLANCY. I understand that there is a large volume of business done in England in making goods up partially, the goods are partly made by the very cheap labour on the continent, and these are put together and completed in England, and I wanted to know if even an additional value of 25 per cent was given to these foreign goods, they can then be imported into this country and obtain advantage of the preferential tariff?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, they could, because the value of goods must settle the question, 25 per cent of British labour creates it a British manufacture; and while it is possible that the goods may be introduced in a half manufactured state, and then finished in Great Britain, unless the finishing process amounts to 25 per cent of the whole value, they could not get in under the preferential tariff.

Mr. CLARKE. Is it found from the experience of the department so far, that the certificate of the exporter of these goods is sufficient? Would it not be possible, where the goods are of British origin, to get the certificate of the manufacturer?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No, that might be a difficult matter. Now, I would say that we had a great deal of difficulty in adopting that 25 per cent which we thought was the proper figure to represent the enhanced value of the finished article by British labour. If an article comes partly from another country to be finished in Great Britain, at least 25 per cent of British labour must have gone into it to make it ready for export, and my conviction is that the goods that have been entered under our preferential tariff are goods that are entitled to it. You can go behind the declaration of the exporter, yet, in the great majority of cases, as you know, parties importing goods from reputable and well-known houses are men who would not do anything of that kind, there is no danger of it. With reference to the possibility of fraud that the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) pointed out, of course, I admit that fraud is possible, but it is just as possible without a British preferential tariff as under it. If parties will send goods in here at an undervaluation, designedly and fraudulently, we must detect that in the best way we can, and if we can, we punish them. But it would be too much to say that there never would have been any cases of that kind without this preferential tariff, because we have had such cases and they have been punished. And so with reference to the preference, if they make a declaration that is false, why, they are liable then to all the penalties under the Customs Act. We have just as good security I consider, under that clause with reference to the valuation as we can have for the honest payment of the revenue. Frauds are possible, but I think fewer frauds, perhaps, will be found in connection with goods bearing the declaration of the British exporter, than from any other country.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentlemen have receded very much from the position they took when this resolution was introduced by the Minister of Finance. The position they took then was that the greater part of the article must be of British manufacture, but they have reduced it now to one-fourth in order to bring it within a rule that they think will protect the revenue of Canada. Now, it is a well-known fact, as the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) has pointed out, that there are large quantities of foreign goods that are completed in England. Take the case of leather. Suppose the leather were exported from the United States, there is no duty on that entering into Great Britain, and it could be made up into boots and shoes there and brought back to Canada. Now, that would be infinitely cheaper for the American manufacturer who wants to get into Canada against the duty of 30 per cent or 35 per cent. He could get in much better that way than by paying the duty on direct importations into Canada. So that the hon. gentleman will see that, when you adopt the rule of 25 per cent, foreign goods will seek this back door for the purpose of getting the Canadian preference. It has been long enough in operation to enable the ingenuity of man to discover all the weaknesses in it. But the hon. gentleman will find that each year will bring these difficulties out, and that each year he will find more difficulty in carrying out the rule he has laid down of 25 per cent, which is only a very small proportion of it. It means that on all goods produced in any foreign country in the world, coming to England under any pretense, or—I will not say a pretense—in reality will be enhanced by 25 cent, and that the whole goods of the world will come into Canada at a reduction of 25 per cent, which means, after all, only a real preference of one-quarter, or  $6\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. That is what it means, when it is figured out under the rule that the hon. gentleman has laid down.

Mr. CLARKE. I would like to say to the hon. gentleman that when I asked him as to whether it would not be practicable or possible to get the certificate, or the affidavit, of the manufacturer, I did not mean to imply that the affidavit, or certificate, of the exporter, in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred, would not be just as reliable as that of the manufacturer. I asked the question for information, because I understood that if a manufacturer forwarded a certificate, there would be no likelihood of the certificate being challenged. It seems that attention has been drawn to this question of undervaluation more frequently and more repeatedly during the last few months, since this preferential tariff came into operation, than previously. Complaints of undervaluation are not confined to importers, because the Canadian Manufacturers' Association recently memorialized the Customs Department as to this question of the undervaluation, not only of goods entitled to the British preference, but of goods of foreign manufacture not entitled to the preference at all, and they made certain suggestions to the hon. Minister of Customs in a resolution which they adopted. A copy of their memorial was sent to me a few days ago, and if the committee will permit me, I would like to read three or four statements respecting undervaluation. At a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, held June 12, 1899, this resolution was passed. The manufacturers of Canada seem to feel that their interests might be very seriously affected, if this system of undervaluation is permitted to go on. The resolution says:

They have had their attention called lately to the question of undervaluation of invoices, chiefly from foreign manufacturers having nothing at stake in this country, and consigning their wares at the lowest possible prices, they think they can get through the customs irrespective of the law, which says that the value of duty must be the price at which the goods are sold in the open market for consumption in the country of production. This has always been treated as a question affecting importers only, but it also affects in a very real manner the manufacturer also. If goods can be entered at two-thirds of the proper value, it is evident that only two-thirds of the duty will be paid, so that articles dutiable at 30 per cent will get through at only 20 per cent. This places the manufacturer in a false position before the public, for he gets only 20 per cent protection, while the public think he has 30 per cent.

Mr. CLANCY.

Then, the manufacturers go on to recommend to the Customs Department certain changes in the methods of valuation for duty:

They, therefore, call upon the Government to scrutinize most carefully all entries from foreign countries in which the goods are consigned to agents or brokers, who have no available assets which could be seized to satisfy any just claim the Government might have against them, and they further recommend that no entries of over $200 shall be received from such persons unless they can furnish proper bonds and securities for the amounts of all their entries, and that on all such entries the signatures of the owners of the goods must be appended to the entries as well as those of the brokers.

They further recommend that some such penalty as is now enforced in the United States should be enacted and enforced here—to wit: that in addition to exacting the full duty in all cases of undervaluation (which is no penalty at all) the full amount of the undervaluation should be also exacted, so that if the undervaluation is 20 per cent, the penalty should be also 20 per cent, and so on. The only way to suppress fraud is to make it at once so expensive that it will not pay.

I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Customs if he has taken any action upon this memorial, and if so, what is the action that has been taken?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I have received the memorial, and it has been answered in a courteous manner, for which the Department of Customs is noted. I took into consideration what was said in the concluding part. Where there is undervaluation, if it be fraudulent, the penalty is quite equal to what they mention. In reference to the undervaluation of goods, it is difficult to arrive at what are the proper values of the items, as to which we have to have evidence, and to search for it. It is no part of the duty of the Customs Department to add to the protection that is incident in the tariff, of the manufacturers of this country. This Parliament determines whether a tax shall be 20, or 25, or 30, or 35 per cent, and, as an incident of that, the manufacturer has protection to that extent. It is the right of Parliament to say what that tax shall be; the department have no right, as I understand it, to add to the protection on behalf of any manufacturers or to increase values beyond their fair limits, as laid down in the customs law. But in the interest of the revenue, the department is bound to see that the values put on goods from foreign countries and entered for customs, are the values at which these goods are sold in the markets of the country whence they were exported. The department has given a great deal of consideration to this question, and have initiated and put into operation rules and requirements that are securing a fair valuation of goods entering into this country, to a greater extent than ever before. I will give an instance of this fact. The Customs Act requires that the value for duty shall be, not the value at which an hon. gentleman might go over to New York and buy a bill of goods for. The hon. gentleman might go over to New York, and a merchant there, finding that he was from Canada, might make to him what is called an export sale, and give him a reduction in the price of these goods of as much as 10 per cent. That would be a perfectly legitimate transaction between the hon. gentleman and the merchant, and the Customs Department would have no right to interfere with the price, even if it were reduced 50 per cent. But when the hon. gentleman comes to enter these goods at the customs-house, he cannot expect to have 50 per cent taken off the value, but he must pay duty on the value at which the New York merchant sells these goods in that country. Before I took office, all that was required with an invoice of foreign goods was a statement: "Certified correct." Well, the hon. gentleman can see, from the illustration I have given, that if he should go to New York, and buy a bill of goods, and receive 20 per cent discount off the regular selling price in the United States because the goods are coming into this country, we would get that New York merchant's statement: "Certified correct." It would be a correct and honest invoice, and there would be no question that he sold the goods for that price, but it would not be correct for customs purposes, because the regulations require that the goods must be valued at the price at which they are sold in that country. We found that parties would bring in their invoices, and that there would be undervaluation, as recognized by the customs law, and it would be found that these bills did not come under the requirements of the customs law for duties. It was easy for a man to make a case out under the old regulations. He could say: I bought these goods for the price stated; I do not know whether they were sold for a higher price over there or not. I took it for granted that this is the price at which they were sold in the United States. I present this invoice, and I think it fairly represents the value of the goods. That is not an unreasonable ground to take. The department took the matter into consideration, because we thought we could make an improvement in these regulations. The man who is buying goods in New York might not know what these goods sold for there, but the man selling these goods to a Canadian at a reduction of the price knows at what price these goods are selling at in that country. Therefore, we altered that certificate altogether, and we required on the foreign invoices that the man in the foreign country who sells the goods, and knows the prices, shall certify that the invoice is not only correct, but that the prices are the fair market value at which these goods are sold in like quantities and under similar conditions in the foreign country. If there is any variation in these prices, it is noted on the margin of the invoice. By that precaution we have found that the revenue is largely augmented, and it has proven one of the best safeguards that was ever instituted against the undervaluation. In addition we have adopted other regulations for ascertaining through our officers the values that rule in certain countries, and though it placed extra work on the department we have not asked for extra help. We have provided that when this information is gained, bulletins are issued to all ports of the Dominion, showing what the ascertained value for customs duty on such and such an article is, thus securing to a far greater extent than ever before, uniformity in customs valuation. I am always pleased to receive suggestions from the importers and from the manufacturers, but I give these facts to the committee with the hope of showing that the department is fully alive to what its duty is in the matter; is doing its very best to safeguard the revenue, and incidentally to safeguard the interests of all those engaged in trade.

Mr. WALLACE. I have always noted with a great deal of interest, how voluble and eloquent the Minister (Mr. Paterson) can be when he is discussing some subject that is not pertinent to the question before the House.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Does not the hon. gentleman say that his hon. friend did not bring up that question?

Mr. WALLACE. I say that the reply of the Minister (Mr. Paterson) was away out in the fields, and I further say that the questions asked by the hon. member from West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) were quite pertinent and were not answered. The Minister explained at great length how he had improved the law, but if you take the 59th section of the Customs Act of Canada, 46 Vic., chap. 12, passed in the year 1883, he will find that law provides for everything that the Minister says he has done, and that law was on the statute-book thirteen years before he became Minister of Customs.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The law is not a regulation.

Mr. WALLACE. It is a regulation, and it regulates everybody. The 59th section says:

Such market value shall be the fair market value of such goods in the usual and ordinary commercial acceptance of the term, at the usual and ordinary credit, and not the cash value of such goods.

The Minister takes great credit to himself now, for having carried out that law which has been carried out for the last sixteen years. Section 58 of the Customs Act, says:

Whenever any duty ad valorem is imposed on any goods imported into Canada, the value for duty shall be the fair market value thereof, when sold for home consumption, in the principal markets of the country whence and at the time when the same were exported directly to Canada.

That law is sixteen years old, but to listen to the Minister (Mr. Paterson) to-night you would think that he had discovered some new law and some new regulations. He tells us that he sends certain officers to ascertain the value of goods in other countries, but surely he does not mean to lead the House to believe that that system was inaugurated since he became Minister. Long before he was in the department there were officers doing that work, to a limited extent before I was in charge of the department, and to a much greater extent when I left. He coolly takes credit for the whole of that in this House to-night.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I said we sent the information out by bulletins to the ports of the Dominion generally. That was not done before.

Mr. WALLACE. The Minister told the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Clarke) that we have no right to add to the profit of the manufacturer by putting enhanced values on imported goods. In their memorial which has been read to the House the manufacturers of Canada never asked anything of the kind. What they asked was that the law be carried out and that they get the protection which the law declares they shall have. In this case they apparently did not receive any protection. The Minister of Customs tells us that nine-tenths of the exporters are reputable men. I am not so sure of that after the disclosures have been made. The system carried out by the Minister (Mr. Paterson) encourages dishonesty, and if he continues it you will find the 99 per cent who do right will decrease from year to year and the one per cent who do wrong will rapidly increase. I have a very interesting letter here, a portion of which I will read to the House. It bears on this subject, and is as follows:—

Sir,—The clause in the tariff conferring certain exclusive privileges on Great Britain is not the infallible instrument of preferential policy it was intended to be. If this were the millenium, and every London, Manchester and Glasgow trader a second edition of George Washington, the preferential clause might accomplish all that was expected of it; but, as this is not the millenium, but the wicked year of grace '99, and as a certain order of English traders are not Washingtons at all, but a pack of rascals, ready to sell their souls to Satan at a considerably less figure than the price Doctor Faust got for his, this clause may in more ways than one turn out not to be the universal benefaction it promised to be.

Even that charity which refuses to think evil, cannot resist evidence of the fact that in England, as elsewhere, there is a set of men who will traffic with the father of lies to get the start of customs officials, and imperil their eternal salvation for 8 per cent. The preferential clause was instituted in the interests of British production, and was the most delicate possible infringement of the Cobden Club. The clause does not imply any special guardianship of the interests of English exporters of foreign goods. It does not imply any special benefit even to merchants of British goods, beyond, of course, the legitimate profit on increased returns from the sale of these goods. Under the clause the London, Manchester or Glasgow merchant continues to have a perfect right to buy foreign goods if it suits him, and export these goods to Canada. The invoices of such goods, however, require to be accompanied with a sworn description of their character and origin—a condition with which all honourable British merchants religiously comply. A glance at the clause will make it manifest that it has opened a new door for the practice of deception and fraud.

It is every day getting harder and harder to tell in what market a particular article is made. In their eagerness to meet the demand for some specific kind of merchandise in wide and general use, the manufacturers of several countries will "get on" to a thing, and produce some article, or variety of articles, that will constitute a type whose market identification will nonplus the smartest buyers, and most competent and experienced customs appraisers. This applies in an especial manner to dry goods. If a dishonest London or Bradford trader find that Roubaix can produce a typical article at less than its counterpart can be made in Yorkshire, there is nothing to prevent him from changing the tickets, erasing the French marks, swearing to a lie, underselling his honest competitor at home, taking 8 or 12 per cent out of the revenue of the Dominion, and wrecking the trade of the honest merchants in Montreal and Toronto. It may be asked, are there not means of protection against this immoral and ruinous kind of competition, this flagrant breach of the moral and civil law? Positively, no effective means. To make it law to have stamped on both ends of a piece of goods the name of the country it was made in, would be but at most a further tax on the ingenuity of the thief. A party who had the nerve to change tickets and make a false oath, would cut off stamps and replace them by his own, provided there was enough in it to pay him for his trouble. This kind of cattle don't stick at trifles. Their theory is, as well be hanged for a sheep as a lamb.

The Toronto dry goods merchants have lately been exercised over some sort of "find" of the description indicated. A New York firm is named as giving countenance to practices that are far from being in accordance with the requirements of the eighth commandment. It is natural and proper for the Toronto men to be so exercised. It is a matter that concerns them intimately. It concerns every honest merchant in Great Britain and the Dominion; above all, it concerns the Canadian Government. It concerns the Government in a two-fold way. The Government is alike responsible for the national revenues and the reputation of the clause or "gift." The "gift" is a pet child. It must not be allowed to walk in the same path with men of unclean and slippery ways. It must be shielded from involuntary complicity with perjurers and thieves.

It being Six o'clock, the Deputy Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to ask the Minister of Customs how it is that uncleaned rice and cleaned rice both come in under the preference from Great Britain?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The uncleaned rice is probably the product of British India, which is one of the preferential countries.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the hon. gentleman tell me what kind of declaration is made under circumstances of that kind?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The same declaration.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the hon. gentleman give the committee a copy of that declaration?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Certainly.

Mr. CHARLTON. I wish to address an inquiry to the hon. Minister of Customs as to the method of keeping our accounts in the Customs Department. The system is of many years' standing. Last year the entry of short returns amounts to $4,154,342 for Ontario, and $473,388 for Quebec, or a total of $4,627,730. This item forms a very considerable portion of the exports to the United States, and is all in connection, I suppose, with the American trade. It has occurred to me, in investigating these trade returns, that this allowance unduly swells our exports to the United States, and that the sum given here as the total of short returns, or returns not made, is excessively large. No allowance, I suppose, is made for smuggling, but I have every reason to believe that the amount of goods smuggled from the United States to Canada is very nearly, if not quite equal, to the amount of exports to the United States, not covered by the returns, and entered in these trade and navigation accounts as short returns. How this amount is arrived at I am unable to say, and I ask information from the hon. Minister of Customs, and I again press my belief that, with no allowance made for smuggling from the United States inward, this allowance for short return makes our apparent exports to the United States greater than they actually are.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. My attention was called to these short returns, and a year or two ago I consulted with my deputy as to whether we would continue the entry or not and after considering the question from all points, we thought that as this had been going on for years, for purposes of comparing one year's trade with the other, it was perhaps well that we should continue it. The amount is arrived at by taking a percentage of the total exports to the United States. It is supposed that the commissions to make export entries at the different ports will amount to that much. As I understand, in conference with my statistical officers, they thought they were warranted in maintaining it from the fact that the United States return of imports from Canada would be more reliable than our returns of exports into the United States, inasmuch as the United States charge a duty. If I remember right, the information they gave me was that the imports into the United States from Canada as given in the United States returns, would about correspond with the total exports from here with the short returns added, and it was for that reason and for the purposes of comparison that we determined to continue this entry.

I dare say goods are smuggled into Canada, but we have no means of ascertaining what amount is smuggled, and we are as vigilant as we can be to detect and prevent smuggling.

Mr. CHARLTON. My attention was first called to this matter last season by the fact that the amount of imports from Canada, as given in the United States returns last year, was somewhat less than the amount of exports to the United States, as given in our returns, without the short returns added. From this it appears that our returns of some $36,454,000 exported, without the short returns added, are in excess of the American returns of imports from this country. I would recommend the hon. Finance Minister to give careful attention to this matter, for in the discussion of our trade affairs with the United States, it is not to our advantage to have it appear that our exports are larger than they really are. In discussing these questions with the United States, in order to obtain trade concessions, it is important to be able to show that our tariff is more liberal than theirs, and that consequently our imports from them are heavier than our exports to them, and being able to show this will give us a greater claim on them to diminish their duties and make their tariff more liberal. Although it has been the rule for many years to enter these short returns it might be well to discontinue it, if it is misleading, and adopt a system more in accord with the actual conditions of affairs.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am glad the hon. gentleman has called my attention to this matter. If he is not mistaken in his figures and if the United States returns of imports from this country show a less volume than our returns of exports to the United States with these short returns added, it would be well to revise the system. If his statement be correct, we must be making our export entries more closely now than heretofore.

Mr. TAYLOR. If I understood the hon. Minister correctly before recess, the preferential rate applies to all goods, whether manufactured in or outside of England, provided 25 per cent has been added to their value after they were imported into England. Is the hon. gentleman aware that manufacturers in other countries are now establishing branch houses in England and manufacturing their goods at home, say Germany or Switzerland, to a certain extent, and then shipping them to England, where they are finished, after which they export them to Canada so as to get the benefit of the preferential tariff. If that be the case, then the preferential tariff is only one-quarter on the English manufacturer and three-quarters on the foreign manufacturer. I am informed that there are manufacturers in Germany who manufacture their goods to the value of 75 per cent, and then send them to England, where they are finished, so that 25 per cent is added to them in England, after which they are exported to Canada and given the benefit of the preferential tariff. This is done by Germany and some of the other foreign countries, particularly in corset goods and watches and clocks.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman is correct. If 25 per cent is added to their value in the finishing process in Great Britain, they would be entitled to come in here under the preferential rate.

Mr. WALLACE. With reference to the Levison Bros. transaction, the explanations made by the hon. Minister are not at all satisfactory. If the papers I have are correct, the penalty imposed was $418. I have a statement here showing that there were two seizures of goods imported by Levison Bros., and that both were settled by the Government for $418. This makes it still worse.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There was only one seizure made.

Mr. WALLACE. There were two according to this statement. I will send it over to the Minister. My information was, further than that—

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No, there was only one seizure made.

Mr. WALLACE. I would like to have the papers brought down. The information I have is that this firm were willing to pay $4,000 to settle; that they engaged the legal firm of Blake & Co., of Toronto, and the arguments of this firm were so conclusive and satisfactory that instead of the $4,000 they were willing to pay, this fraudulent concern were only asked to pay $418.

There is another case I have referred to, and that is the Montreal case, of the firm of Fitzgibbon, Schafeltein & Co. In some features it is like the one to which I have just referred. The Minister tells us that in this Levison Bros. case a libel suit was entered. In this Montreal case also a libel suit was entered, but has been practically withdrawn. This firm sued the editor of the "Shareholder" for libel in making a statement of the case in his newspaper. The editor of the "Shareholder" did not show the white feather, but was willing to go on with the suit and have the case tried in court. But these rascals took precious good care not to go into court—that is the place of all places that they were anxious to avoid. I am informed that the Minister in that case sent over to his legal agent, Mr. Russell, in London, Eng., to have the case adjudicated upon. Will the hon. Minister say if an offer of $7,500 was made to settle that case?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The deputy tells me that a deposit of $7,000 was made at the time of seizure, pending decision.

Mr. WALLACE. What was the decision of the department?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Referred it to the courts.

Mr. WALLACE. No, that is not the decision of the department; that could only be the decision when the decision of the department was not accepted.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. If the hon. gentleman knows more about it than I do, of course he has no use for the information I give him. I say the decision of the department was to refer it to the courts, and it is there now.

Mr. WALLACE. Did the department arrive at no other decision?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No; referred it to the courts.

Mr. WALLACE. A statement I have here is to the effect that charges were made in December, 1897, and a deposit of $7,500 was made after investigating the matter. Mr. Newcombe, the Deputy Minister of Justice, was sent to England, and he arranged with Mr. Charles Russell, the lawyer of the Government, to go to Berlin and take evidence; and in an interview with Mr. Schafeltein, he asked Mr. Schafeltein to verify the statements made by his firm and to produce his check books, and so on. Mr. Schafeltein said that the books were destroyed, and asked Mr. Russell if he had authority to settle the matter. Mr. Russell replied: No. That case is still before the court, I assume.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes.

Mr. WALLACE. Will the hon. Minister give further information on the subject, or have I got to give the House information with regard to it?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I do not know what information the hon. gentleman may wish to give. I know that the leader of the Opposition said that, if the case were in the courts, it should not be discussed now.

Mr. WALLACE. But the leader of the Opposition did not understand the position as the Minister now explains it. He could not have known that the Minister put it in the courts himself and did not give a decision as to the seizure. Why did not he give a decision ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Because it was a very involved and intricate case, and I thought it better to have it decided by the courts.

Mr. WALLACE. What was so involved, the law or the facts ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The facts, principally.

Mr. WALLACE. Surely the Minister has machinery to ascertain the facts much better than the courts would have in this case. It is clear, the same fraud was practiced here as in the case of Levison Bros., and they have got off practically scot free ; because I presume that $418 would very little more than pay the duty on one invoice and would not pay the duty on the hundreds of other invoices that were, as is claimed, fraudulently entered at the customs.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The cases are very distinct.

Mr. WALLACE. Are they not similar in this regard, that they were invoicing themselves ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. One runs over a number of years.

Mr. WALLACE. Levison Bros. was only one case that they exposed. Were other seizures made in the case of Levison Bros ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Not in our time.

Mr. WALLACE. The case of John Macdonald & Co. is the only case in which Levison Bros. were arrested. This one of Fitzgibbon and Shafeltein extends over a series of years, and their invoices amounted to tens of thousands of dollars, all fraudulent, so it is claimed. Seizures were made apparently in that matter of importations which amount to, I think, some hundreds of thousands of dollars, and they state they have no records of it, that their papers are all destroyed. The solicitor of the Minister who goes over to Germany to make an investigation is told that there are no papers to be had ; and yet these parties are permitted, I presume, to continue still their nefarious business of defrauding the customs. We are given no information about this matter to-day, and I think we are entitled to information. This House is the highest court we have, and there is no information which could be properly withheld from it, unless the department can show that the interests of the country or of the Government would be endangered thereby. I think we can clearly show, on the contrary, that the security of the public is greater when these frauds are disclosed to the public, and when it is shown that the operations of these parties have been detected. But the Minister does not throw any light upon these matters. The country may be robbed, it may be gone through by a lot of thieves and rascals, and when we ask for information the Minister simply shuts up like a book. I do not think that is satisfactory.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I understand from the hon. Minister that under the regulations of the department a large quantity of goods the manufacture of countries outside of Britain, comes in under the preferential tariff. Is he in a position to tell the House what proportion of goods imported under the preferential tariff was manufactured in Britain, and what proportion was manufactured outside of Britain ? In other words, has he made any classification of the proportion of goods under those two heads that come into Canada ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No, that would be impossible.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I cannot understand how it would be impossible. I understand the hon. gentleman to say that he had a certain form of affidavit to be made by the British exporter as to the quantity of any particular article that was manufactured in Britain before it could come in under the preferential rate. As I understand him, the British exporter is subject to the same tariff as exporters from other countries, unless he accompanies his goods by an affidavit to the effect that a certain percentage of the value of the article was manufactured in Great Britain.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, the declaration is that not less than 25 per cent shall be so manufactured. I understand him to suggest that the exporter should be required to say whether 25 or 40 or 60 per cent of the value of the article was made in Great Britain. The declaration says that it shall be at least 25 per cent, and it will be impossible for the department to tell how much it had exceeded 25 per cent. There may be cases where the whole cost of the article was the product of British labour, in other cases, 50 per cent of it may be the product of British labour, while there may be cases where, of the finished article, the product of British labour would not be over 10 per cent, in which case it would not be entitled to the preference.

Mr. McDOUGALL. The manufacturer must have some knowledge of what percentage of value of the article has been put on it in England, if he has not got that knowledge he cannot make an honest declaration. Then, I do not see any difficulty in the way of the British exporter who makes that declaration, saying the proportion of British labour or British value that has been put on the article, and also the proportion of foreign labour. If the British manufacturer is in a position to make an affidavit that he has put 25 per cent of the value on those goods, or if he is an exporter he must be able to do it with some knowledge, he must have the means of knowing. Take, for instance, a lady's mantle. He must know how many yards of silk imported from France, we will say, went into the manufacture of that mantle, he must also know how many yards of lace or velvet went into the trimmings of that mantle, and which were imported from the continent, he must have knowledge of the exact quantity of everything that went into the manufacture of that article. Then, he adds his labour, upon which he pays his price. Where is the difficulty on the part of the manufacturer giving in a statement, or a declaration, of the exact proportion of material imported that went into that piece of goods and the value of the work that he put on it?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. What would be the advantage?

Mr. McDOUGALL. The advantage would be a very great one to Canada, because, if it be shown that a large proportion of the goods we import from Great Britain under the preferential tariff come from France, Belgium, Germany and other foreign countries it would be seen that the tariff is of very little advantage. Why should I go to France if some of my customers prefer French goods, or to Germany, if they prefer German goods, or to Belgium, if they prefer Belgian goods, and buy these goods in these countries and pay 35 per cent duty on them when I can get them from British dealers with a reduction of 25 per cent on 75 per cent of the whole purchase?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I do not quite grasp it yet.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Suppose I buy $400 worth of French manufactures, why should I go to France to buy those goods and pay 35 per cent duty, when I have only to go to the English house and get three-quarters of the $400 worth of the same goods, with $100 of English labour added, and gain the reduction of 25 per cent on the duty?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That is where the preference comes in for Great Britain.

Mr. McDOUGALL. But Great Britain does not get the benefit of the preference. Great Britain only gets 25 per cent of it.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. According to the hon. gentleman, he wants these goods to be taxed at the rate of 50 per cent, and the Englishman would be shut out.

Mr. McDOUGALL. We pretend that we are giving this preference to British goods, when we are giving three-quarters of the preference to France.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Is the hon. gentleman opposed to allowing these goods in, with 25 per cent of British labour added?

Mr. McDOUGALL. I am opposed to being dishonest about it. I want to have the facts. Nineteen-twentieths of the people of the country are not aware of this.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The merchants are.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I tell the hon. gentleman that they are not. I did not know it myself until I heard the explanation given by the hon. Minister. I was astonished, and I think the people will be astonished and will consider that it is very unfair. This matter applies almost entirely to an expensive class of goods that is worn by wealthy people. The greater portion of the goods that come to us from Great Britain are expensive goods, such as silks, velvets, plushes and laces, which are worn by the wealthy people, who get the benefit of the preference. The cheaper lines of goods are manufactured in Britain, but we get these, because they are manufactured at home as well. These are the classes of goods that, being manufactured at home, are within the reach of everybody, while the wealthy man gets the benefit of the reduction of the 25 per cent on 75 per cent of the goods that are imported from Great Britain, the poor people, who are unable to buy these expensive goods, are obliged to pay the full duty, if the goods they consume are imported, and if they are not imported, they also have to pay because there is a duty against such goods. They have to pay the amount that is caused to be added to the value of these goods by reason of the protection as against the outside manufacturers. What case will my hon. friend have to go with to the poor people of this country, and will explain this matter to them as he explained it here this afternoon? Can he explain how he gets the duty that he levies on tobacco? Here are the poor people, the labouring classes, that have not the luxuries, the fishermen, the farmers and the miners, who must have their tobacco. They cannot have their silks, they cannot get the big reduction on the importation of silks that the wealthy people get, and my hon. friend puts up the duty on tobacco. Another statement the hon. Minister made before six o'clock surprised me. As I understood the explanation given by the hon. Minister, he stated that the invoice price of goods coming from the United States would have to correspond with the prices at which these goods were sold to the consumers in the United States. Is that not the explanation of my hon. friend?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The price would have to be noted on the invoice. The invoice would come in to the party for the price which he bought at, but if he bought at a lower price than these goods regularly sold for in the country where they were purchased, then the exporter would note on the invoice the home price, or the price in the United States, and duty would have to be levied on the price at which these goods were sold in the United States.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Suppose a dealer in New York bought $5,000 worth of silk, on which he puts a price of 75 cents a yard to the trade. He sells a certain portion of these goods at that price. The hon. Minister knows that it is customary for dealers to reduce the prices of their goods after a certain time, and when they are not selling as fast as it is desired. Suppose a merchant reduces the price of this silk to 60 cents or 50 cents a yard, and I happened to go to him as a purchaser, and buy these goods at 50 cents because he was anxious to get clear of them. Fashion, or some other reason, may intervene to make it necessary that he should get rid of these goods. If I brought my invoice to this country, showing that I bought these goods at 50 cents, although the price had been 75 cents two or three weeks before, would the hon. Minister insist on the price at which the goods were originally sold, or would he accept the price at which I actually bought the goods?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. My hon. friend (Mr. McDougall) is supposing an extreme case. Now, supposing a man in the United States marked goods on the first of the month at 75 cents, and then when the stock had run down, or for some reason or other, my hon. friend went over to the United States and bought them at 60 cents, the invoice would be made out at 60 cents, and if the merchant were selling these goods to his customers at 60 cents at the time he sold to the hon. gentleman, that would be the value for duty here. But if that merchant were selling his goods at 75 cents to everybody in the United States, notwithstanding that he sold them to the hon. gentleman for 60 cents, it would have to be stated in the invoice, on the margin or elsewhere, that 75 cents was the home consumption price, and we would collect duty on the 75 cents, though my hon. friend honestly bought them for 60 cents.

Mr. McDOUGALL. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) will look up his statement before six o'clock, he will find that the only construction that can be put upon it would be that the duty could be charged on the 75 cents, whether the dealer in New York reduced the price to his American customers or not. How is the Minister to determine as to the correctness of any information that comes to him with regard to the value of goods, contrary to the statement on the invoice. Suppose some one comes to the Minister and says: John Smith has goods invoiced at 60 cents a yard, but I bought the same line of goods in the United States for 75 cents. Then, the Minister would have to exact duty on 75 cents.

but according to the interpretation of the statute by the hon. member for York (Mr. Wallace), John Smith would not be obliged to pay beyond what the goods were selling for to other customers on the day he bought them.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That is right.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I do not understand how we can make the objection at the time of getting the invoice, because the man who sells the goods in the States can change his price from day to day as he has a right to. Because I was buying a larger quantity of goods or that the merchant wanted to get my custom, he might sell them at a few cents cheaper per yard to me, but I do not think that is a proper reason for the Minister to question the correctness of that invoice, and compel the importer to pay the duty upon a higher price. I do not see how it is possible to carry out that interpretation of the law without injustice somewhere.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The law is made by the Parliament, and not by the Customs Department.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I know that, but the Customs Department makes the regulations based on the law.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, but it is the law we are guided by in making the regulations.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Did this Parliament make the form of declaration?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Well, we all know that the Minister makes the form of declaration as he makes every regulation.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We have found that declaration to be a great improvement on the former system. While the law expressly declared that the duty shall be paid on the fair market value of the article in the country from whence it is exported the merchant there might see fit to reduce his price to a person coming from Canada, and we now require the importer who does know the prices prevailing, say in the United States, to declare that the prices at which he sold these goods for export are the fair average prices at which he sells them in his own country. He has a perfect right to sell them to a Canadian importer at a lower price if he wishes, but he must now state on the invoice what is the market price in the country of export. The law makes us charge the duty on that price, and the Customs Department simply administers the law. Under the old regulation, the manufacturer or merchant in the United States would simply state that the articles were sold for 60 cents. It would be a bona fide transaction, and that would not be a false declaration. But that is not the value the law fixes for duty. The value for duty would be the 75 cents, the price at which the goods are ordinarily sold in the country of production, and under the new certificate the man who sells the goods in the foreign country must declare that. When that invoice goes to the customs officers, the duty is levied on the 75 cents, the market price in the country of export, as the law requires, and the new declaration has done away, to a large extent, with amended entries.

Mr. QUINN. Does the Minister pretend that this is a new law?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No, but it is a new regulation.

Mr. QUINN. The law has been in existence for sixteen years.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I know that, but we are speaking of the new regulation which the department has adopted to carry out the law more effectually than it has been carried out.

Mr. QUINN. That regulation is in accordance with the law.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Certainly, with the intention that the law should be carried out.

Mr. WALLACE. We are simply asking a question and wanting an answer. The question is, supposing the invoice of the goods sold to the Canadian is the fair market value of the goods in the country where they are produced, what is required then?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I have told the hon. gentleman, but he seems to think he knows better. The declaration is put on every invoice, whether the prices are the same that prevail in Canada and the States or not. If the price in Canada is the same as the price in the States, there is nothing else on the invoice, but if the prices in the two countries vary, that has to be noted on the invoice.

Mr. QUINN. As I understand, there is a regulation which requires the seller of the goods to certify that the invoice is a true invoice, and that the prices are the fair market value of the goods in the country of production. I think that is the regulation that has always been in force.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Supposing a trader in New York is clearing out $1,000 worth of a line of goods, and his price is 70 cents a yard. Suppose he sells out the whole lot to three different parties, one buying $400 worth at the original market price, 70 cents; another, say, in Boston, buying $400 worth and getting 5 per cent discount; and a Canadian buying the remaining $400 worth and getting the same rate of discount. What kind of a declaration would the hon. gentleman expect the man to make with regard to the goods that came to Canada?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. In like quantity and condition at the time of the exportation.

Mr. McDOUGALL. To my mind it is impossible to carry out the regulation of the Minister. It is not worth the paper it is written on.

Mr. ROSAMOND. I think the explanation given by the Minister is a very reasonable one, and the regulation a proper one. But what I would like to know is how the Minister arrives at the 25 per cent basis on the goods from England which are partly of foreign manufacture.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It was an arbitrary figure fixed under the law by the Governor in Council.

Mr. ROSAMOND. I am inclined to think that it is rather an unreasonable arrangement, because it allows such a large proportion of the goods imported from Germany or France or Belgium to come in at the same rate of duty as goods imported from England. Another objection to it is that it gives labour in England an advantage over labour in Canada. Suppose a Canadian imports the same goods from Germany, he has to pay the full amount of the duty, and labour has to be put upon them in Canada afterwards, but the English importer gets the German goods free of duty, puts on 25 per cent of labour, and sends them to Canada at 25 per cent less duty than the Canadian importer paid on the German goods, which gives English labour an advantage to that extent over Canadian labour.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is clear that the hon. gentleman is right in that. The English manufacturer imports the goods from Germany for the purpose of adding 25 per cent to their value. The Canadian manufacturer imports the same kind of goods from Germany. The English manufacturer can import those goods into Canada at a lower rate of duty than the Canadian manufacturer can, and, therefore, so far as the protection to the Canadian manufacturer is concerned, we must deduct the difference from 26½ per cent of duty.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I see the point the hon. gentleman makes. I did not quite grasp it before.

Mr. HENDERSON. In the case referred to by the hon. member for North Lanark (Mr. Rosamond), may I ask the Minister whether he considers that he is giving the 25 per cent preference to Great Britain alone, or is he giving part of that preference to Germany and part to Great Britain?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It is a British preference.

Mr. HENDERSON. It seems to me that there is a preference given to Germany as well, because Germany is enabled to find a market in Canada for those goods at a reduced rate of duty. If 75 per cent of the value of the goods is of German origin, then Germany gets a preference to the extent of 75 per cent of the 25 per cent, and Britain only gets a preference on the remaining 25 per cent.

It seems to me that this preference is far more to the advantage of foreign countries than to Great Britain itself. I think this is a new revelation to the trade of the country. My impression is that it has not been generally understood. What the law says is that there must be a substantial portion of the labour British. It seems to me that 25 per cent would hardly be considered as a substantial portion of the labour in a great many instances. And if the smallest portion of the benefit by far is to be given to Britain, this is a revelation to the trade generally. The Canadian manufacturer has not so understood the law. The Canadian artisan certainly does not so understand it, but I hope he will better understand it before he has an opportunity of pronouncing his opinion upon it, because it is certainly very much against the interests of the Canadian working man that a preference should be given on goods coming in from Germany or from the United States to the extent of 75 per cent, and a preference given to the British manufacturer only to the extent of 25 per cent, and all these goods come into competition with the products of the Canadian artisan.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If it has not been understood, it is not for want of explanation. The idea that there is something new in this is entirely mistaken. The fact that the Government had to fix what might be regarded as a substantial portion was thoroughly understood, and that portion was 25 per cent has been thoroughly understood for a long time, and the hon. gentlemen are mistaken in assuming that there is anything new in it.

Mr. HENDERSON. It may be possible that in the House 25 per cent was mentioned, but I listened very carefully to the tariff discussion two years ago, and I have no recollection of ever having heard that the proportion was to be fixed at 25 per cent. When we were asked to enact a law providing that a substantial portion of the labour entering into any article of manufacture should be British, I do not think there were many hon. members who ever dreamed that 25 per cent was going to be considered by the Government as a substantial portion. The Government has fixed 25 per cent by Order in Council and not by statutory enactment. It is purely an administrative Act, and this House was not made cognizant of what the Government intended to do unless the hon. Minister's memory is better than mine, but I think that many members will agree with me that what proportion of labour would make a thing one of British manufacture was not really discussed in this House, and that the percentage is certainly very much lower than ever the House contemplated it should be when they gave their sanction to this law.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am perfectly certain that the fact that 25 per cent was established as the proportion is known throughout the trade, and anybody who has a practical interest in the matter has become aware of it. The hon. member for Halton takes the ground that this is not a sufficient preference to Great Britain.

Mr. HENDERSON. I take the ground that you are admitting too large a proportion of foreign goods.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The best answer to it would be in the form of a question. Does the hon. gentleman think that the British manufacturers would regard it as a greater preference if we were to oblige them to have 50 per cent of British labour enter into their manufactures? England does not produce the raw material of her manufactures. In a large number of articles she has to import the raw material. Therefore, the higher you make the percentage of British labour entering into an article, the greater the danger of lessening the preference to the British manufacturer. If my hon. friend thinks that we should make the percentage 50 per cent instead of 25 per cent, the effect would be to shut out a very considerable portion of British manufactured goods that now come into the country.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is just what I would want. I am a friend of the Canadian workingman before the British workingman, and for the protection of the Canadian artisan I want to narrow the scope as much as possible and admit as little foreign goods into the country at a low rate of duty as possible. The hon. Minister of Finance may look at it differently. He has two points of view from which to look at it. He wants revenue, and if he can bring in a larger amount of goods at a lower rate of duty, he knows he will have more money to spend, but is that in the interests of the Canadian workingman and our consuming population who are largely workingmen?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). Certainly.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not think it is. So long as a protective policy is in force, our workingmen ought to get a fair share.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend asks, if it is in the interests of the Canadian artisan. Perhaps my hon. friend and I may differ, but I think that it is even in the Canadian artisan's interest. Then, he asks, is it in the interest of the Canadian consumer? Undoubtedly it is. For he gets his goods at lower rates of duty. My hon.

friend has been more frank and candid than most of his associates. He has been frank enough to say that he does not want a British preference at all.

Mr. HENDERSON. Hear, hear.

Mr. CLARKE. No.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, he does. He says "hear, hear," and endorses it now. That is the position of hon. gentlemen opposite, only they are not all as candid as my hon. friend. He really wants to shut out the portion of British manufactured goods that now comes in. A number of hon. gentlemen opposite have tried to show that we are not getting many British goods under the preferential rate, and unfortunately, I must say, the increase has not been as large as many hoped for, but in principle, hon. gentlemen opposite, as represented by the hon. member for Halton, do not want British goods to come in at all. He is a protectionist, and he wants to keep the Canadian market entirely for Canadian manufactures. From his point of view, I do not complain of the position he takes, but I protest against hon. gentlemen opposite taking that ground while professing to be in favour of British preferential trade.

Mr. HENDERSON. The hon. Minister has, perhaps, not fairly stated my position. I am a protectionist, and I do not want British preference until we get preference from Britain.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Let that be the understanding. The hon. gentleman is against the preference we now give to Britain, and I presume he is not peculiar in his views, but represents his party generally, and we may understand that the position of hon. gentlemen opposite is that they are opposed to the preferential tariff, under which we agree to admit the goods of Britain at lower rates than those of foreign countries.

Mr. HENDERSON. Until we get a preference from Britain.

Mr. ROSAMOND. We may all be more or less in favour of a preferential tariff, so far as Britain is concerned, but what we object to is giving this preference to 75 per cent of goods imported from Germany and France. The Finance Minister said a moment ago that there might be 50 per cent of raw material in English manufactures. I do not think there is anything manufactured in England in which there is as much as 50 per cent raw material. And in this case there may be a portion of it manufactured in Germany, which would not be raw material exactly. There may be cloths or other things manufactured in Germany and sent to England, and finished, thus putting on the final 25 per cent of the value of the goods, and exported to Canada. What I object to is, that, under the guise of a preferential tariff, you are giving a preference to 75 per cent of these goods manufactured in Germany, France and Belgium, and I do not think that is in the interest of the Canadian workingman.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) said that the increase of trade with Great Britain was not as large as they had hoped for. The tariff of hon. gentlemen opposite was constructed for a purpose, and that purpose it has largely accomplished. Having reduced the duties on goods which we import largely from the United States, they may expect an increase in the imports. But having first increased the duties on goods which we mainly import from Great Britain, they cannot expect a large increase of trade merely because they cut off one-quarter of this increased duty. He wants to know what the opinion is on this side of the House, and says we are opposed to give a preferential duty to Great Britain. The hon. gentleman will find this side of the House united in favour of a declaration that we want to give Great Britain a preference, and we want Great Britain to give us a preference at the same time. The Government know that they could have secured that boon to the people of this country. But it could only be gained as the result of conferences and negotiations, and they felt that they had no time for that, that they had to meet Parliament with some kind of tariff, and so they said: We will spring this measure of preferential trade with Great Britain upon Parliament. But we say that if you can make reciprocal arrangements with the people of the United States, much more can you make reciprocal arrangements with the people of Great Britain with mutual advantage to both ourselves and them. But while gentlemen opposite profess to be in favour of that, they have not raised a finger to secure a preferential arrangement with the people of Great Britain; they have never attempted to make an arrangement which would be mutually advantageous to the two countries. Before the election of 1896, the Premier pledged himself, in his Toronto, London and other speeches, to try and make a preferential arrangement with Great Britain. But they have merely used this preference as a disguise—and it is a disguise that but poorly conceals their object—to strike down our Canadian manufacturers. With the worldwide prosperity, in which Canada shares, the artisans and manufacturers of this country are doing pretty well—no thanks to any legislation inaugurated by hon. gentlemen opposite. The hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) said that he did not know that when the tariff of 1897 was brought down, that the proportion of British manufacture in goods to entitle them to a preference should be 25 per cent. But the Minister of Finance says: You knew very well, for it was discussed in this House. Why, the percentage was not then decided, so how could it be discussed? It was left with the Governor in Council, or, practically, the Minister of Customs. What is the date of that fixing of that 25 per cent?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It was the 14th July, 1898.

Mr. WALLACE. The tariff is dated 13th June, 1897, so it was a year and a month after the tariff. How could the member for Halton know what it was? Now, as to the merits of this 25 per cent. We will take the case of woollen goods. The wool has been produced in some foreign country, it has been made into yarn in some foreign country, it has been woven into cloth in some foreign country. Then it is taken to England, fulled and pressed, and perhaps dyed, altogether a small expenditure is made upon it. Thus it becomes "British goods," and when it is sent to Canada, Canadians say: We are delighted to receive these goods, because they are made in England, and we will take off 25 per cent of the duty. And as to that 25 per cent reduction, by the way, it is most misleading. If the rate of duty is 30 per cent, and 25 per cent is taken off, the general impression is, that the goods are entered at only 5 per cent. Instead of that, the 25 per cent means only one-quarter of the duty, or, in the case I have supposed, 7½ per cent to be taken off. That is doing an injustice to the Canadian artisan, as well as to the British artisan, for whose benefit this law was supposed to be made. The Canadian artisan does not feel it so much in time of prosperity, but he will feel it in the future, and he is beginning to feel it now, as the Trade and Navigation Returns show—a point to which I will call the attention of the House at a later period. But I call attention to this one point, that the 25 per cent labour provision in Great Britain is an injustice to the Canadian people, to the Canadian Government, to the Canadian treasury, and to the British artisan as well.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I was going to ask my hon. friend from Cape Breton (Mr. McDougall), as we have discussed these matters very thoroughly now, if he will not give me this $107,250 to pay salaries and contingent expenses of the several ports in his province without any more discussion?

Mr. McDOUGALL. I will be glad to do that when my hon. friend will give me a little information about how his business is conducted in those ports. I want to know who had charge of the prosecution against a number of parties charged with smuggling goods at the port of North Sydney and neighbouring ports in the county of Cape Breton, in January, 1898. In order to assist my hon. friend in getting at the information, I call his attention to page T-77 of the Auditor General's Report. I want to know who had charge of the prosecution of those cases for smuggling at North Sydney?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. My hon. friend was kind enough to send me a note saying that he would ask for information about this. I have not had time to get all the information he wants, but I will give him the rest on the supplementary Estimates. I may tell him that Mr. Mackenzie, of the Department of Justice, had to do with most of them.

Mr. McDOUGALL. It seems rather unfair. In the afternoon I sent a note across the floor to the hon. gentleman that I would bring this matter up.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, I admit that; and I handed the note to my deputy, but it was late and office hours were over, and he has not been able to get full information. But there is an item for $3,000 in the supplementary Estimates upon which he can discuss the matter. I do not wish to put him off. In the meanwhile I will listen to my hon. friend, and answer him as well as I can.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I may not be able to be here when the hon. gentleman brings up his supplementary Estimates.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have no doubt the hon. Minister will furnish the information to-morrow.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I made an earnest effort to get it.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Will my hon. friend allow me to discuss it to-morrow, if we are on the Estimates?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Do you want one of these items to stand?

Mr. McDOUGALL. Yes.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Would my hon. friend tell me the points of information that he wants?

Mr. McDOUGALL. I want to get the names of the lawyers, some of whom I find in the Auditor General's Report, and the amount of money received by them. There are certain payments in the Auditor General's Report, but the principal payment is not there at all. I want also to know how much money was recovered from the different parties against whom actions were taken, what was the final result of those actions, against how many parties actions were taken, how many actions were concluded and how many were dropped?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is another matter I wish to bring to the attention of the Minister. A duty is charged on business catalogues which come in by express, whereas no duty is charged when they come by mail. I believe the matter has been brought to the attention of the hon. gentleman by some of the Halifax merchants, they do not understand why there should be any distinction. It has created some little annoyance.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I understand that business catalogues are dutiable, and the custom has been, where not more than three come in by mail together, to let them in free, but where the quantity is larger they are charged according to the clause in the Customs Act.

Mr. QUINN. Before this item passes, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Customs if any progress has been made by the Government towards meeting the wishes of the different boards of trade in the Dominion with the view of establishing a customs court, or of providing some process by which the difficulties arising between merchants and the customs authorities may be tried in a summary manner and that the expenses which now attends the trial of a case of that kind may be avoided. I understand that, for some years, the boards of trade of Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton and other cities have been petitioning the department and the Government, asking that some commission or court, be established for the summary trial of these cases, in order to lessen the expense of the trial of difficulties arising between merchants and the Government as to the non-payment of duties and other matters. I brought the matter up last session, and the hon. Minister told me that it was under consideration at that time. I would like to know if any decision has been arrived at, and if it is the intention of the Government to establish such a court.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think it was more a board of experts that they wanted, for the purpose of uniform valuation. We have a board of experts, composed of the different Dominion appraisers, of which the Commissioner of Customs is chairman, and of which the chief check clerk in the department is a member. I do not think they asked for a court to deal with the question of under-valuation or the imposition of extra duties. That duty is imposed upon the department and upon the Minister, under the law. I think what my hon. friend alludes to is, that the boards of trade were anxious for a board of experts who might be possessed of expert knowledge and be able to deal with a question more rapidly than it is possible under the present method. We have not been able to carry out that suggestion fully, but we have practically brought about that condition. If we had a board of experts, and they had to examine all the cases that came before them at the different ports, it would, after all, come down to this, that we would have to rely upon the judgment of each expert in his line: that is, the hardware man would have to decide the case if the question were in regard to an article of hardware, and a dry goods man if it were in regard to a question of dry goods, so that I do not think you would get any better judgment in that way than we can get at the present time. I think that, although our customs board might perhaps meet a little oftener, it still gives importers a fair valuation. What merchants complain of, perhaps, though not wholly, more than anything else is that there is a difficulty in securing a uniformity of valuation at different ports. At the large ports we have what we consider capable appraisers, in their different lines, such as hardware, dry goods, &c., but at the smaller ports, where there is just the collector, and perhaps a landing waiter, the collector has to use his judgment as to the value of an article entered for duty. We have tried to remedy that difficulty by applying, in a greater measure, the system that was in vogue in the time of the hon. gentleman who was administering the department before I took charge. We have supplemented that by providing that after the appraiser at Montreal has arrived at his decision, from his technical knowledge, as to what is a fair value of an article, bulletins shall be sent to the various ports informing the collectors of the decision that has been arrived at. I think we have made an improvement in regard to that matter, because it ensures a greater uniformity in valuation than was before possible.

Mr. QUINN. I understand that when the same system was adopted in the olden times the complaint existed. The great complaint made by the merchants of Montreal is that there is not a uniformity of valuation throughout the country. It is said, and I think with justice, that goods are brought in at Montreal and assessed at a higher value than they would be assessed at other ports. Of course, this places the Montreal merchants at a disadvantage. The hon. Minister says that he has improved the system in vogue under the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) when he was Controller of Customs. I think the hon. member for West York will bear me out in saying that every effort was made at that time to make the information known throughout the Dominion as to the valuation upon particular items, and that it was impossible to get the officers of the department to make the same valuation at different ports. The hon. Minister will find the same difficulty that was found then. What the Board of Trade of Montreal asked for was that a board of valuers should be established in the Dominion of Canada, and the plan laid down was that one member should be taken from the lower provinces, one from the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, and one from the western provinces, that they should make a uniform rate on all goods imported into the country, and that after they had adopted a uniform rate it should be notified to the collectors of customs, so that every collector would be bound to impose duty at the rate established by this board. In case of difficulty arising about an article coming in at any port, and in case the collector was not in a position to give a valuation to it, it would be his duty to refer the subject to the consideration of the board, which would establish a value for the article, and state under what head it came for the imposition of duty. I do not think the hon. Minister of Customs has done anything new by trying to apprise every collector of customs of the valuations that are given in Montreal, because the hon. member for West York tried the very same thing, and it did not work. I draw the attention of the Government to this condition of affairs and ask my hon. friend the Minister of Customs to look up the petitions that have been sent in from the Board of Trade of Montreal. I am sure he will find a great deal of information in this petition, because, I am informed by prominent members of the board of trade, that specific cases have been mentioned where under-valuation has been practiced at other ports as against Montreal. This is a great injustice and one that deserves attention.

Mr. WALLACE. I am obliged to differ, not only with my hon. friend from Montreal (Mr. Quinn), but with the hon. Minister of Customs as well. I think the Department of Customs may fairly congratulate themselves on the fact that all complaints in that regard have pretty well disappeared. I know it was so many years ago, and I assume, under the same officers, it is the same to-day. Of course, there is always a warm rivalry between Toronto and Montreal, and the complaint has been that goods were valued at a higher rate of duty in one city than in another. Toronto complains that goods were valued at a higher rate for duty there than they were in Montreal and Montreal merchants were making the same complaint as against Toronto. My recollection is, that a most capable officer of that department, Mr. Bredner, was detailed to compare the entries in Montreal and Toronto, with a view of making them uniform, and then all complaints practically ceased. When complaints of that kind came in afterwards from the cities of Montreal and Ottawa, I challenged the merchants to point to a single article on which the duty was higher in one place than another, or on which the duty was not uniform. This complaint of want of uniformity disappeared, I might say, and I believe that the checking branch of the department is most important. I call the attention of the Government to the fact that they should have in the Customs Department at Ottawa, not only the customs entry, but a copy of the invoice, as is required in the United States.

When an importer makes a copy of the invoice for the customs and another copy for the consignee, he should be obliged to make out a third copy, which would be sent to Ottawa, so that the checking clerk here could go over both the entry and the invoice. The exporters in England and the European countries have to do that for the United States, and it would be no hardship to make them furnish three invoices for Canada, one of which should be sent to the checking clerk at Ottawa.

Mr. QUINN. Notwithstanding the comfort that the hon. Minister may derive from the congratulations of the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace), I think it will be found that all complaints have not ceased in Montreal. The complaints may be smouldering, or the business people may think there is no use complaining, or that the Government in time will remedy the grievances, but there is no doubt that you can hear every day in Montreal complaints about the administration of the Customs Department, complaints which have existed for many years. They exist to-day, just as they did before, and I draw the attention of the Minister to that fact.

Mr. WALLACE. They exist since the new Government came in.

Mr. QUINN. They may have been created since the new Government came in, as my hon. friend (Mr. Wallace) suggests, but at any rate they exist to-day, and if the Minister will read the petitions sent here by the board of trade, he will see what these complaints are.

Mr. TAYLOR. I want to draw the attention of the Minister of Customs to what I consider a grave injustice done to an old and faithful servant of the Crown, in the person of Dr. F. B. McCormick, formerly customs officer at Pelee Island. He was an officer for a great many years, and after the general elections of 1896 it was anticipated that there might be complaints against him, and his son wrote a letter to the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), and received a reply from the Prime Minister assuring him that in case there were any charges made against his father, he would have every opportunity of rebutting them. A short time after the right hon. the Prime Minister wrote that, a letter was sent from the Department of Customs dismissing this old and efficient officer. I will read the correspondence, and I will ask the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) to explain the difference in their statements, because the letter of the Prime Minister is emphatic, that nothing will be done against Mr. McCormick without full and ample investigation. On March 3rd, 1897, Mr. H. M. McCormick wrote to the Prime Minister of Canada as follows:—

Detroit, Mich., March 3, 1897.

To the Hon. Wilfrid Laurier,
Premier of Canada, Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir,—I come to you in the capacity of a son, of a former British subject, and a loyal Canadian.

My father, Dr. F. B. McCormick, of Pelee Island, Lake Erie, one of the old McCormick family, always loyal British partisans and staunch followers of the Crown, has been accused by personal and political enemies of many things falsely, and may by their machinations be in time deprived of his position as deputy collector of customs for the island.

You are a very busy man, but justice even in humble quarters should not cry in vain; and I most respectfully yet earnestly petition you to inquire into the real merits of this case, and I shall be glad to furnish you the fullest information from the most reliable sources at my command.

To you, the leader of a loyal and sturdy people, I appeal, without my father's knowledge, that justice may be done, and that an aging man may retain the position he has so justly earned and faithfully filled.

And in granting my request you will add another link—that of gratitude—to the many that already bind me to the motherland.

I have, Sir, the honour to be,

Your most obedient servant,

(Sgd.) H. M. McCORMICK.

To that letter the Prime Minister replied :

Ottawa, 5th March, 1897.

H. M. McCormick, Esq.,
72 Home Bank Building,
Detroit, Mich., U.S.A.

Dear Sir,—I have your favour of the 3rd inst. As you are aware, the Department of Customs is under the control of the Hon. Wm. Paterson, a most careful and upright man, and you may be sure that should any accusations be made against your father, they will be carefully considered, and your father will be allowed every opportunity of defending himself and of rebutting the charges made against him. I hand over your letter to Mr. Paterson, with the recommendation that he should give it his best attention.

Yours very sincerely,

(Sgd.) WILFRID LAURIER.

On the 3rd of April, 1897, a few weeks afterwards, Mr. McCormick received the following letter from Mr. McDougall, the Commissioner of Customs :—

Ottawa, 3rd April, 1897.

F. B. McCormick, Esq.,
Southport, Pelee Island.

Sir,—I have it in command to acquaint you that His Excellency the Governor General in Council has been pleased to dispense with your services as a sub-collector in Her Majesty's customs at the outport of Southport, under survey of the port of Amherstburg, Ont., the Order in Council being dated the 8th January, 1897.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

(Sgd.) JOHN McDOUGALD,

Commissioner.

Through Collector of Customs, Amherstburg, Ont.

On the 12th of April, 1897, another letter was addressed to the Prime Minister by Mr. F. B. McCormick, as follows :—

Mr. TAYLOR.

South Pelee P.O., Ont., Can.,

April 12th, 1897.

Hon. Wilfrid Laurier, M.P.,
Premier, &c., Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir,—The letter written by you to my son, Hugh M. McCormick, of Detroit, Michigan, lies before me, dated "Ottawa, 6th March, 1897." Beside it lies a short note from the Commissioner of Customs, Mr. John McDougald, a copy of which I inclose. I cannot believe that you were cognizant of the statements made in this last letter when your letter was written. From it, it would appear that I was actually dismissed from the post of sub-collector of customs at this port by Order in Council two months before your letter was written. This too, without the slightest chance to defend myself, nay, even without an intimation that I was put upon trial. Nearly three months after, I am peremptorily dismissed.

Upon your promise in your letter contained, that I should have a fair trial if accused and opportunity for defence, I fully relied; for, Conservative though I am, I had entire faith in your word as a gentleman and man of honour, as well as in your directing power as Premier of the Dominion of Canada.

Granted, even for the sake of illustration, that I am, or was, guilty of all the offences contained in the catalogue of the civil service, would I not be entitled to defence?

It is the boast, as it is, thank God, the practice, that under British law no man shall be condemned until proven guilty of the offence as charged.

Is it possible that the civil service of Canada is the only station of life within the Empire in which no defence is allowed to those against whom error or crime is alleged?

I cannot, Sir, I again repeat, believe this of yourself, and ask, as a matter not only of public duty on your part, but also of common justice to myself, that you will look into the matter forthwith.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Yours very truly,

(Sgd.) F. B. McCORMICK.

To that letter the following reply was sent :

Ottawa, 15th April, 1897.

F. B. McCormick, Esq., M.D.,
South Pelee, Ont.

Dear Sir,—I am requested by the Prime Minister to acknowledge the receipt of your favour of the 12th instant, and to inform you that he will call the immediate attention of Mr. Paterson to the matter therein referred to.

Yours truly,

(Sgd.) RUDOLPH BOUDREAU.

To this Mr. McCormick replied :

Southport, Pelee Island, May 3, 1897.

Hon. Wilfrid Laurier, M.P.,
Premier, &c., Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir,—At this date I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your reply to my note of the 12th ultimo, your reply bearing date the 15th ultimo.

The matter being referred to the hon. the Controller of Customs, I awaited his reply to your inquiry.

Permit me to again draw your attention to the matter, and to very respectfully solicit your early consideration of my case.

I have the honour to remain, sir,

Yours very sincerely,

(Sgd.) F. B. McCORMICK.

To this the following reply was sent to Mr. McCormick :—

Ottawa, 28th May, 1897.

F. B. McCormick, Esq., M.D.,
South Pelee P. O., Ont.

Sir—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 12th ult. Owing to the press of work consequent upon the tariff revision, a reply to your letter has been overlooked.

The reason for your dismissal appears to be that the manner in which you have conducted the customs business on the island has not been considered satisfactory.

The chief inspector has reported to the effect that the public convenience will be best served by changing the outport from Southport to West Dock, as has been done.

The Order in Council directs that your services be dispensed with, and the notice sent you was in accordance with such direction.

Your salary will be paid to the time you received notice dispensing with your services.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,

(Sgd.) JOHN McDOUGALD,
Commissioner.

This is the correspondence that took place between the Prime Minister and Mr. McCormick's son, and with Mr. McCormick himself; and yet, without notice, this gentleman was dismissed, the reason assigned in one case being that he had not attended faithfully to his duties, and in the other case that it suited the public convenience to abolish his port and open a port at another place. I claim that a great injustice has been done to Mr. McCormick, particularly after he had received the assurance of the Prime Minister that if a complaint were made, it would be fully investigated, and that he would have every opportunity of refuting any charge made against him. I think the Prime Minister ought to redeem the promise he made, and have the case fully inquired into, and justice done to Mr. McCormick.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have just a word to say to my hon. friend. He will readily admit that it is not possible for me to give him any answer at all or any information on this matter, as it is two years old, and the hon. gentleman has not refreshed my memory. If he had informed me that he was going to bring the matter up, I would have conferred with the Minister of Customs; but being taken unawares, it is impossible for me to give him any answer at this moment.

Mr. CLANCY. It appears that the Minister of Customs failed to comply with the request of the Prime Minister. If the case is two years old, I am afraid that the Minister of Customs is the sinner. He either shut his eyes to the request of the First Minister, or in that case, as in most other cases, he turned a deaf ear to it. It is always better to ignore a matter of this kind than to bring the alleged culprits to the bar and give them a trial. The only way to be sure of dismissing a man is never to give him a trial. I do not see the Postmaster General here, but I recall the fact that he dismissed two or three officials and gave them a trial afterwards, when it was found that they were not guilty; but I never heard of them being restored to office. In the face of the letter of the Prime Minister, declaring that Mr. McCormick should have a fair trial, and the other letter, stating that he would call the attention of the Minister of Customs to the matter, I think we ought to have an explanation from the Minister of Customs.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I would be very glad to give what information I could in respect to the matter; but, as the Prime Minister has said, it happened some two years ago, and I would be afraid to speak with any degree of confidence as to the merits of the case. I rather judge from the letter of the commissioner which has been read, that the chief inspector had visited the island, and reported with reference to the conduct of the officer and with reference to the office itself. I am only judging from what is stated in the letter, as I have not the facts distinctly before me. I do not wish, of course, to say anything that might prejudice the gentleman; but my impression and that of the commissioner is, that he had not been wholly satisfactory in the discharge of his duties before I took office at all—that he had been either under suspension—I had better not say that, if the hon. gentleman shakes his head, as I do not want to do the gentleman an injustice; but I fancy that if hon. gentlemen were conversant with the facts, they would admit that unjust action was not taken. It is not my desire to do injustice, and, as far as I am aware, I have not done so in this case.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would like to draw the attention of the Minister of Customs to the fact that he has not met the case at all. I will assume that we have all the facts in this correspondence.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I would not like to admit that.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, we have all the correspondence before us, and the facts lie upon the surface. They are these. An application was made by the son of an office holder to the right hon. Prime Minister, stating that his father had reason to expect that charges would be made against him, and begging the right hon. gentleman to secure him a hearing in case any were made. That is undeniable. But the gravamen of the case is this, that the right hon. gentleman, in acknowledging the letter, over his own signature, assured the son:

You may be sure that should any accusations be made against your father, they will be carefully considered, and your father will be allowed every opportunity of defending himself and rebutting the charges made against him. I shall hand over your letter to Mr. Paterson, with the recommendation to give it his best attention.

The right hon. Prime Minister also in that letter gave a very high character—I will not say too high—to the Minister of Customs as a very careful and upright man, and in this way gave the assurance to this gentleman that his father's case was in the hands of a man of that character. With such a certificate of character, the Minister of Customs should have been doubly careful not to forfeit that high character. The right hon. Minister followed that up by giving this gentleman the positive assurance that if any charges were made against the father, the father would be given the opportunity of meeting and rebutting them.

The PRIME MINISTER. How is it known that he was not?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. By the correspondence.

The PRIME MINISTER. Only one side of the correspondence is there.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is all here.

The PRIME MINISTER. Only one side of it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If my right hon. friend will examine the correspondence, he will find that it is continuous and complete, because when this man complained of the action taken by the Minister of Customs, the Minister did not say there had been any investigation, but rests the dismissal completely on report from the inspector of Customs that this man had not performed his duty in a satisfactory manner.

The PRIME MINISTER. Hear, hear.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This official held in his hand the pledge of the Prime Minister that if any charges were made against him, he would be given the opportunity of rebutting them, and I have no doubt that the right hon. gentleman sent the Minister of Customs both Mr. McCormack's letter and his own reply to that letter. The Minister of Customs does not pretend that this man was ever given any opportunity to defend himself, but simply says that he was dismissed on the statement of the inspector of Customs that he did not perform his duties in a satisfactory manner. The question is not whether he performed his duties satisfactorily or otherwise, but it is that although he had the positive assurance from the Prime Minister that he would be given the opportunity to rebutt any charge brought against him, he never was given that opportunity, but was dismissed on the mere statement of the inspector of customs. We have, in addition, on the 8th February, 1897, an affidavit made by Hugh H. McCormack, that the inclosed are copies of the originals in his possession, and to the best of his knowledge and belief they are true copies.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

He gives the entire correspondence and swears to their accuracy, and this correspondence shows that the pledge of the Prime Minister was never carried out. I do not hold the right hon. gentleman responsible in the slightest degree, but the responsibility rests upon the Minister of Customs, and I doubt whether, in the face of these papers, the Prime Minister would be able to again give him a certificate of being such a careful and upright man, who would carry out the pledges, as he is bound to do, of the leader of the Government.

The PRIME MINISTER. I appeal to the sense of fairness of my hon. friend and the House as well, against the attitude which he has just taken. Nothing can be more unfair than this style of argument. Here is a transaction which took place two years ago. The hon. gentleman will not pretend to carry in his memory what took place in his office two years ago or even last year. If the hon. gentleman who brought the matter up had notified my hon. friend the Minister of Customs, my hon. friend would have looked up the record and been able to show the other side of the case. There is another side to the case. It is of record that the office of Mr. McCormack was visited by the inspector. I do not know whether the charges were brought to the attention of Mr. McCormack or whether he was asked to reply or not.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The evidence is there over the signature of the commissioner of customs.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend presents the case from the side of the man who was dismissed, and who complains, of course, that he was wrongly dismissed. But there is another side to the case, the side of the department. Does my hon. friend pretend that it would not be well to have, not only the correspondence he read here, but also the report of the inspector on which this man was dismissed. When we have the two versions of the case, my hon. friend the Minister of Customs, will be ready to meet any charges which may be made. It is most unfair to hold the Minister of Customs responsible unless he was notified in advance, and prepared to meet any charge. The hon. gentleman complains that this man was dismissed without being heard, and blames my hon. friend for not having given him the opportunity of defending himself. When the case is brought up at a later day, and the report of the inspector laid before the House, it will be found that the Minister of Customs did give the matter every attention and that justice was done to Mr. McCormack.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. My hon. friend will find that this correspondence contains within itself absolute proof that it is full, complete and absolute proof that the pledge given by the Prime Minister was not carried out and that the man was dismissed in violation of that pledge without any hearing. I hold in my hand a letter addressed by him to the Prime Minister, in which he says :

Upon your promise in your letter contained, that I should be given a fair trial, if accused of any offence, I fully rely, for, Conservative though I am, I had entire faith in your word as a gentleman and man of honour, as well as in your position of Premier of the Dominion. The letter written me by my son lies opposite dated Ottawa, 6th March, 1897, and opposite it lies a short note from you.

That was the letter declaring he should have the opportunity of rebutting any charges which might be brought against him. He said :

Opposite it lies a short note from the Commissioner of Customs, Mr. John McDougald, a copy of which I inclose. I cannot believe that you were cognizant of the statements made in this last letter when your letter was written. From it it would appear that I was actually dismissed from the post of sub-collector of customs at this port by Order in Council two months before your letter was written, this too, without the slightest chance to defend myself, nay, even without an intimation that I was upon trial.

In reply to the letter there is no statement: You were told what the charges against you were and had an opportunity to refute them; and in reply to the application as to the cause of the dismissal he is informed by the Commissioner of Customs that his letter of the 12th ult. was received, and the reason for his dismissal appears to be the manner in which he had conducted the customs business on the Island had not been considered satisfactory.

Mr. TAYLOR. Read the next paragraph.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (reading).

The chief inspector has reported to the effect that the public convenience will be best served by changing the outport from Southport to West Dock, as has been done.

The evidence is all here that though the inspector reported against him he had no information that such a report had been made nor did he have an opportunity to vindicate himself. I am not going into the question of what the position was; I am dealing with the statement that his case should be heard and he would have an opportunity to defend himself, which was not carried out by the Minister of Customs. There is something in what my right hon. friend says that there was no notice given of these matters. But there are no means of dealing with such questions when items of this kind come up. I know that this gentleman does not come here for the first time two years afterwards. He immediately sent forward his communication. But waiting for the opportunity afforded by the customs Estimates to deal with the matter, it was passed over and there was delay also because of the absence of the party to whom the papers were sent.

Mr. BENNETT. In connection with the dismissals in the province of Ontario—

Mr. CHAIRMAN (Mr. Ellis). This item does not deal with Ontario.

Mr. BENNETT. But I understand that the discussion has been general and we have been talking about dismissals in Ontario. I desire to call attention to the case of John Galna, who was the landing waiter or occupied some other position in connection with the customs at Parry Sound. After the elections of June, 1896, complaints were made of the conduct of Mr. Galna, and it was said he had been active in the election contest. In the month of March, a considerable time elapsing, the intimation was made to Mr. Galna that an investigation would be held as to his case. But evidently the department did not feel that, with the evidence before them, the case was a very strong one, because it was not until the latter part of July that the investigation was commenced. I have in my hand a copy of the evidence taken on that occasion. A Mr. Woodyatt, who is the police magistrate, I believe, in Brantford, was appointed to conduct the investigation and about the 1st October he arrived at a decision which was communicated to the Minister of Customs; and on the strength of the report, I presume, the Minister of Customs dispensed with the services of Mr. Galna and he was accordingly apprised to that effect somewhere in the month of December, 1897. Mr. Galna having been notified of his dismissal placed himself in communication with the Minister in November, 1898. About the 11th January, 1898, he wrote to the Minister asking what the report of the investigating officer was, and on the 12th January the Minister's secretary wrote stating he had his request for the report, and in reply begged to say that "the Minister does not see his way clear to furnish" him a copy of the report. I submit that it is very unfair to Mr. Galna that the Minister refuses him a copy of this report. The evidence was heard in Parry Sound, and I am sure that, irrespective of politics, the people think the report could not have been averse to the officer owing to the contradictory evidence as to his acts of partisanship, and owing to the further fact that the things complained of were of a most trivial nature. I submit that in fairness to Mr. Galna, the Minister should now afford him the slight satisfaction of knowing what Mr. Woodyatt really did report. It would be unfair to have a man placed on trial and have the jury retire and then be sentenced by the judge without knowing what the jury had found. That is Mr. Galna's position to-day. The case is all the more remarkable in that neighbourhood owing to the fact that Mr. Watson, who was collector of customs at Collingwood, under whose review Mr. Galna was owing to his occupying a subordinate position, was a Liberal, and during all the eighteen years of Conservative Administration he had taken a strong part in the elections. I am told he went so far as not only to attend public meetings but to attend conventions of the Liberal party. And when people see that he was allowed to perform such acts of citizenship as he saw fit and to take any part in politics he pleased, not only without being dismissed but without being reprimanded, they contrast that with the case of Mr. Galna, who knows that he has been dismissed and does not know what the finding of the commissioner has been. I think the Minister would be doing only tardy justice to Mr. Galna if he would afford him at least the poor satisfaction of knowing what the commissioner's finding was.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I do not remember that case very distinctly, but as the hon. gentleman states, it was an investigation by Mr. Woodyatt, of Brantford, who gave him a fair trial. I think there were two cases; one was the case of Mr. Galna, of Brantford, and the other of Mr. Hogg, of Collingwood. I think Mr. Hogg also wrote me, and wanted to get a copy of that letter, and I took the ground that I was not at liberty to give papers out of the office on the request of individuals, but if any motion was made in the House for those papers they would be brought down. The member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) gave notice of a motion for a return in the case of Mr. Hogg. I have it in my desk, and would have been glad to do the same with reference to Mr. Galna. I think Mr. Hogg took the ground that he thought there would be no report, and that the finding of the magistrate would not be against him. But I think the papers disclosed that he was mistaken. I am sure that if a report is brought down with reference to Mr. Galna, it will be found that the case was sufficiently established. However, I speak with some uncertainty, not having the papers before me. I would have no objection to the hon. gentleman moving for the papers.

Mr. BENNETT. I have to thank the Minister for recalling the case of Mr. Hogg, of Collingwood, for while I have not seen the evidence in that case, I have been assured that the principal witness against him was this Mr. Watson, who was collector at the port while Mr. Hogg was in the subordinate position of a landing waiter. The reports, if correct, go to show the style of man that Mr. Watson was, for during the 18 years he was there under a Conservative Administration, and while Mr. Hogg had been an officer under him, he had carefully kept tab on every movement of Mr. Hogg, and when the day came for a change in the Government, he then took the position of an informer against his subordinate. If that is the fact, it can only provoke reprisals when the whirligig of time brings its changes. In such case, doubtless the same justice will be dealt out to Mr. Watson that he has dealt out to others. I would ask the Minister if he would, in an informal manner, communicate with Mr. Galna and let him have a copy of the report, because to-day the opinion of Mr. Galna and his friends is that he has been harshly dealt with. Still, should the report of the commissioner be adverse to Mr. Galna, then the Minister will be justified in the stand that he has taken. I would ask him to have the report sent to Mr. Galna.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. member is under the same impression with reference to Mr. Hogg as to Mr. Galna. I have that return in my desk, and will lay it on the Table of the House as soon as the Speaker takes the Chair to-night. The hon. gentleman will have an opportunity of looking through it, and I think he will find that he is mistaken in that case. I feel positive that he is also mistaken in the case of Mr. Galna. The same magistrate investigated both cases, and the testimony is there. Mr. Watson did not make any complaint; he was only called as a witness.

Mr. BENNETT. I did not say that Mr. Watson was complainant, but that he was a witness against Mr. Hogg.

Mr. McDUGALL. I ask the committee to excuse me for referring again to the subject which we were discussing a few minutes ago. My attention was called to the discussion which took place on this subject a year ago, and which will be found on page 3732 of the "Hansard" of last year. It will be seen that that discussion was based upon the presumption that the preferential tariff would only apply to that portion which was the product of British manufacture, or which had entered into the make-up in England. Now, to make that clear to my hon. friend, I will read what took place:

Mr. McDUGALL. Referring to the point that the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Wood) speaks so lightly of, I would like to ask the hon. Finance Minister what there is in these resolutions that would prevent the exporting houses of Germany, Belgium or France from sending the cheap products that enter into the manufacture of certain lines of goods to England, putting them together in England, and then exporting them to this country, without paying the duty that would otherwise be imposed upon them. Take, for instance, the article of ladies' hats, which might consist of ribbons, feathers, velvets, laces and a number of other articles, all of which might be manufactured in foreign countries and be worked into hats in England. How can it be expected that the customs officers in this country will be able to tell where any of those articles come from that enter into the composition of a hat made in England. I am satisfied it would be impossible. The same argument might be applied to hundreds of other articles. Take, for instance, mantles, certain lines of dress goods, boots and shoes, woollen and silk goods, socks, stockings, ties, buttons, in all of which the cheap products that enter into their manufacture may be made out of England, but put together in that country, and thence imported into Canada, under this reduction. In what way are the officers of customs going to be able to tell where any of these products were originally manufactured?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman could not have been present when I previously answered the same question. It is difficult to tell exactly how it will be done, and that is the reason why we should not endeavour to do it. The object of the clause is to give the Minister of Customs power to deal with the cases as they present themselves. If, in the case of hats, it is apparent to the Minister of Customs that only a small part of the work was done in England, and that it was practically of foreign manufacture, sent to England to evade the law, the Minister would exclude it from the effect of this clause.

Well, now, what is that small portion?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Less than 25 per cent.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Well, the Minister should have given the House an idea of what the small portion was.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. You have it now.

Mr. McDOUGALL. But it is very contradictory.

I do not see how by any words we can meet the difficulties, and I think it much better to leave the matter to the discretion of the Minister.

It is very strange that the Government, if they considered what was to be the effect of preferential tariff, were not able to come to some understanding as to what the effect of it would be:

I do not pretend that you can define the exact way in which this difficulty can be met, but everything possible for human intelligence to do will be done, and the object of the provision will be best carried out by leaving to the Minister the discretion we desire to leave him, rather than attempt to tie him down by any fast and hard line which hon. gentlemen opposite would have great difficulty in defining.

The understanding of the House was not that this discretion should be applied to 25 per cent, but to the whole value of the goods. The discretion that the House understood was a discretion as to how to distinguish the products of other countries outside of Great Britain from those that were of British manufacture:

Mr. McDOUGALL. The hon. gentleman must admit that it is impossible for the Minister of Customs or the officers of customs to make the distinction, and, therefore, why not put some other machinery in the hands of the hon. Minister.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. What would the hon. gentleman suggest?

Mr. McDOUGALL. I would suggest this. If it were my business, I would put such machinery as this in the hands of the customs. Let him exact from the manufacturers a declaration to the effect that the articles which enter chiefly into the manufacture of any particular article are the product of British manufacture and not of foreign manufacture.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is a fair suggestion, and no doubt the Minister of Customs will adopt it.

Did he adopt it to the extent of one single sixpence, because there are lots of goods put together in England when the whole amount of the products that enter into the manufacture of them are the products of countries outside of England, and these come in under the preferential tariff.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I contend that it is Parliament that should give him the power to do so.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Parliament gives it by this resolution.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I speak subject to correction, but it seems to me that Parliament should specifically give this power to the Minister of Customs.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). That is largely done at present.

Mr. McDOUGALL. The power should be given by this resolution.

The House could not understand anything else from the discussion that went on at that time, than that this preferential tariff would not apply to the portion of the article that was made up of the products of other countries, but the intention was that that preferential tariff should only apply to that part representing the labour of the British workman and the material originally manufactured on British territory and not to products of outside countries that entered into the manufacture, especially when the chief portion of the manufacture was the product of outside countries. The hon. Minister of Finance finds fault with hon. gentlemen on this side of the House for taking the stand they have on this item. Every hon. member on this side of the House believes that a preference should be given, but it should not be given at the expense of the Canadian workman. The British people have no right to expect from us what we do not give to our own people, and we do not give to our own people the privilege of taking goods from France or Belgium or any of these foreign countries and putting them together in this country without paying duty on these products. We do not want to allow England to be made a dumping ground for the products of other countries, because we want to give a preference to England and because we want to give an equal chance to the English manufacturer with our own manufacturers when we are giving the English manufacturer, the English labourer and the English workman a preference on the value of their work we are going far enough, but when we go farther and give another preference to the British producer on not only what consists of the British part of the product but on what is not the manufacture of the British artisan but is a foreign product, I think we are going too far.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Ellis). We have discussed for four or five hours this general question, and the rule of the House clearly is that each item should be discussed by itself. Of course, I am subject to the control of the committee, but I think it would be better to take up each item.

Mr. MILLS. I understand that we are on item 254 which admits of a general discussion in reference to the item.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Ellis). The rule is :

Sometimes there are a number of items in a vote or resolution, and then these may be generally discussed as forming part of a single question. Each item may then, if the committee think proper, be taken up as a distinct question, and so discussed and amended. The debate in such a case must be confined to the item, and when it has been disposed of, no reference can again be made to it when the subsequent items are under discussion.

Mr. MILLS. I understand that the hon. Minister of Customs agreed to allow a general discussion. I wish to inquire of the Minister the rule of the department in reference to collectors of customs engaging in mercantile affairs. Have collectors of customs a right to engage in mercantile business ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Any one engaged in the importation of goods would not be eligible for a collector.

Mr. MILLS. I have to call the hon. Minister's attention to the fact, that I am informed is a fact, that in Wallace, Cumberland County, N.S., the former collector of customs, Mr. Charles H. Kars, was turned out of office for some cause or other.

Mr. TAYLOR. Offensive partisanship.

Mr. MILLS. Offensive partisanship, I presume. Mr. Drysdale was appointed in his place. I am credibly informed that Mr. Drysdale is now doing business in the name of Nelson & Drysdale, general merchants, in Wallace.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There is an officer of the name of Drysdale at that place. Does the hon. gentleman say that he is engaged in any importing business ?

Mr. MILLS. He is doing a general retail business under the name of Nelson & Drysdale, and the business is registered under that name. It would be well for the Minister to inquire into this matter.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. A note has been made of it, and I will inquire into it.

Mr. MILLS. I would also bring the notice of the Minister to another matter. There is a rule in the department in reference to collectors of customs engaging in municipal politics. Are the same rules and regulations, that were enacted as far back as 1875, still in force in the Department of Customs ?

Mr. McDougall.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The department does not approve of officers of customs filling municipal offices.

Mr. MILLS. If I am correctly informed, and I think I am, there is a direct rule against that, enacted as far back as 1875, and which obtains still in the department.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think so.

Mr. MILLS. That being the case, I call the attention of the Minister to the fact that we have in the county of Annapolis a collector of customs for the port of Lower Granville named Edgar H. Porter, who has engaged actively in political matters, and has been elected municipal councillor for that district after a very rabid partisan political contention. The other night the Prime Minister, in replying to the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron), with reference to Mr. McDonald, formerly of the Intercolonial Railway, stated that one of the charges against Mr. McDonald was that he was very much taken up with municipal politics, and that was one of the reasons why he was turned out of office. I ask the Minister of Customs to get a report from his inspector on this case in Annapolis county. I tell him the facts as they appear to me—and I have no doubt the inspector will endorse them—that Mr. Porter indulged in a violent partisan contest in the county of Annapolis, and consequently he, no doubt, does not control the confidence of quite a number of the inhabitants of Lower Granville.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I will make a note of that.

Customs—
Ontario ..... $303,240

Mr. CLARKE. Would the Minister explain this increase of $2,785, as compared with last year ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The business of Toronto having increased largely, we had to give them some extra officers and owing to the extension of business, the cartage and contingencies have increased.

Mr. CLARKE. Is any of that increase to be given to the permanent officers ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am trying to make provisions for a few whom I consider deserving and whose position in the service warrants it.

Mr. CLARKE. Would it be convenient for the Minister to give us the names of the officers who are to receive an increase ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I trust the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) will not press that, as it has not yet been fully determined upon, and we are endeavouring to do it on the question of merit, and where the circumstances will admit of it.

Customs—

Manitoba ..... $36,945

Mr. WALLACE. What is the explanation of the increase of $4,000 here?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The business at Winnipeg has increased enormously, the revenue there amounting now to about $1,000,000. When Mr. McMichael went up last year, they complained of not having enough officers, and the department empowered Mr. McMichael to have the service efficiently manned in that city. The contingencies there have also increased, as would necessarily be the case with the expansion of business.

Mr. TAYLOR. I suppose the increase in Manitoba would be from agricultural implements not made in Canada.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Not all, but I dare say that among other things.

Customs—

North-west Territories ..... $10,000

Mr. WALLACE. What is the explanation of this increase of $1,450?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We have made Lethbridge a port of entry which was formerly an outport, and we pay the officer there $1,000. We have increased sub-collector Osborne at Edmonton from $250 to $500. The collections at Edmonton went up very rapidly, being something like $20,000, and it is only proper that the salary of the officer there should be advanced to $500. There are other necessary items which would account for the increase. In that country, between sessions of Parliament, occasions may arise when another officer is required, and we like to have a little more than is absolutely required. Of course, it will not be expended if it is not needed.

Customs—

British Columbia ..... $95,000

Mr. WALLACE. There is a large increase here. What does it mean?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. A large amount of this increase is at the port of Vancouver, where the business has increased very greatly, and the office was not sufficiently manned. That is another case in which the chief inspector was requested to go out and thoroughly examine into the workings of the port, and to report what was necessary. It was found that eleven new officers were required, and the port is now, I believe, on an excellent footing.

Mr. COCHRANE. How many were there before?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. About twenty before. The revenue has about doubled within the last year or two.

Mr. COCHRANE. I cannot see how that argument works out. I know of my own knowledge, men who do not work half their time in their office, and yet collect many thousands of dollars. I never heard anything about these men being overworked. Hon. gentlemen opposite were great sticklers for economy, when we were on the other side of the House, but I dare say some Grit heelers wanted to be appointed to office. Now, does it not strike any hon. gentleman as absurd, to say that at the port of Vancouver, where the officials were doing the business fairly well, eleven more men were required. When the Minister of Customs wants these increases, I notice that he talks very low. Generally, when he has a pretty good case, he will talk very loud and hammer two or three desks; but when he is telling the committee that he is doubling up the officials, he talks so low that you can hardly hear him. I think he ought to give us some better argument for doubling up the officials than that they are collecting a little more money. How much was collected there before these officers were appointed, and how much now?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I cannot give the hon. gentleman the figures, but they are collecting very nearly double. At the port of Vancouver a great many men are required who are not collecting revenue at all. It is an immense transshipping port for the trade that is done with China and Japan, for goods going east and goods going west.

Mr. COCHRANE. Where are they transshipping from?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Cars coming in have to be sealed, and the goods seen on the ship; and all that work has to be accomplished by our officials. There is no desire at all to overload the port, and it was simply impossible to perform the work as it should be done, with the staff we had. Whatever may be the expense, it is necessary that the ports should be sufficiently manned. I grant that perhaps there are ports to be found in Canada where an officer's whole time is not taken up; but if you have the port, you must have the man to attend to it. Some of the salaries are very low indeed. We do not wish to boast. The expenditure has gone up somewhat; but if you take the expenditure for salaries and contingencies in 1894-95, the last year in which the department was administered by my predecessor, you will find that, though the Department of Customs was always considered one that was well and economically managed, yet the cost of management was a great deal more than it is now. If you take the receipts during this year and apply to them the cost of collection, you will find that the cost is now 25 per cent, or $260,000 less than it was in 1894-95. In other words, the cost would have been 25 per cent more, if the same percentage cost of collection existed this past year as in 1894-95, though the department was economically administered at that time. In addition, the work at the ports and of the inside staff has been wonderfully increased by the preferential tariff. We require to keep two sets of books, but although that is the case, the inside service has not been increased, except the slight increase in the third-class clerks. At our ports there is considerably more work done. There is a larger business and a larger revenue, and the number of entries, which is the best test of the work, has been enormously increased. If you were to apply the percentage of the cost of collection in 1894-95, under the careful management of my predecessor, to the present year, the cost of collection would be $260,000 more than we are asking for. With the expansion of trade and commerce, you must expect the charges to increase, but the only way to look at it is to take the percentage of the cost of collection now and compare that with what it was before, and you will find that there is a very great reduction indeed. The port of Vancouver, I consider, is properly manned now. Previously it was not, and the desire of the department and the merchants and this House, I am sure, is that, while looking carefully after the expenditure, we should have a sufficient number of officers to transact the business that requires to be done in such a way as to safeguard the revenue and give satisfaction to the business community.

Mr. COCHRANE. That is just one of the arguments in which there is no force at all—the argument that because of the importations or the business is expanding there should be an increase in the charges of management. There is no argument in talking of business increasing the cost, unless you mean importations. We might export millions of dollars' worth without entailing any additional work on the staff.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It is importations I am alluding to.

Mr. COCHRANE. Then, do not talk of the business of the country. We might export millions of dollars' worth to Europe without interfering with the customs officers at all.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No? Ask your friends.

Mr. COCHRANE. I do not need to ask anybody with reference to that. It is something new to say that you must have an official in every place from which you export to see that you export properly. There are hundreds of thousands of dollars shipped from ports that I know as well as I know the Minister of Customs, where there is no official attending to that work at all. There may be some regulations enforced in the case of exports to China and Japan, though I do not know why you should be so much interested, if I send a cargo to China and Japan, as to send an official to see that the cars are locked and my goods properly shipped. What argument is there in giving us the percentage which the cost of collection bears to the amount collected? I am not finding any fault, but the hon. gentleman knows that there are hundreds of officials who could to-day do as much work again as they are now doing and not be over-worked at all.

Mr. PATERSON.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am not putting an extra man on at all.

Mr. COCHRANE. I think you are, but I cannot bring you to account for your administration of those distant ports as those nearer home. When you must have a man, he is entitled to fair consideration for his time but he would just as soon work all the time as not. I have men in my riding who would just as soon be making entries if you call that work, as sitting in their offices doing nothing. Here is where the Minister is making a mistake. He totals up how many men he should have in the office for the business they do. Does he take into consideration the fact that before the business expanded—I think it would be better if he had said before the imports were increased—these men were not working all the time?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I did take that into consideration.

Mr. COCHRANE. Are you sure of that?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes.

Mr. COCHRANE. All right.

Mr. WALLACE. I cannot let the statement of the hon. Minister go without challenge. He says the percentage is so much smaller now than it was some few years ago that there has been a saving of $260,000 to the department. I totally deny that statement from start to finish. What are the facts? In the first place, in a period of depression, you cannot in any business reduce the expenses, because those men, we will assume, are engaged permanently, and you cannot well reduce the staff in years of depression to correspond with the depression. Yet what do we find? Take the last two years of the Conservative regime, and the expenditures have been practically, for every year but one, lower in percentage as regards the cost of collection than during the years this Government has been in power. In 1898 the percentage of the expense of collecting customs revenue was 4.37, or $4.37 per $100. In 1897 it was 4.75. In 1896, all under Conservative rule, it was 4.43. In 1895 it was 5.13. That was the year of the greatest depression, when the expenses could not be reduced corresponding with the reduced receipts. In 1894 it was 4.26. So that the average of the four last years of Conservative rule was 4.64, as compared with an average of two years of Liberal rule of 4.86, or nearly the same figure.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. 4.10 for the year just closing.

Mr. WALLACE. I have pointed out that when the revenues have fallen off, you cannot easily reduce your permanent staff, and when the business increases the only difference is that the men are kept more busily employed and keeping them busily employed does them good. There should not be an increase in the public service because there are larger revenues, and when the Government state that in the port of Vancouver the increase has been from 20 to 31 clerks, or 11 at one time, that appears to me totally unjustifiable. The Minister says that the revenues have doubled. That is a mistake. I would like him to give the figures, and I presumed he would come here prepared with the figures, but it seems he has no figures or information before him, but gives his impressions or says he does not remember.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Not at all.

Mr. WALLACE. Will the hon. gentleman give us the figures showing that the business of the port of Vancouver has doubled? Collections at the port of Toronto are more than six times as much as those at the port of Vancouver, but the officers at Toronto are not six times as numerous—not four times as numerous. There is no reason that I know of why the same number of officers could not do more business at Vancouver than they can at Toronto. The railway stations are fewer; the harbour is less in extent, and the business more concentrated in Vancouver than in Toronto or in Montreal. And yet the expenditure is larger in proportion, and the number of clerks is larger in proportion, than in either Toronto or Montreal. The hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane) says that a lot of Liberal heeleders are asking for jobs, and the clamour by members for the appointment of these men to office has been so loud and long that the Minister of Customs had to appoint them. I suppose that is the explanation of the appointment of eleven customs officers at one time at the port of Vancouver. If business had increased, as no doubt it has, the officials, by more diligence, could do a greater amount of work, for the usual rule is, that Government officials are not overworked, and you could easily require a staff of customs officials to do a little more work during the rush of business, just as it is done in any trade or business, and so save this extra expenditure.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) says I have not given the figures. I think, when I have given the figures, the committee will see the necessity for the increases in the staff. In 1897 the customs duties at the port of Vancouver were $390,981, and in 1898 they have swollen to $608,253, and my accountant tells me that for the eleven months of the year just closed there was over $800,000.

Mr. WALLACE. What were they in 1894, 1895 and 1896?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I suppose they are not so much. I have not the figures. But the increase from 1897 is what I have shown.

Mr. TAYLOR. That might be, and not increase the work of the office.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. But this office was undermanned before the business grew in this recent expansion. There was not an appraiser there at that point; the port was reported to be in such a condition that was not creditable to the Dominion, and not efficient, as safeguarding the revenue.

Mr. TAYLOR. The receipts of the Grand Trunk this year are double what they were a year ago, and the expenditure is less. Why could not this be the case in the customs.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think that rather a doubtful statement.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) is astray in that statement. The Grand Trunk receipts are only $600,000 more than they were last year.

Mr. TAYLOR. But what we have to compare with was three years ago, at the time of the depression. The expenditure is decreased nearly 25 per cent under Mr. Hayes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think the hon. gentleman must revise his statement. It cannot be that the expenses can be 25 per cent less.

Mr. TAYLOR. Very nearly.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I happen to know something about it in a general way, and I feel safe in saying the hon. gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. CLANCY. I do not wish to make a speech, but I wish to call the hon. Minister's attention to another of his victims; I know he is pleased to have the list increased. I refer to Mr. Wm. Callwell, of Amherstburg, who was dismissed something over a year ago. I understand that Mr. Callwell has been in the service something more than ten years, and that he was dismissed without any investigation. I shall not set up any defence for Mr. Callwell; the proper time for that would be, when an investigation is instituted by the Minister of Customs. I understand that the department has not only refused an investigation, but has refused to pay Mr. Callwell any compensation for the sums of money that he has paid into the superannuation fund. It seems to me that is a very unfair way of treating any person. I do not think that we should be told, as in another case, that this was two years old, and nothing could be done. I am going to ask the Minister whether he proposes to give Mr. Callwell his superannuation money or give him an investigation, or both.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I judge, from what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) says, that this gentleman was not dismissed for political partisanship. Where parties have been retired from the service for political partisanship, their contributions to the superannuation fund have been returned, with 5 per cent added. But where parties have been retired for cause other than political partisanship—for neglect of duty, or anything of that kind—it has not been the rule to return the amounts paid into the superannuation fund. Of course, as the hon. gentleman will understand, this is not a matter wholly within the department, but has to be dealt with by a power higher than the department.

Mr. CLANCY. That seems all the greater reason why there should be an investigation. I do not know anything that has thrown more light on the present methods than the few words the hon. Minister has just spoken. He makes the statement, that the man dismissed for cause shall not receive any return for the sums of money he has paid in.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Has not.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the hon. Minister say that he will sit in his office, and will not give an officer dismissed for cause an investigation—that he will let him go in that manner?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No.

Mr. CLANCY. Then, will he give Mr. Callwell an investigation before he cuts him off in that way?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The statute does not precisely say that it should be confined to such cases, but the statute was passed with the express intention, so stated to the House, to make payment to the gentlemen who were removed for political cause.

Mr. CLANCY. Then, in that case, before visiting such penalties, should not an investigation be held? Before visiting such penalties upon Mr. Callwell, is it not fair that he should have an investigation?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The investigation took place before the officer. The chief inspector of ports, whose duty it is, made a report, and that report is in the office.

Mr. CLANCY.

Mr. BERGERON. We are entitled to see the report.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. You have not asked for it. I certainly could not bring all the reports in my office here.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the complaint against this man?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The office was in the most untidy state it was possible to imagine, and he was reported against by the inspector. My impression is that if any gentleman saw that report he would say it was my duty to retire that man from the service. The inspectors can have no object in reporting against a man, they simply do their duty in reporting as to the way in which he discharged his duties.

Mr. CLANCY. I think we should have the report. These cases have been coming up somewhat frequently. We had another example here to-night with regard to Mr. McCormack, and the report was so colourless that no person could conclude that the man ought to be dismissed. The report says: "The reason for your dismissal appears to be the manner in which you have conducted the customs business on the island." "Appears to be," he is not certain in his letter. If the other report is as colourless as that, I think it is a slipshod way of doing business. I ask the hon. gentleman to lay the report on the Table so that we may see it.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Will you call at the office and see it? I would have to have it copied.

Mr. CLANCY. I do not think it is fair to ask me to go to the office; we should have it here.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I will try and bring it down as soon as I can.

Mr. WALLACE. I had some knowledge of this case. I think Mr. Callwell wrote to me that he had asked the Minister for an investigation, and he complained that he had not had any. I do not think while I was in the department I ever failed to give British fair play to the man charged. Every officer should have an opportunity to defend himself before an impartial investigator; he can appeal from that investigator if he likes to the Minister. But I think it is dealing unfairly by the humblest officer in the Customs Department summarily to dismiss him without an opportunity of presenting his case.

Mr. MCGREGOR. My hon. friend from West York (Mr. Wallace) says that customs house officers should have British fair play. Why, Sir, the hon. gentleman made one visit to Windsor and cut off the head of Mr. John Watson and Mr. Samuel Chevallier, 52 years old, as able a man and much stronger man than the hon. gentleman.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McGregor) says that I made one visit to Windsor. I say that I cut off nobody's head and that I did not interfere with anybody on my visit to Windsor on that occasion.

Mr. MCGREGOR. Go on.

Mr. WALLACE. That is all.

Mr. BERGERON. Take it back.

Mr. MCGREGOR. Take nothing back. The hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) bellows there the whole time.

Mr. BERGERON. Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman (Mr. McGregor) is obliged to take back an expression when the hon. gentleman to whom he applies it makes a denial.

Mr. MCGREGOR. I live in Windsor, and I know the action that was taken by the hon. gentleman. He came there from Detroit, and I know that upon the occasion of this single visit, the heads of Samuel Chevalier and Mr. Baby were taken off. Hon. gentlemen said: We do not require them, but they appointed William Stokes, older than Mr. Chevalier, and a man who has not been a sober man for twenty-five years.

Mr. WALLACE. I never appointed the man.

Mr. CLANCY. I think it is most unfair to make such an attack upon Mr. Stokes. He is quite as respectable as the hon. gentleman (Mr. McGregor), and that is saying a good deal. I am not going to reflect upon my hon. friend, but I say it is an unfair and cowardly thing to attack a gentleman like Mr. Stokes behind his back.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Ellis). The hon. gentleman (Mr. McGregor) has not given way to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy).

Mr. CLANCY. I desired to correct the statement of the hon. member (Mr. McGregor), because I think it is uncalled for and unmanly.

Mr. MCGREGOR. Maybe that is true or not. The hon. gentleman knows that I am telling the truth. I am not going to say a mean thing to the hon. member, but he knows that this is the truth and nothing but the truth. I am sorry for Stokes myself, but we will have to call upon the Minister to have him dismissed, and then the hon. gentleman can find fault again because he is not doing his duty. It was owing to pure kind-heartedness towards himself and his family that he has been kept in his position. I have tried my best to keep him there as an old neighbour, but he cannot attend to his duties. Samuel Chevalier was not given an opportunity of being heard at a trial nor was John Watson who had been in the service for twenty-five years, given a trial. It is true that Mr. Baby was an old gentleman, but no finer man ever lived in Canada. Ho filled the position that he occupied with honour and with dignity, yet he was dismissed at the same time. All that we are asking is fair-play. If hon. gentlemen opposite think that these men received fair-play I will tell them that their heads went off at one time without the opportunity of a trial being given them. There was no case against them; they were straightforward, honest, thoroughly industrious, always anxious to do their duty properly and to exhibit courtesy to the public. It was a shame that they should be dismissed and that older men should be put in their places without any trial ever being offered them. I should not say "dismissed," because they were superannuated, and their places were filled by men older than themselves.

Mr. BENNETT. What about Killackey's case? Did he have an investigation?

Mr. MCGREGOR. Killackey was only there five or six months.

Mr. WALLACE. I do not suppose that any member of this House has ever heard a larger number of misstatements made than have been made by the hon. gentleman (Mr. McGregor) in the time that he occupied the attention of the committee. Every statement he has made is wrong and he cannot justify or confirm one of them. In fact, at the end of his speech he took occasion to deny the statements he had made at the beginning of it. He said that these men were not dismissed. His whole speech was a harangue against the dismissal of these men unjustly and improperly. He says that I appointed Stokes. I see by the official return that Stokes was appointed on the 1st of June, 1896. I had then ceased to be Controller of Customs.

Mr. MCGREGOR. Your Government appointed him; I did not say yourself.

Mr. WALLACE. Yes, the hon. gentleman charged me directly and personally with the responsibility for this appointment. I had retired from the Government and I had no personal responsibility at that time. I was not supporting that Government to an alarming extent, as the hon. gentleman knows.

Mr. MCGREGOR. Yes, I know it.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman's charge was that I had dismissed these men while in the next sentence he said that they were all superannuated. Nobody regretted more than I did the necessity of superannuating our good old friend Mr. Baby, because I knew the history of that distinguished French Canadian. But I had to superannuate him as he was 88 years of age. Surely it will not be said that a man must not be superannuated when he is 88 years of age?

Mr. MCGREGOR. If you had known the case you would not have superannuated him.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). His age appears as 83 in the book.

Mr. WALLACE. Well, 83 years is a good age.

Mr. McGREGOR. He is just as strong as the hon. leader of the Opposition.

Mr. WALLACE. I have no recollection of the other gentlemen named. Mr. William Stokes may have been appointed. I do not know as I had nothing to do with his appointment. I got up and denied that I had appointed Mr. William Stokes, but the hon. gentleman reiterated the statement.

Mr. McGREGOR. I forgot that you had left the Government.

Mr. WALLACE. No, no; "Hansard" will show that the hon. gentleman charged that I had appointed Mr. Stokes, and when I denied that I had any personal responsibility for it the hon. gentleman repeated his statement that I had appointed him, and when he was asked by the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) to withdraw his statement, in the face of my denial, he abused the hon. member for Beauharnois for interrupting him. That disposes of the matter which the hon. member has brought to the attention of the committee. His object was to show that while I was stating what was a correct rule of procedure for the hon. Minister of Customs to follow, I had not regarded the rule which I laid down for his guidance, myself. I deny the statement of the hon. member for North Essex in toto. His statement was that when I made my visit to Windsor these three heads fell. My visit was made on my return from the Chicago Exhibition in June 1893. These superannuations occurred in the latter part of 1895, more than three years afterwards, and that shows what connection there was between my visit and the cutting off of heads.

Mr. McGREGOR. You made another visit.

Mr. WALLACE. I made the statement that I only made one visit, and I met the hon. gentleman (Mr. McGregor) when I was there.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. member for North Essex (Mr. McGregor) will only do himself justice if he withdraws the statement he made regarding Mr. Stokes. He says in one breath that Mr. Stokes has been drunk for ten years—

Mr. BERGERON. Twenty years.

Mr. BENNETT. That is nothing in Windsor.

Mr. CLANCY. Then, the hon. gentleman (Mr. McGregor) declares that although Mr. Stokes has been drunk all that time, he kept him in his position for the sake of his family and because he was a near neighbour. Mr. Chairman, do you treat your near neighbours in that way? If they have failings of that kind, do you come to this House, where the man cannot defend himself, and availing yourself of your privileges as a member, do you make a statement that your friend is drunk for twenty years? It comes with bad grace from the hon. member (Mr. McGregor), especially when he says he is a friend and neighbour of Mr. Stokes, and he should withdraw it. I hope the hon. gentleman will have the manliness to withdraw it, or to amend it so as to make his one statement tally with the other. Now, we should have the report in the case of Mr. Callwell.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. A note has been taken of that.

Mr. CLANCY. Unless that report discloses some good reason why Mr. Callwell should not have an investigation—

Mr. WALLACE. Every man should have an investigation.

Mr. CLANCY. I go further and I say, that even the report of an officer of the department should not be taken as conclusive evidence to dismiss a man without investigation. It is a very serious thing to deprive a man of his means of living, and he should have no opportunity to justify his conduct. Personally, I do not know much about Mr. Callwell's case, but I do say that he should have fair play.

Mr. McGREGOR. Out of twenty officers in our district, the only two Liberals in the whole twenty, were the two men who were dismissed.

Mr. WALLACE. They must have been very bad.

Mr. McGREGOR. That is Mr. Watson and Mr. Chevalier.

The committee rose and reported.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 11.55 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 26th July, 1899.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PRAYERS.

POSTMASTER AT BRANTFORD.

Mr. CLANCY (by Mr. Taylor) asked:

1. What salary does the postmaster at Brantford receive?

2. If not paid by salary, what commission does he receive based upon the last complete quarter, and what will his fees or salary be per annum?

3. Is he paid the same as the late postmaster? If not, wherein is the difference?

4. Has a deputy postmaster been appointed? If so, what is his salary or fees?

5. Is the postmaster at Brantford engaged in any other business, mercantile or otherwise? If so, is it the intention of the Government to allow a postmaster to draw his pay as such and compete with others who are engaged in the same line of business?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). The late postmaster at Brantford was allowed a commission and proportion of box rents of the office, he paying thereout to the staff of the office such salaries as he fixed for them. The gross amount out of which the late postmaster paid his own salary and that of the staff amounted to $5,262. In connection with the appointment of the present postmaster, a change was made whereby the salary of the postmaster was limited to a fixed sum of $1,500 a year, leaving the balance of the allowance heretofore made for the maintenance of the post office applicable by the postmaster for the payment of the salaries of the rest of the staff in addition to the fixed sum of $1,500 above mentioned, the postmaster to be entitled to retain the box rents, and, in consideration thereof, he to supply the office with all requirements except usual office equipment issued by the department to post offices such as Brantford. The department does not appoint any of the staff in the Brantford office other than the postmaster. I am not aware that the postmaster at Brantford is engaged in any business, mercantile or otherwise. Postmasters in positions of the importance of the office at Brantford are expected to withdraw from other business, and if so engaged at the time of appointment, they would be expected to do so within a reasonable time.

GOVERNMENT LEASE, NEW WESTMINSTER, B.C.

Mr. PRIOR (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

1. Has the Government granted a lease of a lot, or portion of a lot at the corner of Begbie and Columbia Streets in New Westminster, B.C.?

2. If so, to whom is the lease granted, on whose recommendation, and at what rental annually?

3. If this lease has been granted, did the Government call by public advertisement for tenders for said lease, or was it given privately?

4. Was not the said lot reserved by the Government of the late Right Honourable Sir John Macdonald as a site for a permanent exhibition, as shown by correspondence which took place in 1889 or thereabouts?

5. Will the Government bring down to the House all the above correspondence that can be found in connection with said lot?

6. Also, if lease has been granted, will the Government bring down to the House all papers, telegrams, letters, &c., that have passed between the Government and any person or persons in regard to said lease?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). 1. Yes; lot 1, block 13. 2. Lease granted to John Reid; rental, $250 per annum. 3. Offer received without call for tenders and accepted, it not being usual to call for tenders for such leases and none having been called when the former Government leased the same property to John Wilson in 1893 and subsequently to David Diamond in January, 1896. 4. No.

Mr. TAYLOR. What about questions 5 and 6?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The correspondence should properly be moved for. I will look into it. I do not anticipate any difficulty about bringing it down, but I have not got it in hand.

BRITISH COLUMBIA ALIEN ACT.

Mr. PRIOR (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

1. Has the Government had any correspondence with the Provincial Government of British Columbia or any other person, in regard to the Act passed by the Provincial Government, intituled: "An Act to amend the Placer Mining Act" (otherwise known as the Alien Act)?

2. If so, will the Government bring said correspondence down to the House before the end of the session?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Yes, the Government have received some correspondence on this subject which will be brought down, probably to-day or tomorrow.

GALICIANS AND DOUKHOBORS.

Mr. TAYLOR asked :

1. What number of Galicians, including Austrians and Doukhobors respectively, have arrived in Canada since July, 1897, and what has been paid per head for these?

2. What is the number expected to arrive during the remainder of the current year?

3. What officials of the Immigration Department have been employed in connection with the Austrians or Galicians and Doukhobors, and what portion of their time has been employed for that purpose?

4. What amount has been guaranteed by the Government or its officials to purveyors for the Doukhobors and Galicians?

5. What is the total amount which Mr. McDougall refers to in correspondence dated March 25th, 1898, and November 25th, 1898? (See Auditor's Report, Outlay for Emigrants.)

6. What is the amount of the fund (if any) provided or guaranteed on behalf of the Doukhobors for supplies, and how is it secured?

7. What is the cost of the interpreting staff at Winnipeg in connection with the Doukhobors and Galicians?

8. What amount of stock and materials, provisions, &c., and farm implements were bought in Manitoba and the North-west Territories for the Doukhobors or Galicians by C. W. Speers and other Government agents?

9. What Government agents have been employed to look after the Doukhobors and Galicians, and what time has been spent by them in connection with the same, and the outlays therefor?

10. What has been paid for medical expenses in connection with the Doukhobors and Galicians?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). 1. The number of Austrians, including Galicians, arriving in Canada from July, 1897, to the 30th June, 1899, is about 11,560. The number of Doukhobors in the same period is about 7,300. The amount paid and to be paid is £1 per head for Doukhobors and $5 for each adult ticket to Galicians. 2. The Government can give no estimate as to future immigration. 3. The officials of the Immigration Branch of the Department employed in connection with the Galicians and Doukhobors includes the regular staff maintained to receive and care for immigrants of all classes and nationalities at Halifax, St. John, Quebec, Montreal and Winnipeg. It would be impossible to make any division of the time of officials specially occupied with Galicians or Doukhobors. 4. No amount has been guaranteed by the Government to purveyors for Doukhobors or Galicians. 5. $3,290.06. 6. There has been no fund provided or guaranteed on behalf of the Doukhobors, except the bonus of £1 per head to be paid to the committee, to be expended as the committee may deem advisable. 7. The total cost of interpreting staff, including permanent and temporary officials who are employed as well as land guides in locating settlers, is $3,098.48. These officers deal with all immigrants who may require their services. 8. The department is not able to say at present what amount has been paid as full reports are not yet in and the amount of the purchases are paid for out of the Doukhobor fund by the committee at Winnipeg and not by the Government, though in some cases they have been paid by the Government and deducted from the bonus. 9. The regular staff at Halifax, St. John, Quebec, Montreal, Winnipeg and Ottawa, together with occasional extra assistance, have been employed as circumstances demanded in connection with these people, but it is impossible to say what time or money has been spent by them in connection with this particular phase of immigration work as distinguished from other work. 10. The total amount paid for medical expenses up to date, not including drugs, is $1,395.85.

MOUNTED POLICE BUILDING, PRINCE ALBERT.

Mr. DAVIS (by Mr. Rutherford) asked :

1. What year was the Mounted Police building erected at Prince Albert?
2. What was the total expenditure upon same?
3. Were tenders called for?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). 1. The work was started in 1887 and finished in 1889. 2. $76,492.69. 3. No.

Mr. TAYLOR.

REGISTRY OFFICE, PRINCE ALBERT.

Mr. DAVIS (by Mr. Rutherford) asked :

1. What year was the registry office built in Prince Albert, Saskatchewan?
2. Were tenders called for?
3. How many tenders were received?
4. What was the amount of each tender?
5. Was the contract awarded to the lowest tenderer?
6. Were specifications changed after signing of contract?
7. Was the contractor allowed to put in a different foundation than that specified in the contract? If so, what did the foundation cost?
8. What did the building above foundation cost?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). 1. It was completed in October, 1894. 2. Yes. 3. Five. 4. The figures are: $6,854, $8,290, $9,885, $9,975, $10,960. 5. Yes. 6. No. 7. On reaching the depth called for by the contract quick sand was struck and in order to obtain a reliable foundation it was necessary to pile and fill in between the piles with cement concrete and to place over the piles and concrete stringers, and over these again a timber platform to carry the foundation walls which was done at a cost of $2,348. 8. $6,854.

POSTMISTRESS OF SINTULATA.

Mr. DAVIN (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

Whether Mrs. Elizabeth Rowe, of Sintulata, has been dismissed from the position of postmistress of Sintulata, North-west Territories?

How long has Mrs. Rowe held this position, and if dismissed, who recommended her dismissal? On what grounds was she dismissed?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). In reply to the hon. gentleman, I would state that the late postmistress at Sintulata held office since the 1st of March, 1892, until her removal. A very numerous signed petition was sent to the department representing that the postmistress was the wife of a hotel-keeper, and that the office was unsatisfactorily managed, and there was a feeling of insecurity in the community. The feeling there was that the office should not be associated with the hotel business, and for these reasons she was removed.

PURCHASE OF LAND AT LEVIS.

Mr. MARCOTTE (by Mr. Foster) asked :

From whom has land been bought at Lévis in connection with the $48,000 vote, as answered by the Prime Minister? What amount has been paid, and to whom?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The land was bought from the estate of D. B. Young, and the estate of Colonel William Rose. The amounts paid were as follows:—Estate of D. B. Young, $8,397.60; estate of Col. Rose, $4,589.80.

SECRETARY TO THE MINISTER OF FINANCE.

Mr. TYRWHITT asked :

Is it the intention of the Government to appoint Mr. Burns, of Halifax (Secretary to the Hon. the Finance Minister), to a position on the Permanent Force? Is he a graduate of the Kingston Military College?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). That question properly belongs to the Minister of Militia, who is not present, but as reference is made in it to my private secretary, I may be permitted to say that this is the first intimation that I have had of anything of the kind.

THE "JOHN C. BARR."

Mr. PRIOR (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

1. Is the Government aware that one John Steinhalt, of Dawson, in whose name Mr. Ogilvie reports that the American vessel "John C. Barr" is now registered, is a brother-in-law of the Collector of Customs at Dawson?

2. If not aware of the same, will the Government ascertain the facts of the case?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Pater son). (1.) No. (2.) Mr. McMichael, the chief inspector of customs is on his way to Dawson to inspect the business that has been done at that port.

PREFERENTIAL TRADE.

Mr. McNEILL. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to ask my right hon. friend whether he has made up his mind with regard to the course to pursue with reference to the resolution on preferential trade which I showed him?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I do not think I can accept the motion of my hon. friend. I have prepared another which I will show him to see if he will accept it. Perhaps we may be able to agree upon it.

THE VACANCY FOR WINNIPEG.

Mr. ROCHE. Before proceeding with the Orders of the Day, I would like to ask the First Minister when it is the intention of the Government to issue a writ for holding an election in the city of Winnipeg? I understand the lists have been completed and finally revised, and I do not see any reason for further delay.

The PRIME MINISTER. I cannot give an answer to my hon. friend at this moment, because this is the first intimation I have had that the lists have been revised and are now ready. I will look into the matter, and will answer my hon. friend at a later date.

ROADS AND ROAD ALLOWANCES IN MANITOBA.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 175) further to amend the Act respecting roads and road allowances in the province of Manitoba.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and the House resolved itself into Committee on the Bill.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Perhaps the hon. the Minister of the Interior will kindly and briefly explain just what the necessity for this is, and what the effect is?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Some years ago the city of Winnipeg experienced great difficulty in connection with the boundary lines of lots on account of the fact that a great number of miscellaneous plans had been made by different surveyors of land which ultimately became portions of the city. There was no complete plan for the city, but each person who owned a lot on the river which ran through the city, got a plan of the lot made according to his own ideas and filed in the registry office. Consequently there was great difficulty in connecting the plans so as to make a complete survey; and there was a special difficulty in connection with the question of the boundary lines between the streets and the lots. The matter was a subject of serious consideration for some years up there, and finally an Act was passed, which applied not only to the city of Winnipeg but to other incorporated places in Manitoba, permitting the municipal councils to have new plans made which should in reality be a consolidation of the plans which were filed in the registry offices, and the boundary lines as shown upon the new plans thus prepared should be binding, whether the measurement originally made corresponded with the new plans or not. Legislation was obtained from the province for the purpose of permitting municipal councils to have their new plans made in this way, and the city of Winnipeg, at great expense, had a set of plans made for the city of Winnipeg under that Act. There was a provision made in the Act that if any person was not satisfied with the boundary lines as shown upon the plans, he might appeal to the Attorney General of the province, and all parties might be heard, and the Attorney General should decide whether the objection was well taken or not; and if the party was not satisfied he had a right to appeal to the judge of the Court of Queen's Bench. Therefore every opportunity was given for protecting the rights of any person who might see fit to object. The object of the whole proceeding was to get an accurate system of plans which should show the boundary lines, which could not be disputed and would be absolute, and upon which the people could rely in purchasing property. This was done in regard to the city of Winnipeg, and plans were got out in pieces, that is in sections, referring to certain portions of the city. Sectional plans Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 have been completed, and local legislation was quite sufficient to enable these plans to be made, and to be filed, and to become effective, except for this fact, that there were some portions of the city of Winnipeg in regard to the streets of which no patents had ever been issued, and no legislation had ever been passed transferring those streets from the Dominion to the province. Therefore the question arose as to the effect of these plans made under local legislation as affecting the basis of land that had never been patented by the Dominion Government. Of course that could only be settled by Dominion legislation. Some years ago these plans, with the exception of sectional plan No. 7, were confirmed, and at my instance legislation was passed. I think it was introduced into this House by Mr. Daly, the then Minister of the Interior. But I asked him to except this particular plan No. 7, because of the fact that the boundary line of a street known as Water Street was the subject of litigation which had been pending for some years past. The city of Winnipeg had undertaken to sell for taxes some of the property which was in dispute between the city, the mortgagees and various parties that were interested, and I did not think that legislation should be passed which might affect the title of the property. There were twelve feet of land in dispute, the owners of the adjoining lands alleging that this strip of twelve feet belonged to the lots adjoining, and the city of Winnipeg alleging that it belonged to the street. I did not think that it should be complicated by legislation before the parties had come to a settlement. Therefore I asked Mr. Daly to except section No. 7 from the Bill, and he did so. The result is that plan No. 7 has never been confirmed by Dominion legislation up to the present time and the property has up to the present remained under Federal jurisdiction. The parties have since come to a settlement and the solicitors of the city of Winnipeg, of the mortgagees and of the railway company have notified the department that the arrangement is satisfactory and that they are prepared to have the plan confirmed by this legislation.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What I wanted to know particularly was whether this Bill would affect any existing controversy in the courts?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR.
No. It was delayed when the original Bill was brought in with the view that the whole of the dispute should be settled.
Mr. SIFTON.

Bill reported.

ENCOURAGEMENT OF THE CONSTRUCTION OF DRY DOCKS.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved :

That the House resolve itself into committee to consider the following proposed resolution :—
“ That it is expedient to amend chap. 17 of 45 Vic., 1882, entitled : ‘ An Act to encourage the construction of dry docks by granting assistance on certain conditions to companies constructing them,’ by providing, in lieu of section 1 of said Act, that if any incorporated company approved by the Governor in Council as having the ability to perform the work, enters into an agreement with Her Majesty to construct a dry dock for the reception and repairing of vessels, at a place and according to a plan and specification providing for all proper and necessary equipment, machinery and plant, such plan and specification to be approved by the Governor in Council on a report by the Minister of Public Works as sufficient for the requirements of the public at such place, and to be completed within a time to be limited by such agreement, then, provided the company performs the work according to such agreement and to the satisfaction of the Minister of Public Works, under the supervision of whose department the work shall be done ; the Governor in Council may authorize the payment out of any unappropriated moneys forming part of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of a subsidy not exceeding two per centum per annum on the cost of the work, during twenty years from the time of its completion and acceptance by the said Minister : provided, that such subsidy shall not exceed $20,000 per annum, and that the cost on which it shall be calculated shall not be greater than the value of the work as estimated by the said Minister ; and the subsidy shall not be payable for any portion of the said twenty years during which the dock shall not be in complete repair and working order ; and that it is expedient to further provide that if any incorporated company approved by the Governor in Council as having the ability to perform the work, enters into an agreement with Her Majesty to enlarge and extend any existing dock for the reception and repairing of vessels according to a plan and specification approved by the Governor in Council on a report by the Minister of Public Works as sufficient for the requirements of the public where the said existing dock is located, and to be completed within the time limited by such agreement, then, provided the company performs the work according to such agreement and to the satisfaction of the Minister of Public Works, under the supervision of whose department the work shall be done, the Governor in Council may authorize the payment out of any unappropriated moneys forming part of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, of a subsidy not exceeding two per centum per annum on the cost of the work during twenty years from the time of its acceptance by the said Minister : provided that such subsidy shall not exceed $10,000, and that the cost on which it shall be calculated shall not be greater than the value of the work incident to such enlargement and extension as estimated by the said Minister, nor shall such subsidy be payable for any portion of the said twenty years, during which the dock shall not be in complete repair and working order."

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into committee on the resolution.

(In the Committee.)

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Mr. Chairman, there is now on the statute-book an Act, passed in 1882, for the purpose of giving encouragement to the construction of dry docks in such places as they may seem to be required by the commerce of the country. It was under that Act that what was then a very large dock was constructed at Halifax. There are several docks constructed by the Dominion Government, but in this case the Government aided the enterprise by way of subsidy. At that time the dock at Halifax was constructed to a length of 595 feet, and it was considered quite a large dock. I need hardly remind the committee that since that time the size of the steamers on the ocean has very largely increased. Applications have recently been made to the Government with the view of ascertaining what the policy of the Government was in relation to the extension of this Act to other places, and it has been represented to us that the Act, in its present shape, is insufficient to meet the increasing requirements of commerce, inasmuch as, since that Act was passed, dry docks in other parts of the world have been built of a very much greater size and that there are a number of steamers being now built which could not be received into any dock in Canada. Having regard then to this manifest tendency to increase the size of steamers, already indicated by the launching of a number of very large vessels, and to the growing tendency in that direction, the Government have thought it wise to adapt the Act of 1882 to these changed conditions. By the Act of 1882 it was provided that 2 per cent might be paid on the cost of a dock, the amount, however, not to exceed $10,000 per annum, on the basis of the dock costing $500,000. With the increasing size of ships the necessarily increased size of dry docks would cost very much more money, so that we propose, by this amendment, to provide that the rate 2 per cent shall still continue to be paid, but that the amount to which it may be applied can be extended to $1,000,000 so that the limit will practically be increased from $10,000 per annum to $20,000.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Does the hon. gentleman propose to apply this encouragement to the extension of existing works?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The proposal will apply to new works, but if in any case, and that practically means one case, the Halifax people want to extend their dock, they would be entitled under the proposal to the privileges provided for under this resolution, but the suggestion for this legislation does not emanate from them. It may be generally admitted that they are constantly increasing the size of steamers and if it is a wise thing to have this law upon the statute-book it should be adapted to the new conditions.

Mr. ELLIS. Do I understand the hon. Minister to say that there is only one dock that can take advantage of the increased subsidy?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No. I say there is only one dock already constructed under it, and that is the dock at Halifax. This is a general Act, and any part of Canada would have the right to come in under it and take advantage of its provisions.

Mr. ELLIS. Of the existing Act or of the extension of its provisions?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Well, I had in my mind the extension of the provision to any dock already constructed under the Act, but we have not limited it to that. The general policy of the Act is that these docks, built to meet the changed conditions of commerce, should be encouraged within the limits of the statute.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend does not mean to extend it to docks built outside of the statute as well as to docks built under the former Act.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is nothing to prevent any part of Canada coming in under it.

Mr. FOSTER. We had an Act passed in 1882 to encourage the building of docks by which we went to the limit of $10,000 per annum on the 2 per cent plan. You provide here, as I understand it, that if the owners of any dock built under the provisions of that Act now wish to extend their dock they will come in under the provisions of this Act. Could any private corporation which had built a dock previous to this Act, and which may now wish to extend their dock take advantage of this Act?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No such case has arisen, and we did not contemplate that.

Mr. FOSTER. And this does not authorize that?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think not. It certainly was not contemplated.

Resolution reported, and read the second time.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 177) to encourage the construction of dry docks.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THE PACIFIC CABLE.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock) moved second reading of Bill (No. 176) to provide for the establishment of direct submarine telegraphic communication between Canada and Australasia.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time, considered in committee, read the third time, and passed.

LOAN COMPANIES.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House resolve itself into committee on Bill (No. 164)—from the Senate—respecting Loan Companies.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into committee on the Bill.

(In the Committee.)

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is a Bill of a general character to permit loan companies to become incorporated by Letters Patent instead of obliging them to come to Parliament for charters. It has been found that when companies come for special charters, there is a great lack of uniformity, and the committee will agree that it is desirable as far as possible to have uniformity. The Bill was passed by the Senate a year ago and sent to this House but it was not reached. It has been again reviewed by the Senate and some changes made. When it came to this House it went to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, where it was again reviewed, and so I think the committee may assume that the Bill has been very carefully considered. The clauses in the Bill which it is proposed to make of a general character, are substantially the same as those to be found in the Loan Companies Acts at the present day. So that the simple effect of the Bill will be that a loan company may obtain a charter granting practically the same powers which other loan companies have by making the proper application, by way of letters patent. That is the whole purpose of the Bill.

Mr. FOSTER. Will that prevent them coming to Parliament. Must all these companies come under this Act?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No. They can still come to Parliament, but this will discourage them. The presumption is that as this affords them all the facilities they require, they would not come for general legislation.

On section 15,

Mr. FOSTER. What is the idea of extending the period to two years? If the company means business, it should not take two years to decide after it has put in its application.

Mr. FIELDING.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In the general Companies Act they are allowed three years to commence business after obtaining their charter. In this we shorten the term to two. It is necessary to fix a term.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, $300,000 subscribed is the lowest capital a loan company can have to do business?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, where it is receiving money on deposit.

On section 20, clause 1,

Mr. FOSTER. How does that compare with the general powers now had by these companies?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. These are almost exactly in line with the powers granted to a number of companies, some this session and some last session. It is quite in line with the latest legislation the House has approved.

On clause 2,

Mr. FOSTER. What will constitute a proof of market value?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The current market quotations.

Mr. FOSTER. Just a single quotation, or an actual sale?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The point has not arisen exactly, but we will have to take the best evidence we could get of actual sale. There has been no difficulty under that clause whatever.

Mr. FOSTER. Who decides that, a court of justice or the department?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. A court of justice. It would have to be challenged by somebody.

Mr. FOSTER. Are there penalties?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No penalties are provided here. I am not sure that I understand what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) means.

Mr. FOSTER. You are providing here what the company are to do and not to do. Suppose they contravene this section, what will be the penalty—that the parties may have recourse in the courts, or what? If there are no penalties, they might defy it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think there is nothing but that a party could take action in court. It would be a breach of trust, of course, and whatever penalties follow breach of trust would follow in the case the hon. gentleman refers to.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I apprehend that, if any officers committed any such illegality, they would be personally responsible.

Mr. FOSTER. At the suit of somebody ?
The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the Speaker leaves the Chair, I think this is the last day on which the subsidies were to be brought down.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I think they will be ready to-day, perhaps this evening, but certainly to-morrow.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. McDOUGALL. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) whether he is prepared to give me the information now that he promised me yesterday, or whether he prefers doing it at a later stage.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I cannot give it to the hon. gentleman now, but it is being looked up. I think there is an item for customs in the Yukon supplies. I do not know whether we will reach it to-day, but the information will be given at some convenient time.

Salaries of agents and employees in Canada, Great Britain and foreign countries ..... $100,000

Mr. McDOUGALL. I would like to ask a question of the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) in respect to immigration. There are a great many of our people under the impression that something should be done for the older provinces of the Dominion in the way of getting skilled farmers to come into the country and settle upon some of those lands that have been abandoned by the people throughout these provinces for years past. They are of the opinion that much might be done to enlighten our own farmers upon the business of farming by bringing into the country people who are skilled and who would be more capable of making good use of some of the farm lands that are distributed over these provinces. We have, I admit, some good farmers of our own in some sections of our provinces, but we have some bad settlements, in which there are no good farmers, and in which there is really no good farming being done.

Mr. COWAN. Where ?

Mr. McDOUGALL. In various provinces.

Mr. COWAN. That is a little indefinite.

Mr. McDOUGALL. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Cowan) had better go and see them for himself, and he will find it a little more definite.

Mr. COWAN. If the hon. gentleman will let me know where they are I will be able to find them.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Mr. Chairman, I wish you would stop these interruptions, which are not made for any good. I would be much obliged to the hon. Minister of the Interior if he would inform me whether there are any existing regulations under which he could do anything in that line, whether he could not give instructions to his agents in the old country with a view of inducing farmers to come and settle on these lands, for instance in Nova Scotia, because I speak more particularly in regard to that province. A great many of the children of the old settlers on these lands have abandoned their farms, have gone to the mines, to the United States, and to other places, and I think it would be well if we could get skilled farmers to come and take up these farms.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). The question which the hon. gentleman (Mr. McDougall) has brought up is a very important one, and has already been brought to my attention. The difficulties of dealing with it have been considered by the officers of the department very frequently. I quite realize the fact that the old provinces very properly consider that they are entitled to whatever benefit can be given to them from the expenditure of the Government in connection with immigration. I also recognize the fact that it would be a very great advantage to the older provinces if we should be able to bring in a reasonable number of skilled farmers, men possessing a certain amount of capital, who would be able to take up improved properties, which, perhaps, are unoccupied at the present time, who would work them to better advantage and who would apply the necessary capital for the purpose of bringing them to a higher state of cultivation. The main difficulty is that the particular class of farmers that would fill the bill, to which the hon. gentleman refers, it is almost impossible for us to get. They compose a class of people that, in any considerable numbers we have practically not been able to touch at all. I have, upon various occasions, considered plans for the purpose of dealing with that question, and being perhaps more familiar with the province of Ontario than with any other of the older provinces, I had formulated a plan whereby we should get lists of farms with descriptions and statements of all the circumstances which we might put into the hands of our agents in the old country, so that a man that was disposed to move and had a little capital might be able to make his arrangement for his place before he started, and would know what the circumstances were going to be and how he was going to be situated when he got here. I think a considerable amount could be done in that way, and I had it in my mind to endeavour to work out a plan of that kind as quickly as possible. I do not think it could be done in any other way, because the class of people that the hon. gentleman speaks of do not come here in the ordinary way as immigrants. They do not come with a ship-load of people without knowing where they are going to locate or what they are going to do. They do not pack up, realize on their property and come out here, except in small numbers, and they do not generally put themselves in the hands of the Government agents, so that we do not have any control over them. The only way by which the hon. gentleman's idea could be carried out would be by the co-operation of the provincial and municipal authorities in the various provinces in furnishing us with as full information in regard to different properties as might be available, the price, description, all the surrounding circumstances, so that we might be able, through our agents, to furnish this information in the old country. They could say to a man there who has a couple of thousand pounds, and is prepared to come out here: You may make your bargain for your farm before you come, you will be such and such a distance from a church, from a school-house, and the circumstances will be so and so when you get here. There is nothing in the regulations of the department which would prevent us from doing that, because we have a free hand, and to do our work effectually we must have a free hand, because we are changing our methods from time to time. I have a strong idea that a good deal could be done in the way the hon. gentleman suggests, and I can assure him that he has my entire sympathy in the idea he has expressed, and that so far as it is possible for us to accomplish it our purpose is to endeavour to do it.

Mr. McDUGALL. I am very glad that the hon. Minister has given some attention to the subject on this line. The illustration he has given us of what his views are coincide very strongly with my own. A few years ago I went to the trouble myself of ascertaining what number of farms could be got within a settlement that were ready for sale to the class of people that I suggest it would be to the advantage of the community to have settled amongst them, and who could give some knowledge to their neighbours in the line of skilled farming. I found myself confronted with the difficulty of having no Government authority or backing. I prepared a statement of the farms that were available with their locations, the distance they were from the railway stations, the distance from the towns, the means of communication by water, and the distance from churches and school-houses, but I found that I was not sufficiently fortified with inducements to give the people in order to take advantage of this. Then there should be some inducement in regard to the cost of examining these farms, and the cost of placing this information within the reach of people who might take advantage of it. I believe if the Minister (Mr. Sifton) would work on these lines he would meet with success. That is, if he gives such inducement to that class of people as he does to other immigrants.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. McInnes, who is now, I presume, our chief immigrant agent in the United States, was at work for the late Government under Mr. Holmes, known as Capt. Holmes. The highest salary Capt. Holmes ever got when he was chief immigrant agent was $1,200 and expenses, but I find that Mr. McInnes gets $1,500 a year, and in addition draws for board and lodging, $801. It does seem to me that is a very high price for the board and lodging of any ordinary man. We have another gentleman, Mr. Benjamin Davies, who gets a salary of $1,500, but he is much easier accommodated than Mr. McInnes, and his board and lodging only cost $276.65. I do not know what other duties Mr. McInnes discharges that would cause him to pay about three times as much for his board and lodging as Mr. Davies does. Then, I find that the matter of office rent is quite an item. Mr. McInnes pays $300, but Mr. Davies is more expensive in that respect for he pays $450. I find also that Mr. McInnes has charged for fares $751. I do not know whether that is for his own travel or what he has paid for other people. I find also that Mr. Davies pays for newspapers $54.25, and I take it that these newspapers are for his own office, because I find that advertising and other like accounts are charged under different items in the Auditor General's Report. Now, I wish an explanation of these things from the Minister. There is another matter to which I draw the attention of the Minister, and that is with regard to the uniforms supplied to the agents and caretakers of the department at various places. In some ports these uniforms are supplied by the Government and in some they are not. However, as a rule, I find that the Government supplies these men with pretty good clothing and abundance of it. Most of them get two summer suits at $46, and a winter suit at $25, and overcoat, $25, a fur cap anywhere from $8.50 to $10, and a cloth cap for about $3.96. I want to know on what conditions the Government distributes these uniforms, and why they give them to immigrant agents in some ports and not in others. It may be all right, but it is not as I see it, and, therefore, I wish to have an explanation.

Mr. TYRWHITT. I am heartily in accord with the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. McDougall) in his desire to attract to this country a better class of immigrants, and I am also of the opinion that if we are to have a better class of immigrants we must have a better class of immigrant agents. The present Government, on their advent to power removed from his position in Liverpool, Mr. John Dyke, so well and favourably known throughout the Dominion. Any person visiting England in any capacity had Mr. Dyke's services at their disposal immediately upon landing, and I have very great pleasure in testifying to the assistance given me on one occasion, at least, when I found it necessary to seek his aid. But we find Mr. Dyke now replaced by a labour agitator, formerly of the city of Toronto; a gentleman who may be described as a Grit heeler, and who is not the class of man to be approached by the small farmers, men with capital such as the hon. member from Cape Breton has described. I am of opinion that the men who have been sent there as agents lately are not the class of men calculated to promote a better class of immigration to this country. It is needless to particularize, but it appears to me that the men sent to the old country as agents, are most undesirable men themselves, and are calculated to promote the movement of a worse class of immigrants than those we have been receiving hitherto.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). Before the Minister (Mr. Sifton) speaks on the question raised by the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. McDougall), I would like to emphasize the importance of doing something in the direction indicated. Throughout all the older provinces the experience is the same. The farms are slowly but surely being abandoned, and land values are dropping. Farms that have been cleared and occupied for a long time can now probably be bought at a much lower price than they could a few years ago. I understand that the Minister (Mr. Sifton) expressed the hope that the provincial governments might take some action.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. In the way of furnishing information?

Mr. BELL (Pictou). It must be remembered that the provincial governments have scarcely any interest in the matter. The population on the ground is expense to the local government, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) knows, whereas to the Dominion Government every bona fide settler and his family, if they are doing well, is a source of revenue. The same is the case with the municipal organizations in the country. The county council has a direct interest in preventing these farms from being abandoned, and having them re-occupied if they are abandoned. Therefore, both the Dominion Government and the municipalities have a direct monetary interest in seeing the farms occupied, and their interests are consequently identical. I would suggest to the Minister that if the municipalities can be persuaded, as they can easily be, to make accurate lists of the unoccupied farms, giving the necessary particulars required by the intending purchaser, such as distance from school-house, market town, and railway, and so on, the Minister could undertake to print and distribute that information. I think there would be no great difficulty in persuading the municipalities and county organizations to embark in this enterprise. Some of them might hesitate about incurring any great outlay in the matter of publishing and distributing such information, but the hon. Minister has the machinery at his command for distributing it, and it would not affect the cost of his department very much if he also undertook the cost of printing such information as was collected by the municipality. I would like him to dwell on that point in his reply, so that I might go to the municipal council of my own county and urge them to take up this work in connection with the Dominion Government.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I understand that the hon. member for Victoria spoke of abandoned farms in New Brunswick. What has caused them to be abandoned, and when were they abandoned—to-day or in the past? I regret to notice a disposition on the other side of the House to belittle the province of New Brunswick. The other day some hon. gentlemen opposite tried to make out that property in St. John was of no value. Where are the abandoned farms—in Prince Edward Island or in New Brunswick? What caused them to be abandoned, and is property in New Brunswick less valuable or more valuable now than formerly? I think the leader of the Opposition would join with me in remonstrating with any one who tried to belittle the maritime provinces.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman is quite right in saying that I will join with him at any time in standing up in the strongest way for the maritime provinces; but I take it that the effort now being made is to promote the interests of the maritime provinces. The hon. gentleman knows—I know it is the case in Nova Scotia—that, owing to a variety of causes, the sentiment which the world has recognized, that westward the star of empire wends its way—the tendency to go west, which seems to be implanted in the human heart—has been a great disadvantage to the maritime provinces. People have been leaving Nova Scotia and New Brunswick for many years to go to the United States, with the expectation of bettering their fortunes, though in many cases they have found that they had better have stayed at home. There is no doubt that the great attractions of the north-western prairies have induced many people in the maritime provinces, where the making of new farms is attended with more hardship than on the open prairies, to leave what energy and industry would have made very comfortable homes. These farms, having been left by their owners for the purpose of going west, could be acquired for a comparatively small sum; and I take it that the object of my hon. friends have in moving is not to throw any discredit on either Nova Scotia or New Brunswick, but to draw the attention of the Minister to the fact that there are many immigrants coming to this country with a little capital, who might be induced to take up these farms, and who, by industry and energy, could make of them very comfortable homes for themselves, and have advantages which perhaps would not be found in a great many other places. I am inclined to think that measures that have been taken this session are going to have a great effect in giving additional employment in the maritime provinces, and promoting enterprises that will hold the population to a larger extent than we have been able to do in the past. I do not think there is a disposition in any way to decry the maritime provinces, but an intention on the part of everybody to adopt such a course as would produce the best results, both in increasing the value of farm property there, and affording employment to our people. While on my feet, I want to say to the Minister of the Interior that he was good enough two years ago to promise me across the floor of the House that he and the Government would give their careful attention and consideration to the claims of a gentleman who has played a very important part in respect to immigration. I refer to Mr. John Dyke, who was formerly an agent of the immigration department at the port of Liverpool. I am not going to find any fault with the Government for having superseded Mr. Dyke; but I want to point out that when he was induced by the Government of the Dominion to take service under it, he occupied a very valuable and important position in connection with the government of Ontario, which he surrendered for that purpose. I brought the claims of Mr. Dyke again and again before more than one of the late Governments, and pressed upon them the importance of providing a superannuation allowance for him; because, although it certainly was not desirable to extend the superannuation system, the terms upon which Mr. Dyke entered the service, the undoubtedly great value of his services, both in England and on the continent, in promoting immigration to the Dominion, his great ability, and his long service made it, I think, the duty of the Government, when his health broke down, as unfortunately it did, to take some measures to relieve the hardship of the position in which he found himself placed. The Minister of Agriculture was good enough to say that he recognized the importance of Mr. Dyke's claims, and that they would receive attention. I want to press that upon him now, because I happen to know that the position of Mr. Dyke and of his family is such that it is of great importance that he should receive some consideration at the hands of the Government for his many years of long and valuable service.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I am very glad to hear the hon. leader of the Opposition talk as he has done about the maritime provinces. I do not suppose that the hon. gentlemen opposite intended to be offensive in the remarks they made; but it was impossible for me to sit here and let the impression go abroad that the maritime provinces are not on a par with the rest of Canada.

Mr. McDOUGALL. May I ask the hon. gentleman to state who was it said anything he could so construe?

Mr. DOMVILLE. I refer to the remarks made the other night about the value of property in the city of St. John. I am sure that if the hon. leader of the Opposition had been here, knowing, as he does, the value of property in that city, he would have contradicted the statement made.

Mr. DAVIN. Nobody made any statement the other night about the undervaluation of properties in St. John, N.B.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I will make some statements about you if you do not keep quiet.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman can make all the statements he likes, within the boundless resources of his malignant tongue against me.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I do not wish to make any statement against you.

Mr. DAVIN. Then, what do you mean by saying you will make statements? There is not a man on that side dare make statements about me, from the Prime Minister down.

Mr. DOMVILLE. My hon. friend must admit that we have been very lenient with him, not only last session, but the session before, and I do not think he ought to claim anything on that score.

Mr. DAVIN. Lenient?

Mr. DOMVILLE. Yes, why to listen to the hon. member's orations hour after hour is to be lenient. It would not be permitted anywhere else except here. I call that being lenient, but let that pass, it is not worth discussing. Perhaps we will have to use a little more leniency before we go. The country is looking to the expense incurred by delaying this session until this late hour, nearly five months, and I suppose some hon. members still think that they have something to say, though the House in general may not be of the opinion that they have. Judging by the time some members take up, we may be here until Christmas.

Mr. ROSAMOND. What are you doing now ?

Mr. DOMVILLE. I am taking up all the time I require and a little more. Speeches have been made by hon. gentlemen opposite decrying the maritime provinces, but the hon. leader of the Opposition has contradicted these now, and has done right. But what advertising ammunition could be made out of them by the agents of steamboats and railways who are endeavouring to attract everybody into the North-west and give the maritime provinces the go-by.

Mr. WILSON. You have not read the Minister's report.

Mr. DOMVILLE. When your party was in power, and you issued pamphlets all over Europe, you never called attention to New Brunswick at all, but to-day I am glad to have the explanation of the hon. leader of the Opposition, that he has some opinion of our provinces by the sea, that he knows them well and that they ought to get a fair measure of justice, if you choose to call it so, or of what is going. I believe that we have no finer territory in Canada than the lower provinces. We have the coal, the iron, the lumber, and good men too, as is evidenced on both sides of this House.

Mr. COCHRANE. You are giving us quite an illustration now.

Mr. DOMVILLE. What does the hon. gentleman say ?

Mr. COCHRANE. I am asking how long it is since you have been here.

Mr. DOMVILLE. The hon. gentleman must congratulate himself that we do not produce any men like him down there, whether for greatness or smallness.

Mr. COCHRANE. I am glad we have not many like you in Ontario.

It being One o'clock, the Deputy Speaker left the Chair.

The House resumed at Three o'clock.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). A number of matters have been referred to by different members of the committee of which I desire to give some explanation. My hon. friend from Lennox (Mr. Wilson) has referred to the question of expenses of immigration officers. The rule followed is this, that when these officers are at headquarters, they receive nothing for board or lodging, but are expected to pay their own expenses. But while they are travelling in the service of the Government, they are paid for board and lodging. Thus considerable difference will be found in the amounts allowed to different officers on account of expenses, because some travel more than others. Mr. Davies, the officer at St. Paul has, I presume, during the last year for which expense bills are shown in the Auditor General's Report, been comparatively little away from his office, and his expenses have not been very large.

On the question of salaries, I do not know that I can say much more than I have already said, having discussed this question once or twice before. The committee will understand that when a man is specially selected for certain work, it is practically a question of making a bargain with him ; it is not the same transaction as where a man is taken into the service and is paid a salary according to the class in which he is. Some agents get $75 a month, a few $100, and one, Mr. McInnes, stationed at Detroit, gets $125. His position is that of a general agent supervising the work in the state of Michigan and other work with which he is naturally connected. The exact limits are not defined, because it is impossible to define them. But, generally speaking, he watches what is going on, exercises a general control over the work, and advises the department as circumstances arise. He has been a very efficient and hard-working officer, and I think that the payments to him are fully justified by the results. The work in the western states since it was organized in March or April, 1897, has been far more successful than I expected.

With regard to Capt. Holmes, to whom the hon. member for Lennox has referred, I do not know that I can give the hon. gentleman any more information than I have given him privately and in the House. I did not know anything about Capt. Holmes, when I organized the service, except in a general way—I think, perhaps, before I became a member of the Government, I have seen his name in connection with the immigration service. When I asked the late Deputy Minister, Mr. Burgess, for a list of the officers that were in the service, the list was furnished me. I have that list in my possession now. When my hon. friend from Lennox spoke to me, I did not know that I had it. But it has since turned up, having been laid aside in a drawer. I was satisfied that this list did not show the name of Capt. Holmes, and I find that I am correct. I did not know at the time that he was, or claimed to be, in the service of the Government. As a matter of fact, he had been, but was not at the time referred to. This is why the name of Capt. Holmes does not appear in our list of employees.

Mr. WILSON. With regard to the question of expenses, I would like to know whether Mr. Davies and Mr. McInnes occupy relatively the same position in the service ? I see they both receive the same salary, although their payments for board and lodging are very different.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. These officers are not exactly graded ; but Mr. Davies and Mr. McInnes, if classified, would be put in the same class. Mr. Davies has sort of general charge in St. Paul, and exercises a general supervision over the work in the north-western states. The only explanation I can give, or that the deputy can give, for difference in the charge for board and lodging is the reason I have given—that one man travelled more than the other. Generally speaking, Mr. Davies is not so much on the road as Mr. McInnes, for his duties confine him pretty well to his office. St. Paul is an exhibit office; we have an exhibit there of the products of Canada, so that any man going there can judge from that exhibit the resources of the country. We have an exhibit also in Detroit, but a comparatively small one. Then, again, a very important duty of the agent at St. Paul is to watch carefully the trains coming in from different parts of the country. St. Paul is a great railway centre for all the north-western states, and people travelling in all directions reach St. Paul. One of the most important duties entrusted to Mr. Davies is to learn the movement of population by watching the trains, and to see that everything is done to prevent people who are billed through to our North-west, being taken off and sent to any portion of the United States. He also gains in this way information which he reports, and which enables our agents to work more effectively.

Mr. WILSON. What do these people do in winter time? For instance, does Mr. McInnes travel during the winter?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The effective work in the way of advertising the resources of Canada, lecturing and hunting up prospective settlers is done during the winter. But the men who are employed in the North-west in locating settlers during the summer, we send down to parts of the western states to localities that we think most promising, to assist the permanent agents in that work. It is during the winter that the missionary work is really done to the greatest extent; during spring and summer the agents are principally employed in looking after the settlers and locating them.

Mr. WILSON. This matter of railway fare, is that for the agents or for the immigrants?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The railway fare as charged there would be for the agents themselves.

Mr. GUILLET. Has the hon. Minister received a list of names furnished him by the late Deputy Minister, Mr. Burgess?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, I have a list in my office.

Mr. GUILLET. Do you know if it contains the name of Charles Munson? He was one of the agents employed in that service under the late Government. It is singular that Mr. Burgess should have left off the names of the appointees of the late Government. Has the hon. gentleman any objection to bringing down that list?

Mr. SIFTON.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Not the least.

Mr. WILSON. Who fixes the rate allowed agents for travelling and hotel expenses? Have you placed any limit on them as to what they shall pay for their board and lodging?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The agents are allowed their actual outlay.

Mr. WILSON. My impression is that the old Government fixed a limit beyond which they should not go.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. In some cases the late Government gave them an allowance of so much per day, and that was a source of profit to the officers, as they did not spend all they were allowed. But at present the expenses allowed to the officers and paid by the Government do not amount to as much as the old allowance given them. I know that to be the case particularly in the Indian Department, where we made the change.

Mr. WILSON. I presume the Minister insists on vouchers for all these expenses.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, everything is closely watched. There are one or two other matters I wish to mention. In reference to uniforms for the officers, the custom has been to give uniforms to the officers at Halifax, Quebec and Montreal. I think there were some uniforms given also at Winnipeg. I think we have extended a little the allowance at Winnipeg, because the staff has very much increased. That was the practice of my predecessors, and I approve it, because it is very desirable where there are a large number of people coming in and especially where the people are of miscellaneous nationalities that the officers of the Government should be in uniform. That secures them proper attention and obedience, and it makes all the difference in the world to have the officers in uniform in a service of that kind. That practice has been continued, but my Deputy Minister informs me that the allowance for uniforms is somewhat less than it was in former years, it has been cut down a little. The present practice is to allow one complete uniform, an extra pair of trousers, and an overcoat each year.

Mr. WILSON. The Auditor General's Report shows in many cases that you allow two summer suits at a cost of $46 for both, and a winter suit at $25, fur cap, $10, a cloth cap at $3.96. In one case I see a gentleman got two. You will find these items on pages H-8, 9, 10 and 11. On page 9, Halifax, I find a charge for summer uniforms, 2, $46.50; winter uniform, $22. There are no less than seven such items at Halifax.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My deputy informs me that since he has been in charge he has not allowed two sets of uniforms to be given in one year. If the amounts appear as the hon. gentleman says, it must be an old account.

Mr. WILSON. Here is what I find on page H-11, Winnipeg: summer uniforms, 2, $46; winter uniform, $24; overcoat, $25; fur cap, $8.50; cloth cap, $3.97. Just below that is another account for Mr. W. F. McCreary: summer uniforms, 2, $62; winter uniform, $30; overcoat, $30; Chesterfield coat, $14.50; fur cap, $10. Now, why should they have three suits a year? They are better dressed than most of the members of this House, I fancy.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am bound to say that I am unable to explain these items. We will have to look up the accounts of the department. I think I am quite safe in saying that it is not at all correct that any one man has received three uniforms in the course of one year. I will try and get an explanation of it for the hon. gentleman.

Mr. WILSON. I do not bring this up for the purpose of criticising the hon. gentleman I merely want information.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman is quite right. I will have the matter looked up.

Mr. WILSON. There was another thing that struck me forcibly. I see that at the port of St. John they received 2,770 immigrants during the past year according to the report of the Minister of the Interior, and I do not see any account in the Auditor General's Report for a uniform at that port. I do not understand on what basis you do it. I would like if the hon. gentleman would lay down the basis on which the department distributes these uniforms.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Until a short time ago only one man was in the employ of the department at St. John, because immigrants did not come there in any numbers. It was only during last year that there were any considerable arrivals of immigrants at St. John, and we had to send other officers there for the purpose of doing special work at the time when they came. If this business continues at St. John we will have to increase the staff there and we will follow the same practice as we followed in regard to the others.

Mr. WILSON. I see at Brandon, where the clerk and caretaker of the building got a better suit of clothes than the agent. The clerk and caretaker got a suit of clothes that cost $28, while the agent got a suit that cost $25.50.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The person in charge of the buildings is also the agent.

Mr. WILSON. It does not appear in the Auditor General's Report. It just says, "clerk and caretaker." The clerk got a suit that cost $2.50 more than the agent.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is only one man at Brandon. The other man to whom the hon. gentleman refers is a travelling agent. He is down under the head of Brandon because he is there at times, but there is really only one agent at Brandon. The hon. leader of the Opposition called my attention to the case of Mr. John Dyke. The hon. gentleman, I presume, understands that Mr. Dyke was not in a position a couple of years ago to do very much work for the department owing to the failure of his health. I said, when the hon. gentleman brought this matter to my attention, that I fully appreciated the value of his services to the Dominion of Canada. I understand that Mr. Dyke's services have been valuable, not only in the way of assisting immigration, but also in connection with commercial matters. Various gentlemen who have been engaged in business in the old country, have informed me that Mr. Dyke's services have been very valuable in that connection. I have had in my mind the idea of re-engaging Mr. Dyke and placing him in charge of the Liverpool office, and I am prepared to do that if his health will permit him to do the work. I do not think that he will be able to do the same amount of work that he did previously when he was receiving a salary of about $3,000, but I might offer him a couple of thousand dollars a year to take charge of the office, and we will not expect him to do the same amount of work that he did in former years. This is a plan I have had in my mind and which I have had under consideration. I cannot speak positively as to the details but I have every confidence that we will be able to get Mr. Dyke back into the service and put him in charge of the Liverpool office. Since his retirement no person has occupied the same position. Mr. Jury is not an office man; he is in reality a lecturer. On account of the increase in the movement of people from the British Islands we require additional help in the Liverpool office, and I believe that Mr. Dyke's services would be of great value to the Government. That is a suggestion that I had under consideration for some time, and which, I believe, I may be able to carry out. I think the only thing that would prevent me from carrying it out would be Mr. Dyke's being physically unable to do the work.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am extremely glad to hear the statement made by the hon. Minister of the Interior. I think the suggestion he has made meets the case admirably, but I am quite certain that he would only be doing an act of justice to a gentleman whose services in the past have been, as he says, of the most valuable character, both in regard to immigration and to commercial matters. When I last saw Mr. Dyke he had, in consequence of a very important surgical operation that had been performed on him, become greatly improved in his health, and although, perhaps, not equal to the same amount of work that he formerly did, I have no doubt that, in the position that the hon. Minister designs for him, he will render valuable service to the country.

Mr. WILSON. I would like to get through with this part of the immigration business in regard to which I have asked the hon. Minister some questions. I would like to have some explanation about the results which have been achieved in Ireland, and which are very small compared with the amount of money paid out. I see that the cost of the Dublin agency was $6,233, and of the Londonderry agency $2,888, making a total of $9,121. The result was that during the whole year these agencies only reported 709 immigrants from Ireland. It does seem to me that you are paying too much for your agents in that country for the results you are getting, and if the hon. Minister can make some explanation why these agencies should be conducted on so extravagant a scale while sending such a small number of immigrants to Canada, I would like him to do so.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am prepared to admit at once that the results in Ireland, proportioned to the amount of money that has been spent, have not been anything like as satisfactory as I could have desired.

Mr. WILSON. Not so much so as in Scotland.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The work in Ireland was undertaken, as was stated here in the House two years ago, under very unfortunate auspices. When Mr. Devlin went there to take charge, he was met at once by the determined hostility of the Nationalist party. The Nationalist party, as the hon. gentleman knows, is practically supreme in Ireland, as far as public opinion is created, and they regarded the idea of encouraging people to go from Ireland as contrary to their political interests. Taking that view, they made a most violent attack upon Mr. Devlin, upon our service, and incidentally upon Canada. The Irish papers were teeming with articles attacking us and attacking Canada, and trying to make out that we were acting in unison with the landlord interest for the purpose of getting the people away. Of course, it was most ridiculous, but this inflammatory propaganda went on for some time, and Mr. Devlin, instead of being received with open arms, was received with a hostile volley. He had to attempt to change the attitude of the press before he could accomplish anything at all. I am bound to say that, under these extraordinary circumstances, I would not have been at all surprised if Mr. Devlin had lost heart and thrown the whole thing up on account of the position he found himself in. Notwithstanding that, he went on, displaying a great deal of courage, determination and tact, and he actually induced some of the leading papers which had been most pertinacious and most violent in their attacks upon him, to take back all they had said, and admit that, practically, to all intents and purposes, they had wronged him. Since that, he has been accomplishing something and the work there has a much more promising aspect than ever before. I am bound to say that for the amount of money we spend in Ireland we are getting less from there than from any other place, but I am not sure that it would be desirable to drop the work on that account.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Mr. WILSON. Would not it be possible to lessen the expenses in Dublin? The other agency only costs $2,888, and $6,233 for Dublin seems a very large amount. It is about $12 a head for every immigrant, besides the bonus you give the steamers.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is not high.

Mr. WILSON. It is high compared with what you pay the Doukhobors. I think the expenses in Ireland could be reduced without impairing the efficiency of the service.

Mr. COCHRANE. Is there any other place you could send Mr. Devlin to?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. On consideration I do not think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wilson) would say that $12 a head is out of the way.

Mr. WILSON. Not for Irishmen, I admit.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Looked upon in that way, the expenditure is not too much, but we are getting but few people, and it is much more than I would like to see.

Mr. WILSON. It is more than you are paying for Scotchmen.

Mr. WALLACE. The Minister is not able to show that Mr. Devlin has secured a single settler in Canada for this $6,000. These 709 immigrants of Irish extraction, have mostly come from Liverpool, or some English ports, and there is no information which would enable us to attribute them to Mr. Devlin. Has the Minister any reports from Mr. Devlin to show the work he has done? The Minister says that Mr. Devlin's presence in Dublin aroused hostilities to Canada, and that hostility would never have appeared had not Mr. Devlin been sent as agent. It, therefore, appears that it was a mistake to send

Mr. Devlin there at all ; but I suppose he had to be provided for. He was a member of this House, difficulties arose between him and the Government, and Mr. Devlin had to be sent out of the country, to the injury of Canadian immigration from Ireland, as stated by the Minister himself, and to the injury of Canada's fair name ; because they never would have thought of attacking Canada if Mr. Devlin had not appeared on the scene. Mr. Devlin's presence in Canada became very unacceptable to the Government, of which he was trying to become a member, and so he had to be got out of the way. The whole thing has been unfortunate as well as expensive.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Is Mr. Benjamin Davies, the agent at St. Paul, a brother of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. He is.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I suppose the fact that he is a brother of Sir Louis Davies accounts for his increased expenditure ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It, no doubt, accounts for the smallness of his expenses, as compared with the others.

Mr. McDOUGALL. His expenses, including salary, amounts to $5,891.63, and he is the highest of the twenty or more agents in the United States. Mr. McInnes comes next with $5,500, and all the rest run from $1,000 to $3,000. I see the hon. member for Russell (Mr. Edwards) in his seat, and I understand that it is hoped that he will be promoted to a knightly position. Before he receives the honour of knighthood, he would do well to inform the House whether or not he has any brothers or sisters that we will have to appoint to positions at the expense of the country after he is knighted. This class of officials are expensive.

Mr. COCHRANE. Speak now.

Mr. EDWARDS. I do not think it is a matter which would interest the House very much.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Of course, the only amounts received by these agents are the salaries, and as to the expenses, that is a matter for the Government to decide upon. I can tell the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) that not only would we be willing to print and distribute such information as the municipalities and county councils wish to provide, but if my hon. friend (Mr. Bell), or any other member of the House, wishes to indicate a particular municipality, I am willing not only to print and distribute the information, but to send an experienced officer there to collect it, without any cost to the municipality. Of course, our handbook is of a general character, referring to all parts of the Dominion, and it would be impossible to print such detailed information in it. I am in sympathy with the idea of transplanting people of some means from the old country to the maritime provinces and the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, where good farms may be available at reasonable prices. I have been unable to give attention to this phase of the question for want of time. I imagine that if I had been able to visit England myself, I would have been able to work out some plan with reference to this particular work. However, I expect, during the fall of this year, to give special attention to it, and although I do not expect any great results at once, still the work may be commenced.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. member for Lennox (Mr. Wilson) drew the attention of the Minister to some items on page H-11 of the Auditor General's Report, respecting uniforms for immigration officials, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wilson) showed that the total amount paid to Mr. McCreary for uniforms and clothing amounts to $146.50. Is it expected that when the Government pays for these uniforms, the officials who receive them shall have to wear them ? Is the Minister aware that Mr. McCreary wears this uniform for which the country pays ? I am advised that it is not his practice to wear it. I do not know the gentleman. I entirely agree with the policy of having these immigration agents clothed in uniform, but I think that the Minister should insist upon them wearing them.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The uniform was requisitioned for by Mr. McCreary, and I have not the least doubt that he wears it. It may be that the hon. gentleman's information arises from the fact that Mr. McCreary may wear his uniform when actually on duty in Winnipeg, and may not wear it when travelling. I have no doubt that he wears it when on duty. I do not want to be understood as making a positive statement that he does, because the matter has not been brought to my attention before ; but I will have it looked into.

Mr. HUGHES. I have seen Mr. McCreary on duty travelling without his uniform. I did not know he had a uniform. He is a good officer.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My deputy informs me that Mr. McCreary has not perhaps made the same display of brass buttons on his uniform that some of the other officers have, and that may explain the supposition that he was not in uniform.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the object of having a uniform ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have explained that at seaports and at Winnipeg, it has been found very desirable that our officers should be in uniform, as by that means they receive more attention than they otherwise would, especially from foreigners.

Mr. FOSTER. The brass buttons are the essential feature.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. McCreary is not in the ordinary sense of the term an immigration agent.

Mr. COCHRANE. I think it is important that if the country pays for a uniform for this gentleman, and he is so fastidious about his appearance that he does not want to wear brass buttons, he should buy his own uniform. I understand from the Minister that the uniform is supposed to impress people with the fact that the man who wears it is a Government official, and to give him more influence with them than a man in citizen's clothing; but if this man is so nice that he does not like brass buttons, and does not want to be put in a position to be recognized by the immigrants as a Government official, he had better pay for his own clothes, and let the brass buttons be put on somebody else who will wear them.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I suppose the drift of the hon. gentleman's argument is that the officers should all have the same kind of buttons. I will take that into consideration.

Mr. CLARKE. I may say that I do not know Mr. McCreary. The hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) says he is a very efficient officer. If the hon. gentleman says so, I have no doubt he is. I had a communication informing me that Mr. McCreary did not wear the uniform, and asking me what this meant.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. What my hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane) says is perfectly correct, that if the Government pays for the uniform the officer ought to wear it.

Mr. CLARKE. Might I ask the hon. Minister what was the cause of the comparative failure of Mr. Devlin at Dublin? I understood the hon. gentleman to say that when Mr. Devlin arrived at the Irish capital, he was assailed by the Nationalist press. What was he assailed for? How did the Nationalist press come to identify the Canadian Government with the landlord party? I am not clear on that point.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am bound to say I am not clear either. The attack on Mr. Devlin was not in any way justified. Mr. Devlin, very much to his credit, has, I think, been able to show that it was not. As the hon. gentleman is probably aware, there had formerly been at different times a movement got up by the landlord party and the friends of the landlords for the purpose of inducing emigration as a source of outlet for the agitation that took place on the land question. They jumped to the conclusion that this was part of the same scheme, and they immediately attacked Mr. Devlin, and it took upwards of a year of hard work on his part before these people could be got to see that there was nothing in it. Then they proceeded to attack Canada. It seemed to be a necessary and logical part of their argument that they should attack Canada as well. However, that is all over now. While it injured Mr. Devlin's usefulness very much during the first portion of his stay, I think, perhaps, it has not done him any harm, because it gave him a lot of advertising that he would not have otherwise got.

Mr. HUGHES. What is the Minister's authority for making the statement that the landlords and their friends were trying to carry out a scheme of immigration?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I did not say assisted emigration. I said that idea had been circulated by the landlord party.

Mr. HUGHES. Why did Mr. Devlin return to Canada a short time ago?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. He returned on leave of absence.

Mr. HUGHES. Was his salary paid while on leave of absence?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. Was he on strike?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I can assure the hon. gentleman that he was not.

Mr. WILSON. I did not hear the Minister's statement in regard to the number of suits of clothes of uniform allowed to each immigration agent each year?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Each officer who gets a uniform is allowed a complete suit, with an extra pair of trousers, an overcoat and a hat or cap.

Mr. BERGERON. Are they allowed two suits—one for the summer and one for the winter?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No. The present custom is to give them only one suit a year.

Mr. FOSTER. What are the regulations?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. member for Lennox (Mr. Wilson) pointed to something in the Auditor General's Report inconsistent with that, and I will look them up and inform the House later.

Mr. BERGERON. Were not the difficulties which Mr. Devlin met, when he arrived in Ireland, due to the fact that it was known over there that the school question had not been settled, and that it was looked upon as something which would prevent immigrants coming to this country ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I never heard the suggestion.

Mr. BERGERON. He was asked to explain, and that took him a year.

Mr. TAYLOR. In the Auditor General's Report, page H-13, I see $2,610.17 paid to a gentleman by the name of T. O. Currie, who is stationed at Stevens' Point, Wisconsin. Where is that ? They have agencies at Omaha, and Chicago, and other large centres, but I never heard of Stevens' Point. He was paid $1,200 salary ; board and lodging. $658, and other expenses, making a total of $2,610. What were the results of his mission, and how many immigrants did he send to the North-west ? Was he not a defeated candidate at the last election in the interests of the Patrons, and was not his appointment a consideration to induce the remaining Patrons elected to this House to support the present Government ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I cannot say. Mr. Currie was recommended to me as a suitable man for that particular class of work, such as calling meetings of farmers and speaking to them on the general resources of Canada, and I must say he has been a very good man indeed. The agent general, who overlooks his work, told me several times that Mr. Currie had done very good work. I cannot tell how many immigrants he sent, because it is only agents who are working on commission who keep an exact tally of the men they send and get certificates from them. It would be a great waste of the time for the others to do this.

Mr. TAYLOR. Was this appointment given him to induce him to retire as the Patron candidate ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No. I have never seen Mr. Currie, but from what I have heard, he is a very suitable man for the work.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the special work he is doing ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. He is in the St. Paul office, working within a radius of a couple of hundred miles. He addresses meetings of farmers, gives them information about Canada, and acts as correspondent.

Mr. HUGHES. Has he made any report ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. I have sometimes to differ from the hon. Minister, and this is one of them. I think any man who would betray his party and his friends, by selling out to the Government for an office, is undeserving any office in the gift of the country.

Mr. DAVIN. I would like to know whether the reconciliation between Mr. Devlin and the Nationalist party in Ireland is now complete. My opinion is, that all the energy of our energetic friend was required to effect a reconciliation, and we know that in this House he was most energetic. When he went over to Ireland, he got into difficulties with the Nationalist party, which no other agent prior to him experienced. Mr. Devlin had the reputation of being a Canadian politician with Nationalist leanings, and one of the doctrines dear to Nationalists in Ireland is that emigration from their country should not be encouraged, but repressed, and when they found that Mr. Devlin had voted, when a member of this House, against the Prime Minister, who was then leading the Opposition, because he felt very much aggrieved with the present Prime Minister on account of what he considered certain laches in carrying out his promises, and that, still, he went over to Ireland as a paid servant of the Government led by that same Prime Minister, a great many of the people of Ireland, and especially the National party, who are very sensitive on the point of a man taking office under a government with which he is no longer in accord, applied to him a very nasty word, which I shall not here use, because Mr. Devlin is not in the House. The consequence was, that a regular crusade was made against him, and wherever he went, he found the publications of this party in Ireland confronting him, and the first thing he had to do was to make his peace. That is one of the reasons, undoubtedly, why the results of his labours have been so exceedingly weak, and I would like to know whether he is now free to devote his entire energy to bringing out immigrants. Is he able to devote his entire energy to this work ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think so.

Mr. DAVIN. That is not a satisfactory answer ; it shows doubt on the part of the hon. Minister.

Mr. CASEY. A question has been raised about one T. O. Currie, who has an appointment under the immigration department, and the Whip of hon. gentlemen opposite has started the ingenious theory, that after this Government came into power they made Mr. Currie an immigration agent to induce him not to be a candidate at the election which preceded their coming into power. That is a mighty ingenious theory, and only conceivable by such an ingenious brain.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Casey) will not say that Mr. Currie had not the promise of an appointment if he would withdraw ?

Mr. CASEY. As a matter of fact, he started a candidature in one of the western counties—

Mr. TAYLOR. Where ?

Mr. CASEY. West Middlesex. But he gave it up early in the campaign to fight the battles of the Patron candidates against both parties. I happened to run against a Patron myself, and no man was so active in favour of my opponent as Mr. T. O. Currie, showing that if the Liberal party tried to bribe him to keep him from opposing them, they were quite unsuccessful in doing it. In East Elgin, he supported the Patron against the Conservative candidate. In other places he went about supporting the Patron candidate consistently, no matter who might be opposing him. So, it is certain the Liberal party did not bribe Mr. Currie by promise of an appointment in case they should be successful.

Mr. TAYLOR. How about handing over the Patron party to the support of the Liberals ?

Mr. CASEY. That is something that only my hon. friend, the Opposition whp (Mr. Taylor), knows anything about, so, perhaps, he had better explain it. Nobody ever knew that the Patron party was handed over or was capable of being handed over to any other party. But the Patrons supported nearly the same lines of policy as ourselves, and when the Patron party became disorganized, the members of that party naturally fell into our ranks. As to Mr. Devlin and his troubles in Ireland, we know that the Nationalists object to all emigration and emigration agents. They would object to anybody, if they thought he was likely to secure emigration; but if they thought he was a useless man and not likely to do effective work, they would not say much against him. They saw that Mr. Devlin was a taking and popular man and likely to secure immigrants for Canada, that is why they spoke of him as they did. As to the alleged difficulties between Mr. Devlin and the leader of the Government, whatever mention of that matter was made in Ireland was made as the result of the efforts of our friends of the Opposition, who sent statements to Ireland hoping to lessen his usefulness and prevent the success which otherwise he might have gained. I cannot imagine any one better qualified by all natural gifts to secure immigration to Canada from Ireland, and to make Canada popular amongst Irishmen than the gentleman who was entrusted with this work.

Mr. BERGERON. How many agents has the department in the United States ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Eighteen agents who are paid a salary. We have also a large number who are paid a commission; they get the ordinary commission when they send a certificate showing that they have secured immigrants.

Mr. BERGERON. I have a report from the department, given by the authority of my hon. friend (Mr. Sifton), showing that there are twenty-one agents in the United States. I will send it over to my hon. friend and he will be kind enough to give me the salaries of those named on the first page.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The names of the agents and their salaries are as follows :—

McInnes, Detroit, Mich.....	$1,500
Caven, Bad Axe, Mich.....	1,200
Grieve, Mount Pleasant, Mich.....	1,200
Crawford, Kansas .....	900
Davies, St. Paul, Minn.....	1,500
Currie, Stevens' Point, Wis.....	1,200
Broughton, Chicago, Ill.....	900
Bennett, Omaha, Neb. ....	900
Rogers, Watertown, S. Dakota.....	900
Longworth, clerk, Detroit office.....	750
Rev. J. B. Morin.....	800
Rev. Mr. Gouin .....	500
Rev. Mr. Blais.....	500
W. J. White, inspector and general agent for United States.....	2,000

The next three men are not salaried—Messrs. Bartholomew, Parker and Reid.

Mr. BERGERON. I got that report from the department, and was depending upon it.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Messrs. Reid and Bartholomew get $50 a month and a commission on those they send, and Mr. Parker gets $25 a month and a commission.

Holmes, St. Paul, Minn.....	$1,200
Swanson, Eastern States.....	1,500

Rev. Mr. Burriss, of Port Arthur, is not a salaried officer, but we are paying something towards his expenses. He is working to get up a colony to settle in the Rainy River district. He has already brought one colony into that district, and we allowed him something for his expenses, and he is getting another small grant. I believe he comes from Bowmanville. He brings his settlers from the United States; my deputy says they principally come from Ohio. He wrote to me stating that he thought he could get up a colony, and asked if I would allow him something for expenses. We have so many offers of that kind that I hesitated about it, but finally I thought the scheme looked feasible and we gave him a small amount. He brought about 100 people, and the people of Port Arthur were pleased with his work, and told me he ought to be encouraged by getting an additional grant.

Mr. BERGERON. According to my hon. friend's report, there are 255 other agents in the United States; how are they paid ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. When they send a settler and furnish us with the evidence that he is a bona fide settler, we pay them a commission.

Mr. BERGERON. What kind of immigrants do the Government accept and pay for in this way?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. None but agriculturists, we do not recognize the labourers at all. In fact all our agents are notified that labourers will not be permitted to come in, that is to say, that we keep them out under the Alien Labour Law. Our commissioner at Winnipeg is appointed under the authority of the Minister of Justice, to act as alien labour officer, and he has special instructions to prevent any labourers from coming in. There is no trouble about it, because they all understand perfectly that labouring men are not allowed to come in. The settlers are all agricultural settlers. The immigrant gets a certificate from the agent who sends him, and that certificate is presented to the commissioner at Winnipeg, who, upon his being satisfied that the certificate was signed by the agent, and that he is a bona fide settler, certifies that the agent is entitled to his commission.

Mr. BERGERON. How much do you pay?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The bonus is $3 for an adult male, $2 for an adult female, and $1 for others than adults. It does not differ much from the bonus we pay the steamship companies.

Mr. BERGERON. These agents who are paid salaries and who were mentioned a moment ago, do they receive anything else for board and travelling expenses?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. These officers get nothing else, in any shape or form, which is of any benefit to them, that is to say, which adds to their salary. Our rule is that when an agent lives at home he gets no allowance for board or expenses, but when his duties call him away from home, then we pay his actual travelling expenses and board and lodging.

Mr. BERGERON. Who is the agent at Detroit?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. McInnis is the gentleman now in charge of that office.

Mr. BERGERON. Has my hon. friend received any petition, or has he been written to, on account of the agent at Detroit not being able to speak the French language?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Has my hon. friend taken any steps in regard to the matter?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have not yet. During the session I have, to some extent, lost sight of it. The matter was brought to my attention before the session, or at the beginning of it, or, at any rate, some months ago. I was not satisfied of the necessity of having a French agent appointed there. The hon. gentleman will understand that I cannot remove the man who is there. The number of French immigrants that we will be likely to get, will not justify us in removing the present agent, because he has been there from the beginning, and has worked up the business himself. I contemplate removing the clerk from the office by exchanging him, and putting a French-speaking officer in his place.

Mr. BERGERON. That will be in the place of Mr. — ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. Longworth.

Mr. BERGERON. As a matter of fact, is my hon. friend satisfied that, for the amount of money we are paying to all these agents, there is a satisfactory result in the number of immigrants and in the kind of immigrants that come from the United States to Manitoba or the North-west Territories?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think that the work has been phenomenally successful and very much more successful than I had any idea it would be when we started it. As near as we can calculate from the returns, about 10,000 agricultural settlers came in last year. It is the universal testimony of the people amongst whom these immigrants have settled that they are the very best class of settlers. They are people who have learned farming, and who are nearly all from the western states.

Mr. BERGERON. How many agents are there in Europe? I would like to know their names and salaries.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have at Paris Mr. A. Bodard, who gets a salary of $1,200 a year; in Belgium we have Mr. P. Foursin, who gets $1,825 a year, and another agent in Belgium named Mr. Treau De Coeli. This last named gentleman was recommended by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa). I believe he is a very capable man. These three, we have as permanent agents, and we have in addition to that Prof. Oleskow, of Vienna, who is our agent in Austria. He is not a permanent officer of the department, and he does not devote all his time to the work of the department, but he represents the department in that country. There was an arrangement by which the department was to pay him a bonus of $250 for each settler that he sent, but that fell through owing to the difficulty that we experienced in tracing his work, and knowing whether people who came were sent by him or not. While he has been working for us he has received about £750, and we owe him now £250. That would make about £1,000 for three years, and that includes certain expenses which he has paid in the way of credits. I suppose we pay him at the rate of $1,200 a year. The rate of payment is difficult to put on a definite basis in his case, because, being a university professor, he cannot be treated like a clerk. We correspond with him and we have paid him about $1,200 a year. He is the gentleman who recommended the Galician immigration. I may say that the first party of Galicians that came here were such a very undesirable lot of people that an arrangement was made by which some supervision should be exercised over this class of immigration, with the result that the parties which have come out subsequently have been better.

Mr. BERGERON. I suppose that this is the gentleman who sent out the Doukhobors and the Galicians?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. He had nothing to do with the Doukhobors.

Mr. BERGERON. How many has he sent out?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have something over 11,000 Galicians. I cannot say how many he has sent.

Mr. BERGERON. Did he get $2.50 a head for them?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No; it was first arranged that he should get $2.50 a head, but that arrangement was modified, and we have paid him £750, and we owe £200 or £250 now.

Mr. BERGERON. Who sent the Doukhobors?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The arrangement with regard to the Doukhobors was made originally with Mr. Aylmer Maude, an English gentleman who was formerly a merchant in Russia, who retired from business and who came back to England. I think he is a Quaker; anyway, he is associated with the English Society of Quakers, and the Doukhobors are Quakers. The sect of the Doukhobors was planted in Russia by an English Quaker. The English Society of Friends arranged for the settlement of the Doukhobors, or Russian Quakers, in Canada. It came about in this way: Prince Hilkoﬀ, who is a Quaker, was closely associated with these people in Russia; he had been banished from Russia on account of his refusal to comply with the military regulations. Prince Hilkoﬀ became filled with the idea that the Doukhobors could be planted successfully in the United States or Canada, and he entered into communication with the Society of Friends in England, and they sent out Mr. Ward to negotiate for their settlement. Mr. Ward came to see me in Winnipeg when I was there some time ago, and after a lengthy discussion with him, I came to the conclusion that these people were a desirable class of people to have in our North-west, and further inquiries confirmed me in that belief. After a considerable amount of negotiation we agreed that if they would transport the people and pay their passage from the Caucasus where they were then living to the point in Manitoba or the North-west where we meant to place them, instead of paying a bonus to the steamship agent as we usually do, we would increase the amount a little and make it £1 sterling per head, and would pay that amount to a committee to be named by them in conjunction with myself, that is, they named certain members and I named certain members. The committee was composed mostly of Winnipeg gentlemen, and we paid this bonus of £1 sterling per head to that committee, who expended the money for the benefit of the Doukhobors. I may say that from the nature of the case it is an impossibility to do everything of that kind with perfect system. The committee was not organized quite in time, and we had to pay a certain amount on behalf of the Doukhobors when they came, but that was charged up against the £1 sterling per head; so that the entire expenses we are at, outside the ordinary increased expenditure of the office on their account, is £1 sterling per head.

Mr. BERGERON. Could my hon. friend give me the names of the members of that committee?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They were Mr. Archer, an English gentleman, acting in the same capacity as Mr. Ward, as adviser and friend of these people, and a representative of the English Society of Friends who were assisting them; Prince Hilkoﬀ, Mr. McCaffrey, Manager of the Union Bank in Winnipeg, Mr. McCreary and Mr. Bole, Chairman of the School Board in Winnipeg.

Mr. BERGERON. How many Doukhobors have landed in Canada, and have gone up to their destination?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Seven thousand three hundred, for each one of whom we have paid the £1 sterling. Of course, the fact that the business of the department is increased by that much has increased the general outlay for the year a certain amount. We take care of these immigrants in precisely the same way as we do others. If we hear that 500 or 1,000 people are going to land at Halifax to-morrow, our officers are there to look after them, and to do whatever is necessary for their comfort, and to look after their conveyance to their destination. We treat the Doukhobors in precisely the same way. The only separate special outlay for them was the £1 sterling. Everything we bought, including the bread when they were going out, was charged against that bonus. Perhaps the actual outlay was increased a little by reason of the fact that we had to hire a staff of extra interpreters. Every train-load that went up from Halifax was accompanied by an interpreter, which caused a little extra expense.

Mr. BERGERON. How many more of those immigrants are coming here?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. About 1,000 or 1,500 more may come this year.

Mr. BERGERON. When does the Minister expect that immigration to stop?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have nothing definite on that point.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it the policy of the Government to bring in all the Doukhobors and Galicians they can get?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I would not say that, without knowing how many we can get. If we got 10,000 more Doukhobors next year, I should be happy to have them come.

Mr. BERGERON. And the Galicians?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My belief is, that the Galicians are a very desirable class of settlers, but it requires a considerable amount of trouble on the part of the Government officials to get them started. We have had to supply them with provisions the first year to some extent, and I must say that they struggle hard to pay us back for them. We must take care, with settlers of that kind, not to take more than we can assimilate and attend to. I have no doubt we can handle five or six thousand Galicians a year for the next ten or fifteen years, and make good settlers of them. The Doukhobors are not as hard to take care of as the Galicians.

Mr. BERGERON. How much land have you at your disposal for such immigrants, and where is it located?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have got land enough to settle a million of them. The whole of the Saskatchewan valley is practically empty yet.

Mr. FOSTER. Where are these going that you brought in this year?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The entire tract of land for these 7,300 only comprises less than eighteen townships. Each male adult gets a quarter of a section, and eighteen townships would more than provide for that.

Mr. WALLACE. Are the conditions for homesteading the same for the Doukhobors as for other people?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Exactly the same.

Mr. McNEILL. How are these Galicians selected?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I cannot give the hon. gentleman very much information about that. We have Professor Oleskow at the other end of the movement, and he has special authority from the Austrian Government. It is his duty, as far as possible, to prevent people of the pauper class from coming, and I think, with the exception of the first couple of parties, he has been fairly successful.

Mr. McNEILL. The reason I ask that question is, that I understand there is an impression abroad in the Territories that a good many of these people have been criminals in their own country.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I can assure my hon. friend there is no truth in that.

Mr. McNEILL. I wish to call the attention of the Minister to this fact. I am not speaking off the book, but I am speaking from information which I have had from a person who would not have written to me on the subject unless he fully believed what he wrote. He tells me that there is very strong reason to suspect that some of these men who have been palmed off on us here, have been criminals in their own country. I call the attention of the Minister to that, so that he may take steps to investigate the matter, and if it is true, to see that nothing of the kind occurs again.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If my hon. friend (Mr. McNeill) will give me the name privately, or will state to me where his information comes from, I shall have special inquiries made, and the information may prove valuable. The report which I have seen in the newspapers, that the Galicians are of the criminal class in their own country, is an entire mistake.

Mr. McNEILL. My information would not go so far as that, but simply that some of them have been criminals, and I should suppose, from what I have heard, more than a few.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Out of 11,000 people, I suppose, it would be almost impossible to provide that some might not be of bad character.

Mr. McNEILL. From my information, I understand it is not merely a few who have been criminals.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I can understand that perhaps the informant of my hon. friend would not like to have his name mentioned, but if I get the source of the information, I would have it followed up. I am perfectly satisfied there is no foundation for the report that there is more criminality among the Galicians who come here, than there is among the ordinary population of Canada. On the contrary, I venture to say that there are no 11,000 people in the Dominion who will show a smaller record of crimes committed during the last three years than these Galicians. The report of those who know them is, that they are extremely good-living people in their ordinary relations. Of course, there are some things in connection with their social habits which are more or less distasteful to the Canadians, and that applied also to the Mennonites. I am perfectly satisfied that the record of the Galicians, so far as crime is concerned, is most creditable to them. Up to the present time I am only aware of one serious crime committed among the Galicians, the murder at Stuartburn and it appeared in that case that the man had been a criminal before he came here. Ordinarily speaking, the record of the Galicians for propriety of living is very good.

Mr. BERGERON. Are there in the older provinces any agents employed by my hon. friend, not under salary, but commission, to induce the people of the older provinces to settle in the North-west and in Manitoba? Are there any agents in the older provinces of the Dominion, similar to those we have in Europe and the United States?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have no salaried agents commissioned to do that; but some work of that kind is done by the two or three Roman Catholic clergymen whose names I have mentioned, though it has not been recognized by the department, and is not done under instructions from the department. We simply do not take any steps to prevent it.

Mr. BERGERON. As a matter of fact, any person from the older provinces wishing to go to Manitoba or the North-west would be treated in the same way as immigrants coming from Europe or the United States?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. In just the same way—no difference in the world. Speaking about the Doukhobors, I may say that the last ship-load of them which came landed at Quebec, and some people there applied to me to allow some of them to settle in the Lake St. John district, they were so favourably impressed with them. I sent back word that there was no objection to their going anywhere they wished; but the Doukhobors themselves were so set on going to where the others had gone that no arrangement of that kind could be made.

Mr. BERGERON. In such cases I suppose it would be left to the local government to pay the expense?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I threw no obstacle in the way, but, on the contrary, said that I would be willing to assist them in any way I could. I do not know any reason why we should not spend our money for the purpose of settling people in the back portions of the province of Quebec or the province of Ontario, as well as in the North-west.

Mr. BERGERON. I am glad to hear that; I did not know it before. I thought the hon. gentleman could only pay out money for immigrants who were going to Manitoba or the North-west Territories.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Not at all. For instance, our officers cooperate with the colonization societies at Montreal and Quebec, which do a very large amount of very valuable work; and a considerable number of people have settled in the province of Quebec owing to their efforts in that direction.

Mr. BERGERON. Then, would my hon. friend help, in the same way that he is doing in the case of the Doukhobors, any immigration from Belgium or France to settle in the province of Quebec?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Certainly.

Mr. BERGERON. Are the agents in the old country notified of that?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My deputy has just called my attention to a fact which I had forgotten, that the agent in Belgium, whose name I gave just now, is working altogether or almost altogether to get settlers for the province of Quebec.

Mr. CLARKE. Might I ask the Minister if one of these shipments of Doukhobors who have come to Canada came from the Island of Cyprus?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes. They are the last lot who have arrived.

Mr. CLARKE. Was the Minister's attention called to the fact that the death rate among those who had been in Cyprus was very high before they left, and has he inquired into that?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Our information was that the death rate was very high among them when they were in Cyprus, because of the unhealthiness of their situation there. Special attention and care has been given to the medical examination of the Doukhobors at the ports where they have landed.

Mr. FOSTER. Was anything done in that respect at the ports from which they started?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No. They started from Batoum. As a matter of fact, the small-pox which manifested itself on two occasions among them was caught at that place, and was not brought with them from the Caucasus. As my hon. friend knows, there is small-pox at certain times of the year at southern Asiatic ports, and when a lot of people go there at those times, some of them are almost sure to catch the infection. Very careful attention is paid to the medical examination, and my hon. friend, the Minister of Agriculture, tells me that Dr. Montizambert states that the Doukhobors who have landed have been, without exaggeration, as healthy and sound a lot of immigrants as have ever landed in Canada. I may say further that the people who came from Cyprus passed the medical examination all right: they did not have to be quarantined. It was the Doukhobors who came from Batoum who had to be quarantined for small-pox, and I am satisfied that they brought it from there and not from the Caucasus.

Mr. FOSTER. It seems to me that where a medical examination should be held, if the circumstances at all favour it, is at the port of embarkation, so that idiots and persons afflicted with chronic diseases shall not get started on this immigration, but shall be sifted out at that end of the line. I would like to ask the Minister if there is any insuperable difficulty in the way of the medical examination being made at that point rather than at the point of debarkation here. Since we are on the subject of the Galician and Doukhobor immigration, I want to say a word or two on that subject. I have no doubt that those who are strongly opposed, either from prejudice or for better reasons, to Doukhobor and Galician or Hungarian immigration, have painted these people as being less desirable than they really are; and I dare say the immigration department paint them as being a little better than they really are. So far as I am concerned, I have no prejudice against these people. We have 11,000 of one kind, and 7,000 of the other kind, and shall probably have more. They have come here, and I hope they will be successful in this country, and make good citizens. Now that they are here, I do not want them to feel that there is any section of Canadians anywhere who do not bid them God-speed and all success possible in their new homes. We can do that, however, and still have our own views as to the multiplying of that kind of immigration in this country. There is some objection to that class of immigration. I am not going to say that the North-west is not big enough to absorb a certain portion of almost any healthy stock in the world, although the process may be longer in some cases than in others, ultimately assimilating them into a good type of citizenship. But I think we ought to be careful that we get good stock. It may not be the most intelligent in the world, but if it is good healthy stock, that is one necessary element in building up a good population in the North-west. That is one of the things that should be assured, and a careful medical examination would help the department to sift out all who do not reasonably fulfil this condition.

But you may get too many of the class of people whom it takes a large amount of time to assimilate into sympathetic citizenship with the people of our country; and I think it is possible that you may group these people together in large masses so as to make that a very much longer and more difficult process than might otherwise be the case. I think the Department of Agriculture ought to take these points into very careful consideration—how many we can absorb from time to time and whether we are putting them into aggregations which are too close and too numerous. I have heard of difficulties which arise, and I suppose my hon. friend has as well, and it is not necessary for me to take up time further alluding to it. But I think it is a proposition that many of us may accept, that while we welcome those people, now that they are here, and feel that we may absorb some more of them, if we do not get immigrants of the better kind—and there are immigrants better suited to our country and purposes—the thing to be kept in mind is how many we ought to take, and whether we are aggregating them too much and whether they should not be aggregated to a certain extent in order that the process of assimilation may be more rapid. They have much to learn as to the habits, thought and citizenship of the country, and they will learn these more quickly, if not too much tied together, so that they may breathe the atmosphere of other settlers more advanced and of our own people, and thus be stimulated in the progress they must make before they become equal to the best citizens in the country.

I have never thought that we should be too impatient about bringing in large immigration. Everybody knows that what we want is population, but everybody knows as well that the quality of population counts much more than the quantity, and that 5,000 first-class immigrants, who have some idea of our methods of Government and sympathy with our social and other ideas, and who have besides an advanced knowledge of agriculture, are much better than 50,000 of a class that it would take a generation or two to bring up to the required standard. So that we ought not to be too impatient as regards numbers, and should feel that we are doing the work well if the class that comes in is the best class possible to get.

I want to call my hon. friend's attention to another matter, which he does not seem to know as much about as he should, or else the information has not been brought out, and that illustrates the trend of the department to stand by all that is done as the best that could be done. I refer now to the Buriss settlement in the Rainy River. Has the hon. gentleman no information as to the absolute total failure of that attempt to colonize those townships in the Rainy River district? There must be reports that have reached him. I have occasion to pass up and down, and have talked with the people there, and you cannot go up the Rainy River and talk with the people, whether Grit or Tory, without being told that a great mistake was made. You would be told this even by the strongest adherents of the Government, and you would be told by others that worse than a mistake was made. It is generally known there that Mr. Burriss' colony was an absolute failure, and its failure has had a most prejudicial effect on the settlement of that country.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. What was the mistake?

Mr. FOSTER. In the first place, the settlers were not of the right class for that kind of country. They were brought from Kentucky, Tennessee and Ohio, those southern latitudes, and did not know the kind of life or country to which they were going. They were not the kind of men who should have settled in a farming district like that, where everything is in the rough and in the new. Their resources, habits of life and previous experience did not fit them for that at all. Owing to the difference of clime and the totally different conditions from what they expected, these men were totally inadequate to cope with those conditions, and the result has been that every man of them who could get out by means of what he could earn or beg, did so, and those that remained are there simply because they are caged and cannot get out. Several people have told me that they have helped these settlers out of sheer sympathy and pity. I was surprised to hear that my hon. friend thought that the work of Mr. Burriss had been so successful in the past that he had added a bonus for future efforts in that direction, but I suppose there must be reports in the department that give this information. At any rate the failure of this scheme is a matter of common talk in that district.

It cannot be said that the Rainy River district is not good for farming, because it is. There is no better land, I believe, in Ontario than a strip of from ten to twenty miles wide along the Rainy River; I mean back from the river, and extending probably 60 or 90 miles. Everything seems to grow, the greatest crops of clover and timothy can be shown there, but the conditions in those townships are in the rough entirely, and in that district, differing from prairie land, it takes three or four years for a man to get his clearing made and reach a point when he can make a living for himself.

The main difficulty was, first, in the class of people sent in. They were not the hardy farmers who should have been sent in. In the second place, the conditions were different from what these people had, in some way or other, been led to expect. But that the colony was a failure and a bad one no one doubts who is conversant with the facts.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have not any report in the department showing that Mr. Burriss' efforts have been a total failure, and I do not think that they have resulted in total failure. I have heard pretty nearly all that the hon. gentleman heard himself, stated by people who are very much prejudiced against Mr. Burriss, particularly in the neighbourhood of Rat Portage and along the Rainy River. There is a variety of explanations to be given. Mr. Burriss was met by a good deal of hostility of a religious character. Religious prejudice has something to do with that hostility. He is a reverend gentleman, a pastor of the Disciples. I asked a good many questions, and the information I got would lead me to believe that there was some foundation for what the hon. gentleman has heard. A proportion of the people were of a class who could not get on in that country, but some of them would succeed. The only official report I had was from Mr. Speers, who inspected the colony, and his report is favourable.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. FOSTER. When did he inspect the colonies?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. In October last. I was there myself last summer, and I heard two stories. Some said that Mr. Burriss had been fairly successful—I did not hear anybody say he had been remarkably successful—while others apparently feeling strongly against him, said that his efforts had resulted in total failure. I think the truth lies between the two extremes—while his efforts did not result in complete success, they did not result in complete failure. A fair proportion of the settlers will remain and will be successful.

Mr. WALLACE. What about the hon. gentleman's information, stated here, that a large number of these settlers had gone back?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If the hon. gentleman had been listening he would have heard me say that a number of these settlers turned out to be failures.

Mr. WALLACE. That is not the question. Have a large number of them gone out of the country?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I said so—I may not have put it in those exact words—

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) said that the truth is between the two extremes, the question is, is the information that a large number of these people have gone out of the country correct?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have no official information to that effect. I got a certain amount of general information when I was there.

Mr. FOSTER. Was the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) in the settlement?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No. I was at Rat Portage and went down Rainy River to Fort Frances. I met a number of people who talked about this matter. Now, as to the advances made to Mr. Burriss, that was done at the urgent solicitation of the Port Arthur people, who, I presume, were more or less cognizant of his former efforts. That may not be a correct assumption. At first I refused, but after further representation and at their urgent request, I gave him a small contribution towards his expenses—I think, something like $200 or $300.

Mr. FOSTER. Before we leave this subject, I wish it understood that I do not allege anything against Mr. Burriss' good faith and earnestness. I simply give the information I gathered, having talked with people who had been through the settlement and who knew I was anxious to get the facts. No doubt, Mr. Burriss tried, in good faith, to do the best he could. But I think it will be worth while for my hon. friend, before he goes any further, to inform himself of the facts of the case. And I may tell him that he will not get them at Port Arthur or Rat Portage for these places are practically as far from the settlement as we are. That is a country which has a good future before it, but much depends upon getting the right class of men in as pioneers. This done, a large immigration can follow. The facilities for raising stuff are unbounded, while the sale of it is practically at their doors. So it is a very interesting country and a very eligible one to open up. But you can easily give it a bad name by making the mistake of encouraging people to go there who are not fitted for pioneer work.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have no doubt that Mr. Burriss did get some people who were not good pioneers. But so far as there was any failure in this respect, it was not due to bad faith on his part.

Mr. FOSTER. And I may say I never heard of any religious difficulty.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am sure there was a prejudice of that kind.

Mr. MACKIE. I think there must be some mistake about these people returning in any considerable number to the United States. I came down by the last boat that came down the Rainy River last fall. There were some fourteen or fifteen men on the boat who had come from the United States to settle in the Rainy River district and had taken up farms. They were going back to the United States. But what were they going for? They were going to get their families to bring them back to their new homes.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. On which side of the river have they settled, the Ontario side?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. On the Ontario side. There are no settlers on the other side. There are two other points that my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) referred to. One of these was the medical examination in the case of foreign immigrants. It is extremely difficult to inaugurate any system of examination in a foreign country, where the rules and regulations are not made at our instance and do not conform to what we want. We cannot enforce any rules, and we should be liable to get into difficulty if we undertook to do anything of that kind without careful consultation with the authorities there. The greater number of our immigrants from Europe come from Hamburg. There, the port authorities undertake the examination, and my information is that it would be difficult, if not impossible, to get any arrangements made that would be satisfactory. So far as the Doukhobors are concerned, they had their own doctors on board, who, I believe, are quite competent. An examination made at the point of embarkation would not have enabled the physicians to prevent an outbreak of small-pox. The infection was, no doubt, taken at Batoum, while they were there. No physician could have detected it then, because it is only after the period of incubation that the disease manifests itself, and until then, no physician can detect it.

Mr. FOSTER. Of course, you cannot detect an incipient epidemic.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They were all carefully examined and were found to be strictly healthy.

Mr. FOSTER. I am afraid that in some surreptitious way some others were smuggled in. I went through two or three trains filled with Galicians—

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) does not understand me. I am speaking of the Doukhobors, not the Galicians.

Mr. FOSTER. While I am on my feet, I may say, with reference to these Galicians, that I went through some of the trains conveying them, and it was evident that some of them should never have left the other shore, and would not have left it for Canada if there had been some good supervision. The steamship companies should have been told: If you bring these people out, you will have to take them back again.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am glad the hon. gentleman has made that explanation, because I am sure his complaints must have applied to the Galicians. But so far as the Doukhobors are concerned, there was a great deal of care exercised. I do not mean to say that there was no disease among them, and that all were in absolutely perfect health. But there was nothing of a kind that a medical examination would have caused them to be excluded from the ship. So far as the general question is concerned, I am free to say it is one that we shall have to consider seriously, and we have been considering it for some months past. It is a difficult subject to deal with. It is extremely desirable that some method should be devised that will enable us to exercise a little more authority than we have in regard to foreign immigrants. At the present time there is nothing in the law that authorizes me to stop them at all; the law would have to be amended in order to confer authority upon me to do so. Up to the present time there has been no special occasion for drastic measures, and I would not propose drastic measures unless the indications were very strong that serious difficulty was likely to arise. As I told the House the other day, I stopped the bonus for the Galicians altogether from the 1st of June last. I may say that I was strongly remonstrated with upon that subject from the High Commissioner's office, but we decided that we were likely to receive as many from that country as we wished this year without any additional pay, and so the bonus was stopped. We have taken steps for the purpose of cutting off that immigration for this year; as for next year, that will be a matter we shall have to consider.

Mr. COCHRANE. I am not going to find any fault with this expenditure for immigration; I have always been prepared to vote any money that was necessary for the purpose of peopling our North-west Territories, or any other part of Canada, so long as the money was judiciously expended. Now, a thought struck me with reference to the percentage these reverend gentlemen are getting, or so much per head for the immigrants they induce to come into this country. I think that is a mistake. But a more important point is this: For instance, you have got several agents in the United States who are paid by salaries, and a certain number of men who are paid a percentage; now, is there not a possibility that while you have a paid agent, and he has territory to work over, you may have a percentage man who is reaping the benefit of the work of the salaried agent? Here is a man working on a percentage, and you have an agent, I understand, who is getting $5,000 a year, at least he is costing the country that much. Now, it struck me that one of these percentage gentlemen, whom I do not believe in at all, may be right in the territory of your salaried agent, and he is receiving so much per head for the same immigrants whom you pay this man $5,000 to bring out. I do not know anything about this reverend gentleman, but it appears to me he cannot have the same interest in bringing the right class of settlers into the country as a man who is working for a salary. Another point: I think it is an utter impossibility for a man from the southern states to come up into our northern latitude and carve out a home for himself and become a successful settler. I can understand a man from the southern states going on the prairie in a northern climate and making a living for himself; but I confess, as a man that was brought up on a farm, and who has cleared a good deal of land myself, that I am at a loss to know how you can take a man from the southern states, and put him into the forests of Canada, and make a successful settler out of him.

Mr. ROGERS. I am sure that both sides of the House will agree that anything that can be done in the line of bringing in immigrants to fill up our North-west should be approved of, if the money is expended judiciously. We are all anxious to see this country filled up as fast as possible with the proper kind of immigrants. We have not had as good results in the past as we could have wished, for the money expended, whatever the reason may be. It is evident that the present Government have made a little extra attempt to bring in settlers from Europe, although some people may not think them desirable. But my opinion is, that the Government are justified in bringing them in, in view of the great need that there is of filling up our North-west. As regards the Doukhobors, some reasonable objection has been taken to living them up in settlements; that is about the only objection that I have heard in regard to them. Some people complain because they will not take up arms and fight for their country, the same as others; but I have no fear that in our lifetime we shall ever have any trouble of that kind. With regard to the Galicians, I feel that there is good in them also, although perhaps they are not the best class of immigrants that we could get. I have heard the complaint made that the Doukhobors are averse to going out and working as servants for other people, while the Galicians are all anxious to hire out to the farmers and others. Of course, they work for low wages, but they do not come into competition with the artisan or the mechanic, because they are all agriculturists. I am pleased to hear that many of the Galician women go into domestic service, and in some instances have proved themselves very satisfactory. That is a kind of service that is very much needed in our country. We want cheap agricultural labourers. We have to compete in the foreign markets with very cheap agricultural labour in other countries, and, in order to do so successfully, we must have cheap agricultural labour at home. That is the only means by which we can increase our agricultural products, and by which men who have money invested in agricultural enterprises, can get a good return from it. It is quite evident, even in Ontario, that if we could get cheaper labour, such as they have in the old country, we would be able to increase our output 50 or perhaps 100 per cent. It is an acknowledged fact that farming does not pay and farmers cannot afford to pay the wages that are demanded for labour on the farm, and which labour should receive, having regard to the prices that they get for their products. The question is frequently asked: Why do the young men leave the farm? One of the reasons, and the principal reason, is, that they cannot get an adequate reward for their labours on the farm. They do not like to leave the old homesteads, but when they see other young men, whose capabilities are no better than their own, getting twice the remuneration that they can earn on the farm, they will not stay at home. If we could get cheaper agricultural labour young men would be more disposed to stay on the farm, because, in that case, they would not be compelled to work like slaves to hold their property. What I say must apply to the North-west Territories as well as to other parts of the country, because, I am sorry to see, that in the little pamphlet issued by the department here, Mr. Septimus Field says:

I have known several men who dated their downfall from the time they began to hire labour.—

He speaks of Manitoba.

Mr. CLARKE. Who says that?

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Septimus Field.

—So long as they confined themselves to a certain number of cattle and a limited acreage of grain, they did well, but when they began to increase them and outside labour was necessary, it soon ate up both cattle and profit, until the time came when the servant hired the employer. Instances of this have come under my own observation. Many of the now-thriving settlers owe their position to the wages earned from others, coupled with their own thrift, gaining capital and experience at the same time. Many others, starting with capital and no experience, hired men to do the work they should have done themselves, and came to grief as above indicated.

That is very poor encouragement to English capitalists to come to this country.

Mr. CLARKE. What is that document the hon. gentleman is reading from?

Mr. ROGERS. It is a pamphlet issued by the department to encourage immigration.

Mr. CLARKE. What department?

Mr. ROGERS. The Department of the Interior, I suppose, or it may have been the Department of Agriculture. It is headed "Western Canada; Timely Remarks by Septimus Field." However, if Mr. Field never had said so, it is true all the same. Some good may come out of it in that line. As regards these American agents, when we first sent them over to the United States to bring back immigrants from that country, I had very little faith that they would accomplish anything, because many of our own people had left Canada to go to that country, but the results have been very much more satisfactory than I anticipated. I happened to be out of the House for a few minutes, but I understand that some remarks were made about Mr. Currie leaving our Patron organization, and taking a position under the Government. If Mr. Currie does as good work and creates as much enthusiasm in the minds of the people there, as to the possibilities of our great Dominion, as he did in awakening the farmers of this country from the lethargy into which they had relapsed, as regards party thralldom, he will accomplish a great work. I think there is no man who could be selected, in this House, or in this country, who is better fitted to picture, in glowing terms, the beauties, the grandeurs and the possibilities of this great Dominion than Mr. Currie. I will say this, that if Mr. Currie did leave the Patrons he never left them until the Patrons had, unfortunately, disbanded, they did not stick to him or he would never have left them. Canada could not have a better agent or one who could more effectively describe the beauties and grandeurs and possibilities of our great Dominion than Mr. Currie. I am glad to see that good results have come out of this movement. I wish to refer to an article that is published in a paper called the "Farm and Home," which has an American and also a Canadian edition. The paper has headquarters at Boston and Chicago. I will read an article from it that will be very encouraging to the hon. members of this committee and to the Department of the Interior, because it indicates the good work that is being done in the United States by the agents there, and it shows that Mr. Currie, or somebody else, must be exerting an influence upon the minds of the Americans favourable to the movement in which he has engaged.

Mr. CLARKE. Is it the Canadian edition the hon. gentleman is quoting from?

Mr. ROGERS. It is the Canadian edition.

Mr. CLARKE. Where is it published?

Mr. ROGERS. It has two headquarters, one at Boston and another at Chicago. It says:

Mr. FOSTER. Easy.

Mr. ROGERS. I am not slapping my hands and jumping about as the hon. member does; I am keeping quite cool this time. He says:

I have read with interest the first article in "Farm and Home" for June 1st, "The Boom in the North-west," and think that an exodus of 5,000 of our citizens in one day for Canada must show to our Government daddies that something is going wrong, or that many of our citizens must have more confidence or security in other lands and under other governments than our own. I am constantly receiving letters and reports from truthful friends in the North-west, who prefer that country. I intend going there myself, though I prefer not to sell my home, or give up my citizenship.

Millions will leave United States for the north and north-west—

Mr. FOSTER. Millions ?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes ; if they do we do not want many Doukhobors—

—inside of two years, and the population of Canada may far exceed the population of the United States.

This shows what this man thinks about protection.

Trusts, combines, monopolies, corporations, corrupt legislation, billion dollar congresses, pensions for soldiers from whom our country never received just service, rotten beef contracts, expansion in foreign and worthless lands to the neglect of our own, maintaining large armies and navies in order to force our modes, manners and institutions down the very throats of Filipino niggers, who have no more use for them than our forefathers had for taxation without just compensation from overburdened Englishmen more than a century ago ; the burden of all, or nearly all, this falls heavily on those least able to bear it—the farmers, the bankers by usurious interests forcing them from their farms.

He is not only writing to this paper, but he has written to his own Government as well.

I have just written a statement of facts and figures from my farm journal, which I have kept during 18 years of farming in Gallatin Co., Mont., and sent it to Washington, showing how prices have declined and how deceptive the income of the farmer is to an unobserving eye. Our papers often give glowing accounts of Montana. So high are they that I cannot attain thereto. But it is easier to farm on paper than on untutored soil.

WILLIAM NORWOOD, Montana.

I am sure that every member of this House will receive that statement with pleasure. It may be a little exaggerated as to the millions, but the other statement, I believe, is correct, as to the immigration that we shall have from the United States. If our Government take a little lesson from this and seek to check the power of the monopolies, combines and trusts formed through the curse of protection, I am sure our country will prosper.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. ROGERS. I am only giving the experience of that man who signs his own name to his statement. I hope that good results will flow, and that the Minister will see that there is no money needlessly expended. Experience has shown us that we cannot get as large immigration from Great Britain as we got formerly. The country is prosperous, the agricultural labourers are being paid higher wages, we are sending them abundance of our products so that they have cheaper food, and they are less anxious to emigrate than they were formerly. If we can get the small capitalists to come to Canada, then we would have the best class of settlers, and we should endeavour to get that class by showing them that they will have some return for the money they invest. I believe that the immigration agents in England, Ireland and Scotland do their best, but we must remember that they have great difficulties to labour under. I am British and loyal enough to believe that the Canadian Government should encourage by every possible means, English-speaking emigrants. I believe that they should have these agents in Great Britain, and we know very well that if the Government had no agents there a cry would be at once raised against them, although they say too much money is being spent in that line.

Mr. OLIVER. As representing probably one-sixth of the area which is affected by the immigration vote, and as representing the part of the country to which most of the immigration is now tending, I would ask the indulgence of the House for a short while. I shall speak on this subject in a somewhat general manner at the beginning, and call the attention of the House to the large vote for immigration, and the consequent necessity for understanding what results we are striving to obtain by the expenditure of that money. To begin with, it would be well to divide our immigration efforts into two parts, first, that part which we consider valuable enough to warrant us in paying out a large amount of money for ; and second, that part which we do not consider sufficiently desirable to warrant us in expending money to encourage. It is, I believe, thoroughly understood, that there are these two divisions of our immigration service. We send a large number of agents to Great Britain and to the United States and we pay them considerable salaries, because we believe it to be in the highest degree desirable to get immigrants from these countries. We, therefore, spend a large amount of money, not only for the purpose of getting immigrants, but for the purpose of getting desirable and valuable immigrants. But, Sir, the results we have achieved from that expenditure in actual heads of population received, is not very much greater than that per head which we have received without, so it appears, any serious expenditure of money. There is a flow of immigration towards us without any considerable expenditure, and it is that phase of the immigration business which I propose particularly to discuss. I take the liberty of doing so, because the district which I represent, and close to the place at which I reside, has been most favoured by this particular class of immigrants. I am probably more familiar personally with it than any other member of the House, and, therefore, I may be excused for speaking with special reference to that subject.

It does not seem to me to be fair to say : We have received, say, 10,000 immigrants in a year, and we have spent $200,000 or $300,000 to get these immigrants ; when half of these immigrants came of their own volition and without any serious expenditure on our part to get them. There is a question as to the desirability of these people coming here at all, and I shall speak on that point. I wish to speak, not from the point of view of the Government of the day, nor from the point of view of the Opposition of the day. I wish to be understood, not as making a political harangue, nor questioning any motive or policy in any way, shape or manner, but I stand here as the representative of the people of a large part of the North-west Territories, and I wish to place before this House the views of those people in regard to this question which so intimately concerns them. I speak from that stand-point and not from any other. Now, in arriving at that stand-point, or in attempting to arrive at it, whether theirs is the correct stand-point or not, I will ask the House, what is the primary object of inducing immigration ? I believe I am in accord with a large majority of the settlers throughout the North-west when I say, that the primary object of inducing immigration is not simply to produce railroad traffic, but for the purpose of building up a kindred, and as far as possible, a higher, and a better civilization in that country. This may not sound practical to some members of this House. We have heard other reasons given, but speaking for the people who are on the ground, I say, that the settler of the North-west has an ambition other than simply to raise so many thousands of bushels of grain that a railway company may get freight on, or that a merchant may make a profit in handling. The ambition of the settlers of the North-west Territories is not to be hewers of wood or drawers of water for any corporation, or association, or class of the community. They are there as individual citizens of this country, with ambitions just as high and with feelings just as delicate as those of any other class of the community, and perhaps a little more so. The settler who goes into the North-west Territories has the ambition to build up there a pleasant and satisfactory home for himself and for his children after him ; to build up a civilization and to take part in the general progress of the community. He raises the wheat, not as an end but as a means, and he depends for his success in achieving progress and civilization upon the efforts of his neighbours as well as upon his own efforts. If his neighbours are not like-minded with himself, if his neighbours are not of a progressive instinct, if they are not of a civilized tendency, then the progressive and advancing and prosperous settler of the North-west Territories is handicapped by association with those who are not progressive, and, therefore, are not prosperous.

I say that by putting into the North-west a class of people who are not progressive, whose ambition is not civilization, you are handicapping the settlers who are there, and whose ambition is to build up a civilized and prosperous country, such as you see around you to-day—the result, not of accident, or chance, or the force of circumstances, by any means, but the result of the application of energy, intelligence, enterprise and every other quality that goes to make a man or a nation ; and you cannot have the establishment of a progressive civilization in the North-west without these qualities in the men who are there, any more than you could have had it here. This country is civilized, is progressive, is great, by reason of the people who inhabit it. There are other countries which are far ahead of Canada in natural advantages, but which are not the equals of Canada, and are not in sight of Canada in civilization, or progress, or in anything that goes to make the greatness and blessedness of a nation. It is the people who make the country—who are the country. Now, transplant in the North-west people from such a country—a country that is ahead of Canada in natural resources, but is far behind it in civilization and prosperity—for the one goes with the other—and you put them as a collar around the neck of your civilized and progressive settlers ; you cannot expect to see that progress which you would have, if the country were inhabited entirely by civilized people. The mere fact of transplanting a man from one location to another does not change his nature. You see all the difference between one settlement here and another settlement there, simply because there is a different class of people in the one from what there is in the other. Therefore, if you transplant people who are behind in civilization, who have no ideas in regard to our system of government or our social life, who have no ambitions such as we have, who are aliens in race and in every other respect, can you expect your country to be built up as it would be, if you had better men in it ? I say you cannot reasonably expect it ; and you are handicapping the good men you have there by putting such a class of settlers among them.

One hon. gentleman says that they will be labourers for the other settlers. If there is a field for the employment of the labour of these men, let those who represent that field speak for it ; let them demand that the efforts of the immigration department be put forth in order to supply the demand. If Ontario wants these people, by all means let Ontario have them. I am not speaking for Ontario ; but I do claim to speak for the part of the North-west which I have the honour to represent, and I say that we have not a sufficient field for the employment of their labour there—that they stand there, not as labourers for the rest of the community, but as a danger to our social system, our municial institutions and our general progress. That is why we desire to call the attention of the Government and of the House to the undesirability of allowing this immigration to continue.

It is quite common to hear it said: Oh, there are millions of acres in the North-west; there is plenty of room there for everybody. Let me tell the House that the North-west is not illimitable. It is very nearly as far from Quebec to Windsor as it is from Winnipeg to Calgary, which is the length of the North-west. But the question is not one of area altogether. It is a question of population. There is in the North-west Territories to-day a population of possibly 200,000; and the success of your institutions in that country and its general prosperity depend upon the maintenance of the supremacy of a civilizing and directing influence in that country. Now, it would be a very simple matter to overcome any particular settlement in the North-west by a foreign population. Every settlement in that country stands in danger from that influx of population, if it is not checked. The whole of the North-west Territories stands in danger; and if that element once gets control, as it necessarily must, if it is a majority, then where is your control of those North-west Territories, and where is your hope for the progress and prosperity of that country? Remember, these people have to be considered as more than merely beasts of burden. When they come to this country, they become citizens; they have just the same rights as you or any one else, and they have to be considered as a power in the body politic. They are something more than merely raisers of wheat. They are our governors and rulers; they must necessarily be so; it is only right that they should be. Therefore, I say we should view this matter with a careful eye, and see that we do not get too much even of a good thing, if it is a good thing.

It is said: Look at the example of the United States; there is a country which has grown great by reason of opening its doors wide to the world. Well, let us see. The United States had a population of over 30,000,000 before the general influx of European population began. We, in Canada, have a population of possibly 5,000,000. There was no possibility of the original population of the United States being overwhelmed by the influx of foreigners from Europe. But there is every possibility of the population of north-western Canada being overwhelmed. We must not forget the difference in our situations; and we must not forget that, after an experience of many years of the open door to the world-wide immigration, the United States years ago saw their mistake, and to a very great extent shut the door. Now, if the example of the United States was good at one time, why is it not good now? Surely, the more mature judgment of the United States is as valuable to us as the less mature. If a nation of sixty or seventy millions finds it necessary to shut the door to indiscriminate immigration, is it not more necessary for a country of five millions, especially when the part of the country affected, in which these people will have almost sovereign powers, numbers only half a million, or scarcely that?

"But," you may say, "these people will not come in large numbers." Let me inform the House on that point. The Galician population—that is, the class of people who belong to the Little Russian race, from whom these immigrants come—numbers about three millions in the province of Galicia in Austria. The rest of the population are Poles, Germans and Jews. The Galicians are the servile, or lower, stratum of the country. They are the subject race, and they are being crowded out by the Germans. It became a question whether the Germans or the Galicians should get out. The paramount authority in that country is the Government of Austria, and the paramount authority in the Government of Austria is German. It does not need, then, much figuring to show that, when it came to be a question of the German or the Galician getting out, the backing of the Austrian Government was to retain the German and send out the Galician. That is how we get the Galician immigration so easily, because the government of that country is not only willing, but anxious, that a considerable number of Galicians should leave, in order to make room for the increase of German population. With a population of something like 3,000,000 people to draw from, the government of whom is anxious that most, if not all, of them should leave, we stand in danger of having such an influx of population from that country that our North-west civilization will be overwhelmed; and I stand here to-day to call the attention of the Government and the House to that fact. There is not only a population of 3,000,000 of this race in Galicia, but a large part of the population of southern Russia is of the same race, what is called the Little Russian, and we have no reason to believe that if the immigration from Galicia becomes very large, there will not be an immigration from southern Russia, where the conditions are very similar. So that we stand in danger of having a greater number of these people than we can handle and assimilate and who will control us instead of our controlling them. We have not reached that pitch yet, and have not suffered any serious loss in the main. But there is no use in waiting until we do suffer serious loss. It is desirable that we should recognize the position in which we stand and take our measures accordingly. We have not suffered serious loss, but have suffered loss. It is said that these people settle where other people will not, but in my part of the country they settle where other people have settled and where other people would settle in larger numbers, were it not for these Galicians. In fact, where these Galicians have settled, some of the others have moved away.

An hon. MEMBER. Why?

Mr. OLIVER. Because they are not desirable neighbours. I am sorry I cannot agree in all that has been said favourably of these people and do not wish to paint them in unduly dark colours, but feel bound to state the facts as they exist in my part of the country, at all events. I have inquired whether any settlers have moved away on account of the proximity of these people, and have the best authority for saying that they have. People who were on the lands before the Galicians came, when the Galicians did come, and they saw no prospect of other settlers of their own race, nationality, ideas, civilization and progress coming, left their places, some went to the States, and some to other settlements. That occurred in two Galician settlements in that part of the country. One swallow does not make a summer and one instance does not make a general case, and on the other hand you may say that a generality does not prove anything. But I give you the actual facts which speak for themselves. People have left their places because the Galicians came in and settled near them. These other people are the pioneers and not the Galicians. The latter came in and had the advantage of the experience of the others, and they settled in places which would be considered desirable for settlement by other people were it not for the fact that these Galicians came there. It is not necessary that they should occupy every quarter-section in order to keep other people out, because they have taken up a tract of country about 25 miles in length, and there no other settlers will go, although the Galicians have not occupied every other quarter-section. On the face of it, it is plain that this is a very serious question. While we have not suffered any very serious loss so far, I would not be doing justice to the district I represent were I not to place before this House and Government the fact that there is danger, very serious, to the settlement of the North-west, and particularly that part of the country, from the influence of these Galicians. I say so particularly because I think I have the honour of the largest share of the settlement of these people. They seem to think that we have the most desirable country, for they are coming in there in increasing numbers. I understand that there are other members from other sections who hold different views. There are members from Ontario and the maritime provinces who hold different views. Well, I am willing to let everybody speak for himself, but I would respectfully suggest to the Government that in northern Alberta we have all the Galicians we can satisfactorily assimilate at present, and if the hon. Minister of the Interior can suggest any policy whereby these people can be directed to the localities represented by these other gentlemen who desire them so much, I have no objection to that being done. But do not send them to northern Alberta, for we have all we can successfully deal with at present. In fact, I feel that we have a little more than we can successfully deal with, and I would be very glad to have them sent to the county of Frontenac or the city of St. John or the district of Saskatchewan, or any other place where their presence is desired, where there is a field for them and where they will fill a long-felt want. But we do not want them at Edmonton for we are already fully supplied. You ask where are we to get people to fill up the North-west? I looked over the United States census a few minutes ago, and I found that in 1890 there were in the United States 980,938 native-born Canadians. Of these 678,442 were English and 302,496 French. There were of Canadian descent in the United States at that time 1,700,943 people. If it is true that there were in 1890 about 1,000,000 native-born Canadians in the United States, if my calculation is good for anything, it means that there has been an overflow of population from Canada to the United States of not less than 30,000 people a year for 30 years. Where, then, can we find a better field for immigration to the North-west than right in Canada itself, right in the older provinces? I know that that was contrary to the policy of the late Government, as it is the policy of the present Government, but is it not worth trying to get some of that 30,000 a year to go to the North-west. You may say that it is just as easy for Canadians to go to the North-west as people from the United States. Unfortunately, that is not the case. A man from the United States gets his passenger fare at a cent a mile over the railways and lower rates of freight. The Canadian pays more for his passage to the North-west and more for freight on his goods and effects than men from the United States, so that there is discrimination against the Canadian going to his own country. That is one reason which accounts for the overflow of 30,000 a year from Canada to the United States. These Canadians are the people who will settle the North-west better than any other people, who will make more out of the resources of the country, who will furnish the most freight for the railways, who will do most to build up and strengthen our civilization and nation, and instead of the people of the eastern country setting their faces against the immigration of their own countrymen to the North-west, it is in the last degree to their interest to do everything they can to send them there because if they do not go there, the records show they go to the United States.

It being Six o'clock, the Deputy Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. MONK. I desire to make a few remarks concerning the province of Quebec, and the capabilities of that province, of which, to my mind, the Government has not availed itself sufficiently, to promote the settlement of the great tract of territory which has formed the subject of discussion this afternoon and which is known as the North-west Territories of Canada. It is a matter of regret to me that the subject of immigration has been brought before this committee at such a late period of the session. I have no desire—far from it—to prolong the session, for I belong to what I believe to be the rapidly-increasing majority in this House who desire the session to reach its end as soon as possible. I had not the advantage of hearing in full the remarks of my hon. friend from Cape Breton (Mr. McDougall); but, from what I heard, I take it that he raises a similar point with regard to his own province that I do with regard to mine. It seems to me that this is a matter that we can fairly discuss outside of all political tendencies or exigencies. I was fortunate in being forestalled in this discussion—through an accident—by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver), whose district is particularly interested in the immigration of Doukhobors and Galicians, which has been referred to more than once during the present discussion. It seems to me that our policy of immigration is becoming obsolete; and it seems to me high time, with the present development of the country and the experience of our neighbours to the south of us, that we should radically change that policy. The principle underlying immigration in this country and which, in the beginning, obtained with singular favour in the United States, was to bring to the country as many immigrants as possible, irrespective of the qualification of those immigrants to fulfil properly the role which pertains to them in the new territory they were called upon to occupy—in other words, let us have as many people as possible without serious examination of the qualifications of those people for settlement; let us increase the population at any cost; That is the principle that has governed us for years. I do not wish particularly to animadvert upon the policy of the present Minister of the Interior, for, so far as I can see, he has only continued the system inaugurated in this country years ago and which, to my mind, it is highly desirable to change. The proper principle, and that which now obtains in the United States, is a very different one—it is that we should, as far as possible, secure a proper kind of immigrants; far from soliciting immigration, we should control it; we should examine the class of people who come to the country with the most critical eye and give them to understand that, in coming to this country under our system of Immigration they secure exceptional favours; and unless they possess what are, in our opinion, absolutely proper qualifications for forming part of our body politic, of entering, if I may use that expression, into our national entity, they will be refused. That is a very different principle from that which the Government of this country has acted upon for many years. A discussion of a matter of this kind would make it necessary for me to speak at what I consider unwarrantable length; but I hope, at some future day, and during the duration of this Parliament, to bring the matter to the attention of this House and to provoke such a discussion as will enable us to become more enlightened than we are at the present moment upon a subject of such vital national importance.

To return to the discussion of my own province, what is the position? If I understand it aright, the existence of such a boundless and fertile territory in the North-west, which we desire to fill up as much as possible with a suitable population, is a fact for which the older provinces of this Dominion must be given exclusive credit. It is we who have opened up that magnificent territory, at the price of sacrifices which astonish those who come to this country or become acquainted with the conditions under which that territory has been opened up. It is, therefore, in my opinion, to us primarily that the country belongs. It is we who have the first claim upon that country; and all our endeavours at the present moment ought to be directed to finding among our own people suitable settlers; and only after having exhausted in that respect every resource which the older provinces afford, may we properly turn to European and to foreign countries in general to seek, with every precaution imaginable, proper settlers for our country. But not before we had exhausted every means of finding among our own people those who have an unquestionable right to settle up that country before strangers are invited.

Now, Sir, what are the conditions which prevail in the province of Quebec? It is well known that there is in that province, in a certain sense, a large surplus of population, that is to say, among the agricultural classes there are a large number of people who, if proper means were taken to instruct and assist them in availing themselves of the boundless opportunities the North-west offers, would go and settle up that country, and in their case there would be no need of that process of assimilation which the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) has alluded to in such proper terms; they would be ready at once to take their place and to help in a most material degree in the proper development of the North-west Territories. It is well known that in the province of Quebec—and I speak particularly for that province, though I have no doubt somewhat similar conditions exist in the other provinces—in the province of Quebec, I say, we are blessed with large families. As a rule, in my county and in the surrounding counties, so far as I am aware, you will find the farmer with five, six and seven sons in many instances, and that farmer is the proprietor of a farm, often of from 115 to 160 acres. He is prosperous, he does well, but he has not the means of establishing his children upon homes with the opportunities which that extent of land affords to him. Therefore, I say that in our own province, if agents of this Government were established who would be in a position fully to inform the people who are situated in the manner I have described, many of those families would send a certain number of their members to the North-west, and we would find in them the most desirable class of immigrants. I could give in my own county a number of instances of families who would be in a position, with some small assistance from the Government, to send some of their members to settle in that part of the country. As a rule, these young men are familiar with our political institutions, they are satisfied with those institutions, they are accustomed to our manner of living, they are acquainted, so to speak, with the civic institutions which exist in this country, and, therefore, they do not need to pass through a process of assimilation. They are already in a condition to take possession of that territory, and all they require is sufficient information in addition to a certain amount of assistance from the Government, that very assistance which we so generously give to foreigners, and if this were given them, I am satisfied they would immigrate in considerable numbers to the North-west.

I listened with attention this afternoon to the Minister of the Interior, and I heard him admit that in the province of Quebec as well as in the other provinces of the Dominion, there were no agents at this moment for the purpose of furthering that work which is so eminently patriotic, and which can only turn to the greatest advantage of our country. He went so far as to say, for I noted his words, that in the province of Quebec there were two or three gentlemen, clerical gentlemen, I think he said, who took an interest in this work, but the Government had done nothing to hinder or to help them. Now, Sir, we find that we are spending an immense amount of money to bring people here of whom, in the language of the hon. member for Alberta, we know little, and a priori I would be prepared to say that they are the people least suited to form a desirable class of immigrants. Why should we spend such a large amount of money in seeking immigrants away in the eastern portions of Europe, in Austria and in the Caucasus, when we can with a proper method of spending that money find a much better class of settlers here in our own country, and in countries whose institutions more nearly resemble our own, and, therefore, who would not be obliged to go through that process of assimilation already referred to? No more cogent way of putting the question could be imagined than that in which the hon. member for Alberta put it, when he said that if there were members of this House who desired a large number of Doukhobors or Galicians in their own counties, they were quite free to say so; but for his own part he viewed with excessive diffidence the arrival of such a large number of strange people in his own territory. Well, Sir, for my own part I am prepared to say this, that in the province of Quebec, although we are most willing to welcome desirable immigrants, we would view with considerable dismay the arrival among us of such a large number of people about whom we know nothing, and in regard to whom we must absolutely make an experiment before we can know them. Now, Sir, why should we treat the people of our own provinces with less consideration than we treat the courageous pioneers of our own North-west? It seems to me that the circumstances in which we find them should cause us to look with distrust upon them. We know that the Austrian Government seem anxious to get rid of those people, and that fact should warn us to be on our guard about bringing them here, except in a very moderate number. In regard to the Doukhobors, we see the autocratic Government of Russia apparently heedless of the departure of such a large population, anxious, in other words, to send that population to our shores. Is the Minister of the Interior able to tell us in a positive manner that these people, upon whom we are spending such large sums of money, are really a desirable class of immigrants for our North-west Territories? Of one thing I am quite sure, that they are a people who repudiate one of the fundamental principles of Canadian citizenship, indeed of citizenship in any civilized country; they are a people who would refuse to take up arms in case of necessity for the defence of our country.

I feel convinced that before long we will find out that we might have chosen better people, and that this is not the best class of people upon whose settlement in the North-west Territories we could have spent our money. Without going at any length into the general principles which ought to govern our system of immigration, I would say that our first attention should be turned to our own people. They are the people who have the right to all the advantages in the way of settlement in our own territory, and after we have exhausted every possible means of settling these people in our own country, who are in a position to leave the older provinces, to take up land in that great fertile tract, then, and then only, ought we to turn our attention to the European countries.

I would limit the area in which we should exercise our zeal in securing immigrants. It seems to me that, for many years to come, we can find all the immigrants we require to settle in the North-west Territories in the British Isles, France and Belgium. We ought not to go beyond those countries. We ought not to give large sums of money and to pay large salaries to the people who are employed in these countries, without any definite and clear results, for soliciting people to come to Canada. The roll of these agents ought to be strictly limited to making known what are the conditions required by the Government of this country, of immigrants coming to the North-west Territories and becoming, so to speak, a part of our national family. An examination of these immigrants, before they leave foreign shores and come to our country, should be made. The system of paying a commission is one that is abandoned in the United States; it is an obsolete system and one calculated to produce the worst results. We should examine every intending immigrant; we should make sure that each is a proper person to settle in our country; we should make sure of his character, and when he comes we should settle him, and after he is settled follow him up and help him to become a good citizen. If we adopted such a system as that, under proper regulations, I am convinced that, before many years, very far from increasing our grant for immigration, we would be in a position to diminish it, because every one of those families brought to this country under conditions of that kind, would become an immigration agent and the means of securing, without any expenditure to the country, the best class of settlers for our own territory. We have in Montreal an immigration agent who has had long experience. I have no objection to mentioning his name. It is Mr. Marquette, who, for years, has busied himself with immigration work, and he told me that the only way of securing proper settlers for this country was to investigate and follow up the character of the intending immigrant before he left Europe, to ascertain his recommendations, and to find out his qualifications for becoming a settler in this country. The moment he arrives in this country we must apply ourselves to helping him. He must be taken in hand; he must be settled in the part of the country where his settlement will be the most advantageous to himself and to the country, and he must be followed up for one or two years, made acquainted with the system of government, with our municipal institutions; in short, with the manners of our people, and kept in view until he is in a position to assume the quality of a citizen. Returning to the province of Quebec, and when I speak of the province of Quebec, I do not merely speak of our fellow-citizens of French origin, but of all those who inhabit that province, I would say that very few of them are fully ware of the advantages that the North-west Territories offer, and a very large number of them, I regret to say, yearly leave our province and go to the United States, because they know of no better place to go to, and they are lost to us for good. These are young men who have been brought up on our farms, who are inured to our climate, who are happy to live under our flag, who are familiar with our constitution, and who have received an agricultural education in their own homes such as fits them pre-eminently to become settlers in the North-west Territories. Let me quote for the benefit of this committee what was stated, in April last, in one of our leading French-Canadian papers in Montreal, in regard to this exodus to the United States which prevails, as it did in April, and which, it seems to me, it is quite in the power of the Government to diminish. "La Presse" of April 2nd, 1899, says:

Some six months ago two French Canadian families, in all thirteen persons, left Montreal for Wisconsin by the Grand Trunk. The fathers, on purchasing their tickets, were each asked the following question: "Why are you leaving Canada?" The answer in each case being: "I am going because there is no work for me in this country" or "I am going abroad to get employment and provide for my family."

Since then the exodus has taken such vast proportions that on every side you hear the question: What does it all mean? It is felt to be a calamity by every one.

For the last four weeks the number of our people who have left the Windsor and Bonaventure depots for the States, there to earn their bread, has averaged 120 each evening. On Wednesday, 80 French Canadians left by the Grand Trunk alone, and some 30 others by the Boston and Maine, all for New England manufacturing towns. Last evening 150 more set out. One evening of last week over 120 Canadians left the Windsor station for the United States. They all stated that they were going because they could get better wages across the line. They said that the prosperity spoken of by the papers was, as far as they were concerned, a myth, and that they were leaving their country, not because they wished to go, but through necessity, and to improve their position in life.

The same newspaper had taken the trouble to collect testimony from men able to give disinterested evidence in regard to this exodus, and what was the result:

A reporter for "La Presse" interviewed a number of persons this morning in relation to the exodus, with the following result:—

N. F. Mortimer, baggagemaster, said: "For three weeks past the exodus of French Canadians to the United States has been unprecedented. The number of Canadian emigrants has never been so high as this year. The number of French Canadians leaving from this station alone has been over 600 in excess of previous years. The great majority come from Joliette, St. Jérôme and Three Rivers, and most of them go to Lowell, Concord and Boston, where there are great brick-yards. They all belong to a most respectable class, and it is a great loss to Canada."

Mr. James Miller (Morey Transfer Co.) said the number of French Canadians who have left the country this year is over one-third greater than in previous years. The exodus began about three weeks ago ; the increased number who have left the Windsor station is over 500 in all, appearing to belong to an intelligent class of the population, and who might have been kept at home with benefit to the country.

An American customs officer, with an office at the Windsor, said : " The average number of French Canadians leaving this station each evening for the United States has been sixty. I speak here only of those leaving by the Boston and Maine Railway, and say nothing of those taking train at Montreal Junction. The French Canadians get better wages in the United States than here."

Mr. George Richards, constable at same station, said : " I never saw anything like it. One would think all the French Canadians were going to emigrate to the States. The number of French Canadians who have left this year is more than double that of any previous year."

Inquiry made by our reporter at Bonaventure station revealed a state of things equally alarming. All the Grand Trunk officials, who have been in a position to witness this emigration " en masse," declare that the number of French Canadians who have left, this spring, for the United States is more than double that of last year. One official of the Grand Trunk declares that the increase is over 100 per cent. Most of the emigrants come from the district of Little Métis and the parishes along the St. Lawrence. He attributes the exodus to the resumption of business in the United States, while Canada remains stationary.

The Government Railway, the Intercolonial Railway, has brought to Montreal the bulk of the French Canadians going to the United States.

Mr. Hoolahan, Dominion Government immigration agent, says that the exodus question is not within the sphere of his department. His sole duty is to see to the locating of new-comers. " Doubtless," he said, " the immigration agents do their best to dissuade people from leaving Canada, but, generally speaking, with little effect." He thinks that very many of these Canadians who are now leaving Canada will come back to us in the fall.

Mr. Marquette, provincial immigration agent, when asked the cause of the growing exodus, said : " There are two reasons—the first is that this is the season of the yearly habitual start of the French Canadians for the United States, the second is that those who leave Canada belong to no definite class. They may be in the United States this year and in Canada next year. There is certainly an increase in the number leaving the country, but the matter is not so alarming as they say. The advance in wages in the American factories, while wages remain stationary in Canada, contributes largely to drive our people out of the country."

Our reporter met on St. James Street a Canadian customs official, and asked him whether the increase in the number of our people going away to the United States is as great as people say ?

" I believe you," said that officer, " the number of Canadians who have left is over double that of past years ; and the worst of it is that these Canadians are leaving us for good, in fact, most of them will never return to Canada. It is a great loss to the country. As to the cause of this exodus, it is not for me to speak of it."

The general opinion in railway and transportation circles, in so far as our reporter could ascertain, is that while the traffic has been excellent for the American companies, it has been disastrous for Canada. The following remark was made by a man holding a high position in business circles, on seeing on the one hand a group of Galicians who had just reached the station by train, and beside them a group of French Canadians on the point of leaving for the United States :—" I cannot understand the policy which consists in peopling the country with foreigners while depleting it of its own inhabitants. We are bringing in immigrants at great expense, and no effort is being made to keep our own people at home. There is certainly something wrong in the system followed by the powers that be." Our reporter also visited, last evening, the Windsor and Bonaventure stations, in order to see whether the French Canadian exodus still continued. Now he found 65 of our people about to start by the Vermont Central from the Bonaventure station, and over 100 more by the Boston and Maine Railway from the Windsor station. Most of these are young men and young women, all intending to settle in the United States. It would not be so bad were these French Canadians who are leaving us in the flower of their youth were merely the refuse of our people ; but, unfortunately, they are all respectable, worthy citizens, inured to toil, sober and industrious. One family in particular attracted the notice of many persons at the Windsor station. The family consists of the father and mother, both still in the prime of life, with four fine growing girls and three boys. They are bound for Providence, Rhode Island.

I do not wish to detain the committee by giving further evidence on this point, although I have it in my possession, but I would like to quote the opinion of a man in our province who for years has taken an intense interest in the settlement of our own country by our own people. I speak of Dr. Erisson, who is prominently connected with one of our colonization societies :

The great remedy for the national misfortune is education. Our people should first be led to see the dignity of the farmer's work, and be convinced of the advantages it presents ; this task must be discharged by the educators of our youth. Hence the need of a good programme of studies, wherein the teaching of agriculture, especially in the country districts, should hold the first rank. It takes the work of twenty years to farm one generation, and that of a whole century to transform a country. It would be an excellent thing to get our farmers to beautify their homes and all their surroundings ; in that way they would make their children love the place of their birth, and render them loath to abandon their happy homes. The improvement of the highways should also be pushed on. The establishment of domestic industries, so fertile in the production of wealth of every kind in European countries, would also do great good amongst us. Lastly, our rural districts would require to be ably directed by the clergy and the well-to-do class in general, if we are to hope even for a partial arresting of this deplorable emigration of our people. We notice that many of those who are leaving our province are absolutely unaware of the existence of lands fit for settlement, and of the means of securing them. The governments have a large share of responsibility in this matter. On several occasions the society has pointed out the remedies needed in the system of colonization, so that it is useless to recur to them. The trade crisis so severely felt in the United States in the years 1896 and 1897 had forced a large number of our people to return to us. The American crisis being at an end, these same countrymen of ours, not finding in their own country the equivalent of what they earned on the other side of the line, are now going back to their former employment."

Now, Sir, if in the presence of such a state of things, we had here a Government which was anxious to enlighten the people of our own province as to the advantages offered by the North-west, devoting its principal energies in that direction, and not only enlightening the people, but affording them at least the same advantages for settling in the North-west as are afforded to these strangers—I say, "at least," for in my opinion we should devote far more money to settling our own country with our own people than to bringing strangers to our shores—if we have a Government performing that task in the present conditions, such as I have brought to the attention of this committee, then we could not complain. But, Sir, we have not. We have the admission of the Minister of the Interior himself that the principal energies of his department, and the largest expenditures, have been devoted during the past year in a totally different direction. That is where, not only this Government and this Minister of the Interior, as well as past Governments and past Ministers of the Interior have made a mistake. If in the past there has been some excuse, because the result of that indiscriminate system of immigration had not yet become apparent, there is no excuse now. We know, from the experience of the Americans, and from our own experience we know, that that indiscriminate system is not a good system. We must change it completely; we must adopt another immigration policy, and if a similar condition of affairs exists in the other provinces as exists in my province, then we are without any excuse, if we do not make an effort to keep our own people at home.

We should devote our energies principally to keeping our own people in this country. They make by far the best settlers. They meet exactly those conditions which the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) pointed out so clearly this afternoon; and they are the people who have a right to settle up that country, and whom we ought to engage in the first instance in that patriotic work. Afterwards we might turn to other nations, but with great care. I believe myself that our system of immigration ought to be changed completely. We ought to proceed with the utmost care to the great work of settling up our own country. It has been said that we have a magnificent country, but that it is a pity we have not twenty or thirty millions more people in it. Well, Sir, that statement must be accepted with much qualification. We require population to settle our vast tracts of country; but in that work we must proceed cautiously, and it is better for us to secure ten or fifteen proper immigrants than to bring in thousands of people about whom we know nothing, and in regard to whose future in this country I, for my part, entertain the greatest doubts. I do not believe that the people of Slav origin brought from Europe to this country will ever benefit us to the extent of the trouble and expense which we have incurred in bringing them here. We must proceed by a system of selection, giving the first place to our own people; and in regard to bringing in strangers, we must proceed exactly in the way in which a man proceeds when he brings strangers into his own family. We are engaged in the great work of founding a great colonial nation; and it is not by bringing people from the extreme east of Europe, about whom we know very little, that we shall establish here the nation which we expect to have in the future. I say this, Sir, without any reference to politics. The present Minister of the Interior has proceeded along beaten paths; but I believe that the members of this House who consider the question seriously, and who examine the experience of our neighbours to the south of us in regard to an indiscriminate system of immigration, will inevitably come to the conclusion that that system requires to be changed. I believe, Sir, that if we had proceeded with similar caution and prudence in regard to the opening up of that part of our North-west Territories where rich gold deposits exist, we would be better off to-day. We would have spent less money, and we would have kept more of the gold-bearing regions for our own people. But that is past. The errors, if errors they have been, in connection with the opening up of the Yukon country, are to-day irreparable. It is not so in regard to immigration; and if we wish to do a wise thing, we should stop here, as the hon. member for Alberta has suggested, with the Mennonites, the Galicians and the Doukhobors. They may be successful or they may not be; it is an experiment; and we have no right to experiment on a larger scale than we have done thus far. We should stop and see how that experiment succeeds before we go further. Above all, we should turn our attention to our own provinces. If anything like the condition of things that exists in the province of Quebec exists in Ontario and in the maritime provinces, we are absolutely neglecting one of our principal duties in not attending first of all to our own people, and not reserving for them that land which they have at such great sacrifice built up for the benefit of themselves and their descendants.

Mr. DAVIN. I think that the hon. Minister of the Interior will agree with me that the masterly speech to which we have just listened from the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) contains a terrible indictment against the immigration policy of his department. I want to call the Minister's attention to a speech which he made in Toronto soon after he took the office he now holds. This is what he said :

We found that the Government which came into office avowedly for the purpose of stopping the exodus of people to the United States had not been able to stop that exodus, had not been able to keep within the borders of Canada the natural increase of population, while the hundreds of thousands of immigrants from foreign countries had passed in and out again and had not added to our population. I found, when I took charge of the department of immigration that the pall of death seemed to have fallen over the officials.

And so on. What a satire does that sound to-day ! At the close of his speech the hon. member for Jacques Cartier said that if there was anything in the lower provinces like what he had described as existing in the province of Quebec, our position would be very calamitous. Unfortunately, the condition of things in the lower provinces is very much the same as that in Quebec. I have here an extract from the "Casket," an independent newspaper, of April 26th, 1899, published in Antigonish County, N.S. ; and this is what it says:

Thursday's western express train had on board 120 persons who were leaving their Nova Scotia homes for different points in the United States and British Columbia. Twenty-five tickets were purchased at Antigonish, twenty-two being for Boston.

The Richmond "Record," of April 17th, 1899, a Liberal newspaper, published in Cape Breton, says:

Thirty or forty left here one day recently for Boston, via steamship "Halifax."

And the Hawkesbury "Bulletin," of December, 1898, has the following :—

"It is not an exaggeration to state," says the Sydney "Daily Recorder," "that 200 Cape Bretonians boarded the Intercolonial Railway train at Sydney within the last week or two, all bound abroad, with the intention of bettering their fortunes. Nine young women left together on Wednesday last. Several more took their departure next morning. How many have left other districts of Cape Breton would not be agreeable to conjecture. The objective point of all the young women is Boston. Whither are we drifting ? To Boston, evidently, and Boston seems to be the real metropolis of the maritime provinces. We may deplore it, but we cannot close our eyes to the fact. Our best blood is being absorbed by the cities of the United States. In the state of Massachusetts alone there are upwards of 200,000 Canadians, the great majority of whom are Nova Scotians. There are probably as many Cape Bretonians in and around Boston as there are in Richmond county. And consider the children and descendants of those expatriated Canadians that are lost to the country. Our money is being spent in bringing into the country and laying out homes for Doukhoborts, Galicians, Menonites, Icelanders, Jews and other variegated assortments of old-world population, while the choicest elements of our people are drifting to a foreign country. Surely the game is not worth the candle."

I heartily agree with my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier in the appeal he has made to my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier said that if we were to spend as much money in getting our young men, who are now going across the line from Cape Breton, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Ontario, to go into the North-west, it would be to the greatest advantage to our country, for I need hardly tell you that a young Canadian is as good as any foreigner. But it is not merely that I would direct the energy of the immigration department to Ontario, or New Brunswick, or any other of our provinces, but I would also have it throw more energy into bringing immigrants from England, Ireland and Scotland into the North-west. Mr. McCreary, the agent of the Department of the Interior at Winnipeg, stated recently to a friend of mine, whose name I am not at liberty to give, but who is well known to Mr. Smart, the Deputy Minister, and to the Minister himself, that the immigration from England, Ireland and Scotland into Manitoba and the North-west has practically stopped. I think it right to bring this before the hon. Minister, not merely for the purpose of exposing the fact to the House, but to ascertain whether there is any truth in it. Mr. McCreary told this gentleman that the influx of immigrants from the United Kingdom was being stopped. I do not suppose he meant stopped by any active agency on the part of the immigration department, but that the intending emigrants from England, Ireland and Scotland were now being turned away from Manitoba and the North-west Territories. I can hardly believe that there is any good foundation for that statement, although I know, from the return, that the number of immigrants coming in from the United Kingdom is insignificant ; but if that insignificant number is being still more diminished, and there is a prospect of the stream of immigration from those islands, whence we draw our life, being diverted from our country, that is a very serious matter indeed. However, I do not know what answer my hon. friend can make to the indictment contained in the facts which my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) brought before the House, and which I have supplemented by extracts from the papers to which I have referred.

Mr. BOURASSA. I was just going, before the hon. gentleman from Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) took the floor, to reply to some of the statements of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier. I acknowledge that the hon. gentleman was certainly actuated in the remarks he made by a true spirit of patriotism, but at the same time he gave us evidence that he has a greater knowledge of his summer residence in the county of Jacques Cartier than of the province of Quebec at large, and especially of those portions of that province which are still unsettled, and which the governments of Quebec, both Conservative and Liberal, have been making such sacrifices to settle with our own population. There is one statement—especially in my hon. friend's speech against which I desire to put on record my strenuous protest, and that is the statement that the province of Quebec is already filled up, and that this Government should take means to bring our surplus population to the North-west Territories.

Mr. MONK. I beg my hon. friend's pardon. I did not say that. I never said that the province of Quebec was filled up. On the contrary, I spoke of the surplus population consisting of our compatriots who are leaving the province, and not in the sense of meaning that the province is filled up.

Mr. BOURASSA. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I understood him to say that the province of Quebec—and I think that "Hansard" will bear me out—was, to a certain extent, filled up. Of course, I understand that the sections around Montreal and a very small section around the city of Quebec are perhaps filled up with population. But at the same time, if the hon. gentleman really wants to see the population of Quebec, not only increase in number—and I think the population can take care of itself in that respect—but at the same time live happily and in prosperity, I will tell him what should be done. It is not that our people should go to the North-west or Manitoba, not that we should spend money to take people from one part of Canada to another, but that we should, in the first place, teach our farmers of the province of Quebec that a large proportion of them could live much more easily on half the area of farm lands they have now than they do at present. One of the great objects of the government of the province of Quebec is to teach, through its Council of Agriculture, its agricultural societies and its farmers' clubs—organizations that have been helped very successfully by the present Minister of Agriculture—to do as much as they can on the smallest possible area of land, and I have no doubt the same effort is being made in the other provinces. The second means which our provincial government is taking to improve the condition of the people is to open up those vast areas still unsettled, which are very fertile and covered to a great extent with forests, and have them cultivated by our own people. The people from Europe, and to a certain extent that portion of the people of Quebec and Ontario who have been living on settled land for years, are not the best kind of people to open up these unsettled areas. It takes the young men accustomed to work in the bush, the men who go out in the shanties, to clear and open up these lands; and I think I can say, without boasting, that the young French Canadian is the best "défricheur," or pioneer, in the world.

Mr. BOURASSA.

There are many districts in Quebec eminently suitable for settlement. Take, for example, the valley of the Metapedia, in the counties of Bonaventure and Gaspé, the immense valley of the Lake St. John district, where this Government and the government of Quebec have spent so much money building railways, roads and bridges; take the valley of the Gatineau, in Wright County; the valleys of the Lièvre and Rouge rivers, in my own county; the immense valley of the Temiscamingue—all those valleys are covered with splendid forests, that will give to the settler the opportunity of earning a little money by making lumber before cultivating the land. Therefore, I think there is no use in speaking any more about there being no room in the province of Quebec, or in any part of it. The hon. gentleman quoted at length a report from "La Presse," of Montreal, about the exodus of French Canadians and the people of the province of Quebec at large to the United States; and both he and the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) referred to the exodus from the other provinces as well. Let me tell these hon. gentlemen that the exodus to the United States is no new thing. It is one of those evils from which all countries with small populations have to suffer, when situated in the neighbourhood of an extensive populated country, where there is much larger capital invested in industrial enterprises, more trade, more activity, more work. As a rule, those people who leave the province of Quebec for the United States would not go to Manitoba and the North-west. They do not leave for the purpose of farming in the United States, but for the purpose of obtaining employment in the large manufacturing centres, where all the members of their family can obtain work, and where they consequently can earn money more easily than at home on their lands. The exodus was particularly strong from 1834 up to three or four years ago. Of course the hon. gentleman has not put any political animus in his speech, and I do not wish to put any in mine. I do not wish to say that the exodus was due to the policy followed by the leaders of the hon. gentleman, nor exactly to say that because this Government is in power the exodus is smaller. But as a matter of fact, within the last two or three years, especially since the closing of the great cotton mills in the cities of New England, the exodus has been much less than it was before. Moreover, a fair proportion—not a very large but a fair proportion—of the people who left the province of Quebec within the last ten years to go to the United States have been returning during the last two or three years. But still later, within the last year or two some of these big factories have been opened up, better wages have been offered, and as the agent of the Government, Mr. Marquette, well says, according to the report read by the hon. gentleman, when the prices are better our people go there in larger number. But they are not going in the same proportion as they did ten years ago. I do not know how it is in the neighbourhood of the county in which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) lives, but I know that in my county and also in the counties of Wright, Pontiac, Argenteuil, Terrebonne, Two Mountains, L'Assomption—in fact all the northern half of the St. Lawrence and Ottawa valleys, except, perhaps, along the St. Maurice, the exodus has been smaller in the last two years than in previous years. There is another point to be considered. We must not forget that the alien labour laws, during a certain time were very strictly enforced, and our people on crossing the line were expected to come in as settlers and to remain in the United States. But these laws are not now enforced with the same strictness. Therefore, more of our people cross the line. There is no doubt that trains have started loaded from Bonaventure and Windsor stations, in Montreal, as well as from Quebec and other centres of the province. But I know, as a matter of fact, that a good many young men from my county left last year for the United States, and after having worked five or six months, they came back, and they intended to come back when they left. On the other hand, those who left the province of Quebec five, eight or ten years ago left with the full intention of abandoning this country entirely and settling in the United States. So this already makes a big difference.

Now, as representing one of the constituencies in the province of Quebec, and especially one of those where both the provincial and Federal Governments have made great sacrifices to keep our population and to induce the sons of our farmers of the older parts of the provinces to come and settle, I protest strongly against the idea of sending agents of the Federal Government to induce our farmers to settle in the North-west. I say that the policy of the Government should be to keep our people where they naturally belong, to keep the sons where the fathers have settled, to try to induce them to remain in the same province where they were born and brought up, with their own people, under usages and laws with which they are familiar. So far as concerns our compatriots who live in the United States, our policy should be—and I am glad that the Government has done something in this direction—to seek to bring back those who wish to come and who have not lost altogether their old habits of life in our province. I am glad to say that this Government has made sacrifices to that end, sending agents to the farming districts of the United States where some Canadians have settled. I am sure my hon. friends from the North-west will bear me out in saying, at any rate I know as a fact, that several families have come back from the Western States and settled in the Saskatchewan valley. I know also that several French Canadians who left the province of Quebec within the last few years for the United States have been induced by this Government to come back and settle in the Lake St. John district. So far as foreign immigration is concerned, I leave that to the Minister of the Interior. But, for myself, I desire to say that I approve heartily of the policy of the Government, which is to keep our people where they are settled; to bring back our Canadian compatriots from the United States when they may be brought back, and to induce as many honest people from Europe, whatever their origin may be, to come in and fill the North-west. It is very well to talk of a change of policy on the part of the United States now. The United States have changed their mind after they had a population of sixty millions of people. I do not say that we should seek to induce all kinds of people to come to Canada from Europe. But we must not forget that one cause why a bad class of people were induced to go to the United States was that several Socialist leaders in France, Germany, Russia, Austria and Italy represented the Government of the United States to their followers as being the ideal Government for Socialists, declaring that the United States was the land of the free, and that they should go to United States in preference to Canada. Thank Heaven, they have not come here. For myself, I am confident that the Minister of the Interior has followed the proper policy as far as foreign immigration is concerned.

I close my remarks by repeating—because I wish to insist particularly on this point—that the members for the province of Quebec and the Government of the province of Quebec would resent strongly the sending of agents of the Federal Government in our province to induce our people to go to other provinces. We have the best feelings toward our friends in the North-west, and are ready to vote money to assist in filling their country, but we are not ready to give them the best of our population.

Mr. MONK. I wish to set myself right concerning the statement of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bourassa) that I spoke of the province of Quebec as being completely filled up and having no more room for settlers. I think my hon. friend wishes to give to my observations more political import than I intended they should have. I never spoke in any sense of the province of Quebec having no more room. Any man would be a fool who, knowing anything of the province of Quebec, did not know that we have large tracts of land unsettled. Nor did I say that the Government of the province of Quebec had not done its best to assist its population to settle those parts of the province which are not at the present time taken up. But the question is whether the efforts of the province of Quebec, the means at its disposal for this purpose being limited, are sufficient to keep our population in Canada. And does the fact of the provincial government doing its best in its own modest way towards the settlement of our province absolve the Dominion Government from doing its own fair share toward keeping our people here? What is the fact, notwithstanding all these efforts that are being made in the province of Quebec as my hon. friend was not able to deny or gainsay? The fact is that we are slowly settling up our unsettled portion of the province—for everybody knows that each of these older provinces has unsettled tracts—but we are not preventing our population going away to an alien country. And in regard to the representation of my hon. friend that the province of Quebec would look upon it as an insult if this Government placed in the province an agent to instruct our people in the best way to obtain lands in the North-west, there is no such feeling in the province of Quebec—very far from it. The French portion of the population in the province of Quebec consider that they have a share in the North-west, just like every other portion of the population. We consider that if there are good lands there—and according to the information I have those lands are far more profitable than the unsettled portions of Quebec—we consider that we are entitled to our share of them, and we consider that the Government is only doing its duty if it brings to our knowledge the portions of that North-west which are fit for settlement, so that we may have our share of those lands, and partake of the advantages which accrue to the settlers of that country. But to stand up in this House and to say that the population of the province of Quebec desires to remain at home, and desires to renounce any share in the vast prairies of the North-west, is to portray in a most unfair and untruthful manner the sentiment of the people of that province. We do not want more than others, but we want to be accorded the same opportunities as the other provinces.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). The reference made by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) to the lower provinces, is my justification for saying a few words. I cannot help feeling that the remarks made so vigorously by that hon. gentleman do not give a true conception of the French Canadians. One would think that he knows nothing about the outer world, not even about his own country. Does the hon. gentleman forget that it was the French Canadian voyageurs who first went into that country? And does he mean to tell us that they are so ignorant now that they do not know anything about that country which their fathers first discovered nearly 200 years ago? I assume that the people of Quebec, like the people of the other provinces, know a good deal about the North-west just now, and particularly have the people of Quebec heard a good deal about it during the last two years in connection with the school question. I venture to think that the hon. gentleman is not correct when he says that the people of Quebec do not know as much about the North-west and about how lands were obtained, as the people of any other province. I know that from the province of Nova Scotia a good many people are going there. The reference made by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) to the lower provinces, demands this remark: Even if it were true that 200 people left Cape Breton, that is not a large exodus when you consider that there are 80,000 people in the Island of Cape Breton.

Mr. McDOUGALL. The hon. gentleman did not say that 200 went in one year.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I would suggest to the hon. gentleman that he had better permit other members to look after themselves. So far as the lower provinces are concerned, it is a fact that quite a number of our people go every year to the United States. For instance, from the county I represent, a number go as fishermen, and many go who return home again. That has always been the case. But I venture to say that fewer people have gone from Nova Scotia this last year or two than went formerly, although I do not deny that quite a number go now.

Now, coming to the general principle of immigration, I want to emphasize what was said by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), that if you are going to people up the North-west by taking men out of the older provinces, you might just as well expect to make a fortune by changing jack knives from one pocket into the other. Every man who leaves Quebec or any other province and goes into the North-west, lessens the population of his native province, and lessens its productive powers. But are we to wait through all the ages until such time as we can get from the older provinces a sufficient number of people to go out and settle that country in the North-west? We cannot do it. I think there are a good number of young men who will leave the older provinces for the North-west, thinking to better their condition, and they will do it voluntarily, without our having to send agents among them. I know from the province of Nova Scotia there are always a number of young men who are going to the North-west, to Manitoba, to British Columbia, to the Yukon. They are there now by the dozen. But they do not require an agent to tell them to go there. It is the natural disposition of the Canadian who wants to benefit his position, to move from one part of the Dominion to another, and he will do it without the promptings of an agent. But what we want is to get in settlers from the outside.

Now, the whole question is this: Are the settlers we are getting in from foreign countries the best settlers? Are they good settlers? I admit that there are not so many people coming now from Great Britain into this country as formerly, and the reason is that times are so busy in Great Britain that the people all have employment. You cannot force the people away. It is when times are poor that people migrate. It is easy for our young men to go to the North-west during harvest time, they can go for $16 or $20, and if they like the country they can stay there. A young man can make his way anywhere if he has energy. Now, the first condition of citizenship is to have men of good character; and the next condition, very near to it, is that settlers who go into a country should know something about the methods of carrying on the business which prevails there. For example, I was talking to a gentleman the other day about certain people down in Anticosti who wished to emigrate because they felt they could not stay there any longer. I suggested, Why not go to the North-west? What was the reply? The reply was: Why, they know nothing about farming; they must go where they can employ their time in fishing. Now, what would be the use of talking to the North-west people who know nothing about farming in the country from which they emigrate? I have it on good authority that the Doukhobors and the Galicians do know something about farming, and when they go to the North-west they know something about the business to be carried on. That is the prime condition of citizenship. I venture the statement that the parties to whom the hon. gentleman referred as leaving Quebec, were just of the character of those described by the hon. member for Labelle, namely, young men who like to work in factories, and who prefer that. It is true that farming in the older provinces is not as popular as it used to be, and there are large numbers of young men who think they can make a better living and have less drudgery if they go and work in factories. You cannot compel these men to go on to farms, they would not make good farmers if they did. I should like to see every boy and every girl who were raised on a farm remain at home and farm or go and settle in the North-west, but you cannot compel them to do so if they are not willing.

Now, many fear that the Doukhobors will not make good citizens. I have no such fear. They have left a country where they were oppressed, and I am sure that if they refused to take up arms in the country where they were oppressed, it was because they felt in their conscience that they would not be doing right to support such an oppressive government as they were living under. Now, suppose there are 10,000 Doukhobors settled there, are we less able to defend ourselves in case of war because these people are following peaceful avocations there? Is not every other man in this country ready to go to the front if need be, and even taking the hon. gentleman's argument, would it not be a good thing for the people of Canada to know that, if our young men were to leave the farms and the workshops to go and fight in defence of their country, there are thousands of people cultivating the fields and making all necessary provision to feed them. Our country is made up of all kinds of people, and I am sure these Doukhobors and Galicians, although they might not have all the virtues that we would like, will still make good settlers and good citizens. The hon. gentleman spoke about settlers as if he wanted them to be perfect angels when they came to this country. This is a young country, and it is ready to welcome any good man who is willing to work, and not only to give him an opportunity of making a living, but to teach him what is best and highest in good citizenship. If our people are not ready to do that, and if we insist that every man who comes in must be as good a citizen as the people who are here, I think it says very little for the manhood of our people and for our idea of true citizenship. The hon. gentleman said: Let us have immigrants from Belgium, from France and from Great Britain. He would have no Germans, no Hollanders, no Norwegians, no Swedes, no Finlanders, no Icelanders, nobody at all except from those three countries. He could not keep out the Scotch, because they will come, and if the hon. gentleman tries to keep them out they will get in and he will get out. Why confine settlers to these three nations? I would rather have settlers from Great Britain than from any other country in the world for the North-west Territories. But I say that Doukhobors, or any other people who have been accustomed to the pursuit of agriculture, are better than people who have been brought up in the large cities of England and who have been engaged in manufacturing all their lives. The hon. gentleman shakes his head; that is to say, that he thinks a man who has worked in a shop for thirty years is going to make a better farmer than a Doukhobor, who is honest and who has spent all his life upon the farm. All the facts are against the hon. gentleman. I know the Scotch Highlanders who, when he came to the province from which I come myself, did not know very much about farming, but he did know something, because he had cultivated a small patch of land in the Highlands of Scotland, and although he did not make as good a farmer as the Lowlander, who had a larger farm at home, still the experience which he had had on his little patch of ground enabled him to become a much better farmer and a much better citizen than if he had had no knowledge of farming. A man who has cultivated a small patch of land in the old country is better able to succeed upon a farm in this country than a man who comes out of a workshop. Therefore, a condition of all immigration should be that a man coming to settle on our land should know something about farming in the country from which he comes. The climate of the North-west is much the same as the climate in the northern countries of Europe, and I would rather that men from these northern countries should settle in Canada than that they should come from the vine-clad hills of France and Italy. One of the great difficulties encountered by an immigrant coming from a foreign land is the climate for the first few years. But, if immigrants come here perfectly acclimated, they will be ready to go to work upon the land, and I venture to say that they will make good settlers. This cry has been raised against foreigners again and again. When the late lamented Hon. Alexander Mackenzie used the money of this Dominion to bring a class of settlers into Manitoba, he was jeered at and it was said that he was bringing in a class of people who would be a disgrace to this country. I went through the district occupied by these people, and I found that they had paid off every portion of the money advanced to them, with interest, that they made as good settlers as could be found in Manitoba, and that they are now beginning to understand what the duties of citizenship are. I am not afraid that these men are going into politics at once; I am not afraid that these men are going at once to walk out and kill the men about them. If I understood the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) correctly, he said that they were a menace to those settlers about them. He knows a great deal more about that country than I do, but on general principles, I venture to state that, if there are good settlers in the country now, they can stand all the Doukhobors who have gone into that country, whose character is of the very best. When these people come to Canada, I believe that we should not only give them a warm reception, but we should afford them every opportunity of succeeding. Where are we going to get our settlers? The country is open. We have agents all over Great Britain, France and Belgium, and the people know all about us. How are we going to get them, because men will not come from these countries if the conditions are made onerous; they will not pass the inspection as to their morals or the high test that the hon. gentleman would insist upon. Having these lands to be occupied, we must be ready to invite citizens if we want them to come from the northern portion of Europe, or from the centre of Europe, or from any other country in which they have lived as industrious, honest people, willing to work for their living. This is the condition of affairs, and I am sure that the hon. Minister of the Interior should have the assistance and sympathy of this House in his effort to secure such people. I believe that every hon. member who helps to bring a good citizen into this country, to get people to fill up the old lands and people to fill up the new lands and to engage in profitable occupations, will be doing much to promote the best interests of the country. I do not think that we should insist upon nice discriminations, as to appearances or inquire into a man's past history, or demand a certificate from a well-known man as to his character, because if a man is able and willing to work, if he is well-behaved, we must take our risks. There are settlers who may not be of as good a class as we might desire, but for myself, I do not feel any misgivings. If the settler is willing to work, we have unlimited land lying waste, and I think we should give him every opportunity without insisting upon nice discriminations of that kind. I am in sympathy with any movement that will bring the best people to this country, but I have no fear that the assimilative process which is going on, and perhaps which may take two or three generations to complete its work, will not make these people into good citizens. We ourselves cannot look back two or three generations without finding our fathers had to learn a great deal from our grandfathers, and we know that we had to learn a great deal from our fathers. Our children learn from us, and so it is that the process of development goes on. Dr. Robertson was speaking in a church the other day, and he made one statement that struck me as being rather remarkable about the Galicians. He said that some people might think that the Galicians were not the best class of settlers. He told of a little incident that struck him as being significant. He said: I was passing a school-house a short time ago in a Galician settlement and I saw a nice little girl. I spoke to her and asked her name. She gave her name, and it was a Galician name. I said: "You are a Galician." "No," she said, "I am a Canadian." That does not prove a great deal, but it is something as indicating what has been going on in this country. It does not take them very long to know where they are and it shows their desire to feel that they are citizens of the country.

I am in full favour of any outlay that is legitimate to bring Doukhobors, or any good class of citizens, as they are, into this country. The older inhabitants can look after themselves. If we have no power to assimilate these foreigners and make them good Canadian citizens, then we had better haul down our flag as a nation, and say that we are a failure.

Mr. DAVIS. My hon. colleague from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) has spoken on this subject at some length, and, as he has alluded to the district which I have the honour to represent in this House, I think I should say a few words. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) stated that while I and others from the North-west Territories and Manitoba might be pleased at getting this class of immigrants which the Minister of the Interior is sending in, he did not want them. Well, I know what the people in my district think, and I can tell the House that they do not propose to erect a Chinese wall around Saskatchewan. I believe that if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) consulted his own constituents more generally on this matter, he would discover they hold the same views. It is all very well for the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) to talk of building up a new civilization; his people will be pleased to know that a new lawgiver has arrived among them; but what, after all, we want is population in that country. For the twenty years that I have been there, we have been vainly hoping for an influx of settlers, but, notwithstanding that millions of dollars were expended by the late Government on immigration, their policy failed to help us. I represent a district which covers 108,000 square miles, and Alberta and Assiniboia have about the same extent of territory. When the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway was built, the people scattered all over the Territories, some of them going 300 miles from a railway, and they remain there to-day. It cannot be expected that we will build railway lines to all these small settlements, and if population does not go into that country, the people who are there now, mostly Canadians, will leave. My hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) said that the people did not want to raise grain simply to pay freight to railways, but on behalf of the people whom I represent, I say that we do want people in there, so that they may raise plenty of grain, and so that, in consequence, the railway companies may be able to reduce their rates. Here is the expenditure made by the Conservative Government for immigration. I give the figures in round numbers:

1882 .....	215,000
1883 .....	373,000
1884 .....	511,000
1885 .....	423,000
1886 .....	257,000
1887 .....	341,000
1888 .....	244,000
1889 .....	250,000
1890 .....	110,000
1891 .....	181,000
1892 .....	177,000
1893 .....	180,000
1894 .....	202,000
1895 .....	195,000
1896 .....	126,000

The late Government spent nearly $4,000,000, and they only claim to have placed 75,000 people in the Territories. I say, Sir, that the Minister of the Interior deserves credit that, with $260,000 last year, he induced 30,000 settlers to go in there. I believe that it is claimed that in the district of Alberta there are 110,000 people, out of which there are not more than 3,000 Galicians; and does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) wish the people of Canada to believe that 110,000 Canadians—I presume, from what he said this afternoon, they are all Canadians—cannot assimilate 3,000 Galicians? The hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) objects to these immigrants from the social point of view, but if you go to any city in this Dominion, you will find people you do not care to associate with, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) does not have to associate with the Galicians, unless he wants to. When he says that he would rather have gophers and groundhogs than green fields waving with corn, and cattle roaming over the prairies, he goes too far. What I say is, that we want population in there, and we cannot be too particular about the class of people who immigrate. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) told us that they had 30,000,000 people in the United States before they opened the door for foreign immigrants. Well, we would have to go back about forty years to find the United States with a population of 30,000,000, and, as they started fifty years previously with a population of only five millions, they must have got a large foreign immigration in the meanwhile, because the natural increase would never give them that population. Well, when they had thirty millions in the United States, their foreign immigration was at the rate of 2,000,000 a year, and if we consider that with five and six millions of people in Canada our foreign immigration is not more than 5,000 a year, surely the percentage of immigration was greater in the United States than in Canada; and yet we know that in the United States they assimilated the foreign element. Now, Sir, we have some of those foreign immigrants in my district, and I have been amongst them, and I can assure the House that they are going to make first-class settlers. We do not expect that they are going to adopt the manners and customs of the Canadians right off, but we expect them to learn, and we know that they are of about the same class as the Mennonites were, when they came to this country. The Mennonites have adopted our school system and our language, and they are a progressive people. Wherever they have established themselves, they have built towns and mills and elevators, and have become very much like Canadians. There was just as much said against the Mennonites, when they first came to Canada, as is said against the Galicians to-day, and they certainly were higher in the scale of civilization than are the Galicians now. The hon. member for Alberta said that all the Galicians were going to his part of the country. I suppose because the soil and climate there are better than elsewhere; but such is not the fact. The first consignment of those people sent into the country were sent to Alberta, and it is well known that people coming from the old country wish to follow their friends, and for that reason a great many of these people have gone to that district. But there are also some in my district, and I ask the Minister of the Interior to send us more. If Alberta does not want them, we shall be glad to take them. We have room in our district for twenty million people; yet in the past eighteen years, nearly half a man's lifetime, we have not got more than 200,000 people in the whole Territories. At that rate, how long would it take to settle up the North-west Territories? I would like to see people come there from Ontario and Quebec; but that is not the kind of immigration that is going to make us rich. We are not going to get rich by taking money out of one pocket and putting it into another. Some hon. gentlemen say that our own people go to the United States. The hon. member for Alberta took up the census, and showed us that there are about a million Canadians in the United States. That is because our people are of a roving disposition. Those who go to the United States are not farmers, but go there to work in the mills. The same thing is true with regard to the people of the United States. You will find Americans in every country in the world, and if you figured them all up, you would find them to number many millions. So that the fact that there are some thousands of Canadians in the United States does not go to prove anything to my mind. The Government of Manitoba have, I believe, immigration agents in Ontario trying to get immigration from there; I fancy they are also working in the province of Quebec, and the North-west Territories are doing the same. But I lay it down as a principle that we cannot expect to increase the population or the production or the consumption or the wealth of the country by taking people from one part of this Dominion and transplanting them in another part. If we are going to increase our population to any great extent, we must get people from outside. We would like to get them from the United States, and we are getting them in large numbers from that country now. While we would like also to get English people and Irish people, we can at the same time afford to take in a few, more of these foreigners. As to the Doukhobors, there are 2,500 of them in my district, and I hope the Minister will bring more. We have also Icelanders and Swedes in the west. All these people from northern Europe are all right. They are used to a cold country such as ours, and they are used to farming under the same conditions. The late Government brought in a lot of people from Paris, such as notaries and lawyers, who, after remaining two or three years and spending all their money, had to go back, because they knew nothing about farming, while the people who have a knowledge of agriculture remain and are doing well.

Mr. DAVIS.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I propose to offer only a very few remarks on this question; but as a representative of a Manitoba constituency, I feel bound to say that so far as my observations go, I think that country can very well absorb a reasonable number of Galicians and Doukhobors. There are none of these people in the constituency I represent, but in that constituency are all the Mennonites who came to the country eighteen or twenty years ago, and my fellow-members from the west, as well as all who have been through that country, will bear me out in saying that a better class of settlers do not exist in the province of Manitoba than those very Mennonites. I was not familiar with the conditions existing among those people at the time they came; but gentlemen who did visit their settlement at that time tell me that they certainly were no better a class of people than the Doukhobors and possibly the Galicians who have been brought into the North-west. Though I have not been able to observe personally the habits of those people to any extent, I may say that, being connected with a newspaper in Manitoba, I am in an excellent position to obtain information, and the information that has reached me in regard to them is of a very satisfactory character. Those who visit among the Galicians and the Doukhobors tell me that they are making excellent progress. I know, from my slight observation of them, that the Galician men make excellent farm hands, while the young girls are becoming familiar with the conditions of the country and make excellent domestic servants. While saying this, I do not wish to give the impression that I would like to see a very large immigration from the province of Galicia into the North-west country. But I have the very greatest sympathy with the position the Minister of the Interior takes, that these lands of the North-west have lain vacant for years and years, notwithstanding the efforts of both Governments to get them settled upon; and, as the Minister says, are we not very much better off with these Doukhobors and Galicians tilling those lands than seeing them decade after decade lying vacant. Such a vast country as the North-west can absorb a reasonable proportion of that immigration. The Doukhobors especially will, I believe, make a very good element in our population. They are certainly a religious people, clean and well-behaved, and of good physique; and even if they do become absorbed in our civilization, I think we shall have no reason to regret that they have been brought into the country even in considerable numbers.

Mr. CRAIG. I have a word or two to say on this subject, and as there seems to be no hurry at all, judging by the speeches on the other side of the House, I will occupy a few moments. I was especially struck with the speech of the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), whom I do not see in the House just now. That hon. gentleman did not seem to be in much hurry, because he gave us a general speech on the subject of immigration, making a great many statements with which everybody would agree. This discussion arose largely from the remarks made by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). I was very much impressed with that hon. gentleman's argument with reference to giving young men in the province of Quebec information as to the province of Manitoba and the North-west Territories, showing them what inducements there are for them to go and settle there instead of going to the United States. I thought that was a very good argument, and was impressed with the fact that he did not attempt to make any political capital out of anything he said. Some speakers on the other side did try to make some political capital out of it. I listened to the hon. member for Labelle speaking about the exodus, and to some of the other hon. members speaking on the same subject, and was only wishing that we had had them in this House to make similar speeches when the Conservative party was in power, because they used arguments exactly similar to those then used by the Conservatives. The hon. member for Labelle used the same arguments which I myself was accustomed to use in speaking on that question, and naturally I thought they were very good ones?

Mr. LANDERKIN. What do you think of them now?

Mr. CRAIG. I think they are very good now, just as good as they were then, and the conclusion reached by members of the Liberal party is that the exodus is going on all the time, no matter what the conditions may be. I agree in that opinion. There is an exodus going on. The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) said that was one of the things which a country like Canada, with a comparatively small population, lying alongside a great country like the United States, must expect. I am reminded that the speech from the Throne informed us that the exodus had stopped, and I think that the hon. members on the Cabinet benches will have to read that part of the Speech over to some of their supporters, who not only do not think it has stopped but that it will never stop.

With reference to the Galicians, I do not pretend to know anything about them from personal observation. I listened to the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) and others who spoke, and who arrived at different conclusions. There is a great difference of opinion concerning these people. Some hon. members say they are unsuitable and others are quite satisfied to have them, because they say the country must be built up, and it is better to have any kind of settlers than none at all. I am not prepared to admit that view and I think there is a great deal of force in what the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) has said that we should take time to work out the experiment before bringing in any others. I was prompted to say a few words on this question for this reason. I take the "Canadian Baptist." The parties who write in this paper, as a rule, belong to the Liberal party. I do not know whether the gentleman who wrote the letter, a part of which I am about to quote, belongs to that party or not, but that is a matter of no importance. His letter is headed the "The Strathcona Letter." Strathcona was part of the town of Edmonton, but is now, it seems a town by itself. The writer, in the latter part of his letter, goes on to say:

Our town, during the past year, as well as the whole district, has made marked progress, notwithstanding the grievous infliction, by a sadly mistaken policy, of thousands of a class of people being forced upon our territory, which must prove, for many years to come, a clog on the wheels of progress in anything and everything high and noble.

I am not going to endorse that opinion, but I have no doubt that the writer did not give expression to it because of any political feeling. He was writing about the church, and, no doubt, is a minister of that church, and in that letter is merely expressing his opinion about the Galicians, in which he seems to agree entirely with the hon. member for Alberta. As this matters seems to be an experiment, and will be for some time in the experimental stage, I think that while we are not prepared to pronounce any decided opinion at present, we should decide that until it is shown that these people are desirable, no more should be brought into the country. It is very well to say, as the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) has said, that it is better to have men who know something about farming, even if they only know how to handle a hoe than to have those who know nothing about it. I am not so sure of that. A great many successful farmers in Ontario were not farmers at all when they went on the farm. I know many who were shoemakers and engaged in other occupations that have nothing to do with farms, but yet who went on farms and made farming a success. I know these men personally. It depends a great deal on the men themselves. While we require settlers, it is important that we should not forget that quality is a very important consideration. We do want the country filled up, but filled up with the right kind of people, and whether the Galicians are the right kind of people we will not know for some time.

Mr. ELLIS. I gave expression to my opinion on a previous occasion on this question, and, generally speaking, I am in favour of the hon. Minister's policy. I have not heard anything in this debate to change my mind. I am quite satisfied that as time goes on, these people will become excellent settlers, and adapt themselves to our ways. I quite agree that we should get the very best settlers we can, but nobody has yet shown that the Minister has not done that. The conditions in the English-speaking portion of Europe are so completely changed in the last ten, fifteen or twenty years, that we cannot count on British settlers to the extent we once did. I only rose to endorse, as far as I could, the observations made by the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. McDougall) with regard to the vacant farms in the maritime provinces. I think, perhaps, it will be a good policy for the Minister to detail some person belonging to his department, and a man of experience, to look over the whole situation there and see what can be done. I am quite of the opinion that it would be very unpopular now for the Minister to establish agencies in the maritime provinces for the purposes of removing people to the North-west. Even if agents were put there merely for the purpose of giving instructions, it would be impossible to keep them to that line of policy alone. They would become advertising agents and canvassers to remove the people, and the consequence would be a greater distrust and ill feeling towards Ontario and western Canada than exists at present. No doubt at all, it is most unfortunate for us that our population goes away from us to the extent that it does. The province from which I come, in the ten years between the two last censuses, made no increase in population at all. Our people go away; it is natural, perhaps, for them to go to the United States. There are a great many reasons for this. In the first place, the country itself was settled by people from the United States. The family quarrels which caused them to come here long since subsided, and they return naturally to the eastern states, and the United States afford them greater opportunities for progress. The fisherman goes, as a matter of course, because his business is there, a great many go and earn a good deal of money, a great portion of which they return again to the maritime provinces, and the money which comes in in that way is considerable. True, we lose their labour, and it is a great disadvantage. Some of the very best men whom our country has produced have gained high positions in the United States. The gentleman who was sent out by President McKinley to the Philippine Islands as head of the United States Commission, is a Prince Edward Islander. And there are many others who have attained success in the United States, and their example is an attraction to others. I do not know, for my part, what should be done, but I ask the Minister of the Interior to take this matter into consideration, and see if something cannot be done to grapple with the situation in the maritime provinces. I do not wish to rise again, so while I am on my feet I may be allowed to make one further remark. I witnessed the debarkation of the Doukhobors, and I have to compliment the Minister of the Interior, the officers of the Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway on the excellent arrangements made with regard to these people. I have seen many movements of large masses of men from the time the troops were landed in the Trent affair, and including large numbers despatched on various occasions to the upper provinces, but I never saw anything better or more ably managed, never saw any arrangements of the kind more effective or carried out with greater skill. I do not know the names of the gentlemen who represented the department on that occasion, but I can bear testimony to the ability with which they performed the work entrusted to them.

Mr. KLOEPFER. I do not wish to take up much time in discussing this matter. It seems strange to me that this country should have to spend so much money in inducing immigration. We practically drive our own people out of this country, because our trade policy for the last ten or fifteen years has not been up to the mark. Why should we have a tariff 25 per cent less than that of the United States? The reason why our young men go to the United States is because we have not enough trade. Our farmers' boys cannot all be farmers. A good many of them wish to go into the cities, but there is no room for them, because our manufacturers are hampered with the immense importations of manufactured goods from the United States. Even within the last two years we imported $78,000,000 worth, and in the last two years about $20,000,000 worth more than usual. That money has gone to the United States and we shall never see a cent of it back. It is gone for ever. If we had that money among our own population, our population would be a good deal more than it is. We should be a good deal better off if we kept that money in our own country and did not spend a cent for immigration. Take Detroit, Cleveland and Buffalo and other similar cities, and about one-third of their people are Canadians, and the Canadians are the best business men they have. If we protected our manufacturers, we should have the making of the goods that we now import, and we should be able to afford employment here for our farmers' sons. And, with this increase of manufacturing population, our farmers would also be benefited by the increased market for their products. We should not then need to pay so much money to immigration agents, nor should we have to go about offering so much a head to have people brought here. We have spent a great deal for years in the North-west, on railways and for other means of developing that country, and we find that in this House the members from that country do more talking than those of all the rest of Canada put together. We lend them the money to open up their country, we build their railways for them, and yet they import almost everything from the other side. But though they get their goods from the United States, they look to Ontario for money, and they never want to give us a return for it. They should be more ready to help the people who help them. Even if they paid a little more for their goods, it would pay them better in the end. Last year forty thousand barrels of flour were imported into Canada from the United States. That would not have been the case if our manufacturers had been better protected. The way to increase the population is to retain our own people, and the way to do that is to give us a better trade policy for the country.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to say a few words with reference to the remarks of the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. McDougall), in case it might be inferred that in the province of Ontario we have what are known as abandoned farms. I am proud to say that throughout the province, from one end to the other, there are no such things as abandoned farms. There can be no doubt that our young people are drifting away from the farms and going into industrial pursuits, seeking employment in the towns and villages away from the farms. I think the suggestion of the hon. member for Cape Breton was a very good one. If the hon. Minister of the Interior could induce the better class of farmers from the British Islands to come to Canada, men who have means to buy improved farms, I have no doubt that they would find in the province of Ontario an excellent opportunity of investing their money. We have some people of that class, and from my knowledge of them, they have proved a very acceptable class indeed. These men would buy the farms now owned by farmers who have large families and who are desirous of securing more land than they have in Ontario, but are unable to do so on account of the cost. There are plenty of farmers in Ontario, I believe, who would gladly dispose of their farms to such men as the hon. member for Cape Breton referred to, and remove to the North-west, taking their families with them, and securing for each member of the family a good farm. In that way the North-west and Manitoba would have the very best class of settlers that could go into that country—people accustomed to farming, accustomed to the climate, people of good character, good health and good reputation, the very best class of settlers that could be found anywhere. The country would lose nothing by inducing such men as I have referred to, men of means and experience in farming in the old country, who desire to secure an improved farm in Ontario, to come here, because if we lose a man in Ontario we would get another in his place. I hope that the hon. Minister will give some attention to that feature of the immigration question. It will be better than allowing our young men to drift away from the farm, it will enable them to be transplanted to another part of our country where there is abundance of land, and yet the population of our province will not be depleted. I desire to ask the hon. Minister one question on behalf of an hon. gentleman who is not able to be present. Where are the Doukhobors and Galicians located, and what are the numbers in each location or settlement?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). The Doukhobors are located as follows:—There is one settlement west of the Swan River valley—the Swan River valley is about 200 miles a little west of north of Portage la Prairie—and there are about 1,000 Doukhobors there. North of Yorkton there are about 2,000; a little west of Yorkton there are about 2,000. In the Saskatchewan district, not yet finally located, but to locate there, there will be 2,300; they are the last lot that came out. Those are Doukhobors. The Galicians are located in different settlements; they are very much scattered. These people will not settle individually, but if they are put in colonies of 100, or 200, or anywhere up to 600 or 700 they are satisfied. At Stuartburn, which is the original Galician settlement, there are about 400; at Brokenhead, on the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, 20 miles east of the Red River, there are 150; at Pleasant Home there are 600; in the neighbourhood of Swan River and Dauphin there are about 1,500; at Shoal Lake there are 500; at Strathclair, 400; at Saltcoats, 200; at Yorkton, 550; at Rosthern and Duck Lake there are something over 1,000. In the Alberta district, around Edmonton and Fort Saskatchewan, there are about 2,500; at Whitewood, on the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, there are 50; at Huns Valley there are 60; at St. Norbert, 20; at Cook's Creek, 30; at Grenfell, 30; at Crooked Lake, north of the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, there are about 800. In addition to these, there are 2,500 to 3,000 who are at present engaged in various occupations, but are not yet finally located. They will soon scatter into all these settlements, where they have friends already.

While I am on my feet, I want to say a word or two about the people we brought in during last year; and I want to remove an evident misapprehension among members of the House who have spoken, who are evidently under the impression that the work of the immigration branch, and the money we have spent, have been devoted to the purpose of bringing in Doukhobors and Galicians. That is an entire mistake. We are practically expending no money at all in the way of inducing that class of immigration. We are spending money in the United States and in the British Isles chiefly, and to a small extent, comparatively, in France and Belgium. The immigration of the last calendar year shows the following results:—

IMMIGRANT ARRIVALS.

The total number of declared settlers arriving during the year is as follows:—

Via Ocean Ports.
English .....	9,475
Irish .....	733
Scotch .....	1,400
German .....	563
Scandinavian .....	724
French and Belgian .....	545
Galicians .....	5,509
Miscellaneous nationalities .....	3,634
	22,583
From the United States .....	9,119
	31,702
Total .....	31,702
Increase over arrivals during 1897.	9,986

Hon. gentlemen will see that last year the vast proportion of our immigrants were British, counting those from the United States as of British origin, and but a comparatively small proportion were Galicians. During the present year we will have, perhaps, a larger proportion of Doukhobors and Galicians, but they will still remain a comparatively small proportion of the total.

Hon. gentlemen speak as if the people of eastern Canada were all going to the United States. That is not at all the case. In 1898 there were 13,000 Canadians from eastern Canada who landed in Winnipeg and declared their intention to settle in Manitoba and the North-west Territories. I am not going to discuss the so-called exodus, which has been discussed by other members who are more familiar with the facts in eastern Canada than I am, and which has been particularly well dealt with by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa). But I want to say to the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) that I did not consider that he was pronouncing an indictment against the administration of my department in the same way that the member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) did; I did not attribute my hon. friend's remarks as made at all in a political sense, and I am prepared to give his suggestions my best consideration. I understood that the hon. gentleman was expressing his dissent from the general policy of spending money to encourage this kind of immigration from European countries, and I gather from his remarks that he did not approve of any strong efforts to induce any such immigration. Now, as to the people who emigrate from eastern Canada to the United States in the early summer months, I venture to think that they are, for the most part, people who desire to spend some time in industrial occupations; they do not want to go to farming; and I do not believe that anything the Government could do would have any substantial effect in preventing this particular class of people from going where they are going. I certainly think that the effect of sending any considerable number of agents into the province of Quebec for the purpose of inducing the people to go to the west, would not decrease the number of people that go to the United States. I do not regard it as a function of the immigration branch of the Government to spend money for the purpose of preventing people from leaving Canada. It is, no doubt, the duty of the Government to pursue such a general policy, so far as it is able, as will result in making it to the interest of people to stay in Canada, but I do not regard it as a function of the immigration branch to spend money in that direction, except in a somewhat general way.

Now, so far as the province of Quebec is concerned, I have done what I could for the purpose of encouraging repatriation, and for the purpose of helping those who are engaged in the effort to take people from one part of Quebec to another part of Quebec. I have assisted the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company, which is most active in that direction at the present time, and I have assisted liberally the Quebec Repatriation and Colonization Society. My hon. friend will find the operations of that society in the report of the department for the year. It shows that a very substantial work has been carried on; it shows some 2,226 people repatriated during the year 1898. A constant work has been going on in that direction, and, so far as the department was able to do anything to assist in that work, we have done it, and we are extremely desirous to render any assistance that can be given in that direction.

Mr. CHAUVIN. Is there any agent paid by this Government for the purpose of repatriation?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, there are three agents, clergymen of the Roman Catholic Church, who are specially engaged in that work. They sometimes take small parties to the North-west from the province of Quebec; but their real occupation is working in the United States to get people to come back to Quebec who have formerly lived in that province. I am speaking of Father Morin, Father Gouin and Father Blais. In addition to that, we give assistance to the Repatriation Society, and I am quite prepared to go further in that direction, provided I can see that the result will be satisfactory, on the lines the hon. gentleman has spoken of. I desire particularly to say that there is an evident misapprehension as to the manner in which immigration money is being spent. This money is being spent altogether for the purpose of getting British immigrants from Great Britain, and men who are practically British immigrants from the United States. The people we get from Europe, the Doukhobors and Galicians, we get practically without any expenditure, except that which we pay in the shape of bonus.

Mr. MONK. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman what assistance he has given to these 13,000 Canadians?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have not given any. These people have removed themselves. They have asked for no assistance. They are not the class of people to whom assistance would be of any moment, such as it is to people like the Doukhobors and Galicians. When I say that no assistance was given them, I mean no assistance in the shape of money payments. But the staff, the accommodation and the immigration shed have been at their disposal, and they make use of them. All these people reported at the Immigration Office at Winnipeg, and most of them received assistance in the way of direction and information. They made use of the services of the officers of the department particularly in the location of land. The only direct money payment that has been made in connection with the Doukhobors, has been the payment of one pound sterling per head to their committee, which they themselves created by appointment, they naming some of the members and I naming some of the members. That money was only used, practically, for the purpose of furnishing subsistence for a portion of the Doukhobors who were comparatively destitute. They were not all in that condition, because many of them were in fairly good circumstances. But the money was practically used for the purpose of furnishing subsistence during the two or three months that intervened before they could get on the land. While I do not suppose there will be any special objection to offering a bonus, or a payment of $5 per head in the way of assistance to Canadians, the average Canadian would not regard it as being of any value whatever. I think he would rather laugh at it if we were to offer a Canadian farmer's son $5 to go to the North-west. As to the Doukhobors and Galicians they are agriculturists; there are no labouring people amongst them in the ordinary sense of the word. This is a matter in regard to which our agents had definite instructions that none but people who are agriculturists are to be sent to Canada under the auspices of the department.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Some of these people are not engaged in agriculture, but are engaged in the city.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think so more than this: I gave most positive instructions when the Doukhobors went up—of course they were in the country and we could not lock them up or control them absolutely—that while occupying the Government buildings, they were not to be permitted to compete in the labour market with labouring men, that they were not to be permitted to go out and do any work for wages while they were there. I supposed that my instructions had been carried out, and substantially they were. But the position of having several hundred men in a building in the city, having nothing to do, proved rather a difficult one, and some of them got out and engaged in cutting wood and work of that sort. As soon as I heard of it, I gave peremptory orders to put a stop to it. That is one of those things that is likely to happen in any large department where there are a great many men to be dealt with.

Mr. MONTAGUE. When I was in Winnipeg, only a short time ago, I heard it generally complained of that these people were competing in the labour market in Winnipeg and doing work for about one-half of the remuneration it would be done for by local people.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That just happened in the way I spoke of. There was a complaint about it at once. I got a letter from the Trades and Labour Council in Winnipeg in regard to it, and I answered the letter explaining the situation. I do not think that the people who really knew the circumstances complained that any substantial amount of work had been done because they had done nothing at all except what I have mentioned. It was done contrary to my orders, and as soon as I heard that my orders had not been fully carried out, I telegraphed to the Commissioner at Winnipeg and gave him very strict instructions not to permit these men to work for wages.

Mr. DAVIN. Could the hon. gentleman say what is the character of the immigration that has been coming in since January to the present time?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I cannot give the figures now.

Mr. DAVIN. I would like to ask the hon. Minister what about the statement that was made to me by a thoroughly reliable person to the effect that Mr. McCreary had said that British immigration is falling off, so much so, that it may almost be described as having stopped.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not believe that Mr. McCreary ever made such a statement. I do not desire to throw any doubt upon the hon. gentleman's statement, but I think he has been misinformed. I have been told, time and again, and letters have been written to me about statements Mr. McCreary was alleged to have made and things he was said to have done, and it has been found, in nearly every case, that he has not said or done these things. The commissioner is a man who is extremely busy. He is meeting all kinds of people at all hours of the day and night and he is asked all kinds of questions. It would be very easy to misconstrue some of the answers that he might make. He might casually say, on a railway platform, to some one that British immigration is falling off, without in the least intending to convey the idea that in a general way British immigration is falling off. He might have meant that there had not been as many British immigrants arriving in the past week as previously. He could not have said what is attributed to him because the facts of the case are to the contrary. Although I cannot give the exact figures I am satisfied that during the last six months we have had a larger proportion of British immigration than previously.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. Minister read a statement of the number of immigrants who had come to Canada during the year ended December 31st last. He did not include in that list the number of Doukhobors that have arrived. May I ask him for those figures?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The Doukhobors did not come until after the 1st of January this year, so that they do not appear in the blue-book for last year.

Mr. MONK. I would like to ask the hon. Minister if he knows that these Doukhobors would not be prepared to submit to the provisions of the Militia Act; that in other words, according to their religious tenets, they would not submit to military service?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is part of the agreement under which they came, the same as the Mennonites.

Mr. CLARKE. I notice in the "Citizen" to-day, a statement from a gentleman who is the Hungarian immigration agent employed by the Government, whose name I cannot pronounce. It is as follows:

Zoltaire Van Rajis, the Hungarian emigration agent employed by the Dominion Government, has returned to the city from Prince Albert, N.W.T., where he has been engaged settling a colony of his fellow-countrymen. To a "Citizen" reporter he stated last evening that the new settlers had erected houses and broken considerable land, and were making good headway. The agent states that about forty families will come out to Canada from Hungary in about a month, and next spring a still larger colony would follow. Those settlers were well-to-do, and, being thrifty, should make a success of mixed farming.

Are these immigrants being helped by the Government, and to what extent? Are any special facilities being offered them to come here? Does the Minister know of what character they are?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The Hungarians?

Mr. CLARKE. Yes.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have no special information about these particular people. They have just come along with the other European immigrants, and there was no special inducement offered to them. Of course, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) is aware that we have no provision in the law at present to enable me to exclude certain people from the country. They have a right to come and they do come, but no special steps were taken by us to get these people here. If forty or fifty Hungarians came to Winnipeg and wanted to locate upon land, it would be the duty of Mr. McCreary, the immigration commissioner, to employ an interpreter and endeavour to locate them, and I have no doubt that has been done.

Mr. CLARKE. Then, there is an officer appointed by the department to look after Hungarian immigrants?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There has been no officer appointed to procure the immigrants, but if they came and desired to be located it would be the duty of the officers of the department there to see that they were located.

Mr. CLARKE. The Minister is probably aware that the allegation has been made again and again, that in addition to paying a bonus for the procuring of these immigrants, the Dominion Government has given the Galicians, at least, special advantages and privileges—

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is not true.

Mr. CLARKE. When the matter was before the House, on the motion of the hon. member from Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Prior), I drew the attention of the Minister to it, to give him an opportunity to deny the statement made in the Neepawa "Free Press." The statement is as follows, and had reference to the Galicians:

Whatever may be said for or against Galician immigration as a matter of public policy, there can be no two opinions that these foreigners should not be given privileges that are denied to Canadians or other English-speaking people. We are, therefore, at a loss to understand why Galicians are permitted to make homestead entry in the Minnedosa land office for timbered land in the Riding Mountain for which Canadian settlers in this district have been refused entry. It cannot be because these Galicians do not understand the nature of the oath they are required to take in order to make entry; for the agent must have known the lands were not open for homestead entry. And why are these Galicians permitted to go into the Riding Mountains in violation of the Dominion Lands Act, and deprive the settlers of this district of their only timber supply? These are questions that the Department of the Interior will be called upon to answer. There is room in western Canada for the Galicians, and they may make good settlers; but there is no reason why they should be given the special favours mentioned.

This is the paragraph to which I drew the attention of the Minister a few weeks ago, but I did not have the opportunity of bringing it more definitely before him, as the debate lasted until late at night. I now ask the Minister if there is any truth in the allegation made, that these Galician settlers were given special privileges?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is no foundation whatever for the statement. I have already stated in the House, that I sent the chief officer of the Dominion Lands Branch to Neepawa for the purpose of investigating that statement. He has not yet returned, and I have not his report, but my hon. friend from McDonald (Mr. Rutherford), in whose constituency Neepawa is, tells me he saw the commissioner of Dominion Lands out there, after he had investigated the matter, and the commissioner told him there was no foundation whatever for the statement. I repeatedly gave express orders that no distinction whatever should be made, and I sent the commissioner for the purpose of seeing if my instructions were carried out. As the law now stands, it places the people of every nationality upon the same basis precisely; and there is no legal authority for me to treat one class in respect to homestead entries, different from any other class—except it be done under special provisions of the law, and these provisions make no distinction in respect to nationality. The report, I fancy, arose in this way. Some of the Galicians went upon certain lands that were pretty well removed from the settlement up towards the Riding Mountains. They squatted there temporarily, but they received no interest from the Government, and just like other people who squat upon land that was not open for entry, they were notified they would have to get out. They did not get out at the time they were notified, but they received no entries, and will not.

Mr. CLARKE. I suppose the report of the officer appointed by the Minister to make the investigation will be published?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Certainly; he will make his report.

Mr. CLARKE. There is another matter to which I wish to call the attention of the Minister. I have had two letters from a gentleman in Nelson, B.C., referring to a matter which I mentioned to the Minister on a previous occasion, and I have been asked to bring it before the House. A gentleman named Johnsen writes to me as follows, under date June 3rd:

In the "Manitoba Free Press" I note Mr. Sifton's answer to your query on May 15th, re bonus allowed to Doukhobors. I take exception to Mr. Sifton's remark as follows:—"The Government is prepared at any time to make a similar arrangement with any person who may be in a position to furnish a large body of desirable agricultural immigrants from Britain."

I have made Mr. Sifton numerous offers within the past year, to obtain agriculturists, not only Englishmen, but Scandinavians. The latter are admittedly the best settlers Canada has. Mr. Sifton came to see me last year in Fernie. At his request I called upon him at Ottawa in November last, but without any result.

I am prepared to get the Government as many sound men, and men with cash, for the agricultural districts as the Government can find room for. What Mr. Sifton's idea is in importing Doukhobors passes all my understanding, as they are the laziest, dirtiest breed under the sun, and mentally weak through intermarriage. I have lived among them, the same as I have lived amongst most of the nations in the old world. My offers to Mr. Sifton were not based upon profits, as all my work would have been gratuitously performed. I am backed up by my brother, who is consulting agent to the Norwegian Government in all matters having reference to agriculture, he being resident in England.

I do not know who this gentleman is, but he has written to me twice. Until I received that letter I had formed a very favourable opinion of the Doukhobors, both as to their habits, and their qualifications to eventually become good settlers. But, if statements of this kind are being made by persons who allege they have had practical experience of these persons from living amongst them, I think it is well they should be presented to the House, so that if they are not well founded, they can be given official contradiction. It is pretty plain now to the House, that if these are desirable immigrants—and I hope they will turn out to be the most desirable immigrants we have had from the continent of Europe—there is no special credit due to the Department of the Interior for their advent to Canada; because if I understood the Minister correctly this afternoon, we are indebted to some gentlemen identified with the Society of Friends, who presented these Doukhobors to the department as eligible immigrants, and who are really entitled to all the credit, if credit there be, of having sent them here from their native land.

If the allegations made by my correspondent are correct, that these Doukhobors are not desirable settlers, we should be advised of that fact, and steps should be taken not to allow any more to come into the country. If, on the contrary, they are a desirable class of immigrants, I think statements of this kind should be contradicted specifically and authoritatively at the earliest moment. That is the reason I bring this communication before the House. While on my feet, I would like to ask the hon. Minister if he would give us more definite and detailed information as to the duties performed by the very large staff of immigration officers and agents now stationed in the old country—what the special duties of the agent at Liverpool, Mr. Jury, are; what are the special duties of Mr. W. T. R. Preston, who was sent to England five or six months ago, where he is stationed, how much he has received for the discharge of those duties, and where he has been since he was sent by the department to England. I would also like to know the number of immigration agents we have in Ireland. If I read the reports correctly—I have only read them hurriedly—we have only two agencies in Ireland, one at Dublin and the other at Londonderry; whereas, according to the statement of the hon. Minister this afternoon, in reply to the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron), we have 276 agents in the United States. I would like to have more particulars than the Minister has yet given us as to the plan adopted to secure British immigrants, and as to the nature of the work engaged in by those officers who have been sent recently from this country to the old country to engage in that work. I do not think the Minister has yet given us that information, and that is the reason I ask for it. There is another matter to which I would like to draw the attention of the Minister. This afternoon, when the subject of the medical examination of the immigrants was under consideration, the hon. member for York, N.E. (Mr. Foster), expressed the opinion—and I think it is one in which we all concur—that it was eminently desirable that the closest and most rigid examination should be made of the immigrants at the port of embarkation; and I understood from the Minister that wherever practicable this was done. I would like to draw his attention to a statement which appears in yesterday's "Star" with reference to a meeting of a congressional sub-committee investigating immigration matters, which was held at New York on Monday, and to allegations which were made at that meeting and subsequently by Col. Laird, United States Commissioner of Immigration at Quebec, as to the character and quality of some of the immigrants who reached Canada at that port. If those allegations are correct it would appear as if the medical examination of the immigrants who reach that port was not as strict as it ought to be. Col. Laird is alleged in the report of the "Star" to say that, believing that the Dominion of Canada is no more desirous than the United States of harbouring paupers and permanently-diseased people, it is not without surprise that he finds how seldom the Canadian immigration officials will turn back undesirable immigrants. The view entertained by the people of Quebec appears to be that this allegation that pauper immigrants, unsound in mind and body, are permitted to land at Quebec, is a scare gotten up by New York steamship agents. But it appears from the statement of the United States Commissioner of Immigration at Quebec, that there is a laxity on the part of the Canadian officials in keeping out these undesirable immigrants who are brought to Quebec by steamships from different parts of the old land. The allegation is that the great majority of these undesirable immigrants are shipped at Liverpool, and I would like to ask the Minister what steps are taken there to prevent these people embarking for Canada; and if they escape the vigilance of his officers on the other side of the water, what is to prevent them being dumped on our shores?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I presume that the hon. gentleman is aware that there is no Exclusion Act in the Dominion of Canada at the present time, and there never has been, so far as I am aware. Therefore, it is no part of the duty of the Government, under the law to appoint agents for the purpose of keeping people from coming to Canada.

Mr. CLARKE. But I take it that these references are to immigrants who are assisted to come to Canada, for whom a bonus is paid to the steamship agents.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The persons who are assisted to come are reported to our agents here, and they are passed upon by our agents at the ports at which they land, and are subjected to a careful and thorough medical examination. That particular quarantine work is not done under the charge of my department, but under the Department of Agriculture; but I have no reason to doubt that it is done as thoroughly and carefully as it is possible to have it done. The embarkation of these people is carried on under the rules and regulations of the ports from which they embark, and it is not possible for us to change those rules or to affect them by anything we can do. We can only decide what we shall do with respect to the payment of the bonus. So far as the Gallicians are concerned, we have stopped the payment of the bonus from the 1st of June, as I have informed the House a number of times. I do not fancy that there can be any great improvement on the method of the medical examination. It is under the consideration of both the Department of Agriculture and my department, and if any improvement can be suggested by the special officers engaged in looking after that work, both the Minister of Agriculture and myself will be most happy to carry out any feasible suggestions that may be made. With regard to the letter which the hon. gentleman has read, I may say that it is just the ordinary letter which a man who has been pestering the department for years to get work and has not got it, would write. It is just the sort of letter we often receive as the result of not entertaining all kinds of propositions made to us from time to time by people who promise things which, I think, they are not able to carry out. In the first year that I was in office, the heaviest task I had to perform was to answer letters from people who declared their ability to get immigrants from various countries. They were the most complete humbugs that the department had anything to do with. I do not mean to say that the gentleman who wrote the letter which my hon. friend has read is in every sense a humbug; but if all his statements are on a par with those in regard to matters with which I am acquainted, I would not advise the hon. gentleman to rely on much what he says. He says that I called to see him at Fernie last year. I have not the least recollection of anything connected with the matter, except that when the train stopped at Fernie a person, who I suppose was the same man, came in and suggested that he would be a good immigrant agent if I could find a place for him. I terminated the conversation as soon as I could, and that is all I know about it. His statement respecting the Doukhobors is absurd on the face of it. He cannot even know what class of people the Doukhobors are, or he would not have made that statement. He is probably referring to the Galicians. The inaccuracy of his knowledge is evidenced by the fact that he talks of the Doukhobors as being dirty. Why, the one thing that everybody who had anything to do with them practically, noticed is, that they were the cleanest class of people that ever travelled as immigrants into Canada. The report of the people who had charge of them on the steamer, those in charge of the immigration sheds, the railway conductors and trainmen, and every visitor who went to see them, was, that they had never seen as clean a lot of immigrants. It is evident that this man does not know what he is talking about, when he says that they are a dirty people. But, no doubt, he is one of a large number who do not profess any great admiration for my policy.

The hon. gentleman asks for the names of the immigration agents in England. Mr. W. T. R. Preston is one—

Mr. CLARKE. What position has he ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Inspector of Agencies. Upon three occasions the High Commissioner, when in this country, impressed very strongly upon me the fact that the work was seriously injured in the old country because we did not have a travelling inspector of the immigration agencies. We had a considerable number of officers, but not one who could take the position of inspector, and I was for some time anxious that the department should get a good man for the position. I gave the position to Mr. Preston, because I considered him qualified for the work better than any other available man.

Mr. CLARKE. What salary does he get ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Three thousand dollars. Mr. C. R. Devlin, the agent at Dublin, gets $2,000. Mr. O'Kelly is the agent at Londonderry, and his salary is $1,800. Mr. Webster is the sub-agent at Dublin, with a salary of $900. Mr. Griffith is the agent in Wales, and he has been fairly successful, although he had great difficulty at first. He has succeeded in accomplishing a considerable amount of work, and his salary is $1,200. Mr. Jury is agent at Liverpool, with a salary of $1,800. He travels and lectures, largely through the northern portion of England. Mr. Mitchell is clerk and book-keeper in charge of the Liverpool office, at $1,200. Mr. Thomas Duncan, Scotland, salary, $1,500 ; Mr. Murray, agent at Glasgow. I secured him from the steamship service ; he was steamship agent at Glasgow, travelling agent and booking agent. He took charge of our work at $2,000. Mr. Grant, at Dumfries, gets a salary of $1,200.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the total number of Great Britain and Ireland ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Fifteen, besides the office boy.

Mr. CLARKE. Does that include typewriters, assistants and interpreters ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. There are two agencies in Ireland, Dublin and Londonderry ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. What are Mr. Devlin's duties ? Does he go out lecturing upon the conditions of Canada ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. Does the agent at Londonderry ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. Has he a record of the number of meetings that he addressed and the number of people that he came in contact with ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I presume his report shows the number of meetings he addressed.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Devlin's report is very general.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How many agencies in Great Britain and Ireland ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Nine.

Mr. MONTAGUE. For the inspection of nine agencies you employ an official at $3,000. What are his duties ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. To inspect the agencies and report generally on the work. He has to report on the whole European work, and perform any duty assigned to him by the High Commissioner.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What are his special qualifications ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. He is a man of good ability, and I thought that the occupation he has been following for many years fitted him particularly for organization work, canvassing, and work of that kind. So far as I am able to judge, he is thoroughly well qualified.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. Minister admits that he never had any experience in immigration matters ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It is rather strange to pick up a man without experience at all, and make him inspector of all the other men who have been for years engaged in that work. So far as his work as political organizer is concerned, I doubt very much whether the House will consider that that fitted him to be an inspector of immigration agencies. No impartial tribunal would decide that a man, absolutely without experience, absolutely inattentive for years to the question of immigration, would be the best man to place over a lot of agents who have been engaged in that work for years, and give him a larger salary than any of them. Had he ever been in England before?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not know.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is extraordinary. The hon. gentleman appoints a man to superintend European immigration who knows nothing about Europe or the work. Does the hon. gentleman know whether Preston is acquainted with any other language than his own ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think he is.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Here is a man put in charge of European work who knows no other language than English.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. He has an interpreter.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Necessarily, he must have one ; but there is a difference always in getting what a man says through an interpreter and understanding it yourself. There is no excuse. There is no use in the Minister trying to say that Mr. Preston was the man of all others fitted for this work. It was a political appointment. The place was needed for Mr. Preston, and I suppose he was recommended by politicians, and the Minister, in the generosity of his heart, found the place and gave him a good salary. I, for my part, should much prefer that he should say so than that he should say that Preston's eminent qualifications fitted him for that appointment.

Mr. DAVIN. Not only that, but what possible object could there be in having these agencies inspected ? He knows very well that in his own department he has an illustration of the utter uselessness of these inspectors. He knows that in the Lands Department he has, as I believe, abolished the position of inspector—

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) is quite mistaken. I have not abolished the inspector's office at all.

Mr. DAVIN. Who inspects now ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. Stevens.

Mr. DAVIN. I have never seen anything of him ; I used to see something of the other inspectors as they went around. I say here that the position, Inspector of Immigration Agencies in Europe, when given to a man like Preston who knows nothing of Germany, who knows nothing of France, has never been in England, speaks no other language than English—it is palpably a contrived position just to fit a man that, for the time being, wanted a nice, soft thing, and he, probably, wanted to be taken out of Canada. Sir, it seems to me, I confess, that appointing Preston at such a time with the scandals of West Elgin ringing in our ears, scandals in which he was the principal figure—why if the truth were known about his conduct in West Elgin—

Mr. BRITTON. What was his conduct in West Elgin ? What do you know about it ? State now, if you please, what you know.

Mr. DAVIN. I will tell what I know. Are we going to have at the hands of my hon. and learned friend—

Mr. BRITTON. State what you know about Preston's conduct in West Elgin.

Mr. DAVIN. I hope the Chairman will protect me from the interruption of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BRITTON. Why do not you state it ?

Mr. DAVIN. I will tell you what his conduct was, Sir. The conduct of Preston in West Elgin was hugging the machine. And before he went to meet his acolytes and heelers, to contrive the villanies that were perpetrated in West Elgin, with the hypocrisy that belong to a man, he went to a Sunday school and asked the Sunday school children to sing his favourite hymn : "My soul is full of sunshine to-day." And with his soul full of sunshine, he went to meet his brother hypocrites to contrive the hugging of the machine. Why, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Britton) wants to know what he did ?

Mr. BRITTON. So I do ; you have not told us yet. You have told us about his singing a hymn ; but you have not told us what he did in West Elgin.

Mr. DAVIN. He has revealed to us what he did, because there is a letter of his own record.

Mr. BRITTON. Is that all.

Mr. DAVIN. Is not that enough ?

Mr. BRITTON. I do not see anything wrong in that letter.

Mr. DAVIN. I know it will be hard to convince my hon. friend, because I have his conduct and the conduct of other hon. gentlemen vividly before my mind, as in another place here they are trying to do everything they can to burk inquiry—

Mr. BRITTON. Not at all correct.

Mr. DAVIN—and in the face of evidence open, palpable, that wrong has been done, they are trying to throw dust in the eyes of Canada, trying to prevent the truth from coming out.

Mr. BRITTON. I ask you, Mr. Chairman, if it is in order for the hon. gentleman to refer—

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) did not refer to the committee. He said: "in another place."

Mr. BRITTON. The hon. gentleman is pretending to state what took place in a committee of this House, though he is incorrectly stating it. He has not the right to refer to what took place in a committee.

Mr. DAVIN. I did not do anything of the kind, and if I thought it worth while to waste any moments or words on my hon. friend, I would have him called to order for using the word "pretend." I did not refer to any committee. I said that we have had before us in another place conduct such as I have described. If the description was not correct, how does the hon. gentleman know that I referred to the committee?

Mr. BRITTON. Then you are stating something you do not know anything about yourself.

Mr. DAVIN. I know very well how the hon. gentleman has fought and wriggled in many a court of justice defending criminals not half as vile as this Preston. I want to put on record the exclamations of horror of the brother of a distinguished Liberal leader in regard to this man Preston. Why, Sir, it is stated now that Mr. Samuel Blake will probably be the leader of the Liberal party in the local House—probably Premier of Ontario. Nevertheless, that hon. gentleman in the face of the iniquities respecting which this man Preston was the chief hero, lifted up his hands in holy horror and declared, as I remember it, that these people should be decapitated or something to that effect. Hon. Samuel Blake, ex-Vice-Chancellor, wants to have a block set up on Parliament hill and from that block he wishes to see roll the heads of such men as Preston. This man Preston who, according to his own profession is contriving to crush the life out of the electorate of Canada—this man, his hands reeking from this crime, the man the Minister of the Interior makes a position for with $3,000 a year to gallivant through Europe. And he must have his interpreter with him. I suppose he has a courier also.

He probably not only travels with the machine but has a trumpeter to go before him and herald his approach. This is the great man; this is he who has done such great things for the Liberal party in Ontario; way for the author of the machine! In his letter he paints his own character. I suppose the hon. Minister could tell what is meant by hugging the machine.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) evidently knows more about it than I do.

Mr. DAVIN. No, no, it is not my character to hug machines. The hon. gentleman is, I am afraid, closer to the machine than I am when he can make a position for him and give him $3,000 a year to go about here and there. I suppose he is paid his expenses. How much is he allowed for expenses?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. His actual outlay.

Mr. DAVIN. Well, his actual outlay on the continent of Europe, stopping at the Grand Hotel in Paris, going to Berlin, going to Vienna, having an interpreter at each place—why, his expenses must be very great, I suppose they will be $3,000 a year more. But that is not all. While travelling about he will live on the fat of the land, he will have everything that heart could wish, and he can lay by $3,000 a year. And what won't he do for the people of Canada? He would call on this agent, and that agent. We can fancy him calling on his brother Devlin, in Dublin, and saying: Hello, Devlin, how have you been? And Devlin would say: Hail Preston, great creator of the machine, great fighter for the Liberal party of Ontario! Thou art a great man for what thou didst accomplish for that great party in the province of Ontario. Welcome to my bureau. And down they would sit, and you can fancy the delight which Mr. Devlin, who is a strong party man, would listen to the stories of political corruption which this man Preston could tell. Now I want to give the opinion of an ex-judge, the opinion of probably one of the ablest men in the Liberal party.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Where is it found?

Mr. DAVIN. It is printed in the "Montreal Daily Star."

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Does my hon. friend think it very likely that he would give that interview to the "Montreal Star"?

Mr. DAVIN. I think it appeared originally in one of the Toronto papers. Now this is what Mr. Blake says:

If I were in office, Preston's head, as well as all others who took part in those disgraceful acts, would fall just as quickly as I could write down their names on paper.

That is what he says, and my hon. friend near me reminds me that although it has appeared in the "World," and appeared in the "Star," Mr. Blake has never repudiated the interview. And why should we doubt that the hon. Sam. Blake would say that? He and his brother have always posed as politicians of a somewhat higher class than the men who are now at the head of the Liberal party. In fact Edward Blake shook the dust of the Liberal party off his feet because they were truckling with the United States, and we know very well that there was much in that party that was offensive to him. We know he is a gentleman of elevated ideas, and the blood in his veins is the blood of a high minded race of men. The late Chancellor Blake who served his country well as a statesman before he went on the bench was the father of these men. Mr. Samuel Blake is, as well as his brother, a man of superior talent, and we need not be surprised to find the Hon. Samuel Blake speaking in that way. Now, Sir, what does the Minister of the Interior do with this man Preston? When Canada gets too hot for him, when they don't want to have him here where we could examine him, and ask him some questions about this machine, the Minister says to him: "Here, I will make a position for you, I will make you inspector of agencies, and I will send you to England and to Europe, to go everywhere at the country's expense, and you can pocket the $3,000." Sir, I say that, in the sum of discreditable transactions that this Government has perpetrated, this employment of Sifton and sending him over there—

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Of who?

Mr. DAVIN. Well, of Preston. However, they are arcades ambo. This employment of Preston is one of the worst; and the hon. gentleman's excuse that, owing to the position that Preston had filled in the past, he knew all about immigration. Why, it is lameness itself; and I do not think that this committee or this country will acquit the Minister of the Interior of this last foolish, this last wicked act that he has perpetrated in sending Preston over to Europe to fill a purely contrived position, at a salary of $3,000 a year and his expenses.

Mr. BRITTON. I do not, of course, appear as the apologist of Mr. Preston, I do not hold any brief for him. But I want to call attention to the fact that the hon. gentleman has made an attack upon Mr. Preston and charged him with all sorts of things, and in answer to my request that he should name what he did at West Elgin, he has failed to name a single thing he did there. He has picked up what newspapers have said about him, and has quoted a telegram that Mr. Preston himself sent to somebody in West Elgin, I think it was to the Liberal candidate. The hon. gentleman puts that forward as a reason for attacking in this House, a man against whom no one has been able to specify any particular thing that he did in West Elgin. We know what has been said in reference to West Elgin and in reference to Brockville, and we know that newspapers, and individuals in the House and out of it, have seized upon certain matters and attempted to prejudge the case, without a particle of evidence.

Mr. DAVIN.

Mr. BENNETT. It is refreshing to hear the member for Kingston (Mr. Britton) stand up here and, while not trying to palliate the conduct of Mr. Preston and the gang with whom he has been associated in the province of Ontario, he endeavours at least to break his fall a little. Now what has been the history of the past six months in the election contests in the province of Ontario? Starting off from one riding to another, we have seen the gang move about under the direction of this same Mr. Preston, and the climax of all the wrongdoing was brought about in the riding of West Elgin. Now what was the result? A day was fixed for the trial, and efforts were made on behalf of the Liberal party to have a settlement arrived at, and at the last moment, when the Liberal party in that riding were afraid to go into court, the candidate Mr. McNish signed a document that I am bound to say the history of no country—

Mr. BRITTON. Now is it fair to bring that into this question about immigration?

Mr. COCHRANE. What have you been doing?

Mr. BRITTON. I asked the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett), before he attacked Mr. Preston, to specify his charges, that is all. In answer to that, the hon. gentleman failed to do that, and I simply called the attention of the committee to the fact that he had failed to do it. Then, my hon. friend is going into something that may have been said about some local elections.

Mr. BENNETT. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Britton) will allow me to proceed, I was referring to this document that was signed by Mr. McNish. What was the nature of it? What does he state publicly as to that election? He says:

That a large number of persons were specially sent into the constituency by men working on behalf of the Liberal party for the express purpose of taking part, on Mr. McNish's behalf, in the election held January 12th, 1899; and we believe that fraudulent and corrupt means were used by some of such persons to secure his election.

Then, in the following paragraphs, Mr. McNish says:

That in many of the polling subdivisions of the riding there were grave irregularities connected with the return of the ballot-boxes.

And so on. I might go on and illustrate all the irregularities that were carried on in that riding. Who conducted this election? who carried it on?

Mr. MACDONALD (East Huron). Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. Is this discussion in order? Does it refer to the item before us or not? If not, we want it shut off, that we may be allowed to go on with the business. If it is in order, let it be known, and let it go on.

Mr. COCHRANE. Order, order.

Mr. MACDONALD (East Huron). I am in perfect order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Campbell). The item under discussion is for immigration, as follows:—

Salaries of agents and employees in Canada, Great Britain and foreign countries ..... $100,000

While I think that it may be permissible to discuss the position of Mr. Preston, as he is an immigration agent in the old country, still I certainly think that anything connected with the local election, either in West Elgin or anywhere else, does not come under this item.

Mr. BENNETT. As I understand it, the hon. Minister stated a little time ago that one of the officials in the employ of the Dominion Government was Mr. W. T. R. Preston. In a few moments I will be able to show to the committee that Mr. McNish, in his sworn testimony, made a statement as to the manner in which that election was carried on, and in that examination this same Mr. McNish swears that Mr. W. T. R. Preston was introduced to him in St. Thomas, and that he was there throughout the whole of the campaign. Will the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton) deny that?

Mr. BRITTON. I do not remember it; I cannot deny it.

Mr. BENNETT. What does it go to show? If Mr. McNish's evidence is to be taken for aught—and I presume it is to be, because, although all the villainies were conducted and carried on in that riding, I venture to say that no one will suggest that Mr. McNish's sworn testimony is not entitled to credence. Mr. McNish was examined in connection with the petition, for the purpose of discovery, before the trial, and he admitted there that he knew Mr. Preston, that Mr. Preston was in that fight, and that Mr. Preston was practically given control of the campaign. What further was proved? It was proved that all these irregularities were conducted and carried on by men who were under the control of Preston. Now, it comes down to this: If Preston is a gentleman of this style and stamp, then I say that it is utterly unworthy of Canada that it should continue to retain a man of that stamp in its employ. Preston has been assailed in the Toronto "World," and in every public newspaper in Canada. Where is Preston to-day? At a very respectable distance. He is threatening actions, but he does not come over to this country and proceed with actions against the editors and proprietors of any of these newspapers. The hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton) knows what any legal adviser does under such circumstances. If a man came to his office, and asked his advice as counsel, and that man assured him that he had been slandered, or that he had been libelled in the public press, the hon. gentleman would not threaten an action, but he would proceed with an action. Preston does not proceed with an action. Although he claims to be an innocent man and injured man, and although the hon. Minister of the Interior thinks he is an injured and innocent man, it remains to be seen, before this item goes through, whether hon. gentlemen think he is that stamp of a man whose services should be dispensed with. What did we see in this House a few years ago? When clerks were charged with claiming money for overtime and work done in the different departments, their cases were investigated by a committee of this House, and the hon. gentleman who to-day sit on the right, were the loudest in their denunciation of some poor official who had perhaps obtained a few dollars for work that he had done, but which he could not properly receive, and which should not have been paid to him. These hon. gentlemen, though loud in their denunciations, will vote to continue in the employ of the public of Canada this Mr. Preston, who, if he to-day were in this country, would be with Cahill, and Bole, and those other men who are now facing criminal prosecutions. Yet this man is retained in the public service. I say it would have been proper for the Government to have dispensed with his services until an investigation was had, and until it was shown whether Mr. Preston was the innocent man he claimed to be; and it was due to Mr. Preston himself, if they thought he was the innocent man that he professed to be, that there should have been an inquiry made in the courts into his conduct. I do not think that honest Liberals in the country are in favour of keeping men of the sort of Mr. Preston in the employ of the Government, and, in order to test the feeling of this committee as to whether or not Mr. Preston's services should be longer retained, I beg to move:

That the services of Mr. W. T. R. Preston should, in the opinion of this House, be dispensed with, and that item 92 be reduced by $3,000 and expenses.

Mr. WALLACE. I think there should be no dissenting voice to the adoption of that resolution. I am aware that the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton), who sees a judgeship dangling up in the air, just a little beyond his reach, may, in his anxiety for the judgeship, vote that black is white and that white is black, or anything that may be required of him, and that the hon. member for East Huron (Mr. Macdonald) will follow suit. He is ready for any job of this character that may be required of him.

Mr. MACDONALD (East Huron). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) mentioned the hon. member for East Huron. Would he be kind enough to repeat what he said, as I did not understand him?

Mr. WALLACE. I said the hon. member for East Huron (Mr. Macdonald) seems to view the matter in the same light as the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton), and is ready to vote with marked alacrity—

Mr. MACDONALD (East Huron). How do you know that?

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton), in the innocence of his heart, asks: What has Preston done? Why, every newspaper in this country is ringing with denunciations of Preston for his conduct in the West Elgin election. But you do not need to confine it to West Elgin; go to Lennox, go to Northumberland, go all over the country, and you find the same machine at work and the same nefarious transactions perpetrated, and yet they are condoned by the hon. member for Kingston. I will tell him what Preston has done. Preston wrote this telegram, dated Toronto, January 12th, 1899, to Donald McNish, St. Thomas:

Heartiest congratulations. Sorry to the bottom of my heart cannot be with you to-night. To be supported by such a noble army of workers should make you the proudest man in Ontario.

Who brought this noble army of workers to West Elgin?—W. T. R. Preston, or those behind him did. Those who are higher in position than Preston used him as a tool to bring those men into West Elgin. Such a noble army of workers! What does Donald McNish say about it? Over his own signature, written by himself, he has made the blackest confession ever made by a public man in Canada, and he has pronounced guilty Mr. W. T. R. Preston and the noble army of workers he brought into that riding. Mr. McNish was the Liberal candidate of the Liberal party in the county of West Elgin. He says he had no knowledge of wrong-doing but since the election it had come to his knowledge, and here is his statement that he presented to the judges in open court:

1. That a large number of persons were specially sent into the constituency by men working on behalf of the Liberal party for the express purpose of taking part, on Mr. McNish's behalf, in the election held January 12th, 1899, and we believe that fraudulent and corrupt means were used by some of such persons to secure his election.

Mr. WALLACE.

The member for Kingston (Mr. Britton) has read that statement time and again, and yet with his assumption of innocence, he gets up in this House and he wants to know what Preston has done. Does he think the people of Canada are fools, and that they do not know what has transpired in the West Elgin election? And who were these corrupt means used by? They were used by the persons that Mr. Manager Preston of the whole concern, Mr. organizer, schemer, planner, Preston, brought into the riding. What else did the noble army do, according to that prominent Liberal, Mr. McNish:

2. That several of the said persons illegally and without authority acted as deputy returning officers at the said election,—

The noble army of workers again!

2. That several of the said persons illegally and without authority acted as deputy returning officers at the said election, and in at least three cases so acted in the names of reputable local men, having, under assumed names, been introduced to the returning officer by local agents of Mr. McNish.

Another specimen of the work of the noble army under the manipulation and management of Mr. Preston. Mr. McNish says that these things were done without his knowledge, but they were not done without the knowledge of Mr. W. T. R. Preston.

3. That in many of the polling subdivisions of the riding there were grave irregularities connected with the return of ballot-boxes and their contents, the voting, and the counting of the ballots thereat.

Did these men drop down from Heaven?

An hon. MEMBER. Not much.

Mr. WALLACE. Did they come into that constituency of their own accord, or were they not brought in by somebody, who knew the scallawags from London, from Brantford from Nipissing, from Sault Ste. Marie, and from all over this country. W. T. R. Preston knew them. W. T. R. Preston had been in company with them in other ridings, and he marshalled them and manipulated them and got them to do his nefarious work. And yet, Sir, this patriarchal Santa Claus gets up in this House and asks in his innocence what did W. T. R. Preston do?

Mr. BRITTON. That is nice parliamentary language.

Mr. WALLACE. Is there any one in this country to-day who does not know the history of this nefarious transaction, and yet we are asked by the hon. member for Kingston—

Mr. BRITTON. Use your own words again like a good man; the patriarchal Santa Claus. Please use that phrase again. It is nice language for a man who sets himself up as the leader of a great party.

Mr. WALLACE. I have no desire to be personally offensive.

Mr. BRITTON. You succeeded admirably.

Mr. WALLACE. I withdraw any expression that may be offensive to the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton), but it just struck my mind, when there was such an appearance of innocence, that it did not come with good grace from a man with gray hairs in this House. Sir, this statement of Mr. McNish makes a confession of the greatest villainies that have ever been discovered in an election trial in the history of this country. The judges have declared so, and yet these gentlemen opposite pretend to be innocent of any wrong-doing by Mr. W. T. R. Preston.

That there were a large number of ballots cast of Mr. McDiarmid in some nefarious and corrupt manner manipulated.

Who manipulated them? It was the noble army of workers who endeavoured to destroy the sacredness of the ballot in this country.

4. That there were large numbers of persons brought into the riding for the express purpose of personating legitimate voters, and, assisted by some of Mr. McNish's local supporters, such persons did personate qualified voters in voting for Mr. McNish.

5. That the declared number of votes for Mr. McNish largely exceeded the number of bona fide votes cast for him.

6. That a large number of ballots cast for Mr. McDiarmid were in some nefarious and corrupt manner manipulated, whereby the result of the election was rendered doubtful, and that in this connection the voting at Shedden and Middlemarch, and in several divisions in St. Thomas, where said strangers so acted as deputy returning officers, merits special mention.

These workers were brought into that riding by somebody. Was it by Mr. Hardy or was it by any other member of the local government, or was it by their organizer and manager, Mr. W. T. R. Preston, whom this Government has delighted to honour by placing him in a position for which his training or his qualifications never fitted him.

Mr. W. T. R. Preston, Sir, came down to this Government and put a pistol to their head. It was not a case of asking Mr. Preston to accept this position, as the Minister of the Interior tells us. Does anybody believe it? We may be bound to believe it by the rules of Parliament; but we know that positions of that kind do not go begging. We know that if the department wanted a man, they could easily have secured hundreds of competent and capable men in whom the people of the country would have confidence. Why did they select a scallawag and scoundrel of this character? Because, Sir, he compelled them to select it by the rules of Parliament; but we know their secrets; he knew that what he had done for the local government he had done for the Dominion Government as well. That was the secret of it. Did he confine all his rascality and his villainy to acts for the local government? No, Sir, not a bit of it. The man who did that work for the local government was doing equally villainous work for his other employers; and we shall get the disclosures, as we shall in the other cases. Though attempts have been made from day to day to burk investigation, those attempts shall surely utterly fall. Those who are making them are being watched day by day, because the people of this country are not going to submit to any humbug of that kind, but are going to have a thorough investigation of all these matters. They will find that Mr. W. T. R. Preston, who committed such infamous acts on behalf of the Ontario Government was quite as willing to perform the same acts of infamy for his other employers. That is the reason Mr. Preston came down here and was asked by the Minister of the Interior if he would be so kind and condescending as to accept a position in Europe at $3,000 a year, with unlimited expenses, travelling where and how he pleased, and doing what he pleased when he got there; and he has done it. He has gone off. It was necessary, Sir, that he should leave this country. The trials were being held, the investigations were being made, and it was absolutely necessary for the safety of Mr. Preston, and the safety of his employers as well, that he should get out of this country; and out of it he had to go. Under what better conditions could he go than with $3,000 a year and unlimited funds for expenses, with the privilege of travelling when and where he pleased? He was not confined to any specific duties. The Minister of the Interior tells us that he was to be inspector of all the agencies. He was to lord it over Mr. Devlin, who was at one time a member of this House of Commons, and over those who had years of experience and training and fitness for the position. But Mr. W. T. R. Preston was not sent there for any such purpose. That was only the pretense. He was sent there for the reasons I have stated—reasons which I am afraid will prevent the Government from accepting the resolution proposed by the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett). What is that resolution? That the Estimates for immigration be cut down by the amount of Mr. Preston's salary and expenses. Suppose the Government acquiesce in that resolution, and say that they think Mr. Preston should be dismissed from the public service—a man who, from his record, from the admissions of Mr. McNish, his friend, and from the knowledge which the whole public have of him should be dismissed from the public service without an hour's delay. Suppose they did, and suppose Mr. Preston said: "Well, if you do that, I will peach on you; I will let out what I know." Then, where would the Government be? Where would the Government of Ontario be if they permitted that? Where would the Government of the Dominion be? Just imagine the dismay that there would be in the Cabinet and in the ranks of the ministerialists. They would say: "Mr. Preston is going to tell the whole story of his connection with all these frauds and rascalities;" and Mr. Preston, I am quite sure, would be quite equal to the job, if the Government would dare to dismiss him. Nobody knows it better than Mr. Preston, and nobody knows it better than the Government. They are not going to dismiss him, because they dare not do it; that is the explanation. They find themselves today between the devil and the deep sea. If they dismissed Mr. Preston they would have exposures from him which would wreck the Government. If they do not dismiss Mr. Preston, they will have the condemnation of every honest man in this country, be he Grit or Tory, who wants to see this country governed honestly, fairly and well, no matter who has the reins of power. Therefore, I presume that Mr. Preston, notwithstanding the resolution of the hon. member for East Simcoe, is quite safe. He will not be interfered with; the Government dare not interfere with him, notwithstanding the condemnation of such men as Mr. Sam. Blake, who was never known before, to my knowledge, to utter a word in condemnation of the acts of the Liberal party, but who has been a thick-and-thin supporter of that party, failing to condemn them for acts for which other men condemned them. But the last straw has broken the camel's back. Mr. Blake refuses to condone these acts, and he says that Mr. Preston should be dismissed as fast as the Minister of the Interior can write out his dismissal. But the Minister of the Interior is not going to perform such an act. He could not think of doing it; and Mr. Preston will go on drawing his $3,000 a year and travelling all over the countries of Europe wherever he chooses, and disgracing the Dominion of Canada so long as he holds any office under this Government. Hon. gentlemen opposite think it is a great joke; but the people of the country will view it otherwise. They will say that a Government who are afraid to punish an officer who does wrong or to investigate his conduct, just as they have been afraid to investigate the Yukon affairs, is not entitled to the confidence of the people of this country, and the moment the people get the opportunity to pronounce their condemnation, they will not be slow to relegate them to the cool shades of Opposition.

THE MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. A gentleman who has made the statements and insinuations which have been made by the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat, with no evidence whatever to support them, will not be expected to be repelled to in the ordinary way of gentlemen engaged in debate. The hon. gentleman's statements and insinuations are of such a character that the only conclusion which any person listening to him can arrive at is that he is quite oblivious to the necessity of substantiating his statements by any facts. I want to say, in the first place, that Mr. Preston's appointment was made precisely for the reason I gave when I was asked by some members of the committee. For the last two years the High Commissioner, Lord Strathcona, has been pressing upon me the necessity of appointing an officer to do this work. Members of the committee will probably be aware that he has not gone there to take charge of an office which is not organized and in which there are no officials at the present time. The work is thoroughly systematized and Mr. Preston will carry on the system, making such improvements as suggest themselves to him, from time to time. I believe him to be a capable man for the position.

But that is a different question from the one hon. gentlemen opposite have raised, and that is the question of his connection with the West Elgin election trial. I desire to say for myself and my colleagues that we have nothing to say in explanation or extenuation of any frauds alleged or admitted. We do not in the slightest degree condone what is alleged to have taken place in that election, and I desire to be freely understood as not presenting in any sense at all the argument that two blacks make a white or that any wrong-doing on the part of one condones wrong-doing on the part of another. But what I say is this, that Mr. Preston was appointed to the service at a time when nothing was known with regard to the West Elgin election, and the hon. member for West Assinibola (Mr. Davin) loses all control of his imagination when he intimates that Mr. Preston's appointment was due to his connection with that election. In so intimating, he shows that the chronology of events has passed completely out of his mind. Mr. Preston was appointed before anything was said about the West Elgin election whatever, or before anything occurred to indicate that Mr. Preston had anything whatever to do with any impropriety committed at that election. The question is not whether the Government are to blame for having appointed a man who was charged with corrupt practices in an election, because there was no charge against Mr. Preston at the time he was appointed. But the question is whether the Government is to blame for not having dispensed with his services since. Well, all I can say is that when anything is proved against Mr. Preston, when it is shown that he has been guilty of any misconduct which renders him unworthy to be in the service of the Government, then the Government will dismiss but not until then. This Government is not going to dismiss any public servant because he happens to be abused by the Tory party. Something else will have to happen besides his being slandered in the "Mail and Empire"—I myself have endured that kind of thing with considerable equanimity for a considerable length of time—before this Government will dismiss any man which it considers fit for the office to which he was appointed.

I am somewhat surprised at hon. gentlemen opposite. Their awakening in connection with election frauds seems to have come a little too late. What have we had for the last year? We have had the entire Conservative party and press hounding me, and for what reason? Because when Attorney General of Manitoba I asked that the public money of the Dominion of Canada should be spent in order to send to the penitentiary a man who had been guilty of systematically stuffing ballot-boxes. We have seen the time in this House taken up, day after day and hour after hour, with heaping abuse upon my head because I desired, in my capacity as law officer of the Manitoba Government, to send to penitentiary, not a man merely charged in a newspaper with having committed an offence, but a man who was charged in the criminal dock before the courts and ultimately convicted and sent to jail. They could not say anything too violent and too abusive about me because I initiated the proceedings which resulted in the conviction of the criminal.

These gentlemen now so anxious for the purity and good conduct of election proceedings, and who cannot say anything too high-flown about the good name and the fair fame of Canada, could not abuse me too strongly a couple of months ago because I desired that the public money of Canada should be used for the purpose of convicting a criminal. I say that the awakening of the great Conservative party on the subject of election purity comes a little late. Why, they are pastmasters in the arts of corruption. Do not we all remember the by-elections of 1891, when these hon. gentlemen put a gang of pluggers and ballot-box stuffers and ballot stealers from one end of the constituencies to the other and carried the elections by bribery and corruption of all kinds. Is it not notorious that not only did they do that and do it constantly, but they came into this House and by the force of their majority did what is just as bad—stole the seats to which the Liberals were honestly entitled.

Mr. HUGHES. Might I interrupt to ask how many Liberals were unseated, after the elections of 1891 and how many Conservatives?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have not time to go into the arithmetic of the question, but the hon. gentleman knows that my statement is true and it is for that reason he stood up to interrupt me. I say that this awakening of these hon. gentlemen on a question of electoral purity comes a little too late. What I have to say now is simply this, that so far as this Government is concerned, we have a record of which we need not be ashamed. When the Liberal party in this House asked, time and again, that an investigation should be held, when they charged that they had not received fair-play at the hands of the election officers and asked for a proper investigation before a committee, they were refused, the majority of hon. gentlemen opposite voted down the resolution. We had a similar motion made the other day. One of the hon. members for Halifax (Mr. Borden) asked for an investigation, and my right hon. friend the leader of the Government, without waiting a moment for a consultation, said he would grant that investigation, and it is now going on. The statement has been made that an attempt is being made to burk that investigation. I say that a fairer, freer, more complete investigation was never known in any Parliament. These gentlemen have been permitted to call evidence that never was admitted before in any similar investigation. The legal rules of evidence have been swept to one side. We have allowed hon. gentlemen to pass in a list of names, without even telling us what the men on that list were expected to swear to. Witnesses have been summoned who never had anything to do with the election. The committee have permitted men to be called and asked how they voted, and all and every kind of evidence to be given for the purpose of having a full and thorough investigation. Yet in the face of the fact that my right hon. friend the Prime Minister consented to that investigation immediately upon the motion being made, and in face of the fact that the committee has not sought, in the slightest way, to restrict or narrow the investigation and has given every reasonable facility, we are met with the charge that we are burking that inquiry. Such a charge simply shows that these hon. gentlemen have not the first conception of fair-play and honour and do not know when they are generously treated. I have nothing to say in extenuation of any wrong-doing at the West Elgin election. I have no reason to defend Mr. Preston or any other man, except in so far as he is entitled, as an officer of my department, to receive that fair-play and protection which every Minister is bound in practice to see that his officers get and which it is my duty, as head of the department in which Mr. Preston is employed, to see that he gets, but as soon as he is found guilty of any wrong-doing, which renders him unfit for the service, his employment in the department from that moment will cease. But again I say that I want my hon. friends opposite to understand that there are not enough Tories in Canada to get that gentleman dismissed without anything being proved against him.

Mr. BENNETT. Fully conscious of the fact that it would elicit a response from those behind him, the hon. Minister has made the pleasurable announcement that no official would be dismissed on account of the complaints of the Tories. That pleases the hon. gentlemen behind. It is an incentive to them to follow on in the hope that they too may get positions, and they may, if the positions are not all taken up by the Minister's relatives. The hon. Minister indulged in a great deal of desk-slamming, a great deal of noise, and declared that from one end of the Dominion to the other, after the election of 1891, there were charges against the Tories that they could not possibly reply to, of ballot-stuffing and fraud of every kind in connection with the elections. I tell the hon. Minister that that is not the case and I dare him to name a case such as he speaks of after 1891; and I will sit down and give him a chance to speak. Why, it is the old story of bluff and bluster on the part of the Minister; and when he tells us that there are not enough Tories to frighten him out of his position, let me tell him that we need not depend upon the Tories to turn him out of his position. We know that they will assist and gladly; but it is to the great body of honest Liberals in the country, the men who are disgusted with the gang that sit to the right of the Speaker that we make our appeal. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) does not smile at the rebuff his party got in Prince Edward Island yesterday, where they lost a seat, notwithstanding that their candidate had the influence of two Governments in his favour. The Minister does not smile at that because he sees the handwriting on the wall. And as for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), I suppose he feels that the wave will sweep from one province to the other. Now, the question before this committee is not one of bluff and bluster; the question is whether or not this man should be retained in the service of the Dominion of Canada. And what proposition does the Minister of the Interior lay down? He lays down the proposition that until some person shows that a public official is guilty of wrong-doing, the service of that official will be retained. Has it come to this, that a public official in this country can do as he pleases? Has it come to this, that a public official may have a reputation of the blackest kind, and yet, because no private party will prosecute and cause an exposure of his wrong-doing, the Government will condone it all. He says: I do not care what Preston has done; I care not whether Preston is the biggest ruffian and scoundrel in the country; I care not what charges are laid to his door, until some party proves it all there will be no interference with him on the part of the Government. I contend that it is the duty of the Minister, now that the case has been made out against Mr. Preston, of complicity in the West Elgin frauds, to inquire into the matter. Either Mr. Preston has been libelled or the truth has been spoken about him in the press. The Toronto "World," and other papers, have invited him to bring on his libel action. The hon. Minister has—

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) permit me? Mr. Preston has written a letter to the Toronto "Mail and Empire," I think, in which he has challenged proof of any impropriety on his part; and he has notified the Prime Minister that he positively denies the statements made with regard to him, and he has instructed his solicitor to take action for libel. The hon. gentleman said in his former remarks that Mr. Preston was not proceeding with the action. I venture to say the hon. gentleman will not say that he has information that Mr. Preston is not prosecuting the action in the proper way. There has not been time enough for him to be guilty of any neglect or delay so far, because communication would have to take place by letter, so that he and his solicitor should reach an understanding as to what is to be done. There must be, therefore, a certain delay. But, if Mr. Preston, after stating to the Government that he has instructed proceedings to be taken, fails to prosecute his case, I am prepared to say that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) will have ground to find fault, unless we demand explanation.

Mr. BENNETT. Now, the hon. Minister has laid down the startling proposition that if a newspaper has made slanderous statements against a man in any capacity in life, it is not the duty of the man to bring an action, but it is the duty of the newspaper to prove the truth of what it said.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I did not say that, the hon. gentleman is mistaken. I say that Mr. Preston has written this letter notifying the Prime Minister that he denied the statements made against him and had instructed action to be taken. I did not say it was the duty of the newspaper to prove its statements. Under the circumstances, which are somewhat peculiar it is Mr. Preston's duty to vindicate himself; and he tells us he has taken the only steps open to him for that purpose. And I say that the time has not elapsed within which the hon. gentleman can say that Mr. Preston has been guilty of any neglect. When he has been guilty of any neglect, it is time to find fault.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. Minister laid down the proposition quite plainly that it was the duty of the newspaper to go on and prove its statements. Now, here is the position: Mr. Preston started off with a threat of instituting a suit of criminal libel, knowing full well that when he was not in the country, such an action would not lie. But, if he has an action against these newspapers—and he certainly has if the statements published are not true—he is not doing what an aggrieved and innocent man would do in staying on the other side; but he should commence action by coming himself, or having a writ issued against the Toronto "World" and other newspapers, that he has not done up to the present time. The hon. Minister goes on and talks about West Huron and about the investigation taking place in another part of the House. He says there never was such an impartial tribunal. Does he not know that his own chairman told Mr. Russell that he was practically killing time in that committee? Why, it is apparent to any man who has visited that committee, that for days and days the prayer has been going up from hon. gentlemen on that side that prorogation may be reached before the conclusion of that inquiry. Now, there is a motion before the committee that the services of Mr. Preston should be dispensed with. It remains to be seen whether or not hon. gentlemen on your right, Mr. Chairman, believe that Mr. Preston's services should be retained. For the purpose of testing that and seeing whether there is any feeling of fair play in this assembly, and to give hon. gentlemen an opportunity to declare that this gentleman's services should be dispensed with until his reputation and character are clear. I make this motion now before the Chair.

Mr. DAVIN. Will the hon. Minister tell us the date of Preston's appointment?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The 30th of January last.

Mr. DAVIN. Has the Minister caused him to be written to saying that he would be called upon for an explanation?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. He has telegraphed the First Minister voluntarily.

Mr. DAVIN. Well, what was the tenor of it?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The telegram I have not got here, but it was briefly to this effect: that he denied the statement which was made with regard to his character, and that he had instructed legal action to be taken.

Mr. GUILLET. I have had some experience of Preston's conduct, and I desire to say a word or two which probably some hon. members opposite would prefer not to hear. They will not be disposed to laugh after I have related some of his doings in my county in 1892. He came down there as an organizer of a gang of ruffians to do the desperate work he had done in other counties all over this province. It was an extraordinary thing, under the circumstances, that he was retired from the position of librarian in the Ontario House, and for what purpose? Surely, there were other Liberal organizers for the Reform party; there was Mr. Smith still living; there was Mr. Pedley still available, and Mr. Dawson was still moving about the country. But they wanted a man who knew how to manipulate this gang of ruffians, and he was the man who had originated the gang, and who had the confidence of these desperadoes throughout the country; and the Liberal leaders knew that they would come at his call, just as Robin Hood's men sprung up from the earth at his call. They knew that these men would spring up in that riding on the morning of polling day. But Robin Hood's men were gentlemen, compared to these ruffians. They fought in a chivalrous cause, in the defence of the weak and oppressed. I want to point out that in 1892 Mr. Smith was in that county when the election was being held in which I was a candidate; Mr. Pedley was there also, addressing meetings, and Mr. Preston appeared on the scene at the last minute, followed on the morning of election day by this gang of ruffians, for the purpose of personating. He distributed them all over the riding, and they were known as the horseshoe brigade. Each one had a horseshoe pin attached to his scarf, and they were recognized by the scrutineers of the Liberal party in the polling booth by this horseshoe pin, when they came to personate the men whose names were given them by the Liberal scrutineers. The whole thing was denounced by respectable Reformers. It was well known that Preston was the organizer and manager of that gang. Now, it is significant that he was retired at a time when the fate of the local government hung in the balance, and when it was necessary that desperate work should be done by somebody, and nobody else was available. There were no other organizers of the Reform party who could handle this gang, and he was induced by some means to retire from the valuable position of librarian, which gave him a salary with which he could live in comfort, and he was given the charge of this gang of desperadoes, with a prospect of getting a more valuable position and a larger salary, if he did his work successfully. In fact, before his work was quite completed, he was appointed to this position. The circumstances are all suspicious, and they show that hon. gentlemen opposite, in spite of their affected simplicity and innocence, knew very well who the man was, and what kind of work he had been doing in the province of Ontario for ten years, and that was just such work as he has been recently doing in West Huron and Brockville.

Mr. DAVIN. I want to call the attention of the committee to certain dates. On the 13th of January Mr. Preston was appointed, and on the 12th of January he sent this telegram to Mr. McNish:

Toronto, January 12, '99.

Donald McNish, St. Thomas.

Heartiest congratulations. Sorry to the bottom of my heart I cannot be with you to-night. To be supported by such a noble army of workers should make you the proudest man in Ontario. Shake hands with the boys for me, and hug the members of the much-abused threshing machine for "auld lang syne."

PRESTON.

I see my hon. friend from Maisonneuve (Mr. Préfontaine) cheering loudly at that. I suppose he has a vision of the subsidy that will be down to-morrow for his railway. The Minister of the Interior has to admit that the conduct of this man is such that he has to say to the committee that if it be proved to him that he has been guilty of such conduct, then he will call him to account; he does not say that he will dismiss him, but he says that he will have an explanation. Now, Mr. Chairman, the question is, whether this committee knows enough of Preston in this matter to make it incumbent upon us to say that the Minister is already seized of enough concerning him to relieve the people of Canada of the disgrace of having him in so high a position, with $3,000 a year and travelling expenses. We have the fact that, after contributing to the defeat of the Conservative party in one of the most corrupt elections that ever took place in Ontario, the very next day he is given an appointment by the Minister of the Interior. Sir, is it not a very extraordinary thing that it should be the very next day after he writes that letter? I say the inference is not a forced one, that Preston was in communication with some one connected with the Government, who told them what had taken place, and told them that undoubtedly there would be an inquiry, and the sooner he was got out of the country, the better. I say that is a fair inference. Now, the Minister of the Interior flaunts the virtue of the Liberal party before us, and declares that our zeal for purity is new-found. Why, Sir, the records of the courts of this country show that—

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They show that I had to send a couple of the hon. gentleman's political friends to the penitentiary.

Mr. DAVIN. Does the hon. gentleman refer to the Portage la Prairie trial?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I allude, for one, to Mr. Charles Chamberlain, and if the hon. gentleman does not know who he is, I think the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) can tell him all about him.

Mr. DAVIN. I know it was one of his own friends that was convicted at Portage la Prairie. Now, the Minister says that he has been hounded by the Tory party because he prosecuted these cases at Portage la Prairie. Not at all. The Tory party have not complained that any persons charged with crime should be prosecuted.

Mr. DAVIN.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The Tory party found a great deal of fault with me for prosecuting them.

Mr. DAVIN. Not for prosecuting them, but for the way that the hon. gentleman did it. It was for putting his hands improperly into the treasury of the Dominion.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The way I did it was to convict them and that is what the hon. gentleman objects to.

Mr. DAVIN. No, no; what was objected to was that the Attorney General of the province put his hand improperly into the treasury of the Dominion of Canada, and he has not been able to account for thousands of dollars which are unaccounted for to this day. The hon. gentleman had great temerity to refer to that because he is not in a very innocent position in regard to it before the people of Canada. What we are concerned with now is the case of Preston, as to whether a man who has been the organizer, and who has been, it has been admitted, a corrupt organizer, who has been guilty of practices such as my hon. friend behind me has described—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Admitted by whom?

Mr. DAVIN. By himself; take this letter that I have read. The hon. Minister of Railways was not in when I read what the Hon. Samuel Blake said about this man. Samuel Blake said that if he occupied the position of Minister, the head of Preston would fall precious quick. The hon. Minister of Railways was not in when I read that, and that is the language of a man who is not merely a strong Liberal, but who has been, in the past, an eminent judge, and who is an eminent lawyer. What he says is, therefore, that there is proof enough of the misconduct of Preston to cause his head to fall. I hope, notwithstanding some of those interested cheers we have listened to, that there will be found, in the committee, some Liberals who will—

An hon. MEMBER. You will be deceived.

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend need not imagine that he represents all the Liberalism in Canada, because I think he does not. We had a sample, a few days ago, of independent Liberalism when we saw three Liberals vote against the Government of Canada. Why should we not expect more than three gentlemen to vote against the Government now, because the Government to-day are not in the position they were in four or five days ago. They are not in the position they were in four or five weeks ago, because, in the last four or five weeks they have been going down the slide on the run, and no Government in Canada have ever been so low in public estimation as this Government are to-day. An examination of the records of a transaction like this, and their apparent recklessness in using public funds for political ends have produced such an effect upon the public mind that, in the public estimation, this Government have not a shred of character left. The people have lost all confidence in them.

Mr. DAVIS. The hon. gentleman will find out differently in a little while.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman will find that out, that the people have lost all confidence in them since these revelations in West Elgin and these revelations elsewhere, and especially since what has been said in evidence in a place I cannot refer to here, but which the hon. gentleman has referred to and which the hon. gentleman has improperly described. I have been in committees of the House of Commons in England, and I have seen committees here: I am accustomed to attending courts, and I say that no such pettifogging attempts to burk an inquiry as those which have been made by the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton), the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Russell), and other members, to prevent the damning facts coming to light, that would show the people what are the means by which this Government have won election after election, since this country has been unhappy enough to have them at its head, have ever been witnessed before. That, within the last six or seven days, has so affected the public mind that the Government are shaking in their boots, and we will see, probably to-morrow, when these subsidies come down, how it is that desperate means have to be resorted to in order to get men to vote for the Government with a transaction like this before them.

Mr. MACDONALD (East Huron). I shall only discuss this matter briefly. I hope that this excitement will pass away, and that we will come down to the question of the resolution which was moved by the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett). He asks this House to decide upon the dismissal of an officer against whom there has not been a tittle of evidence adduced to show that he is guilty. In the statement made by Mr. McNish, Mr. McNish does not even hint that Preston did anything wrong. He says that he was in the riding during the election. Is it to be supposed that every man who was in the riding during the election was guilty of crime? If that is the only inference that is to be drawn, it is a poor one indeed. The hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Guillet) did not point to one single bit of evidence to show that Mr. Preston was guilty. He called them a crowd of hoodlums that went into this riding, but did he show that Mr. Preston was the leader of the crowd, or that he was guilty of doing anything improper?

Mr. GUILLET. They came with him.

Mr. MACDONALD (East Huron). Suppose the hon. gentleman (Mr. Guillet) was accused of any transaction that was wrong or criminal would he be satisfied to be condemned without having a trial to show that he was innocent? Mr. Preston writes to the Premier a letter in which he states that he is perfectly innocent of these charges that have been brought against him by the press of the country, and that he is prepared to take steps to vindicate his character from these accusations.

Mr. GUILLET. His uncle swore that he would not believe him on oath.

Mr. MACDONALD (East Huron). Mr. Preston has denied to the Premier that he was guilty of any wrong-doing charged against him, and he has taken the action necessary to prosecute those parties who have written against him in the papers. I ask any hon. gentleman on the other side of the House, if it is not the duty of this committee and of every hon. member, to give Mr. Preston an opportunity before we judge him, to vindicate his character as he proposes to vindicate it. Would it be right and just, under the present circumstances, and with the present knowledge, for the committee to pass a resolution dismissing a man against whom there is not a scintilla of evidence that we can depend upon? I hold that Mr. Samuel Blake did not say that he would dismiss Preston unless Preston was guilty, and he is the very last man in this country that would say Preston was guilty until it was shown to be a fact, by sufficient evidence. I challenge the statement of the hon. gentleman who read Mr. Blake's statement to show that Mr. Blake meant that Mr. Preston and the other parties should be dismissed before they were proven to be guilty of the charges made against them. Did Mr. Blake say so? I ask the hon. gentleman, did Mr. Blake say that under the present conditions, without further evidence, he would cut off Preston's head, and the heads of the others, before it was satisfactorily shown to him that these parties were guilty? I think I am correct in saying that Mr. Blake is a man who would not condemn any person without sufficient evidence and therefore he would not say that he would condemn Preston without evidence. Mr. Blake is a man who would not condemn any one without evidence, and therefore we are safe in saying that he did not condemn Mr. Preston.

Mr. GUILLET. I wish to answer the question asked me by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Macdonald).

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order; sit down.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. member for East Huron asked a question, and my hon. friend (Mr. Guillet) wishes to answer.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Campbell). Unless the hon. member (Mr. Macdonald) wishes to give way, the hon. member (Mr. Guillet) cannot interrupt.

Mr. WALLACE. He must expect to have his question answered.

Mr. GUILLET. I do not know what Mr. Blake says, except what I see in the public press, and it has been distinctly stated in the public press that Mr. Blake said that.

Some hon. MEMBERS. What press?

Mr. GUILLET. In several of the journals in this country, and the Montreal "Witness" is one of them, and the Toronto "Mail" is another. They distinctly state that Mr. Blake said that if he had his way it would take him no longer than it took him to write their names, to have Mr. Preston and the others dismissed.

Mr. MACDONALD (East Huron). Sit down now. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Guillet) were on his trial, would he be satisfied to be condemned by what the "Mail" or the "Empire," or the "Globe" said, or by what Mr. Samuel Blake or anybody else said? I do not think he would. If Mr. Preston can be shown to be guilty of the accusations brought against him, I would not defend him for a single moment or any person who acted with him in committing the irregularities and crimes in West Elgin or elsewhere. But there is not a single member here to-night who would in his heart condemn Mr. Preston merely on the statement made by the member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett). Every one of these gentlemen opposite know that the evidence against Mr. Preston would not justify his being discharged from the public service.

Mr. McCLURE. I have no personal knowledge whatever of Mr. Preston or his methods, and I know very little about the West Elgin election or any Ontario election. For that reason I think I can look at the question dispassionately. I am afraid there has been a large amount of heat imported in this discussion which is not conducive to calm judgment, and as the last speaker (Mr. Macdonald) has said, it might be well for us to get down to facts and find what we have to vote for. I do not want to give a vote on this question that cannot be justified. I do not know how much or how little there may be in the charges made against Mr. Preston, and I am not going to decide this question upon the outside issues that have been dragged in here. I am not going to decide this question upon my convictions of what the Tory party has been in the past, nor upon the predictions of the hon. member (Mr. Davin) about what is going to happen in the future. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) is the last one who should talk to any members in this House about trembling in their shoes. He does not hold his own seat in this House by such a very secure and certain tenure that he can afford to fling stones at any one else. But what is the charge against Mr. Preston? Remember we are not trying the West Huron election case here, and I must deprecate very strongly the language that has been used in this House to-night in reference to that investigation. As one member of that committee, I shall not express any opinion upon it at the present time. I am prepared to express my judgment as an independent member of this House and to decide that case according to the evidence when it is heard, but so far as I am personally concerned any charge made in this House in reference to burking the investigation, is made without the slightest shadow of foundation. Now, what is the charge made against Mr. Preston? First, I am told that he has been a Liberal organizer. Is that a crime? If it is there are lots of criminals in this country. I have heard of the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) going about from one section of the country to the other, and I read in the press that when he visits a place he has appointed a Tory organizer in that district. Although perhaps from my knowledge of Tory methods I would not have a high opinion of a man appointed to that position, yet I will not condemn him because he is a Tory organizer. I endorse heartily the statement of the Minister of the Interior, and I will condemn no man because the Tory press says he is a scoundrel, nor will I condemn him because the Liberal press says he is a scoundrel. Unfortunately the press of this country does not possess that independence of spirit—I speak respectfully of the press—but unfortunately the press of this country is intensely partisan and it does not become any member of Parliament, or any man who desires to form a perfect judgment on any question, to be swayed too strongly by what is said in the press, especially it does not become him to condemn any man because that man is condemned by organs like the Toronto "Mail" or the Toronto "World," which long since parted with any character or reputation they ever had. But we are told that we have had the sworn statement of Mr. McNish read here to-night.

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Mr. McCLURE. Well, a statement under oath of some kind. Assuming it is true, I challenge any gentleman in this House to show me that the name of Mr. Preston is mentioned in that statement. We have nothing further than the fact that he was in the riding where this rascality went on. Well, some of these gentlemen opposite were in that riding, and surely we are not to condemn them because of that. Now, as to the language attributed to Mr. Blake. I am not here to-night to justify my conduct by what

Mr. Blake or any other man in Ontario says. Although my own judgment may not be as good as Mr. Sam. Blake's, it is the best I have got, and I will not take his judgment in preference to mine. Then we have the statement that the Tory press charges Mr. Preston with these crimes, but on the other hand Mr. Preston flatly denies them, and he takes the only course open to him and commences an action for libel. These gentlemen opposite cannot deny that Mr. Preston has commenced his action, and until he fails to press it, or does not succeed in it we have got to suspend our judgment. Some of these gentlemen opposite are lawyers, or they pretend to be lawyers in their way, and yet they would stand in this position that if a man has a charge made against him in the public press and he denies it, and brings an action for slander, then before that man has a chance of having his side of the case heard, they would say that he is guilty. Even though Mr. Preston be as bad as these gentlemen opposite say he is, I will give him the benefit of that sound principle of British law, and hold him innocent until he is proven guilty.

Mr. WALLACE. It has been stated in this House to-night that the Hon. Samuel Blake has made his statement with so many provisos that it was no condemnation of the acts of Mr. Preston. So I understood the statement of the hon. member for East Huron (Mr. Macdonald), among others. If the hon. gentleman had only read the statement of Mr. Blake, he would not have made that statement.

Mr. HEYD. What paper is it in ?

Mr. WALLACE. I am not quoting a paper. I am quoting Mr. Sam. Blake.

Mr. HEYD. Who prints it ?

Mr. WALLACE. It does not matter who prints it. Let somebody get up and deny that Mr. Blake made this statement. An hon. gentleman says that this paper is not entitled to any credence, because it is not a Liberal paper. I do not know whether the statement appeared in the Liberal journals of the country or not ; but it appeared in the Conservative and independent papers, and Mr. Blake has never denied it, though many days have elapsed since it appeared. Now, what is the statement. He said :

If I were in office, Preston's head, and all others who took part in these disgraceful acts, would fall just as quickly as I could write down their names on paper.

That is the statement ; there is no proviso about it.

Mr. MACDONALD (East Huron). I would just say in connection with that—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Chairman, I ask you to give me the rights of the floor. We do not want any partisan chairmen in this House.

Mr. MACDONALD (East Huron). I was just going to interject a statement.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Campbell). Unless the hon. member who has the floor will give way, he cannot be interrupted.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Chairman, I would ask you to give me the floor.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I think the hon. gentleman should withdraw that expression, because it clearly implied the charge against the Chairman that he was a partisan chairman.

Mr. WALLACE. I had a right to the floor, I appealed to the Chairman to give it to me, and he did not move from his seat or take any steps to give me my right. I have no desire to say anything offensive to the Chairman, but I have certain rights in this House, and I am not going to permit any person who occupies the position of Chairman to deprive me of those rights. I say that the Hon. Samuel Blake, a prominent Liberal, one who has fought the battles of the Liberal party, and has condoned acts which many of us thought it strange that a man of his standing could justify, condemns an act which one gentleman after another on the Government side has to-night got up to justify ; and nobody with stronger or more vehement language than the Minister of the Interior. What does he say ? " No man will be dismissed because he is charged by the Tories." He says again : " There are not enough Tories in Canada to get that man dismissed." Well, Sir, we shall see whether there are enough Grits who will be able to retain him in office after the exposure that has been made. The hon. Minister of the Interior was forced to admit that Mr. Preston must clear himself. What steps has he taken to demand a justification from Mr. Preston ? Has he sent a cablegram to him saying : " Most serious charges have been made against you." Not a line ; he has done nothing. He said that Preston wrote or cabled back to the Premier ; but he did not do that until within the last few days, after the newspapers had gone over there with the report of the proceedings. Preston saw that report, and saw that his head was in danger, and, therefore, cabled to the Premier. Why did not the Minister of the Interior take some steps ? Why did he not cable to Preston : " Serious charges are made against your integrity, against your honour, against the fair fame of the Liberal party as conducted by you, and you will have either to resign your position at once or come across the Atlantic and face your accusers and defend yourself against the charges made." By whom were those charges made ? In the first instance, by the Conservative party, but, in the second instance, by Mr. Donald McNish, a Liberal member of Parliament, who was declared elected by the most atrocious acts ever disclosed in the political history of this country; and yet the Minister of the Interior gets up and says: "We will defy any Tories to have this man dismissed."

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He did not say that. He said he would defy any Tories in Canada to have him dismissed without evidence.

Mr. WALLACE. He did not say anything of the kind. I took down his words, and he said: "There are not enough Tories in Canada to have that man dismissed."

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman will surely be fair enough to say that what the Minister of the Interior stated was that he would not dismiss him simply because he was charged.

Mr. WALLACE. I quoted his very words, which he repeated twice in his speech; it was the closing sentence of his speech. He stated also that he had sent to the penitentiary a couple of Tories who had done wrong in election trials in the North-west. What are the facts in connection with that? That the only man condemned in the North-west in connection with the election of 1896, and in connection with the expenditure of $10,000, was one of his own political friends. There were no men sent to the penitentiary. The hon. gentleman referred to Mr. Chas. Chamberlain, whose offences, whatever they were, occurred in 1881, and he said that if the hon. member for West Assiniboia did not know who he was, he might refer to the member for West York. I would like to know what the hon. gentleman means by that insinuation? If he means to insinuate that I had any knowledge of any wrong-doing by Chas. Chamberlain, or any one else, I pronounce it a foul slander without any mitigation; I challenge him to produce a particle of proof of any wrong-doing of any kind connected with myself, or any improper connection with any man who has had wrong-doing charged against him. The hon. gentleman tells us that we stole seats in 1891, and went with a band of blackguards from one constituency after another throughout this country; and he was offensive enough to say to the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) that the reason he interrupted him was that he knew it was true.

Mr. HUGHES. I did not hear that.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) challenged him, and I repeat the challenge, to state one case of the kind he mentions in connection with the elections of 1891. I took an active part myself in connection with the by-elections that followed the elections of 1891. I was in several constituencies in the elections of 1891, and I can say that I knew of no single case of wrong-doing, but that the election was conducted as fairly and honestly as I ever knew an election to be conducted in this country. I say that the statement of the Minister of the Interior was a foul slander against the Conservative party, and I defy him to produce any proof of his statement. I challenge him to produce a particle of evidence to justify the statement he made that a party of personators and pluggers had gone there, in the interest of the Conservative party, in 1891.

What are the facts? They are, that the personators and pluggers had gone through this country in the year 1892, in the by-elections. There was a political organizer for the Liberal party, Mr. Alex. Smith. He was in the riding, and we will presume that he was doing his work honestly and fairly on behalf of the Liberal party; but the night before the election a gang of pluggers and personators came in on the same train with Mr. Preston, under his guidance and management, and spread themselves all over the riding.

Mr. MACDONALD (East Huron). That is not so.

Mr. WALLACE. Here is their scheme, as detailed by the hon. member for West Northumberland (Mr. Guillet), whose statement will be accepted where that of the hon. gentleman will be repudiated.

Mr. MACDONALD (East Huron). That is no proof.

Mr. WALLACE. I have known the hon. member for West Northumberland for nearly twenty years, and this is the first time any statement of his has been called in question, and it cannot be successfully called in question in this committee or out of it. According to that hon. gentleman, these pluggers are under the direction and management of Preston, and came into the riding with him. They wore a horseshoe pin in their necktie, so that the returning officer and Grit scrutineer would recognize them. The Grit scrutineer wore a certain badge, which was to disclose his identity.

Mr. MACDONALD (East Huron). How do you know that?

Mr. WALLACE. I am stating facts which were disclosed in court. Two men were arrested, and both jumped their bail, and cleared the country, and the trial became a farce through the manipulations of the friends of hon. gentlemen opposite. The proof of this is, that the personators and the pluggers were in the Liberal party after the trial in 1892 of this same man. We talk about "Auld Lang Syne." Of course, he had been operating these rascalities for years. Do not we know his history? Do we not know that his uncle, John Rochester, who was a member of this House, swore that he would not believe him on oath in any business transaction? Do we not know that twelve good men and true pronounced him a rogue and a rascal? Do we not know that is his whole record? Yet these gentlemen hug to their bosoms men of that character, and give them high offices.

The hon. Minister of the Interior also said that the present Tory majority voted down a resolution in this Parliament demanding an investigation into election frauds. They did not. They quoted the very words in an amendment that had been brought in by hon. gentlemen opposite in a similar case, a resolution that had been brought before this House by these hon. gentlemen themselves, and they could not find fault with that resolution, if they look back to their own records and votes.

The hon. gentleman said that, in the cases of West Huron and Brockville, we promptly gave the committee asked for. Yes, after the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) had proved to this House successfully that rascality had been perpetrated in the West riding of Huron, and that men had been robbed of their most sacred right, the right of voting by ballot and having his votes recorded. The hon. gentleman claims credit for a virtue his party do not possess. They dared not refuse the demand, because the cry would have gone forth that the West Huron election and the Yukon scandal the Government were afraid to investigate, implicating, as they did, three Cabinet Ministers and a whole herd of officials, who participated in the rascality, and public opinion had been so aroused that these hon. gentlemen dare not refuse the investigation. Yet they claim it as a virtue that they did not refuse an investigation into the West Huron election.

I can only repeat that Preston, not by hearsay, but by his own telegram, is shown to have taken a conspicuous part in this election. It is proved that he was the organizer who supplanted Mr. Smith, and took the control and management in his own hands. And we have the confession of Mr. McNish, which cannot be disputed, in which he admitted that there had been wrong-doing committed by his own party. Preston was the organizer; he took the management out of the hands of Mr. Alex. Smith.

Mr. MACDONALD (East Huron). How do you know?

Mr. WALLACE. I am stating facts, to which Mr. McNish swore in court.

Mr. MACDONALD (East Huron). He did not.

Mr. WALLACE. We have the evidence taken in the court, in which Mr. McNish said that Preston was the organizer. What does Preston's telegram mean? If it means anything, it means that he was in West Elgin, and had left in post haste for Ottawa to get the reward of his rascality. The whole facts are, that Mr. Preston was there; and as the hon. member for East Huron (Mr. Macdonald) knows as well as I do, when Mr. Preston appears in a riding, he takes charge on behalf of the Liberal party.

Mr. MACDONALD (East Huron). He was never in my riding.

Mr. WALLACE. I did not say he was.

Mr. MACDONALD (East Huron). If he was not in my riding, how do I know whether he takes charge or not?

Mr. WALLACE. If the hon. gentleman knows anything about it, he knows that what I say is correct; and if he knows nothing about it, he is talking and interrupting a great deal too much. I say Mr. Preston was the manager of the iniquities in West Elgin. Nobody has disputed that. He has claimed all the credit for it. He is the chief pusher, and wants to have his subordinates of the machine, the "much-abused threshing machine," hugged for him for the sake of Auld Lang Syne. And in many other places we have the same iniquities of the same gang, led by the same scoundrel, W. T. R. Preston.

Mr. DAVIS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) challenged the Minister of the Interior to show one case of corruption on the part of the Conservatives in the election of 1891 or any by-elections?

Mr. WALLACE. I read what the Minister said. He said that in the province of Ontario the Conservatives stole seats in 1891, and charged that a band of pluggers went from one constituency to another.

Mr. DAVIS. And the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) also said he defied the Minister of the Interior to prove one case of corruption on the part of the Conservatives in 1891 or any by-election.

Mr. WALLACE. I said nothing of the kind. I wish to correct the hon. gentleman. I read what the Minister had said and challenged him to give a single instance of the elections in 1891, or the by-elections of 1892 in the province of Ontario. I was not referring to the North-west; I do not know what occurred in the North-west.

Mr. DAVIS. I can certainly be allowed to understand a thing when I hear it. I think I heard the hon. gentleman make the statement that I have given with respect to by-elections. The hon. gentleman must have forgotten that there was a by-election in 1892 in Winnipeg. There was a gentleman named Chamberlain, from the county of York, who came up to Winnipeg in the interest of the Conservative party with a band of pluggers behind him, to carry the election. The hon. gentleman has probably forgotten that Mr. Chamberlain and a gentleman named Haidane were prosecuted for these election frauds; and if I remember well, one of them was sent to jail and the other was fined $1,000, which, no doubt, the friends of the hon. gentleman had to raise. He has forgotten that the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford) was deprived of his seat by ballot-box stuffing on the part of the friends of hon. gentlemen opposite in the last general election. The hon. gentleman has, perhaps, forgotten the evidence which went to show that they actually opened a school in Winnipeg for the education of deputy returning officers in the art of manipulating the ballots so as to deprive the people of their franchise. The first question asked the pupils of this school was: "Can you play cards?" And the jar was put on the table—that is not new, it all came out in the evidence—and these deputy returning officers who were shown how to steal the people's ballots. And when their education was completed they were sent to the constituencies of Manitoba and the North-west to manipulate the ballots. One of them told it as a good joke how, in a certain township he had made the reeve, a well known Liberal vote Conservative. And in my own riding, some years ago, the most monstrous things were done. I remember when the whole Mounted Police force was drawn up before the barracks and a telegram was read, purporting to come from Sir John Macdonald, telling them if they would vote for the Conservative party they would get scrip and medals. And yet the hon. gentleman accused the Liberals of election frauds.

Mr. HUGHES. I desire to ask, Sir, if the Minister made the statement, in answer to an interruption I made, that I knew that his statement was true, and that that was the reason of my interruption?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not quite understand the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Hughes's) question.

Mr. HUGHES. When the Minister was addressing the House, I rose to draw attention to the fact that, in the election trials after the elections of 1891, there were two Liberals unseated for one Conservative. That was in response to a statement by the hon. Minister that bands of pluggers had gone from riding to riding in the province of Ontario in the interest of the Conservatives. And I am told that the Minister made the remark that I knew that it was true and that was why I interrupted him. I ask if that was the hon. Minister's statement?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It was.

Mr. HUGHES. Then, all I have to say is that the Minister of the Interior has stated a deliberate falsehood to this House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CHAIRMAN (Mr. Campbell). I do not think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes) is within parliamentary rules in using such language as that.

Mr. DAVIS.

Mr. HUGHES. I demand that the Minister withdraw that statement. I will take that from no Minister or anybody else.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. I leave it to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes) and to hon. members if such language as used by the hon. gentleman is at all permissible.

Mr. MONTAGUE. No doubt the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Hughes's) expression is a strong one—

Mr. TALBOT. Let him withdraw it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Talbot) has no right to interrupt a gentleman in this House. His interruptions are quite out of keeping with the spirit of the House and should not be permitted. The member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) has made a strong statement, but I think that the statement of the hon. Minister of the Interior is quite as unparliamentary. His statement is that fraud was being perpetrated, and that the hon. member for North Victoria knew of it, and that that is why the hon. gentleman took a certain position.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If exception were to be taken, I think my hon. friend (Mr. Montague) has hardly stated fairly the position of the hon. Minister of the Interior. Exception not having been taken at the time, there is no point of order with regard to what the hon. Minister of the Interior said. But surely the hon. member for North Victoria is not going to hesitate to withdraw the unhappy word he used, which he knows is not within a thousand miles of being in accordance with parliamentary rules.

Mr. WALLACE. I would call the attention of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) to the fact that if the hon. member for North Victoria did not call attention at once to what the Minister of the Interior said, it was because he did not hear it. But the Minister of the Interior has this moment stated to the House that he did make such a statement.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The question is as to what I said about the interruption.

Mr. WALLACE. That is what I am talking about. The hon. Minister of the Interior said that seats were stolen and that a band of pluggers went from one constituency to another in the interest of the Conservative party. The hon. member for North Victoria interrupted him, and the Minister said that the hon. member knew it was true and that was why he interrupted him. He admits now that he did make that statement, but it was not heard at the time by the member for North Victoria.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The statement I made was that it was no—torious that a band of pluggers went from one constituency to another in the interest of the Conservative party, and that it was openly charged in the press, and I am satisfied it was true, and that hon. gentlemen opposite knew it to be true. As to this particular statement I made with regard to the member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes), he interrupted me when I was making it; and I thought it was a fair inference, knowing him to be an experienced parliamentarian, that he did it for the purpose of turning my attention to something else. If the hon. gentleman had asked me to withdraw the statement I would have done so, but he has not asked me to withdraw it. He asks me now if I made the statement. I did make the statement. But the hon. gentleman has put himself out of court. What I said, I said it in answer to his interruption, and if he had asked me at the time to withdraw, the chances are that I would have withdrawn it.

Mr. HUGHES. I did not hear the statement of the hon. gentleman at the time.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Then the hon. gentleman should have asked me to withdraw it

Mr. HUGHES. I did not hear you; you did not speak loud enough.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman should have asked if I made that statement. If he had objected to it then, he should have asked me to withdraw it, but he did not do it.

Mr. HUGHES. I withdraw the word falsehood, and I state that any man who says that I knew or was a party to any plugging—

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I did not say he was a party to it at all.

Mr. HUGHES. What did the Minister say?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I withdraw my statement with regard to my hon. friend. I had no idea of charging that he was guilty of fraud.

Mr. FEATHERSTON. The hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) has thrown out a challenge that no person can find that they did anything wrong in the elections of 1891 and 1892. Now, I will refer to a meeting he addressed in the county of Peel at Springfield. I was a candidate in the by-election in 1892, as my election in 1891 was protested. After five days' trial they found one case on which we abandoned the seat. I believe I could have got out of it all right, but the other party was a little afraid their candidate might be disqualified, and they made an offer to pay all the costs, and I would rather pay the expenses of another election than take the risk of paying all the costs of that trial. The member for West York was at a meeting in Springfield, and he was painting me as black as a crow, as being one of the most corrupt men that ever ran in Peel. One of their own supporters, a respectable man, I suppose, got up and said: "Gentlemen, I am no hypocrite. I do not believe in one party preaching that they are so pure and so good, when I know myself that they are just as black as Featherston is, and ten times blacker." Well, they tried to stop that man from speaking and from saying what he wanted to, but they could not. They went back to the hotel and quarrelled with him, and the result was that that man supported me in the election, and admitted that he had paid $5 to the fund to have me unseated. That man got some of his friends of the Conservative party to go with him, and the result was that I had gained 20 votes in that polling subdivision in that election. Now, the hon. member for North Victoria asked the question: How many Grits and how many Conservatives were unseated in 1892? Well, I know that he had no chance to be unseated. He was protested, and he got frightened, and he wanted to get a pair with the member for the county of Peel.

Mr. HUGHES. Did the hon. gentleman say that I wanted to pair with him in 1892?

Mr. FEATHERSTON. Yes, Sir. He was a little premature, as his friends let him out of the trouble by substituting a man of straw who accepted service instead of Mr. Hughes. The hon. member himself was not served at all. Some weeks afterwards when he was called into court, he put in a defence that he had never been served. That is how he was saved from being unseated in 1892. Now, I will tell you another story. There was a by-election in the county of Pontiac, in 1892, and all the Conservative forces from Toronto were there. They stopped at the hotel where I did, and I saw what was going on. There was one little fellow there they called little Johnnie, as I learned afterwards. I spotted him, because I thought he was doing a pretty good business for the party. I met that young man in Toronto in 1896. He looked at me and thought he knew me. He said to me: "I think I have seen you before." I said: "Do you remember the big fight we had in Pontiac in the by-election of 1892?" He took me for a Tory, of course, then. He told me all about the election in Pontiac. I said: "You played a good part in Halton, didn't you?" He said: "Yes," and he told me all about how he went to Halton, and of the sharp practices that he had committed there fixing up the voters. Well, Sir, this little fellow was appointed by the late Government in the custom-house at Toronto. I do not think he should be there any longer.

Mr. HUGHES. I regret that I have to state in answer to the hon. gentleman from Peel (Mr. Featherston) that he has made a statement which, if he had made it outside, I should call a deliberate lie; inside the House I call it an untruth. What occurred in 1892 was this: He was elected and protested. He came to me and proposed to saw-off, and I refused to do it; I got Mr. Archer Miller to saw-off with the hon. gentleman, but I refused to do it for myself. I knew where I stood. I knew if I was unseated I could carry the riding again hands down, and I declined the offer. The hon. gentleman came to me and hung round me to saw-off with him. More than that, he actually proposed that we should hide round this House and dodge the men who were serving us; and for more than a week I was the only one of half a dozen gentlemen, who walked out freely and down into the city to get my dinner, while that hon. gentleman, Sir, was dodging around the House. He came to me and made a proposition and I repudiated it; I would have nothing to do with it; and he must remember that I went to Mr. Archer Miller, of Prince Edward County, and arranged a saw-off between the two of them.

Mr. FEATHERSTON. I remember what occurred; I was sitting on that side of the House. It happened on that side of the House. I never spoke with him anywhere else that I remember. He has made the case all the worse, as I was served before that time. I was in the hotel when I was served. I walked to the dining room door and accepted service like a man.

Mr. HENDERSON. I regret one of the statements that the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Featherston) has made, because I respect that gentleman very highly. He represents a county adjoining my own, but as he made a reference to a town in my county, and intended to cast a reflection upon me, I simply make the statement that I am now making. The hon. gentleman got up and told how he deliberately misrepresented himself as being another man in order to deceive the person he was talking with, and then he comes here and asks us to absolutely believe what he is saying now.

Mr. FEATHERSTON. I got the information all right.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question, question.

Mr. CLANCY. I do not propose to detain the House more than two or three minutes.

An hon. MEMBER. Time him.

Mr. CLANCY. I see some hon. gentlemen sitting under the gallery who, I think, do not pay much attention to what goes on in Ontario. I would not like to form the standard of public morals upon what I observe as being their conduct this evening, and if the hon. gentlemen will do themselves the justice that they are not disposed to do me, they will keep silent for a moment. I think it would be a meaningless thing to pretend to strike out the vote for Mr. Preston if we had no substantial reasons for it. What are the facts?

Mr. HEYD. They have been stated a dozen times.

Mr. CLANCY. If my hon. friend (Mr. Heyd) has a good case he can afford to listen, but if he has a bad one, he can afford to interrupt. What are the facts of the case? They are that Mr. Preston has been associated with a class of men who are well-known from one end of the province of Ontario to the other to be utterly characterless. These men are known from one end of the country to the other, and we must endeavour to realize the effect it will have upon the English people and the estimation that will be placed upon Preston and the Government that retains him under such circumstances. If the Government are not disposed to dismiss Preston summarily—

Mr. LANDERKIN. Your friends are not anxious to hear you.

Mr. CLANCY. It seems not. If the Government are not disposed to dismiss Preston summarily, would it not be a proper thing to suspend him until it was made perfectly clear that the charges were untrue and unfounded? Preston has been given a high position in England. He has been put over all the other men, and he occupies a position that demands that he should be free from charges of misconduct. It is not a matter of $3,000, it is a matter of seeking to ensure the greatest usefulness of this officer of the Government, who is placed over other officers in England that is the material concern of Canada. There is not an hon. gentleman who doubts that Preston knew these men, or that he has trained them because he was associated with them in all these contests. They are a class of men who are utterly without character, men who are ready to perjure themselves when necessary, to plug and to misrepresent, and there is not a Liberal, who is not decent enough, to repudiate a list made up of Cap Sullivan, Tom Lewis, Jack O'Gorman, Bill Mayloy, Dan Ferguson and Duncan Bole. I ask if hon. gentlemen would associate themselves with a single act of these men. Preston was associated with these men, and these men have been guilty of wrong-doing. What is the inference to be drawn from that? Is it not that Preston was aware of it? I do think that the credit of Canada demands—

Mr. LANDERKIN. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) state what these people are guilty of?

Mr. CLANCY. I am going to ask my hon. friend to be reasonable. What was the case of Cap Sullivan? Does he not know that he was reported by the judges for misconduct in the South Ontario election? Is it not known to the hon. gentleman that these men are without character?

Mr. LANDERKIN. What had they done?

Mr. CLANCY. Will the hon. gentleman say that these are reputable citizens ?

Mr. LANDERKIN. I do not know them at all.

Mr. CLANCY. He says that—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Campbell). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) must address the Chair.

Mr. CLANCY. I have never refused to address the Chair. I have not been guilty of any misconduct that I know of. I have addressed the Chair in every instance, and I think my hon. friend (Mr. Campbell) is just a little more anxious about me than he is about others, and I warn him—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. CLANCY. I say I have not been guilty of any infraction because I defy the Chairman, or any one else, to say that I ever addressed an hon. gentleman in the first person.

The CHAIRMAN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) was wrong in cross-firing across the floor of the House with the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin), and I called his attention to the fact that it is necessary to address the Chair.

Mr. CLANCY. I tell the hon. gentleman that it was to the Chair that I addressed myself, and he has no right to tell me to address the Chair when I am doing so. An hon. member surely has a right to discuss a question with another hon. member through the Chair just as he pleases, so long as he is not guilty of any infraction of the rules. I am just as anxious as any hon. gentleman to maintain the rules.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The Chairman is quite wrong in saying that the hon. member for Bothwell was carrying on a conversation across the House. The hon. member for Bothwell addressed himself to the Chairman. The hon. member for Bothwell said : " Will the hon. gentleman do so-and-so." That is the third person, and that is the rule of the Speaker. I am sorry to say that if any person was breaking the rule it was the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin), who directly addressed himself to the hon. member for Bothwell.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I was only asking the hon. member for Bothwell a question, and he did not deem it out of the way that I should do so, whether he violated the rule in answering it I do not know. I did not know that I violated the rule because I seldom ever do it.

Mr. CLANCY. I have no complaint to make against the hon. member for South Grey. What I was complaining of was that I was called to order when I was not disorderly at all. The answer that the hon. member for South Grey gave me to the question that I put to him, was that he did not know these men and I would venture to say that that is the answer that would come generally from that side of the House. I thought that the hon. gentleman would not know the persons on the list I have mentioned here to-night.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Would the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question. Does he know the fourteen persons who were disqualified in South Ontario ?

Mr. CLANCY. I do not know that there were fourteen persons disqualified. I have heard that certain men were reported by the judges for misconduct. I can tell the hon. gentleman that I have no knowledge, personally, of these persons, as he knows very well.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Only Cap Sullivan ?

Mr. CLANCY. Cap Sullivan is a notorious character.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Cap Sullivan is an Irishman.

Mr. CLANCY. Everybody knows Cap Sullivan in this country.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I do not like to hear them cried down without trial.

Mr. CLANCY. He is so notorious that every person knows of him in every Ontario constituency. He is a gentleman with so unsavoury a reputation that hon. gentlemen opposite do not care to know him. I say that Mr. Preston is known to have associated with disreputable men in this country, and Mr. Preston must take the consequence of his associations with him. If the Liberal Government of to-day defends Mr. Preston, they must defend Cap Sullivan and his associates. Every right-thinking person in Canada to-day admits that Mr. Preston should be suspended ; but, notwithstanding that he is discredited in this country as a man of no character and no prestige, he is retained at the head of the immigration service in Great Britain. The Minister of the Interior was not ashamed to tell us to-night that there were not enough Tories in Canada to bring about Preston's dismissal.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Without evidence.

Mr. CLANCY. The Minister of Finance now recognizes the gravity of the statement, and tries to lessen its effect.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Was not the whole tenor of the statement of the Minister of the Interior, not that the man should not be dismissed, but that he should not be dismissed without evidence ?

Mr. CLANCY. I will answer my hon. friend perfectly frankly. The hon. Minister said that he had been belaboured and hounded by the Tory press and by the Tory party for certain acts of his own, and that it was not true he committed these acts. He gave examples of his own to show they were not true, but he went still further, and said that, for that reason, there were not Tories enough in Canada to bring about the dismissal of Mr. Preston.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I stated quite distinctly that there were not Tories enough in the Dominion to bring about the dismissal of Mr. Preston without any evidence of impropriety against him.

Mr. HUGHES. That was an afterthought.

Mr. CLANCY. The Minister (Mr. Sifton) now recoils from his rashness in making that statement, but I venture to say that "Hansard" will show to-morrow that without any qualification and after considerable discussion, the Minister made the statement I have attributed to him.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The sentence was used at the close of the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Sifton's) speech. There was applause from this side of the House, and perhaps my hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) failed to hear the closing words.

An hon. MEMBER. Oh.

Mr. HEYD. I am as anxious as all of you that this discussion should close, and I am exceedingly glad that it is two o'clock in the morning, and that the newspaper reporters have got their newspapers full, so that what has taken place within the last two or three hours will not appear in the press to-morrow, because it just strikes me that my hon. friends opposite have been trying to amuse themselves to-night. Assuming that the charges against Mr. Preston are true, which I, for one, am not prepared to admit; but, assuming that Mr. Preston is just as bad as he is represented to be, then the only consistent course for our friends on the other side is to move an amendment that his salary be increased to $6,000.

Mr. DAVIN. Clever.

Mr. HEYD. It is not clever, but it would be consistent on your side. The feeling that would pervade the breast of an ordinary man at witnessing the protests of purity from the other side of the House, is enough to take away his breath. For a party who have for twenty years existed owing to the corruption of the constituencies of this country, to get up here to-night, and plead purity, and to condemn poor Preston and Cap Sullivan, when they have been elected for the last twenty years by the very practices these men have been accused of—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Poor Preston.

Other hon. MEMBERS. Poor fellow.

Mr. HEYD. Not poor Preston, but poor representatives of that purist party that have been for twenty-five years corrupting this country, and now find fault because they think the country is at last corrupt. Go back to the time of the Pacific scandal.

Mr. CLANCY.

Mr. BENNETT. Go back to the Yukon.

Mr. HEYD. Why was that $500,000 paid by Sir Hugh Allan, and what was done with that $500,000, and what has been done ever since with the contributions from the Red Parlour, in Toronto? Corruption was rampant in this country for the last twenty years at the instigation of the late Conservative Government, and now these gentlemen opposite get up here, and profess to be pure and holy, and condemn Cap Sullivan and Mr. Preston.

Mr. WALLACE. Poor Preston.

Mr. HEYD. Let us go to Winnipeg; let us go to London; let us go to Brantford, if you like—

Mr. CLANCY. What became of the man who was arrested in your constituency?

Mr. HEYD. Why, Mr. Chairman, I sit here to-night, the representative of Brant because of Tory corruption. If the Conservative party had not been corrupt, Mr. Pater-son would have been in the position I now occupy. But because Conservative heelers just did what Mr. Preston is accused of doing, the late representative for South Brant, Mr. Henry, was unseated, and I happen to be elected. There is one of the best evidences of the corruption that existed in 1896.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. HEYD. You appear to smile.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. They want to know what about the man arrested in your constituency.

Mr. HEYD. I do not know anything about the man arrested, but I know my late Conservative opponent was unseated because of corruption. I do not know that there was any corruption in my election. I do not believe there was. It was not proven in the courts, at any rate, and we have a right to assume that, unless it is proven in the courts the election was free from corruption. It strikes me as peculiar that these gentlemen opposite do not respect the British principle of fair play, but they are ready to assume that every Liberal is guilty, and on mere hearsay to brand a man as a scoundrel, in order to advance their own political ends. That is not fair-play. While I am not a sympathiser with the methods which Mr. Preston has been charged with pursuing, I say that until Mr. Preston is proved to be guilty, we have the right to assume that he is innocent. These gentlemen opposite have no right to brand him as a scoundrel; they have no right to use the language they did in connection with him to-night, until they have some better foundation. When the Minister of the Interior says there are not enough Conservatives in this country to secure his dismissal without evidence, he announced a doctrine which will be supported by Conservatives in this country, as well as by Liberals. We are told by these gentlemen opposite that there are enough honest men in this country to turn this Government out. Do our friends on the other side think that the people of Canada have become so imbecile that they are going to turn out the present Government, and put in—what? A thing that was ignominiously defeated some three years ago.

Do not hug that delusion; do not suppose that you are going to derive much satisfaction from that. It must have been a matter of surprise, I will not say of satisfaction, to see our friends hanging around the corridors during the last few days, and manifesting so much interest in the West Huron investigation. This is the first time our friends have really had a chance, if the statement is true, to pay back the Liberal party in their own coin. I trust that our friends will not regard this matter from a partisan standpoint, but will give these men who are accused the benefit of the doubt, at least, until they are convicted. Now, as our hon. friends opposite appear to be willing to come to a vote, I will not say anything further.

Mr. BEATTIE. I am not at all surprised at the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Heyd) making the remarks he has made about the gang. I happen to have been in that gentleman's constituency on the day of his election, and the gang were all there, and by half-past ten in the morning we had one of them under arrest and placed behind the bars. He was, however, granted bail by the magistrate, and he fled the country and has not been brought to justice yet. The hon. gentleman made a remark about London. If he can take any comfort out of London, he must be ignorant of the state of affairs there. We have had three election protests in London, and I will inform the hon. gentleman what they were. The first was between the Hon. John Carling and Major Walker. At the trial it was proven that Major Walker spent over $30,000 to corrupt the electors of London, and he was not only unseated but I think he was disqualified. The next protest was between Mr. Hyman and Sir John Carling, and it ended by Mr. Hyman throwing up the sponge. It was proven that people were kept in a hall, and were in such a state that they could not walk, and had to be led up to vote. The next protest was my own. My opponents made 2,750 charges against me and my friends, not one of which they proved, although the court sat over three weeks, and half the gang who were pressing the trial against me were summoned one morning to go to Brantford to answer for deeds committed in my hon. friend's election. In the case against me, I believe that in one instance a poor old man had been hired to cut a lawn, and the gentleman for whom he did the work, instead of giving him 75 cents, thought it was worth more and gave him $1.25; and it was proven that he had paid the man 50 cents too much, but it turned out that the man was a tenant of the lawyer who was pressing the charge against me, and had paid no rent for nearly a year. That was the only charge that was proven true, and if the hon. gentlemen can take any comfort out of the protests in London, he is welcome to do it.

Mr. GIBSON. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) has made a very serious charge against Captain Sullivan. I want to inform that hon. gentleman that Captain Sullivan comes of one of the best families in the Niagara Peninsula. He has a brother who is a priest at Thorold, and another brother who is a captain on the inland waters and a highly-respected man; and Captain Sullivan has the respect of the people of St. Catharines among whom he lives. I think it was very unfair for the hon. member for Bothwell to single him out and forget all the fourteen Tories who were mentioned by the judge as having been guilty of corrupt acts in the South Ontario election. Because Captain Sullivan was reported by the judge, I think it is very unfair that an attack should be made on his personal character rather than on his political character: and I think the hon. gentleman should withdraw the charge he made. Where Captain Sullivan is best known his word would be taken in a business transaction as quickly as that of any gentleman in this House. I have known Captain Sullivan for a great many years, and I believe this is the first time that he has ever been reported by a judge as having done anything wrong. I suppose it was only in the political sense that he did anything wrong. In his personal character, for honesty and integrity, he is a gentleman who would be believed in any society in the province of Ontario where he is known.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I would just like to read from "Hansard" a little extract of what took place last night, as affecting the judgment in this case of the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) and the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy).

Mr. DAVIN. Order.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It is quite in order.

Mr. DAVIN. Is the hon. gentleman going to read from a past debate?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am going to read what was said last night in reference to the dismissal of public servants.

Mr. DAVIN. That is out of order.

Mr. WALLACE. I rise to a point of order. I think the hon. gentleman knows the rules of the House. I do not wish to prevent him reading from "Hansard" the speeches that were made by the hon. member for Bothwell and myself, because I think a careful perusal of them would do him good.

Mr. COWAN. Is that the point of order ?

Mr. WALLACE. The point of order is whether an hon. member of this House can read an extract from a former debate.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I would say that last night I was asked—

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman is not discussing the point of order.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. Minister knows that a point of order has been raised.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I have accepted the point of order, and I am not proposing to read ; but last night, while the discussion was going on—

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman is still out of order.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman cannot raise the point of order without knowing what I am going to say.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman has already put himself out of order by referring to what took place last night. He is referring to a past debate, and I ask the ruling of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Campbell). The hon. Minister of Customs, I understood, was going to read from "Hansard" certain speeches which were made last night, but the point of order was immediately raised by the hon. member for West York. Before a decision was given by the Chair, the Minister of Customs ceased to continue. Therefore, I think there is no point of order now.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I quite understood that the first point of order had been disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Campbell). No, you misunderstood me. I was looking up Dr. Bourinot's work, and was not prepared to give a decision at the moment, and I supposed that the Minister of Customs was going to discuss the point of order as he had the right to do, but he did not, nor did he resume his remarks.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Quite so, he quite understood he was out of order.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. You are out of order.

Mr. MONTAGUE. No I am not.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Well, it is a wonder.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I thought the hon. Minister—

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Would it not be quite as well if the hon. gentleman should not state what he thought.

Mr. DAVIN.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I take what the hon. gentleman said.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The point of order was not taken on what I thought.

Mr. MONTAGUE. No, on what you said.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. What did I say ?

Mr. MONTAGUE. The point of order was that the hon. gentleman started to relate the circumstances of the last night's debate.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I did not. I was about to make another statement with reference to what I was asked to do to-day, namely, to bring down certain papers, even though the items were disposed of, and I was about to say that I had the papers in my desk—some of them. I was blamed because of my action in certain cases. I cannot refer to what the hon. member for Bothwell and the hon. member for West York said, but if the hon. gentleman had been here, he would have heard that the hon. member for West York took the ground that no officer should be dismissed without an investigation no matter how low he might be.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That being the case, I shall be pleased to lay the papers on the Table and show that there was an investigation.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am quite prepared to leave to the hon. gentleman's colleagues to decide whether he is justified in declaring, in his angry and loud voice, that I stated what was not correct. I have been in this House about twelve years, and never yet knew a Minister who persisted in putting and keeping himself out of order to such an extent as the Minister of Customs has done to-night. He openly, defiantly and intentionally continued his speech although he knew and every one of his colleagues knew that he was out of order. Instead of reading the statement, which this House knew to be out of order, he took another way about it to accomplish the same purpose, by making the statement instead of reading it as made in "Hansard."

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I have not made a statement at all.

Mr. MONTAGUE. He misled the House by pretending that he rose to show that the point of order was not correct, when he had no intention of referring to it, but wished to touch upon another question. That is a quibble, Sir, of which any Minister of the Crown should not be guilty in this House. His colleagues, the hon. Minister of Finance, knew he was out of order. There is not one of his colleagues who will say he is attempting to evade the rules of the House when making that statement, and I say that the most insolent manner in which he raised his voice and began to shout to me, when I had decently and fairly raised the point of order, was unworthy a Minister of the Crown.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). I do not propose to be lectured by the hon. member for Haldimand. I have had a seat in this House before him and understand the rules quite as well. His position in this House does not authorize him to assume the tone of lecturing me in reference to these matters. If I were out of order, he had the opportunity of calling your attention, Mr. Chairman, to the point.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I tried to but the hon. gentleman's voice drowned mine.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman sat down, and when I rose, he did not ask you, Mr. Chairman, to rule on the point of order at all.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I did.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. You did not. He resumed his seat without asking for a ruling as to whether I was out of order or not. I simply stated to the hon. member for Bothwell and the hon. member for East Simcoe that with reference to these papers which they had asked me to produce some time ago, and which I had not with me last night, that I had these papers now. Fault had been found with me because, without sufficient investigation, I had dismissed a public servant, and I have here the record of the investigation made by the stipendiary magistrate at Brantford who investigated in the one case, and the report of the Inspector of Customs in the case mentioned by the hon. member for Bothwell, and I said I would lay them on the Table. Will the hon. gentleman tell me where I was out of order. He says that the hon. Minister of Finance knew I was out of order, but I tell him that the Minister of Finance has not said so or any other gentleman, and the Chairman of the committee has not. If the Chairman of the committee thought I was out of order, then the Chair would have ruled. The hon. member for Haldimand is not the ruler of this House.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman is quite in error. I did ask the Chairman to rule and every hon. gentleman here knows I did.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The Chairman had ruled on the first question raised but not on the second point.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The Chairman never ruled at all. He had said that he never did.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. If he did not, it is because I yielded to the point and did not continue to read the extract I was about to read.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Then the hon. gentleman was again violating the rule by referring to a past debate, and I asked the Chairman explicitly a number of times to rule but the hon. gentleman would not cease talking.

Mr. CLANCY. I think the Minister of Customs will agree with me that when he rose to make a statement what he desired to say had reference to what appeared to him the inconsistency on my part and on the part of other hon. gentlemen in demanding the dismissal of Mr. Preston without an investigation, while finding fault with the Government for dismissing other officials without an investigation. That is the impression that what he said left upon my mind. In that case—and I do not think the hon. gentleman will deny that I have inferred correctly what he wished to say—he was clearly out of order. Now, just a word with regard to Capt. Sullivan. My hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Gibson) thinks I should apologize, because, as he says, this was an election matter. But before he demands an apology of me, I would ask him if he condones the wrong done by this man because it was an election matter. I say that Capt. Sullivan is notorious from one end of this province to the other for having gone into constituency after constituency for the purpose of bribing and other misconduct. I have no doubt his connections may be respectable. I can only say that he has disgraced his respectable relatives. Does the hon. member (Mr. Gibson) uphold him for his conduct because it is done in the interest of a political party? That seems a very strange code of morals. I have no charge against Capt. Sullivan except that he has been guilty of wrong-doing in connection with the elections. I regret to hear that he is of respectable family. He has not added anything to the respectability of his family.

Mr. GIBSON. What I wanted to point out was that the hon. gentleman could remember the name of Capt. Sullivan, but he could not remember the names of the Conservatives. There was no evidence that Capt. Sullivan was there.

Amendment (Mr. Bennett) negatived—yeas 15, nays 57.

Mr. WILSON. Will the hon. Minister tell me how many agencies there are in Great Britain and Ireland and how many on the continent of Europe?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. In Great Britain there is, first, the High Commissioner's office, Mr. Devlin's office in Dublin, Mr. O'Kelly's office in Londonderry, Mr. Griffiths' office in Wales, the Liverpool office, the Glasgow office, and the agency in Forfarshire, where Mr. Duncan is the agent. On the continent there are three agencies—that is, seven in Great Britain and Ireland and three on the continent.

Mr. CLARKE. On page 176 of the annual report of the Department of the Interior there is a tabulated statement showing “the number of male and female adults, and the sexes of children and infants of each nationality arrived in 1898.” It gives the total Irish as 709, of whom there were male adults 375, female adults 241, male children 39, female children 40, and infants 14. I would like to know how that classification is made. Were these immigrants who are reported to have sailed from Irish ports sent out by the officers of the department in Ireland, or were they persons of Irish extraction who sailed from any port of the British Isles?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The total number that is given is the total number of persons coming from Ireland, but not necessarily directly from Ireland. A considerable number of them come by way of Liverpool.

Mr. CLARKE. As a matter of fact, some of these may be sent out as the results of the agents in England or in Scotland.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think so. There is possibly some discrepancy. But I think the records show with reasonable accuracy the number of immigrants who come from Ireland.

Mr. CLARKE. I draw the attention of the Minister to the fact that steamers leaving Liverpool for Canada call either at Queenstown or Londonderry. I wanted to get information whether these 709 who are reputed to have left Ireland, were immigrants who were sent out as the results of the efforts of the salaried agents in Ireland.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am bound to say that as the records are kept, it is not possible to say positively that that is the case.

Mr. CLARKE. I would ask the Minister if, since Mr. Preston has been appointed superintendent of agencies, he has made a journey to Finland and entered into communication with the Finlanders for the purpose of getting them to immigrate to Canada.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes. I do not think he was actually in Finland, because, as the hon. gentleman is aware, the Russian laws condemn such agents to jail. But Mr. Preston visited Copenhagen, I think, where he met parties from Finland and discussed the matter with them there. That is my impression, that was the idea in the first place.

Mr. CLARKE. Has he made any report about his mission to try and secure these Finlanders?

Mr. SIFTON.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. Would the Minister bring down the correspondence when the supplementaries are being discussed?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I will bring down all the correspondence.

Mr. WILSON. I think the Minister has made a mistake about the number of agencies in Scotland. I think there are 4. By turning to pages H—15 and 16, he will find that the agencies ought to be 9 instead of 7.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There were 4 agents, one of them, Mr. Stewart, died not long ago in Inverness, and no one has been appointed in his place. The extra one the hon. gentleman is referring to, is the one at Dumfries. I had considered him as attached to the Glasgow office. He works under the direction of Mr. Murray.

Mr. HUGHES. The Minister of the Interior gave only 2 from Ireland. I understood there were 3 in Ireland.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is an officer at Londonderry, there are 2 in Dublin, Mr. Devlin and Mr. Webster, his clerk. Mr. Webster gets $900, Mr. Devlin gets $2,000, and the Londonderry agent gets $1,300.

Mr. CLARKE. I think the Minister has given us information as to the number of agencies in the United States.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I gave them this afternoon. I did not read all the names of the commissioners, there are about 100 of them.

Mr. CLARKE. I wanted to get the number of agencies.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman will find in the “Hansard” the names of all the salaried agents which I read this afternoon. I did not read the names of those who are acting on commission.

Mr. WALLACE. I would like to call the attention of the committee to some matters about these agencies in the old country where enormous amounts of money are spent, and where scarcely any results are visible. It has not been demonstrated that the two Irish agencies have been the cause of a single settler coming to this country. Now take the case at Liverpool, A. F. Jury is the agent there. The expenses of the agency will alone amount to more than $8,000. Mr. Jury himself is not qualified by experience or by education to perform the duties which we are told he does perform there. We asked the question: What did Mr. Jury do? And we are told that he went out lecturing. How many places has he gone to? There is a list of thirteen places that he has gone to during the year.

Surely that is not the whole business of Mr. Jury if he has attended thirteen fairs during the year. But I can say Mr. Jury is utterly unsuited to bring immigrants to this country. We are told that the business of the immigration department is not to bring mechanics here, but farmers. The man therefore who seeks farmers should have some knowledge of farming, but Mr. Jury has always lived in the city, he has no knowledge, theoretical or otherwise, of farming, and does not pretend to have. When he was in this country he was opposed to immigration, particularly of mechanics, of whom he said the Canadian cities were overcrowded. Now, this man is sent to the old country, he is put at the head of the agency there, which costs $8,000. He makes a report to the High Commissioner and this is what he says :

My work during the past year has consisted in attending agricultural shows and lecturing.

Just imagine Alfred Jury lecturing before an intelligent audience. Why, he cannot speak a sentence of good English. He is utterly unfitted by his training, and he has the cheek of a canal horse, going to public gatherings and thrusting himself in various ways on audiences of every description. So far as any suitable or capable training is concerned, he has never had any, and I do not think, at his time of life, he will ever acquire the qualifications for that position. He tells us of meetings that he attended :

My work during the past year has consisted in attending agricultural shows, lecturing, visiting steamship agents, interviewing intending emigrants at their homes and at the office, watching Canadian affairs as reported by the Canadian press, in order to keep myself abreast of the times as to the development taking place there.

Then he says :

Last July I received several stalks of corn, which I exhibited at all the shows that took place after its arrival ; it was also exhibited by Mr. Devlin at the Dublin show, and everywhere created a great amount of interest.

All through his report he complains that he has not received samples, that he has not proper literature, and that he has not proper illustrations in order to induce immigrants to come here. He does not do anything because he had only a few stalks of corn. None of the illustrations were of a suitable description :

If plentiful supplies of the right quality were given to me, I could arrange with the steamship agents of the district after each show to put specimens in their windows, and the more or less permanent exhibitions thus formed would prove of great advertising value.

I should like to say a word about our literature and posters. In some respects the former is too meagre in detail ; the latter are too flimsy and frail to be of use for any length of time. In regard to the literature, I would respectfully suggest that in all pamphlets dealing with settlement in Manitoba, the North-west Territories and British Columbia, more detailed information be given in reference to the commencement of farming operations by the settler ; for instance, in what time and at what cost he can get a house built, and the kind it would be when finished.

This gentleman went on a week's trip across the continent before he went over there. He has no practical knowledge of life on the prairies or in the back woods. He has been a resident of Toronto from the time he first struck Canada until he went on this mission, and he was working in a tailor shop. He has no knowledge of the requirements of settlement outside of the mechanic class, and he has always denounced the importation of mechanics into this country, so that he could not consistently advise mechanics to come here.

With reference to the posters or show bills that have been sent here with the brass strips along the top and bottom, the paper is so relatively weak, compared with the metal, that in many cases they are partly destroyed before reaching their destination, and when hung up, a very slight touch will tear them and they are cast away as unsightly.

In regard to emigration, I do not think there will be any great movement during the ensuing year, or while the present prosperity in this country lasts, but the present agents in the United Kingdom have the advantage of their predecessors in so far as they have a prosperous Canada to send emigrants to.

None coming, either, according to this account :

The ordinary tenant farmer thinks too much of his home and clings too closely to his past to be easily moved to another country, and the agricultural labourer and the agricultural domestic are too poor to pay their own passage, so that under present circumstances a large emigration of these classes cannot be looked for, though no effort will be spared to get them if they can be got.

The statement of this commissioner shows that he has not got supplies that would give him an opportunity of exhibiting the country in its right light, that he has not received any encouragement to go on promoting emigration from the old country, but he and his staff have cost $8,091. He has an office and a staff of officers, and there is a charge for hiring a lantern ; I suppose, for showing the pictures on the wall. He has been attending shows at these thirteen places I have mentioned, and the results we have from his work are of a very unsatisfactory character. I think we should curtail expenditures that are only, apparently, for the purpose of giving employment to needy individuals and clamorous politicians, because it could not be pretended by any person who knows him, that Mr. Alfred Jury would be a capable immigration agent. For the last twenty years, during which he has been in Canada, he has been running down this country, and he now undertakes to praise it up, and set forth its advantages to the intending settler. In the first place, he does not know about the country. He has spent no time in the agricultural districts ; in fact, he has spent no time outside of Toronto. He has not been through the Northwest Territories, except on a hurried trip, after he received his appointment, and then only along the line of railway. I think the expenditure is quite unjustifiable. We had a statement here this afternoon from the hon. Minister of the Interior, in which he eulogized the excellent work being done by the Rev. Mr. Burrows in bringing settlers into the Rainy River district. The hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) told us that he had been through that country, that the stories that had been told us by the hon. Minister of the Interior were simply fables, that there was no settlement made that was satisfactory, that those Mr. Burrows had brought in from the United States had gone away, and that the whole country recognized his attempts to settle that part of the country had resulted in a total failure. Under the circumstances, the hon. Minister may be deluded into the idea, and he may try to delude others, that these results are being achieved under his excellent management, but so far as we know, and so far as accurate information goes, we are not making the progress in that direction that, having regard to the enormous expenditures and to the increased expenditures that we are asked to sanction, we should make.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). I understood the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) to say that his objection to Mr. Jury was his lack of education and his lack of being able to address himself acceptably to an audience. Then he proceeded to read an extract from Mr. Jury's report, and, as he read that, I failed to find in it any evidence of lack of education or the proper use of English.

Mr. WALLACE. I never accused Mr. Jury of writing that report.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman read it as Mr. Jury's report, and if he did not wish it to be understood as Mr. Jury's report, then he attempted to mislead the House.

Mr. WALLACE. Do not be too fast. I never accused Mr. Jury of writing that.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I do not see any lack of ability in that report. There may be a difference of opinion with regard to the views Mr. Jury may have advocated, but let me ask, does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) think he could make any more creditable appearance on the public platform speaking on public questions, than Mr. Jury can?

Mr. WALLACE. I am not comparing myself with Mr. Jury. I will compare myself with the Minister (Mr. Paterson), and say I can do as well as he can. The Minister can compare himself with Mr. Jury if he wishes.

Mr. WALLACE.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. But the hon. gentleman has been offering a criticism, and I suggest that Mr. Jury can discuss public questions quite as intelligently and in as good English and with as much acceptance as the hon. gentleman himself. The hon. gentleman spoke about Mr. Jury being always a resident of the city of Toronto; but I do not think that the member for the city (Mr. Clarke) would admit that that has dwarfed his intellect in any way.

Mr. CLARKE. I think it would be a great advantage, but at the same time I must say that farming in the city is not very good just now.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. And yet the hon. gentleman will attempt to discuss, and discuss intelligently, farming subjects in this House. I believe that Mr. Jury, on the public platform, can present a case in a very pleasant, a very intelligent and a very acceptable manner. When I said that Mr. Jury could express himself in as good English and in as able a manner as the hon. member for West York himself, I did not mean that as any reflection on the hon. gentleman, because I believe that Mr. Jury can do that very well indeed, and I understand that he was always regarded as a very effective and a very pleasing speaker.

Mr. MONTAGUE. As members of the Government seem anxious to continue the discussion of this item, it is just as well for us to take all the time we want. I was anxious the item should pass quite a while ago, but hon. gentlemen opposite were bound to bring up matters entirely irrelevant, and so we may continue the debate. I have been long enough in the House to remember that when Mr. Daly was Minister of the Interior and doing his best to get good men for immigration work, hon. gentlemen opposite made a pitched battle always to show that the money of Canada was being wasted in connection with immigration work, and one of their chief charges was that political heelers were being employed. Never in the history of the department were so pronounced politicians placed in charge of that work as has been the case under the present Minister. I do not object to men being selected because of party services, but they certainly should be qualified to fill their places and it should be watched as to whether they are doing their work or depending upon past political work for maintenance in their positions. As for Mr. Jury, I am here to say that I think if Canada had been raked over from Halifax to Vancouver with a fine-tooth comb, and the man selected that was least fitted among those who might aspire to the position of immigration agent at Liverpool, that man would be Mr. Alfred Jury. Mr. Jury was a man who had attacked Canada in many ways. He was well known as a fault-finder with the condition of affairs in Canada generally. He knew nothing in the world about Canada. He was a labour agitator, and the chief point he used to urge was that immigration should be restricted, that no mechanics should be brought into Canada. The Minister admits that now, but yet the mechanics of Great Britain are the only men that Mr. Jury has the slightest sort of qualification to talk to. He knew something about the condition of workmen in this country, and therefore he could speak with some intelligence upon that question, but he himself contended that they should not be brought to Canada. Therefore he opposed the immigration of the only class he could be supposed to influence. The only other classes are the agriculturists and the higher educated classes of Great Britain, who might have influence in sending out agriculturists to this country. As regards the higher educated classes, notwithstanding the compliments which have been paid Mr. Jury by the Minister of Customs, I am here to say that those who know Mr. Jury's manner of speech and Mr. Jury's qualifications upon the platform, intellectually or otherwise, would not think that he was the right man to appeal to the higher intellectual classes of the English public. As to the agricultural classes, Mr. Jury, before a British audience of tenant farmers or farm labourers, would be as much at sea as a hen would be in her attempt to navigate a boat. He knows nothing in the world of the requirements of Canadian agriculture. I am prepared to give the Minister of the Interior privately the name of the gentleman who told me, and who knows whereof he speaks, that Mr. Jury, as the Government agent in Liverpool, is the laughing-stock of people who know the business of the Government in that part of the country. Is there a member of this House, from Ontario or anywhere else, who knows Mr. Jury, who will say that his services are worth $2,000, or whatever his salary is, to the Dominion of Canada? The Minister of Customs has referred to his report as a cleverly written document. If there ever was an asinine report, that is one.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It is couched in good English.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Bad English is not allowed to appear in any of the report. If any bad English were written, the Queen's Printer, or the proof readers, would see that it was put into good English. The Minister of the Interior knows that that report does not display any grasp of the situation such as could be shown by a Canadian immigration agent in such an important centre as Liverpool. It is true, as the hon. gentleman states, that Mr. Jury has delivered a certain number of lectures. I want to ask him how many people he believes Mr. Jury has sent to this country.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is absolutely impossible to distinguish the persons sent by one agent or another in England. They work at large, and in the case of a man who works in Liverpool, it would be impossible to distinguish.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I venture to say that if the hon. Minister would investigate, he would find that Mr. Jury's services are of exceedingly little value to the Dominion of Canada. The office is simply a political reward for Mr. Jury, and while I do not object to him or any other man getting a political reward, I object to it being continued as a political reward; I object to a man not being required to perform services in return for his salary; and I object to a man being put in a place which he is utterly unfitted to fill. There is no question that Mr. Jury is unfitted for his position. He was simply put there because he had been of service to the Liberal party in Ontario as a labour agitator, and had tried to mislead the labouring men of that province, as he did many times in connection with election campaigns; and in return for that service for the Liberal party, he is given one of the principal appointments in the United Kingdom, a place which he is utterly unfitted to fill, and from which he should be removed.

Mr. HUGHES. I wish to ask the Minister of the Interior if he has taken any steps in order to induce honourably discharged British soldiers to settle in Canada.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No.

Mr. HUGHES. I know there is a great trouble in the old country to get proper situations for men who have served with the colours for ten or twelve years; and a great many of these men, not finding useful occupations, drift into other armies. It is well-known that in the recent war between the United States and Spain a large number of discharged British soldiers were in the American ranks. Those men would much rather, I am satisfied, settle in Canada than in the United States, and I would suggest to the hon. Minister that he might, through the High Commissioner's Office, in London, take up this matter with a view of having these honourably discharged soldiers brought out and placed on farms in this country. I am satisfied that one such man would be worth a great deal more than the classes that are being brought into the country.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think the suggestion of the hon. gentleman is a good one. I am bound to say it had not occurred to me before, and I think it had not been suggested; but I will endeavour to see what can be done in that direction.

Mr. CLARKE. Might I ask the hon. Minister if Mr. Jury devotes a portion of his time to endeavouring to induce mechanics to come from the old country to Canada, or if his efforts are directed entirely to bringing out agriculturists.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr Jury, like all other agents in Great Britain and Ireland, has express instructions not to send out mechanics or labouring men.

Mr. CLARKE. I would draw the attention of the Minister to the second paragraph of Mr. Jury's report, which states :

The conditions of trade in the north of England during 1898 have been booming in most branches, and have, consequently, been unfavourable to a large emigration ; but I have not lost an opportunity nor spared an effort to bring the claims and the advantages of Canada as a field for emigration or trade before the people of this part of England.

I take it that it is largely the manufacturing centres he refers to.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman is putting altogether too technical a construction upon the report. The instructions are to work among the agricultural population alone. If the hon. gentleman looks at the third paragraph, he will see that the work is among the agricultural population.

Mr. CLARKE. This paragraph seems to me to be conclusive that Mr. Jury has been devoting special attention to induce people engaged in manufacturing to come to Canada. I notice that there is an increase of $100,000 in the appropriation for Immigration for this year. May I ask the Minister if he has received any complaints or remonstrances from any trade and labour organizations or trades' councils in the cities of the Dominion respecting this large sum ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have no correspondence of the kind the hon. gentleman refers to that I can remember at present. I have no recollection of receiving any such correspondence. It may be possible that a letter has come to the department and not been brought to my attention, but I do not think so. A letter of that kind would, in all probability, have been brought to my attention immediately.

Mr. WALLACE. With regard to the clause to which the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) called attention, Mr. Jury says :

The conditions of trade in the north of England during 1898 have been booming in most branches, and have, consequently, been unfavourable to a large emigration ; but I have not lost an opportunity nor spared an effort to bring the claims and the advantages of Canada as a field for emigration or trade before the people of this part of England.

Mr. Jury speaks here of the conditions of trade being unfavourable to a large immigration. If this paragraph means anything, it means that this man who, in this country, was denouncing any Government that would attempt to bring in mechanics to compete with our own, who, he claims, are too numerous already, is now endeavouring to bring that very same class into this country.

Mr. CLARKE.

Mr. CLARKE. And he is apologizing for his failure because of the briskness of trade in England.

Mr. WALLACE. He admits that he has failed in the work he has undertaken. He says further :

I should like to say a word about our literature and posters. In some respects the former is too meagre in detail ; the latter are too flimsy and frail to be of use for any length of time. In regard to the literature, I would respectfully suggest that in all pamphlets dealing with settlement in Manitoba, the North-west Territories and British Columbia, more detailed information be given in reference to the commencement of farming operations by the settler ; for instance, in what time and at what cost he can get a house built, and the kind it would be when finished ; how soon a man can get a crop who arrives there about the end of March, and how he would go to work to get it ; the cost of equipping a farm and the price fetched by the products ; how lands can be leased or bought for ranching, how ranching is carried on, the cost of yearlings or stockers and the age at which they are ready for the market, also the price they fetch ; where the ranching lands of British Columbia are situated and their proximity to means of transportation. These are some of the questions I am being continually asked.

Of course Mr. Jury knows nothing about these matters himself, and he acknowledges that the literature does not give the desired information. What then is the Government doing ? It is employing a whole staff of men over there, typewriters, stenographers, clerks, book-keepers, foreign correspondence clerks, every class of officials, and they have no kind of literature which will give the information required by the very class of people that we desire to get. It would seem to me that the best course for the Government to take would be either to close up the offices or properly equip them. The showing of several stalks of corn in some shop window or other exposed place is not likely to attract much attention. I am surprised that the hon. Minister, with his practical business acumen, does not put things in better shape, so that something can be done to promote immigration of the proper kind to Canada, namely, that of tenant farmers, with a little capital, farm labourers and domestic servants.

Women's Protective Immigration Society of Montreal..... $1,000

Mr. WALLACE. I think we have gone far enough for to-night.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The discussion has ranged over the whole question, and we ought to get through with these votes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Vote No. 95 shows an increase of $90,000 and will require some discussion.

Mr. WALLACE. If you let the other items pass, and let the House adjourn, we could pass vote 95, with much less discussion in the morning than we can at present.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have been putting through these estimates for the last four years, and the whole discussion has never taken more than two hours; yet we have discussed these items since half-past eleven o'clock this morning. I certainly think that the hon. gentlemen ought, in all fairness, to consent to the business going through.

Mr. WALLACE. It would not prolong the debate any to let the item stand. It is not to reopen any debate, but to get information which we cannot very well carefully consider at this time. I think that in a few minutes to-morrow morning we can dispose of that more satisfactorily than we could by spending a good deal longer time over it to-night.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If the hon. gentleman will agree that it shall go through to-morrow morning before one o'clock, I am satisfied.

Mr. WALLACE. I think we can easily promise that.

Committee rose and reported.

RETURNS.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). I promised some members on the committee last evening that certain papers would be brought down, if possible. The hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) asked that the report of the commissioner to investigate the case of John Galna should be laid on the Table; and the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) desired the report of the inspector with respect to Mr. Callwell. I have these papers here, and I move that an Order of the House do issue for the return of these papers, when I shall be prepared to lay them on the Table.

Motion agreed to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 3.05 a.m. (Thursday.)

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 27th July, 1899.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PRAYERS.

GENERAL SERVICE MEDALS.

Mr. CLARKE (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

1. What is the date of the Royal Warrants, published in the London "Gazette," authorizing the long service decoration for officers and the long service medal for non-commissioned officers and men of the Canadian auxiliary forces ?

2. What action, if any, has since been taken by the Department of Militia and Defence to carry out the terms and conditions set forth in the above-named Royal Warrants ?

3. What is the period of service required to ensure the granting of said decorations or medals, and is it necessary that such service should be continuous ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). 1. London "Gazette," of the 2nd June, 1899. Warrants dated War Office, same day. 2. None yet. 3. Twenty years. Continuous service.

MEDICAL ATTENDANCE TO INDIANS IN YALE AND CARIBOO.

Mr. PRIOR asked :

1. What amounts have been paid by the Government during the years 1896-97, 1897-98 and 1898-99 in the electoral district of Yale and Cariboo for medical attendance and medicines ?

2. To whom were these payments made, and how much to each medical man ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). The question is not clear. To whom does the question refer ?

Mr. PRIOR. To Indians.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. As the question does not mention the Indians, I did not know that it referred to them. The hon. gentleman will see that the items do not show anything paid for medical attendance or medical service for Indians.

DOMINION DREDGE "CANADA."

Mr. FOSTER asked :

How long was Harry W. Clark engineer on board the Dominion dredge "Canada" ? Were his services satisfactory ? Is Mr. Clark now on the dredge "Canada" ? If not, when was he dismissed ; on what charges, and was there any investigation ? Who has been appointed to the position ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Harry Clark was engineer on the Dominion dredge two seasons. Mr. Clark and the captain of the vessel did not get along very well, and in that sense his services were not satisfactory, though no particular charge was made against Mr. Clark. Mr. Clark was not dismissed. The officers of the dredges are not permanently appointed ; they are engaged from season to season, and Mr. Clark was not re-employed at the beginning of the present season in consequence of the fact that he and the captain did not get along very well together. It was also deemed desirable that the engineer should be a diver. Mr. Clark was not able to do that kind of work, while Mr. George Burrows, the man selected for the position is a diver.

BI-LINGUAL OFFICERS OF THE MILITIA.

Mr. TYRWHITT asked :

Is it the intention of the Government to enforce the regulation suggested by General Hutten, that officers and non-commissioned officers, acting as instructors, understand and be able to instruct recruits in both English and French ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). In order to show the exact position of matters, I propose to read the militia orders which have been issued by the General Officer Commanding. On Tuesday, the 14th February, the General Officer Commanding issued the following :—

The Major General Commanding desires to remind the officers and staff of the permanent or instructional corps, and all others who aspire to high command in the future, or to positions of responsibility upon the general staff, that a considerable portion of the military forces of the Dominion consist of French-Canadian regiments. It is, in the Major General's opinion, essential that all officers who now hold, or aspire to hold in the future, responsible positions on the staff, should be able to convey their instructions to the French-Canadian troops, in their own language. All officers of the staff, of the permanent corps, and of the instructional staff (including non-commissioned officers) should more especially acquire a practical as well as a theoretical knowledge of the French language, and the Major General suggests that all those who are unable to read or speak French with fair facility should take an early opportunity of making good this defect.

This was followed on the 5th of May by the following order :—

In order to encourage the study of French by the Anglo-Canadian officers, and non-commissioned officers ; and the study of English by French-Canadian officers and non-commissioned officers of the permanent force, it is proposed to hold examinations at a date which will be hereafter named.

The maximum number of marks will be as follows :—

Dictation .....	100
Translation for Anglo-Canadian officers— French into English,—for French-Canadian officers,—English into French....	100
Translation for Anglo-Canadian officers— English into French,—for French-Canadian officers,—French into English....	200
Writing an essay or letter and copying manuscript .....	100
Oral Examination—conversation, including reading manuscript at sight, and translation in writing from one language into the other, from extempore reading .....	200

Total obtainable..... 700

The result of this examination will be notified in militia orders, and officers and non-commissioned officers who obtain 5 of the total marks will be noted in their record of service as "passed," and those who obtain 8 will be noted as "Interpreters."

The examination will be conducted under arrangements which will be made by the commandant of the Royal Military College in conjunction with the professor of the French and English languages at the college. Special regulations on this head have been drawn up for the information of those concerned.

Officers and N. C. Officers noted as Interpreters will be called up for examination once in every five years.

In addition, I may say that I approve of those suggestions, and they are approved by the Government. I may add that in the English army, French is obligatory, every officer requires to possess a thorough knowledge of the French language.

Mr. TYRWHITT. I did not exactly understand the answer to my question. I particularly wanted to know whether this order would be enforced in the case of the non-commissioned officers as well as inspectors.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have only to add to what I have stated that so far as possible it will be encouraged, but I do not mean to say it will be enforced.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. May I be allowed to ask if it is contemplated by the Major General Commanding that the Minister of Militia and Defence should be required to understand French so as to be able to speak the French language ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I may say to my hon. friend that that is a defect which I shall endeavour to repair as rapidly as possible.

QUALIFYING EXAMINATION OF OFFICERS.

Mr. TYRWHITT asked :

What percentage of regimental officers who attended the late camp at Lévis, had passed the qualifying examination ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). The district officer of military district No. 7 has been asked to furnish the information ; perhaps the hon. gentleman will allow the question to remain on the paper.

IMPORTATION OF INDIAN CORN.

Mr. CLANCY asked :

How much Indian corn has been imported into Canada for home consumption for the eleven months ending the 31st May for the fiscal year 1899 ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Pater-son). In reference to this and the next question, I am afraid I will not be able to get my hon. friend this information. Perhaps it would answer his purpose if I were able to bring him down a statement for the nine months, as these are quarterly returns. If I can get the eleven months I will try to do so, but if not, I will bring down the return for three quarters.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the hon. gentleman be good enough to bring them down at once?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I will have them prepared as early as possible.

PREFERENTIAL TRADE.

Mr. McNEILL. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would ask my right hon. friend if he will be kind enough to furnish me with the terms of the resolution which he desires to substitute for the resolution on which I spoke a day or two ago in reference to preferential trade. I have a resolution in my hands, and I would ask my right hon. friend if I may accept it as in the terms he proposes.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Yes.

HARBOUR IMPROVEMENTS AT PORT COLBORNE AND PORT MAITLAND.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), acting for the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), was good enough to show me the report in connection with Port Colborne harbour. May I ask him if he will do the same about Port Maitland harbour?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. At the time I sent to the department for the information I was informed that the papers relating to Port Maitland were not ready. I will make inquiry, and if the report is ready to give to the hon. gentleman he will get it.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), if he has laid on the Table of the House the railway subsidies to be proposed?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No; the railway subsidies, of course, will be laid on the Table of the House by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair), at some time during to-day. I cannot say whether they will be placed on the Table this morning or not. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper), suggested that he thought they should be here this morning, but I expect that sometime during this session, or to-day, they will be laid on the Table of the House.

SEIZURE OF BOATS AND NETS BELONGING TO CANADIAN FISHERMEN.

Mr. PRIOR. Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), whether he is aware of the fact that some boats and nets belonging to Canadian fishermen have been seized by the Americans. I see in the Victoria "Daily Colonist," of July 22nd, the following item:—

Vancouver, July 21.—Several Canadian fishermen drifted over to the American line with their nets yesterday. The Yankees seized nets, boats and all, and will sell the boats and nets at auction. The men were ignorant that they were in United States territory, but telegraphic dispatches to Washington and Ottawa have so far failed to make the Yankees give up the nets and boats.

I would ask the right hon. leader of the Government whether the attention of the Government has been drawn to this matter, and if so, whether the Government is looking into it?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am not aware that the Government has any information on the subject of what is contained in these despatches, which, as my hon. friend (Mr. Prior) knows, are not always accurate. I hope there is exaggeration in that report. I have reason to believe that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) is looking into the matter, but I cannot speak positively as to that.

SUPPLY—PREFERENTIAL TRADE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. ALEXANDER McNEILL (North Bruce). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I would like to call the attention of the House, for a moment, to the position in which we stand in regard to the statement made by the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) on a very solemn occasion, in a carefully prepared speech, on Wednesday of last week. The right hon. gentleman at that time stated that:

It is the duty of Canada by all means in its power, as soon as it is possible to do so, to get preferential treatment in the markets of Great Britain.

I moved a resolution in these express terms on the Monday following, and my right hon. friend expressed disappointment that I had not consulted him before moving such a resolution. I wish to make it quite clear in reference to that matter, that I, personally, would have thought it was a very left-handed compliment if any one had come to me and asked me if I was prepared to support a carefully considered statement I had made on the floor of this House, a few days before. I did not think it was necessary to consult the hon. gentleman on that matter. Last session, over and over again, I approached the right hon. gentleman and members of his Cabinet in the hope that we might be able to reach a conclusion—reach a proposition which would commend itself to both sides of the House in reference to this great question. I found it absolutely impossible to do this. I found that the attitude taken by these hon. gentlemen was such that it was quite hopeless to proceed further in these negotiations. I stated here, the other day, and I repeat the statement, that I went so often to the Government, in reference to this matter that I felt I had almost humiliated myself by my importunity. But, as I said before, in reference to a question of this kind, I was prepared to go even so far as that. However, as I have said, there was no use in pressing the matter farther privately during that session. That seemed quite clear. I brought the matter before the House in a resolution simply affirming that it was advisable that the people of Canada should have preferential treatment for their products in the markets of the mother country. Although that was a proposal accepted at the great Colonial Conference in 1894, the Government could not allow their followers to support it. They could not allow their supporters to say that it was desirable that the people of Canada should have a preference in the markets of England over their foreign competitors. The statement which the right hon. gentleman had made on Wednesday of last week seemed to me so correct and so pointed that, if we could have adopted it in the form of a resolution, there can be no doubt that it would have enormously strengthened the hands of those in the mother country who are labouring to secure this great boon for Canada. Why the right hon. gentleman made that statement, in his carefully considered speech on a solemn occasion of this kind, when he did not intend to support it, I am at a loss to understand. We are now in the extraordinary, I will venture to say humiliating position, of finding that the Prime Minister of Canada, after having made a statement in a carefully considered speech, in reference to a question, which Mr. Chamberlain has declared to be the greatest of all Imperial questions, refuses to allow this House to say that the statement he made was a correct or sound statement. The position is extraordinary and humiliating, and I should like to understand from the right hon. gentleman the reasons for the course he has pursued; I should like to know what the right hon. gentleman meant by making that statement if he was not prepared to support it. Did he mean to lead the people of Canada to believe that he was in favour of preferential trade? Did he mean to lead the people of Canada to believe he considered it was the duty of the Government, by all means in its power, and as soon as possible, to get preferential treatment in the markets of Great Britain? If he meant that the people of Canada should understand that that is his policy and his view, why is it that, to-day, he refuses to accept the statement, his own statement, made in this House? The statement which the right hon. gentleman made the other day will be very good to go to the country with. It will be very useful to his supporters by enabling them to go to the people, in the approaching election, and to say: "We are as much in favour of preferential trade as our opponents are; see what the Prime Minister has said. Sir Wilfrid Laurier has said distinctly that he considers it his duty to get this preference for your goods as soon as possible and by every means possible; can you ask for anything more direct or pointed than that? That is all right for the country; but the hon. gentleman understands very well that he is not going to promote preferential trade in England by that mere statement in Canada. But he knows very well that if this resolution is passed formally in this House, it will enormously promote preferential trade in England, and because he knows that it will, I presume—for I can imagine no other reason—he refuses to allow the resolution to pass. But as he has made that statement in Canada, that statement will go to England. I shall take very good care that the Colonial Secretary, the Right Hon. Mr. Chamberlain knows that that statement has been made in this House, because it will have the effect, at all events, when it is brought to his notice in that way, of letting him understand that my right hon. friend does not feel safe in opposing this policy in Canada. But at the very time my right hon. friend was making that statement in the House, and telling the House and the people that he was entirely in favour of preferential trade, and that it would be the duty of the Government, by every means in its power, and as soon as possible, to get preferential trade, he was stabbing preferential trade by voting down the resolution which he knew, if it passed this House, would immensely promote the cause of preferential trade on the other side of the Atlantic. I do not intend to take up the time of the House. I want to hear what the right hon. gentleman has to say with regard to the extraordinary position in which he stands before the country. I want to hear his explanation of this resolution. The resolution, which the right hon. gentleman has been good enough to hand to me, is this:

That this House expresses its belief that it is expedient, by all reasonable means, to develop and promote inter-Imperial trade, and that such an object ought to be reached by mutual concessions and preferences, and reaffirms its approval of the features of the Canadian tariff, whereby Great Britain enjoys preferences in the markets of Canada.

Now, I was prepared to accept that resolution, as I told my right hon. friend, if he would only allow me to make it clear that it was preferential trade that he meant. But that he will not do. If he had allowed me to make it, say, "by mutual concessions and trade preferences or tariff preferences," I would have been quite willing to accept that resolution; but this the right hon. gentleman at once objected to. Preferences may mean postal preferences. I believe the action taken by the hon. Postmaster General will promote inter-Imperial trade very much. Preferences may mean cable preferences. I believe the grant which has been made by the Imperial Government to the Pacific cable will promote inter-Imperial trade. Preferences may mean subsidies to steamship lines, which will also promote inter-Imperial trade. I wanted this thing made clear; and just as soon as I proposed to make it clear the right hon. gentleman closed down on the proposal, and said he would not accept the amendment I offered, namely, "Tariff preferences." I just wish to make this explanation in order that it may be understood why I have not accepted this resolution of my right hon. friend. It is a resolution which seems to be in favour of preferential trade, just as my right hon. friend seemed to be in favour of preferential trade when he said that it was the duty of the Government by every means in its power to obtain preferential trade. But he refuses to allow me to make the resolution clearly in favour of preferential trade, and, therefore, I object to it. I move, Mr. Speaker, seconded by Sir Charles Tupper:

That it is the duty of the Government of Canada, by all means in its power, and as soon as it is possible to do so, to get preferential treatment in the markets of Great Britain for the produce of Canada.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that the good relations which have hitherto existed between my hon. friend (Mr. McNeill) and myself are getting strained, perhaps almost to the point of breaking. If they break, I am sure it will not be through any fault of mine, but through the fault of the hon. gentleman himself. My hon. friend's honour is altogether too sensitive, in so far as I am concerned. So far as he regards his own honour or virtue, I have nothing to say. The hon. gentleman said that he had almost humiliated himself last year in attempting to negotiate with me, and getting me to yield to his views. There was no humiliation so far as I could see, because we attempted to reach a common ground on that question and failed to do so. My hon. friend has his views on this question and I have mine. I would have been happy if we could have reconciled our views. I went a great length, I think, to meet his views and to stand on his level. But if at the last moment we could not attain that very desirable object, I see no humiliation in that fact for him, and none for me.

Mr. McNEILL. Will my right hon. friend allow me to explain? When I said I felt humiliated, it was because I had so often to run after the members of the Government in regard to this matter.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend did not come by invitation.

Mr. McNEILL. Quite so, and that is just why I felt humiliated.

The PRIME MINISTER. That is my hon. friend's own fault. I am sorry my hon. friend should have looked on the matter in that way. I am always anxious to meet the views of my hon. friend, and I would be happy on this occasion if I could do so; but my hon. friend has some views which perhaps are peculiar to himself, and he cannot think it extraordinary if he finds that other members of the House who are anxious to treat him courteously are yet not able to stand on the high level that he has built up for himself. He must allow something for the frailties of human nature, and if we cannot be all as good, as patriotic, and as British as he is, he must take us with our delinquencies. For my part, I am only dust and ashes; I do not pretend to be at all as good as my hon. friend is. I have only to say that so far as my own conduct in this matter is concerned, I feel no humiliation if I do not always see the way to put a speech into a resolution. If my hon. friend always finds a way of expressing in a resolution the views he has expressed in his speech, without any trouble or hesitation, he is endowed with a gift which very few men are blessed with, because there is nothing more difficult than to express concisely and lucidly in a resolution the ideas expressed in an hour's speech. I objected to the motion which my hon. friend offered the other day, and which he moves again to-day, because it implies a censure upon the Government. It says: "That it is the duty of the Government of Canada by all means in its power and as soon as possible" to do so and so. That implies a censure on the Government as not having done its duty in this matter, or done whatever it was possible for it to do. To this I altogether object. I believe we have done as much and more for the very idea my hon. friend has in view as has been done by any other Government in Canada. I take the view which my hon. friend has expounded himself a moment ago. He objects to the motion which I have put into his hands as an alternative. If I had wanted to move it as a party motion, I would have made it much stronger than it is; but in order, if possible, to meet the views of my hon. friend, to overcome his scruples, and to have unanimous action on the subject, I put into the hands of my hon. friend the motion which reads as follows:—

That this House expresses its belief that it is expedient, by all reasonable means, to develop and promote inter-Imperial trade, and that such an object ought to be reached by mutual concessions and preferences, and reaffirms its approval of the features of the Canadian tariff, whereby Great Britain enjoys preferences in the markets of Canada.

Now, my hon. friend objects to this. He wants to limit the range within which we can obtain a preference and concessions from England. He does not want to have the question left open, but to limit it to one idea, and one alone. He wants to limit it simply to the words, "Trade or tariff." My hon. friend said a moment ago that the resolution I have suggested includes preference in mail service. Does he object to that? He said that it includes also preference in postal service. Does he object to that? He said also that it might mean preference in cable service. Does he object to that? But he says: I want to restrict it to one thing, and that alone. Well, Mr. Speaker, the idea I have is to make it broad, so as to include everything possible. My hon. friend must know that there are two sides to this question, and that if you attempt to force public opinion upon this question in England, you will miss everything. He referred a moment ago to the conference in Ottawa in 1894, and to the resolutions passed by that Colonial Conference, which sat in this city. Is he not not aware that the resolutions of this conference have not been accepted by the Imperial authorities? What is the use, therefore, of trying to force the British Government to do a thing which they have refused to do? The only sensible course followed upon this question by any government is that which we followed when we made an offer and gave an actual preference to the British people, well knowing that, as soon as it was possible, the British Government would follow in that path. But my hon. friend is not content to wait; he wants to force events. He reminds me of Peter the Hermit, who preached the first crusade, but who, although he preached very well, could not lead at all, and was the worst enemy of the movement he had so much at heart. I accept my hon. friend's good intentions, but I am sorry I cannot follow his leadership in this matter, so that nothing remains for me to do but to ask the House to reject his resolution, and we will take the opportunity later on of placing on record our own views on this matter. My hon. friend knows that I cannot move any amendment to his resolution, but must either accept it or vote it down. Therefore, there remains to me no alternative but to vote it down. I am sorry that he will not accept the olive branch which I have tendered him, and which without humiliation he could accept. But since he does not choose to do so, I leave it to him whether or not he is serving the cause he has so much at heart.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I rise for the purpose of meeting the case—which I have not had the opportunity of discussing with Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

my hon. friend who moved the resolution I have great pleasure in seconding—of tendering an olive branch to my right hon. friend opposite, and I think I can, by the addition of a single word, meet his views entirely. I may say that my hon. friend from North Bruce (Mr. McNeill), who has taken such a prominent part on this great question of preferential trade, has shown the utmost anxiety, but not an anxiety greater than I have shown and have always felt, to endeavour to obtain the unanimous action of this House on a question that I have no hesitation in saying to-day is the most important ever submitted for the consideration of the people of Canada. At this period of the session, discussed, as this subject has been, and anxious as every member on both sides is to bring the session to a close at the earliest possible moment, I have no idea of occupying but a few moments the attention of the House.

The right hon. leader of the House states that this motion is a censure on himself. The hon. gentleman can hardly be serious in saying that to embody a statement of his own on a most important question—embodying it verbatim, as it fell from his own lips on the floor of the House a few days ago, in discussing this question—is a censure. If it is, then all I can say is, that my hon. friend is his own censor, because he declares to this House that his own utterance on a most important question is a strong censure on himself and his Government. I have no other object than I have had throughout, and that is, in every possible way and by every possible concession, to obtain such a unanimous vote of this House as I feel would be of immense importance in the promotion of preferential trade, to which all parties and all persons in this House, and none more strongly or more emphatically than my right hon. friend, are committed.

What is the position? My right hon. friend, when appealing to the country for power, pledged himself most solemnly that he was at one with me, that I was not a more ardent supporter of this inter-Imperial trade, promoted by tariff preference on both sides, than he was. And he went further. He took up the question as it stood then. He says that the British Government repudiated the action on this question of the Ottawa Conference. But that is scarcely candid. My hon. friend knows that it was the Marquis of Ripon who was in power, when the resolutions of that conference went home, that the Marquis of Ripon was an inveterate free trader, and, therefore, took exception to the proposal made by the Ottawa Conference. But a good deal was heard after that. After that, the Right Hon. Mr. Chamberlain delivered his views on this question of inter-Imperial preferential trade, not a one-sided trade, but a trade in which each side would have the preference, and he discussed it entirely from the stand-point that there should be a quid pro quo on both sides. With that declaration of the right hon. the present Colonial Minister in his hands, my right hon. friend publicly, when appealing for power, committed himself to that view, and stated that he approved of Mr. Chamberlain's statement. Mr. Chamberlain has never receded to this hour, for an instant, from the position he then took. My hon. friend quoted Mr. Chamberlain's language, and went on to state succinctly that he was prepared to support that policy, that he saw in Mr. Chamberlain's declaration a message of great good for Canada, and declared that if returned to power, he would himself immediately send a commission to the British Government to negotiate preferential trade on those terms. I do not intend to follow the thing further than to say that for some reason, never explained to this day, my right hon. friend changed his mind, and, when he went to England, at the most auspicious time to accomplish the object to which he had so solemnly pledged himself, he took an entirely different attitude. I do not intend to follow that up either, but I draw his attention to the fact that in Toronto, after he returned, he still reiterated his declaration in favour of tariff preference on both sides. He stated that he would have been an idiot if he could have obtained such a thing and had not obtained it; and he explained to the people at that banquet that what he had done was to endeavour to take one step at a time and get the treaties abrogated that stood in the way of England giving a preference to the colonies and the colonies giving a preference to England, and these being removed the subject was open to discussion, and he was prepared to discuss it. Now he is asked to reaffirm on the floor of this House that last declaration that he made to the people of Canada, that he still was determined to use every means in his power to accomplish that preferential trade which he declared was so important to Canada; and I ask my right hon. friend if he is not placing himself in a very unfortunate position when he asks this House to negative a simple statement of his policy as made by himself on the floor of this House on this question. I shall not follow that further than to treat the objection he now makes when he says we are introducing a difficulty in the way of unanimous action in this House by not accepting the resolution that he has drafted. I have no hesitation in saying that, with a view to preventing this being a party question, with a view of having the weight and influence of the whole Parliament of Canada, which I know is of great consequence, in support of this policy, I am prepared to go any length that any man can possibly go to secure an expression of unanimity in this House that I know will only reflect the unanimous sentiment of the people of Canada. I will tell my right hon. friend how I propose to do it. I will ask my right hon. friend to accept his own resolution, with the addition only of a couple of words that will carry out precisely what he has stated. The resolution reads:

This House expresses its belief that it is expedient, by all reasonable means, to develop and promote inter-imperial trade, and that such an object ought to be reached by mutual concessions and preferences.

The right hon. Premier asks my hon. friend from North Bruce if he objected to cable preferences and postal preferences. Not at all; but what my hon. friend from North Bruce wants is that there should be no mistake that, in addition to any other thing, this is to include tariff preference, to which my right hon. friend had pledged himself solemnly before the country previous to the last struggle in this country, declaring that if he obtained power he would seek to secure it, an assurance he reiterated in the city of Toronto and declared, now that the great obstacle had been removed he was prepared to follow it up. I ask my right hon. friend, consistently with his own declarations, to allow my hon. friend (Mr. McNeill) to substitute this resolution which my right hon. friend has introduced, but allowing it to be amended so as to end with the words: concessions and preference by tariff and otherwise."

Now, if my right hon. friend takes the attitude in the face of the world: I will resist any tariff preference being given by the Imperial Parliament to this country—of course, he cannot accept my proposition. But if he will accept my proposition we can have a unanimous resolution here and the matter will be in the hands of the Government to be dealt with by them in the most judicious manner they can. I submit to my right hon. friend whether the suggestion I have made is not one that ought to remove any difference of opinion, and, instead of being regarded as a censure, should be regarded as an expression of the unanimous sentiment of this House, and by resolution proposed by my right hon. friend himself.

THE PRIME MINISTER. The views expressed by my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) are worthy of consideration. I am sure he will not think it extraordinary if I ask time to consider what he says and to consult my colleagues. I will give him an answer this afternoon.

SIR CHARLES TUPPER. I am sure my hon. friend from North Bruce will be ready to withdraw his motion on that understanding, a course in which I shall cordially agree. This is an important question and one on which we should have a unanimous declaration in this House.

MR. MCNEILL. I shall be glad to let the motion stand over.

The PRIME MINISTER. It will be necessary for my hon. friend (Mr. McNeill) to withdraw his motion. This is in amendment to a motion for Supply, the hon. gentleman can bring it up later.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall the hon. gentleman (Mr. McNeill) have leave to withdraw his motion?

Mr. EDWARDS. As I may not be here when this question is taken up on a future occasion by the House, I desire to say a few words upon it now. Representing, as I do, an agricultural county, and knowing well as I do, that the agricultural interests are the greatest interests of this country, it can be very readily understood that any practical measure which would advance the interests of the farmers of Canada would receive my heartiest support. But I believe in dealing with questions practically; I believe in attempting that which we have some chance of accomplishing. In my opinion, this proposal is simply protection run mad. Hon. gentlemen opposite years ago, introduced a system under which the farmers of Canada have been great sufferers, under which they have been burdened as no other class have been burdened by unjust and improper taxation.

Mr. COCHRANE. You have bettered it now.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, when a patient is suffering from a terrible disease under which he has suffered for many years, you would not apply the antidote in such a way as to immediately kill the patient. The cure of this evil of taxation under which the farmers of Canada suffer must be brought about by degrees. But what is proposed, instead of a reduction of the burden under which our farmers suffer? The proposition is to tax the artisans and mechanics of Great Britain for the benefit of the farmers of Canada. And with what results? With the result of making the produce which Canada buys from England dearer than it is to-day. The time may come in the history of the world when it will be absolutely necessary for Great Britain and her colonies to unite commercially and otherwise against the rest of the world.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Will my hon. friend (Mr. Edwards), who is addressing the House with so much ability, allow me to call his attention to the fact that there is no question before the House, the resolution having been withdrawn at the request of the Prime Minister. And the matter will be brought up again at three o'clock. I think my hon. friend is not aware of the position, or he would not interpose between the Government and Supply under the circumstances.

Mr. EDWARDS. I may be wrong, Mr. Speaker, and if so, I submit to your dictum.

Mr. McNEILL.

But, as I understand it, the mover and seconder have offered to withdraw the resolution but the House has not given leave for its withdrawal.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Edwards) has the right to speak. The motion is to go into Supply, to which an amendment was proposed, which amendment it is proposed to withdraw. I put the motion that the hon. gentleman have leave to withdraw his motion, and, on that, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Edwards) rose.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I ask my hon. friend (Mr. Edwards) if, at this period of the session, he proposes to anticipate what may be arrived at by the leader of the House on this question, the offer to withdraw the resolution having been made at the Premier's suggestion.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, if the leader of the House desires I should say nothing upon the subject, I will discontinue; but, Sir, I have views upon questions of this kind that are entirely my own, and as the hon. member for North Bruce has stated that at some previous time members on this side were ordered not to vote for his resolution, I may say that I would not vote for his resolution if I were asked by all the Prime Ministers in the world to support it. I hope that at no distant day the duties will be still further reduced in aid of the farmers of Canada, materially reduced, not only in the interest of the farmers, but in the interest of every individual in Canada, manufacturers as well as farmers, because, if the great agricultural industry is prosperous all other industries in this country will prosper. Agriculture is the foundation of the prosperity of Canada, and if our farmers are unduly burdened and taxed, how can manufacturers prosper? Now, what is suggested? Hon. gentlemen who are protectionists are not satisfied with burdening the people of Canada, that is to say, with burdening the farmers as one class in favour of another class in Canada; but now it is suggested to tax the British artisan and mechanic to aid the farmers of Canada. Are the farmers of Canada such cowards that they want to be spoon-fed in this way? No, Sir, the farmers of Canada only want even-handed justice and fair-play, and no favour. Let them have that, and the day will never come when the farmers of Canada will ask that the British artisan and mechanic shall be taxed to aid them. No, Mr. Speaker, let us do what we can, let us do justice to the farmer in the matter of taxation in our own country, and in the next place, let us do everything we can for the advancement and improvement of agriculture in our country. It has been previously stated in this House that farms in the lower provinces were being abandoned.

Mr. DOMVILLE. That is not true, they are not abandoned.

Mr. EDWARDS. Never mind the statement was made, and what was the remedy suggested. That some sort of arrangement should be made so that British and other agriculturists coming to this country should settle on the farms of Canada abandoned by our farmers. What sense is there in that? If our farmers cannot live upon their farms, why should we try to induce immigrants from foreign countries to settle upon them? The true remedy is for these hon. gentlemen in the lower provinces to improve the agricultural conditions within their provinces. It is quite true that on the western prairies there are settlers who have left their farms in the eastern provinces of Canada; but it is only a question of time when, under improved conditions of agriculture, this eastern portion of Canada will shine as well as the west will ever shine.

Now, Sir, I want to show you the contradictory statement that has been made when this question was previously discussed in this House. It was said that the Government gave away its case when it lowered the tariff against British goods, and did not at that time avail themselves of the opportunity of getting a preference in the British market. In the same breath it was said that the preferential clause of the tariff is not at all in favour of England, but that it has increased trade with the United States. Well, Sir, I do not think that any man living can go into that question and arrive at an accurate conclusion upon it, but I claim that the reduction of 25 per cent on British goods coming into Canada, has produced this beneficial result at least, that it has reduced the taxation upon our own people, it has reduced the protection on goods produced in our own country just to that extent; and in that respect it has been a great benefit to the farmers and producers of our country. But how can any man say that the imports from England would not be less to-day than they are but for that preference? I think they would be less. It is quite true that our imports from the United States have increased very largely, but there is a very natural reason for that in the impetus which trade of every kind has enjoyed in Canada. The importations of raw material have increased very largely to this country, as well also as many manufactured articles. Now, I want to make one plain proposition. Canada, for nearly 4,000 miles, lies along the border of the United States, and the United States produces all kinds of machinery of the exact kind that we require in Canada, and as a consequence of our development in every direction, there has arisen in Canada a large demand for machinery of various kinds that is manufactured in the United States, and which England does not manufacture. For instance, if I wanted to-day in the lumber trade, which is the next largest industry to agriculture a saw gate, or a gang for sawing lumber where would I have to go to get it? I would be compelled to go to the United States, because no other country, not even England, manufactures them. From the fact that they are made more cheaply in the United States, because they are manufactured as a specialty, than they can be made in Canada, and they are imported into this country. Therefore, it is the most natural thing in the world that our trade with the United States should increase very largely under existing conditions. In my view that is the cause of our growing trade with the United States, and not because of any tariff conditions whatever. Now, Mr. Speaker, this is a wide subject, and it is well known that I am an out-and-out free trader, and it is inevitable that on some occasions at least I should desire to give expression to my views. But my hon. friend from North Bruce may say on this occasion: Oh, but you are disloyal.

Mr. McNEILL. No, I would not say that.

Mr. EDWARDS. He might say so, Mr. Speaker, but just as long as Canada lies for 4,000 miles along the northern boundary of the United States it is desirable in the interests of both countries that the very freest trade relations should exist between the two countries. But, Mr. Speaker, let me say that I take no second place as to my faith in British institutions. If I am a radical I am a constitutional radical, and I believe firmly in British institutions. Let me say this, that, looking at the United States and the greatness of that grand country, I say that the country has made the people rather than that the people have made the country. It is impossible that a country such as the United States, with all its different climates and its enormous resources, should not be a great country. North of that great country, with our vigorous climate, and with our geographical conditions the task ahead of us may be more difficult, but we are equal to the occasion, the northern people are equal to the occasion, and although the work must be a more difficult one, we will accomplish the great object we have in view of making Canada a grand country also. Understanding as I do the great advantage of British institutions over American institutions, I say it here, Mr. Speaker, frankly and candidly, that I would rather eat dry bread in Canada than buttered bread in the United States. There is no question as to my views upon the subject, and to the position I take and will always take. We have heard very little in this House this session as to the desirability of trade with the United States. Still, I say, that trade with the United States will aid in developing this country as it can be developed in no other way. No sane man, having any understanding of the conditions that exist between Canada and the United States, of the geographical conditions, of the great carriage east and west, can come to any other conclusion than the best trade relations available with that country will be in the best interest of Canada as well as of the United States. But I hold this view and have always held it: We cannot fight the United States with high tariffs. It is perfectly impossible that any country with 5,000,000 of a population can combat a country with 80,000,000 of a population by means of high tariffs, but there is a way we can do it, and that is by a material lowering of our tariffs. If we levied a 10 per cent tariff to-day, a purely revenue tariff, we would bring the United States, great and strong as she is, to her very knees. And she would have to adopt the same programme herself. The result would be that the channels of the St. Lawrence would float the commerce of this northern portion of the continent. I hold very strong views upon this subject, and just so long as I entertain the views I do I will express them. Canada will never make her best prosperity, Canada will never advance as she should until we come as near as possible to free trade, and when this is attained, I think visionary dreams of asking England to do what would be a wrong to England for the benefit of Canada will vanish. This is a visionary dream; it is useless and a waste of the time of Parliament to discuss it. If England, for the benefit of the English people, desires to give a preference to Canadian goods, it will be time to advance this proposition, but it is futile, silly and nonsensical and a waste of time to discuss any such question now.

Mr. DOMVILLE. Mr. Speaker, before the question is put, I only want to say a few words to the point. I have not very much faith in this preferential business; I have not very much faith in this Imperial federation. There may be a good many people in England who have got Imperial honours out of the advocacy of the question, but I think that Canada should look after herself and do her own business. All we want is our market. We can give the Imperialists in the mother country a few positions over here by putting out some of our own people. But if there is to be a preferential tariff, it must be according to the motion that I have put on the Paper. I shall not have a chance of reaching it this session, but I shall read it, and put it on "Hansard," without bothering anybody. The principle involved is that goods that come into Canada under the preferential tariff must come direct through a Canadian port. I am here as a representative of the maritime provinces, where we are progressing in the direction of building up this country. I am not going to sit still and see goods coming to Boston, Portland and New York under the preferential tariff. If the English people want to send their goods to this country and they want to buy our cereals, then, we ought to have some protection in England, and if we get such protection for our cereals we ought to give them a preference, and I am prepared to do that. I shall read this notice of motion that I may put it on "Hansard," and then I shall have nothing more to say on the subject. I propose to move:

That inasmuch as the Parliament of Canada by the Act 61 Victoria, chap. 37, with a view to encourage the extension of trade between the Dominion and mother country and the British West Indies, provided that a preferential tariff should be applied to manufactures and products of those countries respectively; and inasmuch as vast quantities of goods entitled to such preference are now imported into Canada, by way of foreign ports, greatly to the disadvantage of our own seaports and consequent loss to our own people, and it is desirable as far as possible to encourage the carrying on of the import trade of the country through Canadian ports: It is for the reason herein set forth, in the opinion of this House, that it would be a wise policy and one in the best interests of the Dominion, to provide that the preference granted by said Act should only apply to articles imported by sea from the country of manufacture or production into Canada through a Canadian port.

Amendment (Mr. McNeill) withdrawn and motion agreed to.

(In the Committee.)

Contingencies—

In Canadian, British and foreign agencies, and general immigration expenses, including salaries of extra clerks at head office ..... $257,000

Mr. MONTAGUE. There is an increase of $90,000. Would the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) tell us the cause of that increase?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). The $257,000 is made up by the following estimates:—The estimate of the High Commissioner's office for European work is $57,299. We are asking for $60,000 in round numbers. For travelling expenses, advertising and general expenses in the United States, we ask for $60,000. For travelling expenses in connection with the Canadian agencies, and all Canadian officers, we ask $30,000; for the expenses of locating settlers, $20,000; grant respecting the Lake St. John Railway, $8,000; advertising and printing in Canada, $30,000; bookings paid on account of Doukhobors, $20,000; bonuses to be paid on children's immigration, $5,000; commissions to booking agents, other than the amount I mentioned as being estimated for the Doukhobors, $10,000; and a number of miscellaneous items, $14,000. That makes altogether $257,000. The hon. gentleman asked me about the expenses in the United States. The general expenses of the United States agents this year will be $27,623.34, besides $7,881 for advertising.

Mr. FOSTER. There are two or three points on which I want information. One has reference to the maintenance of immigrants in hospitals. I find that immigrants are maintained at the rate of 90 cents a day in the Calgary General Hospital and in the Holy Cross Hospital. I would like to have an explanation of what the policy is with reference to that. The same thing seems to be done at Medicine Hat Hospital, and generally along the line. With reference to the uniforms, there does not seem to be much uniformity. For instance, I find that some get two summer uniforms and a winter uniform, others get one of each and others only one of any kind. Then with reference to the persons who get the uniforms, some appear to get them who are not permanent men at all, but simply casuals. For instance, an interpreter who did two months' work gets a uniform suit and a uniform cap. Another man gets a uniform suit, an overcoat, a pair of trousers, a fur cap, a cloth cap and a lot of buttons. Another man gets two summer uniforms, a winter uniform, an overcoat at $30, and a Chesterfield at $14.50, and this, singularly, is all given to the man who does not wear his uniform, Mr. McCreary. Then I find a very large item, under Winnipeg, for all kinds of provisions. What is the principle followed with reference to that? Then there is a sum for the relief of prairie fire sufferers. It is a small item, but how do you give that out of an immigration vote?

Then there is fare advanced to emigrants, $73.85. Then, there is an odd item here, expenses for securing labourers for the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, $109.82. What in the world have we to do, as an immigration agency, with getting labourers for the Crow's Nest Pass Railway? Then, there is a small item of whisky, six bottles, at $1, 50. I suppose that is to be used on the cattle that the immigrants are taking out to stock their farms. There is an item here, W. F. McCreary, Yorkton, for livery. I thought that was, perhaps, another suit of clothes, but, no doubt, it is for the hire of horses, and I suppose it is all right. When you come to these immigration agents in the United States, the salaries do not amount to much, comparatively, but when you come to consider the whole expenses of their offices, the amount is nearly $40,000. That is very high, and I do not think the hon. Minister has any right to plead that all the immigrants that come in from the United States come in by virtue of the work and the expenses of these immigration agents. There is a set and trend of immigration, the best you can possibly get, which results from the information given by settlers, and which forces its impression on the public mind that our Northwest is a good place to go to. That is altogether independent of the services of these agents, and if in proportion as the Northwest and Manitoba has recovered from the old difficulties of frost and other difficulties, and a succession of good years and good crops follows, that persuasive power is having its effect all through the countries from which immigrants come, and in no other country more than the border states of the Union, especially on Canadians who have gone there.

I think that those expenses are in many cases excessive. The amount of advertising that is done is simply tremendous. I would like to have an idea as to what is the end of advertising, and as to whether the hon. Minister thinks that that end is being secured now, and the amount properly expended. Mr. McInnes' office costs the country $5,500, the large items being outside his salary and being for the expenses of the office, rents and the fares of delegates, advertising, and the like. Mr. Davies' office costs $5,891, which is very large. Outside of his own salary, there are his board and lodging, and other incidental expenses, none of which include the large items for advertising. We find that afterwards, and I will come to it a little later on, but on the whole the sum of $40,000 was expended on United States immigration agencies. That is a very large amount, and I doubt whether we get an adequate return.

With regard to European agencies, the expenses in Dublin are very large. I think the hon. Minister must be convinced himself that the return from that country has not been and hardly can be expected to be anything very great in the way of immigration to this country. I find an item "to the Royal Dublin Society Horse Show, $98.31," and I am sure I do not know how that is brought about. In Liverpool, we have Mr. A. F. Jury, the agent, and Mr. W. Jury, office boy and messenger. I suppose he is a son of the agent. We have subscriptions to newspapers there, $108.12, which is a large item. The living expenses of Mr. Jury, and travelling, amount to about $1,000. Altogether, the expense of that office amounts to $8,091, including Mr. Jury himself and his clerks. I do not want to say anything particularly with reference to Mr. Jury, but I do not believe that in him the hon. Minister has the best agent he ought to have for the district of which Liverpool is the centre, and in which he has to follow so competent and well-known a man as Mr. Dyke. The Minister very likely may have a different opinion. In the immigration general expenditures, I find that there was paid to Prof. Oleskow, expenses re immigration of Galicians, $2,582. Is that the professor about whose pay the hon. Minister gave an explanation yesterday?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR.
Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. When we come to printing, we find very large expenditures. The system has grown up of giving bonuses to the party newspapers for special editions. Now, occasionally you may get some good service in that respect, but I believe that when you give a large subsidy to the Toronto "Globe," for instance, for a Christmas or Jubilee edition, or anything like that, you are not making the best use possible of immigration money. Altogether, for printing and advertising, in Canada, $9,000 has been expended, and a large proportion given to newspapers for special and advertising editions, as they are called. But when you go to the United States, you find that it is there the advertising and printing gets in its fine work. In the United States last year, in advertising and printing, there were some $18,000 expended. Some of these sums have been expended in pure advertising, which, I suppose would be advertising the fact that there are homes in Canada for settlers, and giving the settlers an idea of the regulations, but a good deal of the money has been spent on newspaper items, and there are many papers willing to give you a "write up" if you pay a good subsidy, and it is doubtful whether we are getting the worth of our money. There is no political service that can be gained by any return from these papers, because they are not Canadian papers. The "Canadian-American" got $1,900 for 200,000 copies of a special edition. In what way were these copies distributed, and are you sure we got the benefit of the distribution? There must be some method by which the Minister assured himself that that went to our interest in foreign countries, or particular places in the United States. The Chicago Newspaper Union got for advertising, $2,879.64. What was the kind of advertising done for that very large amount? Then, Lord & Thomas, of Chicago, got $1,356.70, and the A. N. Kellogg Newspaper Company got $3,156.75, and the Western Newspaper Union, $6,095.50 for advertising alone.

Now, these are generous expenditures, and they are expenditures for papers in the United States. I think that, before we spend $10,000 or $20,000 on advertising in these newspapers, we ought to have full explanation of what we are getting for the money. It is an easy thing to spend $340,000, but it is an immense amount to take from the contributors to taxes in this country. We spend this amount in immigration. One-third of it, perhaps one-half, was spent on what you may call these mechanical appliances; a great deal goes to pay for the general official work of the department, while comparatively little reaches the objective point of securing would-be immigrants. I submit these points, not in the spirit of carping criticism, but desiring to understand what we are getting for the money spent.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The first question the hon. gentleman asked was, as to the policy respecting hospitals. We have followed the policy of the previous Government, that is, we regard any person who has not been in Manitoba and the North-west a year, who goes into hospital as an immigrant patient, and for his maintenance the department pays 90 cents a day. Last year we paid Calgary Hospital $459; Medicine Hat, $1,211.40, and Edmonton General Hospital, $614.20.

As to uniforms, when I took charge of the department, each officer was allowed a summer and a winter uniform. My deputy tells me that that policy was followed until the 1st July, 1898. Thinking the allowance too liberal, it was cut down at that time. Since the 1st July, then, the rule has been to allow a suit of clothes, with an extra pair of trousers, an overcoat and a hat or cap. The fact that two or three sets of articles are charged against one individual is due to the fact that the accounts did not come in, and so the accounts for more than one year appear in one Report of the Auditor General. I am satisfied there has been no violation of the rule.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. FOSTER. But this Chesterfield seems to be a violation of the rule. I object to the Chesterfield.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman's acquaintance with the fashions will inform him that a Chesterfield is an ordinary overcoat. It was a stylish garment many years ago, but is a very ordinary one now.

Mr. FOSTER. I understood the hon. Minister to say that an overcoat was not allowed.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No; an overcoat is included.

Mr. FOSTER. There is just this objection—that in Winnipeg, as the oldest, or the youngest, inhabitants will tell you, no one wears an overcoat; the climate does not make it necessary.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman mentions also the case of provisions. We cannot have an absolute rule with regard to that, but must allow the Immigration Commissioner considerable discretion. If there are people in the immigrant building for whom it is necessary to buy provisions, he is allowed to buy a small quantity to meet their wants. Nineteen-twentieths of the people who go to the immigrant building are able to buy their own provisions. In the case of the Doukhobors, the provisions were charged up against the committee's fund. The object we seek to gain is to prevent dissatisfaction and avoid having people send out reports that they are in Canada and in destitute circumstances.

As for the item regarding relief in connection with prairie fires, the only explanation I can give is, I suppose, that the Immigration Commissioner has employed some new settlers in connection with the prairie fires, and has paid them. The Auditor General's summary of the nature of a bill is sometimes misleading. The Immigration Commissioner could not obtain payment for relief for prairie fires in the ordinary way, so I fancy the explanation must be what I have suggested. If the hon. gentleman desires, I will look into the matter and get the details.

Another item was with regard to expenses of getting labourers for the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. We made a special offer to place a lot of incoming Welsh people. They were farmers in Wales, and they left there on the undertaking, on the part of our agent, that they would be placed on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, and should have work for a certain length of time. At the same time there were some Canadians in Duluth who wrote and asked if an effort could not be made to get them, and an agent was appointed in Duluth for the purpose of going around amongst the Canadians and making arrangements to get them to come up, and a number of them were sent up to the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, and some of them afterwards took up land. Some expense was incurred in connection with that, to which this item refers. The whisky the hon. gentleman refers to was purchased for quarantine.

Mr. FOSTER. As a germ-killer ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, it is said to be very effective for that purpose. In regard to the general question of expenditure in the United States, I may say that a good deal of it has gone for advertising in the United States papers, but we have not done so for the purpose of subsidizing American papers for the Liberal party. Nor have we spent money for that purpose in advertising in Canada, though I am free to confess that, other things being equal, I would be disposed to give our own friends the preference. I want to say this, that, in my judgment, and as a result of my observations in regard to this subject, of all the money we have spent on this branch of immigration the best results have been obtained from advertising. The money that has been spent in advertising in the United States has largely been expended in the purchase of the patent inside of newspapers with large circulations, or in the purchase of space, which we buy from such institutions as the Chicago Newspapers' Union. I need not go into lengthy explanations on that subject, because I discussed it fully last session. We have found that class of advertising extremely useful. In the case of the Chicago Newspapers' Union, we bought a certain amount of space and we changed the plan of the advertisement as often as we liked, giving them so much an inch. Of course the papers containing the advertisement were addressed to the agents, and our experience has been that of the ordinary advertiser in any commercial business, that as soon as we stopped issuing those advertisements, almost immediately letters of inquiry addressed to our agents began to fall off. The letters of inquiry that come to our agents are in almost exact proportion to the amount of advertising that we do of various kinds. I think the most effective advertising, according to the reports of our officers is the patent inside. In the case of one Chicago paper, the Chicago "American," we bought 200,000 copies, and our officers sent a large number of these papers to seedsmen throughout the North-west, and I think they did a vast amount of good. This matter of sending out literature is very much like firing off bullets, only one bullet in ten is going to kill anybody; but if you do not fire off any you will not kill anybody. We have kept on following various lines of propaganda for the purpose of keeping information before the public.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. The hon. gentleman states that 200,000 copies of the Chicago "American" were circulated. Do I understand that these copies were circulated to single individuals, that is to 200,000 different addresses, or were they sent in bulk to certain sections of the North-western portion of the United States ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The 200,000 were mailed from the office of publication. The postage was paid by the publishers of the paper, and they were mailed to addresses that we furnished. They did the mailing.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. You furnished the 200,000 addresses ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, we furnished 200,000 addresses. Our officers and the publishers worked together in the business of getting the addresses, but our officers did most of the work in that direction. The office of publication sent the papers to the addresses we furnished. We have the list of addresses now somewhere in the department.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. In that case I think the money was well expended.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am going to say this with regard to the general question of immigration from the United States. When I organized the staff and took charge of it in the spring of 1897, there was no movement whatever of population from the United States to Canada. If there was any movement at all it was the other way, more were leaving than were coming in. There had been some slight movement a few years before, but it had died out. Now, the fact is that the movement of population from the United States has grown from the time that work was begun until last year we had nearly 10,000 agricultural settlers from Michigan and the north-western states. We trace those settlers almost altogether to the places where our agents had been working, and I am bound to say that I have not the least doubt that we would not have had more than one or two thousand such immigrants were it not for that kind of work. I would not go so far as to say that we might not have got some people from the western states, but we would not have got one-third or one-quarter as many. In my judgment, and in the judgment of my officers, the immigration work has to be carried on in the same manner as the sale of any commodity ; just as soon as you stop advertising and missionary work the movement is going to stop. Last year, for instance, we introduced a new scheme. We secured the State Editorial Association in two or three states to go west over the Canadian Pacific Railway. We had them entertained and carefully looked after all the way, they were in charge of the officers of the department, and practically all the country editors went away with a very excellent idea of Canada, and a large amount of information they never possessed before. They went back and wrote up Canada in glowing style in all their papers.

That happened in two or three states last year. This year we have taken the National Editorial Association. They have been at the coast and they have just got back now, having been in charge of one of our agents and they will go back to their homes and give favourable reports of what they have seen. Of course, this is the very best kind of advertising. It does not cost much, and it is the very best kind of advertising that we can get, because when the editors are writing from the result of their own personal observations, they are more likely to impress the people than if ordinary advertising matter were presented to them. They have been disposed to treat us in a friendly way. That may somewhat arise from the fact that we entertain them to some extent, but the amounts that are expended in such entertainments are only trifling. I am quite aware that some of the office expenses in the north-western states are large. We have attempted to cut them down, but they cannot be reduced very much without curtailing the amount of work that we are doing. It must be a question for the committee to decide as to whether we should reduce the sum devoted to this work or not. If we reduce the expenditure we will get fewer settlers, and the number of settlers we are getting is pretty largely in proportion to the amount of work we do. We have an excellent lot of officers in the western states who are well qualified for the work and industrious. The work, as I pointed out yesterday, has been much more successful than I had any idea it would be when we started it. We have succeeded in getting a most desirable lot of people from the north-western states, and I think it would be a serious mistake if this work were cut down at the present time. We have practically inaugurated the movement, and people are very much in the habit of getting into the idea of going to certain places, one person following another, and having inaugurated this movement, having worked it up to such proportions that we got nearly 10,000 people last year, and I think we will get 12,000 or 14,000 this year I think it would be a serious mistake to take any chances in the way of destroying the movement at this stage. I think it should be kept up for some time, although I do not say that it should be kept up permanently. I do not think that immigration work, or the carrying on of a propaganda in foreign countries is to be regarded as permanent feature of our institutions, but until we have succeeded in establishing a movement which is securing for us a class of people, as to whose desirability there can be no question, I think it would be a mistake to allow that work to fall off. I think we should keep up the pace we have set to-day, and if possible, increase the movement, so that perhaps in a few years the movement will become permanent. There is no doubt that at the present time we have a favourable opportunity for carrying on this work amongst the people of the western states, because the idea is prevalent now, that their public lands are exhausted and information is being disseminated through the western and north-western states that we have large areas in the North-west Territories where free grant land can be obtained. Hon. gentlemen would think that everybody in the western states would know that we have free grant lands in the North-west Territories, but there seems to be an absolute and dense ignorance amongst the farming population of the western states in regard to Canada. No farther south than the southern portion of Minnesota our agents have come across communities that did not know that we could raise wheat in the North-west Territories. They thought that we were in the ice line and that it was absolutely impossible to carry on farming operations such as they were accustomed to. Our first work consisted in getting men, well known in certain communities, to come to Canada, travel through the country and go back and tell their neighbours what kind of a country they saw. They have been astounded at what they have seen and they have been the means of disseminating a great deal of information amongst the people in those communities. I have no doubt that for some years to come it will be a good investment for the Dominion of Canada to keep on disseminating that kind of information amongst the people of Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Montana, and that group of states in which there is a population of the class that is likely to make the most successful settlers in the Canadian North-west.

Mr. DAVIN. Before the hon. gentleman sits down I want to ask him to explain an item in the Auditor General's Report :

H. Walton-Jones, Scandinavian agent—
Accounts, &c., paid on account of salary and expenditure ..... $1,435 82

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This is a gentleman that I sent to Stockholm to report on the possibility of doing successful immigration work in Sweden. As the hon. gentleman is aware, there are certain of the north-western states that have been largely settled by Swedes and Norwegians, especially Swedes, who have been most excellent settlers. They have been, perhaps, the best of all the European settlers, outside of settlers from the British Isles, who have gone into the western states, Minnesota was largely settled by Norwegians and Swedes, and I thought it was desirable to get some definite and reliable information as to what could be done in Sweden in the way of inaugurating a movement of population to our west. I found great difficulty in getting anybody who would be competent and who was familiar with the language.

Mr. DAVIN. Is this gentleman familiar with the language?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, quite. He holds the degree of Doctor of Philosophy from the Swedish University and is perfectly familiar with the Swedish and also the Finnish language. He is a linguist of exceptional ability. He was recommended to me by the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), with whom I consulted upon the question. He was recommended as being the best man that could be found for that purpose; he was sent over to Sweden, he made his report and these accounts are for his expenses.

Mr. DAVIN. Is he still in the employ of the department?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No.

It being One o'clock, the Deputy Speaker left the Chair.

The House resumed at Three o'clock.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. As it is understood that there is other business for this afternoon, I beg to move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose that the other business my hon. friend refers to is the prohibition resolution?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not know that was to be brought on this afternoon. Would it make any difference to the Government to go on with Supply this afternoon, and take that to-morrow afternoon, if that is agreeable all round? I think the hon. gentleman who is to move the resolution should let us have his views as to that.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think it may be agreed that the resolution will stand until to-morrow.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. To-morrow is Friday, when a number of gentlemen leave.

The PRIME MINISTER. As we are in the last days of the session, I think it is not too much to ask members to be here on Friday and Saturday.

Mr. FOSTER. Would it not be well to have it understood that the resolution shall be moved at eleven o'clock to-morrow? That would be for the convenience of most of the members, some of whom might want to go away.

The PRIME MINISTER. That might interfere with the committees, which sit in the morning. I will tell my hon. friend later.

Salaries and expenses in connection with the administration of the Yukon district ..... $100,000

Mr. PRIOR. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Customs whether he has brought down Mr. Ogilvie's report with regard to the undervaluation of vessels?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think I have not brought that yet.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the reason of the increase in this item?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This is a vote for administration of the Yukon district under the control of the Department of the Interior. I may say that this amount was made up before I had received Mr. Ogilvie's estimate. Mr. Ogilvie's instructions were to forward at as early a date as possible an estimate of the requirements of the service in the district for the coming year, so that it could be laid before Parliament; but his estimate did not reach here before the main Estimates were made up and distributed, and I had to make up an estimate from the information which I had at my disposal, and I put it at $100,000. But when I got Mr. Ogilvie's estimate, I found that my estimate was not sufficient; so that there is a supplementary estimate to follow this, increasing the estimate to $110,000 or $115,000. The total will be $215,000. I will read the portions of Mr. Ogilvie's letter which have reference to his estimate.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. As that has not yet been laid on the Table of the House, I think it would be desirable for the hon. gentleman to read the whole letter.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The letter does not make much reference to the estimates, but it refers to other things which will afford information to the committee.

Commissioner's Office,
Dawson, Y.T., Feb. 28th, 1899.

Hon. Clifford Sifton,
Minister of Interior, Ottawa.

Sir,—I inclose herewith an estimate of the revenue of the Yukon Territory from 30th June, 1899, to June 30th, 1900, amounting to $1,507,500. This amount Mr. Lithgow and myself arrived at after going over, as nearly as we could, the previous year's revenue. This does not include, of course, the local revenue, receipts from liquors, &c., but simply that pertaining to the Dominion.

I also inclose an estimate of the probable expenditure for the next year, which consists, as you will see, to a large extent, of funds necessary for the requisite buildings. This we have placed at $100,000. I think we may assume, with reasonable certainty that this will cover all the buildings necessary in the country, and it may be that there will be a surplus. This does not include expense connected with the North-west Mounted Police, of which Mr. White will inform you. In case you decide to abandon the present system of rationing officials and giving them a living allowance, I have included an estimate on that head showing that it will require some $48,500. The estimate on account of expenditure amounts to $162,200, in all $310,700. Taking this out of the estimated revenue, we have a balance of $1,296,800, or say practically one and one-quarter millions of dollars in favour of the territory.

Of course, you can readily understand that much of the expenditure, more particularly that of buildings, will be more or less permanent, and will not be required at any future time. If the militia leave the country, it is just possible that the buildings erected for their accommodation at Selkirk will meet every requirement of the Government service at that point for years to come. They are large and commodious, and I think will suit every purpose.

The buildings erected for militia accommodation at Dawson will be required for police accommodation. The police at present are hampered for room.

In connection with this, I may say that it is not at all desirable to use the wood of this country in finishing buildings. I have written to you on this subject, however, and I will content myself by simply calling your attention to my former communication.

The A. C. Co. will bring red-wood from California at about $150 per thousand feet. Lumber, even at this cost of transport, with the original cost at the point of purchase added, I think will be cheaper in the end than the native lumber. I will advise with the agent of the A. C. Co. here, and try to secure an option on the amount necessary for the finishing of our buildings, as I understand they intend bringing a ship-load of red-wood and other good lumber from San Francisco.

I suppose what we require for Government use will be admitted free of duty. Would you kindly let me know this as soon as convenient.

It is hardly possible the lumber will reach here before the 1st of July.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) WILLIAM OGILVIE,
Commissioner.

Note.—In addition to the above, Mr. Ogilvie estimated $7,400 for two alco-vapour launches, and $2,400 for two engineers for boats, their services to be used in other capacities during the winter, at $1,200 each .....

9,800

$176,000

These launches are particularly well adapted for that country, because they are run with alcohol and coal oil. A comparatively small quantity of coal oil will run one of these launches a long while. They do not have to carry any fuel, and are, consequently, the best kind of small boats for the police force. We purchased one last year and require to purchase two this year.

Mr. HAGGART. How do you keep the motive power?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is coal oil and alcohol. The coal oil furnishes the heat and the alcohol is vaporized and condensed over and over, so that very little is required. The great advantage of vessels of that kind is that they can catch up to any other boat which has to stop for fuel.

In addition to this $176,000, I have asked in the supplementary Estimates for $35,000, general vote for unforeseen expenditure. Last year we had to issue special warrants for a very large amount. I thought it advisable to ask this general vote, which would be available in case of unforeseen and pressing expenditure or of the expenses over-running the estimates.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend will see how utterly impossible it is for the House to pass a vote of that kind. He comes down and asks for a lump sum, and then reads over a mass of details which the House cannot follow at all. These details should be in the Estimates themselves. I would ask him to let the item stand until we can see these details to-morrow in "Hansard." That is the best we can do under the circumstances, but what my hon. friend ought to have done was to give these details in the Estimates.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think the suggestion of the hon. gentleman is reasonable, and that the item should stand.

Item allowed to stand.

For Ocean and Mail Service between Great Britain and Canada..... $126,533 33

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Will the hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) explain the position of the fast line service?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I may say that at present the position is this: As he knows perfectly well, no doubt, the negotiations which were carried on with the firm of Petersen, Tate & Co. proved unsuccessful. We have not considered it expedient, at the present moment, to advertise for tenders, for reasons which, I think, the hon. gentleman himself stated and which he will well understand. There has been an enormous increase, as he knows, in the price of the material of which these vessels are composed. Moreover, after making careful inquiry, we found the various English ship-yards were so crowded that it was practically impossible to find a suitable firm able to undertake such a project; and, even if we did conclude an agreement, we could have had no hope of the immediate undertaking of the work of construction. Therefore, for the present, the matter must be considered in abeyance.

Mr. FOSTER. What is it proposed to do with this vote?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) is aware that this is the same vote which has been given for a great number of years to provide a weekly mail service between Great Britain and Canada. He is also aware, because, I think, the same state of things occurred during his own time, that we have not, for a considerable number of years, been very successful in obtaining such a service as, I think, Canada ought to have. The arrangement with the Allans and Torrances terminated. It is extended, if I remember aright, until the first of next month, or thereabouts. For the next few months, that is, until the close of the season of navigation, we propose to carry on the service with the Elder-Dempster line. But I am carrying on negotiations at this moment with several steamship companies, the Allans and Torrances among the number, and I hope to be able to report to the House—but, I fear, not before the close of the present session—some more satisfactory proposition for the service than we now have. Of course, the hon. gentleman is well aware of the contention that has been put forward by these steamship companies. They allege that the subsidy is wholly and entirely inadequate, that no service such as I mention, and such as I think we ought to have, can be obtained for the money. In that contention there may be some considerable truth, I am bound to say; and it is possible, although, of course, I do not want to commit myself on the point, that we may have to enlarge our ideas on that subject after we have received replies from several steamships companies that I am, as I have said, in communication with. I do not think it would serve the interest of the public to go into minute details on that point, nor to express any opinion as to what the sum should be. For the present, as I say, the service is about to be taken up by the Elder-Dempster line.

Mr. FOSTER. On what terms?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. On the same terms—£500 for the round trip.

Mr. FOSTER. Sailing from Quebec?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes, from Quebec and Montreal during the remainder of the season.

Mr. FOSTER. Why did you change from the old steamships to these?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Because, I am sorry to say, the service they rendered was not a satisfactory one.

Mr. FOSTER. In point of speed?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. What speed do these people give?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. They propose to do somewhat better than the other line, and I think they will probably attain it. If the hon. gentleman desires it, I will give the last details supplied me of the west bound sailings of the Allan line. This is corrected for mean time:

Name of Vessel.	Left Merville.	Net time.
Parisian ....	Nov. 20	8 days 3 hours 15 minutes.
Laurentian ..	Dec. 4	9 " 20 " 15 "
Parisian ....	Dec. 23	10 " 23 " 10 "
Californian..	Jan. 7	8 " 9 " 45 "
Numidian ..	Jan. 27	13 " 6 " 45 "
Californian..	Feb. 10	8 " 23 " 33 "
Laurentian ..	Mar. 3	9 " 16 " 30 "
Californian..	Mar. 18	8 " 1 " 25 "
Mongolian ..	April 7	10 " 0 " 55 "

I may mention that the understanding with them was that from Merville to Halifax the service should average about 8 days. These figures show an average of 9 days, 17 hours, 17 minutes—close upon ten days. I think we could hardly describe that as a fast mail service. I do not wish to make undue reflections on these gentlemen—they may have had trouble, stress of weather and so on; but 9 days, 17 hours, from Merville to Halifax which is considerably under ten knots an hour, I think, the hon. gentleman will agree with me, can hardly be described as a fast mail service.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the average time under the new arrangement?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The average in each case is to be the same—eight days. The average time, east-bound, that we have had is a trifle better—9 days, 3 hours and 11 minutes. I suppose the hon. gentleman does not care about the details. I have made inquiries regarding the Elder-Dempster Line, and all I have heard is in their favour. Their steamers average 8,500 tons, and they are new vessels, whereas nearly all these others, as the hon. gentleman knows, are old vessels. The "Parisian," if my memory serves me well, is twenty years old. She has been refitted. The others are old vessels. The Elder-Dempster vessels are the finest freight craft coming into Montreal. Two of them were built in 1898, and two of them were finished only this year. I believe they are likely to perform a very fair average rate.

Mr. WALLACE. How many knots an hour would they make accomplishing the trip in eight days?

Mr. FOSTER.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. About 12½ knots an hour. The average speed, under the figures I have given, the hon. gentleman will see, is about 9½ knots an hour, speed which will hardly serve our purpose. As I say, the steamship company allege the amount is too small. We, of course, maintain, and I think with some reason, that $126,000 is a substantial solatium and the volume of passenger trade and so on ought to induce them to put on a better class of boats. They have not seen their way clear to do that.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the average tonnage of the mail matter carried?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. That belongs, of course, to the Post Office Department. But we only send out one-seventh of our mail as the service is only once in seven days. At present the vast bulk of the mail business west of Montreal is perfectly certain to go by other routes. Almost invariably, the post office authorities state, letters requiring speed are marked to go via New York. If they are not so marked, the bulk of them would probably go by our own line. I think that letters posted the later days of the week would go via our own line, but up to Wednesday they would be sent by other steamers.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. A letter would not be held over for the Canadian line—

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The hon. gentleman will understand this belongs to the Postmaster General's Department; I am only speaking from recollection. My deputy tells me that as a rule they are sent up to Wednesday by other lines, and those that are not marked via New York, after Wednesday, would go by the Canadian line. Parcel post, of course, goes by our own line.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. We could hardly hope that people would keep letters up to Wednesday for the Canadian line, when they can get the Cunard on Thursday.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. No, I say those that go into hands after Wednesday go by the Canadian line unless marked otherwise.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. A letter sent by the Canadian line would not be mailed till Thursday.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Exactly.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. And letters that are mailed up till Thursday go via New York, because the last letters for England via New York, after the White Star mail of Wednesday, leave on Thursday afternoon or Thursday night to catch the Cunard mail.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not think the Government ought to hold the letters over to go by the Canadian line unless they were marked "go slow." If parties wish communications to take plenty of time, I think they might send them by the Canadian line, otherwise they would send them by the first mail they can reach. I want to ask what is the meaning of item 189, "steam communication between Halifax and Newfoundland, via Cape Breton ports, $2,000"?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. This service for some years was run by Pickford & Black as a fortnightly service. It stops at several ports on the west and south shores of Newfoundland, and calls at Grand Narrows, North Sydney, Antigonish in Nova Scotia.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Some time ago I drew the attention of my hon. friend's department to the importance of providing a subvention for the "Bruce" steamer running between Cape Breton and Newfoundland, and I understood that it was receiving the attention of the Government. I am sorry to see that there is no appropriation for it this year among these votes. If there is a single steam service entitled to the favourable consideration of the Government it is that one. An inestimable service has been afforded to Canada by that steamer in providing for a regular communication between Newfoundland and Cape Breton. The service is very efficient, and I happen to know that the winter before last they performed the service throughout the winter and throughout the year, with the omission of only one trip—the trips are weekly. I need not remind the committee that this service has led to a large amount of additional revenue being received by the Government on the Intercolonial Railway. A regular and efficient line of steam communication between Cape Breton and Newfoundland would only occupy a few hours and lead to a large amount of communication both of passengers and of traffic. A railway on the Island of Newfoundland now carries beyond St. John and to various other portions, all the products of Canada and I can hardly understand why this matter has not been provided for in these Estimates.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. As I mentioned to the hon. gentleman, negotiations were going on, and are now going on, but they have not reached such a point as would justify us in taking a vote in this House.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. As this service has really been in operation for a considerable time without any aid, I think it would be well for my hon. friend to take an appropriation, subject to the Government making satisfactory arrangements with the parties. If no appropriation is made, the Government will be powerless to provide for it, even though they may succeed in completing the negotiations.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I am afraid my hon. friend's desk-mate (Mr. Foster) would consider that rather unconstitutional, to take a vote before we were able to give reasonable details. But I think, after the expression of opinion made by the leader of the Opposition, that probably all parties concerned would be satisfied with a promise that we will continue the negotiations with a view of arriving at a conclusion. It has not escaped our observation that since the completion of the Newfoundland Railway there is a chance for carrying on a considerable traffic with Newfoundland, much more than we have done heretofore the hon. gentleman is perfectly right about that. It is of interest to us in two ways, because, as owners of the Intercolonial Railway, we derive a possible profit. But he knows also that in dealing with our sister colonies we are obliged sometimes to wait a considerable time before we can bring them to the exact point where we would like to conclude a bargain.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not succeed in getting an answer as to the speed that the Elder-Dempster vessels would make.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I hope the Elder-Dempsters will be able to give us a uniform speed of about 12½ knots, not an excessive speed, I am bound to say, but probably as much as we can hope to get for the money, and considerably in excess of what we have been getting. But I may say, to prevent misapprehension, that this is purely a temporary arrangement. I am now carrying on negotiations with other steamship companies, and am in hopes to get a service which will commend itself to both sides of the House. I think we are all agreed that the present service cannot be considered satisfactory. The leader of the Opposition has frequently stated in his place that the service has been a very slow service during all these years. I felt reluctant to terminate our connection with those who have served us so long, but I really must ask for better service before I submit this vote again to the House, and I hope to get one. It is fair to say that we may have to consider the possibility of the question of recommending some larger appropriation, but that can wait until we see what bargain can be made with these parties.

Mr. FOSTER. I could not help but be a little surprised at the concluding remark made by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce. In speaking of the exceeding slowness of the fast service he came to the conclusion that he thought that hon. gentlemen on this side of the House would agree with him that it was time to have a faster service. My hon. friend must think that we are very much asleep indeed if we do not appreciate the humour of that remark. The trouble has been just the other way. It has taken some ten or twelve years for hon. gentlemen on this side of the House to get their hon. friends on the other side of the House up to the mark of acknowledging that something effective should be done towards getting a faster service. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce has given to-day certain reasons which throw a very instructive light on the costly nature of the delay which was made by hon. gentlemen themselves in not pursuing this fast Atlantic service with more reasonable speed and in a more businesslike way. They have torn up a contract which would have placed a fast Atlantic service in operation a year ago, and after all these years of delay, they come down to the House and say that the conditions have so changed that any attempt now to get a fast Atlantic service would be attained with very much greater expense, in fact that such is the crowded state of the shipyards that it would be almost impossible to ask the companies to commence the construction of a fast line of vessels with the idea of getting them within a reasonable time. This is rather instructive and I have no doubt that hon. gentlemen will read the lesson which has been given to the House by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce this afternoon. Does the hon. gentleman know what proportion of the mail goes by these vessels? I am afraid that an infinitely small portion, comparatively, of our mails goes by these slow vessels. It is not worth considering whether we are not wasting our money entirely by giving any amount like this to freight vessels? There may be a few individuals of the political persuasion of my hon. friend who mark their letters to go slow, and they will go by these freight vessels, but I apprehend that almost all of our business mail goes by way of the United States. Still we are in the position that we are paying $126,000 in the way of subsidy to these freight vessels.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I am not at all disposed to deny the justice of the criticism made by the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster), and it is a very questionable point if we cannot do better. It is a question whether we are justified in paying this $126,000, but I will call the attention of the hon. member for York and the hon. leader of the Opposition to the fact that while commercial reasons are wanting, they must bear in mind that Canada, at their instance, as well as ours, has been trying very hard to provide a winter service, and it is largely in regard to keeping up our winter service that this money is required. There is a difficulty in providing a service from St. John and Halifax in the winter, and it is more for that purpose than any other, although it is open to the criticism that a very small proportion of our mails go by these vessels. I had a statement prepared, and it showed that about five or six hundred pounds went by each of these craft.

Mr. FOSTER. That would be, what proportion?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. One-eighth or one-tenth—quite an insignificant proportion; there is no doubt about that. Business men, except possibly during the winter when the service is supplied from Halifax and St. John, will mark their letters "via New York."

Mr. BERGERON. As far as Montreal is concerned, I believe that nine-tenths of the letters go by way of New York. They are not always marked "via New York." The newspapers publish the time of the departure of the mail trains for New York during the whole week, so that persons, writing letters for the old country, are advised of the times at which they can post their letters in order to catch the mails by way of New York. There is only a very small proportion that goes by way of the Canadian lines.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. That is the case during five days in the week.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. Do I understand, from the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, that these steamers stop at Queens-town or Moville.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The Elder-Dempster steamers stop at Queenstown.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. And the mails will be delivered there, the same as they are by the Cunard liners?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes, just the same.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. And forwarded in the same way?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes.

Mr. COCHRANE. I would like to draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce to a statement made by Sir William Van Horne. I want to ask the hon. Minister if, when this bonus is given to freight boats to carry the mails, he will have any control over freight rates? Canadians are in a very humiliating position to-day. If I recollect rightly, Sir William Van Horne stated at a public meeting at Quebec that it cost ninepence, more than double, to take a ton of butter from Canada across the ocean than from the United States, and double to take a ton of cheese across. It seems to me when we give these large subventions to carry the mails and when we do not expect that they will make fast time or that they will carry a large proportion of the mails, the hon. Minister should have something to say in reference to freight rates and not have a lot of money taken out of the pockets of the farmers by the extortionate freights that are charged by these steamship companies.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. We have no control over freight rates.

Mr. COCHRANE. I think the Government should have some control when these boats receive these large subsidies for carrying the mails.

Mr. WALLACE. It looks to me as if the whole of this business was not satisfactory to Canadians. We are paying $120,000 a year for carrying one-seventh, presumably of the Canadian mails to the old country. That is £500 per round trip, and what service do we get from them? The steamship companies are put to no extra expense; it does not cost them a dollar more, because while the agreement with the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce is that they are to make a trip in about eight days, or at the rate of about 12½ or 13 knots an hour, the distance being a little less than 2,400 miles from Halifax to Moville, it is not a very high rate of speed when it takes them nine days and seventeen hours, or forty-one hours longer than they should according to the understanding with the Government to make the trip. The steamship companies have not put themselves to one dollar's extra expense or trouble, apparently, in order to carry the mails promptly. The Minister could not tell us the exact weight of the mails carried by the steamship; but we all know that it is quite small, and that if paid for as freight, it would not cost £100, or anything like it; yet the company receives £500 for the services it renders. The steamship has to call at Moville, going and coming; but I presume that it would do that in any case for the convenience of its own business. I could understand this large subsidy, if the Government had an understanding with the company by which they would run their vessels, say, 18 knots an hour, and deliver the mails in six or seven days between ports; but the Government have, apparently, received no compensation from the company in the form of prompt service. I think the Government must look for a prompter service. New York companies are giving a service of from 20 to 22 knots an hour, so that our Canadian service at 12½ knots an hour leaves us completely in the shade. For the carrying of the mails, as well as for passengers and freight, a fast service is equally necessary, and these will naturally follow the fast routes, even if the cost is a little more. Therefore, to my mind it becomes the more important that the Government should pay greater attention to the necessity of a fast Atlantic service. I remember, two years ago going over on the steamship "Canada," of the Dominion line, sailing from Boston. That steamer made the passage at about 16 knots an hour, the fastest passage ever made from the city of Boston; and the Bostonians who travelled on the vessel, though it was a Canadian vessel, were exceedingly proud to have a vessel running from their port that made that speed. If the Government are unable to get a steamship service of 20 or 22 knots an hour, which I think it would be exceedingly desirable to have, they should attempt something at a lower rate, say at 18 knots an hour, which would be 50 per cent increase on the speed which we have to-day. It is very unsatisfactory to find the Canadian route getting behind the times. Many members of this House will remember when the Canadian route was the fastest on the Atlantic Ocean, when the business and reputation of Canada were built up by a subsidy, if I remember rightly, of $8,000 a week, or $416,000 a year. That was denounced at the time by Opposition journals as a suicidal policy for Canada; but in its results it was most satisfactory, because it built up our Canadian route. It started up other steamers; it made the St. Lawrence route the favourite route across the ocean; and it was beneficial to Canada in a hundred different ways. Therefore, if we cannot secure a fast Atlantic service except at a considerable increased cost, we should bend every effort to secure such a service, taking care at the same time to have the most improved cold-storage arrangements in the ships. You cannot fit an old ship with cold-storage facilities which will be advantageous to the business. You must get these cold-storage arrangements put in new vessels, and you must take advantage of all modern improvements in that respect. By that means you will have fast mails carried to and from Canada, a fast passenger service, and, what is perhaps more important, a cold storage service for the rapid transit of perishable goods, which will reach the British markets promptly and in excellent condition. Nothing can be more promotive of the best interests of Canada than such a scheme, properly carried out.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I have nothing to say in contradiction to what the hon. gentleman has stated. I quite agree with him as to the extreme importance of having cold-storage arrangements. These vessels, which are of the most modern construction, two of which were built last year and two this year, are reported to us as having all the cold-storage facilities that the interests of the trade require. As for the rest, we shall lay to heart the suggestions of my hon. friend; but he must not complain if we have to ask for a little more money to carry them out.

Steam service, fortnightly between St. John and Liverpool, G.B., during the winter season of 1889-1900, not less than ten round trips ..... $20,000

Mr. MONTAGUE. I suppose this is really a part of the project for which a large expenditure is being made by the Minister of Railways at St. John, for the building of wharfs and elevators with the purpose of carrying wheat around by the Intercolonial Railway to the steamers at St. John?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman knows, I presume, that when this subsidy was originally granted, St. John was not our terminal port. I had left this in so as to have a somewhat freer hand in dealing with the question of winter service, but it is only fair to say that I may or may not require it. It will depend somewhat on the arrangements made. It will be as well to leave it in, in the interests of the port of St. John, the trade of which, I am glad to say, is developing very rapidly. The money was not used last year inasmuch as we had a weekly service from St. John to Liverpool all the time. The item itself is for a fortnightly service during the winter season between St. John and Liverpool, not less than ten round trips. None of the money was used last year.

Mr. FOSTER. Out of what vote was the service paid last year?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. This was not required last year, because we had a regular weekly mail service.

Mr. FOSTER. It was paid out of the vote for ocean and mail service between Great Britain and Canada?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Partly.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The point I was speaking on, perhaps, does not come up particularly in connection with this vote, but I understand that the policy of the Government, as enunciated by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, to endeavour to export wheat by St. John, carrying it round by the Intercolonial Railway, and using the facilities for which money was voted this session. I have no hesitation in saying that any man who ever looked at the routes knows this is utter nonsense. The Grand Trunk Railway uses Portland, the Canadian Pacific Railway has its short line from St. John; and if the Intercolonial Railway is to carry wheat to St. John for export, it will have to enter into competition with the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway, and I am told by those who know the trade thoroughly, who know every inch of the ground, who are engaged in business with the Canadian Pacific Railway, that its short line, hundreds of miles shorter than the Intercolonial Railway, never carried a pound of wheat to St. John except at a loss, by reason of the competition of the Grand Trunk Railway. And if the Canadian Pacific Railway carries that wheat at a loss over a road hundreds of miles shorter than the Intercolonial Railway, I think the House will see that it is utter folly for the Intercolonial Railway to attempt to compete and to make that competition a paying investment for the people of Canada, or even a profitable investment in the way of trade. I am told that the Canadian Pacific Railway would not carry wheat to St. John to-day over its line were it not for the purpose of encouraging the steamers whose return cargoes they get.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may say that I do not quite agree with my hon. friend who has just spoken. This country went to a very large expense in the construction of what is called the Short Line Railway from Montreal to the harbour of St. John, in the hopes of competing with the shorter distance via Portland, and my information is entirely different from that of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. Sir William Van Horne told me that he was very much delighted to find that by a combination between the steamships from the harbour of St. John and the railway, they were enabled to compete in the carriage of wheat with the line to Portland, and he saw no reason why St. John, at all events, might not be made a very important winter port of Canada.

For steam service between Halifax, St. John, Nfld., and Liverpool, from 1st July, 1899, to 30th June, 1900..... $20,000

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. This is the estimate made for several years. The only thing of note about it is that the service is now performed by the Furniss Withy Company.

Mr. FOSTER. Under contract?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Year by year. They have no permanent contract.

For steam service between St. John and Glasgow during the winter of 1899-1900 $7,500

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. This is carried on by Donaldson Bros., of whom Reford & Co. are the agents. Ten round trips during the winter. We continue the contract with the same firm. I believe the service has been very reasonably satisfactory, all things considered, and there is this advantage, that going into Glasgow you go into a great consuming centre of population.

For steam service between St. John, Dublin and Belfast during the winter of 1899-1900 ..... $7,500

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. This is carried on by the Head line, the Ulster Steamship Company, McLean & Co. being the agents. This service did not give quite the full number of trips last year, owing to alleged tempestuous weather, but apparently the service is reasonably well performed, and I think we might renew it. If they do not give the service, they do not get the pay. This is to Dublin and Belfast, both ports.

For lines of steamers to run during the summer months between St. John, Halifax and London; and during the winter months between St. John and London direct, and Halifax and London direct ..... $36,000

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. We have divided these two items. The hon. gentleman, some years ago, had this same vote, but combined it in one for $40,000, and made it read in this fashion:

For a line of steamers to run during the summer months between St. John, Halifax and London, and during the winter months between St. John and London direct and Halifax and London direct.

If there is no objection, I will restore the vote to the way in which it originally stood.

Mr. FOSTER. Will that make any difference at all in the running of the steamers in the current year as compared with the running of the steamers during the past year?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I understand not, they will be run in the same fashion.

Mr. FOSTER. From Halifax to London direct during the winter, and St. John to London direct?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. It makes no matter which it is.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I do not think so.

Steam communication between St. John and Digby from 1st July, 1899, to 30th June, 1900 ..... $12,500

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. This, the hon. gentleman knows, is conducted by the "Prince Rupert," as heretofore.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to call the attention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to a petition, a copy of which I have, and which was received some days ago. No doubt, other hon. gentlemen have received copies of the same. This is from the millers throughout the province of Ontario, and I suppose, in the province of Quebec as well. It is signed by W. W. Ogilvie, Montreal; the James Goldie Co., Limited, of Guelph; the Lake of the Woods Milling Company, Limited, of Montreal; the McKay Milling Company, Limited, of Ottawa; the Goldie Milling Company, Limited, of Ayr, Ont.; David Plewes, of Toronto; Robert Noble, of Norval, Ont., and others. The petition reads as follows:—

July, 1899.

To the Honourable Sir Louis H. Davies, Minister of Marine and Fisheries, Ottawa.

The memorial of the undersigned millers and grain dealers of Ontario, Quebec and Manitoba humbly sheweth:

That if top wharfage is charged at Digby Pier, on flour and grain products destined to Digby and points on the Dominion Atlantic Railway, we cannot send our shipments via the Intercolonial and Canadian Pacific Railways through the port of St. John as against lower rail and water rates made through the United States port of Boston, which route has for years past controlled Canadian flour traffic in that section of Nova Scotia.

That our desire is to patronize the Canadian routes at all times, and in our opinion cancelling the top wharfage at Digby would be a move in the right direction; nor would it, in our opinion, be taken as a precedent that because top wharfage was taken off at Digby, it should also be taken off at other points where top wharfage is demanded—the cancelling of top wharfage at Digby not being for local interest, but a general benefit to the whole country at large.

Your memorialists, therefore, humbly pray that flour, grain and grain products, in car-loads from Quebec, Ontario and the West, for Digby and points on the Dominion Atlantic Railway, may be free of top wharfage charges at Digby Pier.

I confess that this is a matter with which I am not very familiar, but I know the high standing of the memorialists, and I am sure that if the representations they make are consented to by the Government, it will be advantageous to the shipping interests. I address the Minister of Trade and Commerce, in the absence of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), to whom this memorial is addressed, and I trust he will take the matter into consideration and confer with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to see what can be done. It seems to me, from the nature of the petition, that a very great interest is involved, more especially as, accompanying this petition, there is another, signed by dealers in flour, as I understand it, in the lower provinces, who seem to agree with the shippers of flour as to the propriety of the course which is petitioned for.

Mr. MILLS. I desire to second what my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) has said. I have received petitions of a like nature with those he mentions. Being, perhaps, somewhat better acquainted with the lower provinces and with these memorialists than my hon. friend, I may be permitted to call attention to the names of some of them particularly known to me: Geo. Armstrong, Frank L. Roop, John H. Charlton, of Middleton; H. T. Warne, of Digby; S. F. Jefferson, Shaffner, Bros., H. H. Whitman and E. Young, of Lawrencetown; L. D. Shafner, Shafner & Piggott, H. R. Shaw, J. E. Lloyd, Joseph I. Foster, W. W. Chesley, John Lockett & Son, James E. Burns, Runciman, Randolph & Co., T. A. Foster, W. A. Kinney and J. W. Forsyth, of Bridgetown; W. J.

Shannon, John L. Clark, Geo. E. Corbitt and W. McCormick & Son, of Annapolis. All these are well known to me as names of important dealers in flour from the lower provinces. I desire to press upon the attention of the Government the prayer of this petition.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Of course, the hon. gentleman is aware that this is not in my department, but in that of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. If he will send me the petitions, I will take care that they are transmitted to the hon. gentleman. This, I may say, is the first I have heard of the matter, though probably, in my absence, a communication may have been addressed to the department.

Mr. MILLS. I was aware that this was in the department of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, but as my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) had brought the matter up, I rose to second him.

Mr. HENDERSON. My excuse for bringing it to the attention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce is the absence of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and the lateness of the time when this opportunity offers to bring it forward. I thought it appropriate to bring it forward now, as the item we are discussing relates to Digby.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Henderson) is aware that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is not absent, but is on duty in the committee upstairs.

Mr. HENDERSON. I had forgotten that for the moment, I am not reflecting on him for his absence.

For a line or lines of steamers to run between St. John and Halifax, or either, and the West Indies and South America ..... $78,000

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I desire to call the attention of hon. gentlemen opposite to this item. As they are aware, for a considerable time there has been a monthly service between these ports performed by Pickford & Black. Very recently, the British Government have applied to us to know whether, if the service were doubled, and they paid half, we would consent to continue our present subsidy, or perhaps give $2,000 or $3,000 more. They propose, substantially, to continue the present service, which, as gentlemen are aware, touches at a number of West Indian Islands, beginning at Bermuda and going on to St. Kitts, Antigua, Montserrat, Martinique, St. Lucia, Trinidad and Demerara. This service they propose to continue, but to make it fortnightly, instead of monthly.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the regular service touch at Bermuda?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I believe it does. There are two services bound up 'n this. One is from Jamaica to Halifax.

Mr. MILLS.

Mr. WALLACE. Does this go as far as the Windward Islands?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It goes to Trinidad and British Guiana. It will practically double the service without appreciable cost to us, and the Imperial Government were very anxious that we should agree to it. I propose to lay a resolution on the Table, after the explanation that this service should be made for the term of five years, which is, I think, the term the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) originally made the contract for.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. We have obtained somewhat more favourable terms in the matter of speed, which is a matter of great importance, as I am advised by the merchants of St. John and Halifax. One voyage, at any rate, will be made several days shorter.

Mr. FOSTER. How often?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Each alternate voyage would be made considerably shorter than it is at present. The hon. gentleman will see there is a great number of places to call at, and when they make a swifter voyage they have to drop some of these, and touch them on their return voyage. We are told it would be a great advantage to the merchants of the maritime provinces if they could communicate with Trinidad and British Guiana more frequently than at present when the voyage consumes 11 or 14 days, and this Pickford & Black promise to do, if the House consents to the arrangement which the British Government promised to make.

Mr. FOSTER. With the same boats?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. No, they promise to give us somewhat better boats. The present service is performed by the "Taymouth Castle," the "Duart Castle" and the "Beta." They promise to build new boats for this service, but they cannot do it instantaneously. They promise to give them the early part of next year, though I will not pledge myself to their performance.

Mr. FOSTER. In the meantime will they put on a fast boat?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. They say so; and they will also re-engine the "Taymouth Castle" and the "Duart Castle" for the present service. I may say that the "Bet" is engaged in the Jamaica service. The parties have stipulated with the British Government that the service to Trinidad and British Guiana shall touch at Bermuda.

Mr. FOSTER. My impression was that at first the service did not touch at Bermuda, but that the Jamaica service did.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The memorandum I have states that the usual service, that is the service for the West India Islands is from St. John by way of Halifax to Demerara, touching at the British Islands on the route, commencing at Bermuda and then going on through St. Kitts down to Trinidad and Demerara.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the object of the British Government in giving the subsidy? I should imagine it would only be justified on the ground of greater speed and better vessels. Is it not proposed that as soon as possible better speed and regular vessels shall be given?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Certainly.

Mr. FOSTER. I know the difficulties of that route, because I had a good deal to do with the inception of it, but those difficulties ought not to be made any longer an excuse for the present service. The present contractors, I think, have done well, they did in my time. But it is complained, both in the West Indies and by our own merchants, that the time taken is a little too long, and that the vessels might be better than they are. Now, if the two governments are going to give a substantial subsidy, I think the service ought to be improved.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I quite agree with my hon. friend. I may say that the moment the proposition was mooted I insisted on these two conditions, and obtained a considerable modification in our favour. Of course, we are getting a double service. The present service is only monthly, and we are now to get a fortnightly service, which would be of considerable advantage to St. John and Halifax. As to the object of the British Government, the hon. gentleman is aware that the condition of the West India Islands for a long time past has appealed strongly to the consideration of the Imperial authorities, and this is one of the means which they have adopted—and I may say that they were very pressing upon us to join with them in this matter—this is one of the means they have adopted for the purpose of helping out the British Islands from the depression under which they are labouring.

Mr. FOSTER. With reference to these new reciprocal treaties made with the United States, I understand that Canada is not at all discriminated against.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. So they assure us.

Mr. FOSTER. Is my hon. friend able to communicate these treaties to the House?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Not yet.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No doubt the Government are in possession of information which these gentlemen when here did not hesitate to give me. They stated that they had made no arrangement with the United States that would discriminate against either British or colonial products.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We had the assurance of that in ample time as the result of negotiations between the Imperial Government and the Canadian Government.

Steam communication during the season of 1899, from the opening to the close of navigation, between the mainland and the Magdalen Islands ..... $9,000

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). This service is also connected with the Island of Cape Breton. I have had several communications from business men in the county I have the honour to represent, complaining that the service rendered by the present boat is not at all in keeping with the service which has been rendered by its predecessor. It may be remembered that a contract was made with a different firm who, I am informed, promised the Government to put a very excellent new steamer on the route. From what I can gather this has not been done, and from information, the source of which I cannot question, I am convinced that the present steamer is not at all equal to the one it superseded. One thing is certain that so far as its connection with the Island of Cape Breton is concerned, it has not at all served the people of that island as well as its predecessor on that route. I have in my possession letters received from business firms which declare that freight which reached the station at Pictou in April remained there until June, although this boat is supposed to be running between those two points. I have the letters in my desk. One of them was from a gentleman whose veracity I could not question, and who has been doing business on that coast for a long time. He says he is conducting a lobster factory along the coast of Inverness, and he tells me that the material that was necessary for conducting the factory remained in the railway station at Pictou for several weeks, although this material was very necessary to the business in which he was engaged. I would ask the hon. Minister to make inquiry and see if this new firm could not place a better boat on that route, or at least, a boat equal to its predecessor, or whether the managers of that boat would not see to it that the freight, between the points indicated, is properly attended to.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I shall take careful note of my hon. friend's remark. If he will kindly give me some little further particulars I will cause immediate inquiry to be made. In dealing with freight there is sometimes this difficulty : During the winter a great deal of freight accumulates and cannot be removed at once. It requires a considerable number of trips to take it all, and that, I am informed, was the cause of the delay the hon. gentleman complains of in handling freight. But if the service is not performed in a satisfactory way. I will consider it a favour if the hon. gentleman will acquaint us with the facts, and we will lose no time in endeavouring to provide a remedy.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). I will place these letters in the hands of the hon. Minister, and he will see for himself that the complaint I have made is well grounded. In regard to freight accumulating during winter, shippers scarcely ever ship anything by that route after the close of navigation. So that it must have accumulated after that time.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I happen to be acquainted with the service in question. This service is performed between Pictou and the Magdalen Islands. I am much surprised to hear the remarks of the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. McLennan), because shippers from the Magdalen Islands are simply jubilant over the new service. Only the other day I received letters from lobster packers showing that they were satisfied with this service. In addition to providing communication with the Magdalen Islands, the steamer performs a new service by going to Bryon Island, which is ten miles away from the main group of islands, and by stopping at many more ports. Tenders were called early this spring for this service, and Messrs. Hart & Leslie, of Halifax, who are well known in the maritime provinces, got the contract at a very late period this spring. Now, my hon. friend is well aware that, as soon as they got the contract from the Government, Mr. Leslie went to England for the purpose of getting a new vessel of size, speed and good freight accommodation. Unfortunately, he did not succeed, and he came back and bought, at once, at Halifax, the steamer "Lunenburg," which gives ample space. I am aware that the complaints which are made now from Cape Breton are made by the people who wanted to get the contract themselves, and I can give their names if necessary.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). That is not the case at all.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce whether tenders were called for this service ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) And was the contract given at an increased figure ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The memorandum I have is that tenders were advertised for, but the remuneration demanded by the tenderers was so much in excess of what it was considered expedient to pay that none of these tenders were accepted, and after that we made an arrangement with Mr. Leslie.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) With tender ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Without further tender.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) For the same service ? My information is that it was for a different service entirely.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I think not.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The service is much better than it was last year. I happen to know something about this question. The steamer which ran between Pictou and the Magdalen Islands last year, would not go to Bryon Island, would not stop at certain other ports, and there were difficulties in regard to the mail service. Now much better accommodation is provided. For instance, the steamer stops at Point Basse, and it goes, once a month, to Bryon Island, which is inhabited by about 300 fishermen during the summer. Both the accommodation and the mail service are improved.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) I am not acquainted with the service given at present by the boat, but my information is that the service is not carried out under the conditions contemplated by the original tenders, and that a new arrangement was made privately with the party who is now performing the service. My information is, that if new tenders had been called for on the basis of the arrangement as now made, other parties would have tendered for it on the basis of the arrangement made with the present contractors.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). I was just going to call the attention of the hon. Minister to the fact that Mr. Leslie has the contract, not as the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux) has said, according to his tender, because Mr. Leslie has not his contract according to any tender. As has been remarked, tenders were asked for under a different arrangement entirely, and I repeat that I know business men along the western coast of Cape Breton, who had no intention whatsoever, and never had, of tendering, or of engaging in any business of this kind, complained, and justly complained, to my personal knowledge, that their freight was not properly attended to. It is quite true, however, that the approval of the hon. member for Gaspé is explained by the fact that the additional service that this boat renders is rendered to the lobster factories on Magdalen Islands, the owner of which is Mr. Leslie.

Mr. LEMIEUX. He has no factory there.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). Will the hon. gentleman tell me that Robert Leslie does not operate several factories on the Magdalen Islands ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Not on Bryon Island.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). I know that Mr. Leslie is a very extensive lobster packer on the Magdalen Islands, that he owns this steamer, and that he got the contract outside of the tenders, and having got the contract, I feel that the interests of these people should not be neglected without protest. I shall take the opportunity at once of placing in the hands of the hon. Minister the complaints that have reached me, and I will say to the hon. Minister also that, to my personal knowledge, this boat has not given satisfaction to the Island of Cape Breton, where it is supposed to touch.

Mr. FOSTER. What boat is now being used ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The "Lunenburg."

Mr. FOSTER. What boat was on the route last year ?

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). The "St. Olaf."

Mr. FOSTER. What are the comparative merits of these two boats ? Have they the same tonnage ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. About the same.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) The old boat was much better.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I think the "St. Olaf" was somewhat larger.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). She was much larger—a splendid boat.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. She was somewhat larger, I understand, but, I believe, the "Lunenburg" is considerably the faster boat of the two.

Mr. FOSTER. It seems to be rather an interesting situation, and naturally the difference becomes a little remarkable. I think that the "St. Olaf" was a good vessel, and that her size and capacity made her fit for the work. When the "Lunenburg" is a smaller vessel, the fact that freight is being accumulated can be easily explained. She had not the capacity for removing the freight. I do not think my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce is able to say that Mr. Leslie got his business by tender, because it appears that the conditions were changed, and that the service which the "Lunenburg" is doing a different service in many respects from what was called for in the advertisement for tenders, and that consequently, those who tendered on the old basis have not had a fair chance of tendering on the new basis. This may be partially explained by the fact that Mr. Leslie is, I believe, a very strong friend of the Administration, and that he believes that personal nearness and a certain approximation of kindred hearts has something to do with getting a contract and that he made the best use of that belief in coming to Ottawa and remaining here, and diligently pulling the wires for a considerable length of time.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I do not know what Mr. Leslie's politics are.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend, in so many cases does as he is bid. I think a quiet gentleman sitting near him felt the wires tingle when they were pulled by Mr. Leslie ; but you have a smaller boat, and a service that is not so good, given without tender by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, of all men in the Government, and you have the further fact brought out that the man who has the contract is a man who is diligently looking after the freights of his own lobster factories.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It is a larger service.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) In the first place, there were tenders in for as low an amount as the previous contract, or else I am misinformed.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it would be well if the Minister would bring down a statement of the tenders.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. My deputy informs me that the correspondence has already been laid on the Table of the House.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I understand that the "St. Olaf," which is placed in comparison with the "Lunenburg," was not available, because it had to leave the route to go on another service where the owners found a more profitable employment. As to the "Lunenburg," I was not aware, until this moment, that it performed this service. I know that it sailed out of Halifax some years ago, and that it was a very substantial vessel, and the fastest local steamer trading out of that port.

Mr. FOSTER. I happen to have information that the "St. Olaf" was available, and that one of the tenderers had offered her for the service.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). Yes, there was a tender from the "St. Olaf."

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The owner of the "St. Olaf" stated to the department that she was not available for that service because she was otherwise employed.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) That was later.

Steam communication during the season of 1899, i.e., from the opening to the closing of navigation, between Prince Edward Island and the mainland..... $10,000

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. This is the Charlottetown Steam Navigation Company.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it the same vessel?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I believe so.

Mr. MARTIN. This service is performed under contract between the Steam Navigation Company of Prince Edward Island and the Government of Canada. I would like to ask the Minister when that contract expires?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. At the close of navigation of the present year.

Mr. MARTIN. I would like to call the attention of the Minister to the fact that the trade between Prince Edward Island and the mainland has very much outgrown the service which this contract calls for. I suppose that the Minister is aware that the capacity of the boats required under the present contract is very low indeed; and that the present company have, at considerable expense and loss to themselves, placed much larger boats on this route. The province is rapidly becoming known as a summer resort, and on that account during the summer season travel between points on the mainland and the island is very large. I understand that the specifications under the existing contract only called for a boat to cost about $60,000, whereas the present company are performing the service with boats, one of which has cost $180,000; so that they are giving the Government of Canada a much better service than the contract required them to do. In the interest of the travelling public and of the people of the province, and, as I said, at a serious loss to themselves. So much progress is being made, and so much larger sums are being voted for subsidies all over Canada, that as Canada is obliged by the terms of union to give Prince Edward Island steam communication between the island and the mainland, I hope the hon. Minister, when he again calls for tenders for this service, will call for steamers having a much larger capacity than the old contract called for. As the present company are performing a satisfactory service, I am sorry that the Government have not seen their way clear to increase the subsidy, even though the old contract has not expired.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Does my hon. friend state that this is a part of the service required under the Confederation Act? I hardly think that is correct. My recollection is that the winter service is the only one stipulated for in the terms of union.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's).

Mr. MARTIN. I think the hon. Minister will find that the stipulation is both for winter and summer.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) The winter and summer service is stipulated for under the terms of union; at the time of confederation, the mail service between the island and the mainland was taken over by the Dominion Government, as stipulated in the terms of union. The company are not only carrying out the terms of the service in that respect, but they have put on two of the finest boats in the Dominion of Canada. They are first-class boats in every respect and their accommodation is everything that can be desired. In calling for new tenders, I think the only thing the Government should stipulate for is that the boats should be up to the requirements of the present boats; I think that would cover the ground fully. The present boats are, I think, all that is necessary for carrying the mails and passengers on the summer routes, and they are performing every service required of them.

Mr. MARTIN. I am sorry the hon. member for King's (Mr. Macdonald) misunderstood me. What I did say was that I hoped that if a new contract was to be entered into, it would provide for larger boats than the old contract called for. As the hon. gentleman has said, and as I said also, the Steam Navigation Company have boats on the route at present of much larger capacity than the old contract called for. What I do contend is that when new tenders are called for, boats will be placed on the route suitable to the changed conditions. With regard to the statement that this is not provided for in the terms of the union, I think the hon. Minister will find that these terms provide for "continuous steam communication between Prince Edward Island and the mainland, both in summer and in winter," and I am astonished that he is not aware of it. I think that if he will look up the British North America Act or the Act admitting Prince Edward Island into the union, he will find the words I quoted.

Steam communication from 1st July, 1899, to 30th June, 1900, between Grand Manan and the mainland ..... $4,000

Mr. FOSTER. Is this the same vessel the "Flushing"?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. No, the owner told us "The Flushing" is worn out and no longer able to perform the service. The service at present is for one trip each week between Grand Manan and St. John, calling at some other ports during the months of June, July, August and September. There is this difficulty. We find that the parties want more money than we are voting, and I do not know how I will be able to arrange it, but am trying to negotiate as best I can.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope the hon. gentleman will appreciate the absolute necessity of that service. Its geographical position is well known. There is a large population on the island of Grand Manan, and St. John is its port. And the maintenance of this steamer gives not only the mail communication absolutely necessary, but also brings the trade of that island very largely to our own merchants and business men in the city of St. John. The "Flushing" ought to be worn out by this time.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. They are building a new vessel.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope my hon. friend will be as lenient in the meantime as he can with regard to the temporary vessel, as the importance of the service is very great.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I believe it is a perfectly necessary service.

Steam communication during the season of 1899, that is to say, from the opening to the closing of navigation, between Gaspé Basin and Dalhousie ..... $11,500

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. This is now conducted by the same parties as before, the North American Transportation Company, with their old steamer the "Admiral." We had the "City of Monticello" last summer.

Mr. FOSTER. Were tenders called for ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes, I think the papers were brought down, but the tenders were not accepted, and under authority of an Order in Council this arrangement was made.

Mr. FOSTER. What do you give "The Admiral" ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. $12,500. There is a supplementary vote of $1,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Why could not a better vessel be got ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. They wanted more money, and "The Admiral," I believe, is a pretty satisfactory boat, though of a somewhat antiquated pattern.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Though "The Admiral" is not a modern boat, she gives satisfaction in the Baie des Chaleurs. The reason for the increase of $1,000 in the subsidy is because at the special request of the Board of Trade of Gaspé, the Government will force the North American Transportation Company to run their boat, whether it be "The Admiral" or any other, a month later in the season, or up to the first of January, in order to give more facilities to shippers.

Steam communication during the season of 1899, that is to say, for not less than 32 full round trips between St. John and Halifax, via Yarmouth and other way ports..... $7,000

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The steamer "City of Monticello" will be employed on this service.

Mr. FOSTER. Will she break bulk at Yarmouth or make the whole trip ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I am told that she runs the whole trip.

Mr. FOSTER. And the arrangement is made for $5,500 ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. You have a very superior boat for that.

Steam communication during the season of 1899, that is to say, from the opening to the closing of navigation, between St. John and Minas Basin ports..... $3,000

Mr. FOSTER. Is that poetical boat still the one used ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. No, the "Beaver" is the boat now employed.

Mr. FOSTER. What has become of the "Hiawatha" ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. She was sold.

Mr. FOSTER. With whom is the contract made ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. With Mr. W. R. Potter, of Canning. There is some difference in the ports of call. One or two old ports are abandoned and others are substituted. She stops now at Bass River and Chevreienne.

Mr. FOSTER. Are the trips monthly ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I believe these are weekly trips.

Steam communication from 1st July, 1899, to 30th June, 1900, between Pictou, Murray Harbour, Georgetown and Montague Bridge ..... $1,200

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. This is just in all respects as before.

Steam communication from 1st July, 1899, to 30th June, 1900, between Quebec and Gaspé Basin, touching at intermediate ports ..... $5,000

Mr. FOSTER. How often does this run ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Every ten days.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright) will see that we have been very lenient. What we should have asked was a statement of trade, showing increase or prospects of increase, and so on, so as to justify the votes.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The reports made to me show that in most cases there is a very great freedom from any variableness or shadow of turning in that respect. They are pretty much the same one year as another.

Mr. FOSTER. How is this service progressing?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I am informed that it has been of great service to the inhabitants on that long line of coast. The people have no communication, except by water, as the hon. gentleman knows, and it is arranged that the vessel shall touch at a large number of ports, including the smaller fishing ports.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the vessel?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The "City of London," of the North American Transportation Company.

Steam communication between a port or ports in Prince Edward Island and a port or ports in Great Britain..... $5,000

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Of course, hon. gentlemen will understand that this is an experimental service, earnestly applied for by the people of Prince Edward Island. Two trips were run last season by the Beaver line steamer "Lake Huron," and a third by the "Gaspesia." We thought to make arrangement for five trips before the close of navigation this year, but I do not know how we shall succeed.

Mr. MARTIN. I have several times asked for information concerning this service, and the answers I have received were always unsatisfactory. I think what we have just heard from the hon. Minister is unsatisfactory also. Nothing definite, it appears, has been arrived at regarding Prince Edward Island. Cold storage has been provided on the steamers for ports in all parts of Canada for three seasons. The first season Prince Edward Island was left out in the cold. When I asked about the service last year, I was told by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) that he was in communication with the owners of steamers. It appeared at that time that he had been in correspondence as in year before, and the result was, that the season passed away with only two trips and one of the trip of the "Gaspesia."

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. There were three trips in all.

Mr. MARTIN. Two trips and one trip of the "Gaspesia." Cold storage, in the proper sense of the term, was not provided on that boat. Consequently, there was a great loss to shippers and a large death rate among animals shipped from Prince Edward Island to Great Britain. One would think that, with the experience of two years before the Minister, he would have called for tenders in the early part of the season. The people of Prince Edward Island were given to understand that the service would begin this year in June. And farmers and business men made their calculations accordingly. But the service has not yet begun, so that the people of Prince Edward Island have suffered very considerable loss. A good deal has been done in the way of cattle-feeding, and the delay will cause loss and inconvenience. I do not know whether the Minister has called for tenders yet.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. We have called for tenders, but have had no response.

Mr. MARTIN. The hon. Minister did not say when tenders were called for.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I believe they were called for in May.

Mr. MARTIN. According to the information I have, they were called for in June. That is when the service should have begun. The Government had evidently been writing to ship-owners, friends of theirs, just as in the case of the steamer between Magdalen and Gaspé, but they have not yet found a friend who has a boat; so, Prince Edward Island must be left out in the cold. We have heard statistics quoted in this House to show that Prince Edward Island is not importing goods from other countries to the same extent as other provinces of Canada are. How could the figures show otherwise, when goods are taken in subsidized steamers to every port in Canada, but for Prince Edward Island steam communication is not provided at all? Goods for the people of Prince Edward Island must be imported by Halifax and Montreal, and be entered there, as though for local consumption. I can tell the hon. gentleman that on not one of the three trips could the vessel carry all the freight offered. When the "Gaspesia" made her trip last season, a large amount of freight was left behind. I think it most unfair that, because Prince Edward Island is small, it should be neglected.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. At least we deserve this credit—that Prince Edward Island got nothing before, while we have taken the matter up, and hope to provide an efficient service.

Mr. MARTIN. I may remind the hon. Minister that cold storage does not date very far back. He knows that he is putting in a plea that is no good.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. But steam communication has been in existence for some time, and some of these subsidies have been voted for twenty-five years; yet in all that time Prince Edward Island got nothing.

Mr. MARTIN. Over and over again credit has been claimed for the Minister of Agriculture for introducing cold storage. Now, when it suits his purpose, the hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) seeks to show that cold storage existed long ago.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I said nothing of the kind.

Mr. MARTIN. In any case, I think the province of Prince Edward Island is being treated very shabbily.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). While it is true that Prince Edward Island has not had as much advantage from steamship communication direct with the old country, nor from cold storage, as other parts of the Dominion, that is not the fault of the Government, or of my department, or the Department of Trade and Commerce. We thought we had good grounds for believing that a subsidy of $5,000 would secure a vessel to go backward and forward between Prince Edward Island and the old country at least five times in the year—at the rate of $1,000 a trip. It is true, that the year before, this was not accomplished; but the discussion which then arose between certain steamship companies and ourselves indicated that it might be brought about last year; and, as a matter of fact, that subsidy, with an amount added from the vote for cold storage, enabled us to get an arrangement which was made with the Beaver Line—I think it was the Beaver Line; the “Lake Winnipeg” was the vessel—which would accomplish some four or five trips during the season. That was not successful. However, they did start and run two trips, and then they declined to go on, and we were forced to take up the “Gaspesia,” who offered to go on and do the rest of the season. Tenders were asked for this service in the early part of the season, but no tender was made, and we were able to make an arrangement with the Beaver Line. In respect to the complaint that there was no effective cold storage; it is true there was not what is called a mechanical cold storage in these vessels. It was not by any means sure that the same vessel would continue in that trade. Mechanical cold storage plant involves a considerable investment on board the vessel, and can only be undertaken when the vessel is destined to that class of work. I tried to get a company to do this, but they would not enter into an arrangement until they had made a trial to see what would be the course of trade from Prince Edward Island, and whether they would continue this work for a term of years. Every effort was made to that end, but they would not undertake it. In default of that, I had to make an arrangement with them by which an insulated chamber was put in, and while that is not as effective nor as permanent, still the proper temperature was maintained on those vessels for the goods. The carriage of cold storage products in these chambers was successful, and they arrived in good condition on the other side of the Atlantic. When the “Gaspesia” took hold, the same kind of arrangement was made with her. Unfortunately, her second trip was unsuccessful, as everybody knows, and the thing has dropped to the ground. We think this vote of $5,000 for the Prince Edward Island service, which I am now asking, will enable us to make an arrangement with some steamship company which can be persuaded that there is enough trade to justify them in devoting a vessel to the Prince Edward Island trade. That has been a difficulty we have had to overcome. I think the steamship companies are mistaken in declining to go into this business, because, from the experience of last year, I am satisfied that they would get sufficient freight. I know that freight was left on the wharf at Charlottetown, and they were not able to take all that was offered. I am satisfied that any company that would devote a vessel to that trade would make a profitable transaction. I am surprised they do not do it, but so far we have not been able to induce any steamship company to take up this work, and devote a vessel specially to that trade. There are some difficulties in the way from the fact that in the early part of the season there is not much goods ready to leave Prince Edward Island. As a matter of fact, last year there was very little ready for shipment until about the 1st of July which would justify a vessel going there. The agricultural products which are to be sent in these vessels are butter, cheese, cattle and grain; these are not ready for shipment, as a general rule, until about mid-summer. My hon. friend shakes his head, perhaps I should say a little earlier in the summer, but I think I am safe in saying the 1st of July. Therefore, the season is a short one, and the steamship companies say that four trips are all they will be able to make with any profit. This is unfortunate, but I think it is something that will be remedied as time goes on. The period for the shipment of these agricultural products from Prince Edward Island will be prolonged, as it has been from other ports in the country. But at the first inception, there is, no doubt, a difficulty, and I am sure the hon. gentleman recognizes that. But we are trying to overcome these difficulties, and are doing our best to get a more satisfactory and a more durable arrangement for this season.

Mr. MARTIN. I think the hon. gentleman has failed to give this committee any reason why this delay has occurred. He says that tenders were called for last year and tenders were called for this year. But last year tenders were called for in June, after the prorogation of this House. This year again, not benefiting by the experience of last year, tenders are delayed until June again. Now, cannot the Minister see that a service that is to begun in June tenders should not be delayed till the service is to begin? He must be aware that owners of steamers must know what service they are to be engaged in long before the summer season opens, and therefore it is necessary that tenders should be called for in March or in April. When these boats are engaged in other services it is not easy for the companies to take them off and put them upon another service. The hon. gentleman has tried to explain why there was no real cold-storage on these boats and he has failed. The loss to shippers in Prince Edward Island on fruit and apples has been very serious indeed on account of that neglect. Last year they understood they were going to have a boat with improved cold-storage, but they did not get one, and the result was that they lost very heavily. The hon. gentleman says that he was afraid there would not be sufficient freight, and he said there was not sufficient freight the first year it was proposed to give this service. The reason there was not sufficient freight then was that the people had not prepared. It was not said whether a trip of this boat would be made or not, but during this present season the people were given to understand that there would be some trips of the boat in June. Business men and farmers prepared for it, the farmers by feeding cattle, but when they expected the boat to arrive it did not arrive. I questioned the hon. Minister, across the floor of the House, and he told me that there was nothing done in June. The farmers told me when I was down there that they would have to let these cattle out on the grass again. They said: We are ready to ship but it appears there is no steamer. If the hon. Minister wishes to remedy this state of affairs next year he must call for his tenders earlier in the season. If he expects this service to begin in June he should call for tenders in March or April. But to say that the service should begin in June, and to call for tenders in June is to make the thing ridiculous.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) Mr. Chairman, this is a very important matter to the province of Prince Edward Island. We, as my hon. friend has just said, are preparing very largely to take advantage of that trade, and I do trust that the Government will spare no exertion in procuring a steamer. There is the prospect of a bountiful harvest; we never had a better output from our cheese factories, which is likely to exceed even that of last year; our lobster fisheries have been fairly good, and the outlook for fruit is also promising. Under these circumstances it will be a matter of necessity that the province should be provided with an outlet for these productions and with cold-storage facilities for the export of freight in order to place them on the market to the best advantage. That little province is paying a good deal of attention to fruit. For the last few years the production has been increasing very rapidly and the shipments made last year to England, on the whole, proved successful. Pains were taken by the shippers to see that shipments were put up in an honest manner and the fruit turned out satisfactorily in the English market. As the service was not commenced earlier in the season there will be less trips than have been called for, and as the estimate is $1,000 a trip, I would suggest that the whole sum should be expended in procuring a boat should the Government fail to get a boat for $1,000 a trip as is set forth in the estimate. I do not want to say anything about the service that was provided last year. The boats furnished were of considerable service to the province. Three trips were made. The boats could not take the amount of freight that was offered. If a service was provided from season's end to season's end there is no doubt sufficient freight would be furnished by the province.

To promote direct communication and trade between Canada and South Africa $5,000

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The committee will understand that this was purely an experimental vote taken last year in view of the exhibition which took place at Grahamstown. A sailing vessel, the "Arcadia," was chartered, but unfortunately she was rather slow and on her voyage she was becalmed under the tropics, so that her trip was not as successful as I could have wished. We deem it best, with the view of doing something to develop a little trade with South Africa, to repeat the vote in the hope that we may have better success this year if another opportunity comes.

Mr. WALLACE. What point did this steamer go to?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. To Capetown. She was a sailing vessel; we were not able to get a steamer.

Steam communication daily during the season of 1899, i.e., from the opening to the closing of navigation, between Baddeck, Grand Narrows and Iona, and one trip each fortnight to Big Pond and East Bay..... $4,000

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. This service was carried on by the Bras d'Or Steamship Company, which has gone out of business. It has been now divided, and the contract has been given to two companies. This service has been given to the Victoria Steamship Company, and the steamer "Blue Hill" is employed.

Steam communication daily during the season of 1899, i.e., from the opening to the closing of navigation, between Port Mulgrave and St. Peter's, to extend twice each week to Irish Cove and Marble Mountain ..... $4,000

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. This is a division of the vote that used to be combined in one. The service is now performed by the steamer "Vega."

Mr. LEMIEUX. Does this boat run to St. Pierre and Miquelon ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I do not understand that it goes to St. Pierre and Miquelon.

Mr. McDUGALL. I would like to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce to the fact that complaints have been made by the owners of these steamship lines, last year especially, and if I am not mistaken, the year before, because of the delay in paying them their subsidies. They suffered, last year, a great deal of inconvenience from this delay. As the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce will understand, these people, who have recently bought these steamers and who are new in the business, have not got much spare money, and they run large bills in connection with operating their steamers, for their staff, coal and other expenses. If they do not get their subsidy promptly it places, not only themselves at an inconvenience, but it also inflicts an inconvenience on those who supply them. It causes the men they employ a great deal of inconvenience, and I take this opportunity to bring the matter to the attention of the hon. Minister. I understand that the reason given is that there was some dispute in regard to calling at some of these points. This dispute arises from the fact that no proper arrangement is entered into between the department and these steamboat companies until after the subsidy is passed by this House. I do not think that is the case with regard to other steamship subsidies. I may be wrong, but my impression is that the steamship subsidies in respect to other services go on in the same way from year to year, but that a new arrangement is entered into between the steamboat owners and the Government, which is not finally completed until the subsidy has passed this House. For instance, at this date some of these steamers have been performing the service for nearly four months. I do not know whether there is an agreement existing or not; but whether there is or not, there should be a distinct understanding, so that when the vessel-owners comply with their agreement there should be no delay in paying them. I understand that the places mentioned in connection with this service are Irish Cove and Marble Mountain. It appears that the steamboat people found it difficult, in passing from Canso and the St. Peter's Canal to Sydney, to call at Irish Cove on one side of the lake, and then to cross to Marble Mountain on the other side, a distance of twelve or fifteen miles, before proceeding towards Sydney. That is the only reason I can find for the delay in paying these people their subsidy. What I would recommend is that some plan should be adopted which would enable the department to pay the subsidies when they become due to these people, who have not much more capital than is necessary to run the service.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. We have no desire to delay these matters in the department; but my hon. friend knows that certain formalities have to be complied with before the Auditor General will pass our cheque; and until that is done, we are powerless to help these people. But we will do our best to see that no unnecessary delay is incurred. The real difficulty, I am informed, was on account of the company's not furnishing the full vouchers which the Audit Office requires.

Mr. McDUGALL. What I would recommend, if it is possible to carry it out, in cases where the payment amounts to, say, $3,000, and there is a dispute because a certain portion of the service was not performed, is that a portion of the $3,000 should be paid to the company, and the balance held back until such time as the department is satisfied in regard to the disputed point. But what I insist on is that the whole amount due to the company should not be kept back until a settlement is arrived at in regard to a small portion of the amount.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). I can certainly bear testimony to the correctness of the statement made by the Minister. I for my part, protested against one of these companies, at least being paid their subsidy until such time as they agreed to perform the full service, which includes Marble Mountain in the county of Inverness; and until the company consented to do this, I appealed to the Minister not to pay them their subsidy. I can only say that for the delay in this instance, the company had themselves very greatly to blame.

Mr. McDUGALL. I do not think the company can conveniently carry out the service without dropping one call, either that at Irish Cove or that at Marble Mountain. I do not think there is very much difference in the distance of these two points from the direct route. I think the course between St. Peter's and Grand Narrows would be about midway between the two.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. We will endeavour to meet the hon. gentleman's views as far as the rules of the service will permit us.

Direct fortnightly steam service between Montreal, Que., and Manchester, Eng., during the summer season, and between St. John, Halifax and Manchester during the winter season ..... $38,933 33

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It was agreed with the ex-Minister of Finance that we should take these other items first, but that he should have the opportunity, either on this vote or on some other, to make some remarks on this Manchester service, to which I have no objection. The House is aware that a contract has been entered into with the Manchester people for this service. It was agreed that it should be performed by steamers of not less than 8,000 tons. The vessels were commenced in July, 1898, but the company represented to us that on account of the engineer's strike, the vessels, which were on the stocks could not be got ready in time. Therefore, only one of those steamers was put into commission, and they performed the traffic with smaller steamers, which gave us a greater number of trips, though, of course, we do not pay them more than a proportionate sum for the service. I may add that, making allowance for these circumstances, the service has been a good service, and has been of material use to our people in enabling them to introduce our goods directly into the city of Manchester, which is the centre of the greatest consuming population of the United Kingdom. With in a radius of 25 miles from Manchester, we are informed, there is a consuming population—almost entirely a manufacturing population—amounting to between seven and eight millions of people. So far we have every reason to think that our money has not been wasted in bringing our goods directly into view of that large population, more especially as the Manchester people have erected, at great cost, very complete cold storage apparatus for preserving the more or less perishable commodities in which we deal.

Mr. WALLACE. Were the ships from Canada pretty well laden?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I am told that they were very well laden, particularly those from the St. Lawrence. The ships from the maritime provinces were not so well laden.

Mr. WALLACE. What about the return cargo?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. We do not get anything like the quantity of return cargo which we would like to get, nor do I see how, in the nature of the case, that can be avoided. We send raw produce largely, while the British returns are composed largely of manufactured goods, which probably occupy not one-tenth or one-twentieth of the space in proportion to the value that the produce which we send occupies. There is another consideration, that whereas in former times we used to bring in a considerable quantity of iron goods from Great Britain, of late years the character of the trade has set the other way. We have lost that return freight, and my impression is that it is not impossible that we shall be sending iron to England within a moderate time. That is, I know, in the future, and I will make no predictions or promises in that respect.

Mr. WALLACE. You are proposing to continue the subsidy under the same conditions as before?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes, but with much better steamers.

Mr. WALLACE. Are the new steamers ready now?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. They are coming out now.

Mr. WALLACE. Is this contract for a term of years?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It is for three years, and it was expressly understood that it was not for more than three years. They only asked for this encouragement for that term. Whether they will come back to us again and ask for more is an open question, but it was most distinctly understood between us that if we gave it for three years that was all they wanted, just to encourage them at the start.

Mr. WALLACE. There is no obligation for any further assistance?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. No, but, on the contrary, there is the express statement that they were not to ask for more. The steamers have been launched and will be ready for service this year, I am advised. The "City of Manchester" is already under operation.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the length of the trip from Montreal to Manchester, and in the winter months from the other ports?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. From Montreal to Manchester the trip occupies eleven days. We only had one steamer, the "Manchester," which was up to the standard. The others were inferior vessels. The "Manchester" makes twelve knots an hour, but she is capable of doing considerably better.

Mr. WALLACE. Are they suitable for passengers as well as freight?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. They have a small passenger capacity, but the service is essentially a freight service, pure and simple. They are freight vessels of about the largest size that the St. Lawrence navigation can conveniently accommodate. 8,000 tons is a very respectable size, although much larger is used on some other routes ; but having regard to the amount of freight generally offered at Montreal, 8,000 tons will be found in practice very near our maximum.

Mr. WALLACE. They are principally engaged, I presume, in carrying the products of Canadian farms ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes, they have cold storage accommodation.

Mr. WALLACE. At such a great distributing point as Manchester, no doubt it is very desirable we should have direct communication. Have they accommodation for cattle ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes, they have both cattle accommodation and cold storage. The point we have been aiming at is to bring ourselves into direct contact with the great centres as far as we can. While Liverpool in some respects is a fine point of distribution, it is not to be compared with Manchester, and in a lesser degree it is, perhaps, inferior to Glasgow, and certainly to London. If we have direct communication with the great centres of population, such as London, Glasgow and Manchester, we practically come into direct contact with nearly half the population of the United Kingdom.

Mr. WALLACE. The statement made by the hon. Minister is very satisfactory. Manchester is the greatest distributing point in the world, perhaps, for a radius of twenty miles around it, so enormous is the population. Manchester is making tremendous strides to get the commerce of the world in conjunction with its ship canal, and I have no doubt that those countries which go in first, as Canada is doing now, will reap the benefit in a few years. It is a wise provision to make.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I would just say one thing, and it is one in which hon. gentlemen opposite will heartily agree. I would hope that all our Canadian producers will lay carefully to heart this lesson, that if you want to trade with England you must play no tricks in the quality of goods. If you give a first-rate article to the English consumer and establish your reputation, you may practically charge anything in reason you please. I trust all our producers will bear in mind that important fact, that to maintain the English market you must give a good article, and that any suspicion of playing tricks, in any shape or way, will inevitably destroy your trade.

Administration of the Chinese Immigration Act, including remuneration to Trade and Commerce and Customs officers .....	$ 3,500
Canada's proportion of expenditure in connection with the International Customs Tariff Bureau .....	600

Commercial agencies, including expenses in connection with negotiation of treaties or in extension of commercial relations .....	20,000
	$24,100

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. These are absolutely the votes we have been taking for some years, and distributed in the same fashion. There is very little change, except in one or two cases we have obtained some new officers.

Mr. WALLACE. Would the hon. gentleman give some explanation of the expenditure on commercial agencies ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I have not spent all that money. You will see that a vote is taken for expenses in connection with the negotiation of treaties, or in extension of commercial relations. I expect that we shall have to spend some more money on that subject ; but have not been called on to do so, though I may at any moment. This goes to defray such items as the salary of Mr. Larke, in Australia, and the various salaries paid to our agents in a great variety of places, such as the West Indies and Cape Town.

Mr. WALLACE. Have you an agent in Cape Town ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes, but we do not pay these agents very much. Mr. Larke is the most expensive of the lot. He receives $3,000 a year and expenses, but I am bound to say that he has sent out a number of very carefully prepared reports, and that our trade with Australia has increased and is increasing in a reasonably rapid ratio, particularly in such articles as agricultural implements. It is a gratifying fact for me to be able to inform the House that while I would not venture to promise that we will derive a very large trade in it, the quality of our Canadian flour is so superior that it has been selling in the Australian market at a very large sum in excess of the native product. I think it is selling at about £10 6s. per ton, while the price of the native article is only £6 6s. Of course, that is Manitoba flour of very high grade, but it is very satisfactory to find that it has established so good a reputation and a considerable trade in that article may be developed.

Mr. WALLACE. That would be £10 10s. per ton.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. No, £10 6s. per ton for our flour, whereas the native article sells for £6 6s.

Mr. WALLACE. Do they use the long ton or the short ton ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I am not sure which, but in either case it shows the great superiority of the Canadian article. The hon. gentleman has asked me about these agents. The names are as follows:—Robert Bryson, Antigua; Geo. Eustace Burke, Kingston, Jamaica; S. L. Horsford, St. Kitts; C. E. Sontum, Christiana, Sweden; Edgar Tripp, Trinidad; and M. Moffatt, Cape Town.

Mr. WALLACE. What salary does Mr. Moffatt receive?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. We do not pay him any direct salary, but pay his rent and certain allowances. The amount last year was between $1,200 and $1,500. How much he will be able to do in the direction of opening up trade I am not in a position to say. Bearing in mind that there is a very large mining population there, we should be able to develop a considerable trade. At present, it is largely monopolized by the Americans. Mr. Moffatt holds out considerable encouragement of trade in several lines. The great difficulty is that we have no direct communication with Cape Town, but must send our goods by way of New York to be carried by American lines, or by way of England. We have found great difficulty in obtaining the services of even one ship. Hardly any ships go direct.

Mr. WALLACE. I am told that a number of cargoes of lumber go from Vancouver to Cape Town.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. There is a trade beginning to spring up in that way, but the sailings of vessels are necessarily irregular. And so far as this portion of Canada is concerned, even the establishment of trade between Vancouver and Cape Town would be a little assistance—it would be cheaper to ship by New York or Liverpool.

Mr. WALLACE. It seems to me there are large possibilities of trade with South Africa. The population there is of a character to call for many kinds of goods produced in Canada. I think this Government would be justified in making greater efforts than they have made to promote this trade. Mr. Moffatt, apparently, devotes only a portion of his time to this work for the remuneration the Government give him would not pay him for his whole time. The Government would be justified in making greater efforts, and if the trade increases, it might justify the establishment of a direct line from some point in Canada to South Africa to carry our Canadian products.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. We will take that into consideration. It might be a rather costly business to subsidize steamers for that service.

Mr. WALLACE. Even so, the increase of trade might justify it. I think also that the Government should make greater efforts than they appear to be doing to promote trade with the West India Islands.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I am in hopes that the agreement we have recently made with the British Government and which I mentioned a few moments ago will afford the foundation for a considerable exchange of trade.

It being Six o'clock, the Deputy Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

For a survey to ascertain the most practicable route for an all-Canadian railway from some point on an existing railway into the Klondike district, and to an ocean port in British Columbia.. $40,000

Mr. MONTAGUE. What is this for?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). This is to cover the balance which we think will likely be incurred in completing the surveys which were authorized at the last session of Parliament. It was the general feeling, I think, that it would be very proper to make an exploratory survey from Edmonton through the Rockies, towards the Pacific, and in the direction of the Yukon, and this amount is expected to enable us practically to complete that survey. Pretty near the whole of the grant made last year has been expended. We have a large party in the country now completing the survey. We do not know exactly what the whole survey will cost, but I think we have a sufficient appropriation for the purpose.

Mr. CLANCY. Have the surveys so far been made both from Edmonton and the Pacific coast?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. Has the hon. gentleman had any report?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. There were three parties making explorations last year. They started at a point 8 or 10 miles to the east of the British Columbia boundary on the Peace River. The first party struck in to a point at the junction of the Parsnip and Finlay rivers. That survey covered 201 miles. Another party started from Edmonton. There was no particular need of their surveying until they got into the mountains. The two parties being together, they went through to the junction of the Finlay and Parsnip rivers, where they separated, one of the parties coming east, and the other going west. The eastern party surveyed a distance of 210 miles to some 10 or 12 miles east of the British Columbia boundary. The other party continued west to near Fort Connolly on the Osalinqua River, covering 202 miles. The third party crossed the Skeena River, going north all the way to the Dees Lake, and surveyed back, a distance of 210 miles. So that there was covered by the three surveys about 615 or 620 miles.

Mr. CLANCY. Are they all consecutive surveys?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, there is a broken stretch which was not surveyed, but which was covered by the party, and is intended to be part of the same line. They are satisfied that a practicable route can be found from Edmonton through a pass of the Rockies, up Peace River, crossing the Skeena River and going to the foot of Dease Lake. You there come very near to the point which would be intersected if you were building a line from the Stikine River a little to the west of Glenora or Telegraph Creek and going north to Lake Teslin. One of the parties are now completing the survey, and intend, before their work is finished, to follow a route down to the coast within Canadian territory. The expectation is, that they will be able to find a practicable route which is not enormously expensive, leading to a port called Port Essington, near the mouth of the Skeena River.

Mr. CLANCY. How great will the distance be from the contemplated junction to the Pacific coast?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Though the mileage has not been accurately ascertained, it is estimated at 230 miles from Port Essington to a point where you would intersect the route which I have described.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What is the total mileage from Edmonton to the extreme point?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If your extreme point is the Pacific coast, at the termination of one of the contemplated surveys, the mileage would be 1.175 miles.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Has the hon. gentleman any report on the country?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, I have very full reports.

Mr. MONTAGUE. They will be laid on the Table?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, I have reports from two of the parties, but the report of the other party is not yet complete. When it is complete, I propose laying them on the Table.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Does the line go by way of the Great Slave Lake?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, it crosses the Rockies along the valley of the Peace River. It does not cross the Peace River at all, but keeps to the south of the Peace River and crosses the mountains in a wide opening, which, I understand, there is formed by the valley of the Peace.

Cost of arbitration respecting the accounts between the Dominion of Canada and the provinces of Ontario and Quebec (payments on account of services rendered may be made to members of the civil service, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act)..... $4,000

Mr. CLANCY. What progress has been made?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Hon. gentlemen will have observed that there is a reduction of $1,000 in the item, which I think is a wholesome sign, indicating that the end is drawing nearer. The matter has been dragging along for many years, and I am glad to say that it is now approaching completion and I hope that, by next year, it will be entirely cleared up. Only two or three matters remain for consideration.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Who is this money for?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It goes to pay the legal expenses of the gentlemen who are conducting the arbitration, Mr. O'Connor, of Ottawa, and Mr. Robinson, of Toronto.

Classification of old records of Canada in the office of the Privy Council (payments on account of this service may be made notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act)..... $1,000

Mr. MONTAGUE. Has any step been taken to consolidate all these record offices into one? There is one in the Privy Council, one in the Secretary of State's Department, and one in the Department of Agriculture. Before the late Government went out of office they had gone very carefully into the question of consolidating these record offices with the view of improving the work and reducing the cost.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have to inform the hon. gentleman that there has been nothing done.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I quite recognize that Mr. McGee is in the habit of doing good work in connection with it but does it not strike the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) that it would be advantageous, as a mere matter of convenience, to consolidate all these archives and record departments?

The PRIME MINISTER. I quite agree.

To assist in defraying the cost in the publication of documents issued by the Canadian Mining Institute ..... $1,000

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is an allowance similar to the one made last year to an important society which represents the mining interests of Canada pretty fully and I have reason to believe that it is doing very excellent work.

"Canada Gazette" ..... $6,000

Mr. MONTAGUE. This is more a matter of book-keeping than anything else, as it is self-sustaining, is it not?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, the Queen's Printer informs me that there is a profit on the "Canada Gazette" so that the vote is more than covered by the receipts.

Miscellaneous printing ..... $27,000

Mr. MONTAGUE. There is an increase of $2,000 here.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is a matter which we discussed somewhat on the supplementary Estimates. It is due to the fact, as the Queen's Printer reports, of an increase in the amount of published matter. The Experimental Farm reports, for example, are 40,000 in number, and the Auditor General's Report is larger than ever. Generally, the expense of printing is somewhat increased.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Who have the paper contracts now, in connection with the Printing Bureau?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will have to get the information later on, as I do not have it now.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the hon. gentleman find whether contracts have been let during the last three years, and if so, will he bring down the figures?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will bring down the information.

Plant for Printing Bureau, including web perfecting press, $19,000, and additional Linotype machines, $14,000.. ..... $38,000

Mr. MONTAGUE. This is a very large increase.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is due to the proposal to purchase additional plant, it is not for maintenance. In the report of the Department of Public Printing and Stationery, which has been laid on the Table, hon. gentlemen will find a statement of what the proposed improvements are:

1. A fast perfecting press, feeding from the web and folding its own work, capable of turning out from 18,000 to 24,000 sheets of 16 pages per hour.

2. The amount of four Linotype machines and the exchange of two of those now in the office for others of the latest improved make.

3. The extension to the rear of the western wing to provide increased space for the bindery and for the press-room.

This third proposal we are not now contemplating.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Where are you purchasing the printing presses?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have no special information upon that, but, I suppose, the printing presses will be American. The linotype machines will be purchased in Montreal, where they are being manufactured.

Mr. FIELDING.

Commutation in lieu of remission of duties on articles imported for the use of the army and navy ..... $2,250

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think that under the law a consul coming from another country is permitted to bring in his uniform and articles connected with his office free of duty, providing he is born in the country he represents, but a Canadian appointed a consul is not allowed to bring in these articles free of duty. That seems to me to be a discrimination. I do not see why a native-born Canadian, appointed consul to a foreign country, should be taxed any more than a native of that country given the same appointment.

Mr. WALLACE. The clause of the Act is as follows:—

Articles for the personal or the official use of Consuls General, who are natives or citizens of the country they represent, and are not engaged in any other business or profession, have the right of free entry.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. May I ask my right hon. friend and the hon. Finance Minister if they have laid the railway subsidies on the Table?

The PRIME MINISTER. They are in the hands of the Clerk, or if not they will be immediately.

Salaries and contingencies of the office of the Paris Agency ..... $3,500

Mr. WALLACE. What were the results from this agency? What does the agent do?

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend knows that the agent sends out immigrants to this country. I admit they do not come in very large numbers, but he also looks after the general business of the country in Paris. A number of Canadians visit Paris, his office is always open to all coming there, and I am sure all those who have visited Paris must acknowledge that he is doing very valuable service to the public at large.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would like to say a word on this subject, because I gave very special attention to it when in London, and I came to the conclusion that it was an absolute necessity to have a competent representative of the Government in Paris. I am bound also to say that after years of intimate acquaintance with the present representative of Canada. I do not believe he could be replaced by a better man. He is a gentleman of high culture, who is extremely popular in Paris, who has the ear of the Government of France, and is on very friendly relations with the leading men of the press, and I found on a very important occasion, he was able to render in that way very substantial service to Canadian interests. In my judgment, the services of Mr. Fabre could not be dispensed with without doing very great injury to the country, and I do not believe it would be easy to replace him with an equally efficient man.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am sure the House is delighted to hear the testimony which the right hon. Prime Minister has just given to the mistakes that some of his friends and I think himself also made while on this side. Perhaps not the Prime Minister, but certainly within his hearing and without any protest having been made by him. I remember a very serious attack being made on this item by hon. gentlemen, when on this side, which can be very easily referred to in "Hansard," and in which it was said by the right hon. gentleman's supporters that the money was wasted. I am very glad that the right hon. gentleman has come to see his duty and to acknowledge that the Opposition to this vote on this side in former days was wrong.

The PRIME MINISTER. I would be very sorry to think that as I am growing older, I am not growing better and more informed and educated.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman is evidently not a Bourbon.

Payments of extra clerks for services rendered in preparation of returns ordered by Parliament ..... $2,000

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is a decrease there.

Mr. MONTAGUE. We do not ask for so many returns.

Academy of Arts ..... $2,000

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. On page 35, there is an item for a National Art Gallery, Ottawa, $2,000. Do I understand that that item refers to the expenditure of the National Art Gallery, and this one for the purchase of pictures for that gallery?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am unable to give the hon. gentleman that information. If he consents to the item passing, I will procure it for him later.

To assist in the publication of the proceedings of the Royal Society ..... $5,000

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not know whether many members have read these reports, but I have read a good number of them, and if the Minister of Finance would look into this subject I am sure he will become convinced that a little larger grant could well be given with great advantage; though I am not aware that the society has asked for any more assistance. There is no subject of Canadian interest, of Canadian history, of Canadian literature or science, that is not fully treated in the splendid articles which appear in these reports of the Royal Society. No doubt the wider distribution of its transactions must be to encourage a better Canadian sentiment and to spread abroad a wider knowledge of Canadian resources. I have nothing to do with the society, except that I am acquainted with many of their reports, and I think it would be advantageous to give them a larger grant.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I believe there has been no application, but it is certain that there will be after the good words my hon. friend has spoken.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. It seems to me $5,000 is a very handsome grant to the Royal Society. I think they ought to be able to turn out quite a number of volumes for that sum. I appreciate all the member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) has stated with regard to the merits of the society, but it seems to me $5,000 is a very ample sum. Is the printing done by the Queen's Printer or by a private printer for the society?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think we have nothing to do with the printing. The society do with this grant as in their judgment they think best.

For cold storage on steamships, on railways, at warehouses and at creameries, and for expenses in connection with trial shipments of products, and for securing recognition of the quality of Canadian farm products ..... $70,000

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). This item is smaller than it was last year because we have found that we could get off with less in the ensuing year. A number of the steamship companies have received their third payment, and, therefore, the account with them is closed. I am making practically no change in the disposition of this vote, but in consequence of the fact I have just mentioned, I found that we would be able to do all the work we have been doing with $15,000 less.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What is the result with regard to shipment of fruit?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We have been making some trial shipments of fruit from Grimsby in the Niagara peninsula, where we have a small cold storage building for the purpose of cooling fruit before it is shipped. We found last year that the shipments of pears were very profitable, and I think it is a trade that can be well built up. We also hope this year to make a good deal more of an experiment with early and delicate apples, if the crop this year is such as will enable people to make shipments. The shipments we made last year of these early apples were successful, but the experiment was not extensive, and we would like to send over more this year. The shipments of peaches have been very unsuccessful as a general rule, chiefly because the peaches here are delicate in flesh and skin, and do not seem to be able to stand shipment. But I have myself formed the opinion that the bruising of peaches is the trouble, and that is done in picking and handling. I believe if special precautions were taken by the men who pick and pack this fruit, a profitable trade could be built up in the choicest varieties. Only the other day I got information of the fact that peaches are sent from South Africa to the London market, but these peaches are never touched by the hands of pickers or the packers. They are clipped off the stem by little pairs of scissors made on purpose, and placed directly in the boxes in which they are sent in cork shavings. The result is that when they reach the London market they are perfectly sound, and have realized very good prices. I am going to try some experiment of that kind this year, if the peach crop is a satisfactory one. I may say, though, that it took five or six years for the South African packers to find out how to do it successfully, and at last they have succeeded. We hope to derive a profit from their experience.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am sorry to see that the vote for this service has been diminished. If there is a service that the Government would have been warranted in making a large addition to, it is this service. If any person were to search these Estimates—these enormous Estimates—for a case in which it was not wise to diminish the grant, he could not find, in my judgment, anything more important than this question of cold storage. Before the late Government went out of power, they had grappled vigorously with this question. It was in its infancy then, but it was commended to Parliament as one of the most important questions that could be dealt with by the representatives of the Canadian people. One of the strong reasons why the late Government pressed the fast Atlantic service upon the country was not only that it provided a means of carrying passengers in the shortest time from one continent to another, not only that it afforded a means of transporting letters more rapidly than by any other means, but its greatest merit, in my judgment, was, that under this contract the Messrs. Allan were bound to furnish whatever facilities for cold storage were demanded by the trade. You have only to look to the United States, or, a still more striking example, to Australasia, to see the advantage of the cold storage. If my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) has given this subject any attention, he knows that the cold-storage system of Canada to-day is utterly insignificant, as compared with that of the United States or Australasia. He knows that the Australian colonies succeeded, in the face of climatic difficulties far greater than ours, as they must cross the torrid zone, to capture, to a large extent, the market in even such an article as butter, which is more susceptible to climatic influence than any other. He knows also that, by means of an admirable system of cold storage, peaches can be shipped to England from South Africa and landed in as good condition as if they had been picked in England that very morning. There is nothing, outside of preferential trade, in which the Government can do so much more for the agricultural interest, as in this matter of cold storage. In the United States parties are spending large capital, not only to accommodate the trade of the United States, but in the hope of capturing the Canadian trade and sending it through American channels. There is large expenditure for local cold-storage establishments, for cold-storage cars and depots, as well as for the most perfect appliances on board the ships which are to carry these products to the unlimited market of Great Britain. I read, without surprise, that the Fruit-Growers Association in Nova Scotia had presented an address to my hon. friend (Mr. Fisher), drawing his attention to the fact that his cold-storage system had utterly failed, and broken down, and had not accomplished anything for the trade. Recent improvements have taken account of the fact that you cannot send two articles in the same compartment without damaging one of them. Fruit, for instance, requires one temperature, and butter another. You cannot send these two articles in the same compartment without spoiling both. If the Australasian colonies, by means of an admirable system of cold storage, not only in the steamers, but in the colonies themselves, can outrival and outdistance us in the markets of Great Britain, that certainly shows that our system of cold storage is very faulty indeed. In connection with the appropriation that is made to-day of $126,000 for steamer subsidies across the Atlantic, the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Government are bound to admit that there is practically no value in the appropriation, so far as mail matter is concerned. The Government have the means of bringing into operation a good system of cold storage, by making a condition of the mail subsidy being given, that the greatest improvements in cold storage should be made, at all events in those vessels which receive the subsidy. We have been paying a considerable amount, and paying to very little purpose, because it is expended in very inefficient appliances for producing cold storage in the ships. And so far as cold-storage cars and means of communication on land, and cold-storage depots throughout the country are concerned, there is practically very little of any value being done. I draw the attention of the committee to this matter, and express my complete dissent and utter disapproval of the cutting down of this cold-storage vote. It ought to have been doubled at least, in order to make it as efficient as necessary. One of the most important shippers asked me the other day what was the matter with the cold storage. They were instructed to receive at the city of Quebec a very large quantity of cheese and butter, to be sent by cold storage, and ultimately it all dwindled down until there were only a few tubs of butter to be had. The matter needs to be taken up systematically, and if it is conducted as it has been conducted in the United States and in the Australasian colonies the result will be that you will add sensibly to the value of every pound of butter and cheese, to the value of fruit and all kinds of perishable goods that the Canadian agriculturist has to send to the foreign markets; and you will give to the agricultural interests what they are entitled to receive at the hands of the Government who are to-day protecting the manufacturing interests of this country by their tariff, as the late Government did. In this way you can give some protection to the farmers without costing the country beyond a comparatively insignificant sum. By adopting such a course you will show to the farmers that their vital and supremely important interests are engaging the attention of the Government, and that the Government intend to take advantage of the favourable situation in which nature has placed us over every other part of the world. We have an advantage over the United States because we have a shorter line of communication between Canada and Great Britain, and with vessels of the same speed we can deliver these perishable goods 24 hours earlier in the markets of England than can be done from any port in the United States. We have also the overwhelming advantage of having the best climate in the world for fruit. The apples of Canada have taken the gold medal in London in competition with the whole world, because it has been found that no other fruit can rival the excellence of Canadian fruit. The Government should adopt the policy, instead of cutting down the small vote of last year, of increasing it to $100,000, and that $100,000 could be spent in a way that would bring a ten-fold return to the agricultural interests of this country. There are no interests better entitled to protection than the agricultural interest. To capture the markets of the United Kingdom for our agricultural products means untold wealth to the people of Canada. We have got the climate, we have got the soil, we have got the industry, we have got everything that is required except the fostering care of the Government, which should come to their aid by the adoption of the same means that other countries have adopted. What we have done in cheese may be done in butter, and every person knows what that means to the agriculturist of Canada. You have the pasturage, you have the climate, you have healthy cattle, you have everything to enable you to compete in the markets of England with all other countries of the world. We know what was done with respect to cheese by the fostering aid given by the province of Ontario; cheese ranged steadily forward until within a comparatively few years we have surpassed the United States in the quantity of our export of cheese to Great Britain. Precisely the same thing can be done in regard to butter, poultry, eggs and everything of a perishable character. I regret extremely that the Minister of Agriculture has cut down this appropriation by $15,000 when I think he should, on the contrary, largely have increased it. The course pursued by the Government demands the severe condemnation of this committee.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). The speech with which we have been treated by the hon. leader of the Opposition has been rather amusing to myself, as I think it must have been to this House who have followed the course of events upon which the hon. gentleman has been dilating. I am afraid the hon. gentleman must have been asleep for the last couple of years, or that he is living in the past in this matter, as he is largely in others. The hon. gentleman has drawn a glowing picture of what could be done by means of cold storage, but he does not seem to be aware of the fact that to a large extent Canada in the last two years has done what he has been outlining. As a matter of fact, three years ago when he and his friends were in office, Canadian butter stood away below Australian butter in the English market, and to-day it stands away above Australian butter, and that is due to the cold storage accommodation which has been supplied by this Government. The hon. gentleman has also forgotten that while a few years ago when his friends were in office, Canadian butter stood at 20 shillings per hundred weight lower than the highest price given for Danish butter in England, by reason of the cold storage accommodation which has been supplied for Canadian butter carried to the English market, to-day Canadian butter, instead of being 20 shillings per 100 below Danish, is almost on a par, being only 5 or 6 shillings per 100 less at most. Last summer when I was in England watching the market quotations, I was proud to see, on several occasions, that Canadian butter was on a level with the best Danish butter. The hon. gentleman says that our cold storage system has been inefficient, that we are not supplying the proper kind of cold storage to carry these goods to the English market, and that we ought to have followed the example of Australia and the United States. The hon. gentleman seems not to be aware that we are following the same system of mechanical cold storage which is used on the Australian, the New Zealand and the Cape Colony steamships, and on the United States lines; and we now have 24 or 25 steamships constantly leaving our ports equipped with the same mechanical cold storage apparatus which is used by the other countries the hon. gentleman has mentioned. There cannot be much difference, therefore, in the accommodation which we are supplying and that they are supplying, as it is done by the same firms, the same machinery being used, and the same system being adopted.

The hon. gentleman said that we ought to have a thorough system of cold storage cars on the railways in the country. He does not seem to have taken the trouble to inform himself so as to know that we have a system of cold storage cars; that there are, on all the leading lines of railway, cold storage equipments supplying the needs of the people in sending their perishable articles to Montreal, to Halifax and St. John; that, as a matter of fact, butter is taken from the creameries where, in the first place, it is put into cold storage chambers, subsidized by the department, which I am managing, that after having put that butter into these cold storage chambers, at the creameries, it is put into cold storage cars for conveyance on the lines of railway to the ports of shipment, that it is there held in cold storage accommodation until it is put on the steamer and that it is then carried in cold storage on the steamer to Great Britain. The hon. gentleman says that the American steamship lines are equipping their vessels better than we are, and that they are attracting the trade in Canadian products to their lines. The hon. gentleman does not appear to know that a large amount of products, which require to go in cold storage from Chicago and the west, are being shipped from Montreal in vessels equipped by the bonus which we have given for cold storage, and that these products are being sent over to England in our ships. We do not allow these products to be put into cold storage chambers on ships, bonused by the department if there are any Canadian products ready to occupy the place on these ships, and it is only when there is unoccupied space that they are allowed to take the produce of the American states. I might tell the hon. gentleman what he does not seem to be aware of, that while at first we were obliged to subsidize vessels to get them to put in cold storage equipments, and while three years ago some of these companies required a bonus to induce them to put in that accommodation into their vessels, they are to-day putting into their new vessels, cold storage accommodation without any bonus at all. Having attained our object the hon. gentleman wants us to go on spending the people's money. I believe that, when we have once attained our object it is a matter of wisdom and economy to cease expending money upon that particular line of work when we can get more accommodation from the people who are engaged in that business without the necessity of our money being spent to get it. The hon. gentleman alluded to one or two points in which he said that our cold storage arrangements were deficient. He spoke of a meeting which took place in Nova Scotia

last winter where the fruit-growers made certain representations to me. That meeting was a large, influential and representative one, and the whole question was very thoroughly threshed out. When I came to inquire into the matter, I found that hardly anybody had taken advantage of the cold storage that was provided, and that the fruit-growers had been under the impression that cold storage was not suitable for the carriage of fruit. They were demanding from me that instead of cold storage, we should make arrangements to see that the steamship companies properly ventilated the holds of their vessels by putting in ventilators and electric fanning machines, so that the air should be changed and kept cool. When in England last summer, I took upon myself to interview the heads of the steamship companies upon the trade of this country, I pointed out what was necessary in that respect: that while in the hot weather in summer, cold storage accommodation was necessary our fruit-growers had found that the hardier winter varieties of apples would do perfectly well in the ordinary hold of the vessel, provided the hold was properly ventilated and equipped with electric fans, so as to change the air in it. As a matter of fact, cold products going forward in cold storage chambers had to pay a little extra freightage. Under the arrangement which we have made, cold storage steamers receiving the bonus are only allowed to charge 10 shillings a ton of 70 cubic feet capacity over the ordinary freight charge. While in the steamers sailing from American ports, 20 shillings a ton of 40 cubic feet capacity, which is the ordinary shipping ton, is charged, while on everything going from Montreal, St. John or Halifax, steamship companies are only allowed to charge 10 shillings extra per ton of 70 cubic feet capacity. This is another advantage that shippers possess in sending forward goods in cold storage by our lines. The contention of the fruit-growers was that their hard winter apples would not bear the extra charge, and they could send them forward, provided ventilation was supplied in the hold of the vessel. I interviewed the head officers of several of these lines, and was successful in getting them to lay out a small amount of money on their ships with the result that we have a considerable number of vessels leaving Canadian ports properly equipped with ventilating shafts and electric fans. The consequence was that these apples arrived in England in far better condition than they ever did before. I am glad to be able to say that these steamship companies have promised me, without any bonus, without spending any more public money, without offering any inducements to them, as the hon. gentleman appears to want me to do, but at their own risk and at their own expense, simply on the representation of what is necessary for the trade, that this fall they will have all their ships ventilated to carry our apples to England. Up to the present time, with perhaps an occasional period in the autumn, when large amounts of butter are going forward, when there is a large quantity of fruit going forward, and when there are also poultry and meat shipments going forward, everybody has been able to get cold storage accommodation in ships going forward from our ports. There has been no lack of cold storage accommodation for our perishable food products going forward, and I cannot see why the hon. gentleman should demand of me that I should waste public money when there is no necessity for it to accomplish the end in view. The hon. gentleman has spoken of other things which have been done. He has alluded to poultry meat shipments. As a matter of fact, last fall we took occasion to make some small poultry meat shipments, and we succeeded well in the prices we got for them. We have made arrangements under which we will be able to induce our people themselves this fall to send forward a large amount of poultry meat to the English market. I am satisfied, from the results we attained last year, that these poultry meat shipments can be made profitable and successful, but the hon. gentleman is urging me to go and do that which I have already done. The hon. gentleman spoke a few minutes ago about ships not stopping at Quebec. In every contract made there is a provision that ships going from Montreal shall stop at Quebec, provided there is enough freight offering to make it worth the stoppage. I do not exactly remember the amount, but I think that it is provided that if 500 packages are offering, the ship is obliged to stop at Quebec, and is obliged to reserve the space necessary in its cold storage accommodation for that amount of freight. The hon. gentleman will see that the majority of the things which he has alluded to have already been accomplished, and if to-day I am able to cut down this expenditure and ask for $15,000 less than I asked for a year ago, it is simply because the expenditure, wisely laid out, well arranged and well managed, has accomplished the objects. So I do not see why the hon. gentleman should expect that we should waste public money and go in for a more extravagant expenditure. In addition to cold storage accommodation on ships, to cold storage on railways to cold storage chambers at creameries, we have been able to make provision for fruit shipments and for poultry meat shipments, which we hope will lead to a large increase in these shipments. We have been able to accomplish everything that the hon. gentleman has alluded to. Under these circumstances, I do not think the hon. gentleman's speech is justified, and I trust that having had this explanation, he will be satisfied with the amount I ask for.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am sorry that the duties of the Minister of Agriculture have unfortunately been devolved upon one who enters on the discharge of his duties with the impression that there is nothing in the world that he can learn. The hon. gentleman is one of those dilettante farmers who imagines that he has got all the agricultural knowledge in the world stored in his cranium. That is very unfortunate for Canada. The only way in which a Minister can be useful is by being willing to learn; and by the time a man reaches that cranial proportion which the hon. gentleman has reached, when there is nothing in the wide world that any one can teach him, and when all he can do is to stand on his feet and talk by the hour of what he had done and is doing, he has become of very little use. The hon. gentleman wants to know if I have been asleep for the last two years. No; I have been wide awake enough to know that all that the hon. gentlemen have done for the country has been done where they had meekly and modestly followed in the footsteps of their predecessors; and they have failed where they believed they could improve on what their predecessors did. The cold storage was in its infancy when the late Government went out of power; but we were grappling with it, in the face of a good deal of hostile criticism on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite, who were disposed to obstruct what the Government were doing for the agricultural interests of this country. The hon. gentleman has sat down without dealing with the gravamen of my charge, and that is, the crime which hon. gentlemen opposite committed when they struck down the fast Atlantic service. What was the position of that question, with the very foundation of which this cold storage was identified? Hon. gentlemen found ready for signature the contract with the Messrs. Allan, who, with the enormous capital they were able to command on both sides of the Atlantic, and the great experience they could bring, were ready to take up the project. I wrote a letter to my successor, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, when the Government changed hands, pointing out to him that by inducing the Governor General to do that which he had refused to do, to allow the contract to be signed promptly, under an Order in Council passed by the late Government, they would save two years. They refused to do that, and consequently not only lost two years, but we have to-day had the humiliating confession made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) on the floor of this House, that they have lost all chance of accomplishing that which they had declared was a service of the greatest importance to Canada. So important did they admit that that fast Atlantic service, with its provision for cold storage, was to Canada, that when we were powerless, owing to obstruction, to pass anything in this House, they agreed to pass unanimously a Bill to secure a fast Atlantic service by the contribution of a million dollars a year, with the provision that the contract must be subject to the approval of Parliament when it met. When the late Government were prevented by the Governor General, in violation of the constitution of the country, from having the fast Atlantic contract signed and closed, when Parliament was to meet in a fortnight, and when, if Parliament did not approve of the contract they could repudiate it, hon. gentlemen not only did not take action, but, under the same impression which the Minister of Agriculture has exhibited to-night, that they knew much better and had more information than all the rest of the world, they discarded all the information that had been obtained on this important question, and undertook to delude themselves, as I told them in 1897, and to delude themselves again, as I told them in 1898, with the idea that they could do something better than their predecessors. And now where are they? Why, Sir, not only does the Minister of Trade and Commerce admit that a great wrong was done to the people of Canada—that Canada has lost this service, which would have been in operation a year ago last May—but he gives us no hope. He says that the ship yards are all full, and that we could not get a ship built to-day on any terms, even if we could now make a contract for the amount that Parliament provided. I can tell the hon. gentleman that I have been wide enough awake to see that just as in that matter Canada has been thrown down, I do not know how long—whether five years or ten years—and that this important service has been ruined and made hopeless by them, a service that would have brought the capitalists of the United States to Canada, owing to the natural advantages we possess, a service that would have enabled us to control the whole mail matter between the two continents to as great an extent as a weekly service could control it, a service by which New York would have got her mails twenty-four hours earlier than in any other way—just as that service, with all these advantages has been thrown away and lost because hon. gentlemen themselves have been asleep to the advantages of Canada, in the same way the hon. Minister of Agriculture is crippling this service by claiming that he has saved a paltry $15,000. I will take up these estimates and will show him where his $15,000 has been corruptly spent by his Government in building a wharf where there was no water to get to it. If he wants to save money, let him go through these estimates, and he will find many ways, instead of robbing the honest, industrious agriculturists of this country, who are the very foundation of its prosperity. Hon. gentlemen laugh when we tell them that the agriculturists are men of standing and character, and important to the best interests of Canada, and that they should be largely protected, and their greatest industry fostered, as to-day the Government fosters the manufacturing and other industries. But when they stand face to face with the intelligent agriculturists, my hon. friends will find they will have to make a better case than they have to-night, before they can convince the people that they deserve credit for robbing the agriculturists of the sum of $15,000, which is to be expended on a wharf at a place where there is no water.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

The hon. Minister of Agriculture, when I point to Australia, says: We are doing exactly the same thing; we are copying Australia and the United States. Let me ask the House whether he was stating what was true or false, when, a few moments ago, he said that under the cold-storage system of Australia the Australians were able to put peaches on the markets of England as fresh and well-flavoured as if picked in London. Contrast that statement with the wail of the fruit-growers of Canada, who tell him that his cold storage is of no value, and it would be better for him to adopt some new system.

If we have any hope of ever getting the session to an end, we must adopt some means of preventing the Minister of Agriculture from getting on his feet, because, unfortunately, when he does, he never knows when to sit down. He reminds me of a certain divine who, after he had preached a long sermon, asked one of his clerical brethren what he thought of it. "Well," said his friend, "it was a good sermon, but I think you passed some very admirable places in it where you might have stopped."

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not at all want to prolong the discussion, but the hon. gentleman has accused me of having neglected what he calls the gravamen of the charge against me with regard to cold storage, and that is the fast line. I thought that when I was dealing with the cold-storage equipment, I was dealing with what ought to be the gravamen of the charge. But the hon. gentleman is more at home in dealing with the fast line and other subjects of that kind, and prefers talking about them to discussing cold storage. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that the contract he boasts about was one of the most gigantic frauds ever perpetrated on the Canadian people, that the contract which he says he concluded with the Allan people, was one which bound the Government to pay the Allan people $750,000 a year, if they chose to take it up, but which left them free to take it up or not at their own will and pleasure, and that there was nothing binding in that contract on them, while Canada was tightly bound. If that is the kind of contract which the hon. gentleman wants to boast of, he is welcome to his boasting. We have done this at all events: we have prevented the people of Canada from being saddled with a burden of three-quarters of a million dollars per year for a steam service which never could have been up to the mark, under the conditions and terms of the contract the hon. gentleman made, and which left us absolutely at the mercy of the steamship company, without protection for Canada.

The hon. gentleman says that this was the great thing they did for cold storage. They provided a contract which was going to give four steamships running per year from Canada to Great Britain, and that was a great thing for the farmers. Well, as a matter of fact, for less than $70,000, I have provided with cold-storage twenty-three steamships going to England, while he was going to spend $750,000 a year in order to get four steamships only equipped with this system.

He says that I have convicted myself out of my own mouth because I stated that the South African people were able to send peaches to England in cold storage. But he did not take into the slightest account what the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) understood perfectly well, namely, that the reason was, the South Africans had adopted a system by which the peaches were not handled or touched at all, and, of course, were not bruised, and consequently could be carried in perfect safety. The hon. gentleman laughs; but, as a matter of fact, we have carried peaches in cold storage to London, and marketed and sold them at as good prices as the South African and Californian peaches. But unfortunately, when they have been handled and bruised by the pickers and handlers, as has been generally the case, our peaches have not reached the English market in good order, but when they have not been bruised, and have been carefully handled, they have arrived in perfect order by the system we have adopted and carried into effect.

The hon. gentleman says that when I go before the farmers, I shall have to provide a different defence, and that he is quite ready to leave the decision with the farmers. Well, I am equally willing to leave it in their hands, and prefer doing that to arguing the point with him.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I cannot allow the hon. gentleman to make a statement calculated to mislead the committee on a very important question, and that is the Allan contract, of which he speaks with supreme contempt, as he talks of the Allan people. He says that the contract was a most wretched and improper one. Has anybody suffered anything by it—

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE.
Thanks to us.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER—except through the failure of this Government to adopt it? What is the fact? It is, that the clause allowing the Messrs. Allan four months, was put in at their request for the purpose of enabling them to negotiate with the Grand Trunk Railway and Canadian Pacific Railway lines, at whose mercy they said they would be largely, unless they could make a contract with them before absolutely closing one with us. But the agents of the Messrs. Allan in Glasgow, a house of enormous wealth, called on the right hon. Secretary of State for the Colonies, and communicated the fact that they were ready to carry out the contract at once. What then happened? When it was found that the $750,000 for a fast Atlantic service which was voted, and to authorize the Government to pay which an Act was passed, failed to accomplish the object, I was enabled to obtain from Her Majesty's Government the implementing of that by a grant of £75,000 sterling, added to our subsidy, for the purpose of completing that important service, on account of its value from an Imperial and national point of view. And when all this was done, when all the means were provided and the Colonial Office was communicated with by Lord Strathcona, then Sir Donald Smith, and when that everything was arranged satisfactorily, unfortunately for Canada this Government obtained power and interfered with the success of that project. My hon. friend now boasts to the people that they have saved $750,000 a year, and have got for $70,000 what would have been done by the fast Atlantic steamers. If he thinks such a monstrous misstatement of the facts, such a gigantic delusion as that, can be palmed off upon the intelligent electorate of Canada, he will find himself completely deluded, as when he went down to Brome the other day with such confidence as to what his constituents would do on the temperance question, and came back with his tail behind him.—in fact, without his tail behind him, for he had lost his tail in the struggle in Brome. The hon. gentleman boasts that they have saved $750,000 a year. Was it done in an open, manly way? Did not the Premier declare to his constituents in Quebec that this fast service was one of the most important things that could be done for Quebec or for Canada? Was he seeking to delude the people when he said that? This matter was turned over to the charge of the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Dobell), who had publicly declared that seventeen knots was quite enough for a Canadian service. And the result of his management is that the whole thing is broken down and destroyed. If the hon. Minister (Mr. Fisher) thinks that the action of the Government of which he is a member in this respect affords grounds for boasting, let him hug that delusion as his friends in West Elgin were told to hug their beloved machine.

Mr. WALLACE. The second speech of the Minister of Agriculture was devoid of those insulting remarks that characterized the first. He apparently profited by the castigation given him by the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper). I have listened at various times to the Minister of Agriculture, but I have never heard him observe the courtesies and civilities due to every member, but due above every member on this side to the leader of the Opposition. There is no more flagrant sinner in that respect than the uncultivated Minister of Agriculture. He remarked that the leader of the Opposition must have been asleep on this as on other matters. He speaks of the leader of the Opposition living in the past. I am in the judgment of the House that there is not now nor has there been, in my recollection, any member of this House who has given more active and intelligent interest to every business proposal and every legislative matter brought before the House than the leader of the Opposition. Why, Sir, he is a marvel. He has none of the characteristics of an old man. He is here to-day with energies unimpaired, watching every question, giving intelligent discussions to everything of importance before the House, and the language used by the Minister of Agriculture is a piece of impertinence—perhaps that is not parliamentary, but if I could find a stronger term that would express my meaning, I would be glad to use it. The Minister of Agriculture says: The hon. gentleman may not know it, but I have already done all this without the necessity of his giving advice. I do not know that there is any member of this House who would be the worse of advice given to him. Other Ministers, I know, are glad to have the mature views and sage counsel of the leader of the Opposition on important matters. But this self-sufficient over-wise Minister of Agriculture, this gentleman who parades with his valet paid for by the country, instead of by himself, as should be if he choses to have that luxury, tells us he has done all these things and has done them well. He tells us: We have laid out everything well, arranged everything well, managed everything well—

Mr. FOSTER. Does he say "we"?

Mr. WALLACE. No, that is right; there was no "we" in it; it was "I." But the country has not discovered these great abilities in the Minister of Agriculture. If he had one-tenth of the mental vigour of the leader of the Opposition, he might thank Providence that he had ten times the intellectual power he has to-day. With regard to the tremendous results of his business arrangements, what do they amount to. He said: We have provided cold storage sufficient in every direction. Why, as I understand it, the most important point where cold storage should have been given is for our trade with the British West Indies. But that has been entirely neglected. He boasts about his exports of butter. But let us take a specimen or two. To British Guiana, last year, we exported $71 worth of butter. They want the butter and we are producing it in enormous quantities; yet all we sent to them was $71 worth. Then consider our shipments in this line to Hong Kong. We have a line of steamers running there regularly; a line of steamers that are the pride of this country for their splendid equipment. We ought to have sent hundreds of dollars worth of butter to Hong Kong. How much did we send? Just $250 worth. Our ships call at Japan also, yet of Canadian butter we sent to Japan only $576 worth. Have the Government provided cold storage on these ships; have they looked after our business in respect of this cold storage question? I claim that they have utterly neglected it. Take the Danish West India Islands—we sent them only $9,000 worth of butter. To the South-western West India Islands, which we should have sent tens of thousands of dollars worth, we sent $75 worth. The hon. gentleman has neglected the most important points, and in his self-sufficient and insolent manner he lectures everybody who does not fall down and worship our sapient Minister of Agriculture. He has boasted in this House and elsewhere: Look at the enormous trade we are doing with the United States—$7,000 head of cattle exported, where only a few years ago we sent a much smaller number. Why, these cattle netted to the Canadian farmer only $14 per head. They should have been kept here and fed in this country, where we have the products to feed them. We send cattle to Great Britain, and have done so for many years. These bring more than $61 per head to the Canadian dealer.

Yet the Minister of Agriculture boasts of the enormous trade that he says he has built up with the United States by abolishing the quarantine regulations. I say in that regard he has done an injury to the Canadian trade, because the whole of that wealth should have been retained for the Canadian farmer. We have the material to feed the cattle here, but he thinks it is a good thing to send them to the United States at $14 a head instead of feeding them and exporting them to Great Britain. As has been pointed out by the leader of the Opposition, these gentlemen are too anxious to indulge in deals to prepare for the next election. They have got their supplementary Estimates and their subsidies down already for an election. To-day they dare not face the people, because they know that the people will refuse to be hoodwinked any longer, will refuse to be purchased by their own money. There have been a series of extraordinary scandals in this country, the Yukon scandal, the West Elgin scandal, and now we have the West Huron scandal, the iniquities of which are being disclosed day by day. Let me tell them that they must soon go before the great jury of the electorate of Canada, who will pronounce a verdict against them which they richly deserve.

Mr. OSLER. I am sorry to see the reduction in this item. I think the speech of the Minister of Agriculture justified entirely the criticism made by the leader of the Opposition. I look upon this item in the Estimates as the most valuable contribution to the progress of the country in the whole blue-book. Yet the Minister of Agriculture, having simply touched the fringe of this enterprise, having shown only a few of the results of the expenditure of $85,000 last year, is now afraid to go any further, and he reduces it to $70,000. We have not begun yet even to scratch the ground as to the possibilities of our development in this regard. For many years I have considered this question; long before I was in Parliament I wrote about it, and thought that the Government of Canada should devote $100,000 or $200,000 a year for the development of this very branch of business we are now discussing. I do not believe any money can be so profitably expended in Canada as money expended in this direction. Last year's expenditure, following out absolutely the policy of the Conservative Government, was successful; and I am sorry now that the hon. gentleman has got frightened and dare not tackle an expenditure of more than $70,000. $100,000, properly spent in this way, would bring in better results than all the railway subsidies we have proposed this year. It will bring in great results to those men who are so often wept over, the poor farmers of this country. This is the way to help the farmer to develop his cheese, his butter and his poultry industry. If this Government had adopted a plan whereby $100,000 or $200,000 a year should be spent among the different provinces in the development of agriculture, I would have supported them.

Mr. REID. I wish to enter my protest against the reduction the Minister is making in this vote. For many years before the last election, hon. gentlemen opposite were telling the farmers that they were being badly treated by the Conservative Government, and they promised that if they got into power they would take the burdens off the farmers and better their condition. Well, we find that in 1896, the Conservative Government brought down estimates to the extent of $39,000,000, and this session the Estimates are over $50,000,000. In every department of Government the Estimates have been increased except in the Department of Agriculture. There is no branch of industry in this country that needs more to be fostered than agriculture. The farmers of this country are its backbone. Last year I asked the Minister if he would place a small amount in the Estimates for the development of the butter industry; he told me that, as he was doing something for cold storage, he could not do anything to help the butter industry. Now we find he is reducing the amount for cold storage. He tells us that the butter in the British market is now equal to Danish butter, and he attributes that to his cold storage system. Now, the hon. gentleman must know that he is comparing Danish creamery-made butter with butter that was made in this country prior to creameries being established, there is no comparison between them. The first time Canadian butter was on a par with Danish butter was when the Quebec Government gave the Quebec farmers a bonus of 3 cents a pound if they would go into creamery butter; and immediately that creamery butter was placed on the British market it was found to be equal to Danish butter. If you turn to the exports of last year you will see that the export of butter from Quebec has been steadily growing. Last year that province exported 8,873,000 pounds, while Ontario exported 1,445,000 pounds. The Ontario Government does not give a bonus to the farmers for creamery butter, and, therefore, that export has not grown in Ontario.

Mr. McMULLEN. Of the butter exported from Montreal, a very large proportion comes from Ontario.

Mr. REID. The reports from the province of Quebec of the hon. Minister of Agriculture show that the creameries in Quebec have been rapidly increasing their output, while in Ontario there is hardly any increase whatever. This is evidence of the fact that this butter which is exported is manufactured in Quebec, and therefore the trade reports are practically correct. I find that, even in my own county, the creameries are not extending as they should, and cheese factories have not been made into butter factories as rapidly as we would like to see them. I believe, if the Government would give the farmers some encouragement in the way of a bonus the amount of butter that would be exported would be largely increased and the country would be recouped a dozen times over. During the campaign it was held up to us that the Liberal party, when they came in, would name a practical farmer to be Minister of Agriculture. While the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) is a practical farmer, I fail to see where he has placed one item in the Estimates, or done one thing in addition to what the Conservative party did when in power, to help the farmers of this country. I believe the farmers need protection more than any other class in this country, and I would like to see the Liberal party do something to protect them. I for one, even though I am on this side of the House, would support any vote that is placed in the agricultural Estimates in the interests of the farmer. When we turn over the next page in the Estimates we find that there is an increase of $108,000 in the immigration vote, for increases in the salaries of officials who are sent over to the old country. If that $108,000 had been expended in assisting the farmers it would have done ten times more good than

It will do in the way in which it is to be spent. I appeal to the Government, in the interests of the farmers of my county, in the interest of the farmers of the whole Dominion, to do more for them than they have been doing. If the Conservative party did not do enough when they were in power let the present Government do ten times more. When they allow all the other departments to increase their expenditures, the Justice, Railways and Canals and Public Works Departments, and when they do nothing for the backbone of the country, the farmers of the country, I do not know what the result will be.

Mr. ROGERS. I agree with the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, and I am very sorry to see the reduction that is being made in the agricultural estimates. While the hon. Minister says that he does not see why we should go on expending any more money on cold-storage at present, I am of the belief that there are many other ways in which that money could be judiciously expended for the benefit of the farmer, if we have all the cold storage we require. I was not here on Monday evening when the item was under discussion for experimental stations. It was a great surprise to me to find that there was any opposition to that scheme. When we see what other countries are doing in the shape of agricultural education, it should be an encouragement to us to try to follow them along that line. It has long been my feeling that the Government of the day, and past Governments, have not done enough for the agriculturists of this country. One of the reasons why I left my old friends was because I thought they were not doing sufficient for the agriculturists. It is not an easy thing for a man to leave his party and to separate himself from his old friends: it is a hardship for him to do it. But if he conscientiously does it, as I did in that case, I feel that there is no case for pronouncing censure upon him. I thought that the Conservative party were doing too much for the manufacturers, too much to build up the cities and towns, and that they were neglecting the agricultural population. My idea, in regard to preferential trade, was that anything that could be done in that direction would be in the direction of breaking up the spirit of protection and of giving freer trade to this country. I hope that the hon. Minister of Agriculture will bring the item for illustration stations before the House again and divide the House upon it, and, as I have said, I am surprised that hon. gentlemen opposite should have objected to it. It is too small an amount to vote down. In regard to agricultural education, to show what other countries are doing, I may be permitted to read an extract from a pamphlet published by Mr. Bryant, of Toronto, in the interest of agricultural education in the public schools. The writer dwells at great length upon the importance of encouraging agricultural education in the schools. He finishes up by showing how little our Government are doing in that line, and he contrasts what is being done in this country with what is being done in other countries. He says:

However, notwithstanding this risk, let us see what a few of the smaller states of Europe are doing in the way of agricultural education. Bavaria, which has about twice the population of Ontario, maintains 26 agricultural colleges, besides keeping up an agricultural department at its famous Polytechnic School at Munich, Wurtemberg, which has about four-fifths the population of Ontario, has 16 agricultural colleges. Saxony, with a population only very little larger than that of Ontario, and with an area only one-fortieth that of Ontario, maintains at Leipzig an agricultural department in the university with 20 professional chairs, and, besides, four agricultural colleges of the highest class, 20 other agricultural colleges, and one veterinary college. Baden, with a population about one-half that of Ontario, although it is not larger than five or six of our counties, has one agricultural college of the highest class, 13 other agricultural colleges, four schools of gardening and forestry, one school for horse-shoeing, and one for irrigation and draining. Hesse-Darmstadt, whose population is less than one-half that of Ontario, maintains one agricultural college of the highest class, and eight other agricultural colleges. But in Hesse-Darmstadt they never have a yield of wheat of an average over the whole country of less than 37 bushels to the acre, while we are satisfied in Ontario with an average of less than 15. Saxe-Weimar, with a population less than one-eighth that of Ontario, maintains an agricultural department in its University of Jena with 15 professorships, and provides for several travelling professorships in the subject as well. And if I were to go beyond the smaller states, and mention what is done for higher scientific agricultural education in the larger state of Prussia, you would be worried with the mere description of the various schools, colleges and special institutions which have been erected in that behalf. However, at the risk of tiring you, I will briefly enumerate them: Four agricultural colleges of the highest class, with about 80 professorships; 40 lesser colleges, all connected with model farms; five special schools for the cultivation of meadows and the scientific study of irrigation; one special school for the reclamation of swamp lands; two special schools for industrial agriculture; one school for horse-shoeing; one school for the raising of trees; one school for silk raising; one school for fish culture; 20 special laboratories and conservatories for the education of gardeners; and three higher schools and 12 secondary schools in which instruction in the culture of the grape vine is made a specialty. And it must be remembered that these schools, as well as the higher colleges, all have model farms attached to them for the practical instruction of their students. Moreover, in addition to all this, there must be taken into account the provision that is made for elementary agricultural instruction, not only in the ordinary primary and higher schools for these various states, but in the special schools as well. And what is true of the German states is true, with but little variation, of every other progressive European nation—France, Austria, Denmark, Belgium, Sweden and the rest.

Mr. DAVIN. Who is the writer of that very interesting letter ?

Mr. ROGERS. J. E. Bryant, M.A., editor of one of the agricultural papers of Toronto. Then I have a clipping from an article entitled "Agricultural education in the Empire of the Czar," showing what they are doing in Russia, that agricultural country which we are accustomed to despise, for agricultural education. It says :

The scheme outlined provides for higher education, furnished by independent agricultural institutes located in the chief agricultural zones of Russia, and by chairs of agricultural and allied sciences in the universities ; agricultural high schools, which are in the nature of technical schools and schools with courses in agriculture ; lower agricultural schools, and the diffusion of general agricultural information. The schools for the so-called lower education include secondary agricultural schools, primary agricultural schools, agricultural classes and practical agricultural courses. These lower schools are to be under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Agricultural and Imperial Domains. They are to be maintained at the expense of municipalities, local communities, associations, &c., but may receive a part of their support from the Government. The course of instruction covers four years, and includes, in addition to the general studies, the elements of the natural sciences, agricultural and rural economy, cattle raising, veterinary, agricultural law, horticulture, gardening, &c., together with carpentry and blacksmithing in their application to agricultural machinery. The primary agricultural schools are open to all who can read and write, and have a knowledge of arithmetic as far as fractions. The courses last from one to three years. They include, aside from general studies, instruction in the elements of agriculture, with practical exercises. The diffusion of general agricultural information is to be provided for by the organization of public readings or lectures on agricultural questions, for the benefit of different classes of the population ; instruction of the teachers in the public schools in agriculture, horticulture, gardening, apiculture, &c., and providing the public schools with small plots of land and means for cultivating the same ; the teaching of agriculture in the normal schools, and the introduction of supplementary courses in agriculture in the village schools. There are now in Russia three schools for higher agricultural instruction, nine agricultural high schools, 83 lower schools, and 59 special courses. Steps have already been taken for the establishment of about 50 additional agricultural schools.

Mr. DAVIN. From whom is the hon. gentleman quoting ?

Mr. ROGERS. I am quoting an extract taken from the "Farmers' Sun," of Toronto. Then I will show what the little country of Finland is doing, a country in the far north of Europe, from which we are hoping to get some immigrants. I met a young man from there last winter, and he gave me such an interesting account of the country and its people that I felt that we might well try to get some of them to come to this country :

An Englishman, who has lived in Finland for 20 years, gives an interesting account of the superior condition of the agricultural Finns, as compared with the Russian peasantry. Within the last century, he says, their country has undergone a complete transformation, in spite of the rigours of the climate. It appears that there are government agricultural advisers, called agronomes, whose services are available for every farmer at the small cost of entertaining one of them and his horse, so long as he stays on the farm. These officials, who must have passed through the Government agricultural schools, advise the farmer as to the draining, manuring, &c., of his bogs and fields. Certificated dairymaids are also provided to teach him how to feed his cows rationally and to make butter, which is one of the chief articles of export. Education is at a high standard, in fact, and schools are plentiful and well supplied with high-class and well-paid teachers. Nearly all peasants can read and write.

I make these quotations to show what other countries are doing for agricultural education. I have always thought that agriculture should be taught in our schools, and that it should be made compulsory, and I am very glad to see that we are coming to that. It is a surprise to me that objection has been raised to the item before the committee. The hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan) is an authority on agriculture. Every one in this House is not possessed of the same agricultural genius that he possesses, and he must make allowance for those who are not so far advanced as himself. I felt that the Minister of Agriculture, in making this attempt, was assuming a considerable burden. I am not sure that it would be a success, but I think some good would come of it. It is an experiment, and the only objection I have is that the vote is not large enough, but I hope that the hon. gentleman will insist upon this item to give it a trial. Speaking of cold-storage and the expenditure of public money in the interest of agriculture, when I read the resolutions that were passed by the Butter and Cheese Association and the shippers of other perishable articles at that large meeting held in the fall of 1896, I felt that there must have been some radical need to call forth those resolutions. As regards the fast Atlantic service, why does the hon. leader of the Opposition have such faith in the importance of that project ? I heard the hon. gentleman, the other day, speak of Sir Sandford Fleming with the greatest respect, as an authority of the highest standing. But is he not aware that Sir Sandford Fleming condemned that fast Atlantic scheme in the strongest possible terms and even went to the length of writing a pamphlet against it ? Surely, the opinion of a man of that kind ought to have some weight with the hon. gentleman. I can tell the hon. gentleman that it certainly has with the country, and that the people are not sorry that his scheme was frustrated. We have in its stead a system much more beneficial to the agriculturists, and of which I am sure the results will be much more profitable. In the future we may be in a position to discuss a fast line service, but at present what we require is better and cheaper freight accommodation, and that we know we cannot have and at the same time have vessels of great speed. The greater freight accommodation must be obtained at the expense of speed. When we have such improved accommodation for freight, when we have a well-equipped storage system, when our products have obtained entry under the most favourable circumstances on the British market, then we may consider the project of a fast line, and then such a project will not cost nearly so much, with our increased knowledge and advanced scientific improvement, and our increased commerce will warrant such an expenditure.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Can the hon. Minister inform the House what cold storage has been provided on the Intercolonial Railway in Nova Scotia?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There are cold-storage cars running on the Intercolonial Railway, the same as on other lines. These cars run to Halifax, Lévis and Montreal.

Mr. McDOUGALL. But what about that portion of the Intercolonial Railway from Truro to Sydney?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No desire has been expressed for any there. I have not been asked to provide cold storage to those points for any fruit products such as would require cold storage.

Mr. McDOUGALL. It is perfectly true that there is no desire, apparently, on the part of the Government to provide that part of the Intercolonial Railway system with cold storage, but I know that the people who are engaged in the fisheries along the coast of eastern Nova Scotia, have a very strong desire to have their fish shipped in cold storage. The hon. gentleman ought to be aware that the people along the eastern coast of Nova Scotia and Cape Breton are shipping fish by express, without the assistance of cold storage, and paying high rates, and getting an efficient service at the same time. He ought to be aware of these facts before lecturing members of this House and telling them it would be waste of money to provide a larger amount than is provided in the Estimates now. He ought to be aware of the fact that there are millions of dollars' worth of fish caught around the eastern part of the province of Nova Scotia, between the months of April and August, and that the people are without any facilities for sending in cold storage over the Intercolonial Railway the fish caught in these waters.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No request has been sent to me for cold-storage accommodation on that part of the Intercolonial Railway. Wherever there has been any request for it, cold-storage accommodation has been provided. It is published in the press, and in the reports of the department, and our bulletins, that, wherever cold storage is required, the department are ready to make arrangements with the railway companies for that purpose.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Does the hon. gentleman not know that a sum of money was voted last year to pay the expenses of a trip to England of a gentleman from eastern Nova Scotia, who went to seek a market there for our fresh fish, and to see what facilities could be provided for cold storage? How does he suppose the fish could be brought to the English market, unless cold storage is provided for bringing them from the counties along the eastern coast of Nova Scotia, where they are caught? I am really surprised the hon. gentleman refuses to give an answer.

Mr. CASEY. I am afraid the hon. gentleman is trying to draw, not a red herring, but a fresh herring, across the path. I do not know that it is the business of the Minister of Agriculture to be conversant about the fisheries of Nova Scotia. It may be, but that is a new branch of agriculture, to my mind. I have no doubt, however, that if the cold-storage system is entirely under his charge, and this matter is brought before him, he will see that cold storage is provided. But I rose, not to speak to the fishermen, because I understood that this is an agricultural debate, and I want to say a few words with reference to cold storage, as provided for agricultural products. I find that hon. gentlemen opposite are very ready to play the part of the farmers' friend while in Opposition, but they do not quite know how. They did not always play that part, when in power, but were much more accustomed to play to the other gallery—what I may describe, perhaps, as the Red Parlour gallery. It is not a great many years ago—I think, in 1895 or 1896—when an election was thought possible, that the then Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) took occasion to claim credit for the Conservative régime because the farming population of Canada had not increased during the previous decade. The increase, he said, from 1881 to 1891 had been half a million, and this had been altogether amongst the non-rural population. This was, he argued, a great thing for the farmers, because the competition among farmers was lessened, and there were half a million more mouths to eat their products. That was the conception which the Conservative Government entertained of what was good for the farming community—increase all other classes of the population at the expense of the farming community, and tell the farmers that they were ever so much better off, because they were not increasing in numbers. It is a very sharp curve for these hon. gentlemen to take now, to have to turn round and speak as the farmers' advocate, and try to urge the Government to take measures which will increase the number of farmers in the country and the prosperity of their industry. I understand that hon. gentlemen opposite are objecting to the reduction of the amount asked for cold storage this year, and will not be content with the business-like explanation given by the hon. Minister.

As I understand the matter, the money already voted and the payments already made to the steamship companies have been sufficient to pay for the installation of the plant required for cold storage. This was not to be an annual subsidy to these people for keeping the cold storage system in operation, but a payment to cover the cost of introducing the plant, and after that, they were to look to the trade for their profits. In other words, the Government are in the position, so far as cold storage is concerned, of a farmer who has put up all the barns and stables and has bought all the farm machinery he needs and is not obliged to draw on his resources for annual payments on account of such plant for the purpose of carrying on his farming operations. They are in the same position as a dairy company that has got its factory built, its vats and presses and other things in position to manufacture. In short, Sir, the Opposition are complaining not because there is any diminution of the service obtained in virtue of this grant, but because the Government is not asking for a new grant this year and every year to pay for plant which is already paid for, which is in operation and of which we are getting the benefit. The contention is so hollow that I can only imagine that they are bringing it forward not to impress the farmer but to occupy a certain amount of time. It is a mistake on their part if they imagine the farmers are not posted on these matters. The speech of my hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Rogers) show how the farmers of Canada, the practical working farmer, is taking an interest in and is posting himself in all matters connected with his profession, and shows that there is no use of their talking to independent men as they are doing with regard to this vote.

Mr. DAVIN. Will my hon. friend allow me? Is it not clear that the hon. member for Frontenac feels that if other interests are to be protected, the farmer should get his share?

Mr. CASEY. I did not hear all the speech of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Rogers), but I say the part I did hear showed that he had posted himself thoroughly with regard to matters connected with his profession and sees the point in connection with this vote as clearly as any of us do. My hon. friend from Frontenac made a good point when he spoke of cold storage versus rapid transit on the Atlantic. I agree with him and with Sir Sandford Fleming that you cannot expect to have large accommodation for cold storage and also rapid transit in the same class of vessels. The ideal fast line must be a purely passenger line, built for purposes of speed. To have an ideal freight line, especially one with facilities for cold storage, it is not necessary to have the same speed required in the other class of vessel. I think it is highly probable, from the shape things are taking, that in the near future the Government will succeed in establishing a rapid passenger line and at the same time a most efficient freight line.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I desire to ask the Minister of Agriculture again if he will promise that he will be able to provide anything out of this vote for putting cold storage on that portion of the Intercolonial Railway east of Truro to Sydney.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, if it is wanted—certainly.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Also to provide for some boats around the coast of eastern Nova Scotia that would bring fish from the fishing port to the Intercolonial Railway. As I have said before there are millions of dollars worth of fish caught on that coast all within three or four months of the year, and the people are obliged, for want of these facilities, to salt down these fish and to accept but a fraction of the value they would bring in the markets of the western provinces, or, as we say, the upper provinces. If these people could send their fish fresh to the upper provinces, as they could do if the same facilities for transporting fish were provided as exist in other countries and in other parts of this country, they would get a far better price. These fishermen consume the products of the farmers, the artisans and manufacturers of Ontario and Quebec very largely, and they have a right to have facilities placed at their disposal by which the product of their hard labour can be sent to the best markets in their own country. It is strange that in the cities of Ottawa, Montreal, Quebec and Toronto, the principal part of the fish they consume comes from Portland or Boston, when we have large quantities of fresh fish landed every day on our own shores. It seems now that the Minister of Agriculture thinks it a waste of money to put any more in this estimate for advancing the interests of our people in this industry. He cannot see any necessity for putting facilities at the disposal of our fishermen, but he sees a necessity for voting hundreds of thousands of dollars for luxurious cars for the Intercolonial Railway. I hope the Minister will give this matter his attention, and I also hope that the Minister of Railways and Canals will provide better railway facilities for the transportation of fish.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not regret that the hon. gentleman has brought this matter up, as it is one of the greatest importance, though it is not strictly related to the business of the Minister of Agriculture. I think he will find that the providing of cold storage through the Department of Agriculture has hitherto been confined entirely to the export trade.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Is there any grant for cold storage ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is, and it is proposed to provide refrigerator cars on the Intercolonial Railway, which is a form of cold storage, and that which, I think, my hon. friend is most interested in. I think the question of supplying the markets of Ottawa and the cities of the upper provinces with fish from the lower provinces is a very important question indeed, and I am glad the hon. gentleman has brought it before the House. The Minister of Railways and Canals, I know, has had his attention drawn to it, and in the new equipment of the Intercolonial Railway it is in contemplation that there should be additional refrigerator cars, and I do not know any service to which those cars could be applied with more prospect of increasing our trade, and with better results generally, than in the development of the fish trade of the lower provinces. I can assure the hon. gentleman that he will find the Government most sympathetic in that respect. It is not correctly the business of the Minister of Agriculture, but I know that the Minister of Railways and Canals has been giving it his consideration. With regard to the second part of his question, as to whether the department could afford to put cold storage in small steamers around the coast, that is another phase of the question well worthy of attention. That is also somewhat outside the line of the Minister of Agriculture, but no matter whose department it is in, it is a question of very large importance, and I agree that the Government should give it their attention. There is already a considerable trade in fresh fish going on from Port Mulgrave, on the Strait of Canso, up to Montreal and west to Chicago.

Mr. McDOUGALL. At great expense.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is carried by the express companies, and I think they have refrigerator compartments in their cars, but the hon. gentleman, who is a resident of the eastern part of the province, may know that better than I do. I quite agree that the cost of handling these goods by the express companies must make the fish somewhat expensive, and we ought to look forward to improving the trade in that line. What is needed, of course, is not only cold storage facilities, but that some enterprising business men, interested in the fish trade, should undertake its management, and I am quite satisfied that there will be no lack of will on the part of the Government to supply all the cold storage facilities which are necessary. I sympathize entirely with the views of the hon. gentleman takes, and I promise that so far as I am concerned, I will do my utmost to see that assistance is granted to the fish trade of the lower provinces.

Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. McDOUGALL. The Minister will see that even if facilities are provided by the Intercolonial Railway, it will not meet one-half the requirements. In the Canso district which is a large fishing station, they are under the necessity now of sending fish by steamer and by express. I have seen these people obliged to send their fish from Canso in open boats in order to connect with express trains. All along the coast there are many places where facilities are needed to enable them to get their fish to market in Canada and the United States. Take for instance, in the County of Richmond, Arichat, Descouse, River Bourgeois, Lardoise and Fourchie, and in the county of Cape-Breton, Gabarus, Louisburg, Mainadieu, Sydney and Bras d'Or, and in the county of Victoria, North Shore, Ingonish and other points to Cape North and many other centres around the island, from which steamers with cold storage would gather up the fish from the fishermen and have it brought to the railway.

Mr. McNEILL. I still have faith in the desire of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) to advance the interests of the farmers of Canada. I agree with all those who have urged the enormous importance to Canada of the development of this cold storage system. I think there is nothing in connection with the Department of Agriculture which may be made a greater engine for good to the agricultural interests of Canada, and what my hon. friend from Cape Breton (Mr. McDougall) has said, shows that it is not necessarily confined to the farming interests, but it reaches even to the fishing interests. I am very sorry my hon. friend has reduced this amount asked for this service. I much regret to learn that the Minister of Trade and Commerce has given it to be understood that for the present at least we must abandon our hopes of having a fast service across the Atlantic. I do not at all agree with the Minister of Agriculture in what he said with regard to that service, so far as cold storage is concerned. The leader of the Opposition says he would have had four vessels which would give a much faster service than any vessels my hon. friend has secured. If these vessels could make the passage in five days, I presume, my hon. friend will not dispute that they could be made of enormous importance to some of the agricultural industries of Canada. Take, for instance, fruit. It would be of incalculable importance to us if we could get our peaches, for example, delivered on the English market a few days sooner than they are delivered now; and it would be of incalculable importance to have our pears and our grapes delivered earlier, as well as our poultry, and many other articles

I could name. Therefore, the cold storage which would have been supplied by the fast Atlantic service is one which is not supplied now, and the country is deprived of that cold storage as long as we have not got the fast Atlantic service.

Now, Sir, when I was sitting on the Government side of the House I was in the habit of criticising my own friends when I thought they were pursuing a policy of which I did not approve, and it is my intention to criticise my friends on the other side of the House just as freely, at least, as I did my own friends. Now, the First Minister to-day did me the favour to tell me that his friendship and mine had about reached the point when they would part company. I should be very sorry, indeed, to lose the friendship of the right hon. gentleman, or to lose the friendship of any of my friends on the other side of the House; but I wish it to be understood by the right hon. gentleman, who, I am sorry to see, is not in his place just now, though he was a moment ago, that I do not want the friendship of the right hon. gentleman, or any other man for one second longer, for one-tenth part of a second longer than he desires to give it to me. I regret very much that the course which the Government has pursued with regard to the fast line service has had the effect of depriving this country so long of that service. I have not been unjust to the Government with regard to this question, because on each occasion when it has come up I have given them credit for desiring to save money.

I believed that the hon. member for Quebec West was earnestly desirous of promoting this fast Atlantic service, and I think so still, but I think that there has been some error of judgment somewhere, there has been failure, for we have been deprived of this fast Atlantic service. I do not believe now, any more than I believed before, that the hon. member for Quebec West has not been trying to do the best he could to supply us with this service. I know the hon. leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) has likened him to the Old Man of the Sea, sitting on the shoulders of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding). I am not at all sure whether it is not the other way, whether it is not the hon. gentleman who has control of the purse-strings who has been like the Old Man of the Sea, sitting on the shoulders of the hon. member for Quebec West. I daresay, when the matter is probed to the bottom, it may be discovered that it was just as much the fault of the hon. Minister of Finance and some of his colleagues perhaps, as of the hon. member for Quebec West. I do not know what the cause is, but whatever it may be we have the fact that we have been deprived of the fast service, which, had the Allan contract been accepted by the Government, would no doubt have been in operation some time ago, and a very serious loss to the country would have been avoided. I cannot help being very much struck by the fact that there are three great lines of Imperial policy which have been delayed by this Government since they came into power, lines of policy which were then, I think, at the point of fruition—preferential trade, the fast Atlantic service and the Pacific cable. All of these, for some curious and unexplained reason, were delayed. I gave the Government credit for the most absolute good faith in connection with the fast service. I do not say that there has been bad faith in connection with it, but I do say that it strikes me as being very remarkable that all these three lines of Imperial policy, to which I have referred, are each one of them, lines of Imperial policy that might fairly have been expected to be unfavourably viewed by our friends on the south of the line. It is a very curious thing that every one of the lines of Imperial policy which have been advanced by the present Government are lines of policy as to which no exception would be likely to be taken by our friends to the south. It is a curious fact. We have got the Pacific cable now, and I am very glad indeed we have got it, and I give the greatest possible credit to the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) for the energy he has displayed in connection with this matter. But we have the fact also that it was blocked in England by the right hon. Prime Minister; we have the fact also that last session the Government showed the most extraordinary reluctance to help on the work; we have the fact that a very strong feeling arose in this country in favour of the Pacific cable, and that when that feeling was displayed, the Government gave way and favoured the cable. We have got it, but we have not got preferential trade with the mother country, and we know what occurred in regard to that the other day. We have not got the fast line for some reason or other, which our friends all very much desired to have carried out. I am very much impressed with the fact which stands strongly out before us, that these three great lines of Imperial policy have, every one of them, been delayed by these hon. gentlemen.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) asked the question, what the Conservative party have ever done for the benefit of the farmer, and he said that now they were claiming that they were the farmers' friends. I would like to say to him that the Conservative party, while in power, did something for the farmer by protecting every article that the farmer grows. They maintained a protective tariff for the benefit of the farmer, for the protection of his pork, his butter, his cheese, and everything that he grows. The farmers have recognized in the Conservative party, the party that have benefited them by protecting all the articles they produce. The Liberal party have interfered with this protection by abolishing the duty on corn and by lowering the duty on flour and wheat. The hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Rogers) made a reference to cold storage. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Agriculture to give an explanation of the expenditure of $70,000, which I find in the Auditor General's Report, as charged to cold storage. While that amount of money appears under the head of cold storage, I see that only a few hundred dollars went to the province of Ontario for cold storage. I find that several hundred dollars were paid in the province of Quebec for maple sugar and syrup to be distributed in England. It is charged under the head of cold storage. What benefit are the farmers of the country getting from the purchase of maple sugar to be distributed in England? The Government paid $7,614 for fruit to be shipped to the old country by way of experiment. There must have been a very bad system of cold storage, because all they got in England for that fruit was $935. It was the intention of the late Government to establish cold storage centres in various parts of the country. Brockville is the centre of one of the best dairying districts in Canada. Its reputation for butter and cheese stands high, and it should have been made a centre in accordance with the policy of the Conservative party, which was to establish cold storage warehouses for the purpose of receiving supplies from the districts surrounding these points. Had the Government erected a cold storage warehouse at Brockville, which has four miles of railways running into it, the farmers, for several counties around, could have gathered their products there, butter, cheese, vegetables and eggs, and could have them shipped in bulk, in refrigerator cars, to Montreal or Quebec, where they would have been placed on board cold storage steamers and transported to the old country. Had Kingston been selected, as another cold storage centre, farmers from the surrounding district could have forwarded their produce which would have been placed in this refrigerating warehouse and sent in cold storage to the old country. I regret that the hon. Minister has seen fit to reduce this amount, simply to the expenditure of last year. Let anybody go through the Auditor General's Report, pages B-41 to B-45, and he will find the items of expenditure. We find that in Quebec the Cold Storage Warehouse Company were paid $3,725, the difference between their earnings and the Government guarantee for cold storage there. This is where the main expenditure went. But Ontario gets a few bonuses of $50 each for some half-dozen butter factories—less than $1,000 altogether paid out in bonuses in the whole province, for putting up an ice-house or something of that kind here and there to keep the butter cool. But no provision is made to ship the butter from the factories to the cars. If cold storage depots were put at different centres, such as Brockville, Belleville, Toronto, and one at Niagara for fruit, then some practical benefit would be received by the farmers from this expenditure; but as it is now, it is to a certain extent so much money wasted. The steamships have been fitted up, and the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific Railway have fitted up their cars; but the Government have failed to establish these depots, which are necessary to complete the system. I regret that this item has not been increased at least $100,000, and that one at least of these depots has not been started in each province, with the intention of extending them year by year. That would be of some practicable benefit to the farmers; but as the money is dribbled out to-day, it is of very little benefit to them. A few butter factories near the line of railway may be able to ship their butter in refrigerator cars, but the factories which are not near a line of railway are not benefited. I thought the Government were going to undertake this work for the farmers of this country; but I see no signs of that yet. I see that $1,000 of that vote were taken for the travelling expenses of the Minister himself to England, and the money has been spent on officers here and there, while less than $1,000 altogether has been spent in the province of Ontario.

Mr. McMILLAN. I wish to say a word or two on this cold storage question, to which I have given considerable attention. It is only as yet in the experimental stage, and I consider that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) is going ahead just as rapidly as the short experience we have had justifies. The hon. leader of the Opposition tells us that it was not the Minister of Agriculture who established cold storage. If it was not, it was he who established it at the creameries. I am astonished at the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) finding fault with the Minister for not providing means of carrying butter from the factories all over the country to the railways. The farmers do not expect to have this cold storage brought to every farmer's door, but they are notified of the days and times when the railway trains with cold storage will be at the railway stations, and I am convinced that a very large amount of benefit has been derived by the creameries all over the country in consequence. I heard one manager say last summer that his butter realized from two and a half to three cents a pound more on account of his having a cold storage building, for which the Government granted the $50 promised for the first year. The hon. member for South Leeds told us that the farmers of this country have been protected in their beef, mutton, cheese, wheat and flour. As one who has farmed in Canada for 53 years, I would say that it would have been better for the farmers of this country if we had never had protection on our grains. I have shown in this House that both oats and wheat are higher in the United States than in Canada, and that a large quantity of our grain went from this country to the United States. The farmers of this country know that they have not been benefited by protection, and they are not calling for it to-day. What the farmers want is the Government to provide cheap means of transportation and cold storage. The cold storage put in the vessels in the first instance has been found to be very defective. At one period we shipped over $2,000,000 of eggs out of Canada; but it was found that the cold storage facilities were not suitable. It has been found that refrigerator compartments are far better for both eggs and apples than cold storage compartments. When these articles were taken from a cold storage compartment at from 35 to 45 degrees of temperature, and were then taken into an atmosphere of 60 or 70 degrees, the eggs and fruit were found to get damp and to sweat, whereas when they are carried in cold ventilated compartments, and the cold ventilation is taken off a couple of days before the ship reaches its destination, the produce goes ashore in the most perfect condition. At the stage which our cold storage experiment has reached, the Minister is justified in cutting down the vote and proceeding slowly until the system is perfected. We want cold storage and cold ventilated compartments put into the vessels as they are built, because existing vessels are not suited for cold storage, as the heat of the boilers reaches the goods and injures or destroys them. On the vessels now being constructed cold storage is put in on improved principles, and I have no doubt that a great improvement will be made from this time forward. I believe the Minister has been doing everything he could for the province of Ontario.

They can take butter in the cool of the night to a railway station, and it will be impossible for the Government to do what the hon. member for Leeds asks, namely, go all over the country and build storehouses. That hon. gentleman and his friends have awakened very much during the last three years to the interests of the farmer. They never felt any interest in him, when in power. It is only now, when in Opposition, that they find the farmer requires all these things. The present Government has been doing everything that could possibly be done. They have cheapened transportation, and furnished us with cold storage, and assisted us by every means to get our goods out of the country.

I have also given considerable attention to the fast line steamship scheme, and I say advisedly that the greater quantity of goods will never be shipped on a fast line, if for no other reason than that the rates would be too high. When a vessel goes 22 knots an hour, she requires a higher rate on freight than one that runs only 15 knots, and it is impossible for us to get a line of steamships on the St. Lawrence route that will run 20 or 22 knots an hour. I have been twice nearly wrecked on the St. Lawrence, when crossing on a steamer that was making only 8 knots an hour, and I had a son wrecked a year ago last spring, when the steamer on which he was struck an iceberg on a clear day, and when she was running only 8 knots an hour. It is impossible to have a fast line on the St. Lawrence on account of the fogs and icebergs, that will compete with vessels going to New York, where no such obstacles are encountered. I do not believe that we would get the advantage which hon. gentlemen opposite have described, by having cold storage on a fast line. True, a few of the more perishable articles may be shipped on a fast line, but the freights would be very high. Our farmers are better satisfied with their conditions to-day and the efforts the Government are putting forward in their behalf, than they have been for many years. They know that freight rates have been cheapened, and not that an arrangement has been entered into with the Canadian Pacific Railway, although that will not affect to such an extent the farmers of eastern Canada, it will bring about a reduction in rates to the western portion. I have not the least doubt that we will get cheaper freight rates in the future, and one great benefit that the Government could confer upon us would be in giving bonuses to lines of steamships, so as to enable them to carry our goods at lower rates. I was astonished to hear a farmer, the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Reid) stand up and say that the farmers require protection. I am a farmer, and I do not ask for protection, because it is impossible for the Government to give it to me. We have to compete in the markets of the world with our products against all other countries, and I want the Government to cheapen transportation as much as possible, and provide the most valuable means of putting our goods on the British market in the best condition possible. That the Government has been doing, and I think it would be a great mistake to increase this item by the large amount demanded with regard to cold storage, until such time as that system becomes more improved than at present. It is the duty of the Government to go slowly and experiment steadily and just as rapidly as the requirements of the country demand. We all know that great changes have taken place in cold storage, and the Government should be careful to see that this system is established on the most approved principles. I know that the farmers of the country are satisfied, notwithstanding the feeling which hon. gentlemen opposite are trying to excite amongst them. They are watching keenly every step the Government takes, and are perfectly satisfied that the Government has cheapened agricultural implements.

Mr. DAVIN. No.

Mr. McMILLAN. They are satisfied that the Government has cheapened a great deal of what the farmers consume, notwithstanding the denial of my hon. friend from West Assiniboia, who will find out, when another election comes on, that all his preaching in this House will be of no avail amongst the farmers of that district. They know what he has been doing; they know how he has spoken in favour of a resolution to benefit the farmers, and then left the House without voting, and they know that it is not the interest of the farmers, but his own, that he is looking after.

Mr. DAVIN. I am glad to find my hon. friend takes such an interest in West Assiniboia and its representative.

Mr. McMILLAN. I have a large number of friends there, with whom I am in communication.

Mr. DAVIN. I am probably as well informed as to the sentiment that prevails there as my hon. friend is, and I can assure him that the sentiment of the farmers and ranchers of West Assiniboia is one of discontent with the Government for not having carried out their pledges, and for having failed to redeem one promise of economy. They pledged themselves against railway subsidies, and have utterly failed to keep it. They pledged themselves not to have thirteen Ministers, but now we are going to have fourteen on full pay. There is not a single pledge of theirs that they have not broken. Does the hon. gentleman think that the farmers, who are intelligent men, will allow themselves to be bamboozled in this manner?

I listened with great pleasure to the speech made by the hon. leader of the Opposition, in which that distinguished statesman showed that he is fully alive to the important interests of the agricultural community. I think that, according to his lights, the present Minister of Agriculture has been a faithful administrator of his department. But I cannot help thinking of those Estimates now before us, in which large sums are lavished in quarters, and directions, and on interests where it is palpable to any clear-sighted person that they are not needed, while the greatest parsimony is displayed as regards the interests of the farmers. I have in my hand a list of the railway subsidies, amounting to $8,500,000, which brings up the expenditure in this country to over $60,000,000. And yet we find the Minister of Agriculture practising and advocating a small parsimony, where the interests of the farmer are concerned. I cannot but look upon his conduct with a great deal of disgust, because, if there is an interest on which we ought, more than any other, to be liberal, it is the agricultural. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, has spoken of me as trimming my sails. Why, from the moment I entered this House, those sails have been spread to breezes which blow in the interest of the agricultural class of the North-west Territories. If any person takes an interest in my fate in that constituency, which seems to trouble the hon. gentleman, it happens that only to-day I have received a letter which may be an indication of the future. This is dated Maple Creek, July 22, and, in the course of it, the writer says:

I have seen quite a lot of ranchers, and especially those who voted for the Government,—

That is, this Government.

—and they are a disappointed lot.

I am told that that is the feeling everywhere and how could any other sentiment be entertained by the farmers if they are the intelligent men my hon. friend proclaims them to be?

Mr. McMILLAN. You say the farmers are not intelligent men.

Mr. DAVIN. I say they are, and my hon. friend (Mr. McMillan) is a very intelligent man. But he has dared to speak of me as trimming my sails, when he knows very well that there is not a single thing he used to condemn when he sat on this side, but when it is done by the present Government he rises and supports it. There is nothing this Government can do that the hon. gentleman would not defend. I hope he will not be disappointed; I know he is looking for a position—

Mr. McMILLAN. Do not measure my corn in your bushel. I never looked for a position. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) spread the report in West Assiniboia that he had been offered a seat in a Cabinet.

Mr. DAVIN. I never looked for a position. I say now as I said when my friends were in power, that there was not a Minister with whom I ever conversed on any personal interest, and Sir John Thompson, who sat near where the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) is sitting, said "hear, hear." The other night some hon. gentleman had the unblushing effrontery to say that he would make some statement about me. I then threw out the defiance, and I repeat it here, that there is not a chapter, not a sentence in a chapter, not a word in a chapter of my life, private or public, in which I should be afraid to have the scrutiny of the public directed. Hon. gentlemen could not make any attempt to show on any platform in West Assiniboia that I had tried to trim my sails—he would be laughed off the platform. Now, the hon. Minister of Agriculture undoubtedly has in his possession a copy of a pamphlet issued from his department containing the evidence of

Mr. Robertson and Mr. Grisdale. I am not going to read it, because it is in the hands of the farmers of Canada. But you have here in the statement of Mr. Grisdale and in that of Mr. Robertson the evidence that more might be done by the Government for the trade in perishable articles than is being done, and, in the face of that, the hon. gentleman is diminishing the vote for cold storage, in other words, the vote in the interest of the farmers. My hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Rogers) made a speech that was misunderstood by the hon. gentleman from West Elgin (Mr. Casey). The trend of that speech was that the hon. gentleman declared himself a disbeliever in protection; but he said: If protection is going, I want my class to have its share. The position that we took was: Let us do as much for the farmers as we do for any other class; if we protect the lumberers, if we protect the implement manufacturers, let us also protect the farmers. My hon. friend who has lately taken his seat has had the audacity to say that this Government has cheapened implements, though we have the same duty on implements we had before the Government came into power, and they have actually increased the manufacturers' protection by lowering the duty on the raw material. There is not a constituency in Canada, above all there is not one in the North-west, where there are farmers, but you find people who have it in their bosoms as a grievance against this Government, and one that they will not forget, this promise in regard to agricultural implements which has been falsified. I do not know whether the hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches saw it; but the other day there was a town councillor in one of the lower provincial towns and who moved a resolution to borrow $17,000, and when his fellow-councillors said: The town cannot afford that, his answer was: I want to raise the credit of the town; what I would like to do would be to borrow $17,000,000, in order that we might follow something like the same line of policy as that pursued at Ottawa; we are told to admire the statesmen at Ottawa, and I am trying to imitate them. The other town councillors laughed, but the sentiments of that councillor who wanted to borrow are being embodied every day in the acts passed by the majority of this House. And we do not laugh at it. And we may be sure that the people throughout the country are not laughing at it; but the people are amazed at the consistency with which, as time goes on, this Government has covered every spot where it was possible to put one's finger on a promise fulfilled. The last thing that has been done is to raise the salaries of two Ministers to the level of the others, giving us fourteen Ministers with full salaries, in the face of the promises of hon. gentlemen opposite to reduce the number of Ministers in the interests of the farmers. There is not a promise now left; the consistency of their inconsistency is complete, and the betrayal of the farmer is perfect.

Mr. FEATHERSTON. This question of cold storage has taken a very wide range to-night, and I desire to reply to some remarks made by the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace). He says that we have been selling our steers to the United States at $14 a piece. Now, the average steer we have sent to Buffalo this spring weighs about 1,000 pounds, and at $4.60 a hundred, he will bring $46. From that you take off the duty, freight and expenses, and you will still have left nearly three times $14. Yearling steers going from this country to the United States are entered as calves, they do not have to pay the 20 per cent duty. An ordinary lot of yearling steers from Ontario will weigh in the neighbourhood of 600 pounds, and at $4.25 a hundred, which is the price in Toronto, it will bring them up to $26.50, and in Buffalo $4.75 or more, which will bring them up to $28.50 each. The duty on them is $2 each; take off another dollar for freight and expenses, and you have a net return for these yearling steers of about $25 a piece. Now, Sir, I myself have been interested in this trade. I bought some this winter myself for feeding, the average weight was 1,025 pounds, and the average price was $4.23 a hundred. Of course, they were a good class of cattle, and those cattle cost me $43.56. I could have bought those cattle from the farmers in 1896 for $30 a piece. Now, I would like to ask the hon. gentleman who got the benefit of the increased price of these cattle. It must be the farmers who raised those cattle from infancy. The hon. member for West York said that instead of selling those steers at $14 we should have fed them, and we could have got $61 a piece. Take that as a basis, and take the price that a bullock was fetching this year. The same bullock in 1896 would bring $43, according to the market then, so there is a net gain of $18 caused by the competition we have got now in our own market.

The member for Grenville (Mr. Reid) said that we were not exporting as much dairy produce from Ontario as the people of Quebec. I know that in the province of Ontario, from Essex down to Toronto and from there to Belleville, and the Brockville district to Quebec boundary there is one of the greatest dairying sections in any country. I think there must be some mistake in these entries in the province of Quebec, and that they must have represented exports from Ontario.

Mr. WALLACE. Do I understand the member for Peel to say that the figures I gave are wrong?

Mr. FEATHERSTON. I am giving you figures of what cattle are worth. I do not know where you can get cattle of any size at $14 apiece, when yearlings that will weigh 600 pounds will fetch $4.25 a hundred in Toronto.

Mr. WALLACE. This was a year ago. I was quoting from the Trade and Navigation Returns ending 1st of July, 1898.

Mr. FEATHERSTON. Probably the hon. gentleman was guided considerably by what he saw in Toronto. He will remember looking at some cattle in Toronto one day when I was there. These cattle sold for $14 each; they were steers bred from dairy herds in the province of Quebec, little half-breed Jerseys and Ayrshires, and French breeds of cattle which are only fit for dairying purposes. I would not take these cattle home for nothing and feed them all winter, when I can buy other cattle such as I bought last winter for feeding purposes.

Mr. WALLACE. What time of the year was it?

Mr. FEATHERSTON. This spring. I met the hon. gentleman there one day, and I was talking to the gentleman that showed him the cattle. That gentleman told me that he told the member for West York that these cattle two years ago were worth $5 apiece. Now, I will quote you a few prices of cattle to-day compared with what they were two years ago. In 1897 shipping cattle were bringing 3½ to 3¾ cents per pound; in 1898, 4¼ to 4½ cents; in 1899, 4¾ to 5½ cents, a net difference on those cattle in two years of $18 per head. I would ask any one, who is getting that benefit? It is not the speculator, it must be the farmer who is getting the full benefit of that increase in the price. In 1897 butchers' cattle were bringing 2½ to 3 cents per pound; in 1898, 3¼ to 3½ cents; and this spring, 4 to 4½ cents a pound. I sold a bunch of butcher's cattle, the average weight of which was 1,100 pounds on the 23rd of June for 5 cents a pound. They were above the average run of butcher cattle. That is a gain on these cattle, between 1897 and 1899, of $15 a piece. The hon. member for South Grenville (Mr. Reid) said that when his party were in power they protected the pork interest of the country, and stated that we ruined the pork interest by allowing American hogs to come in here. I do not know of any American hogs coming in, but I do know that an Order in Council was passed by the late Government allowing packers to bring in all the hogs they wanted to kill in bond and ship them out. This was done until such time as our farmers had become educated up to the point of being able to feed their own stock. No American hogs are killed to-day, because they are not suitable for the English market. The hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), has stated that the ranchers are very much displeased with this Government. The rancher is very much in the same position as that occupied by the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan) and by myself. They are purchasers of stock; they buy a great deal of stock and while this arrangement is no doubt against their interest it is in the interest of the mass of the people. The ranchers of the west are one to one hundred of the farmers in that country. There are one hundred farmers who are getting the benefit from the sales of these stock cattle to one man who has to pay an increased price. The hon. gentlemen have asked the hon. Minister of Agriculture to propose a larger expenditure for cold storage. Last year $40,000 was spent under the head of cold storage. The experiment has been put in successful operation, and instead of demanding a bonus, steamship companies are putting cold storage in their vessels to compete for the trade with vessels that have received the bonus. I am satisfied that while at the inception of this system, encouragement was necessary, steamship companies will on their own account provide all necessary equipment to meet the demands of the trade. I would like to refer for a moment to another question that has been spoken of here, that is the question of feeding our stock.

Mr. FEATHERSTON,

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman goes into the question of feeding of stock we will never get through.

Mr. DUGAS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. The item before us is for cold storage, and I ask if it is in order, upon that item, to discuss the question of the feeding of cattle?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Ellis). I would call the attention of the committee to the fact that the discussion which was commenced by the hon. leader of the Opposition has taken an exceedingly wide range. I do not wish to shut any hon. gentleman off from saying anything that he may wish to say. The hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) covered a very wide range in his remarks, and I do not wish to shut my hon. friend (Mr. Featherston) off.

Mr. FEATHERSTON. I am sorry that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Dugas) does not understand that the beef that goes into these refrigerator vessels and cars comes from cattle. I would like to say a word in regard to the question of feeding of cattle as bearing upon the action of the Government in removing the duties from corn. Pease are worth $23 per ton for export and oats $20 per ton, while we can put in corn at $15 a ton. That must be a great advantage to the farmers of Canada who are feeding stock. In reference to cold storage for cheese, butter, eggs and fruit I would say that adequate provision has been made. The fruit business has been well looked after and it has been put upon a good, sound basis.

Mr. WALLACE. The point I wish to make is in reference to the price of cattle. As I understood it, the statement of the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Featherston) was that the prices of cattle were not as I had given them to the committee. I have here the Trade and Navigation Returns for the year ending 1st July, 1898. There were exported to the United States during that year cattle to the value of $1,240,000, numbering in round figures 88,000 head. The average price was $13.75 per head. The exports of cattle to Great Britain in the same year were 192,091 head at a valuation of $7,403,915, or an average valuation of $60.60 per head, while the average value per head of cattle exported to the United States was $13.25. Hon. gentlemen may make what use they like of these figures, but they show that the proper business of the farmers is to feed their cattle and send them to Great Britain and get $60.60 a head rather than send them to the United States and get $13.25 a head.

Illustration stations ..... $20,000

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have to say that in consequence of the representations which have been made to me, and in consequence of the fact that this scheme, which I had proposed in connection with this item, could only be carried out successfully with the hearty co-operation of the farmers who have been incited not to support it. I beg to move that this item be struck out.

Mr. WALLACE. I think the country will view with a good deal of satisfaction the fact that the hon. Minister of Agriculture has decided to strike out this item. A more crude, or ill-digested, or ill-considered proposition, though the expenditure is not very large, never was presented to this House by any Minister, and we have had a good many crude suggestions made; and the hon. gentleman has done wisely and well in withdrawing it from the consideration of the House.

Mr. TAYLOR. I intended to move an amendment to this vote, which would have read as follows:—

That this item be reduced to $5,000, that sum to be expended in sending experts to tobacco-growing districts to instruct tobacco-growers as to the best methods of growing and curing tobacco.

There was a good deal of discussion on tobacco the other night, and I thought that something in this direction should be done; but, as the Minister intends to drop the item and not to assist either the farmers or the tobacco-growers, I will not have a chance to move the motion.

Mr. WALLACE. While illustration stations, which were proposed for the tobacco industry, are, I think, open to the same objection as the other illustration stations, a great deal is to be said for the proposal to engage expert tobacco men to instruct the tobacco-growers. Tobacco undergoes various processes of sweating, drying and curing, from week to week, for a year and a half. I am told that the crop of 1899 will not be ready to put on the market until the 1st of January, 1901. If you have an illustration station, say in the county of Essex, you cannot get the farmers of that county to visit that station from day to day, or from week to week, to find out the various changes through which the tobacco passes; whereas an expert can visit the farmers at one place, here or there, and demonstrate to them the various processes, and tell them what to do with the tobacco, what temperature it is to have, when to hang it up, when to put it down, and what to do with it in its various stages in order to get it cured and ready for the manufacturer.

North-west Mounted Police..... $353,750

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). On a former occasion I gave to the House a very full explanation as to the condition of the North-west Mounted Police. Last year we took the same appropriation that we are taking this year; but for the year just expired we were obliged to ask for an increased vote of $50,000. This year we have full confidence, even a reasonable certainty, that we shall be able to keep the appropriation within the figures. I stated to the House, and I repeat now, that the reason which compelled us to ask for the increase of $50,000 for the year just past was, that we had not been able to decrease the force so rapidly as we intended. When we took office, the force had been reduced to 750 men. We undertook to reduce it to 500, and we thought we could do it within a reasonable time; but the demands made on the force for different services prevented us from doing so. For instance, we were obliged to keep a certain number of the best men available for service in the Yukon; we were obliged to keep a certain number on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway during its construction; and we had a certain number on patrol, and we intend to keep them on patrol, in the districts north of the Saskatchewan River and the Mackenzie River where immigrants are now coming in and where travellers pass to and fro.

Mr. FOSTER. What does this vote provide for?

The PRIME MINISTER. It provides for 500 men, at the rate of $700 each.

Living and other expenses of Mr. McMartin .....	1,200
	$10,680

Mr. McMartin's expenses will be more than any of the other officers, for the reason that he will have to travel on inspection.

To provide for an officer at Dalton Trail, at a salary of $100 per month and living expenses at $60 per month .....	1,920
Amount required to pay contingent expenses at the Passes, including rent of office at Bennett .....	2,000

This latter amount is an approximate estimate, as it not as yet known what the rent at Bennett will be.

	$14,600
Dawson .....	10,400
Total.....	$25,000

Mr. WALLACE. Is this McMartin a new officer ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No, he was formerly at Huntingdon, New Westminster.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to call attention to the way in which these Estimates are brought so that a change may be made in other years. These Customs estimates in the Yukon ought not to be treated differently from those in Ontario and Nova Scotia. We ought to have the details in the Estimates so that we will see what we are doing but here we have just a lump sum, and then these explanations are read out to us.

Mr. PATERSON.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We will be able to do that better in other years, but could not do that very well this year.

Contingencies, rent and insurance on office, income tax, fuel, light, stationery, &c., and the amount $2,000 required towards the contingent expenses (water, light, fuel, carriage-hire and railway fare) of the High Commissioner, and $1,200 for contingencies (rates, taxes, ground rent, insurance, &c.) of the official residence, including the income tax on the salary of the High Commissioner. $11,700

Mr. WALLACE. It was pointed out last year that the office of High Commissioner was very important and a place where all Canadians could go when they visited London. That is very true, it was pointed out also that it is a very important office, as the High Commissioner was performing high official duties, that he was the intermediary between the Canadian and the British Government in many important matters. No doubt that is very true, but the office of High Commissioner is wanting in one respect. We want settlers to come from Great Britain to this country and we want some office in London, England, where men could go and get the necessary information. I am sorry to have to say that the office of the High Commissioner is not an office where those intending to come to this country can get the full and satisfactory information required, and is utterly unsatisfactory in that respect. It is also unsatisfactory as a place where the British people could find out what opportunities there are for doing business in Canada. I remember reading an article in the "Globe" a year ago, written by one of the staff, I think it was Mr. Willison, the editor-in-chief, who had been visiting London, and was struck with the same opinion. Last year the attention of the Government was called to the necessity of establishing a business branch of the High Commissioner's Office, either in the office of the High Commissioner, if that might be found suitable, or some business part of the city of London, where opportunity would be given for promoting Canadian trade. That has not been done. I remember seeing, a short time ago, in the newspapers, that in England they block paved the streets and that certain blocks were required. One of these blocks was sent to the Canadian Government here as a sample. Why, the High Commissioner's Office should have sent out a load of them, sufficient to supply every dealer in Canada with a sample, and they should also have sent out the prices and the names of the men who were dealing in that article, so that they might be communicated with. But all they did was to send out one block. And yet here was a contract amounting to millions of dollars per annum. Why did they not send out a thousand blocks ?

We should have had a business statement of the case, so that the Canadians who desire to compete would know who to write to and what quantity of material was desired. But none of these things were given. In that regard, our business in England is utterly neglected. Where so many millions of dollars of Canadian products of every description could be sold in England there should be a Canadian agency for the promotion of that trade which is utterly neglected to-day; and I think we might fairly call upon the Government to give some attention to this matter, which means so much to the trade of Canada.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. While I can hardly agree with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) that the business is entirely neglected, I know that there has been some discussion in the press, to which the hon. gentleman has referred, with regard to the advisability of establishing a Canadian business agency separate from the High Commissioner's Office. The suggestion never took very practical form, and I find some differences of opinion with regard to the precise purpose for which it should be established. Some persons, I do not say in this House, but outsiders, had the impression that the Government ought to establish an agency to which goods could be consigned for sale. That, I think, would be impracticable.

Mr. WALLACE. I think so too; I did not advocate such a thing.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, I say this was the view held by some outside. I think that the hon. gentleman will find that the business side of the High Commissioner's Office, though perhaps not all that is desired, has been more active during the past year than before. Very considerable attention has been paid to inquiries regarding Canadian business interests, and a large correspondence has been carried on by the High Commissioner's Office with regard to it. There may still be room for improvement in that direction, but the hon. gentleman may have seen that there is a considerable increase in activity in the business side of the High Commissioner's Office. One view is that the office should be removed to a more central part of London. There are difficulties in the way of making such a change.

Mr. WALLACE. I do not think they should move the office.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The office is certainly well situated for a large class of its business, but it is not in the business centre of London. This general question is one which has engaged the attention of the Government, but we have not thought it expedient to carry out the project for a commercial agency.

Penitentiaries—

General ..... $3,400

Mr. TAYLOR. This was reserved to discuss the question of the binder twine in the Kingston Penitentiary. But I will take an opportunity of discussing that on going into Supply, and perhaps may move a motion.

Legislation—

Contingent expenses in connection with the voters' list..... $2,500

Mr. FOSTER. What is the decision of the Government about that? The law requires that the voters' list shall be printed, but the law was rendered nugatory by some member of the Government interposing between the law and the performance of it, so that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery could not carry it out, and thus the hon. members did not get the list that Parliament had said they should get. I do not think the Government is the judge whether a law should be carried out or not.

The PRIME MINISTER. I agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Foster), and he will find in the supplementary Estimates a vote for $34,000 or $35,000 for the printing of the lists, and we intend to have them printed.

Pensions—

Payable on account of the Fenian Raid. $3,500

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is a slight apparent increase, but it is due only to change in the date of payment. There is no real increase.

Mr. REID. Are all those who took part in repelling the Fenian raid entitled to pensions?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is an item that has been on the list for many years.

Mr. REID. There are men in my county who claim that some are getting pensions who took part in repelling the Fenian raid, and I would like to know.

The PRIME MINISTER. This is a very old vote, and has appeared every year for 20 years. It is for those who received injuries during the raid. Those who served and were not injured will be entitled to medals.

Pensions—

Payable to militiamen on account of the rebellion in 1835 and active service generally ..... $19,000

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). When will the medals be presented to the men who served during the rebellion of 1835?

The PRIME MINISTER. I cannot at the moment give my hon. friend a definite answer, but I understand that it will be at an early day.

Alterations and repairs to Governor General's car "Victoria"..... $2,500

Mr. FOSTER. Is that a charge on the capital fund?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is the usual course. My recollection is that they repair the car, and the interest is a charge upon the Governor General.

Committee rose and reported progress.

YUKON—REPORT OF MR. OGILVIE.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson) moved that an Order of the House do issue for copies of the report of Mr. Ogilvie respecting the valuation of a steamship.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. Would the leader of the Government say what will be the business to-morrow?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). We will take one or two Bills of minor importance; then, if convenient to the House and to my hon. friend, we will take the prohibition question.

ADJOURNMENT.

The PRIME MINISTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned 12.15 a.m. (Friday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 28th July, 1899.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PRAYERS.

PRIVATE BILLS—MEETINGS OF COMMITTEE.

Mr. SCRIVER moved:

That the Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills have leave to sit during the sittings of the House.

Motion agreed to.

QUEBEC HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) (by Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 178) in reference to the Quebec Harbour Commissioners. He said: This Bill is merely to authorize the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec to guarantee bonds for the construction of an elevator by the Great Northern Railway Company to the extent of $200,000. The object of this Bill is to give to those boards a preference over our own mortgage, following the precedent of last year.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. As I understand it involves no responsibility on the part of the Government.

The PRIME MINISTER. No.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS OF MONTREAL.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) (by Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 179) respecting the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal. He said: The object of this Bill is to transfer a certain amount of the appropriation, made last year, for certain works on the eastern side of the harbour to the western side. The whole subject will be discussed when we take up the supplementary estimates for the expenditures at Montreal.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

CONSTITUTION OF THE SENATE.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, in regard to the resolution, of which I have given notice, for the amendment of the Senate, after a conference with the hon. leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) yesterday, as my hon. friend has to leave for England in the early days of next week, and as it is pretty reasonably understood between my hon. friend and myself that we may prorogue, I think, within next week, I intend, in order to facilitate this and to bring prorogation in the course of next week, to drop this resolution for this year, and also Order 24, a Bill further to amend the Criminal Code, 1892.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. In regard to the remarks that have fallen from the right hon. leader of the Government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), I am quite ready to do everything in my power to facilitate prorogation by the end of next week, and I do not see any reason why it should not be accomplished. I am glad that these two measures are to be dropped this year. The Bill in reference to the Criminal Code, I am quite sure, the right hon. gentleman feels, is one that demands more careful consideration on the part of the House, than could be given to it at the period of the session. As to the other measure, I am quite sure we are all agreed that it can well afford to wait.

The PRIME MINISTER. I will not controvert the hon. gentleman's statement.

SALARIES OF THE MINISTERS OF CUSTOMS AND INLAND REVENUE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved :

That to-morrow the House do take into consideration the following resolution :—“ Resolved, that it is expedient to repeal subsection 2 of section 2 of chapter 18 of the statutes of 1897, and to enact in lieu thereof that the salaries of the Minister of Customs and Minister of Inland Revenue shall be seven thousand dollars a year each, and further to provide that authority be given for the payment of the salaries of the present Minister of Customs and of the present Minister of Inland Revenue at that rate from the first day of July, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight.”

He said : I beg to announce that His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject-matter of this resolution, recommends it to the House.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that to increase the salaries ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes. This is merely the first stage whereby it is brought down and it will be open for discussion later on.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Speaker, as I shall not have an opportunity of being present when the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) brings that matter up, I beg to say that I was, myself, committed to the same policy in case the Government had not changed. I always felt that, as these two Ministers held important portfolios, involving a great deal of responsibility, there was no reason why their salaries should not be put upon the same footing as those of other Ministers, or why they should not be made Ministers instead of controllers, as has already been done.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to mention that, on the 19th of June, I moved for copies of the Orders in Council passed since June, 1896, respecting contracts let without tender. The order was made, and I would like to know when we shall be able to have the return.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I think the return has reference to several departments. I have the return so far as my department is concerned, and I will bring it down to-morrow.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I wish to draw the attention of my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to an omission in the return which he laid on the Table of the House in reference to death duties. I think it is important and I would be glad to have it brought down so that it may be given to the Printing Committee.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have given instructions to Mr. Moore to search the records and to bring whatever he has. I will show my hon. friend what we have this afternoon.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved :

That, when these papers are laid on the Table of the House, they be referred to the Committee on Printing, notwithstanding anything in the rule to the contrary.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. I would call the attention of the Government to the Michaud and Belanger papers that have not been brought down, and I would ask that the Government bring the supplementary letters in the liquor permit correspondence.

PREFERENTIAL TRADE.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw the attention of the House to the proposal which I made to my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) with the view of securing the unanimous vote of this House in favour of preferential trade to which I attach great importance. It is fair to say, before my right hon. friend states what decision he has arrived at in reference to it, that I am afraid the object I had in view would not be reached, even if my right hon. friend were to consent to the modification of the resolution that I submitted, and under these circumstances, so far as this side of the House is concerned, we do not propose to deal with that question further in any event.

Mr. CHARLTON. Before any action of this House is taken with reference to the motion presented by the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) which I suppose is still under consideration and not yet disposed of—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may state to my hon. friend that this resolution was withdrawn with the consent of the House yesterday, and it is not proposed to bring forward any motion on that subject from this side, this session.

Mr. CHARLTON. The consent of the House has not been given to the withdrawal of this motion, and I desire to say something upon it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. My hon. friend is mistaken. I can assure him that the motion is absolutely withdrawn.

Mr. CHARLTON. The consent of the House to this has not been formally taken to the withdrawal.

The PRIME MINISTER. The motion was withdrawn yesterday with the consent of the House, and there is nothing now before the House.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to ask when the railway subsidies will be taken up? There are a number of gentlemen interested who would like to be present.

The PRIME MINISTER. The first stage will take place to-morrow and the discussion will take place on Monday.

PREFERENTIAL TRADE.

Mr. CHARLTON. Before we proceed any further I rise to a point of order and I do it in my own interests as a private member of this House—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

The PRIME MINISTER. I must call my hon. friend (Mr. Charlton) to order.

Mr. CHARLTON. I wish to state my point of order.

The PRIME MINISTER. We have nothing before the House. My hon. friend (Mr. Charlton) may have an opportunity of speaking on the question in Supply. It was understood that the Order of the Day would be to take some few little bills at first and then proceed with the prohibition discussion.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER. I wish to point out to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) that the votes and proceedings state, that with the leave of the House the amendment of the hon. gentleman (Mr. McNeill) was withdrawn yesterday.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We could not get into Supply unless it were withdrawn.

SUSPENSION OF THE VILLE MARIE BANK.

Mr. BOURASSA. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to draw the attention of the Minister of Finance to some articles published in "La Patrie" in reference to the suspension of the Ville Marie Bank. I do not speak of this because, as same papers have stated, I am interested in the matter, but I do so in the general interests of the community. The Bank Ville Marie in Montreal suspended this week, and as hon. gentlemen know the Bank Ville Marie probably draws more small capital from the farming community of the province of Quebec than any other bank. It had about twenty branch offices throughout the province. Out of the one and a half million dollars of deposits, it may be estimated that four-fifths of that amount came from—not exactly the poor farming class—but what I might call the middle farming class of the province of Quebec. Of course up to this time I have no suspicion whatever against the integrity of the directors of the bank, but at the same time some statements have been published in the Montreal newspapers, especially "La Patrie," and "La Presse," which would indicate that the Government should take some action. I translate the following from "La Patrie" of Wednesday last:—

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

We ask that the Ottawa Government in order to protect the depositors and the public to send one of its inspectors who would take charge of the bank during the 90 days (of suspension of business) so that we may see clearly through the dark affairs that were transacted.

The following appeared on Thursday:—

The whole district of Montreal demands loudly the appointment of an official inspector from the Ottawa Government to take charge of the Ville Marie Bank. Light must be thrown on the transactions of the bank and this is the only means to have it.

I wish to ask if it is the intention of the Government, or if the Government has any power to comply with the request stated in that article.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). The Banking Act, which, of course, must control the Government as well as banks, makes no provision for the placing of an officer of the Finance Department in charge of a bank under such circumstances. The Banking Act provides that we can call for returns and exact penalties for the banks failing to comply with any conditions of the Act, but no provision of the Banking Act permits us to carry out the suggestion which my hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) has read from the press.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The Minister of Finance will recognize that the Government have considerable responsibility to the depositors, because under the law as I understand it, they have the power of inspection.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It has not been deemed so.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I thought the Government had the power to send an officer to make an inspection of a bank and get returns whenever there was the least doubt as to the solvency of the bank in order to protect the depositors in it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman is quite correct that we have the power to call for special returns, and that if these returns disclose anything improper the Government could of course communicate them to the public. We have no power to appoint an inspector. All we can do is to ask for returns and unless these returns disclose some impropriety nothing remains for us to do. The management of the affairs of the bank must be left with the board of directors, and the courts. It is not in the power of the Government to interfere in this matter, to the extent that some hon. gentlemen desire. Of course in regard to the returns we shall take every step necessary to get these returns at once.

That is within our power and that will be promptly attended to.

BRITISH COLUMBIA ALIEN ACT.

Mr. PRIOR. Is the Prime Minister able to state now if he can bring down the correspondence with reference to the Alien Act of British Columbia?

The PRIME MINISTER. I have looked into the matter and all the correspondence that has come to us is from the Colonial Office, and we have to communicate with the Colonial Office before we can bring it down. I am sorry we cannot bring it down at once.

Mr. PRIOR. There has been no correspondence with the provincial government.

The PRIME MINISTER. No.

MR. A. R. McDONALD.

Mr. BERGERON. I wish to ask for the correspondence between Mr. A. R. McDonald and the Department of Railways and Canals, or any other correspondence relating to Mr. McDonald.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I had it ready here the other night but the hon. gentleman was not present. I shall bring it down again.

CONSTRUCTION OF DRY DOCKS.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved second reading of Bill (No. 177) to encourage the construction of dry docks.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and the House resolved itself in committee on the Bill.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman did not say on the second reading, what was the object of this Bill. I see that it provides that under certain conditions the Government may aid in the construction of dry docks. The Government, I suppose, has in its mind some place where dry docks are about to be constructed. What is the object of the Bill?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The bill is a general one. It particularly arose in consequence of an application from some parties interested in the construction of a dry dock at St. John. It was pointed out to us that the provisions of the existing law would not enable that dock to be constructed of sufficient size to meet the growing needs of the larger steamers, and it is thought best to deal with the matter in a general way.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the same principle will apply to dry docks all over the country, provided they meet the conditions laid down in the Bill.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, that is the provision. It was thought better to deal with the matter on general principles that would apply to any part of Canada than by a special Act.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the meaning of the phrase, "that the cost on which it shall be calculated shall not be greater than the value of the work as estimated by the said Minister"? Should not the subsidy be estimated on the actual reasonable cost of the work?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think the object is just to guard against what my hon. friend is afraid of. It is just possible that the cost of the work might be excessive or extravagant, arising from mismanagement. The intention is that we should only pay on the fair cost, and, if for any reason the cost appeared to be excessive, that the payment should be only on the fair value of the work. This is from the old Act, if I remember rightly.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The words are identical with those contained in the original Act.

Mr. BERGERON. How many of these Government docks are there in Canada?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have Government dry docks at Esquimalt, Lévis and Kingston, that is docks owned by the Dominion. There is also a dock at Halifax, owned by a company, constructed under the provisions of the Act now to be amended. I think these are all.

Mr. BERGERON. In what condition is the dry dock, of which we heard so much last year, which was to be built at Hochelaga?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think it is still very dry.

Mr. BERGERON. Is there anything in this Bill for putting some water into that dock?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No. We shall have the prohibition question later in the day. This does not touch that question at all.

Mr. SPROULE. The Bill provides that a dry dock must be "sufficient for the requirements of the public at such place." It is not the intention that all dry docks should be the same size?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No. I should think the dry dock ought to be adapted to the condition of the commerce in its immediate vicinity.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Does not the Imperial Government contribute to these docks?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Imperial Government contributes to the Halifax dock.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think there is a standing regulation by which docks which are sufficiently large to dock ships of Her Majesty's navy have a claim to a certain amount.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think there is no standing regulation on the subject. It is a matter that is considered by the Imperial Government as each case arises.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. In the cases of dry docks at places like St. John or Montreal, where Her Majesty's ships are accustomed to go, if a representation is made to the Imperial Government, I feel quite certain that under the policy they have uniformly followed, they would give substantial aid.

Mr. BERGERON. I attach a great deal of importance to the discussion we had last year in regard to the dock at Hochelaga, and I want to know whether it will be built or not. I see in the supplementary Estimates a sum of $750,000 for work below the St. Mary's current at Montreal, which means the very same place where it was proposed to build that dock. I want to ask my hon. friend seriously, whether there is any prospect of any work being done there, how it is going to be done, and whether it is going to be done by the Government of Canada, or by the machinery provided in this Bill?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This Bill does not touch the question of the dry dock to which my hon. friend refers. His question relates to the Act of last session, whereby out of the moneys advanced to the Montreal Harbour Commissioners as a loan, they were obliged to set apart certain sums for improvements, including a dry dock below St. Mary's current. We have introduced a Bill to amend the Act of last session with respect to the Montreal Harbour Commissioners, so that instead of reserving the sum of $750,000 for these improvements, $500,000 of the sum may be released and applied to improvements at the Windmill Basin, leaving $250,000 still in the reserve for the purposes of a dry dock or other improvements below St. Mary's current. The appropriation in the supplementary Estimates touches the same question—not the particular question of the dry dock, but the improvements in the harbour of Montreal. If I am to answer my hon. friend's question directly, this Bill does not touch the question of the dry dock, and in the legislation to which I have referred, we do not go further than to provide that the Montreal Harbour Commissioners shall set apart a sum, not more than $250,000, for certain improvements below St. Mary's current, including the dry dock.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Mr. BERGERON. Then, if I understand the hon. gentleman, out of the $750,000 which were appropriated last year for a dry dock in the eastern harbour of Montreal—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not altogether.

Mr. BERGERON. $500,000 of that amount will be appropriated for the Windmill Point, that is to say, above the harbour of Montreal, leaving a balance of $250,000 for the object which the vote had in view last year. The $750,000 for improvements in the harbour below the current which are in the supplementary Estimates for 1900 added to the $250,000 last year, will make $1,000,000 devoted to the dry dock in the eastern part of the harbour at Montreal, and half a million dollars for the Windmill Point.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I would prefer to discuss that on the supplementary Estimates. The present resolution does not touch the question of the dry dock at Montreal at all. That is dealt with by a Bill introduced in my name by the right hon. First Minister, relating to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal. For the present this Bill does not touch dry docks at all.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not understand it that way. The Bill under consideration is a revival of the old law which gave $10,000 to companies in the building of dry docks. That is to say, the Government would not pay more than $10,000, but this is to double the amount. My reason for talking about the dry dock is this. My impression is that there will be $1,000,000 devoted to the construction of a dry dock in the eastern part of Montreal. If there is, the work might be given to a company instead of being built by the Government, and this $20,000 will go towards helping that company. That is why I say there is a connection between the Montreal dry dock and this Bill.

The PRIME MINISTER. There is no connection whatever between the two subjects. When we come to the supplementary Estimates and give the explanation, it will be seen that the proposal has no connection with the dry dock at Montreal.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not suppose this measure would have been introduced unless there had been some antecedent negotiations. Will the hon. Minister inform us whether negotiations have made any progress?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Perhaps I may be a little more fully informed than the Minister of Finance on the subject. The Bill, will have, no doubt, direct bearing upon the proposed dry dock for the city of St. John, owing to the probability of that work being entered upon at an early date, it was considered expedient to introduce this Bill at the present session.

Some parties in St. John have been interesting themselves for some months on the subject of a dry dock for that port. The ex-mayor, Mr. Robertson, has taken an active interest in the matter, and studied the question from various points of view. He has examined dry docks in England and this continent, and been in direct communication with the Imperial Government on the question. He has also been in negotiation with the Government of the province of New Brunswick and the corporation of the city of St. John, and has from all these different sources not only assurances, but from the majority of them guarantees that substantial aid will be forthcoming in the event of this work being constructed. He has from the city of St. John an engagement to give him over a site for the dock, and has the choice of two or three localities in the city, where to place his dock, and also a guarantee of $2,500 a year extending over a period, I think, of 40 years. He also has from the provincial Government an engagement to subsidize his work to the extent of $5,000 a year for a period of 40 years. In the course of this negotiation with the home Government, he has had from the First Lord of the Admiralty assurance that the work will be assisted by the Imperial Government at least to the extent of £2,000 sterling a year. He is hoping for, I think, something in addition to that amount. But taking altogether the promises he has received of contributions in aid of this work from various sources, there is no reason to doubt that a dock sufficient to answer the requirements of the trade can be constructed with this assistance.

Mr. FOSTER. That of course could not have gone on without some idea as to the capacity of the dock which it is proposed to erect there?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The dock is to be 800 feet long, long enough to take in the largest steamers now crossing the Atlantic. It is expected that it will be 80 feet at least in width, and probably, under ordinary circumstances, will take in two steamers at a time.

Mr. DAVIN. Has the hon. gentleman received a scientific opinion on the question whether the rise and fall of the tide in St. John Harbour will be helpful or the reverse to the work which a dry dock of this kind has to carry on.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot say what the hon. gentleman would consider a scientific opinion, but the engineer's opinion is that the rise in the tide of the St. John will be very helpful rather than hurtful. I may add that the dock which it is proposed to build will be of stone.

Mr. FOSTER. Has any company been formed?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I believe that a company has been incorporated but I do not know the details. I know that Mr. Robertson was seeking to interest, and I think succeeded in interesting, the representatives of the different lines of steamship companies. The Allan, the Elder Dempster and the Dominion Lines, express their willingness to associate themselves in the enterprise, and I believe an incorporation has taken place, though not quite sure.

Mr. ELLIS. I saw stated in the newspapers the other day that a very eminent English engineer in that business is coming out to make plans, and of course the plans will have to be satisfactory to the Imperial Government before any aid of that kind can be given.

Mr. DAVIN. Suppose the Government were to give $1,000,000 for the construction of a dock in Montreal, and the Government subsequently under this Act, give to a private company the aid that is provided in the first section?

The PRIME MINISTER. The Government does not propose to give any aid to a private company. Whatever work is to be done in Montreal will be done either by the Government or the harbour engineers, and this Act will not apply.

On section 2,

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My attention was called the other day in the House to the question whether this was sufficiently clear. Before you read section 2, Mr. Chairman, I ask to be allowed to read in a few words. In the 4th line, after the word "dry dock," I move to add "which has been subsidized by Canada," so as to make it clear that this applies to an enlargement of dry docks constructed under the Act.

Mr. FOSTER. Or under the Act and this amendment.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We assume that any new construction will not be enlarged.

Mr. FOSTER. Better make it "under the Act."

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. To make it definite, I propose that the words should be "subsidized by Canada under chapter 17 of the statutes of 1882." Then, on the second page, third line, after the words "ten thousand dollars" add "per annum."

Motion agreed to.

Bill, as amended, reported, read the third time and passed.

PENITENTIARY ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 173)—from the Senate—further to amend the Penitentiary Act, was read the second time and the House resolved itself into Committee on the said Bill.

(In the Committee.)

On section 2,

Mr. DAVIN. Why is this change made ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). This change is made in order to have a scale of gradation of salaries based on the importance of the different penitentiaries. If my hon. friend (Mr. Davin) will look at the schedule, he will see that Kingston penitentiary comes first, and the salary of the warden is $2,600; St. Vincent de Paul comes next, the salary of the warden being $2,400; and so on down. That is the only object.

Mr. FOSTER. What are the differences as regards present salaries ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not think there is any difference now. This is simply to enable the Government to make regulations from time to time to increase salaries as the work of the penitentiaries increased. I ask my hon. friend to look at this section :

The Governor in Council may, from time to time, fix the sums to be annually paid to the warden and the other officers and servants of any penitentiary established under the provisions of this Act; but such salaries shall not exceed the sums specified in the schedule of this Act.

They are limited to a certain maximum. Should the Governor in Council deem it advisable, because of an increase of the work, say, in the Manitoba penitentiary, it may increase that salary, but limiting it to the maximum that is laid down in the Bill.

Mr. FOSTER. This is a new principle, and, at first sight, I must say I do not like it. It means to hand over to the Governor in Council the power to increase salaries without the sanction of Parliament. In no other case do we do that. The civil servant or employee of the Government has a salary which is fixed here in Parliament, and we understand that he is getting that salary. If it is proposed that that officer should get more, the only way in which it can be done is to come down to Parliament and to propose a vote in the Estimates, and have that increase made. This is a new principle entirely, that the Governor in Council for the time being may dispense with that salutary rule. Having once fixed a maximum salary in the schedule to which an officer may advance, all power is then taken out of the hands of Parliament, and the Governor in Council may make any increases that he chooses inside that schedule. For instance, in this case, the maximum salary of the warden of the Kingston penitentiary is $2,600. You appoint your warden this year at $2,000. Parliament understands that you are appointing such a person as warden and that you propose to pay him $2,000. Parliament agrees that that should be done, but after Parliament is prorogued, this gives authority to the Governor in Council, without consulting Parliament again, to make any gradations in advancing the salary from $2,000 up to $2,400, when they please, and in what manner they please, and Parliament has no supervision of it. What is the reason for this? Why should an officer of the penitentiary be treated any differently from an officer in the customs, or any other civil servant of the Government? Why is it that the Government are continually taking from itself these powers of appropriation to increase salaries and all that kind of thing? I should think that a Government would not want to do it for its own peace of mind.

Mr. BRITTON. My hon. friend has overlooked the fact that this has been the law for a long time. Under section 33 of the Revised Statutes of 1886, there is a much wider range than is permitted by the present Act; and there is this important difference, that while the old law made the salary dependent on the number of convicts, the present Act leaves that out, which I think will commend itself to the committee. The number of convicts is variable, while the importance of the penitentiary remains practically the same. Now, section 33, before referred to, which this Act amends, is as follows:—

The Governor in Council may, from time to time, fix the sums to be actually paid to the warden and the other officers and servants of any penitentiary established under the provisions of this Act, regard being had to the number of convicts confined therein, and the consequent responsibility attaching to the offices respectively, and to the length of service and amount of labour devolving upon them; but such salary shall not exceed the sums specified in the schedule to this Act.

The schedule to the Act in reference to the warden put $3,000 as a maximum. This amendment establishes the maximum at $2,600 and the minimum at $1,000, leaving a very wide range, and it applies to all the penitentiaries of the Dominion. Now this Act wisely schedules the salaries for the different penitentiaries, so that we know precisely how far the Government can go in changing the salaries of officers in those places. It was applied by the late Government, and I think properly, to the Kingston penitentiary. The salary of the old warden was $2,400, with certain allowances, and I think it was raised to $2,800. When the new warden was appointed, superseding Mr. Metcalfe, his salary was reduced to $2,000, with the ordinary perquisites that belong to that office. So that no principle has been changed, and I submit that the schedule attached to this Act is a better schedule than the one attached to the old Act.

Mr. FOSTER. I wanted to know whether this Act, as it exists in its new form, contemplates fixing the salaries without the presentation to Parliament of any estimate each year, because I find these sums were brought down each year in the Estimates. When this was read I had not looked up the old Act, and I thought it meant to make the appropriations entirely by the Governor in Council. But if it means that the Governor in Council fixes what shall be the salary, and then they are voted as at present, that takes away my objection.

Mr. DAVIN. The remarks of the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton) would unintentionally give an incorrect impression to the committee. At present, under chapter 42 of the statute of 1895, it is provided that the warden shall get $2,000. Now, why is it that under this schedule of the present Act, he is to get $2,600? I find the warden is to get $2,600, as compared with $2,000 provided in 1895; and the deputy warden is to get $1,500, as compared with $1,200 for the accountant.

The PRIME MINISTER. This is the maximum. The Act provided the maximum under which we could then act. But it is explained by the hon. member for Kingston, and admitted by the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster), that if the Governor in Council passes an Order to raise any salary to this maximum, of course, the appropriation must be asked for from Parliament in the following session and be voted.

Mr. DAVIN. That is not the point that I wanted to make. I see there is a higher maximum provided in this legislation than in the legislation of 1895, the maximum for warden is higher.

The PRIME MINISTER. That may be.

Mr. DAVIN. The maximum in 1895 is $800 for a chaplain, and $1,200 is the figure for two chaplains in the present Act. Then the maximum for surgeons under the Act of 1895 would be $1,500, whereas, under the present Act, it shall be $1,800. The steward, under the Act of 1895, could get $700; under the present Act, $900. There is an increase along the whole line. The hospital keeper under the old Act got $750. I see the chief keeper, under the Act of 1895, got $800, and the chief keeper under the present Act, $1,200.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Davin) is mistaken. The hon. gentleman is aware that the warden of Kingston Penitentiary for twenty-five years never received less than $2,400. Under this Act he would receive $2,000, but there was a later Act. This Act was only to provide a general rule where there was no special statutes applying to the case, but I know that the warden of Kingston Penitentiary always received more than $2,400. This would be in apparent conflict with the Act which provided for a salary of $2,000 a year but this was, as I understand it, a general statute making provision for the salaries to be paid in the penitentiaries at Dorchester, Manitoba, St. Vincent de Paul and in British Columbia where there is not the same condition of things existing. If my hon. friend looks at the Bill now before us, and if he will compare it with the schedules, it is true that the schedule differs in regard to the other penitentiaries, but he will find that while there are some increases in some instances, the schedule is the same.

Mr. DAVIN. I have sent for the Act of 1887, but I think if the right hon. gentleman will look he will see that there is provision here for great increases all along the line.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not see that. There is an increase for the chaplains who are to be paid $1,200.

Mr. DAVIN. Is there not an increase for the surgeon?

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not think so. Perhaps there is in the larger penitentiaries.

Mr. FOSTER. The right hon. gentleman must have the former list there, and it would be very easy to compare them.

Mr. BRITTON. I have the list for 1886.

Mr. DAVIN. I have the list for 1886.

Mr. BRITTON. There seems to be a very considerable difference compared with the Act of 1895.

Mr. DAVIN. There is considerable difference between this and the Act of 1895. Hon. gentlemen will find that there is a great increase which certainly deserves attention on the part of this committee. While the right hon. gentleman is informing himself on this subject, I should like, when he comes to explain these considerable increases, that he would also let us know what changes in the office rate of the Kingston Penitentiary have taken place.

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton) may probably be able to inform my hon. friend more correctly upon this subject than I can. The only important change I know of is the change in the wardenship. Mr. Metcalfe, and I am sorry to say it, is unfortunately in such a condition that he had to be superannuated, and Dr. Platt, a former member of this House, has been appointed in his place.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. As far as that matter is concerned I think that we all, on both sides of this House, regretted very deeply to learn that an old colleague had lost his health and was not equal to his duties. I am glad to say that I think the Government did all under the circumstances they could do to meet the justice of the case.

Mr. BRITTON. The only other changes that have taken place since this Government came in are those of the surgeon, Dr. Strange having been superannuated and Dr. Phelan appointed, and some retirements which have taken place owing to advanced age and ill-health.

Mr. DAVIN. What are these ?

Mr. BRITTON. The tailor instructor and his assistant, four keepers and a number of guards have been retired.

Mr. WALLACE. How many guards have been removed ?

Mr. BRITTON. I am not able, in the meantime, to say exactly.

Mr. FOSTER. As to the actual salaries paid at Kingston last year, I see that the warden got $2,000. Is it proposed to pay the incoming warden a larger salary at the commencement ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Two thousand dollars at Kingston. He had more than that.

Mr. FOSTER. No. Here it is in the Auditor General's Report :

Paid to J. H. Metcalfe, warden, 12 months to June 30..... $2,000

The PRIME MINISTER. Well, that is what the new man gets.

Mr. FOSTER. Then the deputy warden got $1,500, and I see the schedule puts him at $1,500. The surgeon had $1,365, but that was for a part of the year, so that evidently $1,500 was the salary of the surgeon. It is now made $1,800. What is the reason that the surgeon's salary, which has been $1,500 has been raised to a maximum of $1,800 ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). In former times the salary of the surgeon was $1,800. That is what Dr. Strange received, and he was allowed besides to carry on his private practice. Under the present regulation the surgeon is not to have any private practice, but is to give his whole attention to the prison.

Mr. FOSTER. Is Dr. Phelan the surgeon ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Does he give his whole attention to the prison ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I believe he does.

Mr. FOSTER. He gets $1,500. Is it proposed to pay him more, or is this the maximum to which he might be raised ?

The PRIME MINISTER. This is the maximum to which he may be raised.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. His predecessor received $1,800 and was allowed to practice, but now it is proposed that the surgeon shall not have the right to practice.

Mr. BRITTON.

Mr. FOSTER. The surgeon did not keep up his private practice of late.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes, I am certain, to my own knowledge, that Dr. Strange was keeping up his private practice.

Mr. FOSTER. How long has Dr. Strange been out ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. About a year and a half.

Mr. FOSTER. Do they require two chaplains at the penitentiary to pray for them ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. This is the largest penitentiary in the Dominion, and the Roman Catholic element represents, I think, about one-third. It is precisely the same system as obtains at St. Vincent de Paul where there are two chaplains, one a Roman Catholic and the other a Protestant.

Mr. FOSTER. I see that in the Auditor General's Report they are paid $1,200. The chief instructor of industry gets $1,200. There does not appear to be very much increase as to actual salaries.

The PRIME MINISTER. It is not the intention that there shall be any increases of salaries, so far as I know.

On section 3,

The PRIME MINISTER. There is a slight change. Under the law as at present, a man convicted in Quebec has to be sentenced to St. Vincent de Paul, a man convicted in Ontario to Kingston, and there is no authority to transfer a man in Montreal to the Kingston Penitentiary. There is a case of the celebrated Viau, whom it was necessary to transfer to Kingston. This section gives us power to send a convict from the jail direct to any penitentiary we wish.

On section 5,

The PRIME MINISTER. This section requires a little explanation. It was intended to remove a somewhat awkward provision in the present law. Section 62 of the present law says :

62. No spirituous or fermented liquors shall be brought into the penitentiary for the use of any officer or person therein (except the warden or deputy warden, if the latter is resident therein), or for the use of any convict confined therein, except under the rules of penitentiary ; and any person who gives any spirituous or fermented liquor, tobacco, snuff or cigars, to any convict, except under the rules of the penitentiary, or conveys the same to any convict, shall incur a penalty of forty dollars, which shall be recoverable by the warden before any court of competent jurisdiction, and placed to the credit of the Minister of Finance and Receiver General. 45 V., c. 37, s. 64.

That is a very wise provision indeed, but if you look at section 59, we have almost the same provision identically. It is as follows :—

59. Every officer, guard or servant of any penitentiary, or other person, who brings in or carries out, or endeavours to bring in or carry out, or knowingly allows to be brought in or carried out, to or from any convict, or carries to any convict when employed outside the prison walls, any money, clothing, provisions, tobacco, spirits, letters, papers or other articles whatsoever, not allowed by the rules of the penitentiary shall, on summary conviction, be liable to a penalty not exceeding one hundred dollars, or to imprisonment with hard labour, for a term not exceeding three months. 46 V., c. 37, s. 59.

We propose to re-enact this section and leave out section 62.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The objection I have to the Bill is that it permits the warden and the assistant to take in liquor. It appears to me that it would be more important for them to be sober than any one else.

The PRIME MINISTER. On the contrary they are prohibited under the section we are re-enacting. Section 62 would allow the warden to take in liquor, but section 59 which prohibits him from taking in liquor is re-enacted.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). It is a great pity that it is not made obligatory as a qualification for a Minister of Justice that he should be a smoker; because if he were a smoker, he would understand what useless cruelty it is to deprive prisoners of the use of tobacco to which they have been accustomed and to which they attach more value than any other comfort. Formerly a certain amount of tobacco was allowed to prisoners, but men who are non-smokers are so hard-hearted that it is impossible to make them understand what a hold the habit of smoking takes of a man.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Is my hon. friend (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière) a smoker?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes, but I will never advise the leader of the Opposition to become a smoker unless he is one already. A good many of these men detained in our penitentiaries are ready to admit that they are justly imprisoned and detained, but, when you deprive them of their liberty, why add vexatious regulations such as preventing them having a moderate supply of tobacco. One of the officers told me at one of the great prisons in England, that the management of the prisoners would be very much easier if they were allowed a moderate use of tobacco. I appeal to those who are smokers, would it not be better to supply a moderate quantity of tobacco to prisoners, given as a reward for good conduct, and withhold it as a punishment.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière) has made a very affecting appeal, but I cannot help but ask myself why he did not make this appeal to his colleagues in Council. This is a Government measure, I believe, and the Government must be united upon it.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. What is the use of appealing to the Council when they won't make it a condition that the Minister of Justice should be a smoker.

Mr. FOSTER. We find that his colleagues were so hard-hearted that they would not listen to his appeal. Does the hon. gentleman wish us on this side of the House to make cause with him against his colleagues, and try to bring them to a reasonable frame of mind?

The PRIME MINISTER. No, this is an appeal from Philip non-smoking to Philip smoking.

Mr. DAVIN. I suppose this is only to avoid passing an Order in Council when a change is made?

The PRIME MINISTER. No. Sometimes we are obliged to send an officer from one penitentiary to another, where he may be obliged to perform work of a character inferior to what he did before, and we want to be able to continue his salary.

Mr. DAVIN. Under the section at present, if the hon. gentleman changed an officer, say from Kingston to St. Vincent de Paul, I think he would have to pass an Order in Council appointing him; but under this you would not have to do it?

The PRIME MINISTER. We would have to pass an Order in Council just the same.

On section 7,

The PRIME MINISTER. This section is of not very great but of some importance. It has been found that convicts are sometimes sent to the penitentiary who are insane at the time, and who ought to have been sent to an asylum. We take power under such circumstances to say that the Minister of Justice may inquire, and when he has satisfied himself that the convict was insane at the time of his conviction, he may, after a medical examination, send him back to the provincial authorities to be kept in an asylum.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the meaning of the words "or otherwise"? What other proof of insanity would be necessary?

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not know. But perhaps the Minister of Justice thought it advisable in some cases to have a second medical man confirm the opinion of the surgeon of the penitentiary.

On section 8,

The PRIME MINISTER. This section requires some explanation. It is to amend section 4 of chapter 52 of the Statutes of 1887, which is as follows :—

To any officer—

(a) Whose conduct has been good, and who has been faithful in the discharge of his duties ;

(b) Who is compelled to retire from the service on account of some mental or physical infirmity which unfits him for the performance of his duty ; and

(c) Who is not entitled to a superannuation allowance under the rules in that behalf in force,

A gratuity or retiring allowance may be given, calculated at the rate of half a month's salary for each year of his service, up to five years, and a month's salary for each year of service in excess of five years, based on the salary that such officer was in receipt of at the time of his retirement.

There may be cases where a man has been performing the duties of a guard in the penitentiary, or some other service which requires more physical than mental exercise ; and if he becomes disabled, he has the option of retiring with a gratuity. But such a man, having been for a long time in the service of the penitentiary, can hardly perform equally good work elsewhere ; but he may be qualified to become a clerk or to take some other position in the penitentiary. If he does, he becomes entitled under the law to superannuation ; but in case of his superannuation, he would lose all the time he had served in the other capacity. The object of this section is to allow him under such circumstances to take his gratuity, and to provide that this fact should not act as a bar to his receiving a superannuation allowance estimated from the time he has been in the service.

Mr. FOSTER. But the two do not overlap ?

The PRIME MINISTER. No.

Mr. DAVIN. I think that is quite right, and I would like to impress on my right hon. friend that the principle which he is here adopting is the principle which I have urged again and again to be applied to the officers of the Mounted Police. At the present time, if an officer of the force becomes an inspector, say for one or two years. He is not based on the time that he has been an inspector, say for one or two years. He is not allowed to count the ten or fifteen years of his service as a non-commissioned officer. Now that the right hon. gentleman is adopting that principle in this case, I hope, should he be happy enough to be here next session, that he will embody it in a measure in regard to the officers of the North-west Mounted Police.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am quite happy to take a good idea from any one.

On the schedule,

Mr. DAVIN. I would like to draw attention to the schedule. I think it is quite clear that there are changes made.

Mr. BRITTON. Hon. gentlemen know of the changes in the warden and surgeon, which occurred some time ago. The only other changes that have been actually made recently are these : Michael Brennan, James Evans, William Hurst, Edward Mooney, John Mills and James Mathewson have been retired, and the following have been promoted as keepers in their places : Messrs. Bostridge, Bannister, Rutherford, Madden, Beaupré and Doyle. There are other changes in contemplation, I believe, owing to a medical certificate that some of the men are not in good health, but they have not actually taken place yet.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Mr. COCHRANE. What were those men retired for ?

Mr. BRITTON. On account of ill-health. Michael Brennan suffers from chronic lumbago and is unable at times to stoop, and walks with difficulty ; has also palpitation of the heart. James Evans is quite feeble, afraid of convicts, and is in failing health.

Mr. CLARKE. What age is he ?

Mr. BRITTON. He is an elderly man, but I have not his age.

Mr. CLARKE. Fifty ?

Mr. BRITTON. Yes, more. William Hurst is quite deaf ; suffers from rheumatism ; is inactive in consequence ; has palpitation of the heart, and is breathless comparatively on exertion. Edward Mooney is ruptured ; unfit for duty. John Mills is ruptured ; unfit for duty. James Mathewson is quite feeble ; very inactive ; eyesight poor.

Mr. COCHRANE. Do they get an allowance on their retirement ?

Mr. BRITTON. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. Who made an examination of these men ?

Mr. BRITTON. The surgeon of the penitentiary, Dr. Phelan. I may say, with regard to Michael Brennan, that on his application, a second medical examination was allowed him. I understand that he was reported as being in worse health than he thought he really was, and he was granted another examination. Whether it took place or not I cannot say.

Mr. CLARKE. How long has Dr. Phelan been in the employment of the Government as surgeon of the penitentiary ?

Mr. BRITTON. In round figures, two years.

Mr. DAVIN. Take, for instance, the chief keeper, the maximum, under existing law which can be paid is $900. Under this legislation he may be paid $1,200. Take the hospital overseer, the present maximum is $900, but under the proposed legislation the maximum will be $1,200. Then, the engineer, the present maximum is $1,000, but under the proposed schedule it will be $1,200. Do these men get rations ?

Mr. BRITTON. They only get dinner.

Mr. DAVIN. The maximum for the chief trade instructor is at present $1,000, but in this Bill it is $1,200. These are considerable increases, and I am not aware that the cost of living has increased in Kingston. These men get their chief meal at the expense of the Government, and can exclaim—with one of the characters in the drama of the Restoration—although my right hon. friend has almost interdicted me from making quotations—"the gods can't harm me, I have dined." And after an employee of the penitentiary has dined substantially at the cost of the Government, his two other meals will be light ones.

The PRIME MINISTER. I might alter the hon. gentleman's quotation and say to him: We want to dine. There is no intention of increasing the salaries.

Mr. DAVIN. But there is a higher maximum provided in each case than under the existing law.

The PRIME MINISTER. If we attempt to increase the salaries of any of the officers, we shall have to ask for an appropriation and become subject to the criticisms of my hon. friend. There is no intention of increasing the salaries except in two cases, the chaplain and the chief keeper. We propose to combine the two offices of chief keeper and clerk of works, and give the chief keeper $1,400, instead of $1,200. The steward's salary is increased $100.

Mr. FOSTER. Was there a clerk of work before, and what did he get?

The PRIME MINISTER. He got $400.

Mr. FOSTER. Do these men get lodgings?

The PRIME MINISTER. No.

Mr. FOSTER. They get one ration a day?

Mr. BRITTON. At mid-day and the night watchmen get a night meal.

Mr. FOSTER. I think I ought to congratulate the hon. member for Kingston, although I do not know exactly what I ought to congratulate him on. I am not sure whether this is simply a preliminary canter which opens up a vista of the final race-course or not, and whether there is a resolution still lurking around in the Cabinet for another salary for a supplementary Minister, but the hon. gentleman has done very well.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am glad my hon. friend takes it in that light, and accept his congratulations in advance. Perhaps when the thing is brought down he will reverse his course altogether.

Mr. BRITTON. I am much obliged to the hon. gentleman for his compliment, but he will see that the Minister of Justice has not been long at the work, and as the Kingston Penitentiary is in my constituency. I have, of course, to take some interest in it.

Mr. FOSTER. The excuse is perfectly valid. The members of the Cabinet are a little fresh on their business.

Mr. DAVIN. The same criticism has to be made on the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary. I find that power is taken to increase the salary of the surgeon by an additional $200, if desired. Also to increase the salary of the accountant by an addition of $100, from $1,100 to $1,200. Also to increase the salary of the chief keeper. His maximum at present is $900, and now the power is taken to give him $1,200. Again, what is the necessity of providing for these additional increases if it is not intended to give them?

The PRIME MINISTER. I have to speak with some hesitation on the subject, because I do not know much, if anything at all, about the inside management of the penitentiary, and unfortunately the Solicitor General is not here. There is no intention in this Bill to increase the existing salaries, but I have to make an amendment to the chief trade instructor, by adding the words "chief trade instructor and clerk of industries." The chief trade instructor and clerk of industries, when combined in one, will get $1,500. Our intention is to combine the two offices and raise the salary to $1,500.

Mr. DAVIN. The same criticism which I have made to the other penitentiaries will apply to Dorchester, Manitoba and British Columbia penitentiaries.

The PRIME MINISTER. In the other schedule, the Dorchester penitentiary, the matron's salary is $500 and the deputy matron's $400, instead of $300. I understand that these are the actual salaries now paid.

Mr. DAVIN. For very good matrons and deputy matrons that is not too much.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed

COMPANIES ACT AMENDMENT— INSOLVENCY.

House resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 160)—from the Senate—to amend the Companies Act.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). The object of this Bill is to permit companies to issue preference stock. The privilege has been granted from time to time to companies to issue such stock, and I think I am correct in stating that it has never in any instance been refused. We propose to give general permission to companies to issue such stock under by-law.

It is provided that the Bill shall not apply to insurance companies or trust companies.

Mr. BERGERON. It is not quite in point in this Bill perhaps, but I would like to ask the right hon. leader of the Government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) concerning any Bankruptcy Act to be brought down by the Government, or to be allowed to be brought down by any private member.

Mr. CLARKE. This session ?

Mr. BERGERON. Yes. I believe there has been a strong movement in the country to ask my right hon. friend to bring down a bankruptcy law. Some time ago I asked for the correspondence on this subject, and my right hon. friend asked me to give notice and move in the usual way. I did so, but have not had the correspondence yet. I would like to know from him why he has not acceded to this strong demand in favour of a bankruptcy law, and whether we may expect such a law during the present session, or at least within a short time ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Several attempts have been made to improve the local legislation of the several provinces. I believe it is accepted that the legislation of the province of Quebec is quite satisfactory to the trade at large. The legislation of Ontario has also been improved, so that I believe there is now practically no difference between the legislation of Ontario and that of Quebec.

Mr. BERGERON. But the same is not true of the other provinces.

The PRIME MINISTER. I speak of Ontario only at present. We have been in correspondence with the provincial governments in order to ask them to improve their legislation and put it on the same footing as that of Ontario and Quebec. Nova Scotia has responded and improved its legislation, and we hope that the same thing will be done in the other provinces. If that is done, there will be no difficulty at all ; you will hear nothing more about having an insolvency law.

Mr. BERGERON. Of course, my right hon. friend speaks from information in his possession. I do not know the facts, personally. So far as Quebec is concerned, there has never been any difficulty. Our civil law operates perfectly. I have often heard wholesale men in Quebec complain of cases of failure in the other provinces, when they lost the whole of their creances. My hon. friend said that necessary machinery had not been provided in Ontario. This is the first I have heard of it. I should be glad, if the correspondence between the members of the trade and the Government could be brought down.

Mr. CLARKE. As this subject has come up, I may mention that for some time I have had in my possession a number of documents dealing with this matter, and intended to bring it before the House, but an opportunity has not presented itself. It will be recollected by the House that a petition was presented to Parliament, praying for the passage of an insolvency law signed by leading manufacturers and merchants of Great Britain. The representations made were very strong, and it was urged that no time should be lost by the Government and Parliament of Canada in passing an insolvency law. I may say that I have, in addition to a copy of the petition, a number of trade journals printed in the old country, which point out, as the petition does, that British merchants and manufacturers labour under great disadvantages in Canada because of the non-existence of an insolvency law.

The PRIME MINISTER. I would point out that all the demands for an insolvency law come, not so much from this country as from outside—from Great Britain mostly. There is no demand at the present time in the country for an insolvency law, so-called. What the trade wants is a law which will effect two things—prevent undue preferences as between creditors, and also provide for the disposition of the estate of any party who goes into insolvency. What the trade particularly objects to is, that it should be in the power of the insolvent debtor to pay some favoured creditor. Under the civil law of Quebec, which is the common law, such preference are prohibited. This principle has been recognized in Ontario. I understand that in Nova Scotia also it is recognized by the law. What is wanted, in addition, is some machinery whereby the courts should have power to make disposition of the assets of an insolvent debtor. The legislation introduced into the province of Quebec seven or eight years ago has proven satisfactory. Similar legislation has been introduced in Ontario, and if the same provisions were made in every province of the Dominion, all the demands for an insolvency law would disappear. We do not want an insolvency law. The country is prosperous, and it is not required. That which is required, as I have said, has been, or we hope will be, provided for by the legislatures of the different provinces.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. In my opinion, it is not possible for the Government to overrate the importance of this question. I have no hesitation in saying, having had full means of knowing the effect of the statement, that there is nothing that has created such a barrier in the way of increased trade with Great Britain as the want of an insolvency law. I may say that the British Empire League have pressed that matter in the very strongest way. At their request, both myself and the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Dobell) pledged ourselves to give our support to an insolvency law. It is enough to make one hang his head in shame to hear commercial men in the city of London describe the shameful manner in which they have been swindled through the want of an insolvency law in Canada. The statements made by the chambers of commerce and by leading commercial men in Great Britain have had the effect of making merchants absolutely distrust having commercial relations with the people of this country, for fear they may find their goods, or the proceeds of them, by means of a preferential assignment, handed over to some other person.

I doubt very much whether the measures to which my right hon. friend has referred will meet the case, useful as they may be; but I think that when the Government have exhausted their efforts in getting legislation passed in the various provinces, if they will take that subject up in the light of the legislation in other quarters, and bring forward an insolvency law, they will render a great service to the country.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think the dissatisfaction that has been spoken of by my hon. friend was more prevalent a year or two ago; I have not heard of late any specific complaint in the direction he has referred to. When I was in England less than two years ago, a large deputation of commercial men waited upon me, in conjunction with the High Commissioner, and expressed very strongly the views which the hon. gentleman has expressed to the House; but at that time provincial legislation was not in as good a condition as it is at present. I think that, to a considerable extent, the difficulty has been met by the provincial legislation to which the right hon. the First Minister has referred. There is one point, however, in which we are still defective, and that is the lack of uniformity in our insolvency legislation. If we are to rely upon the legislation of the provinces, we cannot have such uniformity. I was deeply impressed with the fact that the lack of such legislation prejudicially affected the trade relations between Great Britain and Canada, although at that time the laws were less favourable in the provinces than they are at present. But unless there be a uniform law there will still be more or less complaint.

Mr. McNEILL. I only desire to say that I endorse every word that has fallen from the leader of the Opposition in reference to this matter.

Mr. BERGERON. I would impress upon my right hon. friend the importance of that correspondence which I mentioned to him. He asked me to give notice of a motion calling for it, and I did so on the 25th of June. Surely it cannot be so difficult to bring it down. I hope he has no reason for withholding it.

The PRIME MINISTER. No reason in the world. Probably I have forgotten it, I will see about it.

Mr. BERGERON. I want to say a word in answer to the Premier and to the Minister of Finance about the local legislatures maintaining their laws in such a way as to help. This is a matter of trade and commerce, and belongs to the Dominion Government and not to the local legislatures. Local legislation is always subject to the caprices of local legislatures, whilst, if a good bankruptcy law were drawn up on business principles and passed by this Parliament for the whole Dominion, I think it would be more satisfactory to our own people, as well as to foreigners who are dealing with our people.

Mr. CLARKE. With the permission of the committee, I would like to read the concluding portion of a memorial presented to the House some time ago. I may say that this petition is signed by the leading business men and merchants of Great Britain, whose names are familiar, I imagine, to the business world of the Dominion:

Your memorialists, therefore, respectfully represent that there should be:

1. One insolvency law for all the provinces and territories of Canada, that such law should, 'inter alia,' provide for:
  2. The abolition of all preferential creditors other than governmental taxes, rent and wages.
  3. For the registration of all liens on goods, book debts or other securities, and that secured creditors should rank only for their debt, less a proper valuation of their security.
  4. Liens and preferences within a period of three to four months prior to an assignment or bankruptcy, to be deemed invalid.
  5. Provision against all fraudulent and preferential settlements.
  6. Provision for the means of enforcing to a trustee duly appointed by creditors an assignment on their behalf of the estate of a debtor who is insolvent.
  7. Provision of a public or other proper examination of a debtor before a judge or other authorized official.
  8. That in any appointment of official receivers the rights of creditors to a proper supervision and control of estates to be safeguarded.
  9. Traders to be compelled to keep books of account.
  10. Provision to meet the notorious evil of traders insolvent, or on the brink of insolvency, ordering or receiving delivery of goods on credit from persons ignorant of their financial position.
  11. Provision that where a debtor has obtained goods while insolvent within sixty days of his executing any deed of assignment or presenting any petition for the administration of his affairs to any insolvency court, that the creditors furnishing such goods shall be entitled to the return of all such goods as are available when the insolvency is declared.
  12. Provision against the frequent case of sales 'en bloc' of stock by traders insolvent, or on the brink of insolvency, before calling their creditors together.
- And generally your petitioners would urge that any legislation dealing with insolvency should, as far as practicable, be assimilated to the law relating to insolvency in England and Wales, with such modifications or improvements thereto as your honourable House shall deem necessary or advisable.

Just one word more. I have had sent to me an extract from an article on bankruptcy in Canada, taken from the "Drapers' Record," a trade paper which has the largest circulation of any trade journal in the world. The opening paragraph of the article is as follows:—

The condition of the bankruptcy law in Canada is one of the greatest scandals of the commercial world. For years an agitation has been going on in this country for the purpose of bringing pressure to bear on the Home Government or the Canadian Government, or both, so that the grievances of British creditors of Canadian debtors might be abated. But nothing is done. We are quite aware that the Home Government cannot pass a Canadian Bankruptcy Act, but one would have thought that the Colonial Secretary, especially when he happens to be the author of the Bankruptcy Act of 1883, would have been able to make such representations to the Canadian Government as would induce the latter to seriously take up the question of bankruptcy reform. This, however, appears to be impossible; at any rate, Mr. Chamberlain does not stir himself in the direction indicated. British exporters have not waited supinely for the relief that never came. They have made several efforts to secure a proper consideration of their grievances, and now they are directly petitioning the Canadian Parliament, through the medium of the European Exporters' Association of Toronto, Limited. In order to strengthen the hands of the petitioners, we may institute a comparison between the legal situation in this country and Canada, so far as insolvency is concerned.

I need not read the whole of it.

Mr. McNEILL. What is the date of that?

Mr. CLARKE. I cannot put my finger on the date; it is quite recent. This is the summing up the article:

To sum up: The chaotic condition of the Canadian bankruptcy law is a grave public scandal, which ought not to be allowed to further continue. Representations to the legislature have hitherto been made in vain, but we cannot think that the weighty memorial that is to be presented to the Canadian Parliament by the European Exporters' Association of Toronto, Limited, will be similarly neglected. Thus to treat it would be worse than a scandal—it would be a disgrace.

This memorial, a copy of which I have in my hand, I thought it my duty, as opportunity offered, to bring forward before the committee, in hope that at the next session, at any rate, some legislation will be passed to meet the wishes of gentlemen who are so deeply interested in the promotion of trade between Britain and Canada, and who have memorialized for a change in the law.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

It being One o'clock, the Deputy Speaker left the Chair.

Mr. CLARKE.

House resumed at Three o'clock.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Mr. Speaker, with the unanimous consent of the House, I beg to move:

That leave be granted the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts to sit during the time that the House is in session.

Motion agreed to.

THE WINDING-UP ACT.

House resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 163)—from the Senate—to amend the Winding-up Act.—(Mr. Fielding.)

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Although this Bill stands in my name, the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) is really in charge of it. My name is improperly placed to it, but the hon. gentleman will explain the nature and purpose of the measure.

Mr. McCARTHY. Any explanations that are desired, Mr. Chairman, I am prepared to give the committee. The Bill is simply to amend the Winding-up Act and the Winding-up Amendment Act, 1889, Section 3 of the Bill enables a compromise to be effected. I may inform the committee that the Bill was very thoroughly discussed before the Banking and Commerce Committee of the Senate. In winding-up proceedings a clash sometimes occurs. For instance, if it is a loan company or a loan and banking company the depositors and debenture holders would be two distinct classes and they might have a dispute in regard to their respective rights and interests, and in case there was such a dispute no settlement could be arrived at between the contending classes unless every person in each class interested, or claiming to be interested, in the fund agreed. This section, as hon. gentlemen will see, permits a compromise to be carried out if a majority in number representing three-fourths in value think a settlement should be arrived at, subject, however, to the approval of the court in the winding-up proceedings being obtained. In other words, the judicial officer before whom the winding-up proceedings are taking place will ascertain and consider whether the settlement is one that he ought to approve of or disapprove of and he will approve or disapprove of it as he may see fit. But first there must be a coinciding of a majority in number representing three-fourths in value of the persons claiming. This section is taken almost verbatim from the English Act. As to the fourth section of the Bill it is, as will be seen, for the purpose of validating winding-up proceedings—taken under the Winding-up Acts of Canada. The Winding-up Act of Canada, R.S.C., chap. 129, gives the right of petition to wind up to a creditor. The Winding-up Amendment Act of 1889 gives the right to a shareholder to petition. There may be some doubt whether proceedings taken under the Winding-up Amendment Act of 1889 to wind up a company by a creditor would be valid. This fourth section makes it clear and makes both Acts apply to every shareholder or creditor so that either a shareholder or a creditor shall have the right to petition to wind up a company, and that if proceedings were commenced under the Winding-up Amendment Act of 1889 by a creditor these proceedings will be validated. The fifth section declares :

The words "capital stock," where they occur in section 3 of the Winding-up Act and in section 8 thereof as hereby amended, and in sections 3, 4, 5 and 8 of the Winding-up Amendment Act, 1899, shall mean and be taken to have heretofore meant a capital stock either 'de jure' or 'de facto.'

A company may be in the position in which there is doubt as to the validity of the issue of its stock, but as in one or two instances in Ontario, the company dealt with that which might not be in law validly issued stock but which had been so created by all parties and paid dividends upon it, and increased the capital stock and paid dividends upon the increased capital. This section declares that in such a case capital stock shall be held to be stock either de jure or de facto. There are two other clauses which are suggested by the Government in regard to which I will not undertake to explain.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the real amendment to the old Act in this Bill ?

Mr. McCARTHY. The real amendment is in section 3 giving power to the judicial officer before whom winding-up proceedings have taken place, to approve of a settlement and to say whether it shall be carried out between contending classes such as debenture holders and depositors, for instance, when one is claiming a preference over the other, and when three-fourths of them agree that a compromise should be made, then the court may approve of such a settlement. It is taken practically verbatim from the English Winding-up Act.

Mr. BERGERON. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. McCarthy) whether this Bill has been carried through the Senate under the supervision of the hon. Minister of Justice ?

Mr. McCARTHY. The hon. Minister of Justice was present in the Senate Committee when the matter was fully discussed, when the Bill was reported, and when the Senate finally read it a third time.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

PROHIBITION OF THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). With the unanimous consent of the House, I would now move that the Order be called for the motion of Mr. Flint.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. T. B. FLINT (Yarmouth) moved :

That inasmuch as it is desirable that legislation be enacted having in view the further restriction of the liquor traffic in Canada, and that such legislation should be uniform in all the provinces and territories of the Dominion, it is expedient, in the opinion of this House, to enact :

1. That subject and except as hereinafter mentioned, the sale of intoxicating liquors in every province and territory of Canada should be prohibited.

2. That the Act prohibiting such sale should not come into force in any province or territory unless and until a majority of the qualified electors therein, voting at an election, shall have voted in favour of such Act.

3. That upon such vote in favour of said Act being duly certified to the Governor General in Council, such Act shall be brought into force in said province or territory, and shall remain in force therein for four years and thereafter until the same shall have been repealed in such province or territory, such repeal shall not take effect therein until a majority of the qualified electors of such province or territory, voting at an election, shall have voted for the repeal thereof ; the proceedings for such repeal to be similar in all respects to those for bringing the Act into force.

4. That in order to avoid unnecessary expense and to secure the largest possible vote, the voting provided for in the said Act shall take place at a general federal election.

5. That this Act shall, on coming into force, suspend the operation of the Canada Temperance Act in any part of the province or territory where the same may be in force at the time, and such suspension shall continue so long as this Act is in force in such province or territory.

6. That while the said Act is in force in any province or territory, the sale of such liquors may be permitted for medicinal or sacramental purposes or for bona fide use in any art, trade or manufacture ; such sales to be made only by vendors appointed for that purpose, and to be subject to such regulations as will secure the due observance of the Act.

7. That while the said Act is in force in any province or territory, no brewer or distiller therein shall be permitted to sell his products except to vendors for the purposes of the said Act, or for export from the said province or territory to some place beyond the same, where the said Act is not in force—such manufacture, sale and export to be subject to stringent regulations.

8. That while the said Act is in force in any province or territory, no such liquors shall be permitted to be imported or brought into such province or territory from any other province or territory in Canada, or from abroad, except for sale for the purposes of the said Act—such importation and sale to be subject to such conditions and restrictions as will ensure the due observance of the Act.

9. That due provision be made in said Act for the enforcement of the same, and for the proper application of all fines and penalties imposed thereby.

He said : I desire to thank the Prime Minister and the House for the courtesy extended to me and to those whom I have the honour to represent in this matter, in allowing this resolution to be taken up to-day when I am perfectly aware that a large amount of other important public business would otherwise have been transacted. It has been arranged that this resolution should be seconded by my hon. friend from East Prince (Mr. Bell). This resolution, as a majority of hon. gentlemen present are aware, emanates from the Dominion Alliance, an association which has been for many years doing good work in connection with the prohibition of the liquor traffic in Canada. Membership in the Dominion Alliance is generally obtained by being elected from any temperance organization favourable to prohibition, and it is the aim of the Alliance to represent the general public sentiment of those who believe in a prohibitory liquor law for the whole Dominion as the proper goal towards which citizens favourable to the progress of temperance should labour. It is not to be assumed that in any degree whatever those in favour of the lines sketched in this resolution, are at all disposed to drop the idea of total prohibition of the liquor traffic throughout the whole Dominion. The resolution represents to a very large degree a compromise between the two extremes of those who believe the operation of the temperance sentiment should work as it hitherto has worked through the Scott Act, through the various local organizations in the various provinces; and of those who believe that morally and politically it is the duty of those who favour temperance to rest satisfied with nothing short of the total prohibition of the traffic in intoxicating liquors throughout the whole Dominion. It is somewhat unfortunate, of course, that the matter should come up at this late hour of the session, but the peculiarity of the situation in regard to this question is, that whereas on almost every other question before the public, any private member can introduce a Bill which if approved by the House and the Senate would be ultimately passed into law; yet, on this subject affecting as it does, finance, as well as trade and commerce, it cannot be introduced in the shape of a Bill by any private member, and must be brought forward by resolution. This is, of course, a disadvantage. Any detailed measure dealing with the subject apart from national prohibition, dealing with it as a question to be worked out in detail as quasi national prohibition work, by means of provinces, must necessarily be of greater length than could be conveniently treated in the form of a resolution. I would have much preferred, had more time been placed at the disposal of those who sketched out this line of prohibitory effort, that it could have been incorporated in a Bill so that all its various clauses might be discussed and amended if necessary, until we reached a point which would fairly express the sentiments of Parliament. Every hon. member in this House is aware that the prohibition agitation has taken a great many phases and aspects since the confederation of the provinces. Originally the evils of intemperance were attacked, and still are attacked, and still ought to be attacked, by means of the persuasion of individuals to refrain from the use of intoxicating liquors, and we are all aware that is a method of prohibition which is eminently practicable and which is in the main entirely satisfactory. But, as the question has been studied, and as the laws of the country have grown and developed, this has not been deemed the only means that society ought to adopt in order to diminish the admitted evils of intemperance, and, consequently, Parliament has been appealed to to place upon the traffic in intoxicating liquors certain restrictions; in the same manner as society has been appealed to by means of various organizations to adopt the principle of personal total abstinence so as to lead young persons of all classes of the community to voluntarily abstain from the use of intoxicating liquors, for the sake of themselves, as well as for the sake of those by whom they are surrounded. But as human nature is constituted and as society has grown, it has been found that additional aids were required; and, with almost common consent, the legislature has passed laws to restrict the traffic in various ways. These have aided in carrying on the temperance propaganda very materially, and have done their share in the work of making Canada to-day one of the most temperate countries on the face of the globe. Still, there has been a constant pressure upon the various local legislatures, as well as upon the Dominion Parliament, to go still further in this direction, and to consider the advisability of enacting laws which would prohibit entirely the traffic in intoxicating liquors, except for certain purposes which are generally admitted to be of some utility. This pressure has been exerted almost constantly on this Parliament since its original organization. This session has made it abundantly apparent that the time has not yet arrived when Parliament has nothing to do but meet, pass the Estimates and go home. I believe the late Sir George Cartier said that that was the ideal at which he hoped Parliament would some day arrive. It appears, as time progresses, that questions of great importance and interest to different sections of the country, and some of them to the whole country, are continually cropping up, and very violent discussions are heard in Parliament on these various questions. One hon. gentleman has the notion that if an export duty is put on saw-logs, a complete state of industrial and commercial happiness for the whole Dominion will arrive. Another has a panacea for all human ills, or a large measure of them at any rate, in the form of preferential trade with the mother country. Another advocates reciprocity with the United States. Others think that the proper dealing with the question of the traffic in intoxicating liquors is of prime importance. My own view, however, coincides with what is perhaps that of the majority of hon. members present, that all of these questions, in their particular spheres and at their particular times, have a relative importance, and that no one question is of an importance which ought to exclude attention to any or all others. I do not desire it to be supposed that although, partially by the force of circumstances, I have on one or two occasions introduced resolutions looking to the prohibition of the liquor traffic, my mind is wholly taken up with that subject, and that I cannot sympathize with the views of any hon. gentleman who has other panaceas to recommend for the benefit of his suffering fellow-countrymen. But there can be no doubt in the mind of any hon. gentleman who has watched the progress of temperance reform, that throughout the country generally there does appear to be a larger number of the electorate whose minds are strongly set upon the desirability of further temperance legislation, and who on all occasions press this matter forward, at public meetings, at political meetings, and upon their representatives in Parliament—that there are a larger number of persons devoted to this means of benefiting the country generally than perhaps to any other one question with which Parliament has to deal. Whether or not that feeling is thoroughly and adequately represented in Parliament, is open to question. There is no doubt that it would be a very desirable state of things, if this public sentiment, which we all know to exist, could be represented in the Parliament of the Dominion as strongly as it is represented among the electorate. Many efforts have been made from time to time to ascertain to what extent the sentiment of large numbers of the electorate is represented in Parliament; but many difficulties, inherent in the nature of the question, have prevented this on previous occasions. No one can deny that the prohibition question is one full of difficulties, although it is full of interest. There are stronger opponents of prohibition than there are perhaps of almost any other great movement which we have had in the country; and there are as strong advocates of prohibition as there are of any other question that has ever been pressed forward to success.

A short resumé of the parliamentary history of prohibition may not perhaps be without interest. At any rate, it may very properly precede a general discussion of the question, which I hope will take place in connection with this resolution; and it ought to be a complete answer to any one who takes the ground that prohibition of the liquor traffic is altogether absurd—that it is a mere intellectual, or abstract, or academic question. If it had been so, I think it would long ago have disappeared from the political arena, for no question which is purely of an abstract or academic character, which is a mere fad of some academic individual, no matter how interesting it may be, could ever have sustained itself so long as prohibition has done as a living question throughout this Dominion. It has been in the local legislatures and in the Dominion Parliament one of the most forceful questions we have had to deal with; it has created a cleavage, not along party lines, but within political parties; and although it does not appear to have made very great headway in the matter of legislation, at this very hour it is exercising a lively interest among hon. gentlemen on both sides of this House, as well as among those they represent in every portion of this Dominion. In 1873 the question first moved on the Dominion Parliament in the nature of petitions, asking for a prohibitory liquor law, and a committee, to which the question was referred by Parliament, after consideration, reported favourably—reported not that it was a question that could be thought so undesirable, but reported with all gravity to Parliament that it should be taken up and should at some time be made the law of the land. A Royal commission was issued, I believe, in the next year, dealing with the subject, and the commissioners were instructed to make inquiries in the United States particularly, as to the working of prohibitory liquor laws in that country. That report, although valuable, was by no means exhaustive, nor can I find that the commissioners reported their opinion in favour of a prohibitory liquor law, but the general tendency of all their observations and the result of their inquiries show that a prohibitory law was admitted by those whom they consulted as not only desirable, but eminently practicable and workable. The following year, as a result of this agitation and the report of this commission, the matter was again brought before this House.

Mr. BERGERON. That would be 1875.

Mr. FLINT. Yes. And so strong was the feeling among the members of the House at that time that the matter went to a Committee of the Whole House, and a Committee of the Whole House, after some interesting discussion, voted that prohibition was the most effective remedy for the evils of intemperance. This report was not acted upon by the House itself. The point I am attempting to make is this, that Parliament did then give its imprimatur, as a Parliament, to the desirability of a prohibitory liquor law; that it took it out of the region of mere moral and abstract sentiment, and placed it upon a legislative and parliamentary basis; and by giving its sanction, it has justified the efforts of those who from that as a basis went forward with renewed interest and energy, in encouraging throughout the country principles of total abstinence among those who were to elect representatives in future Parliaments. This agitation, although it did not result in the full remedy of a prohibitory law throughout the Dominion, led to the enactment of the Canada Temperance Act, commonly called the Scott Act, a most important piece of legislation, not only on account of the temperance principles to which it committed Parliament, but on account of the constitutional principles which were then enunciated and subsequently sustained, after very expensive and very extensive litigation. Parliament held, and held rightly as it appears from decisions subsequently given, that in the exercise of its power for the order and good government of Canada it could enact a prohibitory liquor law, and place within the jurisdiction of the electoral or other divisions in the various provinces the power of bringing that Act into effect over a given area in any province. In other words, the principle of local option was applied, on a large scale, by the Dominion, and that principle was upheld after appeal to the highest court; and as this principle, to a large degree, is attempted to be invoked along the lines of the resolution I have placed on the Order paper, I would call the attention of hon. gentlemen to its importance.

Passing along, however, you will find that the Canada Temperance Act, although it was adopted in many districts, was not worked to the satisfaction of many temperance and other people in those districts, and the reason why the Scott Act has been condemned has always been to me a matter of surprise. However, I think, in a general way, it may be said that it was condemned because it was not properly supported in those constituencies by public opinion. It may have needed amendment here and there and had public opinion arisen strongly in support of the Scott Act in these districts, and had those in favour of it impressed on Parliament the desirability of such amendments as were found from time to time absolutely necessary for its perfect working, those amendments could have been secured. But as soon as difficulties arose in the enforcement of the Act in many constituencies, instead of pressing forward for such amendments as would make the Act more workable, popular clamour demanded the repeal of the Act, and consequently the area over which the Scott Act exercises its jurisdiction has been largely diminished, and to-day it is in force in only a few counties in the upper provinces and not many in the lower provinces. But where it has been strongly supported, where public opinion has been most in favour of enforcing the Act, I believe it has worked very well. There are amendments that may be deemed necessary for its perfect working, but in the main, where public opinion is strong, the Scott Act has worked fairly well. In 1884, the ex-Finance Minister introduced a resolution looking to the total prohibition of the liquor traffic in Canada, and the points he raised in his very able speech have never been satisfactorily answered. They may be answered by indifference or a feeling of hostility, but, as a matter of logic or reasoning, I cannot see that they have ever been fairly and fully answered; and as a result of the debate upon that motion, this House, in 1884, decided by a resolution that prohibition was desirable, repeating the dictum of the House in 1874, but there was a rider added. The House adopted an amendment to the effect that it was prepared to promote such legislation as soon as public opinion was sufficiently strong to sustain a stringent measure, thus indicating that although Parliament was convinced that prohibition was desirable and would be effective, another element had to be considered, apart from the abstract desirability and practicability of its being enforced, and that was that there should be a strong public opinion to sustain a stringent measure. It is this feature in connection with prohibition which makes it appear different from almost every other proposed measure. We do not find Ministers or private members, when introducing measures, appeal to any extent whatever to public opinion. They introduce their measures, no matter of what character, relying solely upon the inherent benefits which these measures promise to achieve and it is supposed that if the measure can stand logical argument, if it is in the line of the general principles of legislation, public opinion will support it. But in connection with the prohibition of the liquor traffic the state of public opinion is always made a very large portion of the discussion and enters very largely into its consideration. I think the reason is, in the first place, as I will show later, that public opinion varies more upon this than almost any other subject.

There are portions in every province of the Dominion where one may travel almost all day and scarcely find a person opposed to prohibition or favourable to the liquor traffic; and then he will strike a community where such propositions are scouted as absurd and ridiculous. The result in the various plebiscites show that some communities are almost unanimous in favour of the utmost restriction of the liquor traffic, while other communities are as strong the other way. In other words, public opinion on this question, though strong on the whole is not homogeneous. There are cities where as the strongest prohibitionist will admit, if prohibition were enacted, there would be great difficulties in the way of its enforcement. There are large communities where the very idea of prohibition is scouted as ridiculous and absurd. In other communities feeling in favour of prohibition is so strong as to amount to a religious sentiment and to cause one who is not a prohibitionist or a total abstainer to be looked upon as a rara avis. So the question of public opinion, particularly in a law which has to be enforced largely through appeal to public opinion, assumes great prominence and great importance. In 1884, Parliament decided that prohibition was desirable, following up the resolution of Parliament in 1875, but declaring that it waited for further intimation as to the state of public opinion upon the subject. In other words, Parliament was ahead or feared that it was ahead of public opinion at that time. Matters went on year after year, and many hon. gentlemen who are now present heard the various discussions which followed in the following years. The results were, however, to confirm the desirability of prohibition. In 1889, Parliament again affirmed the desirability of prohibition, with the same saving clause that public sentiment should be ready for the reception and enforcement of the measure. In 1891, our esteemed friend Judge Jamieson, then a member of this House, proposed a resolution looking to the enactment of a prohibitory law by Parliament. The Government of the day moved an amendment that the whole question be referred to a Royal Commission for the purpose of making inquiries and reporting upon the whole bearings of the question. That commission sat for some time, travelled throughout the provinces of the Dominion and portions of the United States, took down an enormous mass of evidence and published its report. While I never joined in the denunciations of that commission which some good prohibitionists did, I believe the report has not that value which the expense and the pains taken might have led one to expect. Notwithstanding the fact that it contains very much valuable information, yet that information is not so arranged or systematized as to give any student a clear idea, without devoting to it more time than most students have to devote to the subjects of that kind, of the actual trend of expert opinion in the country. Still, the report is valuable to one who will give the necessary time to study it, and perhaps some student of social questions may take time to consider it and extract from it the most valuable of the store of valuable information which will throw light on this question. The result of the commission, however, was a majority report and a minority report. The majority report was against the bringing forward of a prohibitory liquor law for the whole Dominion. I have often wondered what position the Government of that day would have taken had the commissioners come to the conclusion that a prohibitory liquor law was workable. I have wondered whether the Government would have assumed the report to be binding upon the Administration of the day to prepare and introduce a prohibitory liquor law. But they were not obliged to take up that question, because the report of the commission appointed by them was not favourable to it. Had it been otherwise, I think there would have been very strong pressure brought to bear upon the Government to adopt the recommendation of their own commissioners. These are the grounds on which the commission reported against a prohibitory liquor law. I only quote a short portion of the closing lines of their report :

They consider that the "aim" of any system of regulating or prohibiting the liquor traffic is to lessen or extinguish the evils which arise from intemperance or from the improper use of intoxicating beverages, and after the most careful and anxious consideration of the subject, they have come to the conclusion that this would not be accomplished by the enactment of a law prohibiting the manufacture, importation and sale of intoxicating liquors throughout the Dominion, and that if such a law were passed it could not be efficiently enforced. * * * A prohibitory law partakes too much of the character of coercive legislation on a matter in regard to which a very large portion of the people consider they are qualified and entitled to judge for themselves, to be accepted as a measure they are called upon to unhesitatingly obey, and hence the impracticability of efficient enforcement with the powers possessed by the various provinces to legislate in respect to the traffic—the certainty that in some of the provinces prohibition would meet with determined opposition—with an open frontier, such as the Dominion possesses, largely bordering on states in which sale would be carried on, the undersigned consider :

That it is illusory to anticipate that a general prohibitory law could be enforced with any degree of efficiency.

I read this because it is only fair to those who take an interest in this question to know the most that could be said by able and cultivated men who gave many months to the consideration of this matter against national prohibition. And I take it that, considering the feeling of hostility which a certain class of the community would have to have interference with their private habits, the gist of the report is that public opinion in many portions of the country, combined with other disadvantages, would make a prohibitory law practically not enforceable. Upon these grounds rather than upon any ground of hostility to the progress of temperance or total abstinence, this majority report was made. But the minority report to the mind of one that has carefully studied this question contains matter of very great importance; and I think that the Rev. Dr. McLeod who made that report deserves thanks of Parliament and the country. He has presented in the pages leading up to his minority report, an amount of information and a wealth of close and logical argument which is practically unanswerable. The only possible answer is on those grounds I have referred to in the majority report. But upon the evils of intemperance, the extent, nature and character of them, he has brought together the evidence with great force and power. Upon the advisability, from a moral and economical stand-point, of Parliament legislating to restrict those evils by means of prohibition to the utmost extent within its power, I think he has made an unanswerable argument. I will not enlarge upon the points which he has brought out in this report, because they are well known to all students of this question. This is the conclusion which the minority arrived at :

That the House was right in 1875 when it declared that the only effectual remedy for the evils of intemperance was prohibition.

That all the information that was given to this commission confirmed the opinion that the liquor traffic was bad in its influence upon all the proper industries and the best interests of the country ; that the various plebiscites showed a preponderating force of opinion in those provinces where plebiscites had been taken, in favour of a prohibitory liquor law, and that it would be wise at once to enact such a law.

The next movement after the report of this commission was adopted, or rather it was a movement which proceeded contemporaneously with the labours of this commission, was an exercise of pressure upon the Liberal party. It was hoped and expected that a political party, many of whose members were known to be advocates of prohibition, a party seeking popular support, would take up this question and make it a plank in their platform. I may say that I was one of those who hoped that the Liberal party would adopt prohibition as a plank in their platform. I was not at all sure that it would be to the immediate interest of the Liberal party to adopt such a plank as a political measure. I was not sure that it would contribute to their immediate triumph ; but I felt that if prohibition was made a plank by that party it would greatly aid the prohibition movement, and that, although the party might suffer immediately in some directions in consequence thereof, in the long run, and after the lapse of time, and perhaps after having suffered defeat, it would reap the advantage of the growth of prohibition sentiment in the community. In 1893, the Liberal convention met in this city, and when the proposition was brought forward the party declined to adopt it as a plank in its platform, the representatives of the party from the various provinces evidently being of the opinion that it was not desirable from a party stand-point, although they were doubtless animated by impulses as patriotic as we were ourselves in coming to that conclusion. The resolution which was adopted at that convention is familiar to all hon. gentlemen, it was decided that, should the party be entrusted with power, it would be their duty to take a vote of the electors to ascertain their opinion upon the subject of prohibition, and that plebiscite was taken. The words in which the Liberal convention expressed their views upon the subject I will quote :

That whereas public attention is at present much directed to the consideration of the admittedly great evils of intemperance, it is desirable that the mind of the people should be clearly ascertained on the question of prohibition by means of a Dominion plebiscite.

There was present the well-known secretary of the Dominion Alliance, who was also present and assisted in arranging some of the terms of this resolution. He stated that it was the duty of Parliament to find out the state of public opinion, and then to enact such a law as the sentiment of the country demanded, which he believed was in favour of a total prohibition of the liquor traffic. Although the secretary of the Dominion Alliance, as well as the Alliance itself, did not believe that the taking of a vote was in itself a step towards prohibition, yet they looked upon it as the next best thing to having it taken up by a party and made a political question. Although they deemed the plebiscite a matter of vital importance, they accepted it only as a step along the pathway of the prohibition movement. During the discussion upon this question I would like to call attention to an observation made by Mr. McKeown, of St. John, N.B., a member of the legislature of that province. In supporting the resolution, Mr. McKeown said :

Some provinces might be overwhelmingly for prohibition, others might be the other way. Then, sir, I consider it would not be a problem impossible of solution or impossible to the statesmanship of this country to make such an amendment to the constitution as would enable us to have prohibition provinces in this Dominion, in the same way as they have prohibition states in the American Union.

Here we see sketched out in a rough way a possible means of solution of this question in case the result of the plebiscite in some of the provinces should be hostile to prohibition, and in other provinces favourable to it. The result of the vote showed that such was the case.

Now, to what extent the adoption of this resolution by the Liberal convention committed the Liberal party to the enactment of prohibition, has been very widely discussed. I do not think myself that it did commit the Liberal party to that extent ; I do not think it can be inferred from the terms of the resolution nor from the tone of the speeches in the convention that the Liberal party, should it obtain power, were bound, morally or logically, to introduce prohibitory legislation. I think that a candid consideration, both of the terms of the resolution and of the statements which were made subsequently in connection with it, would lead any one to conclude that the Liberal party were not bound as a party to introduce a prohibitory liquor law, unless the result of the plebiscite showed such a preponderating prohibitory sentiment as to make it incumbent upon the Government to act in that direction. In other words, I think the Government of the day were left entirely free to act according to circumstances.

Mr. WILSON. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question? I think the speech made by the Hon. Mr. Anglin clearly indicated the view he took in case it was carried; he said, no matter whether it was carried by a large or a small majority the Liberal party would be bound to introduce and carry through Parliament a prohibitory law. And I think that the speeches made by Mr. Fisher indicated that if his party was successful at the polls, and if the plebiscite was successful, they would introduce and carry through Parliament a prohibitory law.

Mr. FLINT. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wilson), of course, at a later stage of the debate will be perfectly free to elaborate that point as fully as he desires.

Mr. WILSON. I ask your opinion as to it.

Mr. FLINT. I do not desire to enter into an elaborate analysis at this time of those speeches or statements.

Mr. WALLACE. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Flint) state his view upon that very important point?

Mr. FLINT. I will state the views I hold upon the subject, and as to the extent to which the Government, or the party, were bound by these declarations. It was left open, as a matter of honour, and morals, and logic, to those who supported the view in favour of the plebiscite in that convention, and to all those who referred to the importance and relation of public opinion to this question, to weigh and measure such a public opinion as should be revealed by the result of the plebiscite. I could easily suppose many circumstances under which, while there might be a clear majority of votes for prohibition, it would still not be sufficient. Suppose the vote were exceedingly small, far smaller than it was, and suppose that of that small vote a very small majority was in favour of prohibition, I do not think that any hon. gentleman in this House would contend that the Government, or the party, would be bound to introduce a prohibitory liquor law. The whole area of the discussion was left an open subject; it was left open to weigh the vote and to consider the importance of the vote as a revelation of public opinion, to be weighed and considered after the vote was taken. It leaves room for wide differences of opinion amongst those who discuss the bearing of the vote after it is taken, and while one person may think that the vote was ample in numbers, and ample as regards the majority, to bind the Government to bring in a prohibitory law, there are many throughout the country, as strong prohibitionists as any hon. gentleman present, who would take another view and hold that the vote was not sufficiently large, or sufficiently representative of public opinion, or that it represents a sufficient force of public opinion, to make a prohibitory law successful. My own opinion is largely represented by this resolution, that, had all the provinces given a vote as large in favour of prohibition, as some of the provinces gave, it would be an ample warrant for the Government of the day to take up this question and stand or fall by it. But I am not prepared to say that a vote, such as was given in some of the provinces, the province of Quebec particularly, does represent such a large majority of the whole electors of the country as would warrant a political party to bringing in a prohibitory law, although I am free to say that I would cheerfully support any Administration that, utterly irrespective of the vote upon this question, should bring in a prohibitory liquor law for the whole Dominion. I am of the opinion that when you make the vote of the country the basis or ground for introducing prohibitory liquor legislation, you distinctly weaken the case for prohibition; that the strength of the case for prohibition rests, not upon the plebiscite, as recorded in September, 1898, but it rests upon considerations which are entirely apart from that vote, and that, to the extent to which the vote was against prohibition, and to which the important province of Quebec pronounced against it, it distinctly weakened the argument for prohibition from the popular stand-point. I have always endeavoured during the time I have had the honour to be a member of this House, to avoid making this question one of a partisan character, knowing the enormous difficulties in the way of its accomplishment. I was in hopes, and have always been in hopes, that if prohibition was ever enacted, it would come as the result of the combination of both political parties, and as the result of an agreement. If any one is sufficiently interested to go over the arguments which have taken place on this question in Parliament, he will find that the weight and strength of public opinion have always been dwelt upon by every speaker who favoured prohibition, not public opinion as represented in one province, not public opinion as represented here or there, but, as regards national prohibition, public opinion as representing the whole country. It is true that, as a matter of mere technical correctness, there was a small majority for prohibition of 10,060 or 12,000.

Mr. WILSON. A good majority: over 14,000.

Mr. FLINT. At any rate, there was a small majority of the whole people of the Dominion, but that is scarcely the correct way to consider it. Majorities must be considered as they actually occurred, large in some provinces, small in some provinces, hostile in another province. Upon this question of public opinion, and on the importance of it in the consideration of this question, I will quote some observations made by my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) last year. The hon. gentleman discussed some of the difficulties and some of the advantages of prohibition. He said :

There is the difficulty of the enforcement of a prohibitory law which has to be looked at, and the Government and the Finance Minister have to face the question—on the one hand as to loss of revenue, and on the other hand an inefficient enforcement of prohibition in this country. * * * My belief is that if the people of the country, by an overwhelming conviction, want prohibition enforced, they can have it enforced as well as other laws are enforced in this country—that if they do not honestly and earnestly, and by a very strong majority, want it, they cannot have it as well enforced as old settled laws are enforced.

We go back somewhat further, to twenty years ago, and see what was the opinion of some of the leading men of that day who were dealing with this question. It was discussed upon the Scott Act, an Act based entirely, in its being brought into force, upon public opinion in various localities in which it was sought to bring it into force. Mr. Mackenzie said :

In a measure of such vast importance, effecting as it did a sort of social revolution, it was essential that the voice of the people should be strongly and well pronounced in its favour.

Also :

He quite admitted that there was almost an absolute necessity that there should be a strong, if not almost universal, opinion in favour of the enactment of such a measure as this. * * * And, for this reason, he would never favour the enactment of a prohibitory law which was not subjected to the test of the vote of the people, until he was satisfied that there was an overwhelming majority of the whole country in favour of the measure. On the other hand, he had no doubt whatever but that an entire prohibitory law might, could and should be passed when there was a perfectly overwhelming public opinion in its favour.

No man who ever held a prominent position in this House possessed more common sense in dealing with practical legislation than the late Hon. Alex. Mackenzie, and he was then advocating the Scott Act which at that time, in many portions of the country was considered a very great advance over any temperance legislation they had had previously. His opinion as here expressed coincides entirely with the opinion of the ex-Finance Minister (Mr. Foster), who had given a great deal of attention to that subject and who had to a certain degree identified himself with it. In 1895 I had the honour to say in the House when discussing prohibition :

Mr. FLINT.

As to the feeling of the people of the province of Quebec, we, of course, are not fully informed ; but all the opportunities that I have had of looking into the state of public opinion in the province lead me to believe that there is a strong feeling there favourable to as complete a suppression of the liquor traffic as legislation can possibly effect. At any rate, some of the profoundest minds of the Church to which the majority of the people of Quebec belong have expressed themselves strongly in favour of the suppression of the liquor traffic by every moral and legal means within the power of the state to employ.

This was a personal opinion drawn from various sources previous to the taking of a plebiscite, and among the remarks which quite confirmed me in that opinion were some made by my esteemed friend Dr. Christie, a member of this House. He said in one of the debates :

I may be told that my own province (Quebec) has not yet spoken. That is true ; but I think I can fairly say a strong temperance sentiment prevails there, and I hope and trust that, although I do not venture to predict, that when the day of trial comes, the grand old province of Quebec will be found in line with the other provinces in favour of this great moral reform.

This shows that a representative from the province of Quebec, from his observations and study of the conditions in that province, had formed the same opinion as I had, namely, that it was highly probable that the province of Quebec was at any rate fairly in line with the temperance sentiment in the other provinces, as expressed by public opinion and by local plebiscites. The hon. gentleman from East Northumberland (Mr. Guillet), who was put forward by the Conservative Government to move that amendment, said :

I believe it would be wise, and in the interests of prohibition, for Parliament to confer upon the local legislatures the power to deal with the question ; or, if that is not possible, to obtain from the Imperial Parliament such an amendment to the British North America Act as should give Parliament that power. I think that would be a practical way of dealing with a question of this kind. Then, if the legislatures of those provinces, the people of which are prepared for the adoption of a prohibitory law, containing a majority of men who are in favour of prohibition, that same majority will see that the law is enforced. As soon as the state of public sentiment in any province demands a prohibitory law, the same public sentiment will demand its enforcement, and the question will be entirely in the hands of the people of such province when they have arrived at that conviction.

The general argument of my hon. friend (Mr. Guillet) was largely along the line of this resolution : that while he believed public sentiment was essential to the enforcement of a prohibitory law, he had his doubts as to the extension of that sentiment, and his mind grasped the idea that it might be possible to appeal to a strong public sentiment where it existed in the provinces, and to look towards a prohibitory liquor law from that direction. The hon. gentleman from West Durham (Mr. Craig) said :

I claim that a prohibitory law must have a great majority behind it, not only of those who vote, but of all who have votes in this country. * * * The law must have a great majority behind it to make it effective.

Again, he said :

Unless a majority of the people expressly declare they want prohibition, it is no use for any Government to pass a prohibitory measure, and if a majority of the people do not vote in favour of it when they have the opportunity to do so, then, I say, that is a proof they do not want it.

If time permitted I could quote from the speeches of various public men for the last 25 years to the same effect, but time will not allow of that. The present Prime Minister of Canada, replying to the leader of the Opposition in 1898 on this very question, said :

If the electors pronounce against it, the matter ends at once.

I may state that I am not quite in accord with my hon. leader on that point. I do not think that if the late plebiscite had gone against prohibition it would have ended the matter, because I have had sufficient acquaintance with the feelings and the sentiments and the motives which actuate prohibitionists to know that that would not have ended the agitation, but that they would have taken that as a new starting point and gone on still further agitating the question in the expectation that on some future occasion they would secure a large majority, and would make their feelings felt upon public opinion in various ways. However, that is a mere side issue and the Prime Minister possibly meant that it would end agitation for the present. He added :

But if there be a majority for prohibition, whether large or small, then it will be the duty of the Government to consider whether the time has arrived for the Dominion Parliament to place such an enactment upon the statute-book. I have only this to say to my hon. friend, that after the will of the people has been ascertained, if the Government does not then perform its duty, it will be open to my hon. friend to call the Government to a very severe account for failure to perform that duty.

There, the right hon. gentleman was in strict accordance with his great predecessor, the Hon. Alex. Mackenzie, and in strict accordance with all who have dealt with the value of public opinion in connection with the question of temperance reform. The whole question stands precisely there. It stands upon the argument based upon the results of the plebiscite, as to whether the plebiscite reveals that overwhelming and convincing public opinion throughout the whole country that would make it obligatory upon the Administration and upon Parliament to enact a prohibitory liquor law. The question still remains there and is susceptible of debate and difference of opinion upon that point. Speaking on this question, I had occasion to say in 1898 :

The question is two-fold. In the first place, is the country ready and prepared in a proper way to support any Administration and any Parliament which would bring forward and pass a prohibitory law? The second question, and one of immense importance, is this: Is this Parliament ready to enact a prohibitory liquor law? * * * We may have evidence to a greater or lesser extent as to public opinion throughout the various provinces upon prohibition in an abstract way, but that does not give us evidence as to the position which Parliament, as a Parliament, will take in connection with it.

The ground I have always assumed has been that the proper method by which prohibition should ultimately crystallize into the form of law would be by public education, by the manifestation of the public will at parliamentary elections, and that in each electoral district throughout the Dominion, from time to time, there should be such an overwhelming manifestation of public opinion in favour of prohibition that members of Parliament would be elected, pledged and determined to support and enact such a law.

In other words, in my own way of working out the question, the public opinion which I have always had in my mind as the public opinion which would carry through this Parliament a prohibitory liquor law was the public opinion manifested at the polls in the election of members to this House. From that stand-point I never had that faith in the plebiscite as a motive force for prohibition that some people appear to have had; because there always was this weakness, which was seen beforehand, and which is seen now more clearly, that while the plebiscite may possibly be largely a representation of the opinions of one set of men who took the trouble to vote on that occasion, yet the election of a member to this House is the public opinion of men who would be represented and who would enforce the enactment of the law. I do not go into statistics, because I have not made a study of the question from that stand-point. But there are, no doubt, members in this House today a majority of whose electors voted in the recent plebiscite in favour of prohibition, and yet who would not support a prohibitory liquor law: and they might go to their constituents and be elected in opposition to a prohibitory liquor law, although the academic abstract vote of the constituency on the day of the plebiscite may have been in favour of such a law; because the circumstances are different and the combination is different. And so I have always contended that the way in which this public sentiment, which I have always felt to exist, and which does exist in many portions of this country, was to make itself felt in Parliament, must be through the representatives who are responsible to the men who voted in favour of prohibition; and that the way of prohibition lies, not in plebiscites, which are only morally or logically binding, but in the ballot-box at the regular election of members to this House, which is strictly and legally, as well as morally, blinding on the man who runs his election as a prohibition supporter.

I will not go over the figures of the plebiscite, because they are familiar to all. There were provincial plebiscites held in 1892, 1893, 1894, and so on, in some of the provinces, notably in Ontario, Manitoba, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. In these provinces the sentiment manifested in these local plebiscites was in favour of prohibition. In the same provinces, at the Dominion plebiscite, although the numbers were not as large as we thought they ought to have been, yet of those who did take the trouble to vote, the majority was a substantial and representative one in favour of prohibition. Therefore, making all due allowances for those who refrained from voting, for fear of other consequences, those who, though in favour of prohibition, did not take the trouble to vote, because they thought the vote would not result in anything, and those who, though in favour of prohibition, did not vote because they thought that if prohibition carried the question might embarrass their political party, at the same time, in addition to the representatives who come to this House from these various provinces whose sentiments individually are in favour of prohibition, we have every reason to believe that the public sentiment in the provinces of Manitoba, Ontario, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island is in favour of a prohibitory law on the strictest lines which were laid down by the hon. gentlemen whose speeches I have quoted. That is my own conclusion, and I think an investigation of the public press, and of the opinions of distinguished men in various walks of life—clergymen, moral reformers, and men of eminence, who are studying this question—will show that, making every allowance for those who are opposed to prohibition, and for those who think public sentiment is not strong enough to enforce it, there is, in these provinces, at any rate, conclusive evidence of a strong, nay, an overwhelming sentiment, in favour of prohibition.

But when we come to other provinces, I think the conclusion is equally irresistible that some of them can scarcely be said to be favourable to prohibition along the lines suggested by this inquiry as to the significance of public sentiment. I think that public sentiment in British Columbia in favour of a prohibitory liquor law is very weak, while that of the province of Quebec is decidedly hostile to such a law. Now, making allowance for the fact that in the province of Quebec, as it is alleged, the ballots were not altogether as fairly taken as they might have been, and making all due allowance for the fact that in some communities there was absolutely no friend of prohibition present, and that there were opportunities for wrong-doing if any one saw fit to take advantage of them, I think no one can fairly and honestly contend, in the face of the information which we have at the present time from the plebiscite, in which a majority of 94,000 was given against prohibition, and in the face of the opinions of the hon. members representing that province in this House, that the province of Quebec, in the matter of assisting to support and enforce a prohibitory liquor law, is in favour of prohibition. I think every one must admit—I know I do it with regret—that the province of Quebec is opposed to prohibition, will have none of it, and that in that field there is a large opening for missionary effort from the temperance stand-point, and opportunities for converting the people to a different view on this subject from that which they generally hold.

Now, considering the fact that the vote throughout the various provinces was not as large as many prohibitionists hoped and expected that it would be, considering the fact that nearly 50 per cent of the voters manifested no opinion one way or the other, but showed an utter indifference to the question, considering the fact that the great province of Quebec is, by an enormous and overwhelming majority, opposed to prohibition, the question arises whether, from a prohibition stand-point, it is advisable or wise or practicable for Parliament to enact a prohibitory liquor law extending over the whole Dominion. If such a measure or a resolution looking to it were introduced, I would personally vote for it, on the ground that prohibition does not depend primarily upon that point at all—that in my view each member of this House is bound to represent the sentiments of his constituents upon this question, and press forward to the best of his ability the views of his constituents on that question, utterly irrespective of the views of members representing other constituencies, who are opposed to it. Upon that ground I would support a general resolution looking to prohibition, partly for the educative purpose, partly for the purpose of representing the views and wishes, not only of myself personally, but of the constituency which I have the honour to represent, leaving out those who represent entirely different views to offset that vote by their votes on the subject. But if the argument is based solely and primarily upon public sentiment, and the wishes of the public, then this Parliament, as a whole, ought to hesitate before undertaking to establish prohibition for the whole Dominion, including a province which is manifestly hostile to it. The position which many hon. members hold upon this question is very well summed up by one of the religious journals which devotes itself largely to the advocacy of prohibition, the "Christian Guardian." Some time in last May, referring to the efforts made to bring about such a legislation as might possibly meet the wishes of Parliament and be a fair compromise between the two extremes, that paper said:

Shall we say: "Prohibition or nothing," and stay there? Shall we say: "This one thing we will stand by and do nothing else?" Or—shall we adopt a "do-everything" policy? Shall we support and strengthen everything that restricts or curtails or prohibits, in part or in localities, this baneful traffic?

This latter has been our policy for years, while prohibition is our goal.

If a more stringent license system is proposed, increasing prohibited hours, we have supported the proposal. If the age limit is raised, we have approved. If licenses can be reduced, we have helped. If better methods of education are available for public schools or Sunday schools, we have tried to adopt them and rejoice. If plebiscites are ordered by Government, then we are ready to call on our people to vote. We are in this attitude now. A committee of prohibitionists at Ottawa are now considering the best method of promoting temperance reform by Dominion action. We hope to find a path of progress in their conclusion, which will fairly and strongly unite our forces for a forward march.

That represents thoroughly the views of a large number of temperance people throughout the country. While favouring national prohibition as the goal, while being willing at all times to be counted as in favour of that desired end, yet they are not willing to reject any temporary measure which may lead towards it. And so when, at the early part of the session, men who had for years been identified with the temperance movement, men representing the Dominion Alliance, met in this building, they desired to bring something forward which would give a starting-point for discussion and action. And while not one of them, as far as I am aware, was in favour of taking a backward step with regard to national prohibition, yet the majority were willing to take a forward step and see if Parliament could not be induced to pass some legislation or take some action looking to the establishment of prohibition in those portions of the Dominion where public opinion was overwhelmingly in favour of it. After discussion, this resolution was sketched out, and I trust no one will treat it as if it were an attempt at a complete exposition of the case from that stand-point. It is simply a broad sketch, which leaves untouched a mass of details that would require to be worked out with care. But the main element of it is that each province should have the privilege and the opportunity of adopting within its own bounds as complete a prohibition of the liquor traffic as would be constitutionally found possible, adopting the principle of the Canada Temperance Act, which has been upheld as constitutional, and extending the scope of its operation to the whole province instead of to an electoral or other limited district. It is suggested by this resolution that this Parliament enact a general law providing for the prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors in every province and territory of Canada, and providing further:

2. That the Act prohibiting such sale should not come into force in any province or territory unless and until a majority of the qualified electors therein, voting at an election, shall have voted in favour of such Act.

If this is constitutionally possible, I ask hon. gentlemen if it is not a great advance over the present condition of things. I ask if it does not obviate one difficulty, and that is the overwhelming sentiment of one large province against national prohibition. If it is possible, it would not be unreasonable that Parliament should have its attention called to this possibility and be asked to take action. Of course, a constitutional suggestion against it will immediately arise. It will be said that we cannot constitutionally adopt any law of this kind on account of the provisions in the constitution which prevent our enacting a law that will interfere with the importation of articles of manufacture by one province to another. I do not desire to occupy the time of the House at any great length in elaborating an argument on this point. Section 121 of the British North America Act provides:

All articles of the growth, produce or manufacture of any one of the provinces shall, from and after the union, be admitted free into each of the other provinces.

It has been intimated that that forms a barrier against the enactment of a law based on this resolution. I do not think that this section, although prima facie it applies to this case, does so constitutionally. The general idea of this clause was to deal with the subject of taxation. It is under the heading of taxation. It is not under the head of parliamentary powers, and the primary object of passing this clause, which did not exist in the original draft Act at all, was that none of the provinces should levy any tariff of any kind upon the articles of manufacture of any other province. I presume, in the discussion of that Act, it was put in by way of caution and was not intended to limit the power of this Parliament to prohibit the introduction into any province of any articles which might be deemed to be injurious to its welfare and the good order of the country. There has been no litigation in connection with this clause, and consequently, we are free to consider it without reference to any reported decisions. While I cannot conceive it possible any province would be allowed to levy an import on the manufactures of any other province in order to raise a revenue, or for any other purpose, yet we must not take a view that will limit the power of Parliament to an extent I cannot conceive it possible was ever intended. It is explained that this section 121 deals with provincial rights. It is a restriction upon their power of indirect taxation, and has no reference to the power of the Dominion, in legislating for the order and good government of the country, to prohibit the importation of an article into a province. That this is so is quite apparent from the tendency of legislation in another direction. A law is already enacted, prohibiting the importation of intoxicating liquors into any province for sale to Indians, and this clause has never been cited as applying to a case of that kind. It might be possible that, under some circumstances, this Parliament would think it essential and desirable for the order and good government of the country, to prohibit the importation into any province of an article which was regarded by the people of that province as noxious. In other words, if Parliament saw fit, for the order and good government of the Dominion of Canada, to provide that the sale of intoxicating liquor should be prohibited in any province of the Dominion, and under certain circumstances manifested its desire so to do, that would be constitutional. But even if this obstacle were found to be real, if the constitutional lawyers or the courts of the land should hold that it was beyond the power of Parliament to pass such a law, it would only compel Parliament to take one further step, if it adopted this line of reasoning and this resolution, and have the Act amended in such a way that the law would be made constitutional; in fact, it is a familiar idea to all that have been concerned in temperance discussion or temperance legislation, that, where the obstacles were so great in some provinces to the enactment of prohibition, it was not right that these obstacles should prevent the largest partial measure of prohibition being placed in force in other provinces; and many resolutions, passed by temperance bodies and church organizations, have intimated that they did not think it right that a hostile opinion in one province should prevent all progress and advance and all remedy against these evils in every other province. Acting upon that idea, the resolution has been brought forward.

But some people say: Will not the expense be very great, and will not the way be fraught with difficulties? There can be no doubt of that. Any step forward with a question like this is fraught with difficulty, and we find that those who are objecting to prohibition are not backward in pointing out those difficulties. There is, first, the great revenue difficulty, which everybody admits to be a very essential one. It is not wise under any circumstances to ignore it, to pooh-pooh it, or belittle it. It is a difficulty that has to be met. One of the most persistent arguments of those hostile to prohibition, or timid as to its effect, is, that if prohibition were in force in the whole Dominion, there would be a loss of a large amount of revenue which accrues to the country year after year, and which seems to be necessary to assist in meeting our annual charges. But if prohibition comes province by province, as public opinion comes up to the point, the difficulty will certainly be minimized to a very great degree. Suppose that the province of Nova Scotia should accept this prohibition, and suppose that, after an enthusiastic campaign, the vote should result, as I presume it would result, in favour of the adoption of this measure in that fine province by the sea, the loss to the revenue would not be so alarming as if prohibition were adopted throughout the whole Dominion. Taking prohibition step by step in this way, meeting the views of the people province by province, as they declare themselves for it, the great financial difficulty that appears so frightful to so many well-meaning, but timid, persons, would disappear. The public revenue from the sale of intoxicating liquors in Nova Scotia, I suppose is not large—probably $300,000 or $400,000, an amount which would not be missed. If prohibition were granted province by province, as they were found willing to accept it, the treasury could easily make arrangements to meet any difficulties arising from loss of revenue. Another advantage which this method of proceeding would afford would be, that we should have a constant process of education in consequence of the agitation going on in the several provinces to carry the law into effect. If the law were carried into effect in one province for a few years before it was carried into effect in another, there would be opportunities of observing the workings of the law, and the difficulties of enforcement, and how they were overcome, and to observe in smaller area the benefits, as well as the disadvantages. If disadvantages accrued in one province, remedies could be applied in the law in order to make it more acceptable and more workable, not only in that province, but in other provinces that might adopt it.

I shall not read the whole resolution, because it has been a long time before hon. members, and it is not necessary to go into detail. If the principle of the resolution is accepted by Parliament, it will be the duty of those who have the time and the means at their disposal to work it out in the form of legislation, something along the lines of the Canada Temperance Act. The idea is not a new one. When the Canada Temperance Act was before Parliament, an amendment looking to provincial prohibition was moved, but was laid aside. In almost every province of the Dominion devoted temperance men, men whose sympathies with this movement could not be questioned, have suggested: Here is a way out of the difficulty. And I think, although I am in favour of the utmost measure of national prohibition, here is a way by which a large number of the difficulties can be removed. In this way those provinces where public sentiment is ripe for the measure, can have a prohibition law, and in those that are weak or hostile, time will be given those who favour prohibition, to work up public sentiment in favour of the reform.

Now, Mr. Speaker, perhaps I have spoken too long on this subject, but I could not present my argument in any shorter space. With this statement I leave the subject in the hands of the House, feeling hopeful that it will be dealt with in a broad, sympathetic and patriotic spirit. I trust that in the discussion which may follow this resolution there may not be manifested that bitterness which is sometimes manifested in discussing this question, and which does a great deal of harm. I am willing to give credit for sincerity to gentlemen who oppose me politically and who oppose the views which I hold on this question. I am willing to give them credit for the same measure of public spirit, of patriotism and of an earnest desire to benefit the people that those with whom I labour possess. I trust that this great movement may be kept as far as possible free from party spirit, for nothing else can so tend to retard the progress of the prohibition movement as the introduction of the party spirit into discussions relating to it. I trust that every hon. gentleman will look solely to the promotion of such measures as will serve to diminish the evils of intemperance by restricting the traffic in intoxicating liquors, and if they cannot see their way to support national prohibition, that they will at any rate assist in working out what appears to me to be a practicable plan of allowing the separate provinces to adopt provincial prohibition where the people of those provinces desire it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). I have listened to the long and laboured effort of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Flint) who has taken his seat with a good deal of sympathy. He had a very difficult task to perform, and one which I think he has found rather beyond his powers. I could imagine, Sir, lawyer as he is, and special pleader as he is, the case he would have made out if he had been sitting on this side of the House, if he had not been restrained by the position in which he found himself, and in which the Government he supports has found themselves on this very important question. No person can overrate the evil of intemperance, no intelligent citizen can fail to recognize the absolute necessity of doing all that lies in his power to uproot, or at all events, to lessen, the terrible evil of intemperance. The effect of intemperance upon the state, upon the individual, upon every person who suffers from its baneful influence, is such that no person who desires to promote the public welfare can but feel that it is his duty to support every possible means of promoting temperance. An immense change has taken place in the civilized world on the question of temperance. The drinking habits of the people, within the short period of my own life, have undergone a radical change; habits that were formerly fashionable, habits that were looked upon with tolerance, have entirely changed within the last 50 years, and those habits cannot now be indulged in with impunity without a complete loss of character and position. The great agency which has brought that about is two-fold, temperance organizations and the church. The enormous influence of the church, Catholic and Protestant of all denominations, throughout the world, has been most potent in this direction. If you take the position of the clergy of all denominations of the present day, and compare it with the position of the clergy 50, 60 or 70 years ago, you are struck with the overwhelming change that has taken place. It is now recognized as the duty of Christian people, by example and by precept, to do all that they possibly can to promote the cause of temperance, to dissuade men from intemperance, and to guard the community from its baneful effects.

But, Sir, I find my hon. friend from Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) in his long speech here to-day, avoiding what is really the question that is agitating the minds of the people on this important subject, giving it the go-by, to indulge in a lot of platitudes with which we are all familiar, and which do not amount to much; we find that hon. gentleman, professing to be the leader in the temperance cause in this House and out of it, resuming his seat without making an apology to this House and to the temperance people of this country for the manner in which they have been grossly deceived and misled by himself and by members of this Government who took an important position in the great political conference which was held in this city in 1893, and who from that time to this have been deluding the people of this country to believe that all that was necessary was to bring the Liberal party into power and then this giant evil of intemperance would be struck down. The people were told that as soon as their wishes were ascertained by means of a plebiscite, the Liberal party would see that their wishes were carried out entirely, and this country would be relieved from the evils of intemperance. That is the doctrine the hon. gentleman has been preaching, that is the doctrine the Liberal party have permanently claimed they were going to carry out. We were told of the wonders they would accomplish provided the electorate of this country could be induced by a plebiscite to give their verdict in favour of a prohibitory law. Well, Sir, the hon. gentleman has resumed his seat without attempting to apologize to this House for the declarations that have been made upon this question by the right hon. Premier, and made by the great apostle of temperance in the Government, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), that they would carry out the will of the people as a result of a plebiscite which cost this country nearly a quarter of a million dollars of the people's money, at the same time that they had secretly agreed among themselves that no result should follow this vote unless an absolutely impossible contingency occurred, namely, that there must be a vote in favour of more than one-half of the entire electorate of this country.

I tell the hon. gentleman here to-day that he has lost his position as the great apostle of temperance. After wasting a couple of hours going around the subject, and venturing to give no apology to this House for the pledge he gave to the people, as a member of the convention, giving no apology for the pledge his party gave this country, a pledge that has been dishonoured, that has been forfeited and gone back upon by these hon. gentlemen, the temperance people will attach little importance to anything he proposes, and will have little faith in him, when he makes a proposition for the purpose of shielding and protecting the Government, and when he does so at the sacrifice of the principles of temperance which he has advocated in past years. That is the position which the hon. gentleman is brought face to face with, and which he has entirely failed to deal with to-day. He talks of the ideal condition of Parliament that Sir George Etienne Cartier predicted, when there would be nothing to do but Estimates to pass, and he was amused that that old, distinguished French Canadian statesman should have committed himself to such an absurdity. It is not so absurd, because the time has come when Sir George Cartier's prediction is fulfilled to the letter. What is the hon. gentleman here for? He knows that everything that can be done for the advancement of the prosperity and greatness of Canada had been done before this Government came into power.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hon. gentlemen opposite treat that statement with derision. Let me ask them to read the Governor General's Speech, delivered at the opening of this Parliament, in which they will find only a proposition to deform the Senate—reform, they call it—and a proposition to gerrymander the constituencies, for the purpose of enabling them to avoid facing the electorate of this country. Why did they require a gerrymander; what was the most important reason? They required it because they knew that, upon this great question of temperance, they had forfeited the respect and confidence of every man in this country who had any regard for temperance pledges and principles. What is this Parliament brought together for? The time has come that Sir George Etienne Cartier indicated: we have nothing but a gerrymander Bill and a proposal to destroy the usefulness of the Senate. We have nothing to do but vote $53,000,000 of public money for these hon. gentlemen to enable them to strengthen their hands in running elections. This is the position. The time has arrived that Sir George Cartier predicted, the ideal condition of things, when the only thing we have before us is to vote $53,000,000 of public money to be used in such a manner as would do most good in helping hon. gentlemen to retain their positions in the House of Commons.

Now, I may say that the hon. gentleman has attached great weight to the fact that a prohibitory liquor law would involve a loss of revenue to the amount of $8,000,000 to the country, and he seems to think that this is a frightful thing, and that it is a tremendous difficulty. I say that it is no difficulty at all. The man has no sound temperance principles in his heart and mind, who regards the paltry consideration of $8,000,000 of revenue as a balance for a single hour against redeeming this country from the evils of intemperance, promoting its progress, promoting its industries, raising and elevating the country, and increasing its wealth and prosperity. The consumption of intoxicating liquors in this country, notwithstanding the improved condition of affairs that exists to-day, is the cause of so much pauperism as to render a loss of revenue of $8,000,000 absolutely trivial. It can be met by the increased industry, the employment and ability that a sober and industrious man would have, and the ability he would have to discharge his duties to his wife, his family and his country. In my judgment, the loss of revenue is an utterly insignificant matter, and an amount that you could take out of these Estimates now before the House, without doing any harm to the country. The hon. gentleman could carry out the principles of temperance. I am not now expressing my opinion as to the duty of this Government upon the abstract question, but I say that no Government which ever existed in Canada, or in any other country, deserved the reprobation of every temperance man in the country to a greater extent than the Government which has deceived and misled the temperance public of Canada into believing that they were serious in their desire to promote the cause of temperance. Why is it that we could not wring out of the right hon. Prime Minister the declaration that he was bound to give to this House? Why is it that when they asked this Parliament to consent to spend $250,000 of the public money in taking a plebiscite on the question of temperance, nobody in this House was able to wring out of the right hon. Prime Minister, or out of the Government, that dishonourable secret, that compact that they had entered into behind Parliament, behind the public, that there should be no result from this plebiscite, unless something that was absolutely impossible, occurred. The hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) has admitted, on the floor of this House, that he was a party to that dis-honourable transaction, that deception, practised, not only upon the temperance public, but practised upon the intelligent people of the Dominion. In my judgment, no man, no temperance man, supporting the Government, is in a position to look a temperance man in the face and ask his support for any man supporting the Government, or for a Government that, on such a great and important question, will go back upon everything like good faith. Every temperance man in this country was led, by the speech of the hon. Minister of Agriculture, the apostle of temperance in this Government, to believe that his declarations meant something, that his pledge to the people meant that if the temperance public would roll up a majority in favour of prohibition, they should have prohibition. That was his declaration. The right hon. leader of the Government was told across the floor of this House that it was his absolute duty to be frank and open with the country, and on the eve of that great struggle for temperance to let the public know where they stood. He was only asked to state: How large a majority will you require of the people; if you are not satisfied with an absolute majority, how large must it be in order to assure the people that they will have a prohibitory law? What was the language of the hon. gentleman? It was the language of an opportunist, and not of a statesman, the language of a man who is ready to adopt any policy or principle when it suits him, and to discard any policy or principle at a moment's notice when it is convenient to do so. The right hon. gentleman on that occasion displayed a want of policy and a want of principle, and he showed himself to be a mere opportunist. He said: I will give information as to what we will do, when we have the result before us. That is all that, on the floor of this House, the right hon. gentleman could be induced to say, although every temperance man in the country who was obliged to put his hand in his pocket and spend his time and his money in agitating the subject, in endeavouring to roll up a majority in favour of temperance, had an absolute right to know whether he was wasting his time and money in the advocacy of this cause or not.

Now, we are told by the right hon. the Premier and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) backs him up in his statement, that they had secretly an implied agreement that no legislation would follow unless there was an absolute majority of the entire electorate of Canada voting in favour of prohibition. Sir, if these hon. gentlemen had ventured to state that to this House, as they should have, this Parliament would never have consented to a quarter of a million of dollars of public money being wasted. Not a man on this side of the House would have voted, and I do not believe a single independent man on the other side would have dared to vote a quarter of a million of public money to be absolutely wasted. I can tell the right hon. gentleman that he wants a Redistribution Bill very badly before he goes to the country, and one thing he should endeavour to place in that Bill is, that no temperance man should be allowed to vote. The prohibitionists and temperance people of this country will not support a Government who have deceived them, a Government which has led them into a great struggle when they were completely and utterly defeated on account of this concealed policy of the Government, before a single vote in favour of the plebiscite had been cast.

Mr. McMULLEN. That is what you always did; you lived by deceit.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) has anything to say let him speak up so that we may hear him.

Mr. McMULLEN. I want to say that you have lived politically by deceit.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask you if it is in order for the hon. gentleman to interrupt me, and make that statement.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. In the first place the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) should have addressed the Chair, and in the second place it is absolutely out of order to impute any motive to anybody, or to say anything disrespectful or impolite.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Let me call to the attention of the leader of the Opposition that he charged upon the Government just exactly the same as has been charged upon him. I do not say that either is in order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. You are out of order.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) has not withdrawn his insulting language, and I ask you, Mr. Speaker, if he will be obliged to do so?

Mr. McMULLEN. I apologize, Mr. Speaker, for not having addressed you directly, but I do not consider that what I charged is a violation of any rule of the House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order. Withdraw.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The language used by the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) is not language that should be used in Parliament, and it is just as well that he should withdraw it.

Mr. McMULLEN. Under your ruling, Mr. Speaker, I consent to withdraw it, because it is a violation of the rules of the House.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Now, Mr. Speaker, having disposed of this interruption, which I think may fairly be called an impertinent interruption.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Have I not a right to speak on the question of order? If the question is raised with respect to the word "impertinent," any dictionary will show hon. gentlemen opposite what they do not seem to know, that the word "impertinent" applied to debate means not pertinent.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. In that sense there is no word in the English language that could more correctly describe the interruption of the hon. gentleman. It certainly was "impertinent" in the sense of not being pertinent.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If the word "impertinent" was used as meaning not pertinent—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Quite so, that is exactly how I used it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I find in Blackmore's decisions that the word "impertinent" has been ruled out of order on several occasions in the English Parliament.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. In another sense.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. In the sense which I suppose the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) did not mean to use it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. You are quite right, Mr. Speaker, in interpreting the term "impertinent" as meaning not pertinent to the debate, and when the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) made an interruption not pertinent to the debate he made an impertinent interruption.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am quite satisfied with the explanation which the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) has given, but while he is on his feet he should apologize for having imputed motives to the Government.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have imputed no motives to the Government. What I have imputed was that the temperance people have been grossly deceived by the Government with regard to the plebiscite, and if my hon. friend wants evidence I will give him the highest authority. I have statements here; not of blatant temperance orators, who want to get seats in Parliament by riding the temperance horse.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Ha, ha, George E.

Mr. BERGERON. Oh, keep quiet.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not speak of such. I speak of that great power that above and beyond all has led to the temperance reformation that exists to-day; I speak of the church, which has advanced and promoted temperance views within the last fifty or sixty years. Any man whose eyes are opened knows that at this moment the church in Canada is emphatic in its declaration that they have been completely deceived and misled by the Government in regard to this question. My desire is but to occupy a very few moments of the attention of this House, for in the presence of my distinguished friend (Mr. Foster), who is the great representative of temperance on this side of the House I feel it would be improper for me to occupy the time discussing a question which he has made so thoroughly his own. I have referred to the church, and on a recent occasion the Methodist Conference of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, assembled at Mount Allison Theological Hall in the county of Westmoreland, adopted a resolution which I shall read. I will quote that resolution as an indication of what is thought by the church generally—the Church of England, the Presbyterian, the Baptist, the Methodist, the Roman Catholic—all over this country. This resolution will show that the temperance people of this country feel that they have been grossly deceived by this Government, which refused them information as to this implied agreement, information which they were entitled to receive before a quarter of a million of the public money was wasted. This is the resolution I refer to:

Resolved, That this conference views with profound regret and dissatisfaction the action of the Dominion Government in relation to the recent plebiscite on the subject of prohibition of the liquor traffic;

First, for the refusal to give definite information beforehand to the Houses of Parliament, though repeatedly asked for it, as to the intention of the Government on the supposition of a majority being found to favour such prohibition; and further, in refusing to indicate what majority would be requisite to warrant the introduction of a measure for prohibition;

Second, in determining that the negative vote in one province should count for more than the affirmative given in each of the others, and of the majority of the whole, in a matter of such importance to the well-being of the people, and introduced by the Government itself as a test of the wishes of the people;

Third, that the Premier himself has attempted to vindicate the inaction of the Government on the ground that it was always understood that such a majority as that given would not suffice for the introduction of such a measure, while he had steadily refused to give this intimation at the time when it was most eagerly sought, and would have been of the highest service.

This resolution was carried by a vote of 66 for to 9 against.

That resolution was passed at a convention of the Methodist Church of the whole province of New Brunswick, and the whole province of Prince Edward Island, and was carried by a vote of 66 to 9. I give that to my hon. friends opposite to settle the question as to whether I am alone in the opinion I hold that this Parliament and the people of the country, especially the temperance people, were grossly deceived and misled in regard to this important measure.

Now, with all the efforts of the hon. gentleman to extenuate the action of the Government and to protect it in going back upon that which every temperance man in this country had a right to believe was the position they had taken, the hon. gentleman has declared that it would not be practicable to carry out a prohibitory liquor law in Canada, with a large majority of the great province of Quebec hostile to it. I understood the hon. gentleman frankly to admit that if the other provinces wished a prohibitory liquor law it would not be practicable to carry it out in the whole country in the face of a large province taking the position which the province of Quebec has taken. I am not going to discuss the question whether my hon. friend is right or wrong in that; but I say that exactly the same argument applies against the resolution which he has brought before this House—why? Because he says that this resolution provides that the various provinces, quite irrespective of the province of Quebec, may decide for itself what shall be done within the province. But, I ask him, has not a county in the province of Nova Scotia the same individual right that the province has? Suppose that when a vote is taken in the province in favour of a prohibitory law, one county gives a large majority against it. Are you going to allow the other counties in the province to coerce that county? If so, why not accept the verdict of the Dominion, taken as a whole, for a prohibitory liquor law? The hon. gentleman's resolution carries its own condemnation on its face. The resolution is, no doubt, brought forward by the hon. gentleman with the belief that it will promote the cause of temperance; but whether the hon. gentleman is aware of it or not, I believe it is inspired to protect the Government against the overwhelming sentiment of the temperance people of this country, as to the unfairness with which they have been treated by this Government in taking a plebiscite and then refusing to act on the voice of the majority—a majority larger than that by virtue of which they sit on these Treasury benches. Before this Government will recognize the vote that has been given, they require that the temperance people shall roll up a larger proportionate majority of the electorate than that which they obtained in the elections which placed them in power. Surely the decision of the electors that is sufficient to place these gentlemen on the Treasury benches and to maintain them there ought to be sufficient to justify them in bringing in a prohibitory law. If it was not sufficient, they should have made that statement openly and frankly to the great temperance public of this country—ay, Sir, and to the Parliament of this country, who, I do not hesitate to re-affirm, could not have been induced to vote one dollar of public money, if they had known that it was to be thrown into the Ottawa and disappear without leaving a trace behind it. And after the struggle with which they convulsed this country in connection with this plebiscite, the temperance people are to be told, after they rolled up a majority of 14,000 in favour of a prohibitory liquor law, that it is not worth anything, that they are obliged to treat it with contempt, although it has a greater proportionate vote than that by virtue of which they sit in power—because there has not been polled an absolute majority of the entire electorate of Canada, a thing that never has been done, and probably never will be done. And yet, the hon. gentleman brings forward as a counterpoise, as an escape for this Government, an altogether futile proposition to allow the provinces to deal with this subject locally, without regard to whether all the counties in a province are in favour of it, or whether some counties are opposed to it—a consideration that is just as fatal to his proposal as the argument which he is using against the adoption of a prohibitory law for the Dominion. I do not intend to detain the House further than to say that in my judgment such a policy would be just as futile, and that if you are going to have local provincial option, it is far better to carry it a step further and allow that local option to be a local county option, by which every county in a province shall state what its views are on the subject of prohibitory legislation.

Mr. JOHN CHARLTON (North Norfolk). Mr. Speaker, as a temperance man I can join most heartily with my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition in congratulations and felicitations in regard to the rapid growth of temperance sentiment in this country. I am happy to believe that temperance has made very rapid progress, more rapid progress, perhaps, than at any previous time during the last three or four years. I am happy to believe also that friends of progress in this direction are beginning to realize very thoroughly the great importance of reaching the individual—of convincing individuals and leading them to adopt temperance principles and conform to temperance action. I by no means underrate the importance of legislative restrictions and legislative enactments in connection with the promotion of the cause of temperance. But, Sir, I believe that legislative enactments may be adopted prematurely—may be adopted without that support of the public which is necessary to render them effective; and that it is possible that a legislative enactment with reference to temperance, in place of advancing temperance interests, may prove to be most detrimental to the cause, and a calamity to those interested in the reform of the people in this regard. The hon. gentleman, I am happy to say, expresses on this occasion sentiments with reference to temperance in the abstract that are of the most commendable character, and most fully meet with my approval. But the hon. gentleman, I think, does scant justice to my hon. friend who introduced the resolution to-day, when he tells him that he has failed in his duty because he has made no apology for himself or for the Government for his own failure and the failure of the Government on this question. He tells us that the Government has misled the people, that it has been false to its promises and its duty, that it has been guilty of deception and of fraud on this question. It will be my duty to examine briefly into these exceedingly serious charges against the Government of the day.

The hon. gentleman tells us that the pledge of the great Liberal convention held at Ottawa in 1893 was forfeited. Sir, the pledge of that convention was that this question should be referred to the people at the polls, that the people should be asked to decide this question at a plebiscite, disassociated from all other questions, and not at a general election where it would be mixed up with other issues. The pledge at that convention was carried into effect. The question was referred to the people in due time, and it will remain for me to examine a little later what the character of the verdict was upon this question. We are told by the hon. gentleman that the object of my hon. friend who has introduced the resolution and members on this side generally is to shield the Government. Sir, I would scorn to shield the Government if I thought it guilty of wrong, and I am happy to believe that the Government on this question requires no shield, and that its motives and its conduct, no matter how closely scrutinized, will emerge triumphantly from that ordeal.

The hon. gentleman tells us that we are swimming along on a wave of prosperity, but that it is all due to himself and party.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I did not make any allusion to myself.

Mr. CHARLTON. I will withdraw the statement, so far as it refers to the hon. gentleman, but he attributes all the blessings now being enjoyed to the action of the Conservative party in the past.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. CHARLTON. Well, I have a notion that God himself has something to do with it.

M. FOSTER. What will the German Emperor think of that?

Mr. CHARLTON.

Mr. CHARLTON. It reminds me of the German Emperor who talks of "Me and Gott" when our friends over there talk of what they are doing. The hon. leader of the Opposition's speech presents considerable variety. He drops down upon the question of the gerrymander, and he tells us that the Government have sought to shield themselves from the wrath to come and to avert the fate that the aroused indignation of the temperance people of Canada will bring upon their heads, by an attempt at a gerrymander. Both the leader of the Opposition and myself have been members of this House a good many years. I have a very vivid recollection of the gerrymander of 1882. I have felt called upon on many occasions in this House to denounce that measure as one of the greatest political crimes, one of the most villainous pieces of political assassination ever perpetrated by a Government on this continent. I reiterate those sentiments to-day. I say that the Gerrymander Bill of 1882 was a gigantic political crime, and that by a fraudulent arrangement of the ridings of the province of Ontario, the Government of that day stole an advantage of over eighteen seats. Now, the Redistribution Bill introduced by this Government was simply a fulfilment of their pledge to the people that the wrongs and iniquities and outrages of the gerrymander of 1882 should be remedied at the earliest day. They had made in addition the promise that the iniquitous Franchise Act of 1885 would be repealed. They redeemed the latter promise, they did what they were able to do in redeeming the other. They passed a Redistribution Bill in this House that went back to the old principle of county boundaries, that was conceived solely and entirely with the motive of undoing the wrong that had been perpetrated, and that was faultless, or nearly so, in its character. It was conceived in a spirit of justice and calculated to secure justice to the electorate of the province. That Bill has been thrown out by another body. It is to the credit of the Government that it was introduced. The Government can point to its features, not only without shame, but as an evidence of their desire and intention to redeem their pledges and do justice. Then my hon. friend talks about the loss of revenue that would result from the passage of a prohibitory law, and he showed on this point a tone I was pleased to hear. He exclaimed: What does $8,000,000 loss of revenue count, on the one hand, compared with the nameless horrors, suffering, degradation and woe that are the attendants of the liquor traffic on the other hand. That is good sentiment, and I am sorry that it had not more weight with the hon. gentleman, when he and his party were in power. Then was the time for them to have manifested their disregard of the paltry, mercenary loss of a few millions, when, on the other hand, they could have conferred untold blessings on their country.

Mr. WALLACE. We had no instructions from the people then.

Mr. CHARLTON. I shall show very soon that no such instructions were ever given. Then the hon. gentleman tells us about a secret arrangement made in that dark star chamber conclave, the Privy Council of Canada, where the plan was concocted that the verdict of the people should be rendered nugatory and void upon the assumption that it required an absolute majority of the electorate of the country to demand prohibition before the Government would act upon their mandate. Well, the truth was that there was not an absolute majority of the electors voted at all. There was 6 per cent less than an absolute majority voted yea and nay, and there was less than one-quarter of the electorate for prohibition. So that whether there was a secret star chamber arrangement or not, it amounted to nothing, because an absolute majority never was even polled as a total vote.

Then the hon. gentleman tells us about the action of the churches, and I anticipated that he would have gone more fully into that question, but he read us the deliverance of one conference only. But he said that conferences of the Catholic Church, the ecclesiastical courts of the Baptist Church, the Presbyterian, the Congregational, have all upon this question condemned the Government. I would like to see him produce a deliverance of the Catholic Church, for instance, or the Presbyterian Church condemning the Government. There was a resolution passed by the Presbyterian General Assembly, which expressed the hope that, as the result of the reference of this question to the people, some legislation would be adopted that would be calculated to mitigate and lessen the evils of intemperance.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that the one you introduced?

Mr. CHARLTON. No, it was not; but the majority of those in that assembly who supported the resolution, distinctly disclaimed any intention to censure the Government for having failed to introduce a prohibitory law.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Will my hon. friend allow me to put him a question? Does he not know that from the day of Father Mathew, that great and distinguished Roman Catholic priest and apostle of temperance, down to the present hour, the Roman Catholic priests everywhere have been the great advocates of temperance, within the scope of their influence, wherever it was?

Mr. CHARLTON. Heaven forbid that I should ever accuse the Catholic priesthood of being the friends of intemperance. I think nothing of the kind. I have the highest opinion of their conduct with regard to temperance. What I said was, show us a mandate or resolution from any ecclesiastical court of Rome condemning the Government of the day for not having introduced a prohibitory law on the heel of the plebiscite. With regard to these church courts, it is to be borne in mind that where resolutions were passed condemning the Government there was by no means unanimity with regard to the matter. And another point to be borne in mind is that the constituent members of these ecclesiastical courts can hardly be held to afford a good representation of the character and sentiment of the electorate. These two features of the case have something to do with the matter; and so far as the passage of resolutions by church courts is concerned, passed in the majority of cases by narrow majorities, with dissent on the part of a large portion of the people and that dissent more largely from the lay than from the clerical element, I attach not so great importance to that feature of the case as my hon. friend does.

Now, with regard to the case of the plebiscite, it is true it cost some money. But is the Government to be blamed for having incurred that cost when it was incurred in consequence of its pledge to give the people of Canada an opportunity to pronounce their decision upon this question—to refer this case to the high court of the people? Our hon. friends on the other side blame the Government for not having carried out what they allege to be the mandate of the people and in the next breath they criticise the Government because they referred the matter to the people to get their mandate upon it. We had an occasion some years ago in this House, when our friends on the opposite side were hard pressed by the temperance question. I have never known, within the twenty-seven or twenty-eight years that I have spent in Parliament, a session when, in my opinion, a prohibitory law would pass this House. But I have known but few sessions when some agitator did not press the question. My hon. friend from York, N.B. (Mr. Foster) used to figure in that category before he had the responsibilities of office resting upon him. I know, and every one knows, that the prohibition question was an awkward one for the Government; it could not control all its own followers, and the Opposition was ready to embarrass it in any way it could. So it caused the Government a good deal of trouble. At last, the time came when the temperance question reached the point where something had to be done. What did they do? They appointed a Royal commission to ascertain by careful and detailed investigation whether the drinking of whisky was an evil; and whether, if it was, it was an evil which was of sufficient magnitude to call for legislative interposition ; and whether, if it was an evil of that magnitude, legislative interposition could be made effective in relation to the case. The commission went to work and continued its investigation just long enough to relieve our friends on the other side of the necessity of meeting that question during the life of the Parliament. And that investigation cost $125,000, the object of that expenditure being, not to ascertain what the sentiments of the people were, not to ascertain what the majority of the people wanted of the Government, but, in common parlance, to get the Government out of a hole—to bridge over the difficulty until their term expired.

It is natural to contrast the action of the present Government with that of their predecessors. I desire to say a few words about the history of this question so far as it affects myself as a supporter of this Government, and so far as it affects the Government's action in this matter. We did have a Liberal convention in this city in 1893. It was a monster gathering. There were 2,500 delegates gathered from every section of the Dominion. It represented thoroughly Liberal principles and Liberal thought. That convention met and dealt with the leading issues of the day, and formulated its platform. Among other questions with which it dealt was the question of temperance. There was an element in the committee on resolutions, of which I was a member, that demanded that the Liberal party of Canada should place a prohibition plank in its platform. As a temperance man, I said: No, we do not know what the people of Canada desire ; we cannot place a prohibition plank in our platform, being in ignorance of whether the popular demand would sanction such an Act and it would be proper to ascertain, as a preliminary to action on that matter, what the desires of the people of Canada are. And it was decided that this question should be referred to the people at the polls ; and that decision was formulated in the plebiscite resolution that forms a part of the platform adopted by that convention. Now, in due time, the party then in Opposition came into power, and was called upon to face the pledge made by the great Liberal convention with reference to this question. How did they face it ? They waited until we had a voters' list that was fresh and new, so that the people could pronounce their verdict on this question without the use of a list three years old, as was the mode in vogue among our friends on the opposite side of the Chamber. The question was referred to the people. Now, I happen to know that the Government acted in this matter with the utmost good faith. It was suggested in caucus that the people ought to be made aware of the consequences of the adoption of the resolution, demanding of the Government the placing of a prohibitory law upon the statute-books. My hon. friend has alluded to the loss of eight millions of revenue. It was claimed that this was a feature of the case that the people ought to understand, and that the reference ought to be made in language which would make the people aware that a vote for prohibition would incur the voluntary loss of eight millions of revenue, and the necessity of providing for that deficiency in some other way. It was rejected ; the Government refused it ; they refused to complicate the case or saddle the question with any such statement, but decided to refer the naked question as to prohibition, yea or nay, to the people.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Will my hon. friend (Mr. Charlton) allow me to ask him a question ?

Mr. CHARLTON. Yes.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Is he not aware that during the struggle of the plebiscite, three members of this Government went out and publicly declared to the people that it was a question of direct taxation they were voting upon, as eight millions of revenue were at stake ?

Mr. CHARLTON. I do not know what that has to do with the statement I made, that the Government refused to place such a statement on the ballot paper. I suppose that the members of the Government had the right to vote yea or nay on this question as they pleased, that they had the right in common with other citizens to either uphold or oppose prohibition. In taking this course each side exercised the rights of free-born citizens in expressing their opinions upon a great public question, and exercised the same right when they voted upon that question. Well, Sir, the rider was rejected, and the naked question went to the people : Shall we have prohibition or shall we not have it ? Vote yes or vote no. And what was the character of the vote ?—and that is an important question to which I wish to call the attention of my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition. How large a proportion of the electorate responded to the invitation to express their opinion upon that momentous question ? Forty-four per cent, forty-four voters out of every hundred upon the list were sufficiently interested in this matter to come out to the polls and vote ; 22½ electors out of every hundred voted that we ought to have prohibition, and 21½ out of every hundred voted that we ought not to have prohibition. Twenty-seven out of every hundred voted for prohibition in the Dominion outside the province of Quebec. Now, what kind of a mandate is a mandate from 22½ per cent of the electorate ? What justification would exist for a Government of Canada to take the behest of 22½ men out of every hundred as the verdict of the hundred men ? Sir, it would have been an outrage upon the principles of popular government to have founded a law of any character, much less a law of this important character, upon a request of 22½ electors out of every hundred upon the list.

My hon. friend asserted in the course of his speech that the verdict for prohibition was as pronounced as the verdict by which he and I and other members sit in this House. Such is not the case, Mr. Speaker. In 1891, on a list three years old, 66 per cent of the electors voted; in 1896, on a list three years old, 66 per cent of the electors voted; and in the election of 1887, on a list one year old, 70 per cent of the electors voted. The smallest percentage, then, in any of these elections that were held, held upon a list from which many voters had been removed, and many were dead, the smallest percentage we had was 66 out of 100, and voting upon questions at issue in the general elections. But here we have the precaution taken to have a new list, and as soon as that new list was ready the question was referred to the people, and the result of that reference was a response on the part of 44 out of 100, 22½ of whom voted yea and 21½ of whom voted nay. I have just to add that while the proportion was so exceedingly small, 22½ per cent, I know that a large percentage of that number consisted of Conservatives who voted for prohibition for the express purpose of putting the Government into a difficulty. I do not suppose there was actually 18 per cent, possibly not 15 per cent, of the voters voting for prohibition that voted for it out of conviction and from a desire to have the law; and a very large percentage, how large I cannot say, were using their franchise for the purpose of securing a result that would embarrass the Government and for no other reason.

I do not think it necessary to say upon this question any more than this, that as a temperance man I must repudiate the assertion made by the leader of the Opposition, that any stigma should attach to this Government, or any censure should be applied to this Government, because they failed to accept the voice of 22½ men as the voice of the 100. Sir, if the Government had passed a prohibitory law upon that narrow pedestal, that narrow percentage of the voters, it would have committed a breach of its trust, it would have been guilty of having placed upon the statute-book of this country an important enactment that must rest for its efficiency upon popular sentiment, and upon a great mass of voters in favour of the law to back it up. It would have made a mockery of prohibition by adopting such a law under those circumstances, it would have put back the clock of temperance for many years. So far from being worthy of condemnation, the Government, in my opinion, has acted with prudence, with discretion, and is deserving of the confidence and of the approval of the temperance men and of all citizens of this country.

It being six o'clock, the Deputy Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

YALE-KOOTENAY TELEGRAPH COMPANY (LIMITED).

Mr. SUTHERLAND moved that the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 7) to incorporate the Yale-Kootenay Telegraph Company (Limited)—(Mr. Bostock)—be read the second time.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Speaker, I propose to move a slight amendment. I may explain to the House that when this Bill was under the consideration of the Railway Committee, the clauses here inserted by the Senate Committee, were left out in expectation that the proposed amendments to the Railway Act before the House would become law. There has been considerable delay, and as the amendments have not been passed, they have been inserted in the Bill by the Senate Committee. But I find that words which were recommended to be inserted by the Railway Committee of this House, in clause (f), have not been inserted. There is also a word inserted in subsection (k) which I propose to ask the House to strike out to bring these clauses in harmony with the amendments as proposed by the Railway Committee of this House. I beg to move:

That section (f) be amended by adding after the word "streets," the words "squares or other places," and that in subsection (k) the word "unnecessary" be struck out.

These two clauses have passed the Railway Committee in the form I have proposed, and if they pass the House they will be in accordance with the General Railway Act.

Amendments, as amended, agreed to.

PROHIBITION OF THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

Mr. THOMAS CHRISTIE (Argenteuil). Mr. Speaker, in rising I may say that it is not my intention to occupy the time of the House at any length as I merely desire to express my hearty approval of the principle of the motion introduced by the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint), in favour of provincial prohibition. It is quite true that I would have preferred that we should have gone further. If this will not secure national prohibition it is a step in the right direction, and if it is carried out, will, I hope, tend to secure the entire prohibition of the liquor traffic at no very distant time. In view of the fact that a large majority of the electors recorded their votes in favour of prohibition, in all the provinces, with one single exception, the province of Quebec, I think it becomes imperative that some action should be taken. We should go just as far as we possibly can to meet the views of the electors as expressed at the polls. It is true that the province of Quebec gave a large majority against prohibition, but surely that should not block the way of all the other provinces securing prohibition when they have voted for it and expect it. I am convinced that if the measure is made applicable to the provinces, and if ample provision is made for its enforcement, it will be a great success. If so we may expect that even the province of Quebec will soon fall into line and stand abreast of the other provinces on this question. I trust, therefore, that the Government and the House will give this measure a warm and hearty support and make it as perfect as possible. There can be no doubt that the country expects that something should be done to meet the wishes of the electors and see that they are carried out. There is no doubt that if no action is taken whatever, in view of the vote that has been taken, in view of all the promises that have been made, then the country will be moved to disappointment. I shall not further trespass on the time of the House. I trust to have the pleasure of recording my vote in favour of the motion of my hon. friend (Mr. Flint).

Mr. A. H. MOORE (Stanstead). Mr. Speaker, representing, as I have the honour to do, one of the most important constituencies in the province of Quebec, and one which claims to be the banner county in the temperance reform movement, I would not be doing my duty as the representative of my constituents, I would not be meeting their expectations, were I to permit this discussion to close without first expressing my own and I believe their views upon this important question. There is one point in which I can entirely agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Flint) the mover of the resolution, and that is, that it is an important resolution and one of vital interest to the people of this country. This is a question which has agitated the minds of our people for a great many years past, and I venture to predict that it will agitate their minds in the future, and be a thorn in the side of every Canadian Government until it is finally settled. And, Sir, when it is settled, it will have to be settled in accordance with the highest moral and religious sentiments of this country. The ministers of the Gospel, the churches, the Women's Temperance Unions, the temperance organizations and associations throughout the length and breadth of the land have declared unrelenting warfare against this liquor evil, and they will not lay down their arms until it is destroyed. When this question is settled to their satisfaction, it will only be when the flag of prohibition waves in triumph over every hamlet, village, town and city throughout this broad Dominion. There is one feature in connection with this agitation which I regret. The prohibitionists and temperance reformers sometimes use very harsh terms towards their oppo-ents, stating that those engaged in the liquor traffic are rogues and unworthy the confidence of their fellow-men; while, on the other hand, those who engage in the traffic look upon temperance reformers and prohibitionists as fanatics and cranks. It has been my privilege to know a great many men who are engaged in the liquor business, and although I profess to be a temperance man, I have no hard words for them. It is not a fight against men, and as far as I am concerned, I think I can truly say that, compared with the population of this country those people, as a general rule, will not lose very much in the comparison. There are those, too, who curl the lip and point the finger of scorn at the prohibitionists, and say that they are undeserving of notice. But, Sir, this important question has not been beneath the notice and the consideration of the best men of the present age. The late Wm. E. Gladstone, one of the greatest statesmen of the century, after considering the matter, made up his mind, and made the statement, that drink was a greater evil than war, pestilence and famine. The late Duke of Albany, so nearly connected with our noble Queen, whom we all love and respect, after giving the matter consideration, came to the conclusion, that strong drink was the greatest enemy England had to face. I believe, Sir, I am voicing the sentiments of the hon. members of this House, when I say that we must come to the conclusion that strong drink is the greatest enemy that Canada has to face at the present time. And, Sir, the evils resulting from it are the reasons why such unrelenting warfare is declared against it by the best men and women of this country. It is the enemy of the home, of the church, and of the state, three of the most important institutions of the land; it is the enemy equally of the palace and of the humblest residence. The poet has given expression to these lines in regard to a humble home in the far-distant north:

Beneath this moss-grown roof, within this cell
Truth, liberty, content and virtue dwell.
Say ye, who dare this happy place disdain,
What palace can display so fair a train?

Sir, the moment you place the intoxicating cup in the palace or in the humble home, truth, liberty, content and virtue take to their wings and fly away. Strong drink has crossed the pathway and injured the prospects of every man, woman and child in this country. It has crossed the threshold of the church, and degraded the most sacred and most important institution in this or any other land. We have been accused, that it has reared within our parliamentary halls, thus doing something towards sapping the very foundations of our state. It injures our people morally, spiritually, physically and financially. I need not, Mr. Speaker, go into details to convince the hon. members of this House that it is an injury, morally and spiritually, and that where it is indulged in to excess, it degrades the spiritual and moral status of our people. I need not say to you hon. gentlemen that it is an injury physically. The testimony of physicians in every land is, that it is injurious to the physical system, and we know, from practical experience in this country, that sporting men will not risk their money in a contest where physical strength and endurance is concerned, unless the contestant has abstained for some time previously from indulgence in intoxicating liquors. It is also a financial injury; and, viewed in that aspect, there are a few figures which I shall have the honour to submit to this House.

It has been found by statisticians that the direct cost of intoxicating liquors to the consumers of this country amounts on the average to $39,879,854, and the indirect cost amounts to $103,242,862, making in the aggregate, $143,122,716.

Something has been said by previous speakers in regard to the loss of revenue, amounting to $8,455,022 per year. Take that out of the $143,122,716, and the balance of the loss to this country would amount to $134,667,694. I agree with previous speakers who have stated that in case prohibition should be adopted in this country, the revenue would take care of itself. I believe that with the railway subsidies which are promised to be granted this session, the expenditures of the present year will amount to between $50,000,000 and $60,000,000. It would not be a very hard matter to reduce those expenditures by that $8,000,000; and even then the Government would be receiving from the people of this country a greater sum than any previous Administration had ever called upon the people to contribute. It was a matter of surprise to me to learn, and it may be a matter of surprise to other hon. members of this House when I tell them, that according to the record given by the statisticians, this whole business is carried on by 13,039 people, comprising all the brewers, maltsters, distillers, hotel-keepers, and bar-tenders. This great financial loss to the people of this country, to say nothing of the misery, woe, wretchedness and unhappiness of the people, is occasioned by 13,039 people, all against the 5,000,000 people, who might be happy, contented and prosperous were it not for this traffic. It would be in the interest of Canada were the Government to buy out the dealers and take the manufacturing and selling into their own hands.

I will give you a statement of the investments which are made in this country for the maintenance of the liquor traffic: The capital invested in distilleries, breweries and malt-houses, $15,588,953; the value of real estate, estimated at $38,000,000; fixtures, estimated by the owners at $21,000,000, making a total of $74,588,953. The total number of people engaged in the traffic in all its branches is 13,039. The direct cost to the consumers, as stated before, is $39,879,854. The capital invested in the distilleries in Nova Scotia is estimated at $190,000; in Ontario, $6,864,000; total, $7,054,000. The capital invested in breweries is estimated as follows: British Columbia, $236,380; Manitoba, $277,300; New Brunswick, $114,000; Nova Scotia, $569,557; Ontario, $5,305,805; Prince Edward Island, $12,000; Quebec, $1,796,411, making altogether $8,311,423. The capital invested in malt houses is as follows: Ontario, $220,000; Quebec, $3,500. The total capital invested in distilleries is $7,054,000; in breweries, $8,311,453; and in malt-houses, $223,500; making a total of $15,588,953. The total number of gallons consumed by the people of Canada each year averages 21,676,749 gallons. The number of gallons consumed per head is four, or about twenty gallons to every family of five, and the wholesale price of the liquor consumed is placed at $18,030,064. These are only some figures showing the magnitude of that system in the Dominion of Canada.

Now, the two great races who inhabit this country, and who pride themselves upon being the patrons and pioneers of civilization and enlightenment, appreciate educational and religious institutions. They believe that the prosperity of individuals, as well as of nations depends to a great extent upon these very important institutions. One of the old writers stated many years ago that men and women are what the institutions of their country make them. Therefore, it is a matter of the utmost importance to the people of Canada that we should patronize, encourage and support those institutions upon which the enlightened civilization and the prosperity of the inhabitants of this country depend. We have read in papers not long ago of some of those important institutions devoted to religious and educational purposes being in financial trouble; and the people are being called upon to contribute their mite towards the liquidation of debts that stand against them, in order that they can have a better prospect of success in this country. Let us inquire, then, for a few moments what the cost of the liquor traffic, per year of $39,879,854, would do if devoted to educational and religious purposes. It would build a college worth $30,000 for every constituency in Canada. It would pay ten teachers for each college $800 each. It would build twenty-five elementary school-houses at a cost of $1,000 each. It would pay twenty-five teachers $300 each, which is a greater salary, I think, than the common school teachers of this country are getting. It would build one hospital worth $30,000 in every constituency. It would pay two physicians for the same each $2,000 salary per year. It would pay ten nurses $500 a year each. It would build ten churches each costing $4,500. It would pay ten ministers for those churches each $1,000 annually. It would build one asylum in each constituency, worth $20,000. And when we add all that up, we find that it would amount to $184,500 for each constituency. Taking the 213 constituencies in the Dominion of Canada, all these sums would amount to $39,298,500, leaving $581,354 to the good, to be used for incidental expenses. Is there any man within the hearing of my voice who will not admit that that money, if devoted to educational and to business purposes, would be a great boon to the people? And had the present Government carried out the expectation of the people and brought down a prohibitory law, this great boon would have been conferred upon our country. The people have not sat silently by while this strain upon their resources has been going on. Laws have been passed, regulating and restricting the traffic, but they have not proved satisfactory to the best class of people in this country. In 1864 the Duncan Act was passed. It was followed later in 1878 by the Canada Temperance Act. That Act seemed to meet with the greatest favour of any local prohibitory law that has found a place upon our statute-books. But it had great force lent to it from the fact that when it was passed the people were told that the Scott Act or the Canada Temperance Act of 1878 was given as a test of public sentiment, that wherever a county adopted this Act, it was evident that that county was prepared for prohibition, and when a sufficient number of counties had passed this Act to convince the Government that the country was ripe for prohibition, then prohibition would be given. The prohibitionists and temperance reformers in this country became therefore very much more active in inducing the several counties to adopt this Act in order to convince the Government that the country was ripe for prohibition. The time came when some 25 counties in Ontario, some counties in the province of Quebec, and many cities and counties in the provinces down by the sea, adopted the Canada Temperance Act of 1878, and the time came when the temperance people demanded of the Government the carrying out of its promise. They set forth that although not one-half of the counties had adopted the law, a sufficient number had adopted it to convince this Government that the country was prepared for prohibition. It had not run very long in some of the counties, in some of them the limit expired within which petitions for repeal could be filed, and in 1888 and 1889 petitions were filed against every county in Ontario, and in those two years every county in Ontario that had passed the law repealed it, and all but two in the province of Quebec, and some of the cities and counties in the provinces by the sea. Therefore, this took away the evidence that the people were prepared for prohibition.

Then the different temperance organizations and associations throughout the country, the Dominion Alliance and the churches and temperance unions, all combined and adopted a policy of prohibition and no compromise—national prohibition, a total suppression of the liquor traffic in every county and every province throughout the broad Dominion, and the hon. Minister of Agriculture, in many places upon the temperance platform in the Eastern Townships, advised the people to strike out straight from the shoulder for prohibition and no compromise. That was the position after the Scott Act had been repealed, when so many of the counties had taken away the evidence that the people thought they had, that the country was prepared for a prohibitory law. What then was the attitude of the Liberal party? They professed that they were far more favourable to prohibition than the Conservative party. The people of this country were told upon the political platform and the temperance platform that if they wanted prohibition, the only way they could secure it was to turn the Tories out and put the Liberals in. To give strength to this sentiment, the Liberal party in 1893, in convention in this city, adopted on the 3rd June a prohibition plank in their platform. That was introduced by the hon. Minister of Agriculture, then simply the hon. member for the county of Brome (Mr. Fisher). He said, speaking of the Tory party:

They have put off the question; they have shunted it, and have not taken steps to find out the attitude of the country upon this question.

I am glad to be here to ask this Liberal convention to take a step which will bring about an opportunity for the people to express themselves upon this question. We know that in three of the provinces the Liberal Governments of those provinces have brought about local or provincial plebiscites, thus giving the temperance people the opportunity to show what they believe to be the truth, that the temperance sentiment of this country is strong enough to enforce a prohibition law if it is given us. I propose to read the resolution which will bring about this result, and which pledges the Liberal party, if returned to power, to give the people of Canada an opportunity to express their views upon this question, and the Government in power must necessarily carry out the expressed will of the people. There is no doubt that this is what the Liberal party would do, for we know their pledges can be trusted.

Subsequent events have shown how little trust is to be put in the promises and pledges of the Liberal party. There has been some play upon words with regard to the result of the plebiscite, and it will be well to inquire for a moment what is meant when we speak of the express will of the people. The will of the people is the desire, the decree, the choice, the determination of the people. The expressed will of the people is a declaration of sentiment, an utterance of the wishes of the people publicly made. The will of the people expressed at the polls is a declaration of the people who express their will by voting at the polls.

Therefore, the expressed will of the people, if we understand the English language at all, must be considered the will of the people as expressed at the polls, and the will of the people as expressed at the polls is the majority of those who have thus expressed their views. There can be no expressed will where there is no declaration, utterance or representation. The Government is bound by its promises and pledges to abide by the decision of the majority who went to the polls and voted on the 29th September last in favour of prohibition. The refusal to do this is to violate the well-understood and well-established methods and principles which govern all deliberative bodies in this and every other country governed by the people and is a flagrant violation of the most sacred pledges made by the Government on the most important question with which Canada has to deal. If it were otherwise, if it were claimed that on every question of public nature or otherwise the majority of the member's votes had to be polled in order to make a law, how many Bills have passed this House for which a majority of the members have voted? The statutes of Canada would be very small indeed if they contained only such Acts as were carried by the majority of the members of Parliament.

And we have a better claim to count those who staid away from the polls as being favourable to prohibition than they have to claim them as against it. If they remained away it was an indication that they were satisfied with what the majority of the people voted; they acquiesced in the decision, and we have the right to claim them as more favourable to prohibition than opposed to it. The hon. mover of the resolution made the statement that his party never had a prohibition plank in their platform. I was somewhat surprised at the statement he made, because I have always understood that the party introduced a prohibition plank in their platform in 1893. I have always heard it stated on the public platform when the temperance question was discussed, that the Liberal party were prohibitionists, because they had adopted a prohibition plank in their platform in 1893. The resolution relating to this subject adopted by the Liberal Convention in 1893 reads as follows:—

That whereas public attention is at present much directed to the consideration of the admittedly great evils of intemperance, it is desirable that the mind of the people should be clearly ascertained on the question of prohibition by means of a Dominion plebiscite.

And the promise went out to the people of this country that if the plebiscite carried, if there was a majority of the votes in favour of prohibition, then prohibition would be given. That was what the people of this country were made to believe—that if a majority voted for prohibition, this Government was bound by all that was fair and reasonable and honourable and sacred, to come down with a prohibitory law. On September 6th, 1894, the Hon. Wilfrid Laurier is reported to have said to a deputation of Winnipeg prohibitionists—and this has never been contradicted:

He would pledge his honour as a man that as soon as the Liberals came to power at Ottawa, they would take a plebiscite all over the Dominion. By that declaration the party would stand, and the will of the people would be carried out, were it to cost power for ever to the Liberal party.

These were brave, bold and manly words. They went, as on the wings of the wind, throughout the length and breadth of this Dominion. Ministers in their pulpits rehearsed them, temperance organizations and unions throughout the country repeated them at their gatherings, and the man who uttered them was made in their estimation, a hero. He was placed side by side with those great patriots of old who made their names memorable on the pages of history, men who looked upon a stain upon their party or upon their country as an individual disgrace, men who would rather repose upon a death-bed of laurels than flourish in power and position, if power and position were to be attained by violating promises and breaking sacred pledges. It has been said that, in all emergencies amongst nations, man rises to the occasion, that men are provided to meet the exigencies of the time. The right hon. gentleman was looked upon as a second Moses that had come to conduct the temperance people, the people of this country, through the wilderness of intemperance to the promised land of prohibition. I think the right hon. gentleman stated that as soon as they came into power they would take means to bring the matter before the people. They came into power in 1896. The first session of Parliament they were not prepared to take a plebiscite on this question. The second session came and the second session passed, and yet the Government were not prepared to submit the question to the people. The third session came, and they felt that, perhaps, it was not policy to play with the people any longer, and finally the plebiscite was taken. The vote was taken on the 29th of last September. A few hours after the sun had set behind the western hills, it was flashed throughout this country, from east to west, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, that a great and glorious victory had crowned the efforts of the temperance people of this country. And, Sir, if the right hon. gentleman and his colleagues had had eyes that could see all over this country and note the devoted men and women on their knees thanking God for the great victory that had crowned their efforts, it strikes me it would have appealed strongly to their hearts. A month or more passed away and the temperance people became anxious to know what course the Government of this country was going to take. They asked for an interview. It was granted. I do not think there has ever been seen within these walls so large a gathering of representative men and women from all parts of this Dominion as were there to present their claims before the right hon. gentleman and his colleagues. They presented their case, and we have the right hon. gentleman's reply. Perhaps it would be proper for me here to give the figures in regard to that plebiscite vote :

The official returns show the vote polled in the plebiscite on the question of prohibition to have been as follows :—

Let me say something in regard to the vote in the province of Quebec. I am not going to say that it was a fraudulent vote. This is not the time and this is not the place for an investigation of that matter. But there is something very peculiar in the circumstances with regard to that vote. There never has been a time in the history of this country since confederation when an election took place and the people within twelve hours did not know the practical result throughout the length and breadth of this Dominion, which party was triumphant and who were elected. We found out, in all the provinces save Quebec, how the matter stood the first night, and the official account does not change very materially the figures we got. The first report represented 33,000 of a majority in the province of Quebec against prohibition. For some cause or other the returns were not brought in, they were delayed from week to week and from month to month, and complete returns were not made in the province of Quebec until somewhere, I think, in the month of February, and those returns showed 94,000 of a majority in the province of Quebec against prohibition, whereas the first report showed only 33,000 of a majority. There are men in this country who sincerely and honestly believe that the difference between 33,000 and 94,000 was made up by fraudulently tampering in some way with the votes of that province.

It will be seen that after deducting the majority of negative answers given in the province of Quebec, the total majority of affirmative answers to the question in the whole Dominion was 13,916.

The total number of voters on the electoral lists as reported by the returning officers, was 1,233,849. The number of votes polled in favour of prohibition was nearly 23 per cent of the names on the list.

An examination of the votes polled outside the province of Quebec gives the following striking results :—

Total names on voters' lists.....	898,992
Total number of votes polled .....	391,862

I have here the reply that was given by the Prime Minister to the delegation that waited upon him :

May I say to Major Bond that, as a prohibitionist, perhaps he is not altogether free from blame in this respect, because I believe the prohibitionists allowed the campaign to be all on one side. I am not aware that there has been any general agitation in Quebec for prohibition ; I am not aware that there has been a meeting held for the advocacy of prohibition outside of Montreal or St. Hyacinthe ; nor am I aware that there has been a newspaper outside of Montreal advocating the cause. There is only one way in which you can affect public opinion, and it is by the employment of the press, public meetings and such agencies, and if such agencies were neglected, certainly the result could only have been what it has been. Quebec, I claim, is perfectly temperate. The vote in Quebec must not stand alone, but it must be considered along with the vote of every other province.

Let me say here that this is not in accordance with the principles of the resolution which has been brought down by the member for Yarmouth. He proposes to consider the provinces separately and therefore contrary to the opinion of the Premier of this country. In regard to the Premier's statement that there were no meetings held in the province of Quebec, and no agitation for this question, allow me to read the number of meetings that were held in the various counties, and the amount of literature that was circulated, in order to work the people up to the point of voting for prohibition :

	Number of Meetings.	Literature—Leaflets.
Montreal .....	63	199,000
Compton .....	120	73,000
Megantic .....	33	14,000
Missisquoi .....	30	20,000
Wright .....	15	30,000
Argenteuil .....	34	55,000
Labelle .....	39	12,000

	Number of Meetings.	Literature— Leaflets.
Stanstead .....	80	.....
Quebec .....	9	10,000
Huntingdon .....	35	20,000
Richmond .....	41	21,000
Pontiac .....	100	.....
Brome .....	69	.....
Shefford .....	25	.....

You will observe that these meetings were held mostly in the eastern townships; and when I have shown you the amount of printed matter that was circulated and when I say that over $5,000 was contributed for that purpose, you will see that the statement made by the right hon. Premier is not correct. No doubt, he made it unthinkingly. I do not accuse him of misrepresentation, but I presume he had not given his attention to the subject, and was saying what he honestly believed to be the fact. As a proof that the province of Quebec is temperate he gives the following figures:—

There are more than one-half of the rural municipalities which are under a local option law. Out of 933 rural municipalities the number of municipalities in which licenses were issued last year was 330, while the number in which no licenses were issued was 503. The people of Quebec are satisfied with their law, such as it is. We have had a local option law in Quebec since 1864.

It has always been enforced in more than half the province, and outside the towns and cities I think it is pretty well observed.

There is perhaps a suggestion of why so large a majority in a province, such a large portion of which is under prohibition, was polled against it. We have in that matter, a spectacle which stands, I think, without a parallel in the history of Imperial or any other Government under the British Crown. We have an important question, which the Government themselves submitted to this Parliament, and which was carried without a dissenting voice. It seems that an agitation was going on amongst the temperance people of this country, and the Government, becoming frightened that the plebiscite would carry, we had presented to us the strange spectacle of quite a proportion of the Cabinet themselves opposing the measure, going on the public platform, denouncing it and advising their constituents to vote against it. That may be one reason why the vote was so large against prohibition in the province of Quebec. The right hon. gentleman states also that the inhabitants of the province of Quebec are a law-abiding and loyal people. There is no hon. gentleman in this House, I think, who would deny the truthfulness of that statement. I do not think that there is a province in the Dominion of Canada more loyal or law-abiding than is the province of Quebec. History gives us instances where the French Canadian people were approached by foreign countries in the effort to induce them to give up their allegiance to the British Crown and join their fortunes with those on the south side of 45. I think that we owe a debt of gratitude to the French Canadian race and a debt of gratitude to the Roman Catholic clergy, who, at that time, stepped into the gap, poured oil upon the troubled waters, and preserved Canada to the Crown of England. No man can say that the French Canadians are not loyal to British institutions and not loyal to our Queen. We have been told that two-thirds of the province of Quebec is already under prohibition, and that the people of that province will abide by any law that this Government may pass. These are the strongest reasons, in my opinion, why the Government should pass a law since Quebec was the only province that voted against the plebiscite. If they are loyal to the laws of this country and if two-thirds of the province is under prohibition, there is no reason why the province of Quebec should not be under a prohibitory law so as to be on equal footing with all the provinces of this Dominion. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Flint), who made the motion in this House stated that the vote was small; the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) stated that the vote, under the circumstances, was large. There is a disagreement between these two statements, but I am of the opinion that the good sense and judgment of the right hon. Prime Minister will be accepted on this point and that we will agree with him that, under the circumstances, the vote was a very large one. He said:

The plebiscite has resulted in a majority in favour of prohibition of the vote recorded. May I say that I agree with Mr. Spence when he says that the vote is, under the circumstances, a large one. While it does not involve a majority of the electorate, though a respectable proportion of it, the consideration for the Government is, what is to be done under the circumstances? I agree fully with the words spoken a moment ago by Dr. Hogg, when he stated that we are deeply concerned to know what is to be done under the circumstances. I understand that the ladies and gentlemen present are of the opinion that the vote which has been recorded is sufficient, in the words spoken by Mr. Spence, "to authorize the Government to enact prohibitory legislation," and that with the certainty that such law would be effective and loyally obeyed.

I think the prohibitionists and temperance reformers of this country will say that, with such an overwhelming majority of the people declaring in favour of the prohibitory law, the Government should carry out what they believe they promised them they would do. They believe that the Government should carry out the pledges given to the people of this country, and I believe, Sir, that the Government, if they would carry out their pledges, would stand stronger and more solidly in the affections of the people than they do now, or ever will do, unless they retrace their steps and give the people that for which they fought so valiantly and in which fight they believe they won a great victory. I have a statement here made by the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), as reported in the Montreal "Witness." The hon. gentleman says:

That it would be a folly, and that it would be not consonant with the good government of this country, or with the duty which this Government owes to the people of Canada, if, on the vote as expressed in the plebiscite, this Government was to undertake to put in force a prohibitory law.

I have seen a great many temperance people since the plebiscite vote was taken. I have had correspondence with a great many others, and one remarkable fact was that immediately after the vote, there was a general consensus of opinion on the part of temperance men that on that vote no prohibitory law would be passed. That sentiment was almost universal over the length and breadth of the country.

The common sense of the people of Canada appreciated that the result of that vote was no cause of introducing a prohibitory law.

I have no doubt of the honesty of that hon. gentleman, but I must say that my experience is altogether different from what his has been. I have in my possession, piles of resolutions, passed by different organizations and churches throughout the Eastern Townships, condemning in the most emphatic manner the Government for not carrying out the promise which they made to the people of this country. Resolutions have been passed by the following named temperance organizations in my county:—

W.C.T.U.—Griffin, Cassville, Way's Mills, Stanstead Plain, Fitch Bay, Massawippi, Coaticook, North Hatley, the Stanstead County Union, Heathton.

I.O.G.T.—Cassville, R. Belle Bangs, secretary; Work Together Lodge, South Barnston.

Churches, County of Stanstead—Official Board of Methodist Church of Coaticook, P.Q., Rev. W. J. Hunter, chairman; G. L. Masters, secretary. Methodist Church, Smith's Mills and Apple Grove, represented by Rev. Mr. England, minister; Wm. Breevort, secretary. Presbyterian Church, Massawippi, Stanstead County, Rev. Mr. Pidgeon; Presbyterian Church, North Coaticook, Rev. Mr. Pidgeon; Congregational Church, Rock Island, Rev. E. Ellery Read; Methodist Church, Magog, P.Q., Rev. R. Corrigan; Methodist Church, Hatley, P.Q., Rev. Mr. Williams; Rev. Paul Pergan, for Methodist Church, Baldwin's Mills, Heathton, Corliss; three Methodist circuits of Beebe Plain, Rev. C. W. Finch; Baptist Church, Coaticook, P.Q., Rev. J. H. Hunter, pastor.

I have lists which would be very tiresome for me to read and for you to listen to, but they all of them express themselves in a similar manner to the following resolution, which was passed by the Stanstead County Women's Christian Temperance Union:—

Whereas the prohibition plebiscite held on September 29th, 1898, resulted in a substantial majority in favour of prohibition of all the votes cast throughout the Dominion, including an overwhelming majority of the votes polled in all the provinces, except the province of Quebec, and a very large proportion of all the possible votes cast in these provinces, and

Mr. MOORE.

Whereas the electors of Canada were led by the pledges of the Liberal party to believe that the Government and Parliament of Canada—which ordered the said plebiscite—intended to be governed in their legislative action by the will of the people as expressed at the polls;

Whereas, to a deputation of prohibitionists and in 1894, Sir Wilfrid Laurier made a statement as follows:—"He would pledge his honour that as soon as the Liberals came into power at Ottawa, they would take a plebiscite of the Dominion, by which the party would stand, and the will of the people will be carried out, even were it to cost power for ever to the Liberal party"; again, in 1898, he said to a deputation representing the Methodist General Conference, "that if the plebiscite meets with the support of a majority of the people, those who find themselves in the minority will have to concur in the verdict of the majority"; therefore

Resolved, that the Stanstead County Women's Christian Temperance Union deeply regret these broken pledges, and earnestly calls upon Parliament to accept the mandate of the electorate and carry it out according to promise, by enacting such legislation as will fairly embody the will of the people as expressed in the plebiscite, and thereby sustain the honour of the Government.

That resolution was passed by an organization consisting of 260 women. Now, I wish to speak for a few moments as to the honesty of the votes recorded in the province of Quebec. I have taken from the report on the plebiscite a copy of the result of fourteen polls, which show as follows:—

In these fourteen polling divisions the total names on the voters' lists were 1,357, and out of that number 1,330 are reported to have recorded their votes. I have had some experience in conducting elections in my part of Canada, and there are other hon. members in this House who may perhaps have had more experience than I, but I do not think that any honest members of this House will conscientiously say that in fourteen polling districts there could possibly have been such a large proportion of votes polled on lists which, be it remembered, were not new lists by any means. I cannot explain it to-day, but the time may come when this may be better explained than it can be at the present time.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have called the attention of the House to the importance of this great question, and of the great evil that has been inflicted on the people of this country by 13,039 against the interests of five millions. I shall leave the resolution of the hon. member (Mr. Flint) to be criticised by some gentlemen better able than I, but at the same time I must state that an examination of its provisions does not recommend it very strongly to me. The preamble states :

That inasmuch as it is desirable that legislation be enacted having in view the further restriction of the liquor traffic in Canada, and that such legislation should be uniform in all the provinces and territories of the Dominion, it is expedient, in the opinion of this House, to enact—

An Act to "further restrict" the liquor traffic is what the temperance reformers and the Dominion Alliance, as well as all the churches and temperance organizations, do not want. Their object and their desire is for "the total prohibition of the traffic," and legislation to simply restrict it is contrary to the declarations and principles of the Dominion Alliance. It is laid down by Article 3 :

It is contrary to the declaration of principles of the Dominion Alliance. It is laid down by article III : "That the history and results of all past legislation in regard to the liquor traffic abundantly prove that it is impossible satisfactorily to limit or regulate a system so essentially mischievous in its tendencies."

Article 6 says :

Art. vi. That, rising above sectarian and party considerations, all citizens should combine to procure an enactment prohibiting the manufacture, importation and sale of intoxicating beverages, as affording most efficient aid in removing the appalling evils of intemperance.

The constitution of the Council of the Dominion Alliance states in article 2 :

The object of the council of the Dominion Alliance shall be the immediate prohibition of the liquor traffic.

Therefore, the legislation which is proposed in this resolution is contrary in every respect to the principles of the Canadian Alliance and to the principles of all the important temperance organizations in this country. I challenge any hon. gentleman in this House to stand up and say that he has a mandate from the Dominion Alliance, or from any other authoritative source, to pull down the national prohibition flag and lift up in its place a local option flag, similar to the Scott Act, that has been discredited over more than three-fourths of this country. It is contrary to the constitution of all these organizations, and I have yet to learn of one man who has a mandate from those institutions to get up in this House and ask for resolutions to be passed that embody in them principles directly in opposition to those of the Dominion Alliance and the other temperance organizations of this country.

I have another great objection, which is, perhaps, stronger in my mind than it is in the minds of those who live in other provinces. From the great majority polled against prohibition in the provinces of Quebec, it would appear to be an absolute certainty, taking the province by itself, that prohibition is utterly beyond our reach, that the work of the devoted men and women throughout the province of Quebec is entirely futile, and that they can never expect to see the day rise when prohibition will crown their efforts. I have not that heart within my bosom to-night that would go back upon those devoted men and women who have been struggling for years, and who recently thought, from the promises made by this Government, that prohibition was in sight, when, instead of that, a mongrel substitute is submitted, which would relieve the Government from its responsibility and liability, pull down the prohibition flag and raise in its place a local option one, and deprive the people of my province of the hope of ever seeing the hoped for result of their labours. From the events which have taken place all over this Dominion, and recently in the county of Brome, we can come to the conclusion that the people of this country, the majority of them at least, want prohibition, but do not want the Scott Act. The repeal of the Scott Act was carried on the 21st day of last month in the county of Brome, which was under prohibition for over twenty years—the county which is so well and favourably represented by the hon. Minister of Agriculture, a strong and ardent prohibitionist. In that county, at the election, a majority of between 500 and 600 was cast in favour of prohibition, whereas on the 21st of last month a majority of 534 was cast against the Scott Act ; showing that the people in the county of Brome are in favour of prohibition but opposed to the Scott Act. In the province of Ontario, 25 counties adopted the Scott Act; in 1888 and 1889, every one of those counties repealed the Scott Act; and at the provincial plebiscite, on September 29th, 1888, a very large majority of the people of Ontario voted for prohibition. Therefore, it is impossible to contradict the statement that a majority of the people of Canada are in favour of prohibition, but are opposed to a local option law such as is proposed by the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint).

For these reasons, I am opposed to these resolutions. If I had not been speaking so long, and had not tired the House so much, I would try to say something about the grand effect that prohibition would have if adopted by the people of this country. I could tell you, what you all know yourselves, what you have learned by observation of the effect of the intemperate use of intoxicating drinks for beverage purposes. I cannot represent it, perhaps, more forcibly than to tell you of the transformation that is recorded in one of Homer's inimitable poems. Ulysses, one of his great heroes, after the siege of Troy, wandered about the country for years in search of his native shore. He was attended by the goddess Minerva, who protected him in many times of danger, and at last landed him on his native soil. The goddess touched him with her magic wand, and immediately his bright eyes became dim, his raven locks turned gray, his manly form became old and sbrunken, and he stood before his family and his friends to all appearance an old beggar clad in rags. That is the position to which individuals are brought by the use of strong drink, and that proportionately is the effect it has upon the people of this country. Give us prohibition, and, as the Hon. Mr. Foster said, in twenty years time the country would be so rich that it would not know itself. It could fairly be represented by the transformation which took place after the goddess Minerva had touched Ulysses a second time with her magic wand. His dim eyes regained their former brightness; his hair was restored to its natural colour; his form regained its manly proportions, and he stood before his faithful wife and his retainers clad in royal robes and in all the majesty of a king. That, Mr. Speaker, represents, in my opinion, the effect that prohibition in a quarter of a century would have upon the people of this country; and I, for one, after the promises that have been made by this Government, do not feel disposed to release them from their obligation, but to hold them to their promises. Let the prohibitionists and temperance reformers of this country stand solidly together, shoulder to shoulder, and this Government, or some other, will give the people prohibition, that will bring about this great transformation in the fortunes of our people.

Mr. MOORE.

I would like to see, Mr. Speaker, a platform something of this nature. It does not require the skill of a magician nor the subtle occult art of divination to picture what the effect would be upon our great Dominion were prohibition granted. Taking this in connection with the National Policy fully developed, protection to our native industries which will enable Canadian producers to control the Canadian markets; preferential trade with Great Britain and her cluster of colonies scattered all over the world; rapid and cheap communication and transportation, with cold storage facilities to enable us to compete successfully with our rivals in the English markets; immigration, to increase our population, of such desirable immigrants as will perform satisfactorily the rights and duties of citizenship; extension of the franchise to women, and in that way to bring about the purification of the ballot-box; and an honest, economical and efficient Government, of true and patriotic nation-builders, such as can be supplied by this side of the House, led by one of the ablest parliamentarians who has ever graced a seat in the House of Commons, our brave and able chieftain; will develop our varied and magnificent resources, and cause this country to become the most brilliant star in the firmament of nations. With such a policy and such a Government our great Dominion, extending from ocean to ocean, with all her wealth and resources, would experience a transformation as marked and pleasant as that experienced by the Prince Ulysses, when the goddess Minerva touched him the second time with her wand. Thanking you, Mr. Speaker, and hon. gentlemen for the patient hearing you have given me, I will conclude by quoting the lines:

Pull not the prohibition ensign down,
To part with it we'd sigh;
Let many an eye yet dance to see
That emblem in the sky.

Mr. FIRMAN McCLURE (Colchester). Believing, as I do, that this question under discussion is one of the most important that could engage the attention of this Parliament and that it is one which will continue to engage the attention and tax to the very utmost the resources of our Canadian statesmen long after most of the questions that have been debated during this session have been forgotten, I have no apology to make for the few remarks I have to offer. At the very outset I wish to say that I regret exceedingly that I cannot support the resolution moved by my hon. friend from Yarmouth (Mr. Flint). I regret this, because I feel that it is important, in any political movement, as this is, that those who are looking towards a common end should, so far as is consistent with a strict adherence to principle, pursue a common line of policy. I regret it all the more because I am well aware, notwithstanding the statements made by the last speaker to the contrary, that this line of policy proposed by the hon. member for Yarmouth has had the endorsement of a very large and influential body of temperance workers in this Dominion, who see in it a way out of our present difficulty, and who think that it would be a step in advance. However, I am obliged in this case to act according to the light I have, and I cannot see in that resolution any merit which calls upon me to support it. I am not going to deny, and it is within the knowledge of more than one of the members of this House, that there was a time, even since the opening of this session when I was inclined to support some such policy as that proposed by the hon. member for Yarmouth, if proposed then, as now, as a compromise. When the present Government took the position they did in reference to the plebiscite vote, when they practically, if not in so many words, declared that that vote precluded and forbade the Government from passing a national prohibitory law, while I could not to the full agree with the position they took, I felt there was sufficient reason and sound argument in that position to justify the prohibitionists in saying to the Government: Granted, your position is sound, granted that that vote does not justify the enactment of a national prohibitory law, you are nevertheless not relieved from all responsibility in this matter. They might properly have said to the Government: the evils of intemperance in this country are so widespread and disastrous, the present manner of dealing with the liquor traffic is so illogical, unjust and inconsistent, and the right and the duty of Parliament to find a remedy for these evils has been so clearly and so often recognized, that we have the right to say to this Government: Granted that you will not give us a prohibitory law, what do you propose to give us? What remedy do you propose for these evils which you and everybody admit and for which everybody considers it is the duty of the legislature of this country to find a legislative remedy? And if the Government, in response to that appeal, had proposed this or any other reasonable proposition, I would have been inclined to give it my support. But the Government did nothing of the kind, and I am practically frank enough to say I believe we had the right to expect something of that kind from the Government. The Liberal party, years ago, when in power, recognized the duty and the responsibility resting upon the Government to deal with this question in a legislative fashion, when they passed the Scott Act. It is true that very shortly after they went out of power and had scant opportunity to do what was needed to make that legislation as effective as it should be. But even in Opposition the Liberal party was consistent in standing up and defending the policy which they had pursued when in power. I find that during the campaign of 1881, the Hon. Edward Blake, speaking as the leader of the Liberal party, at Aylmer, in the province of Quebec, made this statement, and I refer to it only as showing the position which the Liberal party in Opposition held at that time with reference to the legislation which they themselves had placed upon the statute-book:

I am against the emasculation of the Temperance Act which I believe to be in contemplation at this hour. I am for the amendment of that Act in those details in which experience has shown defects preventing a fair test of its principles. I believe it to be the duty of the Government of the day, finding this law upon the statute-book, to determine whether it should be repealed or made effective. I believe that if they do not choose to repeal it they are bound to make it effective, and if they neglect dealing with the case they neglect their plain and obvious duty.

I am for a fair and full trial of the Act in the localities in which it is in force, with all the aid that executive action can properly afford. And here I may point out that the case which Mr. Mowat states with reference to the Dominion functions is much stronger than he put it, because, if I rightly understand it, the Temperance Act itself contains a clause providing that the collector of inland revenue, a Dominion officer, may bring prosecutions, and that it shall be the duty of the collector of inland revenue to act on informations and bring these prosecutions.

That is a clear statement on the part of the then leader of the Liberal party, that responsibility, rested upon the Government in reference to temperance legislation, apart altogether from the question as to whether they should deal with the broad question of prohibition or not. Therefore, I say that my dissatisfaction with the answer of the Government was not so much that they refused to give prohibition, as that they refused to do anything. They offered no compromise, and to-day we are in this position, that there is no ground for compromise between those who believe in the principle of prohibition and the present Government. We cannot agree upon a policy. The present Government admittedly is not a prohibition Government. There are prohibitionists in this country, and therefore upon that question the prohibitionists and this Government must separate? Now, what are you going to do?

If we are placed in that position, what are we to do? Are we to appeal to hon. gentlemen opposite? Shall we say to them: This Government has refused to give us what we think they should give us, and we appeal to you? I am willing to do so. But what answer do we get? What right have we to assume, from their present attitude, or from their record, that they will do anything more for us? The Scott Act was passed in 1878, and the Liberals went out of power shortly afterwards. The Conservatives came into power, and I charge upon hon. gentlemen opposite that during the years they were in power, the Scott Act remained a dead letter, because they refused to take the steps which it was necessary they should take in order to make it effective. That is written indelibly in the history of this country, and they cannot, they dare not, deny it. They say that the Scott Act was repealed in many places because it was ineffective. I speak from practical experience, when I say it was ineffective because the late Government refused the plain duty that Hon. Mr. Blake pointed out, of making it effective. I am not exonerating the present Government; they have done the same thing. Both parties are on a level in this respect. I arrive, then, at this conclusion—the only conclusion at which a practical prohibitionist can arrive—that political parties, as organized in this country, are dead against prohibition; and I refuse any longer to allow any political party to appeal to me on the question of prohibition until that party declares its policy. My hon. friend from Yarmouth made his proposition; and what did the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) say? He abused the Government for the gerrymander; he abused the Government for breaking its promises; but I appeal to this House, did he hold out one promise, did he hold out the slightest expectation to the prohibitionists of this country that if he came into power, he would do anything for them? It is very well for him to tell about the enormous evils of intemperance, and how the country would be blessed, if they were abolished; but what would he do, or what would his party do, to do away with these evils or remove the difficulties in the way of prohibition? I want to take a straight course on this question, and I tell hon. gentlemen that on this question I am as much against the Government as they are; but I am not necessarily with them because I am against the Government, for they also are against the cause which I am advocating.

What are my objections to the proposals made by my hon. friend from Yarmouth? I hold that Canada—and in this respect I am obliged to differ from many who hold strong views on this question—Canada is in a peculiarly favourable position to give a trial to the enactment and enforcement of a national prohibitory liquor law. We have a people who are peculiarly law-abiding, intelligent and temperate. It is true, that many people of this country are not prepared as yet to accept the doctrine of prohibition, which, to my mind, implies the doctrine that goes down into the personal life of every man, that total abstinence to-day has become the duty of every good citizen. In that I differ from many of my fellow-citizens; but it must be held by any man who is prepared to go the length of national prohibition. Unless you hold that an individual is bound, not because of any abstract principle of right or wrong, but because of the peculiar social conditions that surround us, to say: Though it may be harmless to me, yet, for the sake of my fellow-man, total abstinence becomes a duty. If you are not prepared to go that far, what right have you to place on the statute-books a law which will make any other course on the part of others wrong and unlawful? To be prohibitionists, we must advocate the prime doctrine of total abstinence as a duty resting upon every man who wishes to live up to the full measure of the best citizenship of this country. Canada is in a peculiarly advantageous position to adopt that law and give it effective working. It is true, we have a large extent of sea-coast and a long border upon another country. We stand with our back to the North Pole and our face to the world, prepared to give this a fair trial; for I believe the people are prepared to make sacrifices of their personal desires, and appetites, and even their personal prejudices, in order that the welfare of all may be promoted. I do not expect, and I do not think that any rational prohibitionist would expect, that the enactment of a prohibitory law will immediately abolish the evils of intemperance, but I do believe, as the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) eloquently said on one occasion, that there is nothing you could do better to educate the youth to the conviction that prohibition is right, than to place it upon the statute-book and give it the endorsement of the people; that no higher course of education could be found than to make the laws of the country consistent with the best sentiment and highest convictions of the people. Whether I am in the minority or not, I am still in favour of the principle of national prohibition. But I am not in favour of prohibition by provinces, because, while we are peculiarly situated to give national prohibition a fair trial, provincial prohibition cannot get a fair trial. It is, to my mind, hopeless to expect, with the constitutional difficulties we should have to contend with, with the trade difficulties we should have to contend with, with the commercial reasons that present themselves to the country—it is impossible to dream of enforcing prohibition in Nova Scotia, with a license law at the same time in New Brunswick, or to enforce prohibition in Ontario, with a license system in Quebec alongside of it. I wish to look at this from the stand-point of my own province, and from that stand-point also I am opposed to this resolution. I tell my hon. friend from Yarmouth that if you get this Bill passed in this Parliament, and put it in force in Nova Scotia, we should not have equal restrictions upon the liquor traffic with those we have now—we should be taking a retrograde step, so far as Nova Scotia is concerned. What is the position? There is not to-night one drop of liquor sold in the province of Nova Scotia, outside the county of Halifax, but is sold in violation of the law. We have all the prohibition we can get. My hon. friend from Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux) laughs.

Mr. LEMIEUX. It is sold, just the same.

Mr. McCLURE. I did not say it was not sold. Unfortunately, it is. But, outside of Halifax County, there is not a place where it is sold but in violation of the plainest letter of the law of that province. Therefore, the prohibition which we would get under this proposal is not in advance upon what we have now. I cannot support the proposal for that reason. What then? As I said before, I see no remedy except the remedy which has been endorsed by this Parliament, of a national prohibitory law. And let it come soon, or let it come late, that is a principle which must some day be decided in this country; and it will only practically be decided by putting it in force. There is, up to this time, no nation occupying the position of Canada, having the same extent of territory, and the same population, and the same powers of self-government that Canada has, that has ever attempted to put a prohibitory law in force. It is unfair to compare the various states of the Union to the south of us that have adopted prohibitory laws, and to say that it has been a failure there, and that, therefore, it would be a failure in Canada. The circumstances are entirely different. The prohibition they have in the various states of the Union is the prohibition we should have under the resolution proposed by my hon. friend from Yarmouth—it is only partial prohibition. The national government has not prohibited the traffic. The inter-state trade goes on, and the wholesale trade is unrestricted. Therein lies the difficulty.

Then what are we to do? I say in the first place that there is no man in this Parliament or out of it who can undertake to defend our present system of dealing with the liquor traffic upon any rational grounds. What do we have? We have here at Ottawa a Government which collects an enormous revenue from liquor imported and from liquor manufactured in this country. They authorize the sale, they erect bonded warehouses in which men legally store the liquors, they take a revenue from it, they permit it, they authorize it, they sanction it, they encourage the traffic in it. Yet when we go down into the various provinces we find the provincial legislatures taking the traffic by the throat, declaring it to be an unholy thing, and destroying it by the force of the power they have under the constitution. Is it rational, is it consistent, is it a proper way to deal with any business? Either this business is a good one and should be protected, or it is a bad one and should be abolished; or it is neither one nor the other, and should be regulated. But we do neither. At one end we permit it, we encourage it, we take a revenue from it; and at the other end we throttle it, destroy it, say it is an unholy thing. I say the present system cannot be defended upon sound principle, and I am prepared—and in this I am much more radical even than my hon. friend who preceded me—I am prepared to go the length of the late Henry George and say that there are but two ways of dealing with the liquor traffic problem, either make it absolutely free or destroy it altogether.

But I am told that the plebiscite vote is a complete and effective answer to our demand for prohibition. I do not agree with that. But I am going to say this much, and here I am bound to differ with some of the hon. gentlemen opposite and to differ with some hon. gentlemen on this side, when I say that while the plebiscite does not absolutely condemn prohibition, I am bound to say that if there is no justification to be found for the enactment of a prohibitory law except what has been found in the plebiscite vote, then the prohibitionists are out of court, they have absolutely no case. Now, we hear a number of gentlemen talking here as if it was an admitted principle that because a majority voted in favour of prohibition, therefore, you must get the law. Now, I know something about the campaign that was conducted under that plebiscite. I attended meetings in a great many counties of my own province, and took an active part in that campaign. I have read most of the literature upon the question, and until the day that the answer of the Government was declared, I never heard a prominent prohibitionist make the claim that a mere majority was sufficient to make it a duty upon the Government to pass a law. It never was claimed in this House, it never was claimed outside this House, and when hon. gentlemen undertake to-day to say that the Government has necessarily violated its pledge, or violated its promise, or done anything wrong because they do not pass a Bill in obedience to a mere majority, they state something that has occurred to their minds after the vote was taken, and which never occurred before. I am confident that my hon. friend from York (Mr. Foster), who has been a student of this question for many years, will not agree with that position. He has placed himself upon record very clearly as to what kind of a majority should back up a law of this kind. Speaking in this House in 1891, he said:

That man is no true friend of the temperance cause, or of the prohibition movement, who will enact a law to-day, if he does not firmly believe in his heart that that law finds its reflex in the overpowering conviction of a preponderating and active majority in the country in favour, not only of its enactment, but of its maintenance as well.

“A preponderating and an active majority.” An active majority is not a majority that stays at home and takes no interest in the question. Therefore, hon. gentlemen are precluded from counting those who stay at home. So I do not at all agree with the position that any duty rests upon this Government to pass a prohibitory liquor law in consequence of that vote, because in the words of the hon. gentleman, there was not revealed a preponderating and an active majority in favour of it. But I am bound to say this also, while I make that admission, that that vote taken under the plebiscite was not a full and fair test of the prohibition sentiment of this country. In the first place, as I had occasion to say once before, this matter of taking the plebiscite was something absolutely new to the people of Canada, and it was only with the greatest difficulty that they were brought to understand the necessity and the importance of recording their vote upon this question. When there were no outside influences to bring them to the polls they remained at home.

Then I have no doubt that political influences also entered into this contest. We heard a great deal after the election about frauds with reference to the vote in the province of Quebec. I believe the matter was very much exaggerated, but I am bound to admit from an examination of the returns and from the figures given by the last speaker (Mr. Moore), that in reference to that vote there were some very suspicious circumstances. When I find that in the entire province there was only a small vote on the whole, and yet in some 21 districts nearly every vote was polled, and in some cases actually more polled than were on the list, I do not say it proves anything, but I say it looks mighty suspicious to me at least. On the other hand, let me say that I do not look at the vote polled against prohibition as being of so much importance as the vote that was polled in favour of it, and when those hon. gentlemen talk about enormous frauds and stuffing of votes, let them be honest enough to answer this question. How do you explain it? If you say, as some do, that the province of Quebec is in favour of prohibition, why was it that so few came out and voted, Yes? Leave the "no" vote out altogether, and does the "yea" vote justify the enactment of a prohibitory liquor law? They were honest, they went to the polls, but I say that was not a complete test of the strength of the plebiscite vote. My own idea is that the correct way to have taken that vote was not to have called upon those who wished to vote "nay" to come out at all, but simply to call upon those who were in favour of the principle of prohibition to come out and vote, then we would have found the full strength without having to consider the antagonistic forces.

So for these reasons, and for others, I cannot accept the plebiscite as a final decision against prohibition. I admit frankly that it is not a justification for the enactment of a prohibitory liquor law, it does not afford sufficient grounds in itself to justify any Government in passing a prohibitory liquor law. But it is not such a test of public opinion as relieves the Government from the duty of dealing with this question in a legislative fashion. Since they have refused to deal with it in any way, since they have said: Not only will we not give you prohibition, but we will do absolutely nothing, I am driven back to the position that, believing in prohibition, I have nothing to do but to defend the principle and to go to the country and educate the people up to a belief in the principle of prohibition. But that is not all; it is necessary that we should commence a campaign in this country, not only to educate the people in regard to the evils of intemperance and the merits of prohibition, but something more. What the people of this country need to learn more than that is the duty of recording their votes in accordance with their convictions upon this question. That is something they especially need to learn at this time. Now, that we have had the plebiscite and know where we stand, to a certain extent, our duty as prohibitionists is to go into every election campaign and make our influence felt there. It is not by supporting this Government, not by supporting hon. gentlemen opposite, that we will succeed, but by showing to-day that we have got the sentiment of the community educated to the point of believing in the enactment of a prohibitory liquor law, and by sending a representative from every county who will be prepared, in this House, to vote the convictions and the sentiment of the constituency which he represents. That we have not had up to this time. We have frequently been told that there are no evils in this country to be compared with the evils of intemperance. In a partial sense that may be true, but, I say, that in Canada to-day, although, perhaps, not to the same extent as in some other countries, there is another evil which is as dangerous to the national life of this country as the liquor traffic is, and that is the evil which arises from extreme partisanship, as exemplified by the party organizations of this country, which are represented on both sides of this House. To-day, confronted with this question, which touches more intimately the social, domestic and commercial life of this country than any other question that can be discussed in this Parliament, why is it, that no matter what party is in power, the prohibition question cannot get a fair hearing before Parliament? It is a fact which cannot be denied, that ever since confederation, no matter what political party was in power, this prohibition question has been played with as something that was to be got out of the way and not to be dealt with in a serious and practical manner. It is not because there is not a sentiment in favour of prohibition, but because while the people have been educated to believe in prohibition, they have not been educated up to the point of recognizing that a man, when he belongs to a political party, does not cease to have individual responsibilities, and does not deliver himself body and soul to his party. It is easy to talk these general principles and to utter sentiments of this kind, but I admit it is not so easy to practice them. I have been a party man all my life; I was supporting the Liberal party before I was old enough to know its name and since, and it is not an easy thing for a man to break his party ties, but I have no hesitation in saying what I have said on every platform in my county and what I said I would stand by when I came to Parliament, that, on this question, both political parties were absolutely wrong, and that I would support neither. Upon this question I propose to take an independent stand, and I am not breaking with my party on general politics or denouncing their general policy, but, I say, that their course on the prohibition question has been as unsatisfactory to me as the course of hon. gentlemen opposite on this question has been unsatisfactory to me. The only course left to us is to so educate the people that the time will come when they will make their influence felt upon the political parties in such a way as to compel them to deal honestly with this moral question, as they do deal honestly with other questions. I was struck some time ago by reading an interview with a practical politician in the United States, Mr. Croker, well known as the "boss" of Tammany Hall, in which he gave utterance to some very sound political philosophy, which has made a deep impression upon me, although not believing in his methods. It is a revelation to me as to the methods by which party organizations in the United States, and to some extent in this country, are controlled. He made a statement, which, I believe, well illustrates, to some extent, the state of things in Canada:

The minority of cultured leisured citizens will not touch political work, no not with their little finger. All your high principles will not induce a mugwump to take more than a fitful interest in an occasional election. The silk stocking cannot be got to take a serious hand continuously in political work. They admit it themselves. Every one knows it is so. Why, then, when mugwumps' principles won't make mugwumps work, do you expect the same lofty motives to be sufficient to interest the masses in politics?

Now, while we have gentlemen coming together in meetings and conventions and denouncing the present Government and political parties for their hypocrisy and corruption upon such a question as prohibition, why is it that there is so much dissention and difference upon this question? It is because men who are preaching prohibition in our churches, because men who are preaching prohibition in our temperance lodges, who are preaching prohibition in the Dominion Alliance and elsewhere, have not come down to the point of feeling that if they are going to purify politics they have to take a practical interest in them. If it is true that scallawags, corruptionists and ballot stuffers are able to control party organizations, it is because these gentlemen to whom I have referred refuse to touch party politics with the tips of their fingers. It is necessary for temperance men not only to convince people of the evils of intemperance, but to educate them up to a higher point, and to take a practical interest in the politics of the country. I say that I am a party man; I have always been a party man; I have been a party politician engaged in the politics of this country, and I am going to take part in them. I do not propose, because I am differing from the political parties on this question, to ostracise myself from the political associations with which I am connected, because I am prepared to take a position upon this question that is consistent with reason and with my convictions as to what is right. If hon. gentlemen opposite want my support they must give us something better than the declamations that we have heard to-day in denunciation of this Government upon this question. It is to be remembered that the only temperance legislation that we ever got came from this side of the House. The hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster), has made some very strong statements upon this question. I remember years ago reading the utterances made by him on the public platform, so strong and eloquent and forcible in favour of the principle of prohibition that they have been up to the present time unanswered and are unanswerable. But when I found him standing up in this House, admitting frankly before his fellow-members, that although he once voted in favour of immediate prohibition, he did it only in a moment of weakness, and declaring that from that time forward he proposed to act honestly upon this question; when I read the solemn admission made by that hon. gentleman that, up to that time he had not acted honestly, I admit I admired his courage, his frankness and honesty in making that statement, but I lost faith and confidence in him as a leader of men. When we find him taking a position in favour of the principle of prohibition and even voting in favour of it, and then getting up and saying that he did it in obedience to the lash of public opinion and that he did what he did not believe in, I think we can no longer maintain confidence in that hon. gentleman. I do not propose to close these remarks without coming to a practical conclusion. I wish to place my convictions on record in such a clear and definite way that there will be no mistaking them. I propose to give hon. gentlemen opposite an opportunity of placing themselves on record. I propose to give them an opportunity, if they believe in the principle of prohibition, to vote for it, as I am prepared to vote for it, even against the party I support. I propose to close by moving this resolution, seconded by the hon. member for Hants (Mr. Haley):

That all the words after "That" be struck out, and that the following be substituted in lieu thereof:—"in opinion of this House the time has arrived when it is expedient to prohibit the manufacture, importation and sale of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes."

I am prepared to vote for that, and to support it. And if hon. gentlemen opposite are prepared to support it, it will be carried through this House, and we will have commenced a campaign in this country which will result in the enacting of a prohibitory liquor law, and thus we will have a fair test. I am not going to say that the country will blush as the rose, that there will be any such wonderful transformation as the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Moore), who has quoted Homer's writings to us, predicts, but I say that there rests upon Parliament a solemn duty, and it is to deal with this question as a practical question. The evils of intemperance cannot be magnified. Even at the expense of being called a temperance crank I am prepared to say here to-night that if only those in this country who drink intoxicating liquors suffered the evils from it, I do not think there would be any warrant for this Parliament to pass a Bill, but the worst evils that fall upon this country in consequence of the intemperate habits of the people fall not upon the intemperate themselves, but upon those who are absolutely innocent of any crime in connection therewith. I am not so much shocked at the fact that I see men now and again destroy themselves through intemperate habits, although, dear knows, that is bad enough, but when we go throughout this country, and see the reflex influence of this destroyer upon families that are innocent, then, I say, it becomes us, as men, to look this question fairly in the face and to see if we can pass a legislative enactment. If we cannot, let us admit it honestly, and let us confess that our theory is wrong; but do not go on year after year declaring that it is the duty of Parliament to find a legislative remedy, declaring year after year that prohibition is the only remedy, and yet sit silent, providing no remedy at all. I say, Sir, that upon this question the answer of the Government is unsatisfactory to me. I have heard no policy propounded in this House that deals with the question in a practical manner, and, therefore, I move this resolution, as embodying my own opinion, whether it is supported by anybody else or not:

That all the words after "That" in the original resolution be struck out, and the following substituted therefor:—"in the opinion of this House the time is arrived when it is expedient to prohibit the manufacture, importation and sale of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes."

Mr. McNEILL. Might I ask my hon. friend (Mr. McClure) a question? Was I correct in understanding him to say that he thought the expression of opinion by the people would not have justified the Government in passing a prohibitory measure?

Mr. McClure. I do not think I used the word "justified."

Mr. McNEILL. I do not mean to say that you exactly used that word.

Mr. McClure.

Mr. McClure. What I said was, that I did not think there was any mandate in that vote compelling the Government to pass a prohibitory liquor law.

Mr. McNEILL. Quite so; but my hon. friend (Mr. McClure) says, notwithstanding, that the time has come when a prohibitory law should be passed.

Mr. McClure. Certainly, that is what I say. What I say is, that while the plebiscite did not give a mandate to the Government to pass the law, yet the plebiscite was no condemnation of the principle of prohibition. And, notwithstanding that the result shown by the plebiscite, on the face of it, gave no mandate, yet I believe the time has come when we should pass a prohibition Bill. I say that, apart altogether from the plebiscite, because if we have no justification for prohibition except what is to be found in the plebiscite, then we have no case. I believe we have a case, apart from the plebiscite altogether.

Mr. C. H. PARMALEE (Shefford). Mr. Speaker, I wish, at the outset, to compliment my hon. friend from Colchester (Mr. McClure) on the very able and eloquent plea which he has made for the principle of prohibition. He stated the case with all the keenness, and all the ability, and eloquence in which it could be stated by any hon. member in this House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. PARMALEE. In view of the amendment moved by the hon. gentleman (Mr. McClure) to the motion of the hon. member (Mr. Flint), it is quite evident that the prohibitionists, as represented in this House, are at sixes and sevens. We have the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) pleading before this House for provincial prohibition, and I am bound to say, under existing conditions, and taking public opinion as it is to-day, it seems to me that perhaps that is a more attainable end than some of the more drastic propositions that have been made. It is, however, a new proposal, and I do not think the House, without giving it very careful study and thorough consideration, is in a position to say whether it is practical or not. I am a simple layman, and I do not pretend to know whether there are constitutional difficulties or not in the way of this resolution of the hon. member (Mr. Flint); but I am under the impression that it contains certain propositions over which constitutional authorities may disagree as to our power to adopt them in this Parliament. As against the contention of the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint), we have the hon. member (Mr. McClure) advocating the immediate enactment of a prohibitory law, and we also have a prohibitionist like the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Moore), who wants prohibition, and who takes advantage of the circumstances to score the Government for not granting it. Now, Mr. Speaker, when doctors differ, who is to decide? For my part, while I believe that prohibition is a great moral movement, supported by a large body of the people of this country, nevertheless, this House has to deal with the facts as we find them. While we all admit the evils of intemperance, while we all admit the great desirability of destroying them as rapidly as possible, yet when we come to legislate, we must, no matter what our opinions and principles may be—we must face the fact that we are dealing with a practical question, and that we cannot crystallize it into legislation any faster than public opinion will permit us. The Liberal party put a plank in its platform to the effect that the people of this country should be given a chance to vote upon this question, and while prohibitionists say now, and have said all along, that they never asked for the plebiscite, yet that is beside the question, because they certainly accepted the challenge, when the plebiscite was given them. It has been ably contended by the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. McClure) that the plebiscite vote does not give a fair expression of the prohibition sentiment in this country. I beg to differ from my hon. friend (Mr. McClure). I can recall the circumstances of the campaign. I know how the Government submitted the question to the country, stripped of all extraneous issues, and asked whether the people were in favour of prohibition or not. To that extent the Government completely met the wishes of the prohibitionists. The campaign, as we all know, was conducted with great ability on the part of those who believe that prohibition is the proper policy for this country. In the pulpit, in the press, on the platform, by the distribution of temperance literature, by the organization of committees to get out the voters, they conducted a vigorous campaign, and it is only fair to assume that the prohibition vote was polled. Now, Sir, when we come to examine that vote, it can scarcely be contended that it is sufficiently pronounced to warrant this House in going to the length of enacting such drastic legislation as the total prohibition of the liquor traffic in Canada, however desirable that may be in itself. I believe I am in the judgment of a great majority of the prohibitionists in this country when I say that they themselves would hesitate at having a total prohibition law passed in advance of a sufficient public opinion to support it. The experience of countries that have adopted a prohibitory measure in advance of public opinion and without sufficient support to sustain it, has not been such as to warrant us in imitating their example. I remember that a few years ago the "Globe" newspapers sent some able correspondents to the states of Iowa and Kansas to study prohibition at short range. They went from town to town, and from city to city, in these states, studying the conditions which exist there, and reporting upon them exactly as they found them. And what they found was this: That where public sentiment was very strong in favour of prohibition, they had, as a matter of practice, a fair measure of prohibition, but where they came upon communities in which that sentiment did not exist, in which a majority of the people wished to use intoxicating liquors, they had nothing like prohibition, but unlicensed traffic and a far worse condition of affairs than we have under a license system.

I can compliment the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Moore) upon the length of his speech, and some of the poetry, too, was good. I will admit that he is a sincere prohibitionist, and I will admit further, that he is zealous and enthusiastic in his desire to do something to injure this Government. If things were not as they are, but if his friends were sitting on this side of the House, charged with the responsibility of legislating on a question of this kind, I fancy that the hon. member for Stanstead, and perhaps other hon. members of this House, instead of getting up and attacking the Government as they are doing now, would be as mild as sucking doves.

A good deal has been said about the plebiscite vote in the province of Quebec. It seems to have astonished a great many people that the majority in that province was so strong against prohibition. Knowing the province of Quebec as I do, I believe that vote fairly represents the opinion of its people. Total prohibition is foreign to the genius of the French Canadian people, and I do not say that to their discredit. They love personal liberty; they do not want their liberty restricted by a prohibitory law. But while I say that, I do not want to leave the impression that the French Canadian people, in respect to the excessive use of intoxicating liquors, are any worse than the people of the other provinces. As a matter of fact, I do not believe that there is a more sober, a more thrifty, or a more abstemious population in Canada, or perhaps in the world, than the French Canadian farmers of the province of Quebec. In very many portions of the rural sections of the province of Quebec, they have the best sort of prohibition to-day. As a matter of fact, less than one-third of the purely rural municipalities in the province have licenses at all. That is because the people are so abstemious in their habits that there is no demand for liquor, and there is therefore no incentive to anybody to ask for a license. And even where that is not the case, the clergy having a regard for the habits and morals of the people, inculcate principles of temperance and abstemiousness, and exert their influence against even the license system. So that when people in other parts of the Dominion put on superior airs of virtue, and point with scorn to the province of Quebec and to the people of the province of Quebec, I say, let them take the beam out of their own eye; for when we come to compare the people of the province of Quebec, in respect to their habits in the use of intoxicating liquors, with the people of the other provinces, the comparisons will not be unfavourable to the people of our province.

But, Mr. Speaker, there is another point perhaps more important than that. An attempt—an organized attempt, I may say—is made to cast suspicion on the integrity of the vote that has been cast in the province of Quebec. Even to-night the hon. member for Stanstead ventured to insinuate that there had been fraud. He did not make any open and direct charge, but he tried to lead the House to believe that the vote in the province of Quebec was not an honest vote, but that ballot-stuffing and other crimes were perpetrated. Now, I do not believe that. I believe that the vote in the province of Quebec was as honestly taken as the vote in any other part of the Dominion. The returning officers were all men of the highest character in the communities in which they lived. The deputy returning officers, so far as I know, especially in my own section of the province, were selected with the greatest care, for their ability to discharge their duties, and for the reputation they enjoyed for honesty and integrity in the community; and I defy those gentlemen who have attempted to make charges or insinuate charges of that sort to show that there is a particle of truth in them. The vote in the province of Quebec I believe to have been an honest vote, and unless these men are prepared to come forward and substantiate those charges, they will have to be branded as traducers of honourable and upright men.

The hon. member for Stanstead has said that he would force prohibition on the province of Quebec whether it wanted it or not. When we come to deal with the question of prohibition, we must deal with it from a practical point of view. I believe that the great majority of the prohibitionists themselves to-day believe that public opinion is not a prohibitory law; and it would be folly and worse than folly to put on the statute-book a prohibitory enactment which could not be enforced or kept there. When we come to speak of summary legislation, dealing with the habits of the people, it is admitted by every reasonable and right-thinking man who has given any attention to the subject at all, that the imperative condition for success is a very strong public opinion to sustain it. I do not believe we have reached that state of opinion in this country. It is true, this great moral movement has made considerable strides. It is also true that the habits of our people are steadily and constantly improving, until I think we can congratulate ourselves to day on being one of the soberest countries in the world—the country in which the consumption of liquor is the smallest per head, and in which the evils of the traffic, great as they are, are less marked than in other communities.

It is the habit of some prohibitionists to cherish the idea that Parliament delights to humbug and fool. I would like, if I can—perhaps I cannot—to disabuse their minds of that idea. This House is the creation of the popular will, and this House, when it knows what the popular will is, is naturally anxious to respond to the popular will and grant the desires of the people on all these great questions. I believe that to be the case in respect to the question of prohibition. I do deprecate the attempt to make party capital out of this question. The prohibition movement, though it is a political movement, having for its object the enactment of legislation, has not until now been a party movement. There are prohibitionists in both parties, and until one party or the other is prepared to make it a plank in its platform, thus making it an issue, it cannot be a party question. While I am not going to waste the time of the House in reproaching the Conservative party for what they have done in the past on the prohibition question, or for what they have not done to advance the great cause of prohibition, I would say that until the Conservative party are prepared to take a position on this question, it is unfair to try to humbug the people and make them believe that Codlin and not Short is the friend of the prohibitionist.

Perhaps I have spoken too long, but before I sit down I wish to propose a resolution, an amendment to the amendment, which will enable this House to express its opinion, so that we shall find out when we get through with this discussion, how the House stands on this important question:

That all the words in the amendment be omitted and the following substituted therefor:—
“The result of the plebiscite on the question of prohibition of the liquor traffic in Canada shows that there is not an active prohibition sentiment sufficiently pronounced to justify the expectation that a prohibitory law could be successfully enforced, and, therefore, in the opinion of this House, such a prohibitory law should not at present be enacted.”

Mr. ANDREW BRODER (Dundas). It was rather amusing, Mr. Speaker, to listen to the remarks of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Parmalee), and then find them followed by the amendment he has just moved. He says that the temperance members of this House are at sixes and sevens on this question. He should have confined that statement to the hon. members on that side of the House, for his amendment simply means that the chickens cannot get out of the wet, and he is trying to get a shelter for them. I want to say, while on my feet, that while the hon. member who moved the first resolution (Mr. Flint) was good enough to give us a resume of the history of this question, so far as the Conservative party is concerned, he carefully avoided giving us a history of this question as dealt with by hon. gentlemen opposite. I hold in my hand a book sacred to the memory of a certain convention held in Ottawa in 1893. I think they called it the Reform Convention. They were all reformers then, these hon. gentlemen opposite, but they have since changed their mind. Let me say this, that I have the right to charge these hon. gentlemen with being the parties who made this question a party question in this country, not for the sake of bringing about a great moral reform, but with the express purpose of making political gain. They made it a party question by that resolution which they adopted at their convention, a resolution which virtually meant nothing practically, so far as they were concerned, because that is what they tell us now. They simply made that resolution for the purpose of allowing their friends to go out to the country and catch the ear of the temperance people. For what purpose? To gain the support of these people for the Reform party. The hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) was the moving spirit in this great drama. The whole sentiment of these hon. gentlemen at that time may be thus expressed: Bring on your sacrifice and we will provide the fire. Yes, they were ready to provide the fire to burn up any Conservative holocaust on the altar of prohibition. But they have got the fire now on the opposite side of the House, and are jumping on it with all their political feet in the attempt to stamp it out. They have put up one of their members—for what purpose? To move on the lines of certain resolutions, which they claim were adopted in council by members of this House who are members of the same Dominion Alliance, but do not give the public to understand that there were members on this side who would not agree to such a resolution, but wanted national prohibition or nothing. But they gave out to this country that this resolution was the united voice of members of this House who are in favour of prohibition, sitting down in council with the Dominion Alliance on that question. What is that for? For the purpose apparently of putting the people of the country into leading strings, so that they will go in the direction hon. gentlemen opposite want them to go. But that attempt has fallen to the ground, and the temperance people have a perfect right to demand at the hands of hon. gentlemen opposite what they implied when they asked the people to vote on that question. What was the implication? It necessarily followed that the Government would be bound by the voice of the people as expressed in that vote. They let the people go into this great contest, with a great moral principle at stake, without letting the contestants know the conditions under which they were to enter the contest and fight out the question. For, having kept back secretly the conditions, every member of the Government is guilty even the Minister of Agriculture himself (Mr. Fisher). But when he allowed the people to go into the strife and expend their time and money, and when the people declared themselves in favour of prohibition by 14,000 of a majority, then the Government quietly sit down and say: We did not mean anything when we asked you to vote. That is the position these hon. gentlemen are in.

I am a prohibitionist and will vote for a Dominion prohibitory law, no matter from what Government it comes and against any resolution which proposes to remove from the shoulders of hon. gentlemen opposite the responsibility which the vote of the people has placed upon them. That is the ground every honest prohibitionist ought to take, and if these gentlemen do not deal with that question as the people have directed them to do, let the people deal with them. But these gentlemen are trying to draw their friends out of the fire. They are trying to get them out of the heat of an outraged public opinion, and you find that if one resolution will not do, they move another and then a third. But they will have to reckon with the people. It is very strange that the Minister of Agriculture, who made the statement that he was in the Government by virtue of his temperance principles, should remain in that Government when the public opinion has asked for a prohibitory law and the temperance people are condemning the Government for not granting it. I wish to point out another very curious thing. I have in my hand the resolution adopted by the Executive Commission of the Dominion Alliance on March 14th, 1899. I will only read an extract from it, because I do not wish to be tedious. One of the resolutions reads as follows:—

Resolved, that this meeting desires to express its strong dissatisfaction at the refusal of the Government to carry out the promise to take such steps as would give effect to the expressed will of the people, and earnestly calls upon the representatives of the people in Parliament to accept the mandate of the electorate, and carry it out by enacting such prohibitory legislation as will fairly embody the will of the people as expressed at the polls.

What do we find? We find that that hon. gentleman is one of the executive of the Dominion Alliance, and he sits on that executive while they are passing resolutions condemning the Government of which he is a member. I thought the hon. gentleman was a little more sensitive. What does that mean? Is that a guarantee to his friends, to his colleagues, the other members of the Cabinet, that their lives are safe, that they are not to be harmed, that there will be a great deal of fuss and resolutions and all that, but that not one hair of their head will fall to the ground. Does he mean to say that he can sit comfortably, as a member of the Dominion Alliance, while that alliance is passing resolutions censuring the very Government of which he is a member? We find the name of the Hon. Sydney Fisher on the executive of the Dominion Alliance, and we find that gentleman in that capacity passing resolutions condemning himself and his friends.

Mr. DAVIN. Writes his own epitaph.

Mr. BRODER. Yes, writes his own epitaph. There seems to be some arrangement by which he is allowed to abuse his fellow-members of the Government. He is like the king of olden times who was likewise a bishop. He sometimes lost his temper and swore a little. His courtiers about him said: A bishop should not swear. And his reply was: I swear not as a bishop but as a king. So, I suppose the hon. gentleman swears, not as a member of the Government, but as a member of the Dominion Alliance; and I suppose in that way he will keep on swearing. I want to show what the hon. gentleman said in moving the resolution in 1893. I read at page 135 of this book, which is a very precious book just now:

I am glad, therefore, that the great party to which I belong, with which I have worked, is prepared to take a stand upon the temperance question, and to declare in its platform in favour of a step in the right direction upon this subject.

Now, what does that mean? Does he mean to say that they are in earnest, and that he is honest when he asks the people to pronounce upon this question? Or does it mean that he wants an opportunity for the representatives of his political party to go up and down the country and whisper in the ears of the temperance people: Your only hope is in the Reform party. That is the way in which they have acted. This report shows that Mr. Anglin got up and said that this resolution meant that a majority vote in favour of prohibition would mean that the Liberal party were bound to give them prohibition. He opposed this resolution, and appears to have been the only honest man on this question in that convention. But the Premier has said, if I am allowed to refer to a past debate, that there was an implied agreement between the members of the party and not between the party and the country, that there should be no more about this business. For ever after they were to hold their peace about that arrangement; and I think they are going to keep their agreement. Now, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) is a farmer, and I am a farmer; but I cannot help thinking he does not represent me very well. It is a strange thing that when this fight was going on, the hon. gentleman never put his head in his own province of Quebec to say a word in favour of prohibition. He was out of the country until a day or two before the taking of the vote. He spoke in Ottawa on the 16th of September, 1898—I think I remember the date correctly. And how did he speak? As Minister of Agriculture? No, Sir, he made himself as small as he could. He said: I am here as a private citizen. He laid aside his official robes and appeared as Mr. Sydney Fisher. But he did not appear in Quebec. We found the Minister of Inland Revenue (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière), the late Hon. Mr. Geoffrion, the Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick), and, I believe, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), speaking and working against prohibition—and the Minister of Agriculture here in Ottawa where he could not be hurt. When you look up and down the struggling ranks of the prohibition army fighting for doubtful victory, you do not see the well-preserved figure of the hon. Minister of Agriculture among them.

An hon. MEMBER. He was in cold storage.

Mr. BRODER. At any rate, where his influence was supposed to be greatest, and where he should have been as a representative of the people—in his own province—he never showed himself.

Mr. SCRIVER. He was not needed—there was a majority of 500 in his county.

Mr. BRODER. And my hon. friends opposite did not want him there. They wanted the other elements of the Cabinet to come down and say: Vote against prohibition, for it will kill Mr. Laurier. There was political influences used against prohibition and the hon. Minister of Agriculture did not use his influence in support of it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). My hon. friend (Mr. Broder) is altogether wrong. I did speak in my own county and in Montreal.

Mr. BRODER. I am glad the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) mentions Montreal. He spoke there in February, 1897, in Stanley Hall.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I spoke then, but I spoke also a few days before the vote, in September, 1898.

Mr. BRODER. I accept the hon. gentleman's correction. He made a speech in Montreal that I wish to call his attention to. I am glad he has mentioned Montreal, and I think he will not mention it again. He spoke in Stanley Hall, in February, 1897. He drew the attention of the meeting to the difference between the contention of the liquor men and his own. The liquor men said that if we carried the plebiscite we would not get prohibition, but he wanted to assure the people that if there was a majority on the plebiscite, prohibition would be enacted. He is so reported in the "Witness." And where is he to-night? There was a majority in favour of prohibition, and yet the Minister is satisfied, although the Government does not enact a prohibitory law.

Now, what does this resolution of the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) mean? It means continual confusion and more law, that is what it means. It don't prohibit the manufacture of liquor at all where the law is in force, they have not power to touch it. It does not pretend to touch the question of interprovincial trade! and the very moment a law of the sort suggested by this resolution is enacted, the whole question will be thrown into the courts to know whether you have this power or the other power. In other words, we would be sent hunting around the woods of the provinces with an old flint-lock musket with more powder in the pan than in the barrel, looking for our rights as a temperance party. That is a nice position in which to put the temperance men of this country, looking around the provinces for our rights. I consider it is only to help hon. gentlemen out of the position they are in, that is all. They stand face to face with an outraged public opinion. No matter what they say about the mandate of the people, that is what it means, and no honest man can look at it in any other way.

They say: Oh, well, both parties are alike. Is that a fact? When they approached Sir John Thompson, the late Premier, what did he say? He was manly and above-board, he told them he could not hold out any hope that he could deal with the question on the lines that they suggested. Is that the way they were dealt with by hon. gentlemen opposite? No, they were dealt with in an insincere way, they were led on step by step right up to the threshold of a realization of their hopes, and then the door was closed in their faces and in the face of their party. Now, they say they are no worse than we are. There is no comparison at all in reference to the conduct of the two parties on this question. In the first place hon. gentlemen opposite are wont to make it a party question. There is no man in this House can get up and move a resolution in favour of prohibition without censuring hon. gentlemen opposite as a Government, and they know that, and they call upon their followers to vote it down. Why? Because it is contrary to their declared policy on that question. Was that the case when the Conservative party was in control? It was always treated as non-party question, every member of the House was at liberty to vote for or against it without feeling that he was voting against his party. But hon. gentlemen opposite have fixed it so their friends cannot vote for prohibition without censuring them. I am willing to admit that it is a difficult thing to raise one question upon which you can hold men away from all other questions, and get them to think that it is more important than everything else. I do not share the sentiment expressed by the member who moved the motion for prohibition when he condemned the party for being corrupt and all that. He knows more about gentlemen opposite than I do, and, perhaps, he is correct so far as they are concerned, but it does not apply to this side of the House.

Now, I want to say that while there is a strong sentiment in this country in favour of prohibition, there are a great many moderate-minded men who are not extreme on any question; and I believe that if a law was enacted in this House it would have to be such a law as would gain the support of that element in the country. I believe if ever we are to have a prohibitory law it will have to be on those lines, and of such a character as will appeal to the honesty and good intentions of that class of people in this country. I venture to say that the men who stand up and contend that we cannot pass that law in this country and enforce it, do not understand the make-up of the Canadian people. I believe if that law was placed on the statute-book to-morrow, there is moral stamina enough in the Canadian people to enforce it.

I venture to say that the Government, while they have invited the people to pronounce on this question, are now anxious to evade the responsibility which the vote has placed upon their shoulders, and I will vote against any resolution which proposes to remove that responsibility from the shoulders of the executive of this country who have asked the people to pronounce upon it. They have pronounced upon it, and now let that responsibility rest with the Government who sought the verdict. The temperance people of this country are in earnest, and I believe that those who think they can trifle with the temperance element of this country are making a great mistake. I believe further that the temperance people of this country will demand at the hands of hon. gentlemen opposite what their vote on the plebiscite asks for, and they will demand it by their actions in the future. This Government will have to stand at the bar of public opinion, and they cannot get away from it. There was never a set of men on the Treasury benches that were so anxious to get away from themselves as hon. gentlemen opposite. Their whole effort has been to get away from themselves since they became a Government, to get away from the promises that they have made, to get away from what they led the people to expect of them if they got into power. What does this hon. gentleman's motion mean? In the hands of hon. gentlemen opposite it don't mean anything. It says there must be a vote of the people. They are very anxious to have a vote of the people. They have had votes of the people on several occasions in different provinces. Manitoba, Ontario and other provinces have had plebiscites, and that is all that they have had. They have had a vote in the Dominion, and that is all that they have had. The hon. gentleman who moved this resolution, says :

The Act prohibiting such sale should not come into force in any province or territory unless and until a majority of the qualified electors therein, voting at an election, shall have voted in favour of such Act.

Well, supposing the Government say the vote does not justify them in bringing the Act into force. The Governor General in Council must pass upon it. Is there any qualification as to whether this vote shall be a mere majority or not? They are turning the whole question into a voting machine. They want the people to vote, and that is the end of it. I venture to say that the executive of this country are charged with that responsibility, and they should carry it out. We do not know that the Government are going to commit themselves to the resolution of the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint), but judging from the remarks of the hon. gentleman who moved the resolution for total prohibition, they are not. I do not know as they are going to commit themselves to anything. But I say that the people have committed them to a line of action, and they must take the responsibility of refusing to carry it out, and no motion their friends can make can pull them out of that position. I have only this further to say, that I am a prohibitionist, and I will vote for a prohibitory law, pure and simple, under proper conditions, proposed by any Government; but I am not going to vote for any resolution which proposes to give us a doubtful provincial prohibition, and throw the whole question into confusion, and bring it into disrepute in this country.

I hold the view strongly that if we are ever to have prohibition in this country we must get it within the next few years, because we are bringing into this country a foreign element who have habits altogether different from our own, and as the country fills up largely with this foreign element, who have habits different from our own in reference to this matter, the prospect of getting prohibition will gradually become more remote. The Minister of Agriculture took the position in 1884 that a prohibitory law would be an educator of the people. He does not talk that way now. He wanted to carry prohibition then because his friends were not in power; but he does not want to educate people that way now, he has changed his mind in that respect. I say that the proper way to do is for the executive to determine this question without a plebiscite at all, to take the responsibility of an Act, and stand or fall by it. It is about time that the people understood that the executive are responsible for such legislation. Now, I have only to say that I shall vote against the amendment, and I shall vote against every other amendment that comes up that would remove the responsibility from where it belongs, and that is on the shoulders of this Government.

Mr. T. D. CRAIG (East Durham). I have something to say on this question, but as the hour is late, I shall be as brief as possible, and shall confine myself closely to the subject. The hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Parmalee) said that he was sorry that political capital should be made out of this question. He said he thought it was an unfortunate thing that this should be done. That reminded me of the fact that when the Liberal party were in Opposition, they never ceased to make political capital out of this question, and that sometimes they gave the party in power a great deal of trouble. I find that, no matter what party is in power, they do not want to deal with this question, but they want to get rid of it, whenever they can. It is very difficult, in dealing with this question, to keep it apart from politics. That is something that we can hardly expect will be done. It is no use for the party on the other side of the House, if they have not carried out their promises, to say to the party on this side of the House: We did it as far as we were able to do it. I am not sorry that the Liberal party came into office. Some hon. gentlemen on this side of the House seem to think that I am not speaking sincerely, when I say that I am not sorry they came into power. But I am speaking sincerely, because I think, for a good many reasons, it is a good thing they came into power. It is especially a good thing because it lets the country see what these hon. gentlemen are. I do not say it is a good thing for the country, because I am not prepared to admit that. When the Liberal party were in Opposition, they made a strong impression on a good many people in the country because they claimed to be superior to the Conservative party. We all know that they claimed to be a pure party. I am not going to dwell upon this point, but I am saying that it is a good thing that they got into power. We now know that their claim to be a pure party is exploded, and I am sorry that it is exploded. Although I am a Conservative, the idea I had of them, from hearing it so constantly repeated, was, that perhaps they were a little purer than the Conservative party, but I have lost all faith in them. The "Globe" said, not long ago, that no party could now say: I am holier than thou. That is a great confession to make, because the "Globe" was continually claiming that the Liberal party were the pure party. I am sorry that idea has gone, but it has gone, and, after all, it seems to be a great pity that they did get into power, because the idea that they were a pure party is disappearing every day more and more from our view. The Liberal party claimed that they were the economical party. I need not say anything upon that point, when we have Estimates before us amounting to nearly $60,000,000. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) said something—I do not know what. He is an economical man, and if the Government would allow the hon. member for North Wellington to pare down these Estimates, he would get them down to $40,000,000. But they will not do that, and he has to sit there and support them, although they exceed the Estimates of any Conservative Government. They gave the idea that they were the low-tariff party, that they were going to relieve the people of taxation. That idea is all gone, too. They gave the people the idea, and they gave me the idea a little. I must confess that they were the temperance party of the country. That idea is fast fading away. We find to-night in this House a resolution introduced by the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint), for provincial prohibition, then an amendment made by one of the supporters of hon. gentlemen opposite, the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. McClure), in favour of total prohibition, and another amendment, against prohibition entirely. I think the Liberal party cannot claim that they are the temperance party. I am in favour of a prohibition motion, and I would be very glad indeed, if the Liberal Government would bring in a prohibitory law. I would be glad to support them, if they would do it. I know they are not going to do it, so that I think the idea has gone away from the country that they are the prohibition, or temperance, party. I do not say that I think the time for prohibition has come. But I do say, and I say it with all respect, that the Liberal party have been humbugging the people of this country on the temperance question. I suppose everything is fair in politics, but there is no doubt that they have been humbugging the people on this question to gain votes which they otherwise would not have gained, if they had not made these great professions about their temperance principles. What has been the history of the prohibition question in this House? A deputation came and waited upon Sir John Thompson at one time. He told that deputation frankly that he was not prepared to bring in a prohibitory law. I admired him for doing so in such a straightforward manner, and I know a great many men who did not belong to the Conservative party, admired him for the straightforward and manly stand that he took. But there is a striking contrast between the course of that statesman and the position taken by the Liberal party. Instead of taking that straightforward stand, they wanted the people to believe that it might be possible that they would get prohibition from them, and there is no doubt that Sir John Thompson, by taking that manly stand on that question, hurt the Conservative party amongst temperance people. There is no doubt that a great many people were offended at Sir John Thompson because he was straightforward and honest, when the deputation waited upon him, and that they voted against the Conservative candidates. Some of these temperance people said that the Conservative party were not in favour of prohibition, and the Liberal party derived great benefit from this circumstance. I am not going to discuss the question of the plebiscite as at great length as I otherwise would, if time permitted, but I may say that the Liberal party, in promising the plebiscite, did so to please the temperance wing of their own party. By doing so they gave the people the impression that they were a temperance party. The plebiscite, instead of being an advantage to the Liberal party, has really put them in a very awkward position before the country. As has been remarked by an hon. gentleman, it has been a boomerang; it has come back upon themselves, and if the Conservative party are now able to point out that they are in an awkward position with the temperance people, it is due entirely to their own fault. They adopted this plebiscite to get an advantage; but, instead of getting an advantage, it has placed them in a disadvantageous position with the temperance people. What is my position on the prohibition question? I stated it very clearly about a year ago in this House. While the Plebiscite Bill was being passed through this House, I asked the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) what vote would be required in order that the Government would feel called upon to pass a prohibitory law, whether a majority of the votes cast, or a majority of the votes on the list. I did not get any answer, but the right hon. Prime Minister, instead of answering, asked me what my ideas were. I said very frankly that I thought it should require a majority of the votes on the list. Some hon. members say: "Hear, hear;" but, in saying that, they condemn the course of the Prime Minister in not giving the same answer as I did. The answer that I gave did not affect anybody, but if the right hon. Prime Minister had said what I said, if he had said that that was his own view, it would have been straightforward, and the temperance people would have known exactly what was expected of them. There are some who say that if that answer had been given the prohibitionists would have thrown the whole matter up, and they would have been in the right if they did. If the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) had given a frank answer he would have acted the manly part as Sir John Thompson did when he announced his position on the question. To-day it has come to light that when the plebiscite resolution was passed at the Liberal Convention there was an understanding between the members of the Liberal party that unless there was a majority of votes on the list cast in favour of prohibition the Government would not pass a prohibitory law. No doubt, that was the case, and no doubt the Premier knew it, but why was he not frank to tell the people of the country about it. I am not blaming the Government for not passing the prohibitory law, because I say frankly and honestly that if I were in the Government I would not pass a prohibitory Bill or that plebiscite vote; but what I blame the Government for is that they did not honestly tell the temperance people of this country that they must get a majority of the votes on the list in favour of prohibition before such a law could be passed. The Government did not make that frank statement, and so they put the country to enormous expense for nothing, and worse than nothing, because I say that the consequences of the plebiscite vote and the action, or want of action, of the Government upon it, has thrown the cause of prohibition back for twenty-five years. It must have been because of political reasons that the Premier did not make a frank statement of his policy, and so we have politics introduced again, and party placed before the principle of prohibition. The temperance people of this country have a right to condemn the Government and the Premier for not being frank in this matter, and I believe they will condemn them. Again, we know that the vote on the plebiscite was in a great many cases political. I have been informed that the people of Quebec were told that if they voted for prohibition they would hurt Laurier and the Government, and they were urged not to do so.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Oh, no.

Mr. CRAIG. Well, I have a very strong idea that that was the case in Quebec. I was told by a Conservative friend in my own constituency that a temperance man, a Liberal, said to him: It is all very well for you to vote prohibition, but we are not going to put Laurier into a hole. The vote was political and it all goes to show the difficulty of separating this question from politics when the Government in power is opposed to prohibition, as this Government is and was opposed to prohibition. The Government were undoubtedly afraid that the vote might be large enough to compel them to pass a prohibition law, and so we found some of the Ministers and a good many of the Liberal members working against prohibition in Quebec. The Government were not frank with the temperance people, and it was not manly on their part to pretend to be in favour of prohibition when some of the Ministers went through the province of Quebec and worked against it. The prohibitionists of Canada are, of course, not satisfied with the course of the Government, and hence we find this resolution brought forward by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Flint) as a sort of way out of the difficulty. I do not say that those who support this resolution are not sincere, but I know that I opposed this idea of provincial prohibition at the Dominion Alliance, because I did not think it was at all practicable. I hold that this resolution is one way of killing prohibition for good. I know the gentlemen who support it are quite sincere, and I had a letter from one of my constituents asking me to vote for the resolution, but I cannot do so, because I believe it is not in the interests of the country, and is only calculated to kill prohibition. If it were passed there is no doubt in my mind that Quebec would vote against prohibition, and I have a conviction that even temperance people in Ontario, in view of the attitude of Quebec, would not vote for prohibition. I feel satisfied they would not, if they were assured that Quebec would not vote for prohibition. Again, although there is some provision in the resolution for enforcing it, we do not know who would enforce it. The Government in power is not in favour of prohibition, and why should they enforce it? I am satisfied that it could only be enforced if the Government were in favour of it, and even if the Government were in favour of it, it would be found most difficult to enforce it. My position is this: I would like to see prohibition, but I do not think the Government is called upon by that plebiscite to pass a prohibitory law. If this Government or any other Government at any time think the country is ripe for prohibition and move a prohibitory Bill in this House, I will support any Government in that. If the Government were in favour of prohibition then the Government would enforce the law, but it would be a farce to pass a prohibitory law if the Government did not enforce it. Mention was made to-night of the Scott Act being a failure, and there is no doubt that the reason the Scott Act was a failure in Ontario was because it was not enforced, and that the Government were afraid to enforce it because by doing so they would offend a good many of their own followers. The Government was not a prohibitory Government, and they were not anxious to enforce it, and they let the Scott Act enforce itself, and so it was not enforced at all. I am satisfied that instead of this resolution leading to national prohibition as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Flint) said, the tendency, if it were passed, would be in the very opposite direction. I am satisfied it will not pass, because the Government are against it, and if it were passed it would not be enforced by the Government, so that the result would be that it would injure national prohibition by disgusting the people of the country with its non-enforcement. The country is getting more temperate all the time, thanks to temperance work, and we are all glad to see that. A great many of us would be glad to see prohibition, but it is very doubtful if we ever shall. For my part, I shall keep total prohibition as my goal, and I will not consent to any filtering away of national prohibition by having prohibition in one province and not in another, and by having prohibition in one province not enforced, as it certainly would be, this condition would, in my belief, make the whole thing a laughing stock to the injury of the prohibition cause. Prohibition such as is proposed by this resolution would be a perfect farce.

I am not going to vote for the resolution of the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. McClure), because there is no probability of its carrying, and I am not going to vote for the amendment against prohibition either. I am going to vote against all three resolutions. I believe that if ever a prohibitory law is passed in this country it must come from the Government. I look on a great deal of this prohibition work in the House as a lot of humbug. There is no doubt that it is done to catch votes outside, and some of us are getting rather tired of it. Although in Opposition, and although I might use it against the Government, I do not intend to do so. I do not intend to vote for prohibition in this House, because I do not believe that the time has come for prohibition, judging by the recent vote.

Mr. J. H. BELL (East Prince, P.E.I.) Mr. Speaker, at this late hour of the evening, at this advanced period of the session, it is impossible to speak with much detail upon the important question now before the House. I represent a constituency in which, at the plebiscite, there were about eight votes to one, polled in favour of the total prohibition of the liquor traffic of Canada. Representing a constituency of that complexion, it is the imperative duty of a member to endeavour to carry into effect as far as possible the mandate of the people. Of course, he must needs look around him and observe the condition of things. Sometimes he finds himself unable to carry into effect the wishes of the people in their entirety. Then it is his duty to go as far in that direction as the reasonable circumstances of the case will permit. Let us inquire what are these conditions. What is the precise attitude of the Conservative party towards national prohibition? What is the attitude of the Liberal Government? What is the attitude of the Senate? And what is the attitude of the temperance people? Unless a representative takes these things into account, he cannot either vote intelligently or act efficiently.

Now, what is the attitude of the Conservative party? We may go back perhaps, to the resolution submitted by my hon. friend from York, N.B. (Mr. Foster). In 1884, that hon. gentleman moved a resolution which, without its preamble, is as follows:—

That the right and most effective legislative remedy for the evils of intemperance is to be found in the enactment and enforcement of a law prohibiting the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes.

That was carried by a vote of 122 to 40. There was a resolution moved by Mr. Thos. White at the same time to this effect:

And this House is prepared, so soon as public opinion will sufficiently sustain stringent measures, to promote such legislation, so far as the same is within the competency of the Parliament of Canada.

These two resolutions represent what might be called the high water mark of temperance sentiment as expressed by the Conservative party of Canada. They declared they were in favour of the principle of prohibition, and they said more. They declared that as soon as the people of Canada are ready for the enactment of a prohibitory law, they were ready to enact it. They went that far, but they went no further. Why do I say that? Because in the same year another resolution was moved in similar terms to that submitted this evening by the hon. member for Colchester. It was a resolution to the effect that this country is now ready for prohibition. That resolution, in a Conservative House, was voted down by 107 to 55. Afterwards, in 1892, a resolution was moved by Mr. Jamieson in this House favouring immediate prohibitory legislation. An amendment was moved by the member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster), to the effect that we are not sufficiently conversant with the state of public sentiment or with the manner in which prohibitory laws operate in other countries, and, therefore, it was advisable to have a commission appointed. That amendment was carried—that commission was appointed. It went around through this country and through certain portions of the United States, and took evidence. It took evidence from a few persons in this locality and that, and it came back and reported adversely to a prohibitory law, and adversely it would appear to the very principle of prohibition. That report seems to have been acted upon and adopted by the Conservative party from that time until the present. It seems to have been accepted as expressing the sentiment and conviction of the Conservative party in this House and in the country. We heard soon afterwards of a temperance delegation having waited upon Sir John Thompson, who answered the delegation in these terms: "A system of prohibition was out of the question, and could not be entertained by this Government."

We next hear of the matter in 1898, when a representative of the "Daily News" waited upon Sir Charles Tupper, the leader of the Opposition, who was then in England, for his opinion on the result of the plebiscite vote.

Question.—I suppose, Sir Charles, it may be taken for granted the recent plebiscite has, for the time being, put prohibition in Canada out of practical politics?

Answer.—Quite so. The result of the plebiscite is a serious blow to the prohibition movement. The diminution of the prohibition vote, as compared with the provincial vote of a few years ago, will certainly be used as proof that the demand for the prohibition of the liquor traffic has declined. There has been only one real attempt at prohibition in a self-governing province, and this was in New Brunswick. There it utterly failed, and it resulted, not in the destruction of the traffic, but in free trade in drink with all legal restrictions removed. The people were glad enough to repeal the law and get back to license.

There can be no doubt here of the ground taken by the leader of the Opposition on this question in a moment of sober thought. The prohibitionists of Canada had said: We have scored a victory in this plebiscite—look at our large vote. The leader of the Opposition says that it was a defeat, and not a victory. Temperance people say that the vote is large enough to justify the enactment of a prohibitory law. The hon. leader of the Opposition says that the effect of the plebiscite vote is to put prohibition for the time being outside the pale of practical politics. More than that, if I interpret his views aright, he goes to the extent of opposing the very principle of prohibition. However, I do not wish to push the argument to that extent. It is manifest, however, beyond all doubt that so far as the Conservative party and its leaders are concerned, while they have assented in this House to the principle of prohibition, and said they were ready to give it as soon as the people were ready to receive it, yet they declare that at present prohibition is out of practical politics. I am not here to denounce the Conservative party or their leaders for the conclusion at which they have arrived. I will even admit that, looking at it from the standpoint of their own party, from the rank and file of their supporters, nay more, looking at the matter from the stand-point of the interests of the country, they came to their conclusion honestly. Now, what is the attitude of the Liberal party? The Hon. Mr. Mackenzie, in 1878, was solicited to give this country prohibition. Petitions were sent into Parliament—more petitioners, actually, than voted at the plebiscite. Mr. Mackenzie himself was a prohibitionist, yet what was his answer? He said: Although I am a prohibitionist, yet I do not think the sentiment of the country is sufficiently matured for national prohibition. He gave them the Scott Act, a measure which was then accepted as a fair answer to the petitions, a measure which, wherever it has been put into effect, or attempted to be enforced, has been reasonably successful.

Reference has been made to Mr. Blake's speech in 1887, at Aylmer. He said on that occasion that he was opposed, not to the principle of prohibition, but to the expediency of its enactment. We did not then consider the sentiment of the country ripe for the measure. In 1883 we find the Liberal party dealing with the question. They complained of the course pursued by the Conservatives. The Conservative party had gone round in different sections of the country with a royal commission, and had asked selected witnesses what their opinions were. The Liberals said: That is not the proper way to gauge public sentiment; the proper way is to ask the people—the whole people. Every man has an equal right to show by his vote how he regards this great moral question. Put us in power, and we will test public sentiment, not by examining a witness here and another there, but by a plebiscite of the whole people. That is what they promised, and, when they got into power, they fulfilled that promise and submitted the plebiscite. We have now the returns before us. These returns show that 23 per cent voted in favour of prohibition, and 21 per cent against it. All the rest of the people did not care, evidently, whether we had prohibition or not.

There were then two problems presented to the Government. The first was, whether, under the vote it would be expedient to enact national prohibition. The problem presented itself in this form: You have a number of people in a settlement—say, 100 voters. Twenty-three favour prohibition; twenty-one are against it, and the remainder of the 100 do not care one way or the other. Under the conditions would it be wise, or expedient, or feasible to put a prohibitory law on the statute-books? The Government came to the conclusion that as this was a measure which, more than any other, depended on the force of public sentiment for its efficiency, it was not expedient to put the law on the statute-book. There was manifestly not such a preponderance of public sentiment to back it up as would ensure the success of the experiment. The Government were manifestly helped to this conclusion by the condition of things in the province of Quebec. The result of the plebiscite there, indicated that only eight persons out of a hundred voted in favour of a prohibitory law. Now, this consideration doubtless presented itself to the Government. What earthly chance was there of enforcing that law in the province of Quebec, when only eight persons out of a hundred are favourable to its enactment? There was still another problem presented. It was manifested by the vote in the province of Quebec, that one element of the population was almost unanimously opposed to prohibition. That was the French element. The question doubtless presented itself to the Government in this form: Is it expedient, is it wise, for us to create race animosity by forcing upon the French element of the province of Quebec a condition of things which they have said by their votes they abhor and repudiate. Some hon. gentlemen in this House contend that the vote in that province was not a normal one—that it was only accidental—that the French vote was so polled because the people were afraid to put Laurier into a hole. I would point this out, that although there were certain people in the province of Quebec who may have been afraid of putting the leader of the Government into a hole, yet on the other hand there was a considerable portion—but not the majority, who were very anxious to put him into the hole. That argument is not sufficient, therefore, to account for the fact that in the province of Quebec we have practically got a unanimous vote against a national prohibitory law.

I find also that the antipathy of the French people to national prohibition was not confined to the province of Quebec. In other provinces, wherever you have people of French nationality, you find them equally opposed to prohibition. It is argued that the vote in Quebec was due to certain members of the Government taking the stump against the measure. That cannot account for the vote throughout the whole of Quebec—much less for the French vote in the other provinces. There is another circumstance that leads to the same conclusion. In 1878 many petitions were presented to this House praying for national prohibition. The province of New Brunswick furnished 16,000 petitioners, and in 1898, 26,000 voters at the plebiscite. From Nova Scotia there were 13,000 petitioners, and of voters 34,000. But in Quebec there were only 14,000 petitioners, and 28,000 voters. This shows in the first place there was quite an advance in 20 years in prohibition sentiment in these provinces. But it shows also that in the province of Quebec the advocates of prohibition, though they tried their best to get signatures to petitions in favour of national prohibition, got only 14,000 names in 1878—not as many as there were from the province of New Brunswick, which has not more than one-fifth or one-sixth the population of Quebec. These figures indicate in a general way that the condition of prohibition sentiment among the French element has not changed—it was as hostile or indifferent to prohibition 20 years ago as it is to-day. I have no doubt that the consideration of these circumstances must have had its effect on the mind of the Government, and led them to the conclusion that it would not be expedient in the interest of the future of this country to antagonize the French people or create racial antipathies by enacting a prohibitory law for the whole of Canada, a law which those people have emphatically declared by their votes that they do not want. Now, Sir, I am not going to condemn the Government for the conclusion at which they have arrived. Looking at the question from the stand-point of party—regarding the party as an instrumentality for promoting our present and future welfare, and hence by all fair means to be perpetuated—viewing the matter in the light of the vote polled and also in the light of the conditions in Quebec, I believe the Government came honestly to the conclusion that it would be inexpedient to enact national prohibition. I was going to refer to the Senate, but I shall pass that with one remark. As the Senate is at present constituted, no general prohibitory measure that this House might enact would have the remotest chance of receiving the concurrence of that branch of the legislature. What now is the attitude of the temperance people of Canada on this question? Sir, they are divided. A large element say: We demand a prohibitory law in accordance with the plebiscite vote, and we will accept nothing less. But there is another large and respectable element who say: In view of the condition of things in Quebec and in view of the result of the vote as polled throughout the Dominion, we do not think it would be wise to try to force the hand of the Government to enact national prohibition. It would be safer and better, we think, to enact a measure providing a system of provincial prohibition—not as an end, but as a step towards ultimate prohibition—as a means to the end. Among those who hold views of that kind might be instanced the Dominion Alliance—a body of level-headed temperance reformers, who are supposed to represent and speak for all the provinces. That organization has come to the conclusion that it would not be wise, under present conditions, to enact a prohibitory law for the whole of Canada, including the province of Quebec. Now, Sir, look at the condition of things. Here you have the Conservative party of Canada opposed to prohibition. You have the Liberal Government reaching the same conclusion from different premises. You have the Senate hostile. You have the temperance people divided. Any practical man would be driven to the conclusion that it would be useless, under existing conditions, to advocate immediate national prohibition.

Well, what then? Are we to stop there? The people ask for bread. Will the Government give them a stone? Our temperance friends must remember that the distance between the condition of things that now obtain and national prohibition, is a long one. Is it proposed by this Government to assist the temperance people to pass a certain distance, along that road in the direction of national prohibition, or does the Government propose to place a sign-board right across the threshold of that highway upon which is written, No thoroughfare? I am aware that it is within the power of this Government to fold their hands and do nothing. It is possible to ignore the vote that was polled in the plebiscite election, when 276,000 persons demanded national prohibition. It is possible to ignore the fact that 43 of a majority of the constituencies voted in favour of prohibition. It is possible to ignore the hundreds and hundreds of petitions sent in to the Government since September last, praying that effect be given to the plebiscite vote. I say it is quite possible to ignore all these considerations, but I believe that this Government is too wise, is too closely in touch with public sentiment, is too keenly alive to the necessities of the case, to fold their hands and do nothing. I believe that it is desirable, that it is expedient, nay, that it is imperatively necessary for the Government to take some action in the premises.

Then, in what direction? The Scott Act was in force in Ontario for a number of years. It was afterwards repealed in every county in the province. The Scott Act has thus fallen into disrepute throughout Ontario, and in certain other portions of the Dominion, and I do not believe that it is possible to revive it or improve it so as to make it acceptable to the people. I do not think, therefore, that legislation ought to be along the line of amendment of the Scott Act. How, then, shall we take a step in advance? The answer is clearly indicated by the results of the plebiscite. You have, outside Quebec, a majority for prohibition of 107,948. Outside of Quebec, 64 per cent of the electors voted for prohibition and 36 per cent against it, or nearly 2 to 1. In Ontario the vote stood 3 to 2 for prohibition; in British Columbia, 5 to 4; in the North-west Territories, 2 to 1; in New Brunswick, 3 to 1; in Manitoba, 4 to 1; in Nova Scotia, 6 to 1; in Prince Edward Island, 8 to 1. Now, Sir, do these returns not clearly indicate in what direction legislation should be enacted? It seems to me that certain of the provinces are now ripe for prohibition; they are as ripe now as they ever will be this side of the millenium. This vote in the provinces indicates to the Government the direction of legislation, that is to say, prohibitory legislation in those provinces where sentiment is sufficiently matured to justify the hope that that law will be efficiently enforced. In other words, it is a proposition along the line of the resolution submitted by my hon. friend from Yarmouth.

Now, Sir, I would like to point out and emphasize this fact, that there is no principle embodied in these resolutions which is not found in legislation already upon the statute-book—on precedent already well established. The first principle is that this law is not to go into effect in any part of Canada unless, and until a certain contingency arises. We might pass the law in this Parliament, but that would not give it vitality, that does not bring it into effect. Another event must happen outside of this Parliament to bring that law into force. The second principle is that there must be a majority of those who polled their votes at an election in favour of the measure before it comes into operation in a particular province. Now, these two principles are to be found in the Scott Act, and in the Dunkin Act. The principles of such laws have been submitted to the highest court in the realm, and have been adjudicated upon by the Privy Council of England, and declared to be within the legislative power of the Parliament of Canada. But there is a third principle that appears to be novel, and yet, as a matter of fact, is not so. That is the proposition asking this Parliament to deal with and prohibit not only the sale of intoxicating drinks, but their importation and manufacture. Where have we precedent for dealing with and prohibiting the importation and manufacture? Look back to 1873. There you will find an Act of this Parliament affecting the North-west Territories—affecting territory as large as Europe. That Act remained upon the statute-book of this country for twenty years. That Act was never questioned, it was always held to be constitutional. That Act prohibited not only the sale but the importation and manufacture of intoxicating drinks; it prohibited the importation, not only from the United States, and from abroad, but from any of the other provinces of Canada into these territories. So now you have precedents established by the law of Canada covering every feature and principle of the resolution proposed by the hon. member for Yarmouth. The question has been asked: Why do you come to this Parliament for legislation? Why do you not act as they are proposing to do at this moment in the province of Manitoba? Why not go to the local legislatures for your prohibition? That is a very fair question and deserves a moment's consideration. Why? Because, in the first place, it is very doubtful whether the local legislatures have the power to deal with this question—even with the sale of intoxicating liquors, within provincial boundaries, not to speak of the matter of manufacture or of import. But, are you not aware that there are persons in high authority, even the hon. Minister of Justice himself, who has expressed an opinion that the local legislatures have the power to deal with this matter and to absolutely prohibit the sale of intoxicating drinks within provincial boundaries? I am quite aware of that. But there are other persons in this Dominion whose opinion is entitled to considerable weight and who have given an adverse opinion. There is Mr. S. H. Blake, whose opinion is entitled to respect; there is Mr. J. J. McLaren, of Toronto—the gentleman who argued this question before the Privy Council—who knows, or ought to know, as much about the question as any other man in Canada. Both these gentlemen have come to the conclusion that it is very doubtful whether the power to control the sale of intoxicating liquors, especially sales by wholesale and sales where some element of the purchase may have been made outside the province is vested in the local legislatures. I would like to put this matter at rest by quoting one or two sentences from the decision of the Privy Council itself. The first question submitted to their adjudication was this :

Has a provincial legislature jurisdiction to prohibit the sale within the province of spirituous, fermented or intoxicating liquors ?

Instead of answering this question in the affirmative or the negative, the Privy Council say this :

These questions are in their nature academic rather than judicial—better fitted for the consideration of officers of the Crown than courts of law.

The replies will necessarily depend on the circumstances in which they may arise for decision. These circumstances are in this case left for speculation.

It must, therefore, be understood that the answers which follow are not meant to have, and cannot have, the weight of a judicial determination, except in so far as referred to in the opinions expressed in discussing the 7th question.

It is quite clear, and it will appeal to the mind of the professional man and layman alike that the judgment of the Privy Council is not conclusive upon that point, but rather leaves it in doubt, so that, when you ask me the question : Why do you come to this Parliament for your law, I have already answered you. We come to this legislature because we come to a source of power that is constitutional—that is admitted to be constitutional—that has been decided to be constitutional by the highest court in the realm. It is highly desirable that we should have a law uniform all over Canada. We cannot have that uniformity unless the statute emanates from this Parliament. We have the Scott Act in force in several of the provinces. It is not expedient to repeal the Scott Act, but only to suspend it pending the fair trial of provincial prohibition. That suspension can only be effectuated by this Parliament. Then again, we want to make the future law more efficient than the old Scott Act. That we cannot do unless we have a federal statute. There is a stronger reason than any I have yet indicated, and it is, that we come to this Parliament to ask for a prohibitory law which will deal with and control the manufacture and import of intoxicating drinks. No restrictive measure that does not cope with the manufacture and import can possibly be satisfactory or successful. It must get at and stop the source of the supply. What is our experience in Scott Act counties ? In my own riding, for instance, a dealer in Summerside can import all the liquor he desires. He imports it ostensibly for legitimate purposes, but in reality it is intended for distribution and illegal sale. As long as this condition exists, as long as the people are brought into contact with liquor, as long as the appetite has convenient opportunity to be satiated, just so long will all restrictive or prohibitory laws be violated. Unless your Act can be made far-reaching enough to deal with the question of supply and to control it, it is absolutely useless and absurd to talk of the enforcement of any prohibitory liquor law. The constitutional right of this Parliament to deal with the matter of import from one province into another has been brought into question in this debate. The section of the Confederation Act bearing upon the point has to deal solely with the imposition of duties. It has nothing to do with the restriction or prohibition by this Parliament of the products of one province passing into the other. It merely prevents one province placing a duty upon the imports of another. That was the difficulty that had to be contended with at confederation, and that was the difficulty which was obviously intended to be remedied, and was remedied by the British North America Act. I could give other reasons for arriving at the same conclusion ; reasons that would be equally sound, but I do not wish to trouble the House with them at this late hour.

Before I conclude my remarks, however, I wish to deal with a subordinate phase of this question, yet equally important with the resolutions themselves. Our temperance friends are obliged to grapple with the vendors, whether we have national or provincial prohibition. I should like to receive from the members of this House some suggestions as to how we can best put the legitimate sale of liquor in the provinces where this Act may be brought in force, under efficient control. By legitimate sales I mean for medicinal, sacramental and mechanical purposes. The great difficulty at the present time is, that the vendors make a profit from the sale of liquor. They violate the law because they are tempted to increase their gains. Is it possible to eliminate the element of profit. Permit me, Sir, to make a suggestion along this line. What is to prevent the Government of Canada taking the absolute control of providing the liquor for sale for legitimate purposes ? They could obtain the liquor either by importing it or by purchasing it from the manufacturer, or from both sources. Why not give to the Government the monopoly of purchasing from the manufacturers. Then all liquors not sold by the manufacturers to the Government would have to be sent abroad, or into some portion of the Dominion where the Act was not in force. The Government might also have the monopoly of the import for legitimate purposes into that particular province where the Act would be in force. I can see very many reasons in favour of a proposition of that kind, and very few against it. Suppose the Government had absolute control of the supply of liquor ; they would then put it in packages for the purpose of distributing it to these vendors. These packages would be of different kinds and sizes. They would be sealed with the Government seal ; they would be stamped with the Government stamp, and the prices at which they would be sold would be marked on them. From what source would you pay the salary of the vendors ? They would be paid, not as heretofore out of the profits of their business, but they would receive a fixed sum, and that could be reimbursed to the Government out of the profits of the business. The element of profit to the vendors would be thus eliminated. And, Sir, other benefits would arise from a system of that kind. It would give to those who require to use liquor a safeguard that the liquor would be of pure quality and not adulterated—which is often now the case. That is well worthy of consideration. The Government would give out so many packages to be accounted for by the vendors and the vendors would make their returns accompanied by all certificates under which sales were made. In that way the Government would have the legitimate sale of liquor under perfect control. More than that, the Government would be able to control in this manner the illegitimate sales of liquor. The liquors would, as we have observed, be placed in packages sealed with the Government seal and stamped with the Government stamp. All other liquors in the country would be contraband. It would thus be easy for the Government and its officers and for the public to distinguish between liquor that is legitimate and that which is illegitimate, and in that way the enforcement of the law would be made easier. When liquor not so stamped and sealed was found in possession of any person he would be heavily fined and the liquor confiscated. Under such a system there need be no increase of officials—no increase of cost to the Government. The system might and should be made perfectly self-sustaining. Out of the profits of the business the Government should recoup themselves and pay the duty—pay the vendors' salaries, and pay the salaries of inspectors to enforce the law—should the fines be insufficient for that purpose.

I do not think, however, that on a question of this magnitude and importance it would be wise to legislate hastily. Therefore, while I am in favour of the propositions involved in the resolutions submitted by the hon. member for Yarmouth, at the same time I am of opinion that in view of the constitutional questions and other considerations involved, and because this session is now nearing its close, it would be wise to postpone legislation for the present. By next session the Government and the members will have had time to consider every phase of the question, and will then, I trust, be prepared to legislate along the line of these resolutions.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). Mr. Speaker, before the question is put, I desire to say a very few words, and I promise not to detain the House very long, upon the important subject which has been brought before us. I do not intend to enter upon a discussion of the question of prohibition at large, nor do I intend to discuss at any length the record of the two political parties, nor the record of individuals, upon that question. I only desire to say a few words expressive of my own opinion in regard to the duty of the House with respect to the propositions which have come before us. I may say that I have been all my life an abstainer from the use of intoxicating liquors, and, since I have been of years sufficient to enable me to form opinions on subjects of this nature, I have been a strong advocate of the prohibition of the traffic in intoxicating liquors. As time has gone on, my opinion on that subject has not altered, but, rather, has become greater. I would be as strongly desirous as any member of this House, or any citizen of Canada outside of this House, of supporting a measure for the total prohibition of the traffic in intoxicating liquors, if I were able to come to the conclusion that such a measure could be adequately and properly enforced in the Dominion of Canada. A good deal has been said by various gentlemen about the attitude of the Government on this question. So far as I am individually concerned apart from my position as a member of the Government, I am perfectly free to express my opinion without feeling that I am in any way, expressly or impliedly, bound to take any particular course. My constituents and my friends, political and otherwise, have long been aware of my opinions on the subject; but I have never made my opinions on this subject my political stock-in-trade, nor have I ever, so far as I am aware, sought for any political support on that ground. I am, of course, bound by my position as a member of the Government, to act in accordance with the declarations of policy which have been authoritatively made by the Government or by the Prime Minister, representing the Government. It does not seem to me that there will be a very great difference of opinion in this House in regard to the actual question, as to whether the action of the Government, and the attitude it has taken upon this question, are the correct action and attitude or not. Even my hon. friend from East Durham (Mr. Craig), who does not, I am sorry to say, agree with everything the Government does, is not prepared to say that the Government was wrong in coming to the conclusion at which it arrived, not to introduce a prohibitory law. I cannot find that the Government is open to any charge of deceit or improper conduct in agreeing to submit the question of a prohibitory law to the people. I am not going to discuss that question at any length; but I have heard nothing that convinces me that there was anything worthy of condemnation in the resolution taken by the Liberal Convention in 1893, and in the action taken by the Government in carrying out the pledge that was made to the country, when the platform adopted at that convention was promulgated. The pledge has been carried out—there is no dispute about that; the vote has been taken—and it seems to me that the only practical question before us in regard to that particular phase of the question is, whether the vote did actually require the Government, in pursuance of its duty to the people, to introduce a measure of national prohibition. I need not repeat the reasons which were given by the right hon. Prime Minister, in the published letter which gave the reasons of the Government for coming to a negative conclusion on that question. If any fault is to be found with that letter, it would be in the fact that there was one phase of the result which, if I recollect aright at this moment, was not elaborated in it. If we consider the fact that of the two great provinces of the confederation, Ontario and Quebec, one voted by an overwhelming majority against prohibition. I think every man of experience in public life, every man who has given any careful thought to the question of the administration of our laws, will arrive at the conclusion at which I have arrived, that it would be the height of legislative folly for this Parliament to undertake to impose upon that great province a law which it had by an overwhelming majority declared itself opposed to. I do not think that any member of this House, on giving the matter careful consideration, will be prepared to say that, under such circumstances, there would be a reasonable prospect of success of the enforcement of that measure. When we carry ourselves forward intellectually to the position in which the government of the province of Quebec, charged with the administration of a prohibitory law, as it would in all probability be, or the position in which the Government of the Dominion would be placed, if it were charged with the enforcement of the law, should a prohibitory law be passed, in enforcing that law in a province in which the overwhelming majority of the people had declared themselves to be opposed to it, and in which the opposition to it was of more than usually strong and determined a character, we must, as sensible men, called upon to legislate, not on theory, but with a view of the practical conditions with which we have to deal, admit that it would be the height of legislative folly to undertake to impose on that province a law to which it had declared itself to be so overwhelmingly opposed. Let the members from the province of Ontario suppose that the conditions were reversed, and that the great province of Ontario had voted against the proposition for a prohibitory law in the same proportion as did the electors of the province of Quebec. I venture to say that there is no man experienced in the public affairs of this Dominion, and the public affairs of the province of Ontario, who would not say that it would be the height of folly to attempt to enforce that law upon a province in which an overwhelming majority of the electors had voted against it. It seems to me that that position hardly admits of argument; and when we find a man like the hon. member for East Durham, not wishing to excuse the Government, and still saying that he does not see that the Government is to blame for not introducing a prohibitory law, we see that there is no argument in regard to that question, when we address ourselves to it as a matter of practical legislation. The position in that respect, would be intensified somewhat by the fact that the particular province which voted so strongly against the proposition for a prohibitory law, was a province different in race, and to some extent in religion—though that, perhaps, has nothing to do with the argument, and need not be mentioned—from the other provinces of the Dominion.

The province of Ontario, perhaps, might not feel so hard at being over-ruled by the other English-speaking provinces, but the people of the province of Quebec would be more than human if they did not feel their opposition to such a law intensified by the fact that it was enacted at the request or upon the demand of all the other provinces, in which the inhabitants are largely of a different race and language. There is no use talking about theory with regard to this matter. I challenge the most ardent prohibitionist, in dealing with practical legislation, that it would be wise or statesman-like to enact such a law under the circumstances. If that be the case, what are we to do? I do not believe that because such is the conclusion to which I am compelled to come, this Parliament, therefore, should take no action. I do not think it has been by any means conclusively established by experience that measures of local option are altogether inefficient—although we know that the degree of success in the enforcement of prohibitory laws has varied largely in different states of the union—yet I do not think it has been a failure and I do not think that this House would be justified in saying to the people of the provinces, who voted in favour of prohibition, that they were not capable of judging the situation. My province, by the great majority it polled in favour of a prohibitory law, merits and demands some recognition at the hands of the Parliament of Canada. No doubt, hon. members from Ontario feel the same way with regard to their province. I see no reason why this Parliament should not initiate and pass legislation which would give the people of each province an opportunity of placing upon the statutes a law which would carry out their wishes on this question. If such a law as is suggested by the hon. member for Yarmouth were placed upon the statute-book, I believe that in six months from the time the opportunity was given to Manitoba to secure the benefit of such a law, the necessary vote would be taken and a large majority polled. I have no doubt that any majority which the statutes might require in reason would be polled in favour of such legislation and a law put upon the statute-book and enforced with a very reasonable degree of success. I feel strongly that we are bound, in view of the expression of opinion given in a proper, legal and constitutional way, to give some effect to that expression of opinion, as practical men having in view the enforcement of the law itself. I see no reason why in the province I represent, such a law could not be enforced. I am not perhaps as good a judge of the province of Ontario or the maritime provinces, but I do not see why such a law should not be enforced as well in those provinces. In view of the expression of opinion given, I see no reason why this Parliament should not give the people of the various provinces the opportunity of having such a law on the statutes if they so desire. I do not intend to address the House at length. I cannot vote for the amendment of the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. McClure), for the reason I have given, and therefore do not think it would be wise or statesmanlike to express the view the hon. gentleman has expressed in this resolution. The motion which the hon. member for Shefford has placed before the House expresses a sentiment substantially correct, but I cannot support that as an amendment to or substitution for the motion of the hon. member for Yarmouth. So far as I can, I shall give the motion of the hon. member for Yarmouth a hearty and welcome support. I am bound to say that there are some details in the motion to which I would not like to hold myself committed; but it is not necessary to discuss these at length, for the principle of the amendment is one to which I can give hearty support.

Mr. URIAH WILSON (Lennox). The argument of the hon. Minister of the Interior amounts to this, that there is a stumbling-block in the way of prohibition, and that one of the provinces which is opposed to that policy, must be considered and allowed to control the others. So far as the motion of the hon. member for Yarmouth is concerned, which he says was approved by the Dominion Alliance, I believe there was a meeting of the Alliance called and a committee appointed to draft a resolution. The Liberals went in to shield the Government, and the others were not very anxious to shield them, and this resolution was the outcome. But I have the authority of a gentleman who acted many years as secretary of the Alliance, that he was entirely opposed to the resolution. I refer to Mr. Carson, who told me I might use his name publicly for that purpose.

There were some remarks made by the hon. member for Prince (Mr. Bell) that I wish to pay attention to, because they were unfair and uncalled-for. He says that the Conservative party are opposed to prohibition. So far as my knowledge goes, that is entirely untrue. The Conservatives are just as much in favour of prohibition as the Liberals. The Liberals profess a great deal, but the difference between them and the Tories is that when a Conservative tells you he will do anything he generally does it, but when the other people tell you, you do not know what they may do, but they are more than likely not to do it.

The hon. gentleman made a reference to the Senate which was altogether uncalled-for. He said that we might pass resolutions and enactments to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors, but they would be blocked in the Senate. I do not think he has any authority for saying that or that he ought to have said it.

There is one thing I am particularly struck with, and that is the declaration made by every Liberal who has spoken on the question, that they are not bound by the vote on the plebiscite. Is not that a farce? They asked for a vote of $250,000 to submit the question to the people. What for? That whether the people voted or not, prohibition would be as remote as ever, for if we can judge from what took place, unless 50 per cent were polled of the votes on the voters' lists, there would be no prohibition. That was most unfair. I remember when the right hon. First Minister was questioned very closely, as the Bill was going through, on this point, he would give no information. He would not say what majority he would require.

The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) says he is prepared to support the resolutions of the hon. member for Yarmouth, which provides that if the vote is carried in any province, though only by a bare majority, that province will be given prohibition. But he is opposed to prohibition for the whole Dominion, because one province did not give a majority for it. But might it not easily occur that one part of a province would be opposed to prohibition and the other favourable to it, and would not that be just as great a hardship in the working out of a prohibitory law in that province as the opposition of one province would be to its working out in the Dominion. When these gentlemen came to power in 1896, I believe that all their majority came from the province of Quebec. Did anybody rise in this House and say that the Government ought not to take office. No, what we want to cultivate is the feeling that we are one people, and that whatever the majority says will be law. I find that many people were of the opinion that nothing would come of the plebiscite, no matter how they voted. Those gentlemen who know most about the province of Quebec, know that there was quite as much politics there as temperance in the vote on prohibition.

I believe that in that great province the people who are opposed to prohibition went out and voted against the plebiscite, and that those strongly in favour of the Government went out and did likewise. I heard of a gentleman in Brockville who had been a life-long Liberal, a good Methodist like my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), and myself, who reasoned with himself: I have been a temperance man all my life, but I am afraid that if I vote "yea" in this plebiscite I shall put the Government in a tight fix. I will go home and not vote. And he went home and did not vote. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) said he was opposed to putting a temperance plank in the Liberal platform. That was a very extraordinary statement for that hon. gentleman to make to this House, in my judgment. I thought he was a man, if honest in his convictions as he appeared to be in this House, who would be prepared to sacrifice his political party to his moral and religious convictions. He has been a temperance advocate all his life—at any rate, ever since he came into this House. But I must say that I have noticed a difference in him in the Alliance since this Government came into power as compared with what he was before. Before this Government came into power he was strongly in favour of prohibition and was prepared to push it to an issue. But since his Government assumed office he has been prepared to make excuses, and when the plebiscite came on, he was prepared to have it submitted to the people, putting in what it would cost, and so on. I heard him say so, and that is why I believe it. A good deal of fault has been found because the late Government appointed a commission to go through this country and other countries to find if it was desirable to have prohibition or not. The hon. member for North Norfolk says that commission cost $125,000. And in the face of that these gentlemen went and ordered a plebiscite to be taken, at a cost, as they estimate, of $250,000. There is just this difference between the two parties in these cases: The commission was appointed and did its work, and I have it on good authority that Sir John Thompson said he would abide by the finding of the commission, be it what it might; and if their finding was in favour of prohibition, he would enact the law, and if the people did not approve of him they could turn him out. But the plebiscite was ordered and taken, and a majority of 14,600 was rolled up in favour of prohibition; and instead of these gentlemen obeying the orders of the people and doing as they were expected to do, they say they will do nothing.

Now, I want to read a little from this report of the Liberal convention—it comes in very useful just now. In the first place, I want to read what the leader of the Government said, to show that he ought not to have the plebiscite because he had all the knowledge that was necessary on this subject without it. He said:

You are aware that two years ago, against our protest, however, the Government of the day appointed a commission to investigate the liquor question, not only in this country, but in other countries as well. This was done against our protest. We believe—I still believe, for my part—that we have all the information we require on which to form an opinion on this subject.

If the hon. gentleman had that much knowledge then, he ought to have told his colleague who submitted this resolution to council to commit the party to a plebiscite that we had all the knowledge that was necessary. And the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) said that he agreed with the First Minister on that occasion. The hon. member for Yarmouth said this afternoon that we should be backed up by strong public opinion before we enact a law to prohibit the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors. I think if the hon. gentleman had evidence enough in 1896, when he moved the resolution for prohibition in this House to convince him that there was public opinion strong enough at that time to back up that measure, he has evidence that that sentiment still exists. I am sorry that the hon. gentleman allows himself for the Alliance or for anybody else, to waver from his position, and come in with a wishy-washy resolution instead of one straight for prohibition:

If there was one evidence in favour of the National Policy, previous to its being brought forward as a legislative measure, we have a thousand evidences of public opinion in favour of a prohibitory liquor policy. I think that the signs throughout the country pointing to the fact that the people generally favour a liquor law, are stronger than those in favour of any other legislation ever brought forward.

This is taken from the speech delivered by the hon. gentleman in this House on the 12th February, 1896, and reported in "Hansard" at page 1655. He says further:

The argument that public opinion is not strong enough to enable such a law to be carried out is not well founded. The law-abiding character of our people is sufficient guarantee that such a law would be effectively and successfully administered.

As to the feasibility of a prohibitory law, and results show that a strong degree of popular favour is behind that proposed law. In previous debates the numbers have been alluded to, but I think it would be proper to refer to them again, in order to press on the House the favour with which it has been received. In 1892, Manitoba declared in favour of prohibitory law by a majority of 11,592. In the same year the province of Prince Edward Island declared by a majority of 7,226 in the same direction. The province of Ontario, by a popular majority, leaving out of account about 10,000 votes of women, who, under the Dominion Franchise Act, are not qualified to vote, of 71,527 declared that it also was in favour of the enactment of a prohibitory law. The province of Nova Scotia gave a large majority of 31,400 of the voters in that intelligent province in favour of prohibition.

Now, the hon. member for Yarmouth gave these figures to the House at the time I stated, in 1896. In addition to that we have had the plebiscite, and I could give some figures showing that in his own province the provincial plebiscite gave a stronger prohibition vote than the Dominion plebiscite. But there is another hon. gentleman whom I had the honour of hearing long before I was a member of this House. I happened to be in Ottawa, and I was in the gallery when that hon. gentleman delivered a speech. I refer to the Minister of Agriculture. You will find his remarks in the "Hansard," of 1884, page 982 :

There is another point which I now come to, and that is when we ought to prohibit. It is generally said that we should not prohibit until there is not only an evident desire on the part of the country for prohibition, but also that the country should be prepared to sustain the prohibitory measure and to assist in carrying it out. I believe this is, to a certain extent, true, and I believe also that one of the very best means of obtaining that happy period in the country's history is to commence prohibiting. I believe that the very fact that a prohibitory law is in existence is one of the very best educating powers in the community. I believe that, by the legislative action of Parliament, we may have a better influence upon the people of the country to bring them to that opinion than we can in any other way whatever. It is true that in years past moral suasion has been tried, and moral suasion has accomplished a great deal. Far be it from me in any way to detract from the noble efforts of those who have spent their time and labour in trying to improve the principles of the community upon this question, but I believe that, in conjunction with moral suasion, as an assistance and a help to moral suasion, it is absolutely necessary that the Government of the country should propose a law and should assist those who are trying this moral suasion to carry out the law and enforce it.

Now, I do not propose to find a great deal of fault with that hon. gentleman. I believe those were his honest sentiments at that time. He may have had reason to change his opinion since then but if he has changed it, I think it is since the plebiscite vote was taken, because I think that shortly before that time he made a speech in the city of Montreal, which was reported in the Montreal "Witness," of the 25th of February, 1897. It is such good reading that I am tempted to give you a few extracts from it :

The hon. gentleman, on being introduced by the president, Mr. J. R. Dougall, remarked pleasantly upon the coincidence that in the Federal Cabinet he represented both the temperance people and the agriculturists of the country. The strength of the temperance people would soon be tested in a notable contest ; but as for the agriculturists, he could say that he represented the most numerous body in the Dominion. And in dealing with this drink question, it was the country which was moral ; it was the country which was willing to do all in its power for its removal ; it was in the towns and cities they met with the most serious obstacles. It need not be doubted that he owed his position in the Federal Cabinet to the two elements mentioned ; and he might state that he was not the only Minister in the Cabinet who was interested, and deeply interested, in the cause of temperance. (Applause.) He had been a member of the Dominion Alliance for years ; he had been the president of the society ; he was still a member, and proud to be so. Owing to the multiplicity of his new duties and engagements, he could no longer accept official position in the society ; but his interest in it and the work which it represented was as strong as ever. (Applause.) * * * In previous plebiscite campaigns the issue was local ; this was Dominion ; it was largely a dealing with theory and principle ; it was well understood by temperance people, it was well understood by the liquor trade, that, whatever the result of the plebiscite, legislation would not follow upon the vote.

I do not know how he got that information. The Minister seems to have had it, but he did not communicate it at the time to any of the other temperance men. But the Minister at that time did not seem to take that view, for he said :

Now, let this vital difference be noted—if the temperance people won in this campaign, a prohibitory law would follow, and the liquor traffic would be killed in this country. (Loud applause.) * * * Could the temperance people win in this campaign ? "I say yes, emphatically," exclaimed Mr. Fisher, "if there be proper organization requisites. First of all, there must be organization. You can do nothing without organization."

Now, I was under the impression that that committed the Minister pretty strongly to prohibition ; and when he introduced his resolution into the convention I have no doubt in the world that he was sincere and honest, because I believe he has been a temperance man for a good many years. I think he tried to commit his party to the principle of prohibition, and tried to induce them to adopt it as a plank in their platform, and if the other temperance men had been as honest as he was at that time, he would have succeeded. The hon. gentleman has had a lot of difficulties, no doubt, and some people are unkind enough to say that he prefers office to principle. I would not like to go that far, because I do not think that is fair. Men get into tight places in official life. I have no doubt the Minister is still anxious to do what he can for prohibition, but he is not prepared to do it on the lines he used to be. That is the unfortunate part of it.

Now, I want to say something more about the province of Quebec. I have no feeling of hostility to Quebec as a province, only I say it is absolutely wrong that any one province should govern the whole Dominion. There was a large vote given in that province against prohibition, just as there was in the province of Quebec for the Government. They came into power with a minority of the votes polled, and not many said nay, although they had only 45 per cent of the vote cast. It has been stated over and over again by Mr. Spence and Mr. MacLaren that these gentlemen came to power in 1896 on a minority vote. Now, I wish we could get a straight vote on prohibition in this House. I am afraid there was a little understanding between the hon. gentlemen who moved these two amendments to prevent another amendment, because I noticed when the first amendment was moved the other hon. gentleman jumped up at once and insisted on having the floor, because he had his resolution all cut and dried. It did seem to me they were a little afraid that some other person might get in an amendment. I may be wrong, but that is the way it struck me. I am certainly in favour of prohibition, I am in favour of trying it. In my first campaign that was a test question, and I was foolish enough to take the same ground the Liberal party did at that time. I said I was in favour of leaving it to the people, and whatever the result was I was prepared to stand by it. I have taken that position now. The people have said they want prohibition, and I am prepared to say that so far as my vote goes here or elsewhere, it shall go for prohibition.

Mr. R. L. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). Before the vote is taken, I want to express my views upon this question, and, in doing so, shall not at this late hour occupy more than a moment or two. I may say, in regard to my position, that I take it that a representative is in duty bound to carry out in Parliament the views and desires of the people he represents. The majority of the people in the constituency which I represent, I believe to be in favour of prohibition. Prohibition, in the constituency of Lisgar, when the plebiscite was taken, had a majority in its favour of nearly 2,000. Therefore, I think it fair to assume that I have a mandate from the people of Lisgar to stand up in this House and vote for prohibition, even if I were opposed to the principle of prohibition, which I am not. If the people of a constituency are overwhelmingly in favour of a certain measure, and give a mandate, even if I did not believe in it myself, I would conceive it to be my duty to vote for that measure, or offer the constituency my resignation. That being the case, I stand here tonight prepared to vote in favour of the amendment presented by the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. McClure) in favour of total prohibition. Coming from the province of Manitoba, I may say that I am not a coercionist, and that I would not like to see the province of Quebec, which has voted so strongly against prohibition, coerced in this matter, and have prohibitory legislation forced upon it. But I am disposed to believe, Sir, notwithstanding all that has been said about the plebiscite, that the time is ripe for prohibition, at least in all the other provinces in the Dominion of Canada, except Quebec, and that there is a strong feeling amongst the people of Canada in favour of the total prohibition of the liquor traffic. I may say, that in my campaign I pledged myself to vote in favour of prohibition, if the matter came to a straight issue in the House of Commons. When the plebiscite was taken, I was not in favour of it being held at that particular period. I urged a great many of my temperance friends to use their best endeavours to induce the Government to delay the taking of the plebiscite until a general election was held, but they made no representations to the Ministry. I believe I am absolutely correct in saying that if the plebiscite had been held at the same time as a general election, we would have had such a majority rolled up in favour of prohibition that the Government would be bound to give effect to that vote. If a general election had been held a year ago, and the plebiscite had then been taken, we would probably have had by this time prohibitory legislation upon the statute-book. I listened with the greatest patience and attention to most of the speeches that were delivered on the question to-day, and I was greatly impressed with the manliness and frankness of the speech of the hon. member for Colchester. I must congratulate that hon. gentleman upon the fearless, frank and honest manner in which he expressed his views. Many hon. members may not agree with the position that he took, but there is no hon. member who listened to him who will not agree that he was at least in earnest. He took a strong, fearless position and he spoke with great frankness, when he said that the Government of the day is not a prohibition Government. With that statement I agree, and with his other statement, that the Conservative party is not a prohibition party, I also agree. The people of the country who desire prohibition, it seems to me, have very little to expect from either the Liberal or the Conservative party. They seem to occupy very much the same ground in regard to the question of prohibition. Therefore, in my mind, it behoves the temperance people of the Dominion of Canada to take note of this fact. If they desire prohibition, they must elect candidates pledged to vote for a prohibitory liquor law, and who can absolutely be relied upon to so vote in this House. I know of no other way in which prohibition can be brought about. And so long as temperance people who desire prohibition, set the example of talking prohibition on the platform, and voting for candidates who are not pledged to support prohibition, and who cannot be relied upon to vote for prohibition regardless of party considerations, just so long may they expect to be humbugged in the matter of prohibition. There is only one way in which the people can get rid of this traffic in intoxicating liquors, and that is by absolutely discarding political considerations, and voting in accordance with their principles. I entirely agree with the remarks of the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) in one particular, that if we had a prohibitory liquor law passed, as applying to the province of Manitoba, the sentiment of that province is so strongly in favour of prohibition that the law would be reasonably well enforced. Therefore, as I say, coming from a province so strongly in favour of prohibition, and representing a constituency which has pronounced by such an overwhelming majority of the votes polled in favour of that principle, I am prepared to vote in favour of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Colchester, in favour of the absolute prohibition of the liquor traffic.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle). Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of entering into the details of the question which has been submitted to this House. I want simply to say a few words in reply to the remarks which have just been made by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson). Of course, the hon. member is a better judge than anybody else can be of the mandate which he may have received from his constituents, and I shall say nothing upon that. But I will point out to the hon. gentleman that, when he says that he has received an imperative mandate from his electors to vote in favour of a prohibitory law, I am obliged to quote the figures which have been published in the official report. I believe that he is in the same position as all the other hon. members who represent constituencies that have given majorities in favour of prohibition, that is, he has certainly no mandate from the majority of his electors to vote for prohibition. I see by this return that the total number of voters on the list in Lisgar was 9,112, while the total number of votes polled in favour of prohibition was 2,289. This is less than one-quarter of the people, so that the mandate which has been given to my hon. friend to vote in favour of prohibition, is the mandate of less than one-quarter of his constituents. This is simply an illustration of the whole question, as it shows the position of hon. members representing counties like that of the hon. member for Lisgar. It is also an illustration of the fact that the Government has received no order from the majority of the electorate in this Dominion to introduce a prohibitory liquor law, and that the Government would not be justified in introducing such a measure, when only a small majority of the total number of voters and a minority of qualified electors have expressed their opinion on the question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Would the hon. gentleman allow me? I would state that the list which formed the basis of that vote is what we call in Manitoba a graveyard list of many years' standing, containing the names of hundreds of men who have left the constituency.

Mr. BOURASSA. At any rate, I am sure the hon. gentleman would not admit that he has over 4,000 people who are dead, but who, nevertheless, have the right to vote. However, I do not think it destroys the argument I am making, and it is, that the only mandate that any hon. member could have received from the county of Lisgar, and the only mandate that the Government could receive from the electors of Canada, must be a mandate coming from a straight majority of the electors. It has been said that the Government, when they came into power in 1896, did not have a straight majority of all the votes polled. That although the Liberal party had a majority of constituencies they had not a majority of the total vote. The questions are not the same. The representation for the House of Commons is not only based upon the majority that might be given by the total electors of Canada, but it is based on the majority of certain groups of people settled in counties and represented by one member each. It does not matter for the Government to know if there is a total majority of the electors of Canada that voted in favour of one party or the other, but it matters for the Government to know if they are supported by a majority of members elected by so many constituencies in Canada. In a matter of this kind, with a special question which has nothing to do with the general policy of the Government, which has nothing to do with the local interests represented in one county or a group of several counties, the only thing that can be taken into consideration is the total vote expressed in favour of that question. I hold that a question like prohibition must carry the majority of the total number of the electorate in Canada. And why? Because when the plebiscite took place at the request of a certain class of the people, the people who have asked for prohibition or the people who might ask for a plebiscite are supposed to give all the votes possible in favour of it, and all the votes that have not been polled cannot be interpreted, neither in favour of prohibition nor as neutral. They may be in favour of prohibition, but at the same time they do not take enough interest to go to the poll. I say that the vote that has not been polled cannot be counted in favour of prohibition. Supposing the Government would pass a prohibitory law, and in five or ten years hence the Government consented, on a demand being made, to grant a plebiscite to know if the majority wanted repeal of the law. I contend that then it would require a majority of the electors of Canada to repeal the law, because when the plebiscite is had, all the people that are in favour of the question put must vote, therefore, the votes that are not recorded cannot be interpreted in their favour.

Let me refer now to some of the statements made by the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Moore). I am perfectly surprised that a representative of the province of Quebec, a gentleman who knows well the feeling of the people of that province, who knows their high moral standing; I was surprised to hear him insinuate that frauds were committed in that province in connection with the plebiscite vote. I know that an argument has been made out of the fact that the day after the plebiscite some newspapers gave figures purporting to be of the supposed majority against prohibition in Quebec, and a week after it was found that the majority against prohibition in the province was much larger than at first supposed.

Some people have inferred from that, that the boxes were stuffed and that the vote was irregular. Well, that is a very strange argument. Suppose we use the same argument against the partisans of prohibition and what do we find? I remember very well that the day after the plebiscite was taken, the prohibition majority in Ontario was stated at 14,000, but day after day and week after week, it grew larger until it totalled up to 39,224. Would it be right to contend that in the province of Ontario, or in Nova Scotia, or in British Columbia, or in all the other provinces except Quebec, the vote was not honest, because it was found a week after the plebiscite that the majority was much larger than it was supposed to be the day after the plebiscite. That, therefore, is no argument to use against the province of Quebec, and those who are in favour of prohibition as well as those against it, ought be frank enough to confess it. I have only had a short time to inquire into the details of the plebiscite vote in the other provinces, but taking the report published by the Government and going over in a hurried way, I find some remarkable coincidents. For instance: I find that in the county of Frontenac at poll No. 20, the total names on the list were 74 and the total vote given was 60. That is a very large vote and much over the average given at the general election. Now, out of this total of 60 votes, 56 were given for prohibition. In the county of South Middlesex, poll No. 15, out of 89 votes on the list, 84 votes were polled, and 67 were in favour of prohibition. In the county of Muskoka, a large constituency where the distances are great, and where the vote is not generally very strong even in the bitterest party fight, at poll No. 14, out of 55 votes on the list 50 votes were polled and 47 were in favour of prohibition. In poll 40, 40 votes were on the list and 34 were polled, out of which 32 were in favour of prohibition. At poll 76, out of 63 votes on the list, 56 votes were polled and only 20 were against prohibition. Take the case of Prince Edward Island. I must confess that I had no time to go through the figures because in all the constituencies except King's, the figures for the total votes inscribed on the list are not given in detail but only the additions for the whole county. But in the one county of King's I find some remarkable voting. At poll No. 1, out of 105 votes inscribed, 87 votes were polled or supposed to be polled, and 84 of these were in favour of prohibition. At poll No. 6, out of 102 votes inscribed on the list, 92 votes were polled, and 80 in favour of prohibition. In poll No. 21, out of 109 votes inscribed on the list, 91 votes were polled, and 90 were in favour of prohibition. But the most remarkable of all was in poll No. 4, at that poll out of 105 votes inscribed on the list, 107 votes were given and out of these 107, 103 sober men voted in favour of prohibition. Then in Algoma, at polls No. 102 and 102-A, the total vote inscribed on the list was 10, but nevertheless 21 convinced prohibitionists went and registered their votes in favour of this high moral principle or more than double the total number inscribed.

Mr. BERGERON. That is the machine.

Mr. BOURASSA. In the county of Cardwell, at poll No. 4, township of Albion, out of 67 votes on the list, 67 voted for prohibition, besides 28 others who voted against it; or we had 95 votes polled with only 67 on the list.

Mr. BERGERON. That is the machine.

Mr. BOURASSA. Yes, that is one of the machines which hon. gentlemen know, but which they would not like to have to-night. In South Essex, at poll No. 22, seventy-two voters were on the list, and there were seventy-eight convinced prohibitionist voters, besides six who voted against prohibition.

Therefore, the gentlemen who have made so much of the voting at a few polls in the province of Quebec, where there was a very close vote, must see that the argument can be turned against themselves. But I do not want to use that kind of argument. I think I am broad-minded enough to say that on the whole the vote was an honest one, in the province of Ontario as well as in the province of Quebec, and throughout the Dominion. But one of the reasons why we could not form an idea of the exact majority against prohibition in the province of Quebec, and of the exact majority in favour of prohibition in the province of Ontario and the other provinces is this—that at the plebiscite the feelings of the people were not so much aroused as at the general elections. Therefore, even where the representatives were at the polls—and at many polls there were none—they did not take the trouble to see that the reports of the voting were sent by telegram soon enough to be announced immediately in the newspapers. I know that in my own county, where everything was done honestly, and where I took no part in the fight, leaving prohibitionists and anti-prohibitionists to vote as they liked; I only knew the result days after the voting had taken place. Very much the same was the case in many other parts of the province of Quebec. In the large centres, like Montreal and Quebec, where the news could be got very quickly, we knew the result on the following day; but in the large districts of Chicoutimi and Rimouski, as well as in Labelle and Pontiac, it took about a week after the voting to learn the result. So it is about time that on this as on every other question we should argue on a broader ground than that taken by the hon. member for Stanstead, and the other hon. gentlemen who tried to throw some suspicion on the voting in one province or the other. The hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Parmelee) has spoken of the people of the province of Quebec in language which I need not repeat. Hon. gentlemen who know the province of Quebec know that it is as respectable, I will not say more respectable, as that of any other province. The people of that province, especially the farming community, are one of the most sober populations that can be found in this or any other country. At the same time, I do not know of any class of people who are so reluctant to see any law adopted that might be against the liberty of any man. I will not say that our farmers are prohibitionists. They like to take their drink once in a while; but they know how to take it, when to begin and when to stop. They do not want to be interfered with in their liberty; and I am sure it is the same with most people in all the provinces of the Dominion. Of course, the prohibitionists were convinced, and they were ready to make the fight. I admire those who made it from conviction. I admire those on both sides of the Chamber who have spoken in favour of prohibition from conviction. I admire those who have stood by the mandate of the electors, if it is in accordance with their views. But even if the majority in my county were given in favour of prohibition, if it was not a majority of the electors of my county, I would not feel like voting for it, because the majority did not feel like going to the polls. If the people of the province of Quebec had thought there was anything really serious in this they would have given a vote that would have shown 150,000 majority against prohibition.

Mr. BERGERON. They were right; it was not serious.

Mr. BOURASSA. No, they did not think it was serious, because they could not conceive that it was possible to enact such a law. They could not conceive that it was possible that some people would try to prevent them using an honest thing in an honest way.

Mr. PRIOR. The hon. gentleman told us just now that there were 76 votes where there were only 70 names on the list. Could they do anything better than that, if they tried?

Mr. BOURASSA. I understand that the hon. gentleman is not able to discuss the question on any other ground than the narrow ground on which the hon. member for Stanstead has put it. I could say exactly the same thing of those twenty-one prohibitionists of Algoma, who voted at a poll where there were only ten who had a right to vote. I take the question as a whole. These are matters of detail, and such things have been found not only in the province of Quebec but in the other provinces. Therefore, there is no argument in that, and experienced men should not descend to such arguments. In the other provinces also, if the people thought that the majority of the votes polled would have been in favour of prohibition, I am convinced that many more would have gone and voted for prohibition, and would have relieved the conscience of the hon. member for Lisgar. Under the circumstances, I think the Government would not be justified in introducing a prohibitory law, and I think it is pretty safe that they will not do so.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assinibola). Mr. Speaker, the arguments that have been used on the other side to-night may fairly be described as excuses—I mean on the part of those speakers who have defended the Government, because it is quite clear as hon. gentlemen speaking on this side have shown, that the Government has to make its apology to the people of Canada in regard to this question. Take the kind of argument made by my hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa), who has just taken his seat, and by the Minister of the Interior. It is one that has no statesmanlike foundation whatever, and no foundation in constitutional conceptions of the workings of the state. Let us go to the country whence we get the word "plebiscite." How would the arguments that have been used by these hon. gentlemen respecting the size of the vote do in France? I have in my hand one of the most authoritative books written on France, a book written by Mr. Bodley. Dealing with the vote cast in France for the Government of the day, he writes as follows:

The political indifference of the French electorate is such that it is marvellous that scandals like that of Toulouse are not more frequent. Even there, in spite of the addition to the lists of 3,000 non-electors, who, doubtless, all went to the poll, nearly a third of the persons on the register refrained from voting. It is a significant fact that in the regions where the elections cause the greatest excitement, giving the impression that the entire population is interested in them, the abstentions are more numerous. The most turbulent election of 1893 was that of the Var, when Mr. Clémenceau lost his seat at Draguignan; but, though to assure his defeat, the forces of the boulevards were transported to Provence, the Department, which for a week was the talk of Europe, entered so tepidly into the fray, that only one-half of its voters went to the poll,—

So that in the most exciting election, with great issues at stake, only one-half went to the polls. If you were to apply the argument used by the hon. gentleman, the Government of the country could not go on. You cannot, from any statesmanlike point of view, accept the position taken by the Minister of the Interior or my hon. friend. In a constituency, at an election, you have not to do with the votes that are on the register, but with the vote that comes out at the poll :

—and in the next division, at Toulon, the deputy elected received only a fifth of the votes on the register. The neighbouring Bouches-du-Rhône is politically the most conspicuous of provincial electorates, yet the attraction of 74 candidates for 8 seats brought to the urns little more than half of its electors ; and at Marseilles, whose boast it is that on its Cannebière take birth the revolutions which convulse France, barely a quarter of the voters in certain divisions took the trouble to attest their progressive faith.

If when, on these occasions, barely a quarter of the electorate came out to vote, the French Government declared that they could not regard a man who had been elected by such a small fraction as elected, what would become of the administration of France ? If you were to apply closely the arguments used by these hon. gentlemen to the position of this Government in June, 1896, I am afraid it would be in very ugly queer street.

Bordeaux is a city of less exuberant manners, but it has continued its political prominence, which was its tradition even before the days of the Girondins. It was the last stronghold of Boulangism, and the final stand of that party made the general elections of 1893 of rare interest ; yet, in the three urban divisions, Republicans and Monarchists, Socialists and Boulangists, could not bring to the polls 55 per cent of the electors.

Yet we have an instructed gentleman like the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), who of course is a Frenchman, pure blood, lecturing us in regard to the management of this great institution, this great electoral system, in which certainly the Anglo-Saxon has some claim, and telling us that we have to look, not at the vote cast, but at the vote on the register.

This occurred again in 1896, when the moderate Republicans, who boasted that they were forming a new national party of order, sent to Bordeaux a retired ambassador to contest a seat. The prosperous and the industrious classes so little heeded the proffered honour that they let a Socialist win by the votes of little more than a quarter of the electors on a register of 20,000.

If there were any sense in the argument of the hon. member for Labelle, what was the French Government about in allowing the Socialists to win by a little more than a quarter of the electorate on a register of 20,000. The argument will not bear examination for a minute.

What occurred ? In all Canada the total number of electors on the list was 1,236,419, and the total number of votes cast 543,058, or something less than one-half. There was a majority in the whole Dominion in favour of prohibition of 12,916, but there was a majority of 94,032 leaving the province of Quebec out. Was there anything peculiar about Quebec ? I say there was. The Minister of Agriculture was quoted by my hon. friend from Lennox (Mr. Wilson) as saying that the people could regard the plebiscite as one that would result in legislation. The hon. Minister is on record in several places as having spoken in those terms. I have heard the organ of the most active Minister of the Crown, and a very able man who is now in Paris for his health, and whose health, I hope, will be greatly benefited. From the moment the plebiscite was launched, his organ assailed it vigorously. I have here "La Patrie," and if I turn to the number of the 26th July, I find a long leading article against prohibition. I find on the 3rd August, 1898, another strong article against prohibition. Here is a sentence : "We can assure our compatriots"—

Mr. BOURASSA. En Français.

Mr. DAVIN. No, I shall not give it in the original, for I am a little afraid that my hon. friend might, as he did the other night, find that my French offended his delicate tympanum, although he has an accent that is not pure Parisian, and that would make Edmond About start and gasp.

Mr. BOURASSA. I would not accept the judgment of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. DAVIN. I daresay not, because the hon. gentleman has a very good opinion of himself. "We urge our compatriots to vote against prohibition." On the 6th August, I find an article on "The plebiscite," again attacking prohibition. On the 16th August I find an article headed "The failure of prohibition," a long article of a column and a quarter in length, in which it is shown, or tried to be shown, how prohibition has failed wherever it has been tried. Again, on the 19th August "The example of Maine" forms the subject of an article, and my hon. friend the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Russell) is quoted as against prohibition. Then, again, on the 26th August, we have an article on "Prohibition in Iowa," and its hypocrisy in Maine, Iowa, and elsewhere is held up as a warning against voting in favour of the plebiscite. On the 12th September there is an article, "Pas de Politique"—"no politics"—and the "World," of Toronto, is quoted as having a despatch from Montreal saying that the French Conservative party in Quebec will vote for prohibition with the object of embarrassing the Government of Laurier. And the editor goes on to say that if the French Conservative party were to do that it is for the French Liberal party to vote the other way, and that will counteract the whole thing. What is the meaning of that but to raise party passions in the minds of the prohibitionists of Quebec and to show the Liberals amongst the prohibitionists that there was an organized scheme to embarrass the leader of the Liberal party and to hint to them : The proper thing for you to do is to defeat that Conservative move, and the way to do that is to vote against prohibition. Let us suppose for a moment that the claims of the Minister of Public Works as to his influence in Quebec are sound, that he can ring his bell and get the people to follow him as sheep follow a bell-wether. Then we may believe that the French Liberals who are devoted to prohibition went and voted against prohibition on political grounds, and if that was the case, the vote cast in Quebec must be considered a strong one in favour of prohibition. We come then to the 16th September, when prohibition is denounced as utopian. On the 24th September we have an article on the plebiscite, in which the writer urges the people not to lose sight of what a fiasco prohibition has been in Maine, Rhode Island, Vermont, Massachusetts and Kansas, and in every part of Canada where it has been tried, and urges them not to vote for it. The first article in the issue of September 26th is in the same tone, and on the 27th we have an article headed "The Plebiscite," also against prohibition. Then, we have an article in which the writer refers to the Minister of Agriculture as only representing one in the Cabinet on this question. My hon. friend from Lennox (Mr. Wilson) quoted the Minister of Agriculture as saying he was not alone in the Cabinet in his views on this question, when he was wooing the votes, politically, of the people of Quebec. Here we have the Minister of Agriculture quoted in this paper as saying he is the only one, and this is held up as we know it was elsewhere, to show that this was not a question in which any member of the Government took an interest except the Minister of Agriculture. Not only that, but the hon. Minister of Public Works made a speech—I cannot lay my hand on it at the moment—in which he declared that the plebiscite was never a plank in the platform adopted by the conference in Ottawa.

Mr. DUGAS. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend (Mr. Dugas) is from Quebec and knows that such a speech was delivered—it was notorious at the time. The way the Minister proved that this was not a plank of the conference at Ottawa was by saying that a large number of the people had gone away from the conference before that was brought before them. I was not at the conference, but this does not appear on the face of these proceedings, nor was it ever made to appear when these hon. gentlemen were seeking the votes of the electors. I have here a campaign sheet issued one or two years afterwards by a gentleman who is exercising great influence of a certain kind in the ranks of the Liberal party at the present time. It is headed "Dominion of Canada. Principles, policy and platform of the Liberal party," and it bears the name "Alexander Smith, secretary, Ontario Liberal Association, 34 Victoria Street, Toronto," and is dated January, 1895. The address to the reader at the beginning says, "This pamphlet is not for general distribution." Why not for general distribution? Because anybody who reads it will see that it was intended, not to meet the eye of those who could criticise it with knowledge of all the facts connected with the Liberal party. On page 5 of this pamphlet, after mentioning a number of questions said to be advocated by the Liberal party, we have this paragraph:

There are a number of other questions, such as temperance, the superannuation of public officers, the abolition of Government House, &c., on which the Liberal party has ranked itself in opposition to certain lines pursued by Conservatives.

What does that mean? That means nothing else but this—that the Liberal party had gone further than to say: We want a plebiscite. You know very well, Mr. Speaker, with your knowledge of politics, how that would strike the ear of any prohibitionist in Ontario or the west—the Liberal party has always ranked itself, on a question of temperance, against Conservatives, not on the plebiscite only, but for prohibition. That it was intended to deceive is palpable, because the abolition of Government House was never a plank in the Liberal platform. As the plebiscite was intended to catch prohibitionists, this abolition of the Government House was intended to catch the Patrons. Now, why do I speak thus?

Mr. McMULLEN. You can answer that.

Mr. DAVIN. What a ghoul that is waking up from his crass dreams of stupidity! what a wretched moral ghoul the member for North Wellington is, making a remark like that, meaningless, having nothing to it, coming out of the malignant recesses of a heart that has never been able to learn humanity, as long as he has lived.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman will withdraw the expression "stupidity."

Mr. DAVIN. Oh, well, I will withdraw it, and I will say the brilliant lights of intellect gleam upon that brow of his perpetually. Now, Mr. Speaker, why do I speak thus? I say the time has come when we have a Government that takes $250,000 to get from the people of Canada their judgment on a certain question. They get that judgment, and they were bound to take legislative action; they were bound, above all, not to take the course they are taking here tonight, trying to dodge it as much as they can. We had an argument addressed to the ex-Minister of Finance from an hon. gentleman opposite, in which he quoted what the ex-Minister of Finance said long ago, that it would require a large majority in favour of prohibition to warrant prohibition being enacted. But that argument will not help the Government. I remember well, when this vote for $250,000 was being taken, the ex-Minister of Finance and others appealed to my right hon. friend to say whether he would require an overwhelming vote, or what proportion of the total vote he would require, or whether he would require that every province should give a majority, and not one word could be got from the leader of the Government upon that head. Mr. Speaker, I say that in the judgment of the people of Canada, in the judgment of those who value public consistency and governmental efficiency, there is no defence that can be made of the Government in this matter that would satisfy the people of Canada.

Mr. LEMIEUX moved the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. W. J. ROOHE (Marquette). I think many of the members of this House, and the major portion of the people of the country will agree with me, when I say that the title of this resolution is a misnomer. Had it been called a resolution for the purpose of letting the Government down easily, it would, in my opinion, be a more appropriate application and one more in consonance with the object of its promoters. Those gentlemen who had for years past been trading on their temperance principles to further their own and their party's ends, must now feel, that is, if they have not passed the stage of feeling, that they occupy a humiliating position in the eyes of those who have the cause of temperance at heart. The mover of this resolution, years ago, I believe, on more than one occasion introduced a resolution in this House calling on the Government to adopt national prohibition. He espoused the cause of temperance, ostensibly from conviction, and was its great advocate, in season and out of season, on each and every occasion that he considered it would embarrass the Conservative Government. No doubt existed in his mind in those days that the country was ripe for prohibition, and when, after plebiscites had been taken in several of the provinces, and immense majorities had been rolled up in its favour, his convictions were still further strengthened that the people were overwhelmingly in favour of its adoption. And still, notwithstanding this fact, he, as a prominent member of the Liberal party, acquiesced in, and became a party to, an arrangement entered into between the prohibitionist and anti-prohibitionist wings of the Liberal party in convention assembled, to go through the farce of taking a Dominion plebiscite, with the private understanding that at least 50 per cent of the total vote on the lists would be required in its favour before action would be expected of the Government, by way of a prohibitory measure, a condition impossible of fulfilment, and no person knew this better than the mover of this present resolution. What greater act of duplicity could possibly be practised than the action of the Premier of this country, when, during the last session of Parliament, he was repeatedly pressed by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, and particularly by the ex-Finance Minister, to declare the intention of the Government in reference to the vote that would be necessary to be polled in favour of prohibition before they would assume the responsibility of introducing a prohibitory Bill, to find him as repeatedly refusing to commit himself, denying the right of the Opposition to obtain such information, keeping back from the temperance people information that would have proved of incalculable benefit at that time, before the vote had been taken, and since admitting that the party had long previously come to a private understanding that at least 50 per cent of the total vote on the lists would be required. Had this decision been made public in advance of the vote, the temperance people would have recognized the impossible task set before them, and the public generally would have seen the huge farce that was being enacted, and loud and long would have been the condemnation of the Government for the useless and extravagant waste of $200,000 to provide work for needy members of the party and to deceive the people with a false appearance of friendliness to the temperance cause.

Now, in a speech delivered in the city of Winnipeg prior to the elections of 1896, the Prime Minister expressed certain views that have already been referred to here to-night, in which he declared, on his honour as a public man, that if his party were returned to power, they would stand or fall as a result of the plebiscite, or, as he put it, by the will of the people.

In an interview had with members of the Methodist Conference he gave vent to the same expression and declared that the minority would have to abide by the wishes of the majority. In several other interviews he gave his interviewers to understand on each occasion, that if there were a majority of the votes polled in favour of prohibition this would be sufficient warrant for his Government to introduce a prohibitory measure. There was nothing said in those interviews of the people who would not vote and the most that could be claimed for that class would be that they were willing to abide by the verdict of the majority. Even after the vote had been taken he admitted to a deputation of temperance people that the vote had been a most favourable one in their behalf under the circumstances. It therefore came with all the greater surprise and disappointment to those who had pinned their faith to the Premier's promises and utterances, when they learned that the Government did not intend implementing his pledges by legislation in the direction indicated by the vote of the people. We are told that the vote against prohibition in Quebec was too great to ignore, that we cannot coerce Quebec, which seems to be a favourite word with hon. gentlemen opposite. But every province in the Dominion, with the single exception of Quebec, gave large majorities in its favour and even with the adverse vote of Quebec there was some 14,000 of a majority in its favour. Is the rule now going to be laid down that on a question submitted to the popular vote, the minority is going to rule? There were 129 constituencies which gave majorities in favour of prohibition, and 84 constituencies gave majorities against it, or a clear majority of 45 constituencies in its favour, a larger majority than this Government had when they came into power in 1896; but still they did not hesitate to take office, because every province in the Dominion did not give them a majority, nor did they take into consideration the unpolled vote. Toronto gave a large majority against prohibition, but Ontario in which province Toronto is located, rolled up a large majority in its favour. In granting provincial prohibition to Ontario, therefore, would you not be perfectly justified in coercing Toronto, as hon. gentlemen are pleased to call it, and require that city to conform to the wishes of the majority? So would it be wiser and more reasonable to carry out the wishes of the majority including Quebec, or to allow the minority, the adverse vote of one province to dictate the policy to the greater number. But there is more than a suspicion that the reputed vote of the province of Quebec is not a fair index of the views of the people in that province, that in fact the "machine" got in its work by the stuffing of ballot-boxes, and the length of time it took to obtain correct returns from that province, 40,000 of a majority against being reported the day after the vote which had increased to over 90,000 in a couple of weeks' time. That coupled with other suspicious circumstances and charges that have been made lends great colour to the suggestion of an improper vote. The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) a few moments ago referred to the returns from some polling places in Algoma, and to the returns from some other places as evidence that the prohibitionists had stuffed the ballots because more votes were polled than appeared on the list, in refutation of the charge made by the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Moore), that ballots were stuffed in Quebec by the opponents of prohibition. I would call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that in Algoma he was dealing with the polls in unorganized districts. In some of these districts that he has referred to a local election to the Ontario legislature was recently held, and we find that in one polling subdivision, the Empress Mine B, 12 votes were polled for the Conservative candidate, and 4 for the Liberal candidate, 16 votes in all, when there is not a single vote appearing on the list. At Oliver, 10 A polling subdivision, 4 Conservative votes were cast, 14 Liberal votes, making a total of 18 votes, when there was not a single vote upon the list. At Saw Bill, 16 A, 23 votes were polled for the Liberal candidate and there was not a vote on the list at all. At Ignace, 17 A, 8 votes were polled for the Liberal candidate and there were no votes on the list. In each of these cases that have been quoted by the hon. member for Labelle as evidence that the prohibitionists had been ballot-stuffing the polls were in unorganized municipalities and there were no lists whatever. No better evidence of the hypocrisy of the Government on this question is required or the duplicity practised on the people, than the spectacle of three Cabinet Ministers stumping the country against a policy that was made a principal plank in their own party platform, and declaring in advance of the vote that the temperance people were getting the plebiscite but that was all they would get, and even in granting that they said their party had made a huge mistake.

Surely that fact alone should be sufficient to disillusionize those temperance people who had faith in the promises of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture, and should convince them of the palpable manner in which they have been duped.

Now this resolution provides that before prohibition can be put into effect in any province, another provincial plebiscite must be taken, and taken only at the time for the holding of a general election for the House of Commons. What a farce that is, to be sure; have we not already had two plebiscites taken in the most of the provinces of the Dominion, one in favour of provincial, and the other for national prohibition? And what nonsense it is, and how superfluous to demand another vote on a question in which the wishes of the people are so well known. In my opinion this is merely meant to secure delay to allow the Government time to extricate themselves from the embarrassing position they have through, their own duplicity got themselves into. Knowing that a vote can only be taken once in five years, if this resolution becomes law they see an opportunity to put off as far as possible any action on the question and hope, like Dicken's Micawber, that something may turn up to relieve them of dealing with it at all. Almost every temperance organization of the country have condemned the inaction of the Government, and denounced this breach of faith with the temperance people, many of whom gave their votes to the party now in power on the strength of their temperance pledges. It was not the temperance people who asked for the plebiscite, the major portion of them considered it entirely unnecessary, expensive, and uncalled for. It was merely gotten up by the Liberal party as a campaign cry to draw a certain element of the voting population to their side, while at the same time they had not the slightest intention, no matter how large a majority was polled in favour of prohibition, to introduce and pass a prohibitory measure.

They had been so long in opposition and so great was their anxiety to obtain power, that they became more reckless in their pledges, more profuse in the promises on each succeeding occasion they appeared before the electors, and now that their chickens are coming home to roost the so-called temperance men on their side of the House are put up to whitewash the Government and condone their actions, while throwing this sop to the temperance people to try and ally their restlessness and irritability caused by the hypocrisy of their own political leaders. This resolution only provides for the prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors in any province, and does not legislate against the manufacture and importation, as the Plebiscite Bill which was submitted to the people and on which they voted, provided for. It is therefore only a partial measure, a half-hearted attempt, and will not meet the requirements of the people in those provinces that have pronounced in favour of total prohibition. On the question of the prohibition of the liquor traffic including the importation, manufacture and sale I voted in the affirmative and pledged myself to support such a measure if introduced in this House to apply to the whole Dominion. I have always felt that the Government were insincere on this question, that they were merely utilizing it for party purposes, that they never seriously contemplated its adoption, and events have fully justified that opinion. I have received no instructions from any of my constituents to support such a resolution as this one introduced by the member for Yarmouth, no temperance organization in my constituency, so far as I am aware have endorsed it, and as I believe it is merely meant to remove the responsibility from the shoulders of the men now in power and not for the purpose of furthering the temperance cause I mean to oppose it.

Mr. ROBERT HOLMES (West Huron). Mr. Speaker, it is not because the resolution of the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) goes as far as I would like it to, that I shall give it my support, but it is because it seems to me to be the most practicable and feasible solution of the problem now before us. In the brief time at my disposal at this late hour, I think I can show that the action of the Government is justified under the present circumstances. I am one of those who endeavour to look at circumstances as they are, and not as they might be. We have no right to go behind the vote recorded for the province of Quebec any more than the people of Quebec have the right to go behind the vote recorded in the province of Ontario, and I think we must look upon the matter just as it presents itself to us here. It has been urged to-night as an argument, that if we were to reverse the situation the people of the province of Ontario would not be willing to be coerced, as it is claimed it has been attempted to coerce the people of the province of Quebec. Hon. gentlemen of the Opposition, in so many words, assert that the Government is bound to carry out prohibition, but at the same time there is a mental reservation that so far as the province of Quebec is concerned at all events, and indeed so far as the Dominion is concerned, prohibition would be clearly inoperative, because it has not public sentiment behind it. I want to call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to one or two points wherein I think the Government is justified in the action it has taken. We look upon the province of Ontario as being the banner province so far as prohibition sentiment is concerned, and we regard the vote in the province of Ontario and the sentiment in the province named, as justifying us to some extent in the stand we take. I believe that an analysis of the vote in the province of Ontario would convince any reasonable man, that it would be decidedly imprudent at the present time to enact a strict prohibitory law. I represent a county that is as strongly prohibitive in its sentiments as any county in the province of Ontario. The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) said that he was pledged to his people, and that his people had voted so largely in favour of prohibition that he felt it incumbent upon him, in harmony with their votes, to vote for prohibition. The same reason would impel me to vote for prohibition, but I do not think it would be a logical course to pursue, simply because my constituents, by a large majority, voted for the plebiscite. I do not feel bound to do so unless the other conditions existing were such as would justify me in believing that prohibition could be enforced. In the province of Ontario there are ninety constituencies, and out of these ninety, in nineteen the percentage of the total vote polled was slightly more than one-half the votes on the list. In sixty of the constituencies, the percentage of the votes polled was less than half the votes on the list. In six constituencies the percentage of the total vote polled was only one-third the total votes on the list, and that leaves out of the calculation the cities which, with one or two exceptions, were strongly adverse to prohibition. I hold that there is not a sufficiently strong sentiment evinced by these figures to warrant the Government in passing a prohibitory law. It has been stated to-night, and reiterated time and time again, that the people expect the Government to introduce a prohibitory law. I do not regard that as the fact, and I wish to quote briefly the opinion of one or two persons of high standing in the community, as evidence that the people at large do not regard the Government as being called upon, under the circumstances, to pass prohibitory legislation. At the recent Presbyterian Assembly the Rev. Mr. Jordan, who is represented as a Conservative, said:

I believe the Government has done wisely in not urging upon Parliament the acceptance of a prohibition law, because such a law, if passed at the present time, would simply mean a foregone failure. "The true remedy," Mr. Jordan also said "was not prohibition, but education and legislation rightly used."

Mr. Hamilton Cassels, who is also quoted as a Conservative, said :

He was a Conservative as far as Dominion politics were concerned, but he did not believe in enacting a prohibitory law with a vote of only 22½ per cent of the electorate behind it.

Principal McVicar was inclined to think that there had not been a mandate in regard to prohibition. The Rev. Mr. Potts, who, as a good many people in this House know, is prominent in the Methodist Church, and who is also a Conservative, said that he did not believe that the Government was called upon to introduce a prohibitory measure. The Rev. Dr. Rose, of this city, who, I believe, is also a Conservative, has placed himself upon record as considering the Government is not justified in introducing a prohibitive liquor law in the face of the vote recorded. The New York "Independent," regarded as a very important religious journal, in discussing the Canadian plebiscite vote, said :

That the Dominion is not evenly and uniformly ripe for prohibition, and that there is need for a great deal of work to be done ere the liquor traffic in Canada is placed where it can do no harm is quite evident.

In view of the vote in the various provinces and the adverse vote in the province of Quebec, I think this Government is not justified at the present time in putting on the statute-book a law which, in my opinion, to a large extent, would be a dead letter. Even if there were presumptive evidence that that law could be enforced with a moderate degree of success, I, for one, would be prepared to give my vote in favour of it. I believe in the principle of prohibition, but I believe we can only advance along lines that carry the support of the people. The statement has been made that the country is ready for prohibition. I do not think it is. I took some part in the plebiscite campaign, and wherever I had an opportunity to speak I urged the people to go and record their votes, whether they were in favour of or against prohibition, because, I said, the Government would be influenced by that vote, and if people did not go out and vote, it would be taken as an evidence that they were not in favour of prohibition. Those who stayed at home certainly counted as much against as for the principle of prohibition ; and I think that was fair, because the man who does not come out and record his vote in favour of a law is not going to help enforce it. A law cannot be enforced, if it is not backed up by public opinion ; and to put a prohibitory law on the statute-book not backed up by stronger public sentiment than was indicated by this plebiscite vote would be a farce. I believe that the temperance people of the Dominion of Canada are not so unreasonable in their demands as to think that simply putting on the statute-book a prohibitory law would lead to its enforcement. They want to see a law that would be enforced, and they are satisfied that with the small proportion of the total vote recorded for it, it could not be enforced ; and the experience of the past has shown that. I do not think there is a breach of confidence on the part of the Government in not carrying out what has been called a mandate from the people to put on the statute-book a prohibitory law. There is no breach of confidence in the Government for not doing that. The Liberal party announced its platform in 1893 that they would submit a plebiscite and would be guided by that. Some speakers on the Opposition side argue that if there is a simple majority in favour of a prohibitory law, the Government are bound to enact legislation ; but they overlook the fact that in all legislation of this character, it is absolutely impossible to enforce it unless there is a strong majority behind it. A mere majority is not sufficient to insure the enforcement of sumptuary legislation, and I am surprised that hon. gentlemen opposite should ask the Government to put on the statute-book a law which they are unable to enforce. When the sentiment of this country is sufficiently strong and sufficiently expressed to justify the enactment of a prohibitory law and to ensure its enforcement, I would be one of the first to vote in favour of it. In the meantime, I am prepared to support the motion of the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint).

Mr. D. HENDERSON (Halton). It is not my intention, at half-past two in the morning, to enter on a discussion of this question, which has already been very fully dealt with. My intention, however, is briefly to state the position in which I stand with respect to this question, in case I should not be able to be present in the House when the division takes place. The resolution which has been introduced by the hon. member for Yarmouth is, to my mind, simply a return to the old Scott Act, but extending it to the provinces. The county of Halton, which I have the honour to represent, has been known as the banner temperance county of the province of Ontario. In the year 1881 the county of Halton adopted the Scott Act, and I believe it was the first county to take it up, and that Act remained in force seven years. In 1884, after it had been in force about three years, an effort was made to repeal it, but the Act was sustained by a majority of 180. Another vote to repeal the Act was taken in 1888, when it was repealed by a majority of 197, showing that between 1884 and 1888 the Scott Act lost the support of 377 voters. In eight municipalities out of nine in the county the Scott Act lost support between 1884 and 1888. No further attempt has been made to deal with that question during the past ten years. Last year, when the plebiscite vote was taken, 1,894 electors voted for prohibition, and 1,272 against it, showing a majority in favour of prohibition of 622, all but two of the municipalities giving a majority in favour of total prohibition. Now, as I said, in 1888, the county declared against limited prohibition, against the Scott Act, a law somewhat similar to that which we are now asked to adopt by the motion of the hon. member for Yarmouth, whereas in 1898 the people declared in favour of total prohibition. In my opinion, the election, so far as the county of Halton was concerned, was a very fair one. I do not believe that the Liberal party there were aware of the fact that the Government had decided secretly that a majority of at least 50 per cent must be obtained before they would take any cognizance of that vote, and I am sure that the Conservative party was not aware of it. I believe the election was carried on with little or no attempt to secure anything but a fair verdict. The reason I rise to-night is simply to declare where I stand on this question. I propose to voice the views of my constituents, to follow the instructions that were given to me, as determined by the vote of 1888, and the vote of 1898, and in so doing I believe I can best discharge the sacred duty entrusted to me.

Mr. H. J. LOGAN (Cumberland). Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to represent a county which I believe gave the largest majority of any county in the whole Dominion of Canada in favour of prohibitory legislation. At a large mass meeting held in the Academy of Music in the town of Amherst previous to that election, I made a promise that if a majority of the electors upon the list in the county of Cumberland should vote in favour of prohibitory legislation, I would be guided by that vote in Parliament. The election resulted in 4,444 votes being cast in favour of prohibition and 308 opposed to prohibition. There were upon the lists in the county 7,782 votes. It will be seen that the vote in favour of prohibition was much more than 50 per cent of the whole vote upon the lists in that county, and I am prepared to abide by the mandate given me on that occasion, and to vote according to my promise.

We have heard a great deal with reference to the evils of intemperance, but I do not think they need be discussed. It is admitted that the evils of intemperance are the greatest that exist in the state.

I was one of the delegates to the Liberal convention in 1893, and I then voted in favour of taking a plebiscite. That vote I have never regretted, and if there were no other reason I would defend it upon the ground that the plebiscite election was a great educational campaign throughout the length and breadth of the Dominion, and that whatever money had to be paid out of the treasury, a good return was received in the temperance education given throughout the country. There has been a great deal said by hon. gentlemen opposite as to the Government deceiving the people. It does not seem to me that there can be very much argument along that line. Let me quote from the Senate "Hansard" a debate that took place in that body in June, 1898, before the plebiscite was taken :

Senator Perley wanted to know whether a majority of the votes cast under the plebiscite would constitute a decision in favour of prohibition.

Hon David Mills replied that the object of the plebiscite was to ascertain the sentiment of the public on the subject and find out if the sentiment of the country was strong enough to secure the enforcement of a prohibitory law. The vote polled might be so small that it would not be an indication of the popular will, but only on evidence of indifference on the part of the people on the question. It would be the duty of the Government to use its judgment as to whether the vote taken is an expression of the popular will in favour of or against prohibition or not.

In the province of New Brunswick, during the plebiscite campaign, the Westmorland County Plebiscite Association, in their address to the electors, said :

Every vote unrecorded will be counted against prohibition. In this crisis, carelessness is criminal, simple delinquency on the part of large numbers will mean defeat, and widespread indifference means disaster.

In the campaign in New Brunswick Mr. Buchanan, who claims to represent the advanced temperance ideas of the country, made the following statement :

This question offers no possibility for divisions. It simply asks : Are you in favour of prohibition ? Every elector is obliged to place himself on one side or the other. There is but one single issue. You must discriminate between a plebiscite and an ordinary election. Each are entirely different. People ask how many votes will it take to carry this plebiscite. There is nothing to carry. It has one single, simple aim—that of gathering information as to their sentiment on the temperance question. If in a Scott Act election 5,000 voted for the act and 4,500 against the act it will carry. The plebiscite is simply to learn information. The Government wants to know the number for and against prohibition.

In the Halifax "Wesleyan" during the prohibition campaign a correspondent of that paper delivered himself in the following terms :

Whatever others may think, my opinion is that the Government acted wisely in not stating what will be regarded as a sufficient guarantee that the country is prepared for prohibition. The country is given a free hand, and if prohibition is wanted the people are now at liberty to say so. But while the Government has not stated what will be taken out as the voice of the country on the subject, we may fairly assume that nothing less than a majority of the names on the voters' lists will be regarded as a sufficient guarantee that the country wants such a law. A simple majority of the votes cast, unless that majority is equal to a majority of the names on the voters' lists, would not be sufficient.

But not only was this opinion given by a plebiscite association and others who were engaged in that campaign, but a number of men prominent in public affairs in this country, gave utterances along the very same line. At the meeting in the Academy of Music, to which I have referred, I had the honour of listening to an address by the Hon. Mr. Dickey, the Minister of Justice in the late Cabinet of the leader of the Opposition, and the Amherst "Daily Press," a paper practically owned and controlled by him, in reporting that speech, said :

After introductory remarks, the speaker explained the nature and effect of the plebiscite, warning the people that what would be necessary was not a mere majority of votes cast, but as nearly as possible a majority of the votes on the electorate list ; there was nothing to be carried by a majority. The vote was a declaration of the people's wishes for the information and guidance of Parliament, and should be made as emphatic as possible.

It is thus clearly to be seen that if the Hon. Mr. Dickey had been a member of this Government he would have advised that on the vote no action should be taken. In the same newspaper, belonging to the hon. gentleman, I find its editorial, in the same issue, reads as follows :

In the course of the very able speech of Hon. Mr. Dickey, on Monday night, a text of which appears in this issue, it was pointed out just what would constitute a vote in favour of a prohibitory law in Canada, and the importance will readily suggest itself to the temperance people of securing as large a vote as possible on voting day. When an election for a member is held he who gets a majority wins, but not so in this instance. This is a case in which the Government asks the opinion of the people on a vital question. It asks how many people want prohibition, and as there are about a million people in Canada who have a voting voice, the Government will listen to those who say "Yes" and presume that those who say "No" and those who say nothing are not in favour of prohibition. This may not be in line with the popular supposition, but it is in all probability the view the Government will take of the matter when the voice of the people is heard. According to the wording of the ballot those who are not in favour of prohibition will be against it.

I do not wish to delay the House at this hour, but merely wish to quote some of the expressions made use of by leading newspapers and men in our country prominent in the temperance cause with reference to the plebiscite. The election was held, and the result was that about 22½ per cent voted in favour of prohibition, and 21½ per cent against prohibition, leaving 56 per cent of the total vote on the lists that did not vote at all, and I think there is considerable force in the argument of hon. gentlemen in favour of the position the Government has taken, namely, that 22½ per cent of the total vote upon the lists does not warrant the Government in bringing down any prohibitory legislation. These hon. gentlemen are not alone in that opinion, but have the support of eminent men throughout the length and breadth of the country, including the Rev. John Potts, the Rev. Mr. Rose, Mr. J. S. Robertson, Secretary of the Canadian Temperance League, and the Rev. William Patterson, who have pronounced in no unmeasured tones their conviction that it would be a great blow at the cause of temperance which they have at heart, if the Government should introduce prohibitory legislation at this time.

Mr. LOGAN.

Besides being one of those who voted in favour of the plebiscite being taken, I was also one who urged strongly upon the Government that the straight issue should be put before the people and not be confused with any question of taxation. It is well known that strong pressure was brought to bear on the Government to have the question of taxation, the question as to whether those in favour of prohibition were prepared to pay a direct tax, submitted at the same time as the question of prohibition. I must congratulate the Government on not having yielded to that pressure and having submitted the question of prohibition pure and simple to the people.

It has been charged by hon. gentlemen opposite that the Government itself took part in this campaign and that members of the Government in the province of Quebec used undue influence against prohibition. I challenge hon. gentlemen opposite who have spoken to-night to show that more than two members of the Government spoke in Quebec against prohibition in that campaign. I will admit that the Minister of Inland Revenue did speak to the electors of his own county, at their request, giving his opinion on this question, and the late Mr. Geoffrion, who was a member of the Government without portfolio, also spoke to his constituents on the same line. But, outside of these there was not a member of the Government who spoke.

Mr. BERGERON. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte).

Mr. LOGAN. He did not speak against prohibition.

Mr. BERGERON. He spoke in Valleyfield in my county.

Mr. LOGAN. I am informed by members of the Government, who should know, that he did not take any stand against prohibition in that province. But, even if two or three members of the Government had spoken in Quebec against prohibition, we have the Minister of Agriculture who not only spoke in his own county in favour of prohibition, not only spoke in his own province, but he spoke in the metropolitan city of the Dominion and in this capital city of Canada, calling upon the people to come forward and vote for prohibition. So, there is not much in the statement that people in Quebec were influenced by members of the Government.

I shall not detain the House at greater length, as I said before, the large majority of the electors in my county have given directions to me to vote in favour of prohibition. I have promised to do so and I am prepared to carry out that promise. I could not consider myself their representative if I did not do so. I will vote and do everything in my power to further the cause of temperance which means so much for the peace and happiness of our homes and the prosperity of our country.

3. Resolved, That the subsidies granted to the Ontario and Rainy River Railway Company, the Canadian Northern Railway Company and the Edmonton, Yukon and Pacific Railway Company are granted upon the condition, and if received and paid under the authority of this Act to the above mentioned companies respectively, shall be received upon the condition, that the said companies shall not, nor shall any of them, at any time amalgamate with any other railway company, or lease its line to any railway company; nor shall any of the said railways be leased to or operated by any other company; nor shall any of the said companies make an agreement for a common fund or for pooling its receipts with any other railway company, and any such lease, amalgamation or agreement shall be absolutely void, excepting in so far as such agreement may extend to traffic or running arrangements which have been approved by the Governor in Council.

4. Resolved, That the subsidies hereinbefore mentioned as to be granted to companies named for that purpose shall, if granted by the Governor in Council, be granted to such companies respectively; the other subsidies may be granted to such companies as shall be approved by the Governor in Council as having established to his satisfaction their ability to construct and complete the said railways respectively; all the lines for the construction of which subsidies are granted, unless they are already commenced, shall be commenced within two years from the first day of August next, and completed within a reasonable time, not to exceed four years from the said first day of August, to be fixed by Order in Council, and shall also be constructed according to descriptions and specifications, and upon conditions to be approved by the Governor in Council, on the report of the Minister of Railways and Canals and specified in an agreement to be made in each case by the company with the Government, which agreement the Government is hereby empowered to make; the location also of every such line of railway shall be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council.

5. 6. Resolved, That the said subsidies respectively shall be payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada, by instalments, on the completion of each section of the railway of not less than ten miles proportionate to the value of the portion so completed in comparison with that of the whole work undertaken, to be established by the report of the said Minister, or upon the completion of the work subsidized—except as to subsidies with respect to which it is hereinbefore otherwise provided.

7. Resolved, That every company receiving a subsidy under this Act shall each year furnish to the Government of Canada transportation for men, supplies, material and mails over the portion of its line in respect of which it may have received such subsidy, and whenever required shall furnish mail cars, properly equipped, for such mail service, and such transportation and service shall be performed at such rates as may be agreed upon between the Minister of the Department of the Government for which such service is being rendered and the company performing the same, and in case of disagreement, then at such rates as may be approved by the Governor in Council, and in or towards payment for such charges the Government of Canada shall be credited by the company with a sum equal to three per centum per annum on the amount of subsidy received by the company under this Act.

He said: I beg to state that His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of these resolutions, he recommends them to the House.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would like to ask the right hon. the Premier when he will be prepared to lay on the Table of the House the correspondence with the Secretary of State for the Colonies in regard to the correspondence between myself and Lord Aberdeen on the change of Government.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The correspondence is very short, and I expect I will be able to lay it on the Table of the House on Monday.

LIGHTSHIP FOR HALIFAX HARBOUR.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I intended to draw to the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) if he had been here a resolution of the Board of Trade of the city of Halifax, in respect to the immediate necessity of providing a lightship for the harbour of Halifax. I think a copy of the resolution has been forwarded to the Minister, but I do not know whether or not he has taken or is taking any action in regard to it. In order that it may be brought to the attention of the Minister (Sir Louis Davies) by the right honourable the First Minister, I shall read it. It is a resolution which was passed on the 25th of this month:

Whereas the recent loss of the steamship "Portia," off Sambro, while entering Halifax harbour, has brought to public attention the necessity for more adequate signals to safeguard the approaches to Halifax harbour in thick weather.

And whereas at a meeting of the Board of Trade, held on 18th instant, at which were present representatives of the Marine Department, the cable companies, pilot commissioners, harbour officials, steamship captains, and representatives of the various steamship companies, and commercial interests, it was the unanimous opinion of the meeting that the present signals, safeguarding the entrance to Halifax harbour are inadequate.

And whereas the increasing business of the port of Halifax as the chief Atlantic port of Canada renders it imperative that immediate steps should be taken to obviate the great danger now existing when entering the port in thick weather.

Therefore resolved, that the Government be asked to take into immediate consideration the construction of a lightship of the most modern type, to be fitted with the latest improvements, and to be utilized as a pilot station, and placed in the most suitable position of Halifax harbour.

I may say for the information of the Government that some few years ago there was a small lightship placed at the entrance of the harbour for the purpose which it is now sought to fill by the proposed lightship. That lightship proved altogether inadequate, and eventually it was removed and placed somewhere in the St. Lawrence. I trust that the matter will be brought to the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and I also trust that he will see his way clear to take some immediate steps to comply with the wishes of this meeting of the Board of Trade and of the commercial interests of Halifax generally. The right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) will notice that at the meeting referred to the business interests of every kind in the city of Halifax were very fully represented. He will also notice that the immediate occasion of the calling of this meeting was the loss of the SS. "Portia," which is supposed to have been brought about by the want of proper precautions of the nature indicated.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). The date of the resolution read by my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) shows that this matter has only arisen within the last three or four days.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Yes; it is only dated on the 25th of this month.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I suppose the matter has had barely time to reach Ottawa, and I am sure that if my hon. friend (Sir Louis Davies) has received the document he did not have an opportunity of considering it, or he would have spoken to me on the subject. The pressure of work has been so severe recently that routine business necessarily does not receive that same attention which it would at any other time. To make provision for a lightship there would involve a considerable sum of money, which could only be provided for by a vote of the House, and I had desired and hoped that it might be possible that we would not have to introduce any further supplementary Estimates. I shall discuss the matter with my friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) may be sure that although my economic spirit as Minister of Finance might be against my sympathies as a member from the province of Nova Scotia, the matter shall have our best consideration. I occupy a kind of pooh-bah position in the matter.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The Minister (Mr. Fielding) will understand that I am not saying anything in the way of censure.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Quite so.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am merely emphasizing the matter as far as I can by mentioning in the House the great necessity for this.

THE RAILWAY SUBSIDIES.

Mr. KAULBACH. Among the resolutions proposing railway subsidies there are two which comply with the request made by me last year, as respects the line between New Germany and Shelburne via Caledonia.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I hardly think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Kaulbach) is in order.

Mr. KAULBACH. I am not going to make a speech, but I simply wish to allude to the matter in order to ask a question.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Kaulbach) had better wait until the House is going into Committee of Supply.

Mr. KAULBACH. I simply wish to ask the Government to grant the request made last year by me to extend that road from New Germany to Halifax. I observe among the railway resolutions that there is one noted in this way:

For a railway on a point of the Intercolonial Railway or near Halifax to a point on the Central Railway in the county of Lunenburg, not exceeding 20 miles.

I do not understand that, because the distance between these two points is 40 or 45 miles.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). The hon. gentleman's question would more properly arise in connection with the railway votes which will be reached on Monday. However, I have no objection to answer the hon. gentleman at once. Votes of this character are usually granted partially. It is not found convenient to grant them on the full mileage of the railway at the beginning. The object of granting the subsidy in question is to make a connection between the city of Halifax and the Nova Scotia Central Railway; and if Parliament makes the grant on the 20 miles, I have no doubt that in due course more aid will be granted, though that is something which the parties interested in the road would have to trust the Government and Parliament for afterwards.

Mr. KAULBACH. I am glad to get the information in that way.

MARINE INSURANCE RATES.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I wish to ask if the Government have any information as to the reason for the recent advance in insurance rates, discriminating against ports in the Maritime provinces as compared with the eastern ports of the United States. It is very injurious to the interests of our ports, and our shipping people believe that there is no justification for it. Have the Government taken any steps to inquire into the causes of this discrimination, or have they communicated with the proper authorities?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not know whether anything in the nature of an informal inquiry has been made, but I know that this matter has engaged the attention of my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies). The difficulty is a very simple one. If a fire occurs at Vancouver, the English insurance companies will at once increase the rates at Halifax. There is a tendency on the part of these companies to group ports covering a great extent of territory, and the occurrence of a disaster in a distant port is likely to prejudice the insurance rates in another port far away. If two or three mishaps have occurred, whether in the St. Lawrence or down the Gulf, or on the coasts of the maritime provinces, the first thing we hear is that the insurance companies have put up their rates for the whole of Canada. That has been the experience of the past, and it is only by constant representations by boards of trade and parties interested in shipping that the insurance companies can be prevented from increasing the rates. I do not know that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has had any formal correspondence in regard to the matter, but I know that in connection with various accidents that have occurred to shipping, the question of insurance rates has engaged his attention. If anything can be done to get them reduced, I am sure that he will be glad to do it.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I may say that this subject has engaged the attention of our High Commissioner, Lord Strathcona, and he has been doing all that can be done. We cannot as a Government make demands on these companies, as the rates are a matter of pure private business. As the hon. gentleman probably knows, two unfortunate disasters which occurred to our shipping, though having no connection in the world with the St. Lawrence route or any other Canadian route—one was the loss of an Allan Line steamer off Yarmouth, and the other was the loss of the "Labrador" on the coast of Scotland—were made an excuse and pretext, as the hon. gentleman has said, for raising the rates. I can assure the hon. gentleman that we have been endeavouring in every way in our power to try to get this matter put right. While on my feet I may say that I wish to lay on the Table, and I shall probably move a resolution about it afterwards, the articles of agreement with respect to the West India service which was under discussion the other day. It will be seen that the service has doubled in point of the number of trips, and that not much more than half the time that was consumed heretofore is consumed in making the passage.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I was asked to call the attention of the Department of Marine and Fisheries that the number of accidents and casualties on the coasts of the maritime provinces, as compared with those on the eastern coasts of the Eastern States, will show a considerable difference in favour of the maritime provinces.

SALARIES OF THE MINISTER OF CUSTOMS AND INLAND REVENUE.

The House resolved itself into committee to consider a certain proposed resolution with respect to the salaries of the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Inland Revenue.

Mr. FIELDING.

(In the Committee.)

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. While there may perhaps be some differences of opinion—and I think from the criticisms which we see occasionally in the press that there are differences of opinion—as to what may be the proper number of Cabinet Ministers for Canada, I do not think there is now any difference of opinion on the proposition that the various members of the Cabinet having charge of departments should receive equal compensation. That point was very fairly put the other day by my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition, who was good enough to say that if this question should arise in his absence, he wished to be understood as expressing his approval of the present resolution. I do not think it is a matter which requires any elaborate statement on my part. The Minister of Customs and the Minister of Inland Revenue have charge of very important departments, which collect enormous sums for the public treasury, and I think it is generally admitted—to put it in a way that should commend it to hon. gentlemen opposite—that they are as well entitled to those salaries as any of us who hold other departments. We intended to have brought this matter to the notice of the House last session, but in the rush of business which always takes place at the close, it was overlooked, and we have made the resolution to take effect on the 1st of July a year ago.

Mr. CHARLTON. There seems to be something invidious in placing two members of the Cabinet on a lower scale of pay than others, and I do not suppose any member of the House will object to this resolution. There is a matter in connection with the salaries of the members of the Government which lately has received a great deal of attention from the public press, and it strikes me as a matter that ought to receive attention in this House. That is the assertion which has been made that the Premier of this Dominion should receive a larger amount of pay than he now receives. I think there is a general consensus of opinion on the part of the press on both sides that we should give the Premier of Canada a more liberal compensation to enable him to discharge the duties, social and otherwise, which necessarily devolve upon him; and I take the liberty of referring to this question in the sense that I think it is one that deserves consideration and action.

Mr. FOSTER. I think my hon. friend the Minister of Finance has hardly done justice to the Government by the very brief way in which he has referred to this resolution. The question whether there should be a distinction in salaries or not is a matter for which the present Government are responsible. There may be a consensus of opinion or not as to that; but I think the Finance Minister or the First Minister ought to offer some remarks to the House as to the position taken and the public pledge given by which the people were led to expect that an improvement would take place as regards the number of members of the Cabinet.

It seems to me that the great extravagance of the preceding Administration would not be repeated. In fact, they were asked to hurl us from power on account of that, and no man was stronger in that respect than the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), and I believe that the right hon. the First Minister and party are on record as saying that there could be a reduction in Cabinet Ministers. And these poor fellows were to be kept down until political exigencies could be so far surmounted that a proper scapegoat could be found to be driven out into the wilderness from the Cabinet fold, so that when the salaries were raised there would be the plea that the expenses were not greater because the number of Cabinet Ministers was less. Evidently the Finance Minister has forgotten all about that, or if he has not he did not take the trouble to mention it to the House.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I appreciate, I must say, the spirit and tone of the remarks of my hon. friend. I am quite aware that there has been a good deal of difference of opinion on this question, and I cannot forget that on the side of the House to which we belong there have been some expressions of opinion that there were too many Cabinet Ministers. But this is a matter as to which considerable difference of opinion must be allowed to exist. Because that was the opinion of one member, it does not follow that it was the opinion of the whole party. The hon. gentleman said that I had myself, at some time when in Opposition, had declared or intimated that the number of Cabinet Ministers ought to be reduced. It has been my lot, in my time, to speak of expenditures, when I sat on the other side, but I do not remember that I ever expressed the opinion that the number of Ministers ought to be reduced, or that the salaries paid were too large. I think my view can be canvassed upon that scheme, and it will be found that never on any occasion did I express the opinion that the number of Ministers could be reduced. In one way, the number of Cabinet Ministers may be supposed to be large for a country like Canada. Very often there is a comparison made between Canada and the United States, but there is no comparison at all between the two systems.

Mr. FOSTER. No?

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend may have heard opinions to the contrary, but those opinions, I am sure, he does not share. Cabinet Ministers in the United States have no legislative duties of any kind. Their duties are purely executive, and they are not bound, like Cabinet Ministers of Canada, to be on the floor almost four or five months each year looking after their parliamentary duties, which, in a sense, are perhaps more important than the executive duties. If the American republic can do with seven Ministers, it is quite obvious, from the difference of system in the two countries, absolutely impossible that we should govern this country with the same number of Ministers. And, moreover, although the executive heads are few in the United States, the number of sub-heads is very large. Take the Department of State alone, there are five or six different sub-heads all connected with one or another branch of the system. I know that some of my friends entertain the opinion that the number of Ministers ought to be reduced, but I do not consider that I ever expressed a similar opinion. I cannot forget that this is a vast country with a small population, but scattered all over the continent, and that every section expects, and rightly expects, to be represented in some way in the Cabinet. With regard to the salaries, I do not believe that anybody will contend that the salaries are too large. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) was good enough to refer to me a moment ago. I appreciate the kindness of my hon. friend but I would not stand alone in this respect. If the salary of the Prime Minister were to be reconsidered, it should be not alone but along with the other salaries.

The question therefore stands in this position: It never was a principle on this side that there were too many Ministers or that they were too largely paid. Some members of the party have indulged in that opinion and expressed it.

Mr. FOSTER. Was there not a condition in the previous legislation?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, there was.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have not much to add, but, as I said at the outset, nothing could be more cruel, remembering that these hon. gentlemen sat so long in Opposition, than to attempt to hold them to the opinions they expressed through that long sitting in the cool shades of Opposition, and I am afraid we must not look for it. I may say that I was not in the Government or in the country when the policy was adopted of appointing a Minister of Trade and Commerce and two Controllers, the Controller of Inland Revenue and the Controller of Customs. That was done under an Act passed when Sir John Macdonald was Prime Minister, but it was never brought into operation during his lifetime, and I took the opportunity of expressing to him my strong Opposition to the policy adopted. I did not believe it was a desirable policy. I believed that if there were any two Ministers who ought to have seats on the floor of the House, it was the two connected with the Customs Department and the Inland Revenue Department. I also hold the opinion that if they were to be sub-heads, the head should be the Minister of Finance. They were so associated and intimately connected with the collecting of revenue department that it appeared to me their natural and proper head was the Minister of Finance. I must say that I think my hon. friend who brought into operation and established the practice of having a Minister of Trade and Commerce and making the Controllors sub-heads under that officer, certainly made, in my opinion, from a parliamentary point of view and from the way in which the business of the country is conducted, a mistake, and I have no hesitation in saying that, in my judgment, the Controllors should be made Ministers, and should enjoy the same salaries as the other Ministers, because, if they properly discharge the duties imposed upon them there are no officers of the Government whose duties demand greater attention.

I need not say how sorry I would be to do anything which would possibly interfere with the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but I have also looked upon the creation of that office as entirely unnecessary. It is only necessary to look to the history of that department since it came into operation to find that no services of any kind have been performed by the Minister of Trade and Commerce that have been practically of any value to the country whatever. I believe that trade and commerce must naturally devolve upon the Minister of Finance in whose department is the legislation that has relation to this branch of Government, in conjunction with the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Inland Revenue. Of course I need not say how deeply I regret having to say a single word that will appear to conflict with the interest of any hon. gentleman sitting on the Treasury benches; but we are now discussing a very important question, and that is how that which, I believe, all the House agree upon, can be brought about, the increase of the salaries of the Minister of Inland Revenue and of the Minister of Customs, so as to put them on the same footing as the other Ministers, without increasing the cost to the country. There is no doubt that hon. gentlemen opposite have always been committed to the declaration that there were an unnecessarily large number of Cabinet Ministers. My right hon. friend has just explained the difficulty—that our country is so widely extended that it is not easy to give representation to the various sections in the Cabinet. But my hon. friend the Minister of Finance only a few days ago stated that the time had come when broader views were entertained in regard to that, and it was not proposed to maintain the idea of local representation in the Cabinet. I invite my right hon. friend's attention to the advanced position taken by the Minister of Finance, which, no doubt, indicates that the province of Nova Scotia, at all events, will be ready to surrender one of its Ministers for the purpose of giving representation to sections of the country that are not now represented.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Probably, if the idea of local representation were done away with, we should have three or four men from Nova Scotia in the Cabinet.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have no doubt that my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) has established such a reputation as to warrant the feeling on the part of those behind him that the province which he so admirably represents should have three or four Ministers. But I am speaking now not jocularly, but directly upon the point before us. We are disposed to support the reasonable proposition of having the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Inland Revenue, with the important duties devolving upon them, receive the same salaries as other Ministers. But we hold that it is not desirable to increase the amount given to Cabinet Ministers—taking that question apart from anything else—beyond what has ever been given before. If my memory serves me well, the legislation that raised the Controller of Customs and the Minister of Inland Revenue to the rank of Ministers was accompanied by the statement that their salaries would be increased when it was found practicable to decrease the number of Ministers, so as not to add to the total amount paid to Cabinet Ministers. As my right hon. friend has had it demonstrated that there is absolutely no utility in the Department of Trade and Commerce, I make the suggestion that, if means could be found by the elevation of my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) to a governorship, notwithstanding the great void it would create in this House, the means would be afforded of doing justice to the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Inland Revenue without increasing the expenditure to the public.

The PRIME MINISTER. If my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) would permit me, I would ask him his opinion on one point. If I understood him aright, he stated that the work of the Cabinet Minister is confined to his departmental duties, and that the Minister of Trade and Commerce has very little work in his department. No one knows better than my hon. friend that that is not a true view of the situation or of the duties performed by Ministers. He has been through it himself, and he knows that a Minister's duties are not confined to his department. It is true that the Department of Trade and Commerce is not a heavy department as compared with some others. For instance, the duties of the Secretary of State are not heavy. But the hon. gentleman know that the general policy of the Government may engage the time of a Minister. I remember the time, not far distant, when my hon. friend was Secretary of State. I leave it to him to say if he did not have as much to do as he had when he presided over some more important department.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Chairman, that is raising a new question. I have not said that the Ministers are confined exclusively to their several departments. I only point to the Department of Trade and Commerce as having proved absolutely useless. In fact, the position of Canada has suffered seriously through the want of discharge of the duties that the Minister of Trade and Commerce undertook, in the destruction of a great service that all parties in this House had declared to be of great importance to this country. The only achievement of which the Minister of Trade and Commerce can boast is that of having destroyed the Fast Atlantic Service, which he found ready to his hand when he came into office. I am not aware how valuable the hon. gentleman's (Sir Richard Cartwright's) services may be in other departments. As a general proposition, what my right hon. friend says has a great deal of force. I think it was our former Governor General, Lord Dufferin, who described his position in the Cabinet as that of maid of all work—not having onerous duties in his own office. He was constantly called upon to perform duties in other departments. No doubt, my right hon. friend, though nominally president of the Council, finds a great deal of employment outside of that office. The same may have applied to the Secretary of State's office when I held that position, being at the same time Prime Minister.

The PRIME MINISTER. But I spoke of a time before the hon. gentleman was Prime Minister.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Quite so; my right hon. friend gave me enough to do when I was Secretary of State and leader of this House—unfortunately for the country, and for himself, because it has involved him since in very great difficulties. I do not intend to prolong the discussion further than to say that I hope I will receive the grateful thanks of the Government for making a suggestion by means of which they could give these increases of salaries which we all approve without adding to the expense of the country.

The PRIME MINISTER. I certainly am thankful for the statement my hon. friend made the other day, as it shows breadth of spirit on his part. As to the rest, of course, we are thankful for small favours.

Mr. FOSTER. When was this done?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. At that time, a couple of years ago, I think, the Ministers were controllers, but were advanced to the position of Cabinet Ministers. The Act stated that when the number of Cabinet Ministers should be reduced, the Controllers should be placed on an equal rank with the Ministers without an increase of salary. We think that part of the Bill was a mistake, and we propose to correct it.

Mr. FOSTER. I thought there was a pledge, and it was put in the statute-book.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Statutes are very often repealed.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, in the hands of hon. gentlemen everything is liable to change except hanging on to office.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Well, we propose to hang on.

Mr. McMULLEN The ex-Minister of Finance has referred to me in this discussion. I undoubtedly was opposed to the increase of Cabinet Ministers, I opposed the appointment of the two Controllers. I contended that we have enough members in the Cabinet. But the Act was forced through this House, and these Controllers were appointed, but not for some two years after the Act was passed, which showed that there was no immediate necessity for their appointment. When Sir Mackenzie Bowell was Premier, in connection, I think, with the election of the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Prior), a telegram was sent by the Premier to that hon. gentleman intimating that it was his intention to raise these Controllers to the rank of Cabinet Ministers, and to give them seats at the Council board. That was the first intimation we had of these men being placed in the position of Cabinet Ministers. If the hon. member for Victoria and the other hon. gentleman who occupied the position of Controller were considered by the late Government to be entitled to seats at the Council Board as a matter of justice, I am quite prepared to admit that the two gentlemen who occupied those positions recently under the present Government, are just as much entitled to the honour. I have always been of the opinion that our government machinery in this country was too expensive, and I hold that opinion still. I have opposed the increase of Ministers under the present Government, I did not consider they were necessary. It may be unfair to make invidious distinction against these two gentlemen by keeping them down to the old salary. But there is one redeeming feature about it. Since these men have been raised to the position of Cabinet Ministers our territory has considerably expanded. We have large responsibilities, and a considerably larger revenue. Take the case of the Minister of Customs. Hon. gentlemen will admit that the increased responsibilities that rest upon that gentleman in consequence of the great growth in the revenue, has thrown upon him much greater labour than his predecessors had to perform. I presume the country is willing to pay men in proportion to the services they render. But I desire to be consistent in this matter. I contend that if we had fewer Cabinet Ministers the affairs of the country could be conducted just as well. But hon. gentlemen opposite are entirely responsible for the increase, and after the offices have been established and the Ministers have been installed in their positions, and the Administration has been divided into thirteen departments, it is a pretty hard thing now to cut down the number of Ministers, especially in view of the enormously increased work of the Government during the last two years. I dare say some of the smaller provinces would like to have increased Cabinet representation; British Columbia no doubt would. I would be glad if a readjustment took place whereby the smaller provinces should be represented as largely as possible. But that is evidently impracticable. I determinedly opposed the increase in the number of Cabinet Ministers until I heard the announcement of the leader of the Opposition two years ago. When this question was broached he jumped up and declared his entire approval of the course of adding to the number of Cabinet Ministers, and he also thought their salary should be put on a par with that of the other Ministers. Immediately that this Bill was introduced two days ago, before any one else had a chance to express an opinion on either side, the leader of the Opposition jumped up again and declared that this was a matter of justice, that these men were deserving of the increase, and that he strongly urged it two years ago. Now whether he will be able to carry his followers with him and make them sing the same song he does, is another question. He has not always been able to carry them with him.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am sure I will have the warm sympathy of my right hon. friend if I am not always able to carry with me those sitting on this side.

Mr. McMULLEN. As I say, I was opposed to this increase in the number of Cabinet Ministers until I heard the declaration of the leader of the Opposition. Under those circumstances it is no use for hon. gentlemen on this side of the House to oppose these things when the leader of the Opposition supports them. For my part, I stand almost alone in my course in this matter, but I am willing to acquiesce in this proposition as a simple matter of justice to these gentlemen, if a reduction of Cabinet Ministers cannot be made. The ex-Minister of Finance is disposed to twit me a little on account of the criticisms in which I indulged years ago. I indulged in those criticisms honestly, the condition of the country warranted me in doing so. But I am glad to see that out of a great many difficulties, out of the clouds and darkness that characterized the administration of the affairs of this country some years ago, we have merged into the glorious light of bright sunshine. Canada is prospering, and she can now better afford to pay her Cabinet Ministers than ever before.

Mr. DAVIN. The glorious way in which we have merged into the bright sunshine is evidently by piling up the expenditure. I do not object to paying the hon. gentlemen who occupy the respective positions of Ministers of Inland Revenue and of Customs, the same salaries their colleagues receive. But what the leader of the Opposition contends is what was always understood in this House, that once these gentlemen had seats in the Cabinet, the purely ornamental office of Minister of Trade and Commerce should then cease to exist. The Prime Minister makes no defence of it, except to remind the leader of the Opposition that it sometimes happens that a Minister occupying a comparatively unimportant portfolio may still exercise large influence upon public affairs. If that is a defence in this case, it may be made a defence for appointing 15, 16 or 17 Ministers. This is a growing time, the expenditure has gone up to over $60,000,000; and if the hard-working farmers and artisans should next year keep up the growing time, we will probably have $70,000,000 of expenditure, an orgie of extravagance on which the Minister of Trade and Commerce looks with complacency.

Why, Sir, I cannot sit in this House and look across the floor at the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce because, I may say, that nobody can sit in this House as long as I have—although we do not know each other—even if they are not intimate with them, without having a kindly feeling towards them. And when I contrast the appearance of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, with the appearance he used to wear on this side of the House, his sleekness, his self-complacent joy in life, the look of delight that beams from his countenance, as vast sums of extravagance are piled up, if one could forget the wrong to the country, the benevolence in the man would be stimulated and he would be led to reflect something of the joy and delight that are upon the countenance of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. On behalf of this country, on behalf especially of the west, I protest against having a purely ornamental office and against a Minister being paid $7,000 a year merely because the right hon. Prime Minister can say of him: He can exercise some influence. I object further that, anybody who has been accustomed to examine the blue-books issued by the Department of Trade and Commerce and the blue-books issued by the Department of Customs, will see that the Department of Trade and Commerce is simply superfluity of naught-ness. There is a wasteful expenditure on these blue-books which could be saved by simply giving a little more attention to the blue-book that is issued by the Department of Customs. I do not know really how the Government regard the people of this country. I am afraid that they are taking a view of the people that future events will not justify. If the people are so lost to all sense of observation, if they are so lost to all sense of perspective, that they cannot contemplate the extravagance of this Government, especially their extravagance when compared with their professions, when they were in office. If the people can condone it, then Sir, it will be impossible to classify the people of Canada amongst intelligent nations.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Seek some classification then.

Mr. DAVIN. The classification will be one that the right hon. gentleman will be able to make. The right hon. gentleman, when he sits here, when he has been driven from power, as I believe he will be on the first occasion, in consequence of that extravagance, will be able to classify the people, and he will be able to classify them amongst men who, when sold are not willing to remain in slavery.

Mr. TALBOT. And if the Government are maintained, what will be the hon. gentleman's classification?

Mr. DAVIN. What is that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Talbot), who comes to the aid of his leader, says?

Mr. TALBOT. How will the hon. gentleman classify them if the Government are maintained?

Mr. DAVIN. I did not hear the hon. gentleman. I wish that when, before the hon. gentleman interrupts, he would take some lessons in vocal enunciation, so that he would have a large claim to belong to the class of articulate speaking men. When he fails to make himself clearly heard and understood he suggests a classification that is not exactly amongst articulate speaking men. I entirely protest against the suave passing over of breaches of promises such as we are face to face with to-day. Where is the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock)? The hon. Postmaster General is on record in this House as protesting against even thirteen Cabinet Ministers. Where is he to-day? The hon. gentleman who has just come in tells us that he, as well, is of the same opinion that we have too many Ministers, but he falls back on the fact that this is a growing time and that we have made some advances.

The PRIME MINISTER. Perfection is not of this world.

Mr. DAVIN. I know that, but I never knew that deterioration could become so rapid, as I find in the exemplification of the right hon. gentleman. I know very well that he is not perfect, and I know very well that none of his colleagues are perfect, but as to any opinion I ever had of the Liberal party and of Liberal leaders, I am on record, in this House when the right hon. Prime Minister was sitting upon this side, as saying that he had not the materials around him to make a Cabinet. Whatever view I took of these hon. gentlemen, I never dreamed, in any pessimistic moment, that we should have them coming into power, and at the end of three years giving such a complete demonstration of the fact that men can forget all that is due to their worth, to their dignity and to the country that they profess to serve. I never could have dreamed it, and I have here to put on record my protest against this failure to carry out pledges. This is only one of many, because at every turn we find these extravagances. As I said here the other day there is not an atom, there is not a moral square in the carpet of fact, on which hon. gentlemen can stand and say: We have fulfilled our promises. First, the doctrine that Cabinet Ministers were too numerous is broken, and then there was the pledge, held out to us, not only by one Government, but by two Governments, because it has always been so understood, that if the Controllers were raised to the rank of Cabinet Ministers the superfluity would be got rid of. In regard to the personal element composing the superfluity, I would be sorry to see the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) disappear from the House or the Government. He adds to the dignity of the Government and of the House, and of course, with his vast experience and admitted great ability, he is a gentleman, whom even an opponent would not wish to see disappear from the House. Nevertheless he can be kept in the Government and in the House without increasing the pay of Cabinet Ministers, because, although they are all lords and gentlemen of high degree still I think that the right hon. Prime Minister, without putting on a pair of magnifying lenses, could find amongst his Cabinet gentlemen that he could get rid of without materially weakening it. I cannot believe that, under the circumstances, the people of this country will agree to the proposal, that now seems to be the accepted policy of the Government, that we must have fourteen Ministers paid $7,000 a year each.

Mr. F. A. MARCOTTE (Champlain). (Translation). Mr. Chairman, I have very little to say in connection with the resolution now before the House. But I cannot refrain from saying how startled I was when hearing the hon. gentleman announce a breach of promise such as we are face to face with to-day. The hon. gentlemen opposite are now coming down and asking us an increase of salaries for two Cabinet Ministers, after having so long protested, through that long sitting in the cool shades of opposition, against such an increase of expenditure. I am sure every hon. gentleman must have been impressed, as I was, in contemplating the eagerness with which the right hon. gentleman and his colleagues came down and asked for an increase of salary, when compared with their scruples in the matter of an increased indemnity to members of Parliament. They do not stand on ceremony when they come and ask the House to increase their own salaries, and they think it is a perfectly fair and reasonable proposition to lay before the House, and that it almost amounts to an economy.

Mr. Chairman, I think there is ample food for reflection on the part of every member of this House, in the fact that the hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches, while having no hesitation in increasing their own salaries, show themselves so dainty, so over-particular in the case of an increased indemnity to members of Parliament. If you talk of increasing the pay of members, the right hon. gentleman will be heard to say: "We cannot support such a proposition; we must reduce the expenditure and apply the pruning knife." But in the case of raising the salary of the hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches, it is quite different, and you will be told that the Ministers, having to perform such important services to the country, they are entitled to an increase of salary.

I think, Sir, there is an anomaly in that respect, and the hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches, far from showing any breadth of spirit, are open to the charge of egotism. It is a common saying that the fear of the electorate is the beginning of wisdom; but, of course, in their opinion, that applies only to the Government so far as an increased indemnity to members of Parliament is concerned, and it has nothing to do with increasing the pay of Cabinet Ministers.

Members of Parliament have a smaller salary than short-hand writers and other public servants, and it is ridiculously small, when compared with the salary of the Cabinet Ministers, who draw $660 a month. And it goes without saying, that, having less influence and less prestige than Cabinet Ministers, members of Parliament have more trouble in carrying their constituencies and retaining their seats in this House, while having to shoulder the responsibility of the Government policy. I have no hesitation in speaking aloud on this matter, and voicing the general opinion of hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House. As I said, the indemnity of $1,000 members of this House are paid is ridiculously small, compared with the salary the Cabinet Ministers and civil servants are paid.

The proposition now before us should afford ample food for reflection to hon. gentlemen opposite who, for eighteen long years, have denounced extravagance and advocated a policy of retrenchment and economy in the public affairs of this country. Our Cabinet Ministers have, no doubt, a great responsibility, and they have onerous duties to perform; but I say without hesitation that they are now betraying another of their pledges made to the electorate in respect to the salaries of Cabinet Ministers. The hon. gentlemen have falsified all their pledges in regard to economy given to the people, and especially to the province of Quebec, at the general elections of 1896, and on the occasion of my election in the county of Champlain, which I represent in this House.

Mr. BENNETT. If the Government had not already broken so many of their pledges the country would be startled to hear them announce the betrayal of another pledge in respect to the salaries of Cabinet Ministers. In this growing time, when every friend of the Government expects to profit it is reasonable that the Ministers themselves would also like to take pecuniary advantages of the results. I quite agree that the two gentlemen who are to be advanced to the same salaries as other Ministers are, in my humble opinion, entitled to an even salary with the others. When one contrasts the duties of the Secretary of State with the duties of the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) or the Minister of Inland Revenue (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière), there can be no doubt in the world that the two latter perform more important services to the country. Only one reason for this increase in salary has been advanced, and that was by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) who claimed that on the ground that there has been an increase in the revenues of the country, and that therefore there should be a greater participation in the public funds by all concerned, but there is a salutary rule in life which advises that when one is doing well he should look out for a rainy day, and while the Government and their friends talk about the growing time in the country, as evidenced by the increase in revenue, it is a matter of fact that the claim is somewhat exaggerated. If my hon. friend from West Durham (Mr. Beith) were here I could point to the town of Bowmanville in which he lives, and which is to-day very quiet in point of trade. I might point to the town on the shores of Lake Ontario and I might ask my hon. friend from South Ontario (Mr. Burnett), who to-day is not in his seat, if he ever saw the town of Whitby as quiet as it is now. Take Newcastle, take most of the towns along the borders of Lake Ontario, and it is a remarkable fact that they never had a greater era of depression than they are now experiencing. There has been a period of inflation in some respects, I regret to say, but if you ask wholesale merchants and manufacturers, they will tell you that in many years that payments were never slower than they are to-day in Ontario. They will tell you that people are living as it were in prospective, that they are hopeful of something which has not yet arrived. I admit in the Ontario towns where manufacturing is carried on to a considerable extent, and more particularly the manufacturing of machinery for mining and other purposes, there has been some prosperity, but, generally speaking, prosperity does not exist. I shall not charge the Government with breaking their pledges in this matter, because, in view of all that has occurred, the people of the country do not expect them to keep their pledges. The people have been disappointed continuously in that regard for the last three years, and at this late stage they have given up all hope of any fulfilment of promises on the part of the Government. Now is the time for the Government and for this Parliament to take in sail rather than to crowd on all canvas, and in order to test the view of the House, I beg to move, seconded by my hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) :

That in view of the advancement of the Minister of Inland Revenue (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière) and the Minister of Customs (Mr. Pater-son) to the full rank of Cabinet Ministers, together with the allowance to them and the full salaries of Cabinet Ministers, there should be a reduction of the salaried Ministers of the Crown by at least one in number, and that the cost of civil government should be reduced according to such reduction in the Estimates for the current year.

In this resolution I have signalled out no particular Minister of the Government, but personally I should be very sorry if there was a resolution made that the services of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) should be lost to the House and to the country. Irrespective of politics, I believe that to-day, owing to his capabilities, owing to his hitherto unblemished and unsullied reputation for honesty and probity there is no man in the whole Administration—I except none—who stands higher than does the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright).

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT. The people of Ontario, Conservatives as well as Liberals, give credit to the Minister of Trade and Commerce that he endeavours to lessen the great expenditure that is being settled on the taxpayers of this Dominion to-day. The Minister of Trade and Commerce is given credit for this by the people, that while he was a member of the Mackenzie Administration he did not set his sails to each favouring breeze. There were Liberals in 1873 who strongly pressed on the Liberal Administration that there should be an era of extravagant government, and it is creditable to the Minister of Trade and Commerce that he strenuously opposed that and stood out on principle. I believe that the Minister of Trade and Commerce is to-day the one remaining bulwark against extravagance and worse than the taxpayers of the country have in the Cabinet. I believe he is the one gentleman who remonstrates and I only hope and trust that the Minister of Trade and Commerce, if there should be a change in the Cabinet, will retain a seat therein. If the Government does not accept this resolution which I have the honour to move, they will only give another proof of their absolute disregard for economy in the administration of the public service.

Mr. HENDERSON. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) who is at the present moment out of the House, in order to shield himself against the consequences of his change of heart in regard to extravagant expenditure of this country, referred to a statement made by the leader of the Opposition some two years ago. I desire to point out to the hon. gentleman, however, that the ground on which he was standing was not so sure and solid as he appeared to think it was. At the time the leader of the Opposition made the statement attributed to him, the following resolution was under consideration :—

The salary of each of the said Ministers shall be $5,000 per annum, and shall continue at that rate until a readjustment of the departments of Government shall reduce the number of Ministers holding departments to thirteen or less, whereupon thereafter the salary of each of the said Ministers shall be $7,000.

What the leader of the Opposition said was a plea on behalf of the two Controllers for a salary equal to that of the other Ministers, but only on consideration that the number of Cabinet Ministers should be reduced, and therefore the public revenue should not suffer. This is what he said :

If it is not convenient to make at the present moment a reduction in the number of Cabinet Ministers, which you evidently contemplate, why should you have these gentlemen in the invidious position of receiving a smaller salary. If it is not too late, I would suggest to the Ministers that they should reconsider this resolution and place the Controllers in the position which is justice to themselves and the duties they have to perform they have a right to. Under the circumstances, it would have been better to give the Controllers of the Inland Revenue and of Customs the full salaries so as to implement the promises of the Prime Minister, and then you could make your reduction in the number of Cabinet Ministers afterwards.

On the same occasion I took the opportunity of referring to this matter. I freely expressed my opinion that, as the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Inland Revenue had charge of very important and heavy departments, there was no good reason why those hon. Ministers should not receive as ample a consideration for their services as any other Minister of the Crown. I will read what I stated then and what I still hold. With reference to the department of the Minister of Customs, I said :

I believe it is one of the most difficult departments to manage, there is certainly a very large amount of work, and I can see no reason whatever why that gentleman should receive only $5,000 while the other Ministers are paid $7,000 a year. My plan would be something different from anything that has yet been suggested. We have in the Senate two Cabinet Ministers. One the Secretary of State, occupies, to my mind, a minor position, and one of very little public importance. There is no good reason why that gentleman should receive $7,000 a year, while the Controller of Customs should be put off with $5,000. Then again, in the Senate we have the Minister of Justice, and in this House we have the Solicitor General, both of whom receive together $12,000 a year. I would reduce the Minister of Justice and the Secretary of State down to $5,000, and raise the salary of the Controllers to $7,000 a year, and I think the money would be more equitably distributed than it is at the present time.

I hold the same opinion still. I think there are good reason why hon. gentlemen occupying seats in the Senate, as the Secretary of State and the Minister of Justice do, should not be paid the same indemnity for their services as those who have seats in this House. These gentlemen in the Senate have seats for life. As I understand that the resolution of the Government has been withdrawn, no doubt these gentlemen will consider their positions safe. They have their seats as long as they live, and it costs them nothing to carry those seats. They are put to no expense in the way of revising voters' lists or defending election protests. The Solicitor General is supposed to do a large part of the work of the Minister of Justice, and receives $5,000 a year for that service. I can see no good reason why $12,000 a year, independent of the salaries paid to the deputy and other assistants, should be expended on that department, and only $7,000 on that of the Prime Minister. I further said at that time :

I am sure that the Minister of Justice, when he has in this Chamber an assistant in the Solicitor General to do half of his work, would be very well satisfied to take the sum of $5,000 a year.

At that time the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) was good enough to reply to me by saying :

I am afraid that my hon. friend has not got sufficient respect for that august assembly which sits so near us ; but I will mention his suggestion.

I wish to ask the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce what was the result of the interview ?

THE MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I have no objection to state to the hon. gentleman ; it is taken under consideration. Now, I may be pardoned for saying a word or two, as I have been frequently alluded to in this discussion. I do not intend to take up the time of the House replying to the allusions that have been made to my own department. But I will say this, that if the opinion of members on both sides of the House is that the number of Cabinet Ministers is too great and ought to be reduced, and reduced pretty largely, I make this suggestion—be it remembered wholly and entirely in a theoretical way, because at the present moment we are not in a position to deal with it. They will have to adopt some such system as that which prevails in the mother country, with very great advantage, in my opinion, to the public service and to the status of Parliament itself. As everybody knows, in England the number of Cabinet Ministers is relatively far less than it is with us ; but that is made up for by having a number of Under-Secretaries attached to the several departments, who take a very large share of the work, and who are for the most part chosen from among the younger members of the House. Theoretically considered, the English system, in my opinion, is far preferable to ours. I expressed that opinion more than once when I was in Opposition, and I may tell the hon. gentleman that I expressed it when this constitution of ours was in process of formation, before 1867. That system has the great additional advantages that a number of Under-Secretaries of junior age and experience can very properly be chosen, and from them, if they prove themselves worthy, a crop of Ministers can be ripened in due course. If we are to consider the matter in a purely theoretical light, without regard to existing conditions. I venture to say that in process of time something of that kind will have to be elaborated here, as it grew up in the older country, and I can see a great deal to be said for the introduction of such a system.

When confederation was formed, it was formed by the union of parties in all the leading provinces, and the result was that a very much larger number of Cabinet Ministers was introduced than probably would have been under other conditions. That state of things has continued to the present, and it is by no manner of means, as everybody is aware who has any experience of practical politics, an easy thing to depart from. As for myself, I can say this, that when my friends, from my own province or the Cabinet, think that I have become a useless member of it, I shall be the last man to trouble them with my services.

Mr. CRAIG. While it may be cruel, as the hon. leader of the Opposition says, to hold hon. gentlemen opposite to their pledges, still I think it my duty to remind them and the country of some statements they have made on the question of economy in the administration of public affairs. I myself am in favour of economy, but I am under the impression that the Government is becoming rather too extravagant, and I think the country is rapidly reaching the same conclusion. Perhaps the people do not realize this as fully now as they will later on, but certainly the day is not far distant when they will become very wide awake. We are told that this is a growing time, and while it may be in some other respects, there is no doubt that it is a growing time as regards public expenditure.

I propose to read some very interesting selections from a speech made by the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) when in Opposition, and who at that time was one of the most economical men in the House. The selections I intend to read are from a speech he made on a Bill to reduce the salary of the Governor General, and will speak for themselves, and besides have a direct bearing on the subject before the House :

It looks to me as if the whole scheme of Government in Canada, as represented by costly Governors General, Lieutenant Governors and Cabinet Ministers, were founded upon too liberal a scale. For example, in the United States Government there are but eight heads of departments, each of whom is paid a salary of $8,000 a year, or a total of $64,000. In Canada, we have Ministers and departments galore—eleven Ministers drawing $8,000 a year each, one drawing $9,000, and three Controllers together drawing $18,000 ; in other words, the executive heads of our Government cost us $115,000 a year, as against $64,000 a year payable to the corresponding heads of departments in the United States. In other words, we are paying about 80 per cent more in the way of salaries to the members of our Government than are paid to the members of the United States Government. I mention that as a further illustration of the extravagant scale upon which our Government was formed.

The hon. leader of the Government replied to this statement of the hon. Postmaster General this morning by saying that the system of Government here is entirely different from that in the United States. But I think we might search through the records of "Hansard" in 1895 in vain to find from the right hon. gentleman any such argument as he made this morning. Why did he not then point out the fact that the cases are entirely different? He does so now, but when the Postmaster General was in Opposition and made the statement I have just quoted, the right hon. gentleman gave it his silent endorsement. The hon. Postmaster General, in the same speech, further said :

Nor would I be doing fairly by the subject if I were to suggest that the expenditure has grown to its present proportions under the present Administration. Taking the returns that I have, covering a quarter of a century, giving the figures during the Reform regime as well as the Conservative regimes, there is nothing in the direction of economy particularly on this score, particularly to the credit of the Reform Administration of 1874 to 1878. So that my criticism is wholly also without reference to any particular Government.

The hon. gentleman said also :

The expenses of our Government have grown beyond what is reasonable ; and if we are going to apply the pruning-knife, we must begin at the top. The Government must set the example ; every one who is in possession of power must set the example, that we may bring back the expenditure to a reasonable and moderate limit. Who can justify the expenditure of our country to-day ? It cannot be justified by the wealth of the country. There is nothing to warrant this enormous expenditure of nearly $38,000,000, except the fact that we are burdened down with debt and with office-holders great and small.

The hon. gentleman at that time held up his hands in horror at the bare idea of an expenditure of $38,000,000. But what a change to-day ! To-day we have an expenditure of $60,000,000, and the hon. gentleman views it with the greatest equanimity. What a change in the short space of four years since he crossed from the one side of the House to the other.

I am going to read from the remarks of another gentleman who used to pose as a great economist, and has some pretensions to be one still, although no longer giving any evidence of it by his vote. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), a short time ago, twitted the hon. leader of the Opposition with the fact that he could not always carry his followers with him: I think that was rather to the credit of the Opposition, because it shows that there are members on this side who have some individuality of opinion and do not follow their leader blindly, as does the hon. member for North Wellington. That hon. gentleman does not, evidently, always feel quite comfortable in his present role, for he occasionally, but on very rare occasions, attempts to make some little show of independence by getting up and mildly protesting against some increase, but being always very careful not to vote against the Government. That, of course, he could never do or he would lose all chance of a Senatorship or some other preferment, and while I do not say that that is the reason, it is very suspicious that this hon. gentleman who, when on this side, used to preach a crusade, in season and out of it, against extravagance, has now lost the faintest trace of his former desire for economy and swallows everything. When on this side he supported a Bill introduced by the Postmaster General, then a member of the Opposition, to reduce the salary of the Governor General, and took very strong ground in supporting that measure. He declared it to be a good Bill, that the Government was altogether too extravagant, and that this reduction should be made. I propose to read one or two selections from what the hon. gentleman said, which, no doubt, will be interesting reading to his friends opposite, and the country :

The whole cost of the Government of this country is altogether too much. We have thirteen Ministers, each drawing a salary of $7,000 and a sessional allowance of $1,000 ;—

I wish the right hon. First Minister and his colleagues in the Government to listen to this, and they might have a little conference with the hon. member for North Wellington and find out what he thinks of all this talk going on in the newspapers supporting the Government to-day, and some of those who do not, about increase of salaries to the right hon. gentleman.

—and I must say that if $7,000 was considered an ample allowance twenty years ago, $4,000 should be considered an ample allowance now.

I wonder what the Ministers have to say to that?

Four thousand dollars would procure to-day more of the necessaries of life or the ordinary supplies required by a member of the Cabinet, than $7,000 would twenty years ago.

This is very important information for the members of the Cabinet, and I am glad I found it out for them.

Wheat, flour and other supplies are not over half the price they were. We pay the thirteen Cabinet Ministers $92,000 in salaries and $13,000 in sessional allowances; we provide them with private secretaries, costing $9,000; we pay a deputy Speaker $2,000; we pay two Controllers $13,200; that makes $129,200 for our Cabinet Ministers and our two Controllers; and we have also a Solicitor General, who costs us $6,000 a year.

I see the hon. Postmaster General is coming in now, but I have got through the selections from his speeches.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Read them again.

Mr. CRAIG. No, but I will tell him where they are, so that he may hunt them up, perhaps, for the next Cabinet council. He will find them in the "Hansard" of 1895, pages 3250 to 3252.

But I am reading now from the speech of the hon. member for North Wellington, who seconded the Bill of the Postmaster General for reducing the salary of the Governor General. I am a little surprised that we have not heard anything of that Bill since 1896. It was considered a most important measure at the time. The present Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock), made a very strong speech in favour of it, and so did the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen). We may find that measure mentioned in the Speech from the Throne next session. We shall look for it very anxiously. Now, let me read another short selection from the speech of the hon. member for North Wellington. I ask the particular attention of the Minister of Finance to this:

But when you consider the whole condition of things in this Dominion, and the experience of other colonies that have been extravagant in this regard, you must see that it is time for us to call a halt and make a decided effort to bring the annual expenditure of the country down to a figure which our people can bear without feeling the burden so seriously as they do to-day. I believe we could reduce the expenditure of this country by five or six millions if the Government were only ready and willing to consent to it.

I wonder if that is the case to-day, that the Government are standing in the way of a reduction of the expenditure. We must hold them responsible for it, according to the doctrine of the hon. member for North Wellington.

I believe we could reduce the expenses of the civil service by from $500,000 to $750,000, if the Government would put fewer of their friends in office, and only employ men to fill the offices because they were capable and because they were needed.

I might go on reading almost for ever from the speeches of the same kind by gentlemen on the other side. I have not had time to look up the speeches of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright). But I have no doubt that I could find even stronger speeches made by that hon. gentleman. I am glad that hon. gentleman is in the Cabinet, for I believe he is something of a brake upon the Government. But for him, the Estimates might be seventy millions. We heard that the supplementary Estimates were to be about $8,000,000; but they were whittled down a good deal after the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) left the country. I think the country expects the Minister of Trade and Commerce to look after this expenditure. I am in favour of economy, but there is one thing I will vote for, and that is to employ somebody to make selections from the speeches of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Postmaster General and the hon. member for North Wellington on the subject of extravagance, and once a week read these selections to the Cabinet. One member suggests that the reading should be daily, but that would take too much time. Before the Council enter upon the consideration of any Estimates, these selections should be read, inculcating economy and showing that the farmers of this country are not willing to be taxed as they have been taxed. I hope the Cabinet will consider this question of economy. I am talking seriously; I am not talking for fun. The Finance Minister himself must admit that the expenditure is altogether too great. After having declared that $38,000,000 was too much, how can they reconcile it with their principles to bring down Estimates for nearly $60,000,000? The country realizes the absurdity of it, and will hold these hon. gentlemen to the promises they made when in Opposition.

Mr. McDOUGALL. What member of the Administration is charged with the executive management of the Pacific cable and the fast line? I notice the Postmaster General had charge of the Pacific cable question on the floor of this House, and also that when the Government came in, the management of the fast line was given in charge of the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Dobell), who has made so many trips across the Atlantic in connection with it. I should suppose that these matters should be in charge of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Does the Prime Minister refuse me an answer? I think my question is quite pertinent.

The PRIME MINISTER. I beg my hon. friend's (Mr. McDougall) pardon. Did he ask me a question?

Mr. McDOUGALL. I want to know what member of the Administration is charged with the executive management of these services—the fast line and the Pacific cable?

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McDougall) knows that the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) is not in good health, and cannot give to his department the same attention he would give otherwise.

Mr. McDOUGALL. That is not an answer to my question. The right hon. First Minister might inform me whether these two services are under the executive management of the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

The PRIME MINISTER. Which services?

Mr. McDOUGALL. The Pacific cable and the fast line.

The PRIME MINISTER. The Pacific cable, when it becomes a fact, will be under a commission sitting in London, as proposed by the Bill which has been passed.

Mr. McDOUGALL. But the negotiations with a view to the Pacific cable must be conducted by some Minister of the Crown. Who has the information I want?

The PRIME MINISTER. Negotiations have been carried on by the High Commissioner.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I suppose, then, the High Commissioner acts without any authority from any department here?

The PRIME MINISTER. The High Commissioner reports to me direct.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Then, we are to understand that so far the negotiations are with the Prime Minister, and not with any other member of the Cabinet?

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that the amendment is in the right direction. I shall not, like my hon. friend from East Durham (Mr. Craig) read in support of it speeches made by hon. gentlemen opposite, when in Opposition. I might use up hours of time in doing so. But I desire to point out that the same work now done by the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Inland Revenue was done for many years in the past by hon. gentlemen who, I think, did their work equally to the satisfaction of the country, and for $2,000 less each. When it was proposed to establish the Controllerships, it was said in support of the proposal that the expenditure would be much less than to have two Cabinet Ministers, while the work would be equally well done with the Minister of Trade and Commerce as the representative of the two departments in the Cabinet. The work was done by the two Controllers, who were paid $5,000 each, and now it is proposed to increase this to $7,000 a year each.

In my judgment, if the work could be done equally well before with men who were quite as capable as the men who are doing the work now, and if $5,000 a year was sufficient then, it ought to be sufficient for the same class of men now. The other feature of it is also objectionable, and that is that this resolution is retroactive. When we pass a Bill in connection with the civil service it is usually understood to apply only to the future. But this Bill goes back more than a year, and says that we shall give each of these men practically a bonus of $2,000 apiece each for their services last year. I consider this is a violation of a principle that we have always held to be a correct one, that this Bill should not be retroactive.

Mr. CLANCY: I am puzzled somewhat concerning this right-about-face of the Government on this question within two years. I do not question the propriety of raising the two Controllers to the rank of Ministers. I have always thought that was a very proper thing. But it seems this had to be done by stealth rather than in a plain and open way. We were told two years ago that there was to be no increase in the salary then, and that such increase would only take place in case one of the present Ministers was done away with. Now that pledge has not been carried out. To be sure, we do not always hold hon. gentlemen opposite to a strict performance of their pledges; indeed we sometimes rather commend them for breaking their pledges. But there can be no excuse for their breaking this pledge under the circumstances, and we are puzzled to know how the hon. gentlemen have been able to seduce their supporters into agreeing in a course which they promised would only be taken on condition that one of the present Ministers was done away with. I think this is clearly an act of bad faith on the part of the Government.

Amendment negatived—yeas 17, nays 44.

Mr. HUGHES. May I ask if the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Cowan) is paired.

Mr. COWAN. No, I am not paired for anything in committee. That is expressly understood by the whips and by Dr. Montague and myself. In the early part of the session we were so paired, but that agreement was dissolved as applying to anything done in committee.

Resolution reported.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 182) respecting the Departments of Customs and Inland Revenue.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

Mr. FOSTER. May I ask the Prime Minister if it is proposed to sit after six o'clock to-day?

The PRIME MINISTER. No, I think not.

It being One o'clock, the Deputy Speaker left the Chair.

The House resumed at Three o'clock.

BILL WITHDRAWN.

Bill (No. 165) to incorporate the Yukon River and Atlin Lake Improvement Company.—(Mr. Belcourt.)

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Department of the Interior—

Salaries and expenses in connection with the administration of the Yukon provisional district .....	$100,000
---	-----------

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Chairman, I am glad to see the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) in his place, because I am very anxious to make another appeal to the Government on the question of the dues imposed on mining licenses in regard to the output of gold in the Yukon country. As the hon. gentleman knows, I have always attached a great deal of importance to this question, because I regard the imposition of a 10 per cent duty upon the output as not only a very great injustice to those engaged in gold mining, but I believe it is injurious to the public revenue. My own impression, based upon the information I have been able to get, in reference to this subject, is that it has the effect of restricting gold mining in the Yukon, principally the development of claims of moderate richness, instead of enabling the development of the country by parties who have not a large amount of capital or resources to be carried on, the same as by parties who have obtained possession of very good claims. I am strengthened very much in this opinion by the report of the late and present officers of the Government in the Yukon. I hold in my hand Major Walsh's report, who says, under the heading of "Royalty":

On arrival at Dawson I found a great many questions awaiting solution which could only be disposed of by the authority of the Commissioner. For instance, the question of royalty, over which there had been considerable discussion, appeared to be somewhat mixed. I immediately announced that royalty would be collected on all claims the leases of which were renewed subsequent to the date when the law came into force. Nearly all the leaseholders of the larger prospected claims showed a disposition to respect the collection of royalty. Others, however, were not so tractable, their principal objection being that their leases were granted for one year and that once being granted subsequent restrictions could not be placed upon them. I pointed out to the leaseholders that collection of royalty was necessary for the maintenance of courts of justice, for police protection, mail communication, and for public services. While acknowledging the force of these reasons, they submitted that a more thorough examination of the real cost of outputting the gold would convince the Government that the royalty is a severe tax, and expressed a hope that next year would see it removed.

I have never proposed that the royalty should be removed, but I do suggest that it should be placed on a footing corresponding to that which is exacted in other parts of the Dominion, in British Columbia and Nova Scotia, where gold mining has long been carried on, and also in other gold-mining countries, especially the United States of America.

Referring to the practice in other countries, I believe there is no parallel to be found anywhere for the exaction of such a royalty on the gold output as is exacted in the Yukon country. I made an appeal by cable to the Minister of the Interior from London, and he replied that it would engage the attention of the Government. I admit that a slight improvement was made when the exemption was extended from, I think, $2,500 to $5,000. Of course, that gave a certain relief, but a very small one. The effect of a 10 per cent royalty, which is so much in excess of that adopted in any other country, is injurious to the best interests of Canada in many ways. I am able to speak with positive knowledge when I say, that it has greatly retarded the introduction of British capital into Yukon gold mining investments, and I have no doubt capital from other countries, but I lay particular stress upon British capital. It has had a most depressive effect upon the introduction of British capital into that territory. It is so large that it has defeated its object, owing to the temptation to smuggle, and as the Minister must know, it is not a very difficult thing to conceal the output of gold, because there is such large value in such small space, that it cannot be so easily prevented as smuggling in any other branch of commerce. It has a doubly injurious effect, because when gold is, so to speak, smuggled, it lessens the report of the output, which tends to damage the value of the country in the eyes of the public. Major Walsh continues to say:

Royalty was not collected from any claims which had not got into good working order or which could not show a profit after paying a royalty, and this would represent a large sum.

The effect of this oppressive tax was that Major Walsh could not put the law in force. He says :

Again, more than half the leases were exempted from royalty on account of having been renewed previous to the date of the law requiring the payment of royalty coming into force. The collection of royalty will amount to about a half-million dollars.

I regard that statement as the strongest condemnation of the imposition of a 10 per cent royalty upon an output exceeding $5,000, as the law stands at present. In another portion of Major Walsh's report, he returns to the subject, and under the heading of output of "gold and general prospects," he says :

The output of gold this year from the Yukon district will be in the neighbourhood of $10,000,000. When I left Dawson on the 4th August, the spring and summer's output amounted to about eight and one-half million dollars, and we estimated that there was about $2,000,000 of gold still on the dump, most of which could not be washed up for want of water, but, depending entirely upon rain, this could be cleared up before the close of the season. Three million dollars was carried over from last autumn, which was shipped out this summer. This amount cannot be counted in this year's output. It will require this year about three and one-half million dollars to do the business of the district.

When the difficulties of operation, the scarcity of supplies, and the lack of proper facilities for mining and the small territory worked are considered and understood, an output of $10,000,000 is a remarkable showing, and justifies great expectations for the future.

I call attention to that, because he points out the great difficulties under which gold mining is carried on there. He says :

Practically, Eldorado and Bonanza are the only two creeks upon which any considerable work has been done. They, therefore, represent the output this year. Next year, with Dominion, Hunker, Sulphur, and several other creeks, as well as a great many hill and bench claims, will be added to the list of producers, and it is impossible to make any estimate now of what the product of gold will be.

I draw the attention of the hon. Minister to that, and again to another statement on page 18 of Major Walsh's report, in which he says :

The cold and inhospitable climate, combined with the expensive and hard labour attendant upon mining in that country, will always make it an unpopular and unfavourable "mining camp," and for this reason the mining laws and regulations must be liberal, so as to attract and encourage the population and capital of the world.

Again, on the same page :

They seem to think that with the staking of a claim a fortune is assured. This is a delusion, the best evidence of which is the fact that 50 per cent of the claims which have been staked in the Yukon district have either been abandoned or not entered for. I know many men who came into the district at great expense of labour and money who have withdrawn from it without even locating a claim, and I know of hundreds who have staked claims who only did so with the hope of being able to sell them on the outside to people unacquainted with their value. After a claim has been staked there is a great deal to be done before its actual value—if it has any—can be determined. The cost of prospecting a claim may be anyway from $500 to $2,000, and even five times as much as the latter amount has been expended in prospecting claims which are now abandoned. Perhaps, with cheaper labour, they may be worked at some future time.

In the face of the statements of Major Walsh, the commissioner on the spot, who had the best means of judging, and who discloses that the mining laws were so severe that he had to resort to the unjustifiable—I might almost say—expedient of disregarding the law and using his own judgment; all that ought to have made such an impression on the Minister of the Interior as to satisfy him that a mistake had been made in this matter; and a mistake most injurious to the country. I venture to say that Mr. Ogilvie's opinion not only corroborates everything that Major Walsh has said, but goes a great deal further. I was assured by a gentleman of whose credibility I have no doubt that, Mr. Ogilvie told him that, in his judgment, the Government would receive a larger amount of revenue from a 2½ or 3 per cent royalty than from a 10 per cent royalty. I put it to the Minister of the Interior whether, in the face of all these facts, it would not be in the interest of Canada, in the interest of the Government, in the interest of the development of this great gold country, that we should mitigate that tax; at all events, reduce the 10 per cent royalty to a royalty more in conformity with the practice prevailing in the other gold-producing countries of the world. I do not intend to take up the time of the committee at this late stage of the session; but I felt, with the strong opinions which I hold, and which are generally held by parties who have taken an interest in this subject, that the Government ought to give that subject their attention. At all events, they should be in a position to try whether a more moderate exaction in that regard would not be attended with better results.

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to say a few words on this question, and perhaps the hon. Minister can answer everything at the same time. I have here a letter, on the same subject, from a young Ontario boy, who I presume is well known to the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), and he makes somewhat similar statements. Before reading the letter, I may say that when the question of the 10 per cent royalty was first considered in this House, I expressed my views very strongly against the wisdom of such a course, believing that the business would not warrant it. It appears that the miners entertain the same opinion. This young man says :

The miners complain very much at the Government taking a large royalty tax from them and won't even give them a passable road. I have got into many scrapes in trying to take sides with the Government and offer many excuses, but you cannot persuade the miners when they know they are getting the worst of it, and no doubt but they have got it in the neck on every side the past year. I am satisfied all the Government officials are either incompetent or dishonest and the majority are the last named—looking more to their own pockets and to the pockets of their friends than for the future welfare of this country. The best mines are owned by Americans and when I asked a shrewd Winnipeg lawyer how it was he said you know the Americans are better at tipping the officials than us Canadians and they have the best claims for that reason, and his remarks proved satisfactory to me when I got to investigating matters.

The Canadian Government is badly disgraced in this country and British justice is set aside by the people since they run across such injustice as has been practiced here. If it was not for the Mounted Police there is no doubt but the people would have risen in rebellion and perhaps slain several of the officials who have been running things this past year in a high-handed way. Why, the officials of the Government have more or less interest in claims that are supposed to be good or in a good neighbourhood and it has ruined this country for future development. They reserve, as well, every 10 claims for the Government, which practically leaves nothing for the mass of miners doing the hard work of prospecting.

It appears to me that the Canadian Government in sending out men here have sent all the scapegoats of the province—men of no ability who came with but one thing in view, and that is to fill their own pockets and ruin the reputation of British justice. The Yukon country is a thing of the past, and Government officials are the ones responsible for most of the injustice forced upon a brave, honest and industrious people, who have faced death to make a stake in this country. Thousands have left and gone across the border where there are better laws for miners, while thousands more have gone back home to Canada and elsewhere broken in health; no money and heart-broken because of the injustice met here at the hands of men in high offices.

I presume people on the outside would not believe me if I told some of the poor fellows' experiences in this country in the shape of killing themselves prospecting only to find themselves beat out of their locations by men sent here by a Government whose only aim is self and the man with the ounce (as they call it here). They call the Government tip "Mr. Ounce," which means in the past year if you wanted anything done by a Government official you had to have "Mr. Ounce" close at hand.

Mr. McMULLEN. Give us the name?

Mr. SPROULE. Mr. William Nightingale. I do not know what his politics are or anything about him; but from what he says: "I have got into many scrapes in trying to take sides with the Government." I take it that he cannot be a very strong politician on the Conservative side. I merely read the letter with the object of emphasizing the conviction I expressed nearly two years ago, that the 10 per cent royalty was a higher one than should be imposed, and also for the purpose of giving the Minister of the Interior a little information in addition to the large amount he has already received, from men who went to that country from Ontario and other provinces, so that it may help him to better understand the condition of affairs, and if possible devise a remedy at any early day.

Mr. McMULLEN. My hon. friend has mentioned my name in connection with the letter which he has just read. I certainly know the gentleman to whom he has referred. He is like a man who lived in my riding who was of such pronounced political opinions that in the general elections of 1896, when the Tory party was defeated, he declared that he would not live in Canada if it was to be governed by the Grits. He is an uncompromising, ingrained, galvanized Tory of the very worst kind. You could not find in the whole of Canada a man more imbued with Toryism than this same gentleman, and I am quite sure that this letter has been inspired by the same spirit, with the purpose of trying to injure the Government, and with no other purpose; for he is Tory every day in the year and Sunday too.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman says he is a Tory. Is he a dishonest or untruthful man?

Mr. McMULLEN. You find many Tories who are fairly honest otherwise, but who in politics are absolutely dishonest. With regard to the royalty, I am very glad indeed that the hon. Minister of the Interior has withstood all the appeals that have been made to him to lower the royalty on the output of gold in the Yukon. When we come to consider the enormous expenses to which Canada has been put to maintain law and order in that country, and to hold it under the control of Canada, I think the Minister of the Interior deserves a great deal of credit for trying to make that country pay its own expenses, instead of taxing the people of Canada for that purpose. I give him and the Government the utmost credit for the admirable manner in which they have managed the whole Yukon district. When we consider the enormous distance at which the country is removed from civilization, lying 1,400 or 1,500 miles inland, without railway or telegraph connection, and to which a contingent of the Mounted Police and a force of volunteers had to be sent at enormous expense, we can see what a burden it would have been on the people of this country if the urgent appeals of the hon. leader of the Opposition for a reduction of the royalty from 10 per cent to 2 per cent had been acceded to. I hope the Minister of the Interior will continue to withstand such appeals, and to collect from the gold that is mined in that country the same percentage in the future that he has collected in the past. A very large portion of the gold product is taken to the United States, and if, through the persistent efforts of the Minister of the Interior, we are able to hold 10 per cent of that product to meet the expenses connected with the opening up and development of the country, my hon. friend will deserve the undying credit of every true Canadian.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I listened with some care to the hon. leader of the Opposition in the expression of his views, which I have no doubt he has arrived at after careful consideration of this subject. I quite admit that the opinion of gentlemen of his experience, especially in connection with financial matters in which Canada is interested in the money markets of Great Britain, is entitled to great weight and serious consideration. The money market of Great Britain was entitled to very serious consideration. I regret I am not able to agree in the views which the hon. gentleman has expressed. I may say that the question of the royalties in the Yukon is not one that can be settled for all time or laid down as an absolute and permanent policy, to be followed in the future without any change or modification. It is a question that will have to be considered from time to time as circumstances may change. The position, in so far as the first year is concerned, was this. There was a number of rich claims that were practically all owned by aliens or men not Canadian citizens.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. McDonald, who has the sobriquet of the "King of the Klondike," is not an alien.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Perhaps I was speaking a little too generally when I said that practically all were aliens, but a very great majority of the claims were owned by aliens, and my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition will find that most of the claims which Mr. McDonald owns at present, had been purchased by him from aliens, who were the original discoverers, and purchased at very large figures in some cases. We were in this position. There was reported to be a number of claims, out of which very enormous profits were being made, because, while it has been extremely expensive and difficult to work mines in that country, yet enormous profits had been made, and were being made, very largely for the benefit of men who contributed nothing to our country, and who could not complain that they were badly treated, if called on to pay a percentage. I do not think that the imposition of the royalty has resulted in any great hardship. That which my hon. friend has pointed out with regard to Major Walsh's proceedings, simply indicates that the Government were solving that very difficulty, and had provided for it. The Government could not be fully aware of all the circumstances as they arose; there was no telegraphic communication by which executive action could be transmitted from day to day, or week to week, and we had to give Major Walsh the discretion to remit the royalty in certain cases. I think he acted with extreme judiciousness, and I am confirmed in this opinion by the fact that, though he has been attacked on a great many grounds, I have not heard anything against him in connection with his management of the very difficult task of the collection of taxes. He made some remissions, where it was shown that the expenses of working the claims had exceeded the output, and he was called on to decide what claims the law applied to. He exercised his judgment to the best of his ability, and I have heard no serious complaint in that regard. The fact that no complaint has been raised with regard to Major Walsh's conduct in this most delicate and difficult matter proves that he exercised his powers with tact and discretion. I do not think that any great hardship was imposed on the men who paid the royalty. The total collection, which amounted to nearly $400,000, was very much more than I anticipated a year ago, and it shows that, considering the exemptions, considering the large number of claims altogether exempted from royalty by reason of the fact that the leases had been renewed before the Order in Council imposing the royalty was passed, it must be admitted that the officers of the Government collected all the royalty they could reasonably have been expected to do. I agree in what the hon. leader of the Opposition has said, that when you impose a heavy tax, you put a premium on smuggling, but it does not follow that because some smuggling, some evasion of the law, takes place, it is unwise to impose the tax. That is a question which must be decided in view of all the circumstances. No doubt, some claim-owners endeavoured to escape payment of the tax, and concealed the output of their claims, but on account of that provision of the law which states that evasion or neglect to pay the tax imposed by Order in Council will, upon proof thereof, result in forfeiture of the claim, persons who own valuable claims are likely to be extremely careful before they make themselves liable to forfeiture of their title. That provision, our officers say, has been a very valuable feature, and had the effect of decreasing their difficulties to a large extent.

I do not think there is anything in the nature of an injustice suffered in consequence of this law. I do not think that any person who takes up a claim, knowing what the regulations are, can be held a victim of any injustice at the hands of the Government. And as to those men who took up claims a year and a half, or two years, ago, I do not think, under all the circumstances, they have any right to claim that the Government has treated them with injustice.

The view of my hon. friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) is one that appeals very strongly to me, namely, that, if possible, this mining country should be made to pay for itself. So far that has been the result. There was a large surplus last year, and I think that there will be a considerable surplus this year. As to what the hon. leader of the Opposition has particularly adverted to, and what is no doubt the main reason for his opinion, namely, his belief that the imposition of a royalty deters the people from working claims which are not already known to be of undoubted richness, this is the view I have formed, and which seems to me will be borne out by the facts, though possibly it may be modified by future developments. The richest claims are worked out as quickly as possible by the owners and those operating them, and it would have been a great mistake to have a low tax while that process is going on, for the purpose of encouraging development of the poorer claims. If it should turn out that the number of rich claims is comparatively limited, and the country becomes reduced to working poorer claims, that will be the time for the Government to consider that phase of the question, and, upon careful examination, decide whether it is necessary to the development of the country that a very much lower tax should be placed upon the output, or that a somewhat less crude tax—for a general imposition of 10 per cent is more or less crude—might be easily worked out and adopted. It might possibly, within a comparatively short time, become desirable that a very much lower tax might be imposed upon certain classes of property, necessarily worked in a certain way, where the grounds are poorer mining grounds, and the output small, and the capital required large. That would be a matter to be considered, and I would not like to express any opinion until the circumstances arise.

I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the Yukon territory is not suffering from lack of progress or from the lack of sufficient increase in the output. From all we can learn, the output this year will be probably $20,000,000, while last year it was hardly $10,000,000; so we may see that gold is being taken out of the country as rapidly as there is any special occasion for at the present time. I would not care to father a policy that would result in abnormally stimulating the mining operations in that country to such an extent that we should have the experience some other places had had and the mining operations cease or nearly cease after a short time. Conversations I have had with some gentlemen who have come to interview me on subjects connected with the country do not lead me to believe that when capital is needed in an extensive and bona fide way under the advice of men thoroughly acquainted with the country, the royalty, as it stands at present, would necessarily exclude that capital.

Mr. SIFTON.

Several gentlemen have at different times approached the Government to obtain concessions to employ capital on a very large scale; and in the course of conversation it has always been told them that any arrangement made would be made subject—with, perhaps, a reasonable exemption for the first cost of machinery—to the ten per cent royalty, just as in the case of the ordinary miner. Of course, no arrangement has been made so far, or Parliament would have been made aware of it. But I mention this as an indication of the fact that many men who have carefully studied the Yukon district are of the opinion that capital could be employed in very large quantities, and that gold taken out in course of these operations can pay such a tax as we are now imposing without the operations being rendered unproductive. I desire to commend to the committee this idea—that the policy we have followed up to the present time has been that which seemed best under the circumstances. It has been followed with the object of compelling those who have taken up extraordinarily rich mining claims in our territory to contribute such a proportion of their product as to enable the Government of the district to be carried on without loss; and this, so far, has not resulted in actually retarding the development of the country. Though no doubt it has, to some extent, prevented certain operations which might have been carried on had the tax not been imposed, yet the progress of the country has been quite sufficiently rapid to meet our view, and there is no special object in adopting any policy which would result in greatly stimulating the progress of mining there at the present time, in view of the fact that a very large amount of gold is being taken out, and no great advantage would result in accelerating operations in that direction. So far as the future is concerned, while there is nothing to show, in my judgment, that the tax will injure the country; while I am not prepared to say that, even when operations are reduced to dealing with mining properties which are not so productive as those most largely dealt with now, that tax will be reduced—still, it may be reduced. That is a matter that we have to consider when we have had more experience of the country and can act with a more full and accurate knowledge of the conditions.

Mr. MARTIN. I had not intended to trouble the committee, but I have a letter from a friend of mine in Dawson City, who has been there for a year or two; and, I think some statements he makes may be of some service to the Minister of the Interior in dealing with these questions, and in remedying some of the abuses which he says exist in the administration of affairs there. The letter is dated the 26th June, and I received it a day or two ago—so that even in the summer season, it takes a little more than a fortnight for a letter to come from Dawson City to Ottawa. My correspondent starts out by saying he has not had any news from the outside world, with the exception of a few clippings of newspapers, among others the "Star's" summary of Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper's speech on the Yukon government. He says:

Doubtless, many will think that Sir Hibbert's speech was strong, but I am sure that had an honest and capable judge, clothed with all necessary power, begun an investigation into the running of the various offices in Dawson last fall, at the time when the farcical white-washing investigation was begun by Commissioner Ogilvie, and had the report been published to the people, subsequent to the delivery of Sir Hibbert's speech, they would in chorus exclaim: "The half has not been told us." Instead of the Government appointing Commissioner Ogilvie to try Thomas Fawcett and his fellow-conspirators, it would have been more expeditious and less expensive, and not one whit more laughable, if they had appointed each of these little gods to try himself. Commissioner Ogilvie, like many great men before his time, has lived too long. He has lived to dig a grave and bury therein his once spotless reputation. Sir Hibbert's statements regarding the mail service are strictly correct, as everybody who has been in this country well knows. The statement of the Postmaster General that we had a fortnightly service here all winter is notoriously untrue. It is wonderful how a Crown Minister, having the least respect either for the position or himself, would utter in public so brazen a statement. Canada can afford to lower the postage to Great Britain and to the United States, but she cannot afford to give her own people, in her own territory, a decent mail service.

Now, Sir, I think it is pretty generally known, and by no people so well as by the Ministers of the Dominion Cabinet, that the administration of this territory is rotten. But it is not so generally known that the laws and regulations governing mining and the despotic authority with which those little gods of officials are clothed, are in themselves the chief reasons for this saturnalia of corruption. Now, I will point out to you a few of the absurdities of those regulations, regulations which are driving men out of the country every day, and if persisted in will inevitably be its ruin. We will take the royalty tax. Ten per cent is perhaps not too high for a few claims, perhaps a hundred or so, but on the great majority it is too much, it is nonsense. But the most outrageous feature of it is that the royalty is collected on the gross output; they don't care a rap whether the poor miner who worked hard all winter on his claim will have a dollar left after paying his expenses or not, the Government must have their swag.

Here is an instance of how it works. (I have this on the best authority). Two men owned a claim each having a half interest. They hired men and got out a dump. After they washed up, the Government took as its share 186 ounces, which in currency would be $2,656. After the expenses were all paid the owners divided $1,600 between them, $88 apiece. In another case on Dominion Creek, a man after paying the royalty had not enough left to pay for the labour, and had to dig down in his pocket to pay his men. It may be because I am dense, but I fail to see any difference between this holding up of the Yukon miner by the Dominion Government and the holding up by the Jesse James gang of a Pacific express. If there must be a royalty, in heaven's name let it be reasonable. Have it in the first place, by all means, on the net output of a mine, and again, don't make the little $5,000 claim-owner pay the same as the $100,000 man. Either have a sliding scale by which each will pay according to the amount he nets, or abolish it altogether. I am not opposed to a royalty altogether, but I think it wrong that a man with poor ground should be taxed the same as a man who has good ground.

Another regulation by which the Hon. Clifford Sifton advertises his utter incapacity, is that one by which a miner having recorded a claim, loses his right in that district. He may spend two or three months prospecting it, but if he finds nothing it is all off with him in that district. Statesmanship isn't in it. A man gets into the country, for the privilege of digging on a certain piece of ground he pays $15; if he finds anything, all is well; if not, well, this is what the Government practically says to him: "Well, we gave you 250 feet of ground there to dig on, if you didn't get anything, we can't help it." "Of course there are miles of land in this district yet, there may be gold in it, too, but then you must not dig, you might find some. See those high hills over there; well, we will give you 250 feet (where you cross there is the watershed next) to dig on if you like, but if you miss there your name is Dennis, your services for the development of those two districts are no longer required. The best thing that we can see for you to do is to get out of the country." Nice way to develop a country, surely.

Another huge farce is this representing a claim three months out of every year. Claims in here are of two classes, those known as summer diggings and those known as winter diggings. Now, you will often see a summer claim represented in the middle of winter, and a winter claim represented in the middle of summer. Representing in this way, of course, means sitting in a cabin or tent, eating up grub and satisfying the Dominion Government, who no doubt suppose (as they are so thoroughly versed in those matters) that by this means they are aiding the development of the country. There should be a uniform time for the representing of summer claims and also a day fixed upon which all winter claims must be represented. All claims not represented at those dates should be open to re-valuation by the first man who stakes. This would remove a great deal of the hoodling material from the hands of the official gang who alone have entrance into the "holy of holes" where the consecrated records of the Yukon district are preserved from the pollution of the public gaze. One can do nothing alone, he can dig a hole 10 feet or so, and must then quit work. If two men can in six weeks show more work than one man possibly can in three months, why not count it as representative? But no, it won't go; must have three months living there. Work cuts no figure at all. It is not a development of the country at all, apparently, that they are aiming at. Now, if there is any man so dull witted as to think that it would be better to have one man three months digging a hole in the ground than two men half the time, there is for that man only one field where he may rise, he better apply at once to the Hon. Clifford Sifton at the Interior Department. We have here all the abuses of autocratic government and we have no voice, no vote in the management of our affairs. Little gods are sent in and set over us clothed with almost unlimited power, and sail in to make a fortune, none daring to make them afraid, for have they not got at their backs the Government of Canada? We have taxation without representation, we have the "unearned increment" iniquity in its most pronounced type, and we have in reality no appeal.

There are a few other sentences in this letter, but I think that is all that refers to this question. I read it merely to show the committee and the Minister what a miner, who is on the ground, who owns a mine, and is anxious to work it, says are the hindrances with which miners have to contend.

Mr. DAVIN. Before the item passes, I would like to ask the hon. Minister whether the second instalment, which is now in my hand, of Mr. Ogilvie's report, makes, with the first instalment, the complete report?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, I think Mr. Ogilvie says, in the last paragraph, that there will be some matters which will require to be investigated.

Mr. DAVIN. I have gone through this report, and I do not intend, at this period of the session to take up the time of the committee in regard to it; I do not intend to attempt to do justice to it; I intend to take up one of the charges that Mr. Ogilvie was to have investigated just to show the way that the report leaves it. I will leave it to the committee, then, to judge of the character of the inquiry, and as to the justice of the particular charge to which I refer. One of the charges is this: that Mr. Sifton, being an employee of the Department of the Interior—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Wade.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) has got one paragraph ahead of his subject. That will come later.

Mr. DAVIN. No, I do not intend to bring the hon. gentleman into it in that way. The charge was that Mr. Wade, being an employee of the Department of the Interior, staked a claim on Monte Cristo Island. When that charge was made, those who made it were attacked for their injustice to Mr. Wade and their injustice to the hon. gentleman at the head of the Interior Department. It was intimated, of course, that if it could be shown that an officer of the Department of the Interior had been guilty of any misconduct of that sort, the hon. gentleman would at once deal with it. However, when Mr. Wade came back to Winnipeg he was interviewed. He admitted that he had staked a claim, but he said that he was given special permission to stake claims in the Yukon. The Winnipeg "Tribune" which published this interview, commented on it in this manner:

Mr. Wade admits having staked a claim on Monte Cristo Island, but justifies his action on the ground that when appointed he was given special permission to stake claims in the Yukon. This is exactly the position that the "Tribune" apprehended it to be when the famous grab was made on Monte Cristo, and which elicited so much hostile criticism at the time. While officials with a high sense of the positions which they filled would have declined to compromise themselves in the slightest by competing with the miners in the rush for claims, the original blame is now shown to be at the door of the Government, or the department which permitted the officials to depart from the well-known regulation regarding the holding of land, and to take up claims for themselves. As we pointed out at the time, the blame is not so much that of the officials as the Government that permitted it.

On page 18 of this volume of Mr. Ogilvie's report, Mr. Wade is being examined by the commissioner, and he says, in reply to a question:

I was registrar of lands under the Torrens system.

On page 24 it will be found that Milo Roberts was being examined by Mr. Clarke, who is acting as counsel:

By Mr. Clarke:

Q. You heard what Mr. Howard has said in answer to questions asked him. Do you believe what he said is true?—A. So far as I know.

Q. Do you know that this money was paid?—A. Just what he told you.

Q. Have you any knowledge of the business arrangement between Mr. Howard and Mr. Wade, other than hearsay?—A. No, sir.

Up to that point they are dealing with a wholly different matter from that which I am talking about, but then, Mr. Wade interjects this remark:

Mr. Wade.—There were some charges made against me regarding Monte Cristo Island.

The Commissioner.—There has been nothing said about that to me as commissioner.

Mr. Wade.—I think it important that the commission settle the matter; this charge was made on the outside; it was the first charge made, and included Mr. McGregor and myself.

The Commissioner.—That is a matter for you to bring up yourself.

Mr. Wade.—Yes, Mr. Commissioner, I will state what was said. It was stated that Mr. McGregor and myself had gone out there at midnight, and that we had swooped down on the island and practically staked all the claims on the island. This island has been described as "The Official Island." It was stated that in so doing, we had robbed the miners and prevented them from recording, and that Mr. McGregor and myself had suddenly made ourselves rich, and that my claim was worth $60,000. In answer to that charge, I want to say that we started for Monte Cristo Island in the morning in full daylight; there were no deeds of darkness about the matter at all.

You will see, Mr. Chairman, that to Mr. Wade's conception, though he is a lawyer and supposed to be rather an able man, the gravamen of the charge was, not that he had gone, contrary to law, and staked his claim, but that he had gone out there at midnight:

Q. What time of the year was this?—A. In March. Previous to going to Monte Cristo Island, I had been asked by a miner, who was a friend of mine, to go up and stake a claim. I asked if I might bring a friend along, and arranged with Mr. McGregor to go along with me. We were received by my friend, Mr. Burland, and others; they showed us their map, which they had made two days before, in which they had reserved a place for me to stake.

I want to call the attention of the House to that. I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that this Government official of the Department of the Interior had been in conversation with those miners in respect to staking claims.

So that was far from staking against the interests of the miners; I was staking on the invitation of the miners, who, two days before, had made this map, and asked me to stake. I staked a claim and Mr. McGregor staked a claim; they were all staking that day. So far were we from monopolizing the island, we had only staked two claims out of sixteen staked at that time. We certainly never valued our claims at $60,000. As a matter of fact, the date of the renewal of these claims has gone by, and only one claim has been renewed. I would like to call Mr. Hurdman, who has a list of the claims on Monte Christo Island, the dates on which they were staked, and the number of them renewed.

Albert F. Hurdman, sworn and examined:—

By Mr. Wade:

Q. You are a clerk in the Gold Commissioner's office?—A. Yes.

Q. You have a list showing the claims on Monte Christo Island and the dates of staking, and the number of renewals?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many claims were there staked on that island?—A. Twenty-three.

Q. On what date did I stake?—A. The date of your record is 21st March.

Q. I staked the day before, that is, 20th March. Do you know as a matter of fact how many claims were left unstaked after we got through on that date?—A. Three, but they all could have been staked on that date.

Q. We only staked two claims out of twenty-three, leaving twenty-one for the miners?—A. Yes.

Q. Is Monte Christo considered valuable at all?—A. There is no inquiry in the office about it.

Q. Have any of these claims been renewed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many?—A. One.

The Commissioner.—Who renewed that one?

Mr. Wade.—I was the foolish party myself, Mr. Commissioner. I found out from Mr. Hurdman I was alone. All I have said applies to Mr. McGregor as well as myself.

Mr. McGregor.—I think there were twelve staked on that date, and the balance were staked afterwards.

Mr. Wade.—We left eleven unstaked claims after we got through. If there is any other matter, I would like it gone into. Mr. McConnell is here, and he might be examined in regard to the bridge.

The Commissioner.—I have not heard his name mentioned in connection with this during the work of the commission.

Mr. Wade.—If there is any charge that any one knows against me, I would like to have it brought forward now. Mr. McConnell is here, and I tender his evidence if you have anything to ask him.

Well, Sir, the Minister of the Interior is a lawyer, and I think he will agree with me that as a piece of farce in the way of inquiry, that has never been surpassed? You see Mr. Wade comes forward; practically pleads guilty to the charge and then makes what he considers extenuating explanations and one of these is, that he did not do it in midnight, but he did it in open day. Another is that he hints that his claim is not worth $60,000. He says: We never valued it at $60,000. Another is, that he hints there is no longer any inquiry now for Monte Christo. How could there be inquiries for Monte Christo if, as alleged at the time, the charges were originally made, every claim on Monte Christo was taken up.

Now, I turn to the commissioner's report to the Minister of the Interior, which will be found on page 5, and which contains this statement:

And there was also a charge against Mr. Wade in connection with Monte Christo Island. The evidence shows no criminal act on that gentleman's part, unless the act of an official staking and recording a claim can be considered criminal; but in so far from having done it in an improper manner, he shows himself, that he did it openly and after consultation with the miners themselves. Mr. McGregor was exactly in the same position as far as he is concerned with this matter. The evidence goes to show that the island at present, at least, is considered worthless. This may or may not be considered a mitigation of the fact, though it would not be of the intent—if there is any wrong in it.

As the utterance of a judge, that, too, will stand side by side with the questions that were put, or rather the no questions that were addressed to the witness, but practically volunteered. There is not one word asked him, no cross-examination, nor is there the least evidence that the commissioner thought it his duty to take it up, if Wade himself had not thrust it right before the commissioner. If you turn to the Dominion Lands Act, section 7, chap. 54 of the Revised Statutes, we read:

No person employed in or under the Department of the Interior shall purchase any Dominion lands, except under the authority of the Governor in Council, or shall locate military or bounty land warrants, or land scrip, or act as agent of any other person in such behalf.

Now, I want to ask the Minister of the Interior, as Mr. Wade said here that he was given special permission to stake claims in the Yukon; did the Minister have an Order in Council passed empowering Mr. Wade, while registrar of lands, to stake claims, or in what form did the Minister give him the special commission?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is no Order in Council whatever passed, and when I was questioned as to this before, I stated exactly what happened. My recollection is now, that Mr. Wade spoke to me—I think it was while he was going up on the "Quadra, or, perhaps, in Skagway—and he asked me if there was any objection to him staking a claim. My recollection is that I said to him that as he was not engaged in the recording of mining claims, I did not think it was contrary to law for him to stake claims. That is the recollection I have. When he came down, I saw the interview to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) has referred, and I asked Mr. Wade what he meant by saying that he got special permission. He referred to that conversation I have mentioned; that was all that was said.

Mr. DAVIN. What action did the Minister take when Mr. Wade gave him that explanation?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My answer was what I said. He said he was referring to that conversation, and I told him what my recollection of it was, and he agreed that was correct.

Mr. DAVIN. Did he still remain registrar of lands, and in the employ of the Department of the Interior, or did the Minister dismiss him?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I did not dismiss him.

Mr. DAVIN. What was done?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. He resigned.

Mr. DAVIN. Was it to avoid dismissal?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Sir?

Mr. DAVIN. Was it to avoid dismissal?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Not at all.

Mr. DAVIN. Ah, well! I suppose the Minister has read the second instalment of Mr. Ogilvie's report?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. DAVIN. Well, does it impress his mind—this one item of inquiry—does it impress him that that was investigated in a proper manner?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. DAVIN. It does?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. DAVIN. And is the Minister satisfied that Mr. Wade behaved properly in staking these claims?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Quite sufficient.

Mr. DAVIN. Is the hon. gentleman satisfied with the conduct of Mr. Wade?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is a different matter. I am perfectly satisfied that the conduct of Mr. Wade was not dishonest or in the ordinary sense of the word improper, or in the sense of imputing what would be ordinarily considered impropriety in an official. I am quite satisfied further, that if there was anything wrong in Mr. Wade's staking a claim under the circumstances, that I was more to blame for it than he was. Until he called my attention to the conversation which he had had with me, I did not consider it; and I am bound to say that after the conversation I considered that there was no objection to it. The law did not forbid the officials of the Department of the Interior to take up mining claims. It forbade them buying Dominion lands. The hon. gentleman could not find a court on earth that would decide that the law forbade Mr. Wade to take up a mining claim. If he looks at the Dominion Lands Act, he will see that it refers to all lands to which the Act applies. It is true it applies to all mining lands; but taking up a mining claim is not buying mining lands. That is a narrow construction of the Act; but the department construed it in that way to the extent of permitting, not simply an official of the department who had nothing to do with the recording of mining claims, but the recorder of mining claims himself, a justice of the peace and general administrator of the territory, to take up mining claims. Mr. Wade and those other gentlemen only did what Inspector Constantine had done without criticism or censure of any kind. I do not think it is desirable that that practice should be followed; and, as I said, I took the matter up and after considering it carefully, recommended to my colleagues that that practice should be stopped. But I say emphatically that there was nothing dishonest or improper in the conduct of Mr. Wade. As a matter of fact, there was nothing to investigate, unless it had been suggested—and I never heard it suggested—that Mr. Wade had secured a claim in some underhanded or improper way, and not as an ordinary individual who went out and staked a claim. Mr. Wade seemed to think that that had been alleged; but as he had taken up the claim in the ordinary way, and took no advantage of anybody, there was nothing to investigate, and the commissioner so finds. I do not understand the point the hon. gentleman makes.

Mr. DAVIN. Suppose, as a result of a thorough and exhaustive inquiry, it appeared that he had taken advantage of no one—

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. What was to be inquired into?

Mr. DAVIN. What was to be inquired into was whether as an official of the department he had gone, contrary to the law, and staked claims?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is the most absurd idea I ever heard suggested. Does the hon. gentleman think we should instruct Mr. Ogilvie to decide what the law and regulations of the department are? The hon. gentleman has a grotesque idea.

Mr. DAVIN. I have no grotesque idea at all, and the hon. gentleman cannot slide out of it like that. That is not my idea at all.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman said a moment ago it was.

Mr. DAVIN. My idea was not to inquire what was the law on the subject. There is the law, and my point was to inquire whether he had broken that law.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. In other words, to decide what the law was. Mr. Ogilvie knew long before Mr. Wade went back that the law was what I have stated. The records show that Mr. Wade had recorded a claim. Does the hon. gentleman think that we should refer to Mr. Ogilvie to decide whether Mr. Wade, having staked a claim, had violated the law? That question, if it arose, would be sent to the Minister of Justice.

Mr. DAVIN. But the organs of the Minister of the Interior denied that he had done it; and then, when it was found that he had done it, the fact came like a clap of thunder, and it shows the guilty knowledge which the hon. gentleman has shown to-day. A gentleman who sat in this gallery, now the editor of the Winnipeg "Free Press," prepared the public mind by writing to the "Globe," whose special correspondent he was, and saying that for an officer of the department to stake claims was not a thing that should be condemned by anybody. Are we to prevent, he asked, honest and loyal Canadians from staking claims simply because they are officers of the department, when foreigners are coming in and taking up claims? That was done to prepare the public mind; but when it was found that the public conscience would not stomach it, but that every independent paper condemned such a suggestion—

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. As that followed by the officers of the late Government and inaugurated by that Government.

Mr. DAVIN. I have nothing to do with that. Suppose the late Government did wrong, would it justify the hon. gentleman? Does not the hon. gentleman acknowledge that it was wrong? After he had been brought to book by the independent and Conservative press of this country and by independent public men, he says he then went to his colleagues, and proposed that they should forbid the officials doing what he himself says the Government permitted Mr. Wade to do. What is to be thought of the hon. gentleman at the head of this department, with that clause of the Act in his mind? Here were two sharp lawyers talking to each other about staking claims in the Yukon. Mr. Wade is one of the sharpest lawyers in Canada, and Mr. Dalton McCarthy told me that the hon. gentleman was as sharp as a meat axe. We have these two sharp lawyers discussing what is to be done in the Yukon. Mr. Wade says to the Minister of the Interior: "May I take up a claim? I am registrar of lands; I am an official of the Department of the Interior; what do you say? Do you say that that section is against me? What am I to do?" The Minister of the Interior says to him: "I do not think you will be doing anything wrong if you take up claims." But he tells us here to-day that after the exposé took place, after the bullseye of public indignation was turned on his own conduct and the conduct of Mr. Wade, then he went to his colleagues and said, "We cannot permit this thing any longer." Mr. McGregor and Mr. Wade had each staked a claim. On being examined, Mr. Wade said: "I do not admit that it was worth $60,000." Perhaps it would be worth $59,000 or $50,000. Suppose it was not worth $10, the point is that he broke the law, that he went against the statute of Canada, and, according to his own statement, with the sanction of the Minister of the Interior. Now, having read the second instalment of Mr. Ogilvie's report, of which, having regard to the time of the House, I have given only one specimen brick, I say that any lawyer, or any man with horse-sense as to how an inquiry should be conducted, will say from that one specimen alone that the thing was an egregious farce.

Mr. FOSTER. What does the controller do? You have a controller and a clerk for the controller.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The controller is a gentleman I asked the Minister of Finance to nominate, and I believe he was an officer of that department. He was sent out for the purpose of exercising financial supervision over the accounts of all the Government offices in the district, and a letter of instructions was given him to this effect, that the revenues were to be paid over by the officers who collected them, as often as possible, not less than monthly, to the controller, and he was to audit the accounts and generally to keep track of the funds of the Federal Government in the district. He also supervises the payments made by the commissioner from the funds given him for the purpose of carrying on the administration of the district. We thought it well to have an experienced financial officer there, so that the difficulty we had respecting the finances and proper accounting in the early stages of last year, should not occur again. The arrangement was, that his salary was to be $1,500, and something was said about the possibility of an increase, and the question of increasing it to $2,000 was decided by the Minister of Finance and myself.

Mr. FOSTER. Are not all the collections deposited at once in the banks by the officers?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. They are not paid over to the controller?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The officers at Dawson City pay their money directly into the bank to the credit of the Receiver General, and the controller's account shows the payments made by each officer, and how much each branch has collected.

Mr. FOSTER. What need is there for a controller? Under the regulations which prevail at Dawson now, as at Ottawa and other places, these funds are deposited in the bank, and the bank keeps the account. What do you want with a controller to find out what each man has deposited? He has no control over the deposits? The bank must be trusted to keep the deposit, and the Gold Commissioner to make it. Between the two you have all the machinery necessary. The controller seems to be nothing but the fifth wheel to a coach, the moment you have your banks there. If there were no banks, it would be necessary to have a capable controller, who would stand in the place of the bank.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have a number of officers there who collect the revenue, and it is most important to have an experienced officer, in immediate touch with the commissioner, who will know whether the revenues are properly deposited or not, and who, if anything occurs in connection with the amounts deposited, will be there to make an audit of the account. I am satisfied that if the hon. gentleman were responsible for what is going on, there was nothing he would do quicker than send an officer to exercise supervision.

Mr. FOSTER. Who audits the accounts of these officers?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Ultimately, the Auditor General. I have asked him to send an officer to audit all the accounts.

Mr. FOSTER. That takes away the last vestige of reason for the appointment of a controller.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Suppose an officer does not deposit what he should—

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose an officer did not in Toronto?

Mr. SIFTON.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The inspector, seeing the returns, and knowing what is coming in, can communicate with the Minister in a moment. If an officer in Manitoba, collecting money, does not make a return, or makes one which the inspector thinks is suspicious, there is no difficulty about his making an inspection at once. But supposing we did not have any one whose duty it is to oversee that sort of thing in the Yukon, we might be defrauded out of $100,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, our controller is simply an inspector?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes; I am not sticking on the name.

Mr. FOSTER. But he has nothing to do with the deposit of money, and receives none.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. With the actual work of depositing he has nothing to do. The idea was, when he went up, that the officers would pay the money to him, and he would deposit it to the credit of the Receiver General; but my deputy says the officers make the deposits directly, and he has a duplicate statement.

Mr. FOSTER. His duties are those of an inspector?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. In that respect, yes. Then, he is the accountant for the district. The moneys sent to the commissioner and paid out, are paid through his office. He examines the vouchers, and sees that everything is in proper form, and transmits to the department here.

Mr. FOSTER. Has Mr. Ogilvie to make a requisition on him for expenses, or does the Council have to make a requisition on him for any payment they authorize? Does he check out the moneys which are paid on Mr. Ogilvie's account, and on the Council account, and the like?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not know exactly what the regulation is, but he must either check it out himself or countersign the checks—it must be passed by him. Mr. Ogilvie, on taking charge, stated that he had not had much experience in financial administration and that somebody should be there to protect him in that respect.

Mr. FOSTER. You have four mining inspectors at $1,500 each? What is their duty?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The first year the mining inspectors were there largely in connection with the collection of royalty, but now they are very largely engaged in taking evidence in regard to disputes that arise as to date of location and matters that come before the Gold Commissioner—questions of fact, when they have to go out and examine the claims upon the ground and take evidence as to when parties were on the ground and so on.

Mr. FOSTER. They make report—they do not give decisions ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not recollect any case under the regulations in which they make decisions. If there are any, of course those decisions are subject to appeal to the Gold Commissioner. A great portion of their duties consist in settling in a rough-and-ready way disputes that arise in the location of claims.

Mr. FOSTER. That is, where parties agree to settlement in that way ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the routine of the payment of royalty ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am more familiar with the method adopted the first year than with that which is now followed—and the reason for that I will explain in a moment. In the first year a form was given to each claim owner or each man in charge of the working of a claim. The mining inspector locates himself in a convenient place where he can observe what is going on. He requires each mine owner or person in charge of operation to file a statement every fifteen days, showing the output of the mine, and upon that the royalty was collected.

Mr. FOSTER. Was that the washing outfit or the addition to the dump ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. While they were washing out. The inspector goes along the creek watching operations and forming an opinion, as well as he can, whether the statements made are correct or not. It will be remembered that the mining regulations provide that a false statement as to the output involved forfeiture of the claim—very heavy penalty, probably heavier in the eyes of the miner than if it required to be verified by oath. The officers report that while there were attempts at evasion and shaving of the amount of output where it was thought the mining inspector could not prove the case, on the whole, they were of the opinion that substantially they got pretty correct returns.

Mr. FOSTER. So, the payment would depend on the statement of the miner, which might be moderated, to a certain extent, by the report of the mining inspector ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The mining inspector receives the report, and decides for himself whether it is correct or not. If he comes to the conclusion that it is not correct, he has the power to go to the mine owners and say so ; and they have to adjust it between them in some way. If the statement is accepted, royalty is collected on the basis of the statement. I believe there were some cases of dispute in which persons who were working claims at other places were called upon to give their opinion in regard to it. Of course, the method followed was a somewhat rough-and-ready method. But, on the whole, it is the only way that could be adopted.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that the present modus operandi ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I was about to refer to that. Prior to the time for the collection of royalties, Mr. Ogilvie wrote to me and said he had made up his mind to recommend that the collection of the royalty should be placed in charge of the officers of the Mounted Police. I think he said that the mining inspectors were fully occupied otherwise—had, in fact, more than they could do without taking charge of the collection of royalties. He asked me if I would authorize the change to be made. I wrote giving him the authority he asked for. He has not advised me of the details yet, so far as I know. The department has been advised of the amount of royalty collected up to the 1st of July or thereabouts. It was $400,000. Col. Steele has had the collection of royalty placed in his charge.

Mr. FOSTER. The royalty is collected at the mine ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Practically—it is collected at the office of the mining inspector on the creek.

Mr. FOSTER. It will be now collected, I suppose, at the office of the police detachment ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Sifton) will see that where the matter is left with the mining inspector the ultimate results depend on the honesty of the inspector and the mine owner. The least collusion between these two would defeat the object of the Government.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I quite agree with that.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, he will see that he should search this country with a fine tooth comb to get men who are at once capable and incorruptible to be appointed as mining inspectors.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Capt. Norwood, one of the inspectors, is a gentleman recommended to me by the Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden) as a reliable man and one competent for these duties. I know very little of Capt. Norwood, and do not speak of him from personal knowledge. The other mining inspector is Mr. McGregor. Mr. McGregor is, I think, a nephew of the hon. member for North Essex (Mr. McGregor), and I have been acquainted with him for many years. I think it only fair to say to the committee, that while Mr. McGregor is not a man of scientific education, he is a man of good business capacity, who has travelled extensively in the western country and is thoroughly acquainted with the ways of western people. I am bound to say I could not find in the range of my own acquaintance a man more likely to handle a lot of miners and get along with them without trouble. My judgment has been justified by the result. I have not the least shadow of doubt, so far as Mr. McGregor is concerned, that the collection of royalty was carried on with absolute honesty. Had I had the least shadow of doubt about Mr. McGregor I would never have thought of appointing him to such a position.

I pointed out the difficulty of getting a proper man for that position. I pointed out that, not only was there an opportunity for being dishonest, but he was very likely to be accused of being dishonest, whether he was or not. Therefore, I wanted to assert that there would be no question about the character of the man to be appointed. Now, I want to call attention to this fact, that, after all the arguments and all the attacks that have been made upon the administration of the Yukon district and upon our officers, it yet remains for any single person to make any correct suggestion that there was anything improper connected with the collection of the royalties.

Mr. FOSTER. That proves absolutely nothing.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I did not say it proved anything; I said it was a significant circumstance, that is all.

Mr. FOSTER. There are just two men who can be privy to that. One is the man who owns the mine, and is interested in getting out of it all he can, and who looks upon the Government somewhat in the light of a highway robber, because it takes 10 per cent of his gross earnings, which he thinks, in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred, is exorbitant and unjust. So, the first idea of the miner is to beat the Government, if he possibly can. There is absolutely no system of analysis by which you can tell the contents of a dump, or what it ought to produce. You can in other mining, in quartz mining, lead mining, silver mining—you can by a system of assays come approximately near to what the output will be. You have no such counterbalance as that in the matter of placer-mining there. It is absolutely a rule of thumb, so far as the mining inspector goes, because he cannot test it in any way, and it is natural for the miner to keep all he can and give as little as possible to the Government. Now, when you take that into consideration, and the tremendous temptation which yellow gold has over men's minds, if there is any way possible by which there can be brought about a system in which the miner will co-operate, under an idea that his sense of justice is not being outraged, the incentive to deceit and fraud will be by that much less, and I am not at all certain that the ultimate product to the Government would not be quite as much. Unless you have a man who stays by that dump all the time, and is a practical miner, and sees the washup every day, it is absolutely impossible to gauge and hold a balance upon the miner himself.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is perfectly true, and those facts have come to my mind from time to time. The difficulty is one that I realize as much as anybody can. But, in the last analysis, somebody must be next to the miner. It might be that two men, acting together, might be more free from temptation, might be a check upon each other, and less likely to band in with the individual miner than one man. That was a point that I left to Mr. Ogilvie. I discussed that at considerable length with him, and decided that it would be well to put it in his hands to work out as well as he could. But in the collection of royalty on placer mines, there is no possibility of being absolutely correct; it cannot be done.

Mr. FOSTER. About how many mines are being operated now?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. According to my recollection, about 1,000 to 1,200 are in actual operation. They run mostly upon Bonanza, Eldorado, Hunter, Bear, Dominion and Sulphur creeks. They are all running out of Dawson within a partial radius of 60 miles. They are in a comparatively circumscribed district.

Mr. FOSTER. There is some plan, you do not know what, by which the Mounted Police are doing that work. It is very unsatisfactory to members of Parliament, when they want information in reference to the Yukon, to be told that it is not here, that it is in the commissioner's hands. I want to impress upon my hon. friend that all information respecting these operations should be sent from headquarters down to the Minister's office with the same regularity that a man would take his meals. When Parliament is in session, it ought not to be for months in entire ignorance of what is being done. The Minister ought to be able to know the regular working results of all these mines, so that, when information is desired, it should be accessible. I presume instructions are sent to that effect, and a good deal is left to the commissioner himself; but there is not much care taken towards having those regular reports and regular transcriptions of the work that is going on there sent to the department here.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The department here has been, every week or two, trying to get those reports.

writing, remonstrating, beseeching that the reports should be sent. But the fact of the matter is, that in the organization of a district of that kind a certain class of work which was not anticipated, falls upon the officers, and it takes a certain length of time to settle them into a regular system. I am satisfied that by the time the fall season closes, this year, we will practically have everything in that district in the shape the hon. gentleman desires. We will have the records complete, and a systematic report made to the department. I can assure my hon. friend that nobody realizes the necessity of exact, full and prompt reports and information more than I do. The communication has been slow and irregular, but the officers have been impressed with the necessity of keeping accurate reports. Still, I have found that the work in the district is of a character which men have to learn. Some men that I have sent up there, thinking that they were peculiarly adapted for certain classes of work, have turned out to be not so well adapted as other men that I thought not be so well qualified for their work, but who have turned out to be good officers in the positions in which they have been placed. I have found that men have to learn their work before we find out their particular adaptation for it. I think that things are going along satisfactorily in the Gold Commissioner's office, and that the affairs of the Yukon are upon a satisfactory basis.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not want to pre-judge Mr. Ogilvie's plan for the police to undertake this duty, but I want to point out that he is going from a skilled inspection to an unskilled inspection. There are a thousand mines, and these inspectors, who are on the ground and who travel from mine to mine, have become skilled in this matter, which is under their supervision. If it is handed over to the Mounted Police, the officers will not be able to do it because they have other work to do, unless a lot of new officers are appointed who will have nothing else to attend to. Consequently, it will be left to subalterns to take the money that the miners give them.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The officers will have the assistance of the services of the mining inspectors who are travelling up and down the creeks all the time. We have appointed two or three men who, I think, will be very competent men for the work. The officers will have the assistance of these mining inspectors at any time they wish to call on them.

Mr. FOSTER. It does not strike me that it is going to make it much better.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I may say to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) that the commissioner of the district, after going into the whole matter, wrote me that he would recommend that this be placed in the hands of the police, and being on the ground, and understanding the whole of the circumstances, I thought it would be very difficult for me to refuse compliance with his proposal or to be able to say that he was wrong.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. Minister could not say so, because the commissioner did not give him a chance to say it.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No, he did not give me the details.

Mr. FOSTER. I should have thought that it would have been the duty of the commissioner when he was going to make a change in the system of collecting $500,000 or $600,000 that he would have regarded it as something of importance, that he would have informed the Minister of what he proposed to do and have given the hon. Minister an opportunity to say that he approved of it. It seems to me that the first thing he should have thought of was to have detailed his plan to his Minister and said: This is the plan which I think is best; the distances are long; I will put it into operation and get your opinion of it as soon as possible. But he simply shows, as he shows in his report on the so-called judicial investigation, that it is nothing more than child's play. He may be a most excellent man in other respects, but, for heaven's sake, keep him out of a position in which he has to sift evidence and get at the rights of things in a judicial way. He was never born to exercise judicial functions, never practised it, and it is too bad to put him in a position of that kind. When he proposed to make a change in the system of collection, he should have said what he was going to do. It is contempt of court that he did not produce his plan and submit it to his Minister for approval. He should have sent it down to see what the department thought of it, and if he thought it was best not to wait until the plan was approved by the Minister, he could have put it into operation and got the sanction of the Minister afterwards. I would like to hear the hon. Minister say something as to how he proposes to work it out, because I am afraid he is going to get on a stool between two different sets of officers, and the Mounted Police are unskilled so far as mining matters are concerned. What about these cooks, servants and labourers? Are these salaries outside of rations?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. You have cooks, servants and labourers by whom the cooking and work are done. Are you going to supply the provisions besides?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Is my hon. friend going to adopt Mr. Ogilvie's idea of giving so much ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes ; I do not say that I am going to adopt the exact scale that he has suggested, which may be changed ; but I am going to adopt the plan of giving the men a living allowance for a while, until we get a little more settled.

Mr. FOSTER. That will be subject to very frequent revision as the country opens up.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Could the hon. Minister tell me about how long Mr. McGregor and Capt. Norwood were in the employ of the Government and under salary ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. McGregor has been in the employ of the Government since September, 1897. Capt. Norwood, as a result of a very severe trip going in, became affected with a severe attack of rheumatism, and was obliged to come out. He was away for several months on leave of absence without pay.

Mr. FOSTER. How many months' service has he had to date ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Within a few days of twelve months, from the time he was appointed till he left Dawson City. He left Dawson City on account of the state of his health. As soon as he was able to go back he went back, but when he was there for two months his health was such that he was obliged to come out again, and he took treatment at the hospital. He is now under pay while away from Dawson City.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Practically, he had about fourteen months' salary ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What was his salary ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. $125 a month.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. How many months was Mr. McGregor paid by the Government ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. He has been under pay all the time.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. He is still in the pay of the Government ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. He is not in the pay of the Government, but he is now in the employ of the local council there, and is paid from their local fund. I understand he is occupying the position of inspector of licenses.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I understood that these gentlemen were dispensed with long ago as inspectors of the gold mines and that other parties were put in their places.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Capt. Norwood's services have never been dispensed with. He came out owing to the state of his health. It was known that additional inspectors would be required and additional inspectors were appointed, but when he went back he went back to resume his duties as one of the inspectors. He was only there a short time, and the state of his health required him to come out again. He came out and has been in the hospital here, and I have not seen him nor made any arrangement as to the continuance of his service.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The fact is, that the Minister has stated formally to the House, that he at the outset thought that rough-and-ready people would best do this kind of work. He has taken a non-certificated Yankee captain of a whaler, who is not a British subject at all, for one of the mining inspectors of the district, upon the recommendation of his friend the Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden), and he has taken as another mining inspector a livery stable keeper in his own district, a friend of his own. I have in my hand here a statement which the Minister has altogether set aside in his reply, namely : That Major Walsh changed the law and gave these inspectors such directions as he pleased. Because I drew the attention of the Minister to the fact that Major Walsh had stated :

Royalty was not collected from any claims which had not got into good working order, or which could not show a profit after paying royalty.

This would represent a large sum. We have it that these utterly incompetent, utterly unsuitable people, who had no knowledge whatever of mining matters or anything of the kind, whose previous habits and business showed they were utterly unfit for anything of the kind, were placed in the position of collecting the mining royalty. I stated on the floor of this House, that an English gentleman, who was an entire stranger to me, who went from Moosomin to that country, and had been there two years, said that these two parties, sent there as mining inspectors, made fortunes in a very short time, and made fortunes by receiving bribes from the men they were appointed to receive the mining royalties from. This change in the law by Major Walsh confirms the statement as to the position they were placed in. Instead of enforcing the law, Major Walsh's report shows precisely that what this gentleman told me was correct. I was not aware when I was making the statement to this House, that there was a gentleman in the Press Gallery who was a fellow-passenger at the same time, and who wrote me a note to say that this English gentleman was in the habit of giving the fullest details to large numbers of passengers in the smoking room every day, of the utter rascality that was carried on by these two men, and when I tell the Minister of the Interior that this Yankee uncertificated captain of a whaling vessel—a small whaling vessel—has made a fortune and deposited in a bank at Kentville the other day $60,000 to his own name, it would puzzle, I think, the hon. Minister to cipher out, how this man, who has been travelling backwards and forwards as a valetudinarian, whose health is altogether broken down, and who has been receiving in all fourteen months pay at $125 a month; it would puzzle him to tell where this man got his $60,000. That Mr. McGregor came back a rich man is the belief of this party who had the opportunity of seeing the manner in which these persons discharged their duties, and the fact which was recognized by everybody that they were open to bribery on the part of the people from whom they were instructed to collect mining royalties. That Mr. McGregor also came back a man of fortune is, I believe, pretty well understood in Brandon. So far as the other matter is concerned, I have direct information that this gentleman who had been entrusted with these important duties, has, I say, deposited—a man without previous means—has deposited $60,000 in the bank at Kentville.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. So far as Capt. Norwood's deposit of $60,000 in the bank is concerned, I do not think it has any connection with the course of the Government.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am sorry the Minister of Militia is not here just now, but he told me at the time of Capt. Norwood's appointment that Capt. Norwood was a man of some means.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. He certainly is now.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That was at the time he was appointed. What his means were was not specially mentioned, but the statement the Minister of Militia made would certainly lead me to conclude that Mr. Norwood was a man of considerable means. He had been engaged in the occupation to which the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) has referred—I do not know whether it was a whaling vessel or a small whaling vessel or whether he was certificated or not—but, at any rate, he was willing to take the position we gave him. My information is to the effect that Capt. Norwood discharged his duties in a faithful and efficient way. So far as Mr. McGregor is concerned, if the hon. gentlemen means to say that Mr. McGregor was receiving bribes in any way, shape or form, or was dishonest in any way, he makes a statement which I consider absolutely false. I have not the least hesitation in pledging myself here that it is false, because I know the man, and I know him thoroughly, and the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) is going a long way when he gives to this House the statement, that a man whose name is not given, in regard to whom we have no information as to the basis of such statement, is the authority for the statement that Mr. McGregor, a gentleman known to many members of this House as a man of good character, has been openly receiving bribes and practically rendering himself liable to penitentiary. I cannot conceive a man of the hon. gentleman's experience justifying himself by that means, in making such an outrageous statement in regard to this man. If the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) had the least belief that such was the case, it was a simple matter for him to get some particulars which would enable us in some way to make an inquiry into the charge. But the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) does not do that. The very fact which the hon. gentleman states, totally discredits the information which he says that he has got. I ask the members of this committee what reliance they will place upon this statement that a gentleman, an English gentleman, in the smoking room upon the steamboat, was in the habit of telling the particular instances in which certain men had received bribes and rendered themselves liable to penitentiary. What likelihood or probability is there in that statement? It is the same as a statement which appeared recently in the Ottawa "Citizen." It was headed in enormous black letters "Corruption in the Yukon," and upon reading down the page I saw that a man in the employ of my department—I never saw the man before; he had been recommended in the usual way as a man to go upon a survey—had come back from the Yukon, and the "Citizen" reporter had interviewed him, and as the "Citizen" stated, he had actually looked wise, when he was asked: If the corruption in the Yukon was correctly reported. The fact that the man looked wise was given as an evidence that corruption was rampant in the Yukon, and big black letters were placed over the article indicating that every employee in the Yukon was corrupt. There was as much sense in that headline as in the hon. gentleman's statement: That an English gentleman—name not given—was in the habit of stating upon the steamer that these men were guilty of offences for which they were liable to penitentiary, if the statements were correct. I have to say this, that a gentleman, whose name I will give, an English gentleman, a gentleman whose name is prominent amongst mining men, and who has written the best book upon the Canadian Yukon district that has yet appeared, Mr. Tredgold, who now represents the London "Times," I believe, and the London "Mining Journal" in that district, told me in my office, that the two best officers any Government ever had in that district were Capt. Norwood and Mr. McGregor. I am not giving the statements of an anonymous person, but of a man whose reputation is at stake, and who is, I believe, representing the London "Times," but certainly the London "Mining Journal," and other papers. I compare that statement with the statement made by Sir Charles Tupper.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would like to see the evidence of the statement made by the party referred to, before I gave much weight or attention to it. I think it hardly becomes the hon. gentleman to give a private conversation on this subject, with which he has not favoured the country, nor given, so far as I am aware, over his own signature.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. He has published a very good book, giving an account of his trip and a description of the country.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have no doubt that he is a gentleman of high standing and character, and has given some valuable facts; but I think you will search the book in vain to find the high character given to Capt. Norwood and Mr. McGregor which is given verbally by the Minister of the Interior. The case stands thus: The Minister of the Interior selected two persons from most unlikely positions, to discharge important and responsible duties in the Yukon country. Is there a man in this House who thinks that the Yankee captain of a whaler, not even a British subject, was a proper man to select, when British Columbia abounded with experts, who, by their standing and attainments, would have been fitted to discharge the important duties with which this man was charged. The hon. gentleman stands convicted by the absence of any qualifications required from such an officer; and then he goes into his own constituency, and takes a livery-stable keeper—

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I did not.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Then, it was in an adjoining constituency. He took his friend. What was he—a horse-dealer or a horse-stealer?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I only corrected the hon. gentleman because I know he would not willingly make a statement that is incorrect. The statement that this gentleman was a livery-stable keeper, does not happen to be correct.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman did not feel bound to correct that statement, when it was made by other gentlemen, but chose to let it go. He was a man of much more doubtful character, and that is, a horse-trader—a man who lives by exchanging horses—just the last position in which any member of this House would look to find a man to perform responsible duties of the gravest character, in the performance of which everything depended on the honesty, integrity and capacity of the man. The hon. gentleman has never dared to assert on the floor of this House that either of these gentlemen had any qualifications whatever for the duties with which they were charged. There is the first point. And the fact that these men return, after fourteen months' work, and are found to be men of fortune, is evidence that carries conviction to my mind that this Englishman and every one in the Yukon country, from the lady correspondent of the London "Times" down to every person of the least intelligence in the country, were right, when they said that the Yukon was a reeking mass of corruption. The Englishman who stated to me at the captain's table what I said, was not stating it to me only, but was stating it to everybody, as a part of his experience in the Yukon. He had been there for two years carrying on mining, and was evidently a man of standing and character. I did not know that a gentleman in the Press Gallery was a fellow-passenger; and he said to me: "You did not state it half as strongly as he stated it in the smoking-room—the terrible tale of rascality and corruption in the Yukon." He referred especially to these two men, Norwood and McGregor. He did not say that he had seen them receive bribes. People do not receive bribes in that way; but he said that it was a matter of notoriety in the Yukon that these men had grown rich in a few months, instead of discharging their duties and collecting revenue; just as Major Walsh said he had allowed them to do—violate the law, and give such relief as, in their judgment, they thought necessary. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that any Yankee captain of a whaler, or any horse dealer in this country, ought to be charged with a position of such responsibility and such temptation? Is it not a case of overwhelming temptation, when you give the discretion to a mining inspector to say what the law demands from a gentleman engaged in mining, or to do as Major Walsh says they did—let them go free—in violation of the law, when they thought the case was a hard one? The hon. gentleman will not dare to say that it is not a position of overwhelming temptation. Why, Sir, I understand that the hon. gentleman had superseded these men, and that there was now an entirely new staff; but it turns out that they are still in the pay of the Government. Is the hon. Minister afraid to discharge them? Is he obliged to keep them still in the pay of the Government? Do they know too much for him? Is the hon. gentleman acquainted with them too intimately? Is his association with them too intimate to enable him to get rid of these men, who, to say the least, are utterly incompetent for their duties, and to put men of character and standing in their places? That one fact is all that is required to satisfy the people of this country that this judicial commission was refused because the whole rascality and corruption would have been unveiled and brought to light; and the hon. gentleman would stand in the position of having been largely responsible for all that rascality and maladministration that has disgraced the Yukon, and disgraced Canada, in the eyes of the world.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think it is much to be regretted that a gentleman of the age and position of the hon. leader of the Opposition should make such a malicious and unwarranted attack on a good Canadian citizen. I may tell my hon. friend that there is not the slightest foundation for the charges he has made against Mr. McGregor. Because he happens to be a farmer and dealer in horses and cattle, the hon. gentleman tries to make fun of him, and casts suspicion on his character, as that of a man who is not worthy of trust. I say to the hon. gentleman—and I believe that this country will agree with me—that among our respectable, honest, hard-working farmers and sons of farmers, he will find the best class of people in this country.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is too thin.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is not, Sir. Mr. McGregor belongs to one of the best-known families in the province of Ontario, whose sons have taken honourable and leading positions in their own province and across the lines. A cousin of this man is one of the most prominent professional men in the city of Detroit, and his uncle is one of the most respectable members of this House. This young man went to school in Ontario, and afterwards went out west, and took up a farm, and, by his ability, energy and good character, proved himself to be one of the best Canadian citizens who ever went into that country.

If he had a fair measure of success it was because he was one of those sturdy young Canadians of character and energy whose word was as good as their bonds. When the hon. gentleman makes the statement that Mr. McGregor returned from that country with a slight upon his character, I set my reputation against the hon. gentleman's and reply that there is not one word of truth in what he has said. When anybody says that Mr. McGregor returned a rich man he states what is equally not true, for he is a comparatively poor man compared with what he was some time ago. This man's character stands high all through the country where he is known and is doing business. There he is reputed to be a man of honour and integrity. The fact that he has dealt in horses and cattle and has been able to conduct a large farm successfully against unfavourable seasons is no disgrace, and when the Government chooses its officers from that class of young Canadians rather than the class referred to by the hon. gentlemen who are, in all probability, sent away from their own country by their friends in order to get rid of them, that class who are styled "dudes," who can put on airs and pretend they have some education, I think the Government is to be commended rather than blamed for its action. Mr. McGregor is a young man whose grandfather was one of the most respected men, and whose father is equally one of the most esteemed men in the province, and it is unworthy on the part of the hon. leader of the Opposition, it is unworthy of this Parliament, that he should get up and make such a malicious attack without any case. If Mr. McGregor had been guilty of anything, let him be punished, no matter what may be his character, but a man who has made a reputation for himself for integrity and good character among his fellow-citizens, a man who has conducted large business transactions, and whose word would be taken as quickly as that of any member of this House—to get up and without the slightest foundation make a malicious attack on such a man is unworthy the position the hon. gentleman occupies. The hon. gentleman has not a tittle of evidence to support him. An investigation has been held, and all these English gentlemen that he talks about and these Yankee skidaddlers who are knocking about Dawson City making attacks on the Administration, in which they were assisted by people anxious to condemn the Government, failed to materialize when given the opportunity of putting their statements to the proof. What has been the result? This man, by his business experience, good judgment and tact, and who was looked upon as a man of honesty and integrity, was able to approach the miners under the regulations that were, no doubt unpopular, as he has said himself—having to pay a tax is always unpopular—was able to collect the revenue and return it to this country. What better evidence could we desire that he is a good man for the position and a man of courage and integrity. He has been able, under adverse circumstances, and despite opposition, to collect the Government revenue. Why, my hon. friend and other members on that side were crying out that not one cent of this royalty could be collected. Their newspapers reiterated that cry, and yet we find that over $400,000 was collected and returned into the treasury. Surely the man who had courage and tact and the business acumen to handle these miners, to go into these mines and collect this royalty, which hon. gentlemen opposite said would never be collected owing to the hostility to the tax, surely the man who could do this is entitled to our thanks, and ought to be spared any abuse. I do ask, at least he should not be maliciously attacked in this House or out of it, on the hearsay rumours gathered from a class of Yankee good-for-nothings, men who were known to belong to the criminal class, and who were in communication with certain newspapers and people opposed to this Government. The hon. gentleman speaks of English gentlemen, but we have all had experience of this class. There is a certain class of these people to be found in Manitoba, the North-west, the Yukon and other parts of the country, and I leave it to the people of this country to say whether they would not have more confidence in the young Canadian holding a position of trust than in that class of so-called English gentlemen. In the name of fairness, irrespective of politics, I ask that when a man does his duty well, he should be given some credit and not be hounded down without the slightest evidence being had of any wrong-doing on his part.

Mr. MCGREGOR. I understand the hon. leader of the Opposition to have attacked Mr. McGregor, mining inspector in the Yukon. He is a nephew of mine who left this part of the country about twenty-one years ago, and he is a young man of just as good character as the hon. leader of the Opposition, or any other member of this House. It is true he has dealt in horses, and handled them by the thousand; it is true he has dealt in cattle by the thousand, but surely that is no discredit. If it were, what would become of my hon. friend to my right (Mr. McMillan), who enjoys as high a character as any man in this country, and who has been dealing in horses and cattle all his life? This young man has imported some of the best horses from England, twenty-five head at one time, also from California, Montana and other places. He has been a heavy dealer in horses and cattle. As regards his character, I have known him since he was a small boy, and helped to nurse him, and I never knew of a dishonest act committed by him. His father is older than myself and a man of recognized ability and character. The hon. member for East Middlesex (Mr. Gilmour), who sits behind the hon. member, knows my brother and his family by reputation, they are friends of his, and he can corroborate what I say.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But he is a cattle dealer.

Mr. MCGREGOR. They stand as high in the community as the hon. gentleman himself and his family. It was true that the calling of this young man may not be quite as high in standard as that of the hon. gentleman, but I have yet to learn that in any mercantile calling, whether dealing in horses or in cattle or other commodity, there is anything savouring of dishonour. It may be twenty-two or twenty-three years ago that my brother thought he had better go to Manitoba with his family. He arrived there with seven children, and I think in that family there is, at least now, thirty-five or forty in that country, and I am free to say that they stand as well in the community as any other family I know of. I think this attack of the hon. leader of the Opposition was most unfair and unkind. To single out this young man for special attack when there is no evidence against him was most uncalled for. We have Mr. Ogilvie's report, and I read it over carefully, because I was very anxious, but I could find in it nothing against this young man, directly or indirectly, and if he were here to plead for himself, I think he could make out just as good a case as any member of this House could in defending himself from attacks.

There were many difficulties to contend with in that country. This young man had a knowledge of that western country, and when called on by the Minister of the Interior in the fall of the year, he took charge of a portion of the outfit and took them through to Dawson much more rapidly than any other outfit that had been sent out there, and I am sure that the duties of his position he fills with credit to himself and advantage to the Government, and that you will not find a mark against him as regards his character or conduct.

I am sorry to have to address the House on this subject. I should be sorry to say an unkind word about the hon. leader of the Opposition or his family, but I would not hesitate to compare the two families, and am sure that this young man and his family could stand the comparison.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Nothing would be further from my desire than to attack the standing of any person. I did not know that this man had an uncle in this House, but I think that that uncle failed very signally in discharging his duty to his nephew when he voted down a motion to have an independent judicial commission that would enable Mr. McGregor, and everybody else whose character was attacked in any shape or form, or upon whom any suspicion was cast to vindicate their character completely. If my hon. friend and the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) hold the high opinion which they do for Mr. McGregor—and I have said nothing against him.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, not a word.

Mr. McMULLEN. You called him a horse-dealer.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We are told that he is a farmer and has been engaged in large transactions in the purchase of cattle. But the hon. Minister of the Interior has allowed the statement to be made a dozen times here that Mr. McGregor was a livery stable-keeper. To-day we get a certificate of character for him from the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) and the hon. member for North Essex (Mr. McGregor). But they are very late. I challenge the appointment of these two men for positions the duties of which they were unfitted to perform. Neither the hon. member for North Oxford nor the hon. member for North Essex has shown that Mr. McGregor had the slightest qualification for this office. They say he was a respectable farmer and of a respectable family. But it might as well be said that these things would justify his appointment as a judge of the Supreme Court.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) would not send out a judge to collect the mining royalty.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What I said was that the Minister should have appointed men who had qualifications for the performance of their duty—

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Exactly what I did.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Exactly what the hon. gentleman did not. With scores of able and qualified men in the country, men who understood mining and who were good accountants—

Mr. MCGREGOR. Mr. McGregor is a good accountant. He was in a bank as a young man, and is a good accountant and judge of gold.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not question the accuracy of what the hon. gentleman (Mr. McGregor) says. But it does not touch the question. The charge is that these men were appointed to positions they were unfitted to fill. I gave the evidence of an English gentleman living in Moosomin.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Name.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I told hon. gentlemen that I would furnish the name when an independent commission was appointed before which this gentleman could give evidence.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Hearsay evidence—condemn a man on mere hearsay evidence.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. My hon. friend (Mr. Landerkin) had better not interrupt me or I shall deal with him with greater severity than I have hitherto done.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I am prepared to have the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) deal with me.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I should think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Landerkin) had better read the blue-book in which there is mention of a fact which touches him very closely before interrupting people who are discussing questions before this House. I am sorry that my hon. friend should, by these unseemly interruptions force me to use the means that would silence him. I have here a copy of the book—report of the North-west Mounted Police—and I recommend him to engage his time in perusing it rather than in interrupting me. I gave the evidence of a gentleman who, I had reason to believe, was a gentleman of standing and character, who stated that it was notorious that Mr. McGregor and Capt. Norwood had made fortunes in a few months by the mode in which they had discharged or failed to discharge their duties in the collection of mining rents. I have proved from Major Walsh's report the course he allowed to be taken in regard to these mining rents—that he had allowed the officer to use his discretion as to how much should be paid, which was putting a great temptation in the way of those who were discharging these duties in connection with the mining in the Yukon. And when I find this confirmed by what seems to me good evidence, so far as Capt. Norwood is concerned, and when I find it stated that Mr. McGregor retired to Manitoba greatly improved in his circumstances to say the least of it, I feel that I should fail in my duty if I did not bring to the notice of this House—not an attack upon a farmer or a farmer's son—but the fact that men have been appointed that were not qualified for their offices, offices which it was stated, and widely believed, they had abused. I do not say that either touched a dollar improperly—

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question? He has challenged my commendation of Mr. McGregor, but he has not said in what way Mr. McGregor was not qualified.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. He had no knowledge of mining—

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to state why I think he was a good man? In the first place, he was a young Canadian, with a good, fair Canadian education. Second, he had had a large experience in the west, including a considerable experience in the mining districts and in dealing with mining people. He had large business experience, and had built up a character for honesty and integrity.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is the first time we have heard that this gentleman had any knowledge of mining whatever. The Minister of the Interior has not discharged his duty to himself, to this House, or to Mr. McGregor in keeping back this fact. I have been charged with a malicious attack upon individuals. No language could be further from the truth. What I have stated was, that there was a case that demanded an independent investigation. And the greatest enemies of these officers are those who leave them under the imputation of having abused their offices by failing to discharge their duties, when they voted down such an independent investigation as, if their position is what they say it is, would have satisfied the country. I say it is they who are responsible, and not me, for the position those men occupy to-day. I have only drawn at-attention to the report of Major Walsh, their own commissioner, and to the statements that the Minister of the Interior has allowed to pass unchallenged here; and now to-day, for the first time, we have this high character given to Mr. McGregor. Months ago these statements were made on the floor of this House, and it is only to-day that we find this gentleman given a high character. I say, if he is as innocent of any wrongdoing as I hope he is, the men with whom he has most ground to find fault are not those who made the charges in this House, but those who have given utterance, not to my views, or my opinions, but this man who stated on a passenger steamer, in the presence of scores of passengers, a gentleman who has been mining in the Yukon two years, that Mr. McGregor and Mr. Norwood made fortunes in a few months, and it appears to be true, and appears to be proved, so far as Capt. Norwood is concerned. I say that when such statements as those are made, it shows the absolute necessity there was for this Government to appoint a commission to make an investigation into those charges.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. The somewhat painful experience the leader of the Opposition has had during the last fifteen minutes is a good evidence of the utterly baseless character of these Yukon charges. The hon. gentleman's experience is just such as would have met a commission of judges, if they had been sent up into the Yukon district to investigate these charges. He has had to acknowledge publicly, on the floor of this House, that he did not know what he was talking about, when he made these charges against Mr. McGregor. It is all very well for him to say that these charges had been made before on the floor of this House against Mr. McGregor. It is true that such charges have been made by the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) and the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), who went so far as to call Mr. McGregor a horse-thief. We have paid no attention to those charges; those who know Mr. McGregor, knew well that they were false, and did not think it worth while to pay any attention to them. But when a gentleman of the standing of the leader of the Opposition gets up and calls a man like Mr. James McGregor a rascal, describes him as a man whose proper place would be behind the bars of the penitentiary, then it is time for those who are friends of Mr. McGregor to insist upon a vindication of his character. Surely an hon. gentleman of his experience ought to know better. It does not matter much what the hon. member for Pictou says in this House in regard to these Yukon officials, it does not matter much what the member for West Assiniboia says about them, but when a gentleman of the standing of the leader of the Opposition makes such charges as these on hearsay evidence, on the word of some unknown English gentleman, some remittance man, perhaps, who came out to this country to seek his fortune, some specimen of the class to which the hon. gentleman himself is so much attached—I say when a man of the standing of the hon. gentleman brings such charges against Mr. McGregor, a man who is respectable, a man who is well known in the province of Manitoba as a business man, it is time for his friends to pay some attention to them. The hon. gentleman does not give us the name of his informant, and when he does not give us the name of his informant he assumes on the floor of this House responsibility for the statements he has made. I happen to know Mr. McGregor, I have known him for fifteen years. It is true Mr. McGregor buys horses occasionally, and sells horses occasionally, and so do I; and I defy the hon. gentleman to say that I am any the worse or any more dishonest on that account. Some of the most honourable and respectable members of this House, on both sides, are in the habit of buying and selling horses. Mr. McGregor is a large dealer in horses, I myself have bought horses from him time and again, and I am proud to stand here and bear testimony to the fact that in every way in regard to business I have found Mr. McGregor a thoroughly honest, reputable and upright man. He is a large dealer and stockbreeder in Manitoba. His word is his bond. The reputation of James McGregor throughout the province of Manitoba is such that his friends deemed it unnecessary, when attacks were being made upon him in Parliament, in the earlier part of this session, to reply to them at all. But, as I said before, when the leader of the Opposition gets up in his place and makes such an uncalled for and slanderous charge as he did against Mr. McGregor this afternoon, then his friends began to think it was time to take his part. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think it is clear that the hon. gentleman is in the habit of getting up in this House and speaking of what he knows nothing about, and it does not come well from a man of his position. I must say, as a young member of this House, I feel a little diffident in calling attention to the attitude of a gentleman occupying his position, and to his reckless disregard of the rights of private citizens. It was painful for me to see the hon. gentleman crawling down as he did as soon as he found out that Mr. McGregor had friends in this House, although I am glad that he had the good sense and the discretion to recede from the untenable position he had taken in regard to that gentleman's character. I will say in conclusion that so far as my experience and my knowledge go, the men who went into the Yukon country as officials were first-class men, and if all the charges which have been made against the Yukon officials have as little truth in them, or are as foundationless as the charges which were made by the leader of the Opposition against

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Mr. McGregor this afternoon, I think it is the best evidence possible of the wisdom of the Government in refusing to befool a commission of judges by sending them up there to discover an unheard of mare's nest.

Committee rose and reported progress.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 6.05 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 31st July, 1899.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PRAYERS.

BILL WITHDRAWN.

Bill (No. 65) to incorporate the Restigouche Boom Company.—(Mr. McAlister.)

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 183) to authorize the Government of Canada to construct a branch line of railway from Charlottetown to Murray Harbour, in the province of Prince Edward Island, as a public work.—(Mr. Blair.)

PORT GEORGE, ANNAPOLIS COUNTY, POST OFFICE.

Mr. MILLS asked :

Who is the postmaster at Port George, Annapolis County? Has there been any irregularities in connection with said office that required the services of the inspector? If so, what were they, and what is the situation now?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). Inquiry is being made in the district in regard to the matter set forth in the question. I have not got the information.

MEDICAL ATTENDANCE TO INDIANS IN YALE AND CARIBOO.

Mr. PRIOR asked :

1. What amounts have been paid by the Government during the years 1896-7, 1897-8 and 1898-9 in the Electoral District of Yale and Cariboo for medical attendance and medicines?

2. To whom were these payments made, and how much to each medical man?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). The answer occupies three or four pages. I will hand it in to "Hansard."

Mr. FOSTER. That cannot be done, I am sorry to say, unless it is read.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It will simply save the hon. gentleman the necessity of making a motion for the return.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I move that the paper presented be laid on the Table.

Motion agreed to.

IMPORTS OF INDIAN CORN.

Mr. CLANCY asked :

How much Indian corn has been imported into Canada for home consumption for the eleven months ending 31st May for the fiscal year 1899?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). The monthly reports received by the department do not furnish quantities. I am, therefore, unable to furnish the required information for the period mentioned, but, the imports entered for consumption of Indian corn for the nine months ended 31st March amounted to 17,729,074 bushels, valued at $6,815,818. The exports of Indian corn from Canada for the same period amounted to 13,560,358 bushels, valued at $5,405,323.

IMPORTS OF BINDER TWINE.

Mr. CLANCY asked :

How much twine for harvest binders (or binder twine) was imported into Canada for home consumption for the eleven months ending 31st May for the fiscal year 1899, and the value thereof?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). The monthly classification of imports does not enumerate this article. I am, therefore, unable to answer this question for the time mentioned; but the total quantity of binder twine imported into Canada for consumption during the nine months ending 31st March, 1899, amounted to 4,513,210 pounds, valued at $296,155.

Mr. WALLACE. Might I ask the Minister whether it would not be a good plan to put that item in the classification?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Perhaps it would be.

EXPORTS OF GRAIN.

Mr. HENDERSON (by Mr. McCleary) asked :

1. How many bushels of oats, pease, rye and wheat, respectively, were exported from Canada to Germany in the year ending 30th June, 1898?
2. How many in the year ending 30th June, 1899, or up to the latest date for which full returns have been received?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). Oats, 712,842 bushels; pease, 43,821 bushels; rye, 556,273 bushels; wheat, 239,685 bushels. 2. The latest date to which full returns have been received is 31st March, 1899, being for nine months of the fiscal year 1899. These returns show the following exports to Germany:—Oats, 477,827 bushels; pease, 20,892 bushels; rye, 81,852; wheat, 46,015 bushels.

LEASE OF LOT 1, BLOCK 13, NEW WESTMINSTER, B.C.

Mr. PRIOR asked :

What annual rental did John Wilson pay in 1893 and David Diamond in 1896 for the lease of lot one, block thirteen, in New Westminster, British Columbia ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). On the 27th May, 1893, John Wilson paid $250, being one year's rent to 12th May, 1894. Payment was made in advance. His lease being subsequently cancelled by Order in Council of 29th January, 1896, he paid no more. Mr. D. Diamond never paid anything as the Order in Council of the 29th January, 1896, which granted him the lease was cancelled by Order in Council of the 16th December, 1897.

COAL MINING RIGHTS, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

Have any leases or rights to mine coal under the waters of the harbour of Nanaimo, B.C., been granted by the Dominion Government to any persons or companies.

If so, what fees or royalties have been enacted therefor ?

Will the Government bring down any correspondence in relation to applications made in that respect ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). No such lease has been issued. The correspondence will be brought down.

MAIL SERVICE—OTTAWA AND CYRVILLE.

Mr. HODGINS asked :

1. Who has the contract for carrying the mails between Ottawa and Cyrville ?

2. Were tenders asked for by public advertisement or otherwise for this service, and when ?

3. Who were the tenderers, and what was the amount of each tender ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). The mail service between Cyrville and Ottawa is at present performed by the postmaster at Cyrville, under a temporary agreement. The service was put up to tender on the 7th December last, the tenders being due on the 2nd February. There were no tenders received at the department, but after the date for the opening of the tenders a Mr. Lavigne called at the department and stated that he had tendered for the service at $96 a year. No trace of the tender could be found, but the service was put in Mr.

Mr. PATERSON.

Lavigne's hands from the 1st April last, at $96 a year. On the 29th May last, Mr. Lavigne, before the execution of a contract, declared that he would not continue for less than $200 a year, and the service was taken over by the postmaster of Cyrville at the rate paid to Mr. Lavigne, viz., $96 a year. The rate paid prior to the 1st April last was $100 a year.

THE TRANSVAAL QUESTION.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). With the unanimous consent of the House, Mr. Speaker, I beg to interrupt the regular course of the business, in order to offer certain resolutions which I believe the state of things now existing in a distant country under the suzerainty of Her Majesty seems to render appropriate. Every one will agree with me that the development of the British Empire has now reached such a condition and degree of consolidation that no part of it can affect to be indifferent to anything that may be going on in any other part, and, assuredly, we cannot be indifferent to the condition of things existing in the Transvaal state, which, it must be remembered, though an independent and self-governing country, is under the suzerainty of Her Majesty. Some 80,000 of Her Majesty's subjects have been allowed to become residents of that country, to purchase lands there, to open mines, to develop trade, to establish industries and to build up cities, yet are denied almost every kind of participation in its administration. They are subjected to discriminating and heavy taxation, and yet are denied any kind of representation, and although forced to bear their full share of citizenship, are denied the rights and privileges and liberties of citizens.

For my part, I do not hesitate to say that there are many things to be admired in the career and character of President Kruger. No one who has read his history can fail to admire his sturdy patriotism and force of character. But every one must admit that there would be much more to admire in him if, instead of being intolerant and oppressive towards fellow-members of the same community, he had remembered that patriotism does not preclude justice nor is it inconsistent and incompatible with generosity. At first blush it may be said, and perhaps with some reason, that if the people of the Transvaal have chosen to refuse the rights of citizenship to any but their own race, they are within their own rights—that to nations, as well as men, the old saying applies that every man's house is his own castle.

That would apply if Mr. Kruger had not allowed the Uitlanders to go into the territory of the republic to found and build cities, develop the country, and if he had not taken their money and filled his treasury with it. But, having allowed the Uitlanders to go into the country and become residents, the least that would be expected by those who took up their abode therein was that, having assumed the duties of citizenship, they should likewise be given the rights of citizenship.

It must not be forgotten either, when we come to deal with this question, that Her Majesty is the suzerain of the Transvaal republic, and became so with the full consent of the people of the Transvaal. It must not be forgotten that, at a time when the Dutch population of the Transvaal was in dire distress, when they were threatened almost with annihilation by their neighbours, when they were threatened with something like civil war among themselves, they appealed for British interference and, after a series of events, which there is no use going into at this moment, a treaty of peace was concluded between the people of the Transvaal and Her Majesty, by which, on the one hand, while the independence of the Transvaal was recognized, on the other hand the suzerain power of Her Majesty was fully recognized and admitted. The least, then, that can be expected is that the subjects of the suzerain power should not only be not subjected to any kind of oppression, but be given also rights equal to those enjoyed by the citizens of the Transvaal republic.

I may be told, also, and it has been strongly urged, that the interests of the Empire require that, at this moment, the rights of the Uitlanders should be recognized in the republic. But I would not put the question upon any of the above grounds. Any of these grounds would appeal to British subjects and British subjects alone, but upon this question I think we can safely appeal to the conscience and judgment of mankind at large. We can appeal for protection to the Uitlanders in the Transvaal, not only upon the grounds of British citizenship and suzerainty, but upon rights which must appeal to the conscience of all men. If there is any country in the world it is this country of ours, Canada, where we can proclaim this principle, that wherever men of different races, but races of equal rank, are found to live together under the same government, the only policy which can give adequate justice to all, which can give satisfaction to all, which can insure harmony, is a policy of equal rights and equal justice, a policy which will give to every citizen, without any questions of birth or origin, the same rights, the same liberties, the same privileges, the same aspirations. This is the policy which we have adopted in this country, and I think we can fairly claim with some pride, that it has proved eminently successful. It is the policy which, at this moment, prevails in Cape Colony; it is on trial, but there, as here, it must prove, in the end, eminently successful. This is the policy which, I submit, ought to prevail in the Transvaal. Let the Dutch of the Transvaal Republic give to the English of that republic the same rights, the same privileges, the same liberties which the English of Cape Colony give to the Dutch of Cape Colony, and the problem will be solved. The Uitlanders claim no more than that, the Imperial authorities claim for them no more than that; and it seems to me that it behooves the Canadian Parliament to bespeak its sympathy for such a noble, moral and just cause. If I be asked: What is the reason of this expression of sympathy, what object would it serve, what result would it effect, I simply answer: The object to be sought is that we should extend to our fellow-countrymen in South Africa the right hand of good fellowship, that we should assure them that our heart is with them, and that in our judgment they are in the right; the object would be to assure the Imperial authorities, who have taken in hand the cause of the Uitlanders, that on that question we are at one with them and that they are also in the right—and perhaps the effect might be also that this mark of sympathy, of universal sympathy, extending from continent to continent and encircling the globe might cause wiser and more humane councils to prevail in the Transvaal and possibly avert the awful arbitrament of war. Animated by these reasons, and speaking, I believe, the sentiments of all men in Canada, not only of one race but of all races, I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Foster, the following resolution:—

1. Resolved, That this House has viewed with regret the complications which have arisen in the Transvaal Republic, of which Her Majesty is suzerain, from the refusal to accord to Her Majesty's subjects now settled in that region any adequate participation in its government;
2. Resolved, That this House has learned with still greater regret that the condition of things there existing has resulted in intolerable oppression, and has produced great and dangerous excitement among several classes of Her Majesty's subjects in her South African possessions;
3. Resolved, That this House, representing a people which has largely succeeded, by the adoption of the principle of conceding equal political rights to every portion of the population, in harmonizing estrangements and in producing general content with the existing system of government, desires to express its sympathy with the efforts of Her Majesty's Imperial authorities to obtain for the subjects of Her Majesty who have taken up their abode in the Transvaal such measure of justice and political recognition as may be found necessary to secure them in the full possession of equal rights and liberties.

I have to express not only my own regret, but I am sure, the regret of the House, that the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) is not in his seat to-day. But, before his departure, I conferred with him on this subject and communicated to him the resolution I have just placed in your hand and I have received this letter, which it is not only a duty but a pleasure to place before the House.

Ottawa, July 29th, 1899.

Dear Sir Wilfrid Laurier,—I regret to say in reply to your note just received, that it will not be in my power to attend the House tomorrow, or it would have given me much pleasure to second the resolution of which you have sent me a copy in relation to the Transvaal, as I think we are bound to give all the aid in our power to Her Majesty's Government in the present crisis.

Yours faithfully,
(Signed), CHARLES TUPPER.

Mr. GEO. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) Any extended remarks from me might be considered unnecessary, in view of the letter written by the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), which has been so kindly read by the First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), but a few words may not be out of place. In the first place we on this side unitedly and most heartily concur in every sentiment expressed by my right hon. friend, as well respecting the purpose of the resolution and the reasons for which it has been presented to the House. Nothing that he has said could have been better expressed. The reasons which he gave will be considered, I imagine, all-sufficient reasons with this House for the unanimous adoption of the resolution. I am sure that one thing will be fully recognized, and that is the almost infinite patience with which the British Government under Lord Salisbury and Mr. Chamberlain have conducted the negotiations, from the beginning, with the ruler of the Transvaal Republic. Impatience at delay may have been expressed by many of Her Majesty's subjects in Great Britain and outside of Great Britain, but I am sure we all believe, that, with an Empire of such power and such resources, the very best indication of the innate justice and soundness of her cause is given by what I cannot but characterize as the almost infinite patience with which these statesmen have carried on the negotiations looking to the recognition of the equal rights of British subjects before resorting to the dread arbitrament of war. Always, before war takes place, every resource which can be laid hold of ought to be exhausted; and at no time in the history of the world was that a sentiment more necessary to have imbedded in the popular mind than now. These men may be Outlanders so far as the Dutch Republic is concerned; but we extend to them to-day, as has been done from almost every quarter of the British world, that hand-grasp which will make the 80,000 British subjects there feel that, though Outlanders, so far as the Transvaal Republic is concerned, they are Inlanders taken warmly to the great heart of the British Empire. Nothing strikes us more strongly than the attempt—which may be based on grounds of self-preservation and limited patriotism—of President Kruger to keep for himself and the Dutch citizens of that Republic the rights, the privileges, the powers which they have hitherto had. But every one sees that it is a contest which can have only one termination; that to-day the civilized world is hostile to such a policy as that; and that all that is required, as I believe, is a continuation of that patience and the focussing of the attention of the civilized world upon that point to bring about an amicable solution in the end. Great Britain's efforts have always been marked by the free giving of equal rights to men of every nationality who choose to become citizens of her own country or of any of her dependencies.

That is in such marked contrast to the policy adopted by the Dutch Republic that it cannot help but centre the sympathies as well as the attention of the civilized world on that point. These resolutions, I think, are timely, then, because they say to our own British fellow-citizens, who are Outlanders in the republic, that they have the sympathy and the good-will of the British Empire as a whole, in all its parts, in their struggle for equal rights. No taxation without representation is a cry to which the world rises, and it will rise in the Dutch Republic just as surely as the sun rises. Outside of that, I think, great good will come from the introduction and passage of a resolution like this in that it is another proof of the solidarity of the British Empire throughout the world, that to-day, in these times of telegraph wires, and steamships, and quick transmission of intelligence, evokes a lively and sympathetic and deep interest in every part of the British Empire in the local fortunes of every other part of the British Empire; and as that sentiment surges round and round the world, Imperial federationists, like my hon. friend to my left (Mr. McNeill), Imperial federationists, as most of us here are in one sense or another, may well feel that their cause is being wrought out in the Empire by these very sentiments which are being cultivated through all parts of it. And lastly, without multiplying remarks, I wish to say that I consider this resolution is a timely one, if for no other reason than it shows that we here in Canada, as well as British subjects in every part of the outlying dependencies, have not lost our deep love for the old mother power. As children with a troubled and strenuous infancy, and a childhood wrapped round with clouds and enveloped in difficulties, we have being guided through them by the strong loving hand of a great mother power, we have been given the fullest opportunity to employ our strength, we have been given the freest opportunity to indulge our tendencies and our sympathies; and yet under that lenient and generous sway, every one of those colonies have come, in the time of their lusty strength, back to the old mother land to say: We love thee still, we are children of the brood, with thee we have been and with thee we will ever be.

Mr. ALEX. McNEILL (North Bruce). I desire to say just one word to offer my congratulations to the Government for having introduced these resolutions. I entirely agree with what fell from my right hon. friend the Prime Minister, when he said that all that is desired is that the British people in the Transvaal should enjoy the same rights and privileges that the Dutch settlers in British South Africa enjoy. That is all that the Imperial Government desires. It seems to me that this resolution comes with special significance and force, when moved by the right hon. gentleman who, in the position he occupies, is an embodiment, if I may so describe it, of the freedom, and liberality, and breadth of British institutions. When we ask that the same rights and privileges should be given to our friends in the Transvaal that the Dutch have in British South Africa, we realize that the same liberal institutions are extended to the Dutch there that are extended to our French Canadian fellow-citizens here. At this very moment, as my right hon. friend occupies the position of Premier of Canada, so does a member of the Dutch race to-day occupy the position of Premier of the old British colony of the Cape. So it seems almost incredible when we come to understand what is the position of our suffering fellow-subjects in the Transvaal really is. Now, I should like to be allowed, with the permission of the House, to read a word or two from an article written by a gentleman who is specially well able to speak on this subject. He is a gentleman who occupied many positions of trust in South Africa. I will just give, in his own words, the position of trust he occupied there, so that the House may see how thoroughly competent he is to express his views on this subject. He was connected by ties of the closest intimacy with the Dutch very early in life. He was Attorney General of Griqualand, he was one of the judges of the Supreme Court of the Cape of Good Hope, he was British Commissioner on the Anglo-German Commission, he was administrator of British Bechuanaland, with supreme judicial as well as executive powers; he was resident Commissioner for Bechuanaland Protectorate and the Kalahari, with jurisdiction up to the Zambesi. He says he was always on the best terms with the Boers, that he had many conferences with them, that the most friendly feeling existing between him and them, that he entertains a sincere admiration for their many sterling qualities.

Mr. WALLACE. Who is this gentleman?

Mr. McNEILL. This gentleman is Sir Sidney Shippard, who was, as I have said, our commissioner in Bechuanaland. He was asked by the editor of the Nineteenth Century to write an article on this subject. He said he had carefully avoided giving expression to his views, but, under the circumstances, he thought it right to accept the invitation which was extended to him, and this is the picture that he traces of the condition of our fellow-subjects in the Transvaal:

British subjects in the Transvaal are denied all rights of citizenship, they are insulted, plundered, even murdered by their oppressors; the courts of justice have been deprived of independence, so that neither safety nor redress can be had for our British fellow-subjects there. Their humble petitions have been openly flouted, although they were signed by 38,000 law-abiding petitioners in 1894.

This, you will observe, was before the raid.

They were treated as rebels merely because they petitioned. In the Transvaal Britons are slaves, and may be robbed, beaten, imprisoned and murdered. Their women are grossly insulted, their houses are broken into at any hour of the day or night by ruffianly police, who are a terror to the peaceable, and worse than useless against criminals. When an unfortunate British householder remonstrates, he may be shot dead in his own room.

What did take place, we all know. A short time ago, a Mr. Edgar was actually shot dead in his own house without one word being said to him. He was insulted in the street, and took refuge in his own house, and a policeman burst in the door. When he and his wife went to the door to see who it was, the policeman shot him down without one word being said. This case was taken before one of the judges in the Transvaal, and the redress the poor woman had was the statement by the judge that he was glad to find that the police were able to maintain law and order in the country. Sir Sidney Shippard goes on to say:

The wretched Englishman in the Transvaal has no civil rights, no protection from the law courts; in his case the verdict of a Boer jury is a mere farce. He is unarmed and helpless, an object of derision to his enemies. The money wrung from him has been expended mainly in fortresses, artillery, arms, ammunition and mercenaries to overawe him and keep him permanently in subjection. Lastly, in his despair, he has appealed to his Queen.

I thought it was only right to read these statements, because they are statements made by a gentleman who is an impartial witness. This is the picture that he draws of the condition of our friends in the Transvaal. I have only to say that I am exceedingly glad that this resolution is introduced. I observe there is no offer of material assistance. I take it that we all understand very well why there is no offer of material assistance. It is because everybody knows that material assistance is here, in Canada, at any moment, if it be required. When a great military empire, in 1896, ventured to interfere in this very question, this House, by acclamation, stated its willingness to render material assistance, and if there is not material assistance offered to-day we know that it is because it is felt that it is unnecessary to render assistance to a one-hundred ton hammer to crack a hazel nut.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). Mr. Speaker, before the resolution, which is meeting with such hearty and unanimous approval in this House, is adopted, I desire to say a word of two in regard to it. I think the occasion is both timely and opportune that we, as British subjects, should do two things, first, assure the great mother land that we, too, are watching the course of events in every portion of the British Empire, and that we are in thorough and hearty sympathy with the mother land, as the resolution brought before the House by the leaders of the two parties has shown. Also, in the second place, desire to show to those 80,000 British subjects, far away in Arica, that here on the northern half of the continent of North America, where 6,000,000 of loyal British Canadians live, we are watching the course of events there. We are in hearty accord with them and we want to let them know it, and we want to let others know it too, as it seems desirable now, apparently, that the British Empire is of one mind in every part of the world and of one feeling in regard to this question. British subjects have been deprived of the rights of citizenship which Great Britain has given in every land where her flag has waved. We in Canada have given a conspicuous example of that, because here the fullest measure of freedom and liberty has been given to those who are not British born. We may, perhaps, say that greater freedom has been given by Great Britain than by any other nation to those not native born, because we have been examples of the greatest liberality with the most successful and satisfactory results. I desire to add my word of commendation to the resolution proposed by the right hon. leader of the Government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), seconded by the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster).

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Foster :

That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to Her Majesty's principal Secretary of State for the Colonies by the Speaker of this House.

Motion agreed to, all the members of the House rising to their feet and singing the National Anthem.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. BEATTIE. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), as the session is now drawing to a close and as I do not wish to do anything to prolong it, whether he will give me a day to discuss a Bill which I have on the paper to determine the length of the working day for workmen and labourers ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I will be able to confer with my hon. friend, privately, on this subject.

Mr. WALLACE.

APPOINTMENT OF JUDGE FOR QUEEN'S COUNTY, P.E.I.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) if an appointment has been made of a county judge in Queen's County, P.E.I., to fill the place of the late Judge Alley. The vacancy has existed for a pretty long time, and in the interest of business, as the county court will meet to-morrow, it is necessary that an appointment should be made. The vacancy has existed for two months, and has seriously interfered with business interests. I would like to know from the right hon. Prime Minister whether an appointment has been, or if not when an appointment is to be made, who the party is to be ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) asks if the appointment has been made, and if not when it is to be made. We have not yet made the appointment and the reason is that Her Majesty's Opposition has kept us so busy during the last few months that we have not had time for the consideration of the question that has been brought up by the hon. gentleman. But as soon as the Opposition has given us leisure to deal with the administrative part of the Government, we shall make the appointment.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's). Mr. Speaker, I may say that it is very unbecoming on the part of the Government to neglect this appointment.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. There can be no discussion at this stage.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I find it necessary to refer a little more at length to the neglect of the Government in not making this appointment of a county judge for Queen's County, P.E.I.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I suppose the hon. gentleman will conclude by making a motion ?

Mr. MACDONALD (King's). I will conclude by making a motion, because this matter is important. This vacancy occurred some months ago, and there is no reason whatever why it should not have been filled. The matter has assumed, I fear, too much of a political complexion. It is a case in which politics should have no standing. The court meets to-morrow, this is the last day. It is the most important county court in Prince Edward Island, yet we find this Government, although it has occupied so much time with other more frivolous things, cannot find time to appoint a gentleman to fill this position. It is not for want of applications, because if rumour is to be believed, applications are almost innumerable on the part of certain gentlemen in favour of their friends, and also, I fear, from applicants themselves, which is not in accordance exactly with the position of a judge. The Government are certainly very seriously to blame, because the result is that parties and their witnesses are bound to appear in court in accordance with their summonses, and as there is no judge to try their cases, they have to go to their homes and lose another day; all to please this Government and their friends. This is a monstrous iniquity under the circumstances. If it were not that the Government are holding this matter over to serve their own political ends and their own political friends, they would easily find time to make an appointment, notwithstanding the opposition that is given to their obnoxious measures by the Opposition in this House. It is a great injustice to the province of Prince Edward Island that this seemingly small matter could not be attended to by the Government.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think my right hon. friend answered this question in a serious way. I could not for a moment have imagined that the excuse he would give for retarding the operations of justice in any part of the Dominion would be the frivolous one that the Opposition in this House had been criticising Government measures. I think he ought to give a more serious excuse than that, and I am quite sure that he will. This is an important matter because the interests of justice depend upon it. This office has been vacant, I understand, for about three months, and everything before the county court has been at a standstill because there has been no judge. I understand that there is no machinery in the province to get over the difficulty, and that the only way in which it can be got over at all is by the appointment of a new judge, which makes it all the more necessary that this matter should be attended to. It is a serious matter where litigants and other people interested in cases are looking to the courts at their regular appointed times to adjudicate upon them. There should have been no difficulty at all in appointing a judge. Two minutes of dictation by the Premier, after consultation with his colleague from Prince Edward Island, would have put the matter before Council, and a judge could have been appointed without trouble and without loss of any time. I am sure my right hon. friend will not regard his excuse as germane. I imagine that there is little deeper difficulty than that. I imagine that there is a political difficulty somewhere. I imagine that my right hon. friend and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) have not been quite able yet to settle between contesting claims, with reference especially to consequences that may follow on some of these claims being allowed and certain appointments being made. That is the difficulty and however much we may give a reasonable breadth and leniency to the Government in making appointments, when judgeships are concerned, party politics ought to take a back seat, and the interests of justice ought to be arranged for by a speedy appointment. I hope my hon. friend will be able to give a better excuse than that Her Majesty's Opposition have been doing their duty in this House.

The PRIME MINISTER. I must say that the excuse which I gave to my hon. friend was not intended as a final one, for the reason that I was taken unawares, and I did not know exactly the condition of affairs in regard to the matter. I know that there is a vacancy on the bench in Prince Edward Island, and that is about all I know. Unfortunately the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is ill to-day and not in the House. I shall have to see him and consult the Minister of Justice about it. It is my duty to give an answer to the very legitimate inquiry of my hon. friend, and if the matter is as represented by the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster) that there is no machinery in the island whereby the place of the judge can be filled by another, it is a serious matter and requires proper attention.

Mr. SPROULE. I am a little surprised at the remark of the hon. leader of the Government, because this matter was brought to the attention of the Minister of Justice in the other Chamber over a week ago. He was told that unless the appointment were made by to-morrow it would be utterly impossible to go on with the work of the court; and I believe he gave the assurance that he would bring the matter at once to the attention of the Prime Minister and have it attended to.

SUPPLY.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself in Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Yukon Provisional District—Salaries and expenses in connection with the administration of the territory..... $76,300

Mr. FOSTER. How often do the placer miners clean up? Do they take out their gold dust every day? If so, where is it stored in the meantime? And how often do they make a report to the Government or the mining inspector?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). They report every fifteen days to the mining inspector.

Mr. FOSTER. If he happens to be away, do they send the report in to Dawson?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Either to the mining inspector or to somebody who takes his place in the office down at the creek. Before the police took charge of the work the reports were regularly made to him every fifteen days. I presume that now, since the police have taken charge of the system, the reports are made to the police officers. So far as the general practice is concerned, the practice of the miners is to wash out a little gold from time to time in the winter to pay wages, but the general clean up is in June, July and August.

Mr. FOSTER. They cannot wash out much in the winter.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Very little.

Mr. FOSTER. Do they make out a report on regular forms signed by themselves?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think so.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the hon. gentleman any of those blank forms?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have them in the department.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, if the mining inspector is there, they report directly to him, and if not they report every fifteen days to his office. Do they send in the dust every time they report?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I cannot say that they do. We have not any positive report about whether they do that or not. In some cases, the mining inspector must have given the parties a permit to pay on the wash-up in a month or two. The return seems to show that the inspector is satisfied that the people are responsible to whom he gives this credit. I cannot say positively that they pay every fifteen days.

Mr. FOSTER. Could my hon. friend lay on the Table the reports received regularly each fifteen days of all the placer mining operations showing the amounts washed, and the amount of royalty and what was sent to the Government.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I could lay on the Table a return showing the amounts produced by each mine and the amounts collected, but could not lay on the Table the returns that came from each mine, because we have not got them. The report shows exactly the amount produced by each claim and the amount collected.

Mr. FOSTER. All this goes to show how loose the machinery is for the accurate detection of the amount that should be received by the Government, and a report of that to the department. I think the hon. gentleman will have to give his officer there a regular woolling, to use a vernacular phrase. I know how it is. A man may attempt to operate a mine in British Columbia, and he will sit down for fifteen days and talk to his manager like a father as to the necessity, above everything else, of his sending in a weekly report, and he will send his manager out and hear from him once every Christmas.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am very much pleased to know that the hon. gentleman has a little sympathy for my position.

Mr. FOSTER. But mine managers have a little more freedom than the officers of the department. I would dock these men regularly part of their salary every month or fortnight that a report does not come in. It is too bad that we here, discussing Yukon matters, should be absolutely without information. The Minister himself is without it. He has tried to get it, has written over and over again without effect and when a new plan is made by the commissioner, down comes an intimation to the Minister by the nabob: I have changed all the arrangements, have made a brand new arrangement, but you are not to know what it is; it has gone into operation, and by and by, when I get a Sunday off and have nothing else to do, I will write you a synopsis of this system which I have put into operation. The system may be the best possible but that is not the way in which the department or Parliament ought to be treated. We are expending an immense amount on the Yukon, this country is all interested in its development, we are getting a large amount from it, but we want to know something as to the modus operandi, and the quick and regular transmission of information from the officers out there to the department here, so that in session time it may be given to the House is of primary importance. If there is any way by which we can perfect the machinery for collecting that royalty, the best consideration of the department and its officers is due to that question. If there be nothing in the future but this somewhat loose method, unless we can have some sort of analytical, scientific and sedulously persistent method of ascertaining and collecting this revenue, I think my hon. friend will come to the conclusion that the sooner some other system is adopted the better—a system of license perhaps, by which a sum might be paid which, even though it was a rough and ready way of getting at the revenue, would yet provide a way of avoiding the incentives to fraud which are, in the nature of the case, inevitable. I make these criticisms, not to find fault with the Government, but because of the circumstances. I quite acknowledge the difficulties in the way, but money—you have lots to burn—money, patience and intelligence, ought to overcome them.

Mr. SPROULE. What security does the hon. Minister take from those men who collect the royalty for the due fulfilment of their duties?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have a blanket bond from the guarantee company covering all the officers.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the amount of the bond?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. $50,000.

Mr. WALLACE. How often do the mining inspectors make their deposits?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. As often as they can. It is quite impossible to tell here.

Mr. WALLACE. What are the instructions given them?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The instructions are given them directly by the commissioner of the district and these instructions are to send the money in just as often as possible. The amount of royalty collected is very trivial except during June, July and August. In these months, I presume it is sent in every three or four days.

Mr. WALLACE. I would like information of the amount of royalties paid in each month during the last twelve months. We will say that $100,000 was paid in for the month of June. I would like to know the exact amount for that month, and what reports the Government have of the amount which has accrued to the Government for that month. Of course, we have in our hands all the royalty collected during the last season. For this spring, we have not received a detailed statement. But you received statements every month or every week?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have received no statements of details for this season. The deputy received a letter from Mr. Lithgow, the controller, saying that as the royalty was coming in—this was towards the end of June—there would be about $400,000 for that month.

Mr. WALLACE. Have you had any statement for the months preceding June?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My deputy informs me that there was a considerable sum of royalty for the preceding month, and he has a statement of that.

Mr. WALLACE. You will give us a statement for last year by months?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. WALLACE. I was not here on Saturday. Will the hon. Minister kindly tell me to what item in the main Estimates this is added?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Item 220: salaries and expenses in connection with the administration of the Yukon district.

Mr. WALLACE. I see that in that item there was an increase of $24,800. This item of $76,000 added will make a total increase of over $100,000. I understand the Minister explained these matters on Saturday. I will read the report to get the information I want.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is one portion of this item that I have not explained. The committee will see that there is an item of $1,200 for a relief model. It is intended to get a relief model of that portion of the coast practically which constitutes the disputed territory. We have the information, with a reasonable degree of exactitude. For this information we look to Mr. King, who was the British commissioner, appointed along with the American commissioners in 1892 or 1894.

Mr. FOSTER. Who does that kind of work?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have nobody here who can do it. But Mr. King will ascertain where it can be done, and the work will be done under his supervision. The object is to give a bird's-eye view of the country for the information of the commissioners in discussing the boundaries.

Mr. WALLACE. What size will this model be?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is not yet decided. Mr. King says that this sum will be sufficient to pay for it.

Mr. WALLACE. Besides this item of $76,000 for salaries and expenses, to be added to this item No. 220, there is also an item for contingencies, $35,000. "Contingencies" looks to me very much like expenses, so that would be virtually an addition to the amounts.

Mr. FOSTER. Who controls the contingencies expenditure?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The department here. I ask $35,000 additional because I am afraid—in fact, I am reasonably certain—that expenditures will be found necessary that we have not been able to foresee.

Mr. FOSTER. How many items has the hon. Minister? I want to keep one small item in his department on which matters may be discussed. I have one or two points I wish to discuss, and others may arise.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We might hold item 97 for that purpose.

Additional amount for Dominion Lands..	$3,000
Salary of Chief Inspector of Timber and Forestry .....	2,500
Salaries of five extra clerks at head office, at $400 each.....	2,000
	<hr/>
	$7,500

Mr. FOSTER. Is this office of chief inspector a new office?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes. I ask this item of $2,500 for the purpose of establishing the office of chief inspector of timber and forestry. I have had my attention directed to this subject a great deal by persons familiar with it, and also by the press. Ever since I took charge of the department I have felt that this branch of our work was greatly neglected, but we have had no officer who has the expert knowledge, both from a scientific and practical point of view, to give advice on the subject. The officers we had were Crown timber agents, ordinary bush rangers, or timber inspectors. I intend to utilize these officers' services in connection with the Indian Department and a general way. These are matters requiring such attention all the way from the Pacific Ocean to eastern Manitoba, and we have also large timber interests in the Indian reserves in the eastern provinces. I do not intend to have this appointee an officer of the Indian Department, but I intend to make use of his knowledge in connection with these matters of timber and forestry. It is my desire that this officer should give special attention to forest preservation and renewals. Particularly in the North-west, that subject has been badly neglected. I have attempted to carry out the policy which was outlined by the department before I took charge of it—but concerning which nothing had been done—in the way of making timber reserves, but I have been handicapped by the fact that I have not had an officer who could give his time and attention wholly to it.

Mr. FOSTER. I can see that my hon. friend (Mr. Sifton) could do something in that way if he were going to undertake reforestation or the planting of trees where there have been no forests up to the present time. But, with reference to our timber-covered areas, I do not see what benefit an officer of this kind would be. We have large areas of country which are covered with timber, and we have certain rules under which these may be leased and the timber cut; and it is the business of the timber inspectors to see that those rules are properly carried out. These are officers who would look after the preservation of the forests. But I do not see that a forest expert would be of any particular use in that respect. If you want to preserve the forests, or to prevent the cutting of too much timber, or of timber below a certain size, and to preserve it from fires, you have simply to issue your instructions to those different officers, and they are intelligent enough, I suppose, to carry out those instructions. If you are going to enter upon the work of planting forests in the North-west, then expert testimony may be necessary. Is that what my hon. friend proposes to use this vote for, and has he decided on some plan?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have no plan yet, and this vote is for the purpose of arriving at a better plan, and for the purpose of deciding upon effective regulations. The inspectors we have now are purely local men; they are for the purpose of checking the operations of the men who have timber limits, but they have no special knowledge regarding the preservation of forests. In the North-west we have large areas of timber land, concerning which we have no report from any officer of the department. Petitions have been received from the settlers, asking us to take steps for the preservation of the forest from fires, and at present there are no proper means for doing so. I have done something in that direction on the report of Mr. Stephenson; but he is a very busy man, and has not full and accurate knowledge of the matter. I can assure hon. gentlemen that when this officer is appointed, he will be one of the busiest men in the department.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood that Mr. Macoun, of the Experimental Farm, was largely engaged on that duty, and that various members of the other Experimental farms are also taking up the same work, such as ascertaining what class of trees would be suitable for planting in that country, and also for replanting with forests.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Providing seed for farmers.

Mr. SPROULE. No, but ascertaining what kind of trees and shrubbery would be suitable for planting, and also replanting the country, where it has been denuded of the original forest. That information has been collated by officers of the experimental farms for some years past. So far as that portion of the work is concerned, the Minister seems to be duplicating it. I understood also that he had an inspector, Mr. Pierce, who has been doing Timber Inspector's work largely for years.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. Pierce has nothing to do with the timber.

Mr. SPROULE. I have repeatedly talked with him on that question, and I understood that was part of his duty. It seems to me this is practically the establishment of a new office, to be filled by somebody who is to do work that is already being done by two different agencies, one by the officers of experimental farms, and the other in connection with the Interior Department.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The work that is being done by the officers of the Experimental Farm is not the same class of work at all, but it is work of a horticultural character, such as ascertaining the best kind of trees for cultivation. The officer I require will concern himself with existing forests.

Mr. WALLACE. The Minister is wrong in that matter, because, as explained by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), the very work that he tells us he proposes this officer should perform, is supposed to be performed now by officers of the other departments. But, outside of that, the Minister has given us a very crude statement upon which he proposes to appoint this officer. He ought to be able to justify this expenditure to Parliament in a more satisfactory manner than he has done.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is it proposed to appoint as timber inspector?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. Stewart, a Dominion land surveyor. He has been engaged for the department as surveyor in connection with the delimitation of the boundary between Ontario and Manitoba. He has been recommended to me by the members of the Ontario Forestry Commission as being a very competent man for that purpose.

Mr. FOSTER. What experience has he had?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. He has been connected with timber matters for a great many years in the province of Ontario. I do not know where he resides.

Mr. CLANCY. Is that Mr. Elihu Stewart, of Collingwood?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, that is the gentleman.

Mr. CLANCY. He is the gentleman who was one of the Liberal candidates at the general election in North Simcoe, and who was defeated?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, I am informed that this is the gentleman.

Mr. CLANCY. I can tell the hon. gentleman that while I have nothing to say as to his ability as a surveyor, he never had anything to do with timber.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken, if he says that I employed a gentleman to do work that he is not qualified to do.

Mr. CLANCY. I can tell the hon. gentleman that Mr. Stewart has been feeding at the Ontario crib for a great many years. He has been making useless surveys of townships that no one is living in, and that nobody intends to live in. If these are his qualifications, I will admit that he is eminently fitted for this work. But he does not know anything about timber. While he may be a very good surveyor, he does not know anything of the duties of a timber inspector.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Would the hon. gentleman say by what authority or by what knowledge it is that he says this gentleman has no knowledge of timber?

Mr. CLANCY. I know this gentleman. I do not reflect in the least upon him or upon his ability as a surveyor, but I have known him since the time he was a boy, and I went to school with him.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. What has he done while he was employed by the Ontario Government? Has he not been engaged by the Ontario Government in connection with the timber business?

Mr. CLANCY. No.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. He has not?

Mr. CLANCY. No, he has been engaged making surveys.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken.

Mr. CLANCY. I have had more to do with him than the hon. gentleman himself. Mr. Stewart has been for years employed surveying townships in Ontario. If the hon. Minister will take the trouble to look at the Ontario public accounts, he will see that the sum of $35,000 is put in regularly for the surveying of new townships. Mr. Stewart has been engaged in this work from year to year, as regularly as the years come round. He finally became entitled to such prominence that he was a candidate in the last general election in North Simcoe. He was defeated, and now he is securing his reward. I have nothing to say, personally, against Mr. Stewart; but as a timber inspector, he has had no experience, and he is entirely unfitted for it.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. All I have to say in regard to Mr. Stewart's record is, that I am perfectly satisfied the hon. gentleman is not making a statement that is correct, if he means to say that Mr. Stewart is not qualified to be a timber inspector. I can tell the hon. gentleman that the Ontario Forestry Commission recommended him for that position.

Mr. FOSTER. Who are they?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not remember their names at the moment. Mr. Waldie is one.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the hon. gentleman lay that statement before the committee?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Certainly, I will. I do not want this committee to run away with the impression that the hon. gentleman tries to create. The hon. gentleman is very reckless in his statements, when he undertakes to lead this committee to believe that I have appointed a man to a position for which he is unfitted, and the hon. gentleman has no warrant for making that statement. It will be proven that he has no warrant for making the statement that this gentleman has had no experience in regard to timber, because the appointment was made on the recommendation of the Ontario Forestry Commission, whom I conceive to be eminently fitted to know whether a man was experienced in that work or not. I am not at this moment able to say whose advice I would be more justified in taking than that of gentlemen who were appointed, by reason of their expert knowledge of timber matters, to advise the Ontario Government in connection with the great timber interests of that province. The Ontario Government have had much greater experience in connection with timber matters than have the Dominion Government. The knowledge of the Dominion Government in reference to timber matters is much smaller comparatively, and their experience is not so great, with one or two exceptions, as the experience of the Ontario Government in connection with matters of that kind. If the hon. gentleman is endeavouring to lead this committee to believe that the man recommended for this position is unfit for it, he is making a statement in regard to a matter he does not know anything about.

Mr. FOSTER. There is one circumstance I will call the hon. Minister's attention to, and it is this: I can hardly conceive that an expert in forestry matters, a man who had devoted his whole life to them, and who is well up in his profession, who had adopted it as a profession, would be leaving that field, which is most interesting to a man who pursues it scientifically and practically, to run an election in Dominion politics. I cannot understand that a man whose tastes are in that direction, and who is an authority on this subject, could give it up for the doubtful privilege of representing a constituency in the Dominion Parliament. Generally, you will find that authorities on these scientific matters are in love with their business, and if they are not in love with their business, they are not men that we require, or that any country requires, in this work. If the Dominion has a man at all besides all these present timber inspectors, agents and forest rangers, it should have a man who is versed in forestry, a man that can be placed alongside of men who are authorities in the United States on that matter, and in other great countries. A man may be a very good surveyor, but he may not have that thorough scientific knowledge and experience that are requisite to a man that the Dominion Government should put at the head of their timber and forest resources in order to advise them on the subject of the preservation of timber, reforestry and foresting. I think the hon. gentleman will see that this vote should not be used for the appointment of a man to this position, unless he, scientifically, as well as practically, understands his business, and is able to stand shoulder to shoulder with any other man in reforestry and foresting matters. I have sympathy with the idea of having such a man in Canada, but I do not have any sympathy with appointing a man simply for the sake of making an office for him. He ought to be something more than a surveyor, something more than a man who knows what timber is, when he sees it. He ought to have some scientific knowledge and some experience practically in regard to, the matter of foresting, which is a matter of importance, and which will be sacrificed, unless you get the very best man available.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I perfectly sympathize with the position of my hon. friend from York that a vote of this kind ought not to be taken simply for the purpose of making an office for anybody. I perfectly sympathize with the idea that it would be putting my department in a very false and ridiculous position to appoint a special officer to do special work if he were not competent for the position. I decided to recommend this gentleman for this position, as I have said, upon the belief that satisfactory evidence had been furnished to me that he was competent, and upon the representation that he had been engaged upon timber work for a great many years past. I want to say further, that I am in no way bound to appoint this gentleman if he does not possess the qualifications required for the office, and I can assure the committee, without any fear at all of being deceived, and consequently without any fear of deceiving the committee, that if he does not possess these qualifications he will never assume the duties of this office.

Mr. WALLACE. The Minister has told us that he has received proof of the qualifications of Mr. Stewart that are satisfactory to him. Let him furnish the House with that information. Is the House not entitled to receive it?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I did not say the House was not entitled to it. I said I would bring the papers down.

Mr. WALLACE. We are not unreasonable persons. We are anxious to be pleased, and perhaps what pleases the Minister will please us.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I shall have the papers here before three o'clock.

Mr. FOSTER. Then go on with the other items, and let this stand until we get the papers.

Mr. SPROULE. I want to say a word about this item before it stands. In the creation of a new office, the first thing to be considered is that we are saddling the country with an expense that may last for a long time. That of itself is not the worst. The next point is the qualifications of the party who is selected to fill that office. The hon. Minister has informed the House that it is his intention to appoint Mr. Stewart.

I come from the locality where Mr. Stewart lives, and while I regard him as a very decent and respectable man, I think it will be news to those who are best acquainted with him, that he is an expert in reforesting.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I did not say that. The hon. gentleman should not get up and make a long speech about something that was not said. I said that he had been recommended in connection with possible work that might be done in the way of reforesting.

Mr. SPROULE. My first inquiry of the hon. gentleman was, what were the duties? The hon. gentleman mentioned reforesting as part of the duties. My next inquiry was, what kind of a man he was going to get to fill the position? He said he was going to get a man who was regarded as an expert in those lines, and as a proof he said the man was recommended by the Ontario Association on Reforesting. If he could not be regarded as an expert, the hon. gentleman should not have told the committee that he was; and I say it will be news to people living in the locality where Mr. Stewart is best known that he possesses any special or expert knowledge regarding reforesting. He is a good land surveyor, and a respectable and intelligent man in his own line, but outside of that, in my judgment, he does not know half as much as some of the men engaged in that line on the Experimental Farm. When the news goes up to the locality where Mr. Stewart is best known, the people there will rather regard this as an office made for the purpose of giving a political friend something, than for the purpose of getting expert work done.

Mr. CLANCY. I am not going to give Mr. Stewart's record, but I will begin about midway. I will commence at 1887. By the Ontario Crown Lands Report for that year, the hon. gentleman will find that Mr. Stewart got $2,932 for surveying the township of Maria.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I did not say that he was not employed as a surveyor.

Mr. CLANCY. I am going to show that he was employed as that, and that alone.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I did not say that Mr. Stewart was not employed as a surveyor; but if the hon. gentleman is trying to lead the committee to believe that he had no experience in timber matters, and that his employment with the Ontario Government had nothing to do with timber matters, I am satisfied that he is mistaken.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman went much further than that. He said that I knew nothing about Mr. Stewart and was making a statement that was entirely untrue. I said that Mr. Stewart was, I believed, a very good land surveyor, but that in consequence of being engaged in that work, he had almost no experience in timber matters. According to the Ontario Crown Lands Report in 1888, Mr. Stewart received for surveying the township of Edgar, $3,926; in 1889, for surveying the township of Bronson, he received $3,504. This does not include all, because he has been receiving money every year up to the time the hon. gentleman has employed him. I have gone back as far as 1887, and I am not sure that I might not have gone back a few years further.

Mr. Stewart has been entirely engaged in another work, not pertaining to timber at all. I am not finding fault with Mr. Stewart, who is a very estimable gentleman personally, but I want to point out to him, when he is endeavouring to lead this committee to believe that he is appointing a gentleman of experience to an important position, he is entirely wrong, and I know well what Mr. Stewart's standing is with relation to that matter. I would ask the hon. gentleman to look at page 30 of the Crown Lands Report of the province of Ontario for 1890, and he will find that Mr. Stewart appears there as having been paid for surveying, $1,626.38. Year after year he was employed by the Ontario Government to make surveys of townships and otherwise, and was not in the woods and forests, so far as I have any information. I am pretty well acquainted with the Public Accounts of the province of Ontario for the past year and I know Mr. Stewart very well personally, and I venture to state that he never had any direct connection with timber matters in his life.

Mr. BENNETT. Since the item is to stand in order that Mr. Stewart's capabilities may be looked into, I think it is only fair that the hon. Minister should look into the claims of other parties to see whether or not they are not entitled to the much coveted position. I know Mr. Stewart personally and I know he is a very estimable gentleman, but I have never heard of him as other than an ordinary surveyor. I can tell the names of a couple of gentlemen, who, no doubt, will be quickly recognized by members from the province of Ontario, and probably by the Ministers themselves, as having much more experience in the timber business than Mr. Stewart ever had. Captain John Sullivan, for the last twenty years has been engaged in bush-ranging.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Where does he live?

Mr. BENNETT. The trouble is that at present his residence is unknown. However, I think that could be easily found out, and as the duties of the office will permit the officer to be out of the province of Ontario, that would suit Captain Sullivan pretty well at present. In addition to Captain Sullivan, whose timber experience has been very wide, there is another gentleman, a friend of hon. gentlemen opposite, who is well up in the timber business, in which Mr. Stewart has no experience at all. He is a gentleman who has been in the employ of the province of Ontario off and on, for twenty-five years, and while something may be urged against him, everybody will conceive that in point of ability and thorough knowledge of woods and forests he is perfectly qualified. That gentleman is Mr. D. F. McDonald, and his ordinary post office address is Parry Sound.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am not acquainted with him.

Mr. FOSTER. Ask the Postmaster General?

Mr. BENNETT. He is a gentleman of varied experience, who has been upwards of twenty years in the employ of the Ontario Government. Wherever he is known, his ability for wood-ranging and that sort of business stands second to none. I would ask the hon. Minister, as this item is to stand until the afternoon, to diligently employ himself in the meantime inquiring into the business capabilities of Captain John Sullivan and Mr. D. F. McDonald for the position.

It being One o'clock, the Deputy Speaker left the Chair.

The House resumed at Three o'clock.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. (Mr. Sifton). I desire to move to strike out that portion of the item relating to the clerks.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. While we are discussing the subject of Dominion lands, I think it will be in order for me to ask the Minister if it is his intention, during this session, to bring in any legislation with reference to the seed-grain indebtedness. I have discussed this question with the Government and have brought it up in the House several times. The last time the Government issued seed-grain to the settlers in the North-west, they adopted a new method of taking security. Instead of taking a lien on the homestead of the party receiving the grain, the party had to get two bondsmen—each man getting seed-grain from the Government had to have two of his neighbours enter into bonds for repayment. That means that the Government is holding three homesteads instead of one for a small amount of money, sometimes not more than $10 or $15. This is highly unfair. If the Government is secured on one homestead, that is all they should require, and not try to hold these other parties. Another question in relation to this arises concerning abandoned homesteads. In the past the

Mr. BENNETT.

Government have given seed-grain and taken security on the homestead. In a great many cases the party who received the seed-grain had only made entry and had not performed his settlement duties, and so was not entitled to patent. In some cases these parties abandoned the homesteads. In case of other parties coming in and wishing to take up the homesteads, the Government demands payment for the improvements. So, when a man finds a good piece of land that he wants to take up and goes to the land office to see about it, he may be told not only that there is, perhaps, $100 to be paid for improvements, but a certain amount for seed-grain as well.

Mr. CHAIRMAN (Mr. Ellis). I do not wish to interrupt the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis), but I may mention that there is an understanding that the discussion shall be confined to the item before the committee.

Mr. DAVIS. I thought this would be in order as we are discussing Dominion lands. In any case, I have only a word or two more to say. I desire to point out that the conditions to which I have referred tend to retard settlement and interfere with the formation of school districts, and everything of that kind. Something should be done to do away with this disability, and also to relieve the bondsmen on these seed-grain transactions.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. Minister was to give us some information regarding recommendations of Mr. Stewart from the Ontario Forestry Department.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I will read the letters. One of them, it will be seen, is from Mr. Aubrey White. It is marked "private," but there is nothing in it of a private nature, and I feel at liberty to lay it on the Table of the House:

1 Toronto St.,
Toronto, April 25th, 1899.

Hon. Clifford Sifton,
Minister of the Interior,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir.—Should the Government establish a forestry department, I have great pleasure in recommending Mr. E. Stewart, of Collingwood, His experience as Dominion land surveyor and valuator of timber in connection with the Ontario Government gives him a knowledge obtained by few, and necessarily equips him for a position of that kind.

I have, therefore, great pleasure in recommending Mr. Stewart for any position that may be created in connection with forestry in your department.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) JOHN WALDIE.

Ontario Forestry Commission,
Toronto, April 25th, 1899.

Sir,—I understand you contemplate creating a Bureau of Forestry, having charge of the administration of the woods and forests under the control of your department, and that Mr. E. Stewart, D.L.S., of Collingwood, has been named for the position. I do not like to tender unsolicited advice, but I venture to express my appreciation of the proposed plan. The advisability of keeping the lands better suited for growing timber than for other crops always under timber, and the adoption of a system of selling the standing timber under regulations that will subserve that end, must have the approval of those who have given the question of the part forests play in our industrial and economic welfare any attention.

As you are doubtless aware, we have no trained scientific foresters in this country, but from what I know of Mr. Stewart, I should think he would prove to be a successful administrator of such a service. His scientific training for his profession, his extensive experience in bush life, and in forestry matters in this province, peculiarly fit him for successfully inaugurating and conducting a bureau of forestry in your department.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

(Sgd.) THOS. SOUTHWORTH,

Secretary Ontario Forestry Commission.

Hon. Clifford Sifton,

Minister of the Interior, Ottawa, Ont.

(Private.)

Department of Crown Lands, Ontario,
Toronto, April 28th, 1899.

Dear Mr. Sifton,—I am informed that you are contemplating the establishment of a Woods and Forests Branch in connection with your department, and that Mr. E. Stewart, D.L.S., of Collingwood, is an applicant for the position of superintendent. Mr. Stewart has asked me to say what I know about his knowledge and ability in connection with forestry matters.

I may say that I have known Mr. Stewart for a great many years, and that he has a good knowledge of all timber, being capable of estimating limits and that kind of work. Indeed, he did, upon more than one occasion, conduct estimates on an extensive scale for this department, and we found him to be a most careful and accurate officer. In addition to this, Mr. Stewart has made a number of exploratory township and timber surveys for this department, and is regarded by us as one of our most reliable and efficient surveyors.

He was appointed by the Government of Ontario to the position of mining land agent at Rat Portage, which position he resigned, largely, I think, because the salary was not sufficient, and we were sorry to lose his services.

Mr. Stewart is all round a very strong man in connection with timber and land matters, and I am sure would make a first-class official in connection with your department. His business and general character are everything that could be wished for.

Very truly yours,

(Sgd.) AUBREY WHITE.

The Hon. Clifford Sifton,

Minister of the Interior, Ottawa.

Mr. SPROULE. These letters are all very well in their way. Mr. Waldie is an extensive lumberman, Mr. Aubrey White is the Deputy Commissioner of Crown Lands, and Mr. Southworth is the secretary of the Forestry Commission. I suppose letters have been invited from these sources as testimony for Mr. Stewart, who desires permanent employment under the Government. So far as I could follow the reading of them by the hon. Minister, there is not a word to indicate that Mr. Stewart will be especially useful in the work of replanting the country with forest. They show that he is a good man to estimate timber, has had extensive experience as provincial land surveyor, and has done the work of timber estimating for the provincial government. But there is nothing to show that he is specially fitted for the position more than hundreds of men in the country. I know many men in the country whose appointment would be much more suitable. It seems to me that the sum and substance of this matter is this—Mr. Stewart has been a candidate in the interests of hon. gentlemen opposite—an unsuccessful candidate, but has been very successful in getting employment from the provincial government from year to year as provincial land surveyor—and has no permanent position in life and is desirous of getting one. Out of gratitude for what he has done for the political party in the past, I presume they are anxious to give him some situation. If there must be a situation made for a supporter, I would as soon see Mr. Stewart get it as any other, because he is certainly a respectable man. But it seems to me it is only making a new office which entails a permanent expense on the country, and from which there will be very little fruitful results.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. In reply to the hon. member for Saskatchewan, I beg to say that the subject which the hon. gentleman referred to I have had under consideration during the last week, and I hope to be able to deal with it almost immediately.

Mr. CLANCOY. Will the hon. gentleman tell the committee what Mr. Stewart's special duties are there? It is a broad thing to say he is an inspector of timber, but that actually means nothing.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have described his duties as fully as I could.

Mr. CLANCOY. I confess I have not heard the hon. gentleman state more than that he was a timber inspector, which means absolutely nothing. I take it for granted that the hon. gentleman has appointed him to a position that he knows nothing about. Unless he is able to point out some new condition of things that has grown up lately that warrants this appointment, I think the committee is justified in refusing to give him the appropriation. I think Mr. Stewart is absolutely without experience in timber matters. His being a provincial land surveyor no more qualifies him for that position than if he was not a land surveyor. Now, Mr. Stewart's services, I may inform the committee, commenced with the Ontario Government in 1877 and ended in 1897. He has been employed consecutively every year by the Ontario Government, and he has drawn from the treasury of the province the handsome sum of $50,167 during that period. Even in the year that he was the candidate of hon. gentlemen opposite in North Simcoe, he was in the service of the Ontario Government.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That does not prove that Mr. Stewart does not understand timber matters.

Mr. CLANCY. It is pointed out clearly what his services were, and none of them referred to timber. He simply surveys township after township. There are timber rangers who make a report of timber matters, but Mr. Stewart has never made a report during that whole period on timber matters. During the year he was the candidate of hon. gentleman opposite in North Simcoe, he drew the handsome sum of $3,145.50.

Mr. BAIN. Did not he do work for it?

Mr. CLANCY. He did do the work, but not the work the hon. gentleman is appointing him now to do, it was another class of work altogether. He was engaged exclusively in making surveys, and had nothing whatever to do with timber matters. Perhaps it is not a calamity that he has no qualification, because the hon. gentleman is appointing him to a position that will be entirely barren of results.

Mr. BENNETT. Has Mr. Stewart yet finished the survey of the Christian Islands he was on last year?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not remember that Mr. Stewart was engaged in surveying the Christian Islands for my department. So far as I remember, the only work he has done for my department was in connection with the delimitation of the boundary line between Ontario and Manitoba.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not feel disposed to keep up the discussion much longer on this item, but I think it is apparent to the committee that the Minister has put himself into an untenable position. The only excuse he could have for asking for this vote was to get a thorough man. It takes only a commonplace man to be a timber valuator and a good surveyor, but neither of these are requisites to what this office requires. Do you mean to tell me that you have not got just as good surveyors in your department now as Mr. Stewart, and just as good men to value timber?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If the hon. gentleman means to make an examination of timber and put a valuation on it, I suppose I have.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, these are all the references the hon. gentleman has. You cannot point to a single pamphlet this man has issued as an authority on forestry. A man who has been twenty years in the service should have made himself so thoroughly master of this subject as to have become known in the forestry work of the world. I believe the Minister could pick a dozen men out of his own staff who are in every way just as well qualified as surveyors and valuers of timber as Mr. Stewart. When the Government desires a perfectly well qualified man for the head of the dairy industry, for instance, they scour the country and inquire for men who are easily known as authorities on that particular subject. You cannot point to any evidence to show this man's special qualifications. Where is the forestry congress he has attended? What prominent part has he taken? What advice or opinion has he given to the world on this great matter during the last twenty years? All that is said in recommendation of Mr. Stewart is that he is a man of good character. No doubt, he is a good Dominion land surveyor and valuator of timber.

Mr. CLANCY. No, no, he has never done any valuation.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Waldie says he is a good Dominion land surveyor and valuator of timber. My hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) says he is not; that is a matter between my hon. friend and Mr. Waldie. But take it for granted that he is a timber valuator, as Mr. Waldie says, and what does that mean? Mr. Waldie is a lumberman who has to pay his dues, stumpage and the like of that. Before he can get his lumber lands he has to have the timber valued, and he then has to pay on the scale, which is laid down according to the recommendation of the valuator. That is all this gentleman had to do, as a valuator, to look after stumpage and timber licenses. That is as far as Mr. Waldie goes, and his twenty years' experience has been in surveying townships into lots. Then we come to Mr. Southworth. I do not know Mr. Southworth; he may be a forester or he may be simply the secretary of the commission, and I am not sure whether the secretary of the commission is an expert in forestry or not. My hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) informs me that Mr. Southworth is the best forestry man they have in Ontario. Mr. Southworth says that he approves of the proposal of the Minister to create a bureau of forestry, and that Mr. Stewart has been named for the position. He approves of the advisability of this step and of the adoption of the system of selling the standing timber under regulations that will subserve that end. That does not call for very high qualifications.

As you are doubtless aware, we have no scientific foresters in this country, but from what I know of Mr. Stewart, I should think he would prove to be a successful administrator of such a service.

An administrator of such a service, but he does not say that he has any scientific training. He says:

We have no trained scientific foresters in this country.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. What does he mean by a skilled forester?

Mr. FOSTER. He says:

As you are doubtless aware, we have no trained scientific foresters in this country, but from what I know of Mr. Stewart I should think he would prove to be a successful administrator of such a service.

You have to have as an administrator a skilled forestry man, but we have none such in Canada.

From what I know of Mr. Stewart, I should think he would prove to be a most successful administrator of such a service.

When you have worked it out, but we want the services of such a man before you get to the administration not those of a mere timber valuator.

His scientific training for his profession,—

What profession? That of a Dominion land surveyor, surveying lots for the Ontario Government until he went as a mining agent to Rat Portage and resigned that position. That is not the class of man we want as an authority in Canada. We want a man of scientific training as well as of experience. The very best man that Canada can get is none too good if you are going to get the services of a man of that kind. Mr. White is non-committal in his testimonial. He says:

I have known Mr. Stewart for a great many years, and he has a good knowledge of all kinds of timber,—

There are a great many other men, there is a number of members of this House who have a good knowledge of timber, but that they do not aspire to be placed at the head of a forestry bureau.

—being capable of estimating limits and that kind of work.

Indeed, he did upon more than one occasion conduct estimates on an extensive scale for this department.

These are estimates in regard to the quantities and values of timber.

In addition to this, Mr. Stewart has made a number of exploratory township and timber surveys for this department, and is regarded by us as one of the most reliable and efficient surveyors.

He only says "one of the most reliable and efficient surveyors."

He was appointed by the Government of Ontario to the position of mining lands agent at Rat Portage, which position he resigned.

I do not consider that these are at all sufficient to base the selection of Mr. Stewart to that position upon. The man you want for this position is a man well trained scientifically who will take hold of these great areas which have no forests and these great forest areas of ours, a man of authority and attainments on whose advice we may rely and on whose directions we may set ourselves to work towards the conservation of these forests and towards the reforestation of vacant areas. You may take this man and pay him this salary, but I tell the hon. Minister that there will be no public confidence in the effort if he does not get a man of the highest attainments to be at the head of this department and to take charge of this work.

Mr. TYRWHITT. Mr. Chairman, representing, as I do, a riding adjoining that in which Mr. Stewart was a candidate, I have had the opportunity of knowing something of him personally and also by reputation. After listening to the speech of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy), I am of the opinion that he has described Mr. Stewart's qualifications most accurately. I also am of the opinion that Mr. Stewart, while he may be a good Dominion land surveyor, is not an expert in the matter of timber. I speak of my own knowledge, having known him for a number of years. It appears to me that Mr. Stewart has been amply rewarded already for any service that he may have performed, in the interest of his party, and I can assure the hon. Minister that there are a number of honest Liberals in North Simcoe who would be only too glad to fill this position. I must take this opportunity of entering my protest against the creation of positions for defeated candidates. We had the promise of the representatives of the present Government during the campaign of 1896 that it was their intention to curtail expenses in all directions, to cut down salaries and appoint fewer officers, but instead of that, we find that the Government are increasing the number of their Ministers, increasing the number of their officers, that they are creating positions for defeated candidates and friends in the party and increasing the expenditure of the country at every opportunity.

Mr. HUGHES. Is this forestry department a new department?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is not a new department, but it is a new office.

Mr. HUGHES. I would like to ask the hon. Minister what he is doing in regard to forestry in this country?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I presume the hon. gentleman was not in to hear the discussion.

Mr. HUGHES. I was not.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I explained before that this officer is to be appointed for the purpose of generally superintending the preservation of timber, which work is under the charge of the department, and of making such recommendations and assisting in carrying out such recommendations as may be deemed necessary for the purpose of preserving our timber. The particular way in which the matter will be worked out will, of course, largely result from his work afterwards.

Mr. HUGHES. Is there any intention on the part of the hon. Minister to have experiments made in the propagation of timber in districts under his control?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have not got that far in it yet.

Mr. SPROULE. I take it that, according to this, there will be other inspectors under him, because he is called the chief inspector. It is not intended to have him as the only inspector?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No. There are the other ordinary inspectors in the different districts who will be retained and will work just as before.

Mr. SPROULE. How many inspectors has the hon. Minister in his department?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I cannot give the hon. gentleman the exact number.

Mr. WALLACE. Give it to us within a hundred.

Mr. MORIN. What does the Minister mean by a timber inspector?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. As understood in the department, it is the officer who endeavours to see that the regulations affecting timber on Dominion lands are properly carried out, and that the timber is protected from fire as far as possible. He also makes a return when a person cuts timber on Dominion lands.

Mr. MORIN. I have heard of inspectors of lumber, but not timber inspectors.

Mr. McNEILL. If the Minister is going to make some effort to stop the fearful waste of timber which is going on all over the Dominion, he is pursuing a right policy provided he puts the proper men in the proper place. The question is whether this is a proper man to appoint or not. I would be glad to raise my voice in support of any policy which would be in the direction of protecting our timber, because there is no doubt that a great waste has been going on.

Mr. COCHRANE. Does the Minister expect this gentleman to give him any information regarding timber?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. COCHRANE. How will he get the knowledge?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. He will get it by travelling over the ground.

Mr. SIFTON.

Mr. COCHRANE. I should think you would want some man who has practical experience for that. I suppose there are hundreds of surveyors who are just as competent as this man is, and I do not see how he could add to the information already in your department. It appears to me this is just a piece of jobbery to get a place for a defeated candidate. I have no objection to voting money in this House if it is going to be spent in the interest of the country, but I protest most emphatically against the Minister creating an office for a defeated candidate who has already drawn thousands of dollars from the provincial government. I suppose when he ran as a candidate he ran with the full knowledge that when he was defeated he would get a Government sit. We know how those gentlemen opposite protested against that kind of thing when in Opposition, and how they turn around and do the very thing they denounced. If the Minister of the Interior and his colleagues procured money the way they procured votes, by false promises and broken pledges, they would be in the penitentiary now. They told us that they were going to economize, and that the departments here were crowded with officials from garret to cellar, but since they came into power they are appointing new officials all the time. Does the Minister of the Interior hear what I am saying?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. COCHRANE. Well, I want you to pay attention to this and to hear it too.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I can assure my hon. friend that I not only hear it, but I will take special care to read it in the "Hansard" to-night.

Mr. COCHRANE. Well, if you promise to read it in the "Hansard," there is no use my straining my voice on you. I say this office is just on a par with the inspectorship of immigration agencies. The Conservatives had no such officials when they were in power, but this Government created such an office to give a friend of theirs a job. I am glad the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) has come into the House. We remember how his virtuous soul rose in indignation day after day at the extravagance of the Tory party. But now he sits smiling there, voting in favour of all kinds of extravagance. I do not know what position he is going to get—

Mr. HUGHES. The Senate.

Mr. COCHRANE. Well, they had better put him there pretty quick, because if he goes on swallowing himself day after day as he has done since the Liberals came into power, there will be none of him left to go into the Senate. I have strong opinions about this matter, and I do not want to create a smile, because it is too serious. These gentlemen opposite denounced extravagance when they were in Opposition, but when they get into power they run riot with the people's money. They tell us it is a growing time, and we all know it is a growing time in extravagant expenditure. When they were in Opposition, did they not tell us when we had a surplus that it did not make any difference, because the people paid the taxes anyhow, and now, instead of applying the excess revenue to wiping out the national debt, they are devoting it to finding jobs for their friends and wasting it in all kinds of schemes. I challenge the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) if he can honestly defend any of these extravagant expenditures? Is what was wrong when he was on this side of the House, right because his friends are in power? They dinned in our ears that thirteen Ministers were too many, and after listening to them day after day, I became almost convinced that there was something in it. They have thirteen Ministers, with two controllers, at $7,000 a year each, and we have not heard a word this session about the napkins down at Government House.

Mr. WALLACE. Were there any applicants for this besides Mr. Stewart?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No.

Mr. WALLACE. I see that these recommendations of Mr. Stewart are more than three months old; they are dated last April. How was it that Mr. Stewart and his friends knew that this office was going to be created, and no one else knew it until these Estimates came down? I would like to ask if there are any recommendations of Mr. Stewart besides those we have had to-day?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No, these are all.

Mr. WALLACE. Did not the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) recommend him?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No.

Mr. WALLACE. That is strange, because I am sure that he would be very anxious to have him out of the way at the next election. The hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) has made some recommendations. Does the Minister intend to take them into his serious consideration?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If the hon. member for East Simcoe will put them in writing, I will consider them.

Mr. FOSTER. They are on "Hansard"; that is better.

Mr. McMULLEN. I want to make a short reply to the hon. member for East Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane). I thought that at the commencement of this session we had thoroughly threshed out all these matters.

Mr. WALLACE. The threshing machine has been working ever since.

Mr. McMULLEN. I thought it was generally understood that we would try to rush through the business of the House; otherwise, I would try to answer my hon. friend. I have always been a strong advocate of economy, and am still; at the same time I am prepared to see the services of the country properly conducted. I believe the services of this man are required, or the Minister of the Interior would not appoint him. I do not believe in appointing unnecessary officials, and when any officials are not necessary, I will be as willing to cut down their numbers as the hon. member for East Northumberland.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). There can be no question about the necessity of protecting the forests of the North-west.

Mr. FOSTER. No such question has been raised.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I would draw attention to section 78 of chapter 54 of our Revised Statutes, which makes it incumbent upon the Minister of the Interior, or whoever is in charge of the interests of the North-west, to pay due attention to the protection of the growing timber.

The Governor in Council may, from time to time, for the preservation of forest trees on the crests and slopes of the Rocky Mountains, and for the proper maintenance throughout the year of the volume of water in the rivers and streams which have their sources in such mountains and traverse the North-west Territories, reserve from sale, lease or license such portions of the land in the North-west Territories on, or adjacent to or in the vicinity of the Rocky Mountains.

And so forth. Any one who takes an interest in the question, knows how important it is to preserve the forests, especially those in which are the sources of the rivers, and which are necessary to maintain the irrigation and the fertility of the lands, for we know that on the maintenance of these forests largely depends, not only the regular supply of water now in our rivers, but also the agricultural prosperity of the country.

Mr. HUGHES. I would like to ask the Minister of the Interior to give me the name of one square mile of timber in the North-west Territories which is not taken up?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My hon. friend has certainly got a very mistaken idea of the timber of the North-west Territories. There is only a comparatively small portion of the timber of the North-west Territories taken up. There is a vast quantity of the timber in the North-west Territories which has never been touched, and of which only the vaguest reports are in the possession of the department; and they have not been advertised nor sold, and are not held by anybody. What my hon. friend is trying to get at is the merchantable timber, the timber used for building purposes. We are not discussing that. The timber in the province of Manitoba is not building timber. It is timber which grows on the Riding Mountains, the Duck Mountains, the Moose Mountains, where the settlers get their wood supply, and which has an effect on the climate as well.

Mr. HUGHES. I asked the Minister if he intended to take into consideration that class of timber that could be grown in the North-west. I was told that it had not been taken into consideration, and I could not see what this man was to inspect, if it was not merchantable timber.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My hon. friend did not understand me, or I did not understand him. What I understood him to ask was, if I had any plans for reforestation, and what I said was, that I had not got that far yet.

Immigration—

Payment to the trustees of the colony of St. Paul des Métis, to enable them to supply seed grain and farm implements to settlers in distress within the colony ..... $2,000

Mr. FOSTER. What does this mean?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The explanation of this item is as follows:—In the spring of 1895 a memorial was presented to the Minister of the Interior by the Very Rev. Father Lacombe, O.M.I., on behalf of His Grace the Archbishop of St. Boniface and their Lordships the Bishops of St. Albert and Prince Albert, praying that an industrial school be established and a reservation be made in connection therewith of a tract of four townships of Dominion lands in the district of Alberta, with a view to the betterment of the destitute condition of the majority of the half-breeds of the North-west Territories. In order that the parties mentioned might be able to carry out their plans in regard to the colonization of the poorer classes of half-breeds, the Dominion Government leased four sections of townships 57 and 58, ranges 9 and 10, west of the 4th meridian, for a period of 21 years, for the purpose of an industrial school for the education of half-breed children, and for the same period a lease was granted for the balance of the land in the said townships. Power was given to them to sub-lease the lands in lots of eighty acres to the half-breeds in distress who made application for shelter and help. In addition to the land grants the Government voted $2,000 for the purchase of seed grain and farm implements so as to help the settlers to start in their work, and the Rev. Father Lacombe states that a judicious distribution was made, and the help given at that time was of great benefit to them.

Mr. SIFTON.

On the 3rd January last, Mr. Ruttan, the agent of Dominion lands at Edmonton, and Mr. Coleman, homestead inspector, made an inspection of the colony. The cost of maintenance of the colony, the erection of buildings, purchase of agricultural implements, &c., must have exceeded $8,000 during the past three years.

The funds at the disposal of the trustees will not admit of their doing as much as they would like, and they ask the Government to aid them to enable the new settlers in distress who are coming in to establish their homes, and give them fresh supplies of seeds and implements. It has been decided to ask for a grant of $2,000 for this purpose.

Mr. HUGHES. Where is this colony located?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. In townships 57 and 58, ranges 9 and 10 west, 4th meridian.

Mr. HUGHES. Out there in Alberta.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, the northern part.

Mr. HUGHES. How many settlers are there in this colony?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Speaking from recollection, 200 or 300 men, women and children.

Mr. HUGHES. How much was given this colony previously?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. $2,000.

Mr. HUGHES. You might as well put them on a pension-roll.

Mr. WALLACE. To whom were these four townships leased?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They were leased to three or four trustees. The lease was just in the form of a letter from the department.

Mr. WALLACE. For what term was the lease?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They occupy the land during pleasure.

Mr. HUGHES. Is this money to be repaid?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No.

Mr. HUGHES. Why is it not expended under the direction of an officer responsible to this Government?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Because I think it would be better expended the other way.

Mr. HUGHES. What are the names of the trustees?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There are four trustees. The name of one of them I have not got; the others are Mr. Justice Ouimet, Senator Dandurand and Archbishop Langevin.

Mr. McNEILL. This is a very large sum given these families, and the second amount paid them, as I understand. I am much in favour of giving to people in distress, but to give such sums as those seems to be a very extraordinary course to pursue. It seems to be about $100 a family, both on this occasion and the previous occasion. That is a serious precedent to set and one can understand what tremendous pressure will be brought to bear on the Government in the future for this kind of thing.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not consider the amount excessive at all. I took some time to think about it before making up my mind, and all these applications are the subject of a good deal of consideration before they are acted on. It seems to me this is a meritorious enterprise, for the establishment of which I cannot claim any credit, but only for carrying out what was begun by the late Government. The half-breeds have to enter the battle of life along with the white people, and it is not uncommon for them to get the worst of it, and Father Lacombe inaugurated this idea of establishing this colony to provide where these destitute half-breeds might be gathered in and be enabled to earn a livelihood for themselves and at the same time build up the country. The idea is not to give $10 apiece to the people, but for the trustees to purchase the necessary implements and seed grain, and any property that is not of a perishable character will remain the property of the trustees.

Mr. FOSTER. Are these half-breeds that are getting scrip?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No, I do not suppose that any of the half-breeds in this colony will get scrip.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand that that is a sort of common refuge for unsuccessful half-breeds, who are taken charge of, under kind and paternal leadership, in the endeavour, if possible, to induce them to settle down and make a living for themselves, but these half-breeds are probably the same ones that the Minister was so decided in declaring should not receive any scrip payable to bearer, although, whilst he was stating that, his own commissioners in the North-west were giving away hundreds of thousands of dollars of scrip payable to bearer, all of which will represent an immense depreciation of value before it reaches the half-breeds themselves. This thing ought to end somewhere, and it is no excuse to allege that this matter was gone into in 1885 and a start given to it. Is it to become a yearly grant?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is practically, to all intents and purposes, a vote for relief, something in the nature of the vote we give to assist the Indian schools.

Mr. BERGERON. In which county?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is out of the range of counties. It is in Alberta township 57.

Mr. BERGERON. Are they voters?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I suppose they are, but they will be a long distance from a polling booth.

Mr. WALLACE. Can the hon. Minister tell us whether the experiment is a success or failure?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The report of my officer, who is a very experienced man, is favourable, that the colony is doing well, and should be encouraged. It is in a sense the establishment of a semi-relief institution. If these people did not get there, they would be upon the community and relief have to be given them by the community.

Mr. WALLACE. The first was an experiment which, the hon. Minister says, was fairly successful. Is this $2,000 for the same crowd, or is it for a new crowd coming in?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have not thought of limiting the action of the trustees, but allow them to use their own discretion.

Mr. WALLACE. But surely the Minister asked the question that I am asking before he consented to submit this matter to Parliament? Is this for the parties we helped three or four years ago?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Whoever upon the reserve requires assistance will be given assistance.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand the Minister to say that there are 200 in the colony?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have sent out since and ascertained that there are about 50 families—say, 250 people in all.

Mr. SPROULE. This, then, will be about $8 a head or about $40 a family. I apprehend that there are thousands as deserving half-breeds as these scattered throughout the North-west, but these are chosen out to be made pensioners upon the country to this extent—it would appear they too are pensioners, for we are not told what progress they are making. They have already been assisted in starting farming, but we have no information as to how they have progressed.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I can get the hon. gentleman a report, if he wishes.

Mr. SPROULE. It would be better if we had a report before we are asked to vote this money. This is a principle we should not adopt of starting little colonies, even of half-breeds, here and there throughout the country, because it means that these votes must be left in the hands of a few men who practically make a living or part of a living out of it, and they will find an excuse year after year for asking a renewal of the vote until it will become an annual affair. We have no evidence of beneficial results following this. Before we continue the experiment we ought to be satisfied that beneficial results have followed what has been done.

Mr. HUGHES. This Dominion is trying to induce immigration from Europe to the North-west, and the advertisements of our agents throughout the world point to this country north of Edmonton as a magnificent place in which settlers can find a home. But on the other hand the Government tells the world through this Parliament that a number of families, who have had the pick of the four best townships in that district and who were brought in and started in farming two or three years ago, are back now for a good round income for each family. We have seen too much of this. I shall move that this item be struck out. I object to having this money voted to these four trustees. Who are they? Not one man of them has ever been near this colony, and I dare say not one man of them will go there. If the Minister will appoint some responsible officer who will go there and see that this money is rightly expended for the benefit of these people, if they are destitute, it will not be so bad. But he is establishing a principle that will find a ready following all over this country. If he will put this expenditure under the charge of a responsible officer, I should not object so much, but I do object to handing it over to a church organization. How does the Minister know that they want seed grain there, when the harvest is not in?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I cannot give the hon. gentleman the information.

Mr. HUGHES. Then I have pleasure in moving—

Mr. McNEILL. I hope my hon. friend (Mr. Hughes) will not move to strike the item out. It is too valuable a precedent. There are some Indian lands in the Peninsula of Bruce which are very rocky, the settlers upon which have to face grave difficulties with which they have been struggling for years. In many cases it is exceedingly difficult for them to succeed in raising crops enough for their stock even. A year or two ago there was great distress there. If my hon. friend (Mr. Sifton) is doing so much in the North-west, I hope he will do something for my friends in the Peninsula of Bruce.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Of course, the half-breeds of the North-west are in an entirely different position. No doubt if my hon. friend (Mr. McNeill) represents the condition of these people in North Bruce to the Ontario Government, they will be relieved.

Mr. McNEILL. No; this is a case under my hon. friend's (Mr. Sifton) administration. These people are settled on Indian lands.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is no part of the duty of the Indian Department to take care of the citizens who buy Indian lands; it is only the duty of that department to see that they pay for them.

Mr. HUGHES moved to strike out item 96, as follows:—

Payment to the trustees of the colony of St. Paul des Métis, to enable them to supply seed grain and farm implements to settlers in distress within the colony. $2,000

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. Minister has entirely failed to justify this vote. Whether this money is to go to the men who came in 1895 or to a new crowd he is unable to say. Again, this money is to go into the hands of men who cannot be there to personally supervise the expenditure, and in any case they are not responsible to this House for the proper expenditure of the money. Another thing is that the Minister has not demonstrated that these men are not among those who have received half-breed scrip. The Minister has not yet proved to this House that these people have not received half-breed scrip in large amounts, and I assume it to be the case, unless the Minister shows me some rule by which they would be prohibited from getting half-breed scrip. He has not done that, and we must have the assurance from the Minister and evidence to prove that these men are not receiving half-breed scrip to the amount of tens of thousands, before we vote this additional amount.

Mr. HUGHES. Not only that, but the Minister asks us for $2,000 for seed grain and farm implements, and he has the hardihood to say that he has no information as to whether they want seed grain or not. How does he know but that they may be raising much more grain than they need, and able to export grain in large quantities instead of requiring assistance? I would like the Minister to give us the data whereon he is asking for this money. From whom does he get a report that this money is wanted?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The grant is made upon the recommendation of Senator Dandurand, and Father Lacombe, as one of the members of the board. I want to say to my hon. friends that there is no reason at all in the position they are taking. They voted for a similar grant in 1895, or whenever it was, and they got no such information, and the department had not any. It was paid out without any vouchers then, and without any specification as to what it was going to be used for. My hon. friend's scruple for details comes very late, because he is trying to apply one rule to the department now and quite a different rule from that which he applied to it before. The hon. member for West York had no difficulty at all upon the question before, and his desire for details comes rather late. I say frankly that I have not got a specification of the number of families that require seed grain, and how much each one requires, but I took for facts the statements of those gentlemen who called upon me. I say now that I am prepared to rest my justification for this vote upon the good faith and the accuracy of the representations Father Lacombe made to me. I think the committee will be perfectly safe in entrusting these trustees with the distribution of this money. How do we do in the case of industrial schools under the charge of the Protestant Church or the Catholic Church? We simply vote $140 or $150 per head, or whatever it may be, we vote it en bloc to that church to be used for the support of their schools. We send an inspector there to see if the school is properly carried on, and we also send an inspector here to see if this money is properly expended.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend is perfectly justified in moving that this item be struck out, owing to lack of information. In 1895, or whenever this aid was granted, it was given simply on the representation of Father Lacombe, who came down here saying that he had a scheme under hand, and he was convinced he could do a great deal of good to the half-breeds if he had this assistance, and the assistance was given. In the inauguration of this scheme there was a vote granted, that was merely to set the thing going, there was no understanding that it was to be a yearly grant.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We are not doing it year by year.

Mr. FOSTER. But you are giving no information as to the success of the experiment, you are not able to say whether you are going to duplicate this to these families who have been supplied out of a former vote, you are not able to tell us that you are going to keep it away from the half-breeds in the North-west who have received scrip, you are not even able to tell us whether this plan precludes these men from coming down and settling in those places and getting lands in addition to the scrip they hold in their pockets. I think the Minister should be able to give the committee some assurance on these points. This committee is not ungenerous with regard to the half-breeds of the North-west. If anybody has a claim upon us, it is the Indians of the North-west; if anybody has a claim upon our respect and confidence it is Father Lacombe, who, for many years, has been tried and trusted by all political parties and by men of all shades of religious belief in this country. But the Minister must not presume upon these things and ask us to give him a vote of $2,000 without giving us a scrap of information.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman cannot show one case, of all the many instances in which moneys have been voted in this way, in which a detailed schedule of the particular cases and the amount to be paid to each one, was ever given. Moneys were voted in large sums for the purpose of supplying seed grain in the North-west Territories. Did the Minister bring down a schedule of the settlers that were going to get help? Nothing of the kind. The Minister received a general report, he was satisfied from the reports he received that there was a necessity for this assistance, and it was put in the hands of reliable men to distribute, exactly as we are doing in this case.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this to be repaid? The Minister has not said a word about that. But the seed grain given on the former occasion was to be repaid.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman never saw a detailed statement of the cases in which relief was going to be given laid upon the Table before.

Mr. FOSTER. In the case of seed grain it was put in the hands of responsible officers, and the House was well satisfied that proper securities were taken. It was not a gift, but it was an advance to be repaid, and I believe nearly the whole of it has been repaid. So with regard to the schools. We adopted a plan by which to educate the Indian children, we give so much per year, and this policy goes on from year to year. But the present case is entirely different. I complain that my hon. friend, without saying that this thing is going to stop this year, has given us no information at all. I would like to know whether he considers it right that the half-breeds of the North-west, who have got within three months time $250 in scrip from the commission there, no matter whether they have kept it or not, are to come down and take a portion of these lands and get a portion of this relief as well. Are they to be outside of this arrangement or inside? Does the hon. Minister know?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Chairman, I must confess that I am a little surprised at the attitude which is taken by the Opposition upon this vote. They know that we are simply following the very policy which they inaugurated themselves in 1895. The Government are not inaugurating this policy. At that time the Opposition, so far as I can remember, did not attack or criticise this vote. The Government of that day put it upon the ground which then appealed to every hon. member, and which, I hope, will now appeal to every hon. member. Father Lacombe has been the apostle of the half-breeds for fifty years. He has given his life to them, and he has come to the conclusion, and he has represented to me, as I am satisfied he has represented to the hon. leader of the Opposition, and as he represented to me more than once when I was in Opposition, that he wanted to make an attempt to organize that colony, which he calls the colony of St. Paul des Métis, and to bring as great a number as he could of half-breeds to take up their abodes in these townships and to make farmers of them, to get them to go into agricultural pursuits and follow a pastoral life. Father Lacombe is a man who knows all about these matters, because he has given his whole life to the work he has undertaken. The attempt has succeeded more or less. It has succeeded to some extent, although I do not think it has been absolutely successful. But there has been enough of success not to discourage the attempt. I do not say that we should give a vote for this purpose every year; but when, four years after the first attempt Father Lacombe again came to the Government and asked for a similar grant to go on with the work, we gave it to him, relying on his honour and his well-known character to apply it to the purposes for which it was intended. We now give it to him, having faith in his honour and in his character, and well believing that the money will be applied to the purposes for which it is intended. The hon. member for York, N.B., (Mr. Foster), asks as to whether this vote will be used to pay money to those half-breeds who have received scrip recently. I confess that this ought not to occur, and I think the hon. gentleman can rely upon Father Lacombe's honour and high character to see that the money will not be expended except in the way it is intended for the assistance of these half-breeds. I am quite aware that this is something in the nature of an experiment. Something has been done already in this direction, but Parliament surely ought not to be parsimonious in this matter. We cannot treat the half-breeds as white men, neither as Indians, but we must treat them as occupying an intermediate position. We do not treat them as Indians, because they do not acknowledge the tribal system; but they are entitled to some assistance, and the object of the vote is to endeavour to induce them to do some labour, to become farmers, and to follow an agricultural life. I must admit that I was surprised a moment ago, when the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) asked if these people were voters. I think he is altogether out of place, when he makes such an insinuation as that. There is no reason for it, because the money is placed in the hands of a man who is out of party politics, who has no party politics, and for this reason the vote is one that deserves the favourable attention of the committee.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely regret that there should be any opposition offered to this vote. We are voting large sums of money for objects that do not promise such good results as this vote of $2,000. As has been very properly said by the right hon. Prime Minister, this is an experiment which is being made on behalf of the poorer class of half-breeds in the North-west Territories. These men are in such a position that, unless the Government came to their assistance, they would be paupers, wandering about the country, being a charge on the local municipalities, while the object of this movement which is now going on, is to assist them to become valuable citizens. Of course it is not possible, within the very short time that this colony has been in existence, to achieve, perhaps, as much as was anticipated; but unless the Government come to the rescue of Father Lacombe in the project he has been carrying out, and assists the enterprise, it will never achieve anything. I am satisfied that the assistance that has been given has been judiciously employed, that whatever further assistance will be needed in future will be given, and that we will feel satisfied that we have done something for the poorer class of half-breeds in the territories, who deserve our consideration.

Mr. BERGERON. The right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has mentioned my name, and that is the only reason why I am on my feet now. A few moments ago I asked a question which the right hon. gentleman seems to take in a bad way. I was looking at the vote, but the explanation which the right hon. gentleman now gives must modify my view in the matter. The vote is:

Payment to the trustees of the colony of St. Paul des Métis, to enable them to supply seed grain and farm implements to settlers in distress within the colony.. $2,000

We expected further explanations than had been given by the hon. Minister. The right hon. gentleman gives an explanation which changes my view of the case a little. The right hon. gentleman says that the money will be entrusted to the hands of a man in whom we have every possible confidence. I accept that statement; I have known Father Lacombe himself, and by reputation, and I have no doubt the money will be spent in a judicious way. But the right hon. gentleman will admit that we are not here to give charity right and left, so that, as far as the principle of the vote goes, I do not change what I said a moment ago. I may say that, like him, I have every possible confidence in Father Lacombe, in whose hands this money is to be put. I have the very same confidence that I had in him before, but the right hon. gentleman cannot say the same thing, because, some three years ago, when Father Lacombe wrote to him on the school question, he had not the confidence in the judgment of Father Lacombe that he seems to have now.

Mr. McNEILL. I would like to say to my right hon. friend, when he seems to think we are hard to move in reference to this matter, that I think he was scarcely quite fair in the observations he offered a few minutes ago, although I am quite sure he did not intend to be unfair. What we ask for is information in regard to this experiment. A vote was taken in 1895 for this work, and surely it is reasonable to expect that we should know something of what the result of the experiment has been. I confess that when my right hon. friend pointed to the labours of Father Lacombe in connection with this matter, and referred to the absolute trustworthiness of Father Lacombe himself, that it had a very strong effect on my mind. Still, I must say that the House has a right to know the result of this experiment commenced four years ago. We know that Father Lacombe is most anxious to do what he can to assist these people, but it is one thing to vote money in order to carry out an experiment which may be useful, and it is another thing to vote money, as stated by the Minister of the Interior, for pure charity. We are entitled to be informed whether these half-breeds who go there and receive the benefit of this grant, and we are also entitled to know whether any half-breeds who have received scrip, also receive aid from this appropriation.

The PRIME MINISTER. Though I had several conversations with Father Lacombe on this matter, I have never gathered that the half-breeds who received scrip would receive a share in this grant also. My answer to the statements of hon. gentlemen is that we can rely on Father Lacombe that he would give these seed grants to those who are needy and not to those who are in affluent circumstances. It is our misfortune to be called upon occasionally to give seed grain, on the plea that certain people happen to be in needy circumstances, and it goes without saying that such grants should only be given to those who are in want. Father Lacombe may be relied upon to give this grant only to those poor fellows who have been persuaded to give up hunting, and to try if they cannot make a livelihood by farming. I repeat frankly that no instructions have been given on this point. It would never enter into the minds of anyone I am sure that Father Lacombe was so wanting in business ability, indeed I would say so wanting in charity, as to give this grant to persons who do not need it. I suppose if there is a report in the department the Minister will bring it down. As I have said, I have had several conversations with Father Lacombe on this matter, and his opinion is that the experiment has been only partly successful. I would not say that it is altogether successful, and I think Father Lacombe's reports will be found to run in that direction.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not object to vote money for charitable purposes when that becomes necessary. But I do object to vote public money until we know what has been the result of similar expenditures in the past. The Minister (Mr. Sifton) said this grant was equivalent to a grant for industrial schools, and he knows that every year we have a detailed report of all that is being done in these industrial schools. Now, we only want the same information in regard to this expenditure, it being an analogous vote as the Minister says. The Minister says we voted this a few years ago without having the information, but he must remember that was at the very beginning of the enterprise when there was no possibility of getting any information. The experiment has now been carried on for some years, and we ought to know whether it has been successful or otherwise. How much seed grain has been raised by them, how many of them are becoming self-supporting, are they taking to civilized life and learning to cultivate the soil: these are all things we ought know about after experimenting for five years.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This is only the second vote that has been taken.

The PRIME MINISTER. There was a vote taken in 1895, and none has been asked for since until now.

Mr. SPROULE. That would somewhat alter the case, but nevertheless we should have the information.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I said I had a report in the department, and if the hon. gentleman asked me for that report, he would get it.

Mr. SPROULE. We have been asking for that for the last hour.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. You have not asked for it yet.

Mr. SPROULE. The Minister is derelict in his duty in not bringing down that report.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I cannot carry the whole department over here.

Mr. SPROULE. When we ask for information in this House the Minister has no business to treat the matter with levity and to talk about carrying the whole department over here. That is not becoming in him or any other Minister of the Crown. As representatives of the people we would fail in our duty if we did not get the information before voting this money, and the Minister is very much mistaken if he thinks he can put us off in that jaunty manner. The hon. gentleman can sit there and laugh in derision by the hour, but if he thinks that all the information in the world is boxed up in that cranium of his, and that we are bound to take everything on trust because he is at the head of the department. I can tell him that the country has not that unbounded confidence, either in his integrity, his ability or his frugality, that would lead them to be satisfied with his ipse dixit. We want more than that, and if he does not give it, he cannot expect us to vote the money.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. What I desire to point out is simply this. I stated that I had the report, and that I would bring it down if it were asked for; but the hon. gentleman did not say he wanted it.

Mr. SPROULE. I did not hear the hon. gentleman say that, or I would certainly have asked for it.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I perfectly recognize that it is the duty of a Minister to furnish all the information he can possibly furnish in any shape or form; but no matter how much information he brings, there will be some things that he cannot foresee, which will be asked for, and about which it will be necessary for him to send and get information from the department; and any information which I have in the department I am willing to obtain and furnish to the committee to the very best of my ability. The only information I have not furnished is that report. I stated in a general way what it contained. If the hon. gentleman had asked for it, I would have sent to the department for it, and would have it here by this time; but it would not give the committee any more information than I have given. I have not got a detailed statement of what the trustees propose to do with the money. I stated that when I was asked. I have a general statement of the necessities of the colony, and I am asking the committee to vote the money to be advanced to the colony, leaving the trustees to exercise their discretion in regard to its disposal.

Mr. WALLACE. I have observed specimens of the most colossal—cheek, I was going to say, if it is not improper; but I say this, that when a Minister gets up and tells us, on every item that comes along, as the Minister of the Interior is doing to-day, and as other Ministers have set the example of doing before him, that if he had known, if he had had the slightest inkling or knowledge that we wanted any information, he could have furnished us with the information, but that it is sprung upon him as a matter of the greatest surprise that he would be asked for any information about any item of expenditure. I assume that when a Minister comes and asks for a vote of money, he comes loaded up with information on which he can justify to the House and the House to the country, the appropriation that is made. The Minister of the Interior says he has furnished all the information. He has furnished absolutely none. His statement was that the settlement there was fairly successful. That is the whole extent of the information he has been able to give to this House. Anybody could make that statement; it does not mean anything. We must assume that there has not been very great success or they would not require to come back here for another grant. The Minister tells us, too, that we are estopped from making any objections because in 1895 we did not object. The hon. gentleman was not here in 1895, and does not know what occurred then. But if we failed in our duty in 1895—I am not stating that we did—is that going to prevent us seeking information to-day or requiring the Minister to justify himself in asking for this money? In 1895 this was stated to be an experiment; it was to be a new departure with reference to the half-breeds. After that money was appropriated, inspectors were appointed to supervise its expenditure, and after all the safeguards have been taken, and they come back here and ask for another grant for a similar purpose, they are in duty bound to tell the House what they did with the last money, what measure of success they had, how many people have gone in there, and all other particulars. The Minister comes and says: "I have the report, but I left it at the department; I did not think it worth while to submit it to this House." We want that report here. The Minister thinks the House of Commons is of too little importance to bother himself furnishing any information to except what information may be dragged out of him piecemeal, which is very little, because either he has no information on the subject or he is afraid to communicate that information to the House. He tells this House that he cannot carry all the information around with him. I know that his capacity for carrying information around with him is quite limited; but, Sir, we can fairly ask him to furnish us with the documents, and we will load ourselves up with the information; but he has not done that. He is struck dumb with surprise that he should be asked to do that. Then he tells us, "You cannot show a case in which a detailed statement is made of money expended under similar conditions." To commence with, there is no money expended under similar conditions. He said there was money voted for seed grain. As has been pointed out on this side of the House, that money was loaned, and security was taken for it; the Government inspectors distributed it; and the money has been very largely returned. It is not, therefore, a parallel case at all, and the Minister, when he is caught in a vain attempt to justify a vote of which he has either no information or is afraid to give the information to the House, attempts the old scheme of bluffing it off. We need hardly tell the Minister that that scheme will not work to-day, but that he will have to give the information to this House; and, more than that, he will have to treat the members of the House of Commons on this side with a little respect. I have listened during the last hour or so, and all the answer the Minister would deign to give was a sneer and a laugh when proper information was demanded and proper criticism was given by an hon. member of this House. I can tell the hon. Minister that if he desires to get his Estimates through, he will have to give us the information we are entitled to and that courtesy which is due every member of this House.

Mr. DAVIS. My hon. friend from North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) has made a motion to strike out this item from the Estimates. I know something of the work that Father Lacombe has been doing, and can assure hon. members that he is doing excellent work in the North-west Territories.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. Minister has told us, in general terms, the ranges and the townships where this settlement is, can the hon. member tell us how far from Edmonton it is and in what direction, and so on?

Mr. DAVIS. If the hon. gentleman will ask my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver), in whose riding it is, he will get the information he desires.

Mr. WALLACE. I understood the hon. gentleman was about to give us the information which the Minister was unable to give.

Mr. DAVIS. I know the locality, but not the township and the range.

Mr. WALLACE. We want a little information about the locality. Where is it from Edmonton?

Mr. DAVIS. I am speaking to the motion, and, as I understand it, the hon. member for North Victoria has made a motion to strike $2,000 out of the Estimates, which are there for the purpose of assisting this colony established by Father Lacombe. Father Lacombe is doing first-class work, and there is no sum of money which the House could vote to a better purpose. As a matter of fact, it will effect a saving to the people of this country. As is well known, all over the North-west Territories there is a certain number of half-breeds who have no knowledge of agriculture, who never had any, who have been hunters, and these people, when settlement comes in and their mode of livelihood—freighting and the hunt—is taken away, fall into very straitened circumstances. As a general rule, they establish themselves around the different police posts all through the North-west Territories, and have not been able to support themselves, and the North-west Mounted Police have been in the habit of giving them rations from time to time, and helping them along. Father Lacombe then came forward with this scheme, by which he proposes to take hold of these people and establish them on a colony, where they will be taught agriculture and how to earn a livelihood for themselves. Surely, in such a good work, it is not too much to ask that we should get a little assistance from the Government. Of course, this money is not going to be paid back the same as seed grain given to other people in the North-west. That cannot be expected, but these people are citizens and have to be looked after, and Father Lacombe has undertaken to establish them in a reserve and is doing good work. This man has given up his whole life to the half-breeds, he is not making anything out of it, he is certainly doing good work, and I hope the House will not strike out that item.

Mr. HUGHES. I do not know what the object was in the hon. member for Saskatchewan getting up. He has not given any information to the House, he does not know where the reservation is or anything about it, and is talking entirely away from the vote. The vote is for seed grain and farm implements to the half-breeds on a reserve.

Mr. DAVIS. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon, but will he allow me to set him right. The half-breeds were not on a reserve, but are those who have been hanging around the police posts and have been taken away by Father Lacombe and placed on this colony.

Mr. HUGHES. The report from the Minister of the Interior and the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) is that excellent work is being done on this reservation. Why, then, do these people need further assistance? We learn for the first time, from the right hon. First Minister, that Father Lacombe has brought in a report. I asked the hon. Minister of the Interior what information he has as to why seed grain and implements were necessary, if the colony has succeeded so well, and he told me that Senator Dandurand reported to him that these were needed. He never mentioned Father Lacombe.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I did. I said that Father Lacombe called on me and that Senator Dandurand also called on me. It was Father Lacombe's application I referred to particularly.

Mr. HUGHES. I stand corrected, but I must say that I listened very attentively, and the first mention we have had of Father Lacombe's name was from the First Minister.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman is quite mistaken.

Mr. HUGHES. I was not aware before that Judge Ouimet or Senator Dandurand or Archbishop Langevin was in the agricultural implements or seed grain business. It is quite beneath the dignity of this House to ask these gentlemen, including Father Lacombe, to buy agricultural implements. What were the circumstances when the vote was given in 1895? There were a number of half-breeds who were in distressed circumstances. I do not know how they got into that condition, but if they were in such a pitiable condition as then described, it speaks very little for their tutelage when they had to hang around Mounted Police posts and get assistance from the Mounted Police. But be that as it may, these men were in that condition in 1895, and it was considered advisable in their interests that they should be taken and placed on these townships, and these were not the worst townships, but among the very best in that magnificent district around Edmonton. These four townships were set apart for these people, and this country voted the money for the object Father Lacombe had in view. We had confidence that he would see these people were brought in and well looked after. The only reports we have had are that these colonies are doing well, but the hon. Minister wants another vote. I ask him why this seed grain was necessary and he cannot tell. He cannot tell but that they may be selling any quantity of grain to the new people going in there, the miners, the Doukhobors and the Galicians, and we are anxious to know about all these matters.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace), who spoke some time ago, makes severe demands upon the hon. Minister and all of us on this side. He not only requires most detailed information as to the expenditure of the money that was voted by his own colleagues when in power, and the report of which should have been presented by them before they left office, but he goes further and asks the Minister to tell him, not only how many bushels of grain these half-breeds had and how many hay rakes and wash tubs and so on, but also that we should treat with some little respect the representations of hon. gentlemen on that side. A detailed report of all the particulars of the farm operations of these half-breeds might be obtainable, but to ask that we should treat the representations of hon. gentlemen opposite on this particular question with some little respect is a very severe demand upon us. We all know that this demand for information and details is perfectly hollow. If the details should be given by anybody, they should be given by those who voted the first appropriation, and who were in office when the results of the first experiment were ascertained. My hon. friend from West York (Mr. Wallace) was then a semi-attached member of the Cabinet; and he should have insisted then on the information being brought down. It is not information these gentlemen want; they want to keep the House sitting—

Mr. HUGHES. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Casey) is imputing motives to hon. gentlemen in this House. I call for your ruling, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. CASEY. There is no doubt about the ruling—it is not in order to impute motives. I would say that it would appear that the motive is to keep the House in session.

Mr. HUGHES. I call for your ruling on that expression, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Ellis). I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Casey) qualified his remark with the expression "it appears" and, in that form, it is not out of order.

Mr. CASEY. In fact, I do not think the House could be described as sitting at the present time, most of the business is done on the other side—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CASEY. When I say "business" I mean that which occupies the time of the House. I think the Opposition are not sitting in a parliamentary sense, they are sitting in the same sense as an old hen that has an insane desire to produce offspring from some odd pieces of crockeryware. They are setting, Mr. Chairman; they are clucking—"clocking," as the farmers' wives say; and I do not think they can be brought to their senses except by being treated as these subjects are generally treated—put in a covered barrel in the woodshed and occasionally sprinkled with a little cold water. If time is to be taken up with this vote, let us say a word or two about it. I do not think that gentlemen on the other side are wise in precipitating a discussion on the treatment of half-breeds. Their own treatment of them was not so very satisfactory. They goaded them into a rebellion—

Mr. DAVIS. Two rebellions.

Mr. CASEY. Yes, two rebellions—

Mr. FOSTER. I rise to a point of order. We are in the last week of the session, and while I do not wish to curtail any person's right to go over the North-west rebellion, if he wishes to do so, I want to say that we on this side—

Mr. CASEY. That is not a point of order, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. FOSTER. I am speaking in the interest of expediting business—

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman rose to state a point of order, but he has not stated it.

Mr. FOSTER. Very well, go ahead; you will find that it will not do you much good.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman rose to a point of order, but he did not state any point of order. He objected to any reference to the North-west rebellion. It is apparent that the House will sit as long as it is going to sit, and there is no reason why we on this side should not do a little of the talking. Their treatment of the half-breeds was a scandal and a disgrace and a disaster to the country. They had better let us have the management of them for a while. As to this vote, it seems abundantly clear that Father Lacombe is a man who understands the half-breeds, a man who can help them and do them good. He is not a political favourite of the Government—that was clearly brought out by the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron). If the Government are giving money, it is for the half-breeds and not for any special partiality they have for Father Lacombe. That the money will be well spent is admitted by all who know him. It only remains to be objected, then, that we have not had a detailed account of how every dollar of any previous vote was spent. That is simply absurd, and hon. gentlemen opposite know it. If they want to keep the House sitting, they might as well do it on a question on which there was room for reasonable discussion, and not on a matter of this kind. The fact I wish to emphasize is that hon. gentlemen opposite have always made a hash of their management of the half-breeds, and they are showing now by their opposition to this item that they do not want anything done to civilize or improve these half-breeds today. They did not civilize them themselves, and they object to our doing it. I hope those who are interested in the half-breeds will take note of the action of these hon. gentlemen.

Mr. CLANCY. I do not rise to continue the discussion, but simply to call the right hon. First Minister's attention to the fact that he is not acting fairly in endeavouring to make a point against my hon. friend from Beauharnois when he charges him practically with taking an improper view of the state of things there by reference to people having votes. The right hon. gentleman has evidently forgotten that persons in a similar position in Ontario as to accepting charity are in precisely the same position respecting their votes. Or he is, perhaps, not aware that under the franchise of the province of Ontario, which we have now adopted, a person receiving aid or charity in that province is not entitled to vote. As to the other questions, I do not want to say more than this. This House has never in the past, and I hope will not in the future, insist upon precedents for cases of this kind. No doubt, Father Lacombe is doing good work in the North-west. The Minister of the Interior, in my opinion, put himself in a false position when he commenced to search for similar cases. He could not find them, and the discussion arose. It is quite within the right of any hon. gentleman to ask if persons receiving scrip are receiving this help, and also whether persons are receiving help year after year. This House has a right to definite information, and the hon. gentlemen who ask for it are quite within their rights. They are more entitled to it in view of the importance of the work and of the trustworthy hands in which we know this money is to be placed.

The PRIME MINISTER. So far as the Government is concerned and so far as I am concerned, there is no intention to make this an annual vote. It is an exceptional case, and ought to be treated as exceptional. It ought to be treated so even if it should come up again, which I hope it will not.

Mr. SPROULE. The Minister of the Interior said he told us that he had a report in his department. I did not hear him say it in the first place. But it does seem to me that if he expected to have this money voted, this is where he should have the report. The report might be in his department for ever, without the information it contains coming to the House. My desire was to get some information about it, because I did not feel like voting against this item; it may be used for the best purposes in the world. I would be disposed to support it, if we had that information which would justify us in voting for it. I do not think it would be asking too much from the Minister to allow this to remain until the evening session, and bring the report with him.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I want particularly to repudiate the statement that I have in any way, directly or indirectly, refused to give information. I have given all the information I had. As I said to my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule), when he was speaking in the first place, I told him, if he wanted that report, I would send and get it, but he did not say he wanted it. As to the other matters, I gave all the information I possibly could. Now, the information was such that any member of the committee, if he was not satisfied with it, could have refused to vote for the grant, and could have condemned my proposition. But no member of the committee is justified in opposing this item on the ground that I have refused to give any information that I possess, for I have not.

Mr. HUGHES. The hon. Minister distinctly stated that he had a report on the success of the colony, and that the report was favourable.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. And I said I would bring it down, if asked for.

Mr. HUGHES. Then I asked the Minister if he had a report upon which he based his action in asking for this grant, and I understood that he had no such report.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I know a little about these people, as I have been there. I do not think we have been over-lavish to the first settlers of that country so far. There is a method by which conquerors wipe out the original inhabitants, by sword, or by pestilence coming after the sword of the invaders, and by other methods, for instance, by fire-water. But so far as the half-breeds are concerned, when they are in charge of reputable persons, like Father Lacombe and others, I think we ought, in their interest, as well as our own, to leave the matter with them. We own the soil, and we are getting advantages of our pioneer work. If we are going to discriminate nicely about every dollar and where it goes, this is not the place for it. They ask for money, and they ought to get it, and I think we can trust these people to use it wisely. Now, have we ever had detailed accounts for all the money we have spent here. Until this late day we have not called for detailed accounts, and is it fair now for the first time to do so? I can understand hon. gentlemen asking: When will this cease? When will these people be self-supporting? But it is too late to come down now for the first time and ask for a tabulated statement of how every dollar was spent. I have no doubt the vote will be judiciously employed. But back of all that, we can afford to deal with the Indians and half-breeds of that country in a different way from the way we deal with any other people in Canada. They used to own the country, and we owe them justice, and the result has shown that when they are well treated, they do not raise any disturbance. I am confident that under Father Lacombe and others every dollar will be well spent, and better spent than many thousands that are spent in the older provinces.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. SPROULE. I see the Minister has received some papers. Is that the report? If so, he might give us a little further information.

Mr. HUGHES. While the Minister is getting his report ready, perhaps the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) would enlighten us in connection with this matter.

The PRIME MINISTER. The item is passed.

Mr. OLIVER. I have no desire to speak on this subject, but if any hon. gentleman wants to know what I know, I am willing to tell him. I did not take part in the debate, because it seemed to me that the less any member knew of the subject, the more anxious he was to speak about it. The vote relates to a missionary enterprise that is in the district that I represent. I am acquainted with the locality, I am also acquainted with the missionary who has the enterprise in charge, and I know something of the people who are affected thereby, having practically lived amongst them for twenty years. Speaking of the subject in a general way, I would say that this is an effort on the part of Rev. Father Lacombe to do something in the interest of certain half-breeds of the North-west. It is not applicable to all the half-breeds, it is not a question concerning the half-breeds generally, but it is an effort on his part to do something towards improving the condition of certain of the half-breeds in the North-west. The half-breeds at one time were a very well-off people. With the destruction of the buffalo and the advance of civilization, men who were worth $5,000, or $15,000, or $20,000 twenty-five years ago, were reduced to poverty; and, like any other people, when reduced from comparative affluence to poverty, as their condition of life changed their habits of life changed. Unfortunately, some of them sank, as I may say, in the scale of life to a very low point—not all of them, but some of them. It was, then, for the purpose of doing something on behalf of those half-breeds who were not able to bear up under new and adverse circumstances, that Father Lacombe instigated his scheme. Now, for my part, I will say that, having discussed the matter with Father Lacombe, when he began his scheme, I could not see the same prospects of success that he saw. However, that has nothing, or very little to do, with the present question before the committee. The House or the Government, in their wisdom, saw fit to take up the proposition of Father Lacombe. They made certain arrangements with him whereby he was granted four townships, and four very good townships, about 160 miles north-east of Edmonton. The Government, with the consent of the House, made this grant to him on certain specific conditions. I think they also gave certain assistance, and on the strength of that grant of assistance, the Roman Catholic Church, or a certain section of it, went in, expended money, built buildings and induced half-breeds to go there and settle. The parties whom it was intended to benefit were the parties who had absolutely nothing. The purpose was to benefit the most needy. If you are to benefit a man who has nothing, you have to provide something with which to benefit him, and I think Father Lacombe was rather over-sanguine as to his ability to secure funds with which to benefit these people. I presume and understand the position to be that the money he secured by private or public subscription, and received in aid of one kind or another, he expended in giving so many families a start on this reserve. But this was only a very small number of the half-breeds of the Territories who would naturally require that assistance, and I suppose he comes now and asks for a further sum to bring in families, who require just as much assistance as those who went in. The Government having assisted a large number of half-breed parties, and been to some extent the cause of the church and many private citizens putting money into the scheme, I would feel it too serious a responsibility to take upon myself to vote against this additional grant being made, in hope of carrying on the scheme to a successful conclusion. The Government has committed itself to the scheme, and has been the cause of an expenditure of money by other parties. While the Government is not bound to put in any more money, it seems to me only fair that when only a small amount is asked it should be contributed in order that the scheme shall have a fair chance of success; and if it fails the responsibility will not rest upon this House.

Mr. HUGHES.

Mr. HUGHES. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver), who comes from that part of the country, and should know all about the question, admits that he does not know anything about it, because the whole of his remarks were prefaced with "I suppose." "I presume," &c. He says that this amount of money is to take new immigrants in there. The hon. Minister of the Interior says it is for seed grain. I would like to know who is correct.

Mr. OLIVER. May I be allowed to answer the question? The missionary desires to bring in new half-breed settlers who are destitute. This is the purpose for which the grant was made in the first place. This seed grain is being provided for these destitute settlers. There is no use in bringing a man on the reserve unless he can be provided with seed grain. It is not for settlers who are destitute on the reserve; it is for destitute half-breeds whom they desire to provide for when they go on the reserve.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that the hon. Minister has the report, which I would like to have read.

Mr. OLIVER. My information as to the crops on the reserve last year is that they were good, and that the settlers were doing quite satisfactorily according to their means.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The report which I have been requested to get and to read is from Mr. A. A. Ruttan, Dominion land agent, who was accompanied to the colony of Mr. Coleman. It is as follows:—

Department of the Interior,
 Dominion Lands Office,
 Edmonton, 19th January, 1899.

The Secretary, Department of the Interior,
 Ottawa, Ont.

Sir,—Referring to your letter of the 19th October last (Ref. 360530), I beg to report that I left Edmonton on the afternoon of the 31st ult., with Mr. Coleman, and arrived at the Lacombe colony, St. Paul des Métis, on the evening of Tuesday, the 3rd inst.

The Lacombe colony comprises townships 57 and 58, ranges 9 and 10, west 4th meridian. It was established by an Order in Council dated the 28th December, 1895. A schedule is appended hereto, giving the names of the reads of families, acres under cultivation and number of cattle. The whole population of the colony is at present about 270. It is situated in a rolling open prairie country, immediately east of and adjoining the Saddle Lake Indian reservation. Its chief water supply is afforded by Manawan Lake, a large irregularly-shaped body of water lying to the south of the centre of the colony. The lake is about ten miles, or more, in total length, and occupies an area of probably nine square miles. It is of a fair depth, good water, and contains an abundance of pike of good size and quality. There are about ten to twelve square miles of timbered lands extending to the shores of the lake, and, on the south side, much of the timber being spruce of a size suitable for building-logs and lumber. It should, if carefully conserved, supply also a sufficiency of fuel and fencing for all time to come, to meet the needs of the colony. Coal has not been as yet discovered in the colony. The soil is a vegetable loam of varying depth, upon a clay subsoil, and is of uniform excellent quality. Much of the 363 acres now under cultivation was made ready only during 1898, and the product of the land which was in crop last year (1898) is roughly estimated at 3,000 bushels of wheat, 400 bushels barley and 500 bushels oats. The wheat grown is principally Red Fyfe and Ladoga, the latter being superior in yield and quality as well as in earlier maturity. Potatoes and all other garden vegetables yielded a good crop of fair quality. Owing to the meagre outfit of agricultural implements, the area of crop in 1898 is much less than it might have been if the settlers had been fully equipped. There are at the present time only eight or ten ploughs, one or two sets of disc harrows available for operations in 1899.

The improvements made by the Roman Catholic Mission since the colony was first established are the following:—

A mission-house, 40 x 30, frame, 2½ stories, shingled roof, foundation of blocks of stone, supports, cellar about 20 feet square. It is a well and substantially built house, and serves at present as a residence for Rev. Father Thérien, priest in charge of the colony, and five or six lay brothers, who are employed in various capacities in the work of the colony, as carpenters, school teachers, blacksmith, machinists, &c., &c. The actual expenditure on material for this building is $800. This does not include labour.

The building as it stands is worth not less than .....	$1,500
Stable, 22 x 26, hewed logs, thatch roof, well finished inside .....	200
School-house, logs, thatch roof.....	100
Unfinished saw and grist-mill, with material on ground for completion.....	800
Engine for threshing-machine (to be used for saw and grist-milling) with thresher.	1,250
Engine, for saw-mill, saws, belts, &c.....	400
Grist-mill apparatus (capacity for gristing being about 100 bushels of wheat per diem .....	360
Smut machine .....	200
50,000 ft., B.M., of saw-logs now at mill...	300
	$5,110

The whole mission establishment seems to be on a business-like basis and well conducted. In addition to the expenditure above outlined, the mission has purchased and now holds, for the use of the colonists, the following implements:—

	Cost.
6 Ploughs .....	$150
1 Disc harrow.....	34
2 Common harrows.....	28
1 Binder .....	150
1 Mower .....	80
	$442

Adding to the above several items of outlay the cost of maintenance of the mission during the past three years, the whole of the expenditure must have exceeded the sum of $8,000.

School.

There are about 65 children of school age in the colony, but the average attendance at the day-school does not appear to have exceeded 15. The reason of so large a percentage of absentees is said to be the impossibility of persuading the parents of the necessity of regular and continuous attendance, and in large measure the poverty of the families and the lack of clothing for the young people.

Deserters.

Only two families have as yet left the colony, and their desertion was said to be due to the fact that Father Thérien was unable to undertake, with the resources at his command, to promise to support the people.

Food Supply.

Pending the organization of the half-breed colonists into an industrial community, they are able to supplement the products of agriculture by hunting and by resorting to the whitefish lakes of the north. A road is now being opened to Island Lake, 30 miles to the north, which is a first-rate fishing lake, and will be easy of access when the new trail is established.

Church.

The intention is to erect a separate church so soon as the colony's resources permit. At present, services are held in the second storey of the mission building.

Store.

A store is conducted by Robert Logan, of Beaver Lake. It contains the usual stock of groceries and clothing, but all of these things are sold at prices largely in advance of cost much exceeding the usual profit allowance. So soon as the colony is industrially in a more advanced condition, it will be comparatively easy and safe to establish a co-operative store, supplies being obtained wholesale from Montreal or Winnipeg, and retailed at a profit advance sufficient only to pay expenses.

Grist Mill.

It is the intention to have the grist-mill completed and running next season. At present, the colonists have to transport their wheat to the mill at White Fish Lake, 40 miles distant, and to then suffer the inconvenience and delay attendant upon the tedious process of getting their flour from a mill, the maximum capacity of which is 500 lbs. flour per diem.

When the flour consumed in the colony is gristed on the spot an indirect benefit will also be realized in the use of the bran and shorts (mill offal) in feeding to stock.

Domestic Water Supply.

Water is believed to be available from wells of a depth not exceeding 25 feet in all parts of the colony reserve.

Mr. SIFTON.

The Colonists' Opinion of the Situation.

I was invited to meet the members of the colony, who congregated, to the number of 18, in the mission building in the afternoon of the 4th. All spoke in Cree, Mr. Broudreau acting as interpreter. Several of them spoke at some length, the substance of their statements is that they are satisfied with the colony and with their prospects for the future if they can get implements enough for the farming operations of 1899, and if a boarding-school for their children can be established and maintained in the colony. They expressed dissatisfaction with the day-school, which, they say, does not answer the purpose. They cannot at present clothe their children and send them to school regularly in either summer or winter. They were all agreed that the boarding-school is essential to their well-being. I am inclined to agree with them, and of the opinion that it cannot be too soon established. The first immediate need of the colony is, however, an adequate supply of farming machinery. This ought to be arranged for immediately by the mission authorities, and delivered in the colony by the 1st April.

There is no reason why the colony should not be an industrial success if properly equipped and managed. They can sell the beef that it is possible to raise to buyers from Edmonton, and a large quantity of bacon and flour could be distributed advantageously from this colony to the Indian agencies.

Father Thérien informs me that his colonists have on two occasions made application for the opening of a post office, one, I believe, addressed to Mr. Oliver, M.P., the other to the Postmaster General, without result. They have asked that the post office be named "St. Paul des Métis." If there is any objection to this on account of its length or otherwise, the name "Thérien" would be acceptable and suitable, and complimentary to the reverend gentleman who is working so ably and energetically in an enterprise of great public utility.

If the Roman Catholic authorities would undertake to run a boarding-school on the plan of the very efficient one which is now conducted on the Saddle Lake Indian reserve, it would be an excellent thing for the colony.

The half-breeds who are unable to make a comfortable living outside will then become permanent settlers within the colony. In ten or fifteen years' time the boarding-school will have done its civilizing work, and the whole half-breed community will be infinitely better able than at present to support themselves in pretty much the same social condition as the rest of us. They are now a weakness to Canada by reason of their ignorance and consequent helplessness; they will, however, when suitably educated, be a strength in the national life. The Roman Catholic organization is peculiarly well-fitted to undertake educative work of this nature.

The Gray Nuns, the fathers and the lay brothers possess the requisite experience and aptitude for the special works in which they may severally engage. Their best services are given voluntarily, without pecuniary reward, and simply as a religious duty. They are, perhaps, the more enthusiastic and sincere on this account. Whatever means may be employed, the education of these half-breed colonists should be undertaken as soon as possible. It should be entirely free of cost to the colonies for at least the first five or ten years. If agricultural implements can be provided immediately and an assurance given that a boarding-school will be established in the present year or in 1900, the poorer half-breeds who still remain outside of the colony will be induced to take up residence therein. It is obvious, however, that as matters stand at present, the half-breeds who are without means and in whose interests, primarily, the colony was established, are the least able to avail themselves of it. They might enter it fearlessly if their young children could be placed in a boarding-school, leaving the parents free to hunt and fish for the subsistence which the colony farm cannot be made to yield in the first year or two. I do not think they will enter unless on this condition. Many of these people should never have been enfranchised. It is evident that we cannot afford to leave them in their present state of helplessness, and that every year's delay increases the difficulty and cost of final reclamation.

The lands in the colony are sufficient in extent—on the plan of 80-acre farms—to accommodate about 1,000 families. As the colonists develop industrial habits, and as their means and desires expand, they will forsake the colony for a wider and freer field.

These people are much more unfortunate than the Indians; they were too ignorant to realize the meaning of enfranchisement, and it is, perhaps, doubtful whether Canada really got rid of its obligations to these former wards by allowing them to withdraw from treaty (whose obligations and privileges they did not understand) to a freedom of the perils of which they were certainly most sublimely ignorant.

It is not pleasant to make these comments on the situation, but the conditions which suggest them will have to be faced sooner or later, and it is, therefore, my duty to make such a plain statement as the facts appear to compel.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) A. A. RUTTAN,
A.D.L.

Mr. SPROULE. That contains a good deal of information.

Mr. HUGHES. We are very glad to get that information. Will the Minister tell me now who owns the land?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The Government own the land.

Mr. SPROULE. It is leased to them.

Dominion Lands—Capital—

Examination of survey returns, printing plans, &c..... $50,000

Mr. FOSTER. Where will these surveys be made?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This is for a number of surveys. There is to be a survey of the Doukhobor reserve at Thunder Hill in Assinibola and Saskatchewan, consisting of six townships, and a survey of the Doukhobor reserve at Kamasck, consisting of about seven townships. Then an expedition has been sent out to fix a number of points of the parallel of sixty degrees of north latitude, which forms the boundary between British Columbia and the Yukon Territory. It is proposed to commence with the portion of the boundary between Teslin Lake and the Dalton Trail. A survey will be made of township 1, range 12, east of the principal meridian; subdivision of townships 33 and 34, ranges 19, 20 and 21, west of the principal meridian, on the east shore of Lake Winnipegosis; subdivision of the eastern halves of townships 33, 34 and 35, the southern half of township 35, range 25, and the north-western portion of township 34, range 17, all west of the principal meridian, between Lake Dauphin and Swan River; subdivision surveys in the Lake Dauphin district; subdivision of the southern half of township 37, range 25, and of townships 37 and 38, ranges 26 and 37, on Swan and Woody rivers; survey of township outlines east of Porcupine Mountain, between the Swan and Red Deer rivers; survey of the second meridian from the tenth base line to the Saskatchewan River; surveys in the Swan River district, to be made during the winter in places where summer work is impracticable or too expensive on account of swamps, timber, &c.; subdivision surveys in southern Alberta, in response to urgent applications for the subdivision of thirteen townships on the Milk River, eight townships between the Milk River ridge and Belly River, two townships near the Mormon colony on Lee's Creek, some township outline surveys up the Crow's Nest Pass, and numerous small surveys to accommodate settlers in remote localities; surveys in the Edmonton district, consisting of subdivision of township 45, range 22, township 48, range 22, township 49, ranges 22 and 23, township 46, range 26, and township 47, ranges 26, 27 and 28; survey of the town site of Field, B.C.; surveys in the British Columbia Railway valley, as much as possible, of lands in actual occupation by settlers, scattered from Burrard Inlet to Golden; $10,000 for irrigation surveys under arrangement with the North-west Government; $21,000 for Yukon surveys; and $23,000 for temporary employees at the head office, including draughtsmen, photographers, lithographers and printers.

Mr. FOSTER. Are the surveys in the Yukon surveys of mining claims?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Not altogether. The surveyors are surveying a town site, and land for which application is made for purchase and a deposit made with the land agent. Of course, we cannot have the same kind of subdivision there that we have in a prairie country. The Yukon River and one or two other rivers are surveyed, and the surveys of the land are tied on to the rivers.

Mr. FOSTER. When a mining claim is staked and it has to be surveyed, who surveys it?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. All the surveying of mining claims done there yet has been done by our surveyors. I fancy that three-fourths of the difficulties about registering claims has been due to the fact that the claims were not surveyed, and the surveying has been done by our surveyors to enable the Gold Commissioner's office to get its business straightened up.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that at the Government's expense or at the prospector's expense ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. So far it is at the Government's expense.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think that is right. In all other parts of Canada the survey is always at the expense of the prospector or the mining company, and has to be made before the license or the patent is issued.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The Government does not recognize any liability whatever to survey a claim, but it has been done because the Gold Commissioner's office could not get on without a survey. The greatest difficulty that has occurred there has been as to whether there has been enough ground on a creek to make the number of claims for which application has been made, and surveyors have been sent out for the purpose of going over the claims and settling that question. The action of the Government in this respect is simply due to force of circumstances. If we waited until the individuals got the claims surveyed, we would never get our records, which are an actual necessity. In view of the fact that we are collecting a very heavy tax from the miners, I think we can afford to survey the claims; but we do not recognize it as an obligation.

Mr. SPROULE. Are these surveyors paid by the day or by the contract ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. All our surveyors are hired by the day—$5 per day and expenses.

Amount required to build new wharf at Lake Manniwanka, Rocky Mountains Park .....	$600
---	-------

Mr. FOSTER. What is this wharf for ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is for the purpose of permitting pleasure boats to land. It is in the Banff Park.

To pay for one or more well-boring machines, and operating the same, for use in the North-west Territories.....	$5,000
---	---------

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The Government decided to purchase a machine for the purpose of boring in the North-west Territories, and this is for the purpose of purchasing two more. These machines are sent to a certain settlement where there is difficulty in getting water, and they put down test wells for the purpose of seeing whether water can be got and at what depth. A settler might put down a well 50 or 75 or 100 feet and find no water. If he knew that he would get water further down, he might go on, but not knowing the formation, his money and labour are wasted and he does not go any further. These machines make a test, not for the purpose of an artesian well, but from 100 to 200 feet down, and when water is got, the well is cased up and is used as a public well. This has been a very great boon, indeed.

Mr. FOSTER. Does not the municipality or town or settlement contribute anything ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No, it is only a test well.

Mr. SPROULE. How many test wells have been sunk ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have not that information. The machines were sent to the North-west Government, who operated them, and I am not able to say whether we have a report showing the number of test wells sunk or not.

Mr. DAVIS. One of those machines has been operated in my district, where they put down test wells in several of the outlying districts. They are never operated around a town or settlement close to a town. When they strike water, the settlers dig their own wells. The experiment has been very successful with us. There are portions in my district as elsewhere, where the land is first-class, but the difficulty is in getting water, and if you can assure the people that they can get water, settlement would rapidly develop.

It being Six o'clock, the Deputy Speaker left the Chair.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the explanation of this item ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. When the supplementary Estimates for last year were under consideration, I explained that the commission had been appointed, and gave the membership and the rates of pay. The amount required before 1st July was $1,000. The amount required under this item is made up as follows :—

Commissioner James Walker, at $10 per day for 6 months .....	$1,800
Commissioner J. A. Coté, at $5 per day, for 6 months .....	900
Two clerks (Messrs. Jos. F. Prudhomme and C. Mair) at $100 per month each for 6 months .....	1,200

	$7,000

Expenses of relief party and furnishing provisions to distressed people along Liard and Dease rivers..... $25,000

Mr. FOSTER. We want a full explanation of this ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This is an estimated amount, the estimate being based on the best information we could get. Of course, we shall only expend what is necessary. I will explain the circumstances under which this liability was incurred. On the 26th April last a letter was received from the Premier of British Columbia stating that advices had been sent to his Government by the provincial agent at Cassair and the inspector of the Hudson's Bay Company trading posts informing the Government that great suffering, destitution and sickness, caused, in great measure, by exposure and starvation in high latitudes, prevailed in the north-eastern portion of British Columbia amongst a comparatively large number of people who were on their way to the Yukon by way of Edmonton. The inspector of the Hudson Bay Company brought with him alarming accounts from that region. The Premier of British Columbia pointed out that these unfortunate people were in no sense settlers in British Columbia, and therefore, the province could not assume the responsibility of their rescue and maintenance. They were caught by the winter in endeavouring to reach the gold fields of the North-west Territories, and had, no doubt, been disappointed and beaten back by the obstacles to travel in that uninhabited country. The British Columbia Government had already established a small hospital at Glenora, and had been extending aid to as many as it was possible to reach, but the number said to be destitute in the part of the country mentioned called for assistance beyond their means, and should be met by the Federal Government. On the strength of the above report a telegram was sent to Hon. C. A. Semlin, expressing willingness to do anything possible to assist in relieving the distress of the people referred to, and Major Perry, who is an officer of the Mounted Police, stationed at Vancouver, was asked to send a report in regard to the situation. He wired that the Hudson Bay Company's officers at Dease Lake and Liard River were instructed in February to relieve all cases of bona fide destitution. On the 9th of May, Major Perry again wired that the Hudson Bay Company did not know the quantities of provisions at different points on the Liard River posts available to meet the distress, but at Glenora there was ample; further that the first boat up the Stikine would leave Wrangel on the 20th May, and that there was a pack train at Glenora which could start for Dease Lake about 1st June. Another telegram was received stating that Premier Semlin's telegram was based on a letter from the Government agent at Telegraph Creek, dated the 18th March—that is the provincial government's agent—and received in Victoria on the 18th April reporting that the Hudson Bay Company's manager at Glenora had just returned from a trip to Liard River, and stated that about 400 people were wintering along the Liard and Dease rivers and Dease Lake, and that many were without provisions and were compelled to eat horses and dogs. The Hudson Bay post had relieved some. On the receipt of Major Perry's telegraphic report word was sent from the department to Mr. Chipman, commissioner of the Hudson Bay Company at Winnipeg, stating the facts, and asking him to undertake to forward supplies for their relief. This Mr. Chipman consented to do in the following terms:—

Supplies Glenora considered inadequate for so many people. To deal promptly with the matter probably necessary charter special steamer for Stikine portion of journey. The steamer could also be utilized to bring people out, which will be less expensive than feeding them in the country. Difficulties organizing and conducting transports make it impossible to give immediate estimate of probable cost. Company will gladly do all possible to assist Government, and would suggest basis 20 per cent on actual cost. Necessary act quickly take advantage river navigation and pack train.

To this the Government replied as follows:—

Government wish company to send forward supplies for people on Liard River by special steamer if necessary, up Stikine River and up pack train from there. Wire if you will push matter forward as soon as possible.

Mr. Chipman telegraphed in answer to this:

Arrangements are being completed to carry out wishes of Government regarding relief to miners by sending special steamer and necessary provisions.

On the 15th May, Mr. Chipman telegraphed:

Arrangements completed that by 17th inst. provisions will leave Vancouver and meet river steamer at Wrangel, to be forwarded immediately to Dease River by pack train from Glenora.

This shows what has been done in regard to the matter. We have, as yet, no official report as to what has been done by the expedition. We have news to the effect that a large number of people have been brought in. Some of them have been brought in by another trading company, I understand. That information is furnished to me by one of the members for Victoria, and it is probable that some compensation will have to be given to the company that did that portion of the work ; under the circumstances, they would be fairly entitled to it. It is almost, if not quite, impossible to tell just what amount of money will be expended. but, under the circumstances, the Government felt that these men should not be allowed to starve there without this assistance being given to them.

Mr. OLIVER. The statement of the Minister of the Interior would lead me to suppose that, as in the case of the reports published in papers from time to time, there has been some misapprehension in regard to this matter. I am in receipt of letters from parties in the district affected. That there has been a good deal of sickness in that district is quite true, but, although I have direct information from that country, I have no information that there has been any serious or general shortage of provisions. As a matter of fact, I have a letter, dated from Dawson on the 24th of June, which mentions the names of certain parties who wintered on the Liard and Frances rivers, and who had reached Dawson this spring. They made no mention whatever of either sickness or starvation, such as are mentioned in this report. I do not wish in any way to discredit the action of the Government in taking measures to relieve distress, even on the reports that have been received ; but, owing to the very large amount of capital that has been made out of these reports, I would like the distinction to be clearly drawn between distress that occurs by reason of disease, and distress that occurs by reason of lack of food. So far as my information goes—and I have direct information on the subject—there was not by any means that serious lack of food that has been represented in the newspapers, and that was, no doubt, the basis of the relief expedition sent out by the Government. I was in hopes that by the time this item was reached the Government would have information as to the facts of the case. I am very sorry that is not so ; but as information has not been received, of course it cannot be given to the House. For the present I merely desire to correct, as far as possible, a very serious misapprehension which has been given, through a part of the press to the public in regard to the occurrences in that country.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this the first money that is proposed to be used for that purpose?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. PRIOR. In regard to the relief that has been sent to these men, I think that the explanation of the Minister of the Interior was a correct one, so far as I can make out from letters I have had. It seems there were a large number of men at the Liard River, many of whom were in sore distress. Some had no food whatever, and, besides, were in distress from being frozen and having the scurvy. The miners who were in fair circumstances there, signed a petition, which was sent down to the local government agent, stating they had only food enough for themselves, and none for these men, and that some assistance must be sent, or these men would die. The local government agent had no power, because the provincial government refused to do anything, on the ground that it was the duty of the Dominion Government. The agent of the Hudson Bay Company up there was applied to by the local government agent, but he could do nothing, of course, on his own responsibility. It seems, then, that they applied to Mr. Warburton Pike, manager of the Casca Trading and Transportation Company, who have a steamer running on the Stikine and pack trains running up into the interior. Mr. Pike immediately saw that speedy assistance was needed, and, therefore, he took the responsibility on his own shoulders, and sent off a train of provisions to come to the assistance of those men who were in such dire distress. The Minister says he considers that the company are entitled to some compensation, and I do not think that any member of this House will deny that, having taken this responsibility, without any authority from the Government, but simply from motives of humanity, the company should be thoroughly recompensed for any expenditure they have incurred. I hope the Minister will remember that when their claim comes in, and that he will see that they get compensation for the expense they incurred in this regard.

Mr. SIFTON.

The committee rose, and reported progress.

DEATH OF MR. SPEAKER EDGAR.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, it has been very often my duty, during the present session of the House, to announce sad news to the House, and I feel most painfully the necessity under which I am, of again being placed in the position of performing this very melancholy duty. We have been really living in the shadow of death ever since this session was opened. Death has been unrelenting, and it has chosen its victims amongst the most useful and experienced members of this House. At the very opening of the session, and before the speech from the Throne was delivered, we had to deplore the death of a once very respected member in the person of Mr. Wood. At a later day we had to deplore, almost simultaneously, the deaths of Mr. Ives and of Mr. Geoffrion, one a member of a former Administration, the other a member of this Administration, and now we have to deplore the death of the first commoner in the land. The news has just reached us that Sir James Edgar, Speaker of this House, has departed this life. I have no words to say how great the loss is to us, personally, to me especially, and I am sure the House will agree with me that, to the House generally, it is a most painful loss. Sir James Edgar had been, up to the time of his election as Speaker, a strong party man, but, I believe, a fair opponent. Since he has been in the Chair, I believe, it will be the consensus of opinion, on both sides of this House, that he discharged his duty with great dignity, with fairness, and with general acceptance to both sides of the House. To his loved ones, to his family, the loss is simply irreparable. I have very little, indeed, I have no more to say, but it must be my sad duty to move the adjournment of the House, and to move that when it does adjourn it stands adjourned until to-morrow at three o'clock.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, the suddenness of the news adds to the regret and the sorrow that we all feel at the death of our fellow-member, and the first commoner of this country, in the person of Sir James Edgar. He was, of course, more intimately known to gentlemen on the other side of the House, his own political and personal friends, but I am sure that we, upon this side of the House, especially those of us who have been in this House for the last fifteen or twenty years, have always known him as a man of worth and standing. The position of the Speaker of this House is a difficult one under the best of circumstances. The little differences of opinion that arise are at most a good deal magnified in the heat of debate, but I am quite sure that we all believe, on this side of the House, as well as on the other side, that the late Speaker had no other object and no other wish than to preserve proper order and decorum in the House, and that his decisions have been as fair and as equitable as he in his position could make them. I join with my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) in tendering to his family the most sincere condolences. Death has come very suddenly: it has come to our side of the House as well. Colleagues on both sides have been stricken down very suddenly without a note of warning, and both sides have been sadly afflicted. It only goes to show us that, as my right hon. friend has said, that we are all living in the shadow of death, and it is a salutary lesson to us that in all our little differences, which after all are only little differences, we are members of one common, human family, bound over a very short pathway for a land unknown. Such dispensations should temper, as I have no doubt it does temper, the heat of party strife and the impetuosity of party debate. At these times we, more than at any other times, find that we are all men and brothers. This side of the House join with my right hon. friend and his friends in our sincere regret at the untimely death of Sir James Edgar, and join with him also in most sincere condolences with his family and his friends.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 8.35 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, August 1st, 1899.

The House met at Three o'clock.

ELECTION OF SPEAKER.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The Governor General having been informed of the death of Sir James Edgar, is pleased to give leave to the House to proceed to the choice of a Speaker.

Sir John Bourinot, the melancholy event which we had to deplore yesterday now brings us to the duty of selecting a new Speaker to preside over the deliberations of this House. It were a mere truism to assert that the office of Speaker of the House of Commons is one of the most important of all those that can be either given by the Crown or conferred by the people. Our system of government rests upon the basis of free and untrammelled discussion, and the duty of presiding over the deliberations of the House of Commons, where this free and untrammelled discussion must take place, is, we must admit, one of the most difficult and delicate, when we remember that the object is, as it ought to be, to maintain absolute impartiality between all parties in this House; to keep even the scales of justice and to give the same measure to all; to maintain the dignity and decorum of this House; to keep intact those rules and traditions which many generations have handed down to us as the best method devised by man for the government of a free people. The office of the Speaker, therefore, is one which requires many and varied qualities. It requires, first of all, long experience on the floor of the House, because, without experience, all other qualities, however great they might be, would be of little avail. It requires prompt and sound judgment, independence of mind, firmness of temper; and if to all these qualities is added gentleness and kindness of disposition, we may well say perfection would be well-nigh reached. I submit to the judgment of the House and the judgment of members who came here at the last election, above all to the judgment of those who have been long associated with this House, that all these qualities are possessed in an eminent degree by one of our colleagues, Mr. Thomas Bain, member for Wentworth, province of Ontario.

Mr. Bain is one of the oldest and most experienced members of this House. He entered this House in the most brilliant period of parliamentary government in Canada. He entered it at a time when parliamentary science was represented on the floor of this House—to speak of the dead only—by such men as Sir John Macdonald, Mr. Dornon, Mr. Edward Blake, Sir Alexander Galt and Mr. Abbott. A man who has been trained in such a school must have acquired a great deal of knowledge, which will stand him in good stead in the Chair. Apart from these, I appeal to the judgment of every one in this House that the member for Wentworth being often called upon to preside over the Committee of the Whole, has given signal evidence of his fairness of mind and impartiality and soundness of judgment. This vacant chair has been adorned and graced by men whose names will live in the history of Canada, and I venture to predict that if Mr. Bain is elected to the Chair, as I am sure he will be, he will prove a worthy successor of the men who have left such honourable records behind them.

I beg, therefore, to move that Mr. Thomas Bain, member for the electoral district of the south riding of Wentworth, do take the Chair of this House as Speaker.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I rise for the purpose of saying that I believe I am expressing the sentiments of this side of the House when I say that the hon. gentleman who has the good fortune to be named by the Government to this high office is worthy of everything that has been said of him by the right hon. leader of the Government. I am quite sure that every person who has had the privilege of sitting in this House with the hon. member for Wentworth agrees in the statement that whether as a member of this House, as frequently occupying the position of Chairman of Committees or as occasionally occupying the position temporarily of Speaker, his duties have always been discharged in an independent, able and impartial manner that commends him to the approval entirely, I believe, of this House.

The motion being put to the House,

The Clerk of the House (Sir John Bourinot) declared the motion carried in the affirmative, nemine contradicente; and Thomas Bain, Esq., member for the electoral district of the south riding of Wentworth, duly elected to the Chair of the House.

Mr. Bain was conducted from his seat in the House to the Speaker's Chair by the First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding).

Mr. SPEAKER ELECT. I beg respectfully to thank the House of Commons for the honour they have conferred upon me in electing me unanimously as their Speaker. I feel specially grateful for the kindly way in which the hon. leader of the Opposition has expressed himself, and I can assure the House that it will be my best endeavour to discharge the duties attached to my office with justice and impartiality. I can only appeal to gentlemen on both sides when I say that I feel sensible of my inability to efficiently discharge those duties, and I ask for their earnest and kind co-operation for the preservation of the rights and privileges and duties attached to the House of Commons, starting from time far gone past.

The Serjeant-at-Arms (Col. Smith) then placed the Mace on the Table of the House.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have now to inform the House that it is the pleasure of His Excellency the Governor General that the House shall present their Speaker this afternoon at four o'clock in the Chamber of the Senate to receive His Excellency's approval.

The sitting suspended until four o'clock.

A Message was delivered by René Kimber, Esquire, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod.

Mr. Speaker,

His Excellency the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this Honourable House in the Senate Chamber.

Accordingly Mr. Speaker, with the House, went up to the Senate Chamber;—and then Mr. Speaker spoke to the following effect:

May it please Your Excellency:

The House of Commons have elected me as their Speaker, though I am but little able to fulfil the important duties thus assigned to me.

If, in the performance of those duties, I should at any time fall into error, I pray that the fault may be imputed to me, and not to the Commons, whose servant I am.

The Honourable the Speaker of the Senate then said:

Mr. Speaker,

I am commanded by His Excellency the Governor General to assure you that your words and actions will constantly receive from him the most favourable construction.

And the House being returned,

PRAYERS.

RAILWAY RESOLUTIONS.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask my right hon. friend when it is proposed to discuss the railway resolutions?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Well, we are now occupied with certain items of Supply concerning the Yukon, which we intend to finish. Probably, though I would not say certainly, we will go on with the railway resolutions to-morrow.

QUEEN'S COUNTY COURT, P.E.I.

Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.) Before the Orders of the Day are called, I beg leave to ask the right hon. gentleman if a judge has yet been appointed to the Queen's County Court to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Judge Alley?

The PRIME MINISTER. I may say to my hon. friend that this appointment would have been made to-day but for the illness of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies). It will be made to-day, or certainly to-morrow.

SUSPENSION OF THE VILLE MARIE BANK.

Mr. MONK. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to draw the attention of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) and of the Government to the financial situation created in Montreal by the suspension of the Ville Marie Bank. In reply to an inquiry made the other day, the Minister of Finance said there was no law authorizing the Government in the case of the suspension of a bank to name an inspector. If that is the case, I think that the present moment is an opportune time for the Government, now that Parliament is in session, to change that portion of the Banking Act before the House rises. It is not necessary for me to speak of the situation created among the depositors of that bank by its suspension. The newspapers have given us some information about it, and it is hardly possible to convey to the House an idea of the extent of the embarrassment, trouble, and, in some cases, misery, caused by the closing of the doors of this bank. If at the present time the Government were able to name an inspector who would take immediate cognizance of the affairs of the bank, and report from time to time to the Government, under orders from the Department of Finance, as to the correctness of the latest financial returns made by the institution, and as to the actual conduct of the business of the bank by its directors during the time of its suspension, it would have a most reassuring effect not only on the people interested in that particular bank, but on the public in general. I am sure that if the Government had that power, its exercise would have a most soothing effect upon the public in Montreal; therefore, I would respectfully suggest to the Minister of Finance that he avail himself of the present sitting of Parliament to amend that section of the Banking Act and to obtain that power. I know that under such circumstances the Government are somewhat reluctant to assume responsibility. But what I would suggest is, that the hon. Minister should obtain power to name an inspector of banks upon the demand of a certain number of depositors in a bank situated as that bank is, so that upon the initiative of the creditors the Minister could name such an inspector. I am sure the nomination of such a functionary, the duties of the inspector being to satisfy himself, to report to the department upon the situation of the bank, and also to co-operate, on behalf of the Government, with the directors, would have an excellent effect, and I am sure that the Bill of that nature, even at this late stage of the session, could very easily be put through both Houses. At the present moment the situation in Montreal is very critical, although I have every reason to believe that the danger has been exaggerated. But some action taken by the Government would, I am sure, have a most reassuring effect, and produce excellent results.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Mr. Speaker, I may say that the Government fully realize the importance of the question which the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) has brought to the notice of the House, and that we will give his suggestions all due consideration. Hitherto, it has not been deemed expedient that the Government should assume the responsibility of appointing inspectors for the banks. It has been felt by the distinguished gentlemen who have preceded me in the office of Minister of Finance that the appointment of such inspectors would have a somewhat misleading effect upon the public mind, because it has been felt that the inspection would not be thorough or complete, and unless the inspection were thorough and complete, it would be far better that there should be no inspection at all on the part of the Government than that one should take place that would be somewhat inadequate and misleading. However, new occasions teach new duties, and if there is anything that has occurred in Montreal which will teach the Government to adopt better methods, we shall be only too willing to learn from our experience, and I will be glad to discuss the question with my colleagues. I do not know whether it will be possible to do anything this session in reference to this most important question, but if anything can be done to reassure the public mind in these matters, it is desirable that we should do it. Whether action be taken this session or not, I would remind the House that next year there will have to be some legislation respecting the banks and anything we may be able to learn from our present experience, will stand us in good stead at that time. The hon. gentleman's suggestion will receive every consideration from the Government.

SUPPLY.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to, and the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Militia—

Pay of officers and men .....	$50,000
Food, clothing and necessaries and transportation of same, transport of officers and men, contingencies and all other expenses .....	$75,000

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). Mr. Chairman, I beg to move:

That after the word "pay" in the first item, the words "and transport" be added.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. BERGERON. Will the hon. Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden) explain what this extra $50,000 is for?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. This is the pay for the present year of 100 men. Orders have been already given for the withdrawal of 100 men, and this vote of $50,000 is to pay the men who are left, and to pay for bringing the other 100 back. It is estimated that the cost of the transport will be about $10,000, and the pay of the force remaining in the Yukon, $40,000. As soon as consent is obtained from the United States Government to bring the men out through American territory, by way of Skagway, they will start on their journey.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What proportion of the force is withdrawn?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. About one-half.

Mr. WALLACE. How many were there altogether?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Two hundred.

Mr. HUGHES. I did not catch what the hon. Minister said about coming by way of Skagway. I trust that no recognition of American ownership of Skagway has been given.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, I did not mean that. But it is impossible, I presume, for the force to get out to the ocean to embark on the steamboat without crossing American territory at some point, and it is necessary to get consent in order to do that.

Mr. BERGERON. Before we proceed any further with this item, I want to bring to the attention of the hon. Minister a matter which was discussed when we were going through the main Estimates, about some contracts which were given to Mr. M. Workman, of Montreal, for trousers and military coats. The hon. Minister will remember that there was some discussion on the point that Shorey & Co., of Montreal, had tendered at a price very much lower than the party to whom the contract was awarded. Shorey & Co. offered to supply the goods at 49 cents per coat less than the contract price, but the contract was not given to that firm, because they would not agree to the condition of the anti-sweating clause, which was comprised in the tender. I said to my hon. friend that I had every reason to believe that Mr. Workman, of Montreal, was not complying with the anti-sweating condition, but was doing the work in the same way that Shorey & Co. had proposed to do it. My hon. friend said that it was a dangerous assertion, because Mr. Workman had sworn that he had worked according to the anti-sweating clause. Shorey & Co. said that they would do the work according to their own way, and, because they would not accept the condition of the anti-sweating clause, the department would not give them the contract. Workman got the contract at 49 cents per coat higher, but Workman has not worked according to the condition of the anti-sweating clause. I have proofs of it, and I propose to put the facts on "Hansard," so that the hon. Minister may take notice of them, and deal with the question in his department. Trousers were made by Madame Victor Labonté, at Ste. Thérèse, 150 pairs; by Madame D. Labonté, Ste. Thérèse, 150 pairs, and by Madame Amanda Labonté, 171 pairs, making altogether 471 pairs. Great-coats were made as follows:—Mesdames Paul Gagnon, Ste. Thérèse, 100 coats; Alphonse Renaud, Ste. Rose, in Laval, 100 coats; Cléopâtre Desjardins, 12 coats; Celine Fortin, 36 coats; Rose Desjardins, 48 coats; Anna Desjardins, 74 coats; Arthur Charron, Ste. Therese, 100 coats; Octavie Ouimet, Ste. Rose, 56, making 526 altogether. I have here the declarations of all these parties, before witnesses, as to the work they have done.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Do they state the wages?

Mr. BERGERON. No, they say nothing about wages. The result of all this is that the Government have paid 49 cents more for coats than Shorey & Co.'s tender, the reason given by the Minister being that he could not entertain their contract because they would not accept the conditions of the contract with regard to the sweating; and yet Mr. Workman who got the contract, had the work done in the same way in which Shorey & Co. were honest enough to say they would have the work done. Therefore, I say that Mr. Workman, in agreeing to accept the conditions in regard to the sweating system, misled the Minister. I put the matter before him, so that he can deal with the charge made against Mr. Workman.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. If my hon. friend had had the memorandum earlier, I might have been able to give him an answer, if there is one. I am very much obliged to the hon. gentleman for calling my attention to the fact, which I was not aware of before. In justice to Mr. Workman, I will say this. As the hon. gentleman remembers, I explained that we gave out certain orders just before the annual drill, both to Sanford and to Workman, to be done quickly; and these orders they were unable to undertake unless we permitted them to do them in the way they had been doing in the past. I have a memorandum of one of the employees of the department to say that the infantry trousers to which my hon. friend refers were got in that way, by a special order, and not by contract; and I have a further note saying that the first 500 overcoats had to be got in a hurry, and before Workman's shops were ready. These, my officers know, are the only cases in which there was a departure.

Mr. BORDEN (King's).

But since the hon. gentleman has brought the matter to my notice, I promise him that I will have it carefully investigated, because my only object is to enforce this clause. Seeing that not only Shorey & Co., but other contractors, were excluded on account of the terms of our contract, it is my duty to see that the men who have taken the contract adhere closely to the letter of the contract, and I shall do so.

Mr. BERGERON. I may say to my hon. friend that Messrs. Workman & Co., at the time they tendered, had not any such factory as they pretended they had, and have not got it to-day; but all the work is done outside.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think that the Minister of Militia, before incurring such a serious responsibility as to pay an increase of 40 cents for overcoats, resulting in an enormous additional charge upon the revenue of Canada, should have taken some means of ascertaining whether the party to whom he gave this contract could do the work in any other way than the way in which the Messrs. Shorey proposed. I confess that I do not myself see any reason, especially if Canada has to pay heavily for it, why a contractor of high standing and character should not be able to employ worthy people to do the work at home, if they pay a fair and legitimate price for it. Therefore, I do not see any reason why Messrs. Shorey & Co. should have been deprived of this contract when they offered to perform the work at a lower price than anybody else, and the work given to another person. When the Minister of Militia and Defence refused to accept the lower tender, and gave the work to one of his friends, as I assume he did, at a much higher rate, he was bound to ascertain whether that contractor had the means of complying with the terms. It appears that he had not. Messrs. Shorey & Co. had this contract taken from them because they were going to go outside of their factory to get a portion of the work done; and they stated honestly and fairly to the Minister that they were willing to give him the fullest information and to put it into their tender. The question is a very serious one, involving a great loss of public money; and it appears now, from the statement of the Minister of Militia and Defence, that a large part of this contract is admittedly done in the precise manner in which Messrs. Shorey & Co. were prepared to do the work, and at 40 cents a coat more. It appears to me to be a most unjustifiable transaction. The Minister of Militia and Defence is, at all events, blamable to this extent, that when he took the contract away from the Messrs. Shorey and gave it to the Messrs. Workman he did not inquire, as he could have done, whether Workman & Co. were going to do the work in precisely the same manner as Shorey & Co.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The hon. leader of the Oppostion was not here, I think, when the discussion on this subject took place before, and when I explained very fully what had happened. As a matter of policy, this Government decided to introduce into certain contracts for clothing a clause which prevented sub-letting or farming out of these contracts, in the interest of the labouring people.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Does the hon. Minister mean that a contractor who employs a person to do a certain amount of work at a certain price in his own home is sub-letting a contract? I do not call that sub-letting a contract. I call that getting the work done, and if the price paid is a fair and reasonable one, let the Minister of Militia and Defence explain why the Government feel bound to take such a course.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I quite admit that the price paid will have a great deal to do with it, but what is known as the sweating system is that system by which work is given out by the large contractors to poor people who are paid ruinously low prices, and it is to prevent that practice that this policy was adopted. Mr. Shorey knew perfectly well the terms upon which we asked for the tenders, and he refused to comply with them, so that we had no tender from him to consider. There were others in the same position. The Sanford Company put in two tenders, one higher than the other, but they said: If we get a certain proportion of the contract we will be bound by our lower price. It turned out that they did get a larger amount, $60,000 or $70,000, and so they did the work at the lower price. The late Mr. Sanford came to me about this matter and he said he would have to hire a building and put machinery in it in order to fulfil this contract, and could not afford to do that without getting a very large amount of the contract. I believe that was done by the Sanford Company.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Did the hon. gentleman investigate the prices at which the former contractors had been letting out their work to people in their own homes? If he found that they had been paying fair prices, that would have been sufficient guarantee against sweating.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I cannot say I did.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Then you did not find out that they were paying low prices?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, I did not ascertain the prices; but we considered the system a bad one, and the principle we adopted in these contracts was not to encourage the sweating system. The Workman Company, I believe, are a solvent concern, and they assured the department that they would make the necessary arrangements to do the work in their own factory just as the Sanford Company did, and up to the present, I believed, they had done so, and was very much surprised to hear my hon. friend say they had not.

Mr. BERGERON. Not yet.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. My hon. friend must be mistaken, because I have the assurance from one of the officers of my department that he was in the factory and saw the work going on.

Mr. BERGERON. Somebody must be deceived.

Mr. WALLACE. Where is that report?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It was a verbal assurance by an officer in my department that he was in Montreal in Workman's factory and saw the work going on. The hon. leader of the Opposition says that a very large part of the work was done in the old way. I am told that 500 coats only out of the 4,000 were done in that way, and that the infantry trousers, to which the hon. member for Beauharnois has referred, were outside the contract altogether. That was a special order made for the camps we have just had. In the same way the Sanford Company did work under the old system, where they were not bound by this contract. Under this contract an affidavit has to be made on each application for payment, and no payments are made except on the affidavit of a manufacturer that he has complied literally with the terms of the contract.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. My hon. friend has not shown what necessity there is for the adoption of this policy of absolutely preventing any work being done except in a factory. I confess that I do not know much about the subject, but my impression is that you may have sweating in a factory just as well as outside. It all depends on the price, and I can imagine that quite as small wages might be paid in a factory. If this is a Government regulation, why does it not apply to all the departments? I am told that the right hon. Prime Minister obtained from Shorey & Company the coats for the Mounted Police, and I am quite certain that he consulted the public interest in doing so, and I do not see why the same thing should not have been done by the Minister of Militia.

Mr. FOSTER. Has Mr. Workman received his pay?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. He has received part of it.

Mr. FOSTER. What conditions do you put before the pay is given as regards sweating?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. An affidavit must be made that the contract has been literally complied with before any payment is made.

Mr. BORDEN (King's).

Mr. FOSTER. That is, that the clothes must be made in a factory?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Certainly.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the Minister of Militia was not as careful as he should have been in the making of the contract. He should have assured himself, before he gave a contract at all, that the successful tenderer, or the one to whom he wished to give it, had all the requirements necessary in order to have this sweating condition carried out in the spirit of the law. But he tells us that he did not take those precautions. Two precautions were required: First, an inspection as to whether there was a factory or not of sufficient size; and second, the price paid for the labour. If these two things had been satisfactorily ascertained, the hon. Minister would have been then in a position to say whether the sweating condition was lived up to or not. Is this the system that the Government are going to make operative in these contracts for clothing and supplies? Are they going to compel the clothing to be made in a factory, in a steaming street in Montreal, and prohibit respectable householders in the country from making up those garments in their own homes where they are surrounded with every convenience? Is it better to drive these people into a crowded factory, filled with operatives breathing a heated atmosphere than having the work distributed at as good or better prices amongst the homes of habitants around the city of Montreal in the different parishes? If that be the system adopted by the Government, the sooner it is got rid of the better. It is a farce, because it produces a worse condition of things and prohibits the people from taking advantage of a better condition of things. What will be the rule with reference to the making of articles in the city of Montreal? I first came across it in the case of the manufacture of such articles as shirts, collars and cuffs. Instead of being made in the factories, they were made in this way—the material was cut in quantity and the garments in this form were taken out to hundreds, and I was going to say thousands, of homes in the parishes near Montreal. Women and young girls do the work of sewing at their homes at so much a piece or so much per dozen. It was done there when other work could not be got, and the homes round and about the city of Montreal were actually made comfortable and wealth was gained—wealth for these simple-living people—for these homes by that kind of work, which suited them. The same system is used by Mr. Shorey in connection with his clothing department. Now, would it be a just thing to drive the work out of conditions like that, conditions conducive to health and happiness, and shut it up in crowded factories in the city of Montreal? And to do what? Merely to carry out what is known to be a fad. Is it not plain to every one that in doing that, you take the work out of the best conditions and actually force it into the worst conditions. Now, when Mr. Shorey put in his tender, he was honest enough to make known the way in which he got his work done and to say that he proposed to do this work in that way. He was refused the contract. I have here the list of Mr. Shorey's prices and the list of Mr. Workman's prices; and in almost every case, Mr. Shorey's prices are much less than the other. When we come to the matter of great-coats, they were 49 cents less in Mr. Shorey's tender than Mr. Workman's. Mr. Workman got the contract and 4,000 great-coats were made which gave to Mr. Workman $2,000, or thereabouts, of the people's money over and above what would have been given had Mr. Shorey had the contract. It is stated, and stated very confidently, that Mr. Workman has no factory. My hon. friend (Mr. Borden) has no report to give to this House showing that Mr. Workman has a factory. But suppose he did have a factory, take then the conditions under which the work is done. Does it tend to better conditions for the working people to give the contracts in this way, did it conduce more to the happiness and comfort of the real homes of the people of Canada? There cannot be two opinions on that question. The Premier had no doubt upon the question. When the Premier called for tenders for clothing for the Mounted Police, Mr. Shorey did the very same that he did with reference to the Minister of Militia's contract—he marked in red ink that if he got the contract, the work would be done in the regular way, and that might conflict with the anti-sweating conditions. But he got the contract, because the Premier considered the conditions were far better than those insisted upon by the Minister of Militia. Here is a case of one member of the Government and the leader of it, saving money to the people and contributing to the best conditions of the manufacture of these articles, and another member of the Government crowding people into heated factories and actually preventing the establishment of the best conditions. We are told that there were only a few great-coats. But here is one of the affidavits. It is dated Montreal, 28th July, 1899, and says:

I carted for Mr. M. Workman, of this city, about 2,000 military great-coats since the 1st November, 1898, to different work-people—

Where—in the factory of Mr. Workman? Not at all.

—to different work-people in the parish of Ste. Rose.

That is some twelve or fifteen miles outside of Montreal.

Mr. BERGERON. In the county of the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Fortin).

Mr. FOSTER.—

I also carted these same coats back to and delivered them to the said Mr. M. Workman, 1883 Notre Dame Street.

This is signed by the carter, Calixte Belanger, and also by two witnesses. Is that a factory? Under the very eyes of the Minister, the conditions of the contract are entirely ignored, and the work is done just as Mr. Shorey wished to do it. It is done under the same conditions, but Mr. Workman is paid 49 cents more for each great-coat in order that the glory of an alleged anti-sweating system may be paraded before the labouring men of this country. What does Mr. Shorey say? I have a letter in which he speaks of some of these things:

You will find the great-coats with attached capes, 4,000 in quantity, were given to Workman, McShane's friend.—

There is a very good item. Mr. McShane is a party politician, who has to get along. Mr. McShane is the friend of Mr. Workman. Mr. McShane gets the contract for Mr. Workman.

—at 49 cents per coat more than ours. We affirm that there is no sweating in Montreal. The clause calls for work to be done in the contractor's factory, and not in the homes of work-people. We deal at all times direct with work-people, and pay them current and satisfactory prices. Sweating means contract work, getting some man or person who employs people in his or her own shop, paying inferior wages in price per garment, working long hours, and keeping the people steadily on the grind. We know of no one doing such here. Our work is frequently done in the country by farmers' wives and daughters, they coming to us or we sending the work to them by wagon or railway train, cut in quantities, and they make it up and return to us when ready, and receive their pay at once. To make militia or any clothing as the tender asks for, in our own factory, our system would have to be altered altogether, and our present employees in the rural districts would be deprived of the means of livelihood which they have enjoyed for many years. Farmers' wives and daughters are thus of great assistance to the heads of families. We have been thanked many times by curés in the rural districts for giving work to families, thus keeping the families together and preventing young women seeking employment in cities, where they are subject to great temptations.

Fully 75 per cent of our work is done in the country—Ste. Rose, Ste. Thérèse, Boucherville and like places taking the bulk of it. Convents, such as the Sacred Heart, do a great deal of work for us. We pay the convent mentioned above $1,000 to $12,000 annually. So, according to the present system of calling for tenders, these as well as country people would be deprived of the work. I do not think the present contractors carry out this clause in the contract. In making up our tenders we made a red-ink line around the clause and wrote the Minister that we would only make garments in the usual way, that is, cut and trim them in our own factory, and send them out to be sewn in the usual way. The Minister will probably answer that Shorey's tender was irregular. Well, are they seeing to the enforcing of this clause with Workman, who got all the work? I think not.

There is another matter. Is it a fact that when these gentlemen take the contract for making these great-coats, they are not at liberty to go to get cloth wherever they wish?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, it is not a fact.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No.
