Mr. FOSTER. He then mentions that he had received tenders with reference to the Mounted Police Department, and that he marked in red ink, the same as in the other case, the conditions under which he would do it, and that he got the tender. I think this is a most instructive commentary, both upon the way in which this anti-sweating clause is being worked out, and also on the methods of the Militia Department.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). My hon. friend alludes to the part of these conditions that requires the contractors to provide proper sanitary conditions under which goods are manufactured, as a fad. My hon. friend the leader of the Opposition also appears to disapprove of such conditions. Now, I may say that the ex-Minister of Finance is quite in error when he asserts that the sweating system in all its viciousness has not acquired a foothold in the city of Montreal. Some time ago I received information that caused me to have an inquiry made upon this subject, and if time admitted, I would lay before the House the report of the gentleman who made the investigation, both in the city of Montreal and in other cities. His report shows that garments were being manufactured in various places in Canada under conditions most detrimental to the health and morals of many engaged in that work. Because the anti-sweating conditions adopted by my colleague in the Militia Department and by myself, require a contractor to supply accommodation and facilities whereby work can be done under sanitary conditions, the hon. gentleman assumes that the term "factory" means some place congested with people, unwholesome in every respect. Now, if the hon. gentleman studied the conditions, I am sure he would have reason to correct his conclusions upon that point. The conditions generally seek to accomplish, what? The payment to the workingmen who do the work for a fair wage, and that the contractor shall see that they are enabled to do their work under proper sanitary conditions. Whilst in many instances piece-work may be done to advantage at the homes, yet the balance of the testimony seems to be in favour of the work being done where the factory building can be open to inspection and the adoption of proper sanitary arrangements enforced. These conditions are not oppressive, they are intended for the good of those who bear the heat and burden of the day in connection with this work. My hon. friend is not familiar with them, but I may say that they provide that in connection with any of these works the contractors shall pay to the workingman a fair wage, such a wage as is fair and legitimate in the district where the work is being performed; that sub-letting shall not be permitted; and that the work shall be done under proper sanitary conditions. Whether it be in a street that is crowded or uncrowded, whether it be in the home or whether it be in the country, the contractors shall satisfy the department that the conditions under which the work is conducted are such as they ought to be. I should regret extremely if we had to divide upon a principle of this kind. It is not a question upon which there ought to be a difference of opinion; and if my hon. friend would only reserve his judgment and study the conditions, I would place in his hands a report which will have some influence, I am sure, upon his mind. I should deplore it if, on a question of this kind, concerning the welfare of the great industrial classes, it should happen that there was a division of opinion. I will not hold him responsible for the opinion he has expressed, because I am sure he would revise that opinion on a deeper study of the subject. I would say that the conditions in question have been in operation in my own department for a little while, and we have found nothing to complain of. We require the voucher of the account that comes in from the contractor to be accompanied with an affidavit of the member of the firm who is to pay the wages, also by any one else who may be able to give any evidence and to testify of his own actual knowledge as to the rates that he has paid, and those rates of wages to be paid must be such as are the going rates for work of that kind in the district where the work is to be performed—fair rates, not the result of sub-letting. These conditions have received the approval, not only of the workingmen of Canada but of the great industrial classes of Great Britain. There is nothing novel in them so far as our action is concerned. We have lagged behind in their adoption. The principle on which these conditions were established was affirmed as a result of a report of the Committee of the House of Commons of England as far back, I think, as 1891. The report and recommendations of the committee of the British House of Commons received the unanimous endorsement of the House of Commons. Whilst I am speaking in a general way, I think, I am speaking by the look when I say that almost every Government contractor in England is required to comply with the spirit of these conditions. The spirit of these conditions is that the Government shall assume the responsibility of seeing that the work is performed under proper sanitary conditions, and that the fair-going wage in the district where the work is being performed shall be paid. These are the principles involved in these conditions. It may happen that work has suddenly to be performed when there is no provision to have it performed under these conditions, but I am sure that my hon. friend, upon consideration, will not take exception to the great underlying principle. Not only has it the imprimatur of the precedent to which I have referred, but it has been substantially endorsed by the industrial classes throughout all Canada, and I would again express the hope that no hon. gentleman in this House will put himself in antagonism to the principle of these conditions, at least, until he has so thoroughly mastered the subject that he would be able to justify any other attitude. Experience of the working of this system for eight years in Great Britain has justified, not only the maintenance of it, but it is a sufficient warranty for our adopting it here. I think the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence has done well to incorporate this principle in his contracts, and even if a few garments have, under special circumstances, been manufactured outside of these conditions, it is certainly no reason for undoing the scheme as a whole. It is not the lowest price alone under these conditions that we should seek to pay, but we should require tenderers who are tendering to supply goods, to put in a schedule of wages, and this should be inserted as a part and parcel of the contract. When contractors take contracts at starvation rates they are obliged, either to lose money or to pinch those who have to do the work for them, and it seems better to put all tenderers upon one common plane by laying down a rule that will fix the minimum standard for the wages that they will pay. For these reasons, I think the principle of these conditions will commend itself to the good sense of this committee.

Mr. WALLACE. I think that we have seldom, in this House, witnessed an hon. member sailing around the question for such a long time as the hon. Postmaster General has done without getting near it. What has he told us? He has not referred to a single charge that has been made from this side of the House. He could not do it apparently. He told us that there are four conditions that are imposed in opposition to the sweating system. First, he said that the sweating system was detrimental both to health and morals. In regard to this contract, Mr. Shorey says that 75 per cent of his work is done at all times by the farmers and people out through the country. I would like to ask the hon. Postmaster General what there is detrimental to morals and health when this work is done by the women, wives and daughters, working at their own homes. There can be no place where the morals of young people would be more carefully guarded than under their own roof-tree, and, therefore, the insinuation, if it means anything, means that these people are not safe as regards their morals when they are living in their own homes. The next point is as to their health. Does the hon. Postmaster General mean to tell us that people working in their own homes, in comfortable homes, throughout the country, are less healthy than if they were crowded in workshops where there are hundreds and thousands of people crowded together, and where the sanitary arrangements are not as good as if these people were working in their own homes? We have in this House what are said to be the best sanitary arrangements that can possibly be devised. I am rather doubtful of it, but there is no factory where as much care is taken to preserve the sanitary conditions as in the House of Commons. Yet, to-day, this House is almost panic-stricken with the idea that the sanitary conditions are bad and the mortality in this House is something dreadful to contemplate. We cannot have better sanitary conditions than at the homes of the people. The hon. Postmaster General's next point is in regard to the sub-letting of contracts. It could not be charged against Mr. Shorey that he has sub-let the making of a single garment. Any one who knows anything about the tailoring business knows that this work is all done by piecework, so much for every garment. Mr. Shorey pays so much for each garment, and there is no sub-letting either in the factory or in the country, and the charge cannot be made that there was sub-letting in regard to any of these garments made in the country. Then, the hon. Minister says that there must be some regulation about a fair rate of wage. I would like to know what regulation the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence made in this regard. Did he make a condition that a certain amount should be paid for making an overcoat or a pair of trousers or a tunic or any of that clothing?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The wages paid are to be reported to the department.

Mr. WALLACE. Would the hon. Minister let us have the report?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have not the report here.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman cannot let us have the report. Then, all the other conditions laid down by the hon. Postmaster General seem to have nothing in them. As far as morality is concerned, I think I have demonstrated clearly that the conditions for morality are more favourable in the homes of the people than in a crowded factory in Montreal, that the health of the people and that the sanitary conditions are better in the homes of the people, that subletting has not been practised, and that Mr. Shorey pays the regular rate of wages. It has not been stated that Mr. Shorey has not paid as fair wages as were paid by Mr. Workman. But the country loses $2,000 on these 4,000 overcoats. The hon. Minister says that there was a case of urgency. He has allowed the anti-sweating condition to be violated, and he has not shown us where the urgency exists. Did the department not know how many volunteers they had and how many volunteers they were going to call out? Did they not know this months before the contracts were let, so that there can be no plea of urgency in this matter?

Here is a statement made in this House by a responsible party, who swears that he carried 2,000 of these military overcoats out to the country to get them made. Under these conditions, Mr. Shorey could not have the contract, but Mr. Workman could. It looks to me as if there was a job in this from start to finish, or else total incompetence on the part of the Militia Department.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Some years ago it became my privilege, at the request of some workingmen's organizations, to look into the question of sweating; and if the Postmaster General will look up the records, he will find that an investigation was made in an official way, only a short time ago by a gentleman appointed for that purpose, and I think his report will show that not a great deal of sweating was then being practised in the Dominion of Canada. Hon. gentlemen opposite will not, I think, be able to place themselves before the country as the champions of the workingmen, because I do not think that the history of legislation will show that hon. gentlemen opposite have been as much so as hon. gentlemen on this side of the House. However, we are united in this debate, as we ought to be, upon the principle of giving every man a fair day's pay for a fair day's work; and more particularly should that be the case where the Government, as in this case, controls every contractor who is doing work for the Government. When a contractor takes a contract of this kind from the Government, he must perform it in either one of three ways: he must do it in his factory, let the contract to some one else, or allow people to do it at their homes. Now, the question is not as to the method by which he may perform the work, but the question is as it was stated by the hon. Postmaster General, who gave his whole case away when making the statement, whether the going rate of wages was paid for the work. Now, in order to see that the fair rate of wages was paid, what has the Minister done? In the first place, I think the Minister gave his case away when he stated that he had no information as to how much Messrs. Shorey & Co. paid for the work, bearing in his mind the principle laid down by the Postmaster General that it was the desire of the Government only to see that the going rate of wages in vogue in the district was paid.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. A fair wage.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman afterwards said a fair wage.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. You must take altogether what I said.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am making the words as the hon. gentleman used them. He first said the going rate in vogue in the district and afterwards a fair wage. The two are the same.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I mean current wages.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Current wages, which will be found to be the fair wage; the exception is the unfair wage. Bearing that in mind, what has the hon. gentleman done? Messrs. Shorey had been fair and upright contractors. The Minister assents to that. They had done their work well, and given satisfaction to the Government. Then, I submit, as a fair proposition that when the Minister was giving the contract again, and when Shorey & Co. were the lowest tenderers, his duty, if he desired to protect the workingmen, was to have inquired—and no one would have objected to the most careful and scrutinizing inquiry—as to how much Messrs. Shorey & Co. had been paying for their work. And yet the Minister tells us that he made no such inquiry. Am I correct in that understanding? The Minister says I am correct. He takes the contract away from a reputable firm, who had done the work well and to the satisfaction of the department, and who were the lowest tenderers, ostensibly for the protection of the workingmen, while he fails to make a single inquiry as to whether the workingmen are being fairly dealt with by the Government contractors or not. There must have been some other reason than the desire to protect the workingmen. I want now to ask another question. Where can the Minister show me that there is any defence of the workingmen's rates saying that a big contractor shall not let a sub-contract? It is not in the mere letting of a sub-contract that the wrong is done to the workingman. The question all hinges on the Postmaster General's statement that a fair wage should be paid. If a man takes a contract, and has not the factory or the conveniences to fulfil the requirements of the contract, and if he lets a sub-contract, he should let it at a fair price; that is the requirement the Government should make of him. It appears to me to hamper a contractor without being a defence of the interests of the workmen, for the hon. gentleman to place a clause in the contract such as I have referred to. As regards sanitary conditions, we have had it shown this afternoon, beyond all contradiction, that this work was being done amid surroundings and in places whose sanitary conditions must of necessity have been better than in the factory where the Minister, under that clause of the contract, required the work to be done. I am told that the greater part of Shorey & Co.'s work was done in the county of Laval and the county of Jacques Cartier. I am told that if they had secured this contract, they would have had the work done in the peasant homes of these two counties. Now, I want to ask the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Fortin) whether he thinks the sanitary conditions would be better in a factory at Montreal or in the homes of Laval and Jacques Cartier. Yet the Minister tells us that he took the contract away from this firm because they would not bind themselves down to a clause which they did not feel they could honestly keep, without inquiring as to what wages they had paid, or what the sanitary conditions were under which the work of their contracts had been performed. I want to ask the hon. gentleman how much he knows now as to the sanitary conditions under which this work was done. The hon. gentleman must remember that, upon sanitary ground and in defence of the workmen's rights and morals, he gave that work to a higher tenderer, and it became his bounden duty to have a rigid inspection, first, as to prices paid, and second, as to the sanitary condition in which the work is done. Has he a statement of the wages paid at present for the work?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have none here.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Has he any comparative statement, showing the prices paid for this work, and other work of the same kind, in the city of Montreal?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Then, on what does the hon. gentleman base his statement, that a fair wage is being paid, or that current rates are being paid? There is no protection for the workmen whatever. If you can compel the contractor, under this clause, to show what wages he is paying, you could compel the contractor who would not adopt this clause, to show what wages he was paying to those who were doing their work at their homes, instead of at the factory. It has been established pretty well that Workman & Co. have not lived up to the condition of their tender and contract. I would not ask the hon. gentleman to accept the statements made, without investigation, but it is the duty of the hon. gentleman to make further investigations in order to ascertain if this firm have lived up to their contract, and if not, and they have been paid, a claim lies against them by the Government. If they have sworn to a statement which is not true, that places them in a very unpleasant position, financially and otherwise. They got their contract on the agreement that the work should be done in a factory. We have evidence that it is not.

Mr. BERGERON. They have no factory at all.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is controverted.

Mr. BERGERON. They have none yet.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. My hon. friend is mistaken.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Why, you have a carter who declares that he carted 2,000 garments. That does not agree with the answer of the Minister, who says there were only a few garments made outside, and those were garments needed in a hurry.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Five hundred was the statement.

Mr. MONTAGUE. But here is the affidavit of a carter who says he carted 2,000. The Postmaster General said that a few garments might be made outside, but I do not think that term would apply to 2,000 or to 4,000.

Mr. BERGERON. And the rest were sent down by express.

Mr. MONTAGUE. If that is the case, the hon. gentleman undoubtedly ought to proceed against these contractors. If he finds out that Workman & Co. have not got a factory, or that they have got a factory which is not capable of doing the work, and that they are doing the work by the very system they agreed not to follow, I wish to know from the Minister whether he will take proceedings against these parties, not only to cancel the contract, but also in the ordinary way in which he would be justified in proceeding against them under the circumstances.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I wish the House to know the conditions that have existed, and which warranted the adoption of the principle in question. I have here a report of Mr. McKenzie King, who investigated this matter.

Mr. WALLACE. Who is he?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He is at present on the staff of Harvard University. He is a graduate of the Toronto University, but not living in Canada at present.

Mr. BERGERON. What does he know about Montreal business?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He was directed by myself to make an inquiry into the sweating system to ascertain whether it had acquired a foothold in Canada. The hon. member for Beauharnois seems to think that there is no sweating in the contract works in Montreal. But he will find that Mr. King gives evidence to the contrary. On page 9 of the report, Mr. King writes as follows :—

For a period of over ten years past, and, in fact, until within a year or so ago, certain firms in Montreal were awarded large contracts for the manufacture of Government clothing for the militia and mounted police. Similar contracts were let to a firm in Toronto, and also to a firm in Hamilton which had, in addition, a large contract for the supply of clothing for the post office letter-carriers. With respect to all these contracts by the firms in question, the system of sub-contracting, as already described, was resorted to. In no case did it appear that the Government contractor had the clothing manufactured on his own premises, or even in such a way as to be subject to his immediate supervision. With the exception of the cutting of the cloth, which is done in most cases almost entirely by machinery, and the making of the button-holes, and, in some cases, the putting on of the buttons, in both of which processes machines are also used, the whole work of manufacture was carried on in places not under the control or supervision of the Government contractors. In the making of practically all of the tunics of the militia and mounted police, the work was done in shops owned by sub-contractors, who had agreed with the Government contractor to make up the goods at a specified price or sum. Practically all of the riding breeches for the artillery, cavalry and mounted infantry were made up in the same way. The trousers, however, some of the tunics, and many of the great-coats, in the making of which less skill is required, were let out direct to women in their homes, to be made up at so much apiece. In the case of the clothing of the post office letter-carriers, the overcoats and tunics were made in his shop by a sub-contractor, while the trousers were made by women in their own homes. Wherever a sub-contractor was given the work, he, in turn, employed a number of hands to work for him. A few of these—very few, in fact—were men; by far the largest number were women and girls. In several instances the sub-contractor was a woman. Wherever the work was given out to persons in their homes it was generally women who were employed. In some cases the different members of the family assisted in the sewing, and in a great many cases, one, two, three or more strangers, usually young women or girls, were brought from the neighbourhood and paid a small sum for their services, by the week or piece. It was no uncommon thing for young women and boys to give their services gratis for a second time to the sub-contractor, either in the home or in the shop, and thus serve a species of apprenticeship on the supposed condition of learning the trade. Others began to work, or continued it, at the rate of a few cents a day.

Mr. WALLACE. What contractors does that refer to?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Mr. King in his report says that he has accompanied this report with the names, but he has not, for obvious reasons, given in this printed volume the names of the particular persons whose dealings he has described.

Mr. WALLACE. Why not?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. For reasons of good taste :

It was no uncommon thing for young women and boys to give their services gratis for a certain time to a sub-contractor, either in the home or in the shop, and thus serve a species of apprenticeship. On the supposed condition of learning the trade, others began to work, or continued it, at the rate of a few cents a day.

Then, on page 11, coming down to the particulars in Montreal, reference is made to Government contracts made with four firms, whose name will doubtless appear in the Public Accounts. He proceeds to say :

The making-up of the cavalry great-coats was let by the firm which received the contract to a sub-contractor, who agreed to make them up for $1 each. He received the cloth already cut, and also the thread, but was required to do all the sewing and pressing in the manufacture of the coat, including the work on the linings, pockets, a large cape, buttons, buckles, hooks and eyes, &c. * * * The making of the button-holes was alone excepted, this being done by machines at less than one cent apiece on the premises of the original contractors. This sub-contractor had his own shop in the city, and, while working on these coats, usually employed from 18 to 20 hands. Seven or eight of these were men, and the rest young women or girls. As was invariably the case, the men received from two to four times the remuneration of the women, although it was generally admitted that the work performed could not have been done any better by the men, while in some cases it was thought that it was done decidedly better by the women.

On page 12, he says :

These wages, it should be mentioned, were the best the men had ever received for any considerable length of time, many of them having commenced at $3 a week, and received a gradual increase as time went on. The wages of the women were much lower. According to the sub-contractor's statement, $3 a week was considered a good wage for a woman, and this was what he himself paid the majority of his female hands. The best paid woman, he said, had received $5.30 a week, the lowest $2 a week; and it was possible, he thought, to secure working girls at $1.50 a week. I was informed by the young woman who was said to have been paid the highest wage that, for the first year she had received $3, for the second year $3.50, and for the third year $4 a week, and that only in her fourth year of service for this sub-contractor had she received $4.50 a week. This was the highest wage that had ever been paid her while in his employ. While two or three of the best paid women had received $4 a week, some had been paid $3, others $2.50, others $2.25, and a number $2 a week. For this wage men and women alike were required to work 60 hours a week, that is, from 7 o'clock in the morning till 12 noon, and from 1 till 6 o'clock in the afternoon for six days of the week.

He then proceeds to speak of the manufacture of the riding breeches for the cavalry, artillery and mounted infantry. These he said were made by sub-contractors :

According to the sub-contractor's statement, some of the women and girls received $1.25, others $2, and the rest $3 a week. They worked by the piece, and if they cared to work overtime they were allowed to do so, and thereby increase their earnings. A number of them, particularly in the summer months, were accustomed to come to the shop at 6 o'clock in the morning and work there till after 9 o'clock at night. Occasionally they brought with them food for both lunch and supper, and ate it in the shop. Others, instead of working overtime in the shop, took the different materials with them to their homes, and worked on them there during the evenings. The most that the best paid hands appear to have made by thus working overtime was about $5 a week. A good many of the females employed in the shop were under twenty years of age; some were scarcely fifteen, while others were thirty, or thereabouts.

Another sub-contractor who made riding breeches was a woman, who wrought in her own home, with the assistance of her daughter, and who, during the busy season, employed three girls, all under 20 years of age. The girls received for the first three months $1.50 each a week, and $2 a week afterwards. They worked six days of the week, and if they quit an hour earlier on Saturdays were obliged to put in extra time on other days. The mother and daughter worked frequently till 11 o'clock at night. No men were employed.

Mr. BERGERON. Why do you not lay the report on the Table of the House?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I want to read it. Mr. King proceeds:

The artillery and infantry great-coats were made up largely by women in their homes. Many of the workers lived in villages at a considerable distance from Montreal. In some instances the work was taken in by farmers' wives who had little to do at certain seasons; in other cases the women appear to have continued to work all the year round. In some instances only the members of the family assisted in making up the garments, but not unfrequently women or girls were employed at a wage of $1 or $2 a week.

Then, on page 15, he says:

Four dollars a week represented the gross earnings of this woman, who wrought daily over fifteen hours out of the twenty-four. What her net earnings were may be estimated by deducting her expenses for rent, fuel, light, &c. I mention this case in particular, because I have reason to believe it to be typical of many such cases in the villages in the neighbourhood of Montreal.

Mr. BERGERON. How much did the hon. Minister pay for that report?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) would do well to give serious consideration to such a subject as this, which so intimately concerns the welfare of the people.

Mr. BERGERON. The whole report is wrong.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman may be indifferent to the interests involved; but, if he is, perhaps he will permit the committee to listen uninterrupted to this report which is written in the interest of the whole community.

Mr. BERGERON. The report is not true. I want to know how much of the public money was paid for it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is not the question to-day, but that can be answered too.

Mr. BERGERON. We want to know that.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend must take this evidence. Now, I ask him to listen to this:

Another woman, who made military great-coats at 40 cents each, had employed four girls to assist her. She usually paid them 25 cents a day if they were first-class sewers.

Is that the cause the hon. gentleman is supporting?

Mr. BERGERON. What I say is that that report is not true.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Now, if the hon. gentleman will be quiet—

Mr. COCHRANE. All this has nothing to do with the question.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I ask my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) if he thinks—

Mr. BERGERON. If the hon. Postmaster General will tell me how much he paid for that report, I will answer him.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think the gentleman was paid $200 for his investigation.

Mr. BERGERON. It is not worth fifty cents, because it is not correct.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is the information he gives—

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the hon. Postmaster General allow me to ask him a question?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not wish to be interrupted.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I was only going to ask a question.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If the hon. gentleman will allow me to finish, then I will answer any questions.

Mr. MONTAGUE. If this report does not apply to the work of the Shorey firm, it is no use, so far as this discussion is concerned.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. At page 15, I find the following:—

She usually paid them 25 cents a day if they were first-class sewers. In other words, under this system of sub-contracting, heavy Government clothing was actually made up at 2½ cents an hour.

Is that the system my hon. friend supports?

The woman herself was in the habit of working till midnight, and, during the summer months, commenced her tasks as early as 5 o'clock in the morning. It was only, she said, when she had hired help that her gross earnings, even when thus working overtime, exceeded $1 a day.

Another female sub-contractor, who had also received 40 cents for each military great-coat with capes, had employed five girls, some of whom were paid $2 and others $1 each a week, which means that the $1 a week workers wrought at the rate of 1½ cents an hour.

At page 28 is the summary. Mr. King says :

1. Practically all of the clothing manufactured for the Government of Canada, under the contract system of the past ten years, has been manufactured for the most part on premises other than those of the Government contractors, and according to one of the three modes of sub-contracting already described. As a result of this, the Government contractors have had no immediate supervision of the contract work, and have, in fact, only assumed a partial responsibility for the methods and condition under which it was performed. In other words, the contractors, while reaping the benefits of the contract in question, have failed to discharge adequately the duties and responsibilities which may not unfairly be regarded as appertaining to the proper carrying out of their obligations.

2. Most of the work on Government clothing has really been executed by women and girls. Where these have been employed in shops, their wages have been, on the whole, exceedingly low ; and where the work was performed in homes the prices paid were often such as to necessitate long hours of labour for a very meagre return. In the case of those employed by sub-contractors, the general rule has been to require a maximum amount of work for a minimum amount of pay. Exceptionally long hours and other objectionable features have marked the course of employment of the workers in the homes, and of not a few in the shops.

The introduction of a sub-contractor who resorts to hired help has involved the necessity of realizing a double profit out of the work of the hands, and, as a consequence of this and the competition of sub-contractors, the wages of the majority of those engaged on Government works have suffered a considerable depression. The wages received will not bear a comparison other than unfavourable with those paid as a fair return for labour in trades or occupations.

The conditions under which much of the Government work has been executed has been such as to prove injurious to the health and well-being of those engaged in it. There has been no practice of adequate inspection of the methods or of the work itself, and, as a consequence, individuals and the public alike have been exposed to continuous risk from the spread of contagion, as well as to harm in other ways.

I need scarcely add that the existence of such conditions, apart from any other attendant evils of the sweating system, constitute emphatically, in the words of your communication, "sufficient grounds for Government interference, in order that future contracts may be performed in a manner free from all such objectionable features."

Now, I give that evidence to the committee, and I present my hon. friend with the report. If these conditions exist, I am sure my hon. friend would join hands in any action trying to put an end to it.

Mr. BERGERON. That is not correct.

Mr. MULOCK.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Can the Postmaster General say that a single word of that evidence applies to the manner in which Shorey & Co. do their business? Because that is the way in which Shorey & Co. do their business, and the prices they paid, and the way in which Workman & Co. do their business, and the prices they paid.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If the House thinks it is proper for me to give the names of the contractors, I will be pleased to turn up the accompanying schedule. It is a year since I read that report, but my recollection is, that he says in that report that, for obvious reasons, he has not printed in the body of that report the names of the contractors to whom he refers.

Mr. BERGERON. He was very prudent, because he could not name any.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He says now that he sends me a list of the contractors, and I have no doubt that in my possession in the department is a list of the contractors in question.

Mr. BERGERON. I wish you would bring them down.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If it is thought proper, I am willing to give the names.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Then, does the hon. gentleman see that the whole onslaught which is made against the sweating system ought to be taken into serious consideration by the Minister of Militia and Defence, because the contract has been done by a firm who has been using this sweating system. I want once more to ask the Minister of Militia and Defence if he finds this to be true, whether he will proceed in the proper way against Workman & Co.?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There is no difficulty in answering my hon. friend's question. The Government has entered into a contract with the firms of Workman and Co., and Sanford & Co., and if it turns out that these firms, or either of them, have been systematically deceiving the Government, that they have no factories, and are not carrying out the contract in accordance with its terms, most assuredly I shall proceed according as the circumstances seem to demand.

Mr. BERGERON. I have only spoken against Workman & Co., not against the others.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I say, both concerns; an inquiry will be made into both cases.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. BERGERON. Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose at six o'clock, the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock), was reading an essay, which I am sorry I have not in my hand just now, written by a gentleman named King. He may be a very nice man; I have nothing to say against him, because I do not know him. He is a professor in a university—

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). At Harvard—not a professor, but he is in some position there.

Mr. BERGERON. And he was paid $200 to find out that the sweating system was in force in Montreal.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I did not say that.

Mr. BERGERON. That is what it means.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I said that he was employed to study the question whether it was in force there or elsewhere.

Mr. BERGERON. According to what my hon. friend (Mr. Mulock) has read he found out that the sweating system was in force in Montreal, but I want to tell my hon. friend there is no such thing in Montreal as the sweating system as it is understood in Ontario. The system in vogue amongst manufacturers like Shorey & Co. and others, is the system that is allowed even by the tailors of Montreal. I can tell my hon. friend that some of the best tailors in Montreal, Gibb & Co., for instance, have their work done outside of their shops altogether. They give their work to women and girls, who do it at their own homes, and there is no other system than that followed in Montreal. All that the hon. Postmaster General has read, and all that he has said, are apart from the subject before us. What is the subject before us to-day? There was a discussion between the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence and myself about a contract which was given for artillery coats and trousers. The hon. Minister did not give the contract to Shorey & Co. because they would not subscribe to a clause in the tender against working under the sweating system, and because they were honourable enough to say that they had their way of doing their work and that they would not change it. They did not get the contract. The contract for coats was given to Mr. Workman, Workman not declaring what Mr. Shorey had been honourable enough to say, that he would continue the system of sending coats outside of his factory.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, Mr. Workman accepted this condition.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend will have to decide that with him later on. The contract was given to Workman at 49 cents a coat more than Shorey would have made it for, Shorey's tender being $6.25 and Workman's $6.74. There is the whole case. Has Workman done his work as the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence expected him to do it or not? I understand that he has not done it in that way. The hon. Minister said that he had instructions from his department that Workman did the contract according to the expectations of the department, that he did the work in his own factory and not outside. I have proved to-day, and it was read this afternoon that 2,000 coats were made outside of Montreal altogether, in Ste. Rose in Laval and in Ste. Thérèse in Terrebonne. I have proved that this work was done just as Mr. Shorey has done it, although Mr. Workman's contract was 49 cents higher. Trousers were also made outside of the shop, and they were sent by express. If my hon. friend desires an investigation he can easily have the express people testify to the fact. The hon. Postmaster General has given us an essay upon the sweating system. That is not the question here at all. I say that there is no such thing as the sweating system in Montreal. The hon. Minister of Militia and Defence said that the reason for not giving these contracts to manufacturers employing people outside of their factories, was that the work was done at ridiculously low prices. It seems to me that the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence and the hon. Postmaster General should be anxious, as trustees of the public in this country, to see that the work is done as cheaply as possible, provided the people are perfectly well satisfied with the remuneration they receive. I am sorry that the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Fortin) is not here. I wanted to ask him a question this afternoon if I had had a chance before six o'clock. He must have received letters from people in his county complaining of the fact that the Government forced public contractors not to have work done, as it has been done in the past, by people living in his county at Ste. Rose, and also by people living in the county of my hon. friend for Terrebonne (Mr. Chauvin). I know that on the 27th of July, the Mayor of Montreal, the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Préfontaine), wrote to some manufacturers in Montreal telling them that he was going to impress upon the Minister of Militia and Defence, and upon other departments, that no such clause as this be inserted in future contracts. Has the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence received any such communication from the Mayor of Montreal?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Not yet.

Mr. BERGERON. Probably the hon. gentleman will receive it, because it was only on the 27th of July that the Mayor of Montreal wrote to the manufacturers that he was going to ask that a change be made in that direction. The hon. member for Laval (Mr. Fortin) must have received some letters, not only from the people who are employed in this work, but from some others who are interested in the matter, in Laval, asking him to impress upon the Government the necessity of striking that clause out of public tenders. I hope the hon. Minister of Militia will take note of this and will find out whether Workman has deceived him or not, and if he has I will leave it to my hon. friend to deal with him. I see that the hon. member for Laval has come in. I want to get his testimony in regard to the work that is done in Laval, for different houses in Montreal, and to ask him whether there is necessity of striking that clause out of public morality, by reason of work being done in the homes of the people in his county. I want also to ask him if he has received letters from people who used to be employed in that work, or from some of the parish priests, asking him to do everything in his power to get that clause struck out of public tenders, representing that it has taken away a great deal of work from the people in his county that has been done by them for many years at a remuneration with which they are perfectly satisfied.

Mr. FORTIN. As the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) has asked me a question, I may say, in the first place, that I did not receive any letters from people, or from curés, in the localities interested. I can very well understand the reason: I understand that there is quite a collection of these letters and affidavits in the hands of the hon. gentleman. As regards the question of danger to morality from people working in their own homes for such firms as Shorey & Co., Workman & Co., and others, I must tell the hon. member what he knows, that, certainly, there is no better place for the people to work in than their own homes. As far as that is concerned, I think my opinion will accord with his own. Although I do not care to discuss the merits of this particular contract, or to discuss the sweating system, of which, indeed, I know very little, I can tell the hon. gentleman something that, perhaps, he is not quite aware of, and is it this, that, although these people choose to remain at home and work for these manufacturers, they complain of the insufficiency of the prices they get from them. I have heard it stated, again and again, that these women and young girls were killing themselves from morning till night earning a bare living. This is the complaint I have heard at Ste. Rose, more particularly, where I live, and where these persons reside and are known to me. They, of course, do that work themselves at home and they are not required to work in the factory. They repeatedly complained of the insufficient amount from those contractors. I do not allude specially or more particularly to Shorey & Co. than to other firms of a similar character in the city of Montreal.

Mr. BERGERON.

Mr. MONK. I do not wish to enter upon any discussion of the sweating system, but in so far as I understand the system, I wish to bear testimony to this, that that system is not practised by Messrs. Shorey. I wish to say further that not only that company, but most of those engaged in similar manufactures in the city of Montreal are a great boon to our people. I challenge the statement of my hon. friend from Laval (Mr. Fortin)—I challenge it at least as far as my own county is concerned—the people are continually complaining of the prices paid to them for the work which these manufacturers caused to be executed by the farmers' families. What the committee must bear in mind is that those who undertake this work are by no means paupers. They are the families, as a rule, of rather well-to-do farmers. The mothers and daughters have considerable leisure time, particularly at certain seasons. And the fact that they should be charged with the execution of this work is a great boon to them. It enables them to acquire habits of thrift. It gives them an interest in their work, and there are a number of manufacturers besides Messrs. Shorey & Co.—manufacturers of shirts and collars, who always distribute their work in the rural counties surrounding the city. The work which is distributed in that county is a source of great gratification to the people there.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Might I ask the Minister what were the terms of the contract as to the sweating system?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The terms of the contract, or what is known as the sweating clause, are as follows:—

With a view to suppressing the sweating system and securing payment to the workmen of fair wages, and the performance of the work under proper sanitary conditions, this contract shall be subject to the following regulations, and strict compliance with the true spirit and intent of the various provisions herein contained is required:—

1. All articles included in this contract shall be made up in the contractor's own factory, and no portion of the work of making up such articles shall be done at the houses of the workpeople. The contract shall not, nor shall any portion thereof, be transferred without the written permission of the Minister of Militia and Defence, and sub-letting of the contract or of any of the work to be performed under the contract, other than that which may be customary in the trades concerned is hereby forbidden.

That is the essential point.

If the contractor violates the condition herein mentioned against sub-letting, he shall not be entitled to receive any payment under the contract for work done by the sub-contractor, and the Minister of Militia and Defence may refuse to accept any work performed by a sub-contractor in violation of the prohibition herein contained against sub-letting.

The factory, and the work there being performed under this contract, shall at all reasonable times be open to inspection by persons therefor authorized in writing by the Minister of Militia and Defence.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the hon. Minister tell us where this factory is ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have not inspected it. There are only two or three more points which I propose to present in reference to this matter, and one is that since I left here at six o'clock, I saw the officer of my department, who I stated a few days ago when my main Estimates were up for discussion had inspected the work of the factory. He heard the statement made this afternoon by my hon. friend and that officer says that he has been in that factory several times. That it is a large, capacious, light, well ventilated and healthy factory; that it is larger than Sanford's factory, against whom my hon. friends seem to have no objection. That is the statement made by an officer in my department who was not appointed by me, whom I found in the department, and who I believe to be a thoroughly upright man, and he made that statement to me deliberately since we left this Chamber at six o'clock. I thought I could not be mistaken. I stated very positively that there was a factory, that it was well equipped, and that I believed clothing was being made in that factory, and to make assurance doubly sure, I spoke to this officer.

Mr. BERGERON. Who is this officer ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. His name is McCann. I never saw the factory, I had no occasion to go to the factory, but I asked him about it. It is diagonally opposite the head office of Workman & Co., where his goods are sold. That is the statement which I make. I cannot make it more specific than that. Now, with regard to the wages paid I have to say this, that every employee in the Workman establishment is a member of the trades union, and that the wages paid are the wages fixed by that union. Here is a statutory declaration of the wages paid :

Foreman and superintendent shall be paid $14 weekly. Fitters, open and trimming work for hands and arranging linings for hands to commence work, $8 and $10. Main operators on the machine paid by the piece, earned weekly from $10 to $20.

I may say here that Mr. McCann has told me that at his last inspection he saw a young woman there who told him that sometimes she earns more than $9 a week. That is in pretty strong contrast to the statement read to my hon. friend the Postmaster General of four girls earning from $2.50 to $4 or $5 a week under the old system.

Pressers to assist machine operators, same press belts, paid by the week, $7 ;—

Mr. MONTAGUE. What report are you reading from ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am reading from Mr. Workman's sworn affidavit.

—tellers and girls employed to fit coats and for basting lining, paid by the week, $3 to $4.50 ; pressers for coats and belts, paid by the piece, earn weekly $10 to $12 ; finishers, girls employed for sewing on buttons, &c., earn weekly $3 to $4 ; examiners, after coats are entirely finished in shop, earn weekly $12 to $15 ; button-hole makers, paid by the week, earn $10 to $12, and girl assistants, $3 to $4.50. Special examiner, before packing, $12 ; packers and workers, $10. Our factory flats are two in number, well-lighted back and front, are 25 feet wide, 100 feet deep, ceiling 12 feet high, properly arranged for the comfort of the hands, machines running by electricity,—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BERGERON. It requires an investigation, because my information is quite the reverse. I read affidavits, too.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Is it to be assumed that an affidavit made by a respectable manufacturer in the city of Montreal is not to be considered worth as much as the affidavits which my hon. friend read ? I do not understand that he read any affidavit stating that there was no factory in existence. That was his own statement. He did not say he had an affidavit to that effect ; but he took the responsibility, as a member of Parliament, of stating on the floor of this House that the Workman Company, of Montreal, had no factory whatever.

Mr. BERGERON. Yes.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The hon. gentleman repeats it now ?

Mr. BERGERON. Yes.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (reading) :

—comfortably heated, closets, &c. We open our factory at 7.30, close at 6 p.m., allowing one hour for meals. Total number of hands employed at present is about 40. Our factory is located at 1857 Notre Dame Street, nearly opposite our main premises.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the hon. gentleman tell us how many the Sanford Company employ ? He told us that the Workman factory was larger than the Sanford factory.

Mr. WALLACE. I can tell the hon. gentleman that the Sanford Company have from 1,500 to 1,700 employees.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. They are engaged in other work. Workman & Co. do the same. I want to say to my hon. friend from Beauharnois that the Workman Company, I am informed, have contracts with the city of Montreal to make clothing for the firemen. They have also contracts with the Electric Tramway Company to make the clothing for their employees. Now, is it not possible, and even probable, that the affidavits read by my hon. friend may have referred to the clothing made under these contracts, for military clothing? I think the hon. gentleman ought at least to be willing to give the benefit of the doubt to this firm. I can scarcely understand why my hon. friend seems determined to pursue Workman & Co. with such malignity as he has done for some time past. I can understand his friendship for the Messrs. Shorey; but, surely, he is not persecuting the Workman people because they happen to be Liberals and the Shoreys Conservatives.

Mr. BERGERON. No; I want to help my hon. friend to see that his aims are carried out.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (reading):

The special examining, stamping and packing is done at our main store, where also the cutting is done by cutters employed at a salary of $12 to $14 weekly, and superintended by our regular foreman; that in all other respects the provisions of the said contract have been observed, and the work performed in the manner provided and called for in the said contract.

And I make this solemn declaration, conscientiously believing it to be true, knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath, by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act, 1898.

MARK WORKMAN.

This is dated the 12th of January, 1899. Now, a good deal has been said as to the general principle we have adopted, which is opposed to the sweating system. I do not propose to enter into a discussion of that matter, but I repeat what I said earlier in the discussion, that, after having gone carefully into the question with my hon. friend the Postmaster General, who took special pains to inform himself in this matter, I was satisfied that he had made out a case, and that it was in the interest of the working people, from a sanitary stand-point, and a material stand-point, and to increase their wages, that we should adopt this clause in our contract, opposed to the sweating system. My hon. friend from Beauharnois is quite sure that there is no such thing as the sweating system in or about Montreal. As to that, he appealed to my hon. friend from Laval (Mr. Fortin), who certainly did not bear him out, because my hon. friend said that there were complaints on every hand as to the low rate of wages paid to people who were doing this work; and I believe that the statistics will show that in that neighbourhood there are a great many deaths, and a great deal of distress and sickness, due to the fact that these people work too many hours in their homes, staying in the house all day, and not getting proper exercise, in order to get the miserable pittance allowed to them by the manufacturers. I do not say that Mr. Shorey differs in this respect from other men. Neither did the hon. member for Beauharnois say that Mr. Workman in that respect differed from Mr. Shorey, or paid less wages. I do say that I believe that system has the effect of reducing the rate of wages paid to the people who do the work. Why is it that Mr. Shorey offers, as my hon. friend claims, to do the work at a lower price than anybody else? He does it because he gets the work done at a lower price.

Mr. FOSTER. If that be so, I would like the Minister to go through many of the columns in which the tender of Mr. Shorey was higher. Why was it higher in those cases? Because he was paying higher wages, according to the argument of my hon. friend.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. My hon. friend from York claimed that Mr. Shorey's price was lower in almost every instance.

Mr. FOSTER. No; I said that in some he was lower, and in others he was not.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I understood that the point of the hon. gentleman was that the country was losing a great deal of money by giving the contract in the way we did in order to adopt the system we insisted on being followed.

Mr. BERGERON. So you did, you lost $1,960.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Well, the country can stand the loss, if we remove from the working people the danger of sickness and obtain for them higher wages. I think I have fairly well justified the course I have pursued. The hon. gentleman has made certain charges which I promised to investigate so as to see whether his statement be true that the clothes are not made in a factory but somewhere else. But that Mr. Workman has a factory I think there can be no question. I cannot conceive it possible that a large manufacturer, such as he is, a man of means, occupying the position he does in the city of Montreal, would concoct such a tissue of falsehoods as he would be convicted of concocting if my hon. friend's statement were true.

Mr. BERGERON. No doubt my hon. friend states what he is convinced is true, and it is not a question between he and me, but between his informers and those who are giving me the information. I do not know Mr. Workman at all, but I have every reason to believe that he is the gentleman who is down in the directory as Mr. Mark Workman, merchant tailor, of the Mammoth Clothing House, Montreal. If he has a factory, he must have built since a few days. He is not a manufacturer but purely and simply a merchant tailor, and no doubt a very respectable man.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. A merchant tailor is a manufacturer.

Mr. BERGERON. Not in the sense we are describing one at present, and my hon. friend knows what I mean. He is not a large manufacturer like the Sanford Company.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. He has the contract for the supply of clothing for the firemen of Montreal and the employees of the Electric Tramway.

Mr. BERGERON. That may be, and if he has the contract for the firemen it is only lately, because there has been a great fight in the city council of Montreal over this matter, and the contract was taken away from the one who had it. Mr. Charlebois used to be the man who made the clothes for the police and firemen.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Mr. Charlebois was not a manufacturer.

Mr. BERGERON. Neither is the other. They both do the same kind of business. We are here to perform a public duty, and it is not a question of casting aspersions on Mr. Workman or of booming Mr. Workman, or Shorey & Company. I am not here to boom Shorey & Company. They have been manufacturers for the last fifty years and their standing is very good. It is not a question of being in favour of or against Mr. Workman, but of criticising this Government for having paid him for doing certain work which could have been done at a cheaper rate by another man. My hon. friend says he could not understand how a man like Mr. Workman could give an affidavit if he has not a large factory where he employs some forty working people, a factory larger than that of the Sanford Company in Hamilton.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon, I did not say that. What I said was that the factory where the military clothing is being made by Mr. Workman is a larger room than that which the Sanford Company use for the manufacture of military clothes.

Mr. BERGERON. Mr. Workman keeps a store at 1880 Notre Dame Street, and the large room of which my hon. friend speaks of is on the other side of the street, and not at all on the premises occupied by Mr. Workman.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is opposite them.

Mr. BERGERON. When the hon. gentleman talks about the sweating system, does he not mean that under that system the employees are not employed in the factory itself but somewhere else?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That is a factory itself.

Mr. BERGERON. If Mr. Workman rents a room five or six blocks away from his premises, would you call that employing men in his own factory?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Certainly.

Mr. BERGERON. Where is the difference between renting a room a few blocks away from the store and having the military clothing made there or renting a room in the parish of Ste. Rose?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is all a question of the construction of the agreement.

Mr. BERGERON. It is purely a question whether the one is a Grit and the other a Conservative. My hon. friend has stated that in this matter he was actuated by a regard for the public good, but let me read for the information of the House a few declarations which I have in my hand and which I set against the affidavit of Mr. Workman that everything he supplied has been made in this factory at such a number opposite his store on Notre Dame Street:

Ste. Rose, 27th July, 1899.

I have made for Mr. M. Workman, of Montreal, about 100 military great-coats since the 1st November, 1898.

MRS. ALPHONSE RENAUD.

H. M. Dart and M. Clouthier, witnesses.

Ste. Rose, 27th July, 1899.

I have made for Mr. M. Workman, of Montreal, 12 military great-coats since the 1st November, 1898.

CLEOPHILE DESJARDINS.

H. M. Dart and M. Clouthier, witnesses.

Ste. Rose, 27th July, 1899.

I have made for Mr. M. Workman, of Montreal, 36 military great-coats since the 1st November, 1898.

CELINERE FORTIN.

H. M. Dart and M. Clouthier, witnesses.

Ste. Rose, 27th July, 1899.

I have made for Mr. M. Workman, of Montreal, 48 military great-coats since the 1st November, 1898.

ROSE DESJARDINS.

H. M. Dart and M. Clouthier, witnesses.

Ste. Rose, 27th July, 1899.

I have made for Mr. M. Workman, of Montreal, 74 military great-coats since the 1st November, 1898.

ANNA DESJARDINS.

H. M. Dart and M. Clouthier, witnesses.

Ste. Thérèse, 27th July, 1899.

I have made for Mr. M. Workman, of Montreal, about 100 military great-coats since the 1st November, 1898.

ARTHUR CHARRON.

H. M. Dart and M. Clouthier, witnesses.

Ste. Rose, 27th July, 1899.

I have made for Mr. M. Workman, of Montreal, since the 1st November, 1898, about 100 military great-coats.

MADAME PAUL GAGNON.

H. M. Dart and M. Clouthier, witnesses.

Ste. Thérèse, 27th July, 1899.

I have made for Mr. M. Workman, of Montreal, 150 pairs military pants since the 1st November, 1898.

DAME D. LABONTE.

H. M. Dart and M. Clouthier, witnesses.

Ste. Thérèse, 27th July, 1899.

I have made for Mr. M. Workman, of Montreal, 150 pairs military pants since the 1st November, 1898.

DAME VICTOR LABONTE.

H. M. Dart and M. Clouthier, witnesses.

Ste. Thérèse, 27th July, 1899.

I have made for Mr. M. Workman, of Montreal, since the 1st November last, 171 pairs of military pants.

AMANDA LABONTE.

H. M. Dart and M. Clouthier, witnesses.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have already told my hon. friend that those pants were a special order, not included in the contract.

Mr. BERGERON. How does the hon. gentleman know that the ones I am reading are the ones not included or not?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. They were the only ones made. He made very few. His principal work was overcoats.

Mr. BERGERON. There were 471 pairs of trousers made in the parishes of Ste. Rose and Ste. Thérèse and 576 overcoats.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The number of coats you read of were 470.

Mr. FOSTER. The number would not make any difference in the principle.

Mr. BERGERON. These people who have signed these declarations are all respectable people. I do not know them, but if my hon. friend has an investigation he can have them brought before the committee and swear them, or he can ask his neighbour from Laval (Mr. Fortin) whether these are respectable people or not. I do not think they would sign these affidavits unless they were convinced they were true.

Mr. FORTIN. Hear, hear.

Mr. BERGERON. There was a carter who carried the coats. Here is what the carter says who carted the coats:

Montreal, 28th July, 1899.

I carted for Mr. M. Workman, of this city, about 2,000 military great-coats since 1st November, 1898, to different work-people in the parish of Ste. Rose. I also carted these same coats.

Mr. BERGERON.

back to and delivered them to the said Mr. M. Workman, 1888 Notre Dame Street.

CALIXTE BELANGER.

There is the case. I put it as I have it. It is my duty to lay these things before the Minister of Militia and the House, and I think he should be well satisfied to have these things brought before him.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Certainly. I am not finding any fault.

Mr. BERGERON. Unless these are forgeries, the facts show that there has been a bold violation of the contract, so that $1,960 of public money has been paid to Mr. Workman for nothing. So far as the sweating system is concerned, I repeat, that we have no such thing in Montreal—no such thing as sub-letting contracts, as has been stated by that report read by the Postmaster General. My hon. friend from Laval (Mr. Fortin), I suppose, in his anxiety to say nothing against the Government which he supports, will not say anything for or against the sweating system; and he probably knows that this may be brought against him in his county, because the people there are clamouring for the work. If the remuneration were such a pittance as has been said, they would not be writing to everybody to prevent such a system as the hon. Minister of Militia says should be carried out. They need the work, they like it, and they are satisfied with the remuneration they receive. The only thing the hon. gentleman will be able to say in his own defence is to tell the people: You are not paid enough. That always takes with the people. But, as a matter of fact, the people are satisfied with the money received, and want to work.

Mr. FORTIN. I have answered the question put by my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) to help him. I think he should accept my statement as true.

Mr. ROSAMOND. May I ask is the anti-sweating clause in these contracts similar to the anti-sweating clause in the contracts made by the British Government?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. My hon. friend the Postmaster General can probably answer that question, as he drew the clause.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think that this corresponds substantially with the clause in the British contracts. I have the report of the House of Commons on the subject. I have not it at hand at the moment; but if my hon. friend desires it, I will bring it, and he can have the opportunity of perusing it.

Mr. ROSAMOND. I am inclined to approve of the clause in the contract, so far as the sweating system is concerned. I cannot say that I quite agree with my hon.

friends on this side who have spoken against the clause; but I had no idea the clause was as severe as it appears from what has been read. I hardly think I should be inclined to make it quite so strict. My idea of the sweating system is, that the evil lies largely in the sub-letting of contracts by the Government contractor, and I think that is really what the Government ought to guard against. If the Government did that, and followed up the letting of the contract by seeing that the contractor carries it out strictly, they would, to my mind, be doing very good work. The discussion between the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) and the hon. Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden) seems to me to be upon a question whether the contractors, Workman & Co. had fulfilled their contract or not. The hon. member for Beauharnois has made some very strong statements, followed up by affidavits, and it seems to me to be the duty of the Government to see whether the statements and affidavits which are submitted by him, are correct or not. If they are correct, certainly the contractor has not been living up to his contract. While I am on my feet, I may say a word with reference to what the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) said, in speaking of this contract system and the anti-sweating system. I must take exception to what the hon. gentleman said with regard to factories. He used the expression "heated factories." I have no hesitation in saying that the workers in factories of that kind are in much better conditions, so far as health is concerned, than if working in small rooms. "Heated factories" is not a term, I think, that ought to be applied to them. They are large, airy, roomy, and very much better fitted for working in than are the small rooms of dwelling-houses. The small rooms of dwelling houses are more likely to be heated and unhealthy for work of that kind than are factories. I certainly do approve of the anti-sweating clause in the contract, if not carried quite so far.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. While I cannot speak with absolute positiveness as to the conditions, yet, since my hon. friend put the question, I am able to answer, I am sure, with absolute accuracy, that the conditions in the contract which required that the wages paid shall be "current wages paid to competent workmen in the district," is substantially the condition adopted by the Imperial Government. I do not desire to enter into the controversial questions of fact that have been interjected into this discussion, and which, perhaps, form a very important part of this question. I think it is only fair that the hon. member for Beauharnois should, in the presence of the explanations given, reserve, or in fact withdraw, his criticisms, until he can disprove the statements made by the hon. Minister. The Minister states that a small percentage, about one-eighth, of the overcoats had been made not strictly under the anti-sweating conditions, because they were urgently required, and the contractor had not provided the necessary equipment. My hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) read the affidavit of a carter to prove that some 2,000 great-coats had been carted around. The affidavit proves nothing, except that these great-coats were carted. Of course, these coats could be carted from shop to shop. He carted the manufactured goods. We have nothing to do with them after they are manufactured.

Mr. BERGERON. No, he carted them over to different parties in the place where the coats were made, then he brought them back.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is not the statement made to the House. The statement was read that he carted so many coats, manufactured, of course.

Mr. FOSTER. The statement is a double one. The statement was that he carried 2,000 of those military coats to the homes in St. Rose, and that he carted them back again after they were made.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon; there is no reference whatever to the making in the statement; the hon. gentleman read nothing about the making.

Mr. FOSTER. All I can say is that is what I read.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I did not have a chance of reading the statement, I heard it quoted from, and heard my hon. friend read that he carted that number of coats. However, the hon. member for Beauharnois complains, and this is the gravamen of his charge, that the Government paid nearly $2,000 more for these coats than was necessary; that under the sweating system they could have been obtained so much cheaper. Therefore, the issue between us now is whether it was the duty of the Government to have acquired them at the cheapest possible price at which men and women can live or starve, or to have acquired them at a higher price. That is the issue between us, and I accept that issue.

Mr. BERGERON. That is not the issue.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is the issue my hon. friend has thrown down in this House.

Mr. BERGERON. No, no.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, I took down the hon. gentleman's words. He complains that we gave a contract to Mr. Workman when the work could have been done cheaper. That is what the hon. gentleman says.

Mr. BERGERON. Yes.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That simply means one thing, that under this system we are pledged to pay current wages to competent men, and that caused the price to be a little more. Is this country prepared to pay current prices, or do we wish to continue the old system of grinding the lives out of these working people? That is the issue presented to the House, and the House will understand where the hon. gentleman is upon this issue. The country will make no mistake whatever in discovering the significance of it.

Mr. FOSTER. The country will know where we both stand.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am surprised that the ex-Minister of Finance cannot receive my criticism in patience. I wish now to refer to the hon. member for Lanark, who addressed himself to the subject in a fair way, and has practically approved the whole system. He approved the principle whereby sub-letting is prevented, because sub-letting makes the sweating system possible. Therefore, if it is recognized that we shall adopt all conditions necessary in order to prevent the sweating system, we must adopt the conditions against sub-letting, or against any system that permits the manufacture to be carried out in that way or would involve the application of the sweating system. Now, I would like to know how you can prevent sub-letting the work if it is sent out in piecework all over the country. The only practical way by which you can enforce the anti-sweating condition is to control the manufacture and not permit sub-letting; also to secure that the manufacture will take place under your own eye. But that cannot take place unless in centres, or in places under the control of the manufacturer himself, or the contractor himself, so that he can pledge his solemn oath that the work was conducted in the manner required, and that he paid current wages to the workingmen who did this work. For that reason it becomes necessary in order to secure the payment of fair wages, that there shall be centres of manufacture, and it is also necessary for the other reasons that my hon. friend referred to, the health of the operatives, and that satisfactory premises shall be provided for that purpose. That means endorsing the system which Mr. King shows has obtained not merely in Montreal but in Toronto and Hamilton, as my hon. friend will find according to the testimony given in that report. Mr. King took a long time, he visited many points in this country and has got particulars. I say the question is whether we shall adopt the views of the member for Beauharnois and permit the system of manufacture whereby women are paid between one and two cents an hour for labour, or shall we adopt a system whereby they can get enough wages to earn a reasonable livelihood. I think the country will be perfectly satisfied with the way we have spent this $2,000, or any other sum if it has the effect of levelling up wages, or setting an example which may have the effect of levelling up the rate of wages throughout the country. I do not speak for others on this question, but speaking for myself I believe it would be a wise thing in the interests of the country if every bit of Government work that is to be issued were, if possible, issued under similar conditions, so as to prevent sub-letting whereby contractors are able to make several profits out of the labour of the workingmen. In that case the middlemen will be cut out, the profit that goes to the middlemen will go to the workingmen, they will be the gainers, and the middlemen will disappear altogether. Now, is that not in the interests of this country? When we discussed this question before, I expressed a hope, and I now repeat that hope, that with a more full understanding of the question, all the members of this House would come to the view that this provision is a wise one, and one that should be extended instead of being adversely criticised. I believe the member for Beauharnois has criticised it more out of loyalty to a friend who did not get the contract, than from a study of the subject and a conviction that the principles involved here are not in the public interest.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend does not understand the question at all. I never saw in my life a gentleman so clever as my hon. friend in surrounding a question with cobwebs. The whole question is very simple. I am not talking against the workingmen of this country for whom my hon. friend wishes to be known as the champion. The Minister of Militia and Defence invited tenders to make military great-coats, and Mr. Shorey of Montreal, said he was ready to tender, and he tendered at a lower price than any other tenderer in the country; he tendered for great-coats at 49 cents lower than anybody else. He said: If you exact from me an adherence to that clause in your tender that will prevent me from doing our work in our usual way, the way we have been doing it for the last 20 or 30 years, that is, sending it out to different parishes around Montreal, we cannot take the contract at that price.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. At any price, he could not do it at all.

Mr. BERGERON. The Minister of Militia and Defence puts him aside, he does not consider his tender. What I complain of now is that my hon. friend gives the contract to Mr. Workman, of Montreal. Well, I say that Mr. Workman, of Montreal, fulfilled this contract in the same way that Mr. Shorey had declared that he would do it, and for saying which he was put aside. It is not a question as to whether we were giving a high price to the workmen of this country or not.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman said that we should have had the work done cheaper.

Mr. BERGERON. I am as much in favour of giving a good price to the man who does the work as the hon. Postmaster General is, but the question is: Why was the contract taken away from Shorey, who would have done the work for $1,960 less, and given to Workman, although he did it in the same way that Shorey was to do it?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is not correct.

Mr. BERGERON. That is correct, and that is why I say the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence should have an investigation. Let the hon. Minister have an investigation and he will find out. What does Belanger say? Belanger says:

I carted for Mr. M. Workman, of this city, about 2,000 military great-coats since the 1st of November, 1898, to different work-people in the parish of Ste. Rose;—

Does my hon. friend think that he was doing this to amuse himself? He says:

—I also carted these same coats back to and delivered them to the said Mr. M. Workman, 1888 Notre Dame Street.

Not at the factory of which my hon. friend spoke a moment ago.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It does not show they were made there. My hon. friend said they were taken there to be made.

Mr. BERGERON. I said so and I say it again.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is not in that document.

Mr. BERGERON. That man will swear that he carted them and he will give us his explanation as to why he carted them. There would be no sense in a man promenading between Montreal and Ste. Rose just to get fresh air. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence to give the number of the street where the new factory is.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No. 1857.

Mr. BERGERON. When was the contract given?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. On the 10th of January, 1899.

Mr. BERGERON. Well, I have here the directory of the city of Montreal for the year 1898-99, and No. 1857 is blank.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That was printed long before 1899.

Mr. BERGERON. Well, then, what does it prove?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). It was printed in 1898.

Mr. BERGERON. This was printed in July last year. What does it prove? I leave it to the hon. Postmaster General to say whether his theory in regard to the sweating system—

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Does the hon. gentleman propose to prove by a book, printed in 1898, that a certain building did not exist in 1899?

Mr. BERGERON. I do not say that. There is a house at No. 1857, but there is nobody in it. My contention is that Workman has no factory, never had a factory, and that, probably, when he heard of the discussion we had a month ago, he leased a room at No. 1857 and call that his factory. I would ask my hon. friend if that is what he would understand by a factory. He professes not to be working according to the sweating system because he leases a room across the street and calls it his factory.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am sure the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) does not desire to misrepresent anybody. This declaration was made by Mr. Workman on the 11th of January, 1899, before David Robertson, justice of the peace and a commissioner for taking affidavits, and in it he states that he has a factory, describes the size of the room and gives these particulars that I have quoted.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the size of the room?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. 100 by 25 feet.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. And he says that all his work is done there.

Mr. BERGERON. This is another reason why my hon. friend should investigate the whole case.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The inspector is here. The man who knows all about the factory of his own knowledge, and has been there, over and over again, is on the floor of this House now, and if he were permitted to speak, he could tell the hon. gentleman what he has seen. He is a reputable officer of my department and a gentleman who has been in that department for years.

Mr. FOSTER. When did he inspect the factory?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. In March.

Mr. FOSTER. March of this year?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Quite so.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Two months after the contract was made.

Mr. BERGERON. It is as clear as day now. The contract was made last fall.

Mr. FOSTER. When was the contract made?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. On the 10th of January, 1899.

Mr. BERGERON. All these coats and trousers were made in different parishes out of the city of Montreal, and Workman leased that property, I suppose, about two or three months ago, and now declares that it is his factory, when, as a matter of fact, his work was not done as it should have been done there, and my hon. friend is in duty bound to have the whole thing investigated.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The hon. gentleman's case has broken down lamentably. I have been thinking over the matter since the discussion came up, and I may explain, in addition to what I have stated, that both Sanford and Workman firms, who got contracts, stated that they must have time to get ready to do this work under the new system. Mr. W. H. Sanford himself told me that it would be necessary to have additional rooms. We gave both Sanford and Workman additional time. The advertisements were published in the autumn, and before we entered into the contract, we were satisfied that they were in a position to comply with the contract literally. That contract was not made until Mr. Workman had completed his factory, put in electric plant and shown that he was in every way in a position to carry on the work. We found that we needed 500 overcoats, and as we could not wait until this condition of the contract could be complied with, we gave him these coats to make, and we gave an order to the Sanford firm to be made in the same way. We had to have this work done; we could not wait to have it done in the way that the contract stipulated. The hon. member for Beauharnois seems to have shifted his ground since six o'clock. This afternoon the gravamen of the charge was that we had lost some $1,900 or $2,000. Since the hon. Postmaster General made his spirited observations, in which he brought the thing to a straight issue as between the sweating system and the improved system that we have appointed, the hon. member for Beauharnois has receded from the ground he took this afternoon.

Mr. BERGERON. Not at all. I have not receded. I have not changed one word of what I said. I say the Government have lost $1,960.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Why is it that we have lost $1,900?

Mr. BORDEN (King's).

Mr. BERGERON. Because Shorey & Co. would have done the work the same as Workman & Co. for $1,960 less.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Because we refused to continue the sweating system.

Mr. BERGERON. Not at all.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. BERGERON. If my hon. friend has refused—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. BERGERON. If my hon. friend allows me to speak, why will not the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) allow me?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. If the country has lost $1,900, the labouring people of Montreal have increased their wages by that amount, and they have that money in their pockets. The people of Canada at large will not hesitate to pay that, or even more, as the hon. Postmaster General has said, in order to do away with the vicious system which the hon. member for Beauharnois is here to-day as the advocate of.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the hon. gentleman defending now?

Mr. ROSAMOND. Mr. Chairman, it strikes me that the question is as to whether that $1,960 has gone into the hands of the workmen or not. That seems to be the whole question. If the contention of the hon. member for Beauharnois is right, I think that $1,960 must have gone into the pockets of the contractors. That is really the point in dispute, and it is the question that we have to solve in this case. The question is, as to whether Workman & Co. have done this work in their own factory or sent it out to Ste. Rose, or Ste. Thérèse, or other places, in order to have the work done. If they did that, they violated the spirit of the contract. If they did the work in their own factories, then the workmen have probably got the $1,960, but I do not think there is really any necessity for disputing about it. The facts of the case ought to be inquired into by the Minister.

Mr. BERGERON. I have not changed at all what I said before dinner and during the time we have been discussing this matter. I say we have lost $1,960. This money has gone into the pockets of the people working in the country, in the very same way that Shorey had done. The whole story is, that it was taken away from Shorey & Co. because they were Conservatives, and given to Workman because he is a Liberal.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) is forgetting what he said. He stated that the Government could have got this work done cheaper; and he further added, that the people were perfectly satisfied with the wages that had been paid to them, and for that reason he objects to the system that we are endeavouring to introduce, whereby the sub-letting and lower wages consequently may be prevented. Now, I take issue with him. I do not believe that the people, although they could work for starvation wages under the sub-letting system, are in any way satisfied with it. They may take the wages under a sort of compulsion, but that they are satisfied with them, I deny, and if they are satisfied with them, it is a satisfaction of necessity, and not the satisfaction that would arise if they were free to refuse such wages. The wages that have been paid to workmen under contracts in which we have introduced the anti-sweating conditions, if Mr. King's report is correct—and it seems to me to be correct—have been far greater than the wages paid by Government contractors for many years past. They have not been such wages as competent wages should receive. We take our stand against that low system of sub-letting, with the view of securing payment of current wages to competent workmen.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend the Postmaster General is most unfair in one respect, and if it were not in the House of Commons, I would say it was most unstatesmanlike. I may say that if it were on the platform, I would say that it was the part of a demagogue. Will my hon. friend the Postmaster General tell me what wages were paid by Mr. Workman to the people who made those military great-coats under the contract with the Minister of Militia?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend the Minister of Militia read an affidavit upon that point.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister of Militia and Defence read no such figures. He has not such figures under his hand. If these affidavits are true—and we have no right to say they are not true—some 500 of these great-coats were made in Ste. Rose by people in their own homes. They would have been done by Mr. Shorey in the homes of the people. The argument of my hon. friend is, that lower wages would have been paid in the case of Mr. Shorey having them done in the homes of Ste. Thérèse and Ste. Rose, than was paid in the actual making of them by Mr. Workman, who had at least 2,000 of them made in those same homes, according to these affidavits. Are not these affidavits from a dozen persons, whose respectability is vouched for by the man who knows them, the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Fortin), who sits in this House? Are not those as good as Mr. Workman's? Mr. Workman's is a general affidavit, and these are special affidavits, and that is the difference between them. The Postmaster General has not one scintilla of evidence to base that appeal upon, namely, that the wages paid by Mr. Workman for the making of those great-coats was one cent more than paid by Mr. Shorey under his contract. What is his reason? His reasoning is, that Mr. Shorey would not have paid lower than Mr. Workman, unless he paid sweating wages. That is the argument. That is the assertion. But anybody knows that any one can make a general statement of that kind, and anybody knows that the Postmaster General did not attempt to prove it. Why, it is disproved on their own grounds, because Mr. Shorey must have been paying sweating wages because his tender was less by 49 cents per coat. In these same tenders Mr. Workman is lower in nine out of ten of those articles than Mr. Shorey, and, by the very same reasoning of the Postmaster General, Mr. Workman must have been paying sweating wages. Now, Sir, that is the kind of argument upon which my hon. friend the Postmaster General tried to base an appeal to the people, and in which my hon. friend the Minister of Militia was foolish enough to follow him. He got his great-coats done in Ste. Rose at the homes of the people, and the Postmaster General said that these great-coats were taken out to Ste. Rose, 12 or 15 miles distant, and, being mentioned as coats, and then were brought back as ready-made, that this carter had been carting them round the workingmen's homes at Ste. Rose for the purpose of taking fresh air. That is unworthy of a man who is chancellor of the university, that is unworthy of a man who instituted penny postage, that is altogether unworthy of a man who took up a scheme after it was laid in its foundations by a party opposed to him, and now claims all the credit for himself. That is unworthy of a man who, having opposed a fast-line service, tooth and nail, in this House, now takes credit for a 20-knot service. That is unworthy of the men, and of the man, who, when on this side of the House, brought in a Bill to lower the salary of the Governor General, supported it, and was applauded by his own party. Now he does this to espouse the cause of the labouring man, but he cannot deceive the people. They have taken his measure on these other subjects, in which he has posed to the gallery, and they will not be again deceived.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend endeavours to deal with the general subject that I tried to discuss, by supposing that I was addressing myself as to the facts as to Mr. Workman's contract. I expressly stated that I did not intend to discuss the details, for I am not familiar with the controversial side of this issue. My hon. friend the Minister of Militia makes certain statements. They are contradicted. The hon. member for Beauharnois declares that the working people were perfectly satisfied with the wages that were being paid to them under the former system.

Mr. BERGERON. Will my hon. friend allow me one word? My hon. friend is not just in that statement, though I do not suppose he wants to be unjust to me. That is not the way I put it. In answer to the hon. member for Laval, who said that these people were clamouring that they were not paid enough, I said that they must be satisfied with what they got, whether it is high or low, because evidently they are afraid that even what they are receiving will be taken away from them under the regulation the Minister of Militia has established. I did not say that they are perfectly well satisfied with their price, because I am sure that if you went through the parishes, they would all say they would like to get more; but they do not want to lose what they have.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If the hon. gentleman says that his words meant that, I accept his statement; but what he said was that the people were perfectly satisfied with the wages they had to-day. I draw from that the conclusion that the hon. gentleman prefers the old system to the one with the checks which we have imposed. If that is what the hon. gentleman means, I take issue with him. If he simply refers to some isolated cases, that is another thing. I discussed the general question, and, because I was doing so, the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster), not being able to address himself to that proposition and discuss it logically, seeks to wander into other avenues. We are quite capable of discussing other issues, and even discussing the hon. gentleman and his record, if necessary; but there are certain seasons when such discussions are in order, and certain seasons when they are out of order. I am discussing the proposition before the Chair, and if the hon. member for Beauharnois spoke in ambiguous language, and did not desire a larger meaning to be taken from his words than he now seeks to give to them, I, of course, accept his statement. I would be the last one to try to put a member in a wrong position. We may all at times fail to express our intentions clearly; but if any hon. gentleman says that he is satisfied with the old system of wages, and objects to our endeavouring to place safeguards on Government work, then we are at issue with him.

Mr. BERGERON. Just one word, and I am finished. We are getting away from the point. If it is proved to the satisfaction of my hon. friend, before a committee or anywhere else, that Mr. Workman had his contract fulfilled in the way that Mr. Shorey would have done it, by these people working in the country, will my hon. friend then say that the law is observed and the contract carried out as it should be?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will allow me to direct a little attention to the proposition he has now suggested as a proper matter for inquiry. I take the statements which he has read to the House, and reading them, I do not come to the conclusion which he has come to, nor do I think they warrant the inference he has drawn. Reading these statements, I find that they had no reference, necessarily, on the face of them, to any work that was done in performance of the contract which is now in question. What is the hon. gentleman's attack? It is that my hon. colleague the Minister of Militia has made a contract under which the country has sustained a loss of $1,900 or $2,000, when we could have had this work done at a price that much lower. He attacks the Minister of Militia for improvidence in that connection, and in order to support his attack he produces statements from a number of very reputable people to the effect that they had manufactured military coats for the department. But unfortunately for his argument and the deduction he would draw from it, the statement says that these articles were in all probability manufactured and delivered before the contract that is now in question was entered into at all.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Had this firm a contract before?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. They had no contract before.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I understand from the Minister of Militia and Defence that the first contract entered into by his department with the Messrs. Workman was made on the 10th of January, 1899. It is true that under pressing urgency he had given an order for 500 great-coats before this contract was entered into, and not subject to the terms and provisions of this contract.

Mr. HAGGART. What time was that order given?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. In November.

Mr. HAGGART. The tender was accepted on the 9th of August.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There was no contract entered into until the 10th of January, 1899, as appears from the affidavit which has been read by my hon. friend.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I understood that what was dated the 10th of January, 1899, was the affidavit of Mr. Workman as to the manner in which the contract had been fulfilled.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The first clause of the affidavit which was read by my hon. friend refers to the contract as dated the 10th of January, 1899.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What is the date of that affidavit?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is made on the 11th of January.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman must be wrong. The contract, he says, was entered into on the 10th of January, 1899, and the affidavit stating the way in which the work was done is dated the 11th January, 1899. I think the hon. gentleman is one year wrong in his facts.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it possible that the man was paid ahead?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think it was likely he was paid ahead.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The Minister of Militia will decide that. When was the contract let?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The contract was sent to him earlier, but it was not actually executed until then.

Mr. MONTAGUE. But he was doing the work for three or four months under the terms of the contract without the contract being formally signed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can very well understand the intense anxiety of hon. gentlemen opposite. It must be perfectly apparent to the committee that it is not the facts which they are desirous of getting at, or three or four of them would not get up at the same time in order to create a clamour or drown the statements made. The Minister of Militia states that the goods which were ordered in connection with this contract, and which were manufactured and received by him, and in respect of which this alleged loss took place, were made and delivered subsequent to the date of this contract, except that some 500 great-coats had been ordered previously. If that is the fact—and the documents which I have referred to and the statement of the Minister of Militia and Defence bear it out—the papers which the hon. member for Beauharnois produces as establishing that these articles were made outside of the premises and in contravention of the contract, do not bear out the inference he draws from them. The 500 great-coats were made prior to the time this contract was entered into and outside of this contract, and not subject to the sweating clause contained in it, so that the terms of the contract cannot be made applicable to them at all. Look at these different statements, they all bear the date of the 27th July, 1899.

Mr. BERGERON. They were taken on the one day. And the others were taken a day or two after, which I will have to-morrow.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. These statements were made on the 27th July, and if you will add up the number of great-coats which these several people alleged in their declarations that they made since the 1st November, you will find that they aggregate 470, or 30 less than the number which the Minister of Militia explained were made under a special order that did not come under the operation of this clause. So that my hon. friend's case is far from being made and he is still open to the charge of having made a complaint against the management of my hon. friend which he has not supported, and he and his friends find themselves in this very unpleasant position, that they dug a pit into which they themselves have fallen. If you wanted any conclusive evidence of the fact, you will have it in the heat displayed by the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster), when he rose to reply to my hon. friend and wandered all over the field, talked to us about the fast line and a variety of other things, and intimated that my hon. friend was no better than a demagogue because he had called attention to the actual position of affairs. It seems to me that my hon. friends opposite are in this position, that they undertook to charge against the Minister of Militia that he had made a loss, and they find they have been running dead counter to a sound principle which they are afraid to take issue upon, and are now making desperate efforts in order to escape the consequences of their criticism.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. Minister of Militia has spoken a great deal about the sweating clause in the contract. In my opinion this clause was put there for the purpose of sweating Conservative tenderers out of the job.

Mr. BERGERON. Hear, hear.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have listened to the discussion very attentively, and that is the only conclusion I can come to. The facts are these. The Government advertised for tenders for great-coats and other military clothing. The Messrs. Shorey, a reputable house that has been in business for thirty or forty years, to my knowledge, manufacturing clothing, not only on contract with the Government but for the trade of Canada generally—and I myself purchased clothing from them twenty-five or thirty years ago—replied to the Government advertisement, and put in a tender at the price they were prepared to do the work for. But Mr. McShane has a friend who is a merchant tailor in Montreal, and I challenge the officer of the department, who is there on the floor, through his Minister, to contradict the statement I am about to make. In August, when these tenders were accepted, Mr. Workman had no factory for the manufacture of clothing, nor had he any factory for some months later. He did not manufacture any more than other merchant tailors would do in their line of business. Through Mr. McShane, Messrs. Workman & Co. prevailed on the Minister to apply the sweating clause to the Messrs. Shorey, and the Minister said to that firm: Because you farm your work out to the citizens in the parishes around Montreal, to be sewn by the piece, you come under the sweating clause, and your tender therefore must be sweated out, and Mr. McShane's friend must get this job. The contract was signed on the 11th of January, but the tender was accepted the 1st August, and Workman & Co. were told to get to work. They got their garments cut out and hired a carter to cart the material around and cart back the made-up material, and all this time they had no factory. The Minister's officer, Mr. McCann, who is on the floor, will not say that Workman & Co. had a factory in operation in October, November or December. The Minister states that they had one in March, and it appears that they rented a room across the street and put in some electrical machines to do some work for their retail store, and had about forty men at work. But we know that they farmed out all the Government work, and that my hon. friend from Beauharnois is correct when he says they had no factory. Mr. McShane, however, prevailed on the Government to give them this job, and they did just as the Messrs. Shorey would have done; they gave out the work in exactly the same way, they paid the same prices to the citizens around Montreal for doing the sewing, and they made 50 cents profit over Messrs. Shorey's prices. The hon. Postmaster General is now pleading the cause of the workingman, just as he did that of the Patrons at the last election. But what did he do for the farmers when he came into office? He handed the binder twine made in the penitentiary to a ring, and enabled that ring to squeeze 10 cents a pound out of the farmers for that twine more than they should legitimately have charged. He enabled Mr. McShane's friends to do something on the same scale, when he gave Mr. Workman the contract at 50 cents per piece higher than one of the most respectable firms in Montreal offered to do the work for. When this contract was let in August, Workman & Co. went to work to make the coats. The Minister of Railways says that the contract was only signed on the 9th January, but Workman & Co. had manufactured the greater portion of the goods during the previous fall. The contract was only signed on the 9th January, and yet they made a declaration on the 11th of January that the clothes were all made. Is it possible that they could have made the clothes in two days? The Minister could not have read the contract. The contract was signed on the 11th January, but the tender was accepted in August, and these men were told to go to work, and did so, and they farmed the work out around Montreal just as Messrs. Shorey would have done, and made a clear profit of $1,960 over Messrs. Shorey's tender, which they were enabled to do simply because they happened to be friends of Mr. McShane and the Government.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think it would have been just as well for the Minister of Militia and Defence if the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) had read this affidavit before proceeding to discuss it. When the Minister of Railways and Canals began gleaned information and commenting upon it to the discomfiture of hon. gentlemen on this side, I thought he had not heard it as I had heard it a few moments before. He said that this affidavit was with reference to the amount of wages to be paid by the contractor—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think I said that.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is certainly what the House understood the hon. gentleman to say. And when I interrupted him and said that was an affidavit which declared that the work was done and showed the conditions under which it was done, he said: No, it was an affidavit as to the wages.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. As to the contract.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What did the hon. Minister think the affidavit contained?

The PRIME MINISTER. Let us hear what the affidavit is.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I will let the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) hear the affidavit, because it bears out exactly the contention on this side.

The PRIME MINISTER. I would rather judge of that myself.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am sure the right hon. gentleman is a good judge, and I am willing to accept his judgment. If it does not appear to be what I said we will allow the item to pass without a moment's question. The tenders were called for on the 5th August, they were received, I think, on the 9th August and opened on the 11th September. The contract was awarded on the 11th September, 1898. This affidavit bears date 10th January, 1898; but it is evidently a mistake. It is evidently January, 1899. The departmental stamp shows that it was received on January 12th, 1899. This affidavit does not say that certain wages are to be paid under these provisions of the contract, but it does say, as the right hon. Prime Minister will agree, that certain wages were paid.

The PRIME MINISTER. I will be able to form an opinion about that.

Mr. MONTAGUE. But I wish to whet the right hon. gentleman's appetite first.

The PRIME MINISTER. But I am afraid that after all, you will not give me a good deal.

Mr. MONTAGUE (reading)—

That as to that certain contract—

The PRIME MINISTER. Read the whole of it.

Mr. MONTAGUE (reading)—

Canada,
Province of Quebec,
County of .....

I, Mark Workman, in the county of Hochelaga, do solemnly declare that as to that certain contract dated the 10th day of January, A.D. 1899, between Her Majesty Queen Victoria and Mark Workman, of the city of Montreal, the rates of wages paid in connection with the said contract are as follows, viz.:—

I will not read the list, because the right hon. gentleman has heard it read.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is all right; that is what he is going to pay.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Paid, not to be paid. That is set out clearly in what follows:—

Our factory flats are two in number, well lighted back and front, and are 25 feet wide, 100 in depth, ceilings 12 feet high, properly arranged for the comfort of the hands, machines running by electricity, comfortably heated, closets, &c. We open our factory at 7.30, and close at 6 p.m., allowing one hour for meals. The total number of hands employed at present is about 40. Our factory is located at 1857 Notre Dame street, nearly opposite our main premises. The special examining, stamping and packing is done at our main store, where also the cutting is done by cutters employed at a salary of $12 to $14 weekly, and superintended by our regular foreman.

That looks as though the work had been done. Well, perhaps the next sentence will make it clearer:

That in all other respects the provisions of the said contract have been observed and the work performed—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That sounds like it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That sounds like it, does it not?

—in the manner provided and called for by the said contract (or as the case may be).

The wages paid and the work performed, this affidavit says, according to the contract.

And I make this solemn declaration, conscientiously believing it to be true, and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath, and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act, 1898.

(Sgd.) MARK WORKMAN.

Declared before me at county of Hochelaga, in the city of Montreal, this eleventh day of January, A.D. 1899.

(Sgd.) DAVID ROBERTSON,
Justice of the Peace,
A Commissioner, &c.

Mr. FOSTER. This contract was dated?

Mr. MONTAGUE. The 10th January.

Mr. FOSTER. And the affidavit?

Mr. MONTAGUE. The 12th January, and the work had all been done, remember. The work was done, evidently, before the contract was properly signed at all. Now, another point. Five hundred of these coats, the Minister says, were permitted to be made without the anti-sweating clause being applied. Now, let us get at the facts. Shorey & Company had agreed to make these coats without the anti-sweating clause for 49 cents apiece less than the tender of Mr. Workman. The anti-sweating clause is revoked for the benefit of Mr. Workman to allow him to make these coats in the same manner as it was proposed by Mr. Shorey they should be made, that is, by sending them out to the wives and daughters of the men of the parishes around. And yet the Minister allowed Mr. Workman his contract price which was 49 cents apiece more than the same coats were to be paid for according to Mr. Shorey's offer under the same system. Surely if Mr. Workman was to have the anti-sweating clause relaxed, he should have reduced his price which he received by reason of the insertion of that anti-sweating clause. All the sophistry of the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock), in his vain and noisy attempt to fasten the advocacy of sweating on this side of the House, will not convince even the Minister of Militia himself, I think, that the proposition I am stating is an unfair or ungenerous proposition. If Mr. Workman got 49 cents more by reason of the existence of the anti-sweating clause, surely that 49 cents ought to be taken off if the anti-sweating clause was to be removed and the work was to be done as Mr. Shorey said he would do it. I do not desire to prolong the discussion, but I do desire to resent, for myself and for every other member on this side of the House who has spoken in this discussion, the attack which was made by the Postmaster General and followed by the Minister of Militia. No man on this side, in discussing this question, has for a moment advocated any system by which an honest day's pay should not be given for an honest day's labour. No gentleman on this side has advocated the squeezing of the workmen or workwomen out of a single cent that they have earned.

The Postmaster General knew as well as we did that what we were contending, whether we were right or wrong, was that while they had ostensibly offered to do away with the sweating system at a cost to the country, in this particular, of about $2,000, that the same system obtained, and that the work was done in the same manner as it would have been done if Mr. Shorey had received the contract and had been permitted to let the work out to the families as he had done in previous years—and cheaper to the country, as the member for Beauharnois said.

What does the Postmaster General say? This is what he says: If the hon. gentlemen on that side of the House says he is in favour of the sweating system then we controvert him, because we are opposed to that position; that is the line of demarcation, that is the division between hon. gentlemen on the two sides of the House. I answer that that is not the point of division, and I refuse for my part, for a moment, to be called the advocate of the sweating system, and I refuse, as the member for Beauharnois has refused, to pay for the abolition of that system in connection with certain works at an expense of $2,000 to the public treasury, and still have that sweating system remain.

The PRIME MINISTER. It seems to me that if this subject is approached in the proper light it is a very simple one, and there is no reason for the long discussion we have had upon it. I will endeavour to discuss it in the light of the facts which have been presented to us here to-night. Two tenders were received for that work—I speak of only two, because only two are in issue here, the tender of Mr. Shorey and the tender of Mr. Workman. The tender of Mr. Workman was accepted, though higher, because he offered to do the work in accordance with the anti-sweating clause. Now, the only question that arises is whether Mr. Workman has kept his pledge. Now, what are the conditions which were imposed upon Mr. Workman? Certain conditions were imposed upon him, and the member for Beauharnois contends that Mr. Workman has violated the anti-sweating clause of those conditions, because he gave the work out to be done in the parishes around the city of Montreal. Now, this is where I join issue with my hon. friend. Hon. gentlemen opposite do not deny that it is a wise precaution for the Government to require that all the work done by contractors for the Government should be done with the anti-sweating clause. Hon. gentlemen opposite do not oppose the policy of the Government on that point. Do they oppose it, yes or no?

Mr. FOSTER. No.

The PRIME MINISTER. Then, they are satisfied that it was proper to give the contract to Workman & Co., though it cost the country higher. But what they blame the Government for, what they blame the Minister of Militia and Defence for, is that he did not compel the contractors to carry out the contract in that particular. That is the position. They do not blame the Government for having given that contract to Workman & Co. at a cost 49 cents higher than the price of Mr. Shorey's tender; they do not blame the Government for that.

Mr. FOSTER. I certainly do if my hon. friend puts in that way.

Mr. MONTAGUE.

The PRIME MINISTER. If my hon. friend says that he does blame the Government for doing so let us so understand it.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, let us understand it. As the hon. gentleman puts it, I blame the Government. My hon. friend may not have put it as clearly as he meant to, but as he puts it, I blame the Minister.

The PRIME MINISTER. Well, if I do not put it correctly, it would hardly be honourable for my hon. friend, nor conducive to the interests of the country, to quibble over it. If I do not put it correctly, let him correct me. The Minister of Militia and Defence, having to give that contract, gives it to the higher tenderer because he offered to take the contract with the anti-sweating clause in it. That is the position, and if my hon. friend says that is wrong, let us so understand it. But I do not understand that he does say so. Now, the only question before the committee is, Did this contractor live up to his contract? Has he carried out the anti-sweating clause? The affidavit read, and quibbling also is indulged on that, quibbling which I think is quite unworthy a discussion of this kind. Then, the contract was dated on the 10th of January, and the affidavit was dated on the 11th, and a great deal of sport has been made because this affidavit speaks of the contract having been executed when the contract was dated just a day before.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I made no reference to that at all.

The PRIME MINISTER. No, my hon. friend did not, I admit, but other gentlemen tried to make a point out of that. The facts are plain enough. These tenders were asked for in August, and the contract was awarded in September, and it was signed in the month of January. In the meantime, it had partly carried out. There is no other way of reading the contract. The member for Beauharnois contends that there was a violation by Mr. Workman of that stipulation in the contract which demanded that the whole work should be done in his premises, and that instead the work had been let out to the people in the county of Laval and elsewhere. Now, for my part, I see no violation of the anti-sweating clause there. Why, Sir, it would be monstrous to suppose that a workingman could not do his own work in his own premises. The clause of the anti-sweating system exacts that no workingman shall be kept at work in the premises of his employer, not in his own home, but in the premises of his employer under unsanitary conditions, and conditions that are not favourable for doing the work.

Mr. HAGGART. Does the right hon. gentleman not know that that very clause is embodied in the contract?

The PRIME MINISTER. No, if I read the contract aright. The contract binds the contractor that his own premises shall be kept in a sanitary condition, and if he sublets the contract, it shall be carried out in premises which are equally in a sanitary condition. But, Sir, unless I am greatly mistaken, I would be sorry to believe that the contract should be so construed that the work could not be done, for instance, by a man who lives in the parish of Ste. Rose or elsewhere. At least, if that is the letter of the contract, it is not its spirit. Now, let us discuss that question seriously. What we must insist upon is that the contract shall be carried out in premises supplied by the employer, which shall be in a sanitary condition. But surely a man is not thereby precluded from working in his own house; I do not understand the contract in that way.

Mr. BERGERON. After we have been discussing this matter for three or four hours, we come to an understanding with the right hon. gentleman. The right hon. gentleman knows a firm of manufacturers in Montreal called Shorey & Co. As the right hon. gentleman has said, they have a very large store where they keep the goods which are made. They have tailors in the store who cut the goods and they get the people, from the 1st of January to the 31st December, to make up these goods in their own homes in St. Rose, Ste. Thérèse, Boucherville, Verchères, and all around the city of Montreal. They do not sub-let their work. These people work in their own houses instead of working on the floors of the stores of Shorey & Co. Now we have the whole case. When Shorey & Co. tendered they said that they could not accept the work with the anti-sweating clause at the same price because they would have to enlarge their building. They said: If you allow us to have the work done, as we have done it ourselves in the past, we can tender at a lower price. I can tell hon. gentlemen that they have a plant which other manufacturers in Canada, except the Sanford Company, have not got for making such work, because they have been doing this special work for twenty years. If the right hon. gentleman will just listen one moment I will explain to him what we are complaining of. It is not that Workman's tender was accepted and that Shorey's tender was not accepted, but what we have been complaining of this afternoon is that Workman has been carrying out the contract in the way that Shorey would have carried it out by having the work done outside at Ste. Rose, at Ste. Thérèse, and we do not blame him for that, but he did it in the same manner that Shorey would have done it, except that he got 49 cents more, and that the Government has paid him 49 cents more.

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. member for Beauharnois says that Mr. Workman has had the work done outside. There is no evidence of that. But let us say that he has. It is a very important subject, and I think this discussion ought to be carried on in a serious way and not as a stormy debate. We are all agreed that there should be an anti-sweating clause. How far this anti-sweating clause should go I am not prepared to say, but I do say that it should not go so far as to prevent working women doing work in their own homes. I do not think that could have been the intention of the contract, but if it is the intention of the contract, I think the clause should have been modified to that extent, because I do not want poor women to be deprived of doing work in their own homes. If that be the case a more liberal construction of the clause, I think, should be given, though I must insist that the anti-sweating clause shall be kept in all contracts. Still, a modification should be made so as not to deprive working women of the opportunity of working in their own homes.

Mr. MONFAGUE. The hon. Postmaster General should withdraw his storm entirely.

Mr. BERGERON. He should withdraw all he said this afternoon.

Mr. WALLACE. I think the hon. Postmaster General will withdraw the statements he has made in the face of the very clear and lucid statement of the right hon. Prime Minister, a statement which we can accept very cordially on both sides of the House. I rise more particularly to call attention to this fact: The hon. Minister of Militia and Defence told us that it was quite true that there were some garments, both trousers and overcoats, that were not included in this contract, and, therefore, not under these conditions. The reasons the hon. Minister gave to the committee was that it was a case of urgency. These goods, he said, had to be got and got in a hurry, independently of the contract. He told us that the contract was dated the 9th or 10th of January, and that these goods were made in November, October and on other dates. I look at this schedule prepared by the Government, and I see that tenders were received up to the 9th of August, and that tenders were opened on the 9th of August, 1898. We know that the award was made in September. Well, then, these overcoats that were needed as a matter of great urgency, were made after the 9th of September; they were made in October, in November and in December, at the time after the award had been made to Workman & Co. to make these overcoats under these anti-sweating conditions. Yet, in the face of that the hon. Minister of Militia tell us that it is true 600 overcoats and 500 pairs of trousers were made, not subject to the anti-sweating clause, because it was a case of urgency. Why, Sir, this contract was running at the same time, and then he tells us that they had to disregard the terms of it. They had accepted the tender of Workman & Co. at $6.74, but they had the tender of Shorey & Co. for $6.25, or 49 cents less, before them, and they could have accepted this lower tender, because these overcoats were to be furnished them, not under the anti-sweating clause. We have further information, which is undenied and undeniable, that not less than 2,000 of these overcoats were made out in the country districts, that they were not made in accordance with this pretended anti-sweating clause. I am glad, and the committee will be glad, that the right hon. Prime Minister has repudiated the stand and the position taken by the hon. Postmaster General against making these garments in the homes of the people in the country as a portion of the anti-sweating clause and as being injurious to the morals, the health and the industrial conditions of the country. The right hon. gentleman has rightly told us that there is nothing that will conduce more to the industrial prosperity of the people than allowing these people to make these things in their own homes.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope that the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence will make a demand at once upon Workman for a refund of the $1,960. The only reason he had for refusing to allow that work to be done by Shorey was that Shorey was going to do it in the homes of the people. He has heard the right hon. Prime Minister tell us that this is an illiberal and wrongful interpretation to attach to the anti-sweating law and that, so far as he is concerned, he does not believe it is tenable in the least. Therefore, no ground exists for the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence paying $1,960 more to Workman than he could get the coats made for as well by Shorey. But over and above all that, there are these strange and irregular tenders being called for on the 5th, tenders being opened on the 9th, the contract being awarded in September, and these gentlemen allowed to go on in the face of the Minister's own interpretation of the law, violating it according to his interpretation and getting the work done in the homes of the people. There is $1,960 of the people's money which has been utterly wasted, not saved to the workingmen, but which has gone into the pockets of the contractors.

The PRIME MINISTER. That is a question for consideration. I have only to say that, so far as working women in the country are concerned, I have no reason to be doubtful, and I think it is most proper that the work should be done in the homes of the people. So far as working in the cities is concerned, there would be good reason for an anti-sweating clause, but there ought to be a distinction made as to working in the homes of the people in the country.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I would like to ask the right hon. gentleman whether this clause is inserted in the contract he let for Mounted Police clothing?

The PRIME MINISTER. I am not prepared to answer that.

Mr. MONK. I think our chance of recovering those $2,000 are very slim under these circumstances. I would like to address the Minister of Militia upon this question which interests us in that part of the country where a great deal of the work was done. What is the amount that has been paid under the advantage of this anti-sweating clause, what is the amount which has been paid per piece to the people in the country? Everybody is aware that the people who work under this contract are in reality the people in Jacques Cartier, Laval and Terrebonne counties. Has that clause benefited them in any way? The work having been executed exactly as with Shorey it seems to me we have a right to know what differences and what advantages accrue to the people.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am inclined to say the prices were fair.

Mr. MONK. The right hon. gentleman will allow me to say there is nothing whatever to show that there has been any progress in this respect. The hon. member for Laval told us this afternoon in answer to my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron), that the people complained there that they were worked to death. Under those circumstances, having before us a transaction of this kind, I think we are entitled to know exactly how much has been paid to Mr. Workman. We do not know—the Minister of Militia or anybody else in this House is unable to tell us, and it is a pity we cannot get that information.

Mr. INGRAM. I would like to ask the Minister of Militia and Defence if the sweating system is carried on in the Cart-ridge Factory at Quebec?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Not that I am aware of. I think in a few instances the piecework is done by the day. The same system prevails at as Woolwich, but it is not general. I may say to my hon. friend that there has been no complaint to me.

Mr. INGRAM. It is perhaps due to the Minister of Militia to offer an explanation, and it is due to myself that I should make an explanation to those gentlemen for certain questions I placed on the Order paper early in the session. I received very long correspondence from some parties in Quebec complaining of the way in which the Cart-ridge Factory was being administered by the Government. The labour element complained, and they sent me a number of questions to place on the Order paper. I did not place those questions on the Order paper because they were very offensive. I pruned them down as well as I could, to try and meet the views of those who wanted the information, and tried not to make them offensive. I did not succeed and in his answer on the 27th of April, the Minister of Militia found fault with the way they were put on the Order paper. They are as follows :—

1. What were the Government's reasons for dismissing the members of the labour association, Mechanics' Assembly No. 10,061, out of the Quebec cartridge factory ?
2. How many were dismissed ?
4. How many girls and boys have been injured and maimed in the said cartridge factory during the last two years, and to what extent were they injured ?
5. What remuneration did they receive while suffering from said injuries, including the time laid up from such injuries ?
6. What was the nature of the correspondence which took place between the labour party in the city of Quebec regarding the refusal of the cartridge factory authorities to admit for the purpose of inspection the provincial factory inspectress, Madame Provencher ?
7. What was the result of the inquiries made by the Government regarding the said refusal ?
8. Who is responsible, the Minister of Militia, the Deputy Minister, or the superintendent of the said factory, for the perpetuation of the sweating system as conducted therein ?
10. What is the minimum rate of wages paid to young girls and boys in the said factory ?
11. Is the Government aware of the fact that the earnings of some of these employees per week does not amount to more than $1 ?
13. Was there a petition presented to the Government or any member thereof, praying for the dismissal of Charles Roy ? What were the reasons alleged in the said petition, and whose signatures were attached thereto ?

I have omitted the other questions, that the hon. gentleman said were offensive, and in my judgment they are.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I will say to my hon. friend that it is impossible for me at this moment to give the answer, but I will see when I get "Hansard," and will give him a complete answer, on any occasion that may be convenient.

Construction of small armouries..... $10,000

Mr. FOSTER. Where are these to be constructed ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I may say that we have a list of several places, and the selection has not been finally made, but I think at the following places. At Sussex, N.B.—

Mr. FOSTER. At what cost ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Approximately $3,000 ; Guelph, $2,000 ; St. Thomas, $1,500 ; Cobourg, $3,000 ; Cornwall, $2,000.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend is taking more than his estimate.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. As I explained there are several places named and selected. These are probably the places. I think the sums named are not excessive, and it would be less than the sum named.

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot congratulate the Minister on the defence of his estimates, but what is the principle which underlies this building of armouries ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The reason for it is this, that with our new rifle, which is a very sensitive weapon, it is found advisable upon the recommendation of the General Officer Commanding, in which I concurred, that instead of distributing the rifles as was done formerly, to have separate armouries and to appoint an armourer at each one of those places to take care of the arms.

Mr. FOSTER. For instance, Sussex would be the central armoury for the province of New Brunswick ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Not for the province. It is proposed to have one for each battalion.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is the hon. gentleman doing that for all the counties ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. As rapidly as possible.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Because I would like to say that the 37th Battalion is one of the best in the province of Ontario, and I do not think it has an armoury at any point in the county which is at all worthy of the excellence of the 37th.

Mr. HUGHES. I take the liberty of suggesting to the Minister that there is great need for an armoury in the county of Victoria, and I can inform him that a very suitable building can be had and the entire cost would not exceed $1,000. So that he would save $1,000 by erecting one there this year.

Militia clothing .....$30,500

Mr. FOSTER. What is this ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Our main estimate for clothing was not large enough, and we require this much more. It is for all the different kinds of clothing.

Mr. FOSTER. Will this be made by contract also ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Then it will not be considered as part of the anti-sweating system that the homes of the habitants of the province of Quebec would be interdicted from doing this work ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. So far as my own views are concerned, I would not object to that very much, but I think there should be an inspection of the houses and rooms to be occupied. In many cases I think the neighbours come together in one central room, and do the work in very much too small quarters.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think that is done in the country places.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. In some cases it is done, and I think we should in our contracts provide for inspection being made from time to time. We should have a list of both the houses where the work is done and the people employed.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, Shorey will get a chance at this.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Has Mr. Workman done all his contract yet?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I cannot say.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman should deduct 49 cents apiece for the 500 coats which he made outside of his own shop.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I do not think Mr. Workman should be liable for that. If any one is liable, I suppose I should be personally liable.

Mr. BERGERON. How much money has he been paid?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I cannot tell the hon. gentleman.

General service medals (5,000 medals).... $10,000

Mr. FOSTER. Are these medals got by contract?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. They are got from the Royal mint.

Claim of F. X. Mathieu, for costs in Queen vs. Sureties of the late Col. Bellefeuille. $199 30

Mr. MONTAGUE. What is this?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. These are the costs in the suit against the Crown, recommended by the judge under the circumstances, to be paid. The matter was before Council and an Order in Council was passed authorizing the payment.

Compensation to Octave Ouellette for injuries sustained while working at drill hall, Montreal..... $750

Mr. FOSTER. How do we become liable for that?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. This case has been before the Department of Justice, and after very careful consideration, the Minister of Justice recommended that we should pay this amount. The party asked us for the right to bring an action, and it was thought better to come to a settlement, and to agree to what the Department of Justice recommended rather than have a lawsuit. The circumstances were these. This man was working on the drill shed in Montreal, and owing to a defective ladder on which he was standing giving away, he fell over backwards and was very seriously injured.

Mr. FOSTER. Who was conducting the work—the Government or a contractor?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The Government.

Mr. BERGERON. When did this occur?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. In December, 1895.

Mr. BERGERON. What Mr. Mathieu is this who is to be paid these costs?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. He is a lawyer of St. Scholastique.

Mr. BERGERON. How was it that he was employed in a case from Longueuil?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. He was employed by the Department of Justice, and a report was made to Council by that department recommending the payment.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Going back an item or two, will the Minister tell me what site is being purchased for this armoury at St. Thomas?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. This is a site that will probably be purchased from Dr. Wilson, a former member of this House.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What is the price being paid?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. $6,000, I think, for 8½ acres. There is a drill shed now there, but it is altogether unsatisfactory. The colonel of the battalion, Col. Stacey, saw me about it. In fact, they do not use it at all, and we have to pay a pretty heavy rental for the use of another place. So we came to the conclusion to dispose of the drill shed property, and Dr. Wilson is willing to buy it at the price of $2,000, but I propose to offer it at public auction, and whatever that brings will go to reduce the amount to be expended. It is proposed to build on that site an armoury and use the land for purposes of drill. The colonel says he would prefer a building of that kind and a larger area to drill on, than a drill shed with a small quantity of land.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I suppose the hon. gentleman will expropriate the land in the ordinary way?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Either that or value it. There has been no bargain concluded as to the price. We know the price asked for, and a certain amount has been offered for the drill shed, but we have not gone into that yet and shall take means to get a proper valuation.

Mr. INGRAM. Are we to understand that this $6,000 is just to cover the land?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Mr. INGRAM. Well, while I have no objection to a reasonable price being paid, $6,000 is out of all proportion to the value.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. We will not give more than it is worth, but that is the amount asked.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How far is it from the centre of St. Thomas?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It is near the railway works.

Mr. BERGERON. To whom does the land belong?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Dr. Wilson, the former member.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Has the hon. gentleman a report on the value of the land?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, from the Quartermaster General.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is it fit for the use intended?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am told that a large amount of it will have to be filled up. Has the hon. gentleman got the Major General's report?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am sorry to say that I have not got it here, but he says it is worth that amount.

Mr. INGRAM. I have had something to do with real estate in St. Thomas. That has been my business for some time, and I know that the land in question is not worth half that price. Any one in St. Thomas, who knows anything about land, will say the same thing. I am prepared to consent to a very good price being paid to any one from whom the Government wish to purchase land, but $6,000 is altogether too much. That land is hollow and will have to be filled up. I was of the opinion that possibly $2,000 or $3,000 would pay for the building and the balance would pay for the land.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I understand that the hon. Minister has agreed to expropriation proceedings?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Regular expropriation proceedings, that is all we ask.

Mr. MONK. I wish to draw again the attention of the hon. Minister to the case of Joseph Larose, of St. Laurent, about which we have had much correspondence. The committee is aware that Mr. Larose suffered irreparable injury from receiving a bullet from the rifle ranges. He is ruined for life. He is a small farmer, and although this happened two years ago, there has been no improvement whatever in his general state of health. We voted him a year ago $1,000, but he very naturally claimed more and sought for leave to proceed against the Crown, and I believe the Government recognize very fairly that, under the circumstances, he was entitled to a petition of right, and leave was granted to take such. I make a last appeal on his behalf. At present he is in a very embarrassed condition, and all I ask the Government is to pay him a certain amount of this $1,000, and he is perfectly willing to sign any document by which he will agree that the amount paid will not prejudice the rights of the Government. Under these circumstances, I ask the hon. Minister to take up his case once more and at least pay him a certain amount of the vote.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. My hon. friend has many times brought Mr. Larose's request to me, and I am sorry I have not been able to agree in his view. Last year we passed a vote for $1,000 as compensation. No doubt his case is a very sad one, but he has declined to accept the money. I took the ground that as he would not accept the money, it was not within my power to pay out any portion of it, because we do not know what the result of his suit may be. The amount voted by this Parliament was understood to be a final payment, and I am quite sure the Auditor General would not allow any payment to be made to him which was not final.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the vote say in full payment?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That was the understanding in Parliament.

Mr. MONK. I do not see anything in the vote which would lead any one to say that there was any cast-iron rule as regards the payment. All I ask is that the Minister should pay a certain amount and take a receipt, and I do not see what there is to prevent his doing so.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. We do not know what the result of the case may be when it goes into court.

Mr. MONK. The vote will always stand.

Compensation to the widow of the late Captain F. E. Stewart .....	$1,000

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. This is the case of the widow of an officer who went out to Wright County, near here, when there was a difficulty there about the collection of taxes. The result of the exposure was that this man lost his life. He came home with his health impaired and died shortly after, and this is a gratuity to his widow.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to call the attention of the hon. Minister to the case of the late Major Maxwell, of the Halifax Garrison Artillery. He lost his life, not technically on active service, but practically. He was attending a school of equitation in Halifax for the purpose of qualifying himself for the position he held in the battalion. While engaged in qualifying himself in that way, not, it is true, in the school, but outside the hours of school, he was thrown from his horse and died in a few hours. He has left a widow and a number of children who have scarcely any means of subsistence whatever, and I brought his case to the attention of the Minister in the hope that some provision might be made for his widow and family, and I regret very much that nothing has been done. It may be that technically his case does not come within the class of those dealt with in this way, but still I believe the case of Major Maxwell is as worthy of consideration as that of Capt. Stewart.

The case of a man who dies from exposure some years after he has been in active service, does not seem to me to be stronger than that of Major Maxwell, who fell from his horse during the time when he was taking a course in the school of equitation. It is true, that he fell from his horse an hour or so after he had left the school for the day, but it was while he was practising what he had been taught in the school. Practically, if not technically, he was in active service. I cannot see on what grounds provision should be made for the widow of Capt. Stewart, and not for the widow of Major Maxwell. I do not think there is a single person in the city or the county of Halifax for that matter, who would not consider the Government were doing a fair and equitable and just thing in making such a provision; and I would like to know from the Minister on what ground a distinction is made between the case of Capt. Stewart and the case of Major Maxwell?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Major Maxwell's case, I think, has been stated quite correctly. He was taking the equitation course prescribed under the rules of field officers. But he was not satisfied with the way he was going on at school, but went out on his brother's horse, as though for a ride, apart altogether from the work of the school. It is true, he might not have done that, had not the equitation course not been going on. But it seems rather dangerous to establish a precedent that an officer who happened to be taking the equitation course, was killed while riding his own or his brother's horse, should have claims upon the Government for compensation. I think the case is a very sad one, and one which, I must confess, I had at first felt inclined to consider favourably. But, on careful reflection and taking the best advice I could get from my colleagues, it was decided that it was not such a case as would entitle us to recommend Parliament to grant a gratuity. As to the difference between the two cases, I think there is very marked difference. Capt. Stewart was on active service. It is true, he did not die at the time, but he contracted consumption in that camp, which resulted in his death at not a distant period. It was as a result of his serving the country at that time that he lost his life. As to whether the other case is one we should reconsider or take up again, I can only say that I would be glad to go through it and see if we could arrive at a different conclusion. At the present time I cannot but think that we have taken the proper course.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I may be allowed a word in answer to the hon. Minister. He has mentioned that his own view is more or less favourable to the claim of Major Maxwell's widow, and I am inclined to think that the advice of his colleagues is not based upon a very thorough knowledge of the facts. Supposing that Capt. Stewart, being technically on active service, had gone out to ride while the riot was not making active progress, and, in the course of that ride, had been killed. No one would pretend to say that his widow should not be compensated. He would be on active service the whole time; but, practically, he would be no more on active service than Major Maxwell was. Major Maxwell had been attending the school of equitation. If he could have afforded it, he would have gone to Toronto for this course, and then he would have been in the same position as Capt. Stewart; but he was a young man, making his way in the world, and so, instead of going to a school at a distance, which he could not afford to do, he took the course in Halifax. Out of the hours of school, and while endeavouring to perfect himself in the work he was doing in the school—it makes no difference whether on his own or on another person's horse—he was killed. There is no doubt about the facts. This comes within what the lawyers call a proximate cause, just as much as does the case of Capt. Stewart. Capt. Stewart was engaged in active service, and after he left that active service, the disease manifested itself. It is conjectured—but incapable of absolute proof—that he got that disease while engaged in active service in suppressing this tax riot; and so, the Government makes provision for his widow. Major Maxwell's attendance on the school of equitation was as much the proximate cause of his death as was the active service the proximate cause of the death of Capt. Stewart. I venture to say the proof is as absolute in one case as in the other. Capt. Stewart's widow got compensation, while the widow of Major Maxwell is refused it. I think the Government should reconsider the matter, and if compensation is made to the widow of Capt. Stewart—of which I make no complaint, because I think it is right—I ask that, on the same grounds, a compensation should be made to this widow, who was left in destitute circumstances. Major Maxwell was an active, able and efficient officer, whose record as an officer, I am sure, would commend his case to the department. I trust, therefore, the Minister will reconsider this matter, and make a fuller explanation to his colleagues, and endeavour next year to do what it seems to me should be done in this case.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I sympathize very deeply with the case presented by my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax). I would rather make a strong argument in support of it than say a single word against it. I would rather leave the door open in order that, if possible, a case may be made. The case is one of a distressing character. I cannot agree with my hon. friend that the two cases of Maxwell and Stewart are exactly alike; I think there is a marked line of difference between them. In one case an officer was in active service when he took the disease from which he died; in the other case an officer was not in active service. However I would not argue against my hon. friend, because I would like to find some reason to advise my colleagues to make the payment.

Mr. PRIOR. Before this item passes, I want to call the attention of the Minister of Militia and Defence to a case which he knows by the name of the Macaulay Point claim. I will read the names of the gentlemen who are interested in this claim: Fred. Fell, J. Jardine, W. F. Bullen, R. W. Reford, Henry Moss, Wm. Moss, J. G. Tiarks, Chas. Kent, Thornton Fell, A. Keating, H. O. Price, H. F. Bishop, S. J. Pitts. All these gentlemen are the owners of property at Macaulay Point, near Victoria, B.C., and who bought the property in May, 1891, by auction, from the Hudson Bay Company. I may say that at that time there was a small fortification built at Macaulay Point close to this land, which was occasionally used by the active militia of Canada. I asked for a return and the papers have been brought down with all the correspondence in regard to these claims, which papers I have now before me. It seems that soon after these gentlemen purchased this property, the Government saw fit, at the instance of the Imperial authorities, to enlarge these fortifications. To do that, they had to close up one or more of the roads that had already been made there. I may say that the site where these lots were bought is one of the most beautiful in the province of British Columbia. It is a splendid site for houses, and these gentlemen bought for the purpose of building residences there. It is close to the seashore, and close to the main road, and there is a magnificent view across the straits to the snow-capped mountains beyond. This matter has been going on now for five years. The first claim was made in 1894, and since then several more claims have been made. In the meantime, two or three claims were adjudicated upon before the hon. gentleman took charge of the department, and the then Minister of Militia and Defence, Mr. Dickey, I think it was, referred the matter to the Minister of Justice, and acting upon his opinion he paid these claims. But these gentlemen who are now making a claim are in precisely the same position as those who were settled with, and to my mind they have a very strong case for compensation from the Government. The reason they claim compensation is that on these fortifications which have been built very large guns have been mounted, there are three six-inch quick firing guns, and the concussion of their discharge makes it very dangerous for any houses to be built near there, as the windows are liable to be broken. It has been contended, I believe, by the district officer commanding there, Colonel Peters, and also by Major General Herbert, who has been out there, that this is not a good case for compensation. I contend that if a man buys a lot and the Government step in and build fortifications close to him so that he cannot occupy his house without having all the windows broken, he has a good claim for compensation. Besides, when the forts were built, one or more of the main drives around the point were closed so that the owners of the adjacent property could not drive around the water front; moreover, the view of several of these lots was blocked by the building of the fort. The first letter I want to bring before the Minister was written by Messrs. Fell, Jardine, Newcombe and Bishop, to Messrs. Earle and Prior, members for the city of Victoria in this House:

We would point out that it is not a matter of equity, but justice we have a right to.

The taking away of the streets and enlarging the fortifications has destroyed the property altogether for the purpose for which it was bought. We are perfectly satisfied with our purchases, owing to the beautiful situation and its nearness to the city, and at no distant date it would have been a good investment. Had any of us ever dreamed that we were purchasing land where fortifications were to be erected we should have selected another location. The Hudson Bay Company sold the property for residential purposes, and to induce purchasers to build they offered a bonus of 20 per cent to those building houses costing not less than $4,000.

The closing of the streets and enlargement of the fortifications has completely altered the appearance of the place, whilst the privacy, as a residential locality, has completely disappeared.

The next letter was from the secretary of the Department of Militia and Defence, to Major A. W. Jones, their agent in British Columbia, who was asked to report on the claim. I will read only a portion of Major Jones's report :

There is no doubt, however, that the petitioners, as set forth in their letter of the 13th March, addressed to Messrs. Prior and Earle, have sustained serious loss, but to what extent intrinsically is a very difficult matter indeed for me or any one else to decide upon. I am not inclined, however, to set forth that they have a very strong claim, by reason of the redoubt being built, for long before the auction sale at which they purchased their lots there was in existence at Macaulay Point a three "7"-gun battery, and that upon ground owned by the Government, which goes to prove that this particular spot had long prior to the petitioners becoming owners of lots in this locality been selected for military purposes.

This, of course, is very unlucky for the unfortunate property-holders, but can scarcely, I think, be interpreted as an act of aggression on the part of the Government.

I may say that, although Major Jones says there was a battery there, it was a battery of small guns, only fired at long intervals, and the guns were not at all of the same size as are now mounted there. He goes on to say :

The petitioners in this instance have sustained direct loss, and to my mind are entitled to compensation. They purchased, in good faith, lots for building sites according to a certain plan which was registered according to law, and which showed thereon certain streets, which enabled, and would, in so far as they knew and were entitled to expect, give them access to certain points on the sea-front for all time to come. The Government, therefore, having deprived them of this privilege, become liable for damages. Having arrived at this, therefore, it becomes necessary to determine to what extent.

Were these four claimants all to be dealt with, I would at once and without hesitation be in favour of recompensing them as they ask, but there the matter would not end; indeed, upon the contrary, it will only be beginning, for if the claims now under consideration are to be recognized, we must take cognizance of all those (and there are, I think, some five and twenty more) who will undoubtedly be entitled to like remuneration. There being, therefore, so many conflicting circumstances to contend with, it seems to me that I am unable to give any tangible solution of the question, further than that compensation should be awarded, but to what extent I am not prepared to define.

It is clear, therefore, that the agent of the Militia Department on the spot states that he considers that the four claimants that he is dealing with ought to be compensated, but as there are five and twenty more, he does not like to recommend it.

Mr. PRIOR.

Well, if it is fair to give compensation to four it is fair to give compensation to twenty-five for they are all situated alike. The next letter I have to read is one from Major A. W. Jones, the agent of the department, dated the 20th of July, 1895 :

Victoria, B.C., 20th July, 1895.

Captain A. Benoit,
Secretary of the Dept. of Militia and Defence, Ottawa.

Sir,—Referring to the claim of Messrs. Fell, Jardine and others, and regarding which you wrote me under date 8th July, I have the honour to explain that when I alluded to the closing of certain streets in my letter on the 18th June, I should have been more explicit in naming them, viz.: Seaview and Stevenson roads.

I admit I am wrong, however, in stating had these not been closed they would have afforded "access to the sea-front for all time to come," for, as you correctly point out, they merely give access to the frontage of certain lots which extend from these roads back to the sea.

In palliation of my error, however, I may explain that owing to the situation or lay of these roads, which overlooked the water-front, a fine view of the straits was afforded from this particular location, which is now quite cut off, and it is in this that the petitioners feel aggrieved, as from Vaughan Street, their present front, they are quite precluded from any view whatever over this particular stretch of water, and they accordingly contend that had they been aware that these roads would at any time be closed to them, they would never upon any consideration have been induced to purchase property in the neighbourhood for resident purposes, to say nothing of being subject at times to loud concussions from the guns and, in case of war, imminent peril.

It is particularly this matter, to my mind, which makes this adjacent property objectionable as residential for the future, and will, I have no doubt, prevent intending builders of homes from completing their former intentions in this direction, and thereby throw upon their hands certain lots as comparatively useless.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant.

(Sgd.) A. W. JONES,
Major.

I may say, as I showed before by the letters I have read, that the Hudson Bay Company sold that property for residential purposes and offered to anybody who would build a house costing $4,000, a bonus of 20 per cent, and a great many of these gentlemen could well afford and would under other circumstances, have built. There are a lot of letters, but I will only read those which are necessary to make the case as short as possible. The next letter I wish to read is from Drake, Jackson & Helmcken, the lawyers of the Militia and Defence Department and the Justice Department in British Columbia. They wrote as follows to the Deputy Minister of Justice in regard to Mr. Fell's claims :

Victoria, B.C., 21st March, 1896.

The Deputy Minister of Justice, Ottawa.

Sir,—We have the honour to state that Mr. Fell has shown us a telegram from Hon. E. G.

Prior, asking us to report on this claim. Mr. Fell purchased Lots 5 and 6, Block XXI, having special advantages, as you will notice in referring to the auctioneer's plan, by reason of the roads. They are very fine lots, with nice situation, and we think the claimant would succeed in establishing a claim for depreciation due to the closing up of Seaview Road, Vaughan Street is laid out, but not graded.

The claimant is willing to accept as compensation 35 per cent upon the amount paid, without interest or other outlay. We understand the price paid, including interest, is $3,551.55. The interest paid is nearly $200.

We should advise that the claimant be offered without prejudice an amount not exceeding 25 per cent on the amount paid, exclusive of taxes.

The matter was referred by the Department of Militia and Defence to the Deputy Minister of Justice, and there is a letter here from Drake, Jackson & Helmcken to the Deputy Minister of Justice in regard to Mr. Reford's claim. It says in part :

There can be no doubt that Seaview Street was of advantage, by reason of its affording people the privilege of driving along a good road, and there can be no question of Viewfield being a splendid and delightful location for residences. We cannot, however, admit that the establishment of the fortifications has deterred parties from building, as we think the reason for not building or otherwise utilizing the property is due and chiefly due to wholly different causes. Neither can we advise that the Government would be justified in paying Mr. Reford the full amount of his claim.

Then they go on to say :

It might be argued—and as it is in certain cases—that vibration due to the firing of guns will interfere with the windows of houses, and probably cause either structural injuries ; but, from what we are advised by military experts, we are satisfied that this ground is untenable.

I may say here to show how fallacious is their argument in this case, that before these guns are fired the authorities now send word to the people in the few houses which at present have been built, to open their windows because a great many have been broken when they have fired these big guns. They go on to say :

Judged by this standard, we cannot see any legal liability towards Mr. Reford ; but, assuming his lot suitable for residential purposes, which, as we have before pointed out, we cannot admit, it is possible that Mr. Reford might succeed in substantiating a claim for damages ; but, in our opinion, damages would not be very large ; and in view of the fact that the Crown would be put to a certain amount of costs if a contest arose, we are of opinion that it would be advisable to offer without prejudice a sum equal to 20 per cent on the actual amount paid, exclusive of taxes and incidentals—an exceedingly liberal offer.

Although the lawyers of the department say that they do not think this gentleman, Mr. Reford, has a legal claim, they take care to advise the Government that the best thing they could do would be to pay him 20 per cent. The next document that I will read is the copy of a report of a committee of the Privy Council, approved by His Excellency the Governor General in Council on the 28th of April, 1896. This is after the claims of Messrs. Fell and Jardine had been referred to the hon. Minister of Justice, and after his report had been made upon them. This is the report from Mr. John J. McGee, Clerk of the Privy Council. It says :

On a report dated 22nd April, 1896, from the Minister of Militia and Defence, stating that a number of the proprietors of lands adjacent to the new works of defence at Esquimalt have preferred claims for compensation for damages to their property, caused by the erection of the said fortifications. That these claims have been examined both by the local agent of the Department of Militia and Defence and the agents of the Department of Justice. That there is no doubt that an equitable claim for damages has arisen in the matter, and that the amount which should be paid has been carefully considered.

The Minister, concurring in a report which has been made by the Department of Justice, recommends that each such claimant should be offered, without prejudice, an amount equal to 25 per cent on the amounts which have been paid for the respective properties, with interest added to the purchase money at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from the date of purchase to the present time, but exclusive of all tax payments.

The Committee submit the above recommendation for Your Excellency's approval.

(Sgd.) JOHN J. MCGEE,
Clerk of the Privy Council.

The Honourable
The Minister of Militia and Defence.

That was addressed to His Excellency and the Government paid Mr. Fell and Mr. Jardine an amount of 25 per cent on the amount paid for their property, with interest added. The next letter I want to call the hon. Minister's attention to is one from the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence to the district paymaster stating that the claim has been allowed and that he must make out the respective sums exactly. The next letter is from the Militia Department to the hon. Minister of Justice, dated the 7th of August, 1896, and was signed Eugène Panet, Deputy Minister of Militia and Defence :

The advice which is now requested of you, in regard to Mr. Newcombe's claim, is whether it should be dealt with upon the percentage basis of settlement recommended in your letter above quoted, respecting the claims of Messrs. Fell, Jardine and Reford, and if so, upon what rate of percentage.

Then there are a lot of other letters, one from the District Officer Commanding, dated 8th February, 1897, in which he says that he does not think these persons have any claims, another from Major General Gascoigne, who has been out there, and who says that Mr. Pitts has no claim whatever. The next letter to read is one from the agent in British Columbia, Major Jones, to the Deputy Minister of Militia and Defence, which is a report on the claims of Messrs. Moss & Tlarks. It says :

Again on 18th of June, 1895, I had the honour of reporting to Capt. Benoit, Secretary of the Department, as to claims generally in this neighbourhood, and in both instances I set forth that if one or two claims received the favourable consideration of the Government (as in the case of Messrs. Fell and Jardine), I considered that one and all were equally entitled to compensation, and I am of the opinion that the claimants now being dealt with are, therefore, owed some remuneration, but in what proportion I can only suggest upon being informed of the exact location of their properties in relation to the fortifications and after a personal inspection thereof.

I retain all documents in connection with the matter until I make my report, when all will be returned to you.

I have the honour to be, &c.,
(Sgd.) A. W. JONES,
Major.

Col. C. Eug. Panet,
Deputy Minister of Militia and Defence, Ottawa.

The next one is from the same gentleman. Major Jones, to the Department of Militia and Defence, dated the 12th of July, 1897. It reads as follows:—

With regard to the claims for compensation for alleged damages to the properties of Henry Moss, Wm. Moss and J. E. Tiarks, I last had the honour of addressing you the 30th ult., when I advised that before I could intelligently go into the question it would be necessary for me to procure from these claimants the numbers and location of their different lots.

This I have now done, and furthermore visited the different situations, and the more I consider the problem the more intricate and difficult does it appear to me for any one individual to judge and settle successfully without the aid of sworn evidence setting forth where and what particular manner these various claimants have sustained loss or damage.

In a general way, I may state there is nothing that I can add to my former letters of the 14th December, 1894, and 18th June, 1895, on the subject, and wherein I pointed out that if one or two claimants received from the Government compensation for damages owing to the erection of fortifications there, I consider that all those persons who purchased lots at the auction sale of the Puget Sound Agricultural Company (the Hudson's Bay Company) in May, 1891, were equally entitled to some remuneration, and would (upon one or any being admitted) undoubtedly put in claims, and so it will continue after the four or five now before us have been adjusted, others will be put forward.

My reasons for surmising this are as follows:—

I need not go on with this, as I have already told you the circumstances. Then, he says:

And for this, in my opinion, the purchasers of lots under this particular plan, as set forth at the auction sale in May, 1891, have sustained a loss and accordingly are entitled to some remuneration.

Further on, he says:

In the case of the last named, however, (Tiarks), this gentleman, in 1893, built a house upon this lot at a cost of about $1,750. Other owners, I am inclined to think, will desist from improvements in this way now that the new fortifications are in front of them, their lots consequently become almost useless to them, and certainly unproductive to a degree which undoubtedly will be a cause worthy of consideration when assessing damages.

Mr. PRIOR.

We see from that that Major Jones is under the impression that every one of these gentlemen has good grounds for the claim he makes for compensation from the Government. On July 18th, 1898, there is a letter signed A. Power, from the Department of Justice to the Deputy Minister of Militia and Defence, in which he says:

You have the report of our agent, suggesting a basis for settlement, and if you do not consider the proposal satisfactory, it would be well to have the amount of compensation determined by the court.

Now, this is what I want to call the particular attention of the hon. gentleman to. It seems to me that the only fair thing for him to do is not to leave this matter to Major Jones or to any one in his department, for they seem to be at cross-purposes, but to allow these persons to have their cases tried in the Exchequer Court, giving them all the assistance possible to bring the matter to a conclusion.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Have they asked for it?

Mr. PRIOR. No, they have not asked for it, because they think that since you have given compensation to two or three, and they are all in the same position, you should give the same to them. This goes on to say:

Mr. Reford has been for years endeavouring to obtain a settlement, and he has written this department time and time again about the matter. May I therefore ask you to expedite the matter as much as possible, and inform me within a few days what your department intends to do so that a satisfactory reply can be given to Mr. Reford's inquiries.

There are a lot more letters on the matter, but I will not read them. The last letter is from Capt. Benoit, secretary of the Department of Militia and Defence, as follows:—

Department of Militia and Defence,
Ottawa, 8th March, 1899.

Sir,—I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 23rd ultimo, with reference to claims for damages to properties at "Viewfield," and especially of lot No. 1, block 21, and lot No. 11, block 19, submitted by you to this department in July, 1894, arising from the closing of the roads and the erection of fortifications on the Government grounds, and in answer, to inform you that special attention has been given to the matter by the Honourable the Minister of Militia and Defence, who, after a minute perusal of all the papers in the case, has stated that he did not see how the Government could be held responsible in any way for damages in this connection.

I am therefore to advise you that your contention in this case cannot be admitted, and that the claim cannot be entertained.

I have, &c.,

(Signed) A. BENOIT, Captain,
Secretary of the Dept. of Militia and Defence.

Robert W. Reford, Esq.
23 St. Sacrament St., Montreal.

This is the whole case. I am not a lawyer, and I cannot put it with the argumentative force of some hon. gentlemen in this House who are learned in the law; but I have given the plain facts of the case as they occurred from time to time. For five years these gentlemen, who bought lots intending to build beautiful residences on them, were stopped because the Government had enlarged the fortifications and put large guns there, and closed up some of the roads, whereby the view was obstructed, and some of the most beautiful drives were stopped. I hope the Minister will give the matter his kind and immediate consideration, and if he is still of the opinion that his department cannot compensate these gentlemen, although it compensated others who stood in exactly the same position, he will allow them to take their cases, or one case on behalf of all, to the Exchequer Court; and if the Exchequer Court finds that they are in the right and have equity on their side, I hope he will see that they are compensated in a proper and satisfactory manner.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am not able to enter into a discussion of the question now. I had a memorandum prepared, which, unfortunately, has been mislaid; but I do not know that it would be of any particular advantage to discuss it further. The hon. gentleman has presented his case, it is now in the "Hansard," and I will promise him to take it up and reconsider it carefully as soon as the session closes, and come to a conclusion one way or the other. I must say that as he is on the spot and is familiar with the circumstances, I feel that a great deal of weight is to be given to his opinion.

Arms, ammunition and defence—for equipment ..... $128,000

Mr. McNEILL. I would like to ask if a part of this sum is to be expended on a naval and military brigade. Is the Government doing anything in that direction?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Nothing at present.

Mr. McNEILL. I am sorry to hear that nothing is to be done in that regard. I quite recognize the forward movement which has been made in the annual drill of the militia, but I think it is very important that something should be done also in connection with our naval defence. I find that the Major General, in his report, under the heading of "Principles governing the Defence of Canada," lays the utmost stress upon this particular method. He says:

As a most important element in the defence of Canada, I cannot but impress the necessity of the naval defence of Lakes Erie and Ontario. The Militia Act of 1886 contemplated the formation of a naval militia brigade, and I strongly recommend that steps should be taken with that intention. Training ships with an instructional staff would be productive of most valuable results, not only as a strong and most important element of defence, but as a means of educating the sea-faring population and of improving the shipping interests of the inland waters of Canada.

I do not wish at this late hour, and particularly at this late stage of the session, to enter into a discussion of this question. I think that the mere reading of that recommendation by the officer in command is of itself sufficient, and I would urge very strongly upon the Government that, since they have not done anything this session, they should take special care to do something next session. I am quite satisfied it is a matter of most vital importance, and that is also the view of the General, who, I believe, is one of the ablest officers the Government has ever had in Canada.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There is no doubt whatever of the very great importance of this matter. In addition to the General's report, the Defence Commission, which had this whole matter before them, made a report which, while, of course, it is a secret one, there is no impropriety in my saying does not differ from that of the General. My hon. friend, however, will understand that we cannot do everything in one year. We have made some progress, of course, at some expense to the country, and possibly next year the matter will be taken up; but whether by me or by my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, will have to be considered. I can assure my hon. friend that we are not losing sight of so important a question.

Mr. BRITTON. I wish to call attention to the neglect to spend a little money on the walls of fort at Kingston, and particularly on these two martello towers that were unroofed by a storm some two years ago. Several thousands are to be expended on the walls at Quebec, and, while no doubt, that expenditure is required, it is not needed more than at Kingston, where the condition of the walls and the fort is simply disgraceful. If the walls were all removed and grass-seed planted, the place would be presentable, and not look so dilapidated, and perhaps for all practicable purposes that would do well enough; but in their present condition the walls are an eye-sore. I am aware it is late in the session, and many demands for expenditure are made, and I can hardly hope to have a vote introduced for an expenditure in this direction this summer. But I simply call the attention of the hon. Minister to the necessity for repairs on these works, unless the Government are prepared to allow the walls and the earthwork to become absolutely useless. If they are prepared for that condition of things, something at least ought to be done to cover the unsightliness; and if they are not, something ought to be expended each year to maintain these works in some degree of efficiency.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) With respect to the subject of naval defence, as the hour is late, I shall not trespass on the time of the committee at any great length. A large amount is being expended on the militia, some $2,000,000 or $2,500,000, and in my opinion, if a certain portion of that were devoted to the establishment of a naval reserve in this country, that would be much more effective in strengthening the Empire. From the mouth of the St. Lawrence, around the coasts of Nova Scotia and the Bay of Fundy, we could produce 50,000 good and able seamen, and no doubt the Pacific coast and the lakes could also furnish a large number, and I think it is well worthy the attention of the Government to give some little consideration to this branch of the defences of the country and the Empire. I have not very carefully thought out this matter, but it is a well-known fact that when the British Government put a ship out of commission, they bring her to England and pay off the men, retaining a shipping master, and a quartermaster, and perhaps a few hands, to look after the ship in the meantime. In my opinion, that could be done just as well in this country in the port of Halifax, on the Atlantic, or the port of Vancouver, on the Pacific. The nucleus of a naval reserve is already in the hands of the Government. Our fishery protection service furnishes a class of first-rate men that could be utilized without interfering materially with that service, as they are practically out of work from October until April. With the ship paid off at the port of Halifax, these men might be taken on, the ship equipped, a West India trip be made during the winter, and in that way the men could easily put in six months' service, which would be an excellent drill and establish a nucleus from which the naval service of the country might be increased. Able-bodied seamen for the navy might be drawn from that service. There are no better men to be found, I suppose, than the hardy fishermen on the coast of the maritime provinces, and no doubt on the Pacific coast and the lakes as well. But those in the maritime provinces have not only to work in summer, but very often in the winter, at least some portion of them. If these men's services were utilized, by an arrangement between the Canadian and the British Government, a naval reserve might be brought into action that would be most effective for the navies of the Empire. I would like to have gone into this matter at greater length, but feel reluctant to do so at this period of the session and at this late hour. The subject is one of great interest, and which the Government ought to carefully consider. This reserve might not only be utilized for the service itself, but would give employment to a number of our fishing population, who for a large portion of the year are out of work.

Mr. MONK. In connection with this item of $75,000 for rifle ranges, I would like to ask the Minister if anything is being done towards the acquisition of a rifle range in the vicinity of Montreal. I understand that the rifle range at Côte St. Luc has been abandoned, and as we have a large number of battalions in Montreal and vicinity, they would like to know what steps are being taken towards replacing that range.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It is quite true that the range at Côte St. Luc is inadequate; there has been an accident there and we can no longer continue rifle practice there. Several ranges have been suggested, and I think some three or four have been surveyed, either by officers of my department or by competent engineers in Montreal. But no decision has been come to, because we have no money with which to purchase a range. When we get this vote, I hope to be able to make some provision for the riflemen of Montreal during the present season. I am not able now to indicate where it will be, but I may say that in the direction of Pointe aux Trembles there are two or three ranges which military men think would be suitable; they have been surveyed, but no steps have been taken to appropriate.

Mr. HAGGART. What rifle ranges are you going to purchase with this $75,000, and what equipment? Was the experiment made with the Oliver equipment satisfactory?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, entirely satisfactory. We paid Col. Oliver $5,000. We took a great deal of pains to test the equipment, and had a dozen sets made, and the same number of two or three other kinds. We sent them to the different districts, and I think the result has been favourable. With regard to rifle ranges it is proposed to purchase one in Montreal, which will be somewhat expensive, and one in Victoria, B.C. We are now purchasing a rifle range in Hamilton for which we pay $7,000. Then, at Bedford, N.S., we are purchasing one for $10,000. With this vote we expect to provide necessary accommodation in the several places. It may not all be spent. I cannot give the hon. gentleman full details, but I think the places that I have named will pretty well use up the vote.

Mr. HAGGART. Upon what principle does the hon. gentleman proceed? Does he propose to furnish ranges at the headquarters of all the battalions?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, the idea is to have one for each military district, if possible, in some of the larger districts perhaps more. But we cannot think of providing rifle ranges for every battalion, that is out of the question, though some assistance can be given. In some places where there is a good background, a rifle range can be purchased without much expense.

Mr. FOSTER. What is to be done with $128,000 ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. $33,000 is a revote ; Oliver equipment, camp equipment, two divisions and one cavalry brigade, $19,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What is meant by camp equipment ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. This is a recommendation made by General Hutton. I am really not able to give the details. Equipment for corps of engineers, $5,000. In New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island there is one division in each which have never been properly equipped.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the equipment ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It is a very long list. These estimates have been carefully made up by General Hutton. Equipment for four bearer companies of the army medical corps, $18,000 ; artillery material and ammunition, $53,000. Bearer companies are for the purpose of taking care of the wounded. There is one to be established in Halifax, one in Montreal, one in Toronto, and one in Quebec. There are three ambulance wagons with surgical instruments.

Mr. BERGERON. Are you going to take a part of this vote to pay for the cannon which the hon. gentleman bought last year on the other side ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, I have given all the items.

Mr. BERGERON. I see in the press the report of some guns arriving in Quebec. Can the hon. Minister inform me what they are and how much they cost ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There are twelve 40-pounders, and a number of five-inch howitzers, and they will be distributed at Montreal, some at Quebec, and some, I think, at Kingston. They cost about £20,000.

Mr. BERGERON. That is about $100,000 for guns. The late Government were criticised a good deal for bringing in guns. We shall have lots of fun in the next election over this importation.

Mr. BENNETT. The captains of companies are allowed $40 a year, and it devolves upon each captain to furnish a suitable place for storage for the accoutrements of his company. I have two or three cases in my own riding where, the Government not having provided an armoury or drill hall, the captain has to pay for the rent of the building. But there is this anomaly—that even in cities where the armoury is provided, the same amount is allowed to each captain, and the captain where no armoury is provided is allowed no more. I have been asked to call attention to this fact and see if a new arrangement could not be made so that a fair proportion of the rent of a building could be provided.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The rule is to allow $40 to each captain. Not much space is required as a rule. Each captain takes a room in his own house or in some outbuilding at no expense whatever.

Mr. BENNETT. But they have to pay rent.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Practically the expense is nothing. No doubt there are some cases such as the hon. gentleman refers to. And my attention had been called to the matter. It is very difficult to discriminate. This is the same rule as has existed at least since confederation. There have been very few hardships, and, as a rule, the captains make no complaint.

Mr. BENNETT. I am not a military man myself, but those familiar with military affairs, I think, will know that it is very difficult to get up interest in companies. Where they have no room in which they can drill during the winter months, it is difficult at the commencement of the season, to work up a company ; whereas, in the towns, where the department provides a drill hall, the interest is kept up. In my own town, a captain with commendable pluck, hired a decent-sized room for the use of his company, but the rent was just about the amount given him. I would suggest that an amount should be provided for this purpose.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I will look into it.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose it will not be the most grateful thing to do, but has the Minister any idea what he is asking Parliament for militia purposes this year ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. In the vicinity of two millions of dollars.

Mr. FOSTER. That, as my hon. friend will see, is an enormous vote. I know that it is popular in very part of the country to do as much as possible for the militia ; but I wish to call attention to the fact that it is possible to overdo it. I should be glad to feel that for this large expenditure the Minister is really making an effective force ; but I venture to say, with a great deal of diffidence, because I am not an expert, that the same criticism may be applied to this as to previous votes, that much of it goes to mere machinery and frills and too little to the making of an effective fighting force, such as we aim at. I do not wish to take up the matter in detail, but I want to draw the attention of the Minister of Militia and the Minister of Finance to the fact that these estimates are growing very fast.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The vote is not very much larger, I think, than it has been in the last three years, or, perhaps, than it was in 1895.

Mr. FOSTER. Outside of capital expenditure, it is.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am not sure of that. It has been the opinion in the past, I think it was so under the Administration of which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) was a member, certainly it was so under the Administration of Mr. Mackenzie, that if any economy was to be effected, it should be effected at the expense of the militia. If any vote had to be cut down it was the militia vote that had to suffer. I think that was a foolish policy. As I said in discussing the main Estimates, we should do one thing or the other—either make our force effective or save our money altogether. If a million and a quarter will give us a militia which is not effective, and a quarter of a million more—I am speaking of the charge against income—will give us an efficient militia, I think it poor economy not to expend the quarter of a million. That is the policy we are trying to carry out. I am not taking credit to myself. A process of development has been going on. I found the militia, when I took the head of the department, in better condition than it had been before. It has gradually improved since its organization, certainly with the last fifteen years.

There are two or three points that I may mention to my hon. friend in respect to which I think he will agree with me. The most important is in respect to the education of the officers of the active militia. The standard is very much higher to-day than ever it was before. We have effective schools and we are insisting upon every officer having that qualification which he can only get by attending one of these schools for a certain length of time. We are insisting that no company shall go into camp unless, at least, one of the three officers is fully qualified. Another thing we have done, which I think is important. We have limited the time of service. There was an age limitation, which was not adhered to, but to which we have tried to adhere to much more strictly, and we are bringing that regulation into operation as rapidly as possible. We have fixed the time limit there. A commanding officer shall, under the regulation, retire from his command at the end of five years, but his term may be extended to eight years. We have tried to adhere as closely as possible to that, and it has been done to a very considerable extent. The result of that is that all these officers, young men particularly, after serving five or eight years, go out at the age of 45, go upon the reserve list and may be called upon and will be called upon from time to time. They are effective officers who would be of immense advantage to the country in case of any trouble. By this system we shall be enabled, in a very short time, to double the number of effective officers in the militia of Canada. It is too late an hour and too late in the session to go into a full discussion of the subject, as I would have liked, but my hon. friend will find that the money that we are spending is being well expended, and that the line which is being taken is one which will result in very much greater efficiency than ever before.

Mr. FOSTER. At this stage of the session I do not want to provoke a discussion of the militia, but I just simply want to say, that if we are going to be generous in our expenditures let us be generous where it really promises to make the force effective. I have a good deal of faith in our present General, and I would like to see his recommendations carried out as far as possible, but it is quite possible that a gentleman, enthusiastic and taking a view of war over the British Empire, might have ideas that it will be impossible for us to carry out with our limited resources.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). Mr. Chairman, I do not know anything about the purchase of the equipment as I do not know what is being paid for it, but as far as I can see there is no extravagance practised in the militia at the present time. I think that the expenditure is quite necessary. A few years ago the militia only went out once in every two or three years and we could not keep up the interest or enthusiasm so that this drilling at such infrequent intervals was really of no benefit. The men forgot the drill when they went out only once in two or three years. I think the militia expenditure is handled more carefully and not quite so extravagant as that of the other departments. I do not think there has been any extravagance at all, and if we reduce the amount of the expenditure we will have to reduce the militia force of the country. I see that there is an amount for the Royal Military College in Kingston. I may say that I tried to get one of the graduates of that college to come out and go into camp, but I did not succeed. If the Government are to keep up that college at all, to make military men, you should allow them to come to our military camps, if they do not come, it is discouraging to others who sacrifice their time and business. I hope that the members of the Government will see that it is the duty of every man who is made a soldier to file an appearance in the annual camps to better qualify himself to defend the country when it is necessary.

Mr. BERGERON. I would like to ask the hon. Minister if he has leased the Ile aux Noix Wharf, opposite St. John?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, it has been leased to a company, one of whom is a gentleman named Mr. Naylor.

Mr. BERGERON. What have they leased the island for?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think they are using it for a summer resort.

Mr. BERGERON. Are the Government repairing the barracks?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Only in so far as it is necessary to keep them from tumbling down. The people are doing the work themselves, but so far as it is necessary to keep the place from destruction we have agreed to do something.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the amount of the lease?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. One hundred and fifty dollars a year.

Mr. BERGERON. For twenty-one years.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think so. We were getting $80 a year before and had to pay a caretaker 50 cents a day, but now we get rid of the expense of a caretaker and get $150 a year. The parties do all the repairs which they want, other than those to which I have referred.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the estimated cost of what the Government are doing on the island now?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The Government are doing nothing at all.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the estimated cost of the repairs?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. We have no estimate yet as the work has not been commenced.

Mr. BERGERON. I am informed that the work has been commenced?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The gentlemen who have leased the island are working.

Mr. BERGERON. I understand that there are some of the Government workers there?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Not that I am aware of.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman cannot tell me the estimated cost?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No. The work has not been done, and no estimate has been made.

Mr. HUGHES. I would like to draw the attention of the committee to the fact that I want to see no cheeseparing in the militia Estimates. We have had enough of that in the last twenty-five years, and I trust we will have no spirit of that kind on either side of the House in future. Canada pays less for military purposes than any country in the universe, and in a country as wealthy as Canada is, I think it is scandalous that we should be taxed to the tune only of about 25 cents per head per year for the militia. The militia has been kept up by the officers going into their pockets and bearing the expense that has been thrown upon them by successive Governments. I think that hon. members of the House might very well improve themselves in their knowledge of the militia of the country. It is only tonight that one more than ordinary intelligent member of this House was surprised to learn that the permanent corps are not pensioned. I would suggest that the Minister make a note of this pension matter, and I trust that the Government will not bring in a half-hearted measure, dealing with it in a narrow spirit, but will deal with it in a broad spirit befitting the militia of this country. The expense is about 25 cents a head. It should be 50 cents a head at the very least, and then it would not be equal to what it is in other countries. I will take the opportunity of again pressing on this Minister of Militia, as I have pressed on others, that while the present system of granting certificates to our officers is a great improvement on the system of some years ago, it can be greatly improved. A young officer is appointed, say, to be a second lieutenant, and before he can attend a military school he has to provide himself with a uniform that will cost him anywhere between $50 and $75. Only a limited number can attend the school at a time. I would suggest that there should be a cadet system instead of an officer system, and let these provisional second lieutenants go there by hundreds, and if necessary stand beside men in the ranks. When I was going through the military school, the officer standing beside me was a lieutenant-colonel, while I was a full private, and when I got through I knew as much about drill as that officer. Let a simple uniform be provided for these different schools, so that the young officers would not need to provide themselves with expensive uniforms as they now have to do, before going to the school. I trust also that there will be no diminution in the annual drill but that each corps will drill at least twelve days every year. The Minister spoke of officers being placed on the reserve list, and of officers retiring after five years' service. I believe it is well that there should be a period beyond which no officer should hold command of a regiment; but I think that five years in the majority of cases, will be found to be too short a period.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There is a maximum age—three years more.

Mr. HUGHES. No self-respecting officer is going to hang around and ask for three more years of service.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The district officer commanding may recommend it in the case of a very good officer.

Mr. HUGHES. No self-respecting officer would take it. When my five years were up, my resignation would go in. But why should there not be the rank of colonel in our Canadian militia in addition to that of lieutenant-colonel? And why should not officers who attain this position be retained as brigadier commanders for two or three years, and then pass on to the reserve list. I notice what has been said by General Hutton, and I congratulate the Minister on continuing the good work. General Hutton has infused a new spirit into the volunteers of Canada, which has already borne excellent results. The great majority of his suggestions, I am free to say, are on right lines, and are in accord with the best interests of the Canadian militia.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I would certainly have liked to criticise the management of the Militia from an outside stand-point. While I thoroughly believe in putting the militia on a proper footing, we must halt when we come to what is called in the "Illustrated London News" of the 23rd of February, noisy militarism; that is to say, there is a class of officers in the service, not here, perhaps, who advertise themselves considerably, by articles written by themselves, and known as the Wolseley school. Gen. Wolseley is a very good general and has earned a good many honours; but he has always taken care to have himself written up. I have read articles in the English papers about the militia of Canada that must have come from here. Putting politics aside, it is a great credit to our militia that it is so well conducted, while this newspaper says that in England they can hardly equip their militia regiments though there is an abundance of officers there. I think it is right that the militia should be put into good shape, but I do not like the idea of my hon. friend from North Victoria (Mr. Hughes), who talks about our being taxed to a greater extent for their support. I think the people of this country will halt about being taxed to such an extent as to have us become a warlike nation and contribute an army to go abroad. Are we to become a warlike nation and equip an army to go abroad or are we simply to maintain an army to act on the defensive? While having every love for the mother country, I am not prepared to see a great taxation placed on our people simply for the purpose of carrying out this imperial idea of the federation league.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Who is it writes the articles in the "Advertiser"?

Mr. DOMVILLE. I will find out, and let the hon. gentleman know, if I can. I will put a question on the Notice paper. I am entirely in accord with the hon. Minister in all he is doing, but there is one thing I would like to point out to him, and that is, that he can find officers trained in this country to handle our army. I would like to ask him whether every billet in this country is to be filled by officers imported?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No.

Mr. DOMVILLE. What inducement is there to a Canadian to go through the Military School and qualify himself for service, if he is to be turned down on every occasion by some officer brought out from the old country, who thinks he knows more than he does? There has been about $100,000,000 spent on our militia since confederation, which represents nearly one-half of the debt of Canada to-day, and each General we bring out turns the other down. One is for buttons, and another is for shooting, another is for tattoos, another is for cavalry, another for mounted infantry. Now, which is right?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Buttons.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I dare say that would suit my hon. friend: he would look well in buttons. To my mind, a step has been taken in the right direction in getting good arms. But what is the use of having good arms, if the men cannot shoot? I think that General Herbert's idea was the correct one, namely, to start from the bottom, and teach every man in this country to hit the mark. Then, if an emergency should arise, they can go out and do something; but this galloping all over the country, with an imaginary enemy in front, and another in the rear, and another on the flank, may be a very pretty manoeuvre, and please the press, and sound well in England, but, as the French say, "Ce n'est pas la guerre." What we want is a militia trained to shoot. If the men can shoot, a week will put them in good shape as regards drill. If that were not the case, our militia would be a mighty poor business, for there is not a camp in the country that is not composed of at least 50 per cent recruits. Take this idea of retiring at the end of five years. A colonel has gone to all the trouble to keep his men together, and then has to retire after five years' service, simply because of the imperial idea of making room for officers below him. But in the old country the senior officers have a pension to start on, and if they are of any use, they generally get a staff appointment somewhere. The time has come when we should make up our minds as to what our militia is going to be. I am not finding fault with the vote, but I object to our going in for an Imperial army. As the representative of the taxpayers, I object to it. My hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Prior) will admit that if you put a man on the reserve, after three or four years, with a new drill coming in, and new rifles, and everything changed, he will be very little use afterwards. If he is any good, he might as well be kept on, and if no good, let him be got rid of before. I believe in the Switzerland system of teaching our men how to shoot first. Next year will be our year of criticism. We have not had time to criticise, so far, and we must be careful how we criticise these gallopers over the country, and offend an Imperial officer, who is superior to anything in this country. When I was over at the Jubilee, they called us colonists, and these do not even agree amongst themselves, because each general that comes out here, says the one who was here before him was no good. What is the next general who comes out here, if we bring out another—and I hope we will not—going to say? I hope we will get some General out of our own country, and I hope the staff appointments will be given to our own men, and I think I can find a good many men here who, though they may not agree with me in politics or anything else, would make excellent officers for these appointments. I am willing to take things as they are up to the present, but next year I shall be prepared, if spared, to go into all the details with regard to the expenditure during the regime of the present Major General. I have not a word to say about his being a good or a bad officer. I hardly know him by sight, for I have only seen him once, and may never see him again, but next year there will be ample opportunity for us to find out how much further we are to go, and whether we are going to put our foot right down and say what the position of Canada is to be in reference to the militia. If we want to place Canada in the position of a warlike nation, we want not only arms, but arsenals, and forts, and all the latest equipments. No sooner have we purchased artillery than we find it out of date, and replace by quick-firing guns, and the same may be said for our rifles. Canada would have to spend about $20,000,000 a year to keep up an army of the kind suggested by the present Major General.

AN HON. MEMBER. We cannot do it.

MR. DOMVILLE. Then, we will see what is the next best thing to do. While doing everything he can to promote the efficiency of the service, I hope the hon. Minister will not allow himself to be led away by anybody who might be classed as belonging to that section of opinion which the "Illustrated London News" calls noisy militarism.

MR. HAGGART. We require an explanation from the hon. Minister, after the extraordinary statement made by a gentleman who, I believe, is a colonel on the active force, that the recommendation of the General will saddle this country with an expenditure of at least $20,000,000. Is that what the hon. Minister is leading us to by his estimates? Or is there any foundation for the statement of the gallant colonel who has just addressed the House?

THE MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have the greatest possible respect for my hon. friend from King's, N.B. (Mr. Domville); but, having very carefully looked into this question, I do not view with as much apprehension as he does the suggestion of the General. I think that the expenditure of the present year, a considerable part of which is on capital account, will not be exceeded next year, and will probably be slightly reduced, while carrying his recommendations into effect.

MR. BERGERON. I wish to go back to this Isle aux Noix matter. I think it likely that my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, King's) is not aware of what is actually going on. I am under the impression that this place would be a first-class place for a camp in that part of the country.

THE MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. We have an absolute right to go and hold a camp whenever we please. That is specially provided in the lease.

MR. BERGERON. At the same time, if I am not mistaken, it is understood that the barracks there, which are nice buildings and well constructed, are to be fitted for a summer resort, kept by Mr. Naylor, who is the agent of a company made up of friends of St. Johns of the Minister of Public Works. Of course, it is not in the department of the Minister of Militia, but we shall find in the Estimates that we are to spend $8,000 for a wharf—and this is simply for tourists. Then, there is $4,500, as I have heard, for another wharf at Sabrevois, which is of use only to gentlemen of a club. We have built a wharf for $10,000 at Iberville, also for the benefit of a club there. The only vessels stopping at this wharf are yachts and other pleasure craft, except one barge. We are spending money by the bushel. If it is useful, it is not so bad. But I do not think we should build wharfs here and there on the Richelieu River merely for pleasure seekers and for the benefit of the members of a club. This property has been leased by the Government for $150 a year for 21 years. The Minister thinks he has done a good thing because it was formerly leased for $40 a year and they had to pay a caretaker. If it were leased for that before the Government that was responsible for it was responsible for something very bad. The man who paid $40 made $400 or $500 a year, having a pasture on the island and charging those who sent their animals there—which will give an idea of the size of the island and what can be made of it.

Mr. HUGHES. I would like to say to my hon. friend from King's, N.B. (Mr. Domville) that I think he has wrongly conceived the views of the present Major General Commanding in some respects. I can certainly say that the Major General agrees with the honourable and gallant member for King's in believing that the soldiers should be good shots. A very practical system has been carried out in training them. As for the annual drill, the Major General has the same view as the hon. and gallant member. The General has inaugurated a very useful training in connection with these camps, the exercise of having what we call manoeuvres. The men, in performing these manoeuvres, learn as much drill as on a routine parade, and they also learn the country which they may be called upon to defend in case of necessity. I am satisfied that when my hon. friend (Mr. Domville) looks into the matter he will find that his views and the Major General's are one—another proof that great minds run in the same channel.

Mr. HAGGART. I would like to hear an answer from the hon. Minister to what has just been said by the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron). Is it true that the barracks at Isle aux Noix have been leased?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I stated that. The barracks have not been used for many years. The buildings are going out of repair. The island has been rented to a farmer, or somebody, for a trifling sum, and the buildings allowed to go down. My hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) says that Mr. Naylor represents a company. I do not know anything about that. He made application for the island, and, on looking into the matter carefully, we considered that $150, which was more than three times what we had been getting, was a fair rental. Mr. Naylor becomes the caretaker himself. We are saved $200 or $300 a year.

Mr. MONTAGUE. You are at liberty to re-enter at any moment?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes. I thought it a good arrangement, and I think so still. Mr. Naylor wants to use it as a summer resort. It is better to use the buildings than to leave them unused, and in his own interest he will take good care of them. The repairs are being done by him. The Government will do any work that is considered absolutely necessary to prevent any part of the building being destroyed. But we have not undertaken any general system of repairs.

Mr. MONTAGUE. No expense of fitting? The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No.

Mr. BERGERON. But the barracks will be devoted to hotel purposes. They are making rooms there, and if the Minister should require to use them for a barracks, he will have a great deal of expense to put them in military form again.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) is mistaken. There are rooms there now. This man would not incur heavy expenditure such as the hon. gentleman indicates. I do not think much change will be required. I understand that the man who has been living there has destroyed some of the buildings and some repairs may be necessary to restore them.

Mr. DOMVILLE. My hon. friend from North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) refers to the manoeuvres that were carried out. No doubt they are very good, but the fact that they were carried out proves my argument. It shows that the idea was there before the present General came, for he could not in ten days knock the men in these additional movements. I did not want to criticise, but only to say what Canada is willing to do. If our officers can do these things that are spoken of, that is about all we require. I do not think that there is any need for articles in the paper such as I have read, one of them, if I remember well, speaking of the "paralysis of the militia." It is not very much paralyzed if the hon. member for North Victoria speaks correctly. If our men could do all these things they are not too bad, and will compare even with some of the British regiments that learned marching and countermarching and turned out nothing at all. We have only to go back to history not long ago, at the time of General Braddock, when the colonists knocked the blazes out of the whole of them.

Intercolonial Railway—

Increased siding accommodation.....$90,000

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It has become necessary to extend double sidings at almost all the points along the line, owing to the increased number of cars. A great deal of time has been lost by having to break up trains.

Mr. HAGGART. Why is it charged to capital account?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You could not possibly do it out of ordinary revenue, it was not a matter of repair, it is extension and enlargement.

Mr. HAGGART. I never knew siding accommodation to be charged to capital account before.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Well, the hon. gentleman did not, nor would we if we were simply making ordinary extensions and renewals from time to time. But where you have to do all these immense extensions that we are required to do now, it is a totally different matter. We have to get new rails, we have to lay down new track, new beds, and a good deal of construction work is required. This is quite beyond the ordinary.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I wish the hon. gentleman had been here and heard the speeches of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), who declared time and again, in the old days, that this capital account of the Intercolonial Railway should long ago have been closed. Now, instead of its being closed, it is being opened up very widely, and things are being charged constantly by the hundreds of thousands to capital account that were, under the old regime, charged to current account. If the hon. gentleman will refer to "Hansard" last year he will see items, renewals of bridges, for instance, always charged under the old system to current account, and the hon. gentleman has charged them to capital account. I venture to say that in the present Estimates there are three times the variety of items, yes, four times the variety of items, charged to capital account that were charged to capital account under the old Government. Now, that absolutely destroys the figures for purposes of comparison. The hon. gentleman will go to the country and say he has been managing the railway with a certain line of economy, and the effect will be that what ought to be charged up to current revenue account and so increase his deficit, is charged up to capital account, and goes to the debt of the country, and the hon. gentleman receives credit for running the railway with greater economy and efficiency, whereas he is adding to the debt of the country. Here is an item for increased accommodation in the way of sidings. What is the cause of that? It has been increased owing to the increased revenue, therefore, the increased facilities ought to come out of revenue.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is original construction.

Mr. MONTAGUE. But for the purposes for which these sidings were constructed the demand has been increased by the trade, consequently the revenue has been increased. If that is not the fact, then the hon. gentleman has no right to construct them. This I say, that for all purposes of comparison the figures have been absolutely spoilt, the hon. gentleman must admit that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I absolutely join issue with my hon. friend in respect to the statements he has made. In the first place, when he says that there is a greater variety in the number of charges which are included under the head of capital expenditure than in the past, I join issue with him on that proposition.

Mr. MONTAGUE. We will go through them and compare them. Here is siding accommodation.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Take the item of siding accommodation. Can the hon. gentleman say with any approach to fairness that the conditions that we are called upon to grapple with to-day are analogous to any conditions which have been recognized as existing during the past? I am called upon to-day to add to the sidings throughout the whole line from one end to the other. What is the reason of that? It is because the time has come when, if we are to do railroad work in a proper manner, up to date, with proper facilities, we must adopt a different class of engines and we must haul heavier loads, not particularly because the business has increased, but even to do the business we are doing at a cost which will enable us to do it profitably.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That doesn't meet the statement at all.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think it materially affects his statement. I think the hon. gentleman will find that in the past there have been charges in respect of extensive siding accommodation. But even if that is not the case, does the hon. gentleman say that any of my predecessors was called upon to furnish sidings and accommodation that would cost, I won't say $90,000, I will say one-tenth of that? I venture to say that you won't find $10,000 spent in providing new siding accommodation in any one year in the history of the Intercolonial Railway. The conditions now confronting us are conditions which are entirely on a footing with the original construction of the road. If we are going to do business, we are called upon to put the road in such a shape that we can use heavy engines and haul heavier trains. We cannot use heavy engines to haul longer trains unless we have additional siding accommodation, not between two or three points, but at every point along the line where crossings take place. The hon. gentleman never undertook such an expenditure as $90,000 in any one year, or a tenth part of it, in the way of siding accommodation. He can turn up the items which have gone to make up the total of capital expenditure, and he cannot find any item approaching one-tenth of this point for that class of expenditure.

Mr. HAGGART. I would not think of putting it in.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, such an expenditure was not made on account of sidings. The hon. gentleman spent $10,000 or $20,000 in building fifteen or twenty miles of siding where we are spending $100,000. We are going to do the whole of it now, but we are doing as little as possible to enable us to get along. Take other items and you will find that they have always been regarded in past years as properly coming within capital expenditure, when they have not been made, but we are face to face with conditions on the Intercolonial that are entirely distinct from any that the hon. gentleman had to grapple with or that have arisen in years past. There is not a railway that has not thrown on the scrap iron heap its 40 or 45 ton engines, and replaced them with 80 and 90 ton engines. You must change the character of your road. It is impossible to do it out of income and you must do it out of capital account or not do it at all. The question is: Shall we do it or not do it? I think the opinion of any person who will travel over the Intercolonial will be that we have been endeavouring to bring the road up to modern requirements, so that it will produce good results.

Mr. HAGGART. Imagine the Grand Trunk, after paying a dividend, borrowing an amount to increase its siding accommodation. $90,000; to provide increased station accommodation, $15,000; to provide increased accommodation at Lévis, to build an elevator at St. John, and so on, amounting altogether to nearly $600,000. These amounts are never charged by a railway to capital account upon a road fifteen or twenty years old, as the Intercolonial is. They should not be charged to capital, and the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) used to say, again and again, to me that there should be an end to capital account unless you build a portion of the line for the purpose of tapping it or adding to it. The hon. Minister's capital account this year amounts altogether to $1,600,000. My capital account, in 1895, was $211,000, of which $100,000 was to build a new branch to Dartmouth, so that the capital expenditure was a little over $100,000. If the hon. gentleman wants more modern equipment he has no right to charge it to capital account. He should take it out of income, and that is the only way that a comparison can be made between the management of the railway between 1893, 1894 and 1895, and between 1898 and 1899. The hon. gentleman should keep his capital account for items which are strictly chargeable to it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) is quite correct in saying that in 1895 the capital expenditure, on the Intercolonial, was $211,000, and that $100,000 was spent for a new railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would like to tell the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals that I have discussed this question with the big railways, and I have made it a point to ascertain what the rule is which obtains with them. These great railways in the United States lay down the rule that where, for instance, they are putting down a heavier rail, they charge to capital account the difference between the cost of the rail they put down and what it would cost for a rail of the same weight as the one they take up. That is a matter of betterment and it is invariably charged to capital account. This is the practice of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and they cannot do otherwise. It is not fair to the stockholders, who are entitled to dividends to take from the earnings of the road to pay for permanent extensions.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that this is not done in the United States? I will tell him that the railway journals are full of statements to show that it is done. I read a statement the other day to the effect that the dividends on the preferred and common stocks of the Northern Pacific would be influenced a great deal by reason of the enormous extensions which were being made by the board of directors out of income account.

Mr. HAGGART. Does the hon. gentleman say that the earnings of the road should not be applied towards betterment, if where a new rail is to be supplanted by a better one that the earnings should not be applied towards it? He says this is an injustice to the stockholders.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is the doctrine that is laid down.

Mr. HAGGART. That is the doctrine the hon. gentleman lays down. What is the difference between that and borrowing the money and voting a preferential stock for the purpose of supplying the machinery? What is the injustice to the stockholder?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is all the difference in the world. Supposing the receipts from any one of these railways were a million dollars this year, and they were able to take $500,000 out of that for the purpose of making an extension of their line, does the hon. gentleman say that it is of no moment to the shareholders whether or not that $500,000 is borrowed at 4 per cent, which would only cost the company $20,000 a year, leaving the difference between that sum and the $500,000 for distribution among the shareholders, or whether they took the whole of that money and expended it?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Their security is made the less valuable, if their debt is increased.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not at all, because they have the extension to show for it, and that extension is supposed to have earning capacity, or it would not be made. They are not adding to the burdens of the company in one case, but they are taking the money right out of the earnings of the shareholders in this year for the purpose of improving the road.

Mr. HAGGART. It does make a difference whether the amount is taken out of the interest which they are entitled to apply on capital; but the hon. gentleman says that if the money is put upon an extension of the road, they have not the debt, and they have the extension. If that is true, if you borrow the money, you have the extension of the road, but you have the debt as a liability.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. Minister says it would be unfair to absorb all the earnings of the road, because the stockholders this year might not be the stockholders next year. But there can be no parallel between such a case and that of the Intercolonial, of which the stockholders will be the same years hence as they are now. There is no advantage to Canada in showing a surplus by constantly unloading on capital account. The principle the hon. gentleman has laid down does not apply to the Intercolonial, and it might end in a very great vice.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman overlooks this very important fact, that we have not the income, and do not expect it, out of which to do this work. It is a matter of comparative unimportance whether the money is borrowed for the purpose of making these improvements, or taken out of the surplus earnings, if we have them.

Mr. CLANCY. There is only this difference, that one appears in the unpleasant light of a large deficit, and the other in the more congenial light of a public debt.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. To me it is an unimportant matter whether or not this work is done under the form of a capital expenditure or under the form of an income expenditure. The main point is to get these things done which are necessary in the interests of the Intercolonial, and which we cannot straggle over a period of years. You cannot strengthen your bridges by degrees; you have to have them strong enough to carry your engines and heavy trains, and you have to extend your sidings now, and enlarge your engine-houses now. You have not the money to do these things now; your income does not suffice. The surplus that would be shown under the most favourable circumstances would not be large, and to use the form of an expenditure on income account in meeting these charges would simply be adding to the debt under another form. My hon. friends, however, say that for the purposes of comparison this method of making the outlay is not fair. On that point I am prepared to join issue with them. The extensions and improvements on the Intercolonial are just as large, and larger, than in times past, and I am going as far as I can in drawing on income; I am not asking for anything on capital account that I can avoid; but these works have to be done now to be useful, and, for the purposes of comparison in the future, the hon. gentleman's position would not be in the slightest degree impaired. The hon. gentleman would argue that I should go on and do whatever is necessary out of income, and show a deficit of $1,500,000 this year, so that my hon. friend could say: When I had charge of the Intercolonial, I was able to keep the deficits within $100,000, and look at what they are now.

Mr. CLANCY. Then there will be no limit to the hon. gentleman's capital expenditure?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There will be no limit, if you gave full range to your wishes in the matter, except the needs of the system.

Mr. CLANCY. Suppose the hon. gentleman thought proper to ask $10,000,000 for these purposes, he would be able to say next year that, as the result of that large expenditure, there is a favourable balance on the side of income, although we have added that much to the public debt. Will the hon. gentleman say it is a fair statement of account, that by means of charging expenditure to capital he is able to show a surplus.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman will see that the expenditure on appropriations asked for are not extravagant. He assumes that I would set my imagination to work in order to make large expenditures in every possible direction, but we are proceeding very moderately and within reasonable limits. I am only taking the course which I think any one will say I ought to take, who is interested in seeing the Intercolonial Railway put upon a fairly sound business footing. I do not think the people want the Intercolonial Railway to present the appearance of a bankrupt concern, but to have it, so far as possible within reasonable and moderate limits, a road which will be a credit to Canada.

Mr. HAGGART. Suppose an item is charged to capital account, the first charge against the revenue the next year is the interest on the increased capital account, but there is no such charge as this on the Intercolonial Railway and the hon. gentleman may go on increasing the capital account ad infinitum, and there is no charge for interest against the revenues the next year. I object, especially on a railway that belongs to the Government, to any such charges being put against capital account as those which are now charged against it. Perhaps I have been guilty myself to the extent of about $100,000 per year, but even my action does not justify the hon. gentleman in charging these things to capital account. I say that such things even as building elevators or a dock at Halifax should not be charged to capital account. They should be charged fairly to the road itself. It is high time that the capital account should be closed, except in cases such as building branches of 30 or 40 miles in Prince Edward Island, the cost of which is a fair charge to capital account. But it is not fair to charge sidings, increased station accommodation, or anything of that kind to capital.

Increased station accommodation..... $15,000

Mr. HAGGART. All I ask is that all this work shall be done by tender and contract.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is always done so.

Increased accommodation at Lévis (revote, $34,000)..... $80,000

Mr. HAGGART. What is the amount required altogether?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think we will require at least $20,000 more than we are asking. That will depend upon the cost of our station.

Mr. HAGGART. You are going to build a new station?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Why build a new station here if you contemplate building a bridge? If the bridge is to be built, why not put the station where it should be later on?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If my hon. friend knew the state of public feeling there, he would know that we would not be justified waiting until the bridge is built, and even after the bridge is built this station will also be a very important one. The bridge will be constructed six or seven miles further up the river, and I hardly think will be favourably located as a means of recrossing the river in substitution of the present station.

To build an elevator at St. John (revote, $40,000) ..... $114,000

Mr. HAGGART. Is the contract let?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes; the elevator is $98,000, and the foundation $16,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Has the hon. Minister (Mr. Blair) brought down the correspondence in the McDonald case which we discussed on the main Estimates, and which he promised me to bring down when we discussed these Estimates?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I thought I had already laid that on the Table, but I find I was mistaken. I have both the report and the correspondence here.

Mr. BERGERON. If my hon. friend will be kind enough to send them to me, I will not question him until I read the papers.

Mr. HAGGART.

Mr. HAGGART. I need not add to the protest I made the other evening against the policy of building elevators at St. John. In my opinion the expenditure is unjustifiable. The Government cannot carry grain to that port to compete with the Canadian Pacific Railway, which has elevators there and which has a shorter line and is losing money I believe, or not making money on the grain carried there, but is carrying it for the purpose of building up a maritime trade at St. John. Where can the Government get their grain? In Montreal? The Canadian Pacific Railway has its own ocean terminals at St. John, and the Grand Trunk Railway at Portland. The Intercolonial Railway is very unlikely to get grain coming down by the St. Lawrence. It may be possible that they will get it from the Canada Atlantic Railway; that is the only possible way that I can see. This building of elevators at the northern part of the port to compete with elevators already at the southern part, is altogether unjustifiable.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman's (Mr. Haggart's) leader has stated most positively that he is in error in that.

Mr. HAGGART. I speak for myself.

Increased accommodation at St. John (revote) ..... $49,600

Mr. HAGGART. Is that in connection with the deep water facilities?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. I have the papers which have been brought down, and I find these specifications give the fullest details of the contract. The contract is a lump sum contract, as the hon. gentleman said, except in reference to two items, dredging and rock excavation. My difficulty, when discussing the matter before, was to know how the party was to be paid under a lump-sum contract. By looking at the contract I am not helped out of the difficulty. He is to be paid within 25 per cent of the monthly estimates as the work proceeds. But there is no way of finding out what the progress of the work is.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Why not? Surely my hon. friend must know that the engineers who drew the plans and made the estimates, ascertained the quantities of the various classes of work and put a value upon them and will make calculations based upon the contract prices as compared with the figures of their estimates.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) is using exactly the argument I used at the time of the debate on the subject. I told him the fullest details were made out by the engineer and furnished to the department and he would be able to pass on the schedule he had prepared. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) denied that there was such information. I find now the specifications attached to the contract give us the most minute details, just as I said should be done. The engineer has a schedule of prices and makes an estimate of what he thinks the price should be for doing the work. And as the work under the contract proceeds, he pays out the amount monthly to the contractor as the prices compare with the estimate he had in relation to the work. We could not get these details from the Minister. I am glad to see that the engineering department of the Intercolonial Railway was not so negligent as I understood from the hon. gentleman.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) will take the trouble to read the "Hansard" report of the discussion he refers to, I think he will find his memory does not serve him accurately. I told him what he is now stating. He may recall that he was under the impression that the contract would show just what prices were to be paid to the contractor for the different classes of work. I endeavoured to point out that that would not appear in the contract, because it was a lump-sum contract.

Indiantown Branch, to pay amount of award of Walter Shanly of $34,675.23, and interest thereon from 1st December, 1886, to 1st July, 1899, to Hon. J. Snowball ..... $52,148 44

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) will please give us full details of this. When I was Minister of Railways and Canals, the Hon. Mr. Snowball had a claim against the Government for certain work he had done on the Indiantown branch. An Order in Council was passed by the late Government which modified the original contract, and under this modification his claim was submitted to the Exchequer Court. I would like to know whether that Order in Council has been altered or modified, or whether this claim has been awarded by the Exchequer Court?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is no modification in terms, perhaps none in fact, of the Order in Council the hon. gentleman refers to. A reference was made under the order to the Exchequer Court, and the judge passed upon the question. In so doing, however, he pointed out that in strict law he would be compelled to pronounce against certain of the items, and he submitted the question as to whether anything should be allowed in respect to certain of these items as a matter which the Government might properly take into consideration. The claim was pressed upon us, and I felt it was impossible for my department to approach it from an independent and fair point of view, and upon referring the matter to the consideration of the Council, it was decided that these questions and all the facts pertaining thereto might be submitted to the judgment of Mr. Walter Shanly as a gentleman of established reputation, and one who had been frequently entrusted with the discharge of similar duties. I will put my hon. friend in possession of his report.

Mr. HAGGART. I got two reports of Mr. Shanly, one on Hugh Ryan & Co. and the other on Heney & Borthwick.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You will find Mr. Shanly passed upon these and made certain recommendations. The judge to whom the matter was first referred reported in favour of the contractor, that $10,665 was properly payable to Mr. Snowball. Some of the other items which the judge had left in the way I mentioned were referred to Mr. Shanly, who reported that $24,019 might be allowed of these items, and he further reported that an additional sum of $12,000 might properly be allowed. This $12,000 arose in connection with what might be called easements upon the original work. The judge was of the opinion that he was bound strictly by the letter of the contract, and that inasmuch as the contractor was allowed to lighten his burden or was relieved of doing a certain portion of the work, it was his duty to place a value upon these easements which he did to the extent of $12,000. Mr. Shanly reported that that amount might be allowed, but the Government, on considering the whole report, did not feel that they could adopt Mr. Shanly's view. They did so to the extent of $24,000, which, added to the $10,000 that the judge had awarded and which had not been paid, makes the principal sum $34,655.

Mr. HAGGART. I can see how it was made up. It appears that Judge Burbidge allowed the contractor, over and above his contract price, $10,665. As I understand it, the reference to the Exchequer Court was on a memorandum prepared by myself on the 16th of October, 1895. I have not had time to look into the papers, but I understood the Minister had ordered a fresh one to be submitted to the Exchequer Court.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think not.

Mr. HAGGART. The judge's award was $10,665. To this Mr. Shanly now adds, by way of increase, a further sum of $20,940. Did I clearly understand the Minister that these were claims which the judge thought in equity ought to be paid?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He said that as a strict matter of law he could not allow them, but the Crown might, as a matter of equity allow them.

Mr. HAGGART. I suppose as a matter of law he was not entitled to anything. It was only a matter of grace that he was entitled to anything at all from the Exchequer Court.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think the way the reference went he was entitled as a matter of law.

Mr. HAGGART. But the reference was an extension or alteration of the contract, a waiving of certain rights, which we had under the contract one of them that the certificate of the chief engineer should be final, notwithstanding that the contractor might have all the equities in the world. We waived certain things we were entitled to under the contract, and submitted it to the Exchequer Court. That was the extent of our grace.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Having done that, then it became possible for the judge, from a legal point of view, to allow items up to $10,000 by reason of these waivers.

Mr. HAGGART. What I cannot understand is the Exchequer Court judge going past the submission to him and saying there were other claims which he considered were equitable and right. There may be, but I have no doubt the judge would not report it so.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The report of the judge does not say that it was equitable and right that these others should be paid, but it says that as respects these other items many of them—the report of Mr. Shanly does not report favourably upon all—but as respects those the judge reports that they are matters which could properly be dealt with by the grace of the Crown.

Mr. CLANCY. Does he recommend that he should deal with them?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I take it that he does.

Mr. FOSTER. He makes a statement that it may be dealt with, but he does not recommend it.

Mr. HAGGART. Why does the hon. Minister not give all to Senator Snowball that Mr. Shanly reported he was entitled to?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There was one item relating particularly to a matter of easement. We felt that having entered into a contract which required him to do certain work, when he was relieved of a part of that work, it was not fair, or just, or equitable, and we did not see that we should allow him to be paid for work which he had not done.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not understand the hon. Minister rightly. I think that I know what an easement is perfectly well. Would the hon. gentleman tell me exactly what was done by the contractor which he claims, under this easement, was entitled to payment for?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Suppose he were required to build a bridge, and suppose that that contract came to be changed in such a manner as to enable him to go around and to carry out his contract on a different line, which would dispense with the necessity of building this bridge; suppose that, by reason of the fact of being allowed to change the line of the road, he was going to save $10,000; the contractor would claim that we ought not to have deducted from the contract price the value of the easement, or saving. Under these circumstances, Mr. Shanly was of the opinion that it would be proper to allow him that amount, but we did not think so and we refused to recognize the award to that extent.

Mr. HAGGART. Suppose a contractor has a lump sum contract for building twenty miles of road and that, instead of twenty miles of road he were to build 18 miles and make as good, or a better road; under these circumstances I think the contractor is entitled to full payment for the twenty miles. Of course, this is a matter of judgment entirely, but that is usually done.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman, perhaps, does not recollect the terms of the contract. The contract provided that if there were any lessening of the cost of the work, by reason of the change, the contractor was not to get the benefit, but it was to be deducted from the price.

Mr. HAGGART. I understand that thoroughly. Under the contract he is entitled to nothing, and it is only a matter of grace and by doing away with some of the rights of the Crown that the Exchequer Court was enabled to give him $10,000. As a further matter of grace I suppose he was entitled to the whole of the amount Mr. Shanly has made a fair report I think he should be entitled to the whole amount.

Mr. BERGERON. I would like to ask the hon. Minister if these papers which have been brought down are all the papers connected with the McDonald matter?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not seen them, but I am informed that these are all.

Mr. BERGERON. I have just looked over them, and they show that the accusations brought against McDonald were nearly all of a political character.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Very largely so.

Mr. BERGERON. There is hardly anything else except the charge of having given passes to some of his friends and allowed a great deal of travelling on the Intercolonial Railway without reporting to his chief officer. To this the Government did not attach much importance because they only gave instructions to the commissioner to try the political charges. To all these accusations Mr. McDonald made a general denial, and then an investigation takes place upon the political charges. I will just read, because I want this to go on record, the report of Mr. Bedard, which is as follows:—

It is very easy to see now that out of the ninety-three witnesses whom the complainant had produced and examined, there are not five who have been able to give any evidence worth examining and discussing. Putting aside Charles Belleau, Henri T. Roy, Charles King and David Pottinger, whose testimony explains, to a certain extent, their being summoned as witnesses, I am forced to declare that most of the other witnesses have failed to establish anything in support of charges and there appears no reason, no excuse for having summoned them; because either they know nothing personally or give their evidence in favour of the defendant. Seeing the difficulties one has generally to face when trying to prove facts connected with politics, I decided from the beginning to give full swing to complainant; and his attorneys consequently conducted their investigation pretty much as they were pleased to do. I intervened only when they were evidently beating about the bush, fishing for evidence, or wishing to prove facts certainly irrelevant. But now that we have the case of the complainant, one single charge brought against Mr. McDonald. And more particularly, I fail to find any excuse it is impossible to say that the evidence justifies for producing so many witnesses who knew nothing, or testified in favour of the defendant.

There is evidently a very strong feeling against Mr. McDonald in Fraserville, and a powerful pressure must have been exerted by his political friends upon the complainant to procure his removal. It is no part of my duty to say whether that feeling is founded on real grievances, or reasonably derived from unjust prejudices. But I would fail in my duty were I not to say plainly and unhesitatingly that the complainant has been given full opportunity to prove his charges, and that he has not been able to substantiate any of them by his evidence.

Mr. McDonald has examined seventeen witnesses, among them several members of Parliament, whose constituencies are traversed by the Intercolonial Railway. All and every of one of them have testified to what was already established by complainant's witnesses, to wit: That Mr. McDonald has taken no part whatever in the last election; that he was neutral to such an extent that his friends often found fault with him, and declared he was more flush with Liberals than with Conservatives, and they have nothing to say against him. It is also established that, though requested by the then leader of the Conservatives, Mr. Angers, to take part in the fray, he refrained from so doing, and that he even forbade his son to have anything to do with politics.

Those undoubted facts go to explain certain circumstances which, at first sight, might raise a certain amount of suspicion, and impose upon me the conclusion that Mr. McDonald has not taken any apparent or offensive part in the last federal election, and that the charges brought against him by the complainant are not supported by the evidence.

The whole, however, respectfully submitted.

(Signed) J. E. BEDARD, Commissioner.

Quebec, 12th March, 1897.

That is the whole case, and I understand, that upon this report Mr. Macdonald was subsequently dismissed. He was paid his salary all through by order of the department.

Mr. FOSTER. While he was suspended?

Mr. BERGERON. A letter of the 19th of January, 1897, by Mr. Schreiber to Mr. Pottinger states that pending the investigation of the charges preferred against him McDonald will be suspended from office, and he was requested to deliver all papers and documents to Mr. Belleau, who is to be in charge. Then McDonald himself is acquainted with his suspension. In a letter of the 6th of April, 1897, Mr. Schreiber writes to Mr. Pottinger:

I am in receipt of your letter of the 12th ult., with reference to the pay of Mr. McDonald for the time he has been off.

In reply, I am to say that his salary is to be paid for his full time.

In a letter of the 12th of June, 1897, to Mr. Pottinger, Mr. Schreiber writes:

I have yours of the 9th inst., inclosing a voucher from Mr. A. R. McDonald for expenses for the months of March, April and May, amounting to $139.75, with receipts attached for $3.75.

Yes, the railway is to pay his reasonable expenses. I return inclosures.

It seems as if the superintendent was anxious to know whether he should pay the salary, because here is another letter of the 23rd of August, 1897, addressed to Mr. Pottinger by Mr. Schreiber:

I am in receipt of your letter of the 21st inst., stating that you are still paying Mr. A. R. McDonald's monthly salary as it become due.

In reply, I desire to say that I am quite aware of it, and until I am otherwise instructed I fear I will have to continue.

Then there is the dismissal on the 13th of December, 1897, when Mr. Schreiber writes to Mr. Pottinger:

I am to instruct you to dispense with the services of Mr. A. R. McDonald at the end of this month.

On the 13th of December, 1897, Mr. Schreiber writes as follows to Mr. Pottinger:—

Message received. The department have written you to dispense with the services of A. R. McDonald, and to appoint Ouellette. Letters go to-day.

On the 30th of March, 1898, Mr. Schreiber addressed to Mr. Choquette, then member for Montmagny, the following letter:—

I am to inform you that instructions have been given to Mr. Pottinger, General Manager of Government Railways, to pay Mr. Bédard for the time he was engaged on the A. R. McDonald investigation at the rate of $20 per day.

There is the whole case. Some time ago it was stated that there were other charges against Mr. McDonald. I wish to make it clear that there were not, but that the only charge against Mr. McDonald was political partisanship. A few other things in connection with giving passes to political friends were discarded by the department, and instructions were given to the commissioners to try him simply on political issues. The commissioners report that there was nothing proved against Mr. McDonald, and his lawyers were even paid by the Government. His dismissal is simply an arbitrary act on the part of the Government.

To provide for changing the draw-bars of freight-cars from the link and pin coupler to the Master Car-builders' standard couplers ..... $10,000

Mr. CLANCY. What does that mean?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are required to equip our cars in this way in order that they may be admitted into the United States. The law comes into effect on the 1st of next year, and any cars that are not so equipped may be excluded from the United States. I am not doing it now simply as a beginning; it has been going on for a number of years past. I am doing it as rapidly as I can.

Mr. CLANCY. Has the hon. gentleman to pay a royalty on these?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, this is the cost of the article.

Improvements at Point Tupper..... $8,500

Mr. FOSTER. What is being done there?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have had one or two accidents there, and it is necessary that we should extend the pier, so as to get clear of the shoal, which, I believe, tends to obstruct the passage.

Mr. FOSTER. Will that be done by tender?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Oh, yes.

Improving the telegraph service ..... $13,000

Mr. FOSTER. What are you going to do?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have to have a separate line for the purposes of the Intercolonial. At present it is impossible to get a reply to a telegram inside of forty-eight hours.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Are you going to put up poles, or only a wire?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are going to pay a contribution towards it. For the main part of the line we pay $10 per mile, that is, between Lévis and Moncton, and for the rest $30 a mile.

Mr. FOSTER. To whom are you giving this?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. To the Great North-Western, as far as that system extends, at this end of the line, and to the Western Union at the other end.

Mr. BLAIR.

Mr. HAGGART. Are you going to keep it in repair?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, that is to be done by them. They have engaged to give us a separate and distinct wire.

One first-class passenger coach..... $10,385

Mr. MONK. Is this being built, or is it built already?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is built already. We found it necessary to increase the number by one. We could not get it built here. It is built by the Wagner Company.

Mr. HAGGART. Were tenders called for?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There were no advertisements issued. We sent circulars. The Pullman Company told us that their shops were filled with work and they were not in a position to take any more work. We communicated with the Wagner Car Company and the Barney & Smith Company, and the Wagner Company's tender being considerably the lowest, we gave the work to them. There are only three firms of considerable size in this business, and those are the three I have mentioned.

To provide new appliances and apparatus in connection with the installation of the Pintsch gas car lighting system.... $4,850

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is that the best system?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Cheaper than electricity?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Very much.

Refrigerator cars..... $80,000

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Those will be built under contract. We had twenty, and there is a great demand for others, and we are getting thirty more.

To build an elevator at Halifax (revote). $77,000

Mr. HAGGART. Will this finish it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Contribution towards rebuilding Cowan's Bridge over Pigeon Creek, in the township of Emily ..... $1,500

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We constructed a dam there and raised the water, and the people claim that we should contribute towards the cost of the bridge, representing the increased cost over what it would have been if we had not raised the water.

Deepening, &c., River St. Pierre, Lachine ..... $ 9,000
 Enlargement (revote) ..... 20,000

Mr. MONK. I want to call attention to a demand made some time ago by the municipal council of the town of Lachine. There is an old canal not used at all to-day between the new work and the principal street passing along the river's edge. The old canal is in an abandoned state and used for no purpose at all by the department. The town of Lachine has increased considerably since the last few years, and not long ago the council petitioned the Minister to obtain the use of it from the department for the purpose of embellishing it at their own expense and using it as a public park. They ask for no expenditure of money, but only the use of the canal, and I urge very strongly on the Minister to look into that petition. I think it was well founded and I think it had received the recommendation of the local government engineer. It should be granted as soon as possible as the town is pressing to carry out some improvements, it can only be of use for the Government to take possession of the work.

To pay Heney & Borthwick extras in connection with their contract for drainage works, reported in their favour by Mr. Walter Shanly..... $8,932 86

Mr. HAGGART. And that, I understand, is to stand for the present?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Rainy River—

Lock and dam..... $ 25,000
 St. Andrew's Rapids—Red River..... 150,000

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. These should be classed under the head of Public Works, and will be dealt with when we come to the Estimates of Public Works.

Rebuilding a portion of the south wall of the canal at Atwater Avenue..... $15,000

Mr. MONK. Has that work been carried through?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. A portion of the wall is disturbed by frost. The work has not yet been done, we have had no means to do it.

Mr. MONK. I suppose tenders will be called for?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I suppose so; our policy is always to call for tenders if possible.

Mr. HAGGART. We should have the direct promise from the Minister, because the Minister of Finance has refused to give it to us on some votes for the Public Works.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In some cases.

Mr. HAGGART. We intend to make motions on this subject unless the Minister gives a distinct promise that any item of $5,000 or over shall be let by tender as the law requires.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have no hesitation in giving that promise in 99 cases out of 100, but my deputy tells me that it would not be wise to make a definite promise in this case. I will say that it will be done by tender and contract if it is practicable and in the public interest—in fact, unless there are very cogent reasons against it.

Mr. MONK. When I speak of calling for tenders, of course, I mean a public call. The Minister of Public Works, in some cases in Montreal counts it calling for tenders when he sends out circulars.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not. Our advertisements are inserted in the papers.

Mr. MONK. There are a large number of contractors in Montreal, and if this is put up to public tender, I am sure the Government will save money.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I wish to qualify what I say so far as the case of steel bridges is concerned. In that case, specifications and circulars are sent to the bridge builders. There are only a few of them. They all get notice.

Mr. HAGGART. I may be allowed on this item to remind the hon. Minister that he promised to bring down information with regard to those who were called upon to submit tenders in cases of contracts for supplies for the Intercolonial Railway. I had a list of them when I was at the head of the department, and I do not know of any person of importance who wishes to tender but was put on the list. The hon. Minister said that the list had been increased. I should like to have the list for the last year of my administration and now to compare them.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is a pretty extensive list. I will try to get the information.

Mr. HAGGART. No, the list is a small one—thirty or so, altogether, I think.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My deputy tells me that the lists may be in Moncton.

Mr. HAGGART. No, they are here.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That may have been the case when the hon. gentleman was at the head of the department, but of course, the deputy knows best where they are now. I wish to guard myself against making a promise I cannot fulfil. If the lists are here they shall be placed in my hon. friends hands to-morrow; if not, they shall be telegraphed for.

Mr. HAGGART. The list was submitted to me every time a contract was to be let, and I made it a rule that the contracts should go to the lowest tenderer, and if two parties were equally low, the deputy was to decide. In judging of the qualities of articles to be supplied, it was left to the School of Science in Montreal to judge. I have seen the list with every contract that was let when I was in the department.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. These lists come up with the tenders now, wherever tenders are sent in answer to circulars. But it may be that the lists are sent back. If they are here, they shall be furnished my hon. friend to-morrow.

To pay salary and expenses of experts to gather information and prepare a uniform code of rules and regulations for the railways of Canada ..... $2,000

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Better let this stand, because I may have to drop it. I thought a Bill might be passed this session which would make this vote effective.

To defray the expense of procuring the attendance of witnesses in inquiries before Railway Committee of the Privy Council into charges of discrimination in rates by railway companies ..... $2,000

Mr. HAGGART. Surely the hon. Minister does not intend to pay the witnesses ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will tell the hon. gentleman what I propose to do. If I am given this grant—which, let me say, is only an approximate amount, I do not suppose all this will be required, but I want to have sufficient for the purpose—I do propose to pay the expenses of witnesses who will be required for the purpose of having a thorough and careful inquiry in regard to the complaints that are reaching us from all quarters with respect to discriminations of the railways in their rates, particularly in the matter of oil. Particularly on the question of oil, people have complained that both the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway are in the habit of giving large rebates to the Standard Oil Company which makes it impossible for others to enter into successful competition with them. It is a difficult thing to say, even if it is true, how far we should go. The inquiry is attended with a good deal of expense, and we have felt that it would not be an unreasonable thing to ask Parliament to give us a sum out of which we can pay the expenses of witnesses whom it will be necessary to summon for the purpose of giving evidence in this investigation. A good many people will require to be brought from the different counties, officers of the different roads will be required to give evidence on the question. No private claims will be considered.

Mr. BLAIR.

Ottawa River—

Survey in view of improvement to navigation ..... $10,000

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We intend to make a survey ourselves for our own information.

Mr. MONK. Is any part of that vote to be used on the Ottawa from here down to Montreal ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think so, it will be necessary to have the whole river surveyed.

Mr. CLANCY. Has a survey already been made by a private company with regard to this work ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I understand that the company has been doing something in connection with this work, and has some engineers on the river. The question is one of such immense importance in every way that we thought it would be desirable for us to ascertain from an independent stand-point what the actual prospects are and where works will require to be constructed. It may be that on further consideration this will be used as a contribution to people who are now working; on the other hand, we may think it desirable to put engineers on portions of the river ourselves.

Mr. CLANCY. At first I understand the company asked the Government to guarantee their bonds at 2 per cent on $17,000,000; but from a discussion that took place this session we were told that the company asked a guarantee of $20,000,000 at 2½ per cent. I wanted to ask the hon. gentleman whether he has ascertained approximately what the probable cost of the work would be.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Payment to A. P. Ross, formerly superintendent, Cornwall Canal, of an amount being the house-rent allowance of $200 per year, in lieu of house accommodation from the time it was discontinued, 1st July, 1891, to the 31st March, 1897, the date when Mr. Ross's services were dispensed with..... $1,200

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This was part of the arrangement under which Mr. Ross was engaged. As I understand it he was to have a fixed salary with house rent, or $200 in addition. Not only was it the arrangement but I am reminded that there was an Order in Council passed to that effect. The building was occupied for other purposes during the time this gentleman remained superintendent of the canal, and he therefore did not get the benefit of the $200 which he claimed he was entitled to. It was brought to my attention a little while ago, and having looked into the papers, it appeared to me the claim could not well be disputed. However, I referred it to the Department of Justice, and that department gave a strong opinion that Mr. Ross has a legal claim to this amount.

Mr. PRIOR. Was it discontinued for any special reason?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The building was rented to somebody else, the Crown received the rental.

Mr. PRIOR. When making a claim on the Government, I mean?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am informed that the way the arrangement first came before the committee was that the old superintendent was allowed by the Government to remain in possession of this house which, under the Order in Council, Mr. Ross was to have the right to use, and the value of which was estimated at $200. The old superintendent was left in it in consideration of his agreeing to instruct the new man to his duties. He remained in it during the whole of these years, and the question was not raised, as there was no demand made by Mr. Ross until this year.

Mr. PRIOR. I suppose he was one of those offensive partisans?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think Mr. Ross was a good friend of hon. gentlemen opposite, and no doubt continues to be to this day.

Committee rose and reported progress.

Mr. HAGGART. What will be taken up to-morrow?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). To-morrow morning we shall take up the Ottawa resolution and after that the railway subsidies.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In regard to the railway subsidies, I would say that the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster) has asked that we might have furnished some plans or maps, particularly of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, showing the different railway lines, so that they can be seen readily. I have said that I would have them prepared, so that it may not be possible to take up the railway resolutions if they are not ready. If it is possible to get them in the evening, we may take up the resolutions then.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I might inform the hon. Minister of Finance that it would expedite the discussion of the Public Works estimates if he would give me the report in regard to the port of Maitland that I have asked for.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I feel that I am somewhat at fault in that matter. I have sent word to the Public Works Department, but I have not yet received it. I will make inquiry to-morrow. If the consideration of the railway subsidies be postponed we shall go on with the supplies.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 2.25 a.m. (Wednesday).

Bill (No. 184)—from the Senate—to amend the Exchequer Court Act.—(Sir Wilfrid Laurier.)

Bill (No. 186)—from the Senate—to amend the Yukon Territory Act.—(Sir Wilfrid Laurier.)

PETER VANLUVEN vs. DOMINION BANK.

Mr. BELL (Addington)—(by Mr. Taylor) asked:

1. Was a fiat granted to Mr. Peter Vanluven, of Yarker, Ont., to bring suit against the Dominion Bank at Napanee, Ont., for alleged violation of its charter?
2. If so, has it been revoked or retarded in any way?
3. Will the Government bring down the correspondence in relation thereto?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). The Deputy Minister of Justice has furnished me the following memorandum, which gives the information desired by the hon. gentleman:—When Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper was Attorney General he authorized Peter Vanluven to use his name for the purpose of recovering penalties against the Dominion Bank for alleged violation of the Bank Act. Afterwards it was discovered that a claim had been included in the information to set aside the charter of the bank, which the Attorney General did not intend to authorize. We communicated with Mr. Vanluven's solicitors and informed them that unless they amended the information by striking out the claim for cancellation of the charter, we would withdraw the fiat. After some correspondence, not getting any satisfactory undertaking from the solicitors, the fiat was withdrawn. Mr. Dickey was then Attorney General. There is no objection to bringing down the correspondence, if it is desired.

Mr. PRIOR asked :

1. Has the Government made any arrangement with the Hudson's Bay Company or their agent, in regard to the expenses of running their steamer "Strathcona" on the Stikine River during this season by which expenses are to be paid by the Government and regarded as incurred for the relief of destitute miners in that district?

2. If not, has any other arrangement been made with said company by which any money has been, or will be, paid to them on account of said steamer running on said route, or on account of said company supplying relief to destitute miners?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). 1. No. 2. There has been no arrangement with the company in regard to paying the expenses of the steamer on the route but there has been an arrangement by which the company shall furnish relief to destitute travellers and the expenses therefor are to be paid by the Government. That was explained to the House in Committee of Supply a day or two ago.

POSTMASTER AT FLESHERTON, ONT.

Mr. DAVIS (by Mr. Richardson) asked :

Is not J. Sproule postmaster at Flesherton? If so, has any complaint been made against him and what is the nature of it? Has it been investigated? If so, by whom, and what was the nature of the finding in the case?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). Mr. R. J. Sproule—not J. Sproule—is postmaster of Flesherton, Ont. There has been no recent complaint against Mr. Sproule. In February, 1884, it was found that Mr. Sproule had been illegally applying to his own use Money Order and Savings Bank funds. The matter was investigated by the Post Office Inspector at that time stationed at Barrie, and Money Order and Savings Bank business was, as a result of the investigation withdrawn from the Flesherton post office. Flesherton has not since been a Savings Bank office, but money order business was restored on the 2nd January, 1886.

POSTMASTER AT PORT GEORGE, ANNAPOLIS.

Mr. MILLS asked :

Who is the postmaster at Port George, Annapolis County? Has there been any irregularities in connection with said office that required the services of the inspector? If so, what were they, and what is the situation now?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). I mentioned the other day, in reply to this question, that inquiries were being made. I was not then, nor am I now, in a position to give an answer. I will try to get an answer before prorogation. The question had better be left on the Order paper in the meantime.

PRIVILEGE—QUESTION OF—APPOINTMENT OF MCGREGOR & NORWOOD.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I wish to occupy a few moments on question of privilege. The House will remember, that during a former session, I had occasion to bring before the attention of this House the fact that Mr. Magurn, then the correspondent of the Toronto "Globe," had sent a lying telegram to the Halifax "Chronicle" with reference to a matter that was before this House. And the present Judge Lister was then a member of this House and Chairman of the Committee, stated that his attention having been called to the importance of the statement contained in the telegram and as Mr. Magurn was connected in some capacity with the committee, he had insisted upon his correcting that statement he had made, which was done. Mr. Magurn is now it appears, editor of what I believe is recognized as the organ of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), the Winnipeg "Free Press." I have received a telegram which goes to show that Mr. Magurn has a successor in the Press Gallery of this House who is qualified to take his place as a sender of false telegrams concerning what takes place in this House or in Committees of this House to newspapers for the purpose of conveying false information to the country:

"Free Press" correspondent telegraphs:

Sifton said that McGregor was not a livery stable keeper and Tupper said that if he was, as he understood him to be, a horse dealer, it only made the matter worse, as such a calling was of a most disreputable nature and in itself enough to condemn any man engaged in it.

I made no such statement that it was of a most disreputable nature; I said that I did not think that the fact of a man being a horse dealer was likely to improve the position very much over his being a livery stable keeper. Again referring to the conduct of the hon. member for Essex:

McGregor, Essex, gave a flat contradiction to the statements of Sir Charles who, beginning to see where his reckless malignity had landed him, endeavoured to cover his retreat by pleading that he had been misinformed and by attempting to show that if they were not the scoundrels he had depicted they certainly ought to have been, and that similar charges had been made against them in the House earlier in the session without contradiction.

That is a verbatim report of what has appeared in the "Free Press" of the proceedings of this House, and I say to the House that it would be impossible to crowd more lies into a similar space. The fact is, I made no charge against Mr. McGregor, nor Mr. Norwood, but I stated that, in my judgment they had been appointed to positions for which they were not qualified, and that a gentleman in whose credibility I had every reason to place confidence, had stated in the steamer in which I crossed the Atlantic that it was notorious that these gentlemen became rich in the course of a few months by accepting bribes instead of collecting the revenue that they were called upon to collect. That statement I found afterwards was confirmed by a gentleman who was connected with the press gallery, and who was in the steamer; he stated that the statement concerning these two men was made in the most open manner in the smoking room in the presence of a great number of passengers. I said that, in my judgment, it was a case that demanded investigation. I had no evidence except what I stated to the House, and I said that the name of the gentlemen would be given at once if an independent commission was authorized to investigate that matter. I took the ground that the occupations these parties were engaged in unfitted them for the collection of royalties on mines.

The PRIME MINISTER. Order. I think my hon. friend is overstepping the limit allowed. He has no right to discuss the matter again, after correcting the statement that has been made.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am showing to the House that nothing could be more false than this statement. When my hon. friend from Essex stated that he knew Mr. McGregor to be a man of good character, I said I thought it was unfortunate that the hon. gentleman had allowed the criticisms in regard to McGregor and Norwood to pass unchallenged when they were made at an earlier period in the session; and that if he was correct, as I hoped he was, in the statements he made, he had failed in his duty in not supporting an independent investigation that would establish the characters of these gentlemen. But to say that I said in reply to the member for Essex, what he knows, and what every man in this House knows, is a base falsehood, that I said if they were not the scoundrels they had been depicted, they ought to have been, is something so monstrous that I feel that this House is bound to take the position that no man should sit in the press gallery under the protection of the House, who uses or rather abuses the position by sending such lying telegrams over the country. I think I would fail in my duty to the House if I did not call attention to such an outrageous abuse of the permission that is given to parties to sit in the press gallery of this House.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I think the hon. gentleman is unduly sensitive. I am not finding any fault with his remarks, he has probably just cause of complaint. But I am sure each one of the members of the Government might make a similar complaint as to the comments of Conservative correspondents, which very often are unjust, unkind and absolutely unwarranted by the facts. If both sides of the press will learn to be more considerate, I am sure it would be a great advantage to all concerned.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If any hon. gentleman opposite will bring forward a single case in which any gentleman connected with the press has libelled any member of the Government by such false statements as that, I will not hesitate to join him in having that member of the press expelled from the gallery of this House.

COMMITTEE ON PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS.

Mr. DAVIN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to draw the attention of the Government to the fact that the Privileges and Elections Committee was called this morning for half-past ten o'clock; we were up there at that hour and remained until eleven o'clock, when I had to come down here. I am told they are waiting still, because no Minister was present to authorize the chairman to go on. Why, Sir, this is a great scandal, that an inquiry of this importance should be going on at this period of the session and we can make no progress because a Minister of the Crown is not present. I am sure the right hon. gentleman will thank me for bringing this to his attention, because I give him the utmost praise for his own statement in this House that he wanted an inquiry, but his own colleagues are not aiding him, and the inquiry is being burked.

The PRIME MINISTER. Order.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). The statement the hon. gentleman has made is altogether untrue; that is the only answer it is necessary to make.

Mr. DAVIN. I rise to a point of order, and ask your ruling, Mr. Speaker. A Minister of the Crown says that the statement I make is altogether untrue. He cannot make that statement; it is out of order.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman said that the Prime Minister's colleagues were burking the inquiry upon the committee; I say that statement is altogether untrue.

Mr. DAVIN. I insist on the point of order being settled. I insist that you should make the hon. gentleman withdraw the word "untrue."

Mr. McMULLEN. I contend that the statement made by the Minister of the Interior is quite in order. The member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) made a statement, and the Minister of the Interior has declared that the statement is untrue, not that the statement that the hon. member made is untrue, but that the statement he has made with regard to the matter brought before the House is untrue. He is quite right to make that statement.

Mr. DAVIN. I want the ruling of the Speaker.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If you will permit me, on the point of order, I will say this: The hon. gentleman says that members of the Government in the committee have burked an inquiry. That is purely a matter of opinion. The members of the Opposition upon the committee have accused the members of the Government upon it of burking an inquiry. The members of the Government have taken such a course as they conceived to be consonant with their duty; they do not conceive it to be correct to say that they have in any way burked the inquiry; on the contrary, we say we have facilitated the inquiry in every way possible. The hon. gentleman is of the opinion that the members of the Government are burking the inquiry, and because he entertains that opinion he assumes that he is in a position to state as a fact that the members of the Government are burking the inquiry. Now, I say it is not true to say that the members of the Government have burked the inquiry. That is my opinion, and I think, Mr. Speaker, I have a right to express my opinion as well as the hon. gentleman has a right to state his. If the word "untrue" offends the sense of parliamentary propriety, I am willing to substitute the words "altogether unfounded."

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It has been ruled in the House, as you know, and, in fact, ruled in opposition to my own contention, that it is not permissible to use the word "untrue" in regard to a statement made by an hon. member in this House; therefore, I imagine there can be no question as to that.

I may be permitted to say, however, in support of the opinion formed by my hon. friend, that, I think, if the hon. Minister of the Interior is of the opinion that the supporters and members of the Government, on that committee, have promoted this inquiry, he holds that opinion alone. I believe the publication daily of the proceedings of the committee has left the impression on the mind of everybody in this country that the members of the Government, and especially the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), who had charge of the matter, have been doing everything they possibly could to prevent examination, to prevent inquiry and to prevent the truth being got at.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is the impression made upon my mind and I believe it is the impression made upon the mind of every intelligent man in this House.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would inform hon. members that there is really nothing before the House at this present moment. The question was raised by the hon. member for Western Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) as a personal matter and I think I shall have to rule that the whole discussion is out of order. With respect to the point raised by the hon. member for Western Assiniboia, I think it is undesirable to use the direct statement that the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) has used, when he said that the statement made by the hon. member for Western Assiniboia was untrue. I think the subsequent statement made by the hon. Minister of the Interior covers the ground much more effectually and avoids that source of irritation that, I think, it is desirable that we ought to avoid in dealing with each other across the floor of this House.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, if you will permit me, I would like to give an answer to a statement made by the hon. member for Western Assiniboia (Mr. Davin).

Mr. BERGERON. There is nothing before the Chair.

The PRIME MINISTER. There is nothing before the Chair, but I think the House will permit me to answer the insinuation which is made by the hon. member for Western Assiniboia when he states that Ministers were deliberately burking the inquiry. If Ministers were not present this morning there is ample reason for it. As far as the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) is concerned, who has had charge of this inquiry, there is one good reason for his absence, and that reason is that he is sick in bed. That will answer for him. As to the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), he has one of the busiest departments in the Government. He has to answer all his correspondence before coming here, and then he has to be here at 11 o'clock to answer questions. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) is attending the Railway Committee, which is now sitting. As to the statement made by the hon. leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), it is such as would not be expected from him under the circumstances of this case. When the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries is absent and is sick in bed, he should not have made an allegation of that kind against him. It was not fair to my colleague to make such a statement in his absence. If he were present he could defend himself.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I was not aware that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries was not at this moment in the committee.

The PRIME MINISTER. If my hon. friend did not know that he was not in the committee he had not listened to what the hon. member for Western Assiniboia had said. It may be the impression of the hon. leader of the Opposition that the Government have tried to burk that inquiry, but it is not my own impression.

Mr. SPROULE Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER. I would inform the hon. gentleman that this discussion is out of order.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems rather strange that the rule should be applied to one side and not the other.

Mr. SPEAKER. I allowed a statement to be made by the leaders on both sides.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the House. I did not make any reference to the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies). Although the hon. Minister of the Interior has a busy department, we all have a busy task at this time. Hon. members came up to the committee at 10.30 and were dancing attendance there when word came up from the club that the god was at breakfast.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPROULE. Mr. Speaker, since the adjournment of the House has been moved—

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). It has not been moved.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not understand my hon. friend (Mr. Davin) to have moved the adjournment of the debate. I may be permitted to say that anxious as all parties are to dispose of the work of the session, everybody knows that the business of the House is carried on under great difficulty, when the House and committees are sitting at the same time and that it prevents the attendance, at two places, of hon. members.

PORT MAITLAND HARBOUR.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) whether he has the report in regard to Port Maitland Harbour.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I have sent to the Public Works Department and I expect it during the morning sitting. I will not move the item till I place it in the hon. gentleman's hands.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I want to say to my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) that he was good enough yesterday to say that the railway subsidies would be taken up to-day. I will be obliged to leave after the morning sitting and I was anxious to say a few words on that question before I went away.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). As soon as the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) comes in we will interrupt the business before the House and move the railway resolutions so as to give the hon. leader of the Opposition an opportunity of making the remarks that he intends to make.

GRANT TO THE CITY OF OTTAWA.

The House resolved itself into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:—

That it is expedient to provide that in consideration of the Municipal Corporation of the city of Ottawa, providing adequate water supply and fire protection for the property of the Dominion Government in the said city and in the vicinity thereof, and exempting the Dominion Government for any charge therefor, the Minister of Finance and Receiver General be authorized to pay out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada the sum of sixty thousand dollars per annum for a period not exceeding twenty years, for the purpose of improving and beautifying the city of Ottawa by the acquisition and maintenance and improvement of public squares, and the improvement of the streets and thoroughfares in the said city: such sum to be paid to a Board of Commissioners to be appointed under the authority of an Act of the Parliament of Canada to be passed for such purpose.—(Mr. Fielding.)

(In the Committee.)

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this resolution is to set apart a sum of $60,000 per annum for a period of twenty years for certain improvements in the capital city of the Dominion. Although the sum of $60,000 is there mentioned the actual increase in the expenditure proposed by this resolution is the sum of $45,000. There is at present paid to the city of Ottawa, the sum of $15,000 per annum for water service and fire protection. It is proposed by this resolution, or by the scheme which will be founded upon it if Ottawa will consent, to divert that $15,000 which is now paid from the ordinary city funds of Ottawa and place it together with the $45,000 additional in the hands of a board of commissioners, and that the whole sum shall be expended under the direction of the Government. We make this proposal upon the ground that the capital city of Canada has claims upon the Government and upon Parliament such as cannot be advanced by any other city. Even if we had not that consideration in mind I think we should feel bound to offer some additional allowance to the city corporation in compensation for the supply of water and fire protection, when we have regard to the very large amount of property which the Dominion Government own in and about the city of Ottawa. I think it will be found that, if we applied the same water rates to the water supplied for the Government as is paid by private citizens, leaving out of consideration the question of general taxation and confining ourselves to the question of water rates entirely, that the city of Ottawa might fairly claim a further sum for that service than the $15,000 that we contribute at present.

Mr. WALLACE. That is for water rates alone ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is for water rates and fire protection. While calling attention to that fact I do not base the resolution so much upon it as upon the general ground that the capital city of Canada has special claims upon the consideration of the Government and of Parliament. The capital city is in a peculiar manner representative of the whole Dominion. Every citizen of Canada must have some special interest in the capital, greater perhaps than he would have in any other city in the Dominion. If it is not so, it ought to be so, and I am sure we all hope that we are growing into that feeling, that the capital city of the Dominion should be regarded as having special claims to consideration. My right hon. friend the Prime Minister on one occasion spoke of making Ottawa the Washington of the North—an expression which I am sure in one sense pleased our friends of the city of Ottawa, and which has more than once been recalled to the mind of my right hon. friend. Yet, if he were literally to fulfil the assurance, perhaps I should say the expectation thus created, if he were to attempt to make Ottawa the real Washington of the North, I am inclined to think that our good friends of the city of Ottawa would be the first to complain; for the conditions of the city of Washington are peculiar. Washington has no representation in Congress, and no municipal organization in the same sense that Ottawa has. The fact that it is the national capital is fully recognized. The national Government assumes control over the District of Columbia, contributes to its maintenance, and in all respects engages in obligations which are greater than we perhaps would be willing to undertake here. So I think the proposal to make Ottawa in reality the Washington of the North, in the literal sense of the expression, would give satisfaction neither to Parliament nor the city. To Parliament it would be objectionable because it would cost too much; to the citizens of Ottawa it would be objectionable because it would deprive them of the rights of representation which they now possess. However that may be, believing that the capital city ought to be a matter of interest to the whole country, we propose that this additional sum of $45,000 shall be applied to the improvement of the city of Ottawa.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the $60,000 include the $15,000 ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yea. The $15,000 to which my hon. friend refers is at present paid to the city. We propose to ask the city to give up that $15,000, and allow it to be diverted into the new fund, with the additional $45,000, the two items making up the $60,000. I think, Sir, that the proposal will in the main commend itself to hon. gentlemen on both sides of this House, irrespective of politics. I am not unmindful of the fact that it has been received with some criticism in other parts of the Dominion. It is but natural that the residents of other cities should look with a little suspicion at a grant of this sort. To each one of us the city in which we happen to live has naturally the first claim upon our attention, and it is difficult for us to think that any other city has a greater claim on the Government. But the answer to that is that there is but one capital of the Dominion, and that fact seems to impose on the Government and Parliament an obligation which does not exist with reference to any other city. It might be supposed that the effect of a grant of this sort to the citizens of Ottawa would be to relieve the citizens of Ottawa of taxation. Such, however, I am confident, will not be the case. The city of Ottawa is one of the most heavily taxed cities in the Dominion. The citizens of Ottawa have shown considerable public spirit. They have a beautiful city, and have a right to be proud of it. Many of us who come from other parts of the Dominion and see its handsome residences, the fine grounds surrounding them, and its many other attractive features, all feel that the citizens of Ottawa have done much for the adornment of their city. This grant is not likely to lead to reduced taxation in the smallest degree; but its effect will be to give to the city some improvements which perhaps it might not otherwise be able to undertake. We think that the grant, being of a national character, should not pass into the hands of the civic government, to be dealt with as ordinary municipal moneys are; but should be placed in the hands of somebody responsible to the Government and to Parliament, in which hon. gentlemen on both sides could have the utmost confidence and whose management of it would give us the assurance that the money would be expended wisely and well for the objects which we have in view. We therefore propose in the Bill which will be founded on this resolution that a body of four commissioners shall be appointed for the management of this business, three of them by the Governor-in-Council, to hold office during pleasure, and one by the corporation of the city of Ottawa. Inasmuch as the work of improvement will belong not only to the commission, but also to the city government, it is desirable that there should be harmony between the two bodies; and to secure that we think it desirable that the corporation of Ottawa should select one member of that commission, who may be appointed for any period not exceeding three years. He will presumably be a member of the city council of Ottawa, either His Worship the Mayor or one of the aldermen.

Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. FOSTER. That is not necessary.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is not necessary, but if he should be a member of the civic corporation, then he will only hold office so long as he is such member, and when he ceases to be a member of the corporation he shall retire; but the city corporation can then, if they think fit, elect him as a private citizen. My hon. friend the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) seems to have some objection to that.

Mr. FOSTER. It is too evanescent.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is a matter of detail, and I shall be glad to have the assistance of any hon. member in working out the details. We propose that the commissioners shall perform their services without compensation. It is expected that they will be gentlemen who have a patriotic pride in the capital of the Dominion, and will be willing to perform these services without fee or reward. We propose that as far as possible there shall be no paid officials. When the actual work goes on in any department, we can only do that by employing men to do it; but so far as the organization is concerned, we propose that it shall be a labour of love to those who attend to it. The secretary we propose shall be chosen from the civil service, and shall serve without pay. I presume that in the public service in Ottawa there are many gentlemen who have sufficient interest in the development of this scheme to act as such without pay. We propose that the funds shall be paid quarterly in advance, and deposited in a bank to the credit of the commission, and that cheques shall be drawn thereon only by the chairman and the secretary, so that there will be no need of a treasurer. The bank designated by the Government shall be the treasurer, and shall have charge of the funds. We propose that the commissioners shall from time to time prepare estimates showing what they propose to do, and what the expenditure is likely to be; and that no expenditure shall be made until the estimates have been submitted to the Government and receive the Government's approval. In this way the Government shall have a general review of the work, while at the same time we shall have the benefit of the initiation of these gentlemen, who I am sure will be warmly interested to the improvement of the city of Ottawa, and will thus have a free hand in proposing schemes of which the Government will have to approve before the moneys are expended.

Mr. WALLACE. The Minister has not yet given the House any clear idea of the character of the work the commissioners will have to do or the instructions that will be given to them in regard to the improvements they are to undertake.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Inasmuch as we require the commissioners in every case to submit their plans of the work and their estimates to the Government, we think we shall not be obliged to give them instructions. The hon. gentleman's question is a fair one as applied to the general scheme; but we will not give them any detailed instructions, inasmuch as they will not be able to spend a penny until they have submitted each project to the Government.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Will the hon. gentleman provide that no expenditure whatever shall be made by the commissioners except by public tender and contract?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not anticipate any objection to that. Certainly for the construction of any new work I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that it should be undertaken by tender and contract, except where not practicable. I quite agree that every possible precaution should be taken to have the expenditure made in such a manner and on such terms and conditions that will best accure to the benefit of Ottawa and meet the approval of every member of this House.

Mr. WILSON. Will the hon. gentleman give us a general outline of the work to be done.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Certain works will be commenced and be a first charge on the fund. For instance, certain streets immediately fronting the Government property or leading to the various Government properties might well be improved by asphaltting or works of that kind. They have in Ottawa what is called a local improvement law, whereby the owners of property contribute to the laying down of sidewalks and the asphaltting of the main streets. The Government, not being taxpayers, do not come under that law, and consequently have not been obliged to contribute, but these commissioners will be allowed to contribute out of this money their proper share of the local improvements, just as if the property were held by private citizens. That no doubt will take a considerable portion of the money. For example, Wellington Street, immediately fronting the building, ought to be in a much better condition, and the asphaltting or otherwise improving the pavement of that street ought to be dealt with in this manner.

Mr. WALLACE. The Government, as I understand it, have for many years past undertaken the full responsibility of all expenditure on that?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is an agreement, which has been in force some years, between the Government and the city, whereby certain works are to be carried out by the Government, chiefly the bridges across the canals and the slides. We do not propose to interfere with that agreement as regards these works. There is only one respect in which we do propose to interfere with it ; It is provided that the Government shall maintain Wellington Street, including the sidewalks on both sides. The agreement has been so interpreted, but the maintenance of the street has not been understood to mean asphaltting. That would come in under the local improvement scheme and has not hitherto been done, but the ordinary maintenance of the street is a charge on the Government. That ordinary maintenance would still be a charge, but if the city desires, as we do, to construct an asphalt sidewalk or other improved pavement on the street, that will have to be done out of the funds placed in the hands of the commissioners.

Mr. WILSON. Would the hon. Minister expect the city to contribute its share, inasmuch as the Government now keeps up the street ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We propose that the property owners on the other side shall be obliged to contribute their share. I think that the agreement at present is somewhat defective in that respect, and when the Bill is laid before the House, gentlemen will find that we propose that the property owners on the south side of Wellington Street shall not be relieved of any obligation which would be imposed on any other property owners in the city. It is at present claimed that they are not obliged, but it appears to us that that is a very unreasonable agreement, because the property on the lower side of Wellington Street is in the hands of banks and clubs and other wealthy institutions, and if any property can pay its share of maintenance, it is that.

Mr. FOSTER. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We propose that it shall in no manner be relieved from the obligation which rests upon private citizens in other parts of the city. The local improvements will be one of the principal things that will be a charge on this fund.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Asphaltting the streets ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, the streets immediately surrounding Government property or any street which might not be otherwise asphaltted leading to Government property. That is a matter which will be within the discretion of the commissioners, subject to the approval of the Government. Another work proposed, and concerning which no definite understanding has been come to, is the improvement of the canal bank. It has been suggested that after the works of more immediate importance are done, we might beautify the city very much by taking the Government property on the line of the canal bank and removing many of the eye-sores that at present deface it, and making it something of a park or boulevard. The two branches of expenditure will absorb a considerable sum. No doubt, from time to time, other means will suggest themselves to the commissioners for beautifying the city, and such improvements may be made in the way usually taken by the park commissioners in any city. We have not worked out any scheme in detail, further than to provide that the commissioners must, in every case, have the approval of the Government for any work they undertake, and we shall be glad to adopt any suggestions of hon. gentlemen on either side which will be of advantage in working out the scheme.

Mr. FOSTER. What do you do now for the city ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have a clause in the draft Bill explaining exactly what we are now doing :

Nothing herein shall in any way alter or change the agreement now existing between the Government and the corporation with regard to the control and possession by the Government of the said Major Hill's Park, the abolition of tolls on and the free use by the public of the Union Bridge over the Ottawa River connecting the cities of Ottawa and Hull, and the maintenance and repair and keeping in repair by the Government of the following bridges and sidewalks in the said city of Ottawa :—The bridges over the Rideau Canal, known as the Dufferin, Sappers and Maria Street bridges, the bridges over the Chaudière slide, and the sidewalks on the east side of Elgin Street and on the south side of Maria Street in front of and along the side of Cartier Square ; or shall in any way alter or change any of the provisions of such agreement except as in this Act provided.

These various works are the works which, under the existing agreement, the Government are obliged to keep up in the city of Ottawa.

We are paying the sum of $15,000 to the city for water service and fire protection. It is proposed that we shall take that sum and divert it to the new fund to be created and place it under the control of the commissioners.

Mr. WALLACE. Will we have still the right to the water supply ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. One of the conditions will be, before we appoint any commissioners under this Act, that the city must by by-law agree to be bound by it for the terms of years contemplated by the Act, and one of the obligations they will assume will be to supply water and fire protection to all the buildings owned by the Government within the city of Ottawa, and the Experimental Farm, Rideau Hall and any other property which the Government may now own or hereafter acquire, during the term of the agreement, either within the city or in the immediate vicinity thereof. The city of Ottawa, in return for this expenditure of $60,000, is to supply water service and fire protection without any limit, either as respects the present Government property or any property that may hereafter acquire by the Government within the city or its immediate vicinity. I think I have now drawn the attention of the committee to every point of importance in the matter.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the aggregate of annual cost to the country on behalf of the city of Ottawa ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I would not like to admit that my hon. friend is correct in the suggestion that all this money is spent on behalf of the city of Ottawa, because the bridges over the canals and other expenditures of that kind—

Mr. SPROULE. It comes out of the consolidated revenue and is under control of Parliament and we should understand what we are voting before we vote it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The phrase that I did not agree with in what my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) said was "on behalf of the city of Ottawa." As respects the bridges over the canals, the slides, and so on, these are obligations which are undertaken by the Dominion Government in every part of the Dominion, and money spent in this way here cannot be said in any way to be contributed for the benefit of Ottawa. But the hon. gentleman has a right to know the sum. The average sum for a long period from 1885 down to last year, for the maintenance of these bridges and other things was $27,500 per annum.

Mr. FOSTER. Does that include construction ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, the construction had taken place before this.

Mr. WALLACE. Does it include $15,000 for water supply ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, I am advised that includes the payment for water supply.

Mr. SPROULE. I mean including the expenditure on Major's Hill Park and other outlays incurred within the city limits ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This includes the annual maintenance of Major's Hill Park.

Mr. SPROULE. Does it include the expenditure on it as well ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It includes the maintenance—whatever it costs to keep it up.

Mr. BELL (Picton). Does it include the fence which was constructed last year or the year before ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not think we can very well charge the city with the cost of a fence around the Government grounds.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think the hon. Minister is exactly fair. I asked for information as to the expenditures charged to consolidated fund and spent within the city—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) will tell me what it is he wants, I will get the information for him.

Mr. SPROULE. If I say I know what I am not supposed to know, then the hon. gentleman will give me the information. He admits that he has not given it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Well, what information is it ?

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. Minister tells us the outlay for a fence around these grounds was not—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman surely would not say that we are to charge the fence around the Government grounds to the city of Ottawa ?

Mr. SPROULE. That is not a fair answer, in my opinion. I want to know what outlay has been incurred by the Dominion Government in relation to these grounds and keeping them up. That is the information I desire to have, and either the hon. Minister does not understand the question or he is evading the question.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am not evading the question, because my hon. friend has not asked that question until now. It is a new question altogether—the cost of maintaining these grounds.

Mr. SPROULE. I mentioned clearly enough what I wanted—the expenditure charged to consolidated revenue within the city limits.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I can only say that the question is an entirely different question from the former one. I do not consider the outlay on these grounds as having any bearing on the subject before the committee. Surely the maintenance of Parliament ground—

Mr. SPROULE. I do not require that. These grounds belong to the Government.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. And does not the fence belong to the Government ?

Mr. SPROULE. My object in asking the question was to ascertain how much the country paid for the building up and ornamenting the city of Ottawa. I think that is quite pertinent in connection with the present proposition. I do not mean to oppose the proposition in toto. But I think it is a carrying out of what was really an idle boast made by the Premier to please the people of Ottawa. My judgment at the time was, and subsequent information has confirmed it, that it was a mere boast made to please the people of this city. But the right hon. Premier has been reminded of it from time to time and the Government have to bring down a vote in an attempt to carry it out. But now that they have decided to ask for this money, they seem at a loss as to what they are to do with it. No doubt the object of it was to gain political strength and standing in the city of Ottawa. But for this I do not think the country will feel under obligations to the hon. Minister. Again, this means the appointment of a new commission—a new pull for somebody. Three of the commissioners will be friends of the Government, and they will have certain patronage and will have control of money to be expended, so that they can give employment to their friends. All this can be used to consolidate and strengthen the party now in power with the electors of Ottawa. That was the object sought, in my opinion, and it is a wrong object. In the third place, this commits us to an expenditure for too long a time. Twenty years is one-third of the length of human life, almost, and the binding of a Parliament, or city, or country, or any corporation nowadays to any line for twenty years is entirely too long.

The PRIME MINISTER. What length of time would my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) suggest?

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that half the time would have been quite long enough. Things change very much inside that time; it is frequently found desirable and necessary inside one-quarter of that time to change the regulations and conditions, and I do not think we should be committed to any course for such a great length of time. I do not think the country will view with great pleasure the proposition to spend, in addition to what we have already spent, $60,000 a year. The question as put to the Minister of Finance was to ascertain how much the country is spending year after year already for this purpose, so we could estimate whether we are justified in spending this additional amount. But I have been unable to get the information from him. It is important that we should have this information, because other towns and cities are interested in this expenditure as well as the city of Ottawa. It seems to me that the Minister of Finance might reasonably have expected, when proposing such an expenditure as this, that such a question would be asked. We have expended money year after year on Major's Hill Park, which, in my judgment, was purely the squandering of public money. It went to political friends of the party in power, and not adequate value was received by the country for that expenditure. It is true that it helped to build up and beautify the city of Ottawa; but other towns and cities in Canada get no advantages from it. And now it is proposed that we shall spend a great deal more. We should have the information asked for.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I regret very much that my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule), in that rasping manner which he sometimes has, insists that I am evading his question. I have every desire to give the hon. gentleman the information he wishes, but I do not admit that it is the duty of a Minister to have these facts all in mind so as to be able to answer any question instantly. If I had had any idea that the hon. gentleman would ask this question I would have been ready to answer—and if I knew now what he wanted, I would try to get him the information. But this notice has been on the Order paper for a month, and in that time, the hon. gentleman could easily have framed a question which would have brought the information he desired. I did not know that the question would be raised as to the cost of beautifying these grounds, and so on. Of course, everything done in the way of beautifying the grounds, enlarging the buildings, and so on, must benefit the city of Ottawa; but I do not see how all this can be charged as being for the benefit of Ottawa. If the hon. gentleman will tell me what he wants I will give him, in the fullest manner, the information he asks for.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Perhaps I may be allowed to interpose for a single moment. My right hon. friend was good enough to say that he would have the railway resolutions taken up. I would suggest that the resolution now under discussion be allowed to pass and the debate take place on the second reading of the Bill, and that we should take up the railway resolutions. I desire to have an opportunity of making a few remarks.

Mr. SPROULE. Of course, I accept as gratuitous the allusion to my rasping voice.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Pardon me, I did not allude to the voice of my hon. friend. I was referring to his insisting that I was evading. I did not allude to the hon. gentleman's voice; I beg him to believe that I have not the slightest desire to do so.

Mr. SPROULE. I only wanted to say that if the Minister is going on with the public works, he might expect to be asked how much the expenditure has been on that work up to the present time, therefore, I thought it was reasonable for him to assume that this question would be asked. As I stated in the first place, I want the aggregate of the expenditure which was drawn upon a consolidated revenue of Canada to be applied within the limits of the city of Ottawa, outside the Parliament buildings and the Parliament grounds.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will get the information.

Mr. BENNETT. Will the Minister also bring down a summary of how the $27,000 is arrived at, how that is to be annually expended by the department on the city, so as to give us the details of that $27,000?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will endeavour to get such information as will meet the hon. gentleman's question.

Mr. SPROULE. I want, in addition to that, the expenditure on the parliamentary grounds here, but not the buildings.

Mr. BENNETT. Furthermore, assuming $27,000 to be the amount, is there a calculation in that of the interest on the investment? Take, for instance, the bridges.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No; it only includes ordinary maintenance, nothing in the way of interest.

Mr. BENNETT. Is it intended to have two members of Parliament sitting in this House from the city of Ottawa?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend will have to ask another branch of the legislature, which has declined to allow us to make arrangements respecting representation.

Mr. CLANCY. While assenting to take this step to pass the resolution, I do not want to be understood as assenting to the proposition involved in that resolution.

Motion agreed to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 187) respecting the City of Ottawa.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider certain proposed resolutions respecting the granting of the subsidies therein mentioned to the railway companies, and towards the construction of the railways also therein mentioned.

Motion agreed to.

(In the Committee.)

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I understand that the hon. leader of the Opposition desires to address the committee on the subject of these resolutions at this time, as he desires to leave this afternoon. I may say that the leader of the Government has called the subject out of the order which I anticipated. I was requested last evening by some hon. gentlemen opposite to procure a map and some plans which would show the location of the different roads, and I am having them prepared now. They may not be ready until this evening, possibly not until to-morrow, but I have the full staff occupied in preparing them. With this explanation, I very gladly defer to the hon. gentleman's wishes to speak upon these resolutions. I would like to mention, furthermore, that there are one or two substantial amendments which it will be necessary to make in these resolutions, correcting typographical errors, and otherwise. One of importance refers to the subsidy which is proposed to be granted to the Ontario and Rainy River Railway. The statement appearing in the resolutions as they are now on the Table is that the subsidy is for 140 miles, the mileage to be calculated from Stanley to a point on the Duluth Railway going westward for that distance. I shall ask the committee to allow me to change the wording of that clause so as to make it read, 140 miles, to commence at a point 80 miles west of Stanley. Hon. gentlemen will see the distinction. Already the first 80 miles are subsidized under the resolutions of 1897, so that change would be necessary in order to cover the whole mileage upon the same basis as the $6,400 per mile from Stanley to Fort Frances.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have no intention of going very fully into this subject. I am greatly obliged for the opportunity given me this morning to make a few remarks in regard to this very important question. It is well known in this House that the Liberal-Conservative party and the various Governments that represent that party, have held that it was a very proper and useful appropriation of public money to promote the construction of railways in various parts of the country, and that where the commercial character of a road was not sufficient in itself to warrant obtaining capital for it, the Government could come to its assistance, and, by giving a certain amount of public aid, it would not only promote the general trade and business of the country, but also would recoup, to a large extent, the expenditures thus made by the increased business that would be transacted and the increased revenue that would follow in its train. That policy, Mr. Chairman, it will be remembered, was sharply opposed and controverted by gentlemen on the other side of the House. The policy of the Liberal party was announced in very clear and explicit terms in regard to this matter; in fact, I may say that the leaders of the Liberal party in this House treated the proposal of granting subsidies to railways as a corrupt and unwarranted proposal, as a thing that ought to be repressed and abolished; and we had a great deal of controversy on the floor of this House on that question.

We had a great deal of controversy upon the floor of this House upon that ground. I may draw the attention of the House to a public declaration made by the Liberal party in regard to this question of giving subsidies to railways, which was formulated and put before the country in the most authentic manner by the Liberal party at the last general election. Therefore, this subject was made by them one of the issues between the parties. I may say that I am quoting this from a Liberal newspaper, published by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson), one of the supporters of the Government, which says :

The Winnipeg "Tribune," a Liberal paper which has some regard for Liberal principles,—

And that is paying a very high compliment to the "Tribune," because I am afraid it is pretty much alone in having any regard for Liberal principles.

—was speculating a few days ago upon the expected subsidies (which, however, it estimated would be only about $3,000,000) and in that connection cited the following as an official declaration made on behalf of the Liberal party prior to the general election of 1896 :—

"The policy of bonusing railways by cash and land grants from the Dominion Government has become a fruitful source of jobbery, speculation and corruption. Under its operation favourites of the Government have been enriched. Appropriations have been made for the sole purpose of purchasing the support of constituencies, and vast sums of money have been voted without regard to the public interest, while millions of acres of land that should have been held in trust by the Government for the future homes of hardy and deserving settlers, have been handed over without consideration or justification to charter-hawkers, whose intervention actually retards the construction of the lines whose franchises they control, for the purpose of extorting money from the ultimate builders of the roads. The policy of granting these subsidies has repeatedly been condemned in Parliament by the Liberal party."

That is the official declaration on which these hon. gentlemen opposite went to the country. What have we to-day? No less than a proposal to bring down railway subsidies which they state were a fruitful source of jobbery, speculation and corruption, amounting to $6,500,000, in round figures. I put it to hon. gentlemen opposite that this is another most striking instance of what you may call principle and practice confronting each other. If they were sincere, if the statement they made that the whole policy of bonusing railways, and that is the position they had taken for twenty years in this House while they were in Opposition, were a sound one, if it be true that the great object and aim of bonusing railways is to provide a means of jobbery, speculation and corruption, then I say that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) has placed the Government, of which he is a member, in the position of proposing the most gigantic measure of jobbery, speculation and corruption that has ever been introduced into this Parliament.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) does not think that himself.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not think so. I say that the issue that was put before the people was a false issue. I say there is no foundation in truth for it; I say that one of the wisest uses that has been made of public money, in the past, one that has promoted the progress and prosperity of Canada, more than anything else, and more than any other appropriation of public money, is the money that has been spent to secure the construction of the enormous railway system of this country, and which has opened up the great resources of the country in a way that nothing else could have done and which, without that aid or assistance, it would be fruitless to hope to accomplish. I only draw the attention of the House to the fact that my hon. friends opposite are obliged to turn their backs upon the policy upon which they claimed the support of the people of the country and upon which they asked them to place them in power. They are obliged to do this just the same as they were in reference to the National Policy tariff, because they find that their position compels them to adopt the policy and principles of their predecessors, and, I may say, not only to adopt them, but to carry them out to a length to which they had never been carried out before. Now, I do not intend to go at all into these railway proposals. The time is altogether inadequate for that, and I have no doubt that, in a good many instances, these measures have been very carefully considered, and that the Government feel that they are justified in making these appropriations for the purpose of carrying out and extending the railway system of Canada, which must be steadily extended as the country develops, and as means are demanded for opening up new sections of the country.

When I went to the country I was denounced by the Liberal party for the enormous and tremendous expenditures that I proposed when I stated, fairly and frankly, to this House and to the people of the country, what we proposed to do in connection with the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. I was held up to public execration by the gentlemen who issued this declaration of policy and of principle denouncing all railway subsidies as a means of jobbery, speculation and corruption, and who placed themselves in opposition to my scheme. Where do they stand to-day? Where are those things that were paraded, for the condemnation of the country, in connection with the Crow's Nest Pass Railway? Hon. gentlemen opposite found that the course I had taken in regard to it, was so sound and judicious that they not only adopted it, but they thought that the $5,000 per mile which I had secured the construction of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway for, by the Canadian Pacific Railway, was not sufficient, and they gave $11,000 a mile instead of $5,000 per mile to secure the construction of the same road, adding $2,000,000 to the burdens of the people over and above what the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had agreed to construct the road for. I was denounced throughout the country by the organ of the party, the "Globe" newspaper, for having proposed to subsidize and to aid in the extension of a railway from Winnipeg to Hudson Bay. The statement made as to the amount I proposed in connection with that project was altogether unfounded. The arrangement I made, just before the general elections, largely reduced the obligation that was then resting upon the Government in regard to that measure. But what had we the other day? We had a gentleman, to whose position and standing in the party the Government have paid the highest compliment, by reason, and I do not question the soundness of their judgment, of appointing him one of the international commissioners, on a most important occasion—I refer to the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton)—telling my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), and the Government, that they had made a great mistake in guaranteeing a certain amount of money for the securing of that most important work, the Pacific cable, and that they would have done much better to have devoted themselves to the construction of a railway to Hudson Bay. So that, we have from the mouth of the hon. gentleman who has received a certificate of character of his ability, standing and position in this House, over and above that of his fellows, by the action of the Government in appointing him to such an important position, a declaration that this measure, for which I was so loudly denounced, to secure the construction of a railway to Hudson Bay, is so important a work that it should have taken precedence over the Pacific cable. I need not say anything more in defence of my action in that matter. I was again denounced by the "Globe" newspaper, and the organs of the party all over the country, for proposing to waste an enormous sum of public money in overcoming the rapids on the great Red River at St. Andrews, between Winnipeg and the lake.

Although I was denounced for proposing to waste public money on this work, hon. gentlemen again follow the example I set them, and an appropriation of $140,000 is found here for commencing that very important work. I am taking no exception to that work. I think the Government are acting wisely in expending money to overcome the difficulties imposed by the St. Andrew's Rapids. It is a work which requires to be dealt with as a public work, and I am very glad to find that the Government have an appropriation for it. I propose also to support the construction of the Rainy River Railway as a work of great public importance, which will open up a great gold country in the province of Ontario, and which in the public interest should be promptly pushed forward and completed. I do not hesitate to say that I believe the Government are acting wisely in dealing with that work, which I have no doubt will make a very valuable return. But I was a little astonished at some of the appropriations which I find. When we were discussing the Drummond County Railway proposition, I drew the attention of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, who I see is not beyond the possibility of being influenced by the powers of reason, to the fact that if he wanted to bring the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal, he had the means of doing it and at the same time carrying out a public work to which both parties in this country had, to a considerable extent, pledged the public faith. That was the construction of a bridge across the St. Lawrence, thus enabling the Intercolonial to be brought into the city of Quebec and putting it in a position to have the Drummond County Railway, the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific Railway all competing for its traffic to and fro. Not only that, but if the Government wished to establish communication with Montreal, all they had to do was to say to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, "Take our trains, freight and passengers over your road from the city of Quebec to Montreal and we will take yours from the city of Quebec to St. John or Halifax, giving you the use of our terminal facilities as you give us the use of yours." I showed the hon. gentleman that he could accomplish his object of bringing the Intercolonial into Montreal in that way without the expenditure of one dollar of public money, except the money needed to secure the construction of the bridge; and what was his answer? He treated my proposition with ridicule. Take up "Hansard" of this session, and you will find that he treated with absolute ridicule the idea that $1,000,000 would secure the construction of that bridge. But we had not been pledged to a million dollars. Now, the raison d'être of the construction of the bridge is gone. The reason Parliament was warranted in giving $1,000,000 to build a bridge at Quebec was to bring the terminus of the Intercolonial Railway from Lévis into Quebec. That was a sufficient reason why the city of Quebec, the legislature of Quebec, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Grand Trunk Railway Company, should all participate in the work. I drew attention to the fact that we had frankly stated to these parties that when they were ready to take hold of that work, they could rely on the Government for substantial aid in accomplishing it. My hon. friend, however, treated the suggestion that we could secure the construction of that bridge by the expenditure of $1,000,000 with derision and as too absurd for discussion. Now, what is the fact? We have secured access to the city of Montreal for the Intercolonial by the Drummond County Railway and by the arrangement with the Grand Trunk Railway; and yet we are called upon to vote the $1,000,000. I do not hesitate to say that if I were in the House when that vote came up, I should support it, for

I feel that the city of Quebec, that old historic city, has been led to expect that the Government would aid in the construction of that bridge; and I am only too glad to know that the expenditure of $1,000,000 will undoubtedly accomplish the prompt completion of that work at an early day. But, unfortunately, the great saving and advantage to the country that would result from the construction of the work are gone. The hon. gentleman is locking the stable-door after the horse is stolen. More than that, when the question of how we should bring the Intercolonial into Montreal was considered, the hon. gentleman will remember that I made the proposition, which was treated with great scorn and contempt, that if he was determined to come to Montreal by a line to the south of the St. Lawrence, he should come by the South Shore Railway, for this reason, that instead of running through a comparatively desert country, as the Drummond County Railway does, the South Shore runs through a thriving and populous section of country; and that work would have been accomplished at less cost than the means which the hon. gentleman has adopted. But now what does he do? In the first place, he builds the bridge at Quebec, the whole object of which is gone, and which will only tend to take our traffic from the Drummond County Railway, which was obtained at such expense; because when the bridge is constructed a large volume of traffic from the maritime provinces will no doubt go by the city of Quebec and over the Canadian Pacific Railway, which will thus be brought into sharp competition with the Government road.

I think I only require to draw attention to the position which my hon. friend the Minister of Railway occupies in regard to this subject to show that this matter has been entered upon without that due regard to the interests of the country which, I think, he was bound to take into consideration in the first instance. He was bound to bring the Intercolonial Railway into Montreal via Quebec, and make the city of Quebec its terminus by the construction of this bridge, and if he did not do that, he was bound to take this infinitely superior line by the south shore of the St. Lawrence as a means of reaching the city of Montreal. He now proposes, having secured access for the Intercolonial Railway into Montreal at an enormous cost, to establish by these two expenditures of public money a most complete and successful means of rivalling the Drummond County road, and taking away the traffic that otherwise would be forced to go over that road. I do not intend to take up the time of the committee further than to say that while my opinion is unchanged as to the great value of Government subsidies in aiding the opening up of important lines of railway communication, while I never regarded that policy as a means of fraud, jobbery, speculation or corruption, while I felt that the opposition of hon. gentlemen opposite to that policy was unwise, I may venture to hope that since they now adopt our policy, it is not for the purpose of using these Government subsidies, as they say they were susceptible of being used, to buy up constituencies right and left, and thus merit the censure they cast on their opponents.

I am greatly obliged for the opportunity given me of briefly stating my views and pointing to where I think the hon. Minister has failed very largely, but at the same time, under all the circumstances, I do not hesitate to say that, were I here when the vote is taken. I would not feel myself in a position to refuse either aid to the South Shore line of railway—which I believe to be very important in the public interest—or the construction of a railway which would connect the lines of railway on the south of the St. Lawrence and the Intercolonial Railway with the old city of Quebec.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have just this to say to my hon. friend, who has spoken for the last time this session, that I have no very serious fault to find with the criticisms he has made of our proposal. The criticism he made of the policy followed by the Liberal party, when in Opposition, on the question of railway subsidies would have been more effective, if he had been able to connect the extract he made from a newspaper with the name of any member, or any leader, of the Liberal party. So far as I know, the quotation which my hon. friend found in the Winnipeg "Tribune" of a few days ago, taken from a statement made in 1896, at the time of the general elections, never received any official confirmation on this side.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is put in the "Tribune" as an official declaration made by the Liberal party prior to the general election of 1896.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend has quoted a paragraph which appeared a few days ago in the Winnipeg "Tribune," and which purports to have been copied from a paper issued in 1896.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is in inverted commas.

The PRIME MINISTER. No doubt the quotation was taken from some paper, but I do not remember ever seeing that paper, and I do not know if it has been taken from any paper, except perhaps some election pamphlet issued on the authority of somebody, but not on the authority of anybody that I knew to be responsible for the policy of the party. My hon. friend is the father of the policy we are following, and I congratulate him. I think it has been a very useful policy in many ways.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am sorry that it was abused in the past in some instances, for the purposes of jobbery, speculation and corruption. We cannot hold my hon. friend responsible, because he was in England at the time, but he no doubt paid too much attention to public affairs in this country not to be aware that these charges of corruption and speculation were substantiated in more than one instance. He knows that in the case of the Lake St. John Railway subsidy, the charge was brought home that the subsidy had been diverted to purposes of speculation and corruption. But because a policy has been abused at times, is no reflection on its merits. I am not aware that from 1883 to 1896, from the year my hon. friend introduced that policy until he went out of office, he can connect the name of any leader of the Liberal party with any criticism on the germane idea of that policy. It is impossible, of course, to tie up a party to any given theory. This is a free country, and no doubt there were Liberals and Conservatives who criticised that policy, but as to the general policy itself, it never was assailed, so far as the germane or the mother idea of it is concerned. This is all I propose to say with regard to the general question.

As to the criticism of the Quebec bridge and the South Shore Railway policy, I was glad to hear my hon. friend say that if he were here, he would not oppose the grant to the bridge for the South Shore Railway. I believe these two grants are eminently useful, and will serve very good purposes. But this is not the occasion to discuss the items. That discussion can be best reserved when they are submitted. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. SPROULE. I desire to say a few words on the general policy, and propose to be very brief. What I purpose saying, I do as an individual member of this House, charged with his responsibility as a representative of the people. Let me first observe that we have been spending liberally for years in subsidizing railways. We have not been niggardly in that respect; and, as evidence of that, I may mention that the report I have here shows that we have spent $44,815,000, which has been used for that purpose, and if we take what has been spent with what is now available, or voted for expenditure, $47,315,000. In the earlier history of this country, it seemed to me desirable that they should spend thus lavishly, because there were no other means by which railways could be built. But I think the day has come when we should change our policy. We should not give this money without hope of repayment. In my judgment the time has come when every dollar that we put into railways for the purpose of building them should be in the form of loans either bearing a low rate of interest or at no interest at all. When we look to the United States, we find that for many years they have not given any money to railways, except on the undertaking that it should be repaid to the country. Their conditions in respect of railways are very much the same as ours. In looking over the returns I find that their railways in the aggregate pay no better than ours, and so are no better able to repay the subsidies than ours would be. In 1896, when the last general election was held, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Railways and Canals will remember, and the Ministers from Ontario especially will remember, a party arose known as the Patrons. One of the planks of their platform was, no more subsidies to railways. And it is known that everywhere—or, at any rate, I speak with certainty of my own part of the country—the Reformers and the Patrons claimed to be standing on the same platform so far as this matter was concerned. The Patrons in this House will, I am sure, agree that these railway subsidies are being voted in violation of the platform on which they went to the country. Here are fifty-two railways to be subsidized and nine bridges—and this bridge business, by the way, is a new departure from the policy heretofore followed—making sixty-one objects for which subsidies are to be granted, not a dollar of which subsidies we need hope to have returned to the country. Our country is now comparatively well developed, but even now, if all these subsidies were for railways in new parts of the country which are now without railway facilities, I could see some reason why these grants should be made. But I find that these railways go through the oldest as well as the newest parts of the country, places where there are already good railway facilities and where the railways earn good returns. In such cases, there is no justification in the world for giving these bonuses. Whatever justification there may have been in the past for these railway subsidies, the time has come when we should change our policy, and any money devoted to this purpose should be given in the form of loans, so as to secure repayment to the country.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Before the committee rises, I ask leave to say a word of personal explanation. It has been the custom, particularly during the present session, to quote the newspaper with which I am connected, the Winnipeg "Tribune"—of which, as a matter of fact, I am the editor—as a Government organ, in order to cast reproach upon the Government. I wish to say that the "Tribune" has never been a Government organ, is not now, and, so long as I have any connection with it, I trust, never will be. It is a paper which, during the existence of the late Government, disapproved of the policy of that Government and did all that was in its power to drive that Government from office. It has always been, and still is, a Liberal paper, supporting Liberal principles, but in no sense a Government organ. It is not under the control of any Government or of any clique that is connected with any Government, and no Government or party is in a position to exercise any control over its policy. It is a paper which seeks to do its duty by the public. In saying so, I have no desire to exalt myself or the paper, or make it appear that I regard myself as better than my fellow-members or fellow-citizens, or that the "Tribune" is better than its contemporaries. I am only saying that it does its duty to the people, according to its understanding of what that duty is, and I deem it but fair to the Government that this statement should be made, as it might be calculated to prejudice the Government to an extent which the circumstances do not justify, to have the "Tribune" constantly quoted by opponents of the Government as a Government organ. A study of the affairs of the country convinces me that a partisan press is about the worst curse that can befall a country, and fair-minded men will agree with me that our press is, with a few excellent exceptions, a thorough-going partisan one. I am convinced that if we had a pure and independent press, freed from the trammels of partisan politics, we would soon have a purer and better state of political affairs in our Dominion, and until the press is improved I despair of seeing a revolution in our political life. It is in that belief, nay, with that deep conviction, that I have used what influence I possess to make the press as independent as possible. Now, with regard to the question before the House, viz., that of bonusing railways, I propose to be heard at some length, later on, in opposition to railway bonusing, and in regard to details of bonuses proposed. I regret to say that my views are at variance with the position taken by the Government, and with that taken by the leader of the Opposition.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Perhaps my hon. friend will allow me to say that if he understood me to say that his paper was an organ of the Government, he misunderstood me, I made no such statement. I said the "Tribune" was a paper published by a gentleman who certainly ordinarily supported the Government. I did not say it was a Government organ. But I want to remind him that in his paper he says that this extract which I have read to the House, was from an official source; it was published before the election in 1896. I think my hon. friend is bound to inform the committee what that official source was.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Before answering the hon. gentleman's question let me say that I do not wish to be misunderstood in connection with this matter. I have not risen in this House for the purpose, indeed that is furthest from my mind, of seeking to make it appear that I wish to be obsequious to the Government or apologetic for any position which the "Tribune" has taken. In regard to the extract in the "Tribune," I may say that I quite approve of it, if it is an official declaration made by the Government or Liberal party, and I may say that I think the "Tribune" did quite right in reproducing it, and in using it against the Government. That is my position on that point. I may say that I never saw the extract until I saw it in the paper. I did not inspire its publication, although, as I say, if it is an official declaration, I approve of its having been published. I did not know anything about it until my attention was called to it in the paper. While I would not say that everything that appears in the editorial columns of the "Tribune" is absolutely right, still I believe that it is probably as nearly right as it is possible for men with a proper sense of duty to make it. Hon. gentlemen will, of course, understand, that owing to my residence here during the session I can neither write nor revise one-thousandth part of what appears in the "Tribune," although I do not apologize for one word that appears therein. There is a disposition to make it appear as though I had written every line in the "Tribune." In this particular case I did not know anything about the publication of the extract till I saw it in print.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman has told us he is the editor, and he has stated, very properly, that as editor he is responsible for what appears in his paper, although, of course, everybody knows, who knows anything about newspaper work, that he don't write all that appears in it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He did not say everything.

Mr. DAVIN. I say he is bound to let us know. Here is a statement on the first page: "Railway bonuses. The following is an official declaration made on behalf of the Liberal party prior to the general election of 1896." That appears in the Winnipeg "Daily Tribune," of July 20th.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman has said that he has no personal knowledge of any such declaration.

Mr. DAVIN. No, Mr. Speaker, but—

Mr. COWAN. Order.

Mr. DAVIN. Will that bleached negro keep quiet? I say the hon. gentleman is bound to let us know what is his authority.

Mr. COWAN. Do I understand the hon. member to refer to me as a bleached negro? I ask the hon. gentleman to take that back.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not think it is proper to apply that word to an hon. member of this House.

Mr. DAVIN. I grant that it is not flattering, but that man knows well—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DAVIN. Well, I take it back.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman knows well that it is not permitted by the rules of the House to address a member as this man or that man. He must always address a member of the House as that hon. gentleman, or that hon. member.

Mr. DAVIN. I take it back if it is contrary to order. But I say I am in a position to prove to the satisfaction of any court of justice that that hon. gentleman has been one of three members who in this House, in successive sessions, have conspired to destroy free debate in this House, and if his sins had not been cumulative I would never have used the expression.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is not permitted by the rules of the House to say that members have conspired to destroy free debate in this House.

Mr. DAVIN. I will withdraw that. But I want to ask the member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson): Will he let us know his authority for making this statement in his paper on the 20th?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have already told the House that I did not make the statement, that I did not even know it was there till I saw the paper—

Mr. DAVIN. But the hon. gentleman is responsible. He could telegraph to his editor and get him to give the authority.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I can do that.

Mr. DAVIN. Will the hon. gentleman do that?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have no objection to do it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Before the committee rises, I would ask my hon. friend if it is intended to go on with the discussion of these resolutions after three o'clock? Hon. gentlemen on this side of the House are anxious to know when the discussion on these resolutions will take place.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not later than to-morrow. I have promised the maps which will be required, they will surely be ready to-night, and the debate will take place to-morrow.

Committee rose and reported progress.

It being One o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

The House resumed at Three o'clock.

COMMITTEE ON RAILWAYS, CANALS, &c.

Mr. SUTHERLAND presented the 22nd and 23rd reports of the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines.

Mr. SPROULE. Am I right in understanding that the Bill amending the Railway Act was passed, as well as this Bill mentioned in the 22nd report?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Only the three clauses to which there was no objection. With the consent of the House, I beg to move:

That Bill (No. 72) to incorporate the British America Pulp and Paper Company, be placed among the private Bills on the Orders of this day for consideration by the Committee of the Whole, in accordance with the recommendation of the 22nd report of the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines.

Mr. WALLACE. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sutherland) explain why a Bill that is commercial in its character should go to the Committee on Railways and Canals?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Bill was referred to the Private Bills Committee, but as there was a clause in it taking power to build a considerable length of electric railway, connecting the works of the company, it came before the Railway Committee, and the powers were cut down very materially. The Bill now merely gives power to build an electric railway for the purposes of the company and not to build a public road.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I beg to move:

That Bill (No. 5) to incorporate the Alaska-Yukon Railway Company; Bill (No. 44) to incorporate the Alaska and North-western Railway Company; Bill (No. 52) to incorporate the Canadian Yukon Railway Company; Bill (No. 57) respecting the British Yukon Mining, Trading and Transportation Company, and to change its name to the British Yukon Railway Company; Bill (No. 94) respecting the Yukon Mining, Trading and Transportation Company (Foreign); Bill (No. 101) to incorporate the Glenora Railway Company; Bill (No. 102) to incorporate the Yukon Pacific Railway Company; and Bill (No. 117) to incorporate the Ottawa Suburban Railway Company, be withdrawn, and the fees paid thereon be refunded, less the cost of printing and translation, in accordance with the recommendation contained in the twenty-third report of the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraphs Lines.

Mr. WALLACE. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sutherland) explain, before the motion passes, how it was that one Bill was put through and that others, some of which appear to be unexceptionable in their character should not have gone through, for instance, the last Bill to incorporate the Ottawa Suburban Electric Railway Company.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The committee decided that these Bills were not to go through and the promoters asked leave to withdraw them. A resolution was passed to that effect in the committee.

Mr. WALLACE. Was it for want of time or because the committee did not approve of them ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think more perhaps for want of time than anything else. But all the other Bills, with the exception of that one referred to in the 22nd report, were opposed, and I suppose the promoters came to the conclusion that, at this stage of the session, there was no chance of the Bills becoming law. It was mutually agreed that these Bills should be withdrawn.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Towards the construction of a branch line from Charlottetown to Murray Harbour, including bridge over the Hillsborough River ..... $250,000

Mr. SPROULE. This is a new work, is it not ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). This is for an extension of the line of railway to Murray Harbour.

Mr. WALLACE. Has the hon. gentleman a map of it ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have no map of it. It was in regard to railway subsidies that I proposed to have maps prepared. The amount is to construct a railway from Charlottetown to Murray Harbour. The construction of this work includes a bridge across the River Hillsborough, and the building of some 44 miles of railway. It is estimated that the railway and all permanent works in connection with it will cost $470,000.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the estimated cost of the bridge ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The cost of the railway line is estimated to be in the neighbourhood of $470,000. The cost of the bridge will be in addition to that sum. We are not taking any steps particularly with regard to the bridge, although a portion of this grant may be used in starting the sub-structure. The estimated cost of the bridge is in the neighbourhood of $800,000. This was the estimate of about a year ago. If we were to construct the superstructure of the bridge at this time, which I am not proposing to do, we would have to add the enhanced price of iron. I might explain that the bridge will not only be a railway, but a highway and traffic bridge for vehicles and pedestrians. So important did the people of the Island regard the latter feature of the structure, that they proposed to the Government to bear about one-half of the expected cost of the bridge. They have the authority of the legislature of the province to enter into an agreement with the Government to pay 3 per cent per annum on one-half the cost at that rate. They have expressly stipulated by their legislature for an agreement with this Government to pay $12,000 a year, in consideration of which we are to make provision for a highway for foot and passenger traffic.

Mr. SPROULE. It looks very much as if this vote were in pursuance of an understanding come to with Prince Edward Island some time ago to expend more money in that province. If the bridge and railway are built, they will ultimately cost $1,270,000, according to the hon. gentleman's own statement ; and he now asks us for $250,000 as the first instalment of that amount. I fancy that the other provinces will not regard this as exactly fair to them, for it is practically an additional subsidy to the province of Prince Edward Island, which is not given to the other provinces, and I presume that the Government have taken this means of granting it, so as, if possible, to hide it away, in the hope that it will not be recognized as a subsidy granted to Prince Edward Island by the Liberals in pursuance of their promise that if they came into power, they would give that province an additional subsidy.

Mr. MARTIN. My hon. friend does not understand exactly the position of affairs as regards Prince Edward Island. Ever since confederation that province, so far as any railway expenditure is concerned, has been totally overlooked, while the hon. gentleman will see, if he looks over the statistics which have been laid on the Table of this House, that the provinces of Ontario and Quebec have been receiving from year to year large sums for railway purposes from the exchequer of Canada. I have here a return which was laid on the Table of this House in 1895, showing the mileage of railways that was subsidized in the provinces, as follows :—Ontario, 1,663 miles ; Quebec, 2,136 miles ; New Brunswick, 646 miles ; Nova Scotia, 482 miles ; Manitoba, 100 miles ; British Columbia, 328 miles. But there was not a mile subsidized in Prince Edward Island. The same is true with regard to canals. If the hon. gentleman goes over the Public Accounts, he will find that about $80,000,000 were spent on canals, $13,582,291 of which was spent since the present party came to power, but Prince Edward Island never received a dollar of that expenditure. I am very much pleased that the Government propose to make this expenditure, which is only scant justice to Prince Edward Island. The late Government were committed to such a scheme as would give a fuller measure of justice. Many sections are neglected in this scheme, and I am very glad that the present Government are to some extent carrying it out. I would like, however, to have the Minister give us a little more information as to the route. I think the scheme of the late Government was much more preferable.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The intention is, unless some engineering difficulties intervene, to go in as direct a line as possible to the harbour. I do not think I can state anything more definite than that.

Mr. MARTIN. I would like to be assured whether or not it is to be built by contract, and tenders called for?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Unquestionably. That is the only way to build it.

Mr. MARTIN. Has the hon. gentleman any information as to when tenders will be called for?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would not want to commit myself at this moment to a statement on that subject. We shall have to have careful engineering inspection, the route positively outlined, and all the necessary profiles obtained, before we can ask for tenders. I think the work is not sufficiently advanced yet to enable us definitely to name a date when we can ask for tenders.

Mr. MARTIN. I understand that the survey is practically finished.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have a fair survey, but not sufficient on which to issue specifications and to ask for tenders.

Mr. MARTIN. I have here a sketch taken from the survey, as it appears in the department. The survey, so far as I can see, is pretty well finished, and the route clearly laid down, with the exception of what are termed the loops. It gives two starting points, one at the village at South Port, and one a little below the village. There is another loop line on the plan, giving the option of two routes, the one known as the Vernon River line, and the other as the Vernon Bridge line. Can the hon. Minister give me any information?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. As between those, not at present.

Mr. SPROULE. In answer to the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island, it is true that the other provinces got subsidies but a large share of these was for the purpose of building the transcontinental line in fulfilment of the agreement with Manitoba, the North-west Territories and British Columbia when they came into confederation, and cannot in any sense be regarded as subsidies to the provinces. But this is not a subsidy by way of assistance to build a railway, but is a draft on the exchequer of the country to the whole extent of the cost of building the railway, and therefore every dollar that goes into the building of this railway and bridge is to come out of the consolidated revenue fund, because we are asked to vote the first instalment, which is $250,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman is not quite correct. The estimated cost of the railway is to be borne by Prince Edward Island.

Mr. SPROULE. I was going on to say that, but I understood the hon. Minister to say that the island will pay the interest on one-half, but not furnish the money. That means at least $800,000 subsidy practically direct to Prince Edward Island.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Hardly that, because the railway will belong to the Government and all the benefits accruing from it will go to Canada.

Mr. SPROULE. A railway which will never pay the cost of operating is not very likely to be of much advantage to the Dominion and the whole benefit will be to the locality. It is practically another subsidy to Prince Edward Island. I understood, a good many years ago, when we last rearranged the subsidies to the provinces, that this rearrangement was to be, in the words of Mr. Blake, a final finality, and that we were never again to be approached for the purpose of giving more subsidies to the provinces. I know that Prince Edward Island has been clamouring for this for a long time. The hon. gentleman says that railways in other provinces were assisted. True, but they were assisted on the same principle as railways in every part of the country, Prince Edward Island included. Where a railway is absolutely needed the country is prepared to give $3,200 per mile to assist its construction, but this grant is to build a new railway and bridge in toto the cost of which will amount to $870,000. I do not think that the province of British Columbia will be satisfied unless it gets something, or the other provinces. This is the commencement of a new departure that will ultimately lead to very heavy expenditure being rolled up against the country.

Mr. MARTIN. When the hon. gentleman says this is a new departure he speaks without his usual knowledge of the facts. If he will look at the return laid on the Table, he will find that there was built by the Dominion Government, altogether out of the Dominion exchequer, such railways as the St. Clair branch, the St. Charles branch, the Rivière du Loup branch, the Dalhousie branch, the Indian Town branch, the Oxford and New Glasgow branch, the Dartmouth branch, the Pictou Town branch, the Annapolis and Digby branch, the Cape Traverse branch, and the Cape Breton Railway. The hon. gentleman has no objection at all to the expenditure by the Dominion on canals. He would not be satisfied with a mere subsidy to a canal. No, it must be built altogether at the expense of the Dominion. The provinces of Ontario and Quebec are the provinces in which these canals were built, and therefore the expenditure on them by the Dominion is all right, but after he has all these canals built and all the subsidies voted for railway accommodation that his province requires, he wants to have no further subsidies granted anywhere else. For what reason? Because his province has all the railways it can possibly want, and it has besides all its canals built at the expense of the Dominion. Just to show what a small share of this public expenditure Prince Edward Island has actually received, let me read to the House from the return I have in my hand. The province of Ontario has received since confederation $30,000,000, not to speak of what has been spent on canals; Quebec has received since confederation $15,000,000; New Brunswick, $9,000,000; Nova Scotia, $15,000,000; Manitoba, several million dollars; British Columbia, $21,000,000; the North-west Territories, $7,000,000; and Prince Edward Island only $653,000, or at the rate of $5 per head as against $10 or $15 per head to the rest of the Dominion.

Mr. DAVIS. Did the hon. gentleman say that the North-west Territories got $7,000,000.

Mr. MARTIN. $7,604,819.60.

Mr. DAVIS. Is that in money or lands?

Mr. MARTIN. Without any lands at all. With the lands the amount would be much greater.

Mr. DAVIS. The hon. gentleman must be figuring on the construction of the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and he has no right to include the cost of that.

Mr. MARTIN. This is a statement made by the Department of Railways and Canals and brought down in a return not later than the 30th June, 1898.

Mr. DAVIS. How much of that $7,000,000 has been expended on the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway and how much on the branches?

Mr. MARTIN. I cannot go into details, but I presume the hon. gentleman has a copy of the report of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and if he will be as assiduous in looking over that as he is in asking questions he will get the information. I can hardly be supposed to give him all the information he requires on this subject. This vote for Prince Edward Island is one that can be justified on any ground that can be taken. I am well pleased that the Government has thought proper to include this vote in the Estimates. I am only sorry that other sections such as Rustico, etc., is overlooked. I want that the vote shall be properly expended, that tenders shall be called for, and that the work shall not be unduly delayed. As I said before, the late Government brought in a Bill in 1896 for the construction of this very line as well as others; and to show what interest the province have in it, they are ready to help the building of a bridge at Southport to the extent of a sum not exceeding $12,000 a year, which represents a capital of $400,000, which is a very considerable sum for a province that has already expended very largely on railway construction. I am astonished that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule), coming from a province which has had such a large expenditure on railways and canals, should not rise a little above the consideration of his own province. I think his ideas of the maritime provinces are not large enough. Though Ontario is a large province, it is not the whole world, nor is it the whole of Canada. If the hon. gentleman would come down to Prince Edward Island, I feel confident he would change his views; and, on returning, with enlarged vision if anything were proposed for the province of Prince Edward Island, he would not stand up and oppose it as he does now.

Mr. SPROULE. I can only say that it seems to me that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) is swimming around in that little island province as a frog swims around in a well—he is disposed to think that it is the whole world. As to the data on which he bases his argument, I have the report of the Minister here. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) gives four items which aggregate $90,000,000, but all that the Minister of Railway's report says was spent by way of subsidy was $44,815,000. So, his calculation must be wholly astray.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman's (Mr. Martin's) statement is not limited to the expenditure, but covers the whole report.

Mr. SPROULE. He forgets that the great transcontinental line passes through Ontario for several hundred miles, without which, of course, the terms of confederation could not be carried out.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. But it does not traverse Prince Edward Island.

Mr. SPROULE. But, as I understood, we bought about all the railways that Prince Edward Island had, to recoup Prince Edward Island for the heavy expenditure which had taken place in other provinces for the building of railways.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. But we took the railway.

Mr. SPROULE. But the railway is of no benefit except to the people who are living there, while we pay the cost.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. But the hon. gentleman must not forget that the island was entitled to come into confederation with a certain debt, based upon its population; and a portion of the debt was made up of the cost of constructing this railway, which is handed over to the Dominion. True, it has not proved a very productive asset. But the time it has been in the hands of the Dominion Government is but a short time in the history of a country. And it is to be hoped that it will become more productive and become a source of income to Canada.

Mr. SPROULE. This was long after Prince Edward Island came into confederation, when we were arranging the subsidy.

Mr. MARTIN. Not at all.

Mr. SPROULE. What I say is quite correct. I was in this House when the transaction was closed, and I was not here when confederation took place. Now, the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals says that I am quite ready to have money spent in canals. But the canals are in a wholly different position; they are highways of commerce for the whole Dominion, to carry the produce of the west to the east and that of the east to the west. The money spent in their construction cannot be regarded as the same as subsidies to railways.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You could not get any railway company, under the circumstances of the island, to undertake the construction of a railway.

Mr. SPROULE. That only proves that the railway will not pay and is therefore unnecessary.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, it is because the Government own the whole railway system of the island.

Mr. SPROULE. But if it was an enterprise which promised to yield dividends, parties would take it up and carry it on, and then, if they wished, they could hand it over to the Government to be run in connection with the railway system of the province, and get compensation for it. This is not the same as a subsidy given to build a railway. It is practically an additional subsidy given to Prince Edward Island.

Mr. WALLACE. I am sorry that the Minister of Railways and Canals has not given us much of the information we asked for, so we have to rely on other sources. There is about 210 miles of railway in Prince Edward Island. The cost of operation was $231,000, while the income was $158,000, so that there is a deficit of about $72,000 a year. That is to say, to take a dollar on this road costs about a dollar and a half for, say, $1.40. That being the case, we should approach the construction of further railways in that island with great caution. But caution now seems to be thrown to the winds, the only question seems to be: How much do you want? In addition to the sums here proposed, there must be an expenditure in order to build a bridge. The Minister tells us that, on the estimates of last year, the bridge would cost $800,000. Taking the increase in the price of iron, I suppose it will be a fair thing to say that the bridge now would cost $1,000,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think that would be excessive.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals thinks I am not accurate, but he has not given any figures that are accurate; so, as usual, we are left to make our own estimates. What would the hon. Minister think would be a fair estimate?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think that $100,000 over the estimate would cover the increased price of iron.

Mr. WALLACE. $900,000, very close to a million dollars for the construction of the bridge. $470,000 for the construction of the railroad after bridge is built, would make in round figures between $1,300,000 and $1,400,000. Well, we have paid already $3,750,000 on capital account for railroads in the province of Prince Edward Island, for a little more than 100,000 people.

Mr. MARTIN. Who paid it?

Mr. WALLACE. The people of Canada.

Mr. MARTIN. The people of Canada did not pay it. If the hon. gentleman will sit down for a few minutes, I think I will be able to enlighten him.

Mr. WALLACE. I will be through in a moment or two, and my hon. friend can have the whole afternoon. I do not like any sectionalism. I do not like any provincialism, I have never given a vote in that light. I may say for the constituency I represent that we have never had a dollar of public money expended there except for the payment of our postmaster. We do not ask for any expenditure of public money in my constituency. We are contributing our share to the revenue of the Dominion, and all that we ask is that the money shall be economically and judiciously spent. My constituency never has made any demand for public money. I do not care whether the expenditures for public purposes are made on the Atlantic or the Pacific; I want to see the whole country opened up and developed. But I want to be able to justify to my constituents every expenditure that we make here, and to show that it was a wise and judicious expenditure. Now, in this case my good friend behind me (Mr. Martin) tells us how they have contributed. We have been told before that Prince Edward Island has paid the debts of the Dominion, that when the other provinces were hard up Prince Edward Island contributed to their finances and got them out of financial troubles, that they have paid more than their share per capita of the expenditure. I do not think they have. Now, they must present to this House a much stronger argument than the argument which was used by the members of the North-west Territories; it is not sufficient to say that as $7,600,000 were expended in the other provinces in railway building, therefore Prince Edward Island is entitled to something. We cannot be satisfied with any such flim-flam arguments as have been used in that case. I have pointed out that for every dollar taken in by that railroad after it has been in operation many years, after money has been spent liberally upon it out of capital account to the extent of more than $3,750,000, to-day it takes more than $1.40 to collect 100 cents. Under such circumstances, I think the Government should proceed cautiously before they propose to add $1,400,000 to the indebtedness of this country in the construction of that piece of railway; more than two-thirds of which is for a bridge across the Hillsboro' River at Charlottetown harbour. Prince Edward Island is fortunate in many ways. It is long and narrow, indented with bays and harbours in every direction, an island of great fertility, producing capable and able men, as we know from the representation it has sent to this House. They have a line of railway running through the whole length of it, they are a maritime people. Now they propose to run a line of railway nearly parallel to the coast from Charlottetown to Murray Harbour. That, I presume, will be like the other lines of railway built in Prince Edward Island; it will take $1.40 or $1.50 to gather a dollar's worth of revenue, even after the preliminary work, even after it has been running for 20 or 30 years. I think the Minister of Railways and Canals will have to do what he has not yet done, give us some statement that will justify this expenditure of $1,400,000 of the people's money. It is true they are only asking a quarter of a million to-day, but the expenditure of that quarter of a million inevitably carries with it an expenditure of a good deal more than a million in addition. The Minister of Railways and Canals has not yet, by any statement he has made, justified that expenditure to this House.

Mr. BELL (P.E.I.) I know the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) is a man of reason, and is capable of being appealed to from the stand-point of fair play and common sense. First let me point out one or two errors into which he has inadvertently fallen. He refers to this proposed expenditure as $1,400,000. As a matter of fact it is $1,000,000, because the $400,000 is contributed by Prince Edward Island. The hon. gentleman also says the Government of Canada has already expended $3,768,000 upon railways in Prince Edward Island. Now, I would like to point out to my hon. friend the true situation. I would like him to reflect upon the facts of the case and then tell me whether his statement is correct.

Mr. WALLACE. I will say that my authority is taken from page XIII of the report of the Deputy Minister, where he says: "The total cost of the road and equipment chargeable to capital account at the close of the fiscal year, is $3,768,107."

Mr. BELL (P.E.I.) I am perfectly satisfied that my hon. friend believes what he says. But I ask him as a fair minded man to look into the matter and see whether Prince Edward Island has not paid for its own railway. I know the impression prevails in the minds of many members of this House that the Dominion Government paid for the railway in Prince Edward Island. But as a matter of fact the Island Railway was built by the local Government, and paid for by the sum of $3,114,000—part of the $3,768,000 which the hon. gentleman refers to, was actually paid out by Prince Edward Island and charged to her under the terms of the Union. It was subtracted from the amount of the debt that was placed to the credit of Prince Edward Island at confederation. I want my hon. friend now to be fair and see if this is not the case. Let him remove from his mind the prejudice which exists.

Mr. POWELL. What was the amount of the debt?

Mr. BELL (P.E.I.) The amount of the indebtedness authorized and credited to Prince Edward Island in 1873, was $4,701,050. From that amount was deducted the cost of the railway, viz., $3,114,000—also our local indebtedness—some $500,000. The balance was placed to our credit with the Dominion, and on that balance we draw interest at 5 per cent.

Mr. McMULLEN. At the union did not the Dominion assume the debt created by Prince Edward Island for constructing that road?

Mr. BELL (P.E.I.) No.

Mr. McMULLEN. Yes. Did the Dominion not assume the debt of Prince Edward Island?

Mr. BELL (P.E.I.) Well, the Dominion assumed the debt, but they charged it up against the amount we were entitled to receive, so that the Island, in fact, paid the debt. Now, let me read one of the sections of the terms of Union:

That in consideration of the large expenditure authorized by the Parliament of Canada for the construction of railways and canals, and in view of the possibility of a readjustment of the financial arrangements between Canada and the several provinces now embraced in the Dominion, as well as the isolated and exceptional condition of Prince Edward Island, that colony shall, on entering the union, be entitled to incur a debt equal to fifty dollars per head of its population, as shown by the census returns of 1871, that is to say: four millions, seven hundred and one thousand and fifty dollars.

That sum represented $50 per head of our population. Against that $4,701,050, there was charged the $3,114,000, as shown in the Public Accounts, that my hon. friend from York (Mr. Wallace) has before him.

Mr. McMULLEN. And assumed by the Dominion.

Mr. BELL (P.E.I.) And assumed by the Dominion.

Mr. McMULLEN. That is right.

Mr. BELL (P.E.I.) But, of course, let us distinctly bear in mind that although the $3,114,000 was assumed by the Dominion, the railway of Prince Edward Island was actually built by us in the first instance, and it was charged to us and deducted out of the amount payable to us under the terms of the union.

Mr. ELLIS. I would like to ask my hon. friend (Mr. Bell) if there was any exceptional treatment at that time as against Prince Edward Island? The hon. gentleman seems to be arguing that there was.

Mr. BELL (P.E.I.) There was no exceptional treatment whatever. She came in exactly as the other provinces at so much per head of the population. The only apparently exceptional treatment was the difference between $45 per head and $50 per head. This was accorded her partly by reason of her isolated position and partly for the purpose of manifesting that Canada was willing to treat the smaller province, not only in a just, but in a generous manner. I want my hon. friend from York (Mr. Wallace) to emulate this spirit of justice and generosity. Let me appeal to him now on another point. According to the terms of the clause I have read, Prince Edward Island came into the union with the distinct understanding that a certain further amount of money was to be expended by the Dominion Government on railways and canals. It was understood and agreed that there was to be expended on canals $25,000,000; on the Canadian Pacific Railway, $30,000,000; on the Intercolonial Railway, $10,000,000; and there were sundry other estimated expenditures of $14,000,000. When we came into the union, the public debt of Canada stood at $82,187,000, and all these further expenditures were to be made. The whole of these amounts, viz., $161,187,000, divided by 3,600,000 population, gave $45 per head. Prince Edward Island had a population of about 94,000, which at $50 per head gave us the $4,701,050 to which I have referred. It was not contemplated at that time that we would have had such a large expenditure as we have since made upon canals, upon the Canadian Pacific Railway, or upon the Intercolonial Railway, or that a large amount of money would have been expended in building or subsidizing local railways. The expenditure of $41,000,000 that has since taken place for local railways, was not contemplated at all when we entered the union. It was, in fact, contrary to the terms of the union. That policy was inaugurated in 1882 by a Conservative Government, and it has been continued since by a Liberal Government. I am one of those who have made an honest effort to interpret the terms of the union, and I cannot find that the Dominion Government were justified in making one dollar of expenditure for local railways under the terms of confederation. But, having made that expenditure, it is impossible for Prince Edward Island to reverse the current of public policy, and all we can do is, that if the Government have determined upon a wrongful and unconstitutional expenditure, they should accord to us a fair share of the expenditure. This is the only way in which justice can now be done to Prince Edward Island. Now, instead of the Dominion expending on canals, as agreed, $25,000,000, we have expended $28,494,000 more; instead of expending on the Canadian Pacific Railway $30,000,000, we have expended $32,000,000 more; instead of expending on the Intercolonial $10,000,000, we have expended $24,358,000 more, and instead of incurring sundry expenditures of $14,000,000, we have increased that expenditure in the matter of local railways by $30,815,000. I want to ask the hon. member for York, and every other hon. gentleman in this House, if it is fair to us, in Prince Edward Island, that we should be asked to pay our share of all those large expenditures contrary to the terms under which we entered the union, and yet receive no return?

The least that the members of this Parliament can do with reference to Prince Edward Island is to give us a proportionate share of that excess of expenditure, and of that unconstitutional expenditure—not a million merely, but two and a half millions. I do not care whether you call this a subsidy to Prince Edward Island or a subsidy towards the construction of railways in Prince Edward Island. In either view it is only a partial measure of justice meted out to us. It is only returning to us a portion of the moneys which we ourselves have contributed—wrongfully and contrary to the terms of union—towards the construction of railways and canals in other provinces. Before I conclude, I want to point out that the late Conservative Government, some three years ago, introduced resolutions into this House looking towards the construction of seven branch railways in Prince Edward Island. The amount of money that was to be expended in their construction was largely in excess of the amount now proposed. So our hon. friend of the Conservative party can have no cause to complain if we are following to a slight extent the precedents which they themselves established. Moreover, if hon. members from the rest of the Dominion will look at this matter squarely in the face they will see that it is merely a measure of justice and not an act of generosity which they are meting out to Prince Edward Island.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have just a word to say on this resolution. I am sorry that the Intercolonial Railway has not been allowed to remain just as it was at the close of the parliamentary career of the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie. The present leader of the Opposition unfortunately opened the capital account, and commenced constructing branches; and from that time to the present there has been a continuous expenditure for the construction of branch lines—the Picton branch, the Oxford and New Glasgow branch, the St. Charles branch, branches to Sydney and North Sydney, and all over. It was, in my humble opinion, an unfortunate mistake that these roads should have been constructed at the entire cost of the Dominion, while in the other portions of the Dominion the people were called upon to lay the financial basis by taxation for the construction of their own lines of railway, and to run themselves into debt for that purpose. I admit that it is pretty hard to stop a system when it has been inaugurated and kept alive for some 18 years. We have the two parties going to Prince Edward Island, the one outbidding the other. We are given to understand that Sir Charles Tupper, when he went to Prince Edward Island previous to the last election, in order to carry the province, promised that if he were returned as Premier he would build not only this line, but no less than seven lines in Prince Edward Island. The result is, I presume, that the present Government are compelled to take into consideration some of these claims if they are to have any foothold at all. By this system, hon. gentlemen opposite bought up the country, building railways here, there and everywhere, and hon. gentlemen now in power have very great difficulty in stopping that system. I admit that it should be stopped. In the case of Prince Edward Island there may be an exceptional condition that does not exist anywhere else. It is away out in the Atlantic, largely by itself; it is not connected with the Dominion by any other lines. The lines there are largely owned and operated by the Dominion, and I am sorry to learn that they are operated at an annual loss; but whether they are operated at a loss or a profit, we have undertaken, in bringing that province into confederation to operate those lines. I presume that there are other sections of the country where railways are paying as badly, perhaps worse, than in Prince Edward Island. I am exceedingly sorry that all these lines have been consolidated in one account, and that we are not able to show how the different branches built by hon. gentlemen opposite are remunerating this country for the money invested. I would like to know how the Cape Breton branch and other branches are paying. We could tell that while the accounts were kept separate; but in order to hide the conspicuous deficits that were brought to the attention of this House from year to year, the late Minister of Railways consolidated the accounts, and so mixed them up that to-day you cannot tell the earnings of any particular branch; and I believe that was done for the purpose of hiding the extravagance of hon. gentlemen opposite in building lines that never paid. Now, it is said that the canals are a return for the railways built in Prince Edward Island. The canals of this Dominion, however, are just as much in the interest of the provinces in the east as they are of the provinces in the west. Prince Edward Island wants flour; so does Nova Scotia; and by the deepening of the canals, Prince Edward Island and the other provinces by the sea get their every-day wants supplied at considerably less cost than they would otherwise have to pay.

Mr. McALISTER. Is not the Intercolonial as much advantage to Ontario?

Mr. McMULLEN. I contend that the Intercolonial has been operated largely in the interests of the maritime provinces, and I hope that now that connection has been made with the city of Montreal its administration will be such that it will bring some little return to this Dominion for the enormous amount sunk in it. We have $56,000,000 sunk in that railway, besides an actual loss of $10,000,000 on its operation since its completion. If it is prudently operated now, it should begin to pay its own expenses, and bring something to the account of the people who are now paying about $2,250,000 a year of interest on the cost of its construction. I am sorry to hear the statement of the hon. member for West York in regard to the receipts and expenditures of the Prince Edward Island Railway.

I regret that the Government have felt called upon to add to Government roads in this country. I had hoped that we had reached a period when we had ceased building Government railways, but in this case I believe there is an exception, for the simple reason that you cannot get a company to build a road that is only a short line connecting with another road. Another reason is because the record of these roads in Prince Edward Island is such that he would be worse than a madman who would put money into any of them, because he would never get it out. I regret that the Government have seen it their duty to undertake the construction of this line, and I earnestly hope that this will be the last, but have no right to indulge in such a hope because the history of the past will no doubt be repeated in the future. Hon. gentlemen opposite, when they were in power, pushed along railway subsidies and the construction of branch lines in addition to the Canadian Pacific Railway, year after year, and the result is that the present Government have a difficult task to put a stop to the system these hon. gentlemen inaugurated. They have, however, made wonderful progress in that direction, for they are only building one line, whereas if we had the hon. leader of the Opposition in power we would be building a number of lines.

Mr. MARTIN. I think it is very necessary that the House should have some definite information as to what the province of Prince Edward Island has been charged with for the building of its railway. The statements we have heard are repeated time and again that Prince Edward Island did not pay for its railway. They are without foundation, and I think the time has come when such statements should be finally contradicted, that they may not be repeated in this House. I have in my hand the Order in Council of the Privy Council of England on the admission of Prince Edward Island into the Dominion, which sets the question in dispute at rest beyond controversy. I do not think that hon. gentlemen wish to misrepresent the case willingly, but so long a time has elapsed, that the circumstances are to a great extent forgotten. Now, this Order in Council which ought to settle it is as follows :

By Order in Council, dated Windsor, 26th June, 1883, Her Majesty thought fit to accept the terms and conditions set forth in the Address of the Houses of Parliament of Canada and from the Legislative Council and House of Assembly of Prince Edward Island of May, 1873, and it is declared by Her Majesty that, from and after the 1st July, 1873, Prince Edward Island shall be admitted and become part of the Dominion. By the resolutions which form the basis of the calculations it is provided that the railway under contract and in course of construction by the Government of Prince Edward Island shall become the property of Canada. To carry out the above provision, it was agreed that the cost of these railways should be assumed by the Dominion, and that the money so paid shall be charged as against the debt of Prince Edward Island.

I think that puts the case beyond doubt. The cost of the railway is charged against Prince Edward Island.

I hold in my hand a statement of the amounts paid by the province of Prince Edward Island, which totals $3,144,214.41 for the construction of that railway which is charged against the province, and, on that amount the province loses interest since confederation. The hon. member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen) has laid great stress on the fact that the Prince Edward Island Railway was not self-sustaining. I am astonished at his making such strong statements as he has made. Let him look at the huge deficits on canals, let him turn to the reports of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and he will find that this Dominion has spent something like $80,000,000 on canals, the receipts from which are only $407,000 and the expenditure on which amounts to $540,000. That is that the receipts do not cover the expenditure by the amount of $140,000 a year. If you add the interest on the $80,000,000, which would be about $2,500,000, where would you be landed? You would have an annual loss of $2,633,000. Will the hon. gentleman presume to say that any person, as a business speculation, would go into the building of canals? But why should not our canals be built on a business basis just as well as our railways? To give an instance of the expenditure on canals, $13,582,291, of which was spent since hon. gentlemen came into power. I have in my hand the receipts from and expenditure per year on the Trent Valley Canal, for which his own party voted, since they came into power, $1,250,000. Why did not the hon. gentleman say that that was not a business arrangement? There are no receipts worth mentioning from that canal, but all the same he voted for it like a good supporter of the Government. The receipts from the Trent Valley Canal, according to the last railway report, are $1,404 and the expenditure $10,102, or, as the hon. member would put it—it takes over $7 to collect $1. This is a work on which nearly $3,000,000 has been expended by the Government, and all the receipts from it amount only to $1,400 a year. There is something the hon. gentleman can exercise his ingenuity on, if he likes to go into figures. There is a work on which his party has spent $1,250,000, and from which the receipts amount to but $1,400, and on which the expenditure runs up to over $10,000.

Take the other canals, take the St. Lawrence Canal, the receipts from it are only $128,338, and the yearly expenditure $194,107. On that one canal alone there was between $60,000 and $70,000 of a deficit last year. Why did not the hon. gentleman stand up and oppose the construction of that canal?

Mr. McMULLEN. Does my hon. friend wish to lead the committee to believe that I voted for the construction of the Trent Valley Canal? I never did anything of the kind. On the contrary I voted against it, from the beginning to end.

Mr. MARTIN. Did not the hon. gentleman vote last session in favour of an expenditure on that canal? Can he deny it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That was for work done under contract made before the change of Government.

Mr. MARTIN. I have the Estimates in my hand. We all remember the delegation that came down here from the Trent Valley Canal district, and we know that they went home after $650,000 had been placed in the Estimates and the next year another $600,000 was placed in the Estimates.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. All of which was to pay for work done on the contracts existing at the time.

Mr. MARTIN. Perhaps so, but I say the hon. gentleman did not vote against it.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have opposed from its inception the construction of the Trent Valley Canal, and voted against every appropriation in connection with it. But my hon. friend (Mr. Martin) knows that when the country enters into a contract for any work, an incoming Government must carry out that contract. This Government must carry out what their predecessors have committed them to.

Mr. MARTIN. That is not always the case but I will refer the hon. gentleman to the next item—the Chambly Canal—receipts $21,892.07, and the working expenses $37,063.54, or costing nearly $2.00 to collect $1.00. But I do not think it is necessary for me to say much more on this subject. One hon. gentleman said that Ontario had spent large sums on railways. I have here a statement which shows that, since 1873 up to 1896, the Ontario local government had spent $7,306,538 on railways, while the municipalities had spent $10,069,143, a total of $17,375,681, or at the rate of $8 per capita.

Mr. McMULLEN. That was right out of the pockets of the people.

Mr. MARTIN. But the same statement show that Prince Edward Island spent $3,144,214, or at the rate of over $28.00 per capita.

Mr. McMULLEN. But the Dominion assumed the debt created for that.

Mr. MARTIN. No, it was charged as against Prince Edward Island, and we lost the interest on that amount. This expenditure on railways that I have quoted would amount as I have said to $28 a head, against $8.21 for the province of Ontario. On the other hand, expenditures for railways were made from the Dominion treasury in the province of Ontario at the rate of $14.13 per head of the population of the province in Prince Edward Island at the rate of $5.82 per head. So, we find that this great province that is contributing so much towards railways, has actually had $14.13 per head spent by this Dominion as against $8.21 per head it has spent itself. I do not say anything against hon. members who oppose this vote for Prince Edward Island, because they do not understand the conditions; but that it is a vote that can be fully justified; and I would advise hon. members to give the question some study before they venture to speak on it.

Mr. BLAIR.

Mr. HAGGART. I desire to say only a few words in support of the contention of my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Martin). His statement is literally correct. On entering confederation, Prince Edward Island was charged $3,144,000 for the road partly constructed and partly to be constructed. They were entitled, in other words, to $3,144,000 in cash. They said to the Government: You take this undertaking off our hands and charge us with the amount. And so the Government assumed the road. If the road was a paying concern, the people of Prince Edward Island were entitled to the interest which they were allowed, or $150,000 a year. But it was not a paying concern; we lost on it at the rate of $70,000 a year. I think that is a fair charge to be made against the interest which they would be entitled to. We came to the conclusion that they were entitled under the confederation arrangement to $60,000 or $70,000 a year. And so I brought down some resolutions to the House to grant subsidies to different lines of railways in Prince Edward Island—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is, the votes to build them?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, not to subsidize them in the ordinary sense. One was the very road now under discussion. I think the Government are perfectly justified in proposing it. This road is a road which the people of Prince Edward Island have set their hearts upon. They are entitled to some consideration from the Government in the shape of a subsidy or balance to make up a subsidy which they were entitled to at confederation. I think it would have been better if the Government had followed the resolutions which I introduced into the House and undertaken the whole of these roads at once. If I remember rightly, these lines included one from the main line to Stanley Bridge, another from the main line to Rustico, another from North Wiltshire to Crapaud, two little lines in the direction of Richmond Bay, one from Harmony and one from Charlottetown—besides the one now under discussion.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What was the mileage altogether?

Mr. HAGGART. According to my recollection, it was about 105 miles. Though I have often been charged with heresy and often laughed at for it, I am of the same opinion as the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), that when for Dominion purposes, large expenditures are made in one part of the country, it is sound public policy, and it is just, that expenditures to counterbalance these should be made in other parts which are not benefited by the first expenditures. In spite of all the charges of heresy, I have never got that out of my head yet. Prince Edward Island has received nothing in the shape of subsidies to railways at any time. It is entitled to its share; and if the people have set their hearts on these little lines of railway, they should have them. The charge to the country would not amount to over $25,000 or $30,000 a year. Even if it amounted to $70,000, and the deficit on the Prince Edward Island Railway was only $70,000, it would be only fair-play and just to Prince Edward Island under the terms of confederation.

Those were the principal grounds on which I introduced the resolution. I was aware that instead of receiving a substantial revenue from it the probabilities were that there would be a deficit. I calculated on this deficit, and on those grounds I introduced the resolution. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) finds fault with the resolution which I introduced. He says it is compulsory on the Government now to introduce resolutions in this particular direction because we promised so much, and they had to perform part of it. The hon. gentleman is prepared to swallow his words in detail; he will swallow a resolution for this part of the railway, and next year, I suppose, if the Minister of Railways and Canals brings down another resolution, he will swallow that. He finds fault with the manner in which I kept the accounts for the Intercolonial Railway. He said that on the different sections of the Intercolonial Railway, the Oxford and New Glasgow branch, the Cape Breton branch and others, I purposely added the whole of the receipts and expenditures into one account for the purpose of confusing the country. I did not do what the Minister whom he is supporting does—confuse them by adding the Drummond and Montreal section of the Intercolonial Railway, notwithstanding the promise of his colleague in another branch of Parliament, and the promise given to the country in this House that we would have a detailed account of the receipts and expenditures from that road. I only mention these things for the purpose of replying to the member for North Wellington, and for the purpose of supporting this undertaking, which the members from Prince Edward Island have so much at heart.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the route been decided upon between Charlottetown and Murray Harbour?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. We are going in as direct a course as possible. Surveys have been made, but I think they will require to be gone over again. But substantially we are pursuing as direct a course as possible from Charlottetown, crossing the Hillsboro' River direct to Murray Harbour. The line is 44 miles and a quarter long.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the provincial legislature grant anything towards this line?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. The hon. gentleman will find in "Hansard" what I said on this subject. They engage to pay one-half the estimated cost of the bridge. $400,000 would be one-half the cost and they engage to pay 3 per cent interest upon that amount, or $12,000, in consideration of our making not only a railway bridge but a highway for foot-passengers over the bridge. They pay that for all time.

Mr. FOSTER. The ex-Minister of Railways and Canals has brought to the attention of the House the resolutions which were introduced in 1896 by the Government of that day. I remember going very carefully into the matter with my hon. friend and another member of the Government as a committee. We did not go into it in connection with this one particular part of the island, but we went into it with reference to different parts of the island, with an idea of proposing and carrying out such branch roads as, when fully completed, would connect every portion of the island which it seemed to us had need of communication with the mainland, and out of which we believed that a fair traffic could be got. I know we went very carefully into the questions of cost and returns with the officers of the Railway Department. My hon. friend says that he faced a deficit as a result. I think from memory, that the deficit he faced was very small when it was put over a number of years. We thought it was small in view of a probable fair accretion of traffic, and we came to the conclusion that if these were once built every section of the island that could call for connection with the mainland would be satisfied, and that in the end the deficit would not be greater than at the present time, if indeed it was not made less. It is true that Prince Edward Island is a maritime province. It is indented everywhere with small bays; and it is true as well that the railway did a larger part of the traffic of Prince Edward Island in those days than can be done by water, and this is part, I think, of an economical policy. With reference to this line, considering its deficit and its cost in the past, I think it is part of an economical policy that these branch lines should be built, not profusely, but where there is a possibility for a return from the traffic, and that they should at once be made feeders to the main line and concentrate the traffic into the main line. Then, I think that by a fair and economical management, not only will you satisfy the needs of the island, but I believe you will put the whole traffic of the island with reference to the Intercolonial Railway and its branches in such a position that the deficit will not be any greater, if it is not, indeed, much less, than it is at the present time. That is my recollection of the result that we came to as a consequence of a pretty thorough study of the subject in connection with the Department of Railways. We brought those resolutions down to the House, and if we had remained in power we would have carried them through, and not only Murray Harbour, but the other sections of the island which demanded them, as they do now, these advantages, would have had these lines of communication. On that basis I cannot do anything else but support this vote, which is only a part of our scheme, and I am only sorry the Minister has not carried out the plans outlined by the department under the management of my hon. friend, and completed this system by a network of small lines which would have called in to the main line the traffic from the outlying portions. So I am in favour of this vote, not only because I believe it is right, but because it was part of our own policy when we were in power, a part only and not the whole of it. The hon. member for North Wellington made a most unfortunate slip from the view of political morals when he brought himself down to the sticking point. Although he himself is opposed to this vote brought in by the Minister of Railways and Canals, still he thinks the Minister should bring it in because, if he did not, the other party would get ahead of him. Now, that is the baldest kind of political corruption with regard to subsidies.

Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.) When the late Government took this matter up they contemplated extending the Murray Harbour branch by way of Montague Bridge. I may say here for the benefit of the Minister of Railways and Canals, that Montague Bridge is the principal place of trade in a large section of country, it is a growing town, and it is the largest shipping place in Prince Edward Island, being at the head of tide-water. It was contemplated at that time that the road should run down by way of Kinross, Murray Harbour Road, that a branch should run down the valley of the Montague River and up the valley of the Browns Creek, another branch of the same river, and wind round to Murray River. That distance was supposed to be about 60 miles, the present line is about 45 miles. Now, if it is built to Montague Bridge, I believe it will be the greatest source of traffic for that line along the whole route from one end to the other. I think the Government should consider that route before they commit themselves entirely to the other, and that they should make a survey of it. I may say that I regret very much that the branches that were contemplated at that time have not been considered in this vote. There was at that time considered a branch from O'Leary Station westward, from Summerside northward, from Emerald northward, North Wiltshire, Royalty Junction northwardly, Harmony eastward to Elmira, and Southport to Murray Harbour.

There is one small branch of road from Harmony to Elmira which goes to a part of the province in which there are no harbours and the people have to haul their fish and their produce for a long distance. This is a large producing section of the country. There are cheese factories in that district, and large lobster factories along the coast, and a small branch line of only a few miles, would be a great benefit to the people in these districts. I have nothing further to say, at present, except to emphasize the fact that I trust the Government will consider the matter that has already been brought to their notice in regard to the reduction of fares on the Prince Edward Island Railway and that they will take into consideration the fact that the road, being a surface road, and by running in a winding direction, is greatly lengthened. I would say further that I believe every one of these contemplated roads that I have referred to would be feeders to the main line, and the traffic on them would be just as important as that on the main line is at present. If the traffic on these branch lines were to become as great as it is at present on the main line the expense of operating the branches must be greatly lessened as the same management and the same rolling stock would be utilized on the branch lines. The result of the increased traffic would go largely towards wiping out all the deficits that appear in the operating of the road at present. At this late stage of the session I will not detain the committee longer than to make these few remarks.

Mr. MARTIN. I would like the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals to give me his attention for a few minutes. According to the survey that was partly made in 1896 this branch was to be 65 miles long. The present survey only contemplates a branch 44 miles long.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Forty-four or forty-five miles.

Mr. MARTIN. In reducing the length of the road I think an injustice has been done, and I think the road will not be such a useful one if it is carried out in this way. I wish to impress upon the hon. Minister the fact that under the old plan laid down in 1896 when the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) was in the Railway Department, there was a spur from a point on the proposed line passing at or near Montague Bridge and joining the existing main line at New Perth or Cardigan, which would accommodate Caledonia, the western sections of townships 57 and 58 and sections of townships 59, 61 and 63, which will be afforded with accommodation under the present scheme. I understood from the engineer in charge, when he was down in the province, that that part of the line was to be surveyed. I went to him and asked him whether that part of the line was to be surveyed. He told me that he did not have any instructions about it, but that he would write to the department. I went to see him shortly afterwards and he told me that it was to be surveyed, but the result has been so far that there has been no survey. I think the object to be attained and the usefulness of the road will, to a large extent, be lessened if this spur is not constructed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. As far as it goes, it is all right.

Mr. MARTIN. Yes, as far as it goes but a change of location will be required if this spur is not built and I am sure the hon. Minister will give his consideration to this matter.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The subject will receive consideration.

Mr. SPROULE. I desire to say a word in reply to what was said by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals when he spoke of the fairness of making an expenditure in another province in the light of an expenditure made in one province where it does not benefit another. If that principle were carried there would never come a time when we would not be arranging to make expenditures in the various provinces. If that principle held good, let us apply it to the Intercolonial Railway in its bearing upon the province of Ontario. The expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway, according to the report of the Department of Railways and Canals, amounts to $55,668,000. That was of little or no value to the province of Ontario.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Ontario trade will get into Montreal.

Mr. SPROULE. But this was before the line ever reached Montreal. It never could be used for Ontario trade because the trade of Ontario went through Montreal to the Atlantic navigation and did not traverse this railway at all. So that, in reality Ontario got very little if any benefit of that expenditure. There has been an expenditure made since in Ontario and it will be held, according to the principle laid down by the hon. Minister, that the expenditure which took place since for the Canadian Pacific Railway and other railways should be recouped to Prince Edward Island and the maritime provinces now by some additional expenditures. I do not think that would be exactly fair, and I do not think the principle holds good, and if carried out in that way it seems to me that it would ultimately reach a point of the utmost absurdity. If you are making an expenditure in the province of Prince Edward Island that not only entails that much money of the country being spent, but entails a perpetual loss for all time in the future, then it becomes hard to justify and this must be the case in Prince Edward Island, because, as the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) pointed out it costs us $1.50 a year to keep up the railways in Prince Edward Island for every dollar earned. This is a charge placed upon the country and it becomes, under these circumstances, a still more unjustifiable expenditure. I could understand that if this branch line added to the trade of the main line to such an extent that it would make up a portion of the deficit which occurs there every year, there would be some justification for the expenditure, but if this expenditure only entails a further deficit, from year to year, for all time to come, then, I say, it is unjustifiable and in my judgment the people will not justify it.

Mr. McALISTER. I would like to ask the Minister if it is his intention to put back the night agent at New Mills?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I confess that I have not in my mind at this moment that there has been any change made recently. I will inquire into it. What is the name of the station?

Mr. McALISTER. New Mills. The night agent has been at New Mills for years back, when it was a less important place than it is to-day.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Only a portion of the year?

Mr. McALISTER. The night agent has been there for a number of years back all the year round, and I may say there is a great deal of business carried on all the year round there. There is a great deal of trade there, and we know that in the country districts they do not carry on business in the same way as in cities and towns. They are very often there for freight, and very often go to ship freight after the hour the day agent goes off. It puts them to a great deal of inconvenience, not having a night agent there.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McAlister) will recall the fact that we made arrangements which would admit of our regular agent doing all the work required at that station. The hon. gentleman may remember that it is only in the evening and morning, and not during the night, that trains arrive and depart. Of course, you have to start very early in the morning to make connections, but it was thought that the regular agent could discharge all the duties required there.

Mr. McALISTER. The local passenger traffic is largely on the freight trains and mixed trains, and these come in, I think, after the hours when the station agent will be off. In the winter season the trains are not regular, and passengers come in there, and have no means of knowing where the trains are, whether they are near the station or far away. Sometimes the station is very uncomfortable, from the fact that there is no fire there, and I think, considering the business carried on at New Mills, they are entitled to better accommodation than they have. A night agent should be there. My information is, and my recollections are, that a night agent was on for years back all the time—summer and winter—in fact, I am satisfied as to this. I hope the Minister will look into the matter. I may say also that the accommodation at Nash Creek is not what it should be for the agent.

To pay Messrs. H. Ryan & Co., amount of award on claims in connection with their contract for the construction of a canal and lift-lock at Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., referred to W. Shanly, Esq., C.E., as arbitrator .....	$211,505

$231,505

Mr. HAGGART. Mr. Chairman, this is the most extraordinary item, I think, that has been in the House for a great many years. The session before last, there was an amount brought down in the Estimates for the purpose of paying a final estimate for this work. Last year there was a further estimate brought down for the purpose of paying Mr. Ryan the sum of $20,000 in full, if I remember, for his claim in reference to the Sault Ste. Marie Canal. I could not understand, after a final estimate from the engineer the year before, why it is that a subsequent estimate is brought down for the purpose of paying him the difference between $4.50, which was allowed him for the building of some stone-work along the line of the canal, and $7.50. For the payment of $4.50 a yard I was criticised—the late Government was criticised and found fault with, because it was in excess of the value of the work that was done. I paid it because I thought under the schedule he was entitled to it. I thought it was a large sum to pay $4.50, but, to my astonishment, the present Minister brought down a sum of $27,000 to pay the difference between $4.50 and $7.50. It was opposed in the House—the member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) was in the House at the time—and the Minister says: I will drop this item, and I will leave it to the courts for the purpose of deciding. If I remember rightly, because I have not the information here, I asked for full information in reference to this before debating it, but I have only got the award of Mr. Shanly, upon which this amount is based. If I remember rightly, the contract was entered into with Mr. Ryan in 1888 for the purpose of building this work. Under that contract the chief engineer was made the sole and final judge as to everything in reference to that contract. Subsequently we referred the claims to the Exchequer Court. There were two subsequently entered into, one in 1892 and one in 1894, with Mr. Hugh Ryan, and that clause, leaving it to the chief engineer to be the final judge, was eliminated, and any claims which the contractor might have to be referred to the Exchequer Court of Canada. There does not seem to be any reference to the Exchequer Court. I cannot understand from the Minister what authority he had to leave it to Mr. Shanly to be the final judge of this. He had a final report from his chief engineer in reference to that work. Why is it the Minister passed over the Exchequer Court, and left it to Mr. Shanly to report upon? Is the Exchequer Court of no more use in Canada—a court established for the sole and only purpose of trying cases of this kind and doing away with the old system of proceedings, by which claims might be left to some favourite of the Government or some person who might, perhaps, be influenced by the contractor? The most extraordinary part of this proceeding, if I am correctly informed, is this, that the Government was not represented by any counsel or solicitor before this tribunal—that, in fact, neither party had counsel; but that the matter was left wholly to Mr. Shanly. Why was it that the engineer who was in charge of the work during the whole time of its construction, Mr. Crawford, who, if any one, should have appeared before that court as a witness, was never called? As the case was submitted to Mr. Shanly on an Order in Council, I understand that the Government are bound by the award, that Ryan & Co. can bring an action to recover the amount, and that the Government have no appeal to the Exchequer Court or the Supreme Court. I want to know why the Minister did not bring down all the papers, together with the evidence in the case? Why does he go behind the contract of 1888, for the purpose of going, not to a court, but to an arbitration—a system which the country declared it had no confidence in, and, therefore, provided in all contracts let by the Railway Department that all such matters should be referred to the Exchequer Court. The Minister himself, in the session before last, brought down an appropriation which was to be in payment of this account in full. Last session he found that the contractors had some kind of an equitable claim for $27,500. Where is the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson), who found fault with me because he claimed that the work did not come up to the standard, for which I had paid $4.50 a yard? Now, the Minister brings down an estimate for the purpose of paying the difference between $4.50 and $7.50. Last year he made the statement that $27,500 was to pay this claim in full.

Mr. BLAIR.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. What is the use of making a statement of that kind?

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman brought down an estimate which was supposed to pay the account in full.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. On what authority does the hon. gentleman state that?

Mr. HAGGART. I will get "Hansard." If I remember rightly, the Minister stated last year that he had a final estimate, and that the sum he asked for was in payment of it. When there was a final estimate, and a vote was taken for the purpose of paying a specific amount, the Minister was surely bound to tell the House that Ryan & Co. had other claims besides the difference between $4.50 and $7.50 per cubic yard.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman pretend to tell this House that he did not know that Messrs. Ryan & Co. had a claim of over $400,000?

Mr. HAGGART. I never heard of it. I thought the claim of the year before was settled in full; and last year, when the Minister brought down the item of $27,500, he was so ashamed of it himself that after getting the consent of Council to its introduction, he withdrew it. I thought that if anything was to be left to arbitration, it would be the question whether that work came under a special classification and whether the contractor was entitled to more than $4.50 per cubic yard, because that was the only question before the House at that time. But what I want the Minister to answer is this: Why does he go past the Exchequer Court and leave the claim to Mr. Shanly? Why does he not get the Department of Justice to look after the interests of his department, and argue the question before the arbitrators? If the Department of Justice is busily engaged, why does he not get another solicitor? Why is the investigation not made in an open court, so that the country may know what is going on and its interests may be looked after? Why does the hon. gentleman go outside of the conditions of the contract? Why did you go past the condition of the contract? If it is provided in the contract of 1888 that the chief engineer shall be the final judge and the arbitrator, why does not the chief engineer do his duty? If you are bound, under the subsequent contracts of 1892 and 1894, to leave it to the Exchequer Court, why did you not leave it to that court? And then, if you avoid these two points, why is it that you did not conduct your case in a manner that any other case for a much smaller sum is conducted before an arbitration, and that is, by counsel for the Government and allow counsel for the defence?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have listened to a great many attacks from the hon. gentleman since I have been in this department, but one which strikes me with more amazement I have never listened to. My hon. friend lived through a very large portion of this transaction, and if his memory is of any service to him, he ought to be able to recall the leading facts. I presume that he must be familiar with what was transpiring in his department, the contracts he was making, the leading features of those contracts, the usages which prevail in interpreting contracts, and the general results, particularly in the working out of the "Soo" contract, and all my hon. friend here has been charging against me he must know is entirely unwarranted if he were speaking with any recollection at all of what transpired. He does not even state the character of the contracts entered into. They were two as between the Government and Messrs. Ryan & Company in connection with the Sault Ste. Marie work. The principal contract, the one out of which the largest portion of the claim which they subsequently preferred against the Government arose, was a contract under which, if any dispute arose between the contractor and the Government, the Government were bound to name an arbitrator, and it was stipulated that the chief engineer of Government works should be that arbitrator. A subsequent contract was made for some additional work of a very much more limited character, in connection with which some portions of these claims have arisen, but that contract differed from the original one in this particular, that it provided that if a dispute arose, it should be referred to the Exchequer Court, but it had no reference to disputes which might arise under the first and main contract between these parties.

Mr. WALLACE. The ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) made the statement that in case of dispute under the first contract, the chief engineer was to be the sole arbitrator.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, I have stated that.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. Minister has not followed that out.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, and I will tell you why. The reason which I venture to say must be within the knowledge of the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals, but which he has evidently forgotten, is that my Deputy Minister, as he tells me, since he has been in the department, has uniformly refused to act in the capacity of arbitrator under these contracts, because he felt that the position would be an unfitting one. He felt that the position of arbitrator to deal with cases in respect of which he had given his judgment and opinion to his Minister and the Government, was one he ought not to be called on to fill, and which he declined to fill, and it was because he entertained that view that the subsequent contract contained a reference to the Exchequer Court in substitution for the reference to him as an arbitrator.

When these claims came before the department, growing out of the completion of the work under these two contracts, it became a right which the contractor had, and which we could not gainsay, to refer them to arbitration. It was not a matter in which we had any alternative at all. I could not say to Messrs. Ryan & Company: We will not give you this arbitration, for I was obliged to agree that they were entitled to an arbitration. It was then the chief engineer took the attitude he told me he had uniformly taken and refused to act. The ex-Minister of Railways must know that what I am stating is correct, that the chief engineer had uniformly refused to act in that capacity for reasons which, no doubt, commended themselves entirely to the approval of my hon. friend. We had a claim which, in the larger part, consisted of differences and disputes arising under the first contract, and a portion of which arose in respect of the second contract, and it was a question for us to determine whether or not we would consent that this part of the claim, which arose under the second contract, and which was to have gone to the Exchequer Court for determination, should not be sent to an arbitrator for determination, together with the other portion of the claim arising under the first contract. It was a question whether we should not treat the claim as a whole, leaving all the questions to be determined by the one authority. There could be no doubt as to the wiser course. An arbitrator was to settle the major part of the claim, and in choosing one, we took care to select a person, not only in whom we had confidence but in whom the public also would have confidence—a person who had the necessary experience and knowledge as an engineer to take up the various items and deal with them, because they were not questions of law but of engineering, in respect of which an engineer would be the most competent authority. No person could question as to which was the wiser course to adopt—whether we would split up a portion of the claim and send it to the Exchequer Court to be dealt with by a gentleman who would, no doubt, be competent to deal with questions of law, but who could not be supposed to be well informed on delicate questions of engineering, and would not be regarded as so desirable a final referee as one who had all his life been working on engineering questions.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the hon. gentleman argue that he had not power, under that contract, to refer the dispute to the judge of the Exchequer Court, but that he was forced to refer it to an arbitrator?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I say undoubtedly nothing was authorized in the first contract except a reference to an arbitrator.

Mr. FOSTER. That is to the chief engineer?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, or to any person that might be acceptable to the other side, in substitution, as an arbitrator.

Mr. FOSTER. Does my hon. friend argue that when once an arbitrator is named in the contract and the person named fails for any reason to arbitrate, then it is not possible for him to send a claim to the Exchequer Court?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I could not compel any reference to the Exchequer Court. This question, therefore, came before me in that form. Applying my best judgment to the question, I felt that since there was a right from the contractor to exact a reference to arbitration, and the duty cast upon the Government to make that reference, the best results would be accomplished by selecting as arbitrator a gentleman whose knowledge, training, experience, reputation and standing would fit him better than any judge of any court to determine what was right and proper between the parties. And, therefore, instead of splitting the matter up on the basis of the contract in the form in which they happened to be, one being two years subsequent to the other, I thought we could get a better settlement in the interest of all concerned and would be able to justify our conduct to Parliament and the country with greater certainty if we had all the suits determined at one time by the same arbitrator.

Mr. FOSTER. Were there claims under the second contract too?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have endeavoured to make that clear. The amount of the claims under the second contract necessarily bear a small proportion to the total amount of the claim. I prepared a recommendation to Council, and the conclusion arrived at was in accordance with the view I have stated; and a reference was made to Mr. Shanly as arbitrator. Now, whether the amount awarded is a just result or not is not the question. We have to pay out what the arbitrator awarded.

Mr. FOSTER. Another important point was that the Minister stated that his information was that it was left wholly to the arbitrator, that there was no counsel.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The matters went to arbitration under as fair conditions to the Government as to the contractor. There were no lawyers on either side. The hearing was a lengthy and most exhaustive one; and the evidence which each side deemed it to be in its interest was produced before Mr. Shanly, who sat for a number of weeks hearing all this testimony. It was not a legal question or one in which legal argument was necessary—it was a question of engineering. The chief engineer was present and closely followed the proceedings. Mr. Thompson, the superintending engineer of the Welland Canal, who had been through the whole work and was thoroughly and personally familiar with it in all its details, strenuously contended for the Government view of these various questions; and I think that no one would say that the interests of the Government in the matter would be likely to fall with Mr. Thompson, who is known to be, above all, a very straightforward man, one whose idea is: Let duty be done though the heavens fall; and in no degree could be considered as wanting in capacity for the work. I know from the complaints made from time to time by the contractors that they felt that Mr. Thompson exceeded all bounds and all reason and fairness in the strenuous way in which he contested the various claims of the contractors. The whole matter of that claim is open to the closest scrutiny and examination. I do not think it would have been possible to have a matter dealt with upon lines which were more defensible than those on which the department dealt with this particular claim. I felt that we had no alternative, but must make a reference to arbitration; and if anybody can suggest how it would have been possible to have an arbitration conducted in a more thorough way or in a way more in which the interests of the Crown would be more likely to be protected, I should like to hear it, because I am at a loss to conjecture in what direction it could be found.

Mr. FOSTER. Was the evidence taken down?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Mr. Butcher, the stenographer, took down the evidence. That evidence is not, at the moment, in our possession; but we can procure it, if it is desired.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the Minister say the department has not a copy of the evidence?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, it is in the possession of Mr. Shanly at present.

Mr. FOSTER. But it belongs to the department?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Oh, yes, I have no doubt Mr.

Shanly would furnish it. The evidence on either side was given under the solemnity of an oath, and was all taken down by a shorthand writer. The arbitration has resulted in a certain way and we have no alternative but to pay it.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. Minister give the committee a little information as to the grounds of the claim. We are in total ignorance of that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) a few days ago, expressed a desire to have the papers brought down. They are very voluminous. The claim itself in its different branches is of such a character that I do not think it would exactly throw a flood of light on the question if I were to enter into it. It is a technical claim, and one which, I think, the hon. gentleman himself would not wish to have me go into.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman has not cleared up the point that was raised as to the proposed vote of last year.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I was just coming to that.

Mr. HAGGART. And the year before, where it was stated that it was a final estimate.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) kindly read what I said?

Mr. HAGGART: (reading)

Sault Ste. Marie Canal—

To pay wages of employees whilst unoccupied owing to delays for which the Electric Company were not responsible .....	$ 624
Construction .....	80,000
To pay contractors, Hugh Ryan & Co., the cost of pulling down and rebuilding timber wall in prism of canal, &c.	5,796

Mr. HAGGART. I suppose the $80,000 is to pay the balance of the claim of Mr. Ryan?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, this is to pay the Ryan firm.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I was going to explain this point. What the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) has read does not bear out the statement he made. What he said was that I asked Parliament to vote, $27,000—

Mr. HAGGART. No, $80,000 the year before that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is not the item to which the hon. gentleman refers.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. Minister has not followed me. I said the year before the hon. Minister stated that an item he brought down to the House of $80,000 was to pay the Ryan claim. I asked if this was a final estimate. After the final estimate was paid in a subsequent year, the hon. Minister brought down an item of $27,500.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would like to turn up "Hansard."

Mr. HAGGART. I have it here, and will send it over to the hon. gentleman. The statement was clear, and in the debate on the subsequent year I referred to it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Let us not connect the two years together, for the effect is confusing and prevents a clear understanding of what occurred. In 1897, I brought down an item, covering a claim which I said had been made by the Messrs. Ryan in connection with this revetment wall.

Mr. HAGGART. The revetment wall is separate, as the hon. Minister will see.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is what I say; it is a totally separate claim.

Mr. HAGGART. That is in 1898.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. But the hon. gentleman knows that when the item of $80,000 was brought down in connection with the Sault Ste. Marie Canal—

Mr. HAGGART. That was for the purpose of covering the final estimate, was it not?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not want to confuse the two. There was an item of $27,000 in connection with the revetment wall, the payment of which I asked Parliament to sanction; and the question arose as to whether the amount allowed for the stone should be $4.50 or $7. An objection being taken to the item, I abandoned it. But I could not have suggested to Parliament at that time that the $27,000 was to be a settlement in full of the claim of Ryan & Co. I am not going to confuse the $80,000 with that, because they are entirely distinct. I stated to the House at that time that the $27,000 was to settle the claim of Ryan & Co. for the extra figure in respect to the cost of that stone, and I thought they would accept that amount. It was objected to here, and I stated to the hon. gentlemen, when the objection was taken, that I would withdraw the item and let it be disposed of according to the terms of the contract. I was prepared to pay that $27,000, because I was satisfied that the claim was just, and that we might as well settle it as have it go to litigation, which I thought might then ensue with respect to their whole claim. Well, then, the item was withdrawn, and they did not get this claim paid, and this claim went in, I presume, with the other items of their claim, and was included in the general award which was made under this reference to arbitration, in accordance with the terms of the contract. The claim of Ryan & Co. was between $400,000 and $500,000, and that claim could not be presented until the final estimates were in, and until they were in his possession. I was in the Department of Railways some time before the engineers completed their final estimates or submitted their report.

Mr. WALLACE. The ex-Minister of Railways and Canals has stated that he had no knowledge of any such demand being made. There is a direct conflict between the Minister and the ex-Minister, and I think the House is entitled to some documentary evidence to see who is right.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. About what?

Mr. WALLACE. This claim of $400,000. The ex-Minister says there was no such claim in the department.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The ex-Minister cannot speak as to what occurred in the department after he left it.

Mr. WALLACE. The contract was finished long before he left it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He can speak as to this, and I ask him to speak as to this, whether the final estimates were in his possession before he left the department. They were not in my possession until months after I came into the department. I do not think they were in my possession in the session of 1897; they were not in possession of the department until after the session of 1897, and that is why I can show the hon. gentleman how unreasonable he is, when he makes a complaint that I should have been willing to pay $27,000 at that time, when I had in my mind a final settlement, because I had asked for an appropriation of $80,000. I asked for that appropriation, based upon the estimate of the officers in my department; their estimate was that $80,000 would complete the construction and settle the bill for the Sault Ste. Marie Canal. I dare say they felt themselves warranted in giving me that information, and in authorizing me to ask Parliament for an appropriation for that amount, even before these final estimates were concluded—and if they were, they were not in the possession of the contractors, and we had not been furnished with the demand which the contractors made, based upon these final estimates, for the payment of between $400,000 and $500,000. In all candour, I stated to Parliament that I wanted $80,000 to pay that bill, and I assumed that the estimates of the engineers would approximate that amount. But we did not know, as anybody being in the same position would not know, what claim was likely to be made by Ryan & Co. in respect to the accuracy or otherwise of these final estimates. I knew there were three or four small items, of which $27,000 was one, a proper item to be paid; therefore, I was willing to ask Parliament for authority to pay this in the following session, but it being objected to, I felt I was not under obligation to press it, and I let it go, to be determined in the ordinary way.

Mr. FOSTER. All I can say at present is, that we ought to have the information which the hon. gentleman has in his possession, and which the House has not, which he says is voluminous, and I take it, this is a somewhat voluminous vote, too, so far as the amount is concerned. I do not suppose the Minister expects that we are going to vote this without additional information; if he does, he is very much mistaken. We have absolutely no information at all. I would like him to bring down, first, the contracts upon which this claim has been based.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can give the hon. gentleman the contract, if he likes.

Mr. HAGGART. For 1888, for 1892, and for 1894.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, I would like to have the chief engineer's report upon the final estimate, which report, I suppose, is made up—the whole matter known to the Minister. I suppose he has all information as to what should be paid to square off the whole bill?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can give the hon. gentleman a copy of the engineer's report in the final estimates.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, I would like to have also the Order in Council which authorized the reference of the matter in dispute.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman has got that.

Mr. HAGGART. I have got Mr. Shanly's award. In Mr. Shanly's award is set forth a summary of what the Order in Council is.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman will see that the House should have as much information as he himself, or nearly so, before it can pass an item as big as this. It is a big item. On the face of it, my hon. friend came down in 1897, or after that vote of $80,000, and he was asked, in so many English words, if this was a vote to pay the final estimate, and he answered by the affirmative monosyllable, yes; that is, he gave his assent to that, and all that bears it out. My hon. friend says, probably enough, that he found out afterwards that it was not the final estimate, but this is the way that it appeared to the House.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This was the estimate of the engineer at that time as to what it would cost to clean up the construction of the Sault Canal.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend's question is plain and the hon. Minister's answer is as plain as it can be. I cannot go out into the concessions and side lines of the hon. gentleman's internal economy to find out what reservations he made. That being the statement in 1897 we were surprised when last year, in 1898, there came down this vote:

Sault Ste. Marie Canal—

To pay Messrs. Hugh Ryan & Co., contractors, for the construction of Sault Ste. Marie Canal, the difference between the amount of $4.50 per cubic yard, paid on account of the construction of a masonry revetment wall built of sandstone and the contract price, $7.50 per cubic yard, for the said wall of limestone..... $27,525

Everybody who was in the House when these investigations were going on at the Public Accounts Committee knows how vehemently the late Minister of Railways and Canals was attacked for paying out this $4.50, so that we were surprised last year when the hon. Minister proposed to pay $27,000 to make up the $7.50 per cubic foot against the report of the officials of his own department and the Minister of the department who preceded him. The moment the proposal was brought down we began to wonder what grace was shown to the contractor who induced the hon. Minister to put this amount in. When it was brought before the committee the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), being cognizant of the circumstances and of the discussion that took place in the Public Accounts Committee, said:

How is it this additional sum has been paid in connection with this matter? I understand that Mr. Ryan first contracted to supply sandstone at $7.50 per cubic yard. Afterwards the contract was changed, and he was allowed to use the stone taken from the bed of the canal, and the previous Government allowed him $4.50 per cubic yard for that stone.

In the discussion which took place the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) gained added light, and he goes on to say:

The proposition to pay this increased price is a surprise to me. It appears that Mr. Ryan entered into a contract for this canal on specifications calling for a certain kind of stone, which stone was found at a considerable distance from the canal. Now, after proceeding with the work, they found that they were able to take stone out of the bottom of the canal itself quite as good, if not better, than the stone which it was specified should be taken from the quarry at a distance. He used this stone on the permission which he applied for, and with the sanction of the engineer in charge, quarrying it out of the bottom of the canal and using it in construction. To pay him the same price as he would have been paid for stone quarried at some considerable distance and carried to the works, I think, would be unfair. I do not think that any man would do that in his own business. If I contracted with a man to build me a house, using stone of a quality to be found some considerable distance from the work, and if, after beginning the work, he found that stone of as good a quality could be got on the site of the house itself, I do not think I would pay him the same price as if he had brought the stone from a distance.

He goes on to detail the circumstances, and says :

I do not see why we should be asked to pay this additional price. The explanation given by the Minister, I must confess, is not satisfactory to me. I think we should have some other explanations.

The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals declares that there is no other explanation. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) says after the Minister has said that he withdraws the item :

I think that is the best course to pursue. There is no question that Mr. Ryan applied for the privilege of using the sandstone that he was taking out of the bottom of the canal, in place of limestone. Now, having got that liberty, there might be some doubt as to what he should be entitled to receive. But he applied to the department and liberty was given, and, as a result, the responsibility, of course, rested upon the late Government.

The item was withdrawn. I am led to believe that Mr. Ryan would have been quite well satisfied to have taken this in lieu of all his claims.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Which? The $27,000?

Mr. FOSTER. This was looked upon as a sort of equitable arrangement by the hon. Minister, as taken from the remarks that he made.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That he would be willing to accept $27,000?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not at all.

Mr. FOSTER. After these two votes in 1897 and 1898, and without one scrap of additional information the hon. Minister comes down, three or four days before the end of the session, and asks us to put through a vote of $211,505 to satisfy the claim of the late contractors. That is rather a stupendous conclusion after what transpired in the Public Accounts Committee, then, in 1897, under the Minister's vote, and then in 1898, under the Minister's vote. He asks that the House should just vote this through without further explanation or some further ground than that. When was Mr. Shanly's report received?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. On the 15th of April he enclosed it to the department. The agreement for a reference was made in September, 1898.

Mr. FOSTER. One strong point would be in reference to the nature of the contracts themselves, but the hon. Minister would not expect us to vote this amount without having been given an opportunity to satisfy ourselves that there is some ground for it, an opportunity to satisfy ourselves that the Government took a proper course in referring the matter to Mr. Shanly. I asked the hon. Minister a question as to whether he thought himself debarred by that contract, that the chief engineer refers to, from putting the matter before the Exchequer Court, and the hon. Minister was of the opinion that he was. We can only judge as to whether he was correct in that or not according to our judgment after seeing the contracts. I think the hon. Minister had better perhaps bring down the chief engineer's report, the Order in Council, the contracts and all the items. What we ought to have first is the evidence. It is a pretty voluminous thing to undertake at this time of the session, but this stood over last year, and if it is necessary that there should be full information before $200,000 of the people's money is paid out, it can stand over for another year. There is no pressing necessity for it. It has stood over for a good length of time and it can stand over for another year if it is necessary we should look into this evidence. When we get this other information we may come to the conclusion that we do not need the evidence.

Mr. FOSTER.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not the slightest objection to affording the hon. gentleman and his colleagues, on that side of the House, every fraction of information which is available.

Mr. FOSTER. Another thing is the naive simplicity that is shown by my hon. friend, the childlike faith—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman is too complimentary by half.

Mr. FOSTER.—the childlike faith in human nature when he will come down, three or four days before the end of the session, with a proposition of this kind. I see the sardonic grin on the countenance of my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright).

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I am accustomed to all that simplicity from the maritime provinces on both sides of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. It is a display of childlike faith on the part of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) that he should bring down an item under these circumstances about three days before the House is to finish its business and not give previously to that time what any one might consider to be vital information to the House to make up its mind.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I confess, Mr. Chairman, I counted upon the knowledge of my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals as sufficient for anything that might be wanting in respect to this information.

Mr. FOSTER. We have great confidence in the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I must protest against my hon. friend professing to have discovered in the countenance of the Minister of Trade and Commerce anything indicating a question as to the thoroughness with which this case has been presented. I say to the hon. gentleman that I have felt that if ever there was a transaction involving a claim against the Government which had been gone into carefully, and in a thorough manner through all the various stages this claim is one, and I do not hesitate to say at once to the hon. member that I would furnish him with a copy of the contract. I can furnish him with the Orders in Council at once, and if he would take the time to read them I will let the item stand in the meantime. Of course I cannot say as to what my own conclusions would have been if I had heard the evidence. I would be very sorry to suggest a doubt as to the wisdom and justice of Mr. Shanly. I have not followed the evidence. I felt that we were obliged to refer this matter to an arbitrator and after the arbitrator had decided I felt that the controversy was at an end, and, therefore, I have not studied the evidence. I never asked to see it—that is the fact. We do not want to pay a year's interest at 6 per cent unless absolutely necessary to do so.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. Minister stated that the chief engineer always refused to act as arbitrator.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He declined to act from the moment he came into the department until the present time.

Mr. HAGGART. If I remember correctly this Act referring these matters to the Exchequer Court was passed before he was Deputy Minister. Mr. Page was chief engineer, and, therefore, it could only apply to contracts which preceded 1898.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is what the contract says:

It is hereby agreed that all matters of difference arising between the parties hereto upon any matter connected with or arising out of this contract, the decision of which is not hereby especially given to the engineer, shall be referred to the award and arbitration of the chief engineer for the time being having control over the works, and the award of such engineer shall be final and conclusive; and it is hereby declared that such award shall be a condition precedent to the rights of the contractors to receive or be paid any sum or sums on account or by reason of such matters in difference.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. Minister mistakes altogether my objection. I knew perfectly well that in 1888 the chief engineer was the sole arbitrator. What I stated was that immediately after 1888, the Exchequer Court Act was passed and the jurisdiction removed from the chief engineer, and I could not understand when the Minister stated that the chief engineer had refused in every case.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Well, he refused in the cases which have come up.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

> Transportation facilities—

Port Colborne, harbour improvements $150,000

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. While I regret, as I am sure we all do, the absence of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) in connection with the presentation of his Estimates, I particularly regret it in relation to this item to which I now invite the attention of the committee. The hon. Minister, I know, has devoted a great deal of attention to the transportation question, and has looked forward with very much interest to the opportunity of developing before the House the plans he has prepared and has had in his mind regarding the improvement of our facilities for transportation from the great west to the ocean. I had hoped, when I agreed with the hon. Minister to endeavour to take charge of his Estimates in the House, that before the time arrived for presenting these items, I would have an opportunity of making a personal visit to the localities in which some of the more important of these works were to be constructed, so that I would be able to bring some personal knowledge to the discussion of them. I have to admit, however, that in consequence of the great pressure of work in the House, I have not been able to carry out that intention; and so I have to rely on the information that has been placed in my hands. With regard to the works at Port Colborne, the engineers of the department have made surveys and presented reports which contemplate a very large expenditure. In asking for this vote, however, we do not intend to commit ourselves to the carrying out of these larger expenditures. It may be that after a little time the business will so develop as to justify the Government in asking for much larger appropriations. Our purpose, however, is to ask for an appropriation of $150,000 for the construction of a breakwater in the harbour of Port Colborne. Hon. members may recollect that in the Estimates for the Department of Railways and Canals we have taken an appropriation for $350,000 for the purpose of deepening the entrance to the Welland Canal at that point. It is assumed that that work will go on, and that at the same time steps will be taken by the Public Works Department towards the construction of a breakwater for the purpose of protecting the entrance to the canal. I am advised that the construction of the breakwater, if carried on under ordinary conditions, the contractor having to obtain his material in the usual way, would involve an expense of $360,000 for the full length of the breakwater; but if the work of deepening the harbour at the entrance to the canal is in progress at the same time, then the rock taken out, if available for the breakwater, will enable the contractor to construct it at a much lower rate. The difference in that respect would amount to about $88,000. It is very desirable, therefore, that these two works should be carried on simultaneously. We are not proposing to take an appropriation for the whole cost of the breakwater; but we anticipate that with this sum of $150,000, assuming that we shall be able to get the material in the way described, we shall be able to construct from 1,000 to 1,700 feet of the breakwater.

I am informed by my hon. friend the Minister of Railways that he may require the rock from the excavation to be used at the entrance for work in connection with the canal. The proposal is to build the outer end of the breakwater, as much as is possible for the $150,000, and if the business at Port Colborne develops to a very large extent, as is expected, no doubt demands will be made on the Government for larger expenditure, in order that the harbour may be deepened, but for the present that is all we propose to spend. For the present, with the deepening of the entrance of the canal, as proposed, and with the construction of this portion of the breakwater, as proposed by the Minister of Public Works, we shall take a great step in advance. The intention is to have a sufficient depth of water to enable large vessels from the lakes to come down to Port Colborne and discharge into smaller vessels to go through the Welland Canal.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the carrying capacity of vessels going through the canal?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Seventy-five thousand to eighty thousand bushels is about as large as you can take through the canal with a 13-foot draught of water, which is all that the depth of 14 feet would allow to go through the canal.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the depth of the proposed improvement?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Twenty or twenty-one feet.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The amount in the Estimates is a very small one, only $150,000. By the courtesy of the acting Minister of Public Works (Mr. Fielding), I have been permitted to see the report of the engineers upon this whole scheme. I do not fancy that there is any gentleman in the House who will object to a proper increase of our transportation facilities, so long as it is held within bounds, but I think the House will be somewhat astonished to find that the officers of the department report that to carry out this work, and complete it according to the ideas of the hon. Minister of Public Works—and I suppose those ideas are the policy of the Government—will cost no less a sum than $5,300,000 or $5,400,000. That is the report which the hon. gentleman has under his hand. It was astounding to me, and I fancy the figures are astounding to almost every gentleman in the House. What is proposed to be done? I think the hon. gentleman will agree, in the first place, that one of the largest items is the proposed harbour of refuge there, and a number of acres of rock will have to be blasted, west of Port Colborne, at the entrance to the canal, at a cost of something like $3,000,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We are not proposing that.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is the scheme, as I understand it. The question is, whether the whole scheme is not to be carried out, if you vote this expenditure. My hon. friend from Welland will know more about it than I do, but all I know is, that the officers of the department report that over $5,000,000 will be required to complete the scheme, and I think the House should hesitate before adopting a scheme that will cost that amount, without first obtaining the best possible expert evidence.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We are not proceeding on the basis of any such estimate as that. You can get engineers' reports for carrying on very large operations, but I wish my hon. friend would not assume that, in asking the House to consent to the expenditure of $150,000, we are basing it on any such project. He is quite correct in saying that among the various schemes there is one involving several million dollars.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is the only scheme.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The only scheme which we submit is the scheme of constructing a breakwater at a cost for the present of $150,000. That will complete this work, as we now undertake to do it, and then, if nothing further be done, it will be still useful for the protection of the entrance to the canal. If it be deemed desirable later on to deepen the harbour, that will involve a much larger expenditure, and if deemed desirable to lengthen the breakwater that will involve still more expenditure. The completion of the breakwater would cost $360,000, if the material had to be supplied, and $280,000, if the material were available out of the excavation in the harbour. But if nothing more be done, we will still have a useful work, costing $150,000, for the protection of the entrance to the canal, and whatever may be done in the future will be entirely a matter for the judgment of the House. But the passing of this vote does not necessarily commit us to any larger scheme.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the length of the breakwater proposed?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The whole breakwater would be between 5,000 and 6,000 feet in length, and the cost is estimated at $360,000, if the material is to be supplied by the contractors, or $280,000, if the material is supplied from the dredging of the harbour. We do not propose to build the whole breakwater, but the outer end, as we are advised that will afford useful protection to the entrance of the canal, even if no additional work should be afterwards constructed. It is to be cribwork.

Mr. WALLACE. Will the hon. Minister submit a plan?

Mr. OSLER. I noticed the other day in the Senate "Debates" that Senator McCallum discussed this matter in the Senate on the 12th July, and I fancy there is no man in the Senate, or in this House, who has such a knowledge of the conditions prevailing there. Senator McCallum says that you cannot get a 22-foot harbour at Port Colborne on an expenditure of $2,000,000. There is nothing but rock at Port Colborne harbour at the entrance, and there is no anchorage.

If that is the case, surely it is not wise to begin and expend $150,000, which will entail possibly ten times that expenditure later on. I do not think it is a proper thing to submit an estimate for any public work, unless the whole probable cost is given, and then state that what is asked is only a beginning. It is not right to ask for $150,000, when that may be committing the House possibly to an expenditure of eight or ten times the amount. In this case I should judge, from Senator McCallum's remarks in the Senate, that he, at all events, believes that the proposed expenditure will be utterly thrown away. I do not know the conditions myself, but I have a great deal of faith in Senator McCallum's business judgment and knowledge on such a subject, and I think the Government should be fairly posted as to the probable cost of the work before it will be of use, and as to whether it will be of any use at all. They should be thoroughly informed as to whether the harbour is one that can be made use of with 20 feet of water. I do not think the Government have sufficiently considered that question. I do not think the Government have sufficient information to know whether this money is going to be thrown away, or whether it will require an expenditure of millions more to make it of use.

Mr. MONTAGUE. There can be no question that while this is an innocent-looking vote of $150,000, if the hon. Minister of Finance will do the committee the favour to read to us the report, he will find that this is only a very small part of an expenditure of over $5,500,000, as recommended by the engineer. I may tell the committee, although imperfectly, as I have not now the report in my hands, what the hon. gentleman proposes to do. In the first place, if the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) understands Port Colborne, he will understand that there is not a natural harbour there at all. The Government intend to construct a breakwater by a mile or so, and to build another long breakwater at the east also, I think. As I understand it, they propose to dredge a certain portion of Government land situated east of the canal and make a large basin; and then, from Sugar Loaf Point, a short distance west of Port Colborne, they propose to extend a large breakwater out into the lake, making a harbour of refuge, and then they propose blasting out that section of the lake between that breakwater and the pier at Port Colborne. It will take $2,500,000 to make the harbour of refuge contiguous to Port Colborne. Then, there are elevators, docks and all the rest. The hon. gentleman says that the Railway Department is doing a certain portion of the work. That is correct, but it is in addition, as I understand it, to this vote.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What the Department of Railways propose to do is in connection with the canal only, of course?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. At the entrance to it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Outside of which there is a rocky bottom and no anchorage, as the Senator from Monck has said. In fact, the report of the engineer states the reason for this vote almost in the opening sentence, when it says that it is the purpose to construct a harbour at Port Colborne. No matter how the Minister may gloss it over, this House will have undertaken a work which, eventually, is going to cost, the engineer tell us, $5,500,000. And what I contend is that, before we enter on any such enormous scheme, we should have a well-matured plan before us and that the whole transportation problem ought to be thoroughly considered and decided upon.

Mr. BENNETT. What particular purpose is to be served by the construction of the proposed breakwater?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is for the better protection of the entrance to the canal.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) able to assure us that with the construction of that breakwater vessels will be able to enter in a storm and lie there?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It certainly will be much better than if there was no protection. No doubt, the completion of the whole breakwater from the shore would be a better thing, but I am advised that the construction of the portion mentioned will be substantial protection to the entrance to the canal.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it contemplated, as part of the scheme, to build elevators there?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The report of the engineer, which I brought down, does include elevators; but we are not proceeding on those lines. We intend to construct this breakwater, which, we are advised, is a useful thing, if not another cent is spent upon the harbour. Elevators are part of the scheme outlined, but that is a question for the future.

Mr. BENNETT. Is the construction of the breakwater an indispensable work?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is considered that it will be a very great improvement, but not so good as if we could make the whole breakwater.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The report covered the cost of wider basins, new breakwaters, elevators, docks, bulkheads and a harbour of refuge, the whole thing to amount to $5,500,000. I certainly took it that that was the scheme that the department had decided upon. And I think the people of Port Colborne understand that this is the intention of the Government. I think I can go so far as to say that the Minister of Public Works has promised to construct elevators. I do not know whether he has promised the other works or not, but I know that the scheme is laid out by the engineers.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Montague) has had in his hands a report of what was really the cost of equipping the port of Port Colborne as Buffalo is equipped. It would be, no doubt, a very desirable thing to have such a port, but it is not what we have in view. Of course, everybody would be glad if we could have such a report as that. The report provides for all these things. It provides amongst other things for these breakwaters and elevators. But the estimates speak for themselves. If these other improvements are to be taken up, that will be the time to discuss them. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Montague) need not have any apprehension—there is the sum and substance of what we propose to the House.

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose what my hon. friend hears is correct, and this is merely an academic report—

The PRIME MINISTER. No, it is not academic; it is very practicable, if we had the money.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, suppose it is a report that, so far as it concerns to-day, is academic and all the Government propose to do is to erect a breakwater, but with no intention of proceeding further at present—where is the report, and what is the basis upon which we, who are not experts, are asked to vote $150,000, which is a large sum of money?

The PRIME MINISTER. Certainly.

Mr. FOSTER. What is that basis?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). Perhaps my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) will allow me to reply to one of his questions—what is the object of the breakwater?

Mr. FOSTER. And the necessity?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. What is the object and necessity of the breakwater? There is on the upper lakes a large fleet of vessels of various sizes. Many are not adapted for the canal service, and are plying, some of them between American ports and some between Canadian ports—

Mr. FOSTER. How, not adapted to canal service?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They are too large. There are very few vessels of the inland merchant marine that are able to make use of our canal system, and it seems necessary to provide for the transfer of grain at the mouth of the canal if we are to receive any considerable quantity of the grain of the west.

Mr. FOSTER. The transference.

Mr. HAGGART. The transfer from larger vessels to vessels of the capacity of the canal.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How are you going to do it without increased elevators?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The elevators will come by private enterprise. The deepening of the mouth of the canal will have to be done by the Railway Department. There is an item in the railway estimates to enable the Railway Department to deepen the water at the entrance of the canal to the depth of 21 or 22 feet this year.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The railway item is $350,000.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The scheme involved in these Estimates contemplates the erection of a breakwater, which is a complete structure in itself and wholly independent of a large number of features embraced in the general report of the engineers, that report presenting what they conceive to be a proper and ideal equipment there, if the country was committed to it, and if it were a wise scheme to adopt. But supposing no other features of that report were adopted except the breakwater, accompanied by deepening the entrance to the canal, there will be at this entrance some landing piers where large vessels drawing deeper water than the canals contain, will come in and run alongside these landing piers and transfer their grain to the canal vessels. It is necessary to have a breakwater to enable that transfer to take place. The breakwater will no doubt act advantageously in diverting the immense amount of traffic that now finds its way, even from Canadian ports, to Buffalo. There is no reason why we should not attract a very large amount of grain from Duluth as well. American vessels will be entitled to load at Duluth and unload at Port Colborne, and if the rate of freight by our route is cheapened, we have every reason to expect a large share of the wheat trade that now finds its way down the Erie Canal to New York. The construction of this breakwater then will give a direction to that traffic and its development. If the results justify any enlargement of the scheme it will be for the House, on a future occasion, to consider the evidence, and to determine whether they are in favour of a larger scheme. But you may put it down as an absolute axiom now, that you cannot utilize the fleet that is now upon these upper waters and that is not able to pass through the Canadian canals, you cannot get any advantage of that existing fleet unless you have facilities by which these vessels can safely go to Port Colborne and remain there while they transfer their cargoes.

Mr. SPROULE. How is it proposed to transfer the cargo from one vessel to another?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is no doubt that once facilities are provided by a breakwater so that trade can go there, private enterprise will do the rest so far as elevators are concerned.

Mr. SPROULE. I mean the transferring of a cargo from one vessel to another, because I apprehend it will be very expensive.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is done by an elevator system, either floating or fixed.

Mr. McNEILL. What is the length of the breakwater to be?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The breakwater from the outer eastern point to Sugar Loaf Point will be 5,700 feet, that is the total length, and it will inclose some 500 acres. It will then run westerly for between 1,000 and 2,000 feet. At the easterly end the depth of water is 21 feet. In the middle, a short distance north—I cannot say how far, the maps will show it—you come to 17 feet at low water mark.

Mr. McNEILL. A short distance from each end? Does this breakwater go from the land outwards?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The easterly limit will be at a point 5,700 feet from the shore.

Mr. McNEILL. I am speaking of the work which this $150,000 is to build.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It will commence at a point 5,700 feet east of Sugar Loaf Point, and will then run westerly for a distance of between 1,000 and 2,000 feet.

Mr. McNEILL. This breakwater you are going to construct ends at this point you are speaking of?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, it commences at the east, 5,700 feet east of the shore. The shore runs in a south-westerly direction. This will be opposite the mouth of the canal, sufficiently removed from it to enable vessels to come in and be sheltered, and to prevent some seas washing upon the end of the canal.

Mr. McNEILL. In that case you are going to build between 1,000 and 2,000 feet out into the water. That is evidently the beginning of a larger scheme. You are going to leave that little piece of breakwater there without finishing the whole construction that will be necessary. What would be the total cost of the construction of this breakwater from the point of which my hon. friend speaks, the easterly point to the extreme limit that it is contemplated to build the breakwater?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The breakwater is composed of cribbing, the cribbing is filled with stone, then it is ripped on the sea side, and a large portion of the cost of that filling depends upon the cost of getting the filling itself. If the filling is obtained in the harbour from the dredging that will take place and the deepening the mouth of the canal, the cost will be somewhat less. But if the contractor is obliged to find his filling where best he can, the total cost of this breakwater for a distance of over a mile from the easterly point to the shore, inclosing nearly 500 acres of sea room, would be $360,000. But if the filling can be obtained as part of the process of deepening the harbour there will be a considerable reduction, if the contractor, for example, could utilize the material taken out from the bottom and apply it towards filling the cribs. In that case there would be a deduction of about $80,000, bringing down the cost to about $270,000. That is what I understand the reports of the engineer to show.

Mr. McNEILL. That is the lowest this breakwater itself will cost?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is not a question of the lowest. It is a fair estimate by the engineers.

Mr. McNEILL. That must be the lowest estimate the hon. gentleman has just given.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is the highest and the lowest.

Mr. McNEILL. I am speaking of the lower of the two.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Two hundred and seventy-two thousand dollars would be the higher estimate, if the filling of the breakwater were obtained in a certain way, but if the filling is to be conveyed to the breakwater from any source that the contractor can get it, then the cost would be $360,000 for a distance of 5,700 feet, connecting Sugar Loaf Point with the point I referred to.

Mr. McNEILL. Then, the deepening which is provided for in the railway vote is to cost $350,000, and this breakwater is to cost, if the contractor is not fortunate enough to find, when he digs out, that the material is suitable for the filling of the breakwater, another $350,000.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Not at all; it may never be considered necessary. Experience will show whether it is necessary to lengthen the breakwater or not.

Mr. McNEILL. The hon. gentleman does not mean to tell us that he will leave about one thousand feet of the breakwater standing out in the middle of the water without continuing it?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There are many such instances, and it suits the purpose admirably.

Mr. WALLACE. Where?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is one at Port Arthur.

Mr. McNEILL. But these are not breakwaters of that kind; they are simply to break the sea and to give shelter to vessels lying further up.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am not an expert, but those who are experts say that this will answer the purpose.

Mr. McNEILL. I do not profess to be an expert, but I have been brought up at the water's edge, and I think I ought to know something of what the purpose of a breakwater should be. This is a most unusual condition of things. I never heard of a vessel going out to lie alongside a breakwater of that kind to transfer cargo. If they had a little boat, and they discharged their cargo in the shelter of the breakwater, as soon as they left the shelter of the breakwater, they would be exposed to the heavy sea. I do not think that the hon. Postmaster General can be serious in suggesting that it would be contemplated to construct the work in that way, by leaving a little piece of breakwater out in the water without finishing it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think this is to answer the purposes of a breakwater, and not of a landing. It is not intended that vessels are to lie at this breakwater.

Mr. McNEILL. That is what we understand from the hon. Postmaster General.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, vessels are expected to lie at the entrance of the canal, and the breakwater will be a protection to the vessels entering the harbour. But they are not expected to lie at the breakwater.

Mr. McNEILL. How are they to get there? What is the depth of the water further up?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Thirteen or fourteen feet of water, but with the appropriation that is taken by the Department of Railways and Canals, which is $350,000, it is contemplated that there should be a depth of water sufficient for vessels drawing 20 feet of water to go into the entrance and lie there. It is not contemplated that they shall lie at the breakwater.

Mr. McNEILL. To discharge to a small vessel, under the shelter of the breakwater, while lying at the breakwater.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No; it is proposed that they shall within the entrance of the canal.

Mr. McNEILL. It is not a complete work, and it is one that is unlikely to be left in that condition?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Perhaps not.

Mr. McNEILL. At all events, the expenditure is $150,000 and $350,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. McNEILL. That is half a million for this incomplete work.

Mr. McCLEARY. Some time ago we had this question of improving Port Colborne harbour discussed in the House. From listening to some of my hon. friends on this side of the House, you would think that there was no harbour at Port Colborne at all. The fact is, that vessels are going down the Welland Canal carrying 75,000, 80,000 and 85,000 bushels of grain. As I understand it, all that is necessary is to provide a depth of water in Port Colborne harbour, so that large lake carriers, drawing from 20 to 22 feet of water, can come into that harbour. There must also be a breakwater to protect them. A breakwater is absolutely necessary to be constructed to some length outside of the harbour itself, so that a barge and her tow, or a large freighter itself, can make the harbour in safety. Any one who is acquainted with the northern shore of Lake Erie, knows that it is very rocky about there, and time and time again boats have run on the rocks, when striving to make Port Colborne, because there was no breakwater to protect them. Owing to the absence of a breakwater, a very great deal of trade that should have come to the Welland Canal, has gone to Buffalo.

Mr. SPROULE. You want a harbour of refuge there.

Mr. McCLEARY. No. I think the Government are taking a very wise and prudent course in regard to this matter. This whole question resolves itself into this, so far as the transportation question is concerned, whether an all-water route is best for this country, or a part-water or part-rail route. If we have the Port Colborne harbour equipped as the Government propose to equip it, to give us 20 feet of water in the harbour, and to build a breakwater to protect large lake carriers, we will have an all-water route from Duluth, or Port Arthur, straight to Montreal, when the lower canals are finished. The hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) has referred to the statement made by the Hon. Senator McCallum in the Senate regarding the cost of these improvements. The hon. Senator's scheme is, that a canal should be built from Port Maitland. Of course, he is interested—I do not say, personally—but it is right in the constituency of Monck. In order to carry out that plan, as has been shown here in the House, it would involve the building of a new canal 20 miles long, and cost a great deal more than the Government propose to expend at Port Colborne. As to the matter of elevators, I do not know what the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) has promised. My own opinion is, that the Government should build these elevators, and own them, and not allow them to be placed under the control of any company or private individual, who might be able to hinder trade for considerations of private gain. Of course, it would cost money. I have nothing to say in that regard particularly, but my own opinion is, and the opinion of the people that I represent is, that the Government should build, own and control the elevators there. I do not think there should be any objection taken to this vote, because, as a matter of fact, all Governments in our country have committed themselves to this expenditure on the Welland Canal during many years past. Over $25,000,000 have already been expended on the Welland Canal, and we have spent upwards of $80,000,000 on the canal system. Now, when we need probably a million dollars, or a little more, in order to complete this work, I think that no objection should be taken to it.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman, I should just like to add a few words to what has been said by the hon. member for Welland (Mr. McCleary). I quite agree with what he said in regard to improving the harbour facilities at Port Colborne. We who live in the Niagara Peninsula know the necessity of improving the Welland Canal, and at no time in the history of Canada is the Welland Canal of more importance to the prosperity of the country than at the present moment, in view of the fact that the other canals are approaching completion. Now, I am not in the confidence of the Government as to whether they intend to erect elevators or not, but there is one thing I think I can point out to you, Mr. Chairman, that apart from any consideration whatever the first duty of the Government is, in my opinion, to improve the entrance to Port Colborne harbour for larger or smaller craft. At Sugar Loaf Point, a distance of one mile from the present piers of Port Colborne, there is a very shallow reef of limestone. This ought to be removed if nothing else is done, because, as the hon. member for Welland has pointed out, a large number of vessels in stormy weather have to run to Buffalo and discharge their cargoes that were intended for the Welland Canal, and I venture to say if the reef itself was removed there would be stone enough got out of that with the deepening of the harbour to fill a breakwater of sufficient size to run the length proposed by the Government. Whether the policy of the Government in building elevators is one which they intend to take up or not, I would just like to call the attention of the House for one moment to show you how this feature of business is looked upon in the city of Buffalo, where they have so many elevators. The return of the Board of Trade in the city of Buffalo, 1898, states:

The amount of grain, including flour, shipped from the upper end of Lake Superior to the seaboard in 1898 was, as stated by the returns of the Board of Trade of the city of Buffalo, 123,419,573 bushels. Of this large amount only 1,500,000 bushels passed through the Welland Canal.

In 1896 the value of American craft passing through the Sault Ste. Marie Canal was $43,006,200; Canadian craft, $2,135,300. The proportion of freight carried by our Canadian vessels was 4 per cent.

In 1897, 17,600,000 bushels of grain were shipped by the Canadian Pacific Railway from Fort William, of which 12,928,000 went by the way of Buffalo, and only 2,000,000 via Montreal to the seaboard.

Mr. Thompson, of Duluth, states that a vessel can carry 2,700 tons of freight through the Ste. Marie Canals and make the run from Duluth in 3½ days, and cost, on an average of $120 per day—Duluth to Buffalo is 1,000 miles—and turning this into figures, it means that 15 one-thousandths of a cent per ton per mile for carrying freight on the Great Lakes is the actual cost; that is to say, the steamers do for $10 what it costs the railways $27 to do.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if this statement of Mr. Thompson, which I have no reason to doubt, is correct, I think this House will see the importance of making the harbour of Port Colborne of such a character as to receive not only the smaller craft, but the larger craft on our inland waters, and without going to the expense of building elevators of a permanent character, you could have those floating elevators like what are used in Buffalo almost every day. In Buffalo they have forty ordinary elevators and six transfer towers and eight floating towers, and the latter have no storage capacity at all so that if the larger vessels coming down from the upper lakes had sufficient accommodation at Port Colborne, these elevators could transfer to our fourteen-foot vessels for our lower lakes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the hon. gentleman permit me? Could those floating elevators be used?

Mr. GIBSON. Yes, they use them in Buffalo harbour, even if the Government do not go to the expense of building elevators of a permanent character they could, at least, hire those floating elevators to do the work at so much a bushel, but I quite agree with my hon. friend from Welland in what he said. I would like to point out to the Government the danger of elevators becoming the property of private individuals. It would be quite within the mark for any company in Buffalo to erect an immense elevator in the harbour of Port Colborne, getting a site from the Government and getting one also in Montreal, or even if not in the city of Montreal so long as they have the accommodation in the harbour of Port Colborne they could practically tie up all the work the Government had done by charging such excessive tolls for the elevating the grain; and those vessels would be obliged to go to Buffalo and transfer by way of the Erie Canal. So I say in the interest of the country it would be well for the Government not to give any right to elevate the grain. My own candid opinion is that after the harbour of Port Colborne is completed, if there is a necessity for elevators, transfer the grain out of larger vessels into the smaller ones—they should be the property of the Government—and if elevators for storage purposes are required, they should be built by the Government, and the smallest charge should be made. Now, we find in Buffalo alone with the forty elevators, which my hon. friend from Haldimand (Mr. Montague) spoke about, the six transfer towers and the eight floating towers. The latter have no storage capacity, however. The capacity of the whole is 21,000,000 bushels of grain and cost about $13,000,000, and they can transfer in 24 hours 5½ millions of grain. The Canadian Pacific Railway have four elevators at Fort William with a capacity of 5½ millions, and can transfer 40,000 bushels per hour. Now, Sir, what would be the advantage to the Dominion of Canada by having an all-Canadian route to the seaboard? The distance from Port Arthur to Port Colborne is 825 miles; from Port Arthur to Buffalo, 870 miles, or a distance of 18 miles in favour of the harbour on the Welland Canal. From Port Colborne to Montreal 375 miles, and the distance from Buffalo to New York by the Erie Canal is 495 miles, or a distance in favour of the Welland Canal route of 120 miles. From Montreal to Liverpool the distance is 2,800 miles, and from New York to Liverpool, 3,080, or the distance in favour of the Welland Canal route of 280 miles. In short, from Port Arthur to Liverpool by the Welland Canal route is 4,027 miles, and from Port Arthur to Liverpool via New York would be 4,446 miles, or a distance in favour of the Canadian route of 418 miles. When you take it from Port Arthur or take the grain from Duluth or Chicago by Port Colborne in the Welland Canal, you have in each and every case the advantage of 419 miles and the advantage of the whole grain trade of the west being shipped through our own canals, by our own people and in Canadian vessels. For these reasons, Mr. Chairman, I think the Government are justified and I do not live in that county. I quite agree with every word that my hon. friend who represents the county of Welland says, apart from every political consideration. I think it would be wise for the Government to complete this canal system by increasing the harbour accommodation at the town of Port Colborne, and by erecting a breakwater there of sufficient length to reach out to Sugar Loaf Ridge. The Government should see that contracts are let without delay, so that in the future vessels instead of running past the harbour of Port Colborne in stormy weather they should make the harbour instead of running for Buffalo.

Mr. BENNETT. When the question was first introduced it was the opinion of the House that the Government was simply asking for the construction of a breakwater at the entrance of Port Colborne to meet the present trade, but as the discussion proceeded and the different facts were presented, it is now clear that the Government are about to embark upon a very large expenditure, and the first earnest of that is that in the current year there is to be expended at least half a million dollars. The Government should take the House and the country into their confidence as to what they propose to do in regard to this great question of transportation. The hon. members from Toronto and from other parts of western Ontario have been formulating a scheme for carrying grain from the waters of the Georgian Bay to Toronto by rail, and then shipping by water from Toronto to Montreal. It has been stated in the press that the intention of the present Government is to purchase what is known as the Ottawa and Parry Sound Railway, in order to carry grain from the western states by water to Parry Sound, and then by rail from Parry Sound to Montreal, and there ship it in vessels to the old country. To-night, however, both of these propositions may be said to be set at naught by the Government, which proposes to endeavour to build up a trade by means of the largest possible grain vessels on the great lakes going to Port Colborne, and there to tranship into smaller vessels to pass through the Welland Canal and on to Montreal. Let us consider that proposition. I admit that if you had to-day at Port Colborne a depth of water of from 20 to 22 feet, you would be able to accommodate these large vessels capable of carrying from 150,000 to 200,000 bushels of grain, and these vessels would be able to discharge their cargoes at Port Colborne into smaller vessels capable of carrying 70,000 or 75,000 bushels to the port of Montreal. This is the proposition which the Government have announced to-day, as I understand it, because it cannot be possible that they intend to spend this $500,000 at Port Colborne when the present trade is accommodated by the facilities there now. The proposition is to endeavour to fight every other possible grain route on the upper lakes by this proposed route to Port Colborne. It means that all the carrying trade going to-day to Kingston and Prescott, where elevators have been established by private capital, is to be killed off at once and for ever; because if large vessels go to Port Colborne and discharge their cargoes there, there will be no breaking of bulk at Kingston or at Prescott. Then it means that though Mr. Booth has built a railway at great cost, with the hope of establishing a large grain trade from Parry Sound to Montreal, the public funds of Canada are to be expended to kill off his enterprise. It means further that although the Government have extended the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal, they are going to give up for all time to come the prospect of having a paying grain trade on the Intercolonial east from Montreal, because if the grain trade is all to go by way of Port Colborne to Montreal, it will be shipped at the latter port into vessels for the old country, and the Intercolonial system of railway would only have the carrying of any grain that might remain in elevators at the close of the season, when navigation from Montreal to the sea is at an end. It also means that while the Grand Trunk have a line of railway through from Montreal to the town of Midland, where they have established two large elevators, that route, too, is to be fought by the Dominion; and while I do not wish to view this question from a sectional point of view, I say it behooves the Government to consider well whether or not it is going to pay the country as a whole to enbark in this large expenditure in order to fight private capital which is already invested. The hon. member for Welland (Mr. McCleary) and the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson), both lay down this proposition—that if we have deep water in Port Colborne harbour, with the necessary break-water which must be constructed there, we may hope to be able successfully to fight the trade going to Buffalo. On that point I join issue with the hon. gentlemen. The real advantages which Buffalo has are not in carrying the grain trade from Buffalo to New York by water, but in the fact that there are seven lines of railway running from Buffalo direct to New York, which, with the keen competition among them, succeed, in conjunction with the upper-lake craft, in giving a cheaper rate than the present rate to Montreal. Therefore, I contend, in view of past events, that you cannot successfully fight the Buffalo trade by the proposition now before the House. Moreover, this must be remembered, that we have to-day a water route from Lake Superior through to Montreal, with vessels capable of carrying 75,000 bushels from Duluth, Fort William and other points through to Kingston and Prescott, where they in turn discharge into barges capable of carrying from 25,000 to 40,000 bushels; and, with the enlargement of the St. Lawrence canals to 14 feet of water, there will be a possibility of carrying grain from Fort William and other ports on the great lakes in vessels capable of carrying from 60,000 to 70,000 bushels through to Montreal. What does this huge expenditure mean? It means that while we are unable to kill off the Buffalo trade or to get even a small proportion of the Buffalo trade, we think that by being able to bring vessels carrying 200,000 bushels to Port Colborne we are going to overcome the difficulty. I am not going to give my opinion on that point, because it requires the ideas and opinions of men who have made a special study of the question. But it is admitted to-day that the small quantity of grain that goes to the port of Montreal via the Welland and St. Lawrence canals is due to the fact that the port of Montreal is not open as long as the port of New York, and that we have not the return freight from Europe to Montreal that they have to New York; and when this House is asked to commit itself at the outset to an expenditure of $500,000, is to be followed up by the erection of elevators and the provision of storage facilities for the transportation of grain, the House is virtually admitting that the proposition to deepen the St. Lawrence canals to 14 feet is regarded as an assured failure.

We are confronted with this admission by the Government that this scheme of bringing 75,000 bushel barges to Kingston, and then discharging them into 40,000 bushel barges, to be carried in 14 feet of water down the St. Lawrence canals, or of bringing 50,000 bushel barges from the upper lake ports clean through to Montreal, which the present Government and the past Governments believed would be a success, is a failure. We were told in years past by those interested in transportation that once 14 feet of water was obtained through these canals we would be able to carry 50,000 or 60,000 bushel barges through to Montreal, and we would be able to overcome the rivalry of the Buffalo route. But what has experience proved? I have not got the figures of the amount of grain handled at Prescott and Kingston last year, but I believe I am within the mark when I say that not more than 10,000,000 bushels of grain were handled last year at Kingston and at Prescott. That is to say, we had those vessels carrying 50,000 to 75,000 bushels of grain, and of course smaller vessels also, which transferred their cargoes at Kingston and Prescott into smaller barges that went down to Montreal, and yet only 10,000,000 bushels practically were handled this way in the whole season of last year. I may be incorrect in those figures, but I think I am pretty near the mark. Taking as a basis, that 10,000,000 bushels of grain went through the St. Lawrence canals last year, what do the Government say of this route? They say that it has been a failure, and that we cannot hope, under present conditions, to expect to handle in this way any more than 10,000,000 bushels, but, they say, if you afford us facilities to bring to Port Colborne the largest vessels, carrying 200,000 to 300,000 bushels, and then transfer their cargoes to smaller boats to go through the Welland Canal to Montreal, we may be able to successfully cope with the Buffalo trade. What does the experience of the past prove? It proves that the St. Lawrence canal route has not been a success, and let me tell the House this, that last year, although it was the first season of Mr. Booth's line, he carried as much grain over the Parry Sound Railway as was carried down the Welland Canal, about 10,000,000 bushels. And I see it stated in the public prints, and believe the statement to be correct, that on Mr. Booth's line, over 6,000,000 bushels of grain have been carried the present season; and I am within the mark when I say that the Grand Trunk Railway have carried from Midland to Montreal in the present season, upwards of 7,000,000 bushels. This all goes to prove that to-day on this rail route to Montreal, from points on the upper lakes, there has been carried, in this the dullest part of the season, upwards of 13,000,000 bushels over both these lines, and hon. gentlemen must remember that it is in the fall that the grain trade increases. I know that it is now expected by the Grand Trunk Railway that they will carry from the port of Midland alone 20,000,000 bushels this year, and I have heard the statement made that Mr. Booth's line will carry an equal amount.

Mr. BENNETT.

If 40,000,000 bushels of grain are to be carried by these two lines of railway from points on the Georgian Bay to Montreal, and only 10,000,000 bushels down the Welland Canal and afterwards down the St. Lawrence canals, what is the House to think about this new proposition? If the House votes this large sum of half a million dollars, it means that the Government are simply admitting the failure of the present arrangement, and are declaring that by changing the system and having larger vessels going to Port Colborne, they may be able to carry something cheaper than in the past and as a result be able to cope with the Buffalo trade. The greatest competitors to-day of the Buffalo trade are the Grand Trunk Railway line from Midland to Montreal and the Parry Sound line from Parry Sound to Montreal, because they have shown that in the past year they carried nearly 20,000,000 between the two, and are justified in expecting this year to carry 40,000,000 between the two. Viewing the matter in this light, I submit that the Government should carefully weigh this proposition before embarking on this enterprise and spending half a million dollars. It is quite plain, judging by the large trade that has gone through Port Colborne in years past, that there is no absolute necessity to-day for the construction of this breakwater. It has been urged that there are some boulders and shoals at the entrance of the harbour, and these should be removed as quickly as possible; but if the trade at Port Colborne has gone on successfully for the past twenty years without the construction of this expensive breakwater, why should its construction be undertaken at present? If the vessels that to-day are going there are accommodated—and they must be or they would not go there—why then the necessity of doing this large amount of dredging, the cost of which is estimated at $350,000, and the construction of this expensive breakwater. I submit, in view of the fact that the Government have coupled the two estimates together, and that the intended expenditure in this regard is to be half a million dollars for this year alone—

Mr. GIBSON. What would you propose in place of the Welland Canal route?

Mr. BENNETT. Nothing can be suggested in place of the Welland Canal.

Mr. GIBSON. The Welland Canal route, I mean.

Mr. BENNETT. My argument has been this, and I am sorry if I did not make myself plain, that the Welland Canal demonstrated last year that it could only attract an annual trade of about 10,000,000 bushels, and I think I am correct, because I am taking the figures of the grain transhipped to Kingston.

Mr. GIBSON. 15,000,000 or 16,000,000 bushels.

Mr. BENNETT. I spoke subject to correction, but admitting that 15,000,000 bushels of grain were carried by way of the Welland Canal and the St. Lawrence canals because that would be transhipped in turn at Kingston and at Prescott, then it follows that in one season the trade over the Parry Sound Railway almost ran up to that amount, because 10,000,000 bushels of grain were carried over the Parry Sound Railway last year, and it is expected by the Grand Trunk Railway that they will carry 20,000,000 bushels this year from Midland to Montreal.

I am not speaking of this question from a sectional point of view but on the large question of transportation. I have referred to the Toronto scheme of railway from Georgian Bay, and the Government, while they have not promised active assistance, are certainly lending their ear to the proposition of the Ottawa Ship Canal. It should be the policy of Parliament to settle at once and for all what is to be accepted as the state transportation system. If it is to be by way of the Welland Canal, I suppose this must of necessity follow as an adjunct. If it is to be by way of the Ottawa Ship Canal, this should be laid to one side. If, on the other hand, the Government intend to stand to one side and let private enterprise, like the Parry Sound and Grand Trunk Railway do the transportation, it is inopportune for the Government at present to embark on this large enterprise until they have a settled line of policy. It cannot be contended that the present expenditures are indispensable, because there is at present a trade to the Welland Canal of 15,000,000 bushels. Therefore, there is no necessity for deepening the entrance of Port Colborne; therefore, there is no necessity to construct this breakwater. The trade that has been done in the past will be done in the future on the present facilities. But if the Government commits itself to this proposition, they virtually admit that to-day, with 14 feet of water to Montreal they do not hope successfully to compete with the other routes; but they do hope by getting the large vessels to Port Colborne and taking the grain there by smaller vessels to Montreal, that they will be able to compete successfully with Buffalo for the large grain trade of the west, which, I am glad to say, is increasing year by year.

Mr. SPROULE. Has the Minister of Finance given us an outline of the whole scheme proposed? Because, it has been rumoured that the scheme included not only the making of a harbour but the building of elevators, and that the Government intended to propose some scheme by which parties who provided capital for building elevators, should be supported, to a limited extent, by the Government. Is that contemplated?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Nothing is contemplated beyond the works that have been announced. Of course, there are various plans and propositions and suggestions in regard to Port Colborne, involving large sums, and, in relation to another port, much larger sums. But we set these aside. It is not proposed to do anything with the matter of elevators.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I appreciate the loyalty displayed by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson), and the hon. member for Welland (Mr. McCleary), to the constituencies they represent, through each of which the Welland Canal runs. I do not say that they do not take a larger view of the question than the local one, but we cannot but admire the loyalty with which they defend the expenditure of a large sum of money on the Welland Canal. It has been stated that an hon. gentleman who spoke in another place on this subject was influenced solely by the locality in which he lived. I think that if his speech, to which the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) referred, is read, it will be seen that he did not take that position, but took the position, which was already taken by some of us in this House, that if the money is to be spent, it should be spent in a way to secure the best possible returns to the country. If that is a mere local and narrow neighbourhood view, the word has a definition with which I am not familiar. As regards myself, just a word was dropped by the Minister of Finance in his closing sentence, in which he said that while there would be a large expenditure here, the expenditure would be larger at another point.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I was not referring to my hon. friend (Mr. Montague).

Mr. MONTAGUE. I may remind my hon. friends from Lincoln and Welland that my constituency runs almost to within a stone's-throw from Port Colborne. And, consequently, I might, if local reasons only were to influence me. I could offer no objection to an expenditure so near my riding.

Mr. GIBSON. You would rather have it at Port Maitland?

Mr. MONTAGUE. But that is not the question. The question is whether this sum of money can be spent profitably to the country, and whether, after it is spent, what is expected to be gained by the expenditure will be gained. It is well known that expenditures have been made—and I am not going to say that this is true only of one Government or of another—expenditures have been made in connection with these canals that have not turned out to be of financial or trade advantage to Canada generally. We are all agreed upon the point that, if the Welland Canal is to be a success in attracting a larger trade from the lakes, it must have a proper harbour, and the question to decide is whether we are going to have a proper harbour by the expenditure of this $150,000 and the $350,000 to be spent under the Railway Department. I am here to say—not that I have expert knowledge on the question, but I am advised by those who have expert knowledge—that the expenditure of that sum will not attract these larger boats on the lakes, that it will not attract this increased shipping.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Would it not attract a reasonable portion of the trade if the route is cheaper?

Mr. MONTAGUE. It will attract a reasonable proportion of the trade, if the expenditure is reasonably successful in getting a good harbour. If the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) will assure me that it will do so, I will give him an answer.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Will not the grain take the cheaper route, if it is practicable?

Mr. MONTAGUE. It remains to be seen whether it is cheaper and as safe. If the route is cheaper, but is not safe, it will not be followed. You might absolutely do away with the charges on the Welland Canal, but if you did not provide a safe harbour of entrance, you would not attract a vessel there of increased size.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Hear, hear.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Then, the cheapness of the route does not enter into the question unless we have convinced ourselves that by the expenditure of this sum of money, or whatever sum they propose to spend, a safe harbour will be provided. I have read very carefully both the long report dealing with the larger scheme, and the mere private memorandum, which the hon. gentleman was kind enough to send me, and I fail to find any report by any engineer which says that this expenditure of $150,000 taken away from the expenditures proposed on the larger plan—which calls for an expenditure of $5,500,000 to complete the scheme—will be a great advantage to navigation. If the hon. gentleman has such a report, it is his duty to give it to us. In my judgment, the hon. gentleman has simply picked out one of the items which is proposed in that large report, he has picked it out for this year, and in the following years we shall have the other items picked out to the tune of $5,500,000 before this work is completed and before hon. gentlemen opposite will be able to pretend that they have completed a good harbour at Port Colborne. The hon. gentleman admits that there is a rocky bed outside Port Colborne harbour. Will the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson) tell me how you can have a successful harbour without some anchorage facilities outside? There are no anchorage facilities there whatever. You may expend as many millions as you like, but you will never be able outside of Port Colborne harbour to anchor a ship. Then, will you tell me this: Are you going to be able to attract the larger boats from the lakes without a harbour of refuge at Port Colborne? How many boats can you put in now, even if you construct this breakwater? How many boats can you put in to the entrance of the canal?

Mr. MONTAGUE.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. With a breakwater, you can put every boat on the upper lakes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman would not say that if he was dealing with shipping of his own, he would want more careful protection and better facilities than a mere breakwater hung up in the lake would give to the shipping such as the hon. gentleman expects to attract to that port. If he is going to attract the trade of the larger and more valuable boats that ply on the lake, he will have to have a harbour of refuge, and the only way he can have it will be by the expenditure of $2,500,000 for blasting out all that area between the breakwater constructed from Sugar Loaf Point out into the lake and the present pier at Port Colborne. That expenditure will be $2,500,000 as set forth in the report from which I quote these figures to the House. Now, the next point is: How are you going to attract these boats without dockage facilities? Have you got it? You certainly have not. You may build this breakwater twice its length, but you must give additional facilities. The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson) will not deny what I am stating; and without these dockage facilities you will be unable to attract these larger boats from the lake. Then we are told by the acting Minister of Public Works that he does not propose to enter into the erection and construction of elevators. Now, without these elevators all the scheme of bringing larger boats there, and of transferring the cargoes into smaller boats and taking them through the canal must fail. The Postmaster General tells me: Let private individuals spend that money. But the member for Lincoln rises immediately in his place and says it won't do for private individuals to spend this money, because they will tax the trade too much by their elevator charges, and that will ruin the route altogether. There is a good deal of sense in the argument of the member for Lincoln, and the more sense there is in it, and the more force there is in it, the more it lends strength and force to the argument I am making, that this scheme must be taken in toto as advised by the engineer of the Department of Public Works, and if taken as he advises, it eventually places upon the treasury of Canada a burden of $5,500,000. Now, then, the member for Welland (Mr. McCleary) says that is all right. Let us understand it then, let us not be sailing under false colours, and let the Minister, if he means that, and let the Government, if they mean that, state openly to this Parliament, which votes the money, whether in the end we will be required to spend $5,500,000 instead of $150,000 for the construction of a mere breakwater.

Now, then, another point. One hon. gentleman has referred to the work in connection with the harbour at Port Maitland. The whole point is where we shall get the best harbour and the best returns. I am not here to advocate the claims of Port Maitland, unless the claims of Port Maitland are far and away above the claims of Port Colborne as a safe and proper harbour. A report has been made upon Port Maitland, and I will only say this, that after reading that report I have come to the conclusion that somewhere in the neighbourhood of Port Maitland, on the day that that report was made, there was a little bird whose nest is built somewhere around the harbour of Port Colborne, for there is an amount of information which I do not think, of his own opportunity or privilege, the engineer, who I know very well and who is a very excellent man—there is a lot of information there which it seems to me must have been gratuitously given to him and prepared for him, or it never would have been collected exactly at that time and by him for the purpose. Now, what are the facts? I think we have an admission, and we will have an admission now, I fancy, by the member for Lincoln and the member for Welland, that a mistake was made originally when the Welland Canal was constructed. It should have been constructed from Port Maitland, it should have been constructed there by reason of the fact that there was a good harbour, that there was no rock to blast, that the cutting was all of mud. The question is now, and I am only raising that point in a general way, whether it is even yet not too late to correct the mistake which has been made. What do we have? We will have, if the expenditure is made at Port Maitland, an expenditure of less than this sum required at Port Colborne for the harbour at Port Maitland, elevators, the wharfs and in addition the deepening of the feeder to Welland Junction and not more, as the Minister of Finance says, an expenditure of a good deal less according to the engineer's report; and if the hon. Senator McCallum's figures are to be taken, and he is a man who thoroughly understands whereof he speaks, we would have an expenditure a vast deal less, and we would have a splendid harbour, we would have a natural harbour, and we would have much better facilities, I am told, than will be provided at Port Colborne, even by the expenditure of this large sum of money. I am not here to advocate the special claims of Port Maitland, unless it is shown by the best evidence that it is the proper place to spend the money. I am here merely to ask the information for the House and for the country as to whether it is proposed to expend $5,500,000 at Port Colborne before this work will be completed. I am here to say again that my information is, and I am only relying upon the information of those whose knowledge is good, my information is that unless you build docks, that unless you build elevators, unless you make a harbour of refuge, the mere construction of a pier at Port Colborne to cost $250,000 or $300,000 will be largely a waste of the money, and if it is a waste of the money, I am sure there is no hon. gentleman in this House who wants to vote it. If it is going to give a good service and a return for the money, I am just as willing to vote it as any other hon. gentleman.

Mr. GIBSON. The hon. gentleman says that the building of a harbour at Port Colborne was a mistake. I would like to call the attention of the committee to the fact that this mistake has been in operation for a good many years, nearly a century since the commencement of the old original canal. Now, I am sure that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Montague) and the Senator whom he has mentioned were members of the Conservative party, and the hon. member for Haldimand in this House, and the Senator, either here or in the Senate, when the enlargement of the Welland Canal took place, were in the confidence of the Government of that day; and the route from Port Maitland had been, as the hon. gentleman desires this House to believe, the best route and the cheapest, and best increasing the facilities of the Welland Canal. I think that the gentleman who presided over the Department of Railways and Canals, the late Mr. John Page, would have seen that route long ago, without either the hon. gentleman or Senator McCallum calling his attention to it. Now, he started out by criticising the member for Welland (Mr. McCleary) and myself simply because we had advocated the enlargement of Port Colborne harbour. Now, the hon. gentleman said that we should be above localities.

Mr. MONTAGUE. No; I said I had no doubt the hon. gentleman was above localities.

Mr. GIBSON. But he immediately sailed in to advocate throughout his speech the enlargement of the Welland Canal via Port Maitland, and that has been his whole theme from beginning to end. The expenditure of this money in Port Colborne, he says, is backed up by the member for Welland and myself, and he admires us for our loyalty. Now, I may say it makes no difference whatever to me, so far as I am personally concerned in the county of Welland; but I am free to say that as the harbour of Port Colborne has cost a million dollars, and as the harbour of Port Colborne alone now requires to be deepened, I am sure that after all the expenditure of $25,000,000 to increase the Welland Canal to a further depth of water, it would simply be the work of a lifetime. The most practical feature of the case is, and the one which can be most readily accomplished in order to increase the carrying capacity of our inland waters, is to take steps without delay to deepen the harbour of Port Colborne so as to admit of the larger craft which is now sailing in our inland waters. I am prepared to say that, had the engineers of the Government of twenty-five or thirty years ago foreseen the increased capacity of our inland shipping, greater provision would have made in the canals, particularly in the Welland Canal. When the locks were built from Port Dalhousie up to the summit level at Thorold, and when lock 24 was completed by the Government of the late Sir John Macdonald, it was considered that 12 feet of water was all that ever would be required for our inland navigation. But every hon. gentleman who has gone through the canals, knows that, no matter how large the locks may be built, vessels are immediately built to fill the locks. The locks of the Welland Canal, which are 274 feet long within the gates, 40 feet wide and 14 feet in depth, are called locks of the regulation size. The hon. gentleman knows very well that when the aqueduct was built, it was built to give 14 feet of water on the mitre sill, and we know that from time to time silt enters the harbour at Port Colborne. When the report was made by those who went up to examine Port Colborne harbour, there was only 13·87 feet of water in that harbour; so that, even apart from the larger scheme, there is the necessity at the present moment of giving increased facilities to shipping at Port Colborne harbour. But what my hon. friend knows, and what every gentleman who resides in that locality knows, is that the reef outside of the harbour of Port Colborne is a danger to navigation. There is no difficulty about the harbour itself, except that a greater depth of water is required; but the danger lies in this shoal or ridge, which is about a mile outside of the harbour. In ordinary weather the water is sufficiently deep to carry any inland craft over it, but we know that in a heavy sea a vessel rises and falls eight or ten feet, and there is danger of breaking the back of the vessel while crossing this reef in stormy weather. The Government was waited upon by one of the most intelligent delegations that ever came before it. It was headed by Capt. Carter, and composed of gentlemen largely interested in our inland shipping, and they impressed upon the Government the great need for the removal of this obstruction at Port Colborne harbour.

Mr. CLARKE. What would it cost?

Mr. GIBSON. As I understand, the whole matter, without allowing anything at all for the elevator—

Mr. GIBSON.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Does the hon. gentleman understand that this work is proposed to be done out of this vote?

Mr. GIBSON. No.

Mr. MONTAGUE. As I understand it, they will require another vote of $275,000.

Mr. GIBSON. I do not think that $350,000 would build the pier out to the ridge, and remove the reef.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is not proposed to be done; so that the construction of this breakwater does not remove the difficulty in connection with Port Colborne harbour. The hon. gentleman's own memorandum points out that, in addition to the $350,000 that is to be spent in the canal, in addition to the $250,000 or $300,000 that is to be spent for the breakwater, it will require $275,000 for the removal of the reef that the hon. gentleman refers to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is not strictly correct. What is proposed to be done by the Department of Railways and Canals will give 20 feet of water right into the canal, even if the other dredging is not done at all.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What width will the channel be?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Four hundred feet in width, at least.

Mr. GIBSON. From an economic standpoint, or from a contractor's standpoint, I would advise the Government—and I have given them no advice in the matter at all—to build, in connection with the work, a subaqueous blasting wharf, in which the debris from the blasting of the rock might be filled into the cribs, instead of being carried out and dumped into the lake at deep water, so that the whole of that crib filling could be done at a nominal cost, while it would cost a large sum of money to carry the rock out into deep water. My hon. friend doubts the necessity of building a harbour of refuge. I am not going into the question of a harbour of refuge, but I say there is an absolute necessity of building a pier out to that reef. As I said before, when I spoke upon this question, I cared not whether the Government went into the larger question of elevators or not, but I wished them to do one thing immediately, and that was, that they should deepen the harbour of Port Colborne, and that they should deepen the entrance, which is obstructed by that limestone ridge.

Mr. WALLACE. Is that outside of the breakwater?

Mr. GIBSON. Yes, the present breakwater.

Mr. WALLACE. No, I mean the proposed breakwater.

Mr. GIBSON. It would not be outside of it.

Mr. WALLACE. Would the removal of that ridge cost $350,000 more?

Mr. GIBSON. I never went into the figures further than this, that when the present hon. Minister of Railways and Canals was making a tour of the Welland Canal, the question of lighterage came up between himself and Mr. Thompson, the superintending engineer. I have no doubt that the hon. member for York is aware of the fact that a considerable amount of lighterage is being done by the Grand Trunk Railway between Port Colborne and Port Dalhousie, and that in order to save the expense of that, it is desirable that large lake crafts which come from Chicago, Duluth and Port Arthur, should be able to go into Port Colborne harbour and have their cargoes transferred to vessels drawing 14 feet of water. It was pointed out then that these vessels could not make Port Colborne harbour in stormy weather, and that, in order that they should be allowed to come in, that ridge will have to be removed. My hon. friend spoke about the fact of Port Colborne harbour having been in use without this ridge being removed. I wish him to understand that none of these craft has ever been brought into Port Colborne harbour with a full cargo. None of these vessels have been laid down in 14 feet draught of water. Now, the larger vessels are drawing from 18 to 19 feet of water, just deep enough to cross the mitre sill of the lock on the Sault Canal. It is for the purpose of bringing this craft into Port Colborne, if I understand the question aright—

Mr. MONTAGUE. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that the larger vessels, drawing 18 feet of water are going in there?

Mr. GIBSON. No, they cannot at Port Colborne. I say it is for the purpose of bringing the larger vessels into Port Colborne that this proposition of the Government to deepen the harbour, and to remove the reef, is made. I am sure I tried to point out to my hon. friend just as well as I could.

Mr. WALLACE. How far is that bridge he speaks of from the shore?

Mr. GIBSON. It is from the point of the present breakwater—about a mile.

Mr. WALLACE. It is outside the breakwater?

Mr. GIBSON. Yes, about a mile.

Mr. HAGGART. Do I understand the Minister to say that this expenditure of $250,000 is intended to be expended on the cribwork which extends to Sugar Loaf Point?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. That is what I understood from the Minister, and the $350,000 is intended to be expended on building of a lock at Port Colborne on the Welland Canal.

Mr. WALLACE. How do you deepen at the breakwater which he intends to utilize?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The breakwater is in deep water.

Mr. HAGGART. There is the new one to be constructed from Sugar Loaf Point. I understand the expenditure by the Railway Department is for the purpose of deepening the canal from the lake up to the mouth of the lock at the mouth of Port Colborne, and he would need a depth of 21 feet to utilize this part of the cribwork which he intends to build. There is only a very small distance which is navigable at 21 feet, the rest is 17 feet and 14 feet.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is 20 feet of water where the cribwork starts.

Mr. HAGGART. My argument is that it would be entirely useless to expend $250,000 on a breakwater unless you intend to do the dredging up to the extent of 21 feet. The hon. the Postmaster General says that the depth of the water beside the breakwater is 21 feet. True, it is for a short distance, but for such a short distance it would be impossible to utilize it. The only possible use for the breakwater is that vessels drawing 21 feet of water could sail and take a turn to the right or left inside the breakwater, using the docks and utilizing the elevators there for the purpose of transferring the grain from heavy draft vessels into those of 14 feet. The expenditure at present will not do that. The Minister says it will be utilized entirely for the purpose of protecting vessels going into the canal of 20 feet draft. I deny that it is so. The object of the breakwater is for the purpose of protecting the vessels that lay in the docks.

Mr. GIBSON. Does the hon. gentleman pretend to say that there will be docks running out from the breakwater at right angles?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, that is the proposed plan. It is in the proposed plan submitted.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is the plan of a larger scheme which we are not able to go on with.

Mr. HAGGART. The Minister says we are not pledged at all to this plan. That it is not to be taken into account in regard to this expenditure, and that his object is to build a breakwater which will be on an independent plan altogether. I say it is no use whatever for the purpose of vessels sheltering behind it and transferring their cargo to vessels of 14 feet, because to utilize it for that purpose you will have to dredge the inside up to 21 feet. You know the short distance between the locks and the mouth of the harbour, only a very few vessels can lie there. It would be impossible to put elevators there and have three or four vessels transferring their cargo into smaller vessels. The engineer who proposed that saw the difficulty at once. Then, to dredge the harbour from the mouth of the locks out to the lake to the depth of 21 feet, he proposed to build a breakwater up to Sugar Loaf Point, and in order to do that the whole plan will have to be carried out.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, not at all. The hon. gentleman is reasoning rightly, but he is applying his reasoning rather beyond what is practicable, or what is intended or necessary. The hon. gentleman admits that inside of the breakwater will be an admirable place for the sheltering of vessels that are not unloading. That is correct. But he argues that there is not depth of water to enable them to do that. That is where his reasoning is wrong. At present there is a depth of some twenty feet of water at the easterly point of the proposed breakwater. That depth extends westerly at present some 600 feet, the engineer informs me. The plan will show what the width of that depth of water is. There will be a large amount of filling required for the cribwork, and that will be obtained by the deepening of the harbour at the same time. In that way the deepening of the harbour will do the double service.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Where does the hon. gentleman propose to take the rock out?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I should think the contractor for the building of the pier would be required, as part of the contract, to deepen where it would be necessary in order to make the most effective use of the pier for the purposes of shelter, in case the vessels do not proceed to the entrance of the canal to unload. I am told that the whole amount of the excavation of the harbour would be required to supply stone for the cribwork and the pier at the entrance and all harbour improvements; but it is not necessary to do it all in order to build that pier. By excavating sufficient to fill the crib, you provide plenty of sea-room alongside for vessels to come in and lie at harbour, and it becomes available pro tanto as a sheltering place for vessels.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Does the hon. gentleman pretend to say that it would be necessary to blast all that out to fill the breakwater and pier? Does he know the estimated cost of it? It is $2,500,000.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not care if it is $500,000,000, for we have not adopted the plan involving such expenditure. The fact is that the filling would utilize, if necessary all the excavation you would have to make in order to get twenty feet of water. But I am not saying that it is necessary to deepen to twenty feet the whole 480 acres to be inclosed in the breakwater.

Mr. HAGGART.

If the development of the trade warrants it, future Governments will hereafter deal with that matter the same as Governments have dealt with the Welland Canal system in the past. The present work is absolutely necessary.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Have you an engineer's report to show the value of that breakwater to the harbour? The hon. gentleman has not a line from an engineer to show its value. We have asked for it time and again.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. All the same, the engineer says that that block will be of substantial value as a protection to the entrance of the harbour.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman knows that an off-hand opinion is one thing, and a well-reasoned report is another thing.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will read one passage.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is private information for the Minister.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is a statement for the guidance of the Minister, made by the engineer of the department, Mr. Lafleur.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the date of that report?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is dated to-day.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman will not ask the House to accept that as a report.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The engineer says:

If the present appropriation for $150,000 is applied solely to the construction of the breakwater, it would build about 1,700 feet of its outer end, which would be of utility even if not further extended, as a protection to the entrance of the Welland Canal.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is a pretty strong report, is it not?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It states the point. If it were a thousand folios, it would not be any more valuable. It is not the length of the report that makes it valuable.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman says he has a report from the officers of the department, that the breakwater can be utilized up to 600 feet. We have surveys of every portion of that here, and they show that the full extent that can be utilized is about 400 feet, and this would strike a depth of 12.4 feet, 15.7 feet, and 13.6 feet. The hon. gentleman is right in stating that it will take a great quantity of stone to build the breakwater. To do that profitably you must proceed at the same time with the excavation to a sufficient extent to fill the cribwork; but the hon. Minister does not propose that. Ho-says it was not intended to utilize it. The Postmaster General says it can be used pro tanto for the purpose of transferring grain from vessels drawing twenty feet to vessels drawing fourteen feet. The hon. Minister says that this breakwater, even if not used for the purpose of transferring grain from a heavy-draft vessel to one of a lighter draft, would be useful for the protection of the harbour. Any one can see at a glance that it is not intended for any such purpose—that the only possible object of the breakwater is to make a harbour for the transfer of grain contemplated on the larger scale. The argument of my hon. friend is strictly correct that it is a useless expenditure of money unless it is contemplated for the larger scheme which the engineer proposed to the Minister of Public Works. This will be a useless expenditure of public money unless the larger scheme proposed by the engineers is proceeded with. There is no argument on the other side at all. Does the hon. Postmaster General think that a floating elevator could lie inside that breakwater and a large vessel lie along side from which could be transferred its cargo into the elevator. My hon. friend from Lincoln can tell him differently. The plan is only practicable as a complete plan for the purpose of transferring grain from heavy draft vessels to lighter ones, and if the hon. Minister of Finance asks for this expenditure of $150,000, without having in contemplation the greater scheme, he is asking us to vote a useless expenditure.

Mr. WALLACE. I have listened with a great deal of attention to the various opinions about this expenditure on Port Colborne harbour. The hon. Postmaster General has told us many times over that this breakwater could be completed with an expenditure of $280,000, under the one condition of things, or $360,000 under another condition. But what we have failed to get yet, and what we ought to get, is the report of the engineers endorsing the scheme that the Government are proposing by this vote. The Government have absolutely no report of any engineer to justify the expenditure of this money. The nearest approach to any report from an engineer is that this expenditure of $150,000, which the Postmaster General is advocating, would be of some utility. No doubt it would be of some utility, but is that a justification for the expenditure? The whole object of it is to make a harbour of refuge, and it may be desirable and necessary to provide a place where vessels can go in and unload a portion of their cargo and then go on their way through the Welland Canal, and load up when they get through, or where larger vessels can transfer their cargoes to smaller vessels. But in order to do that there must be two things. First, there must be substantial elevators, because you cannot always find a smaller vessel there into which to unload, and then you must have a floating elevator to transfer a cargo from one vessel to another very rapidly and satisfactorily. In order to have this, you require a sheltered harbour. The hon. Postmaster General tells us that you can have a sheltered harbour with the breakwater he is advocating. I deny that proposition. I say that you cannot, by any possibility, have a sheltered harbour under the conditions stated by him. Here is a breakwater starting from Sugar Loaf Point, 5,700 feet, or one and one-twelfth mile, to a point where the Postmaster General says the water is 20 feet deep. Then, you travel back westward to Sugar Loaf Point, and he says you get a distance of 1,000 or 2,000 feet—the total distance is 5,700 feet—but if you travel back 1,000 to 2,000 feet, you may get a sufficiently good breakwater by an expenditure of $150,000, to make a useful harbour. It cannot be done. But, Sir, it leaves a gap from the end of that Sugar Loaf Point of 4,000 feet or three-quarters of a mile of an open sea on an open coast. But he says that by putting in this little block of 1,700 feet, you are going to have satisfactory results, and that the report of the engineer says that it will be of some utility. Surely that is not what we are going to vote for. In order to build up a harbour where the cargoes of vessels can be transferred from the larger vessels to the smaller vessels, where vessels can be lightened, you must have elevator protection, which you have not got. The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson) tells us that outside of that there is a great ridge of rock. He says that the ridge of rock must be absolutely removed, because the danger to vessels through it is very great. The larger vessels could not go in at all, because the water is not sufficiently deep. Supposing you have this breakwater of 5,700 feet constructed, which the Government do not propose to do, but supposing you have that done, what do you find? 800 or 1,000 feet from the shore the average depth of the water is from three to four feet. I looked over the soundings, and I find some places two feet, and some two and a half, some three feet and four feet. Then, there is another ridge of 500 feet outside of that, which they propose to make ten feet deep, but it is on an average to-day not more than six feet, and so it goes on and this is all rock-bottom. Why, you would have to create a harbour there. From two feet and three feet you have to deepen it to twenty feet or more to make a safe harbour for the class of vessels now navigating the lakes with cargoes of 200,000 bushels, and a burden of 6,000 tons. You will require a navigation of from twenty to twenty-five feet in order to hold these vessels, and if you are going to do the trade there, if Port Colborne is going to be the distributing point where the cargoes will be unloaded from the large vessels to the smaller vessels you will require to have a place better than this where large vessels can go in and unload, if they are careful, and deposit their cargo in an elevator or transfer it by a floating elevator to the smaller vessels that will go through the Welland Canal and the St. Lawrence Canals to Montreal. But this vote does not propose anything tangible. It is not a practical statement which would receive the endorsement of a single engineer. Therefore, when these hon. gentlemen come here asking, in the first place, for an expenditure of $350,000 by the Department of Railways and Canals for a work which is neither a railway nor a canal, and of which we have the particulars now, I say that this expenditure will not produce tangible results. When they get the work, for, say, $150,000, they will have a work the most that the engineer can say concerning which is that it will be of some utility. But, Sir, it will not be of sufficient utility to justify this expenditure. As has been pointed out by the hon. member for Haldimand this expenditure is worth nothing unless it means the whole scheme to be carried out in its entirety with an expenditure at Port Colborne of between five and six millions of dollars. Of course, work of that magnitude would extend over a number of years, and we could not have the benefit of it for many years to come. It seems to me that the scheme is of very doubtful utility, more especially when it can be seen that Providence has designed a shorter route from the Georgian Bay across to Lake Ontario at or near the city of Toronto, by means of the Georgian Bay Canal, a double-track railroad or one of these schemes that have been promoted and pronounced feasible, which can be completed in one year and which will provide for the immediate interests of the country. The Government are plunging into an expenditure which will be utterly useless unless they supplement it with $5,000,000 for these other works. In my opinion they are simply doing it with a view to an intended election. They are throwing the public money right and left and telling the people: See, what we are doing for this growing and prosperous country. Expenditure to be justified must be made with the knowledge of the work undertaken and must be carefully considered. But this scheme of devoting $350,000 to removing part of the rocks—millions would not remove them sufficiently—and $150,000 for making an almost useless breakwater, cannot be justified by the Government or by the Minister of Finance or the Postmaster General who have been advocating this scheme to-night without an adequate idea of what is involved.

Mr. BRITTON. This question is too important a one for me to let it go at all events without a word or two, though I do not desire to trouble the committee at this late hour. The question is whether this amount asked is really necessary to improve the harbour at Port Colborne, to enable the Welland Canal to do the business it is calculated to do. If this work is necessary to give facilities to the trade which is done on the Welland Canal, I think it ought to be granted; if not, I think it ought not to be granted. The Minister of Finance tells us that, so far as it is now presented to the House, it is no part of this larger scheme that has been referred to so many times. I confess that it seems evident that the hon. member for Welland (Mr. McCleary) has the idea that it is part of a larger scheme, and that is certainly the opinion of many in this country—a scheme for providing elevators, and so on, involving a very large expenditure for the purpose of attempting to capture the whole trade of the St. Lawrence. If it is part of this larger scheme, so far as I have light at present, I should certainly oppose it; and I feel very strongly that if it is necessary, or partly necessary for the larger scheme, and if it is not absolutely necessary for the purpose of the trade as it is at present, or as it may be with the Welland Canal as it is and doing the business of the St. Lawrence as we are doing it, the Government ought to hesitate before spending this money. I am sure the Minister of Finance will not take it amiss if one of his supporters says this much—as he is acting for the Minister of Public Works, who has more fully considered the matter, that before a dollar of this money is expended a careful examination shall be made to see whether it is necessary now for the harbour accommodation of Port Colborne, for this trade which is coming to it under present conditions, and if it is not, that the money will not be expended. I ask the Government to consider well before they commit themselves to this larger scheme and to see whether the conditions of trade will warrant all the expenditure that, it is said, is to be made in reference to the St. Lawrence route. Much as I desire that we should have all that we can get for the St. Lawrence, I do not think that we should shut our eyes to facts. We never can get the whole of the great western trade for the St. Lawrence.

We ought to get a great deal of it; and I think that the possibility of getting more than we have is better with the 14-foot channel. For one, so far as I have understood the question, I am not in favour of the Government expending money on elevators and other facilities of that kind, except at the port of Montreal, which is exceptional and for the providing of facilities for which there are very important reasons. If some such plan were adopted as has been adopted in relation to graving docks, a plan of Government assistance, giving to all alike, private enterprise will answer every purpose that will be of any advantage to this country as far as elevators are concerned. There are elevators doing the business of the grain-carrying trade of the St. Lawrence; and if more elevators are necessary, I am satisfied that private capital and enterprise are ready to take hold of that matter, or, certainly, ready with a little Government assistance given in such a way as will afford satisfaction. If this vote is necessary to improve the harbour of Port Colborne without reference to the larger scheme that has been talked about, I shall be in favour of it. But with the statements the hon. Minister of Finance has made to the House and with the reasons that have been given by the members who have spoken on this subject, there has certainly been enough to put the Minister on his guard before the money is expended to see that it is necessary for the harbours of the Welland Canal, as it now is part, and not as part of a larger scheme. If it is part of this larger scheme, whether it cost $5,000,000 or more, it must necessarily be an experiment to capture all the trade of the St. Lawrence, and I would certainly not favour that.

Mr. McCLEARY. It seems to me the opposition to this vote means the abandonment of the Welland Canal route as a through route for the grain trade of the great lakes. As to whether this vote is part and parcel of a greater scheme that may be necessary, I am not prepared now to say. This I do know, that when the Welland Canal was originally built it was built for vessels drawing twelve feet of water, and it was found subsequently that $3,000,000 had to be spent upon that canal to make it at all effective to compete for the trade that was going to Buffalo. Now if the Government, after spending this $350,000 in Port Colborne for deepening the harbour and $150,000 or $250,000 for making this breakwater, find that is not adequate to give Port Colborne harbour the proper facilities to encourage the larger lake carriers to come there, having regard to the great expenditure we have made in this country on our canals, will any one say that they should not increase that expenditure to any amount that may be necessary on the Welland Canal, which is the key to the St. Lawrence route as well as the key to the great upper lakes for carrying the trade of the west through to tide water in the east? While I do not want to charge hon. gentlemen who oppose this with being local in their arguments or as being selfish in this regard, still it is very strange that the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton) should get up and oppose this vote. He probably thinks that Kingston might be hurt if we had a line from Port Colborne right through to Montreal, and if Port Colborne harbour was improved so that vessels drawing 22 feet of water could enter it. The member for West York (Mr. Wallace) objects to it because he says they have under consideration a marine route of some kind that will go through his constituency, possibly. But I want to tell him that we have had a route from Collingwood as long as I can remember to carry the grain of the west to Montreal, but it never carried any, because the all-water route is the route that is going to attract traffic, because it is the cheapest and the best. Traders will take the route which is the cheapest and the quickest, and undoubtedly no one will contend that an all-water route is not much cheaper than either an all-rail route or a route part rail and part water.

Mr. WALLACE. How is it that the Parry Sound takes more than the Welland Canal?

Mr. McCLEARY. Simply because the Welland Canal is in the deplorable condition in which it was left. If we had 14 feet of water in the Welland Canal through to Montreal, so that boats could go through the Welland Canal with 75,000 or 80,000 bushels, the Parry Sound road would not be carrying so much; and if I am to believe what I hear regarding the Parry Sound road, they are not going to carry very much more at the same rate that they did last year, because I do not think it has been a very paying speculation for the gentleman who has put his money into it.

Mr. WALLACE. Freight rates are going up all round.

Mr. McCLEARY. Of course, that depends on the condition of freight generally. We know that water rates have gone up as well. Now, I have no knowledge of the details of what the Government intend to do at Port Colborne. I never saw the plan until to-night. But we who live around Port Colborne know that time and again vessels have gone by Port Colborne simply because there was no protection for them in the form of a breakwater. The idea of the Government is to have at least the beginning of a breakwater, and have it out sufficiently far to protect any of those large lake vessels that come down there; so that when Port Colborne harbour is dredged out to twenty feet, vessels can come in there safely and not run on the rocks, as many have done in the past. Had I time I could go more into details regarding the all-water route as superior to any other route that has been spoken of for carrying the trade of the North-west. The wise men in years gone by knew that by cutting a canal through the Niagara peninsula to join the waters of the great lakes with Lake Ontario and the St. Lawrence route, they would provide the cheapest best and swiftest route; and if our Government in the past had been alive to the true condition of affairs, and had put the Welland Canal into an up-to-date condition, and Port Colborne harbour in the position it ought to be, I think Buffalo would not now be carrying 50 per cent of the lake traffic, but the Welland Canal would be getting it.

Mr. McNEILL. I am sorry that any words of mine should seem to be in any way opposing the scheme which my hon. friend is so energetically in favour of. His speech, I think, has been in favour of the larger scheme entirely, and that is something which I think this committee should be very careful about committing itself to. Now, with regard to what we have before us, because we have not got the larger scheme before us, I want to call the attention of the Minister to the fact that the memorandum or report of the engineer which he referred to a little while ago, is a condemnation of what is proposed. I do not see how it can be regarded as anything else when an engineer of the Government says that it is a thing of "some utility." What words could be used which would condemn it more strongly with faint praise? It is "damning it with faint praise" to say that an expenditure of $150,000 would result in "some utility." I think in the face of such a report as that this vote should not be asked for.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In reference to the remarks made by the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton), I may say that I entirely agree with him, that an expenditure of this character should not be entered upon by the hon. Minister of Public Works without the gravest consideration. I am quite satisfied that the Minister will give it every consideration. Under any circumstances, I do not hesitate to say that the Government ought not to be committed, and Parliament cannot be committed, to any expenditures beyond the sums which have been submitted to Parliament in these Estimates. If the larger scheme is as good a scheme as some hon. gentlemen say it is, that is a question which the Government must deal with in the future, if they deem the scheme worthy of consideration. While I say this, I may say that I am warmly in sympathy with all that has been said regarding our utilizing the St. Lawrence route, and that we should not hesitate to engage in liberal expenditures to draw the trade to Canada which is now going away from her. But if these are correct views, I think we can safely trust Parliament to sustain the Government in what is deemed fair and reasonable in carrying out any larger scheme. Let us not be carried away; let us not be scared by this large scheme, on which several engineers have reported. That scheme contemplated the building of two breakwaters, of twelve docks costing $1,600,000, dredging to the amount of $2,750,000, the building of three elevators at a cost of $450,000, and an allowance of $250,000 for engineering. The Government do not propose to commit themselves to that scheme.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not sit at the present Council table, and I do not know what took place there.

Mr. McCLEARY.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman has sat at Council.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I want to show, by a series of consecutive ideas, just how this thing happened. The Government come down with a vote of $150,000. There is not a single report of an engineer, in the first place. Does the hon. Minister mean to tell me that Council ever passed a vote of $150,000 without some report of an engineer, showing that the work was to be of great utility? My impression is, that the wording of the memorandum which the engineer has prepared for the Minister is, as the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) has said, a condemnation of the proposal. Is this committee to vote $150,000 for constructing a piece of a breakwater out into the lake near Port Colborne because the engineer says it is going to be of some utility? This phase of it never was considered at Council. There is no report, and there is no plan.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Oh, yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The plan is for the whole scheme. The report is for the big scheme, and the information is in regard to the big scheme; but as to this, there is not one jot or tittle of calculation, and not one line of a plan. How did it get in here? It got in here in this way: When the hon. Minister of Public Works went away, he had adopted the big scheme: he was prepared to propose a great deal bigger vote than this. We are told that this vote, in his absence, was cut down a good deal. I do not know whether it is true or not, but it is certain that a little piece of the work is brought down here with a report on a big work and a plan for a big work, and it looks to me as if a little piece had been taken from the big vote, and this little piece of the big work is brought down to this committee without any further evidence than the mere expression of the engineer that it will be of some utility. That is the ground upon which the hon. Minister of Finance asks us to vote this money, when I believe, if the information given to me by a practical man is correct, that the putting down of that breakwater there, without completing it to Sugar Loaf Point, and without doing the rock excavation on that 7-acre area, and making a harbour of refuge, will be a waste of money. I am not opposed to this vote because it is Port Colborne harbour. I am as much interested in that section of the country as I am in the other, and I do not want to detract from the trade of the Welland Canal. If the hon. Minister can assure me, from the report of the engineer, that this money is going to be well spent, and that it is going to give an advantage to Port Colborne which will likely enable her to secure the shipping trade of the lakes, I will support it. If the hon. gentleman cannot give us that assurance, he ought not to ask the committee to pass this amount. *

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am afraid the hon. gentleman has been giving us some memories of what has happened in Council in his days. I can assure him that his description of what happens in Council now is entirely an imaginary one.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How is it that we have a plan for the big work, and no plan for the little work?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The engineer sent up there some months ago made a report on an elaborate scheme, and accompanied it with a full plan.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And that was practically adopted by the hon. Minister of Public Works.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. It has neither been adopted by the Minister nor endorsed by the chief engineer of the Public Works Department. It was a report made by a divisional engineer, assisted by one of the officers of the department. It would be quite possible to take a portion of that scheme and adopt it. It does not follow because a report is made proposing the construction of twelve docks, that you must adopt the whole of the scheme.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Where is your plan?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The plan does not necessarily adopt any particular number of docks. The hon. gentleman has argued that the proposed breakwater is useless, and that it commits us to a scheme. That is an entirely erroneous method of argument. But let us assume that he is correct respecting the utility of the proposed breakwater; let us assume that the breakwater is only moderately useful.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Of some utility.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Suppose it turns out that in the form proposed it is of no utility at all, and that you have to complete the breakwater. You can complete the breakwater for $360,000 at the most, and thus, with an additional expenditure of $200,000, you would have a complete and perfect harbour of refuge.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Does the hon. gentleman say that he is going to get a harbour of refuge?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If, after you build this breakwater for $150,000, that does not make it useful, and an additional expenditure of $200,000 will be necessary to complete it, it is certain that you will have a useful harbour of refuge.

Mr. MONTAGUE. There will be no harbour of refuge.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am told that there will be an ample harbour of refuge, with a minimum of 13 to 14 feet of water, and 20 feet of water at certain places.

Mr. MONTAGUE. You have that depth of water now. You want a greater depth so as to get larger vessels in.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. With the appropriations that are now made, without one dollar of extra appropriation, we will have a 20-foot channel into the Welland Canal, so that large vessels can come in. We know that the lack of that channel is driving business away from the St. Lawrence route.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman, as the hon. gentleman has been kind enough to refer to me, I will say that the Minister of Finance is perfectly correct in his contention because a thousand feet of that breakwater could be put down in 22 feet 4 inches.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether the hon. Minister of Finance is much interested in getting these Estimates through or not. For my part I am very anxious that we should make some progress. I am afraid that all the hammering that has been done has not convinced the Minister of Finance that he is embarking upon a doubtful scheme and one which is very expensive in so far as he chooses to go or says he chooses to go and which may be tremendously expensive if he goes the whole length. There is one instructive commentary on this whole business. Shortly before the Minister of Public Works left for Europe, I noticed an interview of his in one of the papers in which he made an extended reference to great works which were to be undertaken and carried out at Port Colborne. He mentioned two points, one was Montreal and the other was Port Colborne, and he left the impression on my mind and I think the impression is a fair one, and on the public mind, that the Government was going to undertake an immense work at Port Colborne and an immense work at the port of Montreal, and that both of those were meant to capture the trade for the St. Lawrence route. He dwelt upon the Port Colborne one especially. I do not know what the hon. gentleman may say by way of defence of his $150,000 or $200,000 project, but here are the circumstances. The Minister of Finance asks a vote of $150,000 and a total expenditure of $250,000 or $300,000 for a breakwater. When he comes to deploy before the House his reasons, and they must be good reasons to ask for a vote of that amount of money, he has nothing in the shape of a report, nothing in the shape of a plan, but the report and the plan upon which five and a half million dollars are to be expended, nothing else. If they only intend to make the breakwater and do what the Minister of Finance proposed to do, when he comes with that vote to the House, why has he not his report and his plans with regard to that. The only report and plans he has is with regard to the $5,500,000 expenditure. Taken in connection with the interview of the Minister of Public Works, with his statement over and over that this is a Government which is going to capture the trade for the St. Lawrence, with his special interview with reference to the big works at Port Colborne, I am convinced that the Minister of Public Works proposed the idea that there should be an immense harbour, detailed as in this plan at Port Colborne, and that, in connection with the great improvements in Montreal, should do what he has been talking so much about, capture the trade of the lakes for the St. Lawrence route. I want to warn this Government—I do not think they should need to be warned—that when they undertake the work which private wealth and private enterprise is able to undertake and will undertake and ought to undertake in this country, to build the elevators and make the facilities for commerce in this country, through and through, they are, to use the western phrase, biting off more than they can chew. This country will not sustain them in the end, and this country is not prepared to pay the bills and it is unnecessary that they should. Why the very moment that you undertake this work and spend your $700,000, and that is what it will amount to, $360,000 for dredging and $360,000 for a breakwater, if you are going to carry it out as my hon. friend says—that is $750,000 that you are in for. Do you mean to say that you can stop at that and hold yourselves up to this country as undertaking a thing and stopping before you have carried it through to its fulfilment. It is not a harbour of refuge that you are after for vessels of small depth, but what you are after is to capture the heavy vessel traffic. Can you stop when you find that that work does not capture your heavy vessels? I do not believe this House can approve what you propose to do according to the Minister of Finance. You must get sufficient depth and area in order to make the transfer from heavy vessels and capture that trade.

What, then, have you to do? You have to have greater berth room; you have to have what that breakwater was meant for, the scooped-out harbour, which is going to cost millions; and you have to have your docks and elevators. Private capital will not go in when the Government is so eager to do this work itself. Once you have made this beginning by spending $750,000, there will be a call for more than a little floating elevator. The Government will have to build elevators there, and if you build elevators there you will have to build them elsewhere. The Government are going into a business to which there is absolutely no end in this country, and there is no need of it. A certain amount of Government assistance is right in a young country; but there comes a period when the wealth of the country in aggregated forms is able to take hold of these enterprises and carry them out and manage them with private capital. The

Mr. FOSTER.

Government ought not to undertake that branch of industry. But it is reaching out here and there. The jaunty indifference with which the Prime Minister the other night proposed to expend $70,000 for a wharf where there was no water, no inhabitants and no business, and the jaunty way in which we undertake the beginnings of what will prove to be millions of expenditure at Port Colborne, without a single commercial report before the Government or this House as to what they expect to capture, only shows the idea that these gentlemen have in regard to these expenditures. Where is the expert testimony and report that even if you had these facilities you would capture that traffic? Why, Sir, the Minister of Railways and Canals and the Minister of Public Works are dead in love with the Parry Sound connection. The Minister of Public Works has been holding it up sky-high as the great route which will take the wheat trade of the North-west. How many routes are we going to have? And here is an item in these estimates, $10,000, for the survey of the Georgian Bay Canal, which the Minister of Railways and Canals proposes to go into. Are we going to commence these $5,000,000 expenditures at every point of the compass, one route competing with the other? It appears to me that we are going into matters without sufficient consideration. I would like to see the expert testimony; I would like to have the business calculations to show that if you had these works done at Port Colborne, we can reasonably hope to capture that trade against these other different routes. I cannot help thinking that the proposed work is of no use except as a small bit of that magnificent scheme which the people of this country will be called upon to undertake, involving an expenditure of $5,000,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman opened his remarks by expressing the opinion that the Government did not require to be warned in the direction in which he spoke, and yet he immediately followed by pointing out what the Government were embarking on, and showing the committee that the Government did require to be very seriously warned before embarking on this expenditure. Now, I would like to say to the hon. gentleman that the members of the Government—a portion of them, at all events, and I will not include myself in the category—are capable of thinking these questions out, probably, as thoroughly and as successfully as the hon. gentleman. This Government are not likely to embark on tremendous undertakings without foreseeing what they will lead to, or without being able to realize as fully and adequately as the hon. gentleman, the character and extent of the burdens they will impose on the country. The hon. gentleman is criticising the present vote, I will not say without information, but without having thought the subject out, and without really knowing what the facts are, and what the objects are, and what it is possible to obtain by the moderate expenditure proposed. Now, I have myself given this subject of the improvements at Port Colborne harbour some little consideration. Ever since I had the opportunity of visiting Port Colborne some few years ago, I have been impressed with the importance and the necessity of something being done which up to the present has not been done, for the purpose of securing to us a portion, at least, and we hope a considerable portion, of the grain traffic of the west which hitherto has found its way to Buffalo; largely because we have had no facilities whatever at Port Colborne. My hon. friend knows that a vote was asked by me as Minister of Railways and Canals for an expenditure at Port Colborne. He was told what the object of that expenditure was. He was told that the purpose was to deepen the entrance to the canal a most necessary and important work, if we are to afford the possibility of vessels of a large draft bringing their cargoes to the Welland Canal at all. Unless that canal entrance is deepened, we exclude absolutely and completely the admission of that class of vessels which for years past and up to the present have been carrying the great bulk of the tonnage of grain from the west. We propose not only to deepen the entrance to that canal, but we propose, also, to afford, in connection with that work, as we may very well do, berth facilities for those vessels, at which they can safely lie, and lying there, can transfer their cargoes to the smaller barges of 14 feet draught, which will be used for carrying the grain to Montreal. That is the object we have in view in that appropriation in connection with the Department of Railways and Canals. Mr. Thompson, who has been for many years familiar with the working of that canal, who is as thoroughly acquainted with it as any man on the River St. Lawrence, who has studied the situation carefully, and knows the requirements of the trade of Port Colborne, tells us what we have to compete against, and what facilities we have to furnish in order to make a successful competition and capture a portion of that trade. Mr. Thompson, in the many conversations which I have had with him on this subject, has assured me in the strongest possible terms, that there were two things, and only two things that we would require at the outset in order to demonstrate that we would be able to capture any portion of that traffic. We shall have to run out our jetty pier sufficiently far into the lake to get deeper water; and, as part of the extension of the pier, we have to provide a couple of berths at which vessels of a greater draught and carrying the larger tonnage, will be able to lie and discharge their cargoes. He thinks that at the outset as an experimental work, to demonstrate whether or not we can offer sufficient inducements to a portion of those larger vessels to bring their cargoes to Port Colborne, this will suffice. Then, there is another thing which he says is absolutely necessary. You have to afford protection at the entrance to that canal, and to these wharfs and piers which we propose to construct and furnish. In all stormy and rough weather, vessels cannot lie there unless there is a breakwater protection, and it is Mr. Thompson's opinion, which he has expressed to me over and over again, that if we build a breakwater at the points indicated on this plan we are to afford the protection required.

Mr. BENNETT. Assuming that you had to-day a state of affairs prevailing at Port Colborne that steamboats carrying 250,000 or even 300,000 bushels, could discharge there, what is it assumed that they could discharge into—steam vessels going through to Montreal or tow barges—and then what lessening of freight would there be as compared with the present system of discharging a 75,000 bushel boat at Kingston into a 20,000 bushel boat.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have two classes of vessels now carrying grain—the vessels drawing about 18 or 20 feet of water which are going to Buffalo, and the vessels of a smaller draft, drawing only 14 feet or thereabouts, which can go through the Welland and the St. Lawrence canals to Montreal. The result of our deepening of these canals, it is hoped, will be a very great increase in the fleet of vessels of the lesser draft, and possibly they may in the future, if the expectation of the shippers on the lakes are realized, displace the larger draft vessels entirely. But for the present we have to contemplate that for many years to come, these heavy draught vessels will carry a considerable portion of the grain; and if they do, it is necessary, in order that we may get a portion of that trade, that we should provide them the necessary berth accommodation at Port Colborne, or we will not get them at all. The expectation is that if we get these vessels, they will transfer at the berths we propose to construct there into vessels only drawing 14 feet.

Mr. BENNETT. Steam or tow?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Probably both. They will utilize the vessels as they become available. Whichever is decided to be the most economical class of vessels to construct will be constructed in the future. Both tow and steam barges are being used on the lakes, and both not drawing more than 14 feet of water will use our canals and go to Montreal. The purposes which the engineers in my department have in view is to be able to make an experiment and fair trial, by a moderate and reasonable expenditure, in the first place, in the deepening of the entrance and providing an additional length of pier, the placing of two wharfs at which these vessels may lie, drawing any depth of water, and upon one side you will have the deep draught vessels to unload into the barges which will lie on the other side of the pier. To accomplish that a large expenditure is not necessary. If the development is as great as we hope, possibly a larger expenditure will have to be made in the future, but we would not be justified in making that expenditure now, and the Government is in no sense committed to any larger expenditure in that connection. We will undertake no enterprise in connection with the improvement of Port Colborne which ought to be undertaken by private enterprise. We only propose to do that which private enterprise cannot be expected to do. Could it be expected for a moment that the improvement of the entrance to the canal would be taken up by private enterprise, or the placing of the two piers I have spoken of, or the building of the breakwater? None of these things come within the scope of private energy, but necessarily, in our country and the United States come within the duty and responsibility of the state or Federal Government. Now, we have before us the idea that a breakwater of at least 1,000 or 1,200 feet, to start with, will be most useful and effective as a protection to the entrance of this canal. It may be that we will find that a further extension of that may be desirable but no one who knows anything about the condition, as I am assured by Mr. Thompson, will say that a breakwater of 1,000 or 1,200 feet, properly placed will not be most useful as a protection to that harbour. If it should transpire in the future that the extension of the breakwater to the shore would be necessary for the development of business and in the needs of business in dredging the harbour and excavating it, and making it of a uniform depth of 20 or 22 feet, building further additional piers, all this may be done, but no Government would ask Parliament to do that unless it had seen, as the result of the experiments made, that the development in that direction would justify it in taking on and incurring this additional expense. Nothing could be more reasonable than the proposition made in connection with this work, and I am glad to know that my hon. friend from Welland has addressed himself to this point and given the committee the benefit of his judgment, which corresponds entirely with that of the Government in this regard, except that he proposes that we might go further. I have no doubt, from the information I have received from those competent to give an opinion, that the expenditure will be a most valuable inducement to an expansion of our grain trade.

Mr. BENNETT. Will the $350,000 referred to for the dredging dredge a channel 450 feet wide from the deep water in the lake into the proposed cribwork or a point in the canal.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We do not propose to dredge to a depth of 20 or 22 feet into the canal, but only to dredge to a distance sufficient to enable those vessels to reach our piers. We are throwing out the jetty with the piers attached to it, it will get out into moderately deep water, and there will not be a great deal of dredging required except for the entrance, and we are not considering that it will be at all necessary to carry the deep dredging into the entrance beyond these points.

Mr. BENNETT. The other accommodation would have to be constructed on the proposed cribwork?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, not on the breakwater, but on the extension pier that is in connection with the appropriation which I have made.

Mr. FOSTER. How many feet of berth room?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We would have two piers about 520 feet in length each. I can assure the committee that this question has been very carefully considered. I have the plans in my department, and am about to ask for tenders for this work. It has been considered with an eye to the most economical expenditure, and with a view of getting the best results by way of experiment with the least cost.

Mr. CLARKE. Might I ask the Minister what it will cost to have this sandstone reef removed that the member for Lincoln says lies outside the harbour?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is not proposed to disturb that shoal at all in dredging the entrance to the canal. That shoal is to be the initial point for the planting of the breakwater, and from that point it runs in towards the shore.

Mr. CLARKE. I understood from the hon. member for Lincoln that it would be necessary to remove that shoal.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It would be necessary, if you are going to make a harbour of the interior.

Mr. GIBSON. I was on a delegation, along with Capt. Carter and others, that came down from Port Colborne to point out to the Minister of Railways and Canals and other hon. gentlemen present at that interview, that in order to make the entrance into Port Colborne safe, this shoal or ledge off Sugar Loaf Point would have to be dredged to a depth of 22 feet of water. As I have said before, I have never given the matter a thought from that day to this, until I saw the plans to-night. It is possible that the plans proposed by the Department of Public Works and that proposed by the Department of Railways may be of a different character; but the plan that has been submitted to-night, and the one we have been discussing, is the plan, I understand, that is furnished by the Department of Public Works. The Minister of Railways and Canals says to-night that he proposes in this expenditure to provide two jetties for the purpose of receiving the larger sized vessels into Port Colborne harbour at this Point. The question occurred to my mind: How is he going to get over the Sugar Loaf shoal with a vessel drawing 18 or 19 feet of water in stormy weather, because there is not more than 21 feet at this point. In stormy weather these vessels will rise and fall 8 or 10 feet. So, the Minister has forgotten the fact that the larger craft cannot in stormy weather get in without the removal of that shoal.

Mr. McCARTHY. This transportation question is one which the House can well afford to consider for some time. There are a great number of contending routes, and as to which is the best one to adopt, the Government has to decide. But the Government has also to decide upon what expenditure it will make for the purpose of improving the routes which at present carry our freight and grain, until the larger scheme is adopted. Until this evening I was not aware that such extensive plans had been made, and that a report had been prepared in respect to Port Colborne harbour. It would appear from that report, as stated by the member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague), if that scheme is adopted by the Government, that there will be a necessary expenditure in the neighbourhood of $5,000,000 or $5,500,000. Now, that of course is a very large expenditure, compared with which the sum we are asked to vote to-night is a mere drop in the bucket. As I understand the proposition of the Minister the vote asked is only for the purpose of protecting that harbour for the present. Now, I do not think it is necessary at the present time, notwithstanding what the Minister has just said, to obtain a depth of water for the admission of vessels of 20 feet. Twenty-foot vessels cannot go through the Welland Canal. My hon. friend from Welland (Mr. McCleary) talks about local feeling. I suppose it is not because he has a local feeling that he has addressed the committee this evening. I admit that, so far as I am concerned, I have local feeling, both as being interested in the city of Toronto and in the town of Collingwood, which is in my constituency. Now, if these 20-foot vessels have to go into the harbour of Port Colborne and there discharge, we can look at the question from that stand-point, and it only requires consideration from that stand-point. That means transshipment, and in that case Port Colborne would be in no better position than Collingwood, while the route via the Port of Collingwood would be 278 miles shorter than via Port Colborne. I rise at present for the purpose of impressing upon this committee that before they adopt any such scheme as the one which has been submitted in that report, they should well consider the other routes which are asking for consideration. The route which, I submit, is the shortest, the route which is the least expensive, is via the port of Collingwood by means of the construction of a railway from that town to Toronto. If there ever was a natural course by which freight could be carried, it is across that narrow neck of land which lies between the Georgian Bay and Lake Ontario, namely, the region between Toronto and Collingwood. The distance is only 70 miles; it is an easy country in which to build a road, and the expenditure would not be, according to the estimates, anything like $5,000,000. Now, the route via Port Colborne cannot be advocated as an all-water route, so far as 20-foot vessels are concerned. At the present time only 14-foot vessels can go through the Welland Canal; so that, if we are going to have a 20-foot route, the question is, whether you are going to spend enough money to deepen the Welland Canal to 20 feet, and deepen that harbour so that 20-foot vessels can get in. If you are not, then the other route is the one which should receive the consideration of the Government. But there is another reason. I am not opposing the present grant, if it is for the purpose of keeping up the efficiency of the Welland Canal, because that is necessary at the present time. But when we extend ourselves, as apparently it is the intention of the Government to do, in order to obtain a transportation route which will be all-Canadian, then we must look about to see which is the better one. Now, what has been the effect of the Welland Canal route? It has been of greater advantage to American vessels than it has been to Canadian vessels.

You find that in the year 1897, as appears in the report of the Department of Railways and Canals, of east-bound freight, Canadian vessels carried 338,519 tons, and United States vessels 687,939 tons. And west-bound freights, Canadian vessels carried 7,458 tons, and United States vessels 210,834. This is an object lesson, but we must have a knowledge of the coasting laws between the two countries to apply and make it an object lesson. American vessels cannot carry freight from a Canadian port to a Canadian port. Nor can a Canadian vessel carry from an American port to an American port. If you have a better, shorter, cheaper route it would be the Canadian vessels that would carry the freight, and in that way you will build up that which ought to be built up, a Canadian inland marine. And if this be so, we can only do it in such a way as will have the effect to a large extent of preventing American competition and building up what will be known as an all-Canadian route. In that way also we will carry from American ports to Canadian ports. The shortest and the cheapest route from the western states and the Canadian North-west to the seaboard, is via the Georgian Bay, Collingwood and Toronto.

Mr. McCLEARY. Will the hon. gentleman give us some figures to show that this will be a cheaper route instead of merely making the statement?

Mr. McCARTHY. If the hon. gentleman will take Cockburn Island as a common point, he will find the figures to be as follows:—To the Detroit River 288 miles, down the Detroit River 18 miles, through Lake Erie 216, Welland Canal 22, Port Dalhousie to Kingston 148 miles, Kingston to Montreal 160 miles. total 852 miles. From Cockburn Island to Collingwood 193 miles, Collingwood to Toronto, by rail 70 miles, Toronto to Kingston 148 miles, Kingston to Montreal 160 miles, total 574 miles—which makes a difference in these two routes of 278 miles, and to this must be added the delay going through the canal. So it must be much cheaper as well as shorter. How long does it take to go through the Welland Canal?

Mr. McCLEARY. A boat will go through the Welland Canal in 15 or 16 hours. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. McCarthy) please tell us what his lake freight would be by Collingwood and railway from Collingwood to Toronto thence by water to Toronto?

Mr. McCARTHY. If the hon. gentleman will tell me what his lake freight rate is from Cockburn Island to Port Colborne, I will tell him what it is from Cockburn Island to Collingwood. It will be the same so far as the lake is concerned. The question is whether 70 miles of rail will be more expensive than the 278 miles of lake and river and the additional time lost in the canal, for the sending of it by rail from Collingwood to Toronto will be a much greater saving of time. Upon the figures of distances, it would be cheaper to go via Collingwood and Toronto. It cannot logically be otherwise. I am free to admit that water freight is cheaper than rail, but it must not be forgotten that we have only 70 miles of rail. At Port Colborne you have the same transshipment as you would have at Collingwood. I do not desire to detain the committee any longer, but I desired to lay before the Government and the committee the great advantages the Collingwood route has over all others. In view of the fact that this discussion has covered so much ground and so many other gentlemen have expressed their views, I felt that it was my duty, representing the constituency that I do, to lay these facts tersely before the committee.

Mr. SPROULE. The Minister of Railways and Canals has told us that Mr. Thompson was thoroughly acquainted with this locality and had given him the most minute information with regard to it, and upon that information the hon. Minister based the proposed work.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) understood me correctly when he said Mr. Thompson gave me my minute information. He gave me very clear and lucid statements of the nature of the works and the objects to be achieved.

Mr. SPROULE. Why, then, did not the Minister submit that information to the House?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am speaking of frequent conversations I had with Mr. Thompson.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Thompson gave the hon. Minister information regarding the work to be done under his own department?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, and what would be required in the way of a breakwater.

Mr. SPROULE. It occurred to me as desirable that we should have that information, because a great deal of the criticism upon this item would have been saved. I do not wish to be understood as opposing this item, except in this connection—if it is part of a larger scheme, and is likely to accomplish for the transportation of this country what the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Railways and Canals claim, I think we are justified in spending a large amount of money for that purpose. But I confess that I think the expenditure of this amount alone would be of very little use. I cannot lead myself to believe that, if this expenditure is made, vessels carrying 230,000 or 240,000 bushels would come in there and lay up. I do not think there would be room; and I do not think there would be a chance to get in. Then, if it is intended that the cargoes of these large vessels shall be transferred to smaller ones without floating elevators, I can only say that the cost will be so great as to make the scheme entirely impracticable. Unless it is to be of some substantial benefit, I do not see why we should vote this money. I agree with every word that fell from the lips of the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton). I think there is no justification for the expenditure unless it can be shown, and clearly shown, that some substantial benefit will accrue in increasing the transportation of grain from the west through Canadian channels. I do not think that has been shown. I agree with the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) that probably this is merely a portion of the expenditure of the larger scheme taken up by the Minister of Public Works, and he is utilizing it for the purpose of justifying the expenditure to-day.

He is taking a portion of the expenditure that was intended to be made by the hon. Minister of Public Works before he left the country, and cutting it up for this work, but he accompanies this vote with no plans and no explanations that would justify the House in making the expenditure that is proposed. What is that expenditure? It is $520,000 at the lowest estimate. That is a large amount of money, but when we consider what the country would gain, substantially it would not be so much. This vote means the commencement of an expenditure upon a work which, when completed, will amount to $5,000,000 or $6,000,000. That is a large expenditure, but it seems to me that it would be very inadvisable for us to commence with the expenditure of a smaller sum. If it were clearly shown that it was going to be of any substantial advantage I would be in favour of it, but as no information has been presented to this committee to show that this expenditure would be advantageous, I am opposed to it.

Mr. CLARKE. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to occupy the attention of the committee at any length, because I have not had the information as to the proposed scheme long enough before me to be able to master it. We should not expect the hon. Minister of Finance to be as well posted as the hon. Minister of Public Works in regard to a matter which is not in his own department, but I submit that it is due to the members of the committee, when a matter of such vital importance to the Dominion generally is involved, that the submission of the expenditure of such a large sum of money should not be delayed until the closing hours of the session. It is hardly fair to ask the committee to take into consideration a proposal in regard to which the information that has been vouchsafed to us, up to the present time, has been of the most scanty character. There is a marked difference of opinion amongst gentlemen who profess to know all the merits, or demerits, of this proposal. Reference has been made to this subject by an hon. gentleman in the Senate, who comes from the Welland district, and who knows, I presume, whereof he speaks, and who declares that not Port Colborne, but Port Maitland is the natural harbour; and it must not be forgotten that Port Maitland was the Imperial Government harbour years ago. If it is not inconsistent with the rules of the House, I may be permitted to quote some of the remarks which the hon. Senator McCallum made upon this subject. I do so, not to take up the time of the House or to offer any factious opposition to the scheme proposed by the hon. Minister of Public Works but rather to draw attention to the very wide divergence of opinion which exists as to the best national transportation route for the Dominion. Mr. McCallum says:

Port Maitland harbour was the proper harbour for the entrance to the canal, and for this reason: to-day there is 17 feet of water at the entrance to Port Maitland harbour, and for miles up the river you have 20 or 30 feet. There is a bar outside of the harbour for a short distance. Probably it would take a dredging machine a couple of days to remove it. I tell hon. gentlemen that for fifty-four years Port Maitland harbour has not cost the Government of this country one cent for dredging, and I defy contradiction.

Mr. GIBSON. How much traffic has gone there?

Mr. CLARKE. I will come to that in a minute. We are speaking of the probable cost of Port Maitland harbour. Of course, I am not vouching for the accuracy of these statements. I cannot give any estimates as to the cost of the construction of the proposed works, but, of course, when I have read the statement, if I am permitted to read it, of Senator McCallum, a gentleman who has had a great deal of experience, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gibson) can assume the responsibility of contradicting the statements made by Mr. McCallum if he thinks they are wide of the mark. The hon. senator proceeds to say:

There is a sandy beach of four miles with good outside and clay bottom, and, as I have said, with a very little expense you can get 22 or 24 feet of water there all the time. * * * The consideration of a proper entrance to the canal is very important, because seven months of the year the larger portion of the trade will go by our canal. If it does not, our policy heretofore has been all wrong, and the sooner we find it out the better. But we do not help it if we build a breakwater to raise the water over the rock bottom at Port Colborne. It will cost a great deal more to do that than it will to dig the canal from Port Maitland to the junction of the Welland Canal.

This is a statement which, I submit, has been made by a gentleman who has had a great deal of experience in that section of the country. He knows whereof he speaks and his opinion ought to be of some value in enabling us to arrive at a decision.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Twenty miles away from the entrance.

Mr. CLARKE. I may read further from this hon. gentleman's opinion.

Mr. GIBSON. We have read them ourselves.

Mr. CLARKE. If the committee does not desire the information I will not trouble it by reading any more.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not interrupt the hon. gentleman.

Mr. CLARKE. I know the hon. Minister did not interrupt me, but I was interrupted by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson).

I know that it would be necessary to dig 18 miles of canal and enlarge the feeder. It could be done. I have made a few figures in reference to it, and I know something about canals and dredging. They have placed $350,000 in the Estimates for Port Colborne harbour, and I know that they could dig that 18 miles of canal much cheaper than going to Port Colborne. You can do it for $650,000 to $700,000. If the Government wish to do it, and do it in haste, they can set the dredges to work to-morrow. They can advertise for tenders and have it finished for next spring's navigation. It is the easiest digging I know of anywhere in Canada. There is no rock anywhere, and any one can see what it will cost. It would have to be dug 5 yards deep, 18 miles long, 100 foot bottom and some of the bottom of the feeder is now 2 feet below the lake level, and for 2 miles out of the 18 miles the route is through the Grand River swamp, which is from 3 to 4 feet down below Lake Erie's level. I know these facts, and, therefore, I say that we should be careful not to waste money in that way.

I take the opportunity of drawing the attention of the committee to this fact, because it would seem that, even if it is determined to pin our faith to the Welland Canal as the national route, it shows that there is a wide divergence of opinion amongst those who profess to know something about the matter as to whether we should stick to Port Colborne or adopt Port Maitland as the entrance of the canal. But I have a memorandum here, prepared by a gentleman who has had a great deal of experience in regard to this question of transportation. I refer to Mr. Kivas Tully, who has been the engineer of the Ontario Government for a great many years, a gentleman who has had wide experience, and who believes that the best route to be adopted for the proposed national grain route would be established by the construction of a ship canal or a line of railway between Collingwood and Toronto. The memorandum which I have before me says that as far back as 1855 a convention of delegates from the leading cities in the United States and Canada declared that—

The immense trade from the North-west demands the immediate construction of a canal. * * * "The estimated cost of a ship canal for vessels of 1,000 tons burden," Mr. Kivas Tully says, "is $22,170,000," and an Act was passed for its construction in 1856, but owing to the difficulty of procuring the necessary capital, the project was abandoned at that time. It was subsequently revived, and a Select Committee of the Legislative Assembly in 1857 reported: "Should the system of granting public lands in aid of public works of a national character be continued, your committee respectfully submit that no works yet projected in Canada has equal claims with the Toronto and Georgian Bay to a liberal grant." This resolution was afterwards affirmed by a Select Committee of the Legislative Assembly in 1864.

When the late Capt. Eads (an eminent hydraulic engineer) was in Toronto in 1881, he examined the plans and model of the ship canal, and though satisfied as to its practicability, he made the following remark: "If lake navigation is to hold its own, you must fight railroads with railroads."

Mr. CLARKE.

In 1884, Capt. Eads brought forward his project of a ship railway across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, which would have been, probably, carried out but for his death in 1887.

The question of a ship railway between Lake Ontario and Georgian Bay was submitted to him, and his reply as follows:—

I have carefully examined the profile and route for the proposed ship railway from Georgian Bay to Toronto, and from the result of your surveys over the route I am not only satisfied that the ship railway is entirely practicable over it, but that it furnishes one of the most remarkably favourable locations for such a construction of which I have any knowledge.

In a previous letter Capt. Eads stated:

I am glad you are considering the ship railway matter which you brought to my attention when I was in Toronto in 1881. It is undoubtedly the proper solution of that problem.

In 1874, Mr. David Blain, ex-M.P. for West York, procured an Act for the construction of an air line between the Georgian Bay and Lake Ontario, which was renewed in 1892, as a ship railway, and the time was extended. The cost of a single track between Collingwood and Toronto would be $3,000,000, and the distance would be reduced by the construction of this air line to 74 miles. Now, Mr. Chairman, the Toronto Board of Trade, who have been giving a great deal of attention to this matter, prepared a memorandum which has been submitted to the Government, drawing their attention to the feasibility and practicability of constructing this Collingwood-Toronto air line railway as a national road for the conveyance of grain from the North-west to the seaboard. I might draw the attention of the committee to the fact that the Government is now engaged in deepening the Collingwood harbour in order to make it a first-class harbour. They are spending a very large sum in Collingwood harbour, and this air line from Collingwood to Toronto would be the complement of that expenditure. I further draw attention to the fact, notwithstanding what my hon. friend from Welland has said, that Mr. Kivas Tully has declared that the Welland Canal can never be made a national route for the transport of grain from the North-west to the seaboard; and whether his report is right or wrong, he has been firm in his opinion and he has not seen fit to change that opinion which he has held for 40 years.

Mr. McCLEARY. If the hon. gentleman has pinned his faith to a report of forty years ago, held by Mr. Kivas Tully, I do not think it is an up-to-date opinion. The hon. gentleman will remember that there has been an international deep waterway commission appointed between Canada and the United States. The United States Government commission is going on. They have reported to their own Government that the Welland Canal route is the only proper route. It is a natural route for the trade of the North-west. That is an up-to-date report made by live men in conjunction with the commission appointed by this Government.

Mr. CLARKE. I am glad, Mr. Chairman, to get the information which the hon. member for Welland (Mr. McCleary) has given us. Mr. Kivas Tully expressed this opinion as far back as 1859, and still adheres to it. Judging by past experience, it is reasonable to believe that the bulk of the western trade, having passed the St. Clair River and reached the eastern end of Lake Erie will find its way to New York by way of Buffalo. The diversion must be further west than Buffalo. Mr. Tully, in 1888, did not hesitate to repeat that opinion. In a letter addressed to the Hon. John Beverly Robinson, late Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario, he stated :

I cannot avoid expressing my belief that the enlargement of the Welland Canal will not divert the western trade from the Erie Canal through the St. Lawrence to the Atlantic Ocean

The canal statistics, since the enlargement, clearly prove Mr. Tully's statement to be correct. The completion of the Ottawa, Arnprior and Parry Sound Railway further proves that the trade can be diverted, as 10,765,000 bushels of grain were carried to Montreal over 383 miles of railway in 1898. The Grand Trunk Railway carried 6,000,000 bushels from Midland to Montreal—over 451 miles of railway, and a large quantity from Owen Sound, over 495 miles of railway. The Canadian Pacific Railway also carried a large quantity of grain over 460 miles, from Owen Sound to Montreal. Now, Mr. Chairman, if the above railways can divert a large portion of the western trade, a direct line, with only 74 miles of railway, the distance between Collingwood and Toronto, and 308 miles of water during the season of navigation, the distance between Toronto and Montreal, should divert a much larger portion with greater benefit to Toronto and Montreal. The principal object to be attained by the construction of an independent air line from Toronto to Georgian Bay would be transshipment at Toronto, during the season of navigation, thereby lessening the cost of transportation. Now, Mr. Chairman, just let me say one word in reply to the hon. member for Welland (Mr. McCleary). He says that the international convention which has been called, has declared in favour of the Welland Canal route. Mr. Kivas Tully draws my attention to the statement contained in the report of the Minister of Railways and Canals for 1898. The Minister says in his report :

As having an interesting bearing on the question of canal vs. railway transport of grain from the west, it may be noted that whereas grain and pease passed down to Montreal through the St. Lawrence canals to the extent of 560,254 tons, an increase of 64,386 tons over the previous year, the quantity carried to Montreal amounted to 228,586 tons, an increase of 74,869 tons. The quantity of grain carried to tide-water on the New York state canals was 569,362 tons, a decrease of 183,677 tons ; while the quantity carried by the railways of the state amounted to 4,132,740 tons, an increase of 267,980 tons. Of the total freight, carried by the canals and railways of the state of New York respectively, amounting in 1897 to 43,711,512 tons, the proportion carried by the canals has fallen steadily from 68.9 per cent in 1859, and 47 per cent in 1869, to 8.3 per cent in 1897.

Now, I do not exaggerate, when I say that these are extraordinary figures, showing that notwithstanding the facilities that have been given to shippers, grain in much larger quantities is being conveyed from Buffalo to New York by rail than formerly. The quantity being conveyed by the canals is getting smaller every year, while the quantity being carried by railways is constantly increasing. If this statement is correct, I think it is due to the people of Canada that before the Government embark on an expenditure that may reach between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000, every means should be taken to ascertain what is the shortest and most feasible route from the North-west to the seaboard. The hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster) pointed to the fact that this Parliament has already voted $10,000 as its contribution towards making a survey of the water route from the Georgian Bay, via Lake Nipissing and the Ottawa River, to the St. Lawrence ; and in view of the repeated representations which have been made by eminent engineers, and by business men, represented in the Board of Trade of the city of Toronto, as to the feasibility, the practicability and the utility of an air-line from Collingwood to Toronto, and in view of the advantages that would be gained to the farmers of the west by the construction of an air-line, thus shortening the route from the west to the sea-board, it seems to me that it is premature for the Government to ask us, at this stage of the session and with the insufficient information of which we are possessed, to vote an initial sum which may eventually involve the Dominion of Canada in a very large expenditure, to perfect a route that may not be taken advantage of by the shippers and the business men of Canada after the money has been expended upon it. I do not mean to say that the route by Collingwood and Toronto is the ideal route. I would not even commit myself to the statement that it is the best route ; but, I repeat, there are so many different views entertained by men in different parts of the country as to which is the best route, that, in my humble judgment, we have not yet sufficient information before us to enable us to give this question of transportation the consideration which its importance deserves. For this reason I, for one, would be very glad to see the Government hold its hand for a year, and in the meantime appoint a commission of engineers from the Department of Public Works and the Department of Railways and Canals to inquire, not only into the feasibility of the Ottawa, Lake Nipissing and Georgian Bay route, but also into the feasibility of the Toronto and Colingwood route. I am sure that no factious opposition will be offered by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, if they are satisfied that the Government have selected the best route under all the circumstances; and it is because I believe we have not yet the necessary information before us to justify us in endorsing the expenditure of $150,000 as an initial expenditure on a very vast work at Port Colborne, that I have risen to make these remarks. I am satisfied that when the people of Canada are assured that the best route has been selected, they will unite in supporting the Government in asking for the money that may be necessary to complete that route at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. GIBSON. When I was interrupted by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), I was going on to say that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals has shown me the plan by which he intends to make a breakwater immediately—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not a breakwater. I have nothing to do with that.

Mr. GIBSON. That was his scheme—to make a breakwater at the point now occupied by the lighthouse. And if that plan were carried out, all the talk we have heard to-night might have been avoided. The whole discussion has been in favour of trying to obtain another route for carrying grain instead of the Welland Canal, as if that route were now only projected for the first time. Every gentleman is advocating a route of his own. Now, the case put by the Minister of Railways and Canals has been well considered, and it is only because the Government realize the importance of preventing the traffic of the Welland Canal being diverted to the railways and to the United States, that they are proposing this improvement. As the hon. Minister of Railways has pointed out, the making of a harbour of refuge of the 400 or 500 acres is something that may be well deferred for years to come. And the Minister of Finance pointed out, this work is not for the immediate future, but will only be done as the requirements of the country demand it. I, therefore, ask to be allowed to point out to the committee that, according to the plan held by the Department of Railways and Canals, provision can be made for two wharfs immediately to the south of the lighthouse, without entering upon the larger expenditure about which we have had so much discussion to-night.

Mr. MONTAGUE. We have now had the declaration of the Government that they do not propose to go on with the larger scheme, costing $5,000,000, but that their belief is, that the construction of this breakwater at an expenditure of $150,000 will be very valuable to navigation. Is the Minister now prepared to say that the money will not be spent for the construction of this breakwater, unless it is shown beyond reasonable doubt, by the report of competent engineers, that the construction of a breakwater will be of great value to navigation, altogether apart from its being a portion of the larger scheme?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think we are satisfied already that the work will be useful, and if so, we do not require the report of engineers to show that it will be.

Mr. MONTAGUE. If the work will be useful, you will have to have a report of an engineer to show that it is.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have the opinion of our engineer already on that point.

Mr. MONTAGUE. We have no report nor plan in regard to that. If the Government do not desire by the expenditure of this money to begin the big scheme, they will give us that promise.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Government do not desire to commit themselves to the expenditure of one dollar beyond the sums mentioned here. Nevertheless, I do not feel like giving my hon. friend a promise that we will not spend this money without getting a further report, because I think the reports before the committee are amply sufficient to justify the expenditure of the money. My hon. friend's great fear is that we are going into the larger scheme. I have given him the assurance that we are not, but if it has the merits some hon. gentlemen think it has, they will vindicate themselves and we will be open to come to the House at some future time and present the scheme when the House will judge it on its merits.

The committee rose, and reported progress.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 12.15 a.m. (Thursday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 3rd August, 1899.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FRANCHISE ACT—BILL RESPECTING.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I understand a Bill was promoted in the Senate making an amendment to the Franchise Act which amendment removed an anomaly in the Act as respects the province of Prince Edward Island, that it passed the Senate and has been sent to the House, but I see no notice of it on the paper.

The CLERK (Sir John Bourinot). No one has taken charge of it.

Mr. FOSTER. Who knows when it comes?

The CLERK. You will find it stated in the Journal.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope the First Minister will take the responsibility.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I will look at the Journal first.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I understood it was to go upon Government Orders?

The PRIME MINISTER. I shall have to consult the Minister of Justice about that, and I will give an answer to my hon. friend this afternoon.

Mr. MARTIN. I understood the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) was to take charge of the Bill.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 184)—from the Senate—to amend an Act passed at the present session of Parliament respecting the jurisdiction of the Exchequer Court as to railway debts.—(Sir Wilfrid Laurier.)

QUALIFICATIONS OF OFFICERS ATTENDING LATE MILITARY CAMP AT LÉVIS.

Mr. TYRWHITT (by Mr. Taylor) asked:

What percentage of regimental officers who attended the late camp at Lévis, had passed the qualifying examination?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). The percentage of regimental officers who attended the camp at Lévis and who had passed the qualifying examination, was 75 per cent.

POWERS OF CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY RESPECTING BRANCH LINES.

Mr. RUTHERFORD (by Mr. Richardson) asked:

Whether the Canadian Pacific Railway Company possesses the power to build branch lines from points on the main line to any point within the Dominion by depositing a plan of the same in the Department of Railways?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The question is one which involves the legal interpretation which is to be put upon the Act 44 Victoria, chapter 1, and in the absence of some judicial determination, perhaps it would hardly be proper for me to offer any decided opinion upon it.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I want to press upon my suave and generous friend the Minister of Railways and Canals, who was so flush with his offers of information last night, to bestir himself a little more. I find the chief engineer's report is not included in the papers he gave me, on the final progress estimates; and I want the Order in Council for the reference to Mr. Shanly. I have the original contract of 1888, and I have an indenture of 1891. I understood there was another of 1892, but I may be mistaken. It was stated here last night that there were contracts, in 1888, in 1891 or 1892 and in 1894?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There were two contracts, there might have been some confusion as to the dates. Two are all I am aware of. I will find out.

Mr. McNEILL. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) whether the work is to be let by tender?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I would so assume. The point has not been raised, but I take it for granted it will.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES

House again resolved itself into Committee of the Whole to consider certain proposed resolutions respecting the granting of the subsidies therein mentioned to the railway companies, and the construction of the railways also therein mentioned.

1. That it is expedient to authorize the Governor in Council to grant a subsidy of $3,200 per mile towards the construction of each of the undermentioned lines of railway (not exceeding in any case the number of miles hereinafter respectively stated) which shall not cost more on the average than $15,000 per mile for the mileage subsidized, and towards the construction of each of the said lines of railway not exceeding the mileage hereinafter stated, which shall cost more on the average than $15,000 per mile for the mileage subsidized, further subsidy beyond the sum of $3,200 per mile of 50 per centum on so much of the average cost of the mileage subsidized as shall be in excess of $15,000 per mile, such subsidy not exceeding in the whole the sum of $6,400 per mile. The expression "cost" used in this resolution means the actual, necessary and reasonable cost and shall include the amount expended upon any bridge, up to and not exceeding $25,000, forming part of the line of railway subsidized not otherwise receiving any bonus, but shall not include the cost of equipping the railway nor the cost of terminals and right of way of the railway in any city or incorporated town; and such actual, necessary and reasonable cost shall be determined by the Governor in Council, upon the recommendation of the Minister of Railways and Canals and upon the report of the Chief Engineer of Government Railways, certifying that he has made or caused to be made an inspection of the line of railway for which payment of subsidy is asked, and careful inquiry into the cost thereof, and that in his opinion the amount upon which the subsidy is claimed is reasonable and does not exceed the true, actual and proper cost of the construction of such railway, the lines of railway being as follows, that is to say :—

1. To the Central Ontario Railway Company, for an extension of their railway from, at or near either Coe Hill or Rathbun Station on the company's railway to, at or near Bancroft, not exceeding 21 miles, in lieu of the subsidy granted by 55-56 Victoria, chap. 2.—Revote.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). It may be desirable that a general statement, though perhaps a brief one, might be made at this stage rather than at any other, and what remarks I have to address to the committee in that connection I will address at this time.

The committee will have observed, if they have gone over the various items of the subsidy grants which are embraced in these resolutions, that they provide for railways in almost all portions of the Dominion, and embrace a total mileage, on the basis indicated here, which would involve a possible liability of $6,500,000 of money in round figures, or, to give a close and accurate statement, which involve a liability of $6,540,000.

Mr. FOSTER. That is revotes and all.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. In this amount there are included revotes of $1,647,120, and new votes of $4,893,175.

Mr. FOSTER. Will my hon. friend excuse me for interrupting him again, but we may as well have the information as we go on. In making up that calculation of $6,540,000, the hon. gentleman only makes an approximate estimate on the basis of $3,200 a mile. He takes no account of the percentage that may be added on the account of the difficulties of construction.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No; on the basis of $3,200 a mile.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the minimum sum.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have based it on the minimum estimate of $3,200 a mile, except as otherwise provided in these resolutions in only one case. This totals up, no doubt, in the aggregate, a larger sum than it has been usual and customary, at any session of Parliament to vote in this way. A comparison, however, with the appropriations and the subsidy votes which have been passed, from time to time, since this policy was adopted does not, I think, so far as amount is concerned, make an unfavourable showing as between those appropriations and the present resolutions if it is taken to be an unfavourable view that the amount should be large or that, it even should be larger than has been previously voted. I find that there were some years, and I refer now to the period between 1888 and 1894, when the total sum voted was in excess of $4,000,000, including, I admit, revotes, as well as new votes. The amounts voted in these years were as follows :

Mr. FIELDING.

1888.....	$1,297,104
1890.....	3,613,210
1891.....	765,474
1892.....	4,136,649
1894.....	4,658,560

The committee will observe that I have only mentioned here the amounts which have been granted by way of cash subsidies. I have made no reference whatever to the many millions of acres of lands, which, since the policy was adopted, have been granted by Parliament in aid of railways. The total acreage, including the original grant to the Canadian Pacific Railway, is 40,000,000 acres.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. Minister (Mr. Blair) has not given us the subsidies for 1895 and 1896.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There was nothing granted in 1895 and 1896. There were, of course, subsidy votes brought down but not granted, and I am only taking those that actually passed Parliament. I may take occasion, perhaps, to furnish, later on, if the subject is referred to, the total subsidy grants which it was proposed to make.

Mr. FOSTER. Which were brought down to the House ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, which Parliament was asked to grant, but which grant was not made. I have not included the land subsidies, but have confined my statements here exclusively to the moneys granted. It may be said, and it has been said, as I observe, in the public press, that this is an exorbitant sum to grant for such a purpose, and there has been a disposition, in that portion of the press, at all events, which is opposed to the Government, to regard the amount as proper to be added to the assumed liabilities of the Dominion, or the liabilities which the Government is asking Parliament to assume, and which are included in the general total which, I see, is made up as representing the financial obligation assumed at the suggestion of this Government to the sum of $60,000,000. I need not say to hon. gentlemen, who have had experience in the past, that it would be unfair and exceedingly inaccurate to put forward such a statement at all as representing the sum of the fixed, or likely to be fixed, liability of the Dominion. We know, as a matter of fact, that ever since money subsidies have been granted by Parliament, sums have been voted, year after year, largely in excess of the amounts which are called for under such appropriations. I have not made a close calculation in regard to the proportion between the amounts of these subsidies which have been voted and the amounts which have been taken up, but, I think, I am well within the mark when I say that of all the subsidy grants which have been made, from time to time by Parliament, not one-half of the amounts have materialized, or which the Government, after they have passed Parliament, has been called upon to make good. The result is that, while Parliament is asked, through these grants to assume a liability, and while there is involved in them, in a sense, a liability to the extent of the gross amounts which the subsidies total altogether, yet, after all, it is only a contingent liability, and it is based upon such a contingency, that no very large percentage of the moneys granted by Parliament has been found to materialize, as I have said. I think I am speaking well within the mark when I say that probably not one-half of the sum which has been, from time to time, voted by Parliament has been called for by any of these companies. The amounts, therefore, which we are asking to-day are not so much in excess of the sums which have hitherto been voted, on occasion, by our predecessors. I am, I think, relieved of the necessity of justifying, from a party stand-point, at all events, the proposals which we are now submitting to the committee, by the action, or by the statements which has been assumed and which were made by the hon. leader of the Opposition, in respect to these grants.

I was very much pleased indeed to hear the hon. gentleman address himself as he did to the committee in respect to these matters frankly and explicitly, as he did in effect, withdrawing any question as to the attitude of the parties in this House in respect to these proposals as a whole, and expressing his readiness to assent and approve of the grants which we were asking Parliament thus to make. So that, I take it, I am relieved from the necessity of offering to this Parliament any defence at all of these proposals. No doubt there will be some few gentlemen on the other side of the House who may not be disposed to follow their leader in this regard, but who may repudiate the attitude which he has taken with respect to these proposals. There will always be found, I apprehend, on both sides some few who will not place themselves entirely in accord with their leaders; but they do not speak for their party. They are expressing their independent views, while from what has been said in his place here by the hon. gentleman, speaking as leader of the Opposition, these proposals in the main have the assent and approval of the Opposition in this House. My hon. friend, however, while he gave his unqualified assent to the policy which the Government are continuing to pursue in this regard, did not refrain from making a criticism of our action by claiming that in these particulars we were departing from what has been the declared policy of the Liberal party. The hon. gentleman did not furnish the House with any evidence of the grounds upon which he based that statement. What little evidence he did furnish was I think, scarcely such as to convince everybody of its sufficiency. I think it would scarcely convince himself. It was not to be supposed that any newspaper, though it might be recognized as an organ of the Liberal party, no matter how influential it might be, would be authorized to declare what the policy of the Liberal party is, unless the Government had declared itself through its proper official channels, or unless the Liberal party while in Opposition had declared its policy in a formal way through its leaders, or when assembled, as on one occasion it was, to lay down its platform. Unless the Liberal party had declared its policy against giving subsidies to railways through its authorized leaders, it could not be said to have declared such a policy; and I understand that my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition was unable to put his finger on any such declaration or to rest the imputation he cast on the Government in this regard upon any sufficient evidence whatever. I understand that the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), from the remarks he made, was out of joint with his leader in this respect. But though we recognize the prominence of my hon. friend in his party, though we recognize that in the event of a change of Government at an early day, my hon. friend would be fully entitled to regard himself as a strong claimant for a Cabinet position, yet I do not think that even my hon. friend would contend that his utterance here, in antagonism to that of the leader of his party, ought to be received as a declaration of the policy or principles of the Conservative party in the country. So that we may assume that the only differences of opinion with regard to these proposals which may exist on either side will be individual differences, and not differences as between the two parties in the state.

The hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition, however, took occasion to refer in a critical way to one or two grants which are included in these resolutions—not because he thought they ought not to have been included in these proposals or because he was opposed to the grants—for he declared that if present he would vote for them—but because he felt that they were not in harmony with the policy which the Government had adopted in regard to one or two undertakings, more particularly the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal. He contended that the proposal to give a subsidy of $1,000,000 to the Quebec bridge while a meritorious proposal in itself, and one which he heartily sympathized with and would support, was yet in direct antagonism to the policy which the Government had adopted in regard to extending the Intercolonial to the city of Montreal. The hon. gentleman, to my mind, did not reach that conclusion by any very logical process, nor do I think, even if his reasoning had been logical, that it was well founded in fact. There is a radical defect in the hon. gentleman's proposition, because he based it altogether upon the assumption that if the Government had in their minds, as they must be taken to have had, the intention of asking Parliament for aid to this bridge to the extent of $1,000,000, instead of reaching Montreal by the Drummond County Railway and by the arrangement with the Grand Trunk, we ought to have stayed our hand and have endeavoured to utilize this bridge by means of reaching the city of Montreal. I see that one hon. gentleman opposite entirely endorses that proposition. Well, Sir, I do not know that I need detain the committee at this period of the session to argue that question; but I will just take the liberty of pointing to one or two insuperable obstacles which it appears to me would lie in the way of such a proposition. It would, in the first place, involve a considerable delay—and delay is a thing which I do not think we would be justified in permitting—because the building of a bridge across the St. Lawrence at Chaudière would be necessarily a work of time. It does not follow, because we are prepared to give a company aid to the extent of $1,000,000 in the construction of that bridge, that the bridge will be immediately constructed.

Mr. BERGERON. How long will it take?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not prepared to say how long.

Mr. BERGERON. Twenty years?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I should be glad to see it built without any delay.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will it ever be built?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend would not accept any opinion from me if it were adverse to that of his leader, and his leader has assured this House that it will unquestionably be built, and built at once.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the hon. gentleman tell me what is the distance by way of the bridge at the point where it is likely to be constructed from Lévis to the city of Quebec?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think it will be over 14 miles.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And the width of the river as well?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am including the width of the river in that.

Mr. BLAIR.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not think the leader of the Opposition declared yesterday that the bridge would be immediately built.

The PRIME MINISTER. He said it ought to be built.

Mr. BERGERON. I understood him to say that there was no doubt it would have been built if the Drummond County Railway had not been used as the route, but if the route had been made by the bridge and the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Then I understand that the Government are granting a bonus for the purpose of putting the town of Lévis into connection with the city of Quebec, and that it would be necessary to make a trip 14 miles around to get from Lévis to Quebec.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not at all. That is not the object of the grant. The point is to get a bridge across the St. Lawrence which will be available for access to Quebec from all directions on the south side of the St. Lawrence.

Mr. WALLACE. How far is the bridge from Quebec?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Between six and seven miles. It is certainly the most suitable part of the river to cross, and the structure would cost less there than anywhere else, and I think would be as convenient, on the whole, as if constructed anywhere else.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Put it in another way. Freight coming from the east, for instance, bound for Quebec will, of necessity, be compelled to go around fourteen miles instead of being ferried across the river.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Because we have a bridge across the river above Quebec, it does not follow that all the freight will cross that way. It will be a good deal a matter of convenience and of the class of freight whether the freight will cross in the ferry or go round by the bridge. But the situation is no different in that regard from what it is at Lachine, where the Canadian Pacific Railway from the east has to run up the river several miles above Montreal and cross and then run down. What I was trying to point out is that some time will necessarily have to elapse before the bridge can be constructed and be utilized for railway purposes. Time is an essential ingredient in all these matters, and we do not want to have to wait three or four years for the purpose of completing our connection at Montreal, when that can be done at once, and is practically now in operation. My hon. friend, when he comes across the St. Lawrence by this bridge, will then have two or three serious questions to consider, and serious obstacles to overcome. He will have an additional mileage, very much in excess of the mileage which now we would have to cover in reaching Montreal from Lévis, on the south side. He would then have to make arrangements with the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. WALLACE. How much additional mileage ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Fifteen or sixteen miles at least from Quebec alone, but thirty miles further from Lévis, and he would then have to confront the still greater difficulty of making arrangements with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and I do not think it would be practicable to do this upon terms which would be acceptable to the Government of Canada and advantageous to the Intercolonial Railway system. We know, as matters stand to-day, and will continue to stand for all time, that the Intercolonial Railway is a competitor with the Canadian Pacific Railway for the business from the east going west, and for the western business going east. The territory which the Intercolonial Railway drains is territory in respect of which it properly owns the business coming to railways ; but if we had to depend upon making arrangements with the Canadian Pacific Railway in order to reach Montreal via Quebec, we would be hampered at every turn, and it would be impossible for us to do business in any kind of successful competition with the Canadian Pacific Railway, when we would need to use 163 miles of their road in order to reach the point of destination. So that there are a great many questions to be considered, and the intention of the Government, in aiding the construction of a bridge at Quebec, in no wise conflicts with the policy we have adopted and which is now in practical operation, of giving the Intercolonial Railway at Lévis connection with Montreal, but is entirely consistent with it. Instead of hurting, it will help, in every respect, the Intercolonial Railway in its connections with Quebec and Montreal.

Passing from that point of criticism, the hon. gentleman mentioned another. He said that while he is prepared to favour the grant we are asking Parliament towards the construction of the South Shore Line Railway, we were creating another competitor for the Intercolonial Railway. I join issue entirely with him on this question, because I cannot perceive in what direction or on what class of business or in what way the South Shore Railway, if it were built all the way along the south shore, and even if it were to connect with the Intercolonial Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway on the south shore would be a competitor with the Intercolonial Railway. I am of the opinion that that railway would rather be a feeder to the Intercolonial Railway than take business from it. We know that the route of the South Shore Railway carries it along the south shore through the populous portions of that section of country, through parishes which have no railway connection otherwise, or a large portion of which have no other railway connection, and will therefore serve a district or country which is not now and never will be served by that portion of the Intercolonial Railway that we have acquired from the Drummond County Railway Company. There is a considerable mileage distance between the two roads, and that distance, even if it were less than it is, would not prevent the Drummond Railway from doing business with the people along its own route. So that in no respects can I see how the building of the South Shore line would militate against the interests of the Intercolonial Railway, or how we would thereby be bringing another competitor into the field. The business we have been looking chiefly for in making this connection is not the local business. We have not counted on the local business as a material ingredient leading us to adopt that policy. I do not despise, by any means, the business we will get. That business is increasing, and likely to increase. We are going through a country which is improving every year, whose fertile soil will be settled up and will provide support and maintenance for a very considerable population, and that will be an advantage to us in connection with our extension to Montreal, but that has not been the impelling motive on which we chiefly base our policy. We are willing to accept the material advantages in the future in that local business, but it is the opportunity for doing through business that we have been desiring to obtain, and it is because we are satisfied that in reaching Montreal we will reach a point which will not only give us but receive from us an immense volume of business which would not otherwise, from a railway point of view, be able to reach. I cannot, therefore, subscribe, and I think I have furnished the committee with good reasons why I cannot subscribe, to the objections which have been taken by the hon. leader of the Opposition to our grant in these particulars.

Let me turn the attention of the committee, for a few moments, to the general results, apart from the individual proposals themselves. I am not going to discuss the individual grants at any length, but will defer any observations I may have to make on them until each case comes to be dealt with in its turn.

The first resolution is a continuation of the resolutions adopted in 1897 for the first time. We keep to the idea that general subsidies shall be limited to $3,200 per mile, unless the actual and bona fide cost of the construction of the particular railway in question applying for the subsidy does exceed $15,000 per mile.

Mr. WALLACE. How do you ascertain that ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is provided in the statute of 1897 that it shall, in the first place, be ascertained by careful personal inspection by an engineer of the department, who examines the work and ascertains what it ought to have cost; then looks into the books, accounts, vouchers, and papers of the company to see what they represent it to have cost, and makes his report to the Chief Engineer. The Chief Engineer passes on the returns and the information furnished him, and advises the Minister, who reports to the Governor in Council, and the Governor in Council determines finally whether or not the amount of subsidy the company is entitled to receive would be in excess of $3,200 a mile, and, if so, to what extent it should be in excess of that amount. The effect of this section has not been to produce the results which hon. gentlemen opposite at the time it was proposed by the Government anticipated, or, at all events, represented that they feared it would result in. It was charged that we were practically giving a large number of railways, which would be constructed under its operation, very much larger subsidies than it was usual for Parliament to give, that, instead of having to give $3,200 a mile, to a large percentage of those, we should give double that amount, or, at least, over $3,200 a mile. We have had two years' experience of that section, and we find that only two roads have been found entitled to receive more than $3,200 a mile. I have here a memorandum of the amounts. I was under the impression the other evening, as was my deputy, that there was only one road in this category, but I find that there are two. The first is the Ottawa, Arnprior and Parry Sound Road, which, we all know, is a very important road, and a very expensive one to construct. This company received an additional $3,200 per mile for 54.58 miles.

Mr. FOSTER. That is, it received $6,400 a mile altogether?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Was there no portion of it which received anything between $3,200 and $6,400?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No. There are no roads which cost more than $15,000 that did not cost sufficient to entitle them to $6,400 a mile. To a considerable portion of this line, hon. gentlemen opposite themselves gave a fixed subsidy of $6,400 per mile.

Mr. HAGGART. Do I understand that if a road costs anything more than $15,000 a mile, it is entitled to $6,400 a mile subsidy?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No; it is not entitled to a dollar beyond the $3,200, unless it exceeds $15,000 per mile; and then it is only entitled to 50 per cent on such excess, and in that case there is a limit of $6,400 a mile. I have mentioned one of the roads that received this extra bonus. The other was the St. Lawrence and Adirondacks, on a very small mileage of 13½ miles. The amount which has been paid in respect to the clause of the Subsidy Act of 1897, was $433,792. Both of the roads receiving an extra subsidy are roads which would have been regarded as entitled to special consideration from Parliament.

Mr. BLAIR.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the amount they would have to cost in order to be entitled to $6,400 a mile?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They would have to cost $21,400 a mile.

Mr. FOSTER. So that the portion of the Ottawa, Arnprior and Parry Sound road which costs more than $15,000 a mile costs $21,400 or over, a mile.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. When the hon. gentleman says "any portion," he states it in such a way that I can neither assent to it or dissent from it. To entitle them to receive this $6,400 a mile, they would have to show that $21,400 a mile was the average cost of that section. Some portions of the line would cost a great deal more than other portions.

Mr. FOSTER. What section?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This whole 54.58 miles.

Mr. FOSTER. That was the whole length subsidized by the hon. gentleman's Bill?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) will remember, they were not entitled, under this Act, to receive the added subsidy in respect of the cost of a bridge in excess of $25,000 or even on that amount if the bridge had received special subsidy, nor for any sums which they would pay for terminals or rolling stock or right of way in or near a city.

Mr. HAGGART. If the cost of construction of a road were only $10,000 a mile, and if it is specially mentioned as entitled to $6,400 a mile, is it entitled, under this resolution, to anything more than $6,400?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. FOSTER. That first clause is made applicable to the roads "undermentioned."

Mr. HAGGART. It seems a little doubtful.

Mr. WALLACE. What was the estimate of the Chief Engineer of the cost of the Ottawa, Arnprior and Parry Sound road?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot tell exactly, but it was far and away in excess of the amount that would be necessary to entitle it to receive the sum they did receive. In both roads there was no room for controversy or questions as to the right of the company to the double subsidy.

Mr. FOSTER. But the hon. gentleman did not pay on the estimate of the engineer. He paid on the actual cost ascertained?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, and I think I may add that we were very materially aided, after we had come to a conclusion on it, by the scrutiny the Auditor General gave to the accounts.

Mr. FOSTER. That is about the only check we have on the Ministers; and then they sometimes steal a march on the Auditor General by paying by credit checks. The point that was raised by my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) is worth considering. It would seem that this clause respecting $3,200 a mile is applicable to all "undermentioned" roads. And among those "undermentioned" is one to which $6,400 a mile is given. I think the hon. gentleman will have to guard that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It certainly is not the intention to give more than $6,400 a mile in any case.

Mr. HAGGART. It is not the intention; but I think from the wording of the clause, it would not be so clear as it should be.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think the hon. gentleman would be in error in that. The line which is specially given $6,400 per mile is under another resolution.

Mr. COCHRANE. Could the Minister do it under that clause if he wanted to?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, I think not.

Mr. FOSTER. They are under the same resolution, and there is no exception made.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They are not under the same resolution, they are under a second resolution. This is the form in which it has been done in the past, and in which it was done in 1897. We provide in the first resolution, and that was kept distinctly in view, for all the companies are to receive $3,200, and which may become entitled to the additional grant; then our next resolution provides for a straight grant of $6,000. The first clause ends: "The lines of railway being as follows." That would expressly limit it to the railways there named. I mention these facts because I think they will have a reassuring effect upon our hon. friends opposite, and they will see that the fears which they expressed much stronger in 1897 when similar proposals were under consideration, have not been realized, and that we have placed a very safe limit when we have named $15,000 within which to restrict the grantees to the subsidies for a lesser amount. There may possibly be a difference of opinion as to whether we have not been too stringent in that regard, as to whether we have not named too high a sum as the limit within which the company must be restricted to the first named subsidy of $3,200. But I think there is no ground for any anxiety as to the number of roads that may be entitled to receive a larger subsidy than $3,200.

I desire now to make some comment upon two of the other resolutions which are named here. One places a limitation upon the powers of certain companies therein named as to their legal right or power to amalgamate, combine interests, or place themselves in the hands of another railway company. I refer to this section:

3. That the subsidies granted to the Ontario and Rainy River Railway Company, the Canadian Northern Railway Company and the Edmonton, Yukon and Pacific Railway Company are granted upon this condition, and if received and paid under the authority of this Act to the above mentioned companies respectively, shall be received upon the condition, that the said companies shall not, nor shall any of them, at any time amalgamate with any other railway company, or lease its line to any railway company; nor shall any of the said railways be leased to or operated by any other company; nor shall any of the said companies make an agreement for a common fund or for pooling its receipts with any other railway company, and any such lease, amalgamation or agreement shall be absolutely void, excepting in so far as such agreement may extend to traffic or running arrangements which have been approved by the Governor in Council.

The committee will observe that there are three railway companies mentioned here.

Mr. WALLACE. I want a good deal of information about these; so the Minister will not be, as usual, taken by surprise.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend, I am afraid, is not in the best mood this morning. I know he has a great thirst for information. The Canadian Northern Railway Company is the company which has been incorporated by Parliament to build a road in extension of what is called the Dauphin line running up into the Saskatchewan country, and from Swan River, which is the present terminus of the northern line, in an almost direct westerly course to Edmonton. I think this company has been chartered by Act of Parliament to construct a line through to that point. The Edmonton, Yukon and Pacific is the company which has been incorporated by Parliament to construct beyond Edmonton northerly and westerly through either the Peace River Pass or the Yellow Head Pass, and through to the Pacific coast. These three lines are lines which it may be found desirable hereafter, and in the interest of the whole country, to amalgamate together. That is a possibility of the future, and if they are constructed, as I think they will be, I believe the missing links between them will be built, and when they are built, they will constitute an additional transcontinental line. I see before me at this moment an hon. member of Parliament who is closely identified with an enterprising journal which has strenuously advocated that whatever should happen in respect to any of these lines, Parliament ought always to make it a condition of any aid that they should not be permitted to amalgamate with existing railways, or to form a combine which might prove detrimental to the public interest, and prevent the construction and operation of an entirely independent line of railway into the western country.

Mr. HAGGART. Could any railway company, no matter whether this clause was in it or not, do what the Minister supposes they could do without an Act of Parliament?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can assure my hon. friend, yes.

Mr. HAGGART. They might pool their rates, but anything else they could not do.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Every railway company could do it. The hon. gentleman will see from the language of this clause that it does not simply cover the case of the transfer of a charter or the amalgamation of two companies into one company. That, I grant, it would be necessary for Parliament to sanction before it could be accomplished. But there are other ways, as the saying is, of choking a cat besides doing so with butter.

Mr. MACLEAN. Suppose there are two companies whose shares are controlled by the same men, who have the same board and the same administration, how would you reach them? In Toronto there are two light companies who did not amalgamate, but they elected the same president, the same board of directors, and they have a common object. How will you reach a case of that kind when the shares are controlled by the same men? They will work together.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I say that an amalgamation can be made in a practical sense, that even a lease could be made between one company and another without having legislative authority for the purpose. You could practically unite two companies without their coming to Parliament at all.

Mr. MACLEAN. Can you prevent that by this clause?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, I think so. I will not pretend to say that you could prevent a shareholder of one company selling his stock to a shareholder of another company, and if my hon. friend felt that it was essential and necessary that that should be done before there could be any protection guaranteed to the public, there is only one way in which he could prevent such an amalgamation as that and that would be to prevent the construction of railways altogether.

Mr. MACLEAN. Then the railways are the masters and we are not?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, the railways are not the masters. I do not consider that the railways are the masters of this country today. I should be sorry if the time should ever come, and I do not think the time will ever come when the railways will be the masters. I think it is proper that when Parliament gives aid to any undertaking to annex to the grant any conditions which it deems necessary in the public interest, but not impossible conditions, not unreasonable conditions, not conditions which would defeat the enterprise altogether, not conditions, the only alternative of which would be to not allow the undertaking to be proceeded with, but conditions which are reasonable, which are practicable and which will, in all human probability, as far as one can see, accomplish the end desired. I cannot conceive of any case arising looking to a combination between two companies which would not be amply covered and against which the public would not be amply protected by this clause. I would be very happy to accept any suggestion which any hon. gentleman may make, looking to the improvement of this provision if it is possible to be improved. I shall be only too glad to do it, but I was in hopes that the hon. member for East York would have appreciated the effort that we are making in this direction.

Mr. HAGGART. We are not finding fault, we are only criticising the clause to see if the result, that the hon. Minister aims at, can be obtained from the clause.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I was referring to the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean). I think that the question of the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) was a perfectly proper one, and I am glad to answer it. I am now referring to the hon. member for East York.

Mr. MACLEAN. I take it then that the hon. Minister admits that it is possible for companies to so manipulate their stock and their directorate that they will not come within the law, and yet that they would practically effect an amalgamation. The hon. Minister practically admits that this clause which he proposes to guard the people's rights will not guard the people's rights.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. A most extreme and, a most violent assumption! I do say that I regret that the hon. member for East York has not more encouragement for us, and does not appreciate the efforts which are being made in the direction in which, I have gathered, he desires we should move and which, he desired, that the provision in regard to railways should have taken.

Mr. MACLEAN. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend asks: Is it not possible that the shareholders of one company may acquire the stock of another company. It is true it is possible. But, there are hosts of things which are possible which are not likely to occur. It is possible for the railways to come to this Parliament and to find a sufficient number of hon. members so amenable to the influences which they can exert that they can practically control the legislation of this country. But, does my hon. friend imagine that they can do it? Does he think that such is at all likely to occur? No human device can provide protection against all the possibilities, and if my hon. friend, as a legislator is looking towards that as an end, he might as well give up his labour at the outset because he cannot reach the accomplishment of that end.

Mr. MACLEAN. Well, then, the hon. Minister is not accomplishing what he pretends to say he is doing. He is saying to the country: I am protecting your interests by introducing legislation to prevent these amalgamations, but his clause will not cover certain cases, and these are the cases that are occurring every day. What are the Vanderbilts doing every day? They get control of the shares of a railway company, elect their own board of directors and their own president. They do not amalgamate, but practically they do the same thing because the boards of the two railways pursue the same policy. While the hon. gentleman tells the country that he is going to provide against such things, in this resolution, he is not doing it. He does not cover this specific case, and it is a case that is happening every day. Railway lawyers say: We do not care what restraining clauses are placed in the railway legislation of this country as long as we are able to manipulate the stock.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Any amalgamation which may take place between two railway companies is declared to be absolutely void under this third clause. Any leasing, any agreement which provides for common or joint operation, or for amalgamation, in any sense, or for a common fund, pooling receipts, or any of these things that are possible to occur, in any reasonable or probable course of events, we can provide for. But, the fanciful and improbable, we cannot provide against by any legislation which may be prepared. Yet, while I say that, I say this clause would be effective for the accomplishment of every reasonable desire which has been expressed particularly in the newspaper press and by members of Parliament on this question. We provide here that this road will legally be to all intents and purposes an independent highway, and if anything occurs whereby its independence is threatened, whereby its interests are consolidated, or any other thing which can only take place in violation of this statute this agreement is absolutely void. An appeal will be open to the courts to provide means to bring such an agreement to an end.

I come to another clause in the subsidy resolutions which, I think, is one of very great importance, and which marks a distinct departure from the legislation of the past. These grants which have been hitherto made have been, unquestionably, nothing but gifts. There have been no conditions attached to them further than that the roads which were being aided should be built in a particular manner in accordance with the specifications provided by the Government. We still continue, as a matter of course, these provisions; we will require that the line shall be constructed in accordance with the usages of the past, but we have grafted upon this a principle which is a very material departure from the usages of the past. We have, in point of fact, ceased under these resolutions to give bonuses to railways; we have ceased to make gifts to them from the public treasury and we have substituted, rather, what we might properly describe as advances to the companies from the exchequer of the country.

Mr. FOSTER. Simply advances?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Well, simply advances. They are advances in every sense of the word; they are payments made to these companies in consideration that they will perform, on their part, a certain class of obligations, that while the country has certain services which it requires to have rendered they are to treat the payments that are made to them as a partial, or as a full payment as the circumstances of the case may justify. I venture to say that this proposal is a distinct improvement upon the railway proposals of the past, that the country will get substantial benefits from the conditions which we have incorporated here, and that it will get a substantial pecuniary return from these services, not limiting the benefits that will accrue to the country to the indirect results, but in the shape of the direct benefits that will accrue to the country. In my opinion—and I think that opinion will be shared by hon. gentlemen opposite—we are only on the threshold of railway construction in this Dominion. I would have been glad, as I am sure the country would have been, if, when the policy of granting bonuses to railways was initiated, it had been practicable or had occurred to those initiating that policy, that some condition involving an adequate return to the exchequer of the country for those grants could have been exacted. But these considerations come to us as things develop, and it was only reasonable and natural, in the earlier periods when subsidies were given—at a time when subsidies were as much or perhaps more needed than at present—that the main consideration was to secure the construction of railways, and the idea of a direct return to the exchequer did not present itself. But we have now reached a time when in my opinion we shall have an immense growth in the mileage of railways constructed, and when there will no doubt be a continued demand on the treasury for assistance to these undertakings; and we shall in my opinion best meet the reasonable desires of the country by annexing some valuable condition to the making of these grants, which will secure to the treasury a material and substantial return.

Mr. MACLEAN. May I interrupt the Minister to ask him a question in regard to the fourth resolution? When it says that "the location of every such line of railway shall be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council," does that include the location of stations? Here is an opportunity to protect the people in that respect which the Minister might avail himself of.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, there is nothing in express terms in this resolution providing for the location of stations.

Mr. HAGGART. Since the Minister is interrupted, would he deal a little more fully with clause 4? The companies cannot utilize the subsidies until, in addition to the action of Parliament, an Order in Council is passed granting them.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is entirely true. The mere fact that Parliament has passed this Act does not entitle any company to come to the Government and demand a subsidy as a matter of right. They have in the first place to satisfy the department that they are capable of carrying out the work and as to their bona fides. Then they have necessarily to submit their plans for approval; and, as a condition of our entering into a contract with them, we may require that stations shall be located according to the desire or determination of the department, the Minister, or the Governor in Council, and any other condition that is reasonable.

Mr. MACLEAN. Why not put it in here?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There are various conditions attached to contracts providing for the granting of subsidies which are not expressly contained in these Acts. I may say to the hon. gentleman that for the past two years all the subsidy contracts entered into have contained just such a condition as he has referred to, and it is the intention of the department to continue what has been done in that respect. But this is only one of the many conditions which from time to time are provided for, even though the statute does not mention them.

Mr. BLAIR.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the Minister to say that the Government were to get not only an indirect, but direct return for these subsidies.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. When my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean) referred to the other point, I was proceeding to explain to the committee this clause, which I have characterized as a distinct departure from the course of procedure in the past, and my view as to securing a distinct and direct return to the treasury from the railway companies which are receiving these subsidies. I said that in my opinion railway building in this country was really in its infancy. We have to-day closely approximating 17,000 miles of railway built and in operation in Canada. Looking back over the years which have elapsed since confederation, we shall be seen to have made a most extraordinary advance. We had in 1868 only 2,278 miles of railway in operation, while to-day we have nearly eight times as many miles. During those 30 years, therefore, we have increased our mileage 800 per cent. I have no doubt in my own mind that there are gentlemen now sitting as members of Parliament who will live to see the time when we shall have 40,000 miles of railway or more in Canada. In that view, you can well perceive that we are likely to get the full benefit of any conditions such as are contained here, providing for the rendering of a direct service such as now involves a pecuniary charge on the Dominion by these companies. The criticisms which I have seen on this clause in the newspaper press—I have not heard any from hon. gentlemen opposite—have not to my mind been very consistent. I have seen the argument made: "Oh, this proposition is a mere sham; it is a mere pretense that we are not giving subsidies, but only making loans or advances; there is nothing in that, because there is no substantial service which any of these companies are likely to render which will amount to anything, or which, when they come to work themselves out, are likely to mean any saving to the exchequer." But that is not so. If hon. gentlemen will carry in their minds the fact that my hon. colleague the Postmaster General is to-day paying a million and a half of money for the carriage of his mails over railroads in this country—a sum very nearly equal to $100 per mile for every mile of railway in Canada—they will see that the charge for the carriage of the mails alone has become a very serious item of our expenditure, and anything which would tend in the future, either to limit the increase of that charge, or to give us back any portion of the money advanced to these companies, would be a most valuable condition attached to the granting of these aids. The average amount, as I am informed by the Postmaster General, which has been paid for several years past for the conveyance of mails by the railways in Canada, has been $1,447,000 per year. Therefore, the total average annual payment to each railway for the conveyance of mails per mile has been $94.43. While it is true that this provision will not be retrospective in its operation, while it will not apply to existing lines, it will apply to every new line built under it, and the new lines which are built under it are going to be employed for the carriage of mails just the same as railway lines have been in the past. And if they are so employed, you will see that we will be entitled to get back, under the provision contained in this Bill, 3 per cent on the amount of the subsidy. If the subsidy is $3,200 per mile, the Postmaster General will get back an amount equal to about the average sum he is paying for the carriage of mails to-day. And if the carriage of mails increases, the amount would exceed that, and be payable by those companies which would be under this Bill in receipt of the larger subsidy of $6,400 per mile.

Mr. HAGGART. Has the hon. Minister at his hand the practical result of this clause as applied to other railways, because a very similar clause has been inserted in two or three railway charters already. There is one in the charter from Regina to Edmonton, and I think from Calgary to Fort McLeod, and in the Hudson Bay charter.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I suppose the hon. gentleman refers to these railways that were entitled, under their contract, to $80,000 a year for a term of years in addition to the land subsidies?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not the information the hon. gentleman refers to.

Mr. HAGGART. The clause in these other cases is very nearly the same words as this.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It will be useful to have that information, and I have no doubt the Postmaster General will be able to furnish it. It may be well to point out that these railways, to which the hon. gentleman refers, have been built in directions which hitherto have not afforded a very large amount of return. The railways have not gone into districts which were settled or in which settlement was growing rapidly. But along these railways we are proposing to construct, there will be a settled population in a very short period, and a considerable mail service will follow, and in these cases the working out of this clause will be productive of results.

Mr. HAGGART. They were to carry the Mounted Police and the military and all officers of the Government, and that was to be charged against their subsidy.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). Is there any intention of making the companies pay up arrears of interest?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). As soon as the services are rendered, the claim would arise?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, and there is no provision for any payment of arrears of interest. Each year settles itself.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The service must be rendered in that year, and you will not enter an account against them, if not?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. MACLEAN. Then you will not get much of a return.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That does not follow. We do not want to annex a condition that is going to be self destructive. We do not want to give with the one hand and take away with the other. We are giving aid simply to encourage the construction of railways, and do not want to impose conditions which will prevent their construction.

Mr. WILSON. Why should some pay interest and others not? Why should not that be a charge against them?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The principle we are proceeding upon is that wherever there is a public service to be rendered, the rendering of that service must be done by the company to the extent of 3 per cent interest upon the subsidy, but if we do not require the service to that full extent, we do not charge the company with the difference.

Mr. WILSON. If it is not done in the current year, why should not the three per cent be a charge against the road?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The effect of that would be to encumber the railways with a burden of accumulated interest or impose the duty on the Government of winding up the undertaking and preventing its being run. We do not want to propose unreasonable conditions.

Mr. WILSON. Would it not be more businesslike to do it that way?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think the case is at all analogous with that of a business transaction. This is not in a sense intended to be a business transaction. We are pursuing a policy based upon the idea that it is in the interests of the country that railways should be constructed and operated, because the indirect results to the country justify the aid given. But we say, while that is the case, if it should occur that the Government desires to have any service rendered of a governmental character, if the postal department for instance, wants its mails carried or the militia department its men or supplies, the company must, as a condition of its acceptance of this aid, render that service, and if they do render it they will be open to a charge by the Government for the service rendered during any one year to the extent of 3 per cent interest on the subsidy.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. gentleman stipulate the prices at which these mails may be carried, because otherwise the company might charge a price far beyond what it ought to recover?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have provided for that. We have provided that the rates and charges are, in the first place, to be a matter of agreement. If the Minister of the department who requires the service is unable to agree with the company, then the matter is to be determined by the Governor General in Council. The final determination of the rates is to be made by the Governor in Council.

In addition to the mails which we have carried, the cost of carrying which the Postmaster General informs me averages nearly $1,500,000 per year, there are supplies of all kinds and volunteers and police to be carried for some one department or another, and all these cases are covered by this provision.

Mr. HAGGART. The Post Office Department have a right to run their cars and mails over any railway in the Dominion at such rates as they think proper without any reservation.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How is that idea worked out practically? Has it ever occurred within the hon. gentleman's knowledge that the Government have enforced their right and undertaken to fix the rates?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, in every case by Order in Council.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The impression I have gathered in respect of the rates is that they have been very liberal indeed.

Mr. HAGGART. That is the fault of the Government, but they have the power to fix their own rates.

Mr. WILSON.

Mr. FOSTER. They have not been liberal in the opinion of the railway company.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is hardly to be expected that the railway companies would be satisfied with any rate—at least, it is hardly to be expected that if they were satisfied they would say so. That is the effect as it would work out under this clause. I am prepared to furnish the maps which the hon. gentleman asked for.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not propose to take up very much time on the general question. We have to take up each one of these sections in committee, and it is not desirable to have a double discussion. But there are certain general considerations which the hon. Minister has raised and which will require some remarks from gentlemen on this side of the House. In the first place, my hon. friend endeavoured to break the somewhat surprised feeling in the public at the enormous subsidy for railways which was brought down by the Liberal Government—$6,540,000 for this year—by gently intimating to the public that this was not all real, that there was a good deal about it that was assumed, for a purpose, of course; it must not be assumed that all this was a liability, and that probably a large part of it would never be called for. The hon. gentleman forgot that he was passing a most severe criticism on himself and on his Government as a set of business men in saying that they brought down to the House actual money votes for a large number of schemes which they believed would probably never be realized. A business Government and a business Minister would not bring down to this House in these days estimates of public works of which he was not sure as to their basis and prospects, and as to which he did not feel that there was a probability of their being carried through. But in speaking as he did, my hon. friend was looking to the disturbed state of public feeling, which is leading people all over this country to ask anxiously if it is really a Liberal Government that is in power, composed of men who formerly perambulated this country and diligently, season in and season out, scored the preceding Government for reckless waste of public money involved in railway subsidies. He said he did not think it was necessary for him to set his party right with reference to the subsidy question. Why not? Has the hon. gentleman any idea of consistency in public men, or is the doctrine that he enunciated not long ago in the province of New Brunswick, that Government, after all, is only a matter of deals and compromises, the principle upon which this Government is really being carried on. It would seem so from the hon. gentleman's action in this matter.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I hope it will not be assumed, because I do not contradict the statements made by the hon. gentleman, that I am accepting them as accurate. The last statement I entirely repudiate.

Mr. FOSTER. I have to take the hon. gentleman's statement across the floor of the House; but it was a matter of public report and notoriety which my hon. friend did not at the time contest or take the trouble to deny. But the hon. gentleman thinks his party is not inconsistent at all upon this question, and he challenges us to refer to the particular statement or resolution of his party which condemned railway subsidies. Well, Sir, if my hon. friend is great in anything he is great in audacity, and his greatness was never shown more conclusively than in his speech of this morning. I might reply by saying: Can you instance a case of one single leading Liberal or one single Liberal newspaper which, for the last twenty years, that is, since 1882, has not been continually denouncing this system of railway subsidies, from the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), even down to the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), who seems to be so quiescent in these latter days. I remember a very famous letter which was written by the then active and vigorous Minister of Trade and Commerce, when he was trying to get on the soft side of the Patrons, for a reason, running a tilt with the present Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) to see who would get the largest following of Patrons—the confiding Patrons—and in that letter the hon. gentleman stated—and it is on record—we are one, you the Patrons and we the Liberals; we agree upon this, we agree upon that, we agree upon the other; and amongst those things upon which we especially agreed was that there should be no subsidies granted to railways. Has time blotted out all these records of the past, or are they still embalmed there? And yet, with magnificent audacity, the present Minister of Railways and Canals challenges hon. gentlemen, in the year 1899 in the Dominion of Canada, to put their fingers upon one single instance in which the Liberal party denounced railway subsidies. Why, you cannot put your finger down without covering some statement of that kind, from "Hansard" out into the party press. Oh, well; suppose it is so; everything is right now, they say, because yesterday the leader of the Opposition, in the name of the Opposition accepted all these things and swallowed them holus bolus. My hon. friend is very anxious to hide beneath the ample wing of the leader of the Opposition. I have heard him on the floor of this House when some of his expressions were not so gratulatory and so approving with reference to the leader of the Opposition. But now he has no necessity to make a case. Why? Because, as he asserts, again with that magnificent audacity, that the leader of the Opposition stands behind all these resolutions and has declared that the Opposition stands behind them. Neither is true, the Liberal-Conservative party undertook, in 1882, a policy with reference to railway subsidies, which was to give to companies in reasonable amounts and at a reasonable rate per mile, assistance in building new lines of railway. The Liberal-Conservative party adopted that as a principle of action, and carried it into operation until 1896, when it gave way to the Liberal party and Government. Well, Sir, from 1882 this principle of giving aid to railways was attacked session after session in this House, and attacked outside of the House, by the present Liberal Government, by the leaders of the party, and its representatives in this House and their associates the whole country through. What was not said against the system by resolution, by speech and by editorial everywhere? They urged that it was bad in principle, that it was corrupting in its influences, that it was a vast enginery for the disposal of public moneys for party benefit. No one but the Minister of Railways and Canals would attempt to deny that, or call it in question. Now, Sir, these gentlemen come in after having denounced this policy for seventeen years, and they eclipse the gentlemen who were responsible for and carried out the policy under the late Government. The hon. gentleman gives the amounts which were voted from 1888 to 1896 inclusive, revotes and all, at $17,000,000 in round figures.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not give the amounts to 1896. I only gave those to 1894, without including the proposal of 1895.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman is technically right. He did not include 1895 and 1896, because none were granted. He strove to get through with his speech without admitting that none were granted in those years, in order to keep up the average. But an inconvenient question brought from the hon. gentleman that none were voted in either of those two years. So that for those years $17,000,000 in round numbers were voted, or in nine years an average of little less than $2,000,000 per year. But when these hon. gentlemen get their hands on the tiller they turn the old ship of party policy straight around and head for this port with double the sail, twice the engine-power, and a colossal recklessness as compared to the party who had been responsible for the policy in former years. No rocks that may be possibly ahead daunt them; no storms that may be looming in the electoral sky keep them from crowding on more and more sail, and their stokers from adding to the fierce fires beneath the engines. They have made up their minds to beat the other fellows, and they are going to do it if it takes six millions and a half against the average of two millions during the years I have quoted of Liberal-Conservative subsidies. But still this is all condoned by the fact that the Conservatives had a policy and still have a policy of granting adequate and reasonable subsidies to roads that may be worthy of it. Now, I take the ground of the leader of the Opposition. He stated that so far as he was concerned, he proposed, if he were here, to support certain of these votes, and he mentioned them. I shall support certain of them, too; and I daresay there are members on this side of the House that will have preferences; some they will not support, and there may be some who will support none. But I want to say that the leader of the Opposition had not the least idea of endeavouring in the slightest degree to commit the Opposition in this House to vote holus bolus, without criticism, without exercising their judgment with reference to these subsidies. Well, Sir, my hon. friend went into an array of details into which I am not going to follow him, because these will come up later on. Then he came to some general principles. He saw, I suppose, that he had hardly made the case good that the Liberals were not inconsistent in voting $6,500,000 for what they call railway subsidies. But will they be called railway subsidies? I suspect that before the statutes are printed you will find that they are no longer called railway subsidies, but they will come out under the brand new heading of advances to railways, to be hereafter repaid, loans for special services that some time or other they will be bound to render. And so any doubting Thomas amongst the Liberal supporters in the country who when his member goes home, will ask him the question: Well, Sir, I thought you were always opposed to railway subsidies. So I am yet, my good friend. And yet you voted $6,500,000 for railway subsidies. You are quite mistaken, my honest friend, we did not vote a dollar of railway subsidies; we simply voted some advances to railways which they are to repay us in due time. And so he will square himself with the honest voter and get out of it in that way. It is clever, it is remarkably clever. My own feeling is that it is so clever that the honest voter will see through it too quickly. One would think the like had never been done before. At first, what we were anxious to do was to give as much as possible without burdening the treasury, in helping railway construction in the earlier times, and we gave $3,200 as a free gift. Afterwards conditions, first one, then another, were made, and at last in some of our large contracts we provided that services should be rendered and the services are now being rendered. One thing must be taken into account. In the first place, by this gratuitous scale of his by which he grants according to the cost of construction, the Minister includes bridges, which in the Liberal-Conservative time were never included for special help; he includes their cost into bringing up the average which shall entitle them to $6,400

Mr. FOSTER.

instead of $3,200. I am willing to give my adhesion to this, that these roads if they can be built with a subsidy under these conditions, it is fair to say to them: When we want services from you we will ask you for these services, and we will set off our help to you now to a certain extent against these services. But in many cases the assistance will never be adequately met. My hon. friend goes one further. Not only does he completely overturn the old Liberal contention that there should be no railway subsidies, but he brings forth the proposition that we are just commencing the subsidies to railway construction. Do you think that railway construction is going to stop in this country, he says. No, we are just on the eve of great railway construction. His remarks went to show that they had just entered upon the policy of subsidies to railway construction. So that not only have they reversed their previous policy, but they have gone still further now in the amount of $6,540,000, and in the statement of the Minister inviting all and sundry to come in with their schemes; for, he says, we have just commenced railway construction in this country; and if you live long enough, he says, you will see 40,000 miles constructed in this country where you have only 17,000. Well, I hope we shall see such a development of railway construction in Canada as the hon. gentleman anticipates. But I hope it will be a principle more and more strongly adhered to by every Government that, hereafter private capital and the aggregations of the wealth of citizens shall build these roads, except in cases where it is absolutely impossible to have them built unless the Government gives some reasonable subvention. I hold that the Government should no longer hold out an invitation to railway promoters and capitalists in order to get them to sketch out lines and to push lines, with the idea of getting Government help. Cases arise, and will arise in the future, where private capital and its aggregations will not be able to build a road. Then, the Government may reasonably take into consideration whether it will help, but it ought to be laid down as a principle that aid shall not be given where private capital is at all adequate to the construction of the road and the opening up of the country by it. I do not want to transgress over the hour of one o'clock, and consequently I will not say any more on this question. I just wished to make these remarks on the general question, and we can more profitably discuss the different items when we come to them, under their several heads, but I felt that it was necessary to make these remarks in reference to my hon. friend's statement. I wish the hon. gentleman would bring down a statement—the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) and the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) will help him to get the information, as it will be mostly in their departments—showing the real return we have got from the Calgary and Edmonton road, and from the Prince Albert road.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). These railways only run a train once a week.

Mr. FOSTER. My right hon. friend is behind in his knowledge of railways. The Edmonton line runs trains three times a week.

The PRIME MINISTER. Perhaps so; but they are not run daily.

Mr. FOSTER. And the other one runs daily.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) please give me the names?

Mr. FOSTER. There is the Edmonton and Calgary road and the Prince Albert road. These two, I know, have that clause, and have been operating under it.

Mr. DAVIN. I have one or two remarks to make, but I will not be able to conclude them before one o'clock.

It being One o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

House resumed at Three o'clock.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). Mr. Chairman, when recess was called, I proposed to address to the House a very few remarks. What I wish to address myself to, and what I wish to ask the attention of the committee to, is the difference of opinion that was manifested yesterday in this committee between the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and the hon. leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper). The hon. leader of the Opposition, in his speech, in which I do not think he went as far as the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) credits him with going, pointed out, I think, very properly, that the present Government, in bringing down these bloated railway subsidies, pronounces the strongest possible satire on their own declarations and statements, when on this side of the House, and especially on an emphatic declaration of theirs prior to the election of 1896. What the hon. leader of the Opposition did, in the course of his remarks, was to quote from the Winnipeg "Tribune," which had, on the 20th of July, on the front page, a square containing the following:—

RAILWAY BONUSING.

The following is an official declaration made on behalf of the Liberal party prior to the general election of 1896:—

"The policy of bonusing railways by cash and land grants from the Dominion Government has become a fruitful source of jobbery, speculation and corruption. Under its operation favourites of the Government have been enriched. Appropriations have been made for the sole purpose of purchasing the support of constituencies, and vast sums of money have been voted without regard to the public interest, while millions of acres of land that should have been held in trust by the Government for the future homes of hardy and deserving settlers, have been handed over without consideration or justification to charter-hawkers, whose intervention actually retards the construction of the lines whose franchises they control, for the purpose of extorting money from the ultimate builders of the roads. The policy of granting these subsidies has repeatedly been condemned in Parliament by the Liberal party."

I am going to read what the right hon. Prime Minister said:

So far as I know, the quotation which my hon. friend found in the Winnipeg "Tribune" of a few days ago, taken from a statement made in 1896, at the time of the general elections, never received any official confirmation on this side.

I want to call the attention of the committee to this language, because it is very peculiar. It shows that the right hon. Prime Minister is aware—and certainly that is a fair inference—that in 1896 a statement was made, at the time of the general elections, in these terms. Let me quote:—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is put in the "Tribune" as an official declaration made by the Liberal party prior to the general election of 1896.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend has quoted a paragraph which appeared a few days ago in the Winnipeg "Tribune," and which purports to have been copied from a paper issued in 1896.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is in inverted commas.

The PRIME MINISTER. No doubt the quotation was taken from some paper, but I do not remember ever seeing that paper, and I do not know if it has been taken from any paper, except perhaps some election pamphlet issued on the authority of somebody,—

If this means anything, it is, that the right hon. Prime Minister does not know that it has been taken from any paper, but that he knows that it has been taken from an election pamphlet issued on the authority of somebody.

—but not on the authority of anybody that I knew to be responsible for the policy of the party.

There is the statement of the Prime Minister. I have in my hand here the campaign pamphlet issued by the Liberal party:

DOMINION OF CANADA.

Principles, Policy and Platform of the Liberal Party.

Copies of this pamphlet can be had by Liberal candidate from Alexander Smith, Secretary Ontario Liberal Association, 34 Victoria St., Toronto. To the Reader:

This pamphlet is intended as an aid to young men and others who wish to work on behalf of Liberalism and good principles. No one can suppose that in so limited a space more than a small fraction of the shortcomings and misdeeds of the Conservative party can be alluded to. While some attention is paid to the system that has prevailed at Ottawa for the past fifteen years and more, the chief place is given to a short sketch of the principles, policy and platform of the Liberal party. There are also hints for organization, a few remarks upon the Patron platform, and a very brief sketch of Hon. Wilfrid Laurier, the Dominion Liberal leader. In compiling this little document, parliamentary reports and debates of the session of 1894 have been resorted to, but where later authoritative facts could be obtained they have been used. This point should not be forgotten, so that when later blue-books and parliamentary reports are produced there may be no misunderstanding.

This pamphlet is not for general distribution. It is for speakers, committeemen and other workers on behalf of the cause of Liberalism and good government. Copies of the platform, however, for general distribution can be had upon application to

ALEXANDER SMITH,

Secretary Ontario Liberal Association,
34 Victoria St., Toronto.

Then comes a chapter on the Liberal leader, and I will spare my right hon. friend the reading of that chapter, because I do not think his modesty would be equal to the agonizing ordeal of hearing it read. Now I come to page 6 of this work. It is headed "Organize and Work Now":

In order, then, that the political issues of the day may be brought clearly before the people, it is generally for each one interested in the welfare of our country to do all in his power to form associations for the purpose of arousing the electors to a sense of their duty, and inducing them to attend to the practical work of a campaign. There should be no faltering now, and each man should consider it his duty to see to it that a meeting of the committee is at once called for his polling district. It may be called by the chairman or secretary of the polling district, by a notice in the local newspaper, and announcement in the school-house or at some public place or assembly, or, if there is no committee, by two or three friends getting together, and after devising some plans for calling the meeting, "pass the word along," and thus begin by a judicious use of this pamphlet, speeches on the principles, policy and platform of the Liberal party can well be delivered by local men, and once the work is begun no effort should be spared to keep up the interest by social and other gatherings. Speaking alone is not all that is necessary, and after the polling district committee is efficiently organized, with a chairman, this chairman (as many as may be necessary) and a secretary-treasurer and sub-committees appointed, a couple of copies of the Dominion voters' lists should be immediately secured.

And so on. Ample directions are given for organizing; but the point I want to direct the special attention of the committee and my right hon. friend to is this:

By a judicious use of this pamphlet, speeches on the principles, policy and platform of the Liberal party can well be delivered by local men. Then on page 8, comes "the Liberal policy":

During its term of office the Liberal party strove to advance the interests of the country, and while in opposition, with the same end in view—the general good—it has, by resolutions and debates in the House, together with addresses throughout the land, stoutly maintained its principles. The Liberal party, believing in freedom of trade, freedom of speech, and freedom of conscience, is progressive in its character. This was strongly exemplified by the National Liberal Convention, held in Ottawa, June, 1893, when Liberals from every section of the Dominion assembled, and without any previous arrangements, proceeded at once to take counsel together upon the political situation.

Now, I will ask my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) to keep his eye on that excerpt from the Liberal platform published in the "Daily Tribune," and copied by the leader of the Opposition, while I read what is here amongst the principles and policy of the Liberal party in this pamphlet, issued from the authoritative quarters in Toronto:

The policy of bonusing railways by cash and land grants from the Dominion Government has become a fruitful source of jobbery, speculation and corruption. Under its operation favourites of the Government have been enriched. Appropriations have been made for the sole purpose of purchasing the support of constituencies, and vast sums of public money have been voted without a regard to the public interest, while millions of acres of land that should have been held in trust by the Government for the future homes of the hardy and deserving settlers, have been handed over without consideration or justification, to charter-hawkers, whose intervention actually retards the construction of the land whose franchises they control, for the purpose of extorting money from the ultimate builders of the roads. The policy of granting these subsidies has repeatedly been condemned in Parliament by the Liberal party, and this resolution is in harmony with the attitude of the Liberal party upon this question. (See resolutions 3 and 6, Liberal platform.)

Is that in the ipsissima verba, Sir?

Mr. BERGERON. Yes, word for word.

Mr. DAVIN. Now, resolution 3, on page 28, is as follows:—

Purity of Administration.—Condemn Corruption.

That the convention deplores the gross corruption in the management and expenditure of public moneys which for years past has existed under the rule of the Conservative party, and the revelations of which by the different parliamentary committees of inquiry have brought disgrace upon the fair name of Canada.

The Government, which profited politically by these expenditures of public moneys, whereof the people had been defrauded, and which, nevertheless, have never punished the guilty parties, must be held responsible for the wrong-doing.

Then, resolution 6, on page 53, is as follows:—

That, in the opinion of this convention, the sales of public lands of the Dominion should be to actual settlers only, and not to speculators, upon reasonable terms of settlement, and in such areas as can be reasonably occupied and cultivated by the settlers.

These are referred to as the roots of this comprehensive principle. Under these circumstances, I think the Prime Minister can hardly maintain, what he has stated here :—

No doubt the quotation was taken from some paper, but I do not remember ever seeing that paper, and I do not know if it has been taken from any paper, except perhaps some election pamphlet issued on the authority of somebody, but not on the authority of anybody that I knew to be responsible for the policy of the party.

Suppose it rested there, what state of things have we come to in this country? Here is a pamphlet issued by the Liberal party in Ontario, coming from the organizing officer of the party, eulogizing the leader, and stating the principles of the party on which the speeches of future members of Parliament and others trying to persuade public opinion are to be founded. Suppose it rested there, where are we? If the hon. gentleman knew nothing whatever of the fact that his friends were stating what is mentioned in that quotation published by the "Tribune," what an extraordinary state of affairs that is. We are asked to believe that the leader of a party, for which the public were asked to vote because of certain opinions advanced on the platform of that party, knew nothing whatever about a cardinal principle of that platform, and is in a position to repudiate it. The right hon. gentleman tells us :

I do not remember ever seeing that paper, and I do not know if it has been taken from any paper, except perhaps some election pamphlet issued on the authority of somebody, but not on the authority of anybody that I knew to be responsible for the policy of the party.

Suppose my right hon. friend knew—because that construction is capable of being placed upon his words—that such a pamphlet was issued—and it is next to impossible to believe that he did not know that his friends throughout the country were holding this up as one of the reasons why the Liberal party should be returned to power, namely, that they would shut down on railway subsidies—suppose he knew that and did not approve of it, but was ready to take advantage of it, where are we, from any standpoint of public ethics, from any standpoint of knowing where we are at? We need not leave it there. I will read again the language of my right hon. friend. He says :

It might have been published in some pamphlet, but not on the authority of anybody that I knew to be responsible for the policy of the party.

That surely implied that some, at least, of his present colleagues were capable of being made responsible for the policy of the Liberal party. Take, for instance, the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce; he was certainly one of the leaders of that party when they were out of power, and is one of their leaders now in the Government. What does he say? I have his words here. If the right hon. gentleman would take the ground—which I do not believe he would think of doing for one moment—that this was a campaign pamphlet issued from the office of the Reform party in Toronto by the Liberal organizer, Mr. Smith, in order to help the Liberal speakers on a hundred platforms, but that nevertheless the right hon. gentleman is not responsible for it—suppose he were to take that ground, in so doing would he not present a sorry spectacle? I have, however, a statement from the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce entirely endorsing what is stated in the pamphlet, and that hon. Minister was the most, or anyway one of the two or three most weighty men in the Reform party during those eighteen years when they were out of power, and is one of the weightiest men in the Government to-day, in intellect, anyway. Here is a letter written October 1st, 1894, to a person closely connected with the Patron organization, and published in the "Farmer's Sun," for the purpose of showing the Patrons that they would have very good friends in the Liberal party. He said :

What are the other planks of the Patron platform affecting Dominion politics? They are these: Economy of administration, purity and independence of Parliament, tariff for revenue only, reciprocal trade, protection of labour from monopoly, no railway bonuses.

No railway bonuses! No railway bonuses!

There is simply no single one of all these objects which the Liberal party have not been fighting for, moving resolutions for, and doing their best to obtain any time during the last twenty years. Look at the records of Parliament; look especially at the several motions on the Budget; look at their platform, and at the very last resolution moved by myself in Parliament, and you will see that, as regards Dominion politics, there is evidently no ground of difference between the Patrons and the Liberal party.

What is it that the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce laid down there? It is that in repeated resolutions, and especially resolutions on the Budget, the Liberal party approved those principles, including no bonuses to railways, and we know that the right hon. gentleman voted with him on those motions of want of confidence. I need not read these motions, because I have the statement of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, which shows that in every dot of the statement of my right hon. friend was opposed to the facts. My right hon. friend says, speaking of the policy of no more railway bonuses referred to in that quotation, that it had no official sanction. I have just shown that it had. The right hon. gentleman says, speaking of the quotation, that such a statement against railway bonuses was not made on the authority of anybody that he knew to be responsible for the policy of the party. But I have shown that it had the authority of the present Minister of Trade and Commerce.

I think that is a very serious state of things. I will leave that where it is. It is a repudiation by the right hon. Prime Minister of a most important principle in the policy of his party. I may drive the nail further home by one more quotation from the Minister of Trade and Commerce on this very subject. Speaking of the railway bonuses he said—you remember that the "Hansard" of 1894 is referred to by the organizer who composed that pamphlet, or is responsible for it:

What justification is there for heaping—

It is "helping" here; but, evidently, "heaping" is meant.

What justification is there for heaping on our overburdened people all these expenditures for enterprises of the merits of which we know nothing at all, and which, if they be one-quarter as valuable, or one-tenth as valuable, as they have been represented to be by the hon. gentleman, ought to be able to pay their own way. I object to the whole system for the matter of that, but particularly, it seems to me, that going into the wilderness in this fashion, on the vague statement that there are valuable coal mines, in which, even though they are as valuable as they are represented, the people of Canada have no interest, is something worse than throwing away our money.

I think I have shown that the Liberal party was, by its official mouthpiece, pledged to the policy stated formally in the pamphlet issued on the eve of the election of 1896, from which pamphlet, evidently, the acting editor of the "Tribune," who represents my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Richardson), when he is engaged, not in writing, but in statesmanship, quoted; and the author of the pamphlet is entirely justified by the two planks formulated in 1893 at the convention, and by the language of one of the foremost Liberals of the party, which I have quoted here to-day.

Mr. JOHN ROSS ROBERTSON (East Toronto). I want to say a few words upon this subsidy question in general, and more particularly in connection with the subsidy to the Rainy River Railway Company, the voting of which will, in my opinion not only paralyze the public interests of the west, and which subsidy is directly contrary, not only of the opinion of the people, but of the press, in the western part of this Dominion. I would have supported the Government on this question as readily as I supported the Government on the question of extending the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal, if I could have seen anything in the proposal but deception and disappointment for the people of western Canada, and plunder for the interests which this Government delights to enrich at the public expense. I am no admirer of some of the railway bargains which were made by Conservative Governments in the past. Those Governments worked under difficulties. The times were times of despair to hon. gentlemen opposite, and of doubt to the best of Canadians in the country; they were times of danger and uncertainty regarding the position and possibilities of the west; and the Conservative party made sacrifices which it should not have made, and mistakes which, I hope, it would not make, if it were in power to-day. The great objection I have to this bargain, and every other railway bargain which this Government has made in western Canada since it took office, is, that it duplicates the worst errors of the bargains the Conservative party made under conditions which were less favourable to the country. In my judgment, Canada's great mistake has been in giving its credit, its money and its land to every crowd of railway promoters who wanted to build railways with the country's resources. I hope I am no bigot on the question of Government ownership. I am not in favour of Government ownership of railways in the abstract; but I hold that the Government ought not be afraid to own any railway it is not afraid to pay for. What I find it difficult to get at is, why this Government can never get beyond Mackenzie & Mann. The privileges which have been conferred upon these favoured gentlemen by the Liberal governments at Winnipeg, Toronto and Ottawa are valuable. I know that I am always accused of finding fault and never making any helpful suggestions. But the question I am asking may pass as a suggestion. Why could not the Government of the right hon. First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) have worked with his friends in Toronto and Winnipeg, and settled this railway question for ever to the advantage of the whole country? It seems that Mackenzie & Mann have received great aid from the government at Winnipeg, and the government at Ottawa, and finally they come down to Ottawa to this Government, and call upon them to stand and deliver. If these three governments had combined their money, their credit, their lands and their charters, they could have made a better bargain with Mackenzie & Mann than any single one of these governments could make dealing with that enterprising firm one at a time. Why should not these three governments have joined their resources and their powers, and offered the privileges which have been showered on these favourites to the company which would build the road for the smallest subsidy and carry freight at the lowest price? I believe that if this privilege had been disposed of at public competition, the three governments could have made better terms for the country than they have been able to make under this plan of letting every government play a lone hand, and letting Mackenzie & Mann take every trick. The hon. the First Minister could work with the provincial governments to protect the party against the Senate, and why could he not work with these same provincial governments to protect the country against the railroad bargainners, who first bleed Manitoba, and then Ontario, and lastly the Dominion, for the benefit of Mackenzie & Mann, and, I have no doubt, the Canadian Pacific Railway. I have yet to see the first shred of evidence to justify the childlike faith of the hon. gentlemen who pretend to believe that Mackenzie and Mann and the Canadian Pacific Railway are two distinct factors in the railway situation. I believe that they are two in name, and one in fact. If it were a crime for Mackenzie & Mann to be allied with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and those two gentlemen were in the dock, charged with that crime, the circumstances would convict, no matter what they might say, or what my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) might say on their behalf. The theory that Mackenzie & Mann are separate from the Canadian Pacific Railway does violence to all the probabilities and all the facts of our experience with this Government. The friends of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the press of this country are the friends of Mackenzie & Mann; the friends of the Canadian Pacific Railway in the present Government are the friends of Mackenzie & Mann. The hon. the First Minister sat on the fence and allowed the Canadian Pacific lobby to crush the Canadians in the Boundary Creek country, who were fighting for the right to have a railway built at private expense. He is not on the fence to-day. No; he is down leading the hosts to battle for Mackenzie & Mann, or, in other words, for the Canadian Pacific Railway. The hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte)—and no one hopes more sincerely than I do that he may return to this country completely restored to health—I believe that the hon. Minister of Public Works would come out of his sick-bed to shoulder a musket in the interests of the Canadian Pacific Railway, if President Shaughnessy had anything to fear from this deal with Mackenzie & Mann. The hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) has never been known to differ from the Canadian Pacific Railway on a public question, even the elevator question; and he, too, has suddenly developed into the wild, untamed and fiery enemy of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I have read somewhere that all natural law is based on observation, and certain circumstances which are constantly occurring and recurring, are finally accepted as evidence of a natural law. Apply that rule to all the circumstances relating to the case of Mackenzie & Mann, and observation will surely teach the diligent student that the absolute identity of Mackenzie & Mann with the Canadian Pacific Railway is established by the natural law of coincidence. In the Drummond County case, I did not hesitate to support a bargain with the Grand Trunk Railway for the benefit of the country, although I am not a friend of the Grand Trunk Railway, and no admirer of its management. I would not hesitate to vote in favour of a deal with the Canadian Pacific Railway in the name of Mackenzie & Mann, or in that company's own name, if the country were to be benefited. This Government, in my opinion, is not securing for the country the benefits which it might secure.

The hon. gentlemen opposite may talk as they please about the bad bargains which were made when the Conservative party was in power. The Conservative party sacrificed possibilities, perhaps probabilities; but the Conservative party never pretended to have made Canada a nation, it did not figure as the author of a growing time. But this Government which made Canada a nation, which claims responsibility for a growing time, this Government, I say, has sacrificed certainties in its dealing with railway promoters.

The line from Winnipeg to Lake Superior, which might have been used as a check upon the tyranny of the Canadian Pacific Railway, is to become a mere branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway, built with the public credit, the public lands and the public money, and presented to private individuals to be used, possibly, for the oppression of the people, and certainly for their own profit. As to the concessions, it is too early to speak. In all these bargains the railway companies usually concede more on paper than the people can ever get in practice. Considering that the Canadian Pacific Railway will have the railway practically as a free gift, the concessions ought to be substantial. But I am afraid that the people of the west will have to fight harder and back up leaders like the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) and the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) before they realize much from this bargain, which is a sample of what the country gets from a Government by partisans for the benefit of railway promoters.

Now, as to the contractors of this road, Mackenzie & Mann, I understand that in addition to this enormous subsidy for the Rainy River road and its branches, these lucky contractors are to have some hundreds of thousands for the collapse of the Yukon deal. Well, would it not be as well to give these gentlemen the combination of the national treasury at once, and save the time of Parliament in voting the public money?

Mr. TAYLOR. They have taken the hinges off the inside door.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. Yes, I wonder they did not take the whole case. Now, is it possible that this compensation to Mackenzie & Mann may be covered up in the $1,800,000 we are now giving away to these contractors? For my part, I am not yet clear on this matter of compensation to these contractors, William Mackenzie and Donald Mann, the men who have undertaken this Rainy River Railway contract. It is a question with me as to whether they could get compensation at all. This House was told that the hon. the Minister of the Interior had driven such an exceedingly clever bargain on behalf of the country that Mackenzie & Mann would have been ruined if the Senate had not stepped in to save them by knocking out the scheme. Well, it is not long since the "Globe" declared that there were no two men in Canada more grateful to the Senate for saving them from ruin than William Mackenzie and D. D. Mann. I have been accused, as I said before, of opposing everything, and never proposing anything. An hon. member ought to be able to criticise without being called upon to create. I would like to help in destroying everything evil in connection with the work of this Government, and with the kind permission of the hon. member for East Huron (Mr. Macdonald), I would like to assist in the construction of something good. I understand he objects to criticism, and wants helpful suggestions, and my helpful suggestion is that if the Minister of the Interior made such a good bargain as he was said to have made, Mackenzie & Mann ought to be called upon to compensate the country for the services of the Senate which saved them from ruin. Why, Mr. Chairman, if it had not been for the Senate, these two poor, simple-minded Canadians would have been ruined by the surprising genius of the Government's great bargain-maker, the hon. Minister of the Interior. The country pays the Senate which is said to have saved those contractors from ruin, and their gratitude for a signal deliverance from the trap which the Minister of the Interior set for them, ought to lead Mackenzie & Mann to wipe out all claims against this suffering country.

The question of compensation to these contractors, Mackenzie & Mann, is one which should be treated strictly upon a business basis. I say again that the question arises whether these contractors are entitled to any compensation at all. An hon. gentleman on the opposite side of the House, when this Yukon scheme was under discussion, excused the bargain on the ground that the whole Yukon business was a huge gamble. Well, possibly this Rainy River contract may also be likened to a huge gamble. They have to take their chances, and they may come down for an additional subsidy. Mackenzie & Mann are shrewd men, and they went into this bargain with their eyes open. If the Bill had been put through Parliament they would have won great wealth, and as the deal failed to get through, they may write down their loss as one of those sporting events the chance of which must be taken by every one who goes into a huge gamble.

I am not inclined to condemn the Government for trying to save their partners in its mistake from loss. I do not think that if Mackenzie & Mann are entitled to compensation their claim is a moral claim, that is, if a moral claim can arise out of an immoral transaction such as this Yukon bargain. At all events, their claim is not a legal claim, and if they are to get compensation at all, the Government is doing all that it should do when it asks this Parliament to let Mackenzie & Mann out of this transaction with whole bones. Any compensation they get should not go one cent beyond the actual expenses. If these contractors never got a cent for their losses through the failure of the Yukon bargain, the country would not owe them anything. They might compensate themselves out of their excessive profits from the Lake Dauphin Railway deal when, through the kindness of the then Attorney General of Manitoba, they were able to use the credit of that province and the lands of this Dominion to the extent of $16,000 per mile for a railway that was built for $8,000 per mile. I do not think that Mackenzie & Mann would suffer any great hardships if they were asked to take the losses on the Yukon deal out of the same pocket which has been filled by subsidies from their Liberal benefactors at Winnipeg, Toronto and Ottawa.

I was glad to hear the right hon. First Minister, when the subsidies were brought down, announce that the Senate resolutions would be withdrawn. I think that he acted wisely in so doing. There has been no deadlock between the Senate and this House of Commons. It may be somewhat of a coincidence that the Conservative Senate began to develop the virtues of a vigilant watchdog about the time that a Liberal Opposition began to develop the vices of a Government. The Senate has differed from the Government in its interpretation of public opinion on one or two notable occasions. I believe that the Senate was more nearly right than the Government, and if the Senate should see fit to disapprove of the Government's action on this subsidy question, in my judgment the Senate will be conforming to the best interests and opinion in this country. I do not hesitate to say that I believe that the Senate was a good deal too much of an echo to every Conservative Government; and if the present Government is spared to fill the Senate with its own partisans, the Senate will become too much of an echo for every Liberal Government, and such a Senate would shut its eyes and empty the public treasury into the laps of subsidy hunters. Canada, in my judgment, if this resolution brought down by the First Minister had not been withdrawn, would be degraded by the plan of treating the Imperial Parliament at Westminster as a sort of bicycle repair shop, to which we are to run whenever this country punctures one of the tires of its constitution.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. I think the hon. gentleman should confine himself as much as possible to the discussion of the resolutions concerning railway subsidies. As I understand his remarks, he is discussing a resolution which has been withdrawn.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. Well, Mr. Chairman, you will at least permit me to say that Canada has suffered no grievance which could justify the leader of the Government in turning the British North America Act into the raw material for campaign issues. The Senate may have embarrassed the Government, but better that the Senate should embarrass the Government than that the Government should embarrass the country. It might be possible to amend the constitution of this country to suit the politicians who want to strike down the arm which the Senate of Canada occasionally places across the door of the national treasury, so as to preserve the resources of this country from the subsidy-hunting railroad bargainers. The country would probably then ask why that cannot be done, why the Imperial Parliament which can amend the British North America Act to suit the politicians, cannot also amend the British North America Act to suit the people who want Canada to be free to choose her own official language, and who demand that every province of Canada shall have entire and absolute freedom in educational affairs.

Mr. R. L. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). Mr. Chairman, it is my intention to offer some criticism with regard to these bonuses, and I have been debating in my mind whether I had better offer that criticism at the present time or when the items come up clause by clause. I have made up my mind that it would take less time and be much more satisfactory to myself and to hon. members that I should offer my remarks generally at the present time. At this late period of the session, I would not like to be guilty of the bad taste of making any extended speech, although, I must confess that, as far as my own views go, if I failed to rise in my place at the present time, in order to protest against some of these subsidies, and the conditions under which they are being granted. I would prefer to resign my seat in the House of Commons, so keenly do I feel upon that point. I will endeavour to be as brief as possible. On the question of railway bonusing I have long taken the view that the time has come in this country when the giving of railway bonuses to railway corporations should cease. I am not prepared to say that loans may not be made to railways, or that advances may not be made, if they are properly secured, but, so far as my view goes, I believe we have reached a stage in the history of the Dominion of Canada when the Government should build and own the railways itself. At an earlier period of the session I took occasion on a motion I introduced, to present to the House some figures with regard to what the Dominion of Canada has contributed towards the construction of railways. I was able to prove from the figures that this country had paid in cash and lands, assuming the lands to be worth the value placed upon them by the company itself, $135,000,000 for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, while the estimate by the company of the cost of the road was only $91,500,000. Notwithstanding these vast subsidies, we know that, in every part of the western country, traversed by the Canadian Pacific Railway, the most exorbitant rates have been, and in many cases still are, exacted all along the line. So persistent was the agitation against these rates that the late Government felt it to be its duty to refer the question to a commission in order to see if something could not be done by which relief could be afforded to the people. I was able to point to the argument of Sir John Macdonald, when these bonuses were going through Parliament, that the company that was receiving these subsidies would in virtue of the great public assistance contributed, be able to carry the freights of the country at about one-quarter of the rates that would be charged by other companies that were not subsidized. This being the position, in regard to the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, I claim that, in view of our experience, the time has come when there should be a change of policy. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair), has intimated that this Rainy River Railway is but a link of what may yet be another great transcontinental railway. If that is true, has the time not come when the Government, in view of our experience, should absolutely safeguard the interests of the settlers in the west in the building of this new road? We have had sufficient experience of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Surely we should place such restrictions in the contract, in connection with the building of this new road, as will absolutely safeguard the interests of the settlers in that country. I very deeply regret to be obliged to differ from the position which the Government has taken on this question, but I am in hopes that, when all the arguments are fully laid before the hon. members of the Government, they will, at least, adopt such measures as will substantially safeguard the interests of the settlers there. I made, the other day, a brief calculation as to the amount of lands which we have contributed to the building of railways in Manitoba and the North-west Territories, and I find, from official sources, that we have contributed no less than 40,000,000 acres of land, exclusive of lands in British Columbia, and other parts of the country. Let me read to the House, from an official source, a brief statement showing to what companies these lands were given:

Now, I think, I have been able to demonstrate to this House the immense amount of land we have given, in that country, for the bonusing of railways. The total is 40,000,000 acres, exclusive of British Columbia, where practically a kingdom in coal lands has been given away, and large subsidies in lands in other parts of the country. I have been able to show that the great majority of it belongs to the Canadian Pacific Railway, which is, probably, the largest owner of land in the civilized world. It represents 40,000,000 acres, or 62,500 square miles—equal to one-fourth of the area of Austria-Hungary, very nearly one-third of the area of France, over one-half of the area of the United Kingdom, and over two-thirds of the area of Italy. The best lands in that country having now been exhausted, we find that the railway exploiters, the people who are after the Government to build railroads and allow them to own the same now want cash subsidies. It seems to me that the time has come when we should cease giving these people subsidies. I have looked up some statistics in the Year-book of 1897 and I find that the cash contributions to railways in Canada from federal, provincial and municipal sources amount to something like $200,000,000, and all we have to show for that sum at the present time is the Intercolonial Railway. In addition to what we have spent on railroads, we have up to the present time spent $70,000,000 or more on our canal system—a total contribution of $270,000,000 for transportation in this country. It would take the entire revenue of this Dominion, at $40,000,000 a year for seven years, to pay the amount which this country has contributed to transportation. Now, I want to present an argument that will appeal specially to people who live in the North-west. Let us assume that the wheat crop of that country amounts to 40,000,000 bushels per annum, it would take the crop of that whole country for twelve years, at 50 cents a bushel, which is about the average price that has been received there, to pay the enormous contributions which this country has made to transportation. If you take the entire population of the Dominion of Canada at 5,000,000, you will find that we have contributed for every man, woman and child in the country, $54 per head. If you add the gifts of land which we have given to these railway companies, estimating it at $2 per acre, you will find that we have contributed to transportation $350,000,000, which is equivalent to $70 per head of our entire population—men, women and children. In order to make these comparisons effective, I have endeavoured to get some statistics with reference to what has been done in the United States. As nearly as I can gather, I find that the people of that country have not contributed to transportation more than about $1 per head. In fact, they are against railway bonusing; and members who have studied the question will bear me out that even in the construction of their transcontinental railways, extending from ocean to ocean, when aid has been given, it has only been given as a loan, and as a rule the amount has been returned to the Government which granted it. That seems to me to be the proper principle on which aid should be granted to railways in this country. It is all well enough to assist in the construction of railways; but when these railways are able to provide for themselves, it seems to me they ought to return to the country the amount of money that has been granted. I am informed that the constitutions of some of the states absolutely prohibit the granting of bonuses in any form whatever. If the people of the United States had assisted transportation to the same per capita amount that we have, they would have contributed in cash $3,780,000,000—more than twice the entire national debt of the republic. If they had contributed in cash and lands to the same per capita amount that the people of the Dominion have, they would have contributed $4,900,000,000. And yet, notwithstanding these immense expenditures on transportation, I am sure that the statement which I am about to make will startle the House: that at least five-sixths of the entire products of the North-west which come east do not pass over the canals which have been constructed in Canada at such an enormous cost to the country, nor over the railroads which we have bonused so lavishly, but through American channels, via Buffalo to New York. And, notwithstanding these startling figures, we are still going on contributing enormous sums for transportation. The other night we saw, I think it was about $1,000,000 voted for the development of the Trent Valley Canal—an expenditure which we are told will run up to probably five or six or ten millions of dollars. That is not a national undertaking and will be of no benefit for carrying the great trade of our country; and, notwithstanding all we have done, we are still going on with this folly. It would look as if we had established in Canada the national industry of bonusing; but unless we draw the line somewhere we shall soon find that people will not even run a wheel-barrow or a truck without applying to the Government of Canada for some assistance. I am informed that the Government have had applications this session for no less than $20,000,000 of aid for railways, so that it would seem that the Government have had quite a task in paring their contributions down to $8,500,000. It would seem as if the railway raiders were bound to push their enterprise to its very limit. It might not be a bad idea for somebody to suggest to Mr. Crockett, the able Scottish novelist, who has written such an excellent book on "The Raiders" of Scotland, that he should come to this country, where he would find sufficient data to write a companion book to that one; and I am sure it would not be necessary for him to go into the field of fiction. If he confined his data entirely to fact, I think he could make a book sufficiently interesting and startling for the people of any country.

Now, I want to discuss—and I will do it as briefly as possible—the Rainy River Railway, the project which I have risen especially to discuss at the present time. As the country generally knows, the people of the North-west have complained very bitterly of the high freight rates which the Canadian Pacific Railway have charged on the road extending from Winnipeg to the head of Lake Superior. It has been generally felt in that country that the rates on that line have been exorbitant in comparison with the rates on other lines; and for years Mr. Greenway has been using his best endeavours to secure competition with the Canadian Pacific Railway by the construction of a branch from Winnipeg to Duluth or Fort William, with the view of bringing about a reduction in the rate on wheat to a reasonable figure. Some fifteen or sixteen years ago the rate was from 28 to 30 cents per cwt. from Winnipeg to Fort William, on a railway a little over 400 miles in length. In 1889 the Northern Pacific Railway was introduced into the province of Manitoba, and the rate was then cut down to 21 cents per cwt. Since that time Mr. Greenway has been doing his best to secure the construction of another outlet. I have looked over the resolutions, and I find that the total aid to the construction of the line between Rainy River and Fort William or Port Arthur, which it is proposed this Government shall give at the present time is $1,856,000. There is one clause, however, under which the aid on a 70-mile section might be reduced from $6,400 per mile to $3,200 per mile, and if that were done the entire aid would be $1,632,000. In addition to that immense assistance from this Government, the Ontario Government, at its last session, granted a subsidy to the extent, I think, of something like $1,250,000, or at least $4,000 per mile. I have been informed also that the Manitoba Government has in contemplation an additional grant to this very link to the extent of $4,000 per mile. As the House knows, the Manitoba Government has assisted the construction of the Manitoba and South-eastern Railway, extending from Winnipeg to Buffalo Bay down by the Lake of the Woods, being the connecting link with the Rainy River Railway when the through line is completed. The aid to the Manitoba and South-eastern is a special guarantee of its bonds to the extent of $8,000 per mile, almost, if not entirely, sufficient to build that road. If we add together these different subsidies, if we add what this Government is giving and what the Ontario Government is giving, and which I presume the Manitoba Government might give: $4,000 per mile, we will find that we are giving to these people the enormous subsidy of $14,400 per mile, which would be sufficient to build the entire road, in my opinion, although, of course, not being an engineer, I would not like to make any positive statement, although railway construction is now so cheap compared with former years that the public have no conception how small it is.

It was understood some time ago that the Manitoba Government had proposed to aid that road in Ontario on the condition that a low rate would be granted for the carrying of wheat from Manitoba to the head of lake navigation.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Our subsidy does not extend beyond the foot of the lake, and does not go to the other side of the lake, to which their subsidy would apply.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I did not make the assertion that the Manitoba aid was actually granted. I said that I had been informed that such a proposition had been made.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I understood the hon. gentleman to assert that there was practically $14,000 per mile given this road.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I said that if the Manitoba Government gave that $1,000,000—and the information I have is that they contemplate contributing a million dollars to the construction of the road between Fort Frances and Fort Stanley, and if you divide the mileage into that, you will get about $4,000 per mile, and these subsidies together would make the enormous grant of $14,400 per mile.

Mr. WOOD. Have the Winnipeg Government or the North-west agreed to give anything in hard cash, or simply guarantee the amount of interest on the bonds?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The remarks that I have already made entirely answer that question.

Mr. MACDONELL (Selkirk). The statements of the hon. gentleman, so far as the Manitoba Government are concerned, are rather misleading. The Manitoba Government have guaranteed bonds to the extent of $8,000 per mile on the South-eastern Railway, and they have secured their guarantee by a mortgage on the road.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have already stated that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is no part of the line included in this resolution.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is a connector of the Rainy River road.

Mr. RICHARDSON.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. But no part of this.

Mr. RICHARDSON. No. There is absolutely no difference of opinion between us, and if permitted, I will put the case so fair that he who runs may read. I am not here for the purpose of misleading the House in the slightest degree. My statement was that the Manitoba Government had already aided the Manitoba and South-eastern extension from Winnipeg down to Buffalo Bay by guaranteeing the bonds of that company to the extent of $8,000 per mile.

Mr. HAGGART. What do you mean by guaranteeing their bonds?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I shall come to that. Inasmuch as that road has a valuable land grant, the subsidies guarantee and lands will be entirely sufficient to build it from Winnipeg to Buffalo Bay or Lake of the Woods. What I said was that I had reason to believe that the Manitoba Government had contemplated granting a subsidy of $1,000,000, which I think would figure out about $4,000 per mile on the mileage, on condition that a rate of 10 cents per 100 pounds on wheat would be granted in the carrying of wheat from Winnipeg to Lake Superior. I did not state positively that it would be done, but that I was informed it would be. And I was so informed by a member of the deputation which came from Port Arthur recently to urge the granting of federal aid to this enterprise. I went on to say that it was to be a cash subsidy, and that if that were done the total subsidies, including the proposed grant, would amount to about $14,400 per mile, which I am inclined to think would be sufficient to build it. The hon. Minister of Railways say he has never heard of it, and even assuming that the Manitoba Government is not going to give a cent, the aid would still be very large.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. How do you make up $14,000 a mile? What is the mileage between Winnipeg and Port Arthur?

Mr. RICHARDSON. That would not bear on the question.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, it would, because if you expend $1,000,000 over the mileage between Winnipeg and the eastern limit, you would have to distribute that amount over the mileage.

Mr. RICHARDSON. What is the mileage from Fort Stanley to Fort Francis, for it is only on that mileage the aid would apply?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Two hundred and eighty miles.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Divide $1,000,000 by 280.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. You have to add on the other piece.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is already added, by the guarantee of the bonds on the Manitoba and South-eastern to the extent of $8,000 per mile.

Mr. HAGGART. What percentage do the bonds cover? It depends entirely on what percentage they cover.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The question of guarantee has nothing to do with this possible aid to the line between Fort Stanley and Fort Frances.

Mr. HAGGART. I understand that.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The bonds are guaranteed to the extent of $8,000 per mile from Winnipeg to Buffalo Bay. I am not sure what the interest was, but I presume it was 5 per cent.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Four.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Of course, the hon. Minister of the Interior knows the facts. But that point has nothing to do with the proposition I am laying down. I do not mention the matter as a fact, but I give it to the House as I got it and state the source of my information. If Manitoba did give that assistance, it would be to assist the building of that section between Fort Frances and Fort Stanley. The Minister of Railways and Canals tells us that this is 280 miles. I do not know the exact mileage, but I made a division of what I thought would be the mileage, to $1,000,000 and found that the aid would be about $4,000 a mile. I am not giving absolute figures, but making a calculation.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I was not in the Chamber when the hon. gentleman, as I understand, spoke of a proposal to give aid of $1,000,000. Would he kindly let me know what he said?

Mr. RICHARDSON. What I told the House was that I had been informed that the Manitoba Government proposed to grant aid to the extent of $1,000,000 to assist the construction from Fort Frances to Fort Stanley on the line east of that already aided by a guarantee bond from the Manitoba South-eastern, on condition that a through rate of 10 cents per hundredweight be given on wheat. I did not make that as an assertion, but merely said I had been so informed, and on that I based a calculation.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think it a very improbable report.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am not here to say whether it is probable or improbable. I said that, assuming it to be true, it would make an enormous subsidy to this railway; and the proposition I made was that it would be in the interest of the people of the western country as well as in the interest of the entire Dominion if this Government would make a proposition to the Manitoba and Ontario Governments that, inasmuch as the combined aid which might be granted for the construction of this road would be sufficient to construct the road, it would be a good idea for the combined Governments to build the road and hold it as a railway highway upon which all companies might have running powers. If Mann & Mackenzie desire to run trains over the road, they could be allowed to do so on paying a certain charge. If that were done, the interest of the people would be absolutely safeguarded. This is the most important railway link that will ever be built in this Dominion of Canada, in my estimation. It will be the link over which the immense products of the great North-west country will pour, probably for all time; and, if that is so, is it not desirable, and especially so in view of our experience with the Canadian Pacific Railway, that inasmuch as the country, through the different Governments, is going to pay practically the entire cost of the road, the Governments themselves should build that road and hold it as a railway highway for all time. That is my proposition, and I believe it is a fair one. I am in hopes that the Government may yet adopt it.

Now, I want to refer to another matter, and it bears very particularly upon this point. In the resolutions which are before the House there is a clause to which the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals referred at considerable length this morning. That is the clause which is supposed to prevent the amalgamation of this road with the Canadian Pacific Railway or with any other road in the future. That clause gave rise to considerable cross-questioning and considerable argument at the time. The best answer I can offer to that is to read a brief extract from a speech which the Minister of Railways and Canals made in this House last session on that very subject. He was referring to a motion which the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean, made with reference to the control of rates and the prevention of amalgamation on this road. As reported in "Hansard," the hon. Minister spoke as follows. The reference in the first place is to the hon. member for East York:—

The hon. gentleman has said, why does not the Minister of Railways consent to a clause being inserted in this Bill that this railway shall not pass into the hands of the Canadian Pacific Railway? Well, Mr. Speaker, I will tell you why. Not that I would not very much regret seeing this railway, if it becomes, as is hoped, an important trunk line in the future, pass under the control of the Canadian Pacific Railway; but I am not at this moment really able to advise this House as to what kind of words or what sort of a section could be framed which would prevent the Canadian Pacific Railway from acquiring this road. I wonder how you would go to work to do it. Would you say that the persons who shall invest their money in this enterprise shall not sell their stock or their bonds to anybody who might be acting in the interest of the Canadian Pacific Railway? The only way you could do that would be to say that they shall never sell their stock or bonds at all—that the stock or bonds shall never pass out of the hands of the people who invest in them, and that no person who is, or is likely to be, directly or indirectly subject to the control of the Canadian Pacific Railway shall invest a dollar in this enterprise? Would you not make yourself entirely ridiculous by inserting any such clause in the Bill? If the hon. gentleman cannot come any nearer to a solution than that, he will have to leave things as they are, and run the possible risk of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company buying up those interests. You will have to submit to that contingency, so far as I can see; and no provision that we can incorporate in any law is capable of avoiding it. I would be as averse to the Canadian Pacific Railway getting control of this railway as the hon. gentleman. I am willing to give them fair-play; I think they are entitled to fair-play; but I do not like to see them picking up every little railroad that may be constructed in Canada any more than the hon. gentleman does.

I do not wish to be put in the position of casting the slightest aspersion upon the integrity of the Minister of Railways and Canals. I have watched that hon. gentleman pretty closely, and I must say I have learned to admire him. So far as my judgment goes, I think he has done considerable to protect the interests of the people as against the railway corporations. But I am bound, as a representative of a western country to point out the difficulties in the present case. We have a clause in these railway resolutions providing that no amalgamation shall ever occur between the Rainy River and the Canadian Pacific Railway. You see I have been able to prove, from the words of the Minister himself, that that clause is not worth the paper it is written on. The logical conclusion, the only conclusion that hon. gentlemen can come to is that, if you cannot prevent the Canadian Pacific Railway—and the Minister says you cannot—from absorbing the Rainy River Railway, then, I say, in God's name the country should own that railway itself. I think that is the only way in which we can protect the public interests. I wish to be entirely moderate, but I am bound to say in view of the interest of the people in the west in this matter, in view of the agitation that has been worked up over this question, in view of the universal desire of the people of Manitoba and the North-west that their interests should be fully protected the control of this new and important outlet should be held by the Government. I am bound to be, as I have said, brutally frank on this occasion.

I do not propose to have my constituents say that I failed to do my duty on this question. I want it distinctly understood that I am seeking to represent the views of the people that sent me here. I may say that I made a tour through the province of Manitoba and spoke at a number of places on this very question. I did not speak at Liberal meetings, I did not speak at Tory meetings, but the meetings I addressed were generally Farmers' Institutes, composed of Liberals and Conservatives; and I am bound to say that in every case when a resolution was submitted on this very question, it was carried unanimously, declaring that it would be in the interests of the country that the Government should control this important branch railroad between Winnipeg and Port Arthur.

Mr. MACDONELL. Were they not already sufficiently served by communication at the expense of the country?

Mr. RICHARDSON. That would not at all affect this point, for the reason that this particular railway about which I am speaking is not designed to serve a settlement of people; it is a railroad running through a portion of country much of which is, I think, barren, from Fort Francis down to Fort William. There is very little settlement on that line, but I understand there is some settlement along the Rainy River.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is quite rich in minerals.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The point I wish to make is that this railway derives its importance from the fact that it is going to be a highway over which will go the immense products of the north-western country to lake navigation at the head of Lake Superior. If that be the case, then the importance of absolutely safeguarding the interests of the people will be understood by every member of this House.

Now, I am not disposed to think that even the clause in these resolutions with reference to running powers will prove of any value. There is a clause which provides—the Minister of Railways and Canals will put me right if I am wrong—which provides that running powers shall be granted by the Governor General in Council to all who may apply for it. Now, we may provide that running powers may be granted over the road that we aid. We are now aiding the road from Fort Stanley up to Fort Frances and down the Rainy River, some 70 miles. Now, what possible value will the granting of running powers over this piece of road that we aid, be to the country? If the resolutions provided that running powers shall be granted over the road from Buffalo Bay to Winnipeg, that is on the Manitoba South-eastern aided by the Manitoba Government, then running powers will be of some value. But, so far as I can see, there will be no particular value if they only provide for running powers from Fort Stanley to Fort Frances, or to Rainy River. I would like to hear from the Minister of Railways on this point.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think we would scarcely be in a position to impose any condition as respects running powers over lines which are incorporated by provincial legislation, and over which we have no legislative control.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then, that makes my position invulnerable. It is clear that it entirely destroys the value of that provision in the resolutions, if, in lieu of the bonuses we are granting, we can grant running powers only over the piece that we aid. I would like to ask the members of this committee of what possible value will running powers be from Fort Stanley to Fort Frances, or down a piece of the Rainy River, if you have not got running powers over the pieces which connect?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman would not build a railroad in that case.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I believe it would be better to wait than that we should build it under the present conditions, because I believe it would create an irritation and dissatisfaction in the North-west that will do irreparable injury in that country.

Now, I made another calculation which I thought was of some interest, and which I would like to present to the committee. If you take the wheat product of the west for the past fifteen years, it is perhaps safe to assume that on an average eight million bushels were exported. This would represent a total export of 120 million bushels, or 76 million hundredweight. Now, the rate which the Canadian Pacific Railway has charged during the past fifteen years to carry wheat from Winnipeg to Fort William has averaged from 30 cents per hundredweight to 17½ cents per hundredweight. It is quite true that owing to an arrangement made in connection with the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, a reduction of rates from 17½ cents to 14 cents was recently secured, but we paid for it in cash. I think it would be fair to say that the average rate for that period has been about 20 cents per hundredweight for the last fifteen years; the people of the west have been paying about 20 cents per hundredweight to have their wheat shipped from Winnipeg to Fort William, about 425 miles. Now we are informed that the Parry Sound Railway carried wheat from the North-west last year at the rate of 5 cents a hundredweight over their line, and I am informed, and believe, that some of the American lines, notably the New York Central, carry wheat for 2½ or 3 cents per hundredweight for a similar distance.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Oh, no.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think so, from Buffalo to New York. I say I believe that was done, and I will endeavour, if necessary, to give the committee additional data upon that. But at least, rates for similar distances on different railroads have been very low, and I believe, have not, in a number of cases, been more than 5, 6 or 8 cents per hundredweight for the same distance. Therefore, if the Parry Sound Railroad carried it for 5 cents, it would be safe to assume that the Canadian Pacific Railway could carry it for 5 cents without losing money, particularly so when it is remembered that the people of Canada presented to the Canadian Pacific Railway the entire line between Winnipeg and Port Arthur. Upon such assumption, the company has reaped a profit of 15 cents a hundred, or in fifteen years has made a net profit out of the settlers of the west of $11,520,000 on the through rates from Winnipeg to Fort William, to say nothing of the immense profits on the high local rates which have always prevailed, and do still prevail, in Manitoba and the North-west Territories. If the cost of carrying wheat be placed at 8 cents a hundred, the Canadian Pacific Railway would have reaped a profit of $9,216,000, and if the cost was 10 cents a hundred, the company has made out of the people $7,680,000. The mileage of the Parry Sound Railway over which wheat was carried, is the same as the mileage between Winnipeg and Fort William.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is 30 or 40 miles less.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I understood it was practically the same. Notwithstanding this immense loss to the settlers, the country paid for the road, and Sir John Macdonald said that the Canadian Pacific Railway could carry freights at about one-quarter of what would be charged on other lines, owing to the vast public subsidies given.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It has not made its 10 per cent dividend yet.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals says that the Canadian Pacific Railway has not made its 10 per cent dividend yet up to the present time. Is he quite sure of that? So far as we know it has not, because the late Government committed the gigantic blunder, the unpardonable, insane blunder, of giving these immense subsidies to the Canadian Pacific Railway and inserting a clause which provides that until it earned 10 per cent on the capital actually expended in the railway, there could be no reduction of rates.

Mr. MACLEAN. How much was actually expended?

Mr. RICHARDSON. One of the first things I did on coming into the House this session was to place a notice on the Order paper of a motion appointing a commission to find out what was actually expended, and declaring that the excess of subsidies which the Government had given towards the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, ought to be deducted from the capital actually expended in the railway; the object being to demonstrate that even under the bond the time had come to secure Governmental control of rates.

Mr. MACLEAN. The Canadian Pacific Railway made all that money in the west, and the Government has taken no action in the matter.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am afraid the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) is not friendly to the Government.

Mr. MACLEAN. I want the Government to make the inquiry. What became of the motion of the member for Lisgar?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Some hon. member moved the adjournment of the debate, and it has not been heard of since, as the order was never again reached. I do not propose to extend my remarks any further at the present time. I think I have spoken at sufficient length, and with sufficient earnestness and warmth, to satisfy the House that at least so far as I am concerned, I am in very deep earnest in regard to this matter. I did not want to make any statement that was not reasonably fair, or that would not be borne out by the facts. It is an extremely difficult matter for any member at any time, and particularly for a young member of this House, to differ with the party to which he usually gives allegiance. It is a difficult matter, I say, at any time, but I have felt it to be my duty to the people I represent, and to the west, the people who are in deep earnest in regard to this matter, to speak as I have done on the present occasion. I am not sure whether this is the proper time, but I propose to move an addition to the main clause or preamble upon which we are speaking at the present time. I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Oliver:

That the following be inserted after the word "railway" first used in the last line but one of the preamble:—

"That during the construction of all railways herein bonused, all books, accounts and records showing the actual cost of construction shall be open to inspection by the Government, in order that if it be subsequently determined by the Government to acquire any or all of the railways subsidized, they may be so acquired with a knowledge of their actual cost and at a figure from which shall be deducted the bonuses given by Government."

That the rates, both passenger and freight, shall at all times be subject to revision and control by the Governor General in Council, provided that whenever such rates produce a net earning of more than 6 per cent on the actual cost of the road and equipment, less the amount of subsidies received from any source, the rates shall be reduced to such point as shall only produce 6 per cent on such net cost.

Mr. E. B. OSLER (West Toronto). Mr. Chairman, I want to make a few remarks on the general principle of the resolutions, without going into the details of the individual subsidies. What strikes me, in connection with these enormous subsidies which are proposed, is the curious and extraordinary fact that nobody appears, for the moment, to think there is any limit to running into debt in Canada. It seems to have passed away from the minds of the hon. Ministers that at one time, at all events, in their political career, they believed that a limit should be fixed to the debt of Canada, and that it should be held steadily in view by the party in power. This has been my view for a long time, and I believe it most thoroughly. I expressed the view, when I offered myself for election, that the time had come when Government aid to railways in the older provinces should cease entirely. I have not changed my view on that point, but what I have seen since has rather confirmed that view. I believe there is not one single item of aid in this long list that ought to be granted by this Parliament. There is not one single railway proposed on this list which, if it is a business proposition and a railway that ought to be built, will not find capital in Canada, and out of Canada, to build it. The original reason for granting railway subsidies was very good and proper. The Ontario Government granted large subsidies to open up the timber limits and fertile districts in Grey, Bruce and other counties. They should have stopped long ago, but within later years they have been bonusing lines to duplicate lines already aided. This is being done in this House now. It was a most vicious principle. It helped to destroy capital. It is all very well to insert a clause in these charters saying that railways shall not be amalgamated, and that they shall be independent. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals last year, in expressing himself on that view, was quite correct. It is impossible to put in a clause that will prevent the absorption of a railway, if that railway is run by men who find that they are not making money. If the road is being run at a loss, the bondholders will close it out, sell it, and the only bidder that will buy it will be the rival road. That has been the history of railroads. You have only to take the one instance, where the very large grant of $12,000 a mile was given to the Northern Pacific Junction Railway, connecting the Northern Railway with the Canadian Pacific Railway at North Bay. The most stringent provisions were put in, that the Northern Pacific Junction should never be sold to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company or the Grand Trunk Railway Company. The Grand Trunk Railway, in its rivalry with the Canadian Pacific Railway, acquired the Northern Pacific. It is easy to talk about the question, but it is not so easy to suggest any possible means whereby you can prevent one road being absorbed by another road. A strong combination of capitalists built the West Shore system from New York, in rivalry with the Vanderbilt system, or the New York Central Railway. A number of these capitalists in New York almost ruined themselves in trying to carry out that enterprise, but when the clouds of the financial panic that took place had cleared up, it was found that the Vanderbilt interest owned the West Shore road. Every road you are aiding will fall, as surely as the sun sets, into one of the two great systems of Canada. There is no other way for it, because no short road can live and pay its expenses. That has been the history of all roads. You cannot get capital in the world's markets to-day to build a short road, unless there is a Government guarantee. To show you that long ago funds were available for railway building in Canada, in the case of a railway that was a commercial necessity, the Ontario and Quebec Railway was originally chartered and had bonuses from various sources, amounting to nearly $1,000,000. The Grand Trunk interest, through its friends, obtained control of the charter of the railway and of these bonuses. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company, however, wished to construct a line over the same route, to connect its own line with the Great Western. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company and its friends, therefore, got together, obtained another charter, and built that Ontario and Quebec road without one dollar of bonus from the Government or from any municipality in this country; and I venture to say that it is as paying a road as there is in Canada. There was a business necessity for that road, and the business men found the money for it. The main point which I wish to make is, that I believe the time has come in this country when we should say that our debt shall not pile up any higher. We are having very great prosperity; we are having a surplus revenue. On the strength of that, the Minister of Railways brings down subsidies unheard of before in the history of this country; and he supplements these subsidies by saying that they are only the beginning.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, I did not say that.

Mr. OSLER. I think the hon. gentleman said that we were only looking to the future, that railway building had only commenced in this country, and that the Government would be asked for further enormous sums, or some such language. Now, there is no necessity for bonusing these roads; but there is every necessity for stopping the bonusing of any road, unless it may be in the North-west, or in the Yukon, or where some great public interest requires it. In such cases the Government should aid the roads, and aid them liberally; but I mean the ordinary roads in the older provinces. With regard to the condition, that postal services to the amount of 3 per cent of the subsidy shall be returned to the Government, I find that the Calgary and Edmonton road earns altogether in Government work, including the transport of troops and mails, $5,000 a year. That is an enormous interest on the subsidy, is it not? The Qu'Appelle and Long Lake road earns a little under $2,000 a year. The Manitoba Railway earns, I believe, about $5,000 a year. These three roads are running through good districts in the North-west, and they have been in operation from ten to fourteen years. That will show how much revenue Canada may expect to derive from the postal services. Now, apart from the consideration of increasing our debt, which I think is the most important one in connection with this matter, there is another consideration which is perhaps indirectly more important. I differ with my leader, and with the leader of the Government, when they agreed that these railway subsidies were not sources of corruption. I contend that they are a main source of corruption in elections, such as we are now having exposed. It is from such subsidies that the money is supplied to pay the men who have been engaged in the ballot-stuffing and the election frauds which we hear so much about. These men are not committing these crimes for nothing. They are paid with the money of the people. What else can you expect, when a Government stands with open hands, and says to every section of the country: Apply to us, and we will give you any possible Government aid. That has been the position the Government has taken in regard to these railway subsidies. It was the condition that existed before they came into power. It is a condition which I personally have opposed very strongly, whenever I had an opportunity to do so. It is a condition which I intend to oppose as long as I have any voice here or elsewhere. I believe the Government are doing a great injustice to Canada in giving this opportunity to the people to come forward, with their cap in their hand, and say: Please give us a subsidy. It has been stated that $22,000,000 of subsidies have been asked for on this occasion. That certainly means that there are a great many hungry mouths to be fed, and that the Government have only seen their way to feed about one-fourth of them. Perhaps promises may have been made for further subsidies later on. But, for the two broad reasons I have stated—first, that our debt is high enough, far too high, that there is no necessity for these subsidies, and that we should keep steadily in view the necessity of reducing, and not extending, our public debt; and, secondly, that these lavish votes of public money, from whatever Government they come, must tend to corrupt the morals of the people—I oppose most thoroughly these proposed railway grants.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The discussion which has taken place to-day, though we are at a very advanced period of the session, is one which I think ought to be fruitful. It has brought us to the consideration of many question to which it is just as well to give our attention, because they deeply affect the national life of this country. We have at once to consider whether we shall stop the policy which has prevailed for the last fifteen or eighteen years, of bonusing railways, and whether we shall follow in the way hinted at by the hon. member for York, N.B., (Mr. Foster), and boldly urged by some of his followers, of ceasing to give grants to railways at all, and leaving all parts of the country to shift as best they can. Let me say at once that it is quite easy for old sections, such as the country around the city of Toronto, which are gridironed with railways, to say that no section of the country should have any railway aid—that the unsettled parts of the country, where the settler has to go into the heart of the forest, with nothing but his axe, or on the wide prairies, must wait until private capital provides them with the railway they require for the development of the country, and in the meantime the settler must do the best he can. The hon. member for York stated that the Liberal party were going back on their policy in this respect. He stated that there was a time when the Liberal party opposed railway subsidies, and he said that that position had been maintained by every member of the party, from the Prime Minister down. Now, Mr. Chairman, so far as I am personally concerned, I call upon my hon. friend to say when and where I opposed the policy of bonusing railways. I certainly did oppose what he himself very properly styled the policy of giving subsidies to charter-hawkers; but as to opposing the policy of giving help to those railways which must have help in order to develop those parts of the country which are not yet developed, I think my hon. friend will find it hard to cite a line, a sentence, or even a syllable, from me in that respect. Nay, more, since I have been in office, I have been approached by delegations, and before I took office I had consultations with friends on this very subject. And to the delegation I spoke publicly, and my words were reported. I said that I could not, for my part, give up the policy which had been followed in this country for many years, and I asked the older portions of the country, which had been developed and settled upon this very policy, which had received their share of Government bonuses to railways, to come to the help of their needy fellow-citizens, who had not the same good fortune, and contribute to give them that assistance which they had received themselves. My hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Osler) said that he was against this policy and that it was a corrupt policy. I never like to be personal, but my hon. friend belongs to a corporation which, I believe, has received no less than $100,000,000 from this country. Whether that had a corrupting influence upon the politics of this country, I leave for him to say. We have given no less than $100,000,000 to the Canadian Pacific Railway, we have been spending millions of money in other directions, and it was because it was found not possible to develop the country otherwise that this policy was adopted. When the Canadian Parliament adopted the policy of bonusing the Canadian Pacific Railway as it did, of making a free gift to a private corporation of its own creation of no less than $100,000,000, the Parliament of Canada did a thing which never had been done before in the history of any country. Why did we do it? There were special reasons why we did it. Hon. gentlemen opposite must not forget that our position is a peculiar one. The Government has been called on to maintain, develop and assist the progress of this country to an extent it would not have been called upon to do had we been situated differently. But we are alongside a great nation, which has enormous wealth and a vast and growing population, and we found that we could not develop our resources satisfactorily, that we could not keep up the race with them unless our Government were prepared to come to the assistance of those who were ready to give their energy, enterprise and capital to develop the resources of our country. We would have proceeded, no doubt, more slowly and cautiously had we been alone on the continent of America, but as we were situated alongside that great nation, having to contend against its immense capital and resources, the Government, this Parliament, and the people of Canada were induced to put their hands into their pockets and try to put ourselves on a level so as to be able to compete with our neighbours. This policy we are now following.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

I heard from this hon. gentleman that there should not be a single dollar of bonus given to the older part of Canada. He is ready to give assistance to the new parts, to the North-west and the new settlements, but to the older parts he would not give a dollar of assistance. Let private capital, he said, take charge of the business, let private capital come to the rescue of those in need in the older portions, but they must not expect any assistance from us. Well, the subsidies asked from Canada, under these resolutions, to be expended in the older part of Canada, cover sections of country where the farmers have to cart their produce a distance of thirty or forty miles. Does the hon. gentleman say that we should not come to the assistance of those farmers in the older parts of Canada? He says that he will maintain the policy of letting them shift as best they can, and as they have been doing for the past twenty years, and compel them to cart their produce in winter forty or fifty miles. This would be an inhuman policy, and I appeal to the good sense of the House to take a more generous view of the position, and to say that wherever we find a condition of things of that kind we should come to the rescue of the people.

I quite agree with the policy of my hon. friend from York, N.B. (Mr. Foster), that we should not give subsidies to charter hawkers. I admire his repentance, but it is a tardy repentance indeed. If subsidies have been given to charter hawkers, who is responsible? Who has given those subsidies to those charter hawkers? He was a supporter and a member of the Government that alone gave these subsidies. I quite agree that we should not continue that policy, and only give aid to bona fide enterprises, but we are bound to come to the rescue of those who have been suffering.

My hon. friend from York (Mr. Foster) was also horrified this forenoon at the magnitude of our subsidies, and the hon. member for Toronto said he was shocked also and horrified at the magnitude of the subsidies, which are the largest, according to his language, ever brought to the attention of Parliament. The hon. member for Toronto has not been very long in Parliament. He came at the last general election; but if he had been here in the session of 1894, he would have been called upon by his party to vote subsidies amounting to—how much? $6,500,000. If he had been here in the session of 1884, he would have been called upon by the Government of the day, of which, I suppose, he would have been a supporter, to vote subsidies amounting to $9,166,000. Let anybody take the statutes of 1884 and look over the figures, and there he will find subsidies for railways to the amount of $9,166,000. My hon. friend from Toronto was not in the House then, but my hon. friend from York was. He was not then a Minister, but a supporter of the Government, and although to-day he strained at the gnat, he then swallowed the camel without hesitation. He voted for every penny of the subsidies asked—and all bonuses, not one of them an investment, given for railway construction.

My hon. friend also took, I will not say unfair meaning, but an undue meaning, out of some words spoken by my hon. friend the Minister of Railways this morning. My hon. colleague said very truly that although we ask Parliament to vote $6,500,000 subsidies, it was not to be expected that these were all to be expended at once. We have had experience before, and we know that these railway subsidies, which are voted in one year, are expended in a series of years. The expenditure does not and cannot take place in any one year. It will take three or four years, probably more, to absorb the expenditure here voted. And the Minister of Railways called attention to the fact that though on paper Parliament is asked for a large sum of money, it does not follow that the whole amount will be expended this year. The experience of the past shows that these subsidies have always been expended from year to year over a large period of years, and, moreover, there are a good many of them which may not be taken up at all.

My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) says that he understands why these railways were taken up. The Minister knows well, he says, that the railways will not be required, and that the subsidies are voted for an object. My hon. friend can speak by the book if that is his intention. He can see subsidies standing year after year on the statute-book as far back as 1890. Did he, when he introduced that expenditure, have a sinister object in view? Was he looking to the expenditure of money in elections or was he honest and sincere? No doubt he will say that he was honest and sincere; can he not be as charitable to his opponents as he would be to himself, and admit that at least we have as much sincerity as he had?

These are the general features of the policy, but I must confess I was rather surprised to see one item of this expenditure criticised as it has been, and that is the subsidy to the Rainy River road. If there is a road which ought to be encouraged it is that. It is going over what is properly called a new country. It is going to develop and build up a new province of Ontario, bounded by Manitoba on the one side and Lake Superior on the other—a province which in ten years may have 100,000 or 200,000 inhabitants. It crosses a very fertile section of country. There is not even in the great province of Ontario a better section of agricultural land than the valley of the Rainy River. And from the valley of the Rainy River towards Fort William is one of the finest mineral countries in the world. Therefore, I think if there is a project that ought to be viewed with favour it is this one. What are the reasons advanced against subsidizing this section of railway? The hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Robertson) stated his opposition to the subsidizing of this road and his reasons for it. His reason is simply that the money will go to Mackenzie & Mann. I observe that my hon. friend (Mr. Robertson) has one strong characteristic. He seems to be blind upon some questions. He seems to have Mackenzie & Mann in one eye and the Canadian Pacific Railway in the other, and when any question comes up in which either of them is concerned, he is blind to the merits of that question. So far as my information goes, there is no love lost between Mackenzie & Mann and the Canadian Pacific Railway; but so blind is my hon. friend that he does not seem to be aware of that fact. He sees in this subsidy a sinister motive, and thinks that this railway is to be absorbed by the Canadian Pacific Railway. That may be or may not be, but if there is anything that can be done to prevent that, it ought to be done. We ought to take every possible precaution against this danger cited by the hon. gentleman. Let my hon. friend relieve his vision for the moment on Mackenzie & Mann and the Canadian Pacific Railway and read the resolution. I doubt that he has read it yet. Let me call his attention to resolution 3, in which he will find the following disposition:—

That the subsidies granted to the Ontario and Rainy River Railway Company, the Canadian Northern Railway Company and the Edmonton, Yukon and Pacific Railway Company are granted upon the condition, and if received and paid under the authority of this Act to the above mentioned companies respectively, shall be received upon the condition that the said companies shall not, nor shall any of them, at any time amalgamate with any other railway company, or lease its line to any railway company; nor shall any of the said railways be leased to or operated by any other company; nor shall any of the said companies make an agreement for a common fund or for pooling its receipts with any other railway company, and any such lease, amalgamation or agreement shall be absolutely void, excepting in so far as such agreement may extend to traffic or running arrangements which have been approved by the Governor in Council.

This is what we can do—we can legislate against amalgamation. Will my hon. friend from East Toronto tell me what more we can do? This is the Parliament of Canada and we are here to make laws. We see danger in the future, and we take precautions against that danger. But I have heard the argument made by my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) a moment ago, that all this disposition was useless, that any company would find it possible to get rid of that. I have yet to learn that there ever was a law placed on the statute-books which could not be violated. This Parliament will have reached the acme of perfection which has never yet been reached by any other Parliament, when it places on the statute-books a law which cannot be violated by those who are interested in violating it. But because our laws are violated, is that a reason why we should not pass them?

There is all the difference between this law placed upon the statute-books with this section and this law placed upon the statute-books without this section. If it becomes law, as I hope it will, no amalgamation will take place, or, if it does take place, it will be illegal and the hand of the law will rest upon the offender. But this is not the remedy proposed by my hon. friend from Lisgar; nor, if I remember aright by my hon. friend from East Toronto. They want the Government to build this railway. This is a new policy—that the Government should go into the building and ownership of railways. So far as I am concerned, I have only this to say—I am not in favour of the Government building and owning railways. We have one railway and that is enough for the present time. I do not know what may come to pass in the future when men become more radical than they are at the present time. I do not know that the people of Canada may not be induced to go into the business of building and operating railways; but at the present time, I venture to assert, the common opinion of the people of Canada is not in favour of our having more railways than the one we have. These being our views, I cannot accept the suggestion of my hon. friend from East Toronto. What was his suggestion in detail? It was that we should combine with the Government of Manitoba and with the Government of Ontario to build and own this railway. It is very true, we might do that if the other Governments were willing, and if we thought that this Government should extend its ownership of railways. But who assured my hon. friend that the Government of Manitoba and the Government of Ontario are disposed to go into the business of building and operating railways. If not, while we are negotiating, the people will not have the railways they want, the farmers will not have the service they need, and the miners will not have the opportunity to develop the country. That policy is too hazy for the consideration of business men. Our policy, the only practicable policy, is to develop the country as rapidly as possible by means of the aid we wish to give. That is the position. It would be susceptible of very many developments, but at this period of the session, I should not trespass more upon the time of the House. I think I have said enough to make it clear what is the position of the Government and what ought to be the policy of the Canadian people upon this question.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Ellis). Mr. Richardson moves—

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. CHAIRMAN. The reading of the resolution precedes the speaking.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alberta). Whatever may be the personal views of the mover of the resolution or myself with regard to the Government ownership of railways, the committee will see that those views are not embodied in the resolution, and we are not, at the moment, raising the issue of Government ownership, nor are we questioning the subsidizing or the railroads referred to in these resolutions. We are merely considering or criticising the terms upon which the subsidies are granted. Regarding the terms attached to these subsidies so far as they are effective, they are very satisfactory to me. I consider they are a distinct improvement in our railway legislation, and I am glad to see that they have been adopted as a part of the Government policy. But I wish to see these improvements carried a step or two further so that they may be more effective in protecting the public interest than as they stand at present.

Let me here correct an impression that may have arisen in the committee that the North-west is principally interested in these subsidies by reason of getting the larger share of the money to be voted. The amount of money to be voted is about $6,500,000. I find that for purposes west of the Lake of the Woods there is provision made for 250 miles of railroad, for which $800,000 is to be voted. That is the total amount of direct interest of the western country in these subsidies. We are discussing the question not because of our great interest in the amount of money, but because of our great interest in the principle involved in the granting of the money, and because of our desire to see the interests of the public whom we represent more thoroughly safeguarded than they appear to be in these resolutions.

I divide these subsidies into three classes. One is the class of colonization roads in the west, for which $800,000 is asked. The other class is for the construction of railroads and bridges in the east, in the old settled provinces, where the construction cannot be expected to add greatly to the development of the country, although it will no doubt add greatly to the convenience of the people. There is a third class, that covered by the different charters of the Ontario and Rainy River scheme. That road, in one of its features, may be a colonization road so far as it relates to the provinces of Ontario and Manitoba; but so far as it relates to the general western country it is neither a colonization road nor is it a road for the development of established settlements. It is a road to provide additional facilities for the export of the grain of the North-west; if it is not for that purpose it is for no useful purpose, judged from a western stand-point; if it is not for that, it is certainly not for any important purpose. Now, let it be understood that the only interest of the west in that road is in so far as it will ensure lower freight rates to the people of the west and to the people of the east. If the construction of that road does not give assurance to the people of the west of lower freight rates on grain going out and on goods coming in, they have absolutely no interest in its construction. At the present time the Canadian Pacific Railway will haul our freight out and haul our freight in, they can handle all the freight there is; we do not need another road there. The only need we have for another road is to get a reduction in freight rates, and inasmuch as these resolutions do not in any way ensure a reduction in freight rates over that piece of road, we desire to have them amended so that they will lead to such reduction. We hold the principle that if the Government is to give aid to railways, the country should get something in return more than the mere existence of the railway. The time has gone past when the mere building of a railway was a favour. Terms and conditions are what are wanted now.

An hon. member suggests that this provision for getting a return of 3 per cent interest on the amount of the bonuses is a sufficient return for aid granted. I do not quarrel with that at all. That is a very good provision so far as it goes, but it does not touch the point I am dealing with. We do not build railroads simply for the purpose of having them, and we do not make terms with a railroad simply for the purpose of getting our money back. We build railroads for the purpose of getting transportation, and then we build additional roads for the purpose of getting improved and cheapened transportation. Now, where there is such a large amount of money involved as there is in this Rainy River road, we who live in the west, whose interests are more directly bound up with the question of freight rates than people in any other part of the country, would not be doing justice to those whom we represent, nor to the country generally, if we did not draw attention to the fact that when the House is called upon to vote this large amount of money, there is no arrangement made by which the expenditure shall serve the great interest that we have in view.

This question of reduced railroad rates between the western country and the east is not only a question of interest to the west. I have stated before in this House that it is a matter of interest to the manufacturers and commercial people of the east as well as it is to the people of the west. If the commercial and manufacturing interests of eastern Canada are to increase, it can only be by the development of the west, it can only be by being enabled to hold the trade of the west against their competitors across the line, and they can only hold that trade by getting cheaper transportation than they have now. At present they are at a disadvantage in length of distance and in rate of transportation, and every man in this eastern Canada who is interested in commerce or in manufactures should see that the rates of transportation between the east and the west are reduced to the lowest possible figure. The commercial people of Chicago, of Detroit, of St. Paul, are better situated as to freight rates than the merchants of Toronto or Montreal. The manufacturers of these cities are better situated than the manufacturers of Toronto and Montreal. If you are going to hold the western trade, if you are going to increase that trade, if you are going to get the whole of that trade as you should get it, and as we wish you to get it, you must provide for freight rates that will not only compete per mile with the railways on the other side of the line, but you must overcome the greater mileage you have to haul your freight. It is stated in the Trade and Navigation Returns, I understand, that the trade of Canada with the United States is increasing by millions and millions of dollars every year; that within the last two years it has doubled, or something like that. Is there not something to be learned in that statement of fact; because it is a statement of fact? Is that increased trade all done through the eastern cities? Does it all pass through the houses of the merchants of Toronto, Hamilton and Montreal, or is there a large part of it that comes directly into the North-west Territories and into British Columbia, of which they get no share at all? The amount of that loss of trade is increasing from year to year as business connections are established in the west with the United States and freight rates become lower and lower upon the goods coming from the United States. I have said before and I say it again, that there is never a railway train rolls out of Montreal to go to Vancouver that does not charge more for the freight or the passengers carried by it than is charged on a parallel train rolling out of New York bound for San Francisco. The farmers of Canada pay more for the transport of their grain over the Canadian Pacific Railway to the port of Thunder Bay than their neighbours, five miles across the line, pay for hauling the same kind of grain to the port of Duluth over the same road, that is to say, over the Canadian Pacific Railway under the name of the Soo line and connections. This is a state of affairs that this House should take cognizance of. It is foolishness to shut our eyes to the fact that the disadvantages of our position are being increased, even although we have paid millions upon millions of dollars for the purpose of overcoming these disadvantages. When we are paying out $2,000,000 for the purpose of doubling our railway facilities between Lake Superior and the prairies, it is the time for us to see that we provide against our money being used for the purpose of keeping us out of the trade of our own country.

Mr. JAMES McMULLEN (North Wellington). Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a few words in reply to some of the statements of the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) and in reply to some other hon. gentlemen who have already spoken. I have no intention of taking up the time of the House in the discussion of these resolutions, but I think that a few of the remarks that have fallen from my hon. and esteemed friend behind me (Mr. Richardson) should not go without a reply. The people of the province of Ontario have a great many relatives living in Manitoba and the North-west Territories. From the people who live in Manitoba and the North-west Territories letters have come complaining of the rates that have been charged by the Canadian Pacific Railway for the export of their products and for taking in the necessary supplies. A feeling of sympathy has been created towards these people, which has actuated the people of Ontario to support, in any possible shape or way, anything that can be done to grant all necessary relief to the people of the west. Unfortunately, when the charter of the Canadian Pacific Railway was originally made a provision was inserted that the rates should not be interfered with until such time as the company earn 10 per cent upon the money invested in the line. That shuts the door against any direct Government interference with the Canadian Pacific Railway. I am not here to say that the Canadian Pacific Railway rates are excessive. When the Grand Trunk Railway was built, I can state, from my own personal experience, that they charged for wheat from Guelph to Montreal, a distance of 385 miles, 20 cents per hundred. Now, my hon. friend has stated that the Canadian Pacific Railway carries wheat from Winnipeg to Port Arthur, a distance of 444 miles, for the same rate. The history of railroads shows that as the country opens up and as traffic increases, railway companies are enabled to considerably reduce their rates. What I was about to point out was that a feeling of sympathy has been created in Ontario by the complaints which have come from the west in regard to the rate. What are we doing today? We are saddling ourselves with this liability for the purpose of granting the people of the west the relief that they desire. The Government have taken the only step open to them to provide this relief, by subsidizing this new independent line for the carriage of freight at reasonable rates. They will keep control of the road. They intend to make arrangements for controlling the rates, and they propose to provide that the road shall be used by any other railway companies when necessary. They are taking all possible precautions to guard against the road being operated in conjunction with the Canadian Pacific Railway. This is all done to relieve the very men who are complaining because we are granting this subsidy. I say it is a very poor return to the people of Ontario and the people of the whole Dominion who are loading themselves in debt in order, if possible, to grant all necessary relief to the west, when, instead of evincing a spirit of thankfulness to the people of the Dominion, my hon. friend here behind me (Mr. Richardson) finds fault, and says he is not disposed to encourage the granting of this bonus and that he is not disposed to encourage the construction of the road. I would like to know what he would expect the Government to do for the relief of these people if not what they are doing now. He says that he would advise that the Government should own the road. Our experience in the ownership of railroads has been rather an unfortunate one. We own the Intercolonial Railway, and we have over $55,000,000 sunk in it. The people are paying $2,200,000 a year in interest upon that money, we are not receiving a single dollar in return, and up to the present, as I said a day or two ago, we have lost $10,000,000 in addition in operating the road. I would like to know if the people want to go on further and build more Government roads. I do not think so. Notwithstanding the complaint that has been made by the hon. member for Lisgar in regard to freights over the Canadian Pacific Railway, I challenge him here today, to cite a single country in the world, civilized or otherwise, where the people get as low rates as in Canada for their railway service.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) has challenged me to cite a single case where lower rates are given in any other country than those which are given by the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. McMULLEN. No, I am not saying anything of the kind. My question is this: I want the hon. gentleman to name any other country in the world where the general rate, passenger and freight, is as low as it is in Canada.

Mr. MACLEAN. In the state of New York people are travelling for 2 cents a mile, while in Canada they pay 3 cents, 4 cents and 5 cents a mile.

Mr. McMULLEN. No.

Mr. MACLEAN. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am not going to give way to any hon. gentleman now.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I cite the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Soo line, which carries freight for the American people for one-half what the Canadian Pacific Railway charge the Canadian people on their Canadian line.

Mr. McMULLEN. My hon. friend appears not to understand the question I put to him. I will put it again and let him answer it if he will. I want him to cite me a single country in the world, civilized or otherwise, where the general rate for traffic or the carriage of produce is as low as it is in Canada.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is much lower in Germany and in Belgium than in Canada.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Ellis). As I understand that the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) put a question to the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) nobody else has a right to interfere.

Mr. McMULLEN. Mr. Chairman, I will proceed with my address. Taking our railway service as a whole, on the American side as well as on the Canadian side, I contend that the rates are as low, if not lower, than those of any other country in the world, and I challenge any hon. member to prove otherwise.

Mr. OLIVER. I understand that the hon. gentleman has made a general challenge. If the hon. member will read the report of the Railway Commission, which sat under the instructions of the late Government, he will find that the rates in the United States are lower on the average than they are in this country.

Mr. MACLEAN. I also make that statement, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. McMULLEN. I might, perhaps, have qualified the statement by saying the continent of America; but I say that the general traffic rate in Canada is as low—

Mr. MACLEAN. No.

Mr. McMULLEN—as that in any other country. My hon. friend said that they did not grant any bonuses in the United States for the construction of railroads. That may be true; but they granted enormous tracts of land for new lines of railway in various states—land that was very valuable and that was in many instances sold at a large profit. But those sections that did not make grants of land took stock in the railways. I can refer my hon. friend to a county in Missouri which took stock in a railway to the extent of $300,000, and paid every dollar of it. The road was built, but after a few years the bondholders closed out all the stockholders. The railway was put into the hands of a receiver and sold, and the result was that that county lost its $300,000 of stock. Might it not just as well have given the railway a bonus? I challenge the hon. gentleman to point to a single railway south-west of the Missouri River or the Mississippi River that has not been in the hands of a receiver during the last ten years. He cannot do it. The different counties and sections which took stock in these railways were promised by the companies that their stock would be good, that they would get their interest and their money back; but in every case the stock has been closed out. I can cite one county in the State of Missouri where, whenever a judge is elected, the people make a compact with him before his election that he will stand to be imprisoned before he will sign an order for the collection of the interest on the $300,000 of county bonds that was issued to that company, and every year, at the instance of the company, whose headquarters is in Boston, that judge goes to jail, where he remains until the time comes when he has to go and hold court, when he can be held no longer. I know that as a fact. That is the history of railroads in the United States. Now, I am not disposed to encourage extravagant railway bonuses, but I do say that the cases now before this House are worthy of serious consideration. My hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Osler) talks about stopping the increase of the debt and the giving of bonuses. He can well afford to say that now. He is a director of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and they have got all they want, and it is all very well for him to say that we should stop now. But I think the different lines on the list before the House deserve its serious consideration. I would ask the hon. member for West Toronto, suppose Sir Charles Tupper had been elected, and were sitting here as leader of the Government, and suppose he brought down subsidies to implement the promises he made in the last election, I would like to know if the hon. gentleman would get up and make the same statement he made to-day.

Mr. COCHRANE. Would you?

Mr. McMULLEN. He would not do it. He would get up and say he would support the bonuses. In 1888, the hon. ex-Minister of Finance stated that the debt of Canada had reached its zenith, and that he looked forward with the hope that in the next few years it would show a decided decline. That was a year or two before the election. What was the history of that hon. gentleman and his colleagues when they got the confidence of the country again? During the time of the last Parliament they actually increased the debt of the country by $20,000,000. Now, I venture to predict that with all the subsidies which the present Government propose to grant, and with the other gigantic improvements which they have undertaken, they will not, at the end of this Parliament, have added $10,000,000 to the debt of this country, and at the same time they will have done more to develop our resources, to secure immigration and to promote the progress of the country than hon. gentlemen opposite did in the eighteen years they were in power. Now, the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) talks about the Rainy River Railway having been bonused to the amount of $14,500 per mile, claiming that that is excessive. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman what is the average cost of the construction of railways in Canada? I have had a little experience in railway building, and I know what it costs. If my hon. friend had a little experience of that kind, he would know that to build a railway through such a country as the Rainy River Railroad is to traverse, is no ordinary undertaking. Instead of that road being built for $14,500 a mile, I venture to predict that it will cost double that amount. I have carefully examined the surveys and the profiles; and if my hon. friend does that, and sees the rocky sections that have to be traversed and the rivers that have to be bridged, he will agree with me that if Mackenzie & Mann build that railway in accordance with the standard they propose and with the grades which they declare they will not exceed, they will not build it for $28,000, let alone $14,500 a mile. This House and the country should certainly appreciate the condition attached to these subsidies, that after the railways are completed and commence operations, they shall be required to pay the Government 3 per cent on the amount of the subsidy for any services they render to the country. That is a provision for which the Government deserve a great deal of credit, and which will be appreciated by the country at large. The hon. member for West Toronto says he looks on that as nothing. I look on it as a great deal. There is not a road in Canada that is not earning more or less from the Dominion for carrying mails and rendering other services; and their return to the Government on account of these services to the amount of 3 per cent will go on in the future as a permanent investment. The country stands in a better shape with that contribution than it would if it held stock in the companies, because that stock might be closed out by the bond-holders in a few years, as has been done in the United States. But the step which the Government has taken has given the country a sure and permanent stock. No matter what company may own the road, it will have to comply with the provisions in the charter under which the road was built, and pay the Government 3 per cent, if they earn the money. So that if we take stock to-day in that road for the amount of money we are going to advance towards its construction, we are safer, with that provision in the charter, than if we were joint stockholders with Mackenzie & Mann.

My hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. John Ross Robertson) gave credit to the Senate for the action they took with regard to the road proposed to be built to the Yukon. Let me say to my hon. friend that he will not find the people prepared to endorse the course of the senators on that matter. As the right hon. First Minister has said, there never was in the history of the country a greater blunder committed than when the Senate rejected the proposal to build that road, and that blunder placed Canada in the position she occupies with regard to that country to-day. I earnestly hope that such a blunder will never be again committed. Had we gone on and constructed that road, Canada would to-day occupy a better position before the United States and England than she does at present. If that is the kind of service which the Senate is to render the country, let me tell them that the Reform party is going to stay in power a great many years and the existence of a second Chamber is going to be seriously brought into question. We live in a democratic age, when the people claim the right to rule themselves, and will see that their representatives, directly responsible to them, are not prevented in carrying out the will of the people, and will let our respected Senate know that they had better carefully consider their ground before they oppose a policy adopted by the people's representatives, if they do not want to lose the confidence of the people.

There is another matter which my hon. friend has brought to my mind. One would fancy, to hear hon. gentlemen opposite, that no one in this country has a right to commit it to any expenditure except the Conservative party. They are the only party that ought to be allowed to spend the public money, and all that the Reform party should do, when in power, is to clean up the floor pay all the debts, wash and clean out the House, and leave it ready for our hon.

Mr. McMULLEN.

friends, swept and varnished, to take possession of. But we do not intend to follow that course. We believe that when the country is prosperous, the Government have a perfect right to spend public money for the development of the resources of the country, and I believe that the investments thus made will be appreciated and sanctioned by the people. It is rather surprising and somewhat amusing to hear these hon. gentlemen question the right of Reformers to commit the country to any debt. Apparently, their view is that they and they alone are entitled to do this. They hold a similar view with regard to the civil service. They fancy it is a little Tory reserve into which no one shall be admitted except the faithful and that it is extreme presumption on our part to interfere with them at all. These hon. gentlemen talk about subsidies to railways, but I challenge them to show any subsidy on the list such as the one they submitted to aid the Caraqueet Railway. I would like to know where, in the history of the country, you will find any record of any railway which at all compare with that of the Caraqueet Railway? It received large subventions to aid its construction, and stands there a monument of political folly. The man who got the subsidy did the best he could with it, but there the road stands as a monument of the recklessness that characterized the granting of subsidies by these hon. gentlemen. No such recklessness will characterize the subsidies now on the list.

The hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Osler) said that these subsidies would become the sources whence money would be taken for the purpose of hoodling constituencies. I dare say he spoke from experience. In all probability, he knows a good deal more about that kind of thing than we do. We are mere infants in that respect compared with him and his friends. He has given us a pretty good inkling of what the course of hon. gentlemen opposite was when in office, but I am quite sure the Government will not follow out any such system. There is no doubt that these railway bonuses were in the past the source from which large sums were drawn to buy up constituencies, but I can assure my hon. friend that the honesty and uprightness and fairness of hon. gentlemen on this side will prevent any such practice being adopted by this Government, and I believe that the supporters of this Government are not the kind of men to tolerate anything like a raid being made for the purpose of debauching constituencies, on the men who get these subsidies.

I earnestly hope that our friends from Manitoba will now admit that there is a very strong feeling of sympathy in this House and throughout Canada for them, and will cultivate a little appreciation and thankfulness instead of continually complaining that they are being oppressed and that we are doing nothing to relieve them. We are doing everything we can. This road never would have received a subsidy but for the purpose of helping the people of the North-west. Look at what this Government did in the matter of the Crow's Nest Pass line. In order to secure relief to Manitoba an increased bonus was given that line on condition that a decided reduction should be made in freight rates, and I have heard an hon. member now in his seat, declare that the reduction in the rates last year netted the province of Manitoba $600,000. We gave that additional subsidy for the purpose of granting relief, and are doing the same in this case, and I hope that the people of Manitoba will be a little thankful now in place of continually finding fault.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. MACLEAN. We, who sit on this side of the House were not at all surprised at the remarks made by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen). We are used now to hear him repudiate everything he had said in former days in this House. In the old days we heard him denounce Government extravagance session after session, and now we hear him, when his friends are in power, session after session justifying every form of extravagance proposed by the Government. But I was surprised to hear the hon. gentleman go a step further, and lecture his friends on that side upon what their attitude ought to be in regard to the expenditures of the Government. In the old days, when the people of Manitoba and the North-west were complaining of the monopoly of the Canadian Pacific Railway and other monopolies, the hon. gentleman was always their champion, and assisted in fighting their battles. But this afternoon he turns round and lectures the hon. member for Lisgar and the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), and says, practically, that they know nothing of the grievances of the North-west; that they ought to keep mum, and that the Government is doing a great deal for them. I think he went a little too far in that respect, but perhaps, after all, I should not be surprised at anything he does. To use the common expression, he is prepared to go the whole hog in accepting anything that this Government may bring down. This afternoon we have heard some remarkable statements in the House. We have heard the leader of the Government say that he does not believe in Government railways. Hon. gentlemen on this side say the same thing, and I believe the respected leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) takes that position. I stand here as one who believes, and has always believed, in the Government ownership of railways. The leader of the Government will find that he has made a sad mistake in declaring, as he did this afternoon, that he did not believe in Government ownership or Government control of railways. The coming question of this country concerns railways and transportation—

Mr. RUTHERFORD. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) is making a mistake. The leader of the Government, I think, did not say that he did not believe in government control of railways, but in government ownership. Hon. gentlemen, in discussing this matter, should differentiate between government ownership and government control.

Mr. MACLEAN. What I say is, that the leader of the Government this afternoon regretted the expenditure that Canada had made in connection with her national railways, and said that people were not prepared to justify any further expenditure on that account.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think he said that.

Mr. MACLEAN. That is my recollection of it.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That bears out what the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford) says. The leader of the Government deprecated further expenditure which would result in Government ownership of railways.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. But he did not say he regretted the expenditure that had been made.

Mr. MACLEAN. He said it was a great mistake.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No. It was one of the articles of confederation. How could it be a mistake?

Mr. MACLEAN. He opposed the government ownership of railways, and said that the people would not justify further expenditure on that account. I am willing to stake my reputation and any chances I have in the future on this line: I believe in the nationalization of railways and of all great public franchises; and, in connection with city government, I believe in the municipalization of civic franchises. That is the coming principle in governments, that is the principle that is going to win, I think, in the present, and certainly in the immediate future. People are tired of what has taken place in the past. The railways have become the masters of the country, instead of the people being the masters in their own country. All over the world this progressive policy is attracting the young men. I am in favour also of the nationalization immediately of the telegraph system of this country, of the issue of notes, which the banks now enjoy, and a great many other things. Only the other day Lord Salisbury made an important deliverance in the old country. He said that the policy that would rule the higher politics of the world concerned railways, and the government that did not control the railways, had hardly any future. And only the other day the president of the great metal organization in England, speaking of the competition which the merchants and manufacturers of Great Britain are now forced to encounter throughout the world, said there was no relief for England except the nationalization of railways and the reduction of the enormous freight rates. Bismarck, when he undertook to consolidate and regenerate Germany, nationalized the railways; Australia has nationalized her railways; Italy has nationalized her railways; France has nationalized her railways. And all the world over that same principle is going on, and the people of those countries would not hear for a moment of the denationalization of those railways and turning them over to the control of companies. I believe in the policy of government ownership of railways in Canada, and I believe that now is the time to carry it further than we have carried it hitherto. I do not deplore the ownership of the Intercolonial Railway by the Government. The Intercolonial Railway to-day is the finest asset the people of Canada have, and I want to see that road extended, and strengthened, and put in the North-west of this country. I have been over almost the whole of the Intercolonial Railway within the last three weeks. I wish to compliment the Minister of Railways and Canals on the excellent service that that railway is giving. It is a splendid railway. The people seem to be satisfied with it, and to regard it as the people's railway. And I may tell my colleagues in this House that I was pleased to ride over that railway on my parliamentary pass. It was the people's railway, and I thought the least the people could do was to let the representatives of the people see that railway, and so I had no hesitation in using my pass. It is a railway that ought to be strengthened and extended, and that is the only way that we can solve the transportation problem in this country. We have now two great railways, the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific Railway. If these roads are united in anything, it is in regarding the Intercolonial as the most dangerous foe they have to encounter. And they are ready to strangle it any day. They tried to acquire it, I believe, from the late Government; and, failing in that, they have tried repeatedly to entangle it and deprive it of its usefulness as a competitor and regulator of themselves. They can be depended upon to keep on trying to do the same thing. They nearly succeeded in tying it up for ninety-nine years the other day. But for this House and the wisdom of a certain other body—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am afraid the hon. gentleman

(Mr. Maclean) is now straying into a subject he does not understand.

Mr. MACLEAN. The hon. gentleman understands it quite well. And the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) who rebukes me, accepted the suggestion that will prevent the road being tangled up—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It has not been accepted yet.

Mr. MACLEAN. But we hope it will be. What we ought to do in order to regulate these great monopolies, is to strengthen the Intercolonial Railway, and if we build any more railways with the people's money, we should take absolute control of those roads and use them to regulate the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway. The Government system of railways is to-day in Montreal. It is no trouble, by making an arrangement with the Canada Atlantic Railway and the Parry Sound Railway to put the Intercolonial Railway at Georgian Bay. It would cost the country very little to obtain running rights over that railway, and once at Georgian Bay, where are you? You are right in the heart of Ontario, and by a line of steamships you connect with Port Arthur, and there you touch this very railroad under discussion, namely, the Rainy River road. Let these three Governments, which are practically building this road with the people's money, insist on that railway being a Government railway, owned by the Government, and let it give free, common running rights to every other company that applies for it. By putting the Intercolonial into Winnipeg you will solve the railway problem of this country. But if you give that link to an independent company and allow the people to have no more control over it than is proposed in these resolutions you miss entirely the protection of the rights of the people of the North-west.

Now, when I say that I am in favour of the nationalization of railways I do not mean to say that we ought to borrow millions of money and to-morrow buy out the Grand Trunk Railway, the Canadian Pacific Railway, and all the other roads in this country; but I do say that not one dollar should go into any railroad that really affects the transportation question, not one dollar of the people's money should go into that railway unless the people own and control it. Now, it is proposed by these resolutions to give subsidies to various railways that are to be new lines to the North-west and through the North-west, and we are told that some of these lines are likely to form links in a great transcontinental line. It was said here this afternoon that Mackenzie & Mann are really the agents of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and while I thought that myself some time ago, I begin to think now that they really have in view the construction of a great transcontinental system in this country. I believe they have associated with themselves Mr. George A. Cox, a very strong man, that they have big financial concerns behind them, that they are in a position to finance the scheme in England; and that they really do intend to build another great transcontinental system, but they intend to build it with the people's money. Well, I say if it is to be built with the people's money, let the people control it, because the more of these railways you have owned by private corporations the harder will it be for the people eventually to extend the Intercolonial Railway into that country, and by that means to give the people genuine relief from traffic charges.

Now, this question came up two or three years ago. I saw what was coming two or three years ago, and from time to time I invited the attention of the House to this very question. Especially did I invite the attention of the North-west members to this question, one which some of them also saw, and I pointed out to them at the time that the real relief to this country from traffic charges was to come from that direction, and I must congratulate the member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) on the way he spoke this afternoon, and on the stand he has taken in this matter. He sees that the so-called regulations that are in the resolutions will not protect the people; he sees that the people's money is going into another great transcontinental system over which the people will have no control, and which system will be a rival, even a hostile force, to the people's own railway. That is the thing that happens in all these great monopolies that you create. The moment you create a monopoly in this country, whether it is a national monopoly in federal affairs, or a provincial monopoly, or a municipal monopoly, they become immediately hostile to the people who created them. Look at cities where they give these lighting franchises to private companies; as soon as they have their franchises and become entrenched, they are the enemies of the city, and prevent the city from doing anything for itself. Now, I have heard another remark made here this afternoon from a gentleman who sits on this side of the House and who is a director of the Canadian Pacific Railway; he said what the people had long suspected, namely, that a great deal of this money voted in the name of subsidies to railways finds its way into the corruption of the people.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Has found its way.

Mr. MACLEAN. Finds its way into the corruption of the people. The hon. gentleman is exact as to what time is meant. I say it is rather odd that these subsidies should come down just at the time when an election is imminent in Manitoba, and when, probably, an election is not far off over the whole Dominion. In the United States it is found to-day that all kinds of government have been corrupted by these great corporations which have been created. The fact is that in the United States representative institutions have almost failed, and they have almost failed here because of the growing power and the growing corrupting influence of these great corporations. If we are to learn anything from history it is that we ought to avoid creating these great monopolies, and giving these immense franchises to them, but we ought to keep them for the people alone. The people of the United States to-day are simply over-burdened by the supremacy of the great corporations there. They do not know how to get rid of them. They control the legislatures, they control the courts they control the politicians, they control the great majority of the press. They are bound up together. They have organized great trusts and they are simply bleeding the people white. The same thing will happen in this country if we do not check it in time, and luckily we are in a splendid position to check it. We have a railway of our own to-day, a railway owned by the people. It covers the maritime provinces, it has extended from Quebec into Montreal, and it could easily be extended to the west. I would vote to-morrow for the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Toronto and put it at the Suspension bridge on the Niagara River.

Mr. FROST. How much ?

Mr. MACLEAN. Whatever would be necessary. Now, if we pursued a course like that, we would check these corporations and we would do a great deal for the people. But the more corporations you create and the more money you give them, the harder will it be for us ever to get any relief.

Now, the hon. gentleman knows that this feeling is growing in the country. He knows from what the North-west members have told him this session, and previous sessions, that the people of Canada are in favour of the nationalization of railways; and knowing that, he is trying to make some concessions to the people, and he is trying to make us believe that practically these will be national roads, or that they will be controlled by the Government. Now, I have looked at these so-called regulations in the resolutions which are said to secure the people, and I find they are of very little benefit. Take the third resolution, the one that says there shall be no amalgamation of these companies. Now, the Minister had read to him this afternoon his own words saying that you cannot prevent amalgamation; and we have had a director of the Canadian Pacific Railway, a man of wide experience in railway matters, the member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler), stating this afternoon that it is absolutely impossible to prevent these amalgamations. Any reading I have done on this subject is all to the same effect. I gave an instance this afternoon of two lighting companies in Toronto. The stock is held by the same men, they elect the same president for each company, the same directors, and they work together. There is no amalgamation, you cannot reach them, but they do what an amalgamation does when it takes place in substance and in fact. We have the admission of the Minister that regulation is ineffective, and the statement of the member for West Toronto that it is ineffective; but immediately after we have the Prime Minister getting up and saying that these resolutions do really protect the people. Now, that third resolution does not protect the people from amalgamations taking place, and I say that one of the first amalgamations that is likely to take place in this country, although the people may not believe it to-day, is that of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway, who will consolidate to fight the people's railway, the Government system that we now have.

There is not a great deal of protection for the people in the fourth resolution. The fifth resolution is not effective, for the reason pointed out by the hon. member for Lisgar this afternoon. Unless you have complete control over the whole of this railway, and all of it comes within this clause from Port Arthur to Winnipeg, as the hon. member pointed out this afternoon, you cannot regulate its rates, because there are portions of it, as was admitted by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, that do not come within the jurisdiction of these resolutions.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They come under the jurisdiction of the province of Manitoba.

Mr. MACLEAN. And I am led to believe that a certain portion of the railway will run through the State of Minnesota. I want my hon. friends from the North-west, who propose to support these resolutions, to remember that. Part of this railway will go through the State of Minnesota, and if that is the case, this so-called protection in regard to rates does not amount to anything. Forty miles of the road, I am told, go through the United States. Then, we have the seventh clause, which speaks about giving service in return for the money advanced. We heard the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) speak eloquently about that service this afternoon. But we heard the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) tell us how much this service amounted to in three years under an agreement with the Government similar to that which is now proposed. We heard what the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals said this afternoon as to how much this was worth, but we also have what the organ of hon. gentlemen opposite, the Toronto "Globe," said two or three days ago, as to how valuable this really was. I will ask

hon. members to listen to me while I read three or four lines from that paper :

The arrangement for the carriage of mails by the companies receiving subsidies is entirely new. The price for the carrying of mails, military supplies, &c., is to be arranged, if possible, between the Minister and the company, and in case of disagreement by the Government. But the Government is to be credited with a sum equal to 3 per cent on the amount of the subsidy. So that where the company renders services up to this amount, the Government will receive back interest on the amount of its subsidy, in fact, rather more than the interest at which it can borrow money in the markets of the world.

It goes on to show how the Government could make money out of this deal, that they could borrow money at 2½ per cent, and that they would get 3 per cent of a return from these railway companies. What do you think of that? We heard this afternoon what return the railway companies will pay for the advance, and it is that they will carry the mails, or they will perform any other service which may be required by the Government for the same advance. It may not amount to $10 a year, while the interest on the money will be thousands of dollars, so that, practically, the service will be of smaller account. All through, I say, that the protection to the people amounts to very little. I give the Government credit for a desire to try and do something to regulate the railways of this country, but they have not gone about it in the right way. There is only one way to regulate the railways of this country, and that is to nationalize all railways that are built, and to control all the railways that are not nationalized. I see that my hon. friend from Manitoba (Mr. Rutherford) is laughing, yet, if there is anything that the people of Manitoba are willing to go in for, it is the nationalization of railways.

Mr. FROST. How does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) propose to do it?

Mr. MACLEAN. I would nationalize every railway in this country, but I do not know whether the people would go that far or not. If you cannot nationalize all the railways by putting your national railway, the Intercolonial, alongside of them, by putting your national railway into the city of Winnipeg and forcing them to reduce their rates.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) has done me the honour of referring to my smile. I would like to ask him if he thinks that the wheat of Manitoba grows in the streets of Winnipeg. I would also like to ask him how, even if he had the Intercolonial Railway in Winnipeg, he proposes to regulate freight rates on wheat into Winnipeg? At the present time we have a railway at Portage la Prairie connecting with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the railway to which I refer refuses to give to the Northern Pacific the same rate as it gives to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

In consequence of that it costs 12 cents a hundred more to ship wheat from Neepawa to Duluth over the Northern Pacific than it does to ship wheat from Neepawa to Fort William over the Canadian Pacific Railway. The hon. gentleman states that he would bring the Intercolonial Railway into Winnipeg. We will suppose that he has that railway in Winnipeg at the present time; how does he intend to get over the difficulty to which I have alluded?

Mr. MACLEAN. Quite easily. The people of the North-west Territories would build their own railways to connect with the Government system touching at Winnipeg. They would see the advantage of it, and prairie railways can be built for $6,000 or $7,000 a mile,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Oh, no. You could not get the iron there for that.

Mr. MACLEAN. Iron has increased in price a good deal recently and it might cost $8,000 a mile. But prairie railways can be easily built up there that will make connection with the Government railway and the people are prepared to put their money into such lines if they can touch a railway that will give them cheap transportation to the sea. It is not a question of getting to Winnipeg, but it is a question of getting to the seaboard. The Government claimed, when two years ago they built the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, that they had reserved running rights for the people, or for other railways that desired to avail themselves of them.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have already granted running rights over that line.

Mr. MACLEAN. Yes, I give the hon. gentleman credit for that. He claims credit for all these little things, but I would like to give him credit for doing a great thing. It would be no trouble to provide relief, in regard to transportation, if the Government would extend the Intercolonial to Winnipeg.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. Do I understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) to say that we should parallel all the lines now existing in Manitoba and the North-west Territories?

Mr. MACLEAN. No.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. I think that is the amount of the hon. gentleman's answer to my question.

Mr. MACLEAN. It may not be necessary. I will tell the hon. gentleman how far he could go, and it would be as far as Bismarck went when he was dealing with the railways of Germany. He said to the railway companies: I propose to nationalize the railways; let me know how much they cost you, and I am ready to pay you the price of them. The owners of the railroads made up very large sums and presented a statement of them to Bismarck. Bismarck sent for a staff of engineers and said to them: I want you to go and make a survey and let me know what it would cost to parallel those railways. The coon came down in five minutes.

Mr. FROST. Do you compare Manitoba with the empire of Germany?

Mr. MACLEAN. No, I give an instance where it was done. It is the doctrine of the present, as well as of the future, that the nationalization of railways is the only cure for the transportation problem in this country. The only way to remove the grievances of the people of Manitoba and the North-west Territories is to give them what the people of eastern Canada have, a railway owned by the people and run in the interest of the people. If the Government were in earnest, and they are only half in earnest, they would provide a remedy for the existing evils along these lines. All they are doing to-day is misleading the people by telling them that they are getting substantial concessions for them, that they are doing something with the railways that was never done before and that the result of their resolutions will be to afford relief to the people of the North-west Territories. There will be no relief for the people of the North-west Territories, except upon the terms upon which it was demanded this afternoon. If the construction of this railway and the expenditure of this public money will give them reduced rates, then, they will favour it, and there is nothing in it for them unless they get reduced rates. But the only way they can get reduced rates is to nationalize all the railways that are built, or, at least, use the one railway owned by the Government to regulate all the others. This is a proposition that cannot be denied; it is a proposition that the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) repudiated in a large measure this afternoon, but it is a proposition that I believe in, it is a proposition that other men in this country believe in, and it is a proposition that is commending itself all over the world. The people of the United States are suffering to-day more from the domination of the railways than are the people in almost any other country. True, they had cheap transportation there to-day, and true it is that a great many railways, as the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) pointed out this afternoon, have passed into the hands of the receiver. But why did they pass into the hands of a receiver? Because the roads were plundered and ruined and sold out by railroad wreckers. It was not the conduct of the people or that the railways would not need it, or that the road is not getting a good rate for the traffic it carried, but these roads were plundered and ruined and passed into the hands of the receiver because of the action of railroad wreckers and promoters. Now, we ought to avoid all that in this country. What did they propose to do in the United States to relieve the transportation problem? They propose to build a great transcontinental system there, owned by the people, to be double-tracked or even four-tracked from Chicago to Baltimore and from Chicago to New York and from Chicago to St. Louis, and then straight across the country to the Pacific—5,000 miles of railway, and if this goes on in the United States at the rate it is to-day you will find the people of the United States rising in their might and building their own national railways. It would be almost an impossibility to nationalize the immense number of roads, but, as I said before, it is a very easy matter for us in this country to extend our own national railway and in that way limit the monopolies that now exist. There is no other way. I have studied the matter from as many points of view as I could, and I see no other way than by extending the national system.

Mr. MACLEAN.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. I would really like the hon. gentleman to explain how he proposes to get the wheat from the province of Manitoba and the North-west into Winnipeg through his Government railway plans?

Mr. MACLEAN. The hon. gentleman will have an opportunity of explaining to the people of the North-west why he did not support such a scheme. I am not going to give him brains or do his thinking for him. There is an old Greek proverb, to play upon the harp you must play upon the harp: that if you believe in yourself and use the people's money for building these roads you will very rapidly accomplish a great reform. I am sorry to see that the Government which promised to do so much for the North-west, has done nothing but support private corporations, and the great bulk of this money will go into the creation of great fortunes. You are going to establish millionaires in this country. Look at the number that came out of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The same number will come out of this transcontinental railway they propose to build. The Stephens and all the others associated with the Canadian Pacific Railway are to be succeeded now under a Grit regime by the Coxs, Manns, Mackenzies, and others. There was never such a rapid development of millionaires under Government encouragement as to-day under Grit rule.

Mr. WOOD. That is evidence of the prosperity of the country

Mr. MACLEAN. Yes, it is a growing time for millionaires; but the farmers of the North-west will think differently and the hon. gentlemen opposite have been given quite a lesson this afternoon. I am prepared to do anything to increase the protection given in these resolutions and to vote for the proposed amendment submitted this afternoon by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson).

Mr. T. O. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to take up much time of the House in discussing this question. The members of the Opposition criticised the Government with reference to those railway subsidies, and I am sure it is very impressive to listen to the story of the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) talking about public money being squandered and insinuating that it is to be used for political purposes. If the hon. gentleman had that frame of mind some years ago, it would be better for all concerned, when he and his friends got one hundred millions out of the Canadian Pacific Railway deal. If the hon. gentleman had taken this line of action then and at the time the Regina and Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway charter was going through, it would have been much better. I will not go so far as to say that they used it to assist political friends in this House, but the people of the North-west know as a matter of fact that the hon. gentleman and his friends had quite a rake-off. Now, times have changed. Another party is in power. They tell us we should not do such a thing as grant railway subsidies. I might point out to the hon. gentleman that when they are running the affairs of this country they parcelled out nearly one-half of the lands of the North-west Territories to their political friends. Now, if the Government propose giving subsidies to railways, and they propose to give $3,200 cash a mile, and they propose that the parties getting that money shall pay interest at the rate of 3 per cent. What did these gentlemen do? I have here a list of the land and the mileage which makes very nice reading. We find the amount of subsidy earned to be 28,561,354 acres of land. They got that as a subsidy for building 2,617 miles of railway. Now, putting a fair price—say, $3 per acre on that, we find it amounts to $32,721 per mile; and now they talk of the present Government giving the small sum of $3,200 per mile. The hon. gentlemen were very generous when they were in power in granting subsidies to the North-west. It is like putting your hands into another man's pocket and make a good fellow of yourself. They gave away any amount of land. They were generous. Heretofore the people of the west have been subsidizing their own railroads by land grants and as cash subsidies were given in the east our people were paying for their own roads and assisting to pay for eastern roads. This Government have placed us on the same footing as the people in the east, that cash subsidies will be given and the lands of the west kept for the settlers. With reference to the Rainy River, I claim it is right and proper for the Government to help to build the road and to safeguard the interests of the people. The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richard son) has told us that no matter what legislation you might put on the statute-book, you could not prevent persons interested in one railway acquiring an interest in and perhaps control over another railway; but I would like to know how you could keep their earnings down to 6 per cent as he proposes, as the railway company could water the stock. I claim that the only way to protect the interests of the people is for the Government to maintain running powers and control of rates on every railway—the same kind of control, in fact, that the Government retained over the Crow's Nest Pass road. I understand that this is provided for in an amendment to the Railway Act; and it is a much more effective provision in safeguarding the interests of the people than the amendment of the hon. member for Lisgar. With reference to granting subsidies to railways, if we want to open up and develop this country, we can only do it by building railways, not only in the west, but in the east. There are large portions of this eastern country which are not yet opened up, and which require railways as well as the western country. Not only the present Government, but the late Government have voted subsidies of $3,200 a mile for certain railways, and have re-voted them year after year, and yet up to the present time nobody has offered to take these subsidies and construct the roads. The present Government, on top of that, are imposing a claim of 3 per cent interest on the money advanced; and if this House goes still further and adopts the amendment of the hon. member for Lisgar, you will not find any person willing to build a railway for the small subsidy offered. I claim that it is a vital necessity to the people of the North-west to have the Rainy River Railway built, and if you adopt the amendment of the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) it is very questionable if the gentlemen who propose to build that railway will be able to raise the necessary capital. As the Government will have control of that road, in regard to running powers and rates, it is quite unnecessary to adopt the amendment. There is no doubt that we must have more railways in the North-west Territories, and I am glad that the Government have adopted the principle of giving cash instead of giving lands. At the rate at which people are going into that country we shall soon have to open up more territory to provide places for them. Most of the free lands in the province of Manitoba are at present taken up, and portions of the North-west Territories are pretty much in the same position. You cannot get people to settle in a district where there is no railway. There is at present a proposition before the House for a subsidy for 100 miles of railway in the district of Saskatchewan, to accommodate between 700 and 1,000 families, some of whom have been there for 15 years, and who settled there on the promise of hon.

gentlemen opposite that they would give them railway communication. Yet up to the present time that has not been done, and if this Government are granting a small subsidy of $3,200 per mile to that road, they are only carrying out what hon. gentlemen opposite promised about 10 years ago, but failed to carry out, and I am sure there will be no objection to that. You cannot settle people more than 20 miles from a railway. If they are going to raise produce at a profit, they cannot haul it any further than that. We expect in 10 years to have 5,000,000 people in the North-west Territories, and then we will contribute just as much to the revenue as the present 5,000,000 people do, and it will be very easy to pay the interest incurred for construction of roads. I cannot see my way to support the amendment moved by the hon. member for Lisgar, because I think it would be detrimental to the best interests of the west, as it would have the effect of preventing the construction of railroads. I consider the safeguards embodied in the Railway Act by which the Government have control of running powers and rates on every railway in the country, afford all the protection that the country requires.

Mr. D. D. ROGERS (Frontenac). At this late hour I will not detain the House for any great length of time, as I do not intend to repeat what has been said by other hon. members, though I have many figures and extracts from papers of a startling and even alarming character in regard to railway corporations and monopolies. This railway question has been a very live question among the farmers of this country for the last eight or ten years. One of the planks of the Patron platform of Ontario deals with it; and at the meetings of the Patrons it has often been a subject of discussion whether we should grant any more bonuses to railways. We all felt that in the older settled portion of the country it was not necessary to do so but as we had our new Ontario, with its great mineral wealth and a great North-western country, which we would have to open up at some time or other, we felt that it might be necessary to give a little railway aid to that country. The Patron platform in the North-west was not in exact unison with that in Ontario on that point. The Patrons in the North-west felt that Government aid was necessary to secure the construction of railways in that country. But the general feeling in Ontario was that too much money had been granted in the form of bonuses to railways in the past, and that it was time to call a halt. That was the general feeling among the Patrons all over the country, and it has been expressed in this House to-day. It is quite evident that there has been some improvement of late in the way of establishing Government control over the railways; but it is not enough, and I, for one, wish that the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) could have made his resolution a little stronger. The hon. member for East York spoke about nationalizing our railroads, but many obstacles stand in the way of that proposition.

We have as capable and honest men as can be found in other countries, and ought to be able to find men who can conduct the management of railways owned by the Government just as well as these railways are managed in Australia and other countries. It is rather a poor admission to make, that the system of government management of railways could not be conducted in this country with average economy and efficiency. I am convinced that if we had to begin over again, we would never give our national railways away to any great corporation. It may be a little late to take action just now, but I do feel that we ought to seek to recover our lost ground, and take advantage of any opportunity to place ourselves in a better position as regards the control of our railways. I do not see why a man in a position somewhat similar to that of the Auditor General, could not be appointed to oversee the entire management, and who would be as free from government control as the Auditor General is. We ought to be able to get just as good men as Van Horne, and Hayes, and other railway magnates, to manage our system. I do not think it is an impossibility for the Government to handle a railway system honestly and economically, if the proper means be adopted. We know that that is done in other countries. In the state of Delaware, for instance, the railways are made a source of revenue to the state, and, in fact, pay the greater portion of the state taxation. Of course, that is an old-settled country, and not to be compared with this, but still we ought to be able to proceed in the same direction. It has been strongly urged that we cannot prevent the amalgamation of railways, because we cannot prevent the buying of railway stocks and bonds by people who want to get control of the lines of railway. But there is nothing to prevent our inserting a clause in railway charters compelling the company to give the Government the first chance, in the case of any sale, so as to prevent the road falling under the control of other parties. By this means the railway could not pass out of the hands of the chartered company without the Government knowing it, and if the Government felt that an injustice was being done, they could put that clause into force.

I feel very strongly on the question of the increase of the national debt. Of course, the cause of our national debt is mainly due to the building of railways and canals, and that is also the cause of its continual increase. We all know that our municipal corporations have had to shoulder a heavy burden from that same source, and they feel it continually. Take my own county: we have bonused railways to the extent of about $200,000, and, with other indebtedness, our debt runs up to about $300,000. Our councillors, a few years ago, consolidated that debt and made an arrangement to pay it off in thirty years by annual instalments. That shows the feeling of the farmers against burdens of any kind. They are willing to pay a direct tax on their land in order to have the burden of debt reduced. That $300,000 will be paid off in twelve years. We have been paying it off for the last eighteen years, and in twelve years more will be clear of it. Through all the pressure of hard times, the farmers of that county bore that direct taxation in order to get that burden off their shoulders. It is rather discouraging, then, for them to find, when they are reducing their municipal debt, their federal and provincial indebtedness continually increasing. If the Government would formulate some scheme for the gradual reduction of our indebtedness from year to year, they could not adopt a policy which would be more acceptable to the people. Let it be based on the principle of a collective revenue from some particular source, applied to the reducing of our debt, and it would be a move in a direction highly acceptable to the great mass of the people. We find other great countries reducing their debt, and still going on with their expenditure. England is spending heavier than before, but she has paid off $335,000,000 of indebtedness in ten years. We know the enormous debt that France has paid off in late years. We know that the United States have paid off an enormous indebtedness. Certainly, some little move in that direction in Canada would do more to strengthen this Government than any policy they could adopt. Of course, being a new country, our needs for expenditure are greater. But if we have good times at present, and our revenue exceeds our expenditure, instead of spending that excess, let a couple of million dollars be put aside to pay off our national debt, and you have no idea how satisfactory that would be to the people, even if they had to be taxed a little extra in order to do it. The people are not in a mood to stand any increased indebtedness, even if times are good. If the Government would form a fund of some kind to pay off so much of the national debt each year, our people would feel that the burden was getting less, and be more satisfied.

I would wish that the amendment were a little stronger, but it is a move in the right direction, and I cannot do less than support the resolution, so far as it goes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I merely wish to say a few words in explanation of the amendment, for the benefit of those members who were not here when I moved it. The amendment proposes that the Government shall have access to the books, accounts and documents relating to the construction of these railways subsidized, in order that the Government may know exactly what the cost of their construction was, so that, if it be determined at any later period to take possession of these railways, they can be taken possession of at their net cost, less the public subsidies. The other point of the amendment is, that the rates shall be based, not upon the enhanced cost of the road, the stock and bonds of the road, but the actual cost of the road, less the bonuses granted.

As to the question of Government ownership of railways, I would like to discuss that matter, but do not want to take up the time of the House. I am generally in favour of the platform enunciated by my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean). I believe that Government ownership of railways is something bound to come, and that before very long. So strong a hold has that idea taken of the people of the west, that Mr. Hugh John Macdonald, as leader of the Opposition in convention, practically adopted the policy of Government ownership of railways.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). I rise, in the first place, for the purpose of entering my protest against the course which the Government has taken in introducing the railway resolutions. Here we are, with nearly five months of the session ended—we came here on the 16th March, and it is now the 3rd August—and the most important resolutions the House has to consider are placed before us only to-day. I can remember, as every hon. gentleman who was here in the olden days can remember, and as every hon. member knows from his knowledge of public affairs, every member of the present Government and every hon. gentleman who sat with them in those days, was loud in his protest against what they considered the injustice of bringing in railway subsidy resolutions late in the session. They protested that it was improper, that it was immoral, that it was dishonest. I will detain the House by reading a word or two what these hon. gentlemen have said in protestation against the course which they condemned then, but which they are following to-day as unblushingly as if it were the proper thing to do, and as if they had never said a word against it. At the end of the session of 1894, the Government proposed subsidies amounting, if I remember well, to between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000. The present Premier objected. He said:

The session has lasted four months,—

This session has lasted nearer five months than four.

—and the Government have had more time than was necessary to prepare these resolutions. How is it possible that this House can discuss these resolutions intelligently, covering, as they do, about sixty different railway schemes, and involving, as they do, over three millions of dollars? It is quite impossible under such circumstances that any man in this House can give intelligent attention to this question. I protest against such proceedings.

Now, does the right hon. Prime Minister protest to-day? He protested when there were three millions in subsidies. We have more than twice that to-day, and as I shall show before I sit down, perhaps four times. This money we are asked to vote at the close of a long session, though there were opportunities when the discussion might have been carried on earlier, and it was the Government's duty to present these resolutions at the proper time for the due and deliberate consideration of this House. But the right hon. First Minister was not the only one. Mr. Mills said:

We are in the fifth month of the session, and we now have for the first time brought under our attention a number of railway projects, the merits of which we have no opportunity to consider.

That is our case to-day. We have no opportunity to consider these resolutions. I venture to predict, and it does not require much of a prophet for that, that when we come to the particulars of these resolutions the Government will have no information to give; but it will be as it was the other day, as it has been every day this session—when the Minister proposed a vote of public money, he has no information worth considering to give to the House. And when we come to deal with these 54 railway schemes, the Government will be utterly unprepared to present a statement to this House or lay documents before the House that will enable hon. members to intelligently consider the subject. There was another gentleman who spoke—the present hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright):

This abuse is one of long standing, and therefore all the worse.—

It is of a good deal longer standing now. But why, particularly, did the hon. gentleman condemn it?

—We ought, in all conscience, at the time of the Budget, or about that time, to get a description of what our obligations are and what further obligations it is proposed the country should incur.

Is that sound doctrine? I think it is. If it be sound doctrine, I would ask these hon. gentlemen why they do not carry it out in practice? Is it merely to show that every doctrine they approved while in Opposition they utterly condemn now that they have crossed the floor?

The practice of putting these resolutions off until the end of the session is carried on for the express purpose of stifling and preventing inquiry.

Mr. WALLACE.

Why did these hon. gentlemen bring down their railway resolutions at so late a period? Is it for the purpose of stifling and preventing inquiry? I think it is. Then, the present hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mullock) said:

To-day we have scarcely more than one-half the House sitting, and not one of us has had the opportunity of communicating with the outside world before we are asked to vote away public money.

Our complaint again.

It is on the line of the whole financial administration of this Government. They are practically engaged in wrecking the finances of Canada.

That was when our annual expenditure was less than $40,000,000, all told. And yet these hon. gentlemen lightly and airily, at the tail end of a long session, ask us to vote six and half millions or twelve and a half millions, as the case may be, besides five and a half millions of supplementary Estimates, and ask us to finish the work in three days. We can hardly do it. We intend to tell the Government that we expect full information about this expenditure, twelve millions at least. The present Postmaster General further said:

The recklessness with which the rights of the people are being dealt with, the recklessness with which our finances are being handled, the recklessness with which our credit is being dealt with, the recklessness with which the possibilities of this country are being disregarded, convince me that the interests of the country are entirely subsidiary to the interests of the men who are on the Treasury benches.

Now, I would like to ask these hon. gentlemen to take this medicine for themselves, and tell us what they think about it. Then, there is another whom I should quote—the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen)—“Jim,” he is called here. He said:

I do sincerely deplore the condition to which political morality has dropped,—

He cannot sing the old songs to-day.

—as exhibited by hon. gentlemen opposite. It is to be hoped that the end of this system is drawing near.

It is further away than ever.

It is to be hoped that the end of this system is drawing near. It is to be hoped that the people of Canada will see through these schemes, will see through the object of the Government in bringing forward measures of this kind at the close of the session; and it is to be hoped that, although it is late in the day, although the country is heavily burdened with debt, although the annual expenditure has now reached an enormous sum—that even at the eleventh hour the country will get relief from this abominable truckling, and, I may say, the political rascality that is exhibited in this whole scheme.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What paper is that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) is reading?

Mr. DAVIN. "Hansard."

Mr. LANDERKIN. The hon. gentleman is reading from a newspaper.

Mr. WALLACE. No, "Hansard."

Mr. LANDERKIN. "Hansard" is not in that form.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Landerkin) is getting a little mixed.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The hon. gentleman does not know the difference between "Hansard" and a newspaper.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Landerkin) does not appear to know the truth when he hears it. Now, with regard to the proposals themselves, my opinion, and I have expressed it before, is this—that while in the past it was absolutely necessary, for the opening up of the country, that the Government should aid railways, to build them as in the case of the Intercolonial Railway, or to give liberal subventions of both land and money, as in the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway, or to grant subsidies in aid of construction for the opening up of branch lines to develop various parts of the country, yet I contend that the time has come, that it came some time ago when the Government should, as a rule, stop bonusing railways. Let the railways be built in the future on a commercial basis, and let those who have charge of the interests of those roads build them because they are regarded as profitable commercial enterprises. Of course, there will be special cases that must be dealt with in a special manner, so that it would be impossible to lay down a hard and fast rule and say that in future we would grant no further railway bonuses.

Mr. WOOD. How can the hon. gentleman make a speech like that when he was a member of the other Government and a member of the other party?

Mr. WALLACE. That is a hard question to answer. But I ask the hon. gentleman to turn up the "Hansard," and he will see all my speeches in Parliament. Now, Mr. Chairman, I say that we cannot lay down a hard and fast rule; I think that is a true policy for any Government to take. Yet, when we have spent money in every direction, when, according to hon. gentlemen opposite when they were on this side of the House, we had far exceeded the debt we were justified in having in this country in view of our wealth and population, this Government is proposing to squander money recklessly in every direction; they are proposing to-day a larger expenditure than ever has been incurred before. Here we have railway subsidies for $6,500,000. But that is not the measure of the liabilities that we are incurring. The old Government only gave $3,200 per mile, a sum which was based upon the cost of steel rails and appliances for the construction of the road; but this Government are giving double that amount, or $6,400 per mile. The Minister of Railways and Canals tells us to-day that they are not going to give that in many cases, that in many cases it will not materialize, that the money will not be earned. But he makes it very easy to earn the money. He says that any road that expends more than $15,000 a mile will have a claim on the second $3,200; if they expend $2,000 a mile over the $15,000, they will have a claim, and in order to claim the full subsidy of $6,400, the cost of the road will have to be $21,400 per mile. In order to compute that they are to take these railroad bridges, even those that have received an extra subsidy from the Government.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, it is just the reverse of that. They cannot include more than $25,000 in respect of any bridge, and nothing of any bridge which has received special aid.

Mr. WALLACE. The $25,000 covers nearly the whole of this class of bridges, except in very exceptional instances; they receive a special subsidy for the building of those bridges, and I see a whole list of bridges that are to be bonused. Then, the cost of all these railroad bridges is to be added in, so as to enable these companies getting subsidies to make a legitimate and proper demand under these regulations for the $6,400 per mile.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The resolution says the very reverse of that.

Mr. WALLACE. I will read the resolution:

That it is expedient to authorize the Governor in Council to grant a subsidy of $3,200 per mile towards the construction of each of the undermentioned lines of railway (not exceeding in any case the number of miles hereinafter respectively stated) which shall not cost more on the average than $15,000 per mile for the mileage subsidized, and towards the construction of each of the said lines of railway not exceeding the mileage hereinafter stated, which shall cost more on the average than $15,000 per mile for the mileage subsidized, a further subsidy beyond the sum of $3,200 per mile of fifty per centum on so much of the average cost of the mileage subsidized as shall be in excess of $15,000 per mile, such subsidy not exceeding in the whole the sum of $6,400 per mile. The expression "cost" used in this resolution means the actual, necessary and reasonable cost, and shall include the amount expended upon any bridge, up to and not exceeding $25,000, forming part of the line of railway subsidized not otherwise receiving any bonus.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is it. "Not otherwise."

Mr. WALLACE. Up to $25,000, and not exceeding $25,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. But nothing, if that bridge is specially subsidized.

Mr. WALLACE. I see here that all those costing over that receive a subsidy of $50,000, $35,000, and one down as low as $15,000; but nearly all of them go over the amount; and, therefore, are to be included in the cost of the road-bed so as to bring the amount over $15,000 per mile.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is the very reverse of that. No bridge which costs less than $100,000 gets a subsidy.

Mr. WALLACE. The South Shore bridge gets $50,000. It does not say here—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is a revote.

Mr. WALLACE. It does not say in the information we have here that it is to be 15 per cent or any other percentage. We have no means of knowing, the Minister has not given us the information, neither in the resolutions nor in his speech.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is your vote, one that you put there.

Mr. WALLACE. Suppose it was, that was many years ago, under different conditions. This is a new House of Parliament. It is not a sufficient answer to say that four, or five, or six years ago there was a vote for a similar project, and, therefore, that is all there is to be said about it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is a vote for the same bridge.

Mr. WALLACE. We should require the Government to give us the fullest information on every scheme before this House, whether it is a revote, or whether it is a new vote. But he says that a portion of these votes may never be called for. Well, that means that they are proposing, without proper investigation, to give bonuses to railroads for which a proper commercial basis has not been presented to them as a justification for a subsidy. That is virtually what the Minister of Railways and Canals tells us to-day. They are offering bonuses practically to coax men to endeavour to raise money to build railroads, without considering whether the necessities of the country would justify the construction of that road; they are squandering money and coaxing people to attempt to raise further money by selling their bonds and to come to the Government for $3,200 or $6,400 per mile. Then the Government says that if the company crosses a large bridge they will give them $50,000 or $100,000 to assist in building that bridge, the same as they are doing with regard to the Intercolonial Railway at Charlottetown.

The Minister of Railways and Canals says: We are relieved from the necessity of defending our policy because the leader of the Opposition yesterday fully endorsed it.

Mr. BLAIR.

and if there are any objectors on this side of the House, they are so insignificant as to be scarcely worth consideration.

Well, Mr. Chairman, all I have to say is that the Opposition claim the right to a good deal of latitude and we shall exercise that right. We shall not be deterred by the hon. Minister of Railways from criticising his proposals or from examining into his proposals, and we will compel him to justify the votes he proposes in this House. We will have to ask him to present to us arguments that will be sufficient to justify, in this House and before the country, the enormous expenditure he proposes. What does he propose to do? Take the history of railway subsidies for the last nine years, and the hon. Minister himself has given us the figures. Eighteen million dollars in subsidies have been voted in these years, or an average of $2,000,000 a year while he proposes $6,500,000, but the companies may earn the additional subsidies which will make it $6,500,000 more or $13,000,000, less the double subsidy for the railway bridges. We will call it $12,500,000, although it is more than that. It may be that we are voting $12,500,000, which is more in one year than the average of the six years under the former Administration. I never heard the hon. gentlemen, who are now occupying the Treasury benches, say a word in commendation of this policy in the past. I never heard a justification of that policy from hon. gentlemen. Although I think it was a right and a good policy it is not a policy for all time to come, but, on the contrary, it is a policy that was justifiable in the early days, in opening up the country. We have reached the position to-day when the Government should adopt a new policy and should justify the building of these railways upon a strictly commercial basis. But an opposite course is taken. People are invited, implored, asked to come in and build these railways, to borrow money, to get subsidies from the Government, to do everything, and when some of these railways are built it will be found that they are in advance of the times, of the requirements and necessities of the people, that they will not be able to pay their working expenses and will not justify their construction at this time. I say that we are proceeding in this matter with a recklessness, a prodigality and an extravagance that are without parallel in the history of this country. The reckless proposals that are being made now are utterly unjustifiable, but we hear, to-day, that down in the city of Montreal, the Government are sending out contracts to have the voters' lists printed on short notice, that the Government presses here are so fully occupied and the necessity of having the list printed, in order to prepare for the election is so great, that they are printing them in Montreal.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Where did the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) read that?

Mr. WALLACE. I heard it to-day. I would like to ask the right hon. First Minister if my information is correct?

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman's information is absolutely wrong.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know whether the right hon. Prime Minister ought to deny that statement because the other statements that the hon. gentleman is making are of a piece with it.

Mr. WALLACE. I have made no statement about it. I say I have been informed of it. The other statements I have made are statements I have made from my own knowledge and from reading the statements of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals. The comments I have made upon them are justified by the statements that I gather from the resolutions of the hon. Minister himself. Now, Mr. Chairman, I say that the proposal that is made to build a second line of railway from Fort William to Winnipeg, 40 miles of which, we are told, goes through the United States, is unjustifiable. I think the Government have performed their duty in that regard when they built one line from Fort William to Winnipeg. I think that the duty of the Government to this country was fully completed when they did that. If there is a necessity for a second line of railway it should be built as a commercial enterprise. If the Government find, in order to cut rates, or to regulate the prices on traffic there, that this line is necessary, I do not think that they are justified in building it, unless they absolutely control that railway themselves. I go further and say that the Government are not justified in giving a dollar of subsidy to build a railway from Fort William to Winnipeg. That road should be left to the private enterprise of citizens if a second line is necessary between these two points. What do the Government propose to do in regard to this road? They propose to give $6,400 per mile. This Rainy River Railway Company have a further subsidy from the Manitoba Government, at one end, and from the Ontario Government at the other end. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals what subsidies that railway is getting per mile from the Ontario Government?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot say.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. Minister cannot say. Just imagine, Mr. Chairman! Here is a Government giving a subsidy to a railway company in order to enable them to build that road. They know that the railway company are getting a subsidy from the Ontario Government. Still when we ask them what subsidy they are getting the hon. Minister tells us, in his bland and innocent way, that he cannot say. It may be thought they are getting a sufficient amount to build the whole of the road from the Ontario Government, yet the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals comes along and wants us to give them $6,400 per mile additional without making a particle of inquiry as to what amount has been given by either the Manitoba or the Ontario Government, or as to what assistance they require to build this road, without having a consultation as to the terms with the other parties so as to know what would be a proper amount to vote for the construction of this road because, so far as Ontario is concerned, the money comes from the Dominion Government, in the first place, and in the second place, from the Ontario Government. We are left entirely in the dark. The hon. Minister tells us that he does not know. Does he know that they are receiving a bonus from the Ontario Government? I presume he knows that much. He does not know whether it is $1,000, $2,000, $3,000, $7,000 or $9,000 a mile. Then we ask him if he knows what they are getting from the Manitoba Government, and I presume the hon. Minister is quite innocent of any information upon that subject as well. These votes aggregating $6,500,000 that are proposed in the last days of the session are totally unjustifiable expenditures of the people's money, and there is no valid excuse or reason for asking us to sanction them. It may be that in the 52 lines of railway on the list, there are some commendable enterprises. I am not denying that, but I pick out the Rainy River Railway and see how unjustifiable the expenditure is in regard to it. The same can be said in regard to others, yet, they are proposing to vote away millions of the people's money, and it will be voted away because the Government have a majority at their back who, while they condemned such proceedings when they were in Opposition, are ready and willing and anxious to vote away the people's money at every opportunity.

Now, Sir, what is the reason for this? Is it, that that independence with which they were credited, when on this side of the House, was only a thin veneer, was only a pretense, or is it, that with the power of a Government, with the powers and influences that they can wield on private members, they make those men fall into line, and not only stand up and vote for these iniquitous grants, as I have heard hon. members—like the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen)—and defend the very course that they have spent their whole life in condemning? I think, when the people of this country realize the enormous expenditures that are being proposed to be carried through without that thorough investigation necessary, they will condemn the reckless expenditure of the people's money in this country.

Mr. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.) Mr. Chairman, as this seems to be a general discussion on the subsidies the Government have brought down, I wish to say a few words before the motion is put. On looking over the subsidies, I find that the huge amount of nearly $7,000,000 is asked for railways all the way from 100 miles in length to two, six, nine miles, and even to one-sixty-six hundredths of a mile—a little over a half mile. I do not know why subsidies are given to small lines like these, because I cannot believe that they could not get private capital to build those small lines if they will pay. In looking over all those subsidies, I find there are large amounts given to every province except one—British Columbia. That seems to me very strange. There is not one single dollar given to a railway in the province of British Columbia. I may say, Mr. Chairman, that I firmly believe in the policy of aiding railways, either by land grants or by subsidies of money. I know that in a country like Canada, especially in the more unsettled portions of Canada, it is impossible to get private enterprise to take hold of those undertakings and to open up the country as they should be opened up without Government assistance. For years past huge sums of money have been expended in the older provinces, nearly altogether. They have been spoon-fed by the Government in subsidized roads, until now almost the whole country is honey-combed with rail roads. But, Sir, that is very far from the case in the west, and I think it is time that the Government came to the conclusion that British Columbia and the North-west—I am speaking more particularly for British Columbia—are to get their fair share of any public moneys going. I may say there is no richer portion of the country than that same province of British Columbia. I do not wish to go into statistics to prove it, because I took occasion some weeks ago to do so. I showed that British Columbia, as a whole, was the third greatest contributor to the Dominion treasury in the whole of the confederated provinces. I need only to call attention to just one portion of British Columbia. That is the district of Kootenay, which is known over the whole civilized world. We have seen large amounts of gold and silver coming out of the mines in that district, and I am very glad to say that I believe Canada will see the very same thing on just as large a scale on Vancouver Island. The mines that are being opened up there now are showing up just as good as the mines did in the Kootenay, when they had only the same amount of money spent upon them. The members of the Government must certainly have been applied to for assistance in the way of subsidies for British Columbia railways, and I would like to know the reason why they have not given us assistance? There was one railway that the people of British Columbia wanted—the Victoria, Vancouver and Eastern Railway. This is a line that they might well have given assistance to. It would run from Vancouver through the country towards Boundary Creek, and

Mr. PRIOR.

on to the Kootenay country. Another line was that from Nanaimo or Wellington, running north up to the head of Vancouver Island. This is a line that would open up a fine tract of mineral, timber and agricultural country. I am very sorry to see that there is not a sum placed in the Estimates for this road. Another road that is greatly required is that from Kamloops or Ashcroft up into the Cariboo district. This line has been wanted for many years. The only means of communication into the Cariboo country is the old Cariboo wagon-road. It is out of date at present. Machinery is required in there to make those mines pay, and there is no doubt, if a railroad were built there, it would be a paying concern within a year or two. The people of British Columbia require it, and I am surprised that the influence of the hon. member for Yale and Cariboo (Mr. Bostock) that we hear so much of, has not been sufficient to show the Government that they were wanting in their duty in not giving a subsidy to that road. I might say that if the Government wished to do justice to the province, they might have given a subsidy to a portion of the British Pacific Railway. That railway is one that is supposed to run, and I am sure will run, from Vancouver Island across the Seymour Narrows, up through Cariboo, to the Yellow Head Pass. I see that item 41 subsidy for 50 miles to the Edmonton, Yukon, Pacific Railway, a line running from South Edmonton and North Edmonton on to the Yellow Head Pass. Although it comes to the confines of the province, still there is not one dollar going to be asked for the province of British Columbia. The Government saw fit to bring down a vote for $1,270,000 for the province of Prince Edward Island. It is a province with a small population like British Columbia, and if they can do that for a province like Prince Edward Island, surely they might give a million dollars, or two millions, for British Columbia. The British Columbia members are always met with the answer, whenever they say anything about expenditure to hon. gentlemen on both sides of this House: Look at the huge amount of money we spent on you in building the Canadian Pacific Railway. I take exception to that altogether. The construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway was a part of the terms of confederation, and the railway would be no good to the eastern portion of the Dominion if it had not gone through British Columbia. So we can cry quits on that. And because it was more expensive to build through the mountain sections of British Columbia than it was over the plains or in eastern Canada, is no argument why that should be put down to the debit of British Columbia. I do not wish to take up the time of the House at this late hour of the session, but I wish to enter my emphatic protest against the neglect shown by the Government. I consider that it is an insult to British Columbia to bring down this huge amount of railway subsidies without a single dollar for the province of British Columbia.

Mr. J. G. HAGGART (South Lanark). At this late hour of the evening, I will make my remarks as concise as I possibly can. I intend to offer some remarks in reply to the right hon. leader of the Government, who, replying to the hon. member for East York, and particularly the two hon. members from Toronto, stated that it would be hard to find anywhere any observation of his opposed to railway subsidies. All I can say is that he is the only member of the party on the opposite side who was not opposed to railway subsidies. Again and again, in this House and in the country they protested to the fullest extent possible against the granting of railway subsidies. As to the policy of the late Government, I am proud of that policy, which has done more to develop this country than anything else they ever did. Their policy was to grant $3,200 per mile for assisting in the construction of railroads. That sum was the actual value at that time of the steel rails required. Every one knows that at the decreased price of steel rails at present, they can be got at almost half of what they cost at that time. The late Government subsequently added a grant of 15 per cent for all bridges, the cost of which exceeded $100,000. Hon. gentlemen opposite have introduced an entirely different policy. Not content with the policy with which they found fault of granting $3,200 per mile, the Minister of Railways at present takes power to grant $6,400 per mile.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would like to know if the hon. gentleman's Government never gave more than $3,200 per mile?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, there were some lines of railway for which we gave more, and there are some lines of railway that the Government are building altogether. We gave a larger sum towards the connection between the Northern Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway. We gave a certain annual allowance, which would be in excess of that amount, for building two or three roads in Manitoba. I will deal with that point afterwards. I am now dealing with the general policy of the Government, which is to give larger subsidies than the late Government. Why is that, when steel rails have decreased in value? The late Government granted $3,200 per mile on the principle that that was the cost of the steel rails, and that the money would be recouped to the country indirectly in the shape of capital introduced into the country, and in the shape of increased receipts from customs in connection with the construction of these lines of railway. When an hon. gentleman stated that $6,500,000 was an enormous sum of money to vote in one session for railway subsidies the right hon. leader of the Government said that the subsidies brought down in 1884 amounted to $9,500,000. That statement, when I heard it, fairly staggered me, because I knew that the expenditure on subsidies which were granted by the late Government in 1883-84 and in the subsequent years did not amount to $1,000,000, and that the total expenditure on all the subsidies granted by the late Government for the purpose of constructing railways from 1882 to 1895, inclusive, was only $14,000,000, very little more than $1,000,000 per year.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How much was voted?

Mr. HAGGART. I am not saying how much was voted. I sent for the statutes in which these subsidies are set forth, and I find the following: to the government of the province of Quebec, in consideration of their having constructed the railway from Quebec to Ottawa, $954,000. Does the hon. gentleman think that was a subsidy? For the portion between Montreal and Ottawa, $12,000 per mile, or in all $1,440,000. Both of these roads were completed at the time. For the construction of a line of railway from Oxford station on the Intercolonial Railway to Sydney or Louisbourg. Does the hon. gentleman consider that a subsidy, when the whole line was built as a portion of the Intercolonial? For a branch of the Intercolonial Railway from Metapedia eastward towards Paspébiac, $300,000. For a branch of the Intercolonial Railway from Derby station to Indian Town, $140,000. The actual subsidies voted in that year were only $2,100,000. Under the arrangement for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and no person knows it better than the right hon. gentleman, we arranged with the province of Quebec to take over these roads which that province had constructed, and which were to form part of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The people of Quebec insisted that Quebec should be one of the termini of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and for the purpose of carrying out that arrangement, these amounts were voted. If it were the right hon. gentleman's Minister of Railways who brought that down, he would not include it in the subsidies at all. He would bring it down in the same form as he brought the vote for the Prince Edward Island Railway—in an entirely different resolution. Is the $1,600,000 expended for the Drummond County Railway a subsidy? Is the expenditure for bringing the Intercolonial into Montreal over the Grand Trunk Railway a subsidy?

The PRIME MINISTER. No, that is our road.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Did you own the road between Quebec and Montreal after you paid the money?

Mr. HAGGART. Do you own the Grand Trunk into Montreal?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We own the Drummond County Railway.

Mr. FOSTER. We own the Cape Breton extension.

Mr. HAGGART. The right hon. gentleman, I think, ought to be more careful in making a statement in justification of his Government for bringing down $6,500,000 of pure subsidies. The hon. gentleman places a great deal of reliance upon the peculiar condition under which these subsidies are given. Under clause 3:

3. That the subsidies granted to the Ontario and Rainy River Railway Company, the Canadian Northern Railway Company and the Edmonton, Yukon and Pacific Railway Company are granted upon the condition, and if received and paid under the authority of this Act to the above mentioned companies respectively, shall be received upon the condition that the said companies shall not, nor shall any of them, at any time amalgamate with any other railway company, or lease its line to any railway company; nor shall any of the said railways be leased to or operated by any other company; nor shall any of the said companies make an agreement for a common fund or for pooling its receipts with any other railway company, and any such lease, amalgamation or agreement shall be absolutely void, excepting in so far as such agreement may extend to traffic or running arrangements which have been approved by the Governor in Council.

In my innocence I thought that no railway company that received a charter from this Government had the power of doing what is here guarded against. The insertion of this clause is a work of supererogation. No railway company, unless it is specially mentioned in its charter, has the right to amalgamate with or lease the line of any other railway company. Again and again, companies come to this Parliament asking for the right to amalgamate with other companies or to lease the lines of other companies; and not only has the company which desires to amalgamate or lease to come to this Parliament, but the other company which desires to be amalgamated or leased has also to make application for the necessary power. There are some companies which have a general power. The Canadian Pacific Railway has, to a certain extent, a general power, but every other company which receives a charter from this Government has no power to amalgamate with any other company whatever or to lease any other line whatever. It has to come to this Parliament for authority to do either. And what is there to prevent a company doing the same thing under this provision?

Then, the next clause deals with their ability to construct the line. That is the ordinary clause which is in every subsidy Act. They must first get the approval of the Governor in Council to the contract and everything else. The approval of the Governor in Council to the line has to be obtained. The Minister of Railways has the power to disapprove the location or even the stations, if the stations or the lines are not placed in the particular manner which he thinks is right.

The hon. gentleman introduced legislation this session to give him the power, I think, principally of an ex post facto character, to deal with railways already built. But every railway company that comes for the purpose of making a contract with the Government has to file its plans and its location, showing where the different stations are. The Minister of Railways has the power to say: I do not approve of the line, you must alter it in a certain direction; if you do not alter it, or if you do not establish your stations—I think I will even go as far as that, but I may be mistaken in that particular point—I shall not enter into the contract with you, I shall not ask the Governor in Council to enter into the contract to give you the subsidy granted under this Act.

The hon. gentleman lays great stress on these lines:

That the Governor in Council may at all times provide and secure to other companies running powers, traffic arrangements and all other rights as will afford to all railways connecting with those subsidized reasonable and proper facilities in exercising such running powers, fair and reasonable traffic arrangements with connecting companies.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not say there is anything new in that. I only referred to the other two clauses.

Mr. HAGGART. There is nothing new in that, because the power existed before. But the clause on which the hon. gentleman's friends on the other side laid particular stress is the extraordinary one providing that the company shall perform Government service, and that in or towards payment of the same, the Government shall be credited by the company with a sum equal to 3 per cent per annum on the amount of the subsidy. The hon. gentleman's friends appear to claim that the Government were going to get from these companies 3 per cent on the amount of the subsidy. The hon. gentleman had hardly the hardihood to state that. He did not believe it himself but some of his friends made that statement. Take the average amount which the Post Office Department pay for the carriage of the mails on an average railway. I am speaking of a completed railway, and not of one on which twelve miles or twenty miles additional are subsidized, and on which it would be impossible to carry out this provision. I will take the Ottawa, Arnprior and Parry Sound Railway which is 263 miles in length. It is a completed road, and a fair road for the purpose of illustration. It is more than fair, for it would likely get much more for postal service than any one of the roads subsidized under this Act. What does that road receive for carrying the mails over its 263 miles. $5,600 per year, or less than $25 per mile. On the $6,400 then, which the hon. gentleman intends to give, he will get, under this provision, $25 per mile for the postal subsidy, taking the Parry Sound Railway as a criterion. So that on a road of 100 miles, which would get a subsidy of $640,000, he would receive $2,500 in return. You will see at once what probability there is of that 3 per cent being returned to the Government, and the hon. gentleman says it is not to be accumulative at all. The company are not to be charged 3 per cent and then credited with the cost of the postal service, but the cost of the postal service is to be charged against the subsidy each year, and any deficit between the charge for that service and the 3 per cent is not to be carried over against them. It is only the actual service done that year that is taken into account. There may be twenty years in which there is no postal car run over the line at all or no freight or policemen carried for the Government, and in such a case there is no charge whatever against the company. It does not accumulate at all, but the moment a postal car goes on, or some other service is rendered for the Government, then it is to be counted against the 3 per cent interest on the $6,400 per mile, and no difference whatever is carried over against the company. There is not the slightest probability of the Government ever getting one-tenth of one per cent in return. I asked the hon. gentleman to bring the amounts received from the different railways, which had that clause in their charter already, and on which has been expended I do not know how much in the shape of subsidies, but up in the millions. On some of the roads in the Northwest Territories, the highest amount he received was $5,000, the next highest amount $3,000, the next $2,000. I would not mention this particularly, were it not for the fact that that clause is put in for the purpose of deceiving the public. There is no adequate return or actual return under it. There is no actual return. That is put in to be used as an argument during the contest that is likely to occur soon; it is to be made the basis of a statement that these votes are not to rank as subsidies, but are rather in the form of advances from the Government to these different railroads, and on which we shall receive interest. That has been used by the member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis). He says he admires the policy of the Government in not subsidizing the railroads in the way the late corrupt Government did, but in loaning the money, on which the Government will get a return of interest. The hon. gentleman talks about $89 per mile. This is what it would be in the case of roads like main lines of the Grand Trunk or Canadian Pacific Railway, over which the mails run half a dozen times a day. The services that will be run over these bonused roads could not possibly earn more than $20 a mile. And how is the hon. Minister to apply the principle of a road, only one section of which, 20 miles at the end of it, is subsidized. Will he make them put a postal car on for that 20 miles, or is the Post Office Department going to deduct from its payments on account of this subsidy of 20 miles? The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) prides himself on the power he is taking in this connection. But he forgets that the Post Office to-day has power to say to any railway in Canada: You must carry our mails over your road, and we will fix the rate of remuneration ourselves. Of course, it must be a reasonable rate. But it is the greatest absurdity, this talk of being recouped by the interest of 3 per cent on the investment made in assisting these roads. I do not know which roads these subsidies are for—I will consider them as they come up, when we go into the details of the matter. The right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and the rest of them have swallowed their opinions with reference to bringing down the subsidies late in the session. But that is only what they have done with regard to everything else. They are only following the course taken by one of their great leaders in the local House. Fault was found with John Sandfield Macdonald for bringing down his resolutions late. But Hon. Edward Blake, when he succeeded to power, brought down his resolutions in the dying days of the session, and insisted that they should be carried en bloc, or not at all. And the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has fallen from grace in this matter, as he has with regard to every other promise that he made to the people of this country. He introduced them at the last moment; and he finds his friends, who were so clamorous against us, although we quoted Mr. Blake's introduction of his railway resolutions, are prepared to endorse him in the course he has taken in this matter. As to the principle of bonusing railways—and I was always in favour of it—I am not particular as to the road to which a bonus is given. If private capital, the municipality, or the province is interested enough to build the road, that should be sufficient for us—so long as we confine ourselves to a maximum of $3,200 a mile. For such a bonus the Government is recouped indirectly, yes, and directly, by the operation of the road.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think that any one who might have endeavoured to follow the discussion that has so far taken place on these resolutions, would experience a great deal of difficulty in making up his mind as to just what was the opinion, collectively, of hon. gentlemen opposite. A Government that might desire to meet the views of its opponents, would be in rather an awkward dilemma in trying to do so under the present circumstances. We have all varieties of opinion, from the stern, vigorous and determined opponent of subsidies of all kinds, to the most generous and liberal-minded of givers. We have had sectionalism and all sorts of isms. We have had from my hon. friend from East Toronto (Mr. Ross Robertson)—I am sorry he is not in his place, that I might say what otherwise I might wish to say—

Mr. CLARKE. He stayed here until ten o'clock, hoping to hear the hon. Minister.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have been trying to get an opportunity to speak. I feel some reluctance in characterizing the attack of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Robertson) on these propositions as I think it richly deserves. I was amazed. I must say, at the attitude of my hon. friend. I have listened to his speeches in this House, when he has given us evidence of breadth and liberality in dealing with public questions; but I have never heard the hon. gentleman address this House on a question that had any relation to railways, in which either the Canadian Pacific Railway or Mackenzie & Mann could be connected in any way, when he has not exhausted his epigrammatic style in denouncing the proposal. All you need to do, apparently, in order to secure the bitter hostility of the hon. gentleman, is to have somebody whisper in his ear that possibly Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann may, if not now, at some day in the remote future, have some connection with the enterprise. Is not that calculated to weaken the effect of the hon. gentleman's condemnation, as well as of his advocacy of any cause in this House? I am sure the hon. gentleman has a broader mind than to give way to impulses of that kind generally. But he seems to be unable to control his violent antipathy to Mackenzie & Mann. Granted that this enterprise of the Rainy River Railway is a worthy and meritorious enterprise, grant that it is an enterprise that ought to be liberally aided from the exchequer of the Dominion, grant that that ought to be done at once—yet the moment the hon. gentleman hears that Mackenzie & Mann may take up the enterprise, he will oppose it—throw aside all questions of benefit to the country, but oppose it simply because Mackenzie & Mann are connected with it. Now, it strikes me that the hon. gentleman has destroyed the value of his criticism of these proposals by the way in which he has approached them. If the Rainy River enterprise commends itself to the favourable opinion of the country, I take it, that it is a matter of perfect unconcern to us whether Mackenzie & Mann are willing to put their money in it and give the country the benefit of their enterprise or not. Instead of condemning such men, I should think the hon. gentleman would be the first to lend them a helping hand in taking hold of such an enterprise as this. We have not too many men like Mackenzie & Mann in this country. Have they done anything unworthy? Can any gentleman say that they have been guilty of any transactions in connection with Government, or in any public matter, which disqualifies them from being dealt with or recognized by the Government? I am not aware of it. When we desire to see an important railway enterprise carried on, can we pick men up on every blueberry bush and set them to work? I doubt if we can. Mackenzie & Mann, therefore, I say ought not to be used by the hon. gentleman as a bugbear. It is beneath him. I am sorry he is not here in order that he may hear me frankly express the impression which this matter has left upon my mind.

Mr. BLAIR.

Now, coming to my hon. friend from the city of Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Prior), he has, I regret to say, exhibited what I do not think any other gentleman who has taken part in this discussion has exhibited, that is to say, a spirit of sectionalism in the discussion of these propositions.

Mr. PRIOR. No other hon. gentleman in this House has any occasion to be sectional, because British Columbia is the one province that has been left out altogether. As soon as ever a British Columbia member gets up and says anything for his province, he is always told he is sectional.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The very fact that the hon. gentleman pleads that excuse is the best evidence that can be afforded of the truth of the charge I make. I say the member for Victoria has not any ground upon which to charge this Government, or even this Parliament, with sectionalism. I do not think he can point to any disposition evidenced at all by this Government since it has been dealing with public affairs, in which we have evinced any unwillingness to treat every part of this Dominion in the same fair, just and reasonable manner. My hon. friend comes from a province which, he says, has received no consideration in these subsidies, when the very last time the Government had railway propositions to submit to Parliament they gave in effect $3,000,000 to help a railway enterprise, exclusively or largely for the benefit of the province of British Columbia. Does my hon. friend think it a reasonable proposition to submit to this House that every time the Government asks for aid to an enterprise, it must needs dole out money in equal proportions to every province of the Dominion, irrespective of whether they have any particular work or undertaking which has a claim in itself, because of its own intrinsic merits, upon the bounty of the Dominion? I take it my hon. friend is giving away entirely to a local sentiment which is not worthy of him, which is not justified, and which, when you have regard to the treatment that province has already received up to this time, has no foundation in fact. I would have judged—and I will not say it in any unfriendly disposition to my hon. friend—I would have judged from what occurred in this House no later than last year, that he considered he had railways enough in the province of British Columbia, for if my memory serves me right, while my hon. friend was opposed to allowing a company which was incorporated for the purpose and was ready to prosecute and push forward the enterprise of building the Kettle River Railway in that province—

Mr. PRIOR. Does the hon. gentleman say I was opposed to that?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think so.

Mr. PRIOR. The hon. gentleman better be careful before he makes a statement like that I would like him to show one single word I spoke in opposition.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I take it the hon. gentleman was opposed to it, or else he would not have paired with a gentleman who was in favour of it. Did not the hon. gentleman pair as against the Kettle River project?

Mr. PRIOR. No, I did not pair for it, or against it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Well, I accept unqualifiedly the hon. gentleman's statement, if he says that he did not pair on the vote on the Kettle River Railway against the incorporation of the company for the construction of that road.

Mr. PRIOR. I want to say that I never paired to miss any vote since I have been in the House.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Well, was the hon. gentleman paired on that vote? Is he certain that he was not?

Mr. PRIOR. I do not think I was in Ottawa.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman is not certain of it, he is not sure that he did not pair on that vote. Well, if he did pair on that vote against the Kettle River charter, I am sure I am warranted in assuming and drawing the inference I did that he was then, at all events, of opinion that the province of British Columbia had railways enough and did not want any more.

Mr. PRIOR. That is no argument.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If my hon. friend, in point of fact, did not pair and did not take any action one way or the other against it, of course I withdraw the statement I made, which was entirely founded on the assumption that he did oppose the charter to the Kettle River Railway. Now, the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals has undertaken to throw some light on this question, and I think, from the expression I noticed on his face, that he felt very comfortable in the belief that he had put the Premier in a very false position, and he seemed to have demonstrated to his own satisfaction that the Premier had made statements with reference to the amount that was given by way of subsidies in aid of railways which were not accurate, and which, according to his description of what was done in 1884, was much less than the amount stated. Now, there is no doubt of what the hon. gentleman's view is, it is a very fair view. He is in favour of bonusing railways liberally, he is consistent with his own past, he has not stultified himself, as a good many of his friends have done on the other side of the House, in this debate. He states his position frankly, and I accord him credit for it. Well, he has told us that it is an entirely fair thing to do to take the amount of the subsidies which are being voted in 1899 and in adding these up to reach the total of the expenditures of this year made by this Government. But while he thinks that it is fair to add the gross amount of railway subsidies as a part of the expenditure of this year—

Mr. HAGGART. Did I say a word about expenditure?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman surely must have done so. Did not the hon. gentleman speak about the enormous, the extravagant sums that we are spending this year on subsidies? If he did not, I will take it all back.

Mr. FOSTER. He certainly could not, because you have not expended a cent.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, but he was referring to these subsidies, and I think I heard the hon. gentleman enlarge upon the magnificence, upon the immensity, upon the enormity, and upon the extravagance of the proposals now before this committee.

Mr. HAGGART. Not a word.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Then I am entirely in error, and not only did I fail to hear him correctly, but I heard him absolutely wrongly. But the hon. gentleman certainly cannot deny that he pointed out that the expenditure of the late Government was only so much, covering a long period of years, and that the average was a very much smaller sum than we are proposing to spend this year. Now, I suggested to the committee this afternoon that it did not follow that because these votes were passed the expenditures would take place, and thereupon my hon. friend from York (Mr. Foster) seized upon the statement I made, and founded upon it an argument that I was really coming to this House and making proposals without knowing what I was doing without having investigated the question, without having convinced myself that these works were likely to go on, and that, therefore, it was evidence of incapacity on my part in putting such proposals before the House.

Now, my hon. friend made a point, as he thought, against us when he charged that there was evidence of incompetency on the part of this Government, but, if so, there was equally strong and convincing evidence of the same measure of incompetence on the part of the past Administration during all these years. Does the hon. gentleman deny that there were, year after year, voted large sums by the Government of that day in aid of railways which were not called for? Why? Because the expectations of the promoters of these undertakings, and I will take it, the hopes of the Government, in offering these aids, were not realized, so that if it be true that some of the proposals which we are now laying before Parliament, be evidence of incompetency on the part of this Government, if it be evidence that we have been derelict in not having sufficiently searched the matter and in not having investigated and got at the facts in regard to all these undertakings, as proved by my admission that some of the subsidies would not be taken up. It is equally convincing evidence that the same inability to judge and the same incompetency existed in past years. But let me return to the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals. He has, as I have said, satisfied himself that the right hon. Prime Minister had made a statement which cannot be verified and which, when you look at it, is not borne out by the facts. What was that statement, and I will call the attention of the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals to it particularly because it is evident that it has escaped his notice. The right hon. Prime Minister stated, in answer to a statement which was made by the hon. ex-Minister of Finance to the effect that this series of resolutions called for a larger sum in subsidies than had ever been presented to Parliament before, that that was not a fact, that while there are new votes and revotes in the proposals now before the committee aggregating $6,500,000, the Government of which the hon. ex-Minister of Finance was not then a member, but of which he was a supporter in Parliament, in 1884, had introduced proposals, in which they asked for upwards of $9,163,000 for similar purposes.

Mr. FOSTER. Not at all.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They did not do it?

Mr. FOSTER. Not for similar purposes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I affirm and reaffirm the correctness of the statement the right hon. Prime Minister made, that there were subsidies and votes passed through Parliament for $9,163,000, for similar purposes.

Mr. BLAIR.

Mr. FOSTER. In this $6,500,000 that we are asked to vote now, is there a single dollar for the extension of a branch of the Intercolonial Railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, nor was there then.

Mr. FOSTER. Just wait a moment—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) will calmly keep his seat, I will be able to make my statement from my own point of view, and whether it is right or not or whether it is wrong, will appear clearly when what I have read is read. What I have been saying is that when the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals challenged the correctness of the statement of the right hon. Prime Minister when he said that it was not correct for the hon. ex-Minister of Finance to allege that these proposals were higher than had ever been made to Parliament before. The hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals said that it was not correct on the part of the right hon. Prime Minister, to say that, in 1884, the proposals, which he justified and approved, and which were made by the Government which he supported, were over $9,000,000, and that they were made for practically and identically the same purposes.

Mr. HAGGART. No.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would ask the hon. gentleman not to interrupt me. The hon. gentleman says: No, these were not subsidies. I will clear up that point. I presume that we can accept the statutes; we can surely accept a parliamentary declaration on the subject, and the parliamentary declaration is that they were subsidies. Let us go through the items, every one of them. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) is labouring under a delusion if he says that the Government built the Cape Breton Railway as a Government work. Not a dollar of these subsidies went for that purpose. The Cape Breton Railway did not become the property of the Dominion until many years had elapsed after this grant was made. It did not become the property of the Dominion until 1891.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think they took authority in 1887 or 1888 to build.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. But it is 1884 that we are speaking of, and it was in 1884 that the Prime Minister alleged that these votes had been passed, amounting not to $6,500,000, but to $9,500,000, or 50 per cent more than the proposed appropriations which have caused so much fear and anxiety and alarm to hon. gentlemen opposite. Let us go through these items. The first one is: "To the Government of the province of Quebec."

My hon. friend will say that this was a gift to the government of the province. It is a subsidy all the same, and the Act says "a subsidy."

Mr. HAGGART. Was not the road built and running then?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That does not make a particle of difference and this is only worse than the hon. gentleman's explanation in regard to the Cape Breton road, because the Cape Breton Railway later on became the property of the Dominion. What difference is it whether you are giving a grant in aid to the Government or to the railway company? You are giving a grant which was to aid the property, not of the Government, but the property of another railway company:

To the Government of the province of Quebec, in consideration of their having constructed the railway from Quebec to Ottawa, forming a connecting line between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, via the Intercolonial and Canadian Pacific railways, and being, as such, a work of national and not merely provincial utility, a subsidy—"A subsidy," not "a subsidy," says the hon. gentleman.

—a subsidy not exceeding $6,000 per mile for the portion between Quebec and Montreal, 159 miles, not exceeding in the whole $954,000,—

What is the next item?

—and for the portion between Montreal and Ottawa, 120 miles, $12,000 per mile, not exceeding in the whole $1,440,000.

Now we come to the line crossing the state of Maine and forming a part of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. Does the hon. gentleman, in his kindness of heart towards the Canadian Pacific Railway, think that a grant or subsidy should be made to the Canadian Pacific Railway because it is the Canadian Pacific Railway, and that it should not be calculated or taken into account and should be stricken out of the $9,000,000?

For the construction of a line of railway connecting Montreal with the harbours of St. John and Halifax by the shortest and best practical route, after a report of competent engineers, a subsidy not exceeding $170,000 per annum for fifteen years.

Subsidy again; no question about "a subsidy." Now, then we will come to the question about the Cape Breton Railway? What does the statute say in regard to that?

For the construction of a line of railway from Oxford Station on the Intercolonial Railway to Sydney or Louisbourg, a subsidy not exceeding $30,000 per annum for fifteen years, or a guarantee of a like sum for a like period as interest on the bonds of the company undertaking the work, in addition to the subsidies previously granted.

Is not that encouragement on the part of the Government of Canada to pay $30,000 for fifteen years for a line of railway from Oxford to Sydney or Louisbourg? We are dealing with the proposals that were laid before Parliament in 1884, and we are making comparisons between that year and the present year, and in making that comparison, I say that the statement that my right hon. friend the Prime Minister has made has been completely and absolutely established.

Mr. FOSTER. But you have not read them all.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If you want me—

Mr. FOSTER. Read the last two.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. (reading):

For a branch of the Intercolonial Railway from Metapedia eastward towards Paspébiac, 20 miles, in the province of Quebec, a sum not exceeding in the whole $300,000.

For a branch of the Intercolonial Railway from Darby Station to Indiantown, 14 miles, a sum not exceeding in the whole $140,000.

These are the two items out of all.

Mr. FOSTER. You said there were none.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Then, I was in error.

Mr. FOSTER. I might save the time of the House; if the Minister of Railways and the Prime Minister want to prove that there was a year when a larger amount of money was voted for railway purposes than this year they need only go back to 1880—the Canadian Pacific Railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think the hon. gentleman's argument can be as effectively demolished by the votes in 1884 as by reference to other years. I addressed myself particularly to the question that both the ex-Minister of Finance and the ex-Minister of Railways dealt in the first place with the grant to the province of Quebec, which they allege was not a subsidy, and a vote in aid of the Cape Breton Railway. My hon. friend has complained, as some others have complained, that the Government has been very derelict in not bringing down those railway resolutions earlier in the session. I have no doubt that my hon. friend has heard that complaint before, and if it is true that that complaint has been made on the same side of the House from those who are now supporting this Government, he has succeeded in establishing that the party then in Opposition and now in power were putting forward an unreasonable demand. He has succeeded in establishing that they were not consistent in the strict sense of the word with their present attitude. But of what practical value is that?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are here for practical purposes, for the purpose of governing the country, and because some of us, when in Opposition, not having had experience—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. When my hon. friends cease their hilarity—

Mr. FOSTER. One cannot help it, when the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) is said to be inexperienced.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend must admit that when the Minister of Trade and Commerce was in the Government the era of subsidies had not dawned upon us, and he, therefore, could not speak with the knowledge and experience of hon. gentlemen opposite. They know from personal experience that it is impossible for a Government to properly mature its proposals and lay them before Parliament until all the members of Parliament have been here for some time. My hon. friends have had this experience in the past. They have invariably been compelled to delay these resolutions, and I will assume that they did so under compulsion. Did they do it with any improper intent or for the purpose of accomplishing any improper end? I am willing to acquit them of any such intent. They must admit that they were constrained by force of circumstances to delay the presentation of their railway proposals. I think that is a fair and complete answer to what the hon. gentleman has alleged against us. Possibly some of us may be guilty of inconsistency, but we are guilty of no greater crime.

Mr. BERGERON. Will the hon. Minister say why he has doubled the subsidies from $3,200 to $6,400?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will tell my hon. friend why the proposals have come into Parliament in this form as in 1897. My hon. friend will recall the fact that there were railways, not one or two, but many which were at the instance of the late Government aided to the extent of sums varying from the ordinary $3,200 subsidy up to $5,000; $6,400; $8,000; $10,000 and $12,000. No scale, no rule, no regulation guiding the action of the Government in making these proposals, but just as the exigencies of the moment might have urged them. Will my hon. friend from Beauharnois say that that was a wise course to take or that it would not be better to devise some general rule which you can apply to all the applicants coming to Parliament for railway aid. Instead of picking out one road because there happened to be more political influence behind it and giving it a large, generous subsidy of $12,000 a mile, we have said to all, with the single exception of the Rainy River road—that is an exception, I admit, but it seems to be an exception which is approved on all hands—bring yourselves within this general rule and you will be entitled to additional assistance. The ex-Minister of Finance, who, it will be remembered, urged us most strongly to give a subsidy of $6,400 to the Rainy River road, is prepared to justify that grant to-day. But what we have felt was, that instead of treating those individual subsidies and individual undertakings in a special way, because they had some more pull than other undertakings in some remote part of the country, instead of treating such in an exceptional manner, we concluded that it would be juster all round to lay down a rule which could be made of general application. Perhaps we may not have hit the happy medium in respect to the limit under which the cost of the railway will not entitle the company to any larger subsidy than the $3,200; but we have made the best attempt in that direction which is in our power, and we are in a position to say to all applicants, whether they come from British Columbia on the one hand, or from Nova Scotia on the other: We have laid down a general rule; bring yourselves within the purview and operation of that rule, and your company, though it has not any big political backing, will be entitled to reap the benefit by reason of the increased cost of the road. That is the principle on which we have proceeded, and I venture to say, apart from a disposition that may be found among hon. gentlemen opposite to make a little political capital out of our course, that any one who applies a fair judgment to the matter, will say that it was wise and just to make such a rule to be applied all round.

Now, I was led to ask the permission of the committee to address it at this stage because our friends the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) and the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver), the one had moved, and the other had seconded, an amendment to the Government proposal. That amendment, I may say at once, does not strike me as one which can be, or ought to be, accepted. I will not say that the object which these hon. gentlemen have in view may not be a desirable object to attain. In some respects I think it has much to commend it; but, as a whole, I am bound to say—and I think I am voicing the general sentiment of this Parliament—that the proposal has not sufficient merit to justify its acceptance at this time. I was unable to gather from the speech which the hon. member for Lisgar addressed to the committee this afternoon, what his general attitude towards the railway question is. I fully realize that this question in this country, as in almost all other countries, is one about which there is an immense divergence of opinion. It is a question that raises complicated and difficult problems about which men differ in all directions. My hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean) has most advanced views on the question. He would nationalize all railways. Has my hon. friend sat down and considered what that proposal means? I understand from his statement in this House that if he had the power, he would give effect to that policy, and nationalize all the railways of this Dominion. I do not think the hon. gentleman has thought that question out. What does it mean? Why, it means incurring an enormous additional debt to that which Canada is at present carrying. Perhaps a hundred millions might do it. I doubt very much whether it would on reflection. I am sure it would not. A hundred millions would not buy the Grand Trunk Railway and nationalize it; two hundred millions would not perhaps nationalize the Grand Trunk Railway system. Then, how much is he going to ask the people to go into debt for to nationalize the Canadian Pacific? Is not it a mere dream, an absolute delusion, to talk about such a thing? And yet the hon. gentleman would set his face against every proposal to offer the slightest aid or encouragement to railways in this country out of the Dominion exchequer until the people of Canada had determined to nationalize all the railways of the country. Perhaps five hundred millions would do it, or possibly less. It might, perhaps, be done for four hundred and fifty millions.

Mr. CAMPBELL. A thousand millions.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. A thousand millions, my hon. friend says. I have never sat down to think it out.

Mr. FOSTER. Has your hon. friend sat down to think it out?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It never became a subject of discussion in this House until the hon. member for Lisgar made his proposition to-day.

Mr. RICHARDSON. My proposition was, that until we reached the point when it was thought desirable for the country to acquire the railways, we should adopt the principle that all railways to be built should be built and controlled by the Government.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not understand that the hon. gentleman was prepared to give the railways any encouragement, unless we were prepared to take them over. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that it was a plank in the platform of the Conservative party in Manitoba that the Government should own all the railways. Well, that is a stupendous question, a question of enormous magnitude. It is a question which makes a man dizzy, when he thinks about it. I am sure that my hon. friend for East York has not thought about it. I doubt whether my hon. friend from Lisgar has given it very serious consideration. If he had, and if he had plainly seen his way to raising this extra five hundred millions, or, as my hon. friend says, a thousand millions, of money in order to buy these railways and own them, he has not advanced very much towards convincing the people of the country that that would be a wise undertaking. Unless my hon. friends will get down from that high altitude on which they are standing, and deal with practical questions in a practical way, neither of them will succeed in accomplishing very much in the way of affording relief to the people of this country from the burdens under which, from a railway point of view, they are at this moment labouring.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the hon. Minister will give me an hour or two, I think I would be able to convince him, from the statistics I have in my desk, that the nationalizing of the railways would be a very good thing.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Possibly the hon. gentleman has studied the question and satisfied himself; but, after satisfying himself, he has a considerable contract on his hands, in my judgment, to satisfy any considerable number of other people; and he has a still greater contract to satisfy a sufficient portion of the people of this country to induce them, and to induce Parliament to commit the country to his proposition. I have no doubt that there may be circumstances and conditions under which it might be desirable that the Government should own some particular railway. I have more or less sympathy with the hon. gentleman, if he would put his ideas in a practical form—if, instead of spreading himself over this whole wide Dominion, and saying we ought to own all the railways, he were to say that we should own some particular railway under particular circumstances.

Mr. FOSTER. The Crow's Nest Pass, for instance.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, the Crow's Nest Pass. I can understand that it might be a very reasonable proposition that the Government should own that railway. I could sympathize with a suggestion of that kind, but the hon. gentleman is not making a suggestion of that kind, and I was unable, after listening to his argument as closely as I could, to see how he got down from this height at which he started to the proposition embodied in this amendment, and which he prefers to the Government proposal. This leads me to examine for a moment these proposals in some detail. The amendment is as follows:—

That during the construction of all railways herein bonused, all books, accounts and records showing the actual cost of construction shall be open to inspection by the Government, in order that if it be subsequently determined by the Government to acquire any or all of the railways subsidized, they may be so acquired with a knowledge of their actual cost and at figures from which shall be deducted the bonuses given by the Government.

That is the first proposition my hon. friend makes in amendment to the first resolution. As to that I would say, and in this I am expressing the view of the Government, that there would be no objection to adding to these resolutions a distinct one to the effect that the books, accounts and vouchers, showing what the cost of any railway that was aided from the Dominion exchequer has been, showing what its earnings and its expenses are, should be available to the Government, at any time, on request. There could be no harm, and there might be some advantage, in having it expressly laid down in statutory form that the Government should possess such power. If my hon. friend attaches any value to that part of his proposition, I would go with him to make it part of the proposal now before Parliament. There would be no particular objection to such a clause being put in, because it would only apply, as now suggested, to railways which have been bonused by the Government. If that were a desirable thing to do, I think some little improvement might be made in the phraseology, so as to really give effect to the object the hon. gentleman has in view.

But as to the concluding portion of the clause, it is open to the very gravest objection. I think it would not be well that we should declare that the Government ought to have the power to take any railway out of the hands of the railway company at its cost. I do not think it is a reasonable proposition. The adoption of any such clause would be to defeat the very object we have in view in giving these aids to the several railway companies. We would be giving with the one hand and withdrawing with the other. It would be fatal to the successful financing of any of these companies, and would therefore practically defeat the objects we have in view. For that reason the concluding portion of the first clause of the amendment does not strike us favourably, and I would ask him to withdraw that clause and accept one which I will offer in a moment, which, I think, will secure the information he desires, and which as he suggests it would be important for us to have.

Mr. FOSTER. To what end?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. To this end. I am free to confess that the proposal somewhat favourably impresses itself on my mind, because if you have accurate knowledge, upon which you can depend, of the actual cost of the railway, its earnings, the cost of operating it, you will be in a better position to judge as to whether the rates which are being imposed are reasonable or excessive. No person would be unwilling to allow any one who goes into an enterprise of that kind, surrounded with uncertainties as it always is to the final result, to secure a fair and reasonable return on his investment. I think Parliament would be willing that the people concerned in the promoting or carrying on of railway enterprises should have reasonable return for the investment they make, and you can only judge as to whether or not that result is being attained when you are accurately advised as to what the railway undertaking cost, on the one hand, and what its earnings and the cost of operating are, on the other.

Mr. BLAIR.

There is another clause which the hon. gentleman has in his proposed amendment, and which, with the permission of the committee, I will read :

That the rates, both passenger and freight, shall, at all times, be subject to revision and control by the Governor in Council.

The hon. gentleman need not have put that in his amendment because that is here already. It is here in the strongest possible terms, terms as strong as those in the hon. gentleman's amendment. He must have overlooked that fact when he drafted this amendment. He is apparently disposed even to qualify that portion of the clause as he has it. He gives up to the Government the power to revise and control the rates, both passenger and freight, but subject to this provision :

Provided that whenever such rates produce a net earning of more than 6 per cent on the actual cost of the road and equipment, less the amount of subsidies received from any source, the rates shall be reduced to such a point as shall only produce 6 per cent.

That is an impracticable suggestion. Having due regard to the public interest, it is not a reasonable suggestion to make. I do not think Parliament ought to say to any man or body of men who are being invited to invest their moneys in such uncertain enterprises as the building and operating of railways, that the utmost limit of their earnings shall be 6 per cent. They may have to operate that railway for years at a loss. They may, perhaps, have to pay out of their own pocket, for a considerable period, a portion of the cost of operating it, but the very moment they succeed in obtaining good results, the moment their business becomes successful, and they are able to earn 6 per cent, that moment you will place a limit on them and say that their rate must be cut down so as to confine them to a 6 per cent dividend. That proposition would be fatal to the financing and the floating of any railway enterprise, and my hon. friend would only be accomplishing, in an indirect manner, what I know some desire to accomplish in a direct manner, that is totally defeat the construction of railways altogether under this Bill. That is not the object of the Government. While the disposition of the Government in respect of the railways of Canada now in operation and the railways which are being promoted and are in contemplation, is to safeguard the public interest to the fullest degree, we must be practical, we must be reasonable, we must deal with them in a spirit of fairness, we must deal with them in such a way that they may succeed in establishing themselves as we desire to see them do, and we must treat them in a business and enlightened way—and I think we should fail to do that if we adopted either as proposed. Now, I intend to bring my remarks to an end. No doubt my friends opposite will be delighted to hear that.

Mr. BERGERON. We have not been accustomed to this kind of talk from the hon. gentlemen opposite when they were on this side. We like this.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am glad I am able to please the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron). I succeeded in doing so once before. I must be particularly happy in that regard. I ask the House to dispose of the amendments in accordance with the views I have expressed. I have here an additional section which I shall propose at a later time, and I read it now that hon. gentlemen may see that whatever merit there is in it is fully and adequately—

Mr. FOSTER. This is the axe to behead Mr. Richardson.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Richardson) is beheaded, he has beheaded himself. I do not know whether my hon. friend (Mr. Richardson) will support this and withdraw his own or not. I am not going to press him to do so :

That, as respects all railways receiving subsidies under the foregoing provisions, the company at any time owning or operating any of the said railways shall, if and when required, produce and exhibit to the Minister of Railways and Canals, or any person appointed by him, all books, accounts and vouchers showing the cost of constructing the railway, the cost of operating the same and the earnings thereof.

Mr. HAGGART. Have you not that power already ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think not. I am glad to see the impatience of hon. gentlemen opposite. It affords me some hopeful indication that they will assist us in the early disposal of the question now before the committee.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh. oh.

Mr. DAVIN. What is it ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) is in order.

Mr. DAVIN. I desire to understand the amendment.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will send it over. I am not now moving it.

Mr. DAVIN. Quite so. I understand it is a suggestion to the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson).

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am suggesting it, and I will move it.

Mr. FOSTER. Will not the hon. Minister change his mind ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Perhaps I might.

Mr. FOSTER. It surely cannot be another Kettle River question ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not change my mind on that. I wonder if the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) did.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). It is clear from the amendment suggested by the Minister of Railways and Canals that the North-west Territories and Manitoba need expect none of the railway relief that they might fairly have hoped to get from a Government formed by Liberal leaders who had held out to the people such glowing prospects in regard to railway legislation, should they get the reins of power. After the very long speech we have had from the Minister of Railways and Canals, I am not going to take up the time of the committee. I am deeply impressed with the views that were expressed in 1894 by the present Prime Minister and the present Minister of Trade and Commerce as to the utter futility, at this time of the session, of asking men to consider such vast propositions as are found in these railway resolutions. Mr. Chairman, with a majority such as we have to face and in the dog-days, there is nothing for us to do but submit—and protest. I have more than once appealed to the Liberals in this House and out of the House in respect of the treason to Liberal principle that we have witnessed from time to time, and never more strikingly or more glaringly than at this hour in this Parliament. I had to allude to-day to a letter written to the "Farmers' Sun" in 1894, by the present Minister of Trade and Commerce. I have the same paper in my hand to-day. It is now edited by a gentleman who is certainly a friend of the Premier, and certainly an enemy of the leader of the Opposition, and, I think, very unfriendly to the Opposition altogether. I have an article here in which he denounces the Opposition. But I have also an article in the issue of August 2nd. And how is it headed ? It is headed "The Liberal Apostasy." And apropos of what is it so headed ? Apropos of the very resolutions we have now to consider, and in regard to which, when my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) moves a resolution pointing in the direction of relief for the travelling public, and my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) seconds it, the Minister of Trade and Commerce comes forward with a suggestive amendment which is nothing better than a mere futility. This is what the "Weekly Sun" says :

The original Estimates for the current financial year brought down by Mr. Fielding amounted to $46,286,550. The supplementary Estimates brought the total amount asked for by the Government up to $51,783,895. This was an enormous amount to spend, but the end was not to be yet, and last Friday morning honest citizens were startled to learn that the night before the Government had brought down a resolution donating $6,540,295—

The Minister of Railways and Canals will observe that this friendly writer speaks of this money as donated. But hon. gentlemen opposite speak of it as an advance ; "convey the wise it call" :—

—to a crowd of railway promoters and bridge-builders. The appropriations asked for were thus increased to $58,324,190.

This does not include the $1,400,000 appropriated by a special Act for the purchase of the Drummond County Railroad, nor does it include our share of the cost of constructing the Pacific cable, which, at the lowest estimate, will be $2,360,000, and is likely to be far greater. If we add these sums to the general appropriations, we shall find that the total amount the Government proposes to spend is $62,084,190. This is $12 for every individual in Canada and $60 for each family.

$62,000,000. Take the value of an ordinary farm.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Does the hon. gentleman endorse those statements ?

Mr. DAVIN. I am glad to see my hon. friend the Postmaster General there, because this is a paper that he used to own, or at all events pulled full stroke oar in, and partly by means of which the Liberal victory was won.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Does the hon. gentleman endorse those figures ?

Mr. DAVIN. I am reading for the edification of my hon. friend—

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Does the hon. gentleman endorse them ?

Mr. DAVIN. He has on his left the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), who declared at Brandon that the cost of carrying freight from Chicago to Boston was 10 per cent less than the cost of carrying freight from Winnipeg to the seaboard ; and he said it was a thing we must deal with. Has he dealt with it ? Does the Minister of Railways and Canals attempt to deal with it ? The Minister of the Interior comes from the west, he comes from the land whence he ought to get a certain amount of reforming vigour. But although he makes this statement, we do not find him implementing it :

Mr. DAVIN.

This is $12 for every individual in Canada, and $60 for each family.

When the Postmaster General interrupted me I was about to put it in this way, in order that the farmers may realize it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Does the hon. gentleman say these figures are correct ?

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend can reply to me. Take the average value of a farm and divide this $62,000,000 by the average value of the farm, and you have the number of farms that these men are spending every year. Fifteen thousand five hundred and fifty farms a year.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Now the hon. gentleman is endorsing these figures, if he makes that statement.

Mr. DAVIN. Yes, I say that these railway subsidies now have practically brought up the expenditure to over $60,000,000.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Does the hon. gentleman say that this $62,000,000 that he has pictured there is going to be expended during the present fiscal year ?

Mr. DAVIN. Of course, it is possible that some few thousands may not be expended. But will the hon. gentleman say that $56,000,000 will not be expended ? $56,000,000 is very different from $33,000,000 in regard to which the right hon. gentleman declared up in Toronto that they could reduce it, perhaps not by $5,000,000, but by probably $3,000,000.

The donations are given, not in response to public demand, but private pressure. They are brought down in the dying hours of the session, when members are anxious to get away, and when there is not time for public discussion. They are given to promoters of roads in old-settled sections of the Dominion as well to promoters of roads in comparatively new territory. In Ontario the donations are made to roads to which the Ontario Government has already given millions of money, and in respect of which the people of this province will now have to pay a double tax. As if enough had not been done for the railroads, they are given a million and a quarter of dollars to build bridges for their lines.

It is not easy to discuss the granting of all this money with calmness.

And he goes on to denounce in his own eloquent way these proposals, because he is one of the ablest men in Canada, and is a friend of this Government. Well, there is another article on the same subject in this paper to which my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce wrote that letter in which he stated that they were on the same platform as the Patrons. Here is an article headed, "A Gross of Green Spectacles" :

We are asked to approve the voting of $6,540,295 to the various railroad promoters because one of the conditions of the grants is that the railroad companies shall, when required, carry members of the militia and their supplies, and the Government mails, and that, in whole or partial payment for these services, the Government shall be entitled to charge up against the railroad companies 3 per cent per annum on the amount of subsidy voted for the line. This is something, no doubt, but it will not bring us back one cent of the principal.

This writer does not see how utterly futile it is, but the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals has shown what is its value, and his argument on that 3 per cent is irrefragable. You have only to look at what has been earned by the railway going from Calgary to Edmonton to know that it is a piece of dust-throwing in the eyes of the people.

It will do little, if anything, to reduce the amount we now pay existing lines for the carriage of militia and mails.

The "bargain," as the Government terms it, with the railroad promoters bears a striking resemblance to a bargain made some time in the last century by one Moses, the son of the Vicar of Wakefield.

Now, I am going to respect the anonymity of this writer. My hon. friend the member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson), in quoting from this great writer in the "Tribune," gives his name. It would therefore, perhaps, be permissible to give his name, but I will not do that. I will not break the seal of anonymity. We can recognize the hand of a great master of expression, and also the allusiveness of the great writer:—

Moses, Oliver Goldsmith tells us, was deputed to sell a colt at a neighbouring fair, and, with the proceeds, to buy a suitable horse for the vicar and his family. Like Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Moses was one of whom his friends entertained high expectations. So striking is the resemblance, not only between the two bargains, but between the kind of company into which both Moses and Sir Wilfrid Laurier came to grief, that we give the account of the experiences of Moses in the vicar's own words. After telling how the fond mother was predicting with confidence the success of her son at the fair, he continues:

Now, that is the view of the organ of the farmers in Ontario; that is the view also of a most able critic, of a man who can look on all questions of the time, not merely with vast literary knowledge, but with great experience, great achievements in historical investigation, and also a man who is a profound student of political economy.

"As she spoke Moses came slowly on foot and sweating under a deal box, which he had strapped round his shoulders, like a pedlar. "Welcome, welcome, Moses. Well, my boy, what have you brought us from the fair?" "I have brought you myself," cried Moses, with a sly look, and resting the box on the dresser. "Ah, Moses," cried my wife, "that we know, but where is the horse?" "I have sold him," cried Moses, "for three pounds five shillings and twopence." "Well done, my good boy," returned she, "I knew you would touch them off. Between ourselves, three pound five shillings and two pence is no bad day's work. Come, let us have it, then." "I have brought back no money," cried Moses, again; "I have laid it all out in a bargain, and here it is." pulling out a bundle from his breast; "here they are: a gross of green spectacles, with silver rims and shagreen cases.' 'A gross of green spectacles,' repeated my wife, in a faint voice. 'And you have parted with the colt and brought us back nothing but a gross of green paltry spectacles.' 'Dear mother,' cried the boy, 'why won't you listen to reason? I had them a dead bargain, or I should not have bought them. The silver rims alone will sell alone for double the money.' 'A fig for the silver rims,' cried my wife, in a passion, 'I dare swear they won't sell for above half the money at the rate of broken silver, five shillings an ounce.' 'You need be under no uneasiness,' cried I, 'about selling the rims, for they are not worth sixpence, for I perceive they are only copper varnished over.' 'What,' cried my wife, 'not silver; the rims not silver?' 'No,' cried I, 'no more silver than your saucepan.' 'And so,' returned she, 'we have parted with the colt, and have only got a gross of green spectacles, with copper rims and shagreen cases; a murrain take such trumpery. The blockhead has been imposed upon, and should have known his company better.' 'There, my dear, cried I, 'you are wrong; he should not have known them at all.' * * * By this time the unfortunate Moses was undeceived. He now saw that he had indeed been imposed upon by a prowling sharper, who, observing his figure, had marked him for an easy prey."

Sir Wilfrid Laurier has got us something for our money, and Moses got something for the colt.

Now, I have taken the liberty—and I do not think that anybody, no matter how eminent he might be, can object to it—of comparing the right hon. Prime Minister to Faust, to the hero of that great German drama. At a previous session I compared him to a prince of the blood, Clarence, who appears in one of Shakespeare's plays. His friend, who regards the Opposition with great scorn, and always speaks well of the Premier, here compares him to Moses, in "The Vicar of Wakefield." Why? Because he has allowed himself to be a party to bringing down these enormous railway subsidies, contrary, as I have shown already in this committee to-day, to the professed principles of the Liberal party, contrary to the promises and pledges held out in the pamphlet sent broadcast throughout the country, on which, I suppose, some hon. gentlemen opposite founded their speeches in 1896, sent from the office of Mr. Smith; contrary to the declared views of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright). Is it not an astonishing thing that a great writer, speaking for the farmers, has been led to compare the right hon. gentleman to Moses, in "The Vicar of Wakefield," who takes away a horse and brings back a gross of green spectacles with silver rims, which turn out to be copper, varnished or gilt? I was very sorry, I confess, to hear it intimated by the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) that he would oppose the motion of the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson), because I had gathered from his professions in previous sessions that he was devoted to any action that would give railway relief to the people of the North-west, and especially to the people of the Saskatchewan. I must say that I do not think we have had any help from him this session in doing anything for the railway needs of the North-west Territories, or the railway needs of the Saskatchewan. Mr. Chairman, so far as I can, after a hurried reading of the amendment suggested by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, form any opinion, I do not think it would throw any glamour over such of these items as are monstrous proposals of extravagant bonuses for railways in long-settled districts.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I would like very much to agree to the withdrawal of the amendment in favour of the suggestion of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, but I cannot see that his suggestion covers the point at which the amendment aims. I do not propose to suggest to the committee, as the seconder of the amendment, or to suggest to the Government, that the mover and myself have by any means found a solution of the railway problem. We have merely put into a form of words a suggestion as to the difficulty in which we find ourselves in regard to railways at the present time, and the possibility of relief from that condition. The condition in which we find ourselves is, that we are tied up in regard to rates, because our railways are overloaded with stock and bonds. We are prepared to pay rates on whatever a railway actually costs. To do that will not make our rates excessive. What makes our rates excessive is, that we have to pay interest on money far beyond what the roads cost. The amendment is to cut off from the railways of the future the necessity of paying interest on more than the actual cost of the roads. That is the purpose, although it may be imperfectly framed. It may not be effective, but that is the idea in the advocacy of that principle.

Amendment (Mr. Richardson) negatived: Yeas, 13; Nays, 81.

To the Great Northern Railway Company, for a railway between Montcalm and St. Tite Junction, on the Lower Laurentian Railway, Quebec, not exceeding 53½ miles; and for a branch from their main line to Shawenegan Falls, Quebec, not exceeding 6½ miles. 53½ miles, revote.

Mr. FOSTER. Part of this is a new road?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Six and a half miles is new, and the rest is a revote.

Mr. WALLACE. Where does this road commence and what is the whole project?

The PRIME MINISTER. I can give the information to my hon. friend. This road is intended to strike the Parry Sound Railway at South Indian and run to the Ottawa River at Hawkesbury, from Hawkesbury to St. Jerome, from St. Jerome to Montcalm, and from Montcalm to the Lake St. John Railway, going down the Lake St. John Railway to the harbour of Quebec. It is now practically completed, and it is expected that it will be in operation next fall.

Mr. DAVIN.

Mr. WALLACE. Will this vote complete the line?

The PRIME MINISTER. The whole subsidy asked this year will complete the railway from the Ottawa River to the harbour of Quebec. This branch is a spur to the pulp mills on the St. Maurice River.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the distance?

The PRIME MINISTER. Taking the built roads, the distance from the Ottawa River to the harbour of Quebec must be in the neighbourhood of 200 miles. The whole length of the Great Northern will be in the neighbourhood of 100 miles.

Mr. HAGGART. There is a bridge across the Ottawa River, too.

The PRIME MINISTER. The bridge was subsidized two years ago.

Mr. WALLACE. This is said to be a revote. Is a revote under the conditions of $3,200 a mile, or under the new terms made by the Minister that if they give proof they can earn $6,400 a mile?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is a revote under the conditions that if the railway cost over $15,000 a mile, it will be entitled to the addition.

Mr. WALLACE. Then, it is a revote only to the extent of $3,200 a mile.

The PRIME MINISTER. Part of this subsidy, if I remember rightly was voted several times. It was a revote again in 1897. I am under the impression that a small section of the railway was subsidized by the late Government for $6,400 a mile. This is a revote, but it comes under the conditions of the general proposition which we have adopted.

Mr. HAGGART. I think the Minister had better leave out the word "revote."

The PRIME MINISTER. That is only inserted for the information of the committee. It is not a new project. It has been before Parliament several times.

Mr. FOSTER. What my hon. friend means is this. When you go back to the original Act which made the vote, it is a vote for $3,200 a mile, and when the Auditor General comes to pay the whole sum, he will pay $3,200 per mile and no more, because the sum of money is distinctly stated in the original Act.

The PRIME MINISTER. The word "revote," which is in italics, is simply a memorandum for the information of the committee, and not part of the legislation.

Mr. WALLACE. But there is no sum of money mentioned. The old vote is $3,200 a mile, while the new vote may be double that amount.

The PRIME MINISTER. There is an alteration in the conditions. The first vote was for a subsidy of $3,200 a mile without any conditions; this is for a subsidy of $3,200 a mile with conditions which may increase the amount, as stated in the resolution which we have just adopted.

To the Phillipsburg Railway and Quarry Company, shortage in the extension of their railway from a point on the company's line at or near the end of the subsidized section, to the Government Wharf at Phillipsburg, Quebec, not exceeding 66-100ths of a mile. Revote.

Mr. D. B. MEIGS (Missisquoi). Before this is carried, I would like to say a few words about the Phillipsburg Railway. It is a railway built in Missisquoi County, and it has been subsidized to the extent of $7,200 per mile—$4,000 from the government of Quebec and $3,200 from this Government. The road has been built four years, but has not been operated. In the winter season they do not pretend to run it at all, and in the summer season they run one or two trains a week. They have no time table, and they only run it for their own convenience. We have another railway in the county of Missisquoi, which is almost in the same position—the Montreal and Province Line Railway, which was built about fourteen years ago, by means of a subsidy of $4,000 a mile from the Quebec Government. They got a charter from this Parliament, but the railway has not run for fourteen years, and there is not much left of it except the rails. The Quebec legislature on the 16th of January last passed an Act to sequester all railways bonused by the Quebec Government that did not run. I understood that that was sent here to the hon. Minister of Railways. I interviewed him myself, and asked him if this Government would introduce a similar Bill to that passed in Quebec, so that the parties would be forced to run these roads and that the taxpayers would not be obliged to lose the large amount spent on these roads. That has been one of the difficulties with these roads that have been bonused in the county of Missisquoi. Since they finished the roads and got the bonus they never ran them. We have two roads in that county. I have tried to induce the hon. Minister of Railways to pass a similar Bill to that passed by the province of Quebec, and he refused. He said it was a bad Bill for the province of Quebec. I do not know why he should take the responsibility upon himself of making that statement. We have a Liberal Government in that province and a very popular Government and they passed this Bill, and these railways only interest the province of Quebec. They do not interest the Dominion. The Montreal and Province Line Railway was paid $4,000 per mile, and this Government never paid a cent nor was ever asked for a cent; and I think it is no more than fair that the provincial government should have the right to sequester their own railways and try to get back part of their money. The Montreal and Province Line Railway is 60 miles from St. Lambert to Frelighsburg, and 40 miles of that road is running from St. Lambert to Farnham. The other portion, from Farnham to Frelighsburg, has not been run for the past fourteen years, although the company received $80,000 upon that piece. The road was sold at public auction and is now owned by a man in St. Albans and run by the Grand Trunk Railway in his interest. The man is holding the road and not more than a week or two ago was offered $150,000 for it, but he is asking $200,000 for it. They refuse to put this 20 miles of railway in running order, and I think the Government ought to take some steps to force those people to run the railway and not have the country lose this large amount of money and have these railways going to ruin.

This Phillipsburg Railway is in the same position, only it received $3,200 per mile from this Government, besides a wharf built at Missisquoi Bay that cost the Government $4,000 to $5,000. Since that wharf was built, they have unloaded one load of coal upon it, and that is all the use it has been put to. The Government ought to take some steps to force these people to run that road. I take this occasion, when this item is before the House, to urge the Government to do something. The company were to have $3,200 per mile and there was some mistake in the measurement and on 66-100ths of a mile they have never yet received anything, so that I think this amount is due to the company. It seems strange that the country should lose this large amount of money and not have any railway. The people in that country are up in arms and think it is a great imposition on the county that the road is not run.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman is quite correct in what he states. He brought to my notice on several occasions the condition of things existing in his county with respect to this railway, the Montreal and Province line. He brought to me a copy of the Bill with a communication from Mr. Duffy, member of the Quebec Government, in which he expresses the hope that the Government of Canada would ask Parliament to pass a similar measure, the object being to enable the Government of the province of Quebec to take possession of any railways which they had subsidized and which were not being operated according to their contracts. The need of their coming here was owing to the fact that the Montreal and Province Company had received their charter from the Dominion Parliament, and were not subject therefore to the control of the legislature of the province of Quebec, so that the province could not sequester that road. On looking into the Bill passed by the province of Quebec, I pointed out what appeared to me an objection to our adopting that legislation. It would be very unwise in us to assume any such responsibility as has been assumed by the province of Quebec. No doubt the Government case was one of considerable hardship but it is one which frequently arises, and the obligation which would be assumed under that Bill would be very serious. The province of Quebec undertook by legal process to obtain possession of any railway not being operated, and they assumed the further responsibility of operating and maintaining it, and what they desired was that the Government of Canada should take that obligation upon itself in respect of any piece of road in the province of Quebec which had been incorporated by the Parliament of Canada. I later saw Mr. Duffy and pointed out to him the objections to that legislation. I said it would never do for the Government of Canada, by legislation, to undertake to make itself liable to take over and operate every railway that had failed in the hands of the company which was to build it. That would be a pretty serious obligation, and, therefore, I could not advise my Government to approve that legislation.

Mr. MEIGS. They could get the money back. They could get the $4,000 a mile back. The road is a valuable one, there is not a bit of risk, they have refused $150,000 for the leased part of the road.

Mr. WALLACE. How many miles?

Mr. MEIGS. Forty miles from St. Lambert to Farnham, which is leased to the Grand Trunk Railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It was because the 20 miles were not run, that the province of Quebec desired to have some power vested in them whereby they could take possession of the road.

Mr. BERGERON. Could not this Government force the company to operate that road, since they were subsidized by the Government?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is the trouble. We never were. We are powerless so far as that remedy is concerned, because we had never subsidized that company, and there was no subsidy contract between the Government and the company. There was no contract between that company and the Dominion Government to operate the road. I do not think there was any such contract between the province of Quebec and the company. The difficulty was that they were not proposing to get any legislative authority from this Parliament to deal with the road in a particular way that would not involve obligations upon us, but they passed a general Bill under which they charged themselves with the duty and responsibility of taking over any road in the province and—

Mr. BLAIR.

Mr. MEIGS. They were not obliged to take it over.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. But they conferred upon themselves the right to take it over, and having taken it over they took upon themselves the responsibility of operating it and paying out of the provincial treasury the cost of operation; and they asked us as a Dominion to adopt that legislation from a Dominion point of view.

Mr. MEIGS. They took the right to take such roads over, but they did not oblige themselves to run them. They could take the road and sell the rails and get part of the money back. But what I claim is that this road is a valuable property. No one in the county is interested in that road; it was sold by public auction and was bought by a man named Stranahan, of St. Albans. The owners are not citizens of Canada. They have a sort of provisional company, and Mr. Greenshields, who is the legal representative of this man Stranahan, is one of the provisional directors. What was wanted was that the Quebec Government should be given power to deal with the road. That, as I understand it, is all that Mr. Duffy, the commissioner of public works of Quebec, asked.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, what he asked was that we should recommend to Parliament the same legislation generally as they had enacted in the province of Quebec. I pointed out the difficulty, and I thought he saw it and yielded. I asked if he could suggest some way in which some specific power might be given that would be of service to him, but I had no suggestion from him in that regard.

Mr. BRITTON. Is this two-thirds of a mile not constructed?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, but there was shortage in the mileage allowed for.

Mr. BRITTON. In other words, you are paying a debt?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are giving them the balance of the subsidy which they would have had had there been no error in the mileage.

Mr. WALLACE. How much a mile?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. $3,200.

To the Strathroy and Western Counties Railway, for a line from Strathroy, Ontario, via Adelaide and Arkona, to either Forest, Tedford or Park Hill, not exceeding 24 miles, in lieu of subsidy granted by 57-58 Victoria, chap. 4. Partly revote.

Mr. FOSTER. How much of this is re-vote ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Seventeen miles, if my memory serves me.

Mr. WALLACE. Is the company formed? Who are the owners, or who apply for the subsidy ?

Mr. CALVERT. The charter has been granted by the provincial legislature to some citizens of Strathroy, and, I think, of London. Mr. Grist, of Strathroy, is the president, and I think the present mayor of Strathroy is a director, and also the sheriff of London. I may say that in 1894, this House granted :

To the Strathroy and Western Counties Railway Company, for 25 miles of their railway from St. Thomas, through the counties of Elgin and Middlesex, towards Forest Station or Park Hill, on the Grand Trunk Railway, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 a mile, nor exceeding in the whole $80,000.

This was enacted under 57-58 Vic., chap. 4. Since then the promoters of the road have decided to ask for a grant from Caradoc station, seven miles south of Strathroy, into the town of Strathroy, thence to Adelaide village, thence to the village of Arkona and thence to the village of Forest or the town of Parkhill. The company propose to leave off that portion from Caradoc station on the Canadian Pacific Railway, southward to St. Thomas. This road will pass through the finest agricultural district in the province of Ontario. I believe that more farm stock and farm produce has been shipped out of the county of Middlesex than of any other county in Ontario. This road will connect with the Canadian Pacific Railway and with the Sarnia branch and the old Great Western Railway, now the Grand Trunk Railway, at Strathroy, and the Grand Trunk Railway at Forest or Parkhill. I do not see any reason why the money should not be granted now, as it was granted in 1894.

Mr. HAGGART. Was the part of the road now asking for a subsidy subsidized in 1894?

Mr. CALVERT. A portion of it, as I have read.

Mr. HAGGART. The part subsidized before was from St. Thomas, 25 miles. How far is the commencement of this road from St. Thomas ?

Mr. CALVERT. About 18 miles from St. Thomas.

Mr. HAGGART. Then, this is only a re-vote of 7 miles ; this is a transfer of the other on to this part.

Mr. CALVERT. The vote at that time reads :

Strathroy and Western Counties Railway Company, for 25 miles of their railway from St. Thomas, through the counties of Elgin and Middlesex towards Park Hill.

Mr. INGRAM. The object to be gained by running a line from Caradoc to Strathroy, 7 miles, is to have connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway. You have all the advantages of both lines of railway from Caradoc to Strathroy, without building additional mileage.

Mr. WALLACE. The explanations given by the member for West Middlesex (Mr. Calvert) are unsatisfactory. It appears that in the old days a subsidy was voted for another line of railway entirely. That has lapsed, and this is put in, partly as a re-vote. Its starting point is 18 miles from the starting point of the other road from Strathroy. It is in a country where there is a network of railways ; it is a line that is unnecessary. Forest is supplied with railway accommodation.

Mr. CALVERT. There is only one line at Forest.

Mr. WALLACE. There is no necessity for bonusing a railway like that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is quite a straight stretch between these two points that has no railway facilities.

Mr. CALVERT. This road will pass through the village of Adelaide, which is of considerable importance ; and the village of Arkona, which is an incorporated village, and it passes through one of the best portions of an agricultural district. Arkona must be 8 or 9 miles from a railway. It is 12 miles from Watford, where a stage runs every day, and 8 or 9 miles from Forest.

Mr. MONK. I think we ought to be careful in granting bonuses to places that are already reached by railways, when there are places that have no railway communication at present. We have in the county of Jacques Cartier a railway that branches off from the Grand Trunk Railway and goes as far as St. Laurent, a large town, relatively speaking, in the centre of the county. When the subsidy was granted to that branch, it was understood that it would be prolonged as far as St. Genevieve, which has no communication whatever with any place, neither by water nor by rail.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Was a subsidy applied for ?

Mr. MONK. Of that I am not aware. Probably, the people in that part of the country thought that when this Government came into power, the system of subsidizing railways was going to be abolished. If that is all that is required, there will be no difficulty in obtaining an application. I mention this, because St. Genevieve is the only place thus deprived of communication by water or by rail. That branch of railway which is named the Jacques Cartier Junction Railway, received a subsidy. While on this subject, I may mention to the Postmaster General that a couple of weeks ago the morning train, carrying the mails, ceased running to St. Laurent, causing great inconvenience to the people of that town. I would also ask the Minister of Railways and Canals to interfere and see that that morning service is resumed, if it is in his power. They previously had a morning and an evening train, and now they only get the evening train.

Mr. FOSTER. This subsidy is an example which scarcely bears out the Premier's plea this afternoon for a subsidy for railways. You are subsidizing a line of road which runs through a country, most of the villages of which have now railway communication, and none of which is more than seven or eight miles from railway communication. If you are going to take public money to subsidize roads in the very thick of a railroad country, the Premier's plea falls to the ground for the outlying districts. There is no section of country in any province that cannot claim a subsidy, if you subsidize a road of this kind.

Mr. CASEY. Perhaps the hon. gentleman can explain on what principle he and his late colleagues subsidized the Canadian Pacific Railway from London to Windsor, passing within two or three miles of the Grand Trunk Railway all the way, and passing through the same villages, in sight of the Grand Trunk Railway most of the way?

Mr. HAGGART. It was not subsidized.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It was subsidized to Chatham.

Mr. CASEY. If there is any criticism to come from anybody in regard to building railways within the reach of other railways, I do not think it comes very well from an hon. gentleman who was member of a Government which did that?

To the St. John Valley and Rivière du Loup Railway Company, for a line of railway from Fredericton, in the county of York, N.B., to Woodstock, in the county of Carleton, not exceeding 59 miles. Revote.

Mr. WALLACE. Who are in this company?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The late Mr. Baird, I think, was president of the company. I do not know just the members. Mr. Manchester was in it, and Mr. Troop. The company has a corporate existence. I do not think there is a political friend of the Government in it, so far as I know.

Mr. WALLACE. I would like to ask the hon. Minister if this is in connection with some line of railway or is it a new line of railway from these two points?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is a new line. It has no connections beyond at either end, but it connects these two points.

Mr. WALLACE. Is there not a line from Woodstock to Fredericton?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is a line on the opposite side of the river and a line away back.

Mr. WALLACE. It seems that there are two lines of railway already from Fredericton to Woodstock. This bonus is for a third line, so that they are pretty well supplied.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is almost a day's drive between them to get from one to the other. I imagine that you would have objected to a subsidy to this road because it has been revoted three or four times.

Mr. WALLACE. I suppose that this is one of the subsidies that the hon. Minister does not expect to be called upon to assume liability for.

For a railway from Port Hawkesbury, on the Strait of Canso, N.S., to St. Peter's, not exceeding 30 miles. Revote.

Mr. HAGGART. Is that under contract?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This line is not under contract. I do not know whether it has been more than once voted, but it has at least been voted once.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think this is the second or third time it has appeared.

Mr. HAGGART. This is not the line that will go to the coal mine that Mr. Mann has the contract for?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No this is not the same.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I had an earnest appeal from the hon. leader of the Opposition and other hon. gentlemen to include this new railway in the list.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This application is for a road by way of St. Peter's to Louisbourg, on the south side of the island. There is a road from Sydney to Louisbourg, but it is by a roundabout way. This will be a more direct way.

Mr. WALLACE. Is that part of a railway in existence?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No.

For a railway from Windsor, N.S., to Truro, via township of Clifton, not exceeding 58 miles, in lieu of subsidy granted by 57-58 Victoria, chap. 4. Revote.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This road is actually in course of construction. It runs from Windsor, in Hants County, to Truro, in Colchester. There was some question as to the location of the road, whether it should run by way of Brookfield or Clifton. After some objection the Clifton route was adopted, and the road is under construction. The subsidy was voted before, but it was allowed to lapse, and now the contractors wish to have it revoted.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The change was made at the instance of the corporation of Truro.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. WALLACE. Is there a line of railway from Windsor to Truro?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No.

For a railway from a point at or near Brookfield Station, N.S., on the Intercolonial Railway, to Eastville, not exceeding 25 miles, in lieu of subsidy granted by 60-61 Victoria, chap. 4. Revote.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is a road running up the Stewiacke River. It has been voted for a number of years. It was associated with the road mentioned in the last vote, but the company were not able to build both. It is under a provincial charter and is a branch to the Intercolonial.

Mr. WALLACE. It is a feeder to the Intercolonial, but not owned by the Intercolonial.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No. The company are chartered by the province.

For a railway from Cross Creek Station, on the Canada Eastern Railway, to Stanley Village, N.B., not exceeding 6 miles. Revote.

Mr. WALLACE. Is that part of a line of railway?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It will be a branch of the Canada Eastern.

Mr. FOSTER. Running from a point on the Canada Eastern to the thriving village of Stanley.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. How does the hon. Minister expect to have this short branch line constructed if it is not in connection with another line.

Mr. FOSTER. It is part of the Canada Eastern.

Mr. SPROULE. Perhaps the hon. Minister intends to include that when he purchases the Canada Eastern.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If it were built and owned by the Canada Eastern and the Canada Eastern were purchased by the Government, I suppose it would be included in the purchase.

Mr. SPROULE. It is unreasonable to expect a company to build these short lines of railway unless they are in connection with some other lines of railway because they will not pay. It seems to me that it is only a waste of time and money, because no person would form a company to build a railway six miles long for the purpose of getting this bonus without having an arrangement made with some other company to run it when it was built.

Mr. WALLACE. Like the railroad, the history of which was given to us to-night by the hon. member for Missisquoi (Mr. Meigs). You get the bonus and do not run the road.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This road is not going to be built for the sake of the subsidy. It is going to be built for the sake of the road. The road if built, connects with one of the most flourishing and one of the largest villages, in any part of New Brunswick, outside of the cities and towns. The hon. gentlemen opposite will be able to tell the committee that there is no part of the whole county of York more flourishing than the village of Stanley and its surrounding country. The proposed route, if it ever is built, will be built by the aid received from the people themselves, in addition to the subsidy granted by the Government.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there any charter for it now?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Who applied for the bonus?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is applied for by the people of Stanley.

Mr. SPROULE. Name the company.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The president of the company is Dr. D. K. Moore. There are a number of other gentlemen connected with it, Mr. Humble and others.

For a railway from the village of St. Rémi to Stottsville or some point on the Delaware and Hudson (Grand Trunk) in the parish of St. Valentine, not exceeding 19 miles, of which 12 miles is a revote.

Mr. MONET. I would move for a change in this item. The name of the parish of St. Rémi has been changed to that of St. Paul de l'Isle aux Noix, and I would move that the name be changed.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there an incorporated company to build this road?

Mr. MONET. There are two charters, one from the local legislature, and one from this province.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there any portion of this railway built yet?

Mr. MONET. About seven miles, but they did not build the whole road. This road was subsidized for the first time in 1892, and the subsidy was granted from Napier-ville.

Mr. WALLACE. I understand the hon. member to say that there were seven miles built?

Mr. MONET. Seven miles, partly built.

For a railway between Pontypool and Bobcaygeon, via Lindsay, Ont., not exceeding 40 miles. 32 miles revote.

Mr. MONK. Is there a company in existence for the construction of this road?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This subsidy is asked for by the municipal council of Bobcaygeon and Pontypool, and is to connect the village of Bobcaygeon with Pontypool via Lindsay.

Mr. McHUGH. I may say this road connects with the Canadian Pacific Railway at Pontypool. It is a railroad running back from the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway to the village of Bobcaygeon. Bobcaygeon at present has no railway connection. The distance is some forty miles. The whole line is through a very fine agricultural district, and is going to serve a section of country that has no railway in it at the present time.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there any provincial subsidy for this road?

Mr. McHUGH. No.

Mr. WALLACE. Have the municipalities raised any money?

Mr. McHUGH. There were 32 miles of this road subsidized in 1891. At that time the township of Verulam had given a bonus of $15,000, the village of Bobcaygeon $25,000 and the town of Lindsay $25,000. One municipality refused to bonus the road, and the money market was in such a state at the time that they could not float the bonds of the road, and the charter was allowed to lapse. It has been revived, and we are asking for a revote, with the eight miles added that were not bonused before. I think that was simply a mistake, for it was intended to bonus the whole line. The points were named; but the distance between them is 40 miles instead of 32 miles.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. gentleman think this will be enough to carry the riding the next time?

Mr. McHUGH. It is not intended for that purpose at all; I may say that the promoters of this road are selected without reference to their politics at all. I think more of them are Conservatives than Liberals, but they are good business men. Mr. Flavell, of Lindsay, Mr. Boyd, of Bobcaygeon, and Mr. Dobson, in the other Chamber, are Conservatives. There are some Liberals also, but all the promoters are selected without reference to their politics.

Mr. MONET.

Mr. WALLACE. Are the bonuses that were granted by the municipalities still valid?

Mr. McHUGH. They have lapsed, but the intention is to go back to the municipalities and ask them to vote the bonuses again, to supplement this bonus, and in the present state of the money market, the promoters of the road have every confidence that they will be able to float the scheme, and secure its construction.

Mr. HUGHES. I may say that Mr. Boyd and the other gentlemen in the company have every confidence that with this bonus the road will be built, and it will be a very useful road, too.

Mr. MONK. I would like to ask the Minister, as a matter of information, if it is exacted by the department, before any subsidy is granted, that a company should be organized?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, that has never been done, but before the subsidy is agreed to be paid there must be a company.

To the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway Company, for a railway from Aylmer to Hull, Que., in lieu of the subsidy granted by 60-61 Victoria, chap. 4, not exceeding 9 miles. Revote.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that it is a very needless waste of money to grant a subsidy to build a railway where a railway has been already built, and sold to, and used by the electric railway. If it was not worth while for the Pontiac Pacific Junction Company to hold the nine miles which they already had, I do not think we should vote more money to enable them to build over the same line.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it not possible for them to get running powers over the present road?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The difficulty is this. The line has fallen into the hands of the Hull Electric Company, and when the question came before the Railway Committee of this House whether the Pacific Junction Railway could not properly, and adequately for its purposes, acquire running rights over the existing line, the conclusion arrived at was, that it was not desirable to run an ordinary steam railroad over a line which was used as an electric tramway running its cars every three or four minutes. It was not considered safe for human life.

Mr. SPROULE. Who owned the road when it was sold to the electric company?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Canadian Pacific Railway, I think.

Mr. SPROULE. Under what arrangement did the Pontiac Pacific Railway use this road?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Under an arrangement with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and my impression is that the Canadian Pacific Railway passed it over to the Hull Electric Company.

Mr. SPROULE. My impression is that when the Electric Railway Company were seeking some amendment to their charter it contended that that line was the outlet of the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway, and that the electric company had agreed to haul the cars of the company, both freight and passenger, from Aylmer down to Hull which would be a great saving to them and would serve the convenience of the public as well as another line, so that there was no need of another railway. Yet, within two years we are asked to subsidize another road.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This subsidy has been on the statute-book more than two years.

Mr. SPROULE. It might be three years but it is not more. I do not think there is any justification in duplicating subsidies to duplicate railways through the same territory.

Mr. INGRAM. Does the hon. gentleman know that the Pontiac Pacific Junction Company are constructing part of that now?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They are under way. We settled what route they might take, in the Railway Committee, and they had a charter from Parliament, and are now actually carrying on the construction of the line.

Mr. FOSTER. Did they own this once before?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. INGRAM. Where they are constructing the present line is between the river and the railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We decided it was impracticable to carry a steam railway over an electric road. They could only carry freight between midnight and three and four o'clock in the morning, which would not serve any business interest.

To the Portage du Fort and Bristol Branch Railway Company, for a branch line from a point on the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway at or near the village of Quyon towards the village of Portage du Fort, Que., not exceeding 15 miles, in lieu of the subsidy granted by 60-61 Victoria, chap. 4. Revote.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it to be a portion of the Pontiac Pacific Junction?

Mr. MACKIE. It has nothing to do with that road. It joins it at Quyon, and there was a bonus given some years ago for a road between Portage du Fort and Quyon; that is 25 miles. The road commences at Portage du Fort, running towards Quyon, 15 miles. We are making a change, to start from Quyon, running 15 miles towards Portage du Fort, so that we can have connection with the Pontiac Pacific at Quyon. This line is proposed to run straight through to Pembroke. This is only a portion we are bonusing now. It is supposed to cross Portage du Fort into Ontario, and run to Pembroke.

Mr. SPROULE. Does it get any provincial subsidy?

Mr. MACKIE. No, not yet.

To the Orford Mountain Railway Company, for a branch from their railway from a point between Lawrenceville and Eastman to Waterloo, not exceeding 30 miles. 4½ miles revote.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the explanation of this?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have before me a petition which was received from the company. The petition sets forth that the company is unable to extend its operations in such a way as to secure an effective service, unless the mileage is increased and some important points reached that are not now reached by the company. The idea is, that the line is to start from its terminus at Pond, near Kingsbury, which is a point on the Grand Trunk Railway, between the Windsor Mills and Richmond, to connect with the Grand Trunk Railway near Waterloo.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, absolutely no information is given about this. According to the map there are roads on four sides of this, yet they propose to run a road across from one to the other, a short distance away from a road already built; and when we ask why we should subsidize 25½ miles of this road, the Minister has no information.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have given all the information I think there is to give.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman has given all he has, but it could all be put in a mosquito's bladder.

The PRIME MINISTER. We are ready to admit that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) is entitled to more information than has been given. That information could be given at once if the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) were here, but he is away attending the funeral of the late Speaker.

Mr. FOSTER. But the Minister of Railways and Canals is responsible for these votes, and he ought, at least, to take the trouble to inform himself concerning them. This vote had better be allowed to stand.

The PRIME MINISTER. Very well, let this stand.

To the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company for an extension of their railway from Caplin to Paspébiac, Que., not exceeding 30 miles. Revote.

Mr. FOSTER. What is this ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is just what it represents itself to be—the line is built from Metapédia to Caplin. The proposal is to extend it to Paspébiac.

Mr. FOSTER. This is a revote—is it the same distance as before ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

The PRIME MINISTER. The road is nearly built.

To the United Counties Railway Company, for a railway from St. Robert Junction to Sorel, 6½ miles, and from Mount Johnson to St. Grégoire Station, 1 mile, not exceeding 7½ miles. Revote.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand that the United Counties Railway now runs to Sorel, if so, there must be a railway there. Why do you want to parallel that railway ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The portion from St. Robert Junction to Sorel is not built. An arrangement was made to use the Montreal and Atlantic Railway between these points. The company find it necessary now to build.

Mr. FOSTER. If they have running powers now, why is it necessary to subsidize a new road ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They have not effected an arrangement.

Mr. FOSTER. But the Government can compel an arrangement to be effected. It is much easier to do that than to spend public money to build a new road alongside of one already in existence. We ought not to duplicate roads where there is no necessity for it. There is not an immense traffic on these roads. You can be reasonably sure of a seat if you want to travel on the United Counties Railway. It is not because there is a growth of traffic that a new line is necessary. I know that the object is to get into Sorel. But they get in now, and why cannot a running arrangement be effected by which they can always get into Sorel ? We have not money to burn, you know.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is only 6½ miles.

Mr. FOSTER. All the more reason why there should be a running arrangement. No reason has been given why the road should be built.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose my hon. friend knows that the traffic over that road is very slim. There is a road already built forty miles, but not a bit of it is running. Here is a long line of road from Drummondville into Sorel. I daresay thirty miles long, and it is not running, and here is another road almost with a stone's throw of it, and when it gets up to St. Robert it runs off on to this road, which is not being used, for six and a half miles, and runs into Sorel. Now, we are asked to build another road, within a stone's throw of a road which is not being run except for six and a half miles of it. In the name of common sense, why cannot they go on running over it all the time ?

The PRIME MINISTER. There may be something in what my hon. friend says. But I will explain the condition of things there, as I know them pretty well. The road does not run from Sorel to Drummondville at the present time. Some six or seven years ago the bridge over the Yamaska River was washed away in a freshet and has not been rebuilt. We feel sure that it will be rebuilt with the new subsidy we are giving for the construction of the South Shore Railway. But there is something in the objection made by my hon. friend that, perhaps there is no need for this railway, and we will let it stand.

For a railway from a point on the Central Railway, in the county of Lunenburg, N.S., to the town of Liverpool via the village of Caledonia, or to the village of Caledonia via Liverpool, or any part thereof, the whole distance not exceeding 62 miles. Revote.

Mr. KAULBACH. It affords me very great pleasure to find that the Government has acceded to my request by placing, as a revote, the usual sum of $3,200 per mile for the proposed railway from New Germany to Shelburne, known as the Nova Scotia Southern, as it is a road I had advocated most earnestly some years ago, and having obtained a vote from the late Government, it would have been a cruel thing to have refused it now, or allowed it to lapse, more particularly as a larger sum of money has been spent, and much labour employed on construction already, and large numbers of men are being employed at present, without a dollar of call having been made on the Government up to the present, so far as I am aware.

I am also delighted to find the Government has acceded to the request for an additional resolution for railway extension from New Germany to Halifax, as by this connection we will have the shortest, the most interesting, the best, and certainly the safest route from Halifax to Boston, via New Ross, New Germany and Shelburne, and a fast line of steamboats to connect between Shelburne and Boston. By this route a five hours quicker despatch can be obtained between Halifax and Boston than by any other route, and the tortuous and dangerous waters of the Bay of Fundy avoided, as Shelburne harbour is one of the very finest in the world, easy of approach at all seasons and all hours, night not excepted, good anchorage, well sheltered and offering least risk to life and property, it being on the face of the broad Atlantic, than any other harbour on the coast that I am aware of.

As provincial road grants are a thing of the past in Nova Scotia, or the appropriations for that purpose so small as to be hardly worth naming, money grants having been expended imprudently in purchase of iron bridges, and now in the payment of interest on borrowed moneys, I consider the people of New Ross, New Germany, Ohio, and the other sections through which this road will pass are entitled to a convenience or consideration of this sort, to reach a market, as the carriage roads are in that deplorable condition at present as to render travel over them an impossibility without encountering many risks.

By the opening of this railway farming and mining interests will be developed, which as yet, although rich, are in their infancy, and the forests, which abound in valuable timbers, can be brought into practical use.

New Germany is a fine agricultural as well as industrial centre, situate on the beautiful LaHave River, having natural scenery of ravishing beauty, offering an uninterrupted stretch of fine, rich, arable soil from the eastern confines of Lunenburg County, stretching westwardly directly across the county, and far beyond its western confines, and through northern Queen's to the "Indian Gardens," which is settled in part by an intelligent, tidy, frugal and industrious people, all along the line of the proposed railway.

Let me say that this Government is making no mistake in giving encouragement to this road, as the previous Government had done, as this railway, known as the Nova Scotia Southern, or Harvey Road, passes through a country richly interspersed with beautiful lakes and streams affording excellent pleasure or sport for the angler or huntsman, and is studded with luxuriant spruce, pine and other forest, to say nothing of the purity of the climate, and the verdure and freshness of the country, a country affording inducements not only for the tourists but the thousands of settlers to make happy homes for themselves and their children, as the very best farming land can be obtained along and near this line, covered with a primeval growth of forest of pine, spruce and hardwood at very moderate prices, averaging from $1.50 to $4 per acre, and of a quality equal to any in Ontario, for which they claim very much higher prices.

The markets are good for all farm and forest products with a mere trifle for the cost of transport, and in most cases, are immediately at hand, as no part of the proposed road will be more than 16 miles from the seashore. Halifax and Shelburne, being the extreme ends of the road, the distance between these two points being about 120 miles, opens up a market at short intervals all along the line, New Germany offering a good market now, and when this road is built farmers all along the line of route from Indian Gardens east to Halifax will find a ready market at Halifax for all their farm products, as well as their small fruits, and can furnish milk to that city every morning at paying rates, the same as Truro and other places are doing at present.

As the Government is conceding to the wishes of the people by having a resolution for the extension of the road from New Germany to Halifax, which I very strongly advocate, I will defer any further remarks I have to make till the subject comes up.

For a railway from Indian Garden, Queen's county, N.S., to Shelburne, in the said province, a distance of 35 miles. Revote.

Mr. KAULBACH. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) will allow me, I will suggest a correction in the wording of the resolution, as I know more of the geography of that country than perhaps he does. He will observe that the previous resolution says: "To Caledonia" or "to Liverpool." That would leave a gap between Caledonia and Indian Gardens. I would suggest that it be worded "from Caledonia, Queen's County, to Shelburne."

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Kaulbach) had better let it stand as it is. It is a revote in the former terms, and the parties interested in the railway have never taken any exception to it. I think we might let well-enough alone.

The subsidy which the Ontario and Rainy River Railway Company is entitled to receive under chap. 4, 60-61 Victoria, shall be $6,400 per mile for the 80 miles provided in the said Act.

Mr. OLIVER. When we were discussing the general provisions, I understood the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals to say that the interests of the public, in regard to rates over this Rainy River road, were fairly well guarded by the Railway Act, either already standing, or the proposed provisions. I would ask the hon. Minister if he could give us any information as to the policy of the Government in regard to rates on that road?

Mr. WALLACE. We have come to an item that will provoke a good deal of discussion, and I think it had better stand.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) would like the item to stand, we can get through with some that will not provoke discussion.

Mr. FOSTER. Let it stand.

Mr. WALLACE. I think it is about time to finish for the night.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is quite early.

Mr. WALLACE. I can stay here as long as anybody.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not wish to provoke any discussion. I simply ask the question of the hon. Minister.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I apprehend, that the hon. gentleman would think it would be better to present some particular case before he would ask what the Government might be disposed to do in such a case. The general policy of the Government would be to see that the rates imposed by the company were not excessive.

Mr. OLIVER. The question I had in my mind was, as to whether it was intended by the Government to make a substantial reduction in the rates at present charged between Winnipeg and Thunder Bay.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The question of rates upon this, as upon any other line, would have to be dealt with by the Government when the occasion arose. I suppose, what the hon. gentleman would have in his mind is, that we would undertake to make it a part of the contract, or one of the conditions under which this subsidy is given, that the company would undertake to carry its freight at a fixed tariff which we might settle upon. I confess to the hon. gentleman that that view has not presented itself to my mind, and I would think it would be extremely difficult for the Government to deal with such a case in advance. We would have to take up the whole question of the through rates and the rates of the other connecting lines of this company, to ascertain, or to judge, as to what the proper proportion would be, or as to what the proper rate would be to assign to this particular road. This could only be done when the time came to put the road in operation. I think it would be quite impossible to do it in advance. At all events, that is what occurred to me. Of course, we reserve power to control rates, and we will have to deal to the best of our judgment, and on the best information we can get, with each situation as it arises.

Mr. OLIVER. What I had in my mind was, that this seemed a parallel case with the Crow's Nest road. When the subsidy was voted, an arrangement was made whereby certain rates were secured.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. These rates were secured over an existing line, then in operation.

Mr. OLIVER. It struck me that now, when we are voting the money, we should make our bargain as to the rates we expect to get.

Mr. WALLACE. I understood the hon. Minister was going to allow that vote to stand.

Mr. WALLACE.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I offered to allow the matter to stand.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Would the hon. Minister tell us if it will be taken up the first thing to-morrow?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It will be taken up to-morrow.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). I may not be here to-morrow, and I would like to ask the hon. Minister if he has a map showing this road?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is right before the hon. gentleman.

To the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company, for 12 miles of their railway from end of their line at deep water on the Chicoutimi branch of their railway, to Ha! Ha! Bay, in lieu of the subsidy for the 12 miles granted by chap. 4 of 1894.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this over the same route as the old vote?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. The same distance?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

The PRIME MINISTER. I can give the information which I have with regard to this vote. My hon. friend is familiar with the geography of the Saguenay River. The river forms a bay at Ha! Ha! and then projects to the Chicoutimi. The country is very rough, as my hon. friend knows from Ha! Ha! Bay to Chicoutimi. This is to be a line from Chicoutimi to Ha! Ha! Bay, passing in the interior somewhat, but not exactly girding the river.

Mr. FOSTER. Then it is a different road from the old road?

The PRIME MINISTER. I think not there is no difference at all.

For a line of railway from Hawkesbury, Ont., to South Indian, not exceeding 35 miles.

Mr. FOSTER. This is a new road, and we want an explanation of it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This line is an extension of the Great Northern, the object being to connect the lines of railway from Quebec along the course of the Great Northern and strike the Canada Atlantic at South Indian.

Mr. HAGGART. Is there not a railroad there already?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There are some thirty-odd miles to be saved.

For a branch line of railway from the main line of the Ottawa, Arnprior and Parry Sound Railway to the town of Parry Sound, Ont., not exceeding 5 miles.

Mr. FOSTER. What is this ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is a little branch to connect the town with the railway. We were strongly urged by the corporation of the town to grant this assistance.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it not reasonable to suppose that a large railway like that would make this connection with the town ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is a pretty considerable undertaking.

Mr. McCORMICK. I may say that the people of Parry Sound have no connection with the railway except by boat, and this is a very expensive piece of road to construct.

For a railway from Port Hawkesbury, on the Strait of Canso, to Caribou Cove, N.S., a distance of 10 miles.

Mr. HAGGART. There is another railway from Port Hawkesbury to Louisbourg. Where does this go ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is a road under contract now from Port Hawkesbury to Port Hood and the coal mines at Broad Cove. This is an extension of 10 miles in a southerly direction to what is regarded as a very useful harbour. This has no connection with the other road.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the extent of the subsidy granted by the local Government ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The local Government usually give $3,200 a mile. I understand that there have been some negotiations with a view of getting from the local Government $4,000 a mile for that particular road.

To the Canadian Northern Railway Company, for a railway from a point on the present line of the Winnipeg Great Northern Railway north of Swan River to Prince Albert, N.W.T., not exceeding 100 miles.

Mr. HAGGART. That is an extension of the Rainy River road ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. HAGGART. It is part of the same system.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It may, perhaps, be ultimately. That would be a matter for future consideration.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). What is the length of the road you are subsidizing to the Rainy River between Stanley Station and Fort Frances ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. 220 miles at the outside. This piece of road of 100 miles, is required to connect Swan River with Prince Albert. It will form unquestionably a part of the line which now has been built to Swan River.

Mr. FOSTER. From what place ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. From Winnipeg by the Dauphin route. They call it the Dauphin line.

Mr. HAGGART. It passes the Dauphin Lake. It is all part of the same system that runs from Port Arthur to Rainy River and onward, and their intention is some time or other to get through to the Pacific.

Mr. PRIOR. What is the distance between the end of this line, when built, and the other line ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is 100 miles from the end of this subsidized mileage to Prince Albert. As between Prince Albert and Edmonton, it must be between 300 and 400 miles.

Mr. FOSTER. What the Government has started in on is to subsidize and build a road through to the Pacific Ocean.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Hundreds of miles are being subsidized in these places for that purpose. For instance, you begin at Port Arthur, and are subsidizing through to Winnipeg.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, through to the mouth of the Rainy River, on the Lake of the Woods, and then the same road is being subsidized by the Greenway Government from that on to Winnipeg, and the province of Ontario is giving a subsidy to this as well. Then, when they reach Winnipeg, the same concern have a road which runs from that there to Swan River,

Mr. RUTHERFORD. They start at Portage la Prairie.

Mr. HAGGART. They have running powers into Winnipeg.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. And the terminus of this road is at Portage la Prairie ?

Mr. FOSTER. It is, and from there you have a road built by the same concern running to Swan River. There is then the gap between Winnipeg and Portage la Prairie. Then, when you get to the Saskatchewan River, this 100 miles takes you to Prince Albert.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is 200 miles to Prince Albert.

Mr. FOSTER. You are within 100 miles of Prince Albert, and, of course, the inference is that another year you will supplement that. You are not going to leave the thing half done.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, you skip a lot of river and get over towards Edmonton, and there you have taken up this year a company, and are pointing them towards Yellow Head Pass, and are giving them a subsidy for a long portion of that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Fifty miles.

Mr. FOSTER. You are embarked on a plan of subsidizing a transcontinental system of railway through to the Pacific Ocean; and having commenced that, you are in duty bound to go on. The country might as well see that we are proposing by bits to subsidize a road through to the Pacific Ocean. That is what is meant.

The PRIME MINISTER. It is quite possible that in course of time all these things may be done, but, in the meantime, these individual grants will be very useful.

Mr. FOSTER. Are these not the very basis which make that possible?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is no justification for that statement. It is possible, and more likely, that in the future these roads will be extended and will come together. But the justification for giving these subsidies at present is not because there may possibly, in the future, be a connection between them, and they may constitute one through line, but because railway conveniences and accommodation must be provided if that country is to be settled. I am informed by gentlemen who have been there that the country is one of the finest and most fertile portions of the whole Dominion. People are ready to go in there in numbers as soon as they have any assurance that railway accommodation will be provided, and people who have gone there already in the expectation, particularly in Prince Albert and the surrounding sections, that a railway would be provided, are threatening to leave, and will leave, unless railway connection is made. The same observation applies to the condition of things at Edmonton. No doubt we have a valuable heritage in the North-west, a country that will fill up if we enable the people to get out and in with their traffic and otherwise. It is necessary, apart altogether from the idea of another transcontinental system of railway, that we should give this aid and stimulate the construction of roads on their individual merits. It ought to be no objection that at some remote day those different links will be joined together, constituting one entire system, but that has nothing whatever to do with the present proposition; and I want it distinctly understood that it is upon the merits of these roads and because they traverse most valuable fertile country, it is necessary to subsidize their construction in order to induce the settlement the country requires.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. HUGHES. This road is going to branch off from the present line running north through the Dauphin Valley at the lower Red Deer River, and from there to Prince Albert is nearly 200 miles. The country is unsurpassed by anything I have ever seen in the Dominion. Swan River Valley is already filled with settlers from all parts of older Canada and the province of Manitoba, although the road has not more than entered yet. The territory lying north and north-west to Porcupine Mountain on through to the Carrot River district is unsurpassed in Canada; and on the merits of that country, it is the duty of the Government to open it up for settlement. The local traffic and the adaptability of the land for settlement will warrant any Government in running a road into it for the settlers. The settlement extends 85 miles east of Prince Albert, but beyond that the people cannot possibly haul their produce to market. The land is extraordinarily good, but the produce cannot be hauled more than 85 miles. I think it would be well to give the bonus for the whole distance to Prince Albert, but if the bonus is given next year, it will enable the settlers to take out their crops by the road and will benefit the whole community. One word more as to the climate of that locality. This road does not run on the same prairie level as the Canadian Pacific Railway west of Brandon. The prairie level will not, at any point, exceed 1,400 feet in height—running from 900 to 1,400 feet. It is what is called the first prairie level. The second prairie level is colder and the winds are stronger. Those who have lived in that locality and have spent some years in Manitoba near the 49th parallel say that the winds are much stronger near the boundary. The Swan River district is in what they call the region of calm.

Mr. FOSTER. I think we had better adjourn now.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Let us take these votes down to the bottom of the page. There is nothing controversial.

Mr. FOSTER. If it is not controversial, it will pass as easily to-morrow.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. But we want to feel as if we had advanced the work. I am afraid we have made little progress.

Mr. FOSTER. But it is late, and we have a full days' work to-morrow. I think good progress has been made.

The PRIME MINISTER. If there is anything controversial, we will let it stand.

Mr. FOSTER. The whole of it is controversial.

The committee rose, and reported progress.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose we will go straight on with this to-morrow?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 2.05 a.m. (Friday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 4th August, 1899.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PRAYERS.

SALE OF RAILWAY PASSENGER TICKETS.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved:

That the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 32), from this House respecting the sale of passenger tickets be read a second time and agreed to.

He said: This is the Bill introduced by the hon. member for London (Mr. Beattie), some time ago, and it is to prevent what is known as ticket scalping on ferry boats and steamboats, as well as on railways. The amendments are really verbal.

Motion agreed to.

STENOGRAPHERS' FEES AT PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS COMMITTEE.

Mr. FORTIN presented the second report of the Select Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections:

By an order of the House, dated Wednesday, July 12th, 1899, your committee were authorized to employ the services of a shorthand writer to take down such evidence as your committee might deem necessary. Owing, however, to the large amount of evidence taken, your committee have found it necessary to obtain the services of two assistant stenographers. They, therefore, recommend that the usual fee of $5 per sitting of the committee be allowed to each of the three stenographers for each meeting of the committee attended by them.

Mr. FORTIN moved:

That the usual fee of $5 per sitting of the committee be allowed to the three stenographers employed by the Select Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for each meeting of the committee attended by them in accordance with the recommendation contained in the second report of the committee.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fortin) what he means by each meeting of the committee. I understand that there is a morning session and an afternoon session. Five dollars for each of these is important in this sense.

Mr. FORTIN. I understand this is the practice in such cases. Upon the adoption of the first report of the Select Committee on Privileges and Elections the committee was authorized to employ a shorthand writer. It was found impossible to have the whole of the work performed by one man so that three stenographers were actually sworn and have taken the notes until today. This motion is to allow the committee to pay each of these three stenographers attending the committee, according to the practice in such cases.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Fortin) has not answered my question, which is somewhat important. Suppose your committee meets at 10 o'clock and sits until 11, that you meet again at 2 and sit until 4, and meet again at 8 and sit until 10, would you pay $15 to each of the stenographers, or would you pay them $10. It makes a great difference to the House, and in some cases it might be very unfair. The stenographers ought to have fair pay, but I do not think we are justified in paying them unfairly. Besides I think three stenographers is a large number.

Mr. DAVIN. The point raised by my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) can be met by putting in a provision that there shall not be more than $5 paid for any one day. I am not going to oppose the report thus understood, but my impression is, and I would venture to say that it would be verified, that I think the custom is—I know it is so in England—to give the work of taking the notes to one stenographer. He gets the professional fee of a guinea a day there, or of $5 here; then the stenographer is paid so much per folio, and he employs whatever subordinates he requires, one, two, three or four. I am not going to oppose this motion, but I think it ought to be made clear that there would not be more than $5 paid for one day. At the same time I believe that the Chairman in supposing it is customary to give $5 a day to each stenographer, is under a misapprehension.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this all that the stenographer gets, or is he paid by the folio?

Mr. DAVIN. He is paid so much per folio.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). I do not see that the stenographer is entitled any less to $5 a day for attending a meeting of the committee because it happens to be held in the afternoon.

Mr. FOSTER. That is not the point I made. I want the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) to know what my point is.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. As I understand the hon. gentleman, his objection is to the stenographer receiving $5 for each meeting of the committee when two meetings are held upon the same day. When the committee is pressed with business it meets in the morning, for two or three hours, the stenographer attends the meeting and takes the notes for which he gets $5. If the committee holds another meeting in the afternoon the stenographers are just as much entitled to the same pay for attending that meeting as attending a meeting in the morning.

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose it is just five minutes' work, or half an hour's work, they will be receiving the same amount as for a more prolonged sitting?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) is making a supposition that does not exist. If the committee only give the stenographer half an hour's work I suppose the committee can be trusted not to pass a resolution or to vote that the stenographer shall get $5 for that. But the committee are not holding meetings of that kind. The committee are holding meetings in which a great deal of evidence is being taken and a great deal of labour is being involved on the part of the reporters. The committee are meeting at 10.30 and sitting until one, they are meeting again sometimes at three and sometimes at four and sitting until six. The meetings, which are held in the afternoon, involve just as much labour on the part of the stenographers, as the meetings in the morning. I do not see why we should apply a special rule to the stenographers of this committee and deprive them of the advantage of the general rule applied to all other committees. I am not saying whether $5 is too much or too little; I express no opinion about that, but the committee are following what they understand to be the general rule, and I do not see any reason why the general rule should not be applied to the stenographers of this committee.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I suggest that the motion be not pressed now, but that the precedents be consulted in order to ascertain what the general rule is. In 1891 we had very much the same condition that exists to-day when committees were sitting almost all day long. The precedent established then can be consulted, so that we may see what the practice is.

Mr. FORTIN. I have struck out the words "five dollars" as the fee for each sitting of the committee to be allowed to the stenographers.

The PRIME MINISTER. I think we had better see what the precedents are.

Motion withdrawn.

Mr. FOSTER.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT.

Mr. MARTIN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the leader of the Government a question in regard to the proposed amendment to the Dominion Elections Act. The right hon. gentleman gave us to understand yesterday that he was to consult the Minister of Justice on the subject. I would like to ask him if the Government have decided anything in regard to the Bill.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). If my hon. friend were to press his question to-day, I would have to give him a negative answer. I have discussed the matter, not with the Minister of Justice—I could not see him yesterday—but with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), and he has some objection to the Bill. Therefore, the hon. gentleman must not press his question to-day.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it quite within the right of the Prime Minister to negative a Bill which is sent from the Senate at this stage of the session, so that if the Government are not favourable to it, it can be prevented from being brought in on the motion of any private member? The Government might be opposed to it, and yet the House might wish to canvass it.

The PRIME MINISTER. At this stage of the session, anybody can move the first reading of the Bill, but as to the second reading, unless the Government facilitates it, it has a very slim chance of going through.

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose the Government could not support the measure, would they yet facilitate the bringing of it before the House?

The PRIME MINISTER. That is what I referred to when I said to my hon. friend a moment ago, that if he pressed me for an answer, I would have to tell him that the Government would not facilitate the business; and I asked him not to press the question, because I wanted to consult my colleague in reference to it.

SEED GRAIN INDEBTEDNESS.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 189) respecting securities for seed grain indebtedness. He said: I may explain that some years ago the Government advanced a certain amount of money to farmers in the North-west for seed grain, taking bonds from the farmers, which constituted a lien upon their homesteads. The Government also required the farmers who got the seed grain to get certain persons to join with them as bondsmen or as securities for the payment of the money. This Bill is for the purpose of giving the Government authority to release the bondsmen from liability where the land of the original settler is liable and is considered to be a sufficient security.

Mr. DAVIN. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman whether the Bill merely deals with the bondsmen?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. DAVIN. I congratulate the hon. gentleman on going thus far. The measure will undoubtedly get rid of what is a wanton grievance; that is to say, it is a grievance which there is, in my opinion, no reason whatever for keeping in existence, because the Government has ample security for any sums that may be owed it without having these men held by their bonds. I congratulate the hon. gentleman on taking that part of the question up this session. The hon. gentleman will remember that shortly after he became a Minister, when he paid his first visit west, I headed a deputation to him on this subject, and in the House, and by letter I again and again brought this matter before him. The relief of the bondsmen was the serious matter; but I should have liked that he had gone further, and when the Bill is before us in committee, I will suggest—because I could not, as a private member, be able to move the kind of amendment I would like to move—certain amendments which I hope I may be able to persuade the hon. gentleman to accept.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

NEWFOUNDLAND AND CANADIAN FISHERMEN.

Mr. KAULBACH. I would like to ask the Ministry if they have had any recent correspondence with Newfoundland in respect to the supply of bait to Canadian fishermen, and if so, what answer they have received. It seems to me that the harsh and ungenerous treatment which Canadian fishermen have received from the sister colony of Newfoundland is not what they have a reasonable right to expect. The Canadian fishermen are endeavouring to be loyal to the sister colony of Newfoundland, but the restriction imposed upon the French is pointed directly to their bait supply also which is unnatural and unfriendly as well as unjust. The restriction under which Canadian fishermen have to pay duty on their barrels and salt, not as an article of merchandise, but retained on the ships and taken away seems to me to be also very unfair. I would ask the Government if any correspondence has been had with Newfoundland on the subject, and if so, what is the answer of that colony.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I may say to my hon. friend that I stated, in answer to a similar question put by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) the other day, that there had been a large amount of correspondence with the Government of Newfoundland on this question. Representations were made to the Dominion Government that the Newfoundland Government had enforced the regulation prohibiting the export of fish from Newfoundland for any other purpose than food, which prevented the fishermen of Nova Scotia obtaining fish for bait, as they had previously been accustomed to do. These representations were forwarded to the Newfoundland Government, along with an official report on the subject. We have since forwarded another report, but no official or other reply has been received from the Government of Newfoundland up to this morning, when I inquired about the subject in the department. Mr. Venning, in the department, said he would not be surprised if we received a reply in a day or two, but, up to the present we have not had any.

Mr. KAULBACH. I would ask the Minister if the Government was reminded of the duty exacted from Canadian fishermen on barrels taken to Newfoundland on their vessels and not landed, and also on salt. They made no entries of these things, and, in my view, they should not be compelled to pay duty on them.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Representations were made to the Dominion Government on those subjects, and forwarded to the Newfoundland Government, and I shall be happy to show my hon. friend, if he comes to the department, the answer of the Newfoundland Government to each of these complaints. I am rather inclined to think that the argument is not altogether on one side. There are some grounds for the action which the Newfoundland Government took; but it would be impossible to give the hon. gentleman, across the House, as much satisfaction as I would be able to give him, if he came to the department and saw the despatches.

THE PROHIBITION QUESTION.

Mr. BERGERON. I would like to ask the Premier if he intends to give Parliament another opportunity this session to discuss the prohibition question?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I must say that I have not given the matter any consideration; but since my hon. friend has become interested in the question, I will consider it.

Mr. WALLACE. That is a very indefinite answer.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not more than the demand, I am sure.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of the Whole to consider certain proposed resolutions respecting granting of the subsidies therein mentioned to the railway companies and towards the construction of the railway also mentioned.—(Mr. Fielding.)

(In the Committee.)

For a railway from some point near Antler Station to a point south of Moose Mountain, Manitoba, not exceeding 50 miles.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I wish to alter this resolution by striking out the words "south of" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "near to."

Mr. WALLACE. What is the explanation of this resolution?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I may perhaps be more familiar with the locality than my hon. colleague. This proposed line is an extension of what is known as the Pipestone or Souris Branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway. That branch runs south-westerly from Brandon to Antler, and the Pipestone branch of the Souris branch starts about 25 miles south-west of Brandon and runs almost due west. The line was built some years ago to a place called Preston near the western boundary of the province of Manitoba, and last year was extended 20 or 30 miles. The intention is to give a bonus to the extension of this line, from the present terminus to a point about 50 miles further west. I may say that the settlers of the Moose Mountain district have perhaps the greatest claim on this Parliament of any people in the west with regard to railway communication. That country was settled a great many years ago, at a time when lines of railway were projected through it, and when the immigration literature of the Government intimated that a line of railway would be built there. The country was settled many years ago, and a great many of the original settlers moved out and others went in under the belief that railway facilities would be provided. Some three or four years ago another exodus began, and it was only upon the most urgent representations that these settlers were induced to remain. I pledged myself, not that I would secure a railway for them, but that I would do my utmost to secure railway communication for them, and I have urged that upon my colleagues ever since I have been a member of the Government. The territory from the western boundary of Manitoba, where this line would terminate, is an extremely fertile section. I do not know a more fertile and promising portion of country, which has not been altogether taken up, than this, and settlers are now coming in, and by the time the railway is constructed almost every available homestead will be taken up along the line of this railway for many miles each side.

Mr. FOSTER. Who operates that road?

Mr. BLAIR.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this an extension of the Canadian Pacific Railway?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is a branch line.

Mr. WALLACE. We ought to have more information.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman must be hard to please. I can only state that people in the localities are applying for it through my hon. friend (Mr. Sifton).

Mr. WALLACE. That makes the matter still worse.

Mr. DAVIN. I agree with the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) that this is one of the most justifiable votes in this long list.

Mr. WALLACE. We have not yet the information we have been asking for.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. What is the information that the hon. gentleman wants?

Mr. WALLACE. Who has made the application for this, is it the Canadian Pacific Railway Company?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I stated that the road was a branch line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and that this will be an extension of that branch.

Mr. WALLACE. It is not an independent company, that proposes to hand it over to the Canadian Pacific Railway?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No; it is part of their system.

Mr. HAGGART. Then the grant ought to be made to the Canadian Pacific Railway for the extension of their line westerly.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know how it could make any difference. A very large number of votes are put in this form.

Mr. FOSTER. No.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Some hon. gentlemen say: No. But I say: Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. Grants to the Canadian Pacific Railway for the extension of their line are given direct to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There are a number of grants not only in the present list but in past lists in which the vote is given without naming any company, but simply stating that it is for a line of railway between certain points. It is quite immaterial. But it sometimes becomes necessary where there are three or four rival companies chartered to build the line, and the Government must satisfy itself which is the best position, and to which it is most desirable in the public interest that the subsidy should go.

Mr. FOSTER. Does my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) mean to say that there are rival companies in this case?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Then what objection can there be to stating the purpose that the Minister has in view? Wherever definiteness can be had, it should be had.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is no necessity for it.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. Minister says that this is not done, but I would refer him to the very first vote in this list:

To the Central Ontario Railway Company, for an extension of their railway from, at or near either Coe Hill or Rathbun Station—

And so on. Then No. 2:

To the Great Northern Railway Company, for a railway between Montcalm and St. Tite Junction.

And the same form is followed in No. 13, No. 14, No. 15 and many others. The Minister should not be vague and indefinite in this resolution and withhold information that should be freely and fairly given. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) speaks about cases where there are rival lines, but there is no suggestion that there is such a state of affairs here. This is simply to extend the branch line of the Canadian Pacific Railway from Antler Station. There are no rival lines. It appears to be a commendable extension, because it opens up a section of country that is not served by a railway at present, so that this would seem to be a justifiable subsidy, if this system is to prevail.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not see any reason why the Minister should not state in this item what he means, unless there is some purpose that we do not know of to be served. I can easily see another purpose that might be served. In this case there is only one line of railway to be extended, the Canadian Pacific Railway. A very embarrassing and undesirable situation could be created if the Government were to enter into a contract with some other company for the construction of that 50 miles. That other company could have a very good chance of making a dicker with the Canadian Pacific Railway, becoming, in fact, charter-mongers, a business with which my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), like myself, does not sympathize. There has been too much of this charter-mongering in connection with these railway subsidies from the day they were first brought in. A small company taking the middle position is able to treat with the larger companies to sell out to them or release their charter to them. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals can easily see that that is a complication that might arise. I am not going to say that it will arise, but it might arise, and you give it a chance to arise by being indefinite in this case. There is too much of this charter-mongering. Men who never expect to put a dollar into railway enterprises, have their names on numerous railway directorates. Why? Not because they want to build railways, but because they want to sell out the franchises. Why give countenance to these men when it is not necessary?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The way in which these resolutions are drawn, is largely a matter of accident, so far as the phraseology is concerned. I have counted, and I can tell my hon. friend there are from twenty to twenty-five similar cases in this and other lists of railway subsidies.

Mr. DAVIN. They ought not to be there.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I say they ought; it is perfectly proper.

Mr. DAVIN. Why is it proper?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What is the object to be gained? The object is to have the line of railway constructed between the two points named.

Mr. BERGERON. No.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, it is.

Mr. BERGERON. No; the object is to hold the charter until some big concern can be got to buy it out.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman cannot find one of the subsidy Bills in which there are not numerous illustrations of the same kind.

Mr. COCHRANE. It is no matter what we did, why don't you do what is right?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I want to say to my humorously indignant friend that there is nothing calling for justification. We have no purpose except to get this road constructed. There is no public interest involved that makes it necessary to change the phraseology as it is here.

Mr. COCHRANE. If the Canadian Pacific Railway is going to build that line and own it, why does not the Minister take the committee into his confidence and say that he is going to give this subsidy to the Canadian Pacific Railway. If there is any reason why it should not be done, why does not the Minister tell it? It appears to me that there is some reason for putting it in this way, or the Minister would not evade the question and put it as it is.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not understand the indignation, humorous or genuine, on this vote. It is not customary, and nobody knows it better than my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) to vote subsidies for parties who do not ask for them. I have asked my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) if the Canadian Pacific Railway had ever put in application for this subsidy, and I understand that they have never done so. That being the case, does he ask us to give this subsidy to the Canadian Pacific Railway? This subsidy is not intended for the benefit of the Canadian Pacific Railway nor any other company, it is intended for the benefit of the country through which that railway will pass.

Mr. BERGERON. Which company asks for it?

The PRIME MINISTER. No company has been asking for it. The people along the line have been asking for it, as they have done in many other cases. My hon. friend knows that at all times, since 1883, the Government have been and are constantly approached by parties representing to the Government that they are very detrimentally situated, that they have no railway in their section, and asking for aid. The only thing the Government can do is to put a subsidy upon the statute-book which any persons can take up if they choose, and put their money and energy into it for the building of that railway. That is our justification. This case is not exceptional, it has been done this year, it has been done every year; and I do not see what is the cause of the opposition to this particular vote.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend will see, if he goes over these subsidies that wherever in a case like that you have one road of which the one you propose to build is an extension, you grant to that road. Now in point of fact, my hon. friend knows that unless the Canadian Pacific Railway builds that 50 miles, no other company can build it. It ends nowhere, and it begins at the terminus of the present Canadian Pacific Railway branch. It is absolutely impossible for any other company to build and operate that 50 miles, it must be done by the Canadian Pacific Railway. That is one statement of the case. Another statement is that the Canadian Pacific Railway has not asked for it. But this vote would not have been asked for at all unless the Minister of the Interior had been sure in his own mind that if it were granted the Canadian Pacific Railway Company would take it up and build it. I think he could not honestly have proposed it but for that. My hon. friend has scruples about forcing the vote upon the company. That is one thing to be considered. On the other hand, there is the point which we raised on this side as to the very objectionable practice of allowing a third party to intervene on a line of railway which can only be extended by the company as part of its railway extension, and consequently opening up a vista for the operations of the charter monger, numerous specimens of which are to be found around Ottawa at any season of the year, and especially during a session of Parliament; and we may meet some of them probably before we get through with these subsidies. Now, in the Central Ontario Company it is to be an extension of their road. In the next case the vote is given to the Great Northern Railway Company to make an extension, it is a subsidy to the Great Northern Railway Company.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Look at number 43, there is a strong instance.

Mr. FOSTER. What is 43? "For a railway in extension of the St. Francis branch of the Témiscouata Railway to the mouth of the St. Francis River." It is the St. Francis branch which is to be extended, whoever owns the St. Francis branch?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is not a grant to the railway company.

Mr. FOSTER. But from the reading of that it is, and if there is a company that is operating a railway and this three miles is to be tacked on, no one else but the company can build and operate that railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Then you would argue against putting the name of the company there which is entitled to receive it?

Mr. FOSTER. Wherever it is possible for the Minister to give the actual name of the company which will do the work, it ought to be done. It never ought to be left open unless there is a complete doubt as to who can or will take it up.

Mr. HAGGART. The leader of the Government appealed to me as to what is the custom. In a great many cases the grant goes directly to the benefit of the main line of railway. Let me give some instances. A railway from Cobourg northerly to connect with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. They may have made arrangements with the Canadian Pacific Railway that after they have built the line the company will take it over and run it. There is another from Pontypool to Haliburton. In these cases it is not voted to the railway which afterwards runs it, but to the company for the purpose of extension. I can understand that. But here is an extension of what is a main branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I think then that the vote always goes to the railway that intends to benefit by it. There is a vote now for an extension of a line of railway in Quebec which I think will benefit the Canadian Pacific Railway, but that is to the company. The Canadian Pacific Railway will not work it or operate it unless the municipality or private individuals contribute for the purpose of the extension. It is for that purpose then that a company builds it and then leases it to the Canadian Pacific Railway or any other company. It may be an indirect benefit to them. But these lines of railway were subsidized by land grants. I see no reason whatever, nor is there any precedent, for the road to be assisted by direct vote.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). I confess I do not understand the desperate antagonism of our hon. friends on the other side to the vote unless the Canadian Pacific Railway is named in the resolution. My anxiety so far as this bonus is concerned, is to see a bonus authorized by this House that will secure the construction of a railway, and for my part I do not care whether it is the Canadian Pacific Railway or some other railway. The Northern Pacific, I may say, has a line of railway very near that point, and I do not know any reason inherent in the circumstances why, if the Northern Pacific made a proposition to extend its line through that territory, it should not do it. I do not think it is particularly likely. I said in answer to the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) that the line would be an actual extension of the Canadian Pacific Railway Pipestone branch; but if any other company came along and offered to build the line, I did not see any reason why it should not have just as good a right to do it as the Canadian Pacific Railway. I do not see any reason why the Government should be bound to give the bonus to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company as against any other company. Supposing the Northern Pacific made a proposition to extend their Belmont branch and to give facilities to a larger section of country, where it would be to the general advantage of the country, I do not see any reason why it should not be accepted by the Government, I do not see any reason why, necessarily, in this particular case, the Canadian Pacific Railway should be made the recipient of that bonus, whether the proposition should appear to be in the public interest or not. There does not seem to be any possible reason why the resolutions should be changed so as to bind the hands of the Government.

Mr. SPROULE. What company holds the charter over the district now?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I doubt if any company does. It is doubtful if the Canadian Pacific Railway have authority; they may have under their ordinary authority to build branch lines, but serious doubts have been cast upon that by eminent legal authorities and I have serious doubts about it myself, without claiming to be an eminent legal authority. I am inclined to doubt that either the Canadian Pacific Railway or the Northern Pacific have authority to build the line. I have not looked at it lately, but my recollection is, that the Northern Pacific have authority to extend their line over the territory. It never occurred to me until this discussion arose, but I think they have. The Canadian Pacific Railway have authority to build branch lines, and, therefore, would have authority to go over the territory. In any event, so far as this committee is concerned, and as far as I am concerned, what we want to get is the railway. I see no special reason why hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House should be so particularly desirous of protecting the interests of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) has given the very strongest possible reason why the Canadian Pacific Railway should be included in this grant.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is; all companies are included in this grant.

Mr. HAGGART. But named and mentioned in this particular vote. The hon. Minister of the Interior asks: Why should it not be possible for the Government to enter into an arrangement with a private company for the purpose of extending this line of road from Antler Creek through this 50 miles of territory? The hon. gentleman saw the difficulty he was in by giving it to this particular company, and he said: Why should we not give it to the Northern Pacific Railway Company, who could build a connection from the Antler Creek station with their line of railway in Manitoba? Does the hon. gentleman suppose that Parliament is going to subsidize a company for the purpose of building a line of railway running alongside the Canadian Pacific Railway up to Antler Creek and cutting out their connection westward one hundred miles? If it were possible for the Government to do that, or to give it to an independent company, the House would hesitate a long while before they would give a subsidy to the company. The only reason for inducing the Government to give a subsidy to the company is, that the people in that section of the country may be benefited, and the only way they can be benefited is by giving it to the Canadian Pacific Railway for an extension of their road in that direction.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. As a member of this committee, I totally and entirely repudiate the idea that, because the Canadian Pacific Railway, or any other company, build a line to a particular point, that nobody else can build a line from that point any farther. I hope the day will never come when this Parliament will adopt the principle that because a railway corporation builds a line of railway up to a certain point, no other company can start from that point and build on. I do not think I ever heard a more preposterous proposition, and I can hardly imagine that the hon. gentleman could have had time to think what he was saying, and what argument he was presenting to this committee, before he got up and addressed such a proposition to it. I do not know of any reason why, if a company gets a charter and builds a line of railway, the whole of Canada has an embargo placed upon it, and that if another railway is to be run from that point, it must be built by the same company. I do not recognize, and I do not propose to recognize, any such principle, as a member of this House. So far as the hon. gentleman's suggestion goes, it is an entirely unfair suggestion, and a suggestion which is not warranted by anything I said, although I do not want my hon. friend to understand that I accuse him of misrepresenting me. He could not have heard me rightly. I do not suppose that the Government would give a bonus to the Northern Pacific Railway Company to extend its line parallel to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. HAGGART. I did not say so. What I said was, that I understood the hon. gentleman to say: Why should not this particular portion of the road be bonused, and the Northern Pacific be induced to build its line up for the purpose of meeting it at Antler Creek?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I said that the Northern Pacific has built a line of railway to the neighbourhood, not far from this particular place. If the Northern Pacific builds a line of railway to Antler station, and we ask Parliament to give a bonus from that point on for 50 miles, we would not be bonusing a line of railway parallel to the Canadian Pacific Railway. They would be building that without any bonus, and it would be for the Government to decide which proposition was in the interest of the country. I see no reason why the committee should now say that no liberty of action should be left to the Government, that, no matter what they thought, willy nilly, the Canadian Pacific must get that bonus, because they built a line to Antler, to tie our hands under all circumstances, no matter what might happen, so that we will be bound to give that bonus to the Canadian Pacific Railway. I do not see any reason why such should be done at all. No reason has been suggested, except the reason, which I think is a most absurd and inadequate reason, which the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) has given, and the reason is, that because the Canadian Pacific Railway runs to Antler station, nobody else should be permitted to build beyond that.

Mr. HAGGART. How far is the Northern Pacific terminus from Antler Creek?

Mr. SIFTON.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Fifty or sixty miles. If the Northern Pacific Railway Company, seeing this provision in the statute, came to the Government and said: We will build the line to Antler Creek, and then we will go on to the Moose Mountain district, I do not see any reason why the Government should not be in a position to consider that proposition. Suppose the Canadian Pacific Railway would say: We will not build that line for $3,200 a mile; and another company said that they would build it. We would then be in a nice position. I am astonished at the position the hon. gentleman is taking. There seems to be no argument in favour of the position that the hon. gentleman is taking, except it be a desire to compel the Government to give that bonus to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and he seems to be acting more for the Canadian Pacific Railway than for the settlers.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton), I think, has changed his tune entirely since he first addressed this committee. In the first place, he said, in explaining this vote, that it would not be possible that the grant should be given to any other company than the Canadian Pacific, that no other railway could utilize this grant. Now we have an entirely different string to his bow. He wants to dangle this grant between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Northern Pacific. He tells us that the Northern Pacific line is within 60 miles of Antler Creek, and that it is possible that an arrangement may be made with the Northern Pacific people to make the extension. I never proposed any such preposterous idea as the hon. gentleman suggests; I did not say that because a railway company builds to that point, no other railway company should be at liberty to extend beyond that point. I was showing the absurdity of a company, which had its railway only 60 or 70 miles away from the terminus of another railway, which could control the whole of its traffic, own it and check it at this very point, being given this grant. When the hon. gentleman asks: Why should we not give it to another company, which might make arrangements with the Northern Pacific to have a connection there?—I asked: Why should the Northern Pacific be induced to parallel another line of railway, which is at present at Antler? The hon. Minister says: Why should we not negotiate with the Northern Pacific, if it is necessary in the interest of the country; its road is built to within 50 or 60 miles of that point. What we object to is not that this bonus is not given to the Canadian Pacific Railway for the purpose of extending the Canadian Pacific Railway, but that it may be open to the Government, if they think proper, to give it to a rival company of the Canadian Pacific Railway, who are on the ground at the present moment, and that they may say to the Canadian Pacific Railway: We will induce another company to make this extension over the ground which you have built upon at the present moment.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman has stated the point, not with absolute accuracy, but with a considerable degree of accuracy; that is to say, that it is desirable that the Government should be in a position to give this bonus to a rival company if the terms offered by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company are not satisfactory.

Mr. HAGGART. You are at liberty to give it to the Northern Pacific without considering the Canadian Pacific Railway at all, or without offering any terms to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is a dreadful thing—that the Government of this country should think of giving a bonus to any other company without considering the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. FOSTER. Has any other company a charter power from this Government or from the provincial government to build that line?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I explained what my view was. My hon. friend need not have got so far afield, because from what I said he might have known that there was no purpose in the mind of the Government in regard to that matter at all. I said that it had never occurred to me whether the Northern Pacific had power to build this line at all until this discussion began, and that now it appeared to me that the Northern Pacific had the power under their charter.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend said a moment ago that you should not tie the Government so that they could not grant the bonus to anybody. There is a reasonable certainty that the Canadian Pacific Railway has power to build branch railways; and there is no other company that has power to build in that section.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Are you sure?

Mr. FOSTER. I am leaving out the two contestants, the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Northern Pacific.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken. I think there is another company.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, it is the duty of the Government to tell us what other company has charter powers to build there.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are not awarding a contract at this moment. We are only getting power.

Mr. FOSTER. The Government is asking power to use this subsidy just as it pleases. This House has a right, before it votes the subsidy, to know what are the possibilities of the case. We want something to go upon. The only reasonable certainty is that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has charter powers to build that line. We say that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company is the only company which can build it unless you show that some other company has charter powers; and if you do not give the subsidy to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, you preclude yourself from giving it to any other company if the Canadian Pacific Railway Company does not undertake it. What other company has these charter powers?

The PRIME MINISTER. It seems to me that after all this discussion we ought to know where we are, and I think we do. The position taken by the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) is that this is a commendable railway. The hon. member for West Assinibola (Mr. Davin) also stated that he was in favour of this railway. Therefore, we have the fact that it is unambiguously admitted to be a desirable work. We take power to have this railway built by a company that will undertake to do the work. This is done, not for the purpose of assisting this or that company, but for the purpose of serving the interests of the people who want the railway. The position taken by hon. gentlemen opposite is this: "We do not object to the grant, but we want to have it given to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company by name, and to nobody else. If better terms are offered by another company, we do not wish the Government to exercise their discretion, for which they will be responsible to Parliament, but we wish to bind them in advance to the Canadian Pacific Railway." There is a strange thing about this. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company have not asked for this subsidy. They ought to know, like everybody else in the North-west, that this would be a valuable railway. Without casting any reproach on the Canadian Pacific Railway, I think I can say that they have not been slow in the past to ask for rights and privileges. In this case they have not done so. Hon. gentlemen opposite say: "You must give the subsidy to them and to no one else; we do not care whether they have asked for it or not." I do not know the conditions of the case. I assume, however, from the statements made by parties who ought to know, that this is a commendable railway. If hon. gentlemen opposite want to take that position that though commendable the scheme is to be impaired by undesirable conditions, we cannot help it, though for my part I do not think the position is reasonable. I do not think they can seriously ask us to give a subsidy to a company which does not ask for it. What guarantee have we that they will build that railway if we give them the subsidy which they have never asked for? But there is one way of getting over the difficulty. The hon. gentlemen opposite can move to have the vote altered in order to have the subsidy paid to the Canadian Pacific Railway. If the hon. gentleman will make that motion, he will be within his right.

Mr. WALLACE. The statement of the First Minister has completely misrepresented the attitude taken by gentlemen on this side of the House. He says that we say that you must give the subsidy to the Canadian Pacific Railway and to nobody else. We have never taken that attitude. The position we take is that the Government should give an honest statement of the case. They have not do so in this instance. This railway, if it is anything, is an extension of the Pipestone branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and that is what the statement should say; but it does not. The Minister of the Interior says the Northern Pacific may jump in there any day, and demand the right to build this railway; are we going to refuse them that right if the Canadian Pacific Railway Company does not ask for the subsidy? The Northern Pacific cannot jump in 50 or 60 or 100 miles from its present line to this point. The First Minister tells us that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has never made any request for this subsidy. Who has made the request? We are entitled to have the papers in regard to this vote laid on the Table of this House. The hon. First Minister himself said some years ago, in a similar case, that it was impossible to proceed until the papers were laid on the Table. We ask the Minister of Railways to place the papers on the Table.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What papers?

Mr. WALLACE. Any papers upon which this grant is based. He says there has been no communication from the Canadian Pacific Railway and there has certainly been none from the Northern Pacific. There is no other road that has a charter reaching that point or that could ask for this subsidy.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What papers does the hon. gentleman allude to?

Mr. WALLACE. Any papers, any petitions, any requests, any letters requesting that this subsidy of $160,000 be voted. Give use some justification, some basis upon which the Minister came to the conclusion that he would be justified in asking this vote. Has he any such documents?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. WALLACE. Just what I thought.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Therefore I would have some difficulty in producing any.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Mr. WALLACE. Therefore as no railway company or individual or corporation has ever asked for this grant at all, it looks like an election scheme. The Government can say to the electors: Though you did not ask us, we have given a subsidy for a railway through your country. We want to know who has asked for this subsidy. The Minister of Railways says that the railway company has not asked for it, that he has not a line or a document or a request from a corporation or individual, or any petition or request of any kind asking for this grant.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You are going too far.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman says he has no documents.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. WALLACE. How am I going too far? If the hon. gentleman has any documents, he is bound to place them on the Table.

The PRIME MINISTER. I supposed my hon. friend was in favour of the road any way?

Mr. WALLACE. The right hon. gentleman has exaggerated the statement I made. What I asked was, looking at the map, when we were voting last night hundreds of thousands of dollars for parallel lines of railway that could not be justified by any necessities of the people—

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. You did not oppose one.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman is making a statement which is as inaccurate as any he ever made.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. What one did you oppose?

Mr. WALLACE. I opposed the whole scheme on general principles. I opposed almost every one of those on the first page. The hon. Postmaster General, I assume, was not here, and yet not having been here and not knowing what position I took, he says I did not oppose one.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Did you make a motion?

Mr. WALLACE. Another question. I shall make a motion and compel the hon. Minister to put himself on record. He will have more difficulty explaining to the electorate of North York his votes and course, and less time to spend with Sim. Hewitt and the rest of the gang in West Huron and the other constituencies of Ontario, where he hides himself in the back room of a hotel, when other Ministers are out on the stump.

Mr. McMULLEN. Order, order. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. WALLACE—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. WALLACE. He did not raise a point of order.

Mr. McMULLEN. Yes I did.

Mr. WALLACE—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. The hon. member for North Wellington distinctly declared that he rose to a point of order, and it was the duty of the hon. gentleman to sit down.

Mr. WALLACE. I want to—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman must sit down as well as I.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. The hon. gentleman must obey the Chair.

Mr. McMULLEN. My point of order is that the hon. gentleman is supposed to be discussing the granting of bonuses to railways, and in place of doing that he is now discussing the West Huron election. Is that in order?

Mr. WALLACE. On the point of order. I beg to say that I am in the judgment of every member when I say that the hon. member for North Wellington got up three times and called order, and he has no right, Mr. Chairman, to assume your functions.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I must ask the hon. gentleman to confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. WALLACE. I was doing so. I was setting myself right and have the right to do so, and I shall not give up any of my rights. With regard to the point of order raised by the hon. member for North Wellington, it is like his usual statements, too insignificant to be noticed. I shall not depart from the rule. I was discussing the question before the House when I was interrupted by the hon. Postmaster General, who had no right to interrupt me, as you have often ruled, Sir, without my consent. I gave no such consent. He said that I had not made objection to those votes. I replied that he was not here when those votes were passed through the House, and could not possibly have known whether I objected or not, and further that I did object more strenuously perhaps than any other member of the House. I said further that it would be better for the Postmaster General to attend to his duties in this House, that he would have some work cut out for him when he went back to his constituencies in the North Riding of York in attempting to justify his votes and the course he had taken in the West Huron election, where other men came out in the open, and he was as usual secret in the back room of a hotel. I was proceeding to discuss the question, and had no desire to get away from it, and it was only when interrupted by the Postmaster General which with irrelevant and inaccurate statements that I felt compelled to reply to him.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Perhaps I may have to go a little out of the record too. I do not desire to interrupt the deliberations of this committee by embarking in a discussion not pertinent to it, nor does the occasion itself offer an opportunity of dealing with slanderous insinuations, utterly false, founded on absolute imagination—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. There is a point of order before the Chair and not decided yet. We were discussing the granting of certain railway subsidies, and ought to confine the discussion as much as possible to these subsidies. It would be much better if hon. members would not interrupt, except with the consent of the hon. member who has the floor. He should be asked whether he consents to the interruption, and I hope the discussion will proceed on those lines in the future.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I desire to make one observation, in order that the remarks of the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) shall not go on record without being contradicted. He alluded to a person named Sim Hewitt. I can say that, to my knowledge I never saw the man in my life.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. To his second observation—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. member for West York has the floor. If he gives way to the Postmaster General—

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He abandons the floor.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. At the same time, I think it would not be absolutely irregular, the statements having been made, that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) should have an opportunity of denying them. I think that then, it would be right to proceed with the discussion on the railway subsidies.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. To the first specific statement made by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) I have given an emphatic denial. As to the insinuation that my action in West Huron consisted in secreting myself in a hotel, I say that my sole action in that riding consisted in addressing meetings of electors publicly, openly and honourably, and discussing the issues of the day; and I here challenge the hon. member for West York or anybody else to prove what he has insinuated. I challenge an inquiry.

Mr. WALLACE. The Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) has evidently lost his temper. I was not only referring to West York, but to other places as well. In North Grey, I was present—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not think there is any use in discussing these personal questions. It would be much better to continue discussion of the railway subsidies.

Mr. WALLACE. I quite agree with you, Mr. Chairman. The challenge is like many other challenges of the Postmaster General—a vain and empty boast. I know what he did in North Grey—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. WALLACE. I know what the hon. gentleman did in North Grey—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. I would invite hon. members to discuss the question before the Chair. An assertion has been made and has been denied, and, so far as the hon. member (Mr. Mulock) is personally concerned, it must be accepted.

Mr. WALLACE. I am not unwilling to accept his denial, so far as West Huron is concerned—and that was the extent of it. But I know what occurred in Owen Sound and throughout North Grey—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. WALLACE. That is all I have to say about that; and perhaps hon. gentlemen will permit me to go on with the discussion, which is what I am anxious to do. In fact, I had not departed from it, and had no desire to do so had not the Postmaster General interjected other matter. But in all such cases he will find me ready to take a hand in the discussion. I will not make any statements that I cannot prove and those that I make will not make him any more comfortable—he may be sure of that. Now, with regard to this resolution for a subsidy from Antler station, why is it not put in the same form as Resolution No. 43, to which the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals invites our attention:

For a railway in extension of the St. Francis Branch of the Témiscouata Railway to the mouth of the St. Francis River, a distance not exceeding 3 miles.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is not a grant to any specific company.

Mr. WALLACE. We do not care for that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. But that is the point made.

Mr. WALLACE. That was one point. Why does not the hon. Minister say "from the terminus of a branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway"? There is no other road there to be extended. Hon. gentlemen opposite say: We must not make a hard and fast bargain with the Canadian Pacific Railway, because, in the first place, the Canadian Pacific Railway never asked for this subsidy. We have asked the Minister of Railways and Canals who did ask for it, and he is unable to tell us.

Mr. MULOCK.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not. What business have you to make such a statement as that?

Mr. WALLACE. I will ask the hon. gentlemen (Mr. Blair) to address the Chair, and, even though he does sit close to the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock), I would ask him not to follow that hon. gentleman's example and lose his temper. We must observe the rules of debate, Mr. Chairman. I am sorry to have to call your attention so repeatedly to the violation of the rules by hon. gentlemen who should set an example to the House.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I am very glad that the hon. member (Mr. Wallace) has seen fit to call my attention to this point. I am sorry to say that every day the rule is broken, observations being made not to the Chair, as the rules require, but directly to hon. members. I invite hon. members to address themselves to the Chair.

Mr. WALLACE. I shall be very glad if the few remarks I have made, calling forth your very proper observations, Mr. Chairman, have the effect of producing better order and closer adherence to the rules, the observation of which is so necessary for the proper conduct of business. Now, to resume—we asked for the papers in this case, and the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals said: What papers? I said: The papers, documents, petitions of individuals or corporations asking for this vote. The hon. gentleman said: We have no such papers. If there were such papers it would be our duty to call for them in order that we might see what justification there is for voting this subsidy of $160,000. The right hon. First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) said that I agreed to this subsidy. I agreed to this extent, that, according to the map, there is a large extent of country which, I am informed, is well settled and fertile, which is not well supplied with railway facilities. If that is the case, this subsidy would be more justifiable than subsidies we voted yesterday to parallel existing lines of railway. The opening up of new country is the only case in which the vote of a subsidy should be justified at all. I do not alter the opinion I expressed yesterday that the system of voting these subsidies should be abandoned, and we should only vote a subsidy where the case is so clear and where there are such strong special reasons for voting it as to justify Parliament in granting a subsidy.

Mr. SPROULE. My object in asking the information I did from the Minister of Railways and Canals was for the purpose of ascertaining whether there was any company that had made a proposal to build this road. I remember that the late Sir John A. Macdonald suggested the principle upon which these bonuses should be granted. He said that if there was a company who held a charter for the route, and which had made a definite and satisfactory proposal to build the road, the name of the company should be put in the resolution when the bonus was first voted; but if there were two or three companies holding charters over the same line and it was not decided which one would go on and build, then it was to be left an open question and the name of no company was to be mentioned, or a third, where the locality needed a railway and the public had asked for it, but there was no charter for the route. In this case I wanted to ascertain whether there was any company asking for the subsidy, or any memorial or petition from any corporation asking for it. Now, I can understand readily no company being named in this subsidy if no company has agreed to build it, or proposed to build it, although it may be a desirable road to build in the public interest. My point is that we should as much as possible prevent the possibility of charter brokerage or some person who may become a bonus monger coming in and working a racket for the purpose of making some money out of it, after getting control of this bonus and then going to companies to negotiate with them for a transfer of the bonus.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I could not state with certainty as to whether the Canadian Pacific Railway have at present legal authority to go on and construct this line. That is a matter that will no doubt be very carefully considered. I know no reason at present why, if the Canadian Pacific Railway have the power and if they are willing to build it, they should not have the opportunity of doing so.

Mr. SPROULE. Then there is the question, What corporation has been asking for this bonus, or by what kind of a memorial was an application made? That would bring out the information which it is desirable the House should have.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not understand what my hon. friend means about a charter-monger getting control of this subsidy. I do not understand how that can be done. There is only one way in which a company can get control of any subsidy, that is when it enters into a contract with the Government for the purpose of building the road; when that contract is entered into, then the Government engages that the subsidy shall be paid to it. There is no such condition arising under this which calls for action by the Government. We had no memorial before us nor application from any railway company; but we were assured by the Minister of the Interior that the people in that neighbourhood earnestly desired that aid should be offered for the construction of this line, and they believed that if a moderate aid was offered it would lead to the construction of the railway. The Minister of the Interior made those representations to us. It is quite evident from what he has stated to this committee that his representations in that regard were entirely well founded, and we concluded it was desirable that a road should be built. Now, is the House going to be told that a member of the Government may not make representation to his colleagues, that the Government may not inquire into and report upon them, and offer a subsidy for the building of a line which they are satisfied from the representations made to them by their colleagues that the railway would be in the public interest? I cannot imagine that there can be any objection to that, it has been done over and over again. It has been done not only in the case of a railway which involves an expenditure of $150,000, but in the case of railways, one of which was referred to last evening, and which was aided in 1884 to the extent of $2,500,000. There was no company incorporated for the purpose of building the short line across the state of Maine, and no memorial was presented to the Government in its favour.

Mr. SPROULE. I want to say that I did not condemn the principle that because there was no charter there should be no grant. I asked for information for this reason, that sometimes individuals get control of these subsidies, and there may be other railway companies that have charters in the locality, and they go and negotiate and lay off one against the other, and say: We have power to get this charter; will you agree with me to build it? It was to head off these charter brokers that I wanted to ascertain who were the promoters of this railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We stated an hour ago that we acted on the representations of the Minister of the Interior.

Mr. DAVIN. I do not oppose this vote, as I am anxious that the road should be built as quickly as possible. If I have any fault to find with the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals it is that, from the account he gives, it does not seem to me that he has taken means to see that the work is pushed forward quickly, because all he has done is to come here and ask us to give him a vote.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I could not very well do anything until I had the vote.

Mr. DAVIN. I think the hon. Minister could. For instance, the hon. Minister could have spoken to these parties who would have been inclined to build this line, and he could have asked them if they were prepared to go on with it and be in a position to tell us. He ought to be in a position, not to say only that he wants the money in order that he may negotiate, but that he wants the money to carry out such and such an arrangement.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That would be objected to.

Mr. DAVIN. Neither the Government nor the Canadian Pacific Railway are justified in remaining even where this extension would leave them. When the Canadian Pacific Railway was built, Regina was made the capital of the North-west Territories, and the Government sold the town sites, selling it to the people upon the assurance that it was to be the capital of the Territories, and not only the capital, but that it was to be one of the ends of a division of the Canadian Pacific Railway. But in 1883 the Canadian Pacific Railway took away the end of the division. Thereupon a deputation came to Ottawa, saw Sir John Macdonald, and Sir John Macdonald sent for Mr. Stephen, now Lord Mountstephen, the then president of the line. Sir John Macdonald said to him: "Why have you taken the end of the division away from Regina? It was understood that Regina was to be the end of the division. You have done very wrong and it must go back again." Mr. Stephen agreed to bring it back, but he said: You will give me a day to go to Montreal. He went to Montreal, and upon coming back, he saw the deputation with Sir John Macdonald, and he said: "Sir John Macdonald, I am powerless to bring back the end of the division." It is unnecessary to state what reasons he gave. It is sufficient to say that he said he could not do it without doing great injury to the line. Then he said to this deputation, in the presence of Sir John Macdonald, by way of compensation to those parties, some of them gentlemen from the province of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, who had invested thousands of dollars in Regina property: "As we cannot bring back the end of the division we will extend the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, loop it down and bring it around by way of Pipestone and up to Regina." If the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals will look at the Canadian Pacific Railway map he will find that this line is projected right to Regina, and so on to connect with Saskatoon and Prince Albert, which would make it a complete commercial and colonizing line. What the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals should do is to take money to build, not merely fifty miles, but to build a line right to Regina. If the hon. Minister will do me the favour of looking at the map he will find that the line is projected by the Canadian Pacific Railway. What I want, in the interest of the North-west Territories, and in the interest of those who have gone in there to settle is as great railway facilities as it is possible to obtain, and I want to see the line built. In reference to the question that has been raised here to-day, it seems to be an important question, and I do not think that, notwithstanding what the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) says, and notwithstanding that there are people of great eminence connected with this House who have confidence in the system of getting a credit of this sort to enable the Government to make a bargain with whomsoever they please, I do not think it is a desirable way. I see the danger of granting the vote in its present form. I am not saying this because it is a Liberal Government; I would say the same thing if a Conservative Government were in power. Everybody knows that I criticised the Conservative Government pretty freely. This leaves it open to some man to come in, make a deal, and if it ultimately ends in building the road at all, it will enable him to go to a large company for so much money from that company, become a director, and have the line built. I am in favour of seeing the line built, and I shall support the vote.

For a railway on a point of the Intercolonial Railway at or near Halifax to a point on the Central Railway in the county of Lunenburg, not exceeding 20 miles.

Mr. KAULBACH. Mr. Chairman, I cannot say too much in favour of this proposed extension of the Nova Scotia Southern Railway east from New Germany to Halifax, as by it New Germany, Foster Settlement and New Ross, excellent agricultural districts, will be opened up or developed, now lying comparatively dormant owing to the want of proper facilities to reach a market, the carriage roads, for want of repair, being next to impassable.

The resolution refers to this extension as intending to connect with the Intercolonial Railway, which I think is unwise, and as I feel I am better acquainted with the geography of that section of country than most others, I may be permitted to suggest that after its leaving New Germany and reaching New Ross a beautiful section of farming country, offering inducements to settlers, that the road make a detour east for Halifax instead of the Intercolonial, in order to gain connection with Chester Basin, Chester and Hubbert's Cove, important points for business, and rendered attractive as favourite resorts, owing to the beauty and variety of nature's endowments, and the attractiveness of the scene, which can only be appreciated or realized by a personal visit. Among all the towns in Nova Scotia as favourite resorts, there are few fairer or more attractive than Chester and its environments, a proof of which is given by the way it is thronged with tourists every year.

By this route the head water of St. Margaret's Bay is reached, which, in addition to the many benefits and conveniences this thickly-settled section would receive, it would contribute to the road a large percentage of passenger and freight traffic.

If the road as proposed is to be carried from New Ross to connect with the Inter-colonial away from Halifax, it will pass through an uninteresting and worthless country without making the road any shorter, and, worse than all, it would be suicidal to the trade and the best interests of the country, and would deprive Chester and the adjacent places I have named, of all benefits, or any connection whatever with this proposed road in any way.

I therefore urge that a due regard be had to what I have stated, and that the road after leaving New Ross, connect with Chester and the adjacent places named, and from thence, as near as practicable, direct to Halifax, as being in the best interests of the country and all concerned.

It being One o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

House resumed at Three o'clock.

To the Ottawa and Gatineau Railway Company, for their line of railway in and through the city of Hull, Que., not exceeding 4 miles.

Mr. CLANCY. Is that an extension of the road?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is to bring the Ottawa & Gatineau Railway opposite Nepean Point, where they have to come in order to cross the river and get into Ottawa.

To the Edmonton, Yukon and Pacific Railway Company, for a railway from the town of South Edmonton, N.W.T., to North Edmonton, and thence westerly towards the Yellow Head Pass, a distance not exceeding 50 miles.

Mr. CLANCY. Is that an extension of a line already built?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, it is an extension of a line already built, although it is not likely to be prosecuted or extended by the same company which now runs up to Edmonton. It is an extension into a country which is a rich agricultural district, and with a view of inducing settlement.

To the Bay of Quinté Railway Company, for an extension of the company's line in a westerly direction from Deseronto for a distance not exceeding 2 miles; also for an extension of the company's line from its present terminus at Tweed in a northerly direction, not exceeding 5 miles, in all 7 miles—subsidies payable on each of the sections last mentioned as each of such sections may be completed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I wish to amend this by adding after the word "from" on the second line.

the words "a point at or near Richmond boundary road near." Also after the word "payable" on the fourth line, to add these words "on progress estimates as may be, from time to time, prescribed by the Governor in Council."

These provisions are being made for a couple of little branches that are to connect the present line with important mineral sections, and it is the desire of the company and the people interested in the Deseronto enterprise that they should have the opportunity of selecting the most desirable point at which connection may be made.

To the Ontario, Belmont and Northern Railway Company, for an extension of their railway from its present terminus at Iron Mines in a north-westerly direction, a distance not exceeding 5 miles; and also for an extension of the company's railway southerly, from the present southern terminus thereto to the Central Ontario Junction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, a distance not exceeding 2 miles, but the last mentioned aid for the said 2 miles of railway shall not be granted in case the Railway Committee of the Privy Council finds that adequate running powers on fair terms cannot be secured to the company over that portion of the line of the Central Ontario Railway between the present southerly end of the Ontario, Belmont and Northern Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company's line at Central Ontario Junction.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The word "cannot" is an error, and should be "can," on the eighth line, and add the words "subsidies payable on each of the sections mentioned as each of said sections may be completed."

To the Lake Erie and Detroit River Railway Company, for a line of railway from Ridgetown, Ont., to St. Thomas, in the said province, a distance not exceeding 44 miles; this subsidy to be payable only in the event of adequate running rights over the Canada Southern Railway between the two points above mentioned not being granted to the first mentioned company on terms to be approved by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council.

Mr. CLANCY. I want to ask the hon. Minister what the object is of tying this subsidy up by a condition that most people know to be impossible with regard to running powers on the Canada Southern Railway between St. Thomas and Ridgetown?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The question is one which we did not feel we could definitely determine off-hand. If it is possible to secure adequate and sufficient running powers for the Lake Erie and Detroit Railway over the Michigan Central from Ridgetown to St. Thomas, then that would be a proper thing for us to do, and it would be our duty to do it, seeing that the two roads would be practically paralleling one another for nearly their whole mileage. We want to protect ourselves, because if proper and sufficient running rights can be arranged, if the state of business on the Michigan Central is such as to admit of local roads using it, without prejudice to its interests and the interests of the people, why should they not do it? The Railway Committee will give that matter every consideration before the question is determined.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman is now placing a power in the hands of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council that is absolutely unnecessary. I hope he goes further than considering the mere convenience of the two companies. There are the rights of the people to be considered. What is the case? The Lake Erie and Detroit Railway runs from the town of Walkerville along the lake shore to the town of Ridgetown. In the early history of the country, as is well known, the settlements were along the lake and rivers; but as lines of railway were built, they ran at a distance from the lake; and the settlements along the lake shore and towns became in a backward condition, and people had to drive long distances to reach the trunk line of railway. My hon. friend (Mr. Blair) has an intimate acquaintance with the railways in the western peninsula and he knows that they are trunk lines.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is so.

Mr. CLANCY. The Canada Southern and the Canadian Pacific and the Grand Trunk are all trunk lines. There is a road that was subsidized partly by the Dominion Government and partly by the province of Ontario, running from Sarnia to the Rondeau, a point on Lake Erie. The whole traffic must depend upon connections with every one of the trunk lines. But the trunk lines do not pretend to run on a schedule with this road, which is owned by a company independent of them all. The Canada Southern, above all other roads, pays no attention to the local traffic. There is absolutely no defence for tying up this subsidy until it pleases these companies to give running powers, for running powers cannot be got that are satisfactory.

Mr. BEATTIE. There is another point that my hon. friend has not brought out. The Lake Erie and Detroit road have lately acquired the London and Port Stanley. To enable them to form a connection, they would require to build from Ridgetown to St. Thomas. The Michigan Central, as is well known, is a part of the great Vanderbilt system, and any running rights they gave would be subject to any regulations the Michigan Central might make. There is a large coal business done between Conneaut in Ohio, and Port Stanley. They have enormous steamers that bring twenty-seven railroad cars loaded with coal, making two trips a day, and they have no means of reaching their western branches, that run from Ridgetown to Walkerville, and from Rondeau to Sarnia. It is only by having a line from Ridgetown to St. Thomas that they can form a complete connection with their branches. It is only a local road, one built by local enterprise, that will look after the local business, as the Michigan Central is a through road entirely, and does not pay sufficient attention to the local trade. It is necessary that this should be constructed in order that the eastern and western roads should be connected.

Mr. CLANCY. I think the Minister should be reasonable. I do not wish to continue this debate, but I think that what I urge upon him is perfectly fair. I can understand that the Canada Southern, for reasons which appear to them satisfactory, oppose this; but beyond that there is no reason against what I urge, on the ground of paralleling existing lines. It is simply a case of a local road paralleling a through road.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would be glad to meet the wishes of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy). The case from a local point of view has very considerable merit. But the hon. gentleman must see that the Government is in this position—the question has been brought up, and the Canada Southern have made strong representations to the Government upon it. They say there is no necessity for building another line—

Mr. CLANCY. That is nothing new.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They have stated, and, I believe, with all sincerity, that there is no occasion for duplicating this line, that they can afford all the necessary convenience and appliances which the local road requires to do business between Ridgetown and St. Thomas. In the face of representations of that kind, and, at all events, until we—

Mr. CLANCY. Will the hon. Minister permit me? I would ask him if he thinks that a quarter from which to take representations on this subject? It is not an independent source, as the hon. gentleman knows. It is perfectly natural that they should speak as they have done. But surely the hon. Minister ought to give us some other reason than the statement of an interested party. Local municipalities that were already burdened with railway bonuses, came to the aid of this road, and purpose burdening still further to secure its construction. Against this fact, showing the importance of, and necessity for, the road, is it reasonable to take as a guide the representations of those who are interested in opposing it?

The PRIME MINISTER. This is a very important question, and I must confess that I have some sympathy with the views presented by my hon. friend (Mr. Clancy). We might as well dispose of this question frankly. My hon. friend knows that it has been objected, that if this were to pass without qualification, as my hon. friend proposes, it would mean the paralleling of an existing railway for a considerable distance, and that at a distance of perhaps not more than 6 miles from the existing road. I would like to have the views of my hon. friend as to what reason there can be for that condition of things.

Mr. CLANCY. This road, in going from Walkerville to Ridgetown, parallels the Michigan Central in the sense that it goes through the Lake Shore district, taking in the whole district of country that is seeking an outlet on the east. As it approaches St. Thomas, it comes more nearly to the Canada Southern than at any western point. If that were the starting point of the road, I could understand more force in the hon. gentleman's contention, but that is practically the outlet, and so the paralleling has not the same effect.

The PRIME MINISTER. As I understand my hon. friend (Mr. Clancy), he says that, owing to the condition of things which exist in the locality, the Canada Southern ought to be paralleled at a distance of from 2 to 6 miles. That is a position to which, for my part, I will give very earnest consideration. I do not know that we should be disposed to go so far as he wants us to go—that is, to take away this condition—but for my part, I would go as far as possible to meet the views of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) remained until two o'clock this morning, in the hope of having this resolution come up. But he is not able to be here at this time. I would ask the Minister of Railways and Canals to allow this item to stand over until the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) is in his place, as the road under discussion is entirely in his constituency. I know he has something to say about it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would gladly accede to the hon. gentleman's request if it were possible; but I have had a conversation recently with the member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey), who said he wished to be here. I told him it was impossible for us to hold the grant if he was not here, particularly as I knew his views, which correspond with those which the hon. member has expressed. I am glad to find the hon. gentleman has the same views, and they will have due consideration by the Government when the matter comes to be considered. Certainly it is not the policy of the Government to subsidize the construction of parallel lines so close together. The best we can say under the circumstances is that which has been said by the right hon. Premier on the subject.

To the Kingston and Pembroke Railway Company, for the construction of branches from the company's main line to the iron mine at Bluff Point and to the Martele mine in the county of Renfrew, not exceeding 5 miles.

Mr. BERGERON. Last year we had before the Committee of Railways and Canals some very serious matters about this railway. Could my hon. friend tell me whether these differences among the shareholders have been settled?

Mr. BRITTON. They have all been settled, all the arrears of interest on the old bonds were paid up to the 1st of January of the present year, and a new issue of bonds was made carrying interest at 3 per cent for the residue of the term, and preferred stock was issued to the holders of the 6 per cent bonds for the amount represented by the difference between the 3 per cent, the new bonds carried, and the 6 per cent, the old bonds carried. So far as I know, every one is satisfied, and the road now is entering, I think, upon a new career.

Mr. BERGERON. A good paying basis.

Mr. BRITTON. It is going to be nip and tuck, of course, with the road.

Mr. BERGERON. It didn't pay before, I understood?

Mr. BRITTON. No, it did not pay interest. This will help the road. There is a mine that is now proposed to be opened up, and they desire to build the road to it. They intend to bring out large quantities of ore, and send at first a large quantity to Hamilton.

Mr. WALLACE. Are these branches for the purpose of carrying the ore?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Doing all the business that may possibly offer. I may admit that the business which is to be brought to the main line by these extensions is chiefly ore and wood.

For a railway from the village of Parry Sound extending northerly towards Sudbury, not exceeding a distance of 20 miles.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is a very strong opinion in western Ontario, particularly in Toronto, that lines of railway should be built in the direction of Sudbury, particularly as it was alleged that if constructed in that direction they will tend to open up a very valuable country which, up to the present time is, comparatively speaking, undeveloped. It is exceedingly valuable as a timber country, and likely to be found to contain a good deal of mineral wealth.

Mr. WALLACE. There is water communication there which is much more suitable for the timber wealth than a railroad would be. I think the hon. gentleman will find that this demand from Toronto for a road is not for the purpose of opening up this country, but to have a through line, first to Parry Sound and then to continue on to Sudbury.

Mr. McCORMICK. This is a country I am very familiar with, and I congratulate the Minister of Railways and Canals on offering this subsidy. The country which will be developed by this line is very rich in minerals, very rich in timber, and is besides a first-class agricultural country, and this line will tend to develop it in all these respects. I assure the hon. gentleman that I heartily endorse the grant.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like permission to go back to No. 44, and to get some explanations about it, as I was not present when it came up.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is a small shortage in respect of a part of the Canada Eastern Railway which was subsidized under a former law. The hon. gentleman may remember that two extensions of the Canada Eastern were sanctioned, and a subsidy voted for 10 miles covering those two extensions, one to Bluebrook and the other from a point on the main line to Nelson. That portion of the country has been completely left out of railway connection with the Canada Eastern. When these lines were built it was found when they came to be measured that they were two miles and a quarter longer than the mileage which the grant had covered. The grant was for 10 miles, and 12½ miles was taken.

Mr. FOSTER. In reference to vote No. 41, I would like to ask a question or two. Who compose the company connected with that road?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The company is one which was incorporated a couple of years ago, if my memory serves me, at the request of, or at the instance of the corporation of Edmonton. They contracted some liabilities in connection with this road.

Mr. FOSTER. The town of Edmonton?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. I think, perhaps, that, not only a more detailed but a much more accurate statement might be made by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver), who is thoroughly familiar with the subject.

Mr. FOSTER. Could my hon. friend give me the details in reference to the personnel of the company, the nature of the country through which the road runs, and as to whether or not we are to get through ultimately by way of the Calgary and Edmonton road?

Mr. OLIVER. Was the hon. member (Mr. Foster) addressing me?

Mr. FOSTER. I am afraid I shall have to address myself to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver).

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I could give the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) sufficient information.

Mr. McCORMICK.

Mr. FOSTER. I noticed the distressed and pained look that came suddenly upon the hon. Minister when it occurred to him that the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) might not be in the House. I would like to hear from the Minister, for the time being, from Alberta, as to the company, as to the road, how it can be started from Edmonton, and whether it is a continuation of the road that runs from Calgary to Edmonton?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I could give that information.

Mr. FOSTER. As the hon. Minister does not know, the hon. member for Alberta may, perhaps, come to his rescue.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Although the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) may be intending to be humorous, this is rather small-sized play on the part of an hon. gentleman who has been Minister of Finance. I have acquainted myself sufficiently with the facts and could furnish them to the committee, but I thought the committee would very much prefer to hear from the hon. gentleman representing the locality, who knows, of his own knowledge, all the facts which are necessary to be furnished, and who has furnished me with much of the information which I would give to the committee.

Mr. OLIVER. The charter that is now held is a continuation of the charter that was secured by the municipality of Edmonton some years ago under the name of the Edmonton District Railway. It is not a part of the Calgary and Edmonton charter. The charter was obtained for the purpose of securing an extension of the railway from the end of the present Calgary and Edmonton line south of the Saskatchewan River, across the river to the north side, and for the construction of radial branches in different directions. The charter was acquired from the town of Edmonton the year before last by a company.

Mr. FOSTER. Who acquired it?

Mr. OLIVER. The present company. Of course, I cannot tell who the shareholders of the company are. Hon. gentlemen will know the names of the incorporators better than I do. The statute will show the names; I do not know them.

Mr. FOSTER. Probably the hon. Minister knows them.

Mr. OLIVER. The gentleman with whom we dealt was Mr. Pugsley. Mr. Pugsley, I believe, was the promoter of the present company; he acquired the charter of the Edmonton District Railway Company, and last year secured an extension of these rights so as to make the charter extend to the Pelly River, by way of Peace River. At this session he acquired an amendment to the charter, providing that the company may build a branch through the Yellow Head Pass. That is, I presume, an answer to the hon. gentleman's question.

Mr. FOSTER. This vote is for fifty miles. Does this carry it to the Yellow Head Pass?

Mr. OLIVER. No. This will only carry it across the river and about to the limit of the surrounding agricultural settlements. It is about 250 miles from Edmonton to the Yellow Head Pass; perhaps not quite that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If you go to the Peace River it will be 520 miles.

Mr. FOSTER. It is always a good thing in railway promoting for a company to have a large prospect ahead of it by getting upon a travelled route, or what may become a travelled route. What is the information that the Government itself has in reference to those who make up the company?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The representations which have been made to the Government by the persons who are representing the company are that the company would be prepared to satisfy the Government, in the event of the bonus being granted by Parliament, that they would carry the work to a successful completion. Of course, the matter has not been gone into between the representatives of the Government and this company as yet with any degree of fulness. It is not customary to do that until the Government is placed in a position by Parliament to contract, if they are satisfied with the accuracy it receives.

Mr. BERGERON. Who is there in the company beside Mr. Pugsley?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know the personnel of the company. Mr. Pugsley is the solicitor, as far as I am aware, acting for these gentlemen. He has had a good deal of interest in the north-western country. I think he was associated with his brother, the promoter and builder of the Regina, Long Lake and Qu'Appelle road, which road is in successful operation, and he is prepared to satisfy the Government of the ability of his company to build the road.

Mr. BERGERON. When was the company incorporated?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This company was incorporated, I think, at the present session. At all events, if it was incorporated previously, it came this session and got some powers or an extension of its corporate powers.

Mr. BERGERON. Well, then, we ought to be able to get the names of the promoters.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, I did not interest myself sufficiently to inquire, or to ascertain, who the shareholders or the individual persons are who are connected with the company.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. Minister must have had some basis upon which he brought down this vote. He must surely have satisfied himself as to the bona fides and power of the company. If so, he could not help but find out who the members of the company were, or was it that he had sufficient confidence in the solicitor, that whatever he said went? Surely the hon. Minister can give us an explanation?

Mr. BERGERON. This is a matter of over $320,000. The Minister should give us the petition in which the grounds for this vote are set out. Can the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) tell us whether the consideration given to the town of Edmonton was a money consideration or a consideration of an extension of road? Was it a purchase or a prospective extension of road that led to the transfer of the charter?

Mr. OLIVER. The town was not in a position to take advantage of the charter, on the general principle that a municipality has great difficulty in handling a matter of that kind; Mr. Pugsley came there and offered to take over the charter, paying the town the actual disbursements it had made in securing it, and making certain agreements as to the time at which he would complete the road (subject to the completion of the bridge across the river), and as to the location of the station.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the time limit?

Mr. OLIVER. Within one year after the completion of the bridge he was to complete the road into the town of Edmonton. The great object aimed at by the town in securing the charter was to get the road extended into the town.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the bridge completed yet?

Mr. OLIVER. No. It is expected to be completed this fall.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the extent of road covered by the Edmonton town charter?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not altogether clear as to that, but it strikes me that from South Edmonton there was about 100 miles north to Athabasca Landing.

Mr. FOSTER. That is in the direction of the Peace River?

Mr. OLIVER. No, due north. The Peace River is north-westerly. But there was provision for two branches. I think one was to run north-easterly towards Fort Saskatchewan for 20 miles, and the other about 90 miles in a north-westerly direction towards the Peace River.

Mr. FOSTER. Was there a branch towards the Yellow Head Pass?

Mr. OLIVER. The Peace River and the Yellow Head Pass branches would be first in the same direction, and they would deviate afterwards.

Mr. FOSTER. Does my hon. friend remember whether there was an undertaking as to the length of time in which the road to Athabasca Landing should be completed?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not perfectly clear on that point; but the road was to be completed to Athabasca Landing or to Fort Assiniboine.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Fort Assiniboine.

Mr. OLIVER. That was to be completed within a year, or some other limited time.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Mr. George McAvity is the president of the company, and Mr. B. F. Pearson, of Halifax, is the secretary.

Mr. WALLACE. Who are the other officers?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know who the other officers are. The proposal of these gentlemen is to construct a line as far as Fort Assiniboine, if they get the necessary assistance, that is, 96½ miles, within the time named in their charter. But we did not feel called upon to aid them at present beyond the 50 miles stated here.

Mr. FOSTER. This is to subsidize them to go towards Fort Assiniboine.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. The district will be admitted by those who know it to be a very rich farming district, one in which settlers will be likely to gather if the railway facilities are extended, and one in which the Government would very much like to see settlement take place. I think it is generally admitted that unless railway construction takes place, settlers will not go into the remote western country.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, there are no incorporators other than these gentlemen, who simply took the transfer of the town of Edmonton charter?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They got legislation through this Parliament, I think, at the present session, and they are a regularly constituted company.

Mr. WALLACE. Can the Minister give us any information as to the personnel of the new board, or any other information about them?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot tell who they are. I have never inquired.

Mr. PRIOR. It seems to me very important that we should know who the gentlemen back of this charter are. This is a charter for a railway to run to the Yellow Head Pass, I understand.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. And possibly beyond it.

Mr. PRIOR. The people of British Columbia are greatly interested in that railway, because any line that goes through that pass will probably be extended into the interior and ultimately to the coast, and I think that this Parliament should see that this charter does not get into the hands of men of straw.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. We have had this legislation before the Railway Committee on several occasions, when the fullest detailed information was given. Mr. McAvity is a man of well-known financial ability. Mr. Pearson is also a man of standing in the country; and it is evident that this company is in a much stronger position than many companies which are organized to carry out works of this kind. They have shown in the past that they are able to finance such enterprises as this, and I should think that the character of these men would be sufficient evidence that they are acting in good faith, and that they will be able to carry out this work to the extent to which it is being helped at the present time by this subsidy.

Mr. FOSTER. It appears that this road, which was to run to Fort Assiniboine or to Athabasca Landing, is not heading in that direction at all. It is heading as straight as a die for the Yellow Head Pass, which is in a direction straight away from Fort Assiniboine. The idea which the Edmonton charter holders had was to have the road built to Athabasca Landing or to Fort Assiniboine. That charter has been transferred to these gentlemen, and they have got a change by which they have authority to build through the Yellow Head Pass and on to Fort Pelly. So far as the hon. gentleman's information goes, these gentlemen have a double-header, that is to say, they may go in two directions. One pass is not sufficient for them to conquer, but they propose to surmount the two. They propose to pre-empt by their charter the two passes eligible over these mountains to get to the Pacific by a new route. Instead of carrying out what it seems they promised to do, instead of building from Assiniboia or Athabasca Landing, they have got power since to go to the Yellow Head Pass; and this subsidy of fifty miles is heading as clearly towards Yellow Head Pass as is possible, and directly away from Fort Assiniboine, directly north. So that what is apparent from the marking and from what little information we have been able to glean, is that it is a more ambitious project these gentlemen are taking up—nothing more nor less than getting possession of the pass for a transcontinental railway. And lest one pass would not be enough, they have got two passes. Who are these gentlemen who have got all this? Who was it that, almost the moment the hon. Minister of Railways got his portfolio, began to course up and down from the maritime provinces to Ottawa, from Ottawa to Edmonton and the far north, and from Ottawa to the Crow's Nest Pass and the far west, looking for railway business, seeing what possible advantages lay in that direction for future railway work? Who else but the gentleman who is solicitor for this company, who is the intermediary for so many companies? He it is who seized upon the idea that if the Edmonton charter could be got, that would be well to have, and that afterwards it could be changed and additional powers got, and the two passes could be pre-empted, and they then could stand in the direct passage to the north for a transcontinental railway. Any one looking at that line and seeing its direction, and then going back to Rainy Lake road and seeing its direction, can see that the Government subsidies to 500 miles of railway or more, linked in one here, and the other there, and another in another place, are all bits of what is to be ultimately projected, a transcontinental line, and these gentlemen, with this solicitor, have been spry enough to get hold of a charter for the two eligible passes, and undertook to promise, when they bought out the charter powers from Edmonton town, that they would secure the lines in certain directions.

Now, then, it is necessary for us to know if they are in the gap, in the bridge way, for a transcontinental road, which is being projected, and being subsidized in different parts, that these gentlemen are railway builders, that they have abundant capital, that at least they are a sufficient guarantee that this business is not simply a business of getting a franchise and selling it out at a profit, but a legitimate business of railroad building on an ambitious scale, and that these gentlemen are able to carry it out. It is a queer thing that the Minister of Railways would undertake to give these powers and these subsidies, pointing in a direction straight away from Fort Assiniboine towards the Yellow Head Pass, and that he should not have satisfied himself what is the personnel of that company. But he knows no one except the solicitor, and he has an idea of who is president. Outside of that, he has not inquired at all.

I see that here is an Act, chap. 63, 61 Vic. respecting the Edmonton District Railway Company. That is the transfer Act passed in 1898, I imagine. By it the Edmonton District Railway Company sells out its rights, which were to build a railway:

From its point of connection with the Athabasca River, as defined by chap. 17 of the Statutes of 1896 (first session), to the Peace River, thence to a point on the Nelson River, and thence by way of the Nelson, Liard and Francis rivers, to the navigable waters of the Pelly River.

Section 10 of the said Act is hereby amended by striking out the words "and Athabasca rivers" in the sixth line thereof, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "Athabasca, Peace, Nelson, Liard, Francis, Pelly, Mackenzie, Peel, Porcupine and Yukon rivers."

Why, my flight of imagination was modest compared with what this solicitor proposes to do. He proposes to pre-empt, by charter rights, if he possibly can—and he has been successful in doing it—not only the Athabasca River and the Peace River, but the Nelson, Liard, Francis, Pelly, Mackenzie, Peel, Porcupine and Yukon rivers, and if there were more flowing into and around the Antarctic circle, no doubt they would have been pre-empted too. Section 3 provides:

Section 8 of the said Act shall apply to the extension of the railway hereby authorized; provided that with respect to that portion of the company's railway constructed, or under contract to be constructed, between the Peace River and the navigable waters of the Pelly River, the company may issue bonds, debentures or other securities to the extent of $25,000 per mile.

Nothing done without bonds.

The capital stock of the company is hereby increased to $5,000,000.

Why should it not be? Who in the world would attempt to collar the Mackenzie, Yukon, Pelly, Liard, Nelson, Peace and Athabasca rivers with less than a capitalization of $5,000,000. It would be out of keeping with the magnitude of the scheme that there should be a less capitalization.

The railway of the company and the extension hereby authorized shall be commenced and 15 per cent on the amount of the capital stock expended thereon within two years from the passing of this Act, and the railway extension shall be finished and put into operation within five years from the passing of this Act.

Nothing in this Act contained shall be held or construed to vary any of the conditions contained in an indenture made the 16th December, 1897, between the Edmonton District Railway Company and the municipality of the town of Edmonton and the Hon. William Pugsley.

That is the Act of transfer by which Mr. Pugsley got the rights of the Edmonton company, and that Act transferring it to him contained these enlargements which I have spoken of.

I do not know what has taken place since, and I could not get the information from the hon. Minister, with this single exception, that he told me a petition was put in, which I have not yet been able to see, and that on the strength of that, he was giving this fifty-mile subsidy.

There is another chapter in this business. During this session there was an Act passed by which the Edmonton District Railway Company—that is, the corporate existence which Mr. Pugsley has had transferred to him:

—hereinafter called "the company," may lay out, construct and operate from some point on the line of railway which it is already authorized to construct, a line of railway either to the Yellow Head Pass or the Peace River Pass, and thence by such route as is found or deemed most practicable to a port in the province of British Columbia, or to connect with the line of railway which the British Pacific Railway Company is authorized to construct.

The British Pacific Railway Company, I think, runs up through Vancouver Island, so that this is still another extension.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It runs up where?

Mr. FOSTER. Through Vancouver Island.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It runs on the mainland.

Mr. FOSTER. It has to run through the island to get down to Victoria.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It has a charter from the island as well.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes. So after securing the Yukon, Mackenzie, the Pelly and the Yellow Head Pass and the Liard River, and so on, they have power here to connect with the British Pacific Railway Company. This gives them power then to run off from the former proposed route to the Yellow Head Pass and over to the ocean:

Provided, however, that in respect to so much of the said line as may be constructed within the province of British Columbia or the Yukon district, or within the territory to the westward of the eastern entrance of either the said Yellow Head Pass or Peace River Pass, the issue of bonds, debentures or other securities under such section may be extended to aggregate the sum of $25,000 per mile.

Then they changed the name of the Edmonton District Railway Company, because that is a rather restricted name. A man never looks well in a boy's clothes; and in this case the trousers only reach the boot tops and the collar scarcely comes to the middle of the shoulders. So, as this extension was given, the name had to be changed, and the circumscribed entity is changed into the Edmonton, Yukon and Pacific Railway Company—"but such change in name shall not in any way impair, alter or affect the rights or liabilities of the company, nor in anywise affect any suit or proceeding now pending," and so on. Then it provides for annual and special meetings of the company, and the meetings of the directors and where they may be held. And it is provided that the railway of the company and the extension hereby authorized shall be commenced and 15 per cent of the capital stock expended thereon within two years of the passing of this Act. And the subsidy as it appears in the resolution brought down is for that portion of the line going toward the Yellow Head Pass. Now, it seems to me that, with a company with such charter powers and controlling such franchises as this, we ought to have the fullest information, and to know whether it is a bona fide railway-constructing company or a chartermongering company. The Minister, surely cannot have gone on and allowed the granting of all these powers and the subsidizing of this portion of the road without having assured himself with reference to the personnel of the company and as to their ability to carry on this undertaking. But the point I wish particularly to make is that the subsidizing of this road this year inevitably carries with it the subsidizing of the road throughout to the Pacific coast, and this is the vantage ground taken with commendable enterprise by Mr. Pugsley as solicitor on behalf of his company. Now, we ought to know the whole personnel of the company that has power to undertake and carry out so ambitious a project as this to which the Government has committed itself by the subsidy proposed to-day.

Mr. OLIVER. I am somewhat at a loss to understand to what particular point the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) takes exception—whether to the charter or to the subsidy?

Mr. BERGERON. It is to the scheme.

Mr. OLIVER. I suppose the scheme is embodied in the charter. But the charter was dealt with from time to time and from session to session and by amendment after amendment by the Railway Committee and in this House; and I think it is a rather peculiar thing, and a strange loss of time to begin an attack upon the scheme or upon the charter now. As to the merits of the subsidy, I suppose that is a perfectly legitimate question; but as to the charter, as to the parties connected with it, and so on, all these have been before the House. I do not see how they are particularly open to criticism at this time. If we are to understand from their criticism that the hon. member and those who support him object to this scheme in its inception, and particularly in its extension, I, for one, cannot agree with him, nor do I think the people in that part of the country will agree with him. In the beginning the scheme was for saving the interests of the people of a considerable part of that country, which had been ignored and thrown down under charters already granted, possibly without due knowledge of the facts, by the House under the late Government. We tried to save ourselves by getting this other charter. In dealing with this new company, we preserved our rights, rights which, I am sorry to say, so far as our judgment goes, have been persistently ignored, and will be still further ignored if hon. gentlemen opposite have their way. As to the extension of this scheme and the point raised that it is part of a trans-continental line, I do not see where the objection lies. Speaking as one from that part of the country, I can say that we hail it with all the more pleasure if it is part of a trans-continental line. And I want to say to this House that if this is a part of a trans-continental line which will carry a railway westward from Winnipeg by way of the Lake Dauphin district, Swan River Valley district, Prince Albert, the Saskatchewan Valley, Edmonton and the Yellow Head Pass through the Cariboo country to the Pacific coast—it is the best railroad proposition before the world to-day, and it will do more for the development and settlement of the Dominion of Canada than any other scheme before the public. I am speaking of the scheme now as a railroad scheme, not of the aid given to it nor of the form nor conditions of that aid—that is a matter entirely separate, which I should be very glad to hear the hon. member discuss from the same point of view as I have discussed it. But let us not mix the question of the scheme with the question of the aid given to the scheme. As to the scheme itself, I certainly desire to be considered as supporting it in its beginning, in its progress and in its fullest development. So far as this particular aid is concerned, it will enable this company, in the first place, to carry out its agreement with the town of Edmonton and afford protection to the interests of that town and the surrounding country.

Mr. HAGGART. What are the rights of the town of Edmonton to which the hon. gentleman refers?

Mr. OLIVER. The right to railroad connection of Edmonton and the large settlements surrounding it on the north side. It will enable the company to afford railway communications to one part of the settlement on the north side of the present limit of the settlement and so enable the settlement to be pushed much further westward.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the settlement in the direction which this road runs, towards Yellow Head Pass? And for what distance is the country settled?

Mr. OLIVER. The settlement is the best on the north side of the Saskatchewan—the Stony Plains settlement, which lies directly west of Edmonton, through which, I presume, this or any other road would run in order to get to the Jasper Pass, a thick settlement for about thirty or thirty-five miles west of the town. There is some broken country then, but I have every confidence that if the road was built through that country to a length of 50 miles, it will be settled up to that extent. It has already been stated in this House that when people go more than 30 or 40 miles away from a railroad, they cannot raise grain profitably, on account of the cost of hauling it to the railway. The extension of this road will not only benefit the people who are there, but it will induce settlement in a country now unoccupied.

Mr. FOSTER. We have now had the different steps by which the charter formerly owned by Edmonton town has passed into other hands and has been enlarged. I cannot find in either of the Acts that have been passed, the personnel of the company. I think now we ought to have the personnel, and know who we are dealing with.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If this were a debating club, and we were here for amusement, I could understand the hon. gentleman getting up and practising intellectual gymnastics in the way he has been doing this afternoon, reading the names of all these rivers, as if there was something peculiarly funny and ridiculous about the business. If he wants amusement, let him turn over the various statutes of the last fifteen or twenty years incorporating railway companies, and he will find exactly the same funny and peculiar conditions which he has dwelt upon this afternoon. It is an undoubted fact that Mr. Pugsley has identified himself with this grant, but it is no reason why he should be held up to ridicule because he has not been a political supporter of the hon. gentleman. If he was a political friend of the hon. gentleman, he would not comment upon him in this manner. I think it would be much more becoming to the hon. gentleman, if he would address himself to the subject before the committee in a reasonable way, and I am sure that what he has to say would have a great deal more weight on this side of the House. There is no reason why any of these gentleman whose names have been mentioned should not be spoken of in this House with respect. I do not know any reason why the name of Mr. McAvity should be sneered at. He is a gentleman universally respected in the city of St. John; he is a leading member of one of the strongest firms in New Brunswick, a firm of the best financial standing. Mr. McAvity is a gentleman whose connection with any public enterprise gives confidence to that enterprise in the eyes of the public. I have stated to the committee that Mr. McAvity is president of this company, and that Mr. D. L. Pearson, of Halifax, is secretary. Mr. Pearson is a gentleman who has been successfully identified with some of the greatest projects that have ever been started in Canada. The hon. gentleman has no right to say that any representation which that gentleman makes is unworthy of consideration by the Government or by Parliament. I say I furnished all the information that was necessary to lay before my colleagues, when these proposals were being considered, to give them the assurance that they were bona fide and substantial, and backed by substantial men. I did not inquire as to who were the other incorporators of this company. The time might come when it might be proper for me to inquire; I would inquire before the contract was entered into. We are not required to make any inquiries before the subsidies are granted. When a contract is applied for, then it is our business to satisfy ourselves with regard to the stability and sufficiency of the company to carry out the enterprise which they have in contemplation. Until then I am not called upon to do it. I have no further information to give to the committee than I have given them on this subject.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I want to say a few words on this item. In the first place, I think the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) was a little mistaken in trying to leave the House under the impression that Mr. Pugsley waited until the present Government came into power to lie to the west to see what openings there might be for railway construction. If my memory serves me right, Mr. Pugsley, whose name has been mentioned, knew the road well already; he had made trips to the west while the Conservative party were in power, and was then identified with railway construction in that country. While I had not the advantage of knowing him as well then as I do now, I am quite sure his reputation with the Government of that day depended as much upon the recommendation and endorsement of the hon. member for York as upon any other source at that time. Therefore, I think it is unfair to Mr. Pugsley to say that he waited to go to the North-west to look for railway investments until the present Government came into power, when I know, as a matter of fact, that he was interested in railway enterprises out there under the former Government.

But I rise particularly to refer to another railway, and I hope it will not prolong the discussion when I mention the fact that there is no subsidy at all for it. It may be easily understood why there is no subsidy, when I mention the fact that the promoters have not pressed for a subsidy. Therefore, I do not rise because I am disappointed that there is no subsidy for the railway authorized this session to be constructed from Edmonton, via Athabasca Landing, to the Peace River. When the time comes, I will discuss the propriety of the construction of that road, though not this session; and I think I have information of considerable importance to this House and to this country upon that subject. My reason for referring to it now is, that it affords me an opportunity of denying a slander started against me some time ago, which I never thought of sufficient importance to raise as a question of privilege and to refer to a newspaper article. After I changed my political relationship with the leading gentlemen on this side of the House, several newspapers seemed to consider it their duty to try and injure my reputation in every way they could, in the most unworthy, the most cowardly manner. Amongst them was a newspaper in Winnipeg; I think it was called the "Telegram," a Conservative paper. It indicated that, from its own knowledge, I was too poor a man to undertake a trip to the Peace River at my own expense, and that, therefore, I had gone there at the expense of the Government, and this was another whip the Conservatives kept in store for me, at the proper time to show why I had changed my allegiance from the Conservative party. They have never cracked that whip, because they had no whip to crack, and as they have been too cowardly either to retract, or to state, the foundation upon which they made the charge, I take advantage of my position here to say that it was made out of whole cloth and that there was no foundation whatever for it. When they say that I am a poor man and could not afford the trip I admit that I am a poor man, and am not ashamed of it. I made the trip honestly and fairly without any aid, either directly or indirectly or any assistance from this Government or any other Government. I did not even get a map from the department, and I was under no compliment to any Government or any political party for that trip. I made it as an honest man. So particular was I that before starting I applied to the Department of the Interior and took out a mining license so that when I got out there I might not violate any of the mining laws. When I reached Edmonton, anticipating that I would go to British Columbia, I went in and applied for a mining license and paid for it. I received no moneys from the Government, directly or indirectly, and all I can say is that this is a wilful slander and a cowardly one. I have taken this opportunity to put myself right, though I do not know that it was necessary that, in the estimation of the public, I should put myself right, but it is as well to show the lengths to which these newspapers and the men behind them, will go when they will make such cowardly attacks as this from which I have suffered, although, after all, I do not suffer severely from it. Let them go on; let them not spare me on my account. But, to the respectable portion of the press I do appeal for that fair criticism and fair treatment that in this committee, I ask at the hands of every one. With such cowardly attacks as those which have been made upon me I have no sympathy, and I have nothing but contempt for the individuals who follow such a policy. I hope the committee will excuse me for having transgressed upon its time to answer this cowardly slander in the way I have done. I made my trip to the Peace River country as an intelligent man to obtain such information as is useful to a Canadian representative in Parliament. I obtained that information, and I intend to utilize it whenever it can be of use to this committee and to this Parliament. I obtained it legitimately, and I will use it legitimately.

Mr. DOMVILLE. Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for King's has exhibited—

An hon. MEMBER. The hon. member for York.

Mr. DOMVILLE. He used to be the hon. member for King's. The hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster), has exhibited a great deal of warmth. I took down his words, and he talked about charter-mongers. Why throw all these slurs; why attack everybody. Why does the hon. gentleman want to blast the reputation of everybody? Suppose they are charter-mongers, if they are doing some good work, why condemn them. There are a great many things we could have said about the hon. gentleman which we have not said about him. If we went back to the records of the House we might find that a certain gentleman wrote to the Government for 500,000 acres of land and said that if they granted it he would for ever pray.

An hon. MEMBER. Who was that?

Mr. DOMVILLE. I will tell the hon. gentleman in confidence if he wants to know, it was Geo. E. Foster. It is on the records of the House. It was brought down when his own party was in power.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question, question.

Mr. DOMVILLE. The question is a very pertinent one. I am going to point out to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) that Mr. McAvity is quite as respectable a man as anybody who may criticise him in this House, and it seems to me so hard that any hon. member should find fault and attack people who cannot defend themselves on the floor of this House.

An hon. MEMBER. Order.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I am in order; I am speaking to the question of the Edmonton Railway. Let it be Mr. McAvity or anybody else, if Parliament thinks it is a proper object for which to grant money, what difference does it make who builds the road? We might go back and recall the time when my hon. friend projected a railway from Butternut Ridge to Apohaqui with the object of carrying a lot of votes, and which has not been built yet. The project was a worthy one and I would have been very glad if the road had been built. But it was only put forward to capture votes; it did get a lot of votes, but it has not been built. Suppose somebody had accused the hon. member for York, or any one else connected with it, of having a sinister object, would the hon. gentleman have regarded the criticism as fair? The people of the country are satisfied to have public railways constructed if they are worthy projects. I do not want to say very much, but I would ask the hon. gentleman to treat his own countryman, Mr. McAvity, a thoroughly respectable man with ordinary fairness. Mr. Pearson, of Nova Scotia, bears a good reputation. He has never preached, it is true; he has never run any temperance union, but he is a good man. Consequently, he has never had anything to fall from, no distance to come down the ladder, but he has steadily gone up the ladder in the estimation of the people of the country. He has a good record, so much so that only the other day the Bank of New Brunswick wanted his brother to act as one of the directors of that institution. What is the hon. member for York going to gain by finding fault with all these people down there? Is he taking this course because the province of New Brunswick will not look at him or his party. If so, there will be a hard row to hoe for his friends later on. How are his friends going to meet the people of New Brunswick when such men as Mr. McAvity and others are characterized as having been guilty of all sorts of villany. I would ask the hon. gentleman to remember we may go to a great length on this subject, if it is necessary to question the motives of others.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I think the position taken by the hon. Minister of Railways is scarcely a tenable one. He took the position that it would be time enough to get information as to the bona fides of the company, to whom he is granting a large amount of public money, when this vote was passed, and that was all we had to do with it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. FOSTER. I think I can give my interpretation to what took place, and I propose to give my interpretation if the Chairman will protect me.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) may give any interpretation he pleases, but it is not what was said.

Mr. FOSTER. If the courtesy of the hon. gentleman does not lead him to allow me to make my statement I will have to call upon you, Mr. Chairman, to protect me.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I would ask hon. members not to interrupt.

Mr. FOSTER. The position taken by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals was that it would be quite time enough for him to look into the personnel, the bona fides and financial ability of this company, whom he is asking this House to grant a large sum of money to it for the construction of a railway, when the money is granted, and when it is in his power to make a contract for them to expend the money in building the road. That is not the parliamentary idea; it is certainly not the proper parliamentary idea. This committee is asked to vote a certain sum of money for a certain company, but before it votes a single dollar to give to that company to construct this work it should know down to the minutest detail, the personnel and standing of the company. That was the position I took, and that was the opposite of the position the hon. Minister took. I am quite willing that the difference between the position of the hon. Minister and my own position, from a parliamentary point of view should go before the House and the country. It was a very cheap trick of my hon. friend; it was nothing more than a cheap device to put in my mouth what I leave to both sides of this Chamber to witness I never said. I ask you, Mr. Chairman, if I said one word in my reference to Mr. McAvity that was derogatory to a man, or wanting in the least in respect for a man whom I know well, and whom I respect. The members were here when I spoke, and the members are fair, and they know that I said no word with reference to Mr. McAvity that could be construed in the slightest manner into disrespect to him.

Mr. BERGERON. Nor anybody else.

Mr. FOSTER. But it is a cheap device of the hon. gentleman, when he wishes to give no information to this House—which is his chronic state—to put words into the mouth of his opponent, and then to topple over the man of straw, and turn round to his supporters, as if to show what a wonderful victory he had gained over an opponent. I say again, that I said no word in this House that was derogatory of Mr. Pugsley. I said that he was the solicitor of the company, and that he had taken time by the forelock, and had got privileges. He had a perfect right to do it. There is no derogation or contempt to him implied in that, so I did not say a word derogatory to Mr. Pugsley. I know Mr. Pugsley well, and I am not here to speak of him, or of any man, in a derogatory way, and I did not do it. But a little cheap sympathy and applause was sought to be gained by the Minister of Railways and Canals and his bosom friend in imputing to me the charge of speaking of these gentlemen as the embodiment of all villainies. Nothing of the kind; I did not do it. But I say we have a right, when voting the people's money—and it is ours, as representatives and trustees of the people, and does not belong to the Minister of Railways and Canals—to demand, and it is his duty to give us, the personnel of this company to which we are asked to vote a large subsidy, so that we may judge whether we should give it into their hands or not. The company might be composed of the most respectable men in the world, and yet this House might come to the conclusion that under certain circumstances it would not vote the money to that company. This is a perfectly tenable position. The Minister of Railways says that it is time enough for him to give the information to the House when the Government come to give a contract to this company; but this is the time, when we are voting the subsidy, that we should have the personnel of the company. With reference to the remark of the gentleman who spoke last, I have not a word to say.

Mr. FOSTER.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend, who is an experienced parliamentarian, knows as well as anybody in this House, if not better, that there is a hazy line, when you speak of men or things, where it is difficult to say whether you speak respectfully or disrespectfully. When my hon. friend spoke of Mr. Pugsley in his last address, he spoke in a manner to which nobody could take exception; but when he spoke of him in his previous address, to those who listened to him, it was a question whether or not he was speaking in derision or otherwise. When he spoke of Mr. Pugsley dancing around Parliament, and dancing around the department, going about as a charter-monger, I do not think my hon. friend was showing the proper respect to Mr. Pugsley which he now professes for him: and, therefore, he must not find fault if he laid himself open to strictures which I think were well deserved. But, coming to the main point of the objection of my hon. friend, let us see where we are. My hon. friend wants to have information in regard to this company. My hon. friend knows perhaps as much in this respect as the Minister of Railways or anybody else. He has only to turn to the statutes.

Mr. FOSTER. I beg my hon. friend's pardon. I turned up the statute, and there is no name that appears there.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend is wrong.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, I have not seen it.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend must not forget that there has been a series of charters in regard to this company. The first was in 1895—an Act to incorporate the Edmonton District Company—and here are the first incorporators:

Herbert Charles Wilson, William Summerville Edmiston, John Edmund Kelly, Colin Ferrie Strang, John Cameron, Thomas Bellamy, Joseph Henry Picard, all of Edmonton, and William Tyndale Jennings, of Toronto.

The charter they obtained was for this purpose:

The company to lay out, construct and operate a railway of the gauge of four feet eight and one-half inches from some point within the town of Edmonton, in the district of Alberta, North-west Territories of Canada; thence in a southerly direction to a point in South Edmonton on the Calgary and Edmonton Railway, and to connect therewith; also from some point within the said town of Edmonton, thence in a north-westerly direction via the village of St. Albert to a point on the Athabasca River, at or near Fort Assiniboine, with a branch to Stony Plains; also from some point within the said town of Edmonton, thence in a north-easterly direction to a point at or near Fort Saskatchewan, together with a branch to a point on Sturgeon River.

This charter has been extended from time to time by this Parliament. Now, my hon. friend a moment ago said that this company, which started with this small beginning, had extended its charter in almost every direction—to the Liard, the Pelly, the Yukon, the Peace, and so on. Nobody took any exception to the granting of these powers to this company, and it is now too late in the day to question whether Parliament in that respect acted wisely or unwisely. We did it, and there is the end of it.

Mr. FOSTER. Not the end.

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, so far as granting the power is concerned. It is too late in the day for my hon. friend to say that Parliament should not have granted that power.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not say that.

The PRIME MINISTER. That is the inference from the hon. gentleman's remarks. The question now is, whether we shall grant this subsidy or not. My hon. friend wants to know who the incorporators are. My hon. friend knows that the shareholders of a company may change ten times over. The original incorporators may have sold their rights, and may now have nothing to do with the company at all. Evidently, that is the case; and now the Government is asked to grant a subsidy to this Edmonton District Railway Company.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend reads item 41, he will see that this is a different company.

The PRIME MINISTER. By an Act passed this session the name is changed; but it is the same company under another name, and the officers of the Edmonton, Yukon and Pacific Railway Company to-day are the men who were the officers of the Edmonton District Railway Company. Now, who are they? My hon. friend has a right to know whether or not this company is able to carry on the work it has undertaken to do. But my hon. friend knows as well as I do that if a railway company, or any other kind of company, comes before Parliament for any grant, favour or right, Parliament never demands the list of its incorporators or shareholders. The officers themselves may not know who the shareholders are. The hon. gentleman knows that a company is never represented by its shareholders in a matter of this kind, but by its board of directors. If the president and secretary of this company were men of straw, with no weight, or credit, or capital, or respectability, my hon. friend might have made a point against this proposition. But my answer to my hon. friend is this. We have the president and the secretary of this company speaking for it. As to Mr. Pearson, I do not know him; but I understand that he is a man of respectability in the community where he lives. But the name of Mr. McAvity, the president, is known all over Canada as that of one of the most respectable business men of the country. When Mr. George McAvity lends his name to any enterprise, does that fact not carry with it a certainty that the enterprise is not a bogus one, but one that should receive the confidence of the Government and Parliament—nay, of my hon. friend himself? He will not dispute that, I am sure, and, therefore, what more information does he want? Is the scheme a meritorious one or not? As to the merits of the scheme, I refer the House to the remarks of the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver), which, I think, are conclusive.

My hon. friend says it may be a scheme for a trans-continental line. What if it is? Who objects to that? For my part I would be glad to believe that it is a trans-continental scheme, but I do not believe that for many years to come, at all events, it can have that character. But if it has, that cannot be an objection. Therefore, if the scheme is meritorious and the men who ask for the grant carry weight and respectability, I want to know what more my hon. friend can expect?

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend's own intelligence and good sense will teach him what more is necessary. I would like to see the document from which the hon. gentleman read.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have a memo. on it for my own private purposes.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the document the hon. gentleman read?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is an abstract, and I am not going to furnish my own private memo. to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it was an application signed by Mr. George McAvity?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. FOSTER. The Prime Minister read it to the House as being the application of these parties.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is an abstract from their application.

Mr. FOSTER. The application was read by the Prime Minister, signed by George McAvity, but the Minister of Railways says it is only a private memo. of his own. That must be incorrect. No private memo. of the Minister himself can be the petition upon which is based the grant. Surely that cannot be.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I find, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. FOSTER. I have the floor. My hon. friend also will know that something more is necessary, when we are voting large sums of money for the construction of a work, than to know simply its president. The hon. gentleman's argument is that all the House has a right to know is who is president of the company, into whose hands you propose to entrust this public work and the expenditure of this money. Surely that is not a position my hon. friend would try to maintain. We are giving this vote to the Edmonton, Yukon and Pacific Railway Company and we have a perfect right to know who that company is. My hon. friend does not satisfy the demands of this House or the demands of justice in this respect, unless he gives us more than merely the name of the president. A man may be a man of the utmost respectability, as the president of a company, and yet his company, as a whole, may not be of that character.

(The Minister of Railways and Canals sent a paper across the floor to Mr. Foster.)

Mr. FOSTER. What is this?

The PRIME MINISTER. That is one of the documents my hon. friend wishes to see.

Mr. FOSTER. This is not signed by George McAvity. The name we have to conjure with is the name of George McAvity. That was the name to the petition that the Prime Minister read. But just shortly before the Prime Minister read, or while he was reading it, the Minister of Railways scored out something upon it with his pen, and consequently it became impossible to pass it over to other members of the House. It is no longer a public document.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It was not a public document in any shape.

Mr. BERGERON. It should not have been read in the House, then.

Mr. FOSTER. This is simply a statement from Mr. Pearson, who is not the president of the Edmonton, Yukon and Pacific Railway Company, but the solicitor of the Edmonton District Railway Company (Limited). He says that he is authorized by his company to ask for a grant. But this is not a grant to the Edmonton Railway Company, but to the Edmonton, Yukon and Pacific Railway Company, a different corporation and a different entity.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The memo. which the hon. gentleman has is a copy of the document which was sent to me by the department, but the paper from which my right hon. friend read and from which I gave the names to the committee of the officers, was a memo. made for my own private information.

Mr. BERGERON. It belongs to the House.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Nothing of the kind.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. BERGERON. It should not have been read.

Mr. FOSTER. Does that contain the names of the company?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It contains the names of the president and the secretary, and the hon. gentleman will not get the document.

Mr. FOSTER. Then perhaps my hon. friend will not get his vote.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If he resists our getting the vote until he gets the document, he will resist for some considerable time. I am under no obligation to give it, and will not yield to the dictation of any hon. gentleman to furnish private memoranda which I have in my possession, and have had prepared for myself for the purposes of these discussions. I am ready to furnish copies of all documents received in the department, (but private memo. I will not furnish, and from a private memorandum which I have in my hand I read to the committee. I ascertained from that document that the name of the president of the company was Mr. George McAvity, and the secretary Mr. Pearson, and I ascertained further that—

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman read the original document?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will bring the original from which the abstract was made, but will not furnish this memo. The request is absurd.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman must not put the question as though it is a matter between himself and myself.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I put it as though it was a question I had a right to determine, and will determine.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I want to explain—

Mr. FOSTER. I have the floor.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster) has the floor.

Mr. FOSTER. What I was proceeding to say was this, that I do not think the hon. Minister has any right to make this matter a personal one between himself and myself, and to say that he does not propose personally to yield to the dictation of any one. I would be very sorry, Sir, to attempt to dictate to him. It is not as a private person I am speaking, but I am speaking in a representative capacity, and I am asking for information to which I think, as a representative, I am entitled; and if it is the right of a representative to dictate and compel the Minister, he must submit to be being dictated to and compelled. That is what he is there for. He has no right to stand up in his place in this House and to say to a representative of the people, who asks for proper information, that he will not give it and will not be dictated to. That is a new doctrine to this House, and it is a doctrine which will not go down.

Mr. BERGERON. A Liberal doctrine.

Mr. FOSTER. I have no right to the hon. gentleman's private memorandum. But it is an odd circumstance that the hon. gentleman brought down with his papers a memorandum of information from which he read the petitions signed by Mr. George McAvity; and the Prime Minister had it passed to him, and he read the petition signed by Mr. George McAvity; but when I asked to see that, it suddenly became a private document and could not be shown. I accept the hon. gentleman's statement that it is a private document. The petition may be transcribed among memoranda of his own. But what I feel now that I must insist upon is that we shall see the petition signed by this company upon which this vote is based. I also want to have the personnel of the company of which George McAvity is the chairman. These things, as a representative, and not as a person, it is my right to have, and I propose to insist upon that right.

The PRIME MINISTER. There is a good deal of declamation upon the part of my hon. friend for which there is not the slightest occasion. He knows how these things are done. An abstract of the case is brought here, and the whole memorandum is typewritten. The name to the petition, in this case, would be typewritten like the rest. The hon. gentleman has a right to the petition and he shall have it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not say, nor could I say, from personal knowledge, whether the petition is signed by Mr. McAvity and Mr. Pearson or not. All I know is that from the memorandum before me, Mr. McAvity is the president of the company, Mr. Pearson is the secretary. Whatever documents we have in the office will be furnished as a matter of course and not as a matter of peremptory demand on the part of the hon. gentleman. There is no possible objection to bringing them down. But I do protest against the hon. gentleman representing that either my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) or myself professed to be reading a paper signed by these gentlemen. I furnished the names of the officers of the company when they were asked for; but when the hon. gentleman wished to know who are the incorporators of the company, I could not tell him. I do not know that we have the information he wants, but so far as we have it, it shall certainly be furnished.

Mr. BERGERON. It comes to this—that it would seem that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) has not taken the precaution to get all the information he should have concerning this company that asks for a subsidy of $320,000. This may be a mere company on paper. Surely he must recognize that we have a duty to perform, and that the members of the House are entitled to every possible information before we consent to voting public money to the tune of $320,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Where do you get the amount?

Mr. BERGERON. Fifty miles at $6,400 a mile makes about the sum I have mentioned.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It appears to me that my hon. friend's criticism is hardly fair. He knows that this company was incorporated by Act of this House.

Mr. FOSTER. Which one?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Edmonton District.

Mr. BERGERON. It has changed hands since then.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But, as an old member of this House and the Railway Committee, my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) knows that every charter granted incorporates certain parties with power as provisional directors, and after the incorporation or organization of the company, they have the right, under the legislation granted to associate with them all persons who may become shareholders under the Act. It seems unfair and unreasonable for any hon. member of this House to say that a subsidy granted by this House should depend upon the names of the incorporators as they appear in the Act, or that we should demand the names of the shareholders of the company before any business is done. This is quite contrary to all the precedents of Parliament and to the principle of the legislation we grant to railway companies. The Canadian Pacific Railway itself is represented here in the largest possible transaction by its president or secretary or other paid officer who may be very weak financially himself. As to the shareholders of that company, they may be all changed in a single day, and so may the directors.

Mr. BERGERON. But we know them. The list is published every six months.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But they may be all changed the day after publication takes place—shareholders, directors and president.

Mr. DAVIN. May I ask my hon. friend a question? I am asking for information. Do I understand him to say that at no stage of our legislation is it necessary or are we entitled, in the interests of the public, to know the parties with whom we are dealing?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Quite the contrary. Many of the mistakes of the past respecting the granting of subsidies to railway companies have been due to dealing with men who were well known not to have any financial strength, and, perhaps, none too good a character. I was trying to point out that the mere fact that the names of the incorporators of a company or the shareholders being made known would be no guarantee to this Parliament or to the Government in making a business arrangement with them. And if my hon. friend were fair in the matter, having had this railway company's Act dealt with by this House, and finding such men as George McAivty, wholesale merchant of St. John, N.B., and Mr. Pearson, of Nova Scotia, and Mr. Pugsley connected with the company, he would know that this is a far greater guarantee to this committee and to Parliament that they are going to make an honest effort and are capable to carry out as large a financial scheme as this than a list of shareholders could be. My hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) said that the subsidy was $320,000. I think it was only half that amount.

Mr. HAGGART. If the road cost $21,000 a mile, then the subsidy would be $6,400 a mile.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But nobody knows better than my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) that there is no chance of this particular fifty miles costing even $15,000 a mile. But this is diverging from the point I wished to discuss. We have granted subsidy after subsidy in the past Parliaments and in this Parliament that had not the same guarantee of financial solidity as in this case. I go further and say that I do not believe that there is any other railway enterprise that has come before Parliament that is more deserving of our support than this. I have a slight knowledge of the section of country affected, having visited it, and we are informed here to-day not only that it is a fertile country and admirably adapted for settlement, but that it is actually settled and that the people need the railway. It seems to me that this is a proper way to develop that country. The ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster), I think, has brought more imagination than logic to play upon this question. He has read the charter powers of the company and so on. But the powers given under the Act are such as the Railway Committee give to almost any company asking for incorporation, with this exception—that particular care was taken in this charter, which has not been taken in the past, to limit the powers of the company and protect the rights of the people of the district. Special clauses have been inserted in this Bill that should have been inserted in charters given to companies in the past. I believe it is in the interest of Canada that this section of country should be developed. I

Mr. DAVIN.

I think the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Prior) will agree with me that no more desirable enterprise in the interests of the prosperity of Canada could be carried out, if done with a reasonable subsidy, than the continuation of this road from Edmonton to Victoria. I would be willing to pledge myself to any company that would carry out this project all the way through, because I believe it would return to the Dominion in a short time one hundred times the value of the grant. I am surprised at the technical opposition that is being taken to this grant, when we have such strong and respectable men representing the company applying for it.

Mr. DAVIN. I did not understand the hon. member for York to oppose it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. When a gentleman makes a long statement we have to draw our conclusions from that statement. If he is not opposed to it, why waste the valuable time of Parliament in a long discussion? For myself, I have tried to defend the enterprise and to give reasons for doing so. In my opinion, it is one of the best enterprises that are before Parliament at the present time, and I am surprised that it should receive any opposition. I would appeal to my hon. friends to acknowledge that the men who have applied on behalf of this company are a sufficient guarantee of its bona fides, and let us lose no more time in discussing this question.

Mr. HAGGART. What the Opposition have been wanting, we have received from the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver), and from the chairman of the Railway Committee (Mr. Sutherland). We have all along contended that this was a transcontinental road that we were subsidizing; the member for Alberta and the chairman of the Railway Committee take the same ground.

Mr. OLIVER. I defended the grant on local grounds.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman contended that this was a road that started in Ontario and went to Calgary, and by the Swan River to Edmonton, and from Edmonton to the coast. This is the information we have been trying to drag out of the Minister of Railways and Canals. We wanted to know whether we were subsidizing a transcontinental road or not, and these hon. gentlemen have furnished us with the information. This is, perhaps, one of the greatest schemes that were ever introduced into Parliament, except the Canadian Pacific Railway, and when a scheme like this comes up we have a right to the fullest information.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My hon. friend misunderstood me. What defence I made of the scheme was made as a purely local scheme. I said it might become a portion of a transcontinental line, but, for the present, I was defending it as a purely local railway.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman, then, thinks it may become a transcontinental line, but the member for Alberta defended it from its initial starting point at Toronto to the Pacific coast. What is this company we are subsidizing now? It was incorporated in 1895, the names of the incorporators were given in the Act. The right hon. gentleman says it is not necessary to ascertain who take the place of the original incorporators. He forgets that in 1897 there was an indenture made by this particular company, and the whole company, holus bolus, is transferred in trust to a person of the name of Pagsley. We want to see that indenture, and to know who the incorporators are in that indenture. The hon. gentleman says he has a petition from a Mr. McAvity, president of this railway company, in favour of this grant.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, I merely said that Mr. McAvity was president, and Mr. Pearson was secretary.

Mr. HAGGART. But I understood the hon. gentleman to say that he had a petition from them asking for this subsidy.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is a petition in the office from the company praying that a subsidy should be given.

Mr. HAGGART. Is there one from Messrs. Pearson and McAvity for a subsidy for this particular line?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think they have signed it. We have the original document.

Mr. HAGGART. I understood that the Minister read a petition from Mr. Pearson in favour of this grant.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman is in error. I did not profess to be reading a petition from them. In answer to a request for the names of the officers of the company, I read the names of Mr. McAvity, who was president, and Mr. Pearson, who is stated to me to be secretary. They appear on a memorandum made by the officers of my department for my private information. I did not read these names as being at the foot of a petition, for I did not know whether they were at the foot of a petition or not. I have sent for the petition, the original document will be here.

Mr. HAGGART. I leave it to the right hon. gentleman if the Minister of Railways and Canals did not lead this House to believe that Mr. McAvity had petitioned in favour of a grant for this road.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No doubt the company did.

Mr. HAGGART. I leave it to the right hon. gentleman if the Minister of Railways and Canals did not lead this House to believe that Mr. Pearson, the secretary, had petitioned in favour of this grant. The hon. gentleman could not have read the petition of Mr. Pearson in reference to this particular part. The petition of this gentleman is for an entirely different road; instead of being for a road to the west of Edmonton it is for one to the east of Edmonton. Let me read what the petition says:

I am authorized by the Edmonton and District Railway Company (Limited) to ask for a grant to aid in the construction of a line or lines of railway in the territory of Alberta, commencing at a point at or near the terminus of the Calgary and Edmonton Railway in the town of South Edmonton, thence to a point in North Edmonton a distance of six miles or thereabouts, thence westerly 100 miles or thereabouts, also commencing at a point on the last mentioned line in the town of North Edmonton aforesaid, and running thence easterly a distance of 20 miles or thereabouts to a point at or near Fort Saskatchewan; 6,400 acres of land per mile of said railway constructed and a guarantee of $80,000 per year for 20 years, subject to the same terms and conditions as provided in the contract for a subsidy with the Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company.

Your obedient servant,

B. F. PEARSON,

Solicitor, Edmonton Dist. Ry. Co. (Ltd.).

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They did not get all that.

Mr. FOSTER. That is what the Prime Minister sent over.

The PRIME MINISTER. I sent over the papers we had here. I do not see any different petition in that paper.

Mr. HAGGART. This was a petition signed by Mr. B. F. Pearson.

The PRIME MINISTER. This is a grant to the Edmonton, Yukon and Pacific Railway Company for a railway from the town of South Edmonton, N.W.T., to North Edmonton, and thence westerly towards the Yellow Head Pass.

Mr. HAGGART. I suppose the petition from the president is precisely the same. I should doubt very much that there were two petitions.

The PRIME MINISTER. A petition of that kind is not from Mr. So-and-so; it is from the company.

Mr. HAGGART. I am aware of that.

The PRIME MINISTER. Well, if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) is aware of it, he had better state that he is aware of it. The petition is from the company, and it is only signed, on behalf of the company, by George McAvity, the president, and B. F. Pearson, the secretary.

Mr. HAGGART. I am aware that the Government did not make any such grant as that. But what I am arguing is, that there was a petition from Mr. McAvity, or

Mr. Pearson, in favour of a different project.

The PRIME MINISTER. There is no petition from Mr. McAvity or Mr. Pearson, but there is a petition from the company.

Mr. HAGGART. Mr. Pearson signs it on behalf of the company. Now, we have got it that the petition is one from the company. A few moments ago we were told that the Government had a petition from Mr. McAvity and Mr. Pearson in support of it, and that Mr. McAvity would guarantee the completion of the undertaking. I know nothing at all of these gentlemen, and it may be that they are as capable as any one else in the country to construct the railway. I have never heard of Mr. McAvity before, but I take the assurance of the hon. Minister of Railways and of the right hon. Prime Minister, that Mr. McAvity is financially capable, and that anything he puts his name to, he will carry out. But we find out there is no communication from Mr. McAvity on the subject, but that the only communication is from the company with which Mr. McAvity is connected. Mr. McAvity may be privately guaranteeing the enterprise, but he does not come out and publicly support it. It is as a matter of form, as a member of the company, that he petitions the Government for assistance to build this line of railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I sent over to the department for the original documents. Here is a plan, which I will hand over to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart), but in the meantime I will read this document, and I have no objection to the hon. gentleman having it, when I have read it. It is as follows:—

The petition of the Edmonton District Railway Company humbly sheweth:

That your petitioner, the Edmonton District Railway Company, was incorporated by Act of the Parliament of Canada, 59 Victoria (1896) cap. 17, with authority to construct and operate a line of railway of standard gauge from some point within the town of Edmonton, in the district of Alberta, N.W.T. of Canada, thence in a southerly direction to a point in South Edmonton on the Calgary and Edmonton Railway, and connecting therewith; also from some point within the said town of Edmonton, thence in a north-westerly direction by way of the village of St. Albert to a point on the Athabasca River at or near Fort Assiniboine, with a branch to Stony Plains; also from some point within the said town of Edmonton, thence in a north-easterly direction to a point at or near Fort Saskatchewan, together with a branch to a point on the Sturgeon River.

That by an amending Act, passed by the Parliament of Canada, 61 Victoria (1898), chap. 63, the said Edmonton District Railway Company was further authorized to construct and operate a line of railway from its point of connection with the Athabasca River, as above set forth, to the Peace River, thence to a point on the Nelson River, and thence by way of the Nelson, Liard and

Mr. HAGGART.

Frances rivers to the navigable waters of the Pelly River.

2. That the co-operation of capitalists of ample means has been secured in furtherance of this enterprise, and your petitioner relies on this co-operation, together with such Dominion and local subsidies as may be obtained for the satisfactory completion of the undertaking.

3. The present operations of your petitioner, the said company, will, if it is contemplated, be confined to the building of the short strip of railway from the town of Edmonton to the town of South Edmonton, a distance of about four and one-half miles, and also the building of the extension northerly to the point on the Athabasca near Fort Assiniboine, a distance of about 92 miles, as provided for in the Act 59 Victoria, cap. 17, above referred to. The present application is merely for assistance in the erection of these two sections of the company's undertaking.

4. That the cost per mile of the sections mentioned will, it is estimated, vary to a great extent, the work contemplated on the  $4\frac{1}{2}$  mile strip from Edmonton southerly to South Edmonton being, from the nature of the country traversed, exceedingly costly and expensive, while that from Edmonton northerly towards Fort Assiniboine being of not more than average difficulty. Between South Edmonton and Edmonton the road, as projected, crosses the north branch of the Saskatchewan River by way of the railway and highway bridge now being constructed by the Government of Canada. The situation and level of the bridge necessitates very difficult grades, cuttings and embankments on both sides of the river, as well from the junction with the Calgary and Edmonton Railway at South Edmonton to the bridge, as from the bridge to the high lands or plateau forming the upper part of the town of Edmonton, where the company's shops, sheds and general station will ultimately be situated. The estimated cost, therefore, of the strip of railway from Edmonton to South Edmonton, based upon accurate and careful survey by competent engineers, is \$25,000 per mile, while the estimated cost of the section of railway from Edmonton to Fort Assiniboine, based upon preliminary surveys and the current price in that locality of materials, rails, sleepers, and the like, is \$16,000 per mile.

5. That upon the shorter strip of railway, as above described, between Edmonton and South Edmonton, there will merely be required a small steel bridge or a trestle over Mill Creek; on the longer section of railway from Edmonton to Fort Assiniboine there are a number of important streams to be crossed, among them the Pembina River, which will require to be spanned by modern steel bridges. Full particulars of these structures have not as yet been received from the engineers.

The country to be traversed in the proposed route to the Athabasca River consists of excellent farming and grazing districts; but the chief value of the road lies in the fact that it is a necessary link in connecting Edmonton and the railway system of the North-west with the great water routes of the North-west Territories. From Fort Assiniboine above mentioned there is an excellent water route, available, with the exception of a few easy portages, even as far north as the Klondike district, and the steamers at present running on the Athabasca and connecting rivers opens up the vast mineral and agricultural resources of the North-west.

The railway is also an absolute necessity to the settlers at present pouring into the Peace River district lying to the north-west of the Athabasca River, affording them facilities and means of access at present, to their great detriment, denied them. The absence of adequate railway facilities, such as now projected, has been represented to be the only factor in preventing the exceedingly rapid growth of this great district, which is rich in all natural resources.

Your petitioner, therefore, prays that assistance may be granted by the Government of Canada towards the erection of the aforementioned sections of railway, and, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c.

Dated this 9th day of March, A.D. 1899.

THE EDMONTON DISTRICT RAILWAY CO.

(Sgd.) By GEORGE McAVITY, President.

(Sgd.) B. F. PEARSON,
Secretary.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman said that he would bring down the petition from the company in favour of this grant. Does not the hon. gentleman know that the petition is for an entirely different road from the one he is subsidizing at the present moment. The charter of the Edmonton District Railway Company and the amended charter of 1897-98 was for the building of a road north to Fort Assiniboine to connect with the waters of the Pelly. This road that this petition is in favour of, goes north, while the one that the hon. Minister proposes to subsidize, runs in a westerly direction. The hon. Minister must surely think that he can impose upon the credulity of this committee, when he states that he has a petition in favour of the proposed grant that he is bringing down. Does he think that we do not know the difference between a line that is running north, and one that is running west? What is the reason, then, that the Minister has changed this grant from a line directly north to one west? What further information or petition has he? If there is any information, the committee is surely entitled to it. With regard to the Opposition opposing the grant of a subsidy for 50 miles west of Edmonton, I protest that we are not opposed to anything of the kind. As for myself, I am favourable to it for the purpose of developing that section of the country. But we are entitled to be informed of the plans and purposes of the Government. We have not had a word of documentary evidence presented to this committee in favour of the subsidy the hon. gentleman proposes. We have, first, a petition from a company for assistance in an entirely different direction. A couple of months later we have a petition from Mr. Pearson, who represents the company; but the Minister does not deign to give us any information as to why he changed the subsidy which the company itself requested to one entirely different.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I confess my entire inability to follow the hon. gentleman through all the turns and twists which he appears determined to take in connection with this matter. I do not know what is the matter with this project, to have excited such determined and bitter hostility from hon. gentlemen opposite. We have been treated for the last hour to thunderings and vapourings because there was an assumption on the other side of the House that I had said I was reading from a petition signed by the president and the secretary. That occupied the serious attention of hon. gentlemen for about an hour. I felt that it was very necessary for me to put myself on my guard; and, having simply an abstract of the petition in my hand as a private memorandum, I was reluctant to state that the petition was signed by these gentlemen. I have produced the original document, which contains the signatures of Mr. McAvity and Mr. Pearson, verifying what hon. gentlemen assumed that I had improperly stated in the beginning. Now, we do not hear a word or a whisper of the petition; but my hon. friend tears off madly in another direction and declares that we are giving this subsidy on terms and in a direction that we have not been asked to give it. My hon. friend has been furnished with the information that he has been clamouring for; he has in his hand a copy of the original paper, which shows that so far as there has been any departure from the terms under which the company applied for a grant, that departure has been by reason of a subsequent application received from the secretary of the company.

Mr. HAGGART. Where is it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The document under the hon. gentleman's hands is dated the 9th of March. The secretary of the company, under date of the 30th of May, writes us as follows:—

I am authorized by the Edmonton and District Railway Company (Ltd.) to ask for a grant to aid in the construction of a line or lines of railway in the territory of Alberta, commencing at a point at or near the terminus of the Calgary and Edmonton Railway, in the town of South Edmonton, thence to a point in North Edmonton, a distance of six miles or thereabouts, thence westerly 100 miles or thereabouts.

We have not seen our way to give the company aid for 100 miles, in accordance with their amended request, but we have given them aid for 50 miles. If the hon. gentleman can possibly suggest any other reason why we should further delay the committee on this matter, he will no doubt endeavour to do so; but I think we have furnished every reasonable information that can be asked.

Mr. FOSTER. We should have had this information two or three hours ago, when we took up the item. We should have had the petition, with the grounds set forth for the application. Everybody understands that and will assent to that proposition; but the Minister of Railways, with his usual unreadiness, had not this or any other information of a documentary character, and it was only after pounding for two or three hours that we have at last got this original petition from him. Now, the information is still incomplete, and at the expense of exposing myself to the strictures of the Minister of Railways, I shall have to point out wherein it is incomplete. In the first place let me say to the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver), and to the committee that they will look in vain in anything I said this afternoon to find one single sentence opposed to the building of this road. But there were one or two points that I wanted to bring out. One is that this is really, I believe, a part of a transcontinental system, and the Government, having come to that conclusion, should frankly state it, because the country might as well know first as last what they are effecting, and what will be the outcome. I think we have demonstrated to the satisfaction of the House that that is the underlying idea, and that these sections which have been bonused to-day—in Ontario, in Manitoba and the North-west—are portions of that transcontinental line. I have, however, said no word in condemnation of the scheme for putting these railways through.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, the hon. gentleman was a very hearty supporter of the thing from the first, no doubt.

Mr. FOSTER. I am glad the hon. gentleman realizes the position. On the contrary, as the Minister of Railways now says, I have been from the first a hearty supporter of the scheme; and I want no better evidence of that than his statement. After two hours of debate, we have at last got from the Minister what ought to have been on the Table of the House at first, namely, the petitions; and what do the petitioners ask for? Here is a regular petition, setting forth the merits of the scheme, and containing representations as to the kind of country through which the railway runs, and calculations as to the engineering difficulties of the line; and what was asked for in that petition? First, the short line between the two Edmontons of some four and a half miles; secondly, a line from the town of Edmonton north-westerly to a point on the Athabasca River at Fort Assiniboine—that has not been granted; third, a line from Edmonton to Fort Saskatchewan in a north-easterly direction—that has not been granted. This is information such as we ought to have from any bona fide company asking for a grant to construct a great public work. At last we have got it. But the whole of these calculations are, let the committee understand, in support of the requisition for 4½ miles between the two Edmontons, a line north towards Assiniboia, in order to connect with the water stretches, and one easterly to Fort Saskatchewan. But what are you giving? You are giving to a road running to North Edmonton, and then westerly to the Yellow Head Pass. That is not asked for in this petition. The reasoned-out petition, giving the grounds on which the company ask assistance, giving the representations of the company, does not mention that line at all. But two months later a petition comes in from the secretary, which is simply a request, without any grounds for it being given at all. I want to know from the hon. Minister what were the grounds upon which the company, in its petition, threw aside virtually what it had asked for in the first petition, and asked instead for a subsidy for 100 miles running westerly, and I want to know the reasons why the hon. Minister, on that simple request, without any grounds being given in its support, set aside the other well-reasoned request, and granted as much as he could on the 100 miles westerly?

Mr. HAGGART. They had not got a charter even for that 100 miles.

Mr. FOSTER. Had this company a charter to build westerly?

Mr. HAGGART. It was passed five days ago, but the company had not got it then.

Mr. FOSTER. They had not that charter when this petition was in. The second petition was in on May 30th, and they had not the charter then.

Mr. HAGGART. They have not got it yet, because it has not become an Act of Parliament.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Did it not receive assent the other day?

Mr. HAGGART. I do not think so. It is only four or five days ago it was passed.

Mr. FOSTER. We have a perfect right to ask the hon. Minister upon what information he set aside the well-reasoned petition of March, 1899, and granted a subsidy of fifty miles due west, upon this simple request made a month or two later, and not supported by any reasons at all. There must be some ground on which the hon. Minister decided to depart from the request of the first petition.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think my case is almost hopeless—

Mr. FOSTER. I think it is really.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think I can convince the hon. gentleman by any statement I may make or any evidence I may tender. An answer to one question simply furnishes the hon. gentleman standing ground for making another.

Mr. FOSTER. True, and it will until I get the right information.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have stated to the committee that after the receipt of the first application, the secretary of the company filed another, stating that he was authorized by the company to request that a departure should be made from the first application. The company came up here, they applied to Parliament for the necessary authority to change the route of their railway, so as to entitle them to go westerly from North Edmonton towards the Yellow Head Pass. After they had made that application and had good evidence that their application would be successful, they filed another formal communication, dated 30th May, 1899, in which their secretary said he was authorized by his company to ask for a grant to aid in the construction of a line from South Edmonton to North Edmonton, a distance of about six miles, and thence westerly 100 miles. We have complied with the amended request of the company, and we have put in a grant for a line from South Edmonton to North Edmonton and thence westerly, fifty miles, in accordance with this request. That is how we came to do it. What were the reasons which induced the company to ask Parliament to amend their Act I am not aware of. I am not in their confidence. I only know that we are satisfied the country all around Edmonton is one which would justify the construction of railways in different directions.

Mr. DAVIN. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If there were three or four railways radiating from the town of Edmonton, I apprehend that the cost of their construction would be justifiable.

The subsidy which the Ontario and Rainy River Railway Company is entitled to receive under chap. 4, 60-61 Victoria, shall be $6,400 per mile for the 80 miles provided in the said Act.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the provision in that Act?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The original Act is for 80 miles from Stanley. That is the old subsidy Act.

Mr. FOSTER. That is Stanley station?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, we have got to make a change when we come to the next resolution, so as to provide that these 80 miles will not be duplicated.

Mr. OLIVER. As regards the control of the Government over this road when completed, I understand that the whole scheme from Winnipeg to Lake Superior, passes a short distance through the United States. Will not that tell very strongly against that control of rates which we might otherwise hope for, on the part of the Government, under the regulations?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not see why that should be the case. Any arrangements made looking to a definite fixing of the rates would be made in respect of the mileage, and if 30 or 40 miles of the entire length run into another territory, that could be considered and have its weight in fixing the rates. I do not see at this moment that it would be any more difficult to fix the rates than if the road were running through our territory completely. I apprehend that the road which passes around the foot of the lake and through the United States, will be either owned or controlled by the same interest.

Mr. BERGERON. I think we ought to pause before subsidizing a railway which goes through the United States. At the cost of an immense expenditure we subsidized the Canadian Pacific Railway to go north of Lake Superior, so as to have an all-Canadian route, and I am afraid we are not consistent in subsidizing a line that will go partly through the United States, and which may carry the produce of the North-west Territories over to that country.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend is rather late. He should remember the Algoma branch.

Mr. BERGERON. I remember the line on the north shore of Lake Superior.

Mr. OLIVER. It is desirable that we should have a thorough understanding with regard to the control of rates over this road. The idea struck me that the fact of its passing through the United States would have a very serious effect in preventing the Government from regulating the rates. The hon. Minister, however, does not seem to anticipate any difficulty in this respect. But I would ask whether after the moneys are paid over to the railway, after it is completed, and after the company have exercised their full rights to issue bonds, will it be possible then for the Government to regulate the rates and to reduce them, without regard to the possibility of the company earning interest on the bonds which it has sold, and the sale of which was authorized by the Government? I say, will it be possible to reduce the rates irrespective of the rights of the bondholders?

Mr. DAVIN. Before the hon. gentleman answers that question, I want to ask another question of a cognate character. The eastern terminus of this line is at Port Arthur. Well, one of the objects of this line is to give competition between Port Arthur and Winnipeg with the Canadian Pacific Railway. During the winter its traffic and passengers cannot go east through Canada except by the Canadian Pacific Railway. The Canadian Pacific Railway naturally will have nothing to do with a line that is its enemy and therefore this line is looking to dip down into the United States to go to Duluth and connect with the American system. We ought to pause before we give the maximum bonus to a line that will be part of the United States system. My desire is to fight the national system and to get the best advantages for the people tra-veiling upon it; but when it comes to helping the lines in the United States against the national system, then I will fight for the national system. But I will do everything that I can to lower the rates on our Canadian system. Now, during the winter, when the lakes will be closed up, how is this line to get its traffic to the seaboard? My argument is this: The line evidently intends to connect with Duluth and from Duluth with the American system, and therefore our wheat from the North-west over it will be taken through the United States. When we are subsidizing a line like this we should take a guarantee that some arrangement will be made whereby the freight of our products in the North-west, which are every year growing in volume, should go over the Canadian lines, and should not swell the traffic of the United States, enriching a foreign country instead of enriching ourselves.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman's remarks indicate that he has given but a superficial attention to this question. The only wheat that could go over this line would be wheat coming over the Manitoba and South-eastern Railway from Winnipeg. When the Manitoba and South-eastern, and this extension, get to the mouth of the Rainy River, as it is projected now, then the fear of the people who are interested in Canadian trade will be that a short line will be run to Duluth, and that that wheat will go to Duluth; and that will inevitably happen unless they get connection by way of Port Arthur.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will first answer the question of the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver). He desires an expression of opinion from me as to whether any authority which may control the rates over this line will be compelled to take into account the bonded liabilities of the company. While I would not like to speak for the body that may have to determine a question of this kind, I may say, without pretending to determine it now, that I would feel that it would be proper to consider the actual cost of the railway. While I say that I think it would be in the power of the Governor in Council absolutely to disregard the question of cost at all, whether the company got any dividend or any return at all upon their investments, the Governor in Council should not absolutely disregard that consideration, and I apprehend would not feel justified in doing so.

Mr. RICHARDSON. In view of the Minister's statement and of the further fact that when we gave such large aid to the Crow's Nest Pass Railway we asked from them a quid pro quo in the way of a reduction of rates, I beg to move that the following be added:

Mr. DAVIN.

On the condition that the rate on wheat over that portion of the line subsidized by the Government shall not exceed a per mileage rate based upon a gross rate of 8 cents per cwt. between Winnipeg and Fort William, upon the through line when completed, with proportionate rates upon all outgoing and incoming freight according to classification.

Amendment negatived: Yeas, 5; Nays, 25.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 181) for the relief of Isaac Stephen Gerow Van Wart.—(Mr. Landerkin.)

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES.

House again resolved itself into committee to consider certain proposed resolutions respecting the granting of the subsidies therein mentioned to the railway companies and towards the construction of the railways also therein mentioned.

The Ontario and Rainy River Railway Company, for a railway from Stanley Station, on the Port Arthur, Duluth and Western Railway, to Fort Francis, for a distance of 140 miles, at $6,400 per mile, not exceeding in the whole. $896,000

Mr. WALLACE. It will be convenient at this stage to know the different bonuses that are proposed to be paid to this Ontario Rainy River Railway Company. We want to have a look at the map, to have it pointed out where the railway runs; we want a statement of the total amount that has been voted before, and what is proposed for the future. This is a portion of a scheme that, I presume, will involve a further expenditure. We want to know the length of the road, the portion that runs through the United States, and all the particulars in regard to it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman seriously ask me to repeat what I have already stated in the House?

Mr. WALLACE. I have been in the House during the whole of the time that the railway resolutions have been under discussion, and I have not heard the information given that I am asking the hon. Minister for now. I have been paying particular attention to every resolution that has passed, except for a few minutes after three o'clock.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I desire to withhold no information from the hon. gentleman. I know he is an earnest seeker after knowledge, but I can assure him, that if he has been in the House, and has not heard me state what he is now asking me to state, he is not in possession of all his faculties. I can perhaps briefly recount what I have already stated to the committee. The Ontario and Rainy River Railway has already a subsidy, under an Act passed in 1897, of $3,200 a mile, with the contingent possibility of earning $6,400 per mile, under a clause similar to that which has been introduced in the present Bill. The distance for which that subsidy was given was 80 miles, from a station called Stanley, on the Port Arthur and Duluth Railway. The clause which is now under the consideration of the committee, is a clause in substitution of the clause which was put in the Act of 1897.

Mr. WALLACE. Then, the subsidy which the Government propose to give for this first 80 miles, is double the subsidy that was first proposed for it. On what ground do they propose to double the subsidy?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In order to ensure the construction of the line. We propose to give a fixed subsidy of $6,400 per mile.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the Ontario Government giving?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know, but I am informed that they are getting a subsidy from the provincial government for some portion of this line.

Mr. WALLACE. Surely, the hon. Minister knows what the subsidy is.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Minister does not know; the Minister has been informed that the Ontario Government have given, or are proposing to give, $4,000 a mile, either in land or money.

Mr. WALLACE. The Government of Ontario do not only propose to give $4,000 a mile, but they voted that at the last session of the legislature; so that they will have $10,400 a mile for the construction of this road. I see that the hon. Minister is proposing another vote—item 30—for a further distance of 70 miles for the same road.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, this is a road which is much more easy of construction, and can be more cheaply built.

Mr. WALLACE. It comes under the general provision that they get $3,200 a mile, and they have to prove their right to any further sum.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. They will not earn any more than $3,200 per mile by reason of the character of the country through which the road passes.

Mr. WALLACE. Then there is a further subsidy to the Ontario and Rainy River Company from the railway to Stanley Station, to the Port Arthur Road and Western Railway by Fort Frances, a distance of 140 miles. That would appear to be travelling over the same ground.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, it would naturally show here. I think the hon. gentleman understood me to say that it was an error. We proposed to make it the point of departure, 80 miles distance from Stanley Station. That is practically covering the same grant as one made two years ago, but we are proposing to add a further subsidy upon the additional mileage between the point west of Stanley Station and Fort Frances—140 miles at the sum of $6,400 per mile.

Mr. WALLACE. I think it would be proper to consider these three items together, because they can scarcely be understood otherwise. First, the railway is bonused and built to Stanley Station. Will the Minister tell me what distance that is from Fort William?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot state what the exact mileage is. It is not over 20 miles, I think.

Mr. WALLACE. Then they have a further distance under clause 19 of 80 miles, which would bring it up to 100 miles from Port Arthur. Then they have under clause 2, 140 miles, reaching from the end of that 100 miles to Fort Frances. Then the estimated distance from Port Arthur to Fort Frances is 240 miles.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. From the most accurate measurement that is possible to make, it is between 219 and 220 miles between Stanley Station and Fort Frances, and 70 miles from Fort Frances to the mouth of the Rainy River where you strike the foot of the Lake of the Woods.

Mr. WALLACE. That is where the road strikes the United States. That is the point where it leaves Canadian territory. Then we have 240 miles in all, and 70 miles to Fort Frances, amounting to 310 miles. What is the estimated distance the road goes through the United States?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Thirty-five or forty miles.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it surveyed through there?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think so yet.

Mr. WALLACE. Then it comes into Canadian territory again at a distance of 345 or 350 miles from Fort Arthur. What distance is it from there to the city of Winnipeg?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot tell what the distance is—

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister should treat this committee in some sort of a decent way and give us the information. He sits there and if he chooses to answer, he will give "about" or something like that. I never saw the time yet in this House that a Minister of Railways when he was subsidizing a railway claim like this, could not give us some information about it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I want the hon. gentleman to understand that he is not going to lecture me. I think it is most impertinent on the part of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster). What right has he to stand up and undertake to lecture me as though I was his subordinate. I want to tell the hon. gentleman that I know my duties and that I intend to perform them, and I want him to recognize his duty and that he has got to treat other members with some little respect, even though he has had the misfortune to be a Minister of the Crown. I have not declined to answer any questions; on the contrary, I have endeavoured to answer the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) fully. He has asked me the length of the road from Winnipeg to the boundary line. I did not know it, and I appealed to my hon. friend (Mr. Sifton), who did not hear me at the moment. As soon as he heard the question he answered that it was 310 miles, and then the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) takes occasion to lecture me. I want him to understand that I will not submit to it.

Mr. SPROULE. You have got to.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, I have not. The hon. gentleman is under a great misapprehension when he thinks that I will submit to it. It is possible for me to go out into the corridors of this House and to treat the hon. gentleman's question without any notice.

Mr. FOSTER. Try it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will try it unless the hon. gentleman acts in a manner which becomes a gentleman.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman has made several exhibitions of himself, but none so painful as this.

Mr. WALLACE. I can tell the Minister of Railways that his attempt at a game of bluff will not go in this House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. WALLACE. He need not expect to think that a little cheap talk such as he has been indulging in to-night is going to prevent us from getting information which the House and the country are entitled to. If I desire information I ask for it in proper terms. I asked for information about the two subsidies that are being voted for this road.

Mr. BLAIR.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Did not the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) get the answer from me?

Mr. WALLACE. We saw how, in a sneering way, he got up and stated that he did not suppose I was quite sincere or quite in earnest in my desire about this matter, and that he had given certain information to the House. I have been in the House every hour, I think, since these railway resolutions have been under discussion; I have listened as attentively as I could to the explanations, or the so-called explanations, of the Minister of Railways, and, Sir, I think it was a matter of humiliation to the members of this House on both sides to see the utter lack of information possessed by the Minister with regard to every railroad that came up. He had received fair warning that he would be required to place on the Table of the House, as it was his duty to do, all the papers with regard to these matters. Have we had a single paper placed on the Table of the House from the commencement up to the present moment? The Minister has read papers, and when he was asked to place them on the Table and let us see them, he declined, saying that these were private memoranda. Well, where are the public papers which we are entitled to see? The maps which he has laid on the Table are only apologies for maps. This afternoon, although Fort Assiniboine was mentioned a dozen times, I defy him to show Fort Assiniboine on the map except where it was written in by the ex-Minister of Finance.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) showed me where it was.

Mr. WALLACE. There has been no attempt to give the House the information it is entitled to receive. When he is asked about these matters, he manifests indifference, or says, "I suppose," "I don't know," and so on. I am reminded that when Sir Charles Tupper was Minister of Railways and had railway projects to bring before the House he fairly deluged the House with explanations and with documents that might be required to give every member of the House an opportunity of familiarizing himself with the whole subject. But in this case as in all others, we are denied proper information. The Minister threatens to walk out into the corridors and give us no information. For the most of the time, he might as well be out there, for all the use he is to the members of the House. Why, Sir, it has become a roaring farce, the way the members of this House are treated by the Minister when we are voting away millions of dollars of the people's money. When we go back to our constituents and attempt to justify these votes, if one should be barefaced enough to attempt to justify them, what are we to say? That we investigated them, and were satisfied that they were right? Nothing of the kind. What I have learned about this railway is that its length is 460 miles. Twenty miles are already built; there is a subsidy for eighty miles; then there are 140 miles; then, forty miles or thereabouts in the United States; before you reach that there are seventy miles, making 350 miles; and on the other side of the lake there are 110 miles, making a total of 460 miles. I think the Canadian Pacific Railway from Port Arthur to Winnipeg is about 425 or 427 miles long, so that this railroad would be thirty or more miles longer, and a portion of it runs through the United States. Canada is giving a larger subsidy to this road than it has given to any other line of railway with the exception of a short line from Gravenhurst to North Bay, which was given $12,000 per mile. For the most of this railway we are giving $6,400 per mile. The Minister says that one portion of it will not be able to earn the $6,400 per mile. That is a matter that remains to be seen; but in the meantime the province of Ontario is also giving a subsidy to this railway of $4,000 per mile, making a total of $10,400 per mile. Now, either this railway is necessary for commercial purposes or it is not. If it is necessary for commercial purposes, it is an outrage to subsidize it to the extent of $10,400 per mile. If it is not necessary for commercial purposes, that is an enormous sum of money to give as a subsidy, totally unjustifiable under any circumstances or conditions. But for myself, I go still further, and I say that the Government and this country have done their whole duty when they have built a line from Port Arthur to Winnipeg as part of the great transcontinental line of railway from ocean to ocean. If the business of the country requires two lines of railway, the second line should be built as a commercial enterprise; and in my view, it has not a claim to a dollar of public money. We are told, "Oh, the Government is going to have it for a competing line, and therefore we shall be recouped many times over, and the Government is going to retain control." I think I have heard that kind of talk before. The Government have full control over the Grand Trunk, over the Canadian Pacific Railway in the province of Ontario, and over other railways throughout the country. So that the power supposed to be possessed by the Government of giving the people better railroad rates has, as a matter of fact, never been exercised, and, therefore, never has been of any value to the people. In my opinion these enormous subsidies, amounting to $10,400 per mile, from the province of Ontario and the Dominion, to the greater portion of this enterprise, is not justified by any argument I have heard advanced, and is a wanton waste of the people's money. Therefore, I shall oppose the proposed grants for the Rainy River Railway.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the hon. Minister if there has been any calculation of the cost of this road submitted to the department?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There has been no written report submitted on the subject, but I have had a good deal of communication with the firm of Mackenzie & Mann and have had conversations with the engineers in my department. The chief engineer is pretty well acquainted with the district through which the road runs, and he is of opinion that that portion of the road from Stanley Station to Fort Frances is a very expensive railway to build. It runs through a rough country and will cost well up to $20,000 odd per mile. The other portion of the line, we are satisfied from information received from various sources, would be a very much less expensive railway to build, but from Fort Frances through to the head of Rainy River is a comparatively level and fine agricultural country, and we are given to understand that about $13,000 or $14,000 at the outside per mile will build an excellent first-class road from Fort Frances to Rainy River.

Mr. FOSTER. Have no reports been submitted to the Minister at all, as to the cost of the road from Stanley to Fort Frances, and the engineering difficulties?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not any report as to that.

Mr. FOSTER. How does the chief engineer come to the conclusion that it would be a very costly road to build?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He is acquainted with the character of the country through which the road passes.

Mr. FOSTER. Has he been over the country?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think so.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the Minister know whether or not his chief engineer simply sat in his office and made calculations or any kind of experimental survey in any way?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He did not.

Mr. FOSTER. And the hon. gentleman did not think it was necessary to inquire into it before recommending the subsidy?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not beyond the opinion we have.

Mr. FOSTER. What opinion?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have said that the information I have had from my chief engineer, not in writing, not as the result of a survey, but from his knowledge of the country and the class of work required to be done, is that the road will be a very expensive one to build. As a matter of fact, we know that the sum of $3,200 was specifically voted two years ago, subject to the contingent possibility of the road costing over $15,000 and earning a subsidy of $6,400 per mile. They were unable to finance upon that grant, by reason of its indefiniteness. The information received since the Act of 1897 was passed, was that they would earn the $6,400 a mile, in view of the fact that the indefiniteness of the grant made it impossible for them to finance upon it, and that $6,400 per mile was the amount the Government felt they would be justified in giving to aid the railway, they ask Parliament to fix that definitely.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I should suppose that the chief engineer must have had the necessary information before him. The hon. gentleman will recognize the fact that the country through which this road will pass is pretty well known. This enterprise has been under consideration by the people, anxious to have a road, for a great many years, and quite a number of written and printed reports have been made, especially to the provincial legislature. What I wish to convey is this, that at the time of the application for an extra amount, over and above the usual grant by the provincial legislature, a special survey was made.

Mr. FOSTER. By the provincial engineer?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. At the request of the provincial government. I am sorry I cannot remember just now the name of the man who made the calculation, but he calculated that the cost of the 220 miles, for which the $6,400 per mile would be granted, would be about $27,000 per mile. It was on the strength of his report that the provincial legislature increased their grant, and they had in view the fact that we would give a bonus of $6,400 per mile. This is a section of the country in which the western portion of Ontario feel a very great interest. It is acknowledged by all who take an interest in these matters that there is a very much greater agricultural wealth of lands there than was anticipated before the country was so well known. In addition to that, my hon. friend will know, from recent discoveries, that there has been a great demand from our own rolling mills for the iron in that country, and that the development of this great industry in Canada depends altogether on railway communication through these valuable iron deposits, and that, in course of time, the whole connection there might make this a very paying property. There have been a great deal of money and energy put into this enterprise, but all the efforts that have been made have been unable, until lately, to get the enterprise into anything like a good financial position. When it was taken up by Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann, and whoever their associates may be—and I have seen it stated that they are wealthy men, but at any rate we all know that these contractors are men of experience and wealth—and when this bonus was granted in 1897, it was thought probable these men would be able, with their experience and financial ability, to finance this undertaking. But it was found that they could not do so. It was thought by the financiers that if connection were made with the properties Mackenzie & Mann had in the west, it might be made a paying property, and with this subsidy they might be able to raise the money to build the road. I find that the unanimous voice of the provincial legislature irrespective of party is in favour of the construction of this road by means of provincial and Dominion aid. I have watched the proceedings there very closely, and I can say that in the legislature and outside of it, in the cities and towns of western Ontario particularly, they are very much interested in the development of this section, well known now as New Ontario. In view of the report submitted to the legislature—I was under the impression that a copy of these statements had been sent to members of the House, but I know that members are busy and are apt to overlook these things, but I read and carefully studied one that came into my own hands—I think we may fairly conclude that it will be advantageous to the whole country that this subsidy should be given.

Mr. FOSTER. Two years ago, when the graduated system of subsidies over $3,200 was being discussed, I said that there were two roads that were about on a par as affecting two great sections of the country—one was the Crow's Nest Pass, as affecting British Columbia, and the other the Ontario and Rainy River Railway, as affecting the new lands of Ontario, and I have no disposition not to stand by my assertion of that time. The difficulty they had in financing the enterprise was that they themselves did not know and could not tell the men to whom they went for money exactly what subsidy they would receive—and financiers, before they advance money, want to know exactly what the resources of the enterprise are. I thank my hon. friend (Mr. Sutherland) for the information he has given to me and to the House. But I cannot but contrast the methods of the Ontario Government, notwithstanding the many hard things said about that Government, with the work of our own Ministry here. The usual railway subsidy in Ontario, as I understand it, is $2,000 a mile. They were asked to supplement that with another $2,000. But before the Ontario Government ventured to come down to their legislature with a proposition to double the subsidy, at their request, a thorough investigation and survey was made of the cost, and so when the proposal was laid before the legislature, they had the data on which to base their claims, which resulted, as my hon. friend said, in great unanimity.

mity in doubling that subsidy in the Ontario legislature. But here, where we have a very effective Railway Department, so far as engineering ability is concerned, there is no attempt to give the House any information as to the cost of the road. When we are asked to double a subsidy, not only should we have information for ourselves, but we should have information so that when we go to our constituents, by whom we shall be questioned about this, we may be able to give a fair explanation as to the reasons which led us to a conclusion. But it turns out that there was not even a report from the engineer of the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Blair's) own department. He has nothing but word of mouth. Now, I do not believe in this word of mouth business. It is good for a man in the department to talk to his engineer, but when it comes to formulating appeals to this House for substantial financial aid, we ought to have something more than the mere talk between the Minister and his officer.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What engineering reports had the Government of which the hon. gentleman was a member when a subsidy to the amount of $170,000 a year for fifteen years, a total of about two and a half millions, was voted to build a railway across the State of Maine? Will the hon. gentleman say that there was any engineering report procured or furnished to Parliament?

Mr. FOSTER. I have two replies to make to that. In the first place, even if what the hon. gentleman suggests were true, it would be no justification for the negligence of the hon. gentleman at this time. In the second place, I am inclined to believe, although it was some time ago, that we laid very full information before the House. Now, what right has the Minister to come down here and ask us to double the regular subsidy of $3,200 a mile without any report as to the engineering difficulties and the probable cost of the road.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. May I ask the hon. gentleman another question? What right had the hon. gentleman in one of the largest committees of the House last session, to declare that in his opinion the Government ought to ask Parliament to give $6,400 a mile to this railway in place of the subsidy they had given?

Mr. FOSTER. So far as I am personally concerned, I probably know that country better than the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) does. It happens that I have been through it. I am not asking this for general information at all. But I am not an engineer and cannot estimate the cost of a road. What we want is information, not only for ourselves but for our constituents as well. The very fact stated by the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) that a careful estimate and survey had shown that the cost would be $27,000 a mile for that portion of the line was a basis for an intelligent opinion, and one that could be used by those before whom it was laid as justification for their action before their constituents. But we come down to the pitiful position that the hon. gentleman had a talk with his engineer, who never was over the ground, and they came to the conclusion that the subsidy should be $6,400 a mile. That is no way for the hon. gentleman to run his department, and it is no reasonable basis upon which to ask this Parliament to double a subsidy already granted. I believe that the road is a very difficult road to build after you get some distance beyond Stanley Station, right up to Fort Frances. From that point to the mouth of the Rainy River, it is an easy road to build. But that is a general statement, and why in the name of goodness, when a demand was made for $6,400 a mile should we not have called for the report of an engineer, then let the chief engineer of the department go over that and report to the Minister? Such a report placed before this House would give an intelligent basis for a vote. In voting for this $6,400 a mile, which I propose to do, I vote on what I know to be the general difficulties in the way of building a road up to that point, owing to the number of small lakes and the peculiar conformation of the country. But so far as this House is concerned, they have nothing before them upon which to form a judgment. The Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) never was there, and has not a shred of information on the subject. When the matter was decided in Council, there was no information before Council.

The PRIME MINISTER. I had good information.

Mr. FOSTER. Did my hon. friend have an engineer's report?

The PRIME MINISTER. No. I had the report of my hon. friend.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend is going to make a very clever answer: he is going to say he had the splendid authority of the hon. member for York. Well, the member for York is not an authority on engineering matters. And my hon. friend did not have the courtesy to ask me to Council, when that matter was being discussed. But I know my hon. friend feels in his heart that we should have had that information. We want something to justify this vote before the country, as well as to justify our action here. I may get up and say that this road will cost no such amount of money; another man has just as good right to say it will cost a great deal more than that. But there is only one way to get an approximate cost, which is an engineer's report and calculation.

The PRIME MINISTER. I submit to my hon. friend, and to his own moderation, that he is altogether hypercritical in this matter. Of course, we must have information, but there is information sometimes which runs in the streets, and which we do not require to have in concrete form in order to enable Parliament to act. Two years ago my hon. friend supported the Government in voting a large subsidy to the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, and he had himself taken action the year before. What information had he before him then?

Mr. FOSTER. We had the information of an experimental survey.

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman had no critical information upon the subject; he had just such information as we have upon this. Everybody knows, my hon. friend knows better, perhaps, than others, because he has been there, that this is a very expensive piece of railway to build, and that it will cost much over $20,000 per mile. Everybody knows that, because there have been reports upon reports in past years published in the newspapers upon that subject. But now my hon. friend says that, upon top of all that, we should have another survey and another report. Surely, my hon. friend is altogether too critical, and does not pretend that in a matter of this kind the department has not followed business methods, when they have taken information which is in the hands of everybody.

Mr. HUGHES. It is not my intention to lecture the Minister of Railways and Canals, but I really think it would be very much better for the sake of getting his resolutions through the House, if he had fortified himself with a little data. He could have got it from any of his clerks in a few minutes, and I think he would have found that these resolutions would have slipped through more easily. I presume it is an oversight. He should remember that the general membership of this House is not posted as to that Rainy River road. Here three subsidies come in, and I defend the subsidies right straight through. But while the member for York (Mr. Foster) had a chance of knowing the details, other members of the House are not as well informed. Now, I think the Minister could have strengthened his case by pointing out the cost of the Canadian Pacific Railway through this same region. I understand it cost in the neighbourhood of $35,000 a mile to build through a country similar to what this will traverse during the first 220 miles of its course. I say, in all kindness, now to the Minister that it would be only courtesy, and help through his estimates, if he will just bring down a little more information.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. MONK. I want to add my approval of what has been said by my hon. friend from North Victoria (Mr. Hughes). I think the time employed in passing these estimates would have been shortened by at least two-thirds, if we had before us the Estimates at an earlier date, and if we had attached to those Estimates a set of documents such as would justify the grant in each case.

Mr. McCARTHY. I desire to say a word, as it is evident a vote is not going to be taken on this question. So far as the subsidy to the Rainy River Railway is concerned, and so far as the subsidy to the Quebec Bridge is concerned, I desire to place myself on record by saying that I would not support by my vote the sums proposed to be given to either of these two enterprises. I do not mean to say that I would not support votes of smaller sums, but these appear to me to be much too large.

Mr. SPROULE. I see by the Ontario Statutes that they voted last year in the local House a cash subsidy of $1,000 per mile to the Ontario and Rainy River Railway for a distance not exceeding 205 miles, and they voted a subsidy of $4,000 a mile to the other portion of the road. I understood the Minister to say that that portion of the road from Rainy River on was the light portion to build, and would not require as heavy a subsidy as the first section. But the provincial government, for the first portion of the road, voted a subsidy of $1,000 a mile, and for the portion of the road from Rainy River on they voted $4,000 a mile. I was going to ask upon what information the Minister had decided in giving the heavier subsidy to the first portion of the road, because I understood him to say that the second portion, from Rainy River on, would only cost the ordinary amount per mile, and therefore, was not likely to get the double subsidy?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think it is common knowledge that that portion of the line from Stanley to Fort Frances locks is a very rough and difficult country through which to construct a road. But you find a very different country, and far more favourable for railroad construction, after you pass the locks, and all the way through to Rainy River, an ordinary good farming country. The land is very excellent, it is level, and the building of a railway will not be attended with a great deal of expense or difficulty.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). Replying to my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule), I think the Ontario Government first gave a larger subsidy, and this vote of $1,000 was an addition, according to my memory, to the former vote of $2,000 or $3,000.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to ascertain from the Minister if he has any information as to what time this railway is likely to be completed, if this money is voted, because it seems to me that is of great importance to the people of the west. And, when it is through, what arrangements would the company have for carrying the products of Canada through that portion of the United States through which the road must run, because it must run 40 miles through a portion of the United States?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am informed that they have already concluded an arrangement which will enable them to go on with the construction of the whole line immediately. They are getting pretty well down to the boundary with what is called the South-eastern line from Winnipeg to Duluth. They say they will have the link, which passes through United States territory, constructed and ready for operation, as soon as they can get down to the mouth of the Rainy River. They are now pushing the work along quite vigorously and they expect, inside of a year from this coming fall, to have the line finished right through.

Mr. SPROULE. Perhaps the hon. Minister misunderstood me in regard to the right of running through the United States. I was asking him if he knew whether any arrangement had been made whereby the produce of Canada could be brought from the west, taken through United States territory and returned to Canada other than in bond.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think they will have to be bonded.

Mr. SPROULE. I think these subsidies cover all that portion of the road between where we leave the Port Arthur, Duluth and Western Railway until we reach the boundary line of the United States.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We will not subsidize any part of the line running through United States territory, of course.

Mr. SPROULE. Then the distance will be 280 miles.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It will be something more than that, nearly 290 miles. We provide for 290 miles; it may fall short a mile or half a mile.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that they have already a charter for the portion of the line in the United States.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. I regard this as a very important line and the sooner it is built the better for the country. I think we are giving a very substantial bonus for the building of the road, but I cannot close my eyes to the fact that this is going to be an important line to the country. I know a number of people who have gone into that country, from some of whom I have received letters, who regard it as a matter of the greatest importance that this railway should be built at the earliest possible day. The greatest interest centres in the fact that this is another outlet for Manitoba, and it is important that the road should be built for the purpose of transporting the products of that country. I think it is regrettable that we cannot have some better guarantee for keeping this line entirely independent of the Canadian Pacific Railway and some control power over the freight rates to be exercised by the Government that will enable them, in the event of exorbitant rates being charged, to reduce them. My opinion is that the motion made last night by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) was a reasonable one, and I supported it, but the committee did not see fit to adopt that view. I think this matter is important, and it seems to me that, if it was possible to do it, either by making a provision in the subsidy clause, or by an independent Act, measures should be taken to keep this road separate from the Canadian Pacific Railway entirely, and to retain control over freight rates, so that the people of the west and of the east who have subsidized this road so generously shall not be charged more than they ought to be charged for the transportation of freight.

Mr. McMULLEN. Mr. Chairman, I am exceedingly pleased to hear the remarks that have just fallen from the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule). I look upon the construction of this road myself as exceedingly important to the province of Ontario. I cannot understand any man coming from that province who has studied at all the resources of this particular section which is to be opened up, both in regard to the minerals and in regard to the development of agricultural lands, standing up and opposing a grant in aid of the construction of this road. I quite agree that it is well that we should be exceedingly careful to secure the construction of the road at the lowest possible rate, but I would say to my hon. friends opposite that I have examined the surveys and profiles of this road. I saw them in Toronto where they were exhibited for the information of the members of the Ontario legislature.

Mr. FOSTER. These were the company's surveys in profiles.

Mr. McMULLEN. Yes. I examined them carefully, and any one who would go over them would see that it is an exceedingly difficult undertaking to build that road. It is unquestionably going to be an expensive line to build and it will cost $28,000 or $30,- 000 a mile. My hon. friends opposite and other hon. gentlemen from Ontario are aware that recently the entire legislature of Ontario were asked to go out and visit that country so that they might see what they were paying their money for. They went up, made a thorough inspection of the country, and gave a creditable report of the results of their investigation of the resources of the country. They reported that it is highly desirable, in the interest of the province, that the road should be built. Conservatives and Liberals both agree that the evidences of the wealth that would be opened up by the construction of that road were such as to justify the work and make it one that would result to the lasting advantage of Ontario. In the face of all that, I think the Government are amply justified in making the grant they propose to make to secure the construction of that line. I feel quite certain that hon. gentlemen opposite when they were trying to make a contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway, did the best they could in the interest of the country. I have no doubt that the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) many times drove a hard bargain in the interest of the country and I believe the Government are driving a hard bargain in the interest of the country in order to secure the construction of this line, which I look upon as one of the greatest boons that can be secured for the province of Ontario. I could understand any man from the eastern provinces, or possibly from British Columbia, opposing this road from the want of knowing everything about it, but I cannot understand any man from Ontario who takes the trouble to make any examination at all of the resources of that country, and who realizes the agricultural and mineral wealth that would be secured, resulting in a large increase in population, and who has regard to the difficult character of the construction, opposing the granting of a subsidy to this road. I had a conversation a short time ago with a man who is familiar with the steps taken in connection with the location of the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway from Port Arthur westward. He stated to me, and I believe he stated what he knew to be true, that but for the engineering difficulties in the way the Canadian Pacific Railway would unquestionably have been constructed through the section to be traversed by the Ontario and Rainy River Railway. The only thing that deterred them was the increased cost of building the line in that direction. They realized fully the possibilities of the mineral resources of that section of the country; they wanted to possess the carrying trade of that country and they would have built through there but for the increased cost that the construction would have imposed upon them. So that they were forced reluctantly to abandon it. Now, it has been taken up by a company that has evinced a strong determination to push the undertaking forward and carry it to completion. I hope many of us may live to take a trip over the new line as we have over the Canadian Pacific Railway, and if we do, there is no hon. gentleman who holds up his hand and casts his vote in favour of a grant towards the construction of that road but will feel proud that he had the privilege, in the Parliament of Canada, of raising his voice in favour of that enterprise, which will result in such advantage to the province of Ontario.

Mr. HENDERSON. I regret that I am unable to see as the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) does the very great advantages which are going to accrue to the province of Ontario in the construction of the Rainy River road. To my mind it will eventually become an American road and not a Canadian road. It runs to a point in the province of Ontario where it must terminate at least for five months in the year, but can only be regarded as a through line during the summer months while water communication is open. No doubt that freight coming over this road can find an outlet through the lakes during the summer months, but for five months in the year every thing brought over that road must either remain there till the spring of the year or else must be sent on over the Canadian Pacific Railway. Now, I think it is quite absurd for us to suppose that the people in Manitoba are going to ship freight over the Rainy River road to Port Arthur and then take the risk of having to pay whatever the Canadian Pacific Railway may charge them to carry it on for five months of the year from Port Arthur down to Montreal. In my opinion the promoters of this road, if they do not know it now will eventually discover, that a great portion of the road can only be a local road for at least five months of the year, and that before long a spur road will be built from a point somewhere midway between Winnipeg and Port Arthur towards Duluth, and all the traffic for those five months of the year from Manitoba will go over a portion of this road and thence on to Duluth, making connection with American railroad systems to find an outlet at the seaboard. For these reasons I say I do not view in the same light as the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) does the very great advantages that are going to accrue to the province of Ontario on account of the construction of this road. Doubtless even as a local road the eastern portion of it will be of very great advantage to the people coming in there and will help to settle the country, but I think we must abandon the idea altogether that this road is ever going to be a successful competitor with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and if this is one of the chief objects in promoting this road, in bonusing it with the heavy bonus that we propose to give, it seems to me the Government will find they have made a mistake.

Mr. CHARLTON. Some years ago when engaged in the work of the Ontario Mining Commission, I visited that section of country which it is proposed to open by the means of this road. The investigation of the commission with reference to the mineral resources of that region was such as to convince us that it was a country of enormous wealth and enormous possibilities, and I was struck at that time with the necessity of railway communication with this mineral region and to have an outlet for the mineral products. The iron deposits that will be opened up by this road are of inestimable value, and as far as my hon. friend's (Mr. Henderson) objections go that the road will touch the Lake Superior port and that an outlet will not be available during the six months of the year, I did not understand that the traffic of the region in the vicinity of the lakes is conducted by rail except to transport the ore from the mines to some lake port. That is the case with the mines on the south side of Lake Superior, and this road will serve the purpose that other roads do on the American side of taking the ore from the mines and laying it at points of shipment where it must necessarily be transported by water. As to the iron trade of the lakes now, this ore is transported exclusively in vessels. It is shipped from Escanaba, Marquette, and other harbours to Cleveland, Tonawanda, Buffalo and other points on the lower lakes and thence transported to furnaces at Pittsburg, and to other furnaces in the interior. Now, this road does not require one connection. It only requires to touch a good harbour on Lake Superior and if it does that, it will afford a necessary outlet to the vast mineral wealth that is in that region. It opens up a mineral section of great extent and of great value, and the road is necessary for the development of what is properly termed New Ontario. This is an enormous region with great resources, both agricultural and mineral, as well as timber. The road is one of the most meritorious projects presented to this House. So far as the objections made on the other side are concerned that the Government have not taken the precaution to make an active survey and to have from their engineers detailed information as to the cost of the road, they are not well-founded. We have available information possessed by the Department of Railways and Canals, and the information which the Ontario Government obtained when deciding whether they should double the bonus given to this road or not. This information is open to us. The result of the survey is well known to the head of the department and his engineers, and so far as the Government proceeding in the dark is concerned, I may say that such is not the case. Any person of ordinary intelligence who has given to this matter any consideration has abundant source of information as to whether the aid asked for by this road is necessary or not. It is a matter which I think admits of no discussion. There is no doubt that the road will cost more than $25,000 per mile, but so far as the cost of the road is concerned it is a well known fact that the road will open up a new section of country which will develop into one of the greatest agricultural or mineral regions known. If the road is necessary to the development of that great region, I do not think it is worth while quibbling about the question as to whether the Department of Railways should make a re-survey and re-examination when they have information derived from the company itself, and from the investigation made by the Ontario Government. These two sources of information furnish the Government with ample data on which to base its action. I have not the slightest doubt that any hon. gentleman who has examined this matter will say that the road is one of prime importance and that the aid asked for is amply justified by the character of the country and by the extent of development that the road will secure for the country it is to serve. For those reasons, knowing as I do the enormous mineral wealth of that country I cannot see why we should spend time uselessly in opposing the action of the Government in proposing a bonus to this road.

For a railway from Fort Frances, Ont., westerly to a point at or near the mouth of Rainy River, a distance not exceeding 70 miles.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the Minister say whether or not it is the intention of the company to commence operations at both ends, that is, from Fort Stanley and from the mouth of Rainy River?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In the last conversation I had with Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann, they told me that they had strong hopes of being able to do that.

Mr. SPROULE. In this case will the bonus be doubled up?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The 70 miles will earn only the ordinary bonus.

To the United Counties Railway Company, for a railway from St. Robert Junction to Sorel, 6½ miles, and from Mount Johnson to St. Grégoire Station, 1 mile, not exceeding 7½ miles. Revote.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You will observe that this is a revote. It evidently satisfied the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) in his day; and the applicants, having already had the subsidy voted to them, urged upon us to put them in as good a position, at all events, as they had been put by previous legislation. I presume they must have made out a pretty good case.

Mr. FOSTER. There did not seem to be any case at all last night.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There was a good case, the hon. gentleman would admit, when the previous subsidy was passed, Acts were passed.

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot help that. It does not seem to have a leg to stand on now.

To the Bay of Quinté Railway Company, for such extension, branches or additions to its system as will enable the said company to connect its lines of railway or connecting lines with iron or other mines or mineral or wood lands in the counties of Peterboro', Northumberland, Hastings, Lennox and Addington, Frontenac or Leeds, payable in instalments regulated by the length of each of the said extensions or branches or additions, as the case may be, in lieu of part of the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy granted to the Kingston, Napanee and Western Railway Company, by 55-56 Victoria, chap. 5, but not exceeding $3,200 per mile for 10 miles, nor exceeding in the whole $32,000. Revote.

Mr. SPROULE. This seems to be a roving commission to go over several counties.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The only difference between this clause and the clause which was enacted in previous Subsidy Acts, extending back, I think, for a number of years, is, that instead of giving them a subsidy for 18½ miles, we have tied them down to 10 miles.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose you grant the subsidy, what authority have they to build a railway, unless they have a charter?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They have specific powers under existing charters.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that they have power to build to where they have mines; but I do not think they have the same power to build to wood lands.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They must have the legislative authority to build, or else they could not avail themselves of the subsidy. They would have to take the risk of that. I have not examined the charter; I take for granted that they must have the power.

To the South Shore Railway Company, from Sorel Junction along the South Shore to Lotbinière, Que., a distance not exceeding 82 miles.

Mr. FOSTER. Let us have a general explanation of all these South Shore votes.

The PRIME MINISTER. There is only one.

Mr. FOSTER. There are a lot of bridges.

The PRIME MINISTER. This subsidy is intended to give railway accommodation to the parishes along the south shore of the St. Lawrence. The South Shore Railway Company has built, and is now operating, a railway from the city of Montreal to the town of Sorel, on the Richelieu River, and it has built a bridge on the Richelieu River. The object of the subsidy is to extend the same railway from Sorel to the parish of Yamaska, on the Yamaska River; then to the parish of St. François du Lac, on the St. Francis River, Pierreville, St. Zéphyrin, La Baie du Febvre, Nicolet, St. Grégoire, Bécancour, Gentilly, St. Pierre les Becquets, St. Jean Deschallons, Lotbinière; then it stops there. The company asked a subsidy up to Lévis, but we deemed it advisable this time not to grant their request.

Mr. BLAIR.

Mr. FOSTER. But it is coming.

The PRIME MINISTER. No doubt it will, but for the time being we thought it sufficient if we extended it up to Lotbinière. The reason is this. This railway, as it is built, will be tapped by two railways, which will cross it at right angles, that it to say, going from the Grand Trunk Railway towards the St. Lawrence—the railways from Arthabaska to Three Rivers and from Lister to St. Jean Deschallons, in the vicinity of Lotbinière. Those two roads are running now. This railway has for its object the giving of railway accommodation to these parishes on the south shore of the St. Lawrence, which I have just named. They are wealthy parishes, which at one time were served by navigation in the summer, but my hon. friend knows that market boats are becoming gradually obsolete, because now that there is a railway on the north shore of the St. Lawrence, the market boats are debarred from the traffic they had in carrying freight from both sides of the St. Lawrence. In winter time the people are absolutely shut out from communication. All these parishes beyond Sorel, Yamaska, St. François du Lac, St. Zéphyrin, Bécancour, Gentilly, St. Pierre les Becquets, are absolutely without communication, so that there are ten or twelve different parishes, all fine farming parishes, in this condition. My hon. friend said yesterday that this is paralleling another railway, but in that he was not accurate; it is not paralleling another railway in any sense of the term, but is serving the parishes which are on the south shore of the St. Lawrence, but which were disconnected from all other parallel lines. The history of railway construction upon the south shore is this. A railway was built, first, from Montreal to Ste. Hyacinthe, and then to Richmond, and Richmond to Portland via Sherbrooke. That was about 1852. Between 1852 and 1853, another branch was built from Lévis to Richmond. All that distance between Lévis and Montreal, which is to-day served by the Grand Trunk Railway, runs in the valley of the St. Lawrence, between about 36 or 40 miles distant, on an average, back from the river. Since that time a new railway has been built, the Drummond County Railway. Hon. gentlemen from the province of Quebec are aware that between the St. Lawrence and that section of the country which is served by the Grand Trunk Railway—that is to say, the counties of St. Hyacinthe, Bagot, Drummond, Arthabaska, Mégantic, Lotbinière and Lévis—there is a section of country now served by the Drummond County Railway which is very good land, marshy, with clay bottom. The Drummond County Railway has done good work in draining that section of the country. It was originally a lumber road, but it has opened up several parishes, and is opening up more and more, and in a course of time, these will become valuable and wealthy parishes. I have heard the statement made that the Drummond County Railway could give no local traffic. Up to the present it has always given a very large lumber traffic, and it will give, as the country develops, a large agricultural traffic as well. But there was no connection between the parishes on the shores of the St. Lawrence, and those new ones opened up by the Drummond County Railway, so that these parishes I have just named are not in any way served by the Drummond County Railway, and, therefore, are entitled to the advantage given to all localities which are not served by any kind of railway. These parishes in winter time are absolutely shut out from communication. They are at distances varying from 30 to 40 miles from market, some further away, and on our heavy winter roads locomotion is almost impossible, and marketing is done under very great difficulties. So that there is every justification for giving assistance to that railway.

Mr. FOSTER. Will there be much winter traffic along that section?

The PRIME MINISTER. Most of those parishes are on the south shore of Lake St. Peter, and there is no better farming land in America. It is a large hay producing country especially, and produces other large crops besides.

Mr. FOSTER. They are not raising many of those in the winter season.

The PRIME MINISTER. But they export them in the winter.

Mr. HUGHES. That will be a third line between Montreal and Quebec.

The PRIME MINISTER. There will be three lines between Montreal and Quebec on the south shore.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not intend to criticize this in a hostile spirit. On the contrary, I would rather congratulate my hon. friend on obtaining the consent of his colleagues to subsidizing a line, which after all is pretty much parallel to two others. One thing I feared when the Drummond County line was so heavily subsidized, was that nothing would be done for this part of the country, but I would like my hon. friend to be candid and say that this is a portion, purely and simply, of the Atlantic and Lake Superior road.

The PRIME MINISTER. Not at all.

Mr. BERGERON. It will be, there is no question about it. I do not say that there is any harm in that, but my impression is it will.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Is the South Shore not a different company?

Mr. BERGERON. From Sorel to Montreal, but that part which is subsidized here, I am convinced, will be part of the Atlantic and Lake Superior. I do not see any other way for the Atlantic and Lake Superior to come from Lévis.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Has not the South Shore company a charter entitling it to build from Sorel down to the Chaudière?

Mr. BERGERON. I would imagine they have. But I am putting the question to the Government, and it is my impression that this is a part of the Atlantic and Lake Superior.

The PRIME MINISTER. It cannot be. Parliament very injudiciously and imprudently gave two charters over that section of country—a charter to the Atlantic and Lake Superior, and a charter to the South Shore Railway. We are giving a subsidy, not to the Atlantic and Lake Superior, but to the South Shore Railway. That is the position.

Mr. BERGERON. It will practically come to the same thing. But I think my right hon. friend is not quite correct. I think that the charter granted was rather to another line, called the Great Eastern, that was going to Chateauguay and Huntingdon; and the Atlantic and Lake Superior got the charter which had been granted to the Great Eastern. There is no question about the service which these lines will give to the people. But I want to remark to my right hon. friend that there is nothing which shows better the lack of wisdom of the Government in taking over the Drummond County Railway than the subsidy he is now asking. The proper way to bring the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal would have been by this line. Had we done so, we should have avoided the immense expense which this country has incurred through this whole Drummond County scheme.

The PRIME MINISTER. Let us discuss that point for a minute, as the hon. gentleman has referred to it. The policy assented to by this Government, and I believe not denied by gentlemen on the other side, was, that it was advisable to bring the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal. But whether

It was denied or not, I maintain that it was a wise policy. Then, we had open to us alternative propositions. We could have bought the Drummond County Railway, as we did, or we could have subsidized the Drummond County for $3,200 a mile, and built the railway which we are now subsidizing.

Mr. BERGERON. What does my right hon. friend mean by—

The PRIME MINISTER. My position is, that it was good policy to bring the Intercolonial Railway right into Montreal.

Mr. BERGERON. Let us admit that.

The PRIME MINISTER. We choose to bring the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal by buying the Drummond County Railway at $12,000 a mile. If we had not done that, how could we have brought the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal? The hon. gentleman will say that we could have built the railway we are now subsidizing. We had to have a road belonging to the Government.

Mr. BERGERON. You could have had running powers.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend admitted that it was wise to extend the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal. If so, it was wise to own the road; therefore, we bought it. If we had not bought the Drummond County road, we should have been obliged to build the railway we are subsidizing. Does my hon. friend pretend that we could have built that railway for $12,000 a mile? Why, that is preposterous. This road is far more expensive than the Drummond County Railway. There is no great difference in mileage, but the bridges on this road would have been very expensive. This is a section of the country where there are great rivers—the Richelieu, the Yamaska, the St. Francis, the Nicolet, the Bécancour and the Rivière Duchêne—six large rivers, the bridges over which would be far more expensive than if built up the streams.

Mr. MONK. I cannot allow the statement of my right hon. friend to go unchallenged on certain points. So far as he endeavours to convince this committee that the railway subsidy is necessary for these parishes, he speaks uselessly, in so far as gentlemen in the province of Quebec are concerned, because on that point there can be no doubt whatever. I am astonished that this has not been given, and the railway has not been built, before, because these are large and prosperous parishes, and, as the right hon. gentleman says, they are entitled to a subsidy, especially when one examines the list of the subsidies contemplated under the present resolution. But it is exactly over the route we are now subsidizing that the Drummond County Railway should have gone. There is no question about that. At the present stage of the session I must not go into details. But let the committee consider that this is a much shorter route from Lévis to Montreal, let them consider that it runs along the river side, and that it runs through parishes which undoubtedly would be most profitable to the Intercolonial Railway. At the present moment we have railways running north-west from Montreal—we have the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway, running as far as Vaudreuil, 30 miles from Montreal, and the Lachine Railways and some electric railways running toward the Back River. These railways pay enormously. An official of the Grand Trunk told me that the railway to Lachine and that part of their route to St. Anne's and Vaudreuil were the part of the road that paid best throughout the country. There is an immense passenger traffic in summer, and in late years even in winter, and it increases every year. In the direction of Verchères and Varennes, in fact the whole way from Montreal to Sorel, we should have a passenger traffic that would pay from the very inception of the road. From Montreal to Sorel, during the summer, the Intercolonial Railway, with proper management, would have had a passenger traffic immediately remunerative, and even further than Sorel. The hon. gentleman says that the road would have been expensive, that it would have cost more than $12,000 a mile. But that railway was in great part built. The right hon. gentleman must not forget that when we entered into this transaction for the acquisition of the Drummond County road, there was already a road in existence, running from Longueuil to Sorel, which, an hon. friend tells me is 51 miles. That road was on the market. It had been sold by the sheriff, and it was going a-begging. You would have deep water on one side of you all the way, which in summer would be especially desirable. I have no experts' reports before me to demonstrate the fact, but I am perfectly certain that building that railway from Longueuil down to Lévis, we would have realized great advantage, and we would not have paid the absurd price, as it seems to me, which we did pay for the Drummond County Railway. Moreover, we should not have become dependent upon the Grand Trunk Railway, as I am convinced we shall, even at Ste. Rosalie, before we reach St. Hyacinthe; we should have been our own masters until we came opposite the city of Montreal. In my opinion, we committed a grave mistake, when we made that roundabout journey through the woods to reach St. Lambert. So far as the Drummond County portion of the road is concerned, it will never pay, whereas our line through these rich and prosperous parishes would have paid handsomely. Having reached Longueuil and St. Lambert we might then have made an arrangement with the Grand Trunk Railway and we might have used their terminals. But there were other ways. We could have crossed the St. Lawrence without going up as far as the bridge. Once we got beyond Victoria bridge we could have crossed at any place we pleased, and we could have had our own terminus in Montreal. But upon that question it is not for a layman to speak. Now, as concerns this grant, it is there we should have made our entry into Montreal from Lévis, we should have gone along the south shore of the St. Lawrence River, along the water the whole way. We could have acquired a road which would have been a magnificent route, and cheaper than the one we have now taken by the Drummond County Railway, and we would have had a traffic of which this committee has no conception. The population in Montreal is increasing rapidly, and the local traffic for a radius of 20 or 30 miles is enormous. I regret that the Government did not give that point more serious consideration before entering into the transaction known as the Drummond County Railway transaction.

Mr. BERGERON. There is no question that, as the right hon. gentleman said a moment ago, he accepted the opportunity of bringing the Intercolonial Railway into Montreal. But it seems to me a better way would have been that suggested by the leader of the Opposition, namely, by a bridge at Quebec for which my hon. friend promises to give a million dollars, if he is serious. Then he could have brought the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal by that route, and by giving the Canadian Pacific Railway running powers over it. That would have been a great deal better route than by the Drummond County road. But I want to ask my hon. friend what he expects to do by giving a subsidy to this line from Lotbinière to Montreal. Does he expect there will be traffic enough from the parish of Lotbinière to Sorel and thence to Montreal, even for that part of the railway? I could understand it if that line was to start from Point Lévis, or from some large centre instead of the little parish of Lotbinière. Next year I imagine the Government will ask for more subsidies from Lotbinière down to Quebec, and so we will have another sum of money to pay notwithstanding all the hundreds of thousands which were sunk in the Drummond County transaction. There are several lines of railway there. There is the United Counties Railway, which also has a charter; that goes down to Sorel.

The PRIME MINISTER. Not in that direction.

Mr. BERGERON. Yes, down to Sorel, and their charter brings them down below Sorel.

The PRIME MINISTER. It is at right angles with this road.

Mr. BERGERON. What about that railroad that goes to the Yamaska River and stops at the broken bridge? It runs parallel to that line which we are subsidizing now.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend has not looked at the map. The South-eastern Railway leaves Sorel and goes to Drummondville, thence to Acton and from Acton to the States. The South-eastern Railway is running north and south, and this is running east and west.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the name of the railway that runs down to Yamaska bridge?

The PRIME MINISTER. The South-eastern.

Mr. BERGERON. I see there is a sum of $50,000 in these subsidies to rebuild that bridge. Where will that road go?

The PRIME MINISTER. That bridge will serve all the roads that have to cross the St. Francis River.

Mr. BERGERON. I am not opposing this, but I want the thing to be understood. We will have, for a distance of about 30 miles, five or six railways running in nearly the same direction.

The PRIME MINISTER. There will only be three parallel lines.

Mr. BERGERON. The Drummond County, the Grand Trunk Railway, the South Shore, the Atlantic and Lake Superior—

The PRIME MINISTER. The Atlantic and Lake Superior will never be built in that direction, because it will never have a subsidy. My hon. friend does not suppose that this Parliament is going to subsidize two parallel lines.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not think my hon. friend will refuse to subsidize any railway that needs a subsidy down in those parts of the country.

The PRIME MINISTER. But the Atlantic and Lake Superior have been given a subsidy over absolutely the same ground which this railway is intended to cover. Charters have been given to the South Shore and to the Atlantic and Lake Superior over absolutely the same ground. We have chosen to subsidize one to the exclusion of the other.

Mr. BERGERON. But what about stopping this line at Lotbinière? What does he expect to do there?

The PRIME MINISTER. We have given as much work to this company as they can perform in one year.

Mr. SPROULE. I cannot see any justification for granting this bonus. Looking upon the map, I find there are two railways running parallel with this one three-fourths of the distance, and not more than 12 miles, on an average, from the railway we are subsidizing. Three railways south of the river will then be subsidized and built if this one is built. There may be some justification for giving a subsidy to a railway that is going through a section of country not already served, or where there is no railway within a long distance; but that is not the case where you have two running parallel and another at right angles. I think a mistake was made in subsidizing three railways when one would have done the work. In looking over the map, at the time when the Government bought the Drummond County Railway I thought the bargain they were then making was a mistake and I think so still. But I do say that this vote of the large amount of money that we are now making, will not appeal with very great force to the people, especially of Ontario, when they see that we are voting $262,000 to parallel a line for 50 miles by building another railway 12 miles away. In addition to that there is another road from 12 to 20 miles distant from this one again. I cannot understand in what way the Dominion of Canada is justified in giving subsidies of this kind. I can understand that we are justified in granting subsidies to open up the vacant lands of the Northwest Territories, British Columbia and the Lake St. John District where there are no railways and where the possibilities of development are great, but I cannot understand on what ground the Government can justify the voting of a subsidy of $262,000 for a railway in an old settled portion of the country where there are already two railways within a short distance of each other.

The PRIME MINISTER. I must express my great astonishment at the language which has fallen from the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) in view of what we saw this afternoon. This afternoon the committee voted a subsidy to the Lake Erie and Detroit River Railway for a line from Ridgely to St. Thomas a distance not exceeding 44 miles, and the hon. gentleman did not oppose it.

Mr. SPROULE. I got up three or four times to protest against it, but there were others speaking and I could not get a hearing. I was called out when the vote was passed, otherwise I should have opposed it. I regard it as one of the subsidies that are entirely uncalled for.

The PRIME MINISTER. Well, there is one hon. gentleman opposite who would have opposed that vote. But, this provides for the construction of a railway which will run, not 12 miles from the existing railway, but two miles.

Mr. SPROULE. That is the reason why I would have opposed it.

Mr. SPROULE.

The PRIME MINISTER. We have taken power to prevent the building of the road if we can obtain running powers over the Canada Southern Railway. But when we took it the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) and other hon. members urged us not to exercise that power, not to obtain any running rights, but to build a second line at a distance of only two miles throughout the whole length of 44 miles from Ridgely to St. Thomas, from the Canada Southern Railway. I was told privately afterwards, and I knew it myself, that all these towns and villages along the route had themselves bonused this same railway by putting their hands in their pockets in order to obtain a second line of railway, which is only two miles distant from the Canada Southern. They give as a reason for this action that their interests are not well served by the Canada Southern Railway; that the Canada Southern Railway pays attention to its through traffic, but does not attend to the local traffic, and it is for the benefit of the local traffic that they ask for another line distant two miles from the Canada Southern. They do more; they put their hands in their pockets and contribute their own money in order to secure the construction of that line. What is the lesson of this? It is that there are local conditions which we cannot ignore. It is all very well to philosophise upon general principles, and to picture a condition of things which may exist in your imagination, but does not exist in fact. My hon. friend knows that these parishes which are to be served by this railway, are left in a condition for six months, in the winter, in which they are practically without any communication at all. When the hon. gentleman makes an appeal to the province of Ontario and tells us that the people of that province will not submit to it, I tell him that the people of Ontario will not object to anything of the kind. The people of Ontario will not object to contributing their share to give their fellow-citizens of that part of the country, who are closed in for six months in the year, the communication that they themselves have all the year round. I would not be afraid to appeal to the people of Ontario on that subject. Then the hon. gentleman says: Why did you locate the Drummond County Railway where it was located? Why did you not locate it on the edge of the St. Lawrence? The promoters of the Drummond County Railway knew what they were about when they located the line and my hon. friend does not know the country as well as they do. The Drummond County Railway serves a section of the county which is not served by any other railway. The Grand Trunk Railway, the Drummond County Railway and the new South Shore Railway all serve different sections of the country.

Mr. SPROULE. Provided these two railways are built, on one side is the St. Lawrence, and across the St. Lawrence is a railway paralleling this one, so that you will have one railway within two miles of the other. Where is it to get traffic from the north side, while on the other side it has to divide the territory 12 miles in extent with another railway. How much traffic is it likely to get provided it gets the business of half the territory, or six miles? From the custom that obtains in Quebec of bringing the people of the parishes fronting on the river together, there will be more business in that section, but the business of the other six miles will go to the other railway. I cannot see how this railway will secure any heavy traffic. From the discussion that took place two years ago, and again last year, we were given the idea that there must be a railway in that district. It occurred to me that it was the duty of the Government, instead of buying the Drummond County Railway, to build this railway, and then use it to bring the Intercolonial Railway into Montreal, so that they would not only have had the use of it to serve the needs of the locality through which it passed, but it would have served the purpose of securing the extension of the Intercolonial into Montreal.

Mr. BERGERON. Mr. Chairman, I am glad that the right hon. Prime Minister is doing this. It is true that these railways are not very far from one another, and to show that there may be something in the contention that they are too near to one another, I might mention that the people along the line of the Grand Trunk, in Drummond and Arthabaska, particularly, complained that trains on the Grand Trunk Railway were running irregularly. The answer of the Grand Trunk Railway was that they could not run trains regularly on that line because it would not pay them to do so. The traffic passes only on the Drummond County Railway, whatever it is worth, and we will see whether hon. gentlemen will have a deficit on that line, but the traffic on the Grand Trunk line between Richmond and Quebec does not amount to anything.

The PRIME MINISTER. We will have a surplus and not a deficit.

Mr. BERGERON. The right hon. gentleman may promise but we will see by the book. My hon. friend attempts to defend the Drummond County Railway deal and says that another road would cost more, but he is giving subsidies to this line, he is giving money for building bridges, and when all these subsidies are paid to the South Shore Company he will find that he will have a very nice road to bring the Intercolonial Railway into Montreal at a quarter of the expense he has paid for the Drummond County.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the resolution passes, I cannot help but say a word. The right hon. gentleman need not have spent so much time in so many arguments to demonstrate to the committee why a subsidy was proposed, because there was a very short method by which he could have convinced the House of that. The right hon. gentleman promised it as an election matter years ago. The hon. gentleman who sits behind him read his promise in the election contest and this is the payment—a little deferred, you know. I think the note is probably one year behind, and it, no doubt, bears the accumulated interest, so that my right hon. friend has thoroughly implemented his promise. I am not going to open a discussion about the terms of the Drummond County Railway. What has been said by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier, and my hon. friend on my left (Mr. Bergeron) has been well said. Both of those gentlemen have criticised that from this point of view, but it is instructive to remember that the Government, in the first place, spent $7,000,000 as a capital sum in order to get possession of a road already built as to the most of it, and to get running rights over another already built as well as terminal facilities. At that time it was hoped that the Government would be obliged to spend large sums of money for the South Shore, but the Minister of Public Works set the South Shore claim to one side. He thought it was a preposterous thing, and in "Hansard" he can be quoted as saying:

The South Shore scheme is before you. But it is a prospective scheme. The South Shore people who have invested money in this property are friends of ours, nearly every one of them. But this Government has not to deal with friends or opponents; this Government has only to deal with business propositions. Suppose we had made up our minds to go by the South Shore. Let any of our friends opposite rise in his place and tell us how much it would cost. The South Shore scheme is out of the question.

That is when the Drummond County was at its height. The Minister of Public Works then made out that the South Shore was a line, a prospective line even, which was of no moment to them. It was thrown into the background, but that raised the ire of certain members of Parliament, and prospective members of Parliament, along that South Shore, and we find that their representations had effect, for I find that in a contest in Yamaska, I think it was, for the local House, in 1897, the federal member, Mr. Mignault, took a part in the contest, and a most instructive light is thrown upon the policy of my hon. friends in this respect. Before the people for a great number of years they had denounced railway subsidies as the most potent means of corrupting countries. They had gone to the country on a basis of electoral purity and independence of Parliament, but when this hon. gentleman came to take part in the local election, he declared, and he read as follows:—

I, the undersigned, declare that at several interviews during the months of March and April last, Hon. Mr. Laurier, Prime Minister, gave me the assurance and formal guarantee that he would cause to be voted by the Parliament at Ottawa in favour of the South Shore Railway subsidies necessary to secure the construction of the bridges and the railway of the South Shore road from Sorel as far as the Chaudière Junction, near Lévis, and that the said subsidies would be voted at the present session from Sorel to St. Grégoire, at least.

That was made, according to this statement, in March or April, 1897, and it was after that that the Minister of Public Works had set aside and pooh-pooed this South Shore scheme. So that while the Government, through one of its representatives, was putting the South Shore scheme to one side and advocating the purchase of this other right of way and access to Montreal to the tune of $7,000,000, a written statement, a thoroughly official statement, was given to one of the federal members sitting in this House, that the whole of the South Shore subsidies, bridges and all, down as far as Chaudière, would be granted. And tell it not in the hearing of public purity and of the independence of Parliament. This was read in an election contest in one of those counties, and I believe it had a very potent effect. But there was more. Mr. Leduc was running in one of these counties as a candidate. I think it was in the federal contest in Nicolet. His address contained this statement :

I am convinced that a line of railway traversing the parishes of the south shore is indispensable. If I have accepted the Liberal candidature it is because I believe I can do more for the railway than any other person. Be assured that if you are to be aided by the Government you must not send an adversary of the Government to the House

This is but another edition of Mr. Hardy's doctrine of cold justice. Mr. Leduc says, evidently with authority, knowing the Government with which he had to deal: You need not expect justice from this Government. This may be a very meritorious scheme, as you know it is, and as I believe it is, but, all the same, the Government will not give you any help if you send an adversary of the Government. You must send a supporter of the Government if you want its aid. Mr. Leduc was not badly advised, because Sir Wilfrid Laurier turned up at the election, and "La Patrie," which is the organ of the party in Montreal, and which, no doubt, gives the hon. gentleman full justice, is represented as saying :

Sir Wilfrid Laurier turned up at this election, and "La Patrie," Tarte's paper, reports him thus :

"Mr. Laurier spoke at Bécancour of the work of conciliation and progress accomplished by the Government, and urged the electors to elect his young friend and devoted follower, Mr. J. H. Leduc, who has inscribed at the head of his programme—subsidies for the railway on the south shore.

Then, "La Patrie" goes on to explain Sir Wilfrid Laurier's speech as indicating to the people that it would be more to their advantage to elect a Ministerial supporter of subsidies than an adversary of the Government. Mr. Leduc was well advised, and the right hon. gentleman who leads the Government went down to give Mr. Leduc countenance. Why? Because Mr. Leduc had inscribed upon his banner, first and foremost "subsidies for the locality, subsidies for the South Shore Railway." Now comes the date. That was the time when the promissory note was given in defiance of independence and purity of Parliament, in defiance of the old doctrine of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, that railway subsidies were a potent means of corrupting constituencies; and the right hon. gentleman opposite, as soon as he could get leave to go down, went into that constituency and said: Vote for the man who inscribes "Subsidies for the South Shore" on his banner, and commonsense people as you are, know that we are only going to give you cold justice. It will be hot and warm and agreeable if you send a supporter of myself—if you send Mr. Leduc; but if you send an adversary, you know you have no chance of getting anything." What a commentary that is on Liberal professions and Liberal practise! What a commentary on the hon. gentleman and his supporters before they went into power! The promissory note was written then, subscribed by the Premier, endorsed by Mr. Leduc, and it is now being honoured by the party.

Mr. SPROULE. One of the few promises they have carried out.

Mr. FOSTER. One of the few promises they have carried out. It is not all carried out, but we have a good instalment of it: the South Shore, about $262,000; bridge at Yamaska, $50,000; bridge at Sorel, $35,000; bridge at Nicolet, $16,000. This is written on the back of the note: "Honoured to the extent of $362,400; next instalment to be paid at the next session of the legislature."

The PRIME MINISTER. It is always a fine spectacle to have virtue preached by a man who practices it. My hon. friend, I think, would have done something better for himself and something better for me if, instead of quoting the comments of a paper on what I said at Nicolet, he had quoted my words. My hon. friend is too pious a man, I am sure, to make any promises in advance. His opponents can do that. But he is not a man who would make promises to expend public money before it is voted. What a spectacle it would be! What a commentary it would be on public institutions! The hon. gentleman has spoken of a promissory note. He has not shown the document. But let me refresh his memory with a letter that was written in the month of September, 1896, addressed to the Hon. J. Israel Tarte, Minister of Public Works. The idea that any man preaching virtue as my hon. friend does should have correspondence with and should ask favours of my friend, Mr. J. Israel Tarte!

Mr. FOSTER. In order to try to reform him, you know.

The PRIME MINISTER. We shall see the kind of reform the hon. gentleman was preaching. Here is the letter:

House of Commons,
Ottawa, Sept. 18th, 1896.

Hon. J. Israel Tarte,
Minister of Public Works, Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir,—At the request of Col. Tisdale, member for South Norfolk, I write you a line in reference to harbour improvements at Port Dover, Lake Erie. The late Government decided to put into the supplementary Estimates last session the sum of $25,000 to assist in the improvement of that harbour upon the statements, plan and estimate submitted by the United States and Ontario Steam Navigation Company, supplemented by a letter from Col. Tisdale as to what was necessary to make that harbour available for the boats and trade of the ferry boats of the said company, which they had put on between Conneaut, Ohio, and Port Dover. As you are aware, the Parliament expired without supplementary Estimates being considered. The state of the harbour was such that great urgency was required for the immediate prosecution of the works. As the said company was to supplement the grant by an additional expenditure of its own funds, and it had previously expended a large sum of its own fund upon the harbour, I authorized Col. Tisdale to say to the company that if it should go on at once and complete the further improvements contemplated by the document, plan and estimates, the then Government would ask Parliament to vote the grant of $25,000 to the said company as the Government's contribution to the said improvements.

As I understand from Col. Tisdale, he has placed all papers before you, I do not see that I can do anything further, except that if you bring down the grant I shall be glad to give it my support in the House. I may add that I had consulted Council before giving the assurance to Col. Tisdale.

Yours truly,
GEO. E. FOSTER.

We have heard the hon. gentleman on this occasion, and times without number, protesting against this Government pledging the credit of the country before the money was voted; and yet the hon. gentleman did not scruple, on the eve of a general election, to promise to that company $25,000 for that work. Yet the hon. gentleman poses to-day as a preacher and an apostle of virtue, and dares to preach to us and to reprimand us for what we have done. The hon. gentleman should be the last man to do that. There is his own act, and he had better keep silence in future.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that all the defence my hon. friend has? The apostle Paul might have abjured all the doctrines of a lifetime and gone straight to the bad place on just an excuse like that.

The PRIME MINISTER. I cannot help it, if you are to go there.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman as a public man makes a profession of profound virtue as regards the purity of Parliament and the independence of members. On that platform he brings his party into power. In Toronto he took to himself all the virtues, and after enumerating the number of bad men in the late Government, he said: "Whatever else you may have, if there is a change of Government, you will have independence of Parliament and you will have pure Government." On that as one of the planks of his platform, he gets into power; and he is scarcely in his seat before he hands over his written promises to the men who are supporting him in the House. He hands over his written promise to a gentleman who sat here for two years with that promise in his pocket—a promise of a judgeship or a governorship, one or the other; and that gentleman voted for measures to which he was in his heart opposed because he had the promise in his pocket and was waiting for its fulfilment. The hon. gentleman, after having made the promise, did not fulfil it until his party was threatened with wreck and ruin by the kicking of that gentleman and those who were of his way of thinking. Independence of Parliament! Here are subsidies promised holus bolus for a great line of railway, on condition that a member should go down and influence an election with it; and when this is brought to the hon. gentleman's attention, he thinks he has put himself right before an enlightened public opinion by getting up and quoting a letter which I had written with reference to the Port Dover work. And what was that letter? That was a matter of negotiation that had been going on for two or three years. It was a matter which the Government had considered and decided in Council; and if we had put through the supplementary Estimates in that year, we were going to propose the amount, for the sanction of Parliament. We had promised to do it. My hon. friend has not been able to read a letter from me or from any other member of the late Government to the constituencies, promising that something would be done if they would elect somebody who would support us, but that they must be careful to send us a supporter and not an adversary. More than that, the hon. gentleman has included in his Estimates this year a vote for that very work, and I suppose it will be passed by this House. If my hon. friend thinks he has righted himself by quoting a letter written by me, I think he has mistaken the intelligence of the people. The two letters are as different as they possibly can be, and were written for quite different purposes.

Mr. SPROULE. I recognize this difference between the two letters, and I think the Premier will recognize it himself. The one promise was made, not to Canadians who might influence the electorate, but to an American company who had no interest in the elections in Canada. It was made purely for the purpose of having carried on a work which had been begun, which was standing under great disadvantages, and on which the other country had spent money to keep it going for the time being. There is the greatest difference between what is contained in that letter and the promise made by the right hon. Minister to the electorate down there. This letter could not influence the election in any way. It was addressed to people who had no interest in the election, and could not exercise any influence over the electorate, even if an election were being run.

Mr. BERGERON. The answer of my right hon. friend is not at all befitting the high position he occupies. The accusation brought against him is that he went to Nicolet and promised railway subsidies during an election. In reply, he purely and simply gets up and shows to the House a certain letter, and all he proves is what everybody was convinced of, that it is not at all safe to write to the Minister of Public Works. I think that this "tu quoque" argument is unworthy of the right hon. gentleman. Will he do the same thing as regards every other profession he made before the elections?

An hon. MEMBER. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that a justifiable answer? He accused the Conservative party of having used subsidies to public works in order to corrupt the electorate. He made this one of the greatest cries of his party all over the Dominion, he pleaded that if returned to office, he would inaugurate a regime of purity and economy. Well, he was returned to office, and we find him doing the very things which he accuses his opponents of doing; and when we bring him to book for this, he does not deny the charge but admits it, and in justification he says that Mr. Geo. H. Foster wrote a letter one day in the same sense.

The PRIME MINISTER. Quote the speech which I made.

Mr. WALLACE. There are between the cities of Montreal and Quebec, the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway, and now the Drummond County Railway, which has been acquired by the Government at an expenditure capitalized of $7,000,000; and not content with these three roads, the Government now proposes that we shall vote a subsidy to another 82 miles of railway, amounting to $362,000. And yet I suppose that between these two points, Montreal and Quebec, there is not sufficient business for one line of railway. I listened very attentively to the remarks of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) tonight, who spoke with a thorough understanding of the question, and I think he demonstrated clearly that the better course would have been for the Government to have acquired this South Shore line, the first 51 miles of which could have been had for almost nothing, as it was up for sale by the sheriff, and this road would have had this advantage over the Drummond County Railway, namely, that it runs through a populous district the whole way, furnishing passenger and freight traffic, while the Drummond County line runs largely through an uninhabited district, where there neither is now nor is there expected to be in the future, remunerative traffic. So that the Government has blundered in this matter from the beginning.

Another scheme which was suggested by the hon. leader of the Opposition was that, since the Government is now proposing to give $1,000,000 towards the construction of the Quebec bridge, they could have utilized that bridge and have made their connection with Montreal over the Canadian Pacific Railway on the north shore of the St. Lawrence. There are many advantages in connection with that route. The objections made to it by the Minister of Railways and Canals yesterday were so very slight indeed that I shall not refer to them at any length; but, evidently, according to the statement of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, and according to what information I have, if it were desirable and necessary that the Intercolonial Railway should be continued from Lévis to the city of Montreal, the argument of economy and the argument of enormously increased business should have prevailed in favour of the South Shore Railway as against the Drummond County scheme. That scheme was conceived in iniquity. Of that there is no doubt. By utilizing the South Shore Railway, the Government would have promoted the interests of the people of Quebec to an extent they will never do by the Drummond County scheme. Now, they are confronted with increased expenditure. Here is a road subsidized by the Government, and a large source of the business which it might have expected, as a portion of the Intercolonial Railway, it will be deprived of, because the Government are creating an active competitor against it, so that what they give with the one hand they destroy with the other. Therefore, those who are receiving the subsidy have no reason to thank the Government, but, on the contrary, should condemn the Government for not having, when they decided to continue the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal, utilized the South Shore line and avoided those scandals which are connected with the Drummond County line, and besides have obtained a commercial line, the expenditure on which they could justify to the people. So, after two lines of railway had been in operation from Montreal to Quebec, the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Government proposed to have two lines more, where one railway would be more than sufficient to take all the through traffic, and where the local traffic would be served effectually by this South Shore line.

Mr. MORIN. The railways from Quebec to Montreal, existing or proposed, are: the Grand Trunk, the Drummond County, the South Shore, the Quebec Central, the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Great Northern. When these roads are all built, there will be six lines between Montreal and Quebec, and the St. Lawrence River besides. I know the distance between one road and the next, and the distance between the most northerly and the most southerly, but I do not propose to say much about that—no use to cry over spilt milk. The buying of the Drummond County road was bad enough in itself, but I claim that the Government did something worse. The worst feature that I see about this scheme was, that the Government made a contract or bargain with the Grand Trunk Railway to give them all the freight that comes from the east to Montreal, and, in return, the Grand Trunk agrees to give the Government all the freight from the west. This is neither more nor less than blackmailing the Canadian Pacific Railway. You cannot expect to get any favours from the Canadian Pacific Railway, so long as you treat them that way. Undoubtedly, the Government would have done better to have left the matter open, and would have done better not to have clogged itself up with any railway company. The Government is not a railway company, and it should have left the railway companies to do their own dealings among themselves. What will be the result of that? You are in duty bound to transport the freight up and down by the Drummond County road, but you turn around and you want to build a road from Sorel down to Lévis. You are talking now about building to Lotbinière. That is a local matter. But you cannot stop at that. Another year there will be more by-elections, and you will make more promises, and you will extend the road to Lévis. When this South Shore road is built, what will you do with it? You will have a road carrying local traffic, and nothing else, and you cannot get out of it. Below Montreal you have cut out all the freight. We know very well that in the summer time, the heavy time for freight, the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company carries freight down to Chambly River. It takes the freight that comes down on the United Counties Railway to transport to Quebec. Besides, all the way from Montreal to Quebec the shores of the St. Lawrence are lined with schooners and vessels of all kinds to transport freight up and down. Whatever they do transport, the railroads will not get it. Then, we know that the winter traffic on that road will be light, so far as freight is concerned. The country is very good, and very nice—I do not deny a word of it—but beauty alone does not pay. You talk of building the Quebec bridge. If you had let the Drummond County scheme alone, and built the Quebec bridge, you would have been all right enough. But you go on and build the Quebec bridge and who is going to use it? Will some one please tell me that? There will be no one company to use that bridge, except the Lake St. John Railway Company, and they probably will send two or three cars a day in the winter time. We know that in the summer time their best port is Quebec, and the lumber and pulp that come down the road, will go to Quebec. The winter time is no time to handle lumber. The Lake St. John country is a great lumber country, but they never handle lumber in the winter. What will you do with your bridge, when it is built? You must remember that the Canadian Pacific Railway can transport freight from Quebec Montreal, Sherbrooke, Brownsville to St. John, N.B., cheaper than you dare transport it from Montreal to Halifax, because it is 164 miles shorter by the Canadian Pacific Railway than from Montreal to Halifax by the Government road. What object will the Canadian Pacific Railway have to take any freight below Montreal to Quebec and pass it over the bridge? That speaks for itself; there is no politics about that; it is plain business and common sense. You will have your bridge, and it will cost you three millions or three millions and a half, besides which you will have to pay three or four hundred thousand dollars to make connection from the Canadian Pacific Railway to the bridge and from the bridge to the Grand Trunk. What will the company do with the bridge? It will hardly be any use. But if you had left the matter open to the railway companies to tranship and transport whatever they wanted to, then your Drummond County scheme would not have been so bad. But you have tied up the country and tied up yourselves. Now do the best you can. God bless you.

For an extension of the Tilsonburg, Lake Erie and Pacific Railway, from Tilsonburg to Ingersoll or Woodstock, Ont., not exceeding 28 miles.

Mr. SPROULE. These places are quite a distance apart. Is there any company that has a charter covering this ground, and is there any prospect of the road being built?

The PRIME MINISTER. I am sorry that the Minister of Railways and Canals is not present. I have not the information at hand.

Mr. INGRAM. Perhaps I can explain the position of this grant. The present line runs from Port Burwell to Tilsonburg, a distance of 16 miles. The object of this vote is to extend the line from Tilsonburg to either Ingersoll or Woodstock. The Government have placed in the main Estimates $45,000 for the improvement of Port Burwell harbour for the purpose of making this a coal route, with a view of cheapening coal to the western portion of the province of Ontario. By having this extension from Tilsonburg they will connect with the Canadian Pacific Railway and the main line of the old Great Western division of the Grand Trunk Railway. So far as I can see the object of the vote is a proper one, it is in the interest of the people of the western portion of the province of Ontario. This line is similar to several other lines that run between the Detroit River and the Niagara River.

2. Resolved, That it is expedient to authorize the Governor in Council to grant the subsidies hereinafter mentioned towards the construction of the railways also hereinafter mentioned, that is to say :—

To the Quebec Bridge Company, towards the construction of a railway bridge over St. Lawrence River, at Chaudière Basin, near Quebec, $1,000,000, payable 40 per cent on monthly progress estimates approved by the Government engineers, of materials delivered and work done.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I propose an amendment to this clause, to strike out the word "payable" in the third line, and make it read "40 per cent of which may be paid on monthly progress estimates."

Mr. FOSTER. Will the Minister give us an explanation of where this bridge is to be built and its cost?

The PRIME MINISTER. The committee is entitled to a full explanation of the appropriation which is now asked. This bridge is destined to cross the St. Lawrence River below the city of Quebec in the vicinity of Cap Rouge on the north shore, and of the Chaudière River on the south shore about eight miles from Quebec. The total length of the bridge, not counting the approaches will be 3,280 feet. It is to be a cantilever bridge. The central span from the centre of one pier to the centre of the other pier will be 1,000 feet; two anchor arms, together 1,000 feet; two arched spans, together 420 feet; four plate girder spans, together 260 feet. Clear height of the bridge over the water in full tide will be 150 feet. Clear height of masonry piers over high water 60 feet. Total cost of masonry is estimated in round numbers at $1,200,000; the superstructure, $2,400,000; total cost of the bridge, outside of the approaches, $3,600,000. The company have asked for tenders, and they intend to commence proceedings immediately. They have spent, perhaps, $30,000 or $40,000 in surveys and preliminary work. The company is composed chiefly of Quebec gentlemen. Mayor Parent is the president of the company. The Commissioner of Crown Lands for the province of Quebec is a shareholder; in fact, the shareholders are the leading business men of the city of Quebec. I can only give a few names. Mr. Audette, of the firm of Thibaudeau & Co., the largest firm in Quebec, is one of the directors. Mr. Laliberté, chairman of one Harbour Commissioners, is one of the shareholders; Senator Paquet is another. Indeed, I do not know a single business man in the city who is not a shareholder in the company. The basis of the company has been formed with a total capital of $200,000, of which $50,000 has been paid down. They expect to obtain from the Government $1,000,000 and from the city of Quebec $500,000.

Mr. SPROULE. What control will the Government have over the tolls? Will the bridge be for railways alone or for carriages as well?

The PRIME MINISTER. A railway bridge only.

Mr. SPROULE. What control will the Government have over the tolls that are to be charged? What will the tolls be?

The PRIME MINISTER. I have had several estimates, but what the tolls will be, I do not know. Of course, the Government will have to keep over the tolls the same control that we have over the tolls of railways. As to the traffic estimates, I cannot say, as it is a matter of conjecture, but I will give the estimates which have been placed in my hands by the company. The committee, some two or three years, asked returns from all the railway companies which had traffic into Quebec. There is, at present, on the south shore, the Intercolonial Railway, the Grand Trunk, the Quebec Central; and on the north shore, the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Lake St. John, the Quebec, Charlevoix, Montmorency, and then, this year, we shall have the Great Northern. In April, 1897, the secretary of the Quebec Bridge Company inquired at the head offices of the then existing south shore railways for a statement of the actual interchange of traffic between their stations and the city of Quebec. The following is a summary of the answers received :—

Intercolonial Railway.—Traffic with Quebec in both directions for the year (June, 1895 to 1896) amounted to 88,074 tons of freight and 59,760 passengers.

Grand Trunk Railway.—8,202 cars forwarded to and received from Lévis in the year 1896.

Quebec Central Railway.—Including all business to be derived from its connection with the American railway systems and from its own system going into Quebec, and also all business to be derived from a connection in Quebec with the North Shore Railways for traffic going south from Quebec, the officials of this railway estimated their probable traffic with Quebec through the proposed bridge at 12,520 cars freight and passengers.

I have another estimate of the traffic over that bridge. This is an old scheme; it does not date from yesterday. It has been before the public, more or less, for the last twenty years. In 1865, not this company, but the preceding company, which had undertaken the building of the bridge, obtained an estimate from Mr. Walter Shanley, C.E., of Montreal. On the 23rd of March, 1865, Mr. Shanley gave out the following estimate of daily traffic :—

160 cars bound east.
40 cars bound west.

200 cars at $4 = $800 per day.
Annual revenue (313 days), $250,400.

About two years ago the present company, which is now asking for the subsidy and which has been reorganized, got another estimate from Mr. J. H. Walsh, general freight and passenger agent of the Quebec Central Railway, who made the following estimate of the number of cars that would pass over the bridge daily:—

	Cars.
Grand Trunk Railway .....	70
Intercolonial Railway .....	60
Quebec Central .....	44
Drummond County (now the property of the Intercolonial Railway).....	30
Canadian Pacific Railway.....	3
Total.....	207

(Which, at $4 per car, would give an annual revenue of $259,164.)

This last estimate is made by Mr. Walsh the general passenger agent of the Quebec Central Railway. The other estimate which I gave is by a gentleman of great authority, Mr. Walter Shanley, and practically they agree as to the number of cars which would likely pass over this bridge, and which will give a very fair traffic. This does not take into account the traffic of the Lake St. John Railway or the Quebec, Montmorency and Charlevoix Railway. The Montmorency is chiefly a passenger railway. It does not have a very large traffic service except in passengers.

Mr. SPROULE. At what dates were these two estimates made?

The PRIME MINISTER. One is in 1885, and the other in 1897.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the capitalization of the company?

The PRIME MINISTER. The total capitalization of the company is $200,000.

Mr. FOSTER. How do they propose to raise the money?

The PRIME MINISTER. They have a capital stock of $200,000, of which $50,000 has been paid; they have $150,000 from their shareholders; they expect $1,000,000 from the Government of Canada; they expect $500,000 from the city of Quebec, of which, I think, they are reasonably sure—I may say perfectly sure—they expect a subsidy, also, from the province of Quebec, although, of that they have not the same assurance. They raise the balance on their own credit.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the length of the bridge?

The PRIME MINISTER. 3,250 feet.

Mr. WALLACE. The actual bridge?

The PRIME MINISTER. The actual bridge, irrespective of the abutments.

Mr. FOSTER. They have to build the approaches, too?

Mr. WALLACE. What is the estimated cost of the approaches?

The PRIME MINISTER. I have not the actual estimates as to the approaches, but I would suppose that they would not cost more than $400,000, making the total cost something like $1,000,000.

Mr. HUGHES. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if a comparison has been made of the length of the central span 1,600 feet with that of other cantilever bridges?

The PRIME MINISTER. I have no data, and I cannot say how it compares with others. All I know is that the plan has been prepared by American engineers of great repute and that tenders have been asked from different companies, among them the Phoenix Company and Keystone Company. They had four or five engineers in consultation at Quebec. They thought at first of putting up a suspension bridge, but they believed that the pressure of the wind there was too great for a suspension bridge, and that a cantilever bridge would be safer. I cannot say what would be the comparison of this bridge, as to length, with other bridges of this kind. In regard to the span it is pretty long, but my hon. friend must remember that there is not a span of the full length of 1,600 feet, but that the main span is 1,000 feet and that there are two other subordinate spans.

Mr. HUGHES. The map says 1,600 feet, that is 800 feet inside the pier.

The PRIME MINISTER. The pressure upon the bottom of the pillars is expected to be seven tons to the square foot.

Mr. FOSTER. Do any railway companies take any stock in this?

The PRIME MINISTER. I can only speak for the Quebec Central. I know they have great confidence in it and it is expected that they would take stock.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the Quebec Central?

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend knows the Quebec Central and the Canadian Pacific Railway. He is familiar also with the Grand Trunk Railway and the Intercolonial Railway. The Quebec Central is a railway which connects with the city of Quebec and at present has its terminus at Lévis, and its Canadian terminus at Sherbrooke, where it connects with the American system of railways, the Grand Trunk Railway and the Boston and Maine.

Mr. FOSTER. On what principle does the Minister justify the granting of this subsidy—what is the principle that underlies it?

The PRIME MINISTER. The principle is this: The St. Lawrence River is altogether an exceptional river, and a bridge upon the St. Lawrence cannot be treated like an ordinary bridge. There has been a tacit understanding, a tacit rule in constructing railways that upon all bridges costing more than $100,000 we would pay a subsidy of 15 per cent. Now, here is a bridge which will cost at least $4,000,000. It is known that railway bridges costing more than $150,000 are entitled to public aid. We have made a scale of gradation. All bridges less than $100,000 must be provided for by the company that builds them and owns them. For all bridges costing more than that we give aid, and we have given aid as a rule of 15 per cent. I will leave it to the fair mind of every gentleman in this House, and I think I can successfully appeal to them on that ground, that when we are building a bridge which cannot cost less than $4,000,000 we are certainly not exaggerating if we ask Parliament to vote a subsidy of $1,000,000.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend seems to have lost sight of one very important fact. That this is a different bridge from a railway bridge. It is not a railway bridge in the sense of aiding the construction of railway bridges. The only principle we have gone on is this: Suppose a railway is passing through a country and it goes over a stream where the bridge is difficult to build. We give a certain percentage as a subsidy for the building of the bridge, but that is not a toll bridge, it is a railway bridge. We gave a certain percentage on the cost of the Grand Trunk Railway tunnel under the St. Clair River. That was a railway bridge; it was not a toll bridge.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The company charges toll. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) has forgotten that it does not belong to a separate company and there is a toll charged.

Mr. FOSTER. Of course, that is a very exceptional thing, because it is a highway for traffic and running between two countries, but take, for instance, the St. John River bridge. That is built by a company; it is not owned by a railway, but all that the Government did with reference to that was to loan the money at a fair rate of interest and the interest has always been paid. With regard to the Fredericton bridge a loan was given and interest to be paid, but the traffic has not resulted in the interest upon the loan being paid. However, that was the principle upon which the loan was given. Now, you have a bridge which is being built by private enterprise for a public purpose. I am not disposed to think that will overburden the gentlemen who are putting their money into it, but at the same time the hon. gentleman has read to us a long list of railways that will benefit that road in the interchange of traffic. But this is a toll bridge and the Government takes no lien in any way upon future earnings of the bridge. The principle is different from the general policy of aiding bridges in the first place. It is different from those I have instanced in the second place, and it can hardly be said to be parallel with the causeway or tunnel between ourselves and the United States.

The PRIME MINISTER. I cannot see any difference at all between the international bridge and the international tunnel. What reason can there be? The fact that it is an international work does not change the character of the work at all. We give that aid because of the exceptional character of the work. The St. Lawrence is an exceptional river and to build a bridge across it is a work of great magnitude. It is an exception to all rules, you cannot treat it therefore, like other bridges that we have been aiding formerly, but when my hon. friend says there is a difference between the tunnel at Sarnia and the international bridge, I would like to know where is the difference. If there is a difference at all, I think this work is more expensive than the tunnel.

Mr. SPROULE. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that we are not giving any more assistance to this bridge than we are giving in connection with railway bridges.

The PRIME MINISTER. Oh, yes; I said we give more.

Mr. SPROULE. For railway bridges we give 15 per cent, and for this we propose to give 25 per cent. I think the Government should provide that, in striking the tolls for that bridge, the company would be entitled to earn only a reasonable interest on what money they put into it, outside of the subsidy. Otherwise they would be earning money on the subsidy and taxing every car of freight that passed over the bridge, for that purpose.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend would not, I am sure, ask that we should put that company in a position that would impair its finances. On the contrary, I think we should treat this bridge company as we treat the railway companies to which we have been granting subsidies; that is, we should provide that its tolls shall be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, and subject to revision by the Governor in Council, if they are found to be excessive. But I see no reason why we should apply to this bridge company a different rule from that which we have applied to railway companies in regard to tolls.

Mr. SPROULE. I have always held that it is radically wrong to allow railway companies to strike their own freight rates, and I never could see any justifiable reason why we should allow them to earn dividends on money contributed by the country. I would be willing that they should earn a fair interest on every dollar they put in themselves; but I do not think it is fair, or equitable, or in the interest of the country, that they should collect interest on the money which the country has contributed. There has been too much quibbling, and an evident desire to avoid answering the question that has been asked from time to time: On what capital do you estimate a company is entitled to earn interest? Is it the capital they have put in themselves, or that capital, plus the subsidy contributed by the country? That question has always been evaded, and no satisfactory answer has been given to it, so far as I know. I put that question at the time the Canadian Pacific Railway charter was before the House. I held then that the provision put in that charter allowing the company to earn 10 per cent on the capital was wrong; but it was doubly wrong in this respect, that we did not define on what capital they were to earn it; and I believe they are to-day earning on both their own capital and on the subsidy given by the country. The sooner we lay it down that the Government, in striking a toll or rate, shall leave out of the calculation the subsidy paid by the country, and confine the company to earnings on the money they have put in outside of that, the better and the fairer for the people and all concerned.

Mr. MONK. There is a difficulty in the way of the suggestion of my hon. friend which occurs to my mind; that is, the parties undertaking the construction of this bridge have been relying on aid from the Dominion Government, the provincial government and the city of Quebec; and if we put that condition in our grant, the other powers interested may wish to impose a similar impediment, which may give rise to difficulty, when the company comes to fix its tolls.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) speaks of freight rates and of Government control over rates. If the Government had control over freight rates, I would like to know what power the Government here would have to fix rates on the long hauls coming from the western states and coming through Canada? Everybody knows that the different railway companies have their associations, composed of representatives of both American and Canadian railways, who meet from time to time and arrange the rates on these long hauls. I cannot see how this Government can control, or have anything to do with, the arranging of the rates on that portion of the long haul which is in the United States. Perhaps the hon. gentleman can explain that.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not see that we can interfere with the rates on the American side, but we certainly can on the Canadian side. There is no justification for a lower rate on a long haul than it costs to haul the traffic; otherwise, the local rates must be proportionately higher. That is one of the weak features in the system of striking freight rates. I think every country should have sufficient control over its railway corporations not to give foreigners an advantage of that kind at the expense of its own people.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I must confess that I see no objection whatever to the Government adopting the suggestion which the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) has made. It is an eminently proper one, which I may say to the hon. gentleman has been in my mind with respect to similar enterprises; and I think no injustice can possibly be done to the individuals who may put their means into the undertaking, if the earnings from the portion over and beyond what is contributed by way of subsidies, are held to be sufficient to yield them a reasonable return upon their investment.

Mr. WILSON. I would like to ask the Minister what he would consider a reasonable return, and whether he includes the bonuses contributed by the Government as part of the money on which they would get the return?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am trying to make it clear to the committee that I do not think it would be proper to consider the bonuses given out and out, whether by this Government or the government of Quebec, as part of the capital of the company. What we are bound to regard as the object of the promoters of this undertaking is to get a bridge constructed across the river, to afford easy communication between the railways on each side—not that they may make a large amount of money by stocking the company. The stock of this company is a very moderate sum, and must commend itself to the members of the committee—$200,000. It is evident that they are not capitalizing the company with a view to claiming dividends on a large amount of capital.

Mr. FOSTER. It amounts to just the same.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It does not amount to just the same, I think, because they can get money on bonds much more readily than they can get people to invest in stock. When the question of rates comes to be considered—and the Government has ample power in that respect—regard will be had to the suggestion made by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. WILSON. The hon. Minister did not tell us what he considered a fair rate. I supposed he got up to tell us that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I got up to say that in coming to the conclusion as to what would be a fair return to allow the company to realize, the Government would be bound to see that the cost of construction did not include the sums given by way of subsidies.

Mr. WILSON. You might give us the percentage you think they ought to earn.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would not like to commit myself to a definite and positive statement as to what would be the percentage. That would depend very largely on what rate the company has to pay. If they can borrow $100 at the rate of 6 per cent, one would think that 6 per cent would be a fair rate to allow. If they have to pay 7 per cent, a larger rate should be allowed. I do not think that the question of one or two per cent is a very large one, provided the Government keeps in view the principle the hon. gentleman has very fairly stated.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it 150 feet above high water?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. MONK. Has a similar condition been imposed in the case of financial accommodation given similar enterprises in the past. I see that Parliament has done something of the same kind in Sarria and somewhere else.

The PRIME MINISTER. At present the Governor in Council has power to regulate the tolls. The hon. member for Grey suggests that when we come to regulate the tolls, we should see that the company should not take any profit upon the bounty given by Parliament, but simply on their own investment. So far, however, though we have the power, I am not aware that the condition has ever arisen when we should apply it.

Mr. HUGHES. I see the bridge of Forth is 1,710 feet against 1,600 in this, but it is much heavier and cost over $13,000,000 extra for the approaches.

Mr. BERGERON. No doubt this has been the work of engineers, but I remember years ago the cost of the bridge was put at a higher price.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have here the report of Mr. Theodore Cooper, consulting engineer of New York, who made a very elaborate report, and who is engineer of the company. He has made a very careful estimate, and I have already given to the House his estimate. The masonry is to cost $1,200,000, and the superstructure $2,400,000, or a total of $3,600,000, apart from the approaches.

Mr. BLAIR.

Mr. KAULBACH. Has any inquiry been made of competent engineers as to what the cost would be of a tunned as compared with that of a bridge?

The PRIME MINISTER. A tunned is altogether out of the question. It is not practicable.

To the South Shore Railway Company, towards the restoration and renewal of of the railway bridge over the Yamaska River at Yamaska, Que. (Revote).... $50,000

Mr. BERGERON. That has been voted three or four years and my impression is that this amount has not been taken advantage of, and the company refuses to build a bridge even with the offer of the Government. Have the Government any reason to believe that it will be acted upon, and that the bridge will be built?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). They assure us that they will build it.

The PRIME MINISTER. The South Shore Railway Company is ready to proceed.

Mr. BERGERON. Before we come to the final resolutions, I want to call the attention of the right hon. gentleman who has been so generous in aiding bridges and railways, to one bridge that he has forgotten, that is the bridge at Bout de l'Isle. A deputation came to Ottawa to see the Minister of Public Works last year, and I think they saw the right hon. gentleman also. They asked for a subsidy, and were promised that this year when the Government granted the subsidies they would certainly get one for their bridge, and they are very much surprised that the Prime Minister has not given what he had promised. I think it would be only an act of justice on the part of the right hon. gentleman to give the committee the reasons why he has not fulfilled his promise.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The explanation is very simple. So far as my personal opinion goes, I think they are fairly entitled to aid. But the subsidies this year, we are told, are very large. If I were giving my own money, I would have no hesitation at all in making them larger and to include that bridge. But in these matters one has to consider the public interest as paramount.

Mr. BERGERON. Preaching economy in the mouth of my hon. friend may appear superfluous. It seems to me that of all the roads which have been subsidized, there is hardly any of so much importance to the counties of L'Assomption, Berthier and Joliette, as this bridge would have been, especially after the charters granted to the Belt Line Electric Railway, and others. The hon. gentleman said this afternoon that the old parishes must not be neglected for the benefit of colonization companies. These are very rich and important parishes. More than half the provisions that are consumed in Montreal come from the province of Ontario, and our farmers around the city of Montreal are deprived of that market because they have no means of communication. This would be a very important means of communication for all these parishes. I am very sorry the hon. gentleman has not been able to go a little further and to grant a subsidy for that bridge. It seems to me that an additional $40,000 or $50,000 for so important a purpose, would not have made a great deal of difference to the exchequer.

The PRIME MINISTER. I feel just as strongly as does the hon. gentleman with regard to the great importance of that bridge at Bout de l'Isle in order to connect the island of Montreal with the outlying parishes in those counties. But while the hon. gentleman holds the same view as I do on that subject, he must remember that the counties of Berthier and L'Assomption are not altogether without railway communication, although this new line is very essential to them. I grant that their present railway communication is insufficient. But look at the districts where we are subsidizing other railways. We are subsidizing, for instance, the South Shore Railway. The parishes which are to be served by the South Shore have no railway communication at all. In winter they cannot take their produce to market except by horse and sleigh; they have to carry their produce in the same primitive way which existed 50 years ago. These parishes lie at a distance from markets of 20 miles and upwards. Now, the counties of Berthier and L'Assomption are not in the same position, for they have at present railway communication, such as it is. Take the Great Northern Railway that we are subsidizing. It will serve a section of country which is fast developing, but which has no railway communication at all. Well, the Government was in this position, that as they could not give aid to all those which were applying to us, we thought those parishes which were wholly without communication ought to be served first. But certainly I think this bridge which the hon. gentleman refers to, ought to receive the same help which we are giving to these other projects.

3. Resolved, That the subsidies granted to the Ontario and Rainy River Railway Company, the Canadian Northern Railway Company and the Edmonton, Yukon and Pacific Railway Company are granted upon the condition, and if received and paid under the authority of this Act to the above mentioned companies respectively, shall be received upon the condition, that the said companies shall not, nor shall any of them, at any time amalgamate with any other railway company, or lease its line to any railway company; nor shall any of the said railways be leased to or operated by any other company; nor shall any of the said companies make an agreement for a common fund or for pooling its receipts with any other railway company, and any such lease, amalgamation or agreement shall be absolutely void, excepting in so far as such agreement may extend to traffic or running arrangements which have been approved by the Governor in Council.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I propose to move a slight alteration. I move that, after word "amalgamate with," the following words be inserted:—"or lease its line, or lines, to any railway company, or any railway companies, other than those mentioned in this section, except as may here be authorized by Parliament." My attention has been called to the fact that two of the companies named in this clause had been permitted by express authority to make arrangement with other companies by amalgamation or leasing, and I would not suggest that we stand in the way of the exercise of any power of that kind which has been conferred after full consideration by Parliament.

Mr. BERGERON. To which companies does the hon. Minister refer?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Both the Ontario and Rainy River and the Canadian Northern. These have been expressly authorized to make leasing or running arrangements with other companies.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the use of this clause, then?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This clause is especially valuable, because it will prevent the possible contingency which is feared by many people in this House and in the country—amalgamation with the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. BERGERON. But this destroys the effect of clause 3, concerning which the hon. Minister made such a great speech the other day. There only remains one road, the Edmonton, Yukon and Pacific, which does not fall under the proviso.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They all fall under the proviso so far as other companies are concerned. But Parliament has expressly given authority to the two I have mentioned to arrange with other companies. We insert this to prevent an arrangement with any companies except as expressly authorized by Parliament.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose the Rainy River and Canadian Northern roads were to amalgamate, and then the Canadian Northern should amalgamate with the Canadian Pacific Railway?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That would not be authorized. This clause expressly forbids these three companies amalgamating with, or leasing their lines to, any other company. But we now provide an exception in the case of any arrangement already authorized by Parliament.

Mr. SPROULE. What companies are they authorized to amalgamate with?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Port Arthur, Duluth and Western in one case.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose the Rainy River road amalgamated with the Port Arthur, Duluth and Western, and then the Canadian Pacific Railway leased the Port Arthur, Duluth and Western?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) is a member of the Railway Committee, and understands the legislation that has been passed, but he has forgotten for the moment. There were a number of charters on which some money had been expended and some work done—the Hudson's Bay road among the others—concerning which power was given to amalgamate with, or lease to, the Canadian Northern. We gave the Ontario and Rainy River road power, as my hon. friend will remember, to purchase or lease the Port Arthur Duluth and Western. But we did not give power to amalgamate with the Canadian Pacific Railway; that was expressly prohibited.

Mr. ROGERS. It has been said that there was no possible way to prevent companies coming together by one purchasing the stocks or bonds of the other. It seems to me that it ought to be possible to provide that this road could not dispose of its stocks or bonds without consulting the Government or giving the Government the first chance to buy them. It would be no disadvantage and no hardship. Then, if they desire to do so, the Government could buy the whole thing out. The time will come when they will do it. If such a clause as I suggest were inserted, it would facilitate such a course, when public sentiment is ready for it, and in the meantime they could not do anything without the Government being aware of it.

Amendment agreed to.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I propose to move a slight alteration to the seventh resolution. I propose to strike out after the word "every" in the first line the words "company receiving a subsidy" and to insert instead the words "railway subsidized under this Act." And after the word "shall" I propose to insert "be always liable in each year to furnish," so that the railway will be liable.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the object of changing it? The railway cannot furnish you anything, the company may furnish you with something.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Perhaps it will be impossible to suggest a better word than "furnish." It is the company that will receive the subsidy, but the company might cease to own the railway, and we want to impose a charge upon the railway which has been aided.

Mr. BLAIR.

Mr. SPROULE. Supposing the railway that is receiving the subsidy is only two or three miles long—and there is one 66-100ths of a mile long—how would you arrange about securing a return in the way of carrying the mails? Would you divide the whole subsidy upon a mileage basis?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In the case of a railway a mile long, there will really be nothing earned.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose it were six miles long?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Then you would get six out of a hundred.

Mr. WALLACE. When we were considering this matter, some time ago, the Government promised to supply the committee with information in regard to the return that has been received from the Calgary and Edmonton and other roads under a provision similar to this. Now is the time we want the information from the hon. Minister.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. Postmaster General will be here in a minute.

Mr. WALLACE. We have the Postmaster General here now, and, perhaps, it will be better that we should have his answer before we go on to some other business.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). I made inquiry. I cannot give the hon. gentleman the bulk sum that has been paid to the credit of the consolidated revenue fund, but the sum is at the rate that is payable in other cases for the carriage of the mails. The charge is, for a baggage car service, 4 cents a mile, and for a postal car service, 8 cents a mile.

Mr. WALLACE. That is very lucid, but it is not the information we are waiting for. I suppose anybody could have told us that. The question which was asked, and the question the hon. Postmaster General was supposed to have put down, that he might furnish the information in regard to it, was what return had been received in the form of interest on the subsidies paid to railway companies that were under obligation to perform a similar service. We want to know how much per mile was paid, how much in the bulk sum, what lines of railway received subsidies and the return in interest or the moneys earned in that way. We had that promised to us, and the hon. Postmaster General pledged the committee that the information would be furnished. But the hon. gentleman tells us that a baggage service costs four cents per mile and postal car service, eight cents per mile. We all know that.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals

(Mr. Haggart) intimated it as his opinion that the deduction had not been made, that, although there was such a stipulation, still it had not been carried out. I think that was the point on which information was desired. In regard to the amount it would depend upon the frequency with which trains are run, and that would depend upon the nature of the settlement through which the railway runs and upon the business of the railways.

Mr. WILSON. The subsidies were granted to these railways on the same conditions as it is proposed to grant the present subsidies, and we want to know what return has been received by the Government, what the amount of the subsidies was and what has been paid out of the earnings. I understood the hon. Postmaster General to promise that the information would be brought down to the committee.

Mr. WALLACE. We want the information.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The railways in question received grants in bulk sums, which were called annuities, of $80,000 for so many years, and in return they were to carry the mails for a limited number of years. I think twenty years. They did not expect to pay back in the limited number of years any sum at all proportionate to the sum received.

Mr. WILSON. And that was deducted from the yearly payments to these companies? I think we ought to have this information as it has important bearing upon the subsidies now under consideration. There is an impression in this committee that these payments will not be collected, and we feel sure that they will not be collected on some pieces of railway. Where there is a railway only two miles in length, and it runs through a yard, as it does in one case, or where it is entirely for the accommodation of the party who owns the mills and works, there will be no return from it. What we want to know is how this system has worked in regard to railways where this condition has been imposed, because, if the interest in this form is not to be collected, it is folly to put this condition in, and it is only deceiving the people. We have been told that these are not subsidies but loans. I am afraid that they are subsidies all the same. On general principles I am opposed to subsidies. I think the time has come when this Government should refuse to subsidize railways and when it should be left open to private enterprise to take hold of these undertakings. I know that is the feeling in my own riding. If hon. gentlemen will look at the newspapers they will see that what I state is correct. The hon. gentleman who represents us in the local legislature, and who is a Liberal, pledged himself in the election against subsidies, and especially against an extra bonus on iron, but when he got to Toronto, it was found that his pledges were not as strong as his party fealty. He voted for these subsidies and his constituents, or quite a number of them, have asked him to resign.

Mr. CAMPBELL. They are all Tories.

Mr. WILSON. No, they are not all Tories. They are all Grits with the exception of two or three, and they are prominent Grits, too. I am strongly of the opinion that this country feels that we should stop giving bonuses to railways. The Postmaster General, across the floor of the House to-day, said that unless we moved amendments to those resolutions we would be responsible for them. I must say in the most emphatic manner, I am opposed to them, and if I could get a reasonable number of gentlemen to support me, I would move that they be given the six months' hoist.

Mr. DAVIS. I think the party the hon. member belongs to has been in favour of railway subsidies in the past. As far as our country is concerned it has given very large bonuses. They gave bonuses to the extent of about $3,200 a mile and now that his party is in opposition they oppose giving bonuses altogether. I wish to point out that his leader has supported the giving of bonuses to railways.

Mr. WILSON. I do not pretend to say that I came to this House to follow a leader in everything he does, and I am sorry if hon. gentlemen on that side of the House are prepared to follow whatever their leader does. The people of the country are very much disappointed in the course that has been pursued by hon. gentlemen. Look at the resolution that was passed at the Liberal convention, held in Ottawa, in 1893, about economy and the debt being reduced. The First Minister pledged the people in Toronto that he would reduce the cost of running this Government by three or four million dollars a year, but they have not done that.

The PRIME MINISTER. That subject has been mentioned to-day.

Mr. WILSON. I know it has been mentioned, and it will be mentioned a good many times before the next elections. Now, all this discussion has arisen because of lack of information. The Government promised to bring this information down. Now if they cannot do it to-night I hope they will in the morning, because I think it is important.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman knows very well that two or three railways which have been given a land subsidy and a bonus of $80,000 a year or a grant for a term of years are railways which were projected through a completely unsettled country. If they look along the line of those railways they will find that there is no population, and for past years the population of that portion of the Dominion any more than the population of this has not increased. There seems to be stagnation somewhere. The fact is people do not come in in any considerable number. Now, unless we get the people to settle the country—unless the population increases—there is no business for those railways, and there is no use for postal service—

Mr. WILSON. Is that any reason why we should not have the information asked for?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot furnish the hon. gentleman with information which is not at my hand, but some gentleman stated last evening that the amount which was received from this railway bonus did not exceed $5,000 in any one year. I have no means of verifying the correctness of that statement but I have no doubt the hon. gentleman made it with the conviction that it was accurate. It might all be true, and yet it would not have any bearing on the position we take in making these advances. We are not doing this for to-day, but for all time. The time will come when the people will settle around those railways, and if they do there will be just cause for an efficient mail service as there is in any part of old Canada, and when that call comes it has to be responded to by the Postmaster General. All the aid he will have to give this railway company is to pay them for the service, and the Government will get the benefit. The hon. gentleman must not understand that there is any idea on this side of the House that we are going to commence the day after to-morrow or the next day after the Bill becomes law to get revenue from it. It may be some years before any substantial return is realized in respect to this provision, but the hon. gentleman must not be impatient. It is sure to arrive—sure as the sun rises, or else my hope, his hopes and all our hopes in the future of the country will have come to naught.

Mr. WILSON. The Postmaster General took the names of the companies that were given to him by the ex-Minister of Finance, and I think it is only fair that the Government should promise to bring that information down.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman does not perhaps quite remember the incident. The ex-Minister of Finance stated that though the principle of this subsidy resolution was not a new one, yet that, in his opinion, it had not been lived up to. It only existed on paper. It is not the amount, but the question whether or not the principle has been lived up to.

Mr. WALLACE. The Minister will excuse me. I think it was both the principle and the amount.

Mr. BLAIR.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I did not understand anything about the amount, because the hon. gentleman will remember that the Premier was speaking at the time. When he made the observation that in some cases the earnings would be very small. This is the point as I understand it: Every dollar of earnings, every dollar for service rendered by these companies in question for the Government instead of having to be paid by the Government to the railways, is retained and paid over by the various departments into the consolidated revenue fund, and not, as otherwise would have been the case, the Government having to pay money out for the service so rendered. That was the principle, and that is the principle involved here. At the present moment we are paying on an average about $94 per annum per mile on the railways in use in Canada for carrying the mails alone. There may be other Government payments for services on these lines. The amount which a railway earns in these ways is a changing amount, depending on the growth of the country, the frequency of the mails, and the need the Government would have to employ the different roads.

Mr. WILSON. Have you made the deduction?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have stated it here, and hon. gentlemen will find the information in the Auditor General's Report each year. There is nothing mysterious about it. Ever since that arrangement was made, I think in 1892, in every case, whatever money we would otherwise have had to pay in cash, was paid over to the Receiver General and retained as part of the consolidated revenue fund, and so much money saved. The variations are such that the earnings of one road would give no more idea of the earnings of another road than would the earnings on passengers or freight. In some instances we pay only four cents a mile for the use of a railway, which might not amount to more than a few dollars in the year, depending on the number of trains the railway runs, while in other cases we pay several hundred dollars a year for the carriage of the mails.

Mr. DAVIS. One railway which has been referred to runs into my district, the Regina, Saskatchewan and Long Lake Railway. The ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) stated that that railway was paid only $2,000 a year for carrying the mails. I do not know why that railway was built. It was not for the convenience of the people of Saskatchewan. If it had been built where the people asked to have it built, I have no doubt that sufficient revenue would be derived from it to pay 3 per cent on the subsidy. The people of Prince Albert sent three delegates down here to ask for a railway to be extended into the district of Saskatchewan. They never asked for this road at all. They asked that a subsidy should be given to the Manitoba and North-western, which ran through a fertile country, where settlers would go in, and where towns would spring up every ten miles along the line. But in spite of the representations of these delegates, who knew all about the country, the Government gave a subsidy to certain gentlemen, one a member of this House, the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler)—6,400 acres of land per mile and a cash subsidy of $80,000 for 20 years for carrying the mails—for building a line from Regina called the Regina, Saskatchewan and Long Lake Railway, which runs through a wilderness in which there is nothing but alkali swamps, and which will not be settled for 100 years.

Mr. WILSON. I guess that was a mistake.

Mr. DAVIS. It was a great mistake, and the friends of the hon. gentleman made the mistake. Along the 250 miles of that railway there are only a few miles where the lands are fit for settlement. In place of that railway bringing people into the district of Saskatchewan it has prevented people coming there, and stopped the progress of the district for years. For that reason we cannot expect more than $2,000 a year of revenue from that railway. If the road had been built through the section of country where the people wanted it, you would have seen a different result. When the proposed extension is built from Red Deer Lake for 100 miles through the Dauphin country, there will be no trouble about getting 3 per cent on the subsidies, because every 10 miles you will find a large thriving town, and every quarter section from Dauphin Lake to Prince Albert is capable of supporting a family.

Mr. WILSON. I said nothing about the hon. gentleman's railway. I do not know anything about it. Because we made one mistake, that is no reason why we should make another.

Mr. DAVIS. The hon. gentleman was criticising the Government for making this new departure. He said it was a myth, the idea of the Government being able to collect 3 per cent from the railways, and he cited the case of the Regina, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway, and I wished to point out the reason why it does not return a greater revenue to the Government, and why it should not be taken into consideration. That railway was a huge bungle and should never have been constructed.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not understand why this matter has been dragged into the discussion, because it does not seem to me to be relevant at all. The Minister stated in this case he had made a departure from the usual principle followed that would bring us a direct return. I asked what the direct return was, and he mentioned these mail services as the sources of the return, saying that there had been other railway subsidies given on a somewhat similar principle. The difference is that in the case of other railways the arrangement has been for a limited time, while in this case it is for an unlimited time. The Postmaster General says the return was not large. The question was not whether the return was large or small. If I understood him correctly, he intimated that the return could not be got, and that the money was retained and paid into the consolidated revenue. It is only a matter of book-keeping. If that is done instead of the money being paid to the company, there must be an account of it, and I do not see why the information could not be got. Some private members are able to give the information, and I do not see why the Postmaster General cannot give it. I understood from the Postmaster General that this information would be available, and would be given to the House. But whether he has forgotten it or has made no effort to get it I do not know, but it seems to me it would not be difficult for him to get the information.

Mr. DAVIS. What difference would it make? Taking the facts into consideration that I have stated with reference to the Saskatchewan and Long Lake Railway, it would not make any difference, if it was only $1,000. The fact of that road being built through a wilderness, where there is no settlement or chance of settlement, would be sufficient to show that we would not get postal revenue.

Mr. SPROULE. Do they carry mails, or Mounted Police, or Government supplies?

Mr. DAVIS. I suppose they carry the mail.

Mr. SPROULE. Then, the accounts must be somewhere, and ought to be available.

Mr. DAVIS. I wish to point out that, outside of the $80,000 given at the time as a subsidy for the road for twenty years, this company got a subsidy of $1,000 per mile for the construction of the road, putting the price on the land at which they are selling it.

Mr. SPROULE. That has nothing to do with it.

Mr. BRITTON. The hon. Minister has taken wisely the power of deducting the interest of 3 per cent in certain cases, but there is this case that ought to be provided for, and that is, where a bonus is given for an extension to a certain point. The extension is usually short, but may be a source of large revenue, and it will be wise for the Government to take the power to deduct 3 per cent from the earnings of any part of the road, in return for their assisting this extension. The Minister of Railways said that if a road were 100 miles long, and he subsidized six miles of an extension, he would deduct six-one-hundredths of the whole earnings; but the case in my mind is where the extension was, for instance, to a mine, and at that mine a thriving village might in five years grow up and be an important source of revenue to the railway. In that case, under the resolution, there would be no power to make any deduction, if there was no work done over this particular extension. But might it not be wise to get some money back in a case of that kind?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would be glad to give that suggestion consideration, and it may possibly prove to be workable.

Mr. ELLIS. I was going to suggest that the Government, in view of these large subsidies, ought to take power, by the Act itself or by Order in Council, to compel these railway companies to keep their books according to a uniform system. There is a great lack of knowledge of what they are doing, and it is impossible to get correct statistics of railway business and earnings, but if one uniform system of book-keeping were adopted by all railways, we could get at a variety of things of which we are now ignorant, and which it is desirable we should know. According to the report of the Interstate Commission of the United States, one of the great evils they have to encounter in furnishing proper information, is the great variety of railway book-keeping, and the suggestion has been made that there should be a uniform system. I do not know if the hon. Minister would like to grapple with that question, but it is one that will have to be grappled with, when my hon. friends from Lisgar, and East York, and the others have succeeded in having their views adopted, and these railways are put in the possession of the Government and nationalized.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have heard the complaint made, and no doubt there is a great deal in it, but it has seemed to me that it would be sufficient, at all events, when this Parliament comes to deal with the question of a railway commission, to have that matter considered then. There is no limit to the power and control of Parliament over these railways.

Mr. SPROULE. I want to make one more appeal to the Postmaster General for this information. If he is not able to get it, let him say so; but if he is, we ought to have it.

Mr. WALLACE. There is no question about whether it can be got or not. The reports of the department will show the business arrangements with those companies, and whether they have been paying off their indebtedness in this way, as the law provides. Two days ago the Postmaster General promised to give this information to the House. He has not done so. He tells us that baggage-cars get 4 cents a mile, and regular postal-cars 8 cents a mile. But we knew that already. Those have been the rates for the last forty years. What we want is the information we have asked for, and which he can very easily obtain. The Minister of Railways admits that we ought to have it, because he told us that he had just sent for the Postmaster General in order to get it. But when the Postmaster General came in, we found that he had not got it. We have come to a clause where we require it, and the Postmaster General is dumb. I would like to hear him speak.

Mr. SPROULE. I think we ought to have an answer from somebody. It is not unreasonable to ask whether this information can be had or not. If it cannot we are not so unreasonable as to insist upon it. But if it can, what reason can there be for not bringing it down at a later stage?

Mr. DAVIS. What difference would it make?

Mr. SPROULE. I am asking for information from somebody who has authority to give it.

Mr. WALLACE. I think we will have to take the bit in our teeth, and the rules and regulations of this House into our own hands.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think the hon. gentleman can be allowed to do that.

Mr. WALLACE. We have had so-called explanations about different questions, and the only satisfactory information we have had on any subject was that given by the right hon. First Minister when he explained the case of the Quebec bridge. I think we will have to ask the right hon. First Minister to assume charge of these departments, because he is the only man who appears to be fit to run them.

The PRIME MINISTER. I feel highly flattered. I had no idea that I was such a good administrator. My hon. friend the Postmaster General will look for this information and will bring it down if it can be had. Of course, it must take some time.

Mr. WALLACE. Perhaps 15 minutes to get it ready.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall this resolution be adopted?

Mr. WALLACE. With the understanding that this information be brought down.

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, but we must have time to prepare it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I propose now as an additional section, section 8, the section of which I spoke yesterday:

That, as respects all railways receiving subsidies under the foregoing provisions, the company at any time owning or operating any of the said railways shall, if and when required, produce and exhibit to the Minister of Railways and Canals, or any person appointed by him, all books, accounts and vouchers showing the cost of constructing the railway, the cost of operating the same and the earnings thereof.

Mr. WILSON. Would it not be well to add that they should make known all the bonuses they have received?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That would be of public record, and besides it will appear in the company's books.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. OLIVER. Is section 4 adopted? I did not hear it read.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, it is the usual and customary clause.

Mr. OLIVER. I think a suitable and valuable amendment could be made by adding to the words "the location of every such line of railway shall be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council" so as to make read that railway stations also shall be subject to such approval. It would answer the purpose of an amendment to the Railway Act which has been proposed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think not. I pointed out to the Railway Committee, but perhaps the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) did not follow me, that, for the last two years I have been inserting a clause in every contract made giving a subsidy to a railway company bringing it within the right of the Government to locate the stations on the line. We will continue to do that, so it will be hardly necessary to direct the Government to do what it is doing and intends to continue to do. But the amendment to the Railway Act which was proposed goes far beyond this, as it provides that the Government shall have control of the locations of stations upon all railways that have received public aid, not only from the Dominion but from the province or anywhere else. That Bill has been blocked in its passage and cannot become law this session. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) will see that it is not necessary to make the amendment he suggests.

Mr. OLIVER. In regard to clause 5, I desire to ask a question. Where traffic arrangements and arrangements for running powers are made, is the amount of subsidies received by the road from which the running powers are asked taken into consideration?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am unable to state what action the Government has taken with respect to that point. We have had one case before us. Application was made by the Bedlington Railway to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council for the right to run over some portion of the Canadian Pacific Railway Crow's Nest Pass line. We gave the running powers, and, in settling the terms in which they should be exercised, in other words, the amount that should be paid by the company seeking the running powers, we ascertained the cost of the line, deducted the amount of the subsidy granted and made our calculations on the balance.

To the United Counties Railway Company, for a railway from St. Robert Junction to Sorel,  $6\frac{1}{2}$  miles, and from Mount Johnson to St. Grégoire Station, 1 mile, not exceeding  $7\frac{1}{2}$  miles. Revote.

The PRIME MINISTER. I desire to make an amendment to this vote. After the words "six and one-half miles," I propose to insert the following:—

This subsidy to be payable only in the event of adequate running rights over the South-eastern Railway between the two points above mentioned, and of being granted to the above mentioned company on terms to be approved by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council.

At the present time the United Counties Railway enters the town of Sorel over a portion of the South-eastern Railway. They complain that at the present time they are threatened with losing their right of way, and they ask for this subsidy. I am of the opinion that there is no necessity for a second line of railway there if we can avoid it.

Amendment agreed to.

Resolutions reported.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 12.55 a.m. (Saturday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

SATURDAY, 5th August, 1899.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PRAYERS.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. DAVIN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. In the "Daily Patriot," published at Charlottetown, P.E.I., in the issue of August 2, 1899, in a correspondence from Ottawa, I read as follows:—

Ottawa, August 2.—Following up their attack on all kinds of labour legislation, the Opposition yesterday devoted a whole session attacking Dr. Borden for giving to the workmen the advantage in his militia clothing contracts of anti-sweating clauses. They advocated the retention of those principles upon which sweating is carried out. A few days ago, they made a similar attack on day labour, and at yesterday's committee, Sir Charles, adhering to the same policy of starvation wages to workingmen, and all modern improvement to lighten the burden of employees, fought against Blair's Railway Bill.

Now, I say that every word of that is false, and I will just read a few sentences to show what the Prime Minister said on that very subject in statesmanlike language, which every one would endorse. Speaking in that debate, to which this correspondent so falsely, maliciously, and mendaciously refers, the Prime Minister said :

The hon. member for Beauharnois says that Mr. Workman has had the work done outside. There is no evidence of that. But let us say that he has. It is a very important subject, and I think this discussion ought to be carried on in a serious way and not as a stormy debate. We are all agreed that there should be an anti-sweating clause.

So that you see we have the highest authority in this House stating that his impression of the debate, as it went on, was that we were all agreed that there should be anti-sweating clauses; and I shall be in the memory of every one here when I denounce this article as false and malicious. I am sorry I do not know who the correspondent is, but it is enough, I think, to bring the matter before the House, as I have done.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to call the attention of the Ministers to the fact that some additional information which was promised has not been brought down; first, the papers from the Department of Railways and Canals, which have been asked for long ago, and repeatedly, respecting the dismissal of Belanger and Michaud, at Trois Pistoles, on the Intercolonial; then, certain missing letters from the Department of the Interior, with regard to Yukon liquor permits; then, papers with reference to mining leases or claims for mining coal under the waters in the harbour of Nanaimo.

Mr. DAVIN. I also have to ask for some papers: The report of the Minister of Justice to Council, in the case of the Queen vs. Skelton et al.; also, the Orders in Council passed since June, 1896, in respect to contracts given without tender.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. PRIOR. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to say a word to the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair). Yesterday, or the day before, the hon. gentleman taxed me with having paired last session to escape the vote on the Kettle River Railway Bill. Now, I feel sure that the hon. gentleman does not want to do anything unfair or to do me or any other member of this

Mr. DAVIN.

House an injustice. I have looked up the matter, and I find that I left Ottawa on the 8th March, not intending to come back, and I did not come back that session. I did not pair that session. I find that the vote on the Kettle River Railway Bill was taken on the 15th April, five weeks after I left. I also find that the whips paired me on several occasions during the session, but without my knowledge or consent.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I accept the hon. gentleman's statement unhesitatingly. He was not quite certain himself on the subject the other night; but now, as he is certain, I am glad to accept his statement.

QUEBEC HARBOUR COMMISSION.

Mr. BERGERON. I would like to ask the right hon. First Minister if he has received any communication from the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec concerning a Bill which passed Parliament a few days ago, without their knowledge, and in which there is a clause which reads as follows:—

All things heretofore done by the Corporation of Pilots for and below the harbour of Quebec and by the directors of the said corporation with reference to the distribution of the funds of the said corporation between the members thereof and the payment out of the said fund of sums of money to pilots who act as captains are hereby declared to be good and valid for all purposes.

It seems that this clause affects some cases which are sub judice, and would be most unjust to litigants. My information goes to show that the Harbour Commissioners are very hot over it, and have communicated with the right hon. gentleman to see whether a Bill could not yet be brought in to undo this clause.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). My attention has been drawn by several parties in the city of Quebec to this amendment in the Bill. The Bill was introduced by the Solicitor General, at the instance of the Quebec Harbour Commissioners, and it was generally satisfactory; but in the Senate the Minister of Justice introduced the amendment now complained of. This amendment is complained of by some, but highly supported by others. On the question of policy, I am not prepared to express myself at this moment. But the question is whether it affects vested rights, and I have put myself in communication with the Minister of Justice on this subject.

Mr. BERGERON. Will the right hon. gentleman be able to give another answer before we part?

The PRIME MINISTER. I should be very happy when I confer with the Minister of Justice. It is a legal question as to which I must obtain his opinion.

WEST HURON REPRESENTATION.

Mr. MACLEAN. I wish to ask the right hon. gentleman if he is aware of a certain article which appeared in a newspaper yesterday, and would ask him if it be the case that a vacancy has occurred in the representation of West Huron?

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend must know that newspaper articles have not much weight sometimes.

Mr. SPEAKER. I may say that I have no official notice.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 175) further to amend the Act respecting roads and road allowances in the province of Manitoba.—(Mr. Sifton.)

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 190) to authorize the granting of subsidies in aid of the construction of the lines of railway therein mentioned.—(Mr. Blair.)

STEAMSHIP SERVICE WITH THE WEST INDIES AND SOUTH AMERICA.

Resolution approving of articles of agreement for an improved steamship service between Canada, the West Indies and South America read the second time.—(Sir Richard Cartwright.)

PROTECTION ON NAVIGABLE WATERS.

On order for consideration of amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 137) further to amend the Act respecting the protection of navigable waters.—(Sir Louis Davies.)

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I introduced a Bill prohibiting the deposit in navigable and tidal waters of rubbish, saw-dust, &c. The main object was to provide that harbour masters should still have the right to mark a place within the limits of the harbour where this rubbish could be deposited and some doubts were raised. The Bill went to the Senate and the objection was made that it applied not only to tidal waters but navigable waters. Eventually a compromise was reached and they agreed that so far as tidal waters are concerned the Bill would remain as it was, but with regard to non-tidal waters the depth should be reduced from 12 fathoms to 8 fathoms.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know that there is any opposition, but my hon. friend from Toronto asked me to request that this Bill be allowed to stand until Monday.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If my hon. friend desires, we will let it stand. I beg to move that further consideration of the amendments be postponed.

Motion agreed to.

SAFETY OF SHIPS.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES moved second reading of Bill (No. 170) respecting the safety of ships.

He said: This Bill was introduced by me some time ago, and I requested at the time that those gentlemen who represent commercial interests should forward it to their several constituencies in order that I might have the benefit of the opinion of shipowners and others interested. The Bill has two main divisions. The first extends the time when vessels can leave for England with deck loads. No sailing ship or steamer can enter any English port after the 1st November carrying a deck load higher than 3 feet, and by our law they cannot leave this side after the 1st October, carrying a deck load higher than 3 feet. Of late years, steamers have been taking the place of sailing vessels, and the date of leaving here is earlier than it might be. After consultation with those representing the insurance interests and the shipping interests, they agreed among themselves that the 12th October should be adopted as the date to which we could extend the time. The clause of the Bill provides that steamships may sail from this side on the 12th October with summer deck loads.

The rest of the Bill has reference to provisions which were pressed upon me very strongly by the hon. member for Quebec (Mr. Dobell), having for their object the control of the deck loads carried in summer, and providing that they should be subjected to the supervision of the Port Warden and no clearance given to any vessel with a deck load until certificate was produced that the deck load was according to law and the vessel seaworthy.

Since the Bill was introduced, I have received some very strong protests from a number of shipowners in the city of St. John, and from some in the province of Nova Scotia. They state that these provisions will be very harsh in their operation and will not effect the object we have in view; and that, at any rate, time should be given for their consideration rather than that they should be forced upon them at present. Messrs. Wm. Thompson & Son, of St. John, N.B., especially set forth the objections at great length. They say that many of their steamers load in outlying ports, and that it would be difficult to get efficient and satisfactory port wardens who would be suitable and could give the proper investigation and examination and keep such control as would be satisfactory to the shipowners on the one side and the insurance men on the other. They think they would be put at a disadvantage, and they are satisfied with the existing laws, and contend that the insurance companies are the best judges as to whether they load their vessels in a proper manner.

Mr. FOSTER. That would apply to everything except the life of the crew.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The chief object in introducing this Bill was to obtain, if possible, a reduction of the rates of insurance charged by the British companies. They have raised the rates of insurance largely against this side, and we thought that by having this clause we should be able to gain a reduction of the rates. The Carmichaels, of Pictou, and the Thompsons, of St. John, say that it would not have this effect, and that it would harass them. Having considered the matter I propose to strike out all the sections in the Bill except the first, and give time for consideration; and it may be, re-introduce these provisions next year.

Mr. ELLIS. I am very glad the Minister has adopted that course. There is no doubt that the feeling among the shipping community of St. John was strongly against the Bill. Perhaps a year's consideration will enable the views of the Minister and the views of the shipping community to be brought more in accord than they are at the present time.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and the House resolved itself into committee on the Bill.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I move that the following be added to the section:—

And no master of any steamship so sailing shall incur or be liable to any of the penalties prescribed by the Act referred to.

This does not alter the effect of the section; it is put in for greater clearness.

Amendment agreed to.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I move to strike out all after section 1.

Amendment agreed to.

Bill, as amended, reported, read the third time and passed.

CONDITIONAL LIBERATION OF PENITENTIARY CONVICTS.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 171) to provide for the Conditional Liberation of Penitentiary Convicts.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee on the Bill.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

(In the Committee.)

The PRIME MINISTER. The object of this Bill is to introduce the ticket-of-leave system for convicts. The Bill follows, I believe, word for word, the English Act. That Act has been in operation in England for some twenty years and more, perhaps, and I understand, has worked satisfactorily. The Bill provides generally that the Governor in Council may allow a convict to be set at large on condition of good behaviour. The convict so set at large is not free; he can be rearrested at any time; but he is allowed to be at large, to some extent under the surveillance of the police. Here is a convict, a young man of good character, who may have committed a crime in a moment of passion, or, perhaps, have fallen a victim to bad example or the influence of unworthy friends. There is a good report of him while in confinement, and it is supposed that if he were given another chance, he would be a good citizen. Under the Bill power is given to the Governor General to order his liberation—of course, under certain rules to be established, in the framing of which we shall be guided by the precedents of England. The matter is experimental, so far as we are concerned, but we are guided by the experience in Great Britain.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the right hon. First Minister say whether they have adopted any system similar to this in the United States, and if so, how it works there?

The PRIME MINISTER. I am not aware that it has been adopted by any state in the Union. We have been guided by the precedents in England.

Mr. CLANCY. What class of offenders does this apply to?

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not know that it is restricted to any class of offenders, but applies, by the terms of the Act, to all kinds. But in practice, it is to be assumed, the privilege would not be allowed to those guilty of heinous offences. But take the average run of offences—assaults, larcenies, and other offences of that kind, which are by far the most numerous with which courts of justice have to deal—and it is especially to those guilty of such offences that this system is to apply.

My hon. friend is also aware that in England the Act has been applied to political offences. Happily, we have no offences of that nature in this country. But it has been applied frequently in England to men who have been convicted of treason or offences bordering upon treason. In this country, the Bill would apply chiefly to offences of a minor character, such as larceny, assaults, and the like.

Mr. CLANCY. I wish to ask the right hon. gentleman a question. I have in my mind a very distressing case where a man committed an act, unpremeditated, that ended in the death of his wife, and the act was committed under very aggravating circumstances. No defence was possible, and the man was sent to the penitentiary. The man's whole character was such that nobody could have expected it of him, his life had been rather exemplary; but through an uncontrollable temper he committed an act that ended in murder. I desired to know whether the Bill went far enough to give the Justice Department discretion to deal with a case of that kind?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, that is my construction of the Bill.

Mr. WILSON. I have a case in mind where a young man raised a $5 bill to $500. His previous conduct had been irreproachable, so to speak, but he was sent to the penitentiary, and that has entailed great suffering on his wife and children. I have good reason to believe that if he was set at liberty there would be no reason to regret it.

Mr. DAVIN. Legislation of this kind might work better in England than with us. We are a smaller people, and our political organizations are more active and more thoroughly organized than in England. That clause is very wide, and I am afraid that political pressure will be brought by whatever Government is in power on the Justice Department.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I differ with the hon. gentleman in that I think it would apply better in Canada than in England, because in the old country crime is more frequent, and people are brought closer together. I know several cases of young lads. I have in my mind one or two cases in New Glasgow of lads with excellent parents, but who were carried away into crime. One of them got drunk and did something, and they were put into the penitentiary. Now, one of the questions that agitate reformers is whether keeping young people in the penitentiary is conducive to their betterment. When a young man whose previous character has been good, commits a crime that sends him to the penitentiary, many surrounding cases may make his offence much more pardonable than some higher crimes would be. A boy who had been sent to jail again and again may be deemed incorrigible, but there are cases where a country boy, for example, coming to town, commits an offence, and there are about it many circumstances that call for the clemency of the Government. I do not think it would apply so much to older sinners, but when a young lad is sent to the penitentiary for a minor crime and shows by his conduct that he is sorry, he might be set at liberty on condition of good conduct, and he can live down the offence. I think this is an excellent Bill, and while I do not think any Government would exercise this pardoning authority indiscriminately, I think it could be utilized judiciously to very good effect.

Mr. FOSTER. In whose hands in England is this power of granting ticket of leave?

The PRIME MINISTER. The Home Secretary, not the Government.

Mr. FOSTER. It strikes me that is an improvement upon the method you have adopted here. If there is one member in the Cabinet who is so jealous of the work of his department that he will permit the least possible political pressure to have any effect upon him, it is the Minister of Justice. All the other Ministers are more liable to the results of political pressure than the Minister of Justice. I am inclined to think that the love of reputation and the high traditions of the Justice Department, and everything that pertains to that would make it a safer medium for the issue of tickets of leave than leave it to be decided by the members of the Council, all of whom are necessarily, to a greater or less extent, swayed by political considerations. But the Minister of Justice would feel that his department was primarily and solely responsible, and he could not shelter himself behind an adverse decision of his colleagues. It would be somewhat as in the case of a judge on the bench a mere matter of justice and clemency. I would suggest strongly for the consideration of the Government whether this should not be put solely upon the responsibility of the Justice Department, without the co-operation of the other members of the Cabinet. Of course, my remarks apply to all Cabinets. We must take into account that political pressure in our country will be a factor much stronger than in the old country. There, the system of patronage is so entirely different that the Home Secretary is absolutely not subject to political pressure, unless in certain political crimes and where international representations are sometimes made, as, for instance, in Mrs. Maybrick's case. I am not averse to trying this experiment. I think the humanitarian side of it should lead us to give every man who has fallen a chance to regain his position and his self-respect in so far as he can. I think this experiment if tried under the best conditions, and if it proves successful, it will be a step forward in our administration of justice in this country.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). There is a good deal of force in all the objections which have been urged against this Bill—I would not say urged against it exactly—but in what has been said showing the danger to which it may be liable. In the first place, I think there is a good deal of force, and of truth, in the remarks made by the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) in so far as political pressure is concerned. There are two classes of men in the prisons of the country; there are the men who are hopeless criminals and there are other men who are the victims of accident rather than of criminal instincts, and it is to these men to which this Bill is to be applied with the design to giving them a chance to redeem their characters. It is questionable whether a jail or a penitentiary is a place of improvement for a man placed in confinement there. Very often a man goes into a penitentiary who is not a criminal, but he is made a criminal by the associations which in jail become unavoidable. There is no doubt that one of the most serious objections to this measure is that it will subject the Government and Ministers to a strong pressure on the part of political friends. We cannot avoid that: we have that even to-day in the exercise of the pardoning power. There is no doubt that every year, almost, strong political pressure is exercised upon Ministers in order to prevent the carrying out of justice. But this rather favours than militates against the broader and more general view which underlies this measure. Although large powers and vast discretion are given to the party in authority to interfere with a sentence and to prevent a man from incurring the punishment which has been imposed upon him by a court of justice, they are not exercised upon its own responsibility, but under certain rules which guide the discretion of the party in authority. In the administration of the law, judges, in many cases, are vested with almost unlimited powers but these unlimited powers, which rest upon their discretion completely, are not exercised arbitrarily, but according to well understood rules. It must be so in this instance. The party in authority, whether the Minister of Justice or the Government, who has charge of the administration of this Act, will follow the precedents which have been established and will apply the jurisprudence now established in the mother country. It is the intention of the Department of Justice to set down certain rules and regulations which will be at once a bar to a certain class of applications. No doubt applications will come from all parts of the country to have this Act applied to this or that criminal. Three-fourths of these applications will be such that the Minister will be able to say that they do not come within the rule and cannot be entertained. In regard to the party who ought to be in authority, my hon. friend (Mr. Foster), suggests that it should be the Minister of Justice. The Minister of Justice has come to the conclusion that it ought to be the Governor in Council. I believe that we should leave the matter as it is. The Bill which was introduced in the Senate has been carefully considered by the Minister of Justice and his officers, it has been carefully considered by another Chamber, and they have come to the conclusion that it is better to leave the matter as it is. There is a precedent for it. It is in a modified sense the exercise of the pardoning power which is vested in the Governor in Council, but there are rules which govern the exercise of this power by the

Str WILFRID LAURIER.

Governor in Council. The sovereign is not now at liberty to exercise the pardoning power as in the olden times, but he must be advised by his Council and his Council must be advised by the Minister of Justice. I think there is safety in following the same rule here. My hon. friend knows that in a case of murder, for instance, when an application is made for the commutation of the death sentence, it is considered by the officers of the Department of Justice, who go into it very carefully, after which the hon. Minister goes into the case carefully himself and comes to a certain conclusion upon it. If they come to the conclusion that clemency ought to be exercised then the judge who tried the case has to be consulted. The judge gives his own opinion upon it. Then, after the judge has been consulted, after the Minister of Justice has considered the report, he makes his report to Council. I think there is safety in all these precautions, and I think it would be better to follow the same procedure in regard to this measure and to have a settled process for considering the applications of different parties so as to reach, if possible, the best solution under the circumstances. I think that view will appear reasonable to my hon. friend if he gives a moment's consideration to it.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not want to take up the time of the House, but I hold my view very strongly, and what the right hon. gentleman has said has only deepened that conviction. Let us take what we know as members of the Government sitting around the Council board. What are you going to have when this legislation becomes law? Immediately there is a new impetus given to applications from persons who have friends in the penitentiaries. The pressure that is made upon the Minister of Justice to exercise the pardoning power is now but an atom as compared with the cases that will now be brought up for what may be called an extension of the clemency power. It will take up the time of the Cabinet much more than it does at present. With the multiplicity of business that they have before them—they have just as much as they can do now and more than they can get through with, and you will multiply the vexatious cases that come before them, by a large percentage. That is one idea and if I were a member of the Government I would feel that it was doubtful policy to inject into the Cabinet such questions as this, large in number and of a vexatious character and that will bring a great deal of trouble to Ministers. What happens as a matter of fact? Although there are thirteen men sitting around the Council table it does not occur in one case out of twenty that any of that number, or very few at most, except the Minister of Justice, understand the history and merits of the case.

The PRIME MINISTER. Oh, no.

Mr. FOSTER. Let me go on. There are cases which come to be celebrated, or which come to be eminent cases, which will receive the attention of every member of the Cabinet, or will be looked into by a majority of the Cabinet, but, there will not be the same urgency in these cases. These cases will be more common and in the end, although a case will be submitted to the arbitrament of thirteen men, the history of the crime, the history of the conduct of the prisoner and all these things, which a man in touch with the daily course of the department knows, will be known to the Minister of Justice, but they will not be known to the other gentlemen of the Cabinet who are not living in the atmosphere of the department and are not cognizant of all its daily conditions as they occur. It will therefore happen that the decision will be given after all, either upon the presentation of the case by the Minister of Justice, or it will be given from other considerations by men, the greater number of whom cannot be thoroughly cognizant of the facts and circumstances of the case. If the decision is left with the Minister of Justice every other member of the Cabinet can very well say, when pressure is brought upon him from every part of the country: It is in the hands of the Minister of Justice and I cannot interfere. It is his sole work; he must be responsible and you must not bother me with it. You thus eliminate immediately a great many kinds of cases which otherwise will be brought before you. I am not trying to talk philosophy, but it is the common-sense idea when I say that the further you get away from the idea which is, after all, the main idea in the minds of the people, that justice is a reflex of the Divine law,—that it is, if one objects to that expression, a translation of the law of effect following cause absolutely and certainly—the farther away you get from that, and the more you teach the people generally that after all justice is simply a human device in this country, and a human device that can be worked by politicians and members of the Government, the more you are weakening the effect of justice in the country. I would infinitely rather have an occasional injustice through a wrongful decision of a judge than to have the impression in the minds of the people that the decisions of judges are not final, but that there is a recourse to the politicians afterwards. If that justice, which is personated in the dignity, the decorum and the inaccessibility of a judge, is after all made subject to a final appeal to the party politician you are going a long way towards breaking down in the minds of the people a long-established and fundamental tradition with reference to the administration of justice. That is the peril in the ticket-of-leave system. Therefore, I say, hedge it around all you can, and prohibit it as far as you possibly can the approaches by way of political influence. That is why I am in favour of giving this power to the Justice Department which, whatever else may be said with reference to our Governments, has generally stood in the country, and uniformly stood, as a department uninfluenced by the varying party politics of the time.

Mr. MACLEAN. I would just like to point out, along the same line as the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, that if the power is put into the hands of the Minister of Justice, then members of Parliament and candidates for Parliament would be free from the pressure to which they are now subject from people who may have friends in prison, to do something for them. If a member or a candidate is in a position to say that this power is exercised by a judicial authority, the Minister of Justice, and by him alone, and that political pressure shall not count for much, he will be saved from a great deal of inconvenience. There is not a man in this House who has not been approached at some time or other by persons who have friends in jail, and who has been told that he would receive certain support if he would use all the pressure he could bring to bear on the Government. It will save members and a candidate from a great deal of inconvenience if they are in a position to say to these people, "We cannot do anything for you; if you have a good case, you must lay it before the Minister of Justice, who will treat it judicially and not politically." Let everything connected with the administration of justice be kept in a judicial position, and do not bring it into the field of politics. If the suggestion of my hon. friend is carried out, I believe the whole country will trust the matter to the Minister of Justice rather than to the Governor in Council which is more subject to political pressure.

Mr. DAVIN. I do not think the Government should press this Bill this session, because the members have not been able to inform themselves—as to the conditions under which the legislation was pressed forward in England. I am unable to conceive a case that cannot be met by our pardoning power, and the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) need not have apologized for introducing philosophy into this discussion. If there is any question into the discussion of which philosophy must enter, it is the question of the deterrent influence of the sanctions attached to crime. What we are asked to do is this. For the sake of a few persons, we are asked to imperil the deterrent efficiency of our punishment. That is what it really comes to, and the right hon. gentleman seems fully aware of the danger himself. So that I think we ought to be in a position to consult the debates which took place in England when this legislation was passed through the Imperial House of Commons; because I think it will be found that it was intended to meet the case of political offenders, and not the case of the ordinary criminal. To emphasize the danger of this legislation take the speech of my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), an able man and a lawyer, a man who might one day be a Minister of the Crown, perhaps a Minister of Justice. What argument strikes him, although he is a lawyer? The purely sentimental, philanthropic argument—the pity of it that a certain individual who had committed a crime should undergo a severe punishment and lose his liberty for a given period, and not, as the hon. member says, get a chance. The working of the ticket-of-leave system, so far as I have been able to look into it in England, has not been a gratifying success. There is a radical difference, not politically, but socially, between our conditions and those of England. The social position of Ministers of the Crown in England removes them far from such pressure as can be brought to bear on Ministers of the Crown here. I think it is not unreasonable that we should ask the Government to postpone this legislation. No harm can be done by postponing it to another year. A graver subject than this has not been brought before the House of Commons this year, and yet we are here at a time when we cannot discuss it. Half or two-thirds of the House have gone and if any man were to attempt to discuss it with the gravity and at the length it demands, he would be accused of taking up time to lengthen the session. The danger of this legislation is that it will lower the efficiency of our sanctions. Everybody knows that one of the greatest dangers to the efficiency of sanctions is the introduction of the element of uncertainty into punishment. When you do that you give at once to the criminal, who is a criminal partly because his organ of hope is too large, a field for his organ of hope to work in. In doing that I am afraid that you will strike a blow at the efficiency of our system; and you will also, I think, stimulate what is already too strong in our community, the tendency to look at these matters sentimentally.

Mr. HAGGART. I cannot see why we should send these cases to the Governor in Council. When a prisoner is to be pardoned, the question never comes before the Council at all, except in the case of capital punishment.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is nothing here said about the Council at all.

Mr. HAGGART. That is what we want eliminated from the Bill, and then the statute would be the same as in England where the Home Secretary is responsible alone and not the Government.

The PRIME MINISTER. We can go through the clauses in committee, and then the committee may rise, and I will confer with the Minister of Justice on the matter.

Mr. DAVIN.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. HAGGART. Why, there is nothing at all in this clause calling for reference to the Governor in Council?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is what I said and I could not understand the objection.

Mr. HAGGART. We were misled by the explanation of the First Minister.

Mr. FOSTER. Evidently no one has read the clause.

Mr. DAVIN. It would be a scandal to carry a clause of this importance when we find that the leading members on either side have not read it.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have said that we had better pass the clauses and we need not take the Bill out of committee; I will confer with the Minister of Justice and give him the benefit of the discussion to-day.

On section 2,

Mr. FOSTER. Before we go out of committee, I must say I do not understand the modus operandi even now. There may be provision generally as to who is to advise the Governor General, but it is not provided here. The Governor General issues the license or revokes it. He does it by instrument under the hand of the Secretary of State. But who advises the Governor General?

The PRIME MINISTER. It is intended that the Minister of Justice should advise him.

Mr. FOSTER. But is it not provided? And if left unprovided it would really be the Council after all.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This does not confer any power, but only regulates it. The Governor General will, of course, in all cases, act under the advice of the Minister of Justice, and not under the advice of any other Minister.

Mr. HAGGART. But he can do it under any Minister.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, but no other Minister, being cognizant of the facts, would interfere any more than he would interfere with my department.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it should be set out.

The PRIME MINISTER. I think you will find it is not necessary.

Mr. FOSTER. Well. I want to say one other word in support of what my hon. friend (Mr. Davin) has said. I ask the Prime Minister to consider if it would not be better to let this mellow for another year? We are here a mere remnant of the House, and this is a very important measure. It would not hurt at all to let it stay over for a year, and, in the meantime, we could, probably, get advice from the judges and others.

The PRIME MINISTER. Hear, hear. I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to, and committee rose and reported progress.

GRANT TO THE CITY OF OTTAWA

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 187) respecting the city of Ottawa.

Mr. CLANCY. I suppose that this would be the proper stage to have a discussion on the Bill. I do not wish to speak at length, but I do think the Government have entered upon what may prove to be a very serious departure from the healthy rule that should govern us in cases of this kind. When we were discussing the resolution, the Minister of Finance stated that the capital city had, above all cities in Canada, a claim upon the Government. I was rather surprised at that. I had been searching in vain for a case in which the very opposite principle is not recognized. We all have great pride in the capital of Canada, and no one would stand in the way of the growth of the city. But I think that if we consider the immense advantages that are given to the capital city, these are a complete offset to any claim that the city may have for any improvements other than those that belong strictly to the Government. I refer first to the city of Toronto, and I appeal particularly to the right hon. First Minister. Toronto is the centre of the province, the Parliament buildings are there, a large number of public institutions are there; and yet there is not a single penny paid in the form of municipal taxation on account of any institution there. That matter was discussed some years ago, and it was thought that if the principle were admitted at all, it would open the door to very serious difficulty. Toronto urged, for instance: We keep up a great public park in which are the legislative assembly buildings, and you contribute nothing towards it. But it was pointed out on the other hand that the buildings were a great adornment to the city, and that the city of Toronto had special advantages through being the capital and through having the public buildings located there. In the province of Ontario a limit is fixed by the legislature to the taxation that may be imposed for municipal purposes.

We have found in the province of Ontario that there is scarcely a town, I might almost say, a village that has kept within the limit of civic taxation which, as the right hon. gentleman knows, is two cents on the dollar, exclusive of what may be raised for debentures and for school rates. I am glad to know that Ottawa is an exception to this position of things. Now, what has happened? The towns and villages throughout the province have been so pressed by making improvements that they have been forced to go to the legislature almost year after year to get their debt consolidated. Now, without entering upon a long discussion, I am unable to see a single reason that can be urged that the city of Ottawa is entitled to compensation to relieve the taxpayer here from municipal taxation. I shall not go into the fact that we are maintaining certain streets and bridges at the expense of the people of the country generally. Wisely, perhaps, the Government has undertaken the maintenance of a handsome park, but after all it is a park for the city of Ottawa. But taking everything into account, I do not see any substantial reason, in consequence of the capital being in Ottawa, why we should relieve the people here from the public purse of a single cent of municipal taxation. I venture to say they have ample compensation in the fact of the Capital being located here. There is not a city in Canada which would not readily take upon itself more than the city of Ottawa is being asked to take upon itself, to have the national Government established in its borders, and that without any bonus. But that is not a question to raise. We must have a capital somewhere, Ottawa is the proper place, and we all feel a pride in it. But we are departing from what seems to me to be a healthy rule. Let us not ask the city to bear one dollar that we should bear ourselves; but on the other hand, let us not open the door to a rule that is manifestly unfair to every city and town in Canada.

Mr. BELCOURT. I am willing, as taking a deep interest in this matter along with my colleague, to leave the case entirely on the ground stated by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy). He says that we should not do anything to relieve the people of Ottawa of a single cent of taxation. Now, I am quite willing, as representing Ottawa, that the case should be left on the ground; and if the House will bear with me, I will show conclusively that the hon. member for Bothwell has every reason to support this measure according to his own principle. I agree with him that this is not a party question or a local question, that the whole country has an interest in its capital city. The capital is part of a national trust. I believe that from one end of the country to the other people take an interest in Ottawa as the capital of Canada. That is a sentiment which is not common to this country but prevails everywhere. Every nation takes pride in its capital, and I believe that every nation in the world has at one time or other contributed something towards making its capital attractive and a credit to the nation. In some countries enormous sums of money have been appropriated towards improving the capital city, notably in the case of Paris.

Mr. CLANCY. It may have been very unwise for France to do so.

Mr. BELCOURT. I think everybody who has visited Paris must have come to the conclusion that it was a very wise thing for the national Government of France to expend the money it did on beautifying that city; and I think everybody acquainted with the facts believes that it was the best investment of money that could be made in France.

Mr. BERGERON. But it was not spent under the same circumstances that we have here; it was spent by Napoleon, not by a parliamentary government.

Mr. BELCOURT. It was spent for the purpose of embellishing the capital.

Mr. BERGERON. But there was no popular parliament sitting in Paris at the time.

Mr. BELCOURT. I hope my hon. friend is not trying to make political capital for the elections. I should be very sorry if any member of this House took that view of it. This is not a party question, surely we can rise above that.

Mr. BERGERON. But he has not chosen a good example; as a matter of history Paris is not a parallel case.

Mr. BELCOURT. Of course my hon. friend and myself cannot agree. I think it is a parallel case, it is at least a precedent, because the money was expended in Paris by the national Government, and I repeat that everybody who visits Paris must come to the conclusion that the money was a good investment for the people of France. I say that the immense sum of money that was expended on purchasing and adorning the Place de la Concorde was the very best investment France could have made. The expenditure made by the national Government in building the Grand Opera is one of the best investments the Government could have made. I grant that this country has done a great deal for Ottawa, and the citizens of Ottawa have done a great deal for it also. But aside from the national considerations I have mentioned, as a matter of justice and fair-play, I am quite willing to rest the case on the ground laid down by the member for Bothwell. If the citizens of Ottawa were asking the Government to contribute towards embellishing this city in order to relieve themselves of their duty in that regard, I would be the first to say that their position was untenable. But that is not the position. The proposition now is that the Government shall contribute the sum of $45,000 towards the improvement of the city, while the city contributes $15,000 out of the $60,000. As was explained the other day by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), the Government to-day pays the city for water and fire protection a sum in the neighbourhood of $15,000. The city consents that this sum of $15,000 shall go to this fund of $60,000 for the purpose exclusively of improvements to sidewalks and streets. So that not only, as the hon. member for Bothwell puts it, are the citizens of Ottawa not relieved of a single cent of taxation, but they are actually contributing $15,000 out of the civic grant to join with the Federal Government in this purpose.

Now, I want to give the House some figures which I think will speak more eloquently than I can do.

Mr. INGRAM. Is it not a fact that the Government is keeping up Wellington street and certain bridges and the parks?

Mr. BELCOURT. Yes, I am coming to that in a minute, but I want to show the conditions under which this is done. The municipal assessment of Ottawa is about $25,000,000, of which $11,000,000 is Government property.

Mr. MACLEAN. How much of that is taxable?

Mr. BELCOURT. $25,000,000 is the total valuation, and $11,000,000 is the assessed value of Government property.

Mr. HAGGART. How much are the other exemptions?

Mr. BELCOURT. They amount to between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000 upon religious property and schools. If the Government property paid taxes, the same as the property of other ratepayers, the city would have an annual revenue from it of $250,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the assessable basis upon which the taxes of the city are levied?

Mr. BELCOURT. $25,000,000 is the total valuation for taxation purposes.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman does not understand me. The hon. gentleman says that $25,000,000 is the valuation of property, but when you deduct the exemptions, how much is left upon which taxes are levied? It would be about $10,000,000.

Mr. BELCOURT. It is more than that. I made a mistake in my statement. The total valuation of property on which the corporation levies taxation is between $24,000,000 and $25,000,000. Besides that there is about $11,000,000 of Government property and between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000 of religious property.

Mr. DAVIN. $25,000,000 is assessable for taxation purposes ?

Mr. BELCOURT. Between $24,000,000 and $25,000,000.

Mr. WILSON. What is the rate on the dollar you pay here ?

Mr. BELCOURT. Twenty-one mills, exclusive of local improvements and school rates.

Mr. MACLEAN. Not school rates ; they are in the general levy.

Mr. BELCOURT. My colleague (Mr. Hutchison) corrects me. That rate is exclusive of water rates, local improvements and income tax. The revenue which the city would derive if the Government property paid taxes in the same way that taxes are paid by ordinary ratepayers would be $250,000. Not only is the Government property exempt, but civil servants are exempt from paying income tax which everybody else has to pay. Moreover, very valuable property, which at one time contributed largely to the civic revenue, has been expropriated by the Government. The property on which the Langevin Block now stands yielded a large amount of taxation, but by the expropriation of that property by the Government, the city lost the revenue from it.

Mr. BERGERON. The Langevin Block is an ornament.

Mr. BELCOURT. Yes, but it is not a source of revenue.

Mr. ROGERS. Did the Government not purchase that ground ?

Mr. BELCOURT. Yes, they purchased it, but by the expropriation of it the city lost the revenue that they derived from it prior to its expropriation.

Mr. ELLIS. Surely the value remains. You have still got the value in money in that property.

Mr. BELCOURT. Yes, but the revenue formerly derived from taxation is lost.

Mr. BERGERON. The people who have sold that property have built somewhere else and are paying taxes to the corporation.

Mr. BELCOURT. The only point I wish to make is that this property at one time contributed to the civic revenue, but by the expropriation of it by the Government, the city has lost the revenue which it derived from it.

Mr. FOSTER. But there is lots of land in the city.

Mr. BELCOURT. The same argument applies to the Museum on Sussex street, the Art Gallery on the corner of Queen and Albert streets, and to other places.

Mr. HAGGART. The hill here was Ordinance land and was exempted anyway.

Mr. McMULLEN. Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say that civil servants paid no taxes ?

Mr. BELCOURT. I said they paid no income taxes.

Mr. McMULLEN. They pay taxes on their buildings.

Mr. BELCOURT. I am not going for one moment to attempt to minimize the advantage which the city of Ottawa derives from the fact that the seat of Government is here. I quite recognize it, and I rejoice that it is in Ottawa. I believe there is no other place in Canada which was better suited to become the seat of Government than Ottawa. It is situated in the very centre of Canada.

Mr. LARIVIERE. No ; Winnipeg is the centre of Canada.

Mr. BELCOURT. And it is on the boundary between two of the oldest and largest provinces in Canada, a spot which seems to have been created purposely for the erection of buildings such as these. I rejoice that it is so, and I do not, for one moment, minimize the great advantage which it has been to this city that it was chosen to be the capital of Canada. But I take issue with those who say that the growth and development of the capital are due entirely, or largely, to the fact that it is the seat of Government. I say that Ottawa was bound, independently of the fact that it is the seat of Government, to become a very great industrial and railway centre. The resources of the forests and of the mines and the value of the Ottawa River will combine to make Ottawa one of the largest and the most prosperous cities in Canada. Whilst every citizen in Ottawa fully recognizes that it owes a great deal to the fact that it is the seat of Government, the people have not rested upon their oars, and have at no time in the history of the capital, neglected to perform their duties in the direction of civic government. If hon. gentlemen look at it fairly, and see what has been done in other cities, they will come to the conclusion that the citizens of Ottawa have shown a great deal of public spirit and energy, and that they are to-day burdened with very large expense incurred for the purpose of advancing civic improvement. Go about the city, see the number of parks and the number of lawns which are kept up by the citizens. It matters not how small many of the houses are, you will see these lawns around them in every part of the city.

Mr. SPROULE. Do you not see them in any city in Canada ?

Mr. BELCOURT. I do not think so, to the extent as in Ottawa. It requires additional expenditure to keep up these lawns. At the present moment the city is incurring an expenditure of nearly $750,000, for the purpose of constructing a main sewer which will have the effect of very materially improving the city. The hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) wanted to know something about the bridges. I am going to tell the House something on that subject that is not but ought to be generally known. The fact is that the bridges over the canal and over the Ottawa River, which should have been constructed by the Government, have been constructed and paid for by the city of Ottawa. I think there is no other city in Canada where a bridge has been constructed over a canal or other public work that has not been paid for by the Government.

Mr. BERGERON. The new bridge at the Chaudière has been paid for by the Department of Public Works.

Mr. BELCOURT. I am not speaking of the bridge over the Ottawa River. That is an international bridge. The bridge over the slides at the Chaudière was constructed and paid for by the city of Ottawa. The sum of $45,000 was expended there. Here is a bridge constructed over public works bringing revenue to the Dominion Government.

Mr. MACLEAN. How much revenue?

Mr. BELCOURT. I do not know.

Mr. BERGERON. Surely they had to build that bridge, or else they would not be able to work their mills.

Mr. BELCOURT. The fact remains that it is a source of revenue to the Government. I do not know that it makes much difference whether that revenue is large or small. The city was not under any obligation to build that bridge, and yet it did so. Then, if we take the Dufferin bridge over the Rideau Canal, I do not think any one will contend that that is a bridge that should not have been built by the Government; yet that bridge was built by the city, and some $90,000 expended on it. Pooley's bridge, also over the canal, was built by the city, and $18,000 expended. The Maria Street bridge was built by the city, and $10,000 expended.

Mr. WILSON. I understood the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), on introducing this Bill, to say that all bridges over canals, not only in Ottawa, but all over the country, were kept up by the Government.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My impression is that where a bridge is constructed over a Dominion canal, the Dominion Government constructs and maintains it. I have insisted on that in the case of my own province, and I think the Dominion Government recognizes that principle.

Mr. BELCOURT. Another fact to which I want to direct the attention of the House is that the Major Hill Park was handed over by the city to the Government.

Mr. BELCOURT.

Mr. CLANCY. Would the hon. gentleman prefer the city having it now? Has the city made a sacrifice?

Mr. BELCOURT. That is the very point I am addressing myself to. That park is in the very heart of Ottawa, and is a very valuable property. If the city had chosen to divide that property into building lots, it would have derived not only a great revenue from the sale of the lots, but also a revenue from taxes on the property. Instead of that, the city, after spending $35,000 on the property, handed it over to the Government.

Mr. CLANCY. Was it forced to do so, or did the city suggest that the Government should take it over?

Mr. BELCOURT. It was a matter of agreement.

Mr. CLANCY. The city wanted to get rid of it, of course.

Mr. BELCOURT. The city lost that property, and lost the revenue which it might have derived from it. In order to allow the Government to improve Wellington street, the strip of ground, which has been valued all the way up to $40,000, was also given up by the city for nothing. If you take the various amounts I mention, you will have $223,000 of expenditure by the city of Ottawa which should have been made by the Government. Now, from the fact that these buildings are here, and that they have to be protected against fire and supplied with water, the city of Ottawa has had to construct and maintain a larger number of water mains and a larger number of drains, and has had very largely to increase its fire appliances. By reason of the fire which took place recently in the Western Block, the city of Ottawa almost doubled its annual expenditure for the purpose of fire protection. Before 1898 its expenditure for fire protection was $28,000; now it is $45,000. That increase was almost wholly due to the fact that these buildings required better fire protection than the city was able to give prior to 1898. That fact shows conclusively that the city of Ottawa, though it does receive some benefit, and large benefit from the fact that this is the capital of Canada, is also obliged to incur very heavy expenditures. The percentage of expenditure for fire protection on the civic revenue is six and three-tenths per cent in the city of Toronto, seven and two-tenths per cent in the city of Ottawa, almost double that of the city of Toronto; and I assert with confidence that that expenditure is due exclusively to the fact that these Parliament Buildings are here and have to be protected from fire. For water supply, the amount paid by the Government to the city is to-day $15,000. From actual calculation it is proven that if the Government were to pay at the same rate that I and my colleague and other rate-payers in Ottawa pay, it would pay the sum of $45,000 for water alone. I am sure that the House will be astounded when I tell it that the sum paid for water by the Experimental Farm is not more than $250 a year. If the city received from the Government for water what it receives from other people, it would receive $45,000, the sum which it is proposed to grant to the city by this Bill. That is the sum the Government would have to pay for fire protection.

I do not want to keep the committee any longer than absolutely necessary, but I thought it would be of advantage in this discussion that the committee should be put in possession of the figures I have submitted. If the House will bear with me a little longer, I would like to point out what is being done elsewhere in the improvement of national capitals. My hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) says that the case I quoted of the city of Paris is not a parallel one, but I do not think he will say that the cases of London, Dublin and Edinburgh are not parallel. As far as I can see, these cities are not in any different position from Ottawa. Take the South Australian capitals; they are in the same position, and yet in every one of these you will find that the government contribute very largely to the civic expenditure. In the city of London, England, the Government pays the same rate of taxation as other people; also in the city of Dublin. In the city of London the Government contributes, besides, annually towards the maintenance of the fire brigade $50,000, and towards industrial schools, $43,000, and it also pays the city the receipts from local taxation licenses. In Dublin, the Government contributes annually a sum amounting to what it would pay, if rated like other property; it pays for water supply at a fixed rate per 1,000 gallons, and it maintains the police force. In the city of Adelaide, South Australia, the government collects all license fees, such as hotels, auctioneers, &c., and pays to the municipality 5 shillings in the pound on all expenditures on streets, bridges and jetties.

Mr. BERGERON. Have they representatives in the House?

Mr. BELCOURT. I think so. In New South Wales the government pays taxes on all its property in the town of Sydney, except that used for railway purposes. It controls the parks and police, and contributes one-third towards the maintenance of the fire brigade. In the Cape of Good Hope the government contributes to the rates in respect of all government buildings in its capital, Cape Town, with the exception of the House of Parliament, and the railway building, and such buildings are duly rated for this purpose. It also pays over half the cost of police maintenance, and contributes annually $2,500 towards the protection of government buildings from fire. It also aids in maintaining the public gardens.

I shall not refer to case of Washington, because then I might leave myself open to the charge that it was not a parallel case, but if this or any other government will do for this district what the government of the United States has done for the district of Columbia, I would be willing to give up our right to representation.

Mr. FOSTER. You could very safely do it.

Mr. BELCOURT. That remains to be seen. I am not urging this from a local point of view, but have quoted these figures simply for the purpose of showing that we are not asking anything from the Government, save what governments in other countries have recognized as due their capitals, and I base the claims of the capital of the Dominion to the recognition we ask, on broad, national grounds. I believe that this expenditure is one which the country is willing to agree to, and hope the measure will go through without division.

It being One o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

The House resumed at Three o'clock.

Mr. MACLEAN. I desire to take up the attention of the House for only a very few minutes. I intend to support the vote now before us, but for reasons other than those advanced by the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt). We in Ontario have had a great many examples of exemption from municipal taxation; and these exemptions have become so burdensome to the municipalities throughout Ontario that there is a growing agitation to have them removed. We have gradually removed a number of them but still they are burdensome. The principle that ought to govern in these things is that those who enjoy the benefits of civic government, be they individuals or corporations, ought to pay for them in accordance with their means. Every city supplies many things to the people that live within its borders—fire protection, light, water, police protection, the maintenance of court-houses, salaries of judicial officers who are in the service of those who live in the municipalities, and so on. If the Dominion of Canada enjoys these benefits within the city of Ottawa it ought to pay its share for them. The ordinary taxpayer in the city is the man who earns a dollar or a dollar and a half a day, and it is upon him that the burden of these exemptions fall. He gets no benefits from them, but they are a burden to him, and the injustice of it must be seen by every person who is in favour of equitable taxation. I would make corporations whether Government or other, and I go so far as to say even educational institutions, pay their share for the privileges they enjoy through the instrumentality of a civic government. The only persons who get the benefit of municipal taxation at the present time and do not pay for it are those who own property in a place where real estate is rapidly advancing in value—those who receive what is called the unearned increment. These people get the benefit of the location of the Dominion buildings and of the capital here, but the ordinary man who earns a dollar or a dollar and a half a day is taxed to the utmost on what he can bear to pay for all the benefits of civic government for those who are exempt. I do not say that I would go to the length of taking the value of the Dominion property here and making the Dominion pay 2 cents on the dollar—

Mr. CLANCY. No half-way in the argument.

Mr. MACLEAN. No, no half-way in the argument. I am utterly opposed to exemptions. We have suffered much from them in Ontario and I as a citizen and a taxpayer of Toronto object to being taxed to provide protection, light, good streets and so on for the people of Ontario who have their buildings there. The province of Ontario ought to pay for all the benefits she enjoys. The civil servants, whether of Ontario or the Dominion, if they live in the city and secure the advantages of it, ought to pay their share of the expense. The incomes of the civil servants are exempt, but I have to pay on my income, and I do not see why any one else should not.

Mr. WALLACE. Does the hon. member (Mr. Maclean) pay on his sessional indemnity?

Mr. MACLEAN. No, that is exempt by Act of Parliament; but the moment it comes under the law, I am willing to pay on it. On the general principle that whoever enjoys the benefits of municipal services should pay their share of the expense, I shall vote for the resolution now before the Chair.

Mr. SPROULE. Mr. Speaker—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the hon. gentleman will allow me, I desire to say a word which may facilitate the debate. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) offered a suggestion the other day that the term of this grant was too long and that it might fairly be reduced to ten years. We are prepared to accept that suggestion, so the debate might as well be continued from that basis.

Mr. SPROULE. I am glad that the hon. Minister has accepted my suggestion. Changes are so rapid in this country that to have things of this kind fixed for a long term of years is not as advantageous. I cannot approve of this grant under the present circumstances. In the first place, I see by the memorandum that the Minister has been kind enough to furnish me, that there are two classes of expenditure by the

Mr. MACLEAN.

Dominion Government in Ottawa, some being classed as ordinary and some as extraordinary. The ordinary expenditure includes the work performed under agreement—water supply, the maintenance of Major's Hill park, the bridges, maintenance of Wellington street, lighting, sprinkling and snow-cleaning. Extraordinary expenditures include contribution to drain on Wellington street, improvement of Major's Hill park in 1886-87, paving of Wellington street and Dufferin bridge in 1886-87, contribution to the construction of central fire station 1887-88, contribution to a bridge on the Rideau River in 1886-87 and 1888-89, contribution to the approach to the Chaudière bridge in 1893-94, contribution to the asphaltting of the approaches to Sappers' and Dufferin bridges in 1896-97, construction of fence around Major's Hill park, 1897-98 and 1898-99 and extraordinary repairs to Sappers' bridge and construction of a sidewalk on Wellington street the same years. These two classes of expenditures together amounted on the average within the last ten or fifteen years to $61,000 a year. We propose in addition to that to spend $60,000 more; that makes $120,000 a year, or about $1,250,000 every ten years in the city of Ottawa. Now, it is said the city derives no benefit from the Parliament Buildings being located here. I would like to ask any member of the city council if he would not be willing to give a substantial bonus to-day to any firm of manufacturers to locate here and employ 1,000, 1,200, or 1,500 hands who become wage-earners, and who represent for the most part that number of families. I understand we have about 1,500 civil servants in the city of Ottawa who are wage-earners. It is said that they do not pay taxes upon their income. Well, I think the civil servant pays taxes on his property as well as in other ways, they become taxpayers in the same way as any other individual in the city. The civil servant pays water rates and lighting as well as others. Every civil servant is a consumer of the produce that is made or brought here; in every respect he helps to keep up the revenue of the city except paying taxes upon income. Therefore, the city of Ottawa is not entitled to any great consideration in that regard. I agree with the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) in that I am opposed to exemptions. I would be quite willing if the same principle obtained in every department of life and that Government property should be assessed the same as any other property. I hope to live to see the day that all exemptions will be abolished, and that all property of every nature inside a municipal corporation will be assessed. The hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) stated that if they imposed the same rate of taxation upon $11,000,000 worth of Government property in this city as they do upon private property they would realize an additional sum of $250,000 a year. But he forgets that if this Government property were made assessable the same rate of taxation which prevails now would be diminished.

Mr. BELCOURT. I said that $11,000,000 is the ratable value of Government property in Ottawa.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that there is $25,000,000 worth of taxable property from which taxes are raised now, and if you increase that sum to $36,000,000, which would include the Government property not now assessed, you would not require to strike as high a rate of taxation to raise the same amount of money; therefore, it would not come to $250,000, but to about two-fifths of that. I see that there is nothing included for keeping up these grounds in this $61,447 we are spending now; therefore, there is a very much larger amount of expenditure in the city in connection with Government buildings than is shown here. Then we must take into account all the labourers who are employed on the Government Buildings from time to time, every one of whom becomes a wage-earner and contributes to the advantage of the city the same as a wage-earner contributes to the city of Toronto, or Hamilton, or any other. I am inclined to think that the Premier made a somewhat amusing boast when he said that if his party came into power he was prepared to make Ottawa the Washington of the North. I think he has been twitted so often about that that he wants to get out of it some way, and this proposition is an evidence of it. So far as he is redeeming one of his pledges, I respect him, because he has broken so many that he ought to be given credit if he redeems only one. But how far all the other cities will endorse this additional expenditure is another question. We who live 350 miles from Ottawa—

Mr. BELCOURT. Only six months in the year.

Mr. SPROULE. Now, we come here and we spend money during the six months, while the session lasts, and it all inures to the benefit of Ottawa. That is one of the items that I forgot, and I think my hon. friend for reminding me of it. If I take the number of members in the House of Commons and in the Senate and calculate how much they spend in the city of Ottawa during the session, it amounts to a very large sum, and all this money is a contribution to Ottawa from every other part of the country. This fact makes my argument very much stronger. No other city in Canada has this advantage. There is another item in this Bill that I object to. Clause 7 says:

The committee may purchase, acquire, and hold real property in the city of Ottawa, or in the vicinity thereof, for the purpose of public parks or squares, streets, avenues, drives or thoroughfares.

I do not think this commission should be allowed to hold property at all except as representatives of the Crown. I do not think that they should be allowed to buy property. We have already enough Government property around here. So I say for these reasons that I am opposed to this Bill, and I am satisfied my constituents are opposed to it, and I believe the people in every other part of the country are opposed to it. In addition to all the money we spend here during the session of Parliament, in addition to the fact that about 1,500 civil servants who are residents here, and, with their families, contribute to the advantage of the city. I do not think that we should give $60,000 a year over and above the $61,000 we are spending at the present time.

Mr. BELL (P.E.I.) When this matter first came up for consideration I thought I ought to oppose it on the ground that I could not find any precedent for the Government appropriating Dominion funds to civic purposes. But after weighing the arguments advanced by hon. gentlemen who have spoken in the debate, and in view of the suggestion of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), (who now proposes to make the term 10 years instead of 20), I feel disposed to modify my first impressions. The statement has been made that if the property of the Dominion of Canada, within the city of Ottawa, were taxed at the same rate as other property, it would yield an addition to the income of the city of $250,000 a year.

I do consider that a legal argument, because we cannot—we dare not recognize the principle that Government property should be taxed. If we do, we will never know where to stop—we will have to pursue that principle in other localities. While that is not a legal argument, I regard it as an equitable consideration—a matter that might fairly be taken into the account—one which would induce us to the conclusion that it would be fair to contribute something, not in the way of a tax, but in the way of something of the nature of a bonus. I do not see any reason, if the federal authorities enjoys the benefit of civic government, of fire and police protection, of the use of streets and sidewalks, why they should not contribute something in return for what they receive. It seems to me, therefore that upon equitable grounds, the Government has a right to contribute something. Then, again, there is the argument in regard to water rates. It is said that if we had to pay for our water supply at the same rate as other property holders, our contribution would be, not $14,000, but $45,000 a year. That argument is entitled to consideration. It is also alleged that the citizens and the corporation of Ottawa have gone to greater expense by reason of the fact that the capital is situate here. The citizens have expended more in beautifying their homes and their surroundings, and the corporation have gone to greater expense in improving their streets and in making Ottawa worthy of the capital of the Dominion. This is also entitled to some consideration. Then, too, weight attaches to the argument advanced by the hon. Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding), that we ought to regard this matter from a national stand-point. There is but one capital of the Dominion of Canada, and we are all proud and should be proud of our national capital. We ought to be ready to make some slight sacrifice towards adorning that capital—towards making it a city beautiful, surrounding, imposing and magnificent Parliament buildings—a sight which strangers cannot help to appreciate and admire. For these reasons, I think, I think we ought to be prepared to make some reasonable concession to the city of Ottawa. Let me make one suggestion in regard to the salaries of civil servants. In the petition presented to the Government by the city of Ottawa, the statement is made, that $1,000,000 of the income of the civil service is exempt from taxation. If that $1,000,000 paid its taxes in the same way as other property, the civic government would derive from that source $20,000 a year. Now, whatever amount we contribute towards the civic government of the city of Ottawa, we should look to a condition of affairs in future whereby that amount would be reduced by this $20,000, which this Parliament ought to authorize to be imposed upon the civil service. I have never been able to understand the sense of the exemption. It seems a sort of legal fiction that has no foundation, or, if it has it should be removed. I understand that the local legislature of the province of Ontario has no power to authorize the civic authorities here to impose taxes upon the income of the Dominion employees, and the reason assigned is, that if Ontario had such power, the effect would be or might be to diminish and prejudice the value and efficiency of the service. It has been held by the courts that the power to authorize such a tax is not now vested in the local legislature, and consequently cannot be conveyed by the province to the civic authorities at Ottawa. I am one of those who believes that this condition of affairs should be changed, that this Parliament ought by statute to waive its right to have the salaries of Dominion civil servants exempted from taxation for civic purposes. This Parliament ought not only to waive its right but authorize the local government to enable the civic government at Ottawa to tax the salaries of civil servants for the purpose of supplementing the civic revenue. I hope, in the near future, to see such a measure passed by this Parliament. I trust that it will then reduce the amount of the subsidy which this Parliament is now called upon to pay, by at least $20,000, or by such sum as the tax upon that $1,000,000 will amount to.

Mr. SPROULE. Mr. Speaker, in hurriedly looking over the paper which the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) was kind enough to give me, I took the ordinary and extraordinary expenditure, and united them together, whereas in reality they were united. I gave the extraordinary expenditure as $61,000 a year. As a matter of fact, it is only $32,000 a year. I used it in my argument, and it was incorrect to that extent. I desire to make the correction.
Mr. BELL (Prince East, P.E.I.)

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, it generally falls to my lot to put in a few words after the great lights have had their say. There has been so much reiteration, unfortunately, of what has been said before during this session, to which we have been compelled to listen, that I hesitate to say anything which may be a repetition. I cannot allow this motion to pass without saying a few words in opposition to it. I would not take this ground, if it were not that the expenditure which has taken place upon the public buildings in Ottawa, on parks, and grounds, and upon everything connected with the Government property, had not been such as to make the capital not only a credit to Canada, but to make it such as would be a credit to any part of this continent. If the capital were not in such a condition, I am sure there would be no person who would be more anxious than myself to see it put in that condition. We take pleasure in bringing people from all parts of our own country to this beautiful city, and the people from foreign countries travelling through have spoken of it in terms of the highest admiration, and have marvelled at what $1,000,000 have been able to do in the way of public buildings. If it were not for all we have done already, there might be some reason for this grant; but I think we ought to be satisfied with reasonable things. Mention has been made of what other cities have done in the way of encouragement to manufactures and other business enterprises. We might call this a manufactory, I suppose, in one sense of the word. We can say, from our experience this session, that it manufactures a good deal of gas, and that the motive power is largely wind; and Ottawa benefits largely from that. Many cities, if they have a civic holiday or other celebration, spend large amounts in the way of attractions.

Mr. MACLEAN. To bring the farmer in.

Mr. WILSON. And take the farmer in.

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, and we have many of them visiting Ottawa, being the beautiful and attractive place it is. As an illustration, I may mention that an excursion came from my county, consisting of 300 or 400 men, who spent three days here, and I am sure that while here they spent $1,000 or $1,500 to the advantage of the city. That is a daily occurrence, showing the advantage that it is to the city of Ottawa to have the capital here, and the city should not be too greedy. What would Ottawa have been without the Parliament buildings? What would this straggling hill have been to-day but for the expenditure of the Government? We know that the city has an advantage as a business centre; but see what has been made of it by the capital being here. But for that it would be almost a collection of lumber shanties, as it was before we came here; and it is rather greedy for Ottawa still to clamour for more. My own city of Kingston was a rival for the capital at one time, and I have always felt and feel still that it should have been there. However, since we have had confederation, I am satisfied that it is here, and I believe the whole country is satisfied. I believe the city of Kingston would have offered the Government $50,000 to come there, and other cities would have done the same, and it would have been to their advantage. The whole gist of the thing is this, that the great taxpayers of Canada, the farmers, who have to bear the great burdens of the country, regard this vote as very objectionable. There is no class of the community who would be more pleased to see the capital in a fine position than they are; but they feel that the Government have done enough for the city of Ottawa. I could not go back to my own constituency and vindicate this measure. I would be glad to see the amount reduced to $30,000 for ten years. If the Government would cut the amount in two, everybody would be satisfied, and there would be no growling.

Mr. DAVIN. I doubt very much whether, when the people of the west come to look at it, they will regard with favour this large expenditure in the interest of the city of Ottawa. In looking at the bill, I see what seems to me to be a difficulty. You will have two bodies governing Ottawa, and one of these bodies will be under the direct control of the Government of the day. That body will have the power of a body corporate—the power of holding property and doing anything else that a body corporate can do. I foresee a considerable difficulty in that regard. However, there is no use in discussing any proposal at any length under the present circumstances; but I express the opinion of those who sent me here when I say that they view with disfavour at this time this large expenditure in this direction.

Mr. INGRAM. Before the motion carries, I wish to enter my protest against this proposed expenditure. I think the advantages which the citizens of Ottawa have at present in having the public buildings here, and the large number of men employed in those buildings, ought to be sufficient for them without expecting the country to contribute directly to the city funds. I feel quite sure that Toronto, and other prominent cities in the Dominion, instead of asking for a bonus, would be very glad to give one in order to have the advantages which Ottawa has in having the buildings here.

Motion agreed to, on division; Bill read the second time, and the House resolved itself into committee on the Bill.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I move that this section be amended by inserting "ten years" instead of "twenty years."

Motion agreed to, and section, as amended, agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. When the hon. Finance Minister was explaining the Bill, it struck me that the question of permanency was not sufficiently kept in view in the forming of this commission. I think that the strength of a commission of that kind is its permanent character, so that there might be a continuity in the character of the improvements made. If you have as the city's representative an alderman or the mayor appointed, either of whom is likely to go out of office the moment some little difficulty arises between him and his supporters, he may have to go out just as he is getting acquainted with the work, and it does not seem to me that in that way you will get the best man or that, if you do you will be able to retain him. I think that it ought to be arranged that the representative chosen by the city should at least retain office for three years, and then be succeeded by somebody else chosen by the city. If a man is just in for one year and may or may not be appointed another year, he will be inclined to cater to the constituency behind him, which may elect him again or dispense with his services.

Mr. WALLACE. This clause provides that if an alderman or the mayor is appointed a commissioner he shall cease to hold office as such when he ceases to hold office as mayor or alderman. It seems to me that that would prevent the city council if they found him a desirable man, from continuing him in office.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is not the intention, and I do not think that would be the construction.

Mr. WALLACE. There should be an opportunity given the council to reappoint him if they desired, and they should not be precluded from doing so.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is not intended that they should, and I do not think that the resolution carries that construction. With regard to permanency, I entirely agree with my hon. friend from York, N.B. (Mr. Foster). But my hon. friend will see that in some cases this commission and the council may have to work hand in hand, and in order to avoid anything like conflict or confusion, it is desirable that a representative of the council should sit on the board, and we have to assume that its representative would be either the mayor or one of the aldermen. Besides, if the council sees fit to appoint a private citizen, it can do so, and it is within the discretion of the council to make the appointments either for a period of one year or for a period not exceeding three years.

Mr. BELCOURT. The views expressed by the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster) are those to which everybody will agree, but it seems to me that we may well leave to the council the discretion of appointing their representative for a year or longer. If a man whom they do appoint proves satisfactory, no doubt he will be reappointed at the end of the year, and if he should not prove a desirable man he will not be appointed again.

Mr. FOSTER. Have any names been determined on?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. None whatever. The names of various gentlemen have been suggested, but none have been determined on.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose the one object of the Government is to have a thoroughly efficient commission, and I hope that will be obtained, otherwise Parliament would be likely to go back on the vote. The permanency of the vote will depend entirely on the way it is managed. The system which has been pursued in this city—though it is rank heresy in this Chamber to cavil about the arrangements of the city fathers—seems to me to show a lack of consecutive design in the way of street improvements, doing a bit here and another there, without any continuity of plan. No doubt the Government feel that the permanency of this vote will depend entirely on the way it is expended, and therefore will be careful to see that the proper men are named as commissioners.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman, and I hope the Government will be able to make such appointments as will meet general approval.

Mr. SPROULE. There are no means, under this Bill, of getting rid of the commissioners, once appointed.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Governor in Council can remove them at any time; they hold office during pleasure.

Mr. SPROULE. During whose pleasure, their own? I understand the judges are appointed in this way.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, no.

Mr. SPROULE. And if that is so, I should think that any one appointed in the same way as the judges would expect to hold office for life.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I was not present when the Bill was introduced and do not know the exact reasons advanced for it. No doubt they were very good reasons. I understand that one of the reasons was that there was a large amount of Government property which under the law paid no taxes to the city.

Mr. FIELDING.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did not advance that view.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Assuming that this is a reason which can be put forward in support of this Bill, I would like to know whether the Government would take into consideration the fact that similar conditions exist in other cities. For instance, in Halifax a very large amount of property is exempt from taxation because it had been acquired by the Government of Canada. Of course, no citizen of Halifax denies that it is an advantage to the city. Very valuable properties have been acquired for the Intercolonial Railway, Post Office Department, Minister of Finance Department, Agriculture Department, and other departments of the Government. Though it is an advantage to the city, still the same conditions apply as apply in the city of Ottawa.

Mr. MACLEAN. The same is true of Toronto. This Government has in the city of Toronto a custom-house, and an Inland Revenue building through which they collect large sums, in fact the main part of their revenue from Ontario. These buildings are on prominent streets, they have to be protected by the police and fire services of the city, and in every way they enjoy the advantages of the city. But the Dominion Government pays nothing on that account, and I say they should pay it.

Mr. DAVIN. In this form?

Mr. MACLEAN. No, in the form of straight municipal taxation.

Mr. DAVIN. The speeches of my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Borden) and East York (Mr. Maclean) go to show where this Bill will land us. Pass this Bill, and from Halifax, from Toronto, and other places you will have demands upon the Finance Minister.

Mr. ELLIS. Why not?

Mr. DAVIN. And from St. John. From St. John to Victoria these demands will be made.

Mr. BERGERON. Even by Regina.

Mr. DAVIN. Well, I will not say that. You will have all those places where the Government has a function of any department like a bird's nest from which the mother bird has been long absent—the rustling of a leaf will cause the opening of the mouths of those who hope to get something. Even at this stage, I think the Government ought to ponder whether they should go on. Suppose you yield to the appeal of my hon.

friend from East York, of my hon. friend from Halifax, or my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Ellis), you consider how much you will give to their several cities, are you going to bring forward a similar Bill to this creating commissioners for these respective places and dealing with each city as you are about to deal with Ottawa? For my own part, once we decide to give money that shall be held to be equitably equivalent for the amount of taxes that may be supposed to be due by the Government, once we consider the Dominion property in a city as hypothetically taxable, I would rather vote the money and give it to the corporation. If they do not spend more money than they are spending now, the people of the city would be relieved to that extent. I think that would be a better principle than this. As I hinted on the second reading of the Bill, I see great inconvenience and worse than inconvenience arising out of the appointment of this board of commissioners.

Mr. BERGERON. When the Bill was introduced I had the honour to ask the Prime Minister if the Government intended to consider any other cities, and the answer I received was that none had applied yet. I would ask if the right hon. gentleman has had any applications from cities in which the Dominion has public buildings for the same treatment as the city of Ottawa has received?

The PRIME MINISTER. I have not received any such application. There is but one city of Ottawa in the Dominion.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The remarks of several hon. gentlemen who have recently addressed the House might be correct if they were not based upon an error. They are based upon the assumption that we have asked this grant to the city in lieu of a local tax. Now, I was very careful not to put it on that ground, for I realize that if it were based upon such ground it would open up a thousand questions throughout the Dominion not only in cities but in every town and every village where you have a public building or own property, and we have no intention of admitting the principle which would open up so many questions. All I said was, leaving aside the question of general taxation, that if we were not bringing down a measure of this kind. I thought it would be only fair to the city of Ottawa that we should make them some increased allowance in compensation for the water supply. That, of course, stands in a different relation from the ordinary taxation. The public buildings do not pay taxation to the municipalities. I think I am correct in stating that in every place where there is a public building you have to pay the municipality the cost of water. There is no exemption in that respect. Having regard to the vast amount of property occuried for Dominion purposes in the city of Ottawa, I think the water tax we pay is very moderate; and if we were charged an equitable water rate, I think we would be bound to pay more than we do. That was the only point respecting local taxation that I advanced. But the ground on which we have asked this grant is that Ottawa is the capital of the Dominion, and, therefore, has a special claim on the Dominion treasury such as could not be advanced in connection with any other city, no matter how worthy it may be in other respects.

Mr. CLANCY. Though the hon. Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) has taken great care to conceal in words the meaning of the Bill, he has not deceived the members of the House, who as he sees, make claims at once. The ingenuity of the Minister of Finance is great, but it is not sufficient in this case. We all know that the Minister of Finance can see very quickly when he wishes to; surely he can see that the question of water rates has nothing to do with the case—that that is a question that stands by itself. If we are not paying enough water rates, let us pay more. If there is anything else that the Dominion Government should pay, let us pay it, and not in a cheeseparing fashion, but fairly and generously. There is only one argument advanced in favour of this Bill, and that is that we ought to be patriotic. I think that is simply empty sentiment, a nice thing in theory, but when we come down to the fact it means relieving the taxpayer of Ottawa to that extent. Let us not conceal that from ourselves. I think the taxpayers of Ottawa should not be put in any better position by the action of this Government than the taxpayers in other cities and towns. I am not going to argue the question on the narrow ground of the benefits that may be derived from the location of the capital buildings here; but we cannot conceal from ourselves that the value of all property is enhanced largely by the fact of the location of public buildings here. I say the principle is an unsound one, bad in essence, and one that should not be adopted. Apart from the sentimental aspect of the question, which I do not think we should allow to enter into this consideration, no reasonable argument can be urged. We are, in fact, entering into a partnership with the city to that extent, although the hon. gentleman has now limited it to a period of ten years. You are entering upon a partnership by allowing this commission to purchase property and hold property in conjunction with the city, and you are entering upon a course that will have no end. The hon. gentleman has had the ingenuity to make it perpetual, while he proposes to limit it to ten years; that will be the result of it.

Mr. MACLEAN. I merely wish to say that I am voting for these resolutions because I do not believe in tax exemptions; but I am not voting for them in order to make this the Washington of the North.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. One word in regard to the argument of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy). He insists that this will relieve the taxpayer of Ottawa. Now, if we were paying this money into the municipal treasury of Ottawa, and leaving the municipal authorities free to do with it as they pleased, then his argument would be correct. But inasmuch as we are not paying a penny into the treasury of Ottawa, inasmuch, on the contrary, as we are taking $15,000 out of the treasury of Ottawa which we are now annually paying into that treasury, and putting the whole amount into the hands of a commission, who must expend it under the direction of the Government, and upon such works as, in the judgment of the Government, are a proper charge on this fund, then my opinion is, that it will not relieve the taxpayer of one penny, but it will give Ottawa some improvements, in which we will all have pride, and in which the city of Ottawa, already heavily taxed, might not be able to indulge in otherwise. With regard to other cities throughout the Dominion, let it be distinctly understood that the ground upon which we place this vote gives no city any claim to come here. If this Bill has any merits, it must rest upon the ground that we want to do something for the capital city of the Dominion of Canada which we are not in a position to do for any other city throughout the Dominion; and if my own city, for whose welfare I am as anxious as I am for the welfare of any other city, should come here and ask for a grant on these lines, I should simply reply: Well, it is your misfortune that you are not the capital of the Dominion, but you have other good qualities which make up for it, and I think you are a better city than the capital of the Dominion—

Mr. FOSTER. And I will give it to you in some other way.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, I do not say that I will give it in any other way, but I do say that we ought to be able to recognize the fact that the capital stands in an exceptional position. Be it wise or unwise, that is the ground of our vote.

Mr. CLANCY. Let us not hide from ourselves the fact that we are entering into a partnership, and the hon. gentleman is endeavouring to cover it up in this Bill. If we desire to aid in beautifying the grounds in Ottawa, let us make an appropriation for that purpose, and then we will have the control of the matter in our own hands from year to year, and will know where we stand.

On section 5,

Mr. FOSTER. With reference to that commission, it may end just as some of the other commissions did—for instance, the civil service commission. If you take a civil servant, who is paid his salary for his work in the department, and make him secretary of this commission, and he devotes his whole time to this commission, then we pay him a salary for which he does nothing.

Mr. MACLEAN.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There will hardly be business enough to keep him employed all the time.

Mr. FOSTER. It will amount to this, that the country will pay to one of its civil servants the secretaryship of that commission. Sixty thousand dollars is a large sum of money, and the work which will be carried on, and all the business in connection with it, will give sufficient work for one man.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We had in view the idea of charging against this commission no large working expense for either a secretary or a treasurer of the commission. We wanted, if possible, to have the work done as a labour of love. We have been assuming that, perhaps, among the numerous public servants in the city of Ottawa, there would be some gentleman who would be willing to undertake the work which I supposed would involve a more moderate amount of labour than the hon. gentleman seems to think. If the duties are onerous, it may be necessary to have a man paid to perform it, but, I think, we might very well make the experiment and see if there is not, in the civil service, some gentleman who could afford to give some of his leisure time to them without interfering with his ordinary duties.

On section 7,

Mr. FOSTER. That puts the Government, as far as that is concerned, in the position of a householder or property holder.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. I think that subsection (a) and (b) should not be in the Bill. They go beyond what the hon. gentleman professes in the balance of the Bill to do, in that they allow the commissioners to acquire property wherever they think fit, which will not only become a permanent charge, but will form a permanent partnership. The hon. gentleman will not take the ground that it does not form a permanent partnership. Let me suppose that, during the period of ten years to which this arrangement is limited, a considerable amount of property is acquired that might be justified on any other ground, will he say that the limit of ten years has any meaning? Will he say that at the end of ten years the arrangement will not be permanent? Relations will grow up in the meantime that you cannot put an end to at the end of ten years, because it will be impossible to terminate these relations.

Mr. MACLEAN. Suppose we decide to terminate the arrangement, could the commission sell the land?

Mr. FOSTER. Nothing belongs to the commission.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is a matter that we could amend by later legislation, if it were necessary. I do not anticipate that this commission will ever be required to sell anything. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) asks if we expect to be able to put an end to this arrangement at the end of ten years. I will be frank enough to say that if it works well, and to the satisfaction of Parliament, at the end of ten years some further arrangement will, probably, be made on the same lines. I think he magnifies the importance of the clause giving the commissioners the power of acquiring property and erecting buildings. It is necessary that the commission should have these powers, although they will only exercise them to a limited degree. Suppose we wanted to open up a new street or thoroughfare?

Mr. CLANCY. The city can do that now?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, unless we give power by this Bill. The commissioners might get power by going to the city council, but we do not want to get mixed with the city council at all.

Mr. BELCOURT. The city council have not the power.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the commissioners want to open up a square and beautify it, why should we not give them power to purchase the land? We do not anticipate that they will erect any very large building, but suppose they wanted to put up a band stand in a square, which would be technically called a building, it would be necessary that they should have this power. That does not appear to be the slightest danger that they will go into any wild speculation.

On section 8,

Mr. FOSTER. What is that for?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. To give legal authority over any property. This is put in under legal advice, that all works must be declared to be for the general advantage of Canada to bring them under the control of the legislature of Canada.

Mr. POWELL. I have a word to say. It is exceptional legislation, and, probably, may be justified on account of that, but it does strike one that the practice of Parliament in declaring anything that it sees fit, in a purely arbitrary manner, to be for the general advantage of Canada, is simply doing away with the constitution altogether. Here is a matter of police, of local interest, of civic concern, and here is the Parliament of Canada violating the whole spirit of the constitution by declaring that streets and public squares, which are matters of municipal concern and ownership, shall be for the general advantage of Canada. It is possible that there will follow in the country from this legislation very serious complications. Here we will have an imperium in imperio, a public square in one portion of the city over which the city has not the slightest jurisdiction. It is entirely withdrawn from the jurisdiction of the municipality and municipal regulations are not applied to it. This Parliament is to make a new system of regulations, although the city has, perhaps, power to make by-laws that may meet the case. I appreciate the difficulties that the Government are in. It is not open to them as in the United States to have a portion of the country set apart for the federal city.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That may be a development of this.

Mr. POWELL. I think this is a perfectly hybrid piece of legislation, which is utterly devoid of principle. I am not taking very serious objection to it, of course, because the position of the Government is a very difficult one from the constitutional standpoint. But, to return to what I said, I simply protest against this method of declaring everything that the Government see fit or take it into their head to declare to be for the general advantage of Canada and to so declare by Act of Parliament. It is doing away with the constitutional safeguards that are imposed for the protection of the provinces and of the municipalities.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think this present Government is not open to the charge that it has tried to do much along that line. My own views are very much in accord with those of the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Powell). We have time and again, not, perhaps, so much during the present Administration as in the time of former Administrations, declared works to be for the general advantage of Canada, and in doing so we might seem to have conflicted with the provincial authorities, because the provincial government had an interest in these works. Take, for example, a railway which a provincial government had an interest in. Without consulting the provincial authorities, Parliament calmly declares it to be a railway for the general advantage of Canada. That is a debatable proceeding; it has been done in the past, and it may have to be done again, but it is fairly open to criticism. Here is a case, however, where the works are to be constructed with Dominion money by a Dominion authority, and there can be no reason why they should not be placed under Dominion control. It would be an anomaly that we should create a work and then allow the municipal or provincial authorities to come in and tell us that we have no control over that work at all. I think that this clause is necessary to give the commission power to carry out its work,

Mr. POWELL. It is understood to be entirely exceptional, and not to be regarded as a precedent.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I quite agree with that view.

On section 12,

Mr. CLANCY. Will the expenditures of this commission come under the inspection of the Auditor General?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not think technically they would; but I think the hon. gentleman may rely upon our taking care that the matters shall be thoroughly investigated.

Mr. WILSON. What objection would there be to having the accounts come under the supervision of the Auditor General?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. None in the least.

Mr. WILSON. Then, why not put that in the Bill—that the Auditor General shall pass on these accounts as on all others?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not offer any objection, but I cannot think of any form of words that would bring them under the supervision of the Auditor General.

Mr. POWELL. Two or three words at the close of the section would do it—all payments to be subject to audit by the Auditor General.

On section 16,

Mr. CLANCY. Do I understand that the old agreements are still in force, with the simple difference that on Wellington street the Government will maintain the street and all the walks on the north side.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The existing agreement has been understood to oblige the Government to keep the street in repair, including the sidewalks on both sides. We think that is a mistake. We think the property-owners on the south side of the street should have no exemption that is not given to citizens on any other street, but should be obliged to pay their share as property-owners; and provision is made to that effect.

Mr. CLANCY. There is no relief to the Government of Canada beyond what the hon. gentleman states?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is correct. All expenditures by the commission shall be subject to the audit of the Auditor General.

Mr. CLANCY. You should make it subject to the control. The Auditor General has control as regards the legality of all

Mr. FIELDING.

expenditures, and this would only give him the power of mere audit

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think the phrase suggested covers the ground. What is needed is to bring the expenditure under the Audit Act.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Then, make it read, "all payments shall be deemed payments under the Audit Act."

Mr. WALLACE. There ought to be more control by the Auditor General than he has under the Audit Act. For this expenditure of $60,000 there is no direct responsibility to this House, so that I think the Auditor General ought to be clothed with more powers as regards this expenditure, than as regards other expenditures for which the Ministers are responsible.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Government cannot be divested of their responsibility. The Auditor General will examine the accounts, and if he finds anything wrong he will point it out in his interesting little blue-book, and if he makes out a charge of mismanagement the Government will be bound to change the condition of things immediately. I would propose this amendment:

All expenditure by the commission shall be subject to the audit of the Auditor General in the same manner as in the case of other public moneys.

The committee rose, and Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

GENERAL INSPECTION ACT.

Bill (No. 156) further to amend the General Inspection Act (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière) read the second time, and the House resolved itself into committee on the Bill.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. This is to give the Governor in Council power to appoint more than one chief inspector, as two inspectors may be required.

Mr. WALLACE. Is the salary of the additional inspector provided for?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. When we come to the clause in connection with the salaries I shall explain that.

On section 2a,

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. This is to provide for a permanent standard fixed by statute.

Mr. WALLACE. It takes power away from the Governor in Council to make any changes. I approve of that.

On section 3,

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I propose to fill in the blank in this section with the words "five hundred dollars." I think that penalty would not be too much.

Mr. WALLACE. What was the penalty before ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. There was no penalty, but we have found it necessary to have a penalty in order to prevent fraud ; and I think that in fixing $500 as the maximum we are not going too far, while at the same time, we are showing our sense of the seriousness of such an offence as this.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 4,

Mr. CLANCY. With regard to the grading of winter wheat, this Bill provides that No. 1 Red Winter wheat shall weigh not less than 62 pounds to the bushel, and No. 1 White Winter not less than 60 pounds to the bushel ; but No. 1 Mixed Winter wheat must weigh 62 pounds to the bushel. I know that that is the same as the old Act, but the anomaly is evident. The mixture of the two, one at 62 pounds and one at 60 pounds should make a wheat weighing 61 pounds.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. My attention had not been drawn to that. It is logical that we should take an average and make it 61 pounds.

Mr. HAGGART. The Minister will see what that would lead to. Suppose the mixture was one-tenth of one kind and nine-tenths of the other, would that do ? It would be better to leave it as it is.

Mr. CLANCY. That shows the anomaly more clearly. Suppose the greater portion of the mixture were white wheat at 60 pounds to the bushel, yet the mixture must weigh 62 pounds.

Mr. MACLEAN. Fixing it at 62 pounds is probably a penalty for mixing.

Mr. HAGGART. The penalty is for the mixing.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Does the committee decide to make it 61 ?

Mr. DAVIN. It will be seen that the suggestion of the member for Bothwell is a sound one, if you look at analogy. No. 2 Winter wheat shall be winter wheat weighing 58 pounds, then No. 2 Winter wheat shall be Red Winter wheat weighing 60 pounds. When you mix these you will have the 59 ; so by analogy it ought to be 61. What does the member for Kent say ?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I say let it go as it is. You need not mix the grain, the two kinds don't grow together.

Mr. WALLACE. I would ask the Minister of Inland Revenue whether the various grain sections of the Boards of Trade in Toronto and Montreal have been consulted with regard to this classification ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes.

Mr. WALLACE. Is this the same classification with regard to hay as was made previously ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman will see that the classification there is determined by a mixture of clover. Now, farmers know that timothy is much more important than clover is ; but the classification is made to depend upon the fact of there being a portion of clover with it. Every farmer in the House knows that hay may be discoloured, may be rendered less valuable on that account than if there was no clover in it. I looked over that portion of the hon. gentleman's Bill when it came out, and I was puzzled to know why such a classification should be followed out in every respect as it is there. I do not understand why hay, being dark in colour from the mere fact of having received a shower of rain, or being left out over night, should make it second-class although there was no clover in it.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I took it for granted that this classification was right because it had been adopted for so many years, and I could not see anything objectionable in it. It is difficult for me to argue that point with my hon. friend now. Since he saw that sometime ago, I should have been very glad if he had called my attention to it. I do not see any objection to it.

Mr. DAVIN. Before this clause is adopted, I would like to say that it has been suggested to me by some of the leading farmers in the North-west that in line 33 the word "plump" might be omitted. They hold that any wheat fulfilling the conditions of soundness, being well cleansed and weighing not less than 60 pounds to the bushel, would fulfil all the conditions that would be necessary for No. 1, and they suggest the omission of the word "plump."

Mr. MACLEAN. We must keep up the quality.

Mr. DAVIN. Very well, I will not press it.

Mr. WALLACE. I would like to ask the hon. Minister a question. I notice, on page 2 of the Bill, the following :—

No wheat which has been subjected to scouring or brushing for the removal of awn or other fungoid growth, shall be included in the preceding six grades.

I would like to ask the hon. Minister whether he has included such wheat any place else ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. We have thought it indispensable that the six grades should represent the perfection of western wheat, while the other grades will be classified as commercial grades by the Standard Board. The intention of the Bill is to prevent that ever-recurring yearly variation in the six high grades. If my hon. friend will consent to wait until we get to the clause, he will see the provision that has been made in regard to commercial grades.

Mr. DAVIN. Before we go further, I have to move the addition of a clause of which I gave notice. It is as follows:—

That whenever there shall arise a difference of opinion between the farmers selling wheat and the wheat-buyer as to classification, the farmer, while taking the price offered for his wheat as of lower grade than that to which, in his opinion it belongs, may insist on the buyer with him fixing on a sample, which sample shall be parcelled and sealed and sent to the head inspector at Winnipeg, and if the inspector grades the sample higher than the buyer, then the buyer shall pay to the farmer the difference between what he had already paid and that which he should have paid under the higher grading of the inspection.

Also, in the clause describing No. 1 hard, to omit the word "plump."

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The only difficulty I find in accepting this amendment is, that this Bill is the result of an agreement that was reached after a great deal of consideration at a meeting at which the interests of the farmers, the dealers, the millers and the boards of trade were thoroughly represented. In view of the fact that this Bill is the result of a mutual agreement, I would be sorry to see any change made in it now.

Mr. DAVIN. There was nothing brought up at this meeting that would in any way clash with what is proposed. It is an extraordinary proposition for the hon. Minister to lay down, that we are not to add a clause to a Bill because, forsooth, some people, in no way in evidence here, made an agreement.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. My hon. friend knows that I did not mean to say that the committee has no power over the Bill. I am merely explaining that the Bill is one of such a nature that it is difficult for hon. members in general to understand the merits of it. This is the result of the work of men who understand every part of the question. We ought to think seriously before making any change.

Mr. DAVIN. This clause cannot possibly do any one any harm.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Will it not introduce the element of uncertainty?

Mr. DAVIN. No; it will be an advantage to the farmer. It proposes to protect the farmer from the over-cleverness of the buyer at various points. Suppose the farmer comes to the buyer and says: This is No. 1 Hard, and the buyer says: It is not No 1 Hard—

Mr. WALLACE.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. While this inspection is going on at Winnipeg, and before the board makes its report, the grain cannot be sold to a third party.

Mr. DAVIN. Of course, it can be. What would happen would be this. A farmer comes in and says: This is No 1; and the other man says: No, it is No. 2. It is probably near No. 1; it is very good wheat, but I cannot pay you for No. 1. The farmer does not want to go back 20 miles with that wheat, and he sometimes sacrifices his wheat. In this case he says: I will take your price for No. 2, although I know very well you are not giving me the full value. We will agree upon the sample, and send it right on.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). Suppose the dealer says: It must be determined definitely now, or I will not buy your wheat.

Mr. DAVIN. I want to deal first with the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, and then I will come to the hon. Minister of Customs. The money transaction is finished, and then the buyer can do what he pleases. He can hold the wheat, which my hon. friend knows he frequently does. He has control of an elevator, and he will hold it there, or he will send it on to Winnipeg. If the inspector at Winnipeg confirms the grading, the transaction remains; but if he decides that it shall be No. 1 Hard, then the difference between the price paid and the price of No. 1 Hard will have to be made good to the farmer by the buyer.

Mr. WALLACE. Suppose, he says, it is only No. 2, and he puts it into No. 2 bin with No. 2 wheat, what position will he stand in then?

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend evidently has not paid as much attention to grain buying as to most other matters.

Mr. WALLACE. That is my business.

Mr. DAVIN. Then, we must receive my hon. friend's criticisms with doubt. The object of bringing forward a motion like this is to meet the case, not where the buyer would throw the wheat in with No. 2, but where he mixes it with No. 1 Hard, which we know is done. I suppose we ought to say caveat emptor, and the seller has to take the same care; but what we want to guard against is the farmer's wheat being bought at a price lower than its real value in consequence of the peculiar conditions which belong to the buying of wheat. The legislature cannot be too sagacious in exhausting every means open to legislation, to fence the farmer against the possility of plunder. If the buyer took that wheat and put it in with No. 2, he might bet his life against a red cent that the inspector at Winnipeg would not grade it above No. 2.

Mr. WALLACE. He would lose, then ?

Mr. DAVIN. He would not lose. If the buyer treated that wheat as No. 2, and the inspector at Winnipeg graded it as No. 1, I grant that the buyer would lose ; but such a thing is beyond possibility.

Mr. WALLACE. If the buyer were an honest man, that is what he would do ; he would put the wheat in No. 2 bin, because in his judgment as an honest man that is the classification to which it belongs. If he knows his business, he knows it is No. 2.

Mr. DAVIN. If he knows his business, he will select a sample which is the proper sample of that wheat. He has the means in his elevator of testing what that wheat is graded at ; and he would be very chary of putting it into No. 2 bin. What is being constantly done is this. We have had gentlemen here from Winnipeg Toronto and Montreal, belonging to the leading boards of trade and leading wheat-handlers from Winnipeg ; and the buyers themselves have declared that wrong was being done frequently to the farmers in the very way this clause is intended to guard against. I think you will find that there is not a North-west man here who will not be ready to accept and endorse this clause. As to the fear of the Minister of Inland Revenue that, as a lot of persons interested in the grain trade were consulted with regard to this Bill, this will clash in any way with any interest they were connected with, there is not an atom of ground to stand on for any such contention.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Will my hon. friend say how the buyer is to deal with a load of wheat that is brought to him ? He buys it as No. 2, and he runs the risk of this wheat being subsequently declared to be No. 1. In the meantime, he must store it somewhere, either with other wheat of the same supposed grade, or with wheat of a different grade. He runs that risk, and it seems to me that to cover that risk he will adopt an insurance principle, and give a lower price because of the chance he takes of loss.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. The amendment proposed by the hon. member for West Assiniboa (Mr. Davin) would certainly do no great harm ; but it would be absolutely useless to put it in the Bill. As a matter of use and want in Manitoba and the North-west Territories, this arrangement is daily carried out as between the buyer and the seller on the wheat markets throughout the country. In cases where the buyer declines to enter into such an arrangement of his own free will, you cannot compel him to buy the wheat. So that the amendment does not help the farmer in any way whatever. As has been stated by the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue, this Bill gave us a great deal of work. All the different interests were represented—the farmers of Manitoba, the buyers of Manitoba, the millers of Ontario and the exporters of grain. It is a matter of arrangement and mutual trust, and I hope the hon. member will allow it to go through without amendment.

Mr. CLANCY. What the hon. gentleman has said just emphasizes the necessity for this provision. The hon. gentleman points out that you could not force any grain buyer to purchase the grain under such circumstances. I admit that to be the case, but that arises from the want of supervision ? The arbitrary power is put into the hands of the buyer to class the grain at any grade he pleases, and the farmer must accept that grade or go home without making a sale. But let us suppose that the grain buyer is the better judge, which is usually the case. If he has wittingly or unwittingly graded the wheat lower than it ought to be, it ought not to be an excuse on his part to say that the wheat has gone into a third party's hands or into the wrong bin, and the farmer must suffer.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. The hon. gentleman is overlooking the fact that you cannot compel the grain merchant to buy the grain.

Mr. CLANCY. I quite conceive that you cannot, but you should surround the transaction with every regulation that will prevent, as far as possible, false grading. Just fancy the position of a farmer coming to an elevator and being told : You must take this classification or go back with your grain. That is an arbitrary power that should not be exercised, and I think that the hon. gentleman's provision goes just this far. The farmer says : I think that wheat grades higher ; the buyer will say no, and may be perfectly right. But if he had any confidence in his judgment, he will consent to its being confirmed by a grain inspector ; and if the decision of the grain inspector goes against him he ought to be made to pay the difference. I do not imagine that you can force the grain buyer to purchase but you can put him under greater restraint with regard to the proper classification than he is under now. At least give the farmer a chance, and if the other man makes a mistake, let him stand the consequences.

Mr. OLIVER. While it may be difficult to insert such a proposition as that of the hon. member for West Assinibola in the Bill at present, and while it is possible that the amendment is not in such form as to enable it to be properly enforced, at the same time I wish to emphasize the necessity that exists for some remedy. At present the great difficulty between the buyer and the seller of grain in the North-west is this question of grade. There is no question as to price. The price is quoted from day to day in the markets of the world, these prices are just as accessible to the farmer as to the grain buyer, and the farmer knows what his grain is worth according to the market price. But where the difficulty comes in is in the grading, and the farmer says that in this matter he is not dealt with fairly by the buyer. It may be that you cannot get over that difficulty, but I wish to point out that it is a difficulty, and a very serious one, and it is due almost entirely to the fact that the grain trade of the North-west is at present a monopoly. If there were free competition in the buying of grain, this matter of grading might be left to regulate itself. But at present there is not, and I am free to say that the action of this House has not been such as to induce free competition. If we legislate to prevent a free and open market in the North-west, or refuse to adopt such legislation as would secure a free and open market, then the farmers of the North-west are entitled to ask for such legislative protection against unfair grading as it may be possible for us to give them.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. What does the hon. gentleman mean by a monopoly? Does he mean that there is only one buyer?

Mr. OLIVER. The grain buying in the North-west is done by a combine of combines. The prices are regulated by this combine, and there is no free competition in the buying of grain by reason of the action taken by the Canadian Pacific Railway, supported practically by this House. That action has not been broken down by legislation, as it should have been.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. If it be a fact that there is only one buyer, and if a farmer is not satisfied with the grading, and insists on a sample being sent to Winnipeg to be graded, which would interpose an element of uncertainty into the transaction, and if the buyer says to him: If you insist on that condition, take your grain somewhere else, what is the remedy of the farmer?

Mr. OLIVER. Does the hon. gentleman admit the fact, as was shown before the sub-committee appointed to deal with this question, that not only is there a combine of grain buyers, but that it is supported by a combine of bankers, who came down here to support it.

Mr. WALLACE. What about the House of Commons?

Mr. OLIVER. I will attend to the House of Commons. There is a combine of buyers, and I do not think any member from the North-west will deny it. The hon. Minister of Customs asked what then is the remedy. In case this combine refuses to buy the grain, under the condition suggested. Well,

Mr. OLIVER.

If the grain buyer is fair and honest, and if it is simply a difference of opinion between him and the farmer, our proposition would regulate the matter.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. But if he is honest in it, and buys it for No. 2, and puts it in No. 2 bin, if it turns out to be No. 1, he would be the loser.

Mr. OLIVER. Putting the No. 1 in the No. 2 bin could not possibly lower the value of the wheat, but it might have the effect of raising the No. 2 bin to No. 1 price. It is not the grade that gives value; it is the quality. It is the grade upon which the farmer is paid for the grain, but the buyer gets the value according to the quality. As I say, if he puts No. 1 wheat in the No. 2 bin, he may get the price of No. 1 for it. This was, in fact, the foundation reason of this Bill—to prevent that very mixing of grain, by means of which they pay a No. 2 price for No. 1 grain.

Mr. CAMPBELL. So far as this proposed amendment affects the grain grown in Ontario, I see no reason for it. I do not think that there is any demand for it. The buying and selling have proceeded satisfactorily for years. If there is a grievance in the North-west, I probably do not know so much about the matter as hon. members from that section, and so would not say much about it. But I am in a position to dispute what the hon. member from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) says on one point. Every one knows the great milling firms of the North-west, the Ogilvies and the Lake of the Woods Milling Company, and I do not think that any one who knows anything of the facts, believes that there is any collusion between these two firms. They are in bitter opposition, and have their buyers all over the North-west. We know that the prices paid for wheat in Manitoba compare very favourably with the prices paid for grain in other parts of the world. I do not believe there is any need for this amendment, however, and I can see how it would lead to confusion. Suppose there are fifty or sixty farmers coming in with loads of grain. There are different buyers, as they are at all stations. If a man comes to me and says: "My grain is No. 1," and I do not think so, he is free to go to other buyers. If he does not accept my offer, he would be obliged to take it home or sell it elsewhere. If I bought it on the terms proposed by the hon. member for West Assinibota, I have to keep that grain separate, and then, perhaps a week afterwards, the inspectors report that it is worth 2 or 3 cents a bushel more. I must hold that grain, or sell it at a loss, or take chances. The amendment would lead to endless confusion, and I do not think it ought to be adopted.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Having given some considerable attention to the grain trade of the North-west, I would like to express an opinion on this amendment. Personally, I see no real objection to the amendment. It is practically harmless, because the Bill makes ample provision to protect the farmer in reference to this whole question of the grading of grain. If a farmer is not satisfied with the grade he is offered by the buyer, he need not accept it. I admit there is a difficulty at that point. What is the farmer to do with his grain? That is the point, and that is why I, for one, insisted upon legislation with regard to flat warehouses. The Bill provides that in case of dispute—and, in fact, the public have acted upon it for years—the grain can be sold subject to inspection at Winnipeg, and, if there is a dispute even with the Winnipeg inspection, the Bill provides that the board of arbitration shall decide the question, which I think ample to protect the public interests. I have no objection to the amendment, because I think it harmless; but I do not see that it is necessary. If we had the privilege, when the farmer is not satisfied, of having provision made by the railway company, or any other company, to put his grain into storage until he has the question of grade decided at Winnipeg, there would be no difficulty or confusion of interests. I think it is not necessary to add the amendment, because I believe that when the hon. member for West Assinibola has gone fully into the Bill, he will find that there is provision made in case of dispute as to the grade.

Mr. HAGGART. But that will apply only to car-loads, will it not?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Not necessarily. It will apply to any question that is submitted to the board of arbitration, whether a car-load or a wagon-load. There is, as I understand it, no restriction of the powers of the board.

Mr. HAGGART. But how would you send a wagon-load forward to Winnipeg?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Send a sample, and keep the grain at home in a storehouse—that is, where a storehouse is provided.

Mr. HAGGART. But you have not got that.

Mr. DOUGLAS. While I am on my feet, I would like to say, in reference to the Bill generally, that it is a Bill of mutual agreements that was reached by parties interested, and if ever there was a Bill before this House that was fully and thoroughly discussed, and every inch of the ground covered by it debated, it is this Bill relating to the inspection of grain. I can assure the House that the miller's interest, the farmer's interest and the exporter's interest were fully considered, and we came to the conclusion that we would give and take, and, if possible, arrive at a common ground for common interests; and that is about the position of the Bill, as presented by the hon. member.

Amendment negatived: Yeas, 13; Nays, 29.

Mr. DAVIN. Now, I see that I am face to face with the same forces that betrayed the farmers in the North-west Territories on the Elevator Bill, and I see the same bowing down to those forces on the part of the members from the North-west who, I should have hoped, would support the farmer's claims. I want to give the committee some idea of the way—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DAVIN. Who is it that calls order? Is it that tadpole Minister of the Interior?

The CHAIRMAN. Order. We are on the schedule of the Bill. The hon. member will please confine himself to the question.

Mr. DAVIN. I am speaking on the schedule. Now, what will happen? We will have the reptile press of the Minister of the Interior sending to the North-west false accounts of what takes place here to-day; and those Ministers who have shown their hostility to the farming interest in the North-west Territories, and those members who have shown their hostility will be held up in every part of Manitoba and the North-west as patriots, and a false view will be given. I will give a sample of it. They sometimes make a mistake, and it goes to an honest paper. The McGregor "Herald" up to a certain time was favourable to the Administration, but it could not stand the Minister of the Interior, it could not stand the extraordinary spectacle of backboneless statesmanship that is manifested by the member for Eastern Assinibola (Mr. Douglas). Here is what the McGregor "Herald" said in regard to one of these letters:

Our Ottawa letter is generally welcome to us as an exposition of political matters from the stand-point of supporters of the Laurier Government at Ottawa. But the editor of the "Herald" always acknowledged his full responsibility for the subject matter that was published. Hence we used the blue pencil liberally and often intentionally omitted to publish it. One paragraph we refused to insert dealt with Mr. Sifton's conduct on the elevator Bill introduced by Mr. Douglas.

The conduct was that when the crucial clause was to be voted on, neither the Minister of the Interior was present nor the member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis), and other members were absent from the committee. It was easy to see by the list of the committee which had been handed by the Minister of the Interior to the member for Eastern Assinibola, to move that it was to have been a hanging committee. It was a committee to kill the Bill. I will tell my hon. friend what one of his colleagues who was on that committee told me of his own appearance when he saw himself abandoned by the Minister of the Interior and by the member for Saskatchewan, and others. He said that he looked like a frog in hell with his back broken. That is language worthy of Milton or Dante. The "Herald" goes on :

It will be remembered that the Bill was referred to a special committee, of which Mr. Sifton was a member. At its first session the committee killed the Bill. The absence of Mr. Sifton from that meeting was severely commented on by Mr. Douglas and other western members.

But not in this House. When the Minister of the Interior was giving his crawfish explanations of the extraordinary action of himself as Minister in this Government for the Territories, there sat the member for Eastern Assiniboia as silent as if he was one of the dumb dogs of Jupiter that could not bark :

Mr. Sifton, however, took the first opportunity afterwards to state his position on the question. He said that while favourably inclined towards some portions of the Bill, he was opposed to the clause establishing the right of owners of flat warehouses to equal shipping privileges with elevator owners. In taking this stand, Mr. Sifton does not rightly represent the electors of Brandon constituency, a fact of which he is no doubt well aware by this time. The author of the Ottawa letter comes to the rescue and vainly attempts to convince the farmers of Manitoba that they do not know their own business. He does extremely well when he writes on matters and things within his own ken, but he is a disastrous failure when he undertakes to tell Manitoba farmers how to manage their own business.

That is what the "McGregor Herald" says in regard to that matter, and it sets in vivid light the position of the farmers of Manitoba and the North-west, and the position in this House of their members. The member for Eastern Assiniboia, who I now see before me, through weakness or something worse—but weakness in certain cases is about as bad as anything can be—has thus erred. When, however, he was wooing the voter of his constituency for votes, he told them how he would kick, he was to be a great kicker. Why, Sir, the kicking of the hon. gentleman is about as much as we might expect from a paralyzed rat.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Campbell). The schedule of the Bill is before the committee, and the hon. gentleman is not addressing to me a single argument thereon.

Mr. DAVIN. I think the Chairman is under a mistake. If he will look at the 14th clause on the 7th page of the schedule, he will see that it does not go far enough ; and my amendment that has been kicked out of this House by North-west boots, was intended to bring a remedy. My hon. friend the Chairman will see that it is distinctly ad rem that I should dwell upon this matter in urging the interest of the farmers whose conditions have been so well pointed out by my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver). My hon. friend declared there was the same dangers to be guarded against that I did. The member for East Assiniboia says he sees no other objection to the amendment than this, that some persons, not members of this House, were consulted in regard to the Bill. He knows very well that in an important matter he was taken in hand by people outside of this House in another case, and moulded as if he was clay in their hands. And here he says every farmer in his constituency is in favour of it, and instead of speaking the opinion of his constituency, he says : Well, the wheat men of Montreal and the wheat men of Toronto and of Winnipeg, those great friends of the farmers are in favour of it. If the calculation were made at the present time of what the farmers have lost in consequence of not having their wheat bought fairly in the Territories, it will be found to be two or three million dollars. The hon. gentleman himself knows it, and the hon. gentleman has stated it on platform after platform. Yet, Sir, when a clause like this is proposed, which the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) says is necessary—

Mr. DAVIN.

Mr. TALBOT. He did not say that. He said it was harmless, like a bread pill.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Talbot), who does Bellechasse the honour of representing it, says that this is as harmless as a bread pill.

Mr. TALBOT. That is what the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) says.

Mr. DAVIN. What harm can a bread pill do ? If it suits the farmers of the North-west Territories, a bread pill cannot do any injury to those men whom the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) and the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford) are afraid of. The hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford) says it is not necessary, and the hon. member for Alberta says it would do no harm. If it will gratify the people of the North-west Territories, what harm does it do ?

Mr. RUTHERFORD. The people of the North-west Territories are neither children nor fools, and I am sorry that an hon. gentleman in this House has been guilty of such an indecent exposure of his mental feebleness as to advance the argument he is advancing in favour of a buncombe resolution such as he has introduced.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. member for Macdonald, seated side by side with the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, playing at Minister of the Interior, rises in his place to give the world the assurance of a man, to show what a broad-browed, magnificent entity the entomological personality that represents Macdonald is. I may be a very weak-minded person—

Mr. DOMVILLE. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIN. I see that the hon. and gallant colonel (Mr. Domville) agrees with that.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I do.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman, that embodiment of chivalry, agrees with that. However, at present, I have to deal with the hon. member for Macdonald.

Mr. DOMVILLE. You had better get a straight-jacket.

Mr. DAVIN. I do not want to play twin to the hon. gentleman. I know very well that he requires other straighteners than straight-jackets, and I think he has straightened himself pretty well to-day. But I am dealing with the hon. member for Macdonald. I say that this clause would help the farmers of the North-west and it is scandalous to think that a man like the hon. member for Macdonald, who will do any mortal thing that the hon. Minister of the Interior tells him to do, who is the Dog Tray of the Minister of the Interior, the fetch and carry of the Minister of the Interior—

Mr. RUTHERFORD. I think the hon. gentleman is using language that is unparliamentary and that is unjustifiable even from him.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Campbell). It is a little bit too strong.

Mr. DAVIN. If it is unparliamentary I will withdraw it, but I can tell my hon. friend that in the English Parliament it would not be considered unparliamentary. It is not flattering to the Dog Tray, I know that. Mr. Chairman, you had better call six o'clock, as I have some more things to say.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Chairman, I have in my hand a letter that was sent to me by Mr. J. W. Connell, member of the local assembly for one of the districts of Eastern Assiniboia. It is a very long letter, and I will not read it in full. I will just give some idea of what it is. Having sketched a vast combine that was formed in the North-west Territories and Manitoba he says :

In 1897 three large companies came into existence, being composed of a number of small companies. They, together with the Northern Elevator Company, which had been in existence for some years, made the four large companies. These controlled nearly the whole elevator plant of Manitoba and Territories. These companies, having very little hope of squeezing each other out of the trade without heavy loss even to the surviving companies, in 1897 formed what is known as "The Wheat Combine," arranged as follows :—All wheat purchased must be bought at the same price, the price to be paid each day being agreed upon at the Winnipeg Exchange in the morning. One wire to each market was all that was necessary. The buyer to whom the wire was sent gave the price to each of the other buyers. Each then paid the same prices until fresh instructions were received, but in no case must any buyer break the market. If he did, some of the other buyers promptly wired Winnipeg and the offending buyer was called down. Will any one venture to argue that a market regulated in this way is a market on which there is plenty of competition ?

Another feature in the organization of the combine was : that all wheat purchased at this uniform price was to be sold through the New York agency, and the selling price was to be the same. Each individual company, then, purchased at a uniform price agreed upon by the four companies and sold at a uniform price based on foreign quotations. Still another part of the agreement provided that no man who did not own an elevator would be allowed to buy wheat. That is denied by the grain men, but falsely. I had an agreement with the Manitoba Grain Company before the combine was formed, for space in an elevator ; but as soon as the combine was formed I was told that I could not have space. I applied for space in another combine elevator, but it was refused. I then bought wheat by the load and had the wheat graded and stored in the combine elevator. When the monopolists heard what I was doing, they issued an order to their elevator man not to store wheat for any person but the farmers, who must store in their own name. This, of course, prevented me buying along these lines. I then bought the farmers' tickets.

He goes on to say that they were able, by means of the tremendous power they had with the banks, so to squeeze him that he lost tremendously. Nevertheless, as my hon. friend from East Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) knows, this gentleman gave in that year 4 or 5 cents a bushel more for the grain than the elevator men were offering. He further says :

Now, I assert, without fear of contradiction, that the wheat has been purchased since the grain combine was organized, two years ago, at 5 cents per bushel less than it would have been bought for under competition, and 5 cents per bushel less than a fair commercial value, as 1½ cents a bushel for buying and 1½ cents for elevator dues is considered a fair profit. Take Fort William price, then the price paid at any local market. The difference is made up by freight and buying profit, and you will find the average has been for buying from 7 to 10 cents per bushel instead of 3 cents, and you must admit that 5 cents per bushel has been forced out of the farmers.

The wheat exported from Manitoba and the Territories for the last two years will reach at least 50,000,000 bushels. The loss to the farmers has been $2,500,000, or more money than the cost of the entire elevator plant.

They know that to permit any one to buy and ship wheat will not affect the elevator system. But it will place the farmers in this position : They can say to the elevator owners, "Give me a fair commercial price for my wheat, and fair weight, and I will sell to you ; but if you don't, why I can use the flat warehouse. I am willing to give you my wheat for 1½ cents less than the flat warehouse but no more, and as the flat warehouse men must have 1½ or 2 cents per bushel for his work, this will give the elevator men 3 to 3½ cents for handling the wheat." This is just what the combine doesn't want. They want to dictate to the trade. They want 7 or 8 cents for handling the wheat.

Then he describes the bankers' association as being opposed to legislation that will relieve the farmer, and as working in with the elevator men. Now, this gentleman is a North-west public man and a grain-buyer; but he is a public-spirited man, and he knows very well that the way to make the North-west prosperous, and the way to make this whole country prosperous, as sometimes we hear from more than one voice in this House, is to develop the North-west on honest and productive lines; and the productive lines on which to develop and expand the North-west is to secure that the farmer shall have the value of all he produces from the soil. If you secure that, it is possible that the grain-buyers of Winnipeg and other parts of the country may not become as rapidly wealthy, but they will undoubtedly succeed. The farmers, who are not only the bone and sinew, but the flesh and blood of the North-west Territories, will get their sweat, the value of what they produce out of the ground; but at present very frequently, as this gentleman points out, it is the man who is not connected with the farmer who takes his sweat. Now, I greatly regret what we have seen in regard to a motion that would have given relief to the farmer, and which I had hoped the hon. gentleman would have accepted. Now, Mr. Chairman, if you will read the next section.

On the schedule,

Mr. DAVIN. There is an amendment of which I gave notice, but of the fate of which I am very doubtful in view of the fate of my previous amendment. I refer to the amendment of which I gave notice on the 20th June, page 479 of the Votes and Proceedings, and I would like to know whether my hon. friend who has charge of the Bill has been able to see his way to adopt this. I had a conversation with him, and I do not conceal from myself the fact that there would be some difficulty in carrying this out, but the more this amendment has been considered by the farmers of the North-west the more wise it appears to them, and I should like to know from my hon. friend whether he thinks he will be able to adopt it. The amendment provides that:

At each point in Manitoba and the North-west, where there is an elevator, the Department of Inland Revenue shall see that farmers having grain to dispose of may be made acquainted with the price of grain at Winnipeg.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. When my hon. friend spoke to me about this amendment we discussed it, and he appeared to agree with me that it would be exceedingly difficult to carry out his proposal. Since then I have further considered it and have consulted the officers of my department, and have come to the conclusion that it would be practically impossible to give every day the continual variations in the price of wheat, which is continually going up and down in the market, at all the stations along the Canadian Pacific Railway. These quotations are changing all the time, and I do not see very well how it would be possible to put in practice what my hon. friend proposes. If it is found so difficult to do this, even in a large centre, how can my hon. friend expect that we will be able to do it in the scattered villages and stations along the Canadian Pacific Railway?

Mr. DAVIN. Of course, after that statement of my hon. friend, and looking at the vote against my former amendment, which could have been so easily put in practice, there is no use in my pressing this one.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I do not wish my hon. friend to understand that we have any intention of resorting to the strength of our majority, but I appeal to him whether he did not admit the difficulty himself?

Mr. DAVIN. I know there would be great difficulty.

Mr. DAVIS. I may say, in the first place, that this Bill was before the people for a long time, previous to its being discussed by a committee consisting of representatives from the North-west and of representatives of the grain men from Toronto and Montreal and other centres. Every one interested was notified to be present, and was present, with the exception of the hon. member for West Assiniboia. This Bill was discussed the whole afternoon and through the night until two o'clock in the morning, and thoroughly threshed out in all its phases, and the result arrived at was a matter of compromise. We had to give and take, and an agreement was come to as embodied in this Bill. At that meeting the hon. member never put in an appearance. Had he been present he might then have brought up the suggestions which he has advocated to-day, and if they had any merit they would have been incorporated in the Bill; but after the matter was thoroughly discussed, it is out of place for him to come forward and bring up these clap-trap resolutions. In this, he is simply acting the part of a demagogue.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Campbell). I think the word "demagogue" is out of order.

Mr. DAVIS. If it is, I withdraw it, but I would draw attention to the fact that the hon. member for Assiniboia has used some very strong language about hon. members this afternoon. For instance, he called my hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford) "old dog Tray," and the hon. member for East Assiniboia a broken-backed frog from hell.

Mr. DAVIN. I quoted simply what a Liberal member had said.

Mr. DAVIS. The hon. member reminds me of a waste pipe, which I saw sticking out of a mill the other day, and out of which steam was continually issuing. I asked the proprietor what it was, and he said it was the waste pipe. Well, it seems to me that the hon. gentleman is the waste pipe or the sewer pipe if you like, of that side of the House, from which steam is always escaping. If the hon. gentleman has such a keen interest in the farmers of the North-west, as he pretends to have, he should have been at that meeting.

Mr. DAVIN. May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? What committee does he refer to?

Mr. DAVIS. I refer to the meeting of the grain men and the representative farmers of the North-west at which the hon. member was not present.

Mr. DAVIN. Where was this meeting held?

Mr. DAVIS. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say he knows nothing about it? It was held in the committee room and sat all afternoon and night. He must have known about it. He knew enough about it to get the report of the discussion, which was taken down in shorthand, and to digest that report and pick out of it the little resolutions he has proposed to-night. My hon. friend from East Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) was there taking a prominent part, as he always does, in an intelligent manner, in everything that interests the farmers of the west, and he was perfectly satisfied with the Bill as well as every other representative present. And after we came to an agreement, I do not see how he could adopt such clap-trap resolutions as the hon. gentleman has proposed, without breaking faith with every one who was at that meeting. I think that the member for West Assiniboia, in addressing hon. gentlemen on this side, might use a little choicer language for he certainly does not gain strength in his own constituency or anywhere else by applying the epithets he has applied to such men as the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) who is highly respected wherever he is known. Nor do I think he will gain by applying such names as he did to the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford). I do not think it is decent language to use to hon. members on this side of the House.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman complains that I was not at a meeting in regard to which he says I have consulted the notes. My hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue gave me notes of the meetings that were held. But to these meetings I was never invited, and I did not at the time know anything about them. The only meeting that I attended in connection with a question of this sort, I heard of by accident. I think I got an informal invitation from the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. My hon. friend (Mr. Davin) must remember that I sent him an invitation.

Mr. DAVIN. I got no invitation whatever to the meeting that was reported, and the report of which I have.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The hon. gentleman was invited to the first meeting.

Mr. DAVIN. I attended one meeting, and formally thanked the hon. Minister for having invited me, and I said that I had heard of other meetings, after they had been held, but had not been invited. But suppose I had heard of these meetings, what has that to do with the question we are discussing? We cannot deprive Parliament of its duty or responsibility by having a meeting in a committee room. I do not know but that the meetings to which the hon. gentleman refers may have been held while I was laid by for some six weeks. In any case, I was invited to no meetings but the one I attended. I think the hon. member (Mr. Davis) said that I had shown that I had mastered all that took place at those meetings. Wherein, then, on the hon. gentleman's own testimony, am I unfitted to deliberate on this question or to discuss it in this House? Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman has appeared to-night in the character of 'arbiter elegantiarum.' He lectures me on parliamentary demeanour and epithets. I applied no epithet to the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas). I referred to the fact that the hon. member for East Assiniboia declared that when he came down here he would kick; and I think he said he would kick the shins of the Ministers. I said his kicking showed no more energy than that of a paralyzed rat. There is nothing unparliamentary in that.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There is nothing very pretty in it.

Mr. DAVIN. Of course, the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) need not expect, nor need the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis), that I can rise to the elegancies which mark their style. But I say here, with all the poor capacity that I may have, that that is no epithet, but a simile to the hon. member for East Assiniboia.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is a mighty poor grade of language to use in this House.

Mr. DAVIN :

'Tis sweet to hear the watch-dog's honest bark

Bay deep-mouthed welcome as we draw near home.

I like to hear that voice occasionally. Here is another gentleman come to lecture me on parliamentary demeanour and the use of language. I had a lecture from the hon. gentleman from Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford); and I think he used pretty offensive language. I think it shows a great deal of presumption on his part to use such language, because he belongs to the same class as those who are being exposed in the committee room upstairs.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. May I ask what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) means?

Mr. DAVIN. Oh, yes; oh dear, yes. What I mean is, that he belongs to the same electioneering thimble-riggers as Farr and the rest.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. I rise to a point of order. I protest against the conduct of the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) this afternoon and at the present time. The hon. member—

Mr. SPROULE. State your point of order.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. My point of order is, that he alluded to me as belonging to a class of political thimble-riggers.

Mr. DAVIN. Well, state your point of order.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. I want that hon. gentleman to withdraw that expression. I insist upon his withdrawing, and I insist upon his withdrawing the inference conveyed by it.

Mr. DAVIN. What I will do—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair.

Mr. DAVIN. I suppose we had better go on with the—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) has a perfect right to speak to the point of order.

Mr. DOMVILLE. No.

Mr. SPROULE. Certainly; he has a right to discuss the point of order before the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. DAVIN. If the expression is unparliamentary, I will withdraw it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair.

Mr. FOSTER. What more do you want?

Mr. DAVIN. Do you want me to withdraw it, if it is not parliamentary?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Go on.

Mr. DAVIN. I intend to go on. I was addressing myself for the moment, as I had a right to do, for the lecture I received as to my demeanour. Now, the hon. member has declared that I had called the hon. member for East Assiniboia a broken-backed frog. I did nothing of the kind. The hon. gentleman cannot be historical. On previous occasions in this House he has tried to convey to the House what I stated on public platforms, and has wholly failed to give a correct representation of what I said. There are some men so constituted that they cannot report correctly, and I dare say that the hon. gentleman from Saskatchewan thought I did call the hon. member for East Assiniboia a broken-backed frog. What I did say was this. I wanted to describe the state of abandonment in which a certain cause in which the North-west is deeply interested, was, and I repeated a description of what took place, as given me by a Liberal member who was present, and who, if he did not call that hon. gentleman (Mr. Douglas) that, said that he was like that. So far as I have been able to read or attend to what has taken place in parliaments, here or elsewhere, I do not consider that that interferes with what is parliamentary, or that is hostile even to the elegancies of debate.

Mr. DAVIN.

Mr. McMULLEN. Oh, oh.

Mr. DAVIN. We hear once more the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen). That hon. member need not suppose that his judgment is the judgment in which I intend to glass my parliamentary deamantour.

Mr. McMULLEN. If it was no higher than the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin), I would be ashamed of it.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman is quite welcome to that sort of thing. Now, with regard to the criticisms of the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis); what is his elegancy? He said I was a demagogue. I would not complain of that myself; but the Chairman very kindly interfered, and said he did not think it parliamentary. Then, the hon. gentleman described my conduct in regard to this Bill, and I am in the judgment of the House, if I have not shown at least as much knowledge of this subject as hon. gentlemen who have been opposing me. I have given as much attention to this matter, in my humble way, as even such great minds as the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford), who looks down, from his great moral and intellectual altitude, upon such a humble pigmy as I am.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman adopts it?

Mr. RUTHERFORD. The hon. gentleman is correct.

Mr. DAVIN. I look up and see its god-head in all its glory there. If his position is as high as his own estimate of himself, it is a pretty elevated one, and we would require a telescope to see where it is. He also lectures me. I have, to the best of my knowledge and zeal, given all the attention I could to this question; I have not confined myself to merely attending the chambers and ante-chambers of Ministers. I have seen the people of the North-west Territories; I have conversed with the people who are familiar with this question, because I can only learn it second-hand. I am neither a farmer nor a grain buyer, but I have tried to master it. We have an expression here to-night that shows to some extent, at all events, that I have voiced the opinion of the North-west Territories, because, in almost the same language, certainly in the same drift of thought as I have resorted to myself, we have an hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) whose business it is to be a public critic, whose business, not merely as a member of this House, but as the editor of a paper, is to be informed, gets up and endorses the general stand I have taken. The hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis), who is such a marvellous expression of all that is elegant and delicate, of fine and gentlemanly demeanour, and whose whole career illustrates honour in such a noble manner, comes forward to lecture me and says that my dealing with this question, in which I am advocating, to the best of my ability, the interests of the North-west farmer, is clap-trap. It certainly has not received any cheers from the Liberal side of the House here to-night. I think he will find that it is something more than clap-trap, that I have not aimed at cheap cheers. I am only aiming to do all I can for the farmer. I have protested before, and I protest, here now, that we have men sitting on that side of the House, and sitting in high places, who profess to be the friends of the farmers, but who, as in the case of the Elevator Bill, and who, as in other matters, the very moment it comes down to the fine thing, when we want their aid to assist the farmer, cannot be found. Where was the hon. member for Macdonald, who comes forward occasionally with some resolution or other, the other night when the amendment of the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) came up? He was afraid to rise up, but at last he rose up and voted with the minority of thirteen. Thirteen! There were thirteen the other night for the amendment of the hon. member for Lisgar, and it will be remembered that it was thirteen—the famous thirteen—that recorded its vote against the late Government, and, absent omen, it seems a dangerous number. I do not want to frighten the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, or his colleagues, by suggesting a danger of that sort. Once again I have to express my thanks to such a master of the elegancies as the hon. member for Saskatchewan, and such a fine gentleman as the hon. member for Macdonald, for giving me a lecture upon manners and parliamentary demeanour.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a few words in reply to the hon. member for West Assinibola (Mr. Davin), who poses in this House as the farmers' friend. He has tried to pose as the farmers' friend for a great many years. No person can know the record of the hon. gentleman without knowing that, on a certain occasion, he moved a resolution about free binder twine for the farmers, boomed it in his paper in the Territories, made speech after speech, and when it came to the vote, took to the woods. That is only one case showing how he has been posing as the farmers' friend for a number of years. In connection with this same grain matter, the Grain Exchange of Winnipeg sent a circular to all the North-west members. The hon. gentleman says that he is not looking for cheap notoriety, but we find that he takes this circular, puts it in the Votes and Proceedings of this House, and simply writes his name at the top of it, as if it were his own production. I have the motion in my desk. When the hon. gentleman says that he is not looking for cheap notoriety, I think that such an action as this shows the reverse.

Mr. WALLACE. What is wrong in that?

Mr. DAVIS. The hon. gentleman says that he is not looking for cheap notoriety. It appears as if he were looking for cheap notoriety when he is making use of other people's ideas and representing them as his own by placing them on the Order paper. The hon. gentleman has made some insinuations in regard to my career. All I would say to that hon. gentleman is that my career would compare very favourably with his own. I would hate to have such a reputation as the hon. member has. The less he says about that the better, because I do not care to go into these things, but if it is necessary to rake up the hon. gentleman's career, I am sure he will not like it. As far as he says anything about my career, I am willing that it shall be compared with that of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. SPROULE. I see nothing in this Bill that appears to apply to grain in the province of Ontario. It covers the district of Manitoba and extends to Port Arthur, but we have grades that apply to Ontario as well. One of the difficulties we have in Ontario, when grain is bought at Toronto or Owen Sound or North Bay, is that it is sometimes not found up to the grade when it comes from Port Arthur. What redress would the purchaser of Ontario grain have under the provisions of this Bill?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The first idea of this Bill was to provide for the protection of western grain. It does not change anything with regard to the inspection of eastern grain.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought it was desirable to provide for calling these inspectors into use for the inspection of eastern as well as western grain.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. We have not repealed the old Act. We have only amended part of it.

Mr. WALLACE. The Bill refers to Manitoba grain entirely. There is no provision at all with reference to Ontario grain.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The Bill was first framed rather from the western point of view. It was afterwards found that the legitimate complaints of the eastern purchaser had not been sufficiently acknowledged. So the right was given to the eastern purchaser, in case he was not satisfied with the western inspection, to protect himself against a wrong inspection in the west. But I do not think the Bill alters in any way the system of inspection for eastern grain.

Mr. DAVIN. I have been attacked because, on the 21st of March, I put the following notice on the Paper, and there is nothing that I have done since I have been in Parliament that I consider so truly the act of a conscientious and active member of Parliament:

Mr. Davin—On Thursday next—The following proposed resolution:—

That it appears from year to year the unsatisfactory state of grain standards has been formally brought before this House and before the Minister of Inland Revenue, and that the following resolutions have been passed unanimously by the Winnipeg Grain and Produce Exchange:—

You see, I give credit at once to the body from which I got the idea.

"(1) Resolved, that this exchange request the chairman of the Western Grain Standard Board to ask permission of the Minister of Inland Revenue to call together the western members of this board to discuss the advisability of having inspectors grade on the word and meaning of the Inspector's Act, and that the Standard Board from year to year define such commercial grades as may be found necessary.

"(2) Whereas, the evils resulting from the mixing of Manitoba grain at Fort William and other terminal elevators are most injuriously affecting the reputation of Manitoba grain in the European markets; and whereas the Winnipeg Grain and Produce Exchange is most desirous of restoring the reputation of Manitoba grain to its former high standing, that this exchange hereby expresses its positive conviction that no mixing of grain should be permitted in terminal elevators, and also that no mixing of grain should be permitted in a cargo shipment unless the inspection certificate issued therefor shall have written across the face a statement defining the various grades entering into its composition.

"(3) And further be it resolved, that this exchange memorialize the Department of Inland Revenue to secure the enactment of such legislation as may be necessary for the carrying into effect and enforcement of the principle above enunciated."

In view of the foregoing resolutions, it is the opinion of this House that immediate action is demanded on the part of the Government to secure for the wheat of the West that premier position in the estimation of the world to which by its unrivalled excellence it is entitled.

What is to prevent the inference that it was that notice placed on the Paper by me that led to the activity of the Minister? What certainty is there that if some member of Parliament had not put that notice on the

Mr. WALLACE.

Paper, action would have been taken resulting in the conference and this Bill, which is but an elaboration of that notice?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Why do you try to obstruct it, then?

Mr. DAVIN. I am not trying to obstruct this Bill. I am trying to amend it. I say the Bill is an elaboration of that notice.

Mr. WALLACE. I think, in view of the statement now read by the hon. member for West Assinibola, that the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) will withdraw the statement he has made. I listened to that hon. gentleman, and I came to the conclusion that the hon. member for West Assinibola had been plagiarizing; but when we hear the notice read, we find that he gives the Winnipeg Board of Trade full credit for the resolution passed by that body. In view of this fact, what are the Government going to do? I have no doubt the hon. member for Saskatchewan will gladly retract his statement.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. At the next sitting of the House.

Mr. WALLACE. Well, so long as he does it, we will not quibble about the time or manner of doing it.

Mr. DAVIN. Now, I have in my hand a statutory declaration:

I, Charles B. Halpin, of the town of Portage la Prairie, in the province of Manitoba, publisher, do solemnly declare:

1. That on the 15th day of April, 1897, and for some time afterwards, I was a partner with John G. Rutherford, we being at that time the owners of the Liberal Printing Company. The said John G. Rutherford is now the member in the House of Commons for the Dominion constituency of Macdonald.

2. On the above mentioned date a by-election was pending in said constituency, in which the candidates were John G. Rutherford, the Liberal candidate, and Kenneth McKenzie, the elder, a Patron and Independent candidate.

3. That on the 15th day of April aforesaid a bogus issue of the "Weekly Review"—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Campbell). I do not think that has anything to do with the question.

Mr. DAVIN. It is just to justify what I said.

Mr. WALLACE. I think it is in the public interest, after the challenge which was thrown out to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. DAVIN. Here is an affidavit to show that the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford) issued bogus newspapers, which is as bad as issuing bogus ballots.

Bill reported; read the third time and passed.

CUSTOMS AND INLAND REVENUE DE-PARTMENTS—INCREASE IN SALARIES.

Bill (No. 182) respecting the Departments of Customs and Inland Revenue (Mr. Fielding) read the second time and the House resolved itself into committee on the Bill.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. WALLACE. I must express my disapproval of this Bill. I remember when hon. gentlemen opposite were in Opposition they condemned the proposed increase of the members of the Government and pledged themselves to reduce the number. They have not reduced the number, but on the contrary have given these members of the Government who were not members of the Cabinet the position of members of the Cabinet. To that I do not object at all, because, considering the fact that these two Departments of Customs and Inland Revenue have more to do with the treasury, perhaps, than any other, it is necessary that they should be represented on the Treasury Board. But I think that the course of the Government should be rather to decrease the salaries than increase them. So far as the right hon. First Minister is concerned, I said in the House, not many days ago, that I thought he should have a higher salary, that his position and the numerous responsibilities connected with it would justify the House in giving him a more liberal salary than he is getting to-day. I know that in the old days, when Sir John Macdonald and the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie were occupying the position of First Minister their salaries were not sufficient to enable them to properly hold up the dignity and the responsibility of that position; but so far as the other members of the Government are concerned, I do not think that any increase in the way proposed is justifiable. I may say for myself that I occupied the position of Controller of Customs, with all the power of a Minister of the Crown, with the exception that I had not a seat in the Cabinet, but I can say that I spent as many hours in performing the duties of the office, with whatever ability I may have possessed as any Minister has done before or since.

Mr. PRIOR. More, I think.

Mr. WALLACE. I have no doubt that my circumstances and surroundings were such that I could give a large amount of my time to the duties, and did so. I never found fault with the salary of $5,000, which was paid for the services rendered by the Controller of Customs, and which was the salary allowed by law, and I enter my protest against the Government increasing the salaries of the heads of these two departments of Customs and Inland Revenue from $5,000 to $7,000 per annum, and I wish to place my protest against this increase before Parliament and the country.

Mr. DAVIN. I wish to call attention to the meaning of this clause. It says that subsection 2 of section 2 of chapter 18 of the statutes of 1897 is hereby repealed. But what is that subsection? It is as follows:—

The salary of each of the said Ministers shall be $5,000 per annum, and shall continue at that rate until a readjustment of the departments of the Government shall reduce the number of Ministers holding departments to thirteen or less, whereupon and thereafter the salaries of each of the said Ministers shall be $7,000 per annum. So that here we have another plank and another promise thrown to the wind.

The history of this question is an instructive one. Originally the salaries of the Ministers were $5,000 a year, and when, a few years after confederation, Sir John Macdonald brought in a Bill raising the salaries from $5,000 to $7,000 a year, he was denounced in the strongest language by the Liberal party of that time. And then they came into power, I think, a year or so after, but Mr. Mackenzie accepted the $8,000. Of course, I do not think that too much for men like Mr. Mackenzie, Mr. Blake, Mr. Brown, Mr. Dorion, or such men. In 1887, an Act was passed respecting the Department of Customs and the Department of Inland Revenue, and creating the Controllershops. Those who heard the discussion at that time will remember that the leaders of the Liberal party deprecated any addition to the burdens of the country, or any increase in the number of Ministers. And it would be very easy to show that it has been held out before the people in official documents that if the Liberal party came into power the number of Ministers would be decreased. A Bill was introduced in 1897 by the present Government, raising the Controllers to the rank of Ministers of the Crown, and giving them seats in the Cabinet. A clause was inserted providing that their salaries should remain at $5,000 so long as it was not possible to make an adjustment of the Cabinet so as to reduce the number of Ministers to thirteen or less—pointing clearly to the idea that there would be no use in the position of Minister of Trade and Commerce, when the head of the Customs Department and the head of the Inland Revenue Department should have seats in the Cabinet. But this clause of the Bill is now repealed—this safe-guarding clause put in and eloquently commented on and held out just two short years ago to the people as assurance, in the solemn form of a statute, that if the salaries of the Controllers should be increased, the extra Minister would disappear. Now, the extra Minister does not disappear and we have fourteen Cabinet Ministers with full salaries, and we give the two who were affected by this Bill back wages also.

Mr. WOOD. May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? Does he think that the hon. gentlemen who now occupy the Treasury benches, if they had devoted their time and talents to their several lines of business could not have made double the amount of $5,000, or the amount of $7,000 a year. My impression is that men of their education, talents and ability, had they devoted their time to their several lines of business, would have doubled their income; and instead of doing the business of the country for this small pittance, I, for one, would not give my time for twice that money, and I have not one-quarter the ability of any of them.

Mr. DAVIN. As my hon. friend (Mr. Wood) asks the question, I will answer at once, and frankly. First and foremost, I think the hon. gentleman missed my point. I did not say a word about these salaries being high. In the case of any Prime Minister, or any member of the Cabinet who really has the ability to fill the position, $7,000 a year is a contemptible wage. If I were not speaking in the presence of the Prime Minister, I would speak in the strongest language of the inadequacy of $7,000 to pay a man of his ability.

Mr. WALLACE. His salary is $8,000.

Mr. DAVIN. I apply the same to $8,000. Take a man like the late Sir John Macdonald, or a man like Mr. Blake, of first-class mental ability. If he gave to his profession the time he gave to politics, he would make a great deal more money than he could make out of politics, where, even if he succeeds, he gets more kicks than ha'pence.

The PRIME MINISTER. There seems to be no difference of opinion as to the soundness of the Bill now before the House; nobody on either side expresses the opinion that it is not fair and proper that the Minister of Customs or the Minister of Inland Revenue have the same salary as other Cabinet Ministers. The hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) put the case very fairly when he said that there was not only no reason why the Minister of Customs or the Minister of Inland Revenue should not be in the Cabinet, but that, on the contrary, there was every reason why they should be in the Cabinet, being at the head of two of the most important departments of the Administration. He has been Controller of Customs, but was not in the Cabinet; but I am sure that the experience he gained as head of the Customs Department caused him to form the opinion he expressed, that the man who has charge of that department ought to be in the Cabinet, because the questions with which he has to deal are among the most important that come before the Government, and that it is only right that he should be in the Council and to participate in the discussion—

Mr. DAVIN.

Mr. WALLACE. And Treasury Board.

The PRIME MINISTER. And the Treasury Board as well. And the same is true of the Inland Revenue Department. After the hon. gentleman resigned, his successor was taken into the Cabinet. In my opinion, as I expressed it at that time, this was against the law. I proposed that the law should be amended, as it was amended. At the time, however, no increase was made in the salary of the Controllers, who were thus made Ministers. My hon. friend has expressed the idea, and it has been adverted to on the floor of this House again and again, that in taking the step we are now taking we are going back on the views expressed by the Liberal party. I do not deny that there have been members of the Liberal party who expressed the view that the number of the Cabinet Ministers ought to be reduced. I never entertained that opinion. At no time in my career did I ever express an opinion that the Cabinet was too numerous; on the contrary, as my experience grows the more I hold to the view that, situated as we are, with such a large country to administer, we must have representation from all sections of the country, from the east, the centre and the west. I differ from some of my hon. friends on this question, who thought that we might reduce the number of the Cabinet. I never expressed those views, nor do I entertain them now. I do not see how the present Government nor any other Government could dispense with any member of the Cabinet, nor reduce the number. At the present time there is a complaint against the present representation in the Cabinet that some of the provinces are insufficiently represented. So if we are to be logical in this matter there can be no reason at present why the Cabinet should be reduced; and if the Cabinet is not to be reduced, there is every reason why the gentlemen who hold the positions of Minister of Customs and Minister of Inland Revenue should have an adequate salary. The same salary as the other Ministers are paid. It seems to me that upon this point there can be no difference of opinion. True, in the Liberal party as in many other parties, we do not all hold the same views. It is only yesterday that we saw some hon. gentlemen on the other side supporting a proposition of the Government and others opposing it. But in this matter I beg to say that my opinion has never varied that the Cabinet cannot be reduced from the number which now compose it, and that all the members of the Cabinet shall be treated equally. Now, an opinion prevails, and I have heard it expressed by the hon. member for West York, that the portfolio of Trade and Commerce is one of minor importance.

Mr. WALLACE. I expressed no such view.

The PRIME MINISTER. Then it must have been some other hon. gentleman on that side of the House. I do not hold that view. The portfolio of Trade and Commerce may not be a heavy one in regard to departmental duties, but the political duties of the Minister of Trade and Commerce are very great.

Mr. FOSTER. What political duties ?

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend knows very well that a Cabinet Minister has not only to administer his own department, but there are numerous political questions to which he has to give his attention. Questions are always arising, trade and commercial questions, which require the attention of the Government ; and certainly the Minister of Trade and Commerce has to give his constant attention to this class of questions. There are the mail subsidies for one thing, which is a very important matter, and he has to look after the extension of the trade of the country, to consider suggestions which are made to him ; so that, though the departmental duties connected with that portfolio may not be great, still there are very important political duties of the nature I have mentioned which engage every moment of his time. At the present time there are three departments in the Government, three portfolios which have no departmental duties, those of the President of the Council, the Secretary of State, and the Minister of Trade and Commerce. These three portfolios have not attached to them any departmental duties, except that of the President of the Council, who has under his charge the Mounted Police. But the portfolio of Trade and Commerce has no important departmental duties attached to it, nor has that of Secretary of State. But for all that, these three Ministers have very important duties to perform, every one of them ; and I am able to say that these three gentlemen, the Secretary of State, the President of the Council and the Minister of Trade and Commerce, are all very busy men, and are constantly occupied with the business of the country.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think there is any difference of opinion in the House as to the gentlemen who hold the portfolios of Customs and Inland Revenue being paid an equal salary with the other members of the Cabinet. Without being invidious, the Minister of Customs has a department which is probably more taxing than that of any other Minister, more taxing by the multiplicity of details and various other things that occur to the mind of any one who understands that department, which make it a very vexatious department, and which keeps the Minister on a tension continuously from the beginning to the end of the year. That of Inland Revenue is more one of routine. There is no use trying to elevate any department out of the proportions which belong to it. The Department of Inland Revenue has a large scope, but it is much more of a routine department than that of Customs.

The PRIME MINISTER. There are many details in it.

Mr. FOSTER. But the details are in most cases settled by the departmental officers, and do not come before the Minister as in the case of the Minister of Customs, to whom every person thinks he must go as a final resort. When you come to the Department of Secretary of State, that is practically easy, it is all routine. If he has a good deputy, and a good man at the head of the printing department, his life is an easy one. If he is young and vigorous, and takes part in political matters, he may find enough to take up his time. The same may be said of the Department of Trade and Commerce as at present constituted. If its Minister took charge of the two great revenue-collecting departments of the Government, then he would be one of the most hard-worked Ministers. But the moment you give to these two departments responsible Ministers, that moment you take away from the Minister of Trade and Commerce nearly the whole burden of the work which fell upon him. Now, take the Department of Trade and Commerce since the hon. gentlemen have made that change and have made these two former Controllers Ministers, and it has had comparatively nothing to do with either the Customs or the Inland Revenue. True, it had something to do with steamship subsidies, but the gentleman who holds a place in the Cabinet without portfolio has taken the larger part in those negotiations. He has not been very successful, but he has carried them on, and to that extent has relieved the Minister of Trade and Commerce. So far as the departmental execution of work is concerned, the Minister of Trade and Commerce has almost a sinecure. He may have political duties, and a gentleman of the experience and ability of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, holding the position he does in the party, must have large political duties. But I must not discuss him in the light of political duties. Investigations into the extension of trade and of commerce and the like of that, I think, are commercial rather than political duties, and in those the Minister of Trade and Commerce at present has no very large or onerous duties to perform. I just wish to bring one point out, though, in this discussion, and I do not want to pursue it any further. It is a strange position for the right hon. gentleman to take, to say that he never took the position, whatever other members of his Cabinet may have said, that the Cabinet should be reduced in number. Why, this is a strange statement from the right hon. gentleman, and it is a statement which is contradicted by the statute. What more definite pledge could the right hon. gentleman give of his position as Prime Minister and a member of the Government than the pledge which he embodied in the statute when he expressly declared that :

The salary of each of the said Ministers shall be $5,000 per annum, and shall continue at that rate until a readjustment of the departments of Government shall reduce the number of Ministers holding departments to thirteen or less, whereupon and thereafter the salary of each of the said Ministers shall be $7,000 per annum.

You could not give a more sacred, a more solemn, a more binding pledge, of not only your convictions but your actual promises than by embodying in the statute, upon a matter of great public policy, a law in reference to the constitution of the Government. The right hon. Prime Minister cannot, of course, disassociate himself from the Government and from his colleagues when it comes to the passing of legislation, and especially of such legislation, because, if I do not mistake, the right hon. Prime Minister was the member of the Government who introduced this legislation and who has to be responsible for it. Any legislation that has to do with the Ministers and what they shall receive, is legislation which must be introduced by the Premier himself, even though the payment of the money may be in another department than his own. The right hon. gentleman is forced simply to this ground, that, when he was in Opposition he either made a great mistake in reference to this matter, or else he was trying to catch popular favour. And he did catch popular favour. Any leader of a party who goes to the people with the programme inscribed on his banner that he will reduce the number of Cabinet Ministers, goes to the country with a very taking card, with a large number of electors. The right hon. gentleman played that card, and his colleagues played that card. They played it much more strongly than he did, but he himself played it as well, and when he came into the Government he put upon the statute-book his conviction in reference to that policy. Now, then, he got all the benefit from that, and he must either have been playing that card to get popular support or he must confess that in this, as in so many other things, he actually did not read circumstances and events at all right. In numerous other things he has had to confess that already; he confesses it now in reference to the constitution of the Cabinet, and he now recants what he himself and his party declared to be right and proper as a matter of policy. He now publicly recants, but he does it only by saying that he never held that view personally, and that he cannot be held responsible. He has reaped the benefit of that game and of the promulgation of that policy. As to whether the proposition is a reasonable one, I agree with the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Wood) and my hon. friend who spoke here, that the hon. Minister of Customs and the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue should have the same salaries as the other members of the Cabinet. I do not think you could make a distinction between them and the other members of the Government. If they are Ministers doing the work and members of the Council, they should have the salary attached. But, we cannot allow it to go to the public that the right hon. gentleman did not pledge himself to the policy of the reduction of his Cabinet. He did it by solemn legislation, and he must confess now, as others have to confess, that he made a mistake, that he was young and fresh and enthusiastic for support and he did not see conditions as he sees them now. With many other things it has been exactly the same. This is almost the last one of their pledges and promises which these hon. gentlemen have not undone since they came into power.

Mr. SPROULE. I hold the same views on this question which I held a good many years ago. I remember distinctly the discussion that took place at the time when it was proposed to make these changes in the department by converting the Ministers of Customs and Inland Revenue into Controllers. The ground was very strongly taken then that an increase in the number of offices was being made which was entirely unjustifiable, and that the increase in the burdens of the people which resulted was likewise unjustifiable. At the time the change was made the denunciations of the proposal were very strong. I remember, also, when another proposal was made in 1897 to take the Controller of Customs and the Controller of Inland Revenue into the Cabinet without increasing their salaries. The proposal was moved by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies). The Prime Minister has said that he never entertained the view that these Controllers should have smaller salaries than any other Minister of the Crown or that there should be a less number in the Cabinet. I want to draw his attention to what took place at that time, and I think we may accept the statement of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries as fairly voicing the sentiment of the whole Cabinet. That hon. gentleman in moving the resolution, said :

I move to add this clause as part of the Bill which was omitted in the printing by mistake :

"The salary of each of the said Ministers shall be $5,000 per annum, and shall continue at that rate until a readjustment of the departments of Government shall reduce the number of Ministers holding departments to thirteen or less, whereupon thereafter the salary of each of the said Ministers shall be $7,000."

I spoke in reference to it in the following language :—

It seems to me this is the proper time to deal with the distribution of the heads of departments. I would like to ask the Minister if it is contemplated to reduce the heads of departments to the same number that it was before. I remember very distinctly that at different times since the Controllers were appointed, the hon. gentlemen opposite, who were then sitting on this side of the House, objected very strongly to the increase of offices, and to the appointment of a Commissioner of Trade and Commerce. Now, so far as we have any information, it is not the intention of the Government to do away with that office to-day. Might I ask the Minister if they have it under consideration, or if they have decided to reduce the number of Ministers to the same number as before, and to do away with the office of Minister of Trade and Commerce?

THE MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman is perfectly right. The prevailing impression, I think, on both sides of the House was that a determined effort should be made to reduce the number of Ministers, and that matter has been under the consideration of the Government, and is now engaging their very earnest consideration. The hon. gentleman sees that this Bill now introduced is merely to make the present Controllers in point of fact Ministers, and to entitle them to seats on the Cabinet Board; and the express provision is made on the face of the Bill—not the mere statement that the Government are considering it—but that when the departments are reduced to thirteen, and not until then, their salaries should be the same as those of other Cabinet Ministers.

That is distinct and specific, and may fairly be taken as voicing the convictions of the whole Cabinet. Afterwards he repeated the same statement:

But it is expressly provided that, if in the re-adjustment of departments hereafter, the number is reduced to thirteen or below, then these gentlemen who are called to the Cabinet should receive $7,000 a year, but not until then.

MR. WILSON. Why not make it ten?

THE MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It says thirteen or less, and that embraces ten. I do not think there is any difference of opinion.

This indicates that the Government expressly proposed at that time when the salaries were increased, the number of Cabinet Ministers would be reduced to thirteen. That was a compact made between them and the country. But to-day, without any effort to reduce the number of Cabinet Ministers, they increase the salaries of the two Controllers to the same figures as those of the other Cabinet Ministers. I object to it very strongly on this ground, and I believe the country holds the same view as I do. I admit that these two Ministers are entitled to the same salaries as the others; but you are bound, in fulfilment of your promise, to reduce the number of Cabinet Ministers. There is no just reason for continuing to have a Minister of Trade and Commerce, a Minister of Customs and a Minister of Inland Revenue. It seems to me that you should abolish the office of Minister of Trade and Commerce, which is virtually an artificial or honorary office, and make the present Minister of Trade and Commerce the Minister of Customs; but until they abolish that or some other Cabinet office and reduce the number of Ministers, I do not think the Government are justified in making this increase to the expenditure of the country. Another feature of this Bill which I object to is that it is retroactive. We generally object to retroactive legislation. The Bill begins the increased salaries of the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Inland Revenue on the 1st July, 1898, and gives them each a year's salary after the financial year is ended. I do not think this is right. I could understand the increase being made to commence now; but there is no justification for going back and paying these men $4,000 for work for which they have been paid pretty well already. I do not think the country will endorse this Bill or regard the Premier or the Minister of Marine and Fisheries as being consistent or honest with themselves in view of the promises they made to the country in 1897 that they would not increase the salaries of these men without reducing the number of Cabinet Ministers to thirteen or less.

MR. PRIOR. I do not rise to say a word against the increase of salary to the Minister of Customs or the Minister of Inland Revenue, because I believe that both of these officers have a right to just as large a salary as any of the other Ministers. They are two of the most important members of the Government, and should be paid as well as the others. But I agree with the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat that this Bill should not be retroactive, but should date from the 1st of July of this year. That was not the reason, however, why I rose. I notice that the right hon. leader of the Government did not agree with the remarks made a few days ago by the Minister of Finance in reply to me when I asked for representation in the Cabinet for British Columbia. The Minister of Finance took me to task, and said that it was time that we got over this provincial idea, this sectionalism, of which he accused me. But the right hon. First Minister says there are a good many Ministers required, because every part of the Dominion has to be represented. We might as well understand it at once that there is no sectionalism in this, but that Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island each expects to have one of its own men in the Cabinet to represent it. Such being the case, I think this is the time for me to say once more that I think there ought to be a true British Columbian in the Cabinet to represent his province.

MR. McMULLEN. I want to say one word on this clause before it is adopted. This difficulty originated many years ago, when Sir John Macdonald decided to create the two offices of Controller of Customs and Controller of Inland Revenue. On that occasion I opposed the Bill on the ground that it would eventually lead to an increase in the members of the Cabinet. I admit that I was one of those who always opposed increasing the number of Ministers, and I am of the same opinion to-day. I have no personal feeling towards the Minister of Customs or the Minister of Inland Revenue. I am not prepared to say that they do not earn their salaries just as well as the other Ministers do; but I do say that, in my humble opinion, the governmental machinery of this Dominion is too expensive, and should be recast from bottom to top. I think the present conditions are quite unjust. In the first place, the Ministers of the Crown get $8,000 a year each, while representatives of the people have to sit in this House for four and a half or five months, and, though their business is just as important and their time just as valuable as those of the Ministers of the Crown, we have to stay here for an indemnity of $1,000 a year. We have got to sit here for $1,000 a year indemnity, while Ministers get $8,000. I contend that this should be recast. If Ministers of the Crown earn $8,000, the members who sit here for four and a half or five months earn more than $1,000. But I contend some Ministers do not earn $8,000.

I am opposed to the increase for this reason, that the expenses of the Government are too high, although I am glad to say that the present Government has reduced them. The hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) laughs at that, but I am prepared to go into an investigation and prove to him that, taking into account the fact of the very large increase in expenditures, owing to the opening of the Yukon country, the expenses of the Government last year were less than they were when hon. gentlemen opposite occupied the Treasury benches. If hon. gentlemen opposite are prepared to challenge that statement, I will prove it, because I have the figures here. The Government have made commendable efforts in the direction of keeping down expenses, but at the same time I believe they are still too high, and I am sorry that the Government have decided to make this addition. I would like very much to have the number of Cabinet Ministers reduced; and if they cannot be reduced, I would like to see the salaries reduced or made proportionate to the duties of the offices. The Secretary of State has nothing to do compared with other Ministers, and I would have no objection to seeing his salary reduced to $5,000, and that of the Ministers of Customs and Inland Revenue raised to $7,000.

I was rather surprised when the hon. leader of the Opposition, speaking on this question, pointed out the fact that the Ministers of Customs and Inland Revenue had lower salaries, created an invidious distinction. I cannot see it in that light. That hon. gentleman has always admired British precedents, and, therefore, I will give the salaries of the British Ministers of the Crown. The Prime Minister has £5,000 a year; the Lord High Chancellor has £10,000 a year; the Lord President of the Council only gets £2,000 per year; the Lord Privy Seal gets no salary; the First Lord of the Treasury gets £5,000 a year; the Chancellor of the Exchequer, £5,000 per year; the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster gets £2,000 per year; the Secretary of the Colonial Department, £5,000 per year; the Secretary of the Home Department, £5,000 per year; the Secretary of the War Department, £5,000 per year; the Secretary of the Indian Department, £5,000 per year; the First Lord of the Admiralty, £4,000 per year; the President of the Board of Trade only gets £2,000 per year; the President of the Local Board only gets £2,000 per year; the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, £20,000 per year; the Lord Chancellor of Ireland, £8,000 per year; the Secretary for Scotland, £2,000 per year; the First Commissioner of Works, £2,000 per year; the President of the Board of Agriculture, £2,000 per year. So that very few of them have the same salaries.

Mr. WALLACE. What does the Postmaster General get?

Mr. McMULLEN. £2,500 per year. The House will, therefore, see that there is quite a difference in the salaries of these gentlemen.

Mr. DAVIN. But all those are not in the Cabinet.

Mr. McMULLEN. Yes, they are. I thought the hon. gentleman was better posted than to challenge that statement.

Mr. DAVIN. Not all those whom the hon. gentleman has read out.

Mr. McMULLEN. Yes, if the hon. gentleman will go to the Library he will find that they are. There are nineteen Cabinet Ministers in England. There are distinctions in the salaries there, and I do not see why we should not have distinctions here. If the head of one particular department enjoys a mere sinecure, he should not be paid as large a salary as one who has a great deal of work to do. No doubt the Minister of Customs in this country holds a very onerous position and is very closely confined to his office. The same may be said of the Minister of Inland Revenue. But if the duties of these offices are heavy and increasing, the duties of other offices are nothing like so heavy or growing to anything like the same extent. I was honest, when in Opposition, in advocating a reduction in the number of Cabinet Ministers and a reduction in their salaries, and I am honest in doing so to-day. I should be very much pleased if the Government would see its way to allow the matter to stand as it is for the present; and if it will not, I am opposed to the Bill and to having this legislation made retroactive. If the increase is to be given at all, it should be given from now, and not start back from the 1st July, 1898. If there is any one in this House more responsible for this Bill than anybody else, it is the hon. leader of the Opposition. In 1897, he declared that the difference in salaries was an unfair and invidious distinction and contended that the Ministers of Customs and Inland Revenue should be placed on a par with the other Ministers, and before he went to England he gave expression to the same opinion. But that hon. gentleman is not my leader. So far as the leader of the Government is concerned, I do not know that I ever heard him advocate a reduction in the number of Ministers, but I have done so, and so has the Postmaster General, and so have others, and I do not remember our ever having been taken to task for doing so. I would like that the matter should be allowed to remain as it is until such time as it may be found convenient to make some change in the number.

Mr. McMULLEN.

But in justice to the representatives in this House, if this Bill becomes law, I say that some change should be made in the sessional indemnity. It is unfair to ask members of Parliament to sit here four and a half or five months on an indemnity of $1,000, when the Ministers of the Crown are paid so much higher salaries, there is an invidious distinction and I am opposed to the provisions of the Bill and shall vote against it. This question shall receive my personal attention during the vacation, and if I live to come back, I shall express my views in the form of a resolution before the House.

Mr. WALLACE. In most of the statements of the hon. member for North Wellington I can cordially agree. I want to say, however, to the right hon. First Minister that I have expressed my opinion that the proposed increase in salaries is not justifiable, not because the Ministers of Customs and Inland Revenue are not entitled to as much salary as the other Ministers, but because the principle has been established and should not be departed from; and if any change should be made, it should be made in the direction of scaling down the other salaries to those of these two Ministers. I was Controller of Customs for three years or more, and I can say that the salary was quite sufficient.

Mr. LANDERKIN. For you.

Mr. WALLACE. Yes; it may be that I have not the gigantic intellect of the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin), whose services have not been recognized by his leaders, I observe, by any promotion, but I can say this, that the proposal now made does not meet with my approval.

With regard to the point raised by the hon. member for North Wellington concerning the indemnity of members of Parliament, as it is called, and which it is time to call a salary, I have this to say. I think it is time to call it a salary. They do that in the United States. It is preposterous that a member of Parliament should spend six months in the service of his country, working just as hard as a Minister, and get $1,000 while the Minister, working twice as long, gets eight times as much. The First Minister and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will know how they do it at Washington. There the Cabinet Minister gets $8,000 a year and the member of Congress or the member of the Senate, who devotes a little more time than our members do to legislative duties—though I do not know—

Mr. FOSTER. A little more, on the average.

Mr. WALLACE. A member of Congress or of the Senate receives $5,000 a year—I presume on the basis that they spend five-eighths of the year attending to their public duties. In addition to that, a salary is provided for a secretary for each member of Congress and each Senator, to relieve him of laborious work. I would take the responsibility of calling the attention of the Government to the point, and suggesting for their consideration and approval—and it has my approval—that members of Parliament should be furnished with a secretary to assist them in their correspondence. Every member of Parliament is expected by his constituents—and very properly—to send them a good deal of literature. There is, necessarily, also, a great deal of correspondence connected with the position of representative of 20,000 or 30,000 constituents. I see members of Parliament, day after day, spending their time in writing letters to their constituents, addressing documents, and that kind of thing, and on that account, not able to give that attention to their parliamentary duties which they should give. I would not suggest that a secretary be furnished at the high rate of pay fixed in Washington. For a moderate amount secretaries could be employed who would relieve the member of some of the more laborious of his duties and enable him to devote his time to the public business and to his duties in Parliament. I believe the country would save by members attending more closely to their parliamentary duties and being able to give to them more intelligent attention. And we should have more economical legislation and better laws. There is the other point raised by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen). He said we work here for six months in the year and get $1,000, while the Ministers work twice as long and get, not twice as much, but eight times as much. Not only is that true, but the mere fact of receiving more remuneration for services performed carries with it the idea of superiority. I do not think there is very much difference between members of the Government and members of this House, let us say, on the other side, who are not members of the Government. I do not think there is so much difference on this side between members of the former Government and those who never had the honour of being in any Government. While I admire the abilities of the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster), and while this House recognizes his almost unrivalled powers in debate, yet, taking all the members on this side, we do not see the great difference that would justify the payment to one member of $8,000 for twelve month's work, and to another of $1,000 for six month's work. As the hon. member for North Wellington suggested, there should be a thorough revision of these matters. But you can hardly get the Government to undertake that, because the Government are enjoying the advantage of it, and they are not likely to give up these advantages to the hon. members who are supporting them.

The PRIME MINISTER. What is the suggestion of my hon. friend (Mr. Wallace) with regard to the indemnity of members?

Mr. WALLACE. I would favour a decrease of the remuneration of the Ministers, and an increase of remuneration to the members in the shape of furnishing each of them with a secretary. I would not commit myself much further than that. And I would have it as it is in the United States, where they do not give the money to the member to pay for a secretary, but the secretary is paid by the Government.

The PRIME MINISTER. I think that they have not a secretary for each member, but they have numerous secretaries for the committees.

Mr. WALLACE. No, they have a secretary for each member, and each secretary is paid $1,200 a year. I think the scale of remuneration extravagant, so far as the salary of the congressmen and senators and their secretaries are concerned. But they proceeded upon the right principle in not making too large a difference in remuneration between the Minister and the ordinary member. The difference we make is quite unjustifiable on its merits.

Now, the right hon. First Minister said that while, in theory, it might be wrong, in practice you had to recognize the representation of the provinces in the Cabinet, and he asked where we could reduce the representation of any province. Well, take his own province of Quebec as it has been represented in the Cabinet for the last three years, previous to the lamented death of one of the members of the Cabinet. There were in the province of Quebec seven members of the Government, if we include the Solicitor General—I am not sure whether he is a member of the Cabinet or not.

The PRIME MINISTER. He is not.

Mr. WALLACE. He is a member of the Government, though not of the Cabinet. Now, take the representation of Ontario as compared with that of Quebec. Ontario has 40 per cent more population than Quebec and 40 per cent more representatives in the House of Commons. Very well, on all rules of fair-play, of intelligence, of wealth, of population, the province of Ontario should have, in round figures, exactly ten members to the province of Quebec's seven. But when you come to examine, you find that Ontario has only five members or, as I contend, four, instead of ten that she should have. We have the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Postmaster General, the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Customs. As to the Secretary of State, I think one-half the year he lives across the river in Quebec. But counting him in the province of Ontario, there are only five, whereas, by the rule of fair-play, there should be ten from Ontario to seven from Quebec.

Mr. WALLACE.

The PRIME MINISTER. That would be a large Cabinet.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. With many other provinces to hear from.

Mr. WALLACE. The suggestion might be that the province of Quebec has just twice the representation that it is entitled to, and that is all.

The PRIME MINISTER. How is it in point of salaries?

Mr. WALLACE. The First Minister, the Minister of Public Works, the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of Inland Revenue and the Solicitor General receive $34,000; the Ministers from the province of Ontario receive $35,000, without counting sessional indemnities in either case.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Except that one from Quebec, the Solicitor General, is not a Minister.

Mr. WALLACE. He is a member of the Government.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He is not a member of the Government.

Mr. WALLACE. He is a member of the Government, but not a member of the Cabinet. I was a member of the Government by Act of Parliament, but I was not a member of the Cabinet.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick) is not by Act of Parliament.

Mr. WALLACE. The Prime Minister asked what about the salaries. The salaries are not the only consideration, because he has appointed in the province of Quebec two Ministers without portfolio, one of whom, unfortunately, has gone to his long home. Both these Ministers were members of the Cabinet, they were formulating the policy of the country, and the legislation of the country. They were assisting in conducting the business of the Government, and we find that one of them is taking quite an active part. I refer to the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Dobell). He is taking so active a part that he is very seldom attending to his parliamentary duties, but is apparently busy as a member of the Government. Now, there is another feature about it. The next clause provides that these two Ministers may be paid at the rate of $7,000 per annum from the 1st day of July, 1898. Now, was there any bargain made by which these gentlemen should get an increased salary of $2,000 when they accepted office? Was there a bargain made with them a year ago that they would be recouped for their past services? I would like the First Minister to give an answer to that question.

The PRIME MINISTER. Surely my hon. friend does not expect me to answer such a question as that.

Mr. WALLACE. We will assume that it was not so. However, from some correspondence that occurred when the Minister of Customs got his position, correspondence that came up in North Grey about that time, there is reason to suppose, from a letter written by the First Minister himself, that there was some such understanding. But we will accept the statement of the First Minister that there was no such understanding. Then these gentlemen have been performing their duties in conformity with a bargain made with the Dominion of Canada, they accepted the office for $5,000 a year. It is proper for Parliament, at any time they choose, to increase the salaries of these Ministers, or of any other Ministers, they receive their salary according to law. But I say that when a Minister, without any previous bargain or understanding receives a salary, whether large or small, this Parliament is not justified in making it retroactive and saying to them: Yes, you made a bargain with the Dominion of Canada, you accepted an office that carried with it a salary of $5,000 a year, but after the end of your term, after you have performed your duties and received the remuneration that the laws provide, we are going to give you two gentlemen $4,000 in addition. I say, Mr. Chairman, that that is utterly unjustifiable. Speaking for myself, I am against the increase from $5,000 to $7,000, and I am still more strongly opposed to making that retroactive. I do not believe the people will approve such a misappropriation of the public funds. You may say it is only $4,000. Very well, I think $4,000 could be put to more useful purposes. These men are not poor men, they are not receiving niggardly salaries, they have been receiving $6,000 a year of the people's money, each of them, for the last year. I do not think that these hon. gentlemen can justify it. In making these remarks I am quite sure the House will accept my statement that I am not animated by any personal considerations. I have the pleasure of regarding both of these hon. gentlemen personally on the most friendly terms, and I would like it to be remembered that when we have discussions in Parliament, they are purely political. I have personally not one word of harshness to say or one harsh thought in my mind against these hon. gentlemen. But regarding it purely as a matter of public business it is wrong to make these two hon. gentlemen a present of $4,000 and it cannot be justified on any score. If they are entitled to it a year ago why did hon. gentlemen not come down and say: We are proposing to increase the salaries of these two Ministers. I am opposed to the policy of increases altogether; I think the salaries should be toned down and decreased, but I am in favour of paying Ministers fairly. I think it is doing an injustice to the people to vote this $4,000 to men who have, in accordance with the law, been paid every dollar to which they are fairly and justly entitled.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to my hon. friend (Mr. Wallace) who has just sat down, and I must say it did not strike me that this was dated back a year. I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister on what ground he dates it back? I think the ground is pretty strong that has been taken by the hon. member for West York that the law stipulated a salary, that they received that salary and that they worked under it. It is a covenant they undertook to perform, and it strikes me that we ought not, in the face of the law, to go back and give these hon. gentlemen an extra salary for the year past. If, last year, hon. gentlemen thought that these hon. gentlemen should have the same salary as other members of the Cabinet, they should have prepared their legislation last year. But what would the country think of us as legislators, after having been elected under the law which said that we were to get $1,000 a year, if we should go to work, after we had been here one or two sessions, and voted ourselves $1,500 or $2,000 for the preceding years. If we did, I think the country would spew us out of their mouth and do it rightly. It may be that you made a mistake when you thought these gentlemen were worth $5,000 a year, when you took them into your Cabinet, but you have to take the bitter with the sweet. You ought to pay something for your mistake. I feel disposed to stand strongly against the retroactive part of this Bill. You have made a mistake, and you want to rectify it, but why rectify it backwards. This is a contract; these hon. gentlemen went into it under the law; they accepted the terms. Why should you go back and pay them for the past year? In looking at the Bill I was thinking more of the principle, and it did not strike me that it was retroactive. I think that is a strong feature against it. I do not take any grounds of virtue, but I say this, that if I were a Minister, if I went in under these conditions and knew the law, I would be disposed to say to my colleagues: I do not want you to make it retroactive. I went in under the law which says $5,000 is to be the salary until we can get $7,000 and can change the policy of the Government in regard to it; we cannot make a change of policy now, but we will remedy this later, and in doing it we ought not to go back and make the Bill retroactive.

The PRIME MINISTER. If my hon. friend remembers the speech delivered by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), when he introduced this Bill, he has an answer to his question. The Government intended to bring it in last year. This is the language made use of by the hon. Minister of Finance in introducing the Bill:

We intended to have brought this matter to the notice of the House last session, but in the rush of business which always takes place at the close, it was overlooked, and we have made a resolution to take effect on the 1st of July a year ago.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think that the country would take that as a satisfactory reason. The Government has to look after its business. The Government did not choose, for some reason or other, to bring it in. It may be a matter of party policy that it was not brought in. Let them pay for the party policy. It may be that hon. gentlemen did not want to shock the public confidence quite so soon in going back on this thing. Let them pay the bill; it has been worth something to them. Let them pay $1,000 or $2,000 each. You have got the advantage, and you should pay for it.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend takes a view, upon this matter, which has to be contradicted. Last year we had intended to bring in this legislation because we had made up our minds that the Ministers of Customs and Inland Revenue ought to be placed on the same footing as their colleagues. The discussion which has taken place has not challenged in any way the justice of that proposition. Nothing has been said this evening in opposition to the view that the Ministers of Customs and Inland Revenue should be placed on the same footing as the colleagues with whom they are associated. Having come to that conclusion the Ministers have given their best services to the country, and although the Bill was not introduced last session, the Ministers have given their best services to the country, and I do not think the country would be indisposed to pay them for the work they have done since the 1st of July, 1898. That is a proposition that ought to appeal to the sense of fairness of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster). The proposition has not been challenged that the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Inland Revenue are entitled to the same treatment as any other members of the Government. The hon. gentleman does not say that the Ministers are overpaid. He agrees with us in the position we have taken. Having made up our minds at the time to ask Parliament to give them this increase of salary and the Ministers having given their best services to the country during the year, it seems not unfair to ask that their salaries should be paid for that time.

Mr. FOSTER. My right hon. friend has challenged me on another point, although I have not opened my mouth in reference to it. I am free to say, in regard to this talk about Ministers being under-paid or not, that no salary that you can give here will pay some Ministers for the terrible weight of responsibility that is incurred by them in carrying on the affairs of the Government. That I acknowledge, and the same thing applies to members of Parliament. Yet I am not able to take the view in Parliament that a Minister of the Crown should have more than he gets at the present time. I have been a Minister myself, and I quite well know the amount of responsibility which attaches to the position. I have been a member of Parliament, and I know the responsibility that devolves upon a member who will do his duty. Yet, I am bound to say, so far as members of Parliament are concerned, unless the country is going to grade the salaries and pay people according to what they are worth, I do not see how you can raise the indemnity beyond $1,000 a year. It is not a salary; but it pays the expenses. The moment you go beyond what pays a member's expenses and make it salary you must pay members according to what they are worth, and that it is impossible to do. In so far as my light goes now, I am not in favour of the payment of larger salaries to Ministers, and I am willing to take my chances, both as a member of Parliament, and if the time ever comes, as a Minister under the present conditions, as far as the salary is concerned.

Mr. SPROULE. If it is right to go back one year, it is right to go back two, and commence in 1897, when the original Act was passed, and when the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) said that it was not intended to give these gentlemen any more salary. They were employed under a contract, just like a hired man; they put in their time, and received their wages, and their work has gone into the history of the past. Now, you go back one year, and say: We did not pay them enough wages. If you did not pay them enough last year, you did not pay them enough the year before; and there is just as much justification for giving them each a bonus of $2,000 a year for the work they did that year as there is for the work they did last year. They rendered us as valuable services in the one year, as they did in the other. But I do not see any justification for going back at all. These gentlemen took their positions under the law and at the salaries as they existed; they were quite willing to take them, and I think the country regard them as having been tolerably well paid. I agree with everything the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) has said in regard to differentiating the salaries. I am reminded that if that principle is good, the late Controllers should each be presented with $2,000 a year. There would be as much justice in that, as they did as much work as the present Controllers, and a great deal more in some cases. I have always believed, and I believe now, that every Minister of the Crown should not be paid the same salary. The Secretary of State would be fairly well paid at $3,000 a year. The same might be said with regard to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. What services does he render to the country, as Minister of Trade and Commerce, for which he should be paid $7,000 a year? Look at his report, and try to ascertain what he is doing. You will find that he is doing scarcely anything; it is a mere honorary position. I think the country would welcome the time when we would pay salaries somewhat in proportion to the duties and labours of those who receive them. We have to-day seventeen Cabinet Ministers; yet, according to the promise of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) the number was to be cut down to thirteen or less, but the Government has not endeavoured to cut them down. I draw the attention of the country to this, so that it may remember it when these hon. gentlemen go back to the electorate to receive that punishment which I am sure will be inflicted upon them.

Mr. CARGILL. Mr. Chairman, as representing a rural district, in which there are not many people who have an income of $7,000 a year, I feel it my duty to enter my protest against this Bill. I am glad to find the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) in sympathy with members on this side of the House on this particular subject. I have a very distinct recollection of the criticisms which were made as to the extravagant expenditure of the late Government, in my election in 1896. The hon. member for North Wellington is well and favourably known in western Ontario as having been a very severe critic of the expenditures of the Conservative Government for very many years, and I think he was honest and sincere in doing so. I, therefore, must give him credit on this occasion for sympathizing with members on this side of the House who have raised their voices against these increases which are proposed to be made in the salaries of the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Inland Revenue. I do not see why there should not be a distinction made as to the salaries paid to the different members of the Government. In all positions in life we find that men are paid according to the services they render, and I do not see why the same rule should not prevail in the Government of the country. I was very much surprised at the remarks made this evening by the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Wood), a gentleman of enterprise and industry. We know that that hon. gentleman has succeeded in accumulating an immense fortune, which he could not have done without being possessed of those characteristics. He said that men possessing the ability of the Cabinet Ministers in this country could easily earn twice $7,000 a year. I would like the hon. member for Hamilton to mention any business man in this country who is making $14,000 a year?

Mr. WOOD. Lots of them.

Mr. CARGILL. With no capital?

Mr. WOOD. Are not their brains capital?

Mr. CARGILL. The members of the Government invest their brains, but they invest no capital. I would like to know how much capital the hon. member for Hamilton has invested in his business, and if he is realizing a fair rate of interest on that capital? I am quite sure that he is piling up quite an amount out of his business annually; but, apart from the investment of capital, I know of no business man in this country who is making $14,000 a year with his brains alone. There may be some lawyers doing so; but these are not business men.

Mr. McCARTHY. Hear, hear.

Mr. CARGILL. I mean to say that they are not engaged in mercantile business. I do think that the Opposition have made a very strong case. I have listened very attentively to the speeches of the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) and the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), and I know that we have the sympathy of several members on that side who are supporters of the present Government, but who, on this particular occasion, do not feel justified in voting for this Bill, and would respectfully ask the hon. Finance Minister to reconsider the matter. This is a growing time, and I hope will continue to grow, and then perhaps, after four or five years of this growing time, when the country is well advanced in prosperity, we may consider the advisability of increasing the salaries of the Cabinet Ministers.

Section agreed to.

On section 3,

Mr. SPROULE. I beg to move in amendment that the words "one thousand eight hundred and ninety-nine" be substituted for the words "one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight."

Amendment negatived: Yeas 14, nays 24.

Mr. POWELL. I desire to withdraw my vote. I did not notice that the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Ellis), with whom I have a standing pair, is absent.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am in the same position, and forgot for the moment that I was paired.

Mr. BERGERON. I am also in the same position, being paired with the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot).

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I move the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. SPROULE. I move in amendment that the Bill be not now read the third time, but be referred back to the Committee of the whole, with instructions to amend the third section by striking out "1898" and substituting therefor "1899."

The House divided on amendment.

Bill read the third time, on division, and passed.

QUEBEC HARBOUR COMMISSION.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 178) respecting the Quebec Harbour Commissioners. He said : This is a Bill to enable the Harbour Commissioners of the port of Quebec to guarantee the interest on an issue of bonds to the amount of $200,000 to be issued by the Great Northern Railway Company, for the purpose of constructing an elevator. The Harbour Commissioners are indebted to the Government, and the object of this Bill is to provide that the bonds now to be issued shall take priority of the Government loan. The House is aware that a large sum is due to the Government for principal and interest for loans and in connection with Quebec harbour.

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. WALLACE. How much interest and how much principal ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think I am right in saying that the advances amounted to $3,975,000, and this has accumulated interest until the total is $5,200,000. Practically, they have been paying no interest. A year ago, we allowed the Harbour Commissioners to make a special issue of bonds for carrying on certain improvements, very much as one would issue a bottomry bond upon a ship, and allowed those bonds to take priority of the Government loan.

Mr. WALLACE. What interest does the Government charge ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think it is 4 per cent. However, as this has not been an over-profitable investment so far, when one is not getting his interest, he is apt to forget the rate. The Harbour Commissioners have made arrangement with the Great Northern Railway Company to construct an elevator at a cost of about $200,000. The Harbour Commissioners agree to guarantee 3 per cent interest on the bonds and have asked the Government to permit them to do so, and we have thought it expedient to submit the Bill to the House.

Mr. FOSTER. The Bill, as it purports to be, is quite different from the Bill as it really is.

The PRIME MINISTER. In what respect ?

Mr. FOSTER. What the Government is really doing is going into a system of building elevators in different cities, and this is one for Quebec. Under the guise of allowing the Harbour Commissioners to guarantee the bonds of the Great Northern Railway Company to build an elevator, they are really taking so much of the public money to bonus an elevator in the city of Quebec. Does not my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) see that when you get all this refining off, and get down to the solid matter it is nothing else but what I say. The Quebec Harbour Commissioners owe this country over $5,000,000, of which nearly $4,000,000 is principal. Now, the essence of that bargain is that they are to pay the interest on that capital, and the only means they have of paying it is from the revenues of the harbour. They have not been able to pay the interest, and now the Government are not only going to forego the interest, but are going to remove, by this much, the possibility of any interest being paid. As the harbour of Quebec improves, any surplus that the commissioners have over expenses can be applied towards the interest on the Government loan. But the Government forestalls that by allowing them first to pay on the bonds issued by a railway for building an elevator. That is the same as the Government paying for the construction of the elevator. The proposal is one wound about with verbiage, but that is all that it amounts to. It allows a third party to do the work, but it simply means taking so much public money to aid the construction of an elevator in Quebec. If the Intercolonial Railway, the Government railway, wants warehouses, station houses, lumber yards and elevators, it has a right to build them in connection with the running of the road. But I do not think that in any other case we have bonused or built elevators for cities or corporations. The Intercolonial Railway has no business in Quebec City, the road does not go there. But the Great Northern has business there, and it will build an elevator provided the Harbour Commissioners will guarantee the bonds. But the Harbour Commissioners have no money to be applied to such a purpose, for whatever surplus they get they have to pay interest on the Government loan, which was given to them bona fide. By intermitting the interest and allowing the Harbour Commissioners to guarantee these bonds, you do practically the same as if you asked a vote of this money in Parliament.

So, it is money which would be covered into the treasury ; but, instead of putting it into the treasury, you give it as a bonus to elevators in the city of Quebec. Are you going to build elevators in the city of Toronto or elsewhere ? Are you going into that business amongst other business you have been going into, spending $70,000 for wharfs where there is neither business nor water ? Building wharfs where there is no customs, with little trade, nothing but a simple mining concern, and voting $10,000 to do that ? Are you going now into the business of bonusing elevators and guaranteeing the bonds of different railways which will put up elevators on their roads. You have already given to the city of Quebec $1,000,000 as a bonus to a bridge ; now you are giving them another bonus to enable the Great Northern Railway Company to build an elevator. The Great Northern Company may be a great pet of the right hon. gentleman ; it may be a very deserving road ; but the Great Northern ought not to be subsidized to build elevators by the Government, as will be the effect here, when you boil it down. To resume : the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec are indebted to this Government for interest upon nearly $5,000,000. They would pay that interest, if the working of the harbour gave sufficient money for it. There is a surplus, but instead of its going to pay that interest, you leave it to them as a bonus to build an elevator on the bonds of the Great Northern Railway Company. So, stripped of its verbiage, it is simply a bonus. I ask again : How far is the Government going in reference to this expenditure ? I think it is straining the goodnature, and generosity, and the sense of fairplay of this Parliament pretty well, when you give a bonus of $1,000,000 for a bridge, the raison d'être of which was nearly destroyed by previous policies of the Government itself.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am certainly surprised at the speech of the hon. gentleman, and, notwithstanding he air which he put upon it, I must say with due deference, that I cannot believe him to have been serious. The hon. gentleman knows very well that the innuendoes he has made, have no foundation whatever.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not mean to make any innuendoes ; I meant to make my statements straight.

The PRIME MINISTER. Very well ; I accept his statement that he did not mean to make innuendoes ; all I can say is, that he was not very happy in expressing his ideas.

Mr. FOSTER. That is my misfortune.

The PRIME MINISTER. I thought it was worse, but I take it to be a misfortune. Now, what is the position ? At the present time the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec are indebted to the Government in a capital sum of $3,900,000, or, in round numbers, $4,000,000, bearing interest, if my memory serves me right, at 4 per cent. Therefore, the Harbour Commissioners have to pay every year to the Government of Canada $160,000 as interest. I will not refer to what has taken place in the past, nor make any recriminations in regard to it. The Harbour Commissioners of Quebec have received some value, but not to the extent of the capital with which they are burdened. Let that pass, however. My hon. friend knows that this matter came before us last year, and he knows that for ten years or so, ever since this debt was created, the Harbour Commissioners have not paid one cent of interest upon that capital, and they cannot pay one cent. The reason is very obvious ; we discussed it last year. If I remember right, the gross revenues were in the neighbourhood of $60,000, and all that was absorbed by charges of administration. At all events, I am certain that for years they have not paid a cent of interest, simply because the cost of administration absorbed all the revenues derived by the Harbour Commissioners, with a slight margin. Now, for years the harbour of Quebec had been a very prosperous harbour, up to about 1870. At that time Quebec had the square timber trade of the St. Lawrence, and the harbour was covered every year with large rafts of square timber, and with a fleet of vessels from the other side. At that time the harbour was prosperous, and yielded a good revenue ; but about 1870 it began to fall off, and has been falling off ever since. The trade of Quebec has been decreasing all the time up to last year. Last year the trade commenced to revive, and we then authorized the Harbour Commissioners to borrow $350,000, and to give a preference to these new bonds over our debt. We did that in order to give facilities to the Harbour Commissioners to improve their harbour with the money they were authorized to borrow, so as to give better facilities to trade by increasing the equipment at that port. Now, at that time we gave to the Harbour Commissioners power to borrow $350,000, and we gave the bondholders preference over our own bonds. We did that because otherwise the Harbour Commissioners would not be able to equip their harbour, and it would have rotted from want of use. Now, in order to make our asset good, we did what a creditor often does, we made another advance to the debtor, so as to enable him to give better security. I think it was a wise policy to give the Harbour Commissioners power to borrow $350,000 to invest in building wharfs, in equipping the harbour, so as to attract trade. It was a wise thing to do, because we gave more value to our asset. Now, we are simply following the same policy. Here is a new railway being built, which is to be a continuation of one of the most important railways that we have in Canada, the Parry Sound Railway. The Parry Sound Railway at the present time has no outlet to the ocean, but it is expected that by the continuation of that road by means of the Great Northern Railway, subsidized yesterday, it will have an outlet to the ocean at Quebec. The Great Northern Railway wants to build an elevator, and it has asked the Harbour Commissioners to guarantee their bonds. Now, the Harbour Commissioners cannot guarantee their bonds, unless we do what we did last year, that is, give a preference to these new bonds over our own debt. If we give that power to the Harbour Commissioners, they will guarantee the bonds of the company, elevators will be built, and our asset will be more valuable than it is to-day.

The reason why we did it is to enable the Quebec Harbour Commissioners to improve the harbour, to bring trade to it, to increase the revenue, and, therefore, to make it possible for the commissioners of the harbour of Quebec to pay back some return to us on our investment. So far as that investment is concerned, it has been an investment only in name. It has yielded nothing. I do not believe the day will ever come when the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec will be able to discharge their whole debt to us, but I believe the time will come, at no distant day, when the Harbour Commissioners will be able to come to Parliament and have a new bargain made for the renewal of their debt upon new terms, and that they will be able to pay some of the interest upon the capital. I believe that at no distant day the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec will be in a position, when these improvements have been made, and when trade has been revived in the Quebec harbour, that instead of having $60,000 of a revenue they will have $200,000 or $300,000, and when they will be able to say to us:

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

We will pay back $2,000,000 of our $5,000,000 of debt, so that we will be able to meet our liabilities. In order to bring about that condition of affairs it is essential that we should give to the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec power to equip their harbour so as to secure the trade. My hon. friend ought to take a broader view of this question. He should not say that we are taking this way of subsidizing the building of this elevator. We are doing nothing of the kind, but we are taking the only step which can be taken in order to give some life to that harbour and to secure some return for an investment which has been absolutely unproductive. Do these reasons not appeal to the hon. gentleman? Does he not see that this is a business transaction and one which must appeal to his business judgment?

Mr. BERGERON. I would like to ask the right hon. gentleman if there is not already, in Quebec, an elevator which was built some years ago, but which has never been used for any purpose?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Is this to be taken to build another one on the same conditions?

The PRIME MINISTER. Not on the same conditions.

Mr. BERGERON. I have no objection to spending all the money my right hon. friend wishes in Quebec since the public treasury is open. The more we can get the better, but surely we must have some sound reason for doing it. There is no doubt that it is useless to spend money in this way so long as the elevator, which is there, is not used. It should be shown that more elevators are needed, because the money can be spent in some other way and in a better way. The right hon. gentleman should give us some semblant de raison for this proposal, and if there is none, let us spend the money for some other purpose. We have in Montreal, I think, three or four elevators which were built years ago, and which have never been used. I hope when these great improvements in the channel are made, and which are going to cost so much, if the plans of the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) are carried out, that they may be used. But until the elevator, which is now in existence in Quebec is used, is filled with grain and put in operation, I think it is improper to spend public money to build another.

The PRIME MINISTER. We are not spending any public money; we are not spending a cent of the money of the Dominion of Canada. If it were possible, without this, that we could collect a cent of the interest which is due to us, there would be something in the argument of my hon. friend, but my hon. friend knows very well that we cannot collect one cent from the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a comforting doctrine.

The PRIME MINISTER. It is comforting to this extent, that unless the harbour is equipped, we cannot collect a cent of that money which is owing to us.

Mr. FOSTER. Does not my hon. friend see that the railway companies, which are stretching out for business, should be expected to do something?

The PRIME MINISTER. Exactly. And this something the commissioners are doing.

Mr. FOSTER. But the commissioners are not doing it; this is what we are doing.

The PRIME MINISTER. The commissioners say that they ought to give some help to the railway companies. Now, a word to the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron). There is an elevator at Quebec which was built by the Canadian Pacific Railway under an agreement in response to a bargain which was imposed upon them as the result of the cabal in No. 8 in this building. But the Canadian Pacific Railway built the elevator and then never used it. The Canadian Pacific Railway do not undertake to carry wheat to Quebec. I do not know whether they undertake to carry wheat to Montreal. But Mr. Booth, the builder of the Parry Sound Railway, undertakes to carry wheat to the seaboard, and we all hope that his undertaking will be successful. He is now carrying enormous quantities of wheat over his railway. If he is to carry wheat to Quebec he must have an elevator, and it must be on the jetties or wharfs of the harbour of Quebec where the wheat can be brought by the railway and unloaded into the ships. This is the object of this elevator.

Mr. BERGERON. Could he not use the one already built?

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not think that the one already built would be suitable for that purpose.

Mr. FOSTER. Where is the present elevator?

The PRIME MINISTER. On the Louise Basin.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that not part of the harbour?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, but I am told that it cannot be used.

Mr. SPROULE. The right hon. Prime Minister says that the railways do not carry wheat to the seaboard because it does not pay them, and then says the Booth road proposes to do it and that to enable him to do it, it is proposed to give this subsidy for the building of an elevator. Suppose that it should prove a failure after the elevator is built and that they should not be able to carry on that trade profitably. It is only a venture and according to the hon. Minister's statement it has not paid other roads. Is there any ground for believing that it would pay the Booth road any more than it did the other roads? If, after the elevator is built, it proves a failure and the elevator is abandoned the money will be wasted. In plain English, this is practically giving a subsidy to the city of Quebec out of the consolidated revenue fund of the country for the building of an elevator. The Harbour Commissioners cannot pay interest on the money which is already borrowed from the country without an additional outlay, and if they have to pay interest, at the rate of 3 per cent on the additional outlay, it will prevent them from paying any interest on the loan we have already made to them. The commission will have to pay interest on the outlay for the elevator, and, therefore, the country will get back none of the money it has loaned for the harbour. We have a number of other towns and cities that are building elevators. Take the town of Midland, which bonused elevators to the tune of something like $50,000. The railway paid the other portion of it, and the elevator was built. Up to the time that elevator was built, the harbour of Midland did not pay, but by the increased trade brought about by its construction, it is earning more to-day, but not enough to pay interest on the money the Government invested in that harbour. But how can you justify giving assistance to the city of Quebec to build an elevator when you will not give any assistance to the town of Midland? The town of Owen Sound has two elevators, which were built with the assistance of a bonus granted by the town; the debt incurred for that bonus is standing over that town to-day and will not be paid for 17 or 18 years. These elevators were built by the people of the town taxing themselves for the purpose, while the Government propose to tax the country to build an elevator for Quebec. Collingwood is doing the same; it has already given a bonus to build an elevator, and it is proposing to give another as soon as the harbour is sufficiently deepened to enable large vessels to come there. The town of Meaford is negotiating to-day for the building of an elevator, and it proposes to give a bonus of not less than $15,000 for an elevator of moderate capacity, or a larger bonus for a larger elevator. Goderich is doing the same; Kincardine is proposing to do the same; Wiarton is considering the same question. If we are going to subsidize the building of elevators in the city of Montreal, the city of Quebec and the town of Port Colborne, as the scheme proposed to us the other night contemplates, I cannot see any grounds on which this Government can refuse to apply the same principle to every town in Canada that proposes to build an elevator for the accommodation of the through grain trade from the west. We have subsidized railways to go to Quebec; we are giving $1,000,000 for the Quebec bridge; we have granted $4,000,000 to that harbour on which we cannot hope to receive a single dollar of interest—so the Prime Minister has told us. We may possibly get some interest in the future, but we are not likely to get the principal paid back.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We are not giving them a cent. We are lending them the money.

Mr. SPROULE. Who pays the interest?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Harbour Commissioners of Quebec.

Mr. SPROULE. Where do they get it?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Out of the business of the port.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose they do not get any interest?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Then, nobody pays it.

Mr. SPROULE. There is no immediate prospect of their getting it. We cannot get a penny of interest now from them on the loan for harbour purposes, and we have no hope of getting any in the future.

Mr. WALLACE. Suppose they do not pay the interest, what follows?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We do not pay a cent. The man who lends his money takes his risk of that.

Mr. WALLACE. Can he not foreclose the property if he takes a mortgage on it?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He can only foreclose on the elevator. He cannot on anything else.

Mr. SPROULE. I am speaking of the $4,000,000 invested in the harbour. I take it that in the same way we guarantee the interest on the loan to the harbour of Montreal, and will pay it if the Harbour Commissioners cannot pay it out of the business of the port. When these various towns and cities in Canada have to tax themselves to assist in building elevators, how can you justify taking money out of the consolidated revenue to assist in building an elevator in the city of Quebec, after the liberal way in which we have dealt with that city up to the present time? You cannot justify it before the people of Ontario by any kind of reasoning you submit.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend is astray. We do not take one cent to build an elevator in Quebec.

Mr. SPROULE. Do you not guarantee the interest?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No.

Mr. SPROULE. What does the Bill say? The corporation is authorized to do it. Whose corporation is it? The corporation of the Government. Whose money is it spending? The money of the country, which the hon. Minister told us a moment ago he never expects to get back. If not, the country loses it, and we are subsidizing the city of Quebec to the extent that we are guaranteeing the interest on the outlay. In my judgment, you cannot justify this to the people of any place in this country who are taxing themselves for the purpose of assisting to build elevators. We adopt the principle that where railway companies build bridges that cost $100,000, we give them 15 per cent of the cost, and you are practically adopting the same principle to-day with regard to elevators. You are telling the people of Quebec that if they build an elevator you will pay the interest on its cost. Go and tell the people of Owen Sound, the people of Collingwood, the people of Midland, the people of Goderich, that you will apply the same principle to them as you do to the people of Quebec. In my opinion, this is not justifiable, and the Government are only starting on a principle that will lead them to trouble, and bring many application from other places for similar assistance in the future.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman evidently misconceives this Bill altogether. If his conception of it were correct, a great deal of what he says would logically follow, and the towns which propose to build elevators out of their own funds would perhaps have good cause of complaint. But we do not vote any public moneys for the construction of this elevator; we are not asked to do so. We do not guarantee the bonds for its construction; we are not asked to do so.

Mr. SPROULE. You guarantee the interest?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We do not. I am going to show you what we do. We have an unproductive debt, which has not paid us interest for ten years, and which cannot under existing circumstances pay us interest in the future; and those who owe us that money say to us: "If you allow us to guarantee the cost of an elevator, and let that guarantee take priority of the debt we owe you, we will be able to increase our revenues so that in all probability you will have a productive debt where you now have an unproductive one." We are asked to postpone the payment of our interest to the payment of the interest on the bonds issued for the building of this new elevator. That is the position we assume, and no town or city in Canada has any ground for opposition to the principle we adopt. If this debt were a live or productive one, and we were asked to give priority to a new guarantee, there would be a great deal of force in the hon. gentleman's argument, because giving that new mortgage priority would be tantamount to taking it ourselves. But inasmuch as our debt has been non-productive in the past, and there is no possibility of its being productive in the future, unless these new works are built, what we are asking simply is to postpone the payment of our mortgage or bonds to the payment of the bonds for these new improvements. It is not intended to give a dollar by this Act, directly or indirectly, but to effect that which any business man would call a good business transaction. Where a man has a large debt due him, which, under existing circumstances, there is no likelihood of his collecting, and there is a prospect of making it a paying debt, either by advancing fresh moneys from his pocket or enabling the debtor to raise money elsewhere to improve the property on which the creditor holds security, would it not be a good transaction for him to take either course?

Mr. FOSTER. Who is to get the revenue?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It will go to pay the interest on the cost of the elevator, and any surplus revenue will come to us.

Mr. FOSTER. The surplus of what revenues?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The revenues of the Quebec Harbour Commissioners.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is to own the elevator?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It will be owned by the company, subject to the mortgage of the Quebec Harbour Commissioners.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is to get the revenues?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The railway company. But the Harbour Commissioners will derive large revenues from the fact of the elevator being put there. If the railway company meets the interest on its bonds or pays its bonds, there will be no charge either upon the Harbour Commissioners or upon us, but we are looking to the contingency of the company not doing so. And in view of this contingency, are we taking a good business course by allowing the Harbour Commissioners to give a guarantee to the company which will take priority of the guarantee they have already given us, and that so far has proved to be worth nothing? Can we hope to get anything out of that guarantee in the existing conditions? We cannot. Can they improve the existing condition? Yes. Can they improve the existing condition without our giving them this concession, which would allow them to obtain foreign money to build this elevator? The answer is, no. We propose to enable them to introduce foreign money, for the purpose of building this elevator, and our property will thereby increase in value instead of decreasing.

Mr. SPROULE. The transaction strikes me in this way. You have a debt due you by the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec, out of which you get no interest to-day, but if they improve the conditions and thus enable themselves to earn sufficient money to pay the interest on their debt, you are foregoing your priority and enabling them to pay instead the interest on the cost of the elevator. If that money did not go to pay interest on the elevator, it would go into the consolidated revenues of the country.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. But they would not have any revenue.

Mr. SPROULE. How does the hon. gentleman know that? We find private corporations offering to put up elevators in Montreal, and we find that private companies have put up elevators in other places, and is it not just as likely that the company would do the same thing in Quebec, if there was any prospect of a profitable trade being done there, provided they got the assistance from that city which other companies have got from other towns. Then the harbour of Quebec would become a more productive harbour, and the country would be entitled to expect payment of the interest on the money we have invested in that harbour. But we are foregoing that prospect by putting another debt ahead of ours, so that if by any means there should be an improvement that would enable the harbour of Quebec to earn money which would come to us we will lose the interest that belongs to the Dominion, and let that go to the parties who build the elevator. In this we are discriminating in favour of one place against others, where the people have taxed themselves to build these elevators.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The real question is whether the Dominion will have to pay anything for this elevator or not. The ex-Minister of Finance says that we are just simply subsidizing this elevator and providing the money to build it. Certainly, if we were providing $200,000 out of the Dominion treasury to build it, we would have to pay the interest, and that would be a charge on the treasury. But how is this a charge on the treasury? We are not paying a cent. We are not giving anything, but simply allowing the improvement to be made. Whether or not the company can raise the money in this way is another question, but if the Great Northern Railway Company can raise the money on their bonds, covered by the guarantee of the Quebec Harbour Commissioners, it is certain that the Dominion does not contribute a cent. The only possible contingency which could justify the argument would be if this were such a profitable transaction that the Quebec Harbour Commissioners are going to earn a lot of money which would come to us, and which we are depriving ourselves of. That is not a reasonable supposition. If we are ever to get a cent of interest out of this investment, it must be by doing something to develop the trade of the port. As the matter stands at present, we are not likely ever to get anything, and we are simply permitting the commissioners to make this arrangement with the Great Northern Railway Company, which will not cost us a cent, and which may have the effect of improving the business of Quebec, and thereby improve our chances of getting paid our debt, which there is not the slightest probability of our ever getting paid under present conditions.

Mr. FOSTER. There are two points involved, and we must not lose sight of the one in discussing the other. Here is a railway corporation which is looking for an immense trade from the west down to the seaboard.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Has the hon. gentleman not spoken before?

Mr. FOSTER. I thought we were in committee?

Mr. SPEAKER. I allowed the discussion to go on because it was anticipating the work of the committee.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think it is worth while to go into committee to-night, and we might continue this discussion when we go into committee.

The PRIME MINISTER. We can pass the second reading now, and take up the discussion in committee on Monday.

Motion agreed to; Bill read the second time.

THE PRIME MINISTER'S INVITATION TO CHICAGO DEMONSTRATION.

Mr. DAVIN. If you will allow me, Mr. Speaker, there is an important statement in an evening paper attributed to the right hon. Prime Minister, which I think should be brought before the House, and which, with your permission, I will read:

Washington, August 5.—F. M. Fitzpatrick, of the Treasury Department, has returned to Washington from Ottawa, where he went at the instance of the committee of citizens of Chicago, in charge of the ceremonies of laying the cornerstone of that city's great post office building next October by President McKinley, to arrange for the formal invitation and expected acceptance of an invitation from Chicago's citizens to the Governor General and Cabinet of Canada to participate in these festivities. Mr. Fitzpatrick is the assistant United States architect for the Chicago building.

To an Associated Press representative he admitted that his official reception at the Canadian capital was slightly chilly, Sir Wilfrid Laurier very candidly telling him that under the present conditions it would be impossible for him to accept or even consider any social invitations to this side of the border.

Mr. Fitzpatrick says that in substance Sir Wilfrid's voluntary statements and answers to queries were as follows:—"As a friend, in whom I am deeply interested, I am very glad to see you, but, frankly, as a representative of the federal or any local government in the United States your visit could not have been more untimely. When I received your first letter I took up the matter with His Excellency the Governor General, and he expressed a sincere desire to visit Chicago, and seemed anxious to accept the invitation, as I was. We would have been delighted to go, and were looking forward to the day with much anticipation. But since then the tone of your press has been so harsh in dealing with the Alaskan boundary question, such misrepresentations have been made about me, that it would be undignified for us to visit you, and I cannot advise His Excellency to go."

Mr. Fitzpatrick said that Sir Wilfrid intimated that in the present state of public feeling in the United States, as indicated by the press, it would not be entirely safe for the Governor General and himself to visit Chicago, as he feared that they might in a great gathering of such a character as the Chicago ceremony be subjected to some unpleasantness or indignity by thoughtless persons. Sir Wilfrid expressed himself as strongly in favour of arbitrating the Alaskan boundary dispute, and concluded the interview as follows:—

"No, much as I regret it, I could not go to Chicago under present conditions, and shall certainly, however a painful duty it may be, also advise His Excellency to decline the invitation, that I know and feel has so kindly been extended to us by the city of Chicago."

Mr. Fitzpatrick secured Sir Wilfrid's promise, however, to reconsider the matter.

I desire to ask if the right hon. gentleman has been correctly reported.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have nothing to say, Mr. Speaker. I beg to move the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 11.45 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 7th August, 1899.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PRAYERS.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 191) further to amend the Act respecting the Senate and House of Commons.

He said: This is simply to provide that when a member of either House belongs to the active militia and is obliged to leave for the purpose of attending a militia camp, he shall not for that reason have his absence from the House counted against him.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time.

POSTMASTER AT PORT GEORGE, ANNAPOLIS.

Mr. MILLS (by Mr. Macdonald, P.E.I.) asked :

Who is the postmaster at Port George, Annapolis County? Has there been any irregularities in connection with said office that required the services of the inspector? If so, what were they, and what is the situation now?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). The postmistress being ill, she required an assistant and the assistant in charge did not promptly remit the money received for money ordered, appearing to think that prompt remittance was not necessary, the postmistress being a woman of ample means. The inspector pointed out the irregularity, and said that any repetition would be followed by a change of postmaster.

MAJOR GENERAL HUTTON—RECOMMENDATIONS OR REPORTS.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON (by Mr. Dugas) asked :

1. Has Major General Hutton made any report or recommendation in favour of, or against, the appointment of any person to command the Militia Army Service Corps? If so, the names?

2. What qualifications, if any, will require to be held by the officer to be appointed to command the Militia Army Service Corps?

3. Will the existing regulations in regard to qualification for appointment to the staff or permanent corps be suspended in the case of the officer to be appointed to command the Militia Army Service Corps?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). Major General Hutton has not been asked by me to make any report or recommendation with reference to any officer in the militia or elsewhere regarding the militia army service corps. In reply to the second question, I beg to say that the matter is under consideration, and I am not able at present to say what the qualifications are.

Mr. FOSTER. This is scarcely an answer to the question.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It is the only one I can give.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY LOCOMOTIVE ENGINEERS.

Mr. STENSON asked :

1. How many locomotive engineers (drivers) are employed on the Intercolonial Railway to-day?

2. How many of these have been taken on since 1st January, 1897?

3. Is it a fact that an engineer, whose position was rendered untenable by persecution practised upon him by officers of the road, in 1890, on account of his political opinions, and who consequently resigned, cannot be taken back upon this road upon which his record is excellent?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). 1. The number of enginemen employed on the Intercolonial Railway to-day is two hundred and twenty-five (225). 2. Seven have been taken on since January 1st, 1897, with the transfer of the Drummond County Railway. Thirty firemen were promoted to the position of engine drivers since January 1st, 1897. 3. Nothing is known to the department about this matter, but if such a case has occurred and one of the enginemen voluntarily retired from the service in 1890, on account of his position having been rendered untenable because of his political opinions, it would be difficult to restore him to his position. The arrangements existing between the department and the trainmen entitle the latter to promotion by seniority, and it would not be practicable to put men back to their former places from positions which possibly they may have filled for years in order to make such a restoration as is referred to.

ST. THOMAS AND AYLMER WEST— CARRIAGE OF MAILS.

Mr. INGRAM asked :

How many times did the Department of the Postmaster General advertise for tenders to carry the mail between St. Thomas and Aylmer West?

How many persons tendered for the contract each time, and what was the price of each tender? Also the date upon which each tender was received by the department?

What were the dates tenders were to close as advertised each time?

Who has the contract for carrying the mail between St. Thomas and Aylmer West?

On what date was the contract made? Did the lowest tender receive the contract?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Tenders were called for twice. On the first occasion, six were received, and on the second occasion eight were received. On the first occasion, the tenders ranged from $140 to $249, all of which, with the exception of the lowest, were received on or before the day fixed for receiving tenders. The lowest was not received within the time fixed, although the tenderer alleges that he had posted it within the time. Each of the tenders, however, was considered excessive, and tenders were again called for. Eight were received, the lowest being for $25, which was accepted. The contract may be signed, but the department has not yet the information, and it is not usual to give the names of the tenders until the completion of the contract.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. DAVIN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to draw attention to the fact that the report of the Minister of Justice to Council in the case of the Queen vs. Skelton, et al., which was promised, has not yet come down.

DR. PATRICK SCOTT—SAUGEEN RESERVE.

Mr. McNEILL. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of the Interior if he can inform the House if the service of Dr. Patrick Scott has been dispensed with in the Saugeen reserve?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not remember hearing the name before, but will inquire and let the hon. gentleman know.

QUEBEC CARTRIDGE FACTORY.

Mr. CLANCY. I have been requested by the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Ingram) to ask the hon. Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden) if he is prepared to give the answer promised some days ago with regard to the employees of the Quebec Cartridge Factory?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The Minister of Militia is not in his seat at the moment. Will the hon. member bring the matter to his attention when my hon. colleague is in the House?

YUKON—MR. J. B. CHARLESON.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to renew my request for certain papers, which I have already asked for three or four times. One is the Order in Council, appointing Mr. Charleson and allocating certain moneys towards that service.

ONTARIO AND RAINY RIVER COMPANY.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I wish to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals to a portion of his remarks in reply to a question put to him by the hon. member for Alberta, and which will be found on page 9776 of "Hansard." The hon. Minister is reported as having said:

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will answer the question of the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver). He desires an expression of opinion from me as to whether any authority which may control the rates over this line will be compelled to take into account the bonded liabilities of the company. While I would not like to speak for the body that may have to determine a question of this kind, I may say, without pretending to determine it now, that I would feel that it would be proper to consider what amount of means had actually gone into this work. While I say that I think it would be in the power of the Govern-nor General in Council absolutely to disregard the question of cost at all, whether the company got any dividend or any return at all upon their investments. The Governor in Council could absolutely disregard that consideration, and I apprehend would feel justified in doing it.

The word "not" is evidently omitted. I understood the hon. Minister to have said that the Government could not absolutely disregard that consideration and would not be justified in doing it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is what I said.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I moved a motion, based on the Minister's statement, as I understood it. If he had not said, "I apprehend would not feel justified in doing it," my motion would be absurd. However, the Minister has already set the matter right.

QUEBEC HARBOUR COMMISSION.

Mr. BERGERON. I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) if he has had an interview with the Minister of Justice concerning the Act relating to the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec, of which I spoke. The right hon. gentleman was to have seen the Minister of Justice and to give us an answer soon; for, if anything is to be done, there is little time to it.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I had an interview with the Minister of Justice on the subject, and find that we have had correspondence upon that particular clause, some in favour of it and some against it; so the Minister of Justice is not able to advise any action to be taken.

Mr. BERGERON. Then, nothing will be done?

The PRIME MINISTER. The Minister of Justice has not advised any action.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. BERGERON. I desire to call the attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) to an address to His Excellency passed by this House on the 24th of April last for some very important documents which were then needed, and are still needed now, but have not yet been brought down—copies of tenders for letting the contracts of certain sections on the Soulanges Canal. It is a very long time, and the return should have been down by this time. It is most important that these papers should be down before the House prorogues, so I call the hon. gentleman's attention to the matter, as I fear it has been forgotten.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, it is not forgotten. But I intimated at the time—or, if not at the time, shortly afterwards—that it was a return that would involve a great deal of labour.

Mr. BERGERON. But that is four months ago.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. Minister must be referring to some other documents, because these that are referred to do not require much labour.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend (Mr. Wallace) may know—

Mr. WALLACE. I am aware what papers the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) refers to.

Mr. BERGERON. The address to which I particularly refer as passed in this House on the 24th April was as follows :—

Address to His Excellency the Governor General for :

(a.) Copy of tenders for the letting of sections one and two of the Soulanges Canal ; also a copy of advertisement of the same, and a statement of the tenders moneyed out.

(b.) A copy of the tenders for the reletting of sections one and two of the Soulanges Canal ; also a copy of advertisement for the same, and a statement of the tenders moneyed out.

(c.) A copy of all correspondence, or Orders in Council, directly or indirectly relating to the letting or reletting of the above sections.

There was another address on the same date for :

(a.) Copy of all correspondence or Orders in Council relating to the entering into an agreement by the Government, or Department of Railways and Canals, for the operating by the same of the Baie des Chaleurs Railway during the fiscal year 1896, and a copy of the contract governing the same.

(b.) A statement containing the period during which the road was so operated, also the total expenses directly or indirectly connected with such operation, and the total revenue derived from the same.

Also :

Address to His Excellency the Governor General for a return showing all the tenders for the furnishing of oils for Government railways during the years 1896 and 1897, as well as all correspondence and Orders in Council directly or indirectly relating to such tenders.

And also :

Address to His Excellency the Governor General for :

(a.) Copy of tenders for the letting of sections four, five, six and seven of the Soulanges Canal ; also a copy of advertisement for the same, and a statement of tenders moneyed out.

(b.) Copies of tenders for the reletting of sections four, five, six and seven of the Soulanges Canal ; also a copy of advertisement for same, and a statement of tenders moneyed out.

(c.) Copy of all correspondence or Orders in Council directly or indirectly relating to the letting or the reletting of the above sections.

My hon. friend (Mr. Blair) can understand by these motions, as I have read them, that there is not a great deal of labour involved in preparing these returns ; so that is why I think they must have been forgotten.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I am inclined to differ with my hon. friend as to the amount of work involved, as I think that in these cases the work would be very considerable. The officers of my department are instructed to prepare returns with all possible despatch. We have been under great pressure in the calling for returns. The officers tell me that there has not been the same body of returns called for many years. I have kept the staff busily engaged, and we are getting out the returns as rapidly as it is possible to furnish them.

Mr. WALLACE. I ventured to predict at the time that this motion was made that this return would not be prepared this session—

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Order. There is nothing before the Chair.

Mr. WALLACE. Then I shall discuss this matter later on.

I. C. R. EXTENSION TO MONTREAL— AGREEMENT WITH THE G. T. R.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair) moved that the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 139) to confirm an agreement entered into by Her Majesty with the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada for the purpose of securing the extension of the Intercolonial Railway system to the city of Montreal be read the second time and agreed to.

He said : Before this motion is disposed of, I wish to make a few remarks with reference to the matter. I realize that the period of the session will not favour any extended observations, so I shall condense what I have to say within the closest possible limits. But, in view of the character of the amendments that have been made by the Senate, and that no explanations with respect to them have been made in this House, I think it would be proper for me to avail myself of this opportunity to point out the nature of those amendments. It will be remembered that in the agreement which was submitted during the present session for confirmation by this Parliament, a clause was inserted known as clause No. 40, which provided that the traffic agreement entered into between the representative officers of the Intercolonial Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway Company should practically be made part of this leasing agreement, and continue for the term for which the lease was made, and should not be altered except by mutual consent of the parties. The Senate, when proceeding to deal with this Bill, professed to discover that this clause was exceedingly objectionable for several reasons—in the first place, that it confirmed the continuance of this traffic agreement for the whole term of the lease, they said, which was a very unwise thing to do, that its terms were of that nature that the interests of the Government and the Intercolonial Railway were likely to be prejudiced unless there was an authority somewhere, on the part of the Government, at all events, entitling it, at any time, to bring the traffic arrangement to a termination. And they professed to regard the terms of it in themselves as exceedingly unfavourable because, they said, in its nature, it gave advantages to the Grand Trunk Railway which ought not to have been given, which gave the company practically the right to receive all the traffic of the Intercolonial Railway which reached Montreal and was destined for points in British Columbia and the North-west and Manitoba, in preference to other roads. They said we were thereby seriously injuring what might be the interests of Canadian roads and leading to the carriage of freights from the maritime provinces to the west through United States territory.

They profess to have discovered that this agreement, after it had passed this House, was in the first place a traffic agreement, and, in the next place, that it contained very grave and serious objections. It is only proper, I think, that I should call particular attention to the fact that this traffic agreement was in the possession of this House when the Grand Trunk Railway Bill was under consideration. Not only was it in possession of this House, and copies of that traffic agreement were laid upon the Table and distributed, but it was discussed in this House; and I think it is a surprise to the gentlemen of this House to learn from the statements made in the Senate Chamber, that the nature of this agreement, its general character and effect, had entirely escaped the notice, in the first place, of the Government, and, in the next place, of members of Parliament. So far from such having been the case, the traffic arrangement was the subject of special discussion in this branch of Parliament. The hon. gentleman who is now leading the Opposition, in the absence of the leader, took occasion to move a resolution in which he desired to alter the agreement in one respect; he wished Parliament to express its views against the agreement in the form in which we had presented it. But so far from entertaining the view which led to these amendments which were passed in the other Chamber, he entertained, and this House entertained, a directly opposite opinion. The opinion of the Senate was that this agreement was too permanent in its character, that it had all the elements of durability, that it was going to last through the whole term for which the lease had been made; whereas, in this House, after gentlemen opposite had critically examined this traffic arrangement, they came to the conclusion that the way in which it had been referred to in the lease was not of such a character as to ensure the permanency of the arrangement. It was not that the arrangement was for too long a period, it was not that it was too firm and fixed, but it was that it was possible for the

Mr. BLAIR.

Government to change the arrangement which was so desirable and so much in the interests of the Intercolonial Railway; it was possible for the Grand Trunk Railway, on the one hand, and the Intercolonial Railway authorities, on the other, to agree together to rescind this arrangement and thereby to do a great injury to the public interest. So you will see that there was no omission at all upon the part of hon. gentlemen opposite, or upon the part of the Government duly to consider this question. They did consider it carefully, and came to the conclusion that the traffic arrangement was a beneficial one, and that the more fixed and certain it was, the more it would be in the general interest of the country. So far from this traffic arrangement having been entered into without due consideration, it is proper for me to state that the subject was thoroughly thought out by the officers of the Intercolonial Railway, and so far as I am personally concerned, received the fullest possible consideration which I could give the question. We came to the conclusion that under this arrangement we were receiving, and securing to us a most substantial arrangement; and it was with extreme reluctance, I may say, and after a good deal of negotiation only, that the Grand Trunk Railway Company agreed finally to concede this privilege to us. It was not an advantage to the Grand Trunk Railway Company to enter into such an arrangement, because they thereby committed themselves for all time to come, or, at all events, for the duration of this lease, if the Government choose to hold them to it,—they committed themselves to delivering to us all the traffic that was intended for points on the Intercolonial Railway, irrespective of the amount of traffic which we might be able to give them in return; because, we were aware, as everybody is aware who knows the relative quantity of business which is done by the two roads, that the Intercolonial Railway business, that which originated upon the Intercolonial Railway, and would be destined for points west, would be very small in proportion, as compared with the amount of business which we receive from the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and that the advantages in this respect were on our side rather than on the side of the Grand Trunk Railway Company. These questions, however, do not appear to have received very much consideration in the other Chamber. Those gentlemen seem to have had in view every interest except the interest of the Intercolonial Railway—

Mr. FOSTER. Order.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Or at least those of them that were urging this matter seem to have had in view and to be moved by interests outside of the Intercolonial Railway; whereas, the arrangement was made having regard exclusively to the interests of the Government railway and the public.

Now, Sir, the question which is before the committee is not one which, I presume, will give rise to any controversy at this stage. This amendment will be accepted by the Government. I have no intention of asking Parliament to refuse its assent to it; not, however, because I think it is any improvement upon the arrangement as it was made, not because I think that it is not a disadvantage to the contract as it was submitted to Parliament, but because rather than have the arrangement defeated, rather than have the confirmation of the lease withheld, I think it is better that we should accept the proposed amendments, even though they are a blot upon the agreement which has been entered into. We accept them rather than take the consequences of having the legislation defeated for this year. But when it is alleged that the advantages which are under this agreement going to accrue to the Intercolonial, are of such a nature that we ought rather to hold in our hands the power to terminate this traffic arrangement at any time, and leave it as traffic arrangements ordinarily are left, that is to say, leaving in the hands of the Government power to terminate, it will be, perhaps, of some interest to hon. members, and it may be of some interest to the country, to know just what the volume of business is which originates upon the Intercolonial Railway, and which is intended for points west of Montreal, or, in other words, for points in Manitoba, British Columbia, and on the Pacific coast, because it was upon that view that the argument was chiefly made that this arrangement was not in the interest of the country. It was claimed that if this arrangement was left to stand permanently, freights which otherwise ought to find all Canadian routes to the west, would be diverted through United States territory, and that Canadian railroads would be deprived of the earnings which ought, according to the views these gentlemen put forward, to belong to them in preference to any other road with which the Grand Trunk Railway might have connection. Now, to point out to the House how very unimportant and trifling a consideration that is, I will just show, for a moment, what the volume of that business is. I take the statistics that have been furnished me for the year past, for the full period of twelve months ending on the 31st May, 1899, and I find that all the freights which have been received upon the Intercolonial Railway for shipment to points in Manitoba, the North-west Territories or British Columbia, aggregate only 76 tons, and that the gross earnings of the Intercolonial Railway upon that freight only amounted to $218.72. Now, imagine an agreement, made after due consideration, after the questions had been weighed and considered from every point of view affecting the interest of the Intercolonial Railway, imagine an agreement of that kind being set aside for the reason that the business which has originated in the maritime provinces for British Columbia, Manitoba and the North-west Territories would, perhaps, under the operation of this agreement, find its way into those provinces, possibly through some American connection, and for a portion of the distance through American territory when the whole gross tonnage for the past twelve months only amounted to 76 tons, and when, of this 76 tons, four-fifths consisted of settlers' effects. It may possibly be, although I cannot see it, that, in future, and perhaps long before these 99 years shall have elapsed, that condition of things may have changed. There may be an immense increase in the volume of business originating on the Intercolonial Railway and intended for Manitoba, the North-west Territories and British Columbia, and the argument that is made is that it would be a very grievous condition of things that for 50, or 100, or 200 or 600 miles of the distance, these freights, so originating on the Intercolonial Railway, should be carried through American territory. I venture to say there is nothing in the argument that has been made. I refer to this agreement and I am justified in saying that upon the face of it, if the business from the Intercolonial Railway for the west should greatly increase, if it should be a thousand times more than it is to-day, there would be no injury to this country or to Canadian railways. I say that for the reason that, under this arrangement, it is in the power of the shippers of those freights to direct the route by which they shall go. It is for them entirely to settle the question of their route, and if, in any particular lines of manufacture, or of goods, there should be a large increase in the volume of business, originating in the maritime provinces and intended for Manitoba, the North-west Territories or British Columbia, it would be the simplest thing in the world for the people who are concerned, to direct the way by which these goods should be routed to the west. They can easily direct that these goods shall be taken over Canadian routes. Even though the freights, originating in the maritime provinces intended for these western points, should be delivered to the Grand Trunk at Montreal, the Grand Trunk has its traffic arrangements with the Canadian Pacific Railway and can deliver them to the Canadian Pacific Railway at North Bay so that the Canadian Pacific Railway could carry by its own line, through Canadian territory, any shipments which were consigned by it. It appears to me that the objection which was taken to the original arrangement was not well considered, and many of the criticisms that were passed in this House, and elsewhere, upon that arrangement with the Grand Trunk, including the traffic arrangement, which have resulted in the amendment to this Bill, are not well founded. There is another matter I wish to speak of in connection with this present Bill. We have heard, from the moment that this project was first mentioned, the gloomiest predictions in regard to the result of this policy. They have been made from time to time, and I see that the hon. leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), renewed the statement, at Toronto, the other night, that he had previously made. He committed himself to a statement to the following effect, and I will read it in order that I may call more particular attention to it. The hon. gentleman said, as reported in the "Mail and Empire," of August 1st:

Sir Wilfrid Laurier says further that they brought the Intercolonial Railway into Montreal by the Drummond County Railway purchase. Do you think that that makes good the boasts that they have done anything to promote the interests of Canada when I tell you that all that has done for Canada is to make a deficit of the Intercolonial Railway, to be paid out of your taxes, about $200,000 a year more than it was before.

The hon. gentleman makes this statement in view of what was said in the earlier portion of this session by me, that no deficit would occur on the Intercolonial Railway under the new policy. That prediction was not only made by the hon. gentleman but it was made by other hon. gentlemen opposite, and persistently made, and they declined to acknowledge or admit that the effect of the new arrangement would be otherwise than to add to what is called the normal or usual deficit of between $50,000 and $60,000 a year, the amount of the rental we were obliged to pay under this agreement. I am in a position to inform the House as to the actual results, not from a calculation, not by an estimate, but after the accounts for the year have been fully made up, and I think it will perhaps be agreeable to the House to know what the result has been after one year's full operation of the Intercolonial Railway under the arrangement which this Bill will confirm and effectuate in connection with the extension of the road to Montreal. The gross receipts for the year ended the 30th June, 1899, were $3,738,331.44. The working expenses—I mean the whole outlay for the year ended on a like date, the 30th June, 1899, amounted to $3,675,686.21, leaving, as a result of the year's operations, a net surplus of $62,645.23. Now, the usual and ordinary deficit upon the Intercolonial Railway in years past, and until this Montreal extension was brought into operation, was from $50,000 to $60,000. I think that this has been the normal deficit within the last eight or ten years. For the year 1897-98 the deficit was much larger than that; it amounted to $209,000, but I explained, I think, to the entire satisfaction of the House, that, during that year, there was a proper and legitimate reason for the deficit being larger than in previous years. I will not repeat that explanation, because I trust it is within the recollection of hon. gentlemen opposite. I expressed the decided opinion to the House that that condition of things would not continue because we were obliged that year to recover from the system of procrastinating and postponing and delaying expenditures on the Intercolonial, which expenditures and outlays should, in the interest of the road, be made in the earlier part of the season.

Mr. HAGGART. Does this include the payments to the Grand Trunk Railway and the Drummond County Railway?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I shall deal with that. The $3,675,686.21; the expenditure for the year, includes $210,000 of rent for the leased lines. Every dollar of that rent is paid; all the charges in connection with our proportion of repairs and maintenance on the Drummond County has been paid, so that we come out at the end of the year, having cleared our debts and having paid our rents, with a net surplus of $62,645.

Mr. FOSTER. No more than that?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No more than that.

Mr. FOSTER. In the growing time?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) says, "no more than that," but I should think that a difference of between $300,000 and $400,000 between the amount of the deficit as predicted by gentlemen opposite, and the amount of the surplus which we actually have, ought to be sufficient to satisfy the most rapacious gentleman opposite. The leader of the Opposition predicted that the deficit would be $260,000, but, as a fact, the surplus is $62,000, so that that hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) was $312,000 out, according to his modest calculation. I may take one moment, Mr. Speaker, to emphasize what appears to me to be the value which may be attached to the extension of this railway system to Montreal. It was represented that when the Intercolonial Railway was extended you were getting a worthless piece of road, a road that would produce no business, that had no local value, and that would give no additional earnings. That was represented from the beginning to the end of this controversy, and yet, adding the $210,000 of rent we paid, the $62,000 of surplus which we show, and the $60,000 (in round figures) of the previous deficit, you have nearly $400,000 difference in the result between the operation of the Intercolonial Railway prior to the extension, and after the extension, within the last 12 months, that the extension has been in force. I intend to furnish proof to hon. gentlemen opposite, so that it will not be open for them to say that this result has been brought about by any manipulation of the accounts, by any reduction of the expenditures, by any means which would not be proper and legitimate in the natural operation of the railway itself. I think I can prove that by some figures to which I will call your attention. There was one direction in which perhaps it might have been possible to have improved the showing by cutting off expenditures, and that direction would have been in the outlay made upon the maintenance of way and works, which covers all that is done in the way of putting down rails and fastenings, timber repairs, repairs of wharfs and buildings, ballasting, track repairing, and charges of that kind. In all these directions, if the expenditures were scamped, if they were kept down to the lowest possible notch, a saving might be effected, which, while it would not tend to better the property, would have for one year, or perhaps more, a favourable showing on the financial operations of the railway. I want to call the attention of the House to the actual figures for the year which has just passed. I shall state what the expenditure was for maintenance of way and works on that period, and what the similar expenditure was for the last year the Conservative Government were in power. During the past year the amount laid out for this purpose was $849,322 as against $774,556 for the year ending 30th June, 1896.

Mr. FOSTER. When the Minister quotes the total expenditure and the total income, does that include the Prince Edward Island Railway?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No. It is the Intercolonial Railway I am speaking of. You will see there is a difference between the amount expended last year, 1898-99, and the amount expended for the year 1895-96, of $75,000, in round figures. That is to say, we expended $75,000 more on this account last year than did hon. gentlemen opposite the last year they were in power.

Mr. FOSTER. You might give the receipts and expenditures of the Prince Edward Island Railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not got them. I am not dealing with that road.

Mr. FOSTER. That is unfortunate.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think it is at all unfortunate. As the hon. gentleman knows, the accounts of the Prince Edward Island Railway have never been kept in connection with the Intercolonial Railway accounts. They are two totally different roads, and the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal has nothing whatever to do with the Prince Edward Island road. I do not know what the results of last year on the Prince Edward Island road are yet, as the accounts have not reached me. If I had them I would be glad to produce them if they were asked for, but I would not introduce them in this discussion, because they do not belong legitimately to it, and the result would be simply to confuse matters.

Mr. HAGGART. Have you got the expenditure on capital account for last year.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not the expenditure on capital account.

Mr. HAGGART. Pshaw!

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. But I have the expenditure for the year on the maintenance of way and works, which is not capital, which is purely revenue. It does not affect the question of the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal in any way to say that we have expended so much money on capital account. True, we have expended money on capital account, but we did not expend very much last year. There is no capital expenditure included in these items which go to make up the $849,322. What I want to show is, that last year we spent $75,000 more for the maintenance of our way and works on the Intercolonial Railway than was spent in the year ending 30th June, 1896, and, notwithstanding that we did spend this out of revenue, we have the favourable financial showing of the Intercolonial Railway for last year which I have stated to the House.

Mr. HAGGART. The Minister of Railways does not seem to be anxious to get this Bill through this session of Parliament. The Bill was considered dead and buried, and it had been accepted as such by all parties, and yet the Minister, in moving the adoption of the Senate amendments has taken the opportunity of making a long speech. First of all, he went out of his way to attack the Senate for the amendment they made to the Bill, and he charges that they had the interests of other parties in mind rather than the interests of the Intercolonial Railway. Well, Sir, the Senate were perfectly justified in the ground they took, and the country will support them in their action. The Minister told us that the traffic arrangements were before the House and thoroughly criticized when this Bill was going through. I beg to differ from that statement. We thought the traffic arrangement attached to the agreement was the same as the traffic arrangement attached to the preceding agreement, and we did not know there was any difference until it was drawn out of the Minister (Mr. Blair) by the remarks of the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster).

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Will the hon. gentleman pardon me. He was put in personal possession of a copy of the traffic agreement, days before the question was under consideration in the committee.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) must have had a copy in his hands.

Mr. HAGGART. I was put in possession of the agreement entered into with the Grand Trunk Railway, but the traffic arrangement was not attached to it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It was sent in with it.

Mr. HAGGART. Whether it was or not I did not get it; and not until the debate was well on did I know anything about the difference in the traffic arrangement. The hon. gentleman said that when you come to analyse the amount of the Senate's objection to the Bill, you find that it is infinitesimal. The hon. gentleman does not state that one of the Senate's principal objections was the transfer of all the unconsigned freight on the Intercolonial to the Grand Trunk. Every other railway in the country had a right to object to such an arrangement as that. It virtually amounted to handing over the Intercolonial Railway to the Grand Trunk. What better possible arrangement for the Grand Trunk could have been made? It gets all the unconsigned freight of the Intercolonial, and it gets an arrangement by which all its freight is carried over the Intercolonial to the maritime province ports at exceptional rates. The Grand Trunk has this advantage under that arrangement, that the Government work the railway, while the Grand Trunk will not be responsible for any deficits that may occur on it. The hon. gentleman says the Senate committed a serious crime—in what? In providing that the Government need not consider this as a permanent arrangement, but shall have the right to terminate it on giving six month's notice; and that power is given to the Government alone. The Government may continue the arrangement for all time; but what the Senate provides is that instead of being bound by it for 99 years, the Government shall have the option of terminating it at the end of a year. This alteration is very much in favour of the Government. The hon. Minister takes this opportunity of bringing down his statement with reference to the Intercolonial Railway. When the Intercolonial estimates were under consideration, he stated that the figures would show a greater surplus this year than had ever been shown before, amounting to about $62,000. How are we to judge whether that is an actual surplus or not? The hon. gentleman has been charging to capital account expenditures which have always hitherto been charged to revenue. We do not know what the expenditure for last year on capital account is at all. When we come to analyse the figures, we may find that instead of there being a surplus, there is an actual deficit. If the hon. gentleman expends $1,500,000 on capital account, a great portion of which I contend should be charged to revenue account, it is very easy for him to show a surplus. The hon. gentleman could easily have given us a statement of the receipts and expenditures on the Intercolonial this year, together with the amount expended on capital account. He does not choose to do it. He comes down in the dying days of the session with a bald statement of the receipts and expenditures, and says there is a surplus of $62,000. I suppose we have to rest content with these figures, hoping that we may have an opportunity to analyse them at another session. But I object to this kind of proceeding. The hon. gentleman has no right to put that statement before the country without giving the Opposition an opportunity to criticise it. Under this arrangement, the Grand Trunk are in a far better position than they would be if they owned the Intercolonial, because they are to receive from the Intercolonial all the unconsigned freight coming from the maritime provinces, while they will not be liable for the deficits of the Intercolonial, which have been the rule on that railway with the exception of two or three years; and when the Senate tries to protect the interests of the country in some small degree, the hon. gentleman tries to minimize the effect of its amendment, because, in bringing down a statement of the amount of freight which he says will be affected, he confines it to the freight carried to Manitoba and the North-west, while all the freight of the Intercolonial which is delivered at the port of Montreal, will be subject to that arrangement. It is a discrimination against all the other Canadian roads in favour of the Grand Trunk in regard to Canadian freight, and it certainly is a discrimination in favour of American roads in regard to freight that is to be delivered in Manitoba and the North-west.

Mr. BLAIR.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is quite clear that it is quite impossible for the hon. gentleman to be fair in a discussion of matters connected with the Intercolonial. I do not desire to lengthen the session one minute more than I think is necessary to reply to the allegations which the hon. gentleman has made. He says that the Minister of Railways should have been able to lay before the House a statement of the expenditure on capital account, in order to enable it to form an accurate idea whether he had not loaded down that account with expenditures that ought to have been charged to revenue. I frankly admit that if the Minister of Railways followed the example of the hon. gentleman and his predecessors, it would be necessary to have the items of the expenditure; for we know that the hon. gentleman loaded the side-tracks at Moncton with cars that were partly worn out, and left them there without putting them in proper condition to do the work, and brought new ones and charged their cost to capital account, simply because he wanted to reduce the working expenses. We know that his predecessors, when they were running the Intercolonial, charged such items as snowsheds to capital account, in order if possible to show that the Intercolonial was paying working expenses. We know perfectly well that that is the system under which they manage the Intercolonial. Now what are the facts? My hon. friend has said clearly that during the last year he spent over $73,000 more on permanent way than was spent by his predecessors during the previous year, which is a very good indication that at least the road-bed and the general condition of the road is in an improved condition compared to what it was under the late regime.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman has said that I laid on the sidings old cars and did not repair them, and then bought new ones and charged them to capital account. How that affects the result I do not know, and I would like to know where the hon. gentleman got his information, because I distinctly deny his statement.

Mr. McMULLEN. I will tell the hon. gentleman how it affects the result.

Mr. HAGGART. But the hon. gentleman's statement is not correct.

Mr. McMULLEN. Where you have old cars and in place of getting them repaired and charging the repairs to working expenses, you lay those old cars to one side and buy new ones, which you charge to capital account, you, of course, make the revenue show better to the extent which the repairs to the old ones would have cost and which would have gone against running expenditures.

Mr. HAGGART. All I can say is that the hon. gentleman has been wrongly informed.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. Minister of Railways will be able, through his manager, to ferret out the truth.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman has the facts at his hand. He can turn up the accounts and show whether I charged any new cars to capital account.

Mr. McMULLEN. They do not show the number of cars you did not approve of. With regard to the Senate, my hon. friend says it did very good service to Canada when it interfered with the matter as it did. Nobody has objection to a clause being inserted providing that the Government may terminate the contract at the end of six months or a year, if we could reckon on always having the Government to act in the interests of the country, but if we should have a Government disposed to play into the hands of other railway companies, or out of pure mischief, with the desire of showing that their predecessors did not do right, give notice to terminate a contract that was advantageous and from year to year would be more advantageous, they could take advantage of that clause. An unscrupulous Government might be influenced by improper motives to terminate a valuable contract that from year to year was growing more valuable. In the second place my hon. friend says that, under this contract, we have covenanted to hand over to the Grand Trunk Railway all the freight. But that applies only to the unconsigned freight.

Mr. HAGGART. That is what I said—the unconsigned freight.

Mr. McMULLEN. The unaddressed freight—that is the freight which it is not stipulated shall go by any particular line from Montreal. But I would like to ask, would that prevent the Canadian Pacific Railway canvassing the maritime provinces for freight? Not at all. They can send their agents to the maritime provinces and along the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway and enter into covenant with any shipper to send his freight, no matter of what character, over the Canadian Pacific Railway instead of the Grand Trunk Railway. That only applies to the freight which is not billed to go over any particular line after it reaches Montreal, and in such cases the Government have the right to send it by the Grand Trunk Railway. There is nothing about that except that it clearly shows that Parliament and the Senate are beginning to be influenced altogether too far by railway magnates who come around here and exercise influence in connection with such legislation, and I contend that the day is not far distant when there will be a stop put to the influence exercised by those magnates. The representatives of the people and the Senate should put a stop to that sort of thing and be in a position to act impartially in the interests of the people, uninfluenced by the selfish interests or considerations of these railway companies and enable the country to get fair-play.

I am quite satisfied that the bargain is an admirably good one, and I am quite satisfied that, in the course of a few years, with the advantages we are now enjoying, owing to our connection with the city of Montreal, the Intercolonial Railway will show a far better return and thus establish the wise and statesmanlike conduct of the Government in making the arrangement they have effected. For years we have been losing millions of dollars, but I am confident that in the future, a better showing will be made, and we cannot take this year as a criterion, because there are always expenses in consummating an arrangement such as we have entered into during the first year, which will not have to be met in the succeeding years.

It is very satisfactory indeed to find the hon. Minister of Railways able to show a surplus of $63,000 to $64,000 this year, which can be taken as an indication that every year the surplus will continue to grow, if it is not crippled or limited by mischievous legislation or by interference by the other House. I am confident that the last of our deficits has been seen, and that in future we will enjoy surpluses, which will give some return to the people for the enormous expenditure they have incurred on this road.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman's own admission very largely discounts the force of his argument. He admits frankly that it would be valuable to have information of how much has been expended on capital account and how much on repairs, and if the Minister of Railways had followed the example of his predecessors, we would have had that long before this. The only logical conclusion from the hon. gentleman's remarks is that he has such unbounded confidence in our present railway management that he regards any information as quite unnecessary, and is willing to take everything the hon. Minister says on trust. But if, as he admits, it was necessary that we should have the information as to how much was charged against capital account by the predecessors of the present Minister of Railways, it follows that it is equally necessary at present. If he is desirous of getting at the correct facts, in order to determine that the present arrangement was a good one for the country he must certainly admit that it was essential we should have had that information when discussing that arrangement. That is what occurred to me when the hon. Minister made his statement, but he gave us very little information, and we were utterly in the dark as to how much was expended on capital account and how much on repairs and maintenance.

The hon. gentleman says that we now have the earnings before us, and, therefore, have no grounds for complaint. But we had not these before us when we were discussing the arrangement, although we asked for them a great many times. The hon. Minister has given them to us now, but this is the first time he has given them to the House. He did not give them in the debate we had some two weeks ago.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) is in error, if he will allow me to say so. I did furnish the statement of the earnings up to the date we were then discussing, or as nearly that date as the figures were then available for. But what was asked was a statement of the earnings and outlay on a particular part of the road. I could not furnish that, but I furnished the details of all earnings up to the end of May.

Mr. SCHULLEN.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the hon. gentleman to refer to the aggregate of earnings over the whole road, and not expenses or earnings over that part of the road known as the Drummond County section.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I furnished that.

Mr. SPROULE. If that was given, it was when I was absent, because I had no recollection of it having been given to the House. If the hon. Minister says he gave it, of course, I accept the statement, and take it to be correct. But the difficulties that we had to contend with in the matter, then, could not be effectually overcome with the information at our disposal at the time. I only rose to say that it was necessary, under any management, to have the information of how much was spent on capital account and how much for maintenance, and that it is equally important to have it now, as it was at any other time.

Mr. FOSTER. It is somewhat surprising that at this hour of the session the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) should participate in a debate on Intercolonial Railway matters with half-made statements, which, of course, cannot be allowed to go altogether without remark. It would be as easy for him to bring down a statement of capital expenditure as of expenditure on current account and of revenue. A problem would then have been presented which, in the light of all the statements of the last two or three years, might have been studied with some fairness by the House. Any one who was present when the Intercolonial Railway estimates were going through last year and this year, is aware of the fact that in case after case expenditures which were formerly paid out of revenue, were by the hon. gentleman charged to capital account. We went over the particular cases, and they were threshed out in the House. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) admitted in case after case that this was the fact. This year the statements were gone through and criticised by the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart), who made it perfectly clear that a very large proportion of the expenditure which the hon. gentleman is seeking this year to expend on the Intercolonial Railway, and is charging to capital account, is for a class of work which formerly were charged to income, and not to capital; and the only excuse the hon. gentleman could give was, that this year he was making larger expenditures than usual on these services throughout the line, and it was impossible to take the money out of revenue account. It is, therefore, an admission that he is pursuing a plan different in many respects from what was pursued before, a plan which destroys entirely the value of deductions from figures as they have been and as they will appear in the public reports. It is impossible for us to get at the truth, unless we know the items of capital expenditure, so as to be able to see how far things are now paid for out of capital which were formerly paid out of income. And so, the flourish with which the hon. gentleman announces his very moderate surplus of $62,000 in this growing time, is not justified until we can get at the figures and make the comparison thorough and complete. The hon. gentleman is very glad—and so am I—that he has a surplus of $62,000. He imputes it all to the fact that he has made the extension to Montreal. But he begs the question entirely, and furnishes no proof of it. The whole history of the year in reference to railway companies is against it. In every other railway in Canada, and, I think, in Great Britain and the United States, there has been this year a very large increase in the receipts, because of the growth in the business of the country and the greater quantity of goods to be moved. My hon. friend from Westmorland (Mr. Powell) gave from the reports the figures of increases in the great railways. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) and the members of the Government have stated over and over again that the business of the country had largely improved. And we know that it has improved, and that the quantity of goods to be transported is larger; so, it is only fair to believe that the Intercolonial Railway would enjoy some portion of that increase in business, and so secure greater revenues. In all this year of improved business the hon. gentleman is able to show an increase of only a little over $100,000—that is, he has a surplus of $62,000, where last year there was a deficit of about $59,000—altogether a betterment of about $120,000. If he will consult the railway reports, he will find that, if the increase of receipts on the Intercolonial Railway had been in comparison with that of other railways, he would have made that amount out of the accretion of business and the increase of produce to be transported. So, he begs the question entirely, when he puts the increase down either to his superior management or to the fact that he had made an arrangement with the Grand Trunk and has bought the Drummond County road.

The hon. gentleman went out of his way to attack the Senate. The less he says about that the better; in fact, the less he and his party say about the Senate in the country, the better for them. The sooner they allow the people to forget the extravagant bargain that they proposed, and the extraordinary reduction which the interposition of the Senate has brought about in this bargain, the better for themselves as a party. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that this country feels that it owes a debt of gratitude to the Senate for its interference in this matter. That fact had not a little to do with my right hon. friend's (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) shelving of the crusade which was to be undertaken throughout this country against the Senate, to its final extinction, its utter annihilation. That is laid aside—why? Because the Senate has proved its usefulness, and proved it in a very substantial manner, in relation to this very question, proved it to the discomfiture of my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) and his project, and to the discomfiture of the Government as well. Now, the hon. Minister tried to buttress his position, with regard to the Senate's interference with reference to the traffic clause, with the assertion that that clause was fully discussed in this House. But it was not fully discussed in this House. The hon. gentleman knows that we were kept here one whole day, and a night, and half the next day, in discussion on this Bill, before we came to the traffic section at all, on some of the first sections of the Bill, because of the refusal of the hon. gentleman to bring down information which had been asked for, and which he had promised to bring down—all that long day and night, and the next day of the session—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It was eleven o'clock at night before we got into committee.

Mr. FOSTER. Very well, my hon. friend remembers it was a period of some length and of some struggle. My hon. friend, like that celebrated quadruped in the old story, had to come down at last.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I remember very well that when these gentlemen made it clear that what they wanted was a statement of the engine and car mileage on the Intercolonial Railway and on the Grand Trunk Railway relatively, it was too late at night for me to telegraph to the Grand Trunk Railway people to get it, and I did not wire until the following morning. It was eleven o'clock at night before this subject came up.

Mr. FOSTER. Does not the hon. gentleman know that fully six days beforehand he took his own pencil and paper and, at the dictation of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden), he took down just what was wanted, and if he lost that slip of paper, it was embalmed in the "Hansard," and he could have read it the next day. And yet six days intervened after that day, and when the debate came on the hon. gentleman did not have it. To argue that he did not know what was wanted, is not a compliment to his intelligence. I was going on to state that that long session was taken up entirely with preceding sections of the Bill, and taken up almost entirely in endeavouring to press the hon. gentleman to bring down the information, and when at last an arrangement was made, in the forenoon of the second day, by which the information having been brought down, we were to finish the debate within an hour or so, then it became impossible to give any lengthy investigation to the succeeding articles of that agreement, and the fact was that they were passed over almost without investigation and debate. I myself, however, brought up the matter of a traffic arrangement. Now, the hon. gentleman tried to induce the House to believe that I and those who voted with me were so enamoured of that traffic arrangement that we proposed to make it impossible to have it changed without the agreement of the House. That cannot be borne out by the "Hansard." I took up but one single feature of that traffic arrangement which struck me; I said that there was one good thing in it as compared with the 1897 arrangement, that is, that the Grand Trunk Railway was to make the transfer point at Montreal instead of at Lévis, and that would give additional carriage. I said: That is one betterment we have got. Now, we have to pay a rental for perpetuity; but ten days after this Bill becomes law the Minister has it in his power to cancel that feature of the traffic arrangement, and to permit the Grand Trunk Railway to transfer at Lévis if they wished. That was the point to which I directed my attention, and the sole point; that was the point I saw quickly, even though I was not an expert. It takes a man who knows more than I do about traffic arrangements, to fathom the subtleties of a traffic arrangement and all its consequences between two great lines of railway. I do not want to weary the House by extracts, but I could read extracts which you will find on pages 5066 and 5067, in the remarks I made on that subject. The sole point I was making was this, that I wanted to preclude the possibility of the Government disturbing that one feature of the traffic arrangement by which we did get a betterment over the past arrangement, ten days or any time after the Bill had become law; and my ground was that we should not change that without the sanction of Parliament. That was all that I argued for, and that was the reason that I argued for it, and any business man can see that that is a cogent reason, and that it would easily strike one. With reference to the other effects of that traffic arrangement, which practically delivered up the maritime provinces for ninety-nine years to the tender mercies of one road, and cut out practically every other road from participation, these were not the features of that arrangement which were discussed in this House, and they were not the features which I was discussing. The hon. member for North Wellington thinks it sufficient if a person consigns freight, and has the power as a shipper of saying which way it will go. It has been acknowledged by the Minister of Railways and Canals, and by hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House who understand the question, that that is a very inefficient precaution, because the shipper, in the first place, has the disadvantage in making routes, and in the second place, in nine cases out of ten, it never occurs to the shipper to do it.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. McMULLEN. In nine cases out of ten he does.

Mr. FOSTER. Very well, we will leave it that way. When two such eminent authorities as the hon. member for North Wellington and myself disagree, there is no use arguing any longer, we must leave it to the intellect of the House to decide. However, I take my opinion largely from what railway men have said, both inside and outside of the House. Now, that was the feature that I objected to. We tried to cure it on this side of the House by saying that if such a thing takes place and if that is abrogated, at least it should not be done until the Government and the House sanction it. But to say that because of that statement, and the resolution I offered, therefore, this side of the House agreed that the great good of that arrangement was that it should be perpetual, is no proof at all; the right hon. gentleman knows that quite as well as I do. Now, I deprecate starting a live discussion on a dead issue. We did not intend to discuss it at all, and the Minister might very well have taken the little dose so wisely and so gently administered, and said nothing about it. But he has chosen to bring up the subject of the expenditures and receipts of the Intercolonial Railway and its management; and once that is started, no one knows where it will stop.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I just want to make one remark. I notice that all the gentlemen on the other side who have spoken to-day, are particularly dissatisfied with the results which I have been able to show to the House following the operation of the Montreal extension for the last twelve months, not because they are comparatively small, but because they are so large.

Mr. SPROULE. I desire to correct the hon. gentleman, I was not dissatisfied at all.

Mr. FOSTER. I may correct the hon. gentleman by saying that I rejoice with him that they were so much, and I am sorry they have not been more.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman asked me why I did not give more information. I have given to the House all the information which has the slightest connection one way or the other with the operation of the Intercolonial Railway in the past twelve months. I have given a statement of the earnings for the year and of the expenditure for the year, made up exactly as they have been made up through all the years past, so far as I know, and made up as the officers of the department have been in the habit of making them.

I have made no statement here in regard to the capital expenditure of the year, because capital expenditure has no connection in one shape or the other, or in any form, with the matter of income expenditure. If my hon. friends were to be supplied with the information, which they are now desiring, and which has reference to the capital expenditure, it would not affect the balance as being now compared. My hon. friend, I apprehend, would not propose to add the capital expenditure to the expenditure on revenue account. That would scarcely be fair. It has never been done in the past; it was never done by the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) during his regime. It is not done now, and it would be a misleading and unfair course to pursue. I would have no objection if these accounts and facts had been furnished to me, but they have not been. The best I could do was to bring here a statement of the expenditure on revenue account for the past twelve months, which I have furnished to the House, and the House is now in a position in which it can make a complete and fair comparison with past years. I think the result of the comparison is not unfavourable to the administration of the road for the past twelve months. Let me add one other remark to the subject of this capital expenditure. If I had shown an outlay, in respect to maintenance and repairs upon the Intercolonial out of capital during the past year, the hon. gentleman might have said: You have borrowed money on capital account and spent it on repairs and maintenance and added it to your income expenditure. In that case, it might have been material for me to have produced a statement of what the expenditure was on capital account. But that is not the fact. I am not showing a reduced expenditure on revenue account; I am showing an increased expenditure on revenue account, so that, for the purposes of comparison during the last twelve months, it is shown the expenditure on maintenance and repairs was $75,000 more than was expended by my predecessor. But, every portion of it came out of income. If there had been any expenditure out of capital for maintenance and repairs, and I am not aware that there was, it would have increased the disparity between the years of the administration of my predecessor and the present administration, and I would be justly charged with very great impropriety in attempting to make unfavourable comparisons by improper means. But I did not do it. When I have shown the House what we have taken out of income for the year, and when I say that we have spent $75,000 more on repairs and maintenance than my predecessor, where does the question of capital expenditure come in? My hon. friends are deceiving themselves if they imagine that this has any bearing upon the question of capital expenditure, and I think further that when the accounts are furnished, showing what the capital expenditure was, they will find that, during the last twelve months, there was nothing laid out which could legitimately be said to have been a class of expenditure which should come within income charges. I have incurred a good deal of capital expenditure because we have had to provide additional cars and engines and extend the sidings, which extensions and equipment were necessary to handle the increased business. What I say is this, and the argument and inference are irresistible, that these hon. gentlemen, who have been condemning this transaction and saying that the result would be a loss to the country, and that there would be a bigger deficit than ever, must be confounded by the results which are here disclosed. We have shown that there was $210,000 paid for rent, every dollar of which has come out of the road, and that there was a surplus of $62,000, which makes $272,000. The nominal deficit in the past was between $50,000 and $60,000, but take it at $50,000, and that would make $322,000 of a difference between the result of the operation of the road for the year 1899 and the year preceding four years past.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, I understood the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) to have stated to this House, on a former occasion, that he could make no exact statement, because the cost of running the Drummond County road and the earnings were not kept separately.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman is quite right.

Mr. WILSON. Well, now the hon. gentleman attributes the whole surplus of the Intercolonial Railway to the acquisition of the Drummond County Railway. How can he know what the result has been if he cannot keep track of the earnings of the Drummond County Railway? I think if the hon. gentleman wants to take credit for the Drummond County in that way he should bring the figures down to this House.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman must know that, at no time in the past history of the Intercolonial, was there more than $30,000 or $35,000 of a surplus and I believe then only once.

Mr. WILSON. This is the growing time.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. But does the hon. gentleman say that there never was a period in the history of these provinces when the times were as prosperous as they are to-day? During the eighteen years that hon. gentlemen were in power and the Intercolonial was running, do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that there was no time when the Intercolonial was as prosperous or when the general business of the country was as prosperous as it is now? I say we have had prosperous times in the maritime provinces, and we have had times on the intercolonial when business was just as good, so far as the business would be naturally due to the Intercolonial, irrespective of this extension, is concerned. We have had times when the lumber business was a great deal better than it is now and the lumber business makes up a large portion of the business of the Intercolonial, but we have never had such a showing as for the past year. I have told the hon. gentleman, and I think it is only a loss of time to discuss it further, that in the first place we do not keep our accounts separately for sections of the Intercolonial Railway, and that in the next place we could not tell what business was done by the old portion of the road and what was due to the extension. They could not be estimated separately, and we could not make it a matter of accurate calculation. I would not add anything more than to say this, that what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has put forward as to the resolution he moved in the House respecting the traffic agreement, does not at all explain the position in which he stands, or which he took at that time, as compared with the position taken later on by the Senate. The attitude of the Senate was in direct contradiction to the view presented by the hon. gentleman who moved that amendment. The attitude of the Senate was that this arrangement ought to be terminable by the Intercolonial at any time after six month's notice. The argument of my hon. friend is that the Government should have no power to terminate it at all, but that they should come to Parliament to get leave to terminate it. That is utterly and entirely opposed to the contention that was put forward in the other House upon which this amendment has been based. There never was a moment when the Grand Trunk Railway would not be glad to terminate the agreement. We do not want any legislation to authorize us to induce the Grand Trunk to terminate the agreement. They were reluctant to go into it, and they would terminate it at any moment. The hon. gentleman speaks of the iniquity of the traffic arrangement.

Mr. CLANCY. Was the Grand Trunk Railway Company willing to accept the amendment of the Senate in regard to that?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, they were willing from the first moment. They were willing that we should absolutely rescind that agreement altogether. They were adverse to going into it, because the scheme was one under which we were receiving more benefits than we gave. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) speaks of the iniquity of this agreement, but if it were iniquitous, he is paying his own ability a poor compliment when he says he did not know anything about it until it was brought before the Senate. I defy him to produce the authoritative statement of any responsible railway man that there was anything in that agreement disadvantageous to the maritime provinces, to the Intercolonial Railway or to the country. The arrangement was made for the benefit of the Intercolonial Railway and it was made because under it we could exchange as much traffic as possible with the Grand Trunk Railway, because the Grand Trunk Railway was at the end of our long haul and the more freight we could exchange the better it would be for the Intercolonial Railway. We are not bound to consider in a matter of this kind the interests of any railway other than the Intercolonial Railway. We are bound to consider our own interests, and that was what the Government had always in view.

Mr. CLANCY. The Minister has been so hard pressed that in the very last throes of this Bill he finds it necessary to try and square himself with the country. He has spoken here for three-quarters of an hour and he has spoken without a single definite fact before him to prove his contention. He claims that there is a small surplus of $62,000, and he makes the off-hand statement that that entirely results from the Montreal extension, but he is unable to put his finger on a single fact to show that a dollar of it is due to that scheme. The Minister (Mr. Blair) can have just as much surplus as he likes on the Intercolonial Railway if he keeps on adding millions of dollars to capital account and not taking it into the calculation. But he knows, and the country knows, that the people will have to pay the interest on that capital account. The people of Canada are not so dull as to be fooled into believing that you can spend millions of dollars on capital account on the Intercolonial Railway, and still have a surplus, without it costing them heavily in taxes. The Montreal extension as a matter of fact may not have contributed a single dollar to that surplus, and the Minister is now unable to prove that it has. The Minister (Mr. Blair) is very much engaged with the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), and he seems to be deaf to the appeals we are making from this side of the House. Let him give me his attention for a moment while I challenge him to point to one single definite fact which shows that the extension to Montreal has added one single dollar to the $62,000 surplus which he claims. The Minister has the information, or ought to have it, to enable him to accept this challenge. It is no excuse for him to say that the system of book-keeping has been such and such in the past. This is the first time he has had to deal with the existing condition of affairs, and his book-keeping ought to be such that he could show at least one instance to prove that the extension to Montreal has been any benefit whatever to the Intercolonial Railway. The Minister (Mr. Blair) is absolutely without a case, and he stands convicted of having cooked the accounts or having failed to straighten them out. He stands convicted of having indulged in generalities which are absolutely misleading, and unless he can give us some facts his statement has no weight whatever. If he fails to do so I leave him to choose his position in the country.

The PRIME MINISTER. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. Which place will you choose?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Which will you run for?

Mr. FOSTER. I will tell you by and by.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will be better able to judge when I know where you are running.

Mr. CLANCY. Is the Minister of Railways prepared to sit there silent in the face of the challenge I have thrown out to him?

Mr. McMULLEN. Dispense.

Mr. CLANCY. I have no doubt the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) would like us to dispense with a great many things which are not palatable to him.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I shall not detain the hon. gentleman now.

Mr. CLANCY. It is not a matter of detaining me, but the country is anxious for that statement.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We will have to take the risk in the country on that.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman is taking a good many risks that he will have some difficulty in getting the country to sanction, and he has taken no risk which has less justification behind it than this one. Even at this very last hour, the Minister (Mr. Blair) has found himself so pressed after having faced both ways, that he has made a break at some explanation, but the House I believe sees, that he would be better off if he had said nothing at all. When one gets into a false position the natural result is that he will continue in that false position, for no one can start wrong and come out right.

The PRIME MINISTER. Hear, hear.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. Minister started out crooked and he ends crooked. He started out by withholding information and he ends by withholding information. He would have done himself more credit if he had let this matter go in silence than to make the poor show he did.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It would no doubt be more satisfactory to the other side if I had remained silent.

Mr. CLANCY. I tell the Minister (Mr. Blair) that if we wanted to make political capital he is taking the right course. If we want to serve the interests of the country he is taking the wrong course.

The PRIME MINISTER. Then sit down if you are satisfied. We are all happy.

Mr. CLANCY. I tell the Premier, that I would sooner see the interests of this country served than even the interests of a great political party. Even in the very last scene of this drama, the Minister of Railways refuses to bring down information, and in the absence of that information he cannot set himself right before the country or before the House. I am willing, Mr. speaker, to let this case go to the country on that ground alone, and leave the country to judge who is right and who is wrong.

Motion agreed to, and amendments read the second time and agreed to.

Mr. BERGERON. On division.

The PRIME MINISTER. If you do not agree with the Senate, we cannot help it.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not agree with the Government.

Amendments made by the Senate in Bill (No. 133) to authorize the acquisition by the Dominion of the Drummond County Railway read the second time and agreed to.

It being One o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

The House resumed at Three o'clock.

CONDITIONAL LIBERATION OF PENITENTIARY CONVICTS.

House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 171)—from the Senate—to provide for the conditional liberation of penitentiary convicts.—(Sir Wilfrid Laurier.)

(In the Committee.)

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Since this Bill was before the committee the other day, I have discussed with the Minister of Justice the question raised by the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster), and I find that the Minister of Justice agrees altogether with the views expressed by the hon. member for York, and disagrees with mine. The hon. member for York took the ground that the administration of this Act had better be entrusted to the Minister of Justice than to the Governor in Council, while I took the other ground. The Minister of Justice believes that this Bill should follow the procedure which now obtains with reference to the pardoning of minor offences. The power of pardon cannot be exercised by the Governor in matters of murder and other extreme offences except on the advice of his Ministers; but, with regard to all other offences, the power of pardon is now exercised by the Governor on the advice of one of his Ministers, who, according to the rule now obtaining, is the Minister of Justice. Therefore, I will move an amendment which will meet the views of my hon. friend in that respect—that the following words be added as section 12:

It shall be the duty of the Minister of Justice to advise the Governor General upon all matters connected with and affecting the administration of this Act.

The other day the hon. member for York asked me whether or not such a law as this was in existence in any of the states of the Union. The Minister of Justice has handed me a memorandum which shows that it is to-day in force in perhaps two-thirds of the states of the Union. This is the memorandum:

The following states have adopted the parole or ticket-of-leave system in respect to convicts:—Alabama, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, New Jersey, New York, North Dakota, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Utah and Wisconsin.

The states of Iowa, Vermont, Virginia and West Virginia have systems of conditional pardons, somewhat different from the parole system which prevails in the states mentioned.

Maryland has a law which permits the court to parole a convict subject to recall for sentence if it is thought well to do so.

The governors of the following states that had not in 1898 adopted the parole system have expressed themselves in favour of it, namely, New Mexico, Oregon, North Carolina and Tennessee.

The private secretary of the governor of Alabama writes:—"Based upon the experience of one year that it has been tried, the governor is very much pleased with its operation and results."

California.—Of 72 prisoners at large on parole, eight have violated the conditions of their parole, leaving 66 who have remained at large and done well. The warden of the state prison reports:—"I heartily approve of the law, and believe that it has done much good already, and will continue to increase its usefulness in the future."

In Kansas, the executive clerk reports:—"On the whole, our experience with this branch of work has been fully satisfactory. We think it affords a means of dealing with the younger criminal element."

In Massachusetts, the secretary of the Prison Board reports:—"As far as possible, the prisoner is placed on his good behaviour in order that he may shorten his sentence. As a rule, this object is attained."

In the state of New York, where the law has been longest in force, the law is most highly praised.

There is nothing whatever in the contention that pressure would be brought to bear upon the Minister of Justice to recommend tickets-of-leave where they ought not to be granted. The pressure for pardon is always great and continuous, but the settled rules upon which the Minister proceeds always furnishes an effectual check against the abuse of power in this regard.

A prisoner on parole, or of ticket-of-leave, is always on his good behaviour, and there is constant motive operating upon him to conform to the law that he may retain his liberty, and thus time is given for the formation of habits and character that are in conformity to the law, and so the prisoner may pass from the condition of the criminal class to the law-abiding class under the operation of this system.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not understand that this qualified the offence. Is it to be for any kind of offence, or only for minor offences?

The PRIME MINISTER. All kinds of offences.

Mr. BERGERON. From murder down?

The PRIME MINISTER. It would include manslaughter, but is not intended to apply to cases of murder, although there is no restriction.

Mr. BERGERON. I understand that that is the intention, but that is not so expressed.

Mr. DAVIN. Before this clause is adopted, I wish to say that I understood that this legislation would not be proceeded with this session.

The PRIME MINISTER. Oh, no.

Mr. DAVIN. I may have misapprehended what was said. I have not the least hesitation in saying that I have great objection to adding to the power of the Minister of Justice while that office is administered as it is at present. If the case of the Queen versus Skelton is to be considered as a sample of the way this Act will be administered, it affords a striking illustration of what grave abuses might be perpetrated. Under the present legislation, what have we seen? Two men were tried—

The PRIME MINISTER. I have the papers in that case before me, and they will be laid on the Table to-morrow morning, and then we can discuss that matter by itself.

Mr. DAVIN. Then, I will not refer to it, as we will take it up when the papers are brought down, but I am certainly indisposed to extending the power possessed at present of interfering with the operation of our criminal code by the Minister of Justice. What is the additional ground placed before us in support of this measure? It is the precedent set by certain states of the Union. Well, if there is a country anywhere to which we should not look for guidance or example in criminal legislation, it is the United States, because, by sentimental legislation and by empirical Acts, they have introduced confusion and uncertainty into the administration of their criminal law. The effect of this Bill will be to introduce uncertainty into the administration of our law. At present the man who contemplates committing a crime has before his eyes a certain and effective punishment to deter him, but if this Bill be passed, he will have, instead, the probability that even if he be convicted and sentenced, his friends can use their influence with their member, or some other influential person, or work on the sympathies of some sentimentalists who may happen to have some influence with the Minister of Justice, and by this means induce the Minister to let him free on a ticket-of-leave, perhaps to return to an honest life, and perhaps to prey upon the public. If there be cases that require the exercise of the clemency of the Crown, we have ample scope for that exercise in the pardoning clauses of the criminal code.

Mr. QUINN. I regret that I cannot agree with my hon. friend from West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) in this matter. I think that the Bill is a very good one. Having had some experience in criminal matters, I know that one of the great difficulties in prosecuting young criminals in particular is the certainty of exposing them to the danger of contamination in a penitentiary, and there ought always to be a means by which the errors committed sometimes by judges and juries might be corrected by the investigation of the Minister of Justice and the reports that come from time to time from the wardens of the penitentiaries. I do not think that in this Bill we are following the example altogether of the United States, though it is certainly of great advantage to have the experience of the several states of the Union that have adopted this system, which has been in force in England for many years. We are taking this system, not from the United States, but from England, where it has been in force a great number of years, and, I think, has worked admirably. I can call to mind a number of cases in which, if there had been in force in this country any system providing for the liberation of prisoners, a great deal of good could have been done, particularly in the case of young offenders. The worst possible injury that can be done to a young man is to leave him in the penitentiary for a number of years. Although it is necessary, for the good of society, that severe punishment should be inflicted, there are cases in which convicts ought not to be compelled to complete their full term, and no means has hitherto existed of obtaining their liberation, except by the intervention of the Governor in Council to grant the pardon. We are now providing machinery by which the Minister of Justice may release such persons on their good-conduct parole, which means that they are not free from the consequence of their crime until their term has actually expired, and that, if they are guilty of any other offence in the interval, they will have to complete their term, besides suffering any additional penalty that may be inflicted. I think this is not only a wise, but a generous and humane, thing, and one calculated to advance the best interests of society.

Mr. FOSTER. The main objection I have to the Bill is removed by the amendment of the right hon. gentleman, leaving the matter in the hands of the Department of Justice. I did mention also that, as this was untried hitherto in this country, and as there were comparatively few of the members present, it might not be a bad thing to allow the Bill to remain over for a year and get the matured opinion of persons who would naturally take an interest in it, and whose interest would be brought to the point of giving an opinion because of the imminence of legislation; and I thought that the First Minister had the committee rise with that idea in his mind. I do not press that strongly. I think it would be well to let the Bill over, as the right hon. gentleman says this legislation has been tried in Great Britain a long while; and though the conditions are different here, it may not be amiss to try it. My impression is, however, that it would not be time lost in the end to lay the Bill over for a year, but I will not press that view.

The PRIME MINISTER. This Bill has received the consideration of the Department of Justice, and moreover, the department have been in communication with lawyers, and especially with the class of lawyers like my hon. friend from Montreal (Mr. Quinn), who have had experience in these matters. It is after full consideration and consultation that the department have come to the conclusion that this Bill should be passed; and I think that, in view of that, we should take the view of my hon. friend from Montreal and pass the Bill.

Mr. DAVIN. I must say, Sir, that I consider that the worst persons in the world to consult on a subject of this kind are those who are engaged in prosecuting or defending criminals. Those who have been engaged, either in prosecuting or defending criminals all their lives—and I have known a good many of them—develop one or other of two peculiarities. Many of them get such a twist in their minds against the criminal that they come to believe that no man who goes into the dock can be innocent. I remember that I have ventured more than once to tell a jury that Sir William Bodkin, before whom I used to practice when a very young man, that that learned judge could never conceive of a man who was brought into a dock being other than guilty of whatever crime with which he might be charged. Others go to the other extreme. If they happen to be constituted as my hon. and learned friend (Mr. Quinn) is, with a noble mind and great heart, they take an extra-sentimental view of the situation. Therefore, I do not think that men who have been engaged in the administration of the criminal law are especially fitted to give an opinion above others who have studied these things and formed opinions concerning them. If you look to legal studies to enable you to form an opinion on these questions, you should look to studies of criminal legislation and its effects in various countries, and also to go, as my hon. friend from York (Mr. Foster) did the other day—with some apologies that, however, were by no means needed—to the philosophic basis of criminal legislation. I say that the grand object of criminal legislation is to deter from crime. So far as I have been able to follow the legislation in England and in this House, I have come to the conclusion that laws that have leaned in any way towards sentimentalism, do not help in deterring from crime. What I fear is that legislation of the kind now proposed, instead of helping the young people with whom my hon. and learned friend sympathizes—and if I thought otherwise I would be the first to support his views—and instead of reforming the criminal, will lead to an increase of crime.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair) moved that the House resolve itself into committee on Bill (No. 85) further to amend the Railway Act.

Mr. FOSTER. I thought this Bill was not going on.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There were two clauses before the Railway Committee which I felt compelled to drop by reason of the opposition that developed. These clauses are not in the present Bill.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into committee on the Bill.

(In the Committee.)

On section 2,

Mr. FOSTER. What are these clauses?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. These clauses were all assented to by the committee, I think I may say with complete unanimity. They are merely formal.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is very little change from the clauses that have been inserted for a number of years past in the charters that have been passed. This is to make these provisions part of the Railway Act, instead of having the trouble of incorporating them in each Act. They were very well considered in committee, and generally agreed to.

Mr. BERGERON. In fact, there is so little in it, that I do not see why we should pass it at all.

Mr. MACLEAN. I would ask the Minister if this would not be a good opportunity to incorporate in this Bill power by which the Government may take control over the location of railway stations and over traffic arrangements?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I had that before the committee.
Mr. DAVIN.

and that was one of the sections which I proposed to add to the Bill, another section was to confer upon the Governor in Council power to establish uniform rules and regulations for the operation of railways throughout the Dominion. These two clauses were in the Bill as it was considered by the Railway Committee; but when they were reached, objection was taken to them, and I was threatened, I may say, with determined opposition by gentlemen who were opposed to it. The leader of the Opposition, who attended that meeting of the committee, declared that they would not allow this Bill to pass, that a time of the session had arrived when it would be possible to obstruct its passage; in fact, he said he would take the responsibility of preventing those clauses being passed. As a consequence, I felt driven to drop the sections. I think under the arrangement that was arrived at between the Prime Minister and the leader of the Opposition, it would not be a proper thing for me to re-introduce those clauses. Therefore, I am obliged to take the Bill as it passed the committee.

Mr. WOOD. I cannot sit here and allow this Bill to go through in its mutilated form without raising my protest against the Government allowing the Opposition to be masters of the situation in refusing to pass the two best clauses in the Bill. Clause 4 is really in the interest of the people throughout the western country, for by it companies constructing railways would be prevented from passing by located villages and forming village sites of their own in order to increase the returns from the road. Clause 5 is in the interest of the employees all over the country. Regulations that have been made recently by one of the railroads have been thought by many of the railway employees to be very difficult to understand and to be learned by men even who have been in railway work for many years. When they saw that the Government had taken this matter in hand and prepared to deal with it, they were quite sure the regulations would be reasonable, and several of them told me themselves they were perfectly satisfied that the Government would make such regulations as would give general satisfaction throughout the country. Now, on behalf of these railway employees, I protest against the Government allowing the Opposition to defeat what I contend is a very important clause in the interest of these employees. I regret very much that these honest, hardworking and industrious men are to be subjected to rules and regulations being imposed upon them by men in this House who do not understand the case.

Mr. FLINT. In reply to my hon. friend who has just spoken (Mr. Wood), I desire to say that there are times when we are obliged to recognize the existence of facts, and one of the facts that the Government is obliged to recognize is that we ought to be at the end of the session, we ought to prorogue to-day according to the understanding that was reached between the two parties. But we find there is a great deal of business yet to be done. I myself heard the leader of the Opposition say that he proposed to fight these clauses with all the resources available to him.

Mr. DAVIN. I rise to a point of order.
 Is it in order to refer to what has taken place in committee, and to make an argument from it?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I understand there is a report to the committee of the proceedings of the committee.

Mr. FLINT. I say that I heard the leader of the Opposition state that he proposed to fight these clauses with all the resources available to him as leader of the Opposition, and on that ground the Minister of Railways and Canals dropped the clauses.
 I think, therefore, the Government may be excused for not insisting upon passing these clauses at this late hour of the session. I think the leader of the Opposition and those who represent him here have resources available to them at this period of the session to defeat the proposition if brought forward again.

Mr. DAVIN. What a most extraordinary spectacle we have now, in a Government standing here and saying they cannot carry on legislation, shrinking from carrying out their own ideas because of an account that is not official, that we have no authority for, of what one member of the committee said. On that committee there is a large majority of Government supporters, yet we are told that the committee decided to drop these two clauses; and then we have a Government coming here and saying: We dropped them, but do not be too hard on us; we dropped them because the leader of the Opposition spoke vigorously against them. I merely comment on this spectacle of helplessness manifested by this Government in regard to this matter, which has been repeated again and again.

The PRIME MINISTER. The Government ask for no favour in this matter whatever. This is a matter of great importance, we are now in the dying hours of the session, and the leader of the Opposition did not want this matter to be considered in his absence. There are courtesies which the hon. gentleman appears to ignore in these matters. Perhaps it would be just as well, and better, if there were no courtesies extended from one side to the other, but I am not prepared to admit that doctrine. But we all desire the blessing of prorogation, and as this is a highly contentious matter, we think it need not be insisted on at this session, besides it will have to go before another House.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the arrangement was come to between the leaders to facilitate the end of the session; and today my hon. friend seems to be not unwilling that the courtesies of political warfare should be done away with. I think he had better be discreet, because, in a warfare of that kind, the disadvantage would always be with a Government; anyway, we do not want an armed hostility like that. The only thing I take exception to would be this, that when the Government and the leader of the Opposition practically made an arrangement that in order to facilitate the close of the session these two clauses of the Bill would be dropped, it is quite too bad for hon. gentlemen on the other side to rise up and declare that a good measure is being defeated solely by the obstruction of the Opposition. If I understood the hon.
 Minister aright, I think there were others besides hon. members of the Opposition who were opposed to these clauses, and under the circumstances, I think it would be better if the Bill had not been introduced at all, but as it is, I do not think these two clauses ought to be pressed, and I do not think that hon. gentlemen opposite should throw the onus of defeating what they consider a good Bill upon the Opposition.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). It should be said that when that statement was made in committee it was also stated that if these two clauses were withdrawn the House would have closed last week, on Friday or Saturday.

Mr. MACLEAN. I was not a party to this arrangement which is now spoken of, and I intend to press an amendment to this Bill which will cover the point, so as to give the Railway Committee of the Privy Council jurisdiction.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know what the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster) means when he says that I had intimated that there were others who were opposed to this clause beside hon. gentlemen on the Opposition side of the House. I am not aware of there having been any opposition developed by the friends of the Government to the measure.
 There has never been any to my knowledge, nor do I desire to suggest that there was any. The hon. leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), when these clauses were brought up in committee, rose and said that he had very strong objections to them. He considered them of very great importance, and said that they could not have his support, and that he would do his best to defeat them. He gave me to understand that he would take the responsibility of defeating them. In view of the attitude of the hon. gentleman, and the late period of the session, I asked the committee if they would allow the matter to stand so that it might be considered in the meanwhile. The hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition, when he was present in the House, made it very clear that he would not consent to the adoption of these clauses, because he stated that he intended to avail himself of all means within the rules of the House to defeat the Bill if it contained these two clauses.

Mr. BERGERON. Mr. Chairman, it is not very often that I do it, but I am obliged to stand by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) on this question. I was present when the whole discussion took place, and I can vouch for it that the hon. gentleman yielded, as he has said just now, to the circumstances. The hon. leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) left the day after, perfectly convinced that he could rely on the understanding that was made with the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals and with the Government. I would be very sorry if anything should be done to interfere with any arrangement which might be made between hon. members on both sides of the House, and I do hope that my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean), who has threatened to make an amendment to the Bill, will not do it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Chairman, no matter how strongly I might feel in favour of the clauses that it is proposed to insert, in view of the circumstances, the hon. leader of the Opposition having said that he was strongly opposed to the Bill, and intended to use every means in his power to keep it from becoming law, in the shape in which it was before the committee, and in view of the arrangement that was made, I would consider it a dishonourable and improper act if I were, in the absence of that hon. gentleman, to vote for any amendment that was moved, either from one side of the House or the other. This is how I feel personally in regard to a matter of this kind. I am perfectly willing, as a member of this House, to stay here a month or two, if necessary, to fight this thing out, but, after having come to an arrangement, I would feel that I was doing a dishonourable and discreditable act if I were to go back on that arrangement.

Mr. MACLEAN. In view of the circumstances, to use the words of the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Sutherland), and in the exercise of my rights as a member of this House, I now propose as an amendment, namely, that the following words be added to the Bill as clause 4. I propose to move, seconded by Mr. Wallace—

Mr. WALLACE. I am going to support the amendment, but I do not desire to second it.

Mr. MACLEAN. Well, then, I will move, seconded by Mr. Sproule :

In case it appears to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council to be expedient or necessary for the public convenience that a station shall be located at any point on the line of any railway, the committee may make an order requiring the company to place, maintain and operate a station at the place named and described therein, and may define the accommodation to be provided in connection therewith, and may order and require tracks to be laid down from and in connection with the company's main line to and from such station and for sidings wherever deemed necessary by the committee ; and it shall be the duty of the company owning or operating the line of railway to carry out the order within the time mentioned therein.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Chairman, before the amendment is put, I beg to say that before the hon. leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) left the House, we had some conversation as to what was to be the business of the House, and we agreed, on the part of the Government, to drop certain measures we had in order to facilitate prorogation. The hon. leader of the Opposition, at the same time, was very strong in his opposition against these clauses, and I agreed, so far as the Government were concerned, that we would see that no discussion would take place in his absence. I appeal to the sense of fairness and honour of every hon. member that, when arrangements are made between the leaders on both sides of the House, to carry on the business of the House, these engagements ought to be sacred.

Mr. McNEILL. Mr. Chairman, I would earnestly beg my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) to withdraw his amendment. I do not know how we are going to carry on the business of the House if a solemn agreement, entered into by the leaders, on both sides, are to be set at naught. I would earnestly beg my hon. friend to withdraw the amendment. I do not want to multiply words at this time of the session, but these are my views on the question.

Mr. BOSTOCK. Mr. Chairman, I am probably one of the members of the House most interested in this particular matter, from the fact of this question having been brought before the Railway Committee this session by myself, on account of two cases of this kind which happen to be in my constituency. I was exceedingly disappointed to find that we were not going to have these clauses passed in the Bill introduced by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals. If I had thought it was not going through, I should have taken the opportunity of pressing for a clause of that kind when the British Columbia Southern Railway Bill was before the Railway Committee earlier in the session. Did I understand the ex-Minister of Railways to say that under the law as it at present stands the Minister of Railways has power to deal with the location of stations ?

Mr. HAGGART. I do not know that that power would be ex post facto, but in the case of any road subsidized by the Government, the Minister of Railways can approve or disapprove of the line of railway, and, I go so far as to say, of the location of the stations. I may be wrong, but I think it is entirely in the power of the Minister.

Mr. BOSTOCK. I am glad to say that the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway has assured me that he will carry out the wishes of the people, and locate the station at Moyie. I have a letter from him in which he states that he has had a siding put in to accommodate the people of that town, and I trust that he will immediately appoint a station agent and operator, as the people of Moyie wish him to do. Although I consider the action of the Canadian Pacific Railway exceedingly slow in the matter, yet they now show a desire to meet the wishes of the people in that case. As to the other matter which I brought before the Railway Committee, this clause will not assist the people in any way, because the location of the line would have to be dealt with and altered. When I wrote to the Minister of Railways last fall, as to the location of the station at Grand Forks, the location of the line was altogether different from what it was subsequently made. Therefore, the fact of the location of the line having been so materially altered, the station cannot be put at the place where I promised the people of Grand Forks I would endeavour to have it put. I believe, however, that in this House we should be bound by the arrangement made between the leaders of both parties, and, although it is really in the interests of my constituents to have a clause of this kind passed, yet I do not feel that I would be justified in assisting to break an arrangement which has been entered into between the Prime Minister and the leader of the Opposition.

Mr. WALLACE. I propose to support the amendment of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean). I am not responsible for bringing this matter before the House, but it is here now, and, as it is a proper proposal, I shall vote for the amendment. Speaking generally, it may be said that every railway in this Dominion has received subsidies from the Government; and, even if we did not give them a dollar of subsidy, we gave them enormous franchises and powers, and we should retain over them whatever control is necessary in the interests of the public. This amendment proposes to prevent a railway company doing an injustice to communities. We remember that the question was immediately brought before the House in a certain case, where a community had located and built a town, and where the railway company, coming in afterwards, decided to locate the station more than two miles beyond that town. Well, the pioneers in that country, who spend their time, their labour and their money, are entitled to the protection of the Government, and this amendment is a move in the right direction. But what do we see here to-day? Last session and this session we saw the majority behind the Government voting for every proposition made by that Government, but to-day we are told that the Government cannot carry this clause; and why? In deference to the opinions of the leader of the Opposition! It is the first time on record where the Government proposed to legislate, or not to legislate, in obedience to the demands of the leader of the Opposition. Are they afraid to proceed with this clause, and do they want to take shelter behind the leader of the Opposition, or what is the cause? The Government, strong in their majority, should push through the legislation they introduced in this House, if they think that legislation is right. If it were in the best interests of Canada that this legislation should not be proceeded with, we might understand the thing. But they come here, in a humiliating position, afraid to legislate in this direction, and wanting to shelter themselves behind the leader of the Opposition. Such a course is quite unworthy of the Government.

The PRIME MINISTER. I must appeal once more to the sense of fairness of the House upon this question. For my part, I am in favour of this legislation, and the Government is in favour of it; but the leader of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) is strongly against it, and I think it is due to a man of his experience, age and position, that his opinions should not be lightly treated.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER. When the leader of the Opposition asked that this matter should not be considered in his absence, I agreed with him, amongst other things, that this clause should be allowed to wait until he could express his views upon it.

Mr. FOSTER. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER. We are now at the 7th of August, and, in order to permit of prorogation, the leader of the Opposition and I came to a certain arrangement, one detail of which was, that this question should not be taken up in his absence. If we do not accept the amendment, it is not because we share the views of the hon. leader of the Opposition, because we do not share his views, but it is because we want to keep our word with him. We can discuss the matter at the proper time, and it can wait for another session.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think it is rather peculiar that there should be any gentleman in the House who would not feel under the circumstances that the Government were doing the only right and proper and honourable thing in taking the course indicated by the Prime Minister. I do not rise for the purpose of supplementing anything he has said, but simply for the purpose of saying that I have no doubt that the action of members on this side of the House will not be in any sense misunderstood. For my part I am strongly in favour of the clause which my hon. friend the Minister of Railways introduced, and I would have been quite satisfied, like the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Sutherland), to stay here another month if necessary, for the purpose of fighting it out and putting that clause on the statute-book; but there are circumstances in connection with deliberative assemblies of this kind in which a man is not always permitted to exercise his own judgment, but is bound by arrangements, which are and must be made from time to time by the leaders on both sides, if the business of the House is to be carried on. Therefore, although I am as strongly in favour of the clause introduced by the Minister of Railways as he is himself, I feel that we are bound by the arrangement made, and it would be altogether dishonourable not to adhere to that arrangement.

Mr. HAGGART. We do not object to carrying out the arrangement made by the leader of the Opposition; but it is rather unfair to say that the leader of the Opposition was going to use every means he possibly could to defeat the clause, and put that forward as the reason for dropping it.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is the only reason.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman says that if it were not for the tactics adopted by the Opposition, hon. gentlemen opposite would force this amendment through. They had plenty of opportunity during the last five months to bring it down, and have it passed, if necessary. I doubt very much whether the Minister of Railways would support the amendment proposed by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean). Would the hon. gentleman support legislation which would give him the power of compelling any railroad company in the country to put up sidings and a station wherever he pleased, no matter whether the railway had received assistance from the Government or not? If I remember rightly, the furthest the hon. gentleman went was to support the proposition with respect to railways which had received subsidies from the Government. I think the Minister of Railways has already the power to determine where a station shall be on a subsidized road. The contract with the company has to be approved of by Order in Council, and the Minister can embody any clauses he likes in the contract, including the location of stations. So that the power already belongs to the Minister, except that he wishes it to have some ex post facto effect. Would the Minister like to have the power to locate a station on the Grand Trunk or the Canadian Pacific Railway in any part of this country? I think it is a power he would not care to have. He would be liable to receive a petition from the inhabitants of any section of the country who might want a station, putting aside altogether the wishes of the railway company. He has enough of such power on the Intercolonial. No doubt he has plenty of applications from supporters of the Government—I know I had—for stations at particular points. If he granted all these applications there would be a station at every two miles along the road. That is a power which the Minister ought not to ask for or to have. But what I protest against is the dropping of this legislation, and throwing the onus and responsibility on the Opposition because the leader of the Opposition made an arrangement with the leader of the Government that these clauses should not be considered until next session, and the Minister getting up and stating to his followers in the House: "You would have had such legislation if it had not been for the opposition of the leader of the Opposition." If I am not mistaken, he induced my hon. friend from East York to introduce this amendment.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know on what authority the hon. gentleman has made the last statement.

Mr. HAGGART. I may be mistaken in the last statement.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not conscious of having had any communication with that hon. gentleman on the subject, although, if I were free to vote for such a clause as we had in the Bill before the Railway Committee, I would be prepared to support it and support it heartily. The hon. gentleman has not stated correctly, I think, the position we occupy to-day in respect to this matter. When the Bill came before the Railway Committee, the hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition, being present, stated that he was strongly opposed to the adoption of clauses 4 and 5. He stated further that he was prepared to exhaust all the facilities the rules of Parliament afforded to defeat these two clauses of the Bill. I made an appeal to the hon. gentleman in every way I could. I pointed out that these clauses had been before the committee for weeks and months, and that the reason they had not been brought up earlier was because I had been urged by gentlemen, I think on both sides, to allow Bills, which they claimed were not contentious Bills, to come before the committee, remarking that this Bill, being a Government Bill, would of course be easily disposed of. As a matter of courtesy to these gentlemen, on several occasions I allowed the Railway Bill to stand over; but I had not, I say most sincerely, the slightest expectation that there was going to be developed any such opposition to these clauses as was subsequently developed. When I stated to the committee that I was not going to press these clauses, I did not state that as a result of any understanding between myself and the leader of the Opposition. I did not say

I was going to abandon these clauses. I had the right, I supposed, to move them in this House. I desired to have the subject thoroughly discussed by the committee, and I was not willing to take any suggestions which hon. gentlemen on either side might offer; but when these causes were withdrawn, I told the leader of the Opposition and the committee that I yielded to compulsion, and the leader of the Opposition said that he was prepared to take the responsibility of these clauses not going through. Therefore, it is only fair to the Government that it should be known to the whole country why these clauses have not been carried—not because the Government was not willing and sincerely desirous of seeing them made the law of the land, but at this period of the session the possibilities of delaying and defeating legislation are numerous, and yielding to the desire of everybody to get away, the clauses were withdrawn, and there is going to be no serious injury resulting to the country. It is quite possible, as the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) has said, and as I myself have said in the committee, for the Government to incorporate, in any contract we may enter into with any company receiving a subsidy from the Government, a clause governing this question of stations, but I thought that did not go far enough, and that we ought to have a clause which would entitle us to determine the location of the stations of any railway subsidized by any province of Canada or by this Government. I wanted to have them all put on the same footing, and therefore desired that such a clause should be incorporated in the Act. It can be introduced any session, and in the meantime the Government will see that in the case of any railways which may receive a subsidy from this Government, a clause to this effect will be embodied in the contract.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the hon. Minister promise that he will introduce such a Bill next session. If so, I will be quite willing to abide by the decision of the right hon. Prime Minister and acquiesce in the arrangement made with the hon. leader of the Opposition.

Mr. HENDERSON. I regret very much that clause 4 especially has been abandoned by the Government, but after what has been stated, I hope that in another session it will be re-introduced. If I properly understand the case, it is not only intended to apply this clause to railways to be built, but also to railways that have been subsidized in past years.

Mr. HAGGART. To all railways whether subsidized or not.

Mr. HENDERSON. The amendment of the member for East York (Mr. Maclean) proposes to deal with all railways, whether subsidized or not. I would not desire to go that far. It would be perhaps going too far to deal with railways that have not received assistance from the Dominion Parliament or the local legislatures. I regret that any arrangement was made to drop this clause, even if such arrangement should secure an earlier prorogation. We are here now very close on five months, and it would not have made the difference of a day in this long session, if we had had a full discussion of this clause, and I scarcely think the Government should conceal themselves behind an excuse of that kind for dropping it. I am not aware that any arrangement had been made, and was waiting the passage of the Bill to advise one of my constituents that it had become law, in order that an application might be made under it to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. I hope that when another session comes round the hon. Minister of Railways will take it up, and either in this or some other well-considered form introduce a clause that will cover the whole ground. In doing this, the hon. Minister will have my hearty support. I can scarcely say that I am prepared to support the amendment of my hon. friend from East York, because it goes a little further than I think it ought to go.

Mr. McMULLEN. As one of those who strongly advocated the introduction of this clause, I was disappointed when it was struck out. Nothing could possibly induce me to vote against the adoption of this clause except the compact entered into by the right hon. leader of the Government with the hon. leader of the Opposition. That compact, I am disposed to accept, and therefore I will vote against the amendment.

Mr. MACLEAN. An effort has been made here to lead the people to believe that it is by reason of the opposition from this side of the House that this legislation has not passed this session.

Some hon. MEMBERS. So it is.

Mr. MACLEAN. Quite the contrary. We were in favour of having that clause passed and ready to vote for it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. MACLEAN. Those who are really responsible for this clause not becoming law now are the party opposite.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. MACLEAN. If there is a party responsible for trouble in this matter, it is the party opposite who have given the people pledges year after year that they would introduce a railway commission which would govern all these questions. Let us have that railway commission, which the hon. Minister of Railways has promised us session after session. I do not want to have these grievances come up year after year in this House, when they should be settled at once by a railway commission, if the Government would only bring their measure forward for the appointing of one.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My hon. friend is a member of the Railway Committee, and ought to know what took place there. His leader (Sir Charles Tupper) took the full responsibility, openly and publicly, of the position he took with regard to this matter. My hon. friend then did not protest nor did the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson), nor any other member of the committee, but gave their leader full support in the position he took. Surely the hon. Minister of Railways is entitled to fair-play, because he has extended a great deal of courtesy to members on both sides during the long months of the session, and postponed the consideration of the Government Bill in his name so as to give a chance to private legislation. But the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) is now taking a position quite the opposite of that taken by his leader. In the committee my hon. friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) protested to the best of his ability against the withdrawal of the clause, but the majority agreed that the Minister of Railways should discuss the matter with the right hon. First Minister, and after these two gentlemen had an interview with the hon. leader of the Opposition, the Minister of Railways reported the agreement arrived at, and the committee unanimously acceded to it.

Mr. HAGGART. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that there was an agreement between him and the hon. leader of the Opposition to drop these two clauses?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes, and the two clauses only.

The PRIME MINISTER. The two clauses only.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The thing was done openly and above-board, with the knowledge of everybody. It was not a case of the two leaders meeting together and coming to an understanding, but this was done openly, many days ago, to the knowledge of every member of the committee and of the people as well, because it was fully reported in the press, so that any one who objected could have protested before the leader of the Opposition went away. If there is any humiliation in the matter, it is suffered by the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace), and those who are prepared to go back on the honourable arrangement made with the leader of the Opposition. I wish to make myself clear to the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) and to say that we do not consider that in placing the matter before the House, as the Prime Minister has done, he has done anything contrary to the wishes of or the position taken by the hon. leader of the

Mr. MACLEAN.

Opposition. Because he publicly stated, in reference to the committee that that was the position he wished the House and the country to understand that he took with reference to this matter. If any person else had a different view, that was the place and that was the time for objection to be raised. For myself, I have already stated that, in view of the arrangement made, I would not, under any consideration, do anything that would interfere with the carrying out of that arrangement.

Mr. MILLS. I rise to bear testimony to what has been said by the Prime Minister, the Minister of Railways and Canals and the chairman of the committee. I was in the committee when the arrangement was made, and, without taking into consideration at all the merits of the amendment introduced here, I shall vote against it—not because I am opposed to the subject matter of the amendment, but because I think it is right and honourable that an arrangement of that kind, entered into by the parties, should be carried out. As regards the responsibility of it, as that question has come up, I desire to say a word. I say that the responsibility in connection with this Bill rests upon this Government. There were many weeks in the early part of the session when the time, instead of being partially wasted, as it was, might have been occupied in putting through this legislation. It is a standing disgrace to this Government that such important legislation should be reached and rushed through in the dying moments of the session.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to say a very few words—

Mr. BERGERON. Oh, oh.

Mr. DAVIS. If my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) will possess his soul in patience—

Mr. BERGERON. Go on, go on; we are waiting anxiously to hear you.

Mr. DAVIS. I was not in the committee when the arrangement was entered into that has been spoken of; but I cannot understand hon. gentlemen on the other side trying to foist the responsibility of the postponement of this legislation upon this side of the House. It was the leader of the Opposition who compelled them—practically compelled them—to abandon this clause in the Bill for this session, by giving them to understand that it would be obstructed in the House, and that the House would be kept in session for two or three months longer. I am sorry the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) was not in the committee; if he had been there, he probably would have dragooned the leader of the Opposition into allowing this to go through, much as he dragooned him into opposition to the Stikine Railway Bill. But I have supported in this House the principle of this amendment on several occasions, and I believe that it is only fair that such legislation should be placed on the statute-books, in the interest of the people in the western country particularly. In that country we are expecting new towns to be built up, and we want them to be protected. In the town in which I live, as in other places in the constituency I have the honour to represent, we have suffered a good deal for want of such legislation as this. I desire to tell the hon. member for East York that, as I was not a party to the arrangement spoken of, I am prepared to support his amendment.

Mr. OLIVER. I am very sorry to see this question, which is of such vital importance to the pioneers of the North-west, made a football between the parties. But, seeing it is being made a football, I want to relieve myself from any charge of taking an unfair part in the deliberations of this House by the vote I shall give on the amendment. I was present in the committee when the Minister of Railways and Canals announced that, in view of the position of the leader of the Opposition, he withdrew these clauses. I did not know there was any arrangement.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No; that was made after.

Mr. OLIVER. I understand that there is a great difference between withdrawing a section of a Bill under arrangement, and withdrawing it under compulsion. I do not feel bound to support a position which has been taken under compulsion from those who are opposed to what I believe in. Had I known of any arrangement at the time, I would have been able to protest against it, and would have protested against it, as suggested by the chairman of the Railway Committee (Mr. Sutherland). I did not know of any arrangement until now. I understand now that there is an arrangement between the leader of the Opposition and the leader of the Government, that this clause should be dropped. In support of that arrangement we, on this side, are asked—I am asked—to vote against the principles that I believe in. I am always willing to stand by an arrangement that is made between myself, or my friends, and my opponents, provided always that my opponents stand by the arrangement, but not otherwise. If the leader of the Opposition is not able to control his followers in this House so that they will stand by an agreement, I certainly think that agreement is not binding upon me, and I shall not act as if it were binding upon me.

Mr. HENDERSON. It seems to me that hon. members who sit behind the Treasury benches, are extremely anxious to throw the responsibility of dropping this clause upon the Opposition, and more especially upon the leader of the Opposition. I think they are placing the members of the Government in a most humiliating position, when they get up, one after another, and tell this House and the country that the Government were not able to pass a measure that they considered in the interest of the country, simply because one or two members on this side said they did not approve of it. I think it will be within the recollection of many hon. members who are members of the Railway Committee, that on one occasion in that committee, when Sir Charles Tupper was designated as leader of the Opposition, he refused to be called by that name, on the ground that there was no such person as the leader of the Opposition in connection with the work of the Railway Committee—there were no politics there. If that hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) spoke in the Railway Committee, he spoke for himself; he did not speak as leader of the Opposition, having refused to be called the leader of the Opposition in that very committee. Therefore, I say, it is unfair to make this attempt to mislead the House and the country as to the reason for this legislation being dropped at the present time. It has been stated repeatedly by one hon. gentleman after another that there was an agreement that this clause should be dropped. If so, there must have been two parties to that agreement, and if the leader of the Opposition was one party, the Minister of Railways and Canals or the First Minister was the other. I want to know how you can make one party to an agreement responsible for it, without making the other responsible? It seems to me that, upon the statement that has been made, one party to the agreement is equally responsible with the other; and, if the leader of the Opposition has to assume his responsibility for dropping this measure, to my mind, the leader of the Government must share the blame, if blame there is to be.

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to say a few words on this subject, because I am put somewhat in an anomalous position on account of seconding this motion. Now, the history of this matter that has been given, while probably substantially correct, is not exactly what has occurred. In the first discussion which took place on this Bill, the leader of the Opposition wanted the whole Bill held over until next year, but the force of his argument was directed to clauses 4 and 5. The Minister of Railways and Canals refused to let it be held over, but ultimately intimated that, if objection were confined to these clauses, he would be disposed to consider whether he would allow these to remain over, and report the rest of the Bill. On the ground of the lateness of the session, I myself advocated the holding of the Bill over until next year, because there were other clauses that ought to be more fully considered. But by this time we had reached one o'clock, and there was no understanding come to, so far as I am aware, except that the Minister told the leader of the Opposition that he would consult with his colleagues and see about it. At the next meeting of the Railway Committee neither the leader of the Opposition nor myself were present, but the Bill was reported upon a suggestion by the leader of the Opposition at the previous meeting, that his objections were largely confined to clauses 4 and 5. I would have remained content and accepted that arrangement as an implied agreement reached between the leader of the Opposition and the Government through the Minister of Railways and Canals, were it not for the fact that to-day the contention is made that the leader of the Opposition is responsible for not allowing those clauses to go through. I think that is most unfair, because if there was any responsibility, both sides were equally responsible for the omission of these two clauses. When the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) moved this amendment, I offered to second it, and I did so because I did not think it was fair to throw upon the Opposition the responsibility for these clauses not going through.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman will recollect that I told the leader of the Opposition in that committee that if these clauses were dropped he would have to take the responsibility of it, because his action was responsible for the defeat of the clauses. He stated his position most unequivocally; and hon. gentlemen will know whether a single member of the Opposition who was present took any exception to the attitude of the leader of the Opposition in respect of this Bill.

Mr. SPROULE. I remember that some spoke of the clause when the discussion was going on.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman remember that there was a single voice raised from any member of the Opposition in protest against the action which the leader of the Opposition proposed to take, and which he knew would result in defeating the Bill?

Mr. SPROULE. I remember distinctly one or more members speaking in favour of the clause.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think it is very well understood why these clauses were not passed. All I want to add now is that it is the deliberate intention of the Government to introduce this subject again at the next session of Parliament.

Mr. MCNEILL. I wish to say in reference to this matter that it is always well to be on the safe side in reference to an agreement, and if there is any doubt about it, it is better to assume that the agreement has been made rather than run the risk of breaking an agreement which has been entered into. I think the question we are discussing is a very much larger question than that contained within the clauses of the Bill. The jealous keeping of faith between the two sides of the House is indeed an important matter. I would like to say to my hon. friend who has moved the amendment, that if I vote against it I hope he will not think that I desire to do any discourtesy to him. I may say that if the archangel Gabriel had moved the amendment, I would have voted against it.

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. MACLEAN. If the First Minister will say to the House that he does not hold the Opposition responsible for the withdrawal of this Bill, then I will consent to his suggestion.

The PRIME MINISTER. I just have this to say, that I made an arrangement with the leader of the Opposition that we would not proceed with these clauses in his absence, and I intend to keep that arrangement. I may say that these two clauses represent the policy of the Government, and they will be re-introduced next session.

Amendment negatived.

On the preamble,

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to refer to one clause we have passed, because a paper has been put in my hands, coming from the Mayor of Toronto, which I think should be considered by the committee. It is in reference to subsection two of section two, where it says:

Every person who willfully breaks down, injures, weakens or destroys any gate, fence, erection, building or structure of a company,—

A penalty shall be inflicted. Now, the solicitor for the city of Toronto says this ought to be amended by adding after the word "company" the words "lawfully erected by said company," because, as he says, there might be a trespass fence erected by the company, and there might be no authority to take it down, and any one touching it would be liable to the penalty in this clause.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The words of the section involve the doing of what would be an unlawful act.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose they put up what is practically a trespass fence, and it has remained there for years? This leaves it open to any one, corporation or individual, who takes that fence away, to be liable to the penalty.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not if they had a lawful right to remove it. If they had a lawful right to remove it, there can be no penalty. I think the hon. gentleman will find it is all right.

Mr. WALLACE. It is proposed to insert "lawfully erected by said company." I do not see why the Minister should object to that. If there is a matter in dispute between a corporation and a railway company, or between a railway company and an individual, the railway company might erect an inclosure which they had no right to erect. The Bill says now that if they erect a fence, it is a criminal act to take it down. There is a case in Toronto under way at the present time in respect to the Lansdowne Avenue crossing, as the Minister of Railways and Canals knows, that refers to this very question. I think the settlement of that question will depend upon the wording of the law.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I may say to the hon. gentleman that that section is the identical language of the law as it is now and as it has been on the statute-book for a long term of years. The only change is in regard to penalties, they are limited.

Mr. WALLACE. I am not disputing what the Minister tells us. But as time goes on we find that that law is unfair. At a recent investigation in the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, when I was present, the Minister's attention was called to the Lansdowne Avenue crossing in Toronto, where a fence had been erected. It was erected, perhaps, lawfully in the first place, but later on a road was put there and the city claim no fence should be put there. If a fence is lawfully erected I do not see why we should hold it sacred, or make it a criminal act to take it down.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The objection would be that you would put it in the power of anybody and everybody to tear down a fence and place the responsibility on the company of establishing that they had a lawful right to erect the fence where they had erected it.

Mr. WALLACE. In reference to the city of Toronto, or any other place, where the fence is on the roadway, it would be the corporation that would take action, and not any irresponsible person.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If you adopted that amendment it would not be an offence for any person who chose to come along to tear down a fence, or any other structure, unless the persons who owned the property could show that it was lawfully erected. You would give any person carte blanche to go around destroying property.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time and passed.

P. E. I. RAILWAY—BRANCH TO MURRAY HARBOUR.

House resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 183) to authorize the Government of Canada to construct a branch line of railway from Charlottetown to Murray Harbour, in the province of Prince Edward Island, as a public work.—(Mr. Blair.)

(In the Committee.)

On clause 2,

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, before you pass that clause I would like to call the attention of the committee and especially of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) to what, in my opinion, is a conflict between this Bill, in regard to the subsidy that is proposed to be contributed by the Government of Prince Edward Island for the bridge, and a Bill passed by the local legislature. This Bill proposes that the Government of Prince Edward Island shall pay annually without rebate $12,000. A Bill was passed by the local legislature and assented to on the 5th of May, 1899, which contains this clause :

The Lieutenant-Governor in Council may enter into an agreement with the Government of Canada stipulating that should the Government of Canada build a bridge across the Hillsborough River, from a point in or near the city of Charlottetown to a point in or near Southport, and said bridge be so built as to be adapted and suitable not only for railway purposes, but also as a public highway bridge for vehicles and foot-passengers and for general traffic of all kinds,—

This is the point, now :

—the Government of Prince Edward Island will, on the completion to their satisfaction of such a bridge, pay annually to the Government of Canada towards the interest of the money required to build that part of said bridge which will be used for general traffic of all kinds other than for railway purposes, a sum not exceeding $12,000.

In the Bill now before the committee this is the provision :

And before entering into any contract for the construction of such bridge the Government of Prince Edward Island shall undertake and agree to contribute the sum of $12,000 a year.

There is no doubt in my mind that there is a conflict between those two clauses. The position is this. It was proposed years ago, and a Bill was introduced into the legislature for building a bridge across the Hillsborough River for traffic only. When the Government of Canada proposed to build a railway bridge it was thought that it would be a saving in the cost of construction if the Dominion and the local Governments should combine and build a bridge for railway and ordinary traffic purposes as well. The intention of the local government, as indicated in the Act I referred to was that they should contribute the share of the cost of the bridge on the basis of the additional costs—consequent on making it a bridge for foot-passengers and vehicular traffic; but under clause of this Bill they would be bound to pay $12,000 a year absolutely without any reference to the cost of an ordinary traffic bridge. The Government of Prince Edward Island in my opinion intended only to pay interest on the additional cost entailed by making the bridge a traffic as well as a railway bridge. That additional cost might not exceed $250,000, and in that case $12,000 a year would be too much to ask Prince Edward Island to pay. There is another phase of the matter which the committee might well take into consideration. Parliament has been voting, for some days past, large sums for bridges, and if this bridge for local traffic were undertaken by the province, the Dominion of Canada as has been done in other sections of Canada, would be likely asked—and it could not very well be refused—to contribute about 15 per cent. That would be a just claim to put forward by the province. In lieu of that, the Government should have the maintenance of the bridge, and I think the Bill might be amended so that instead of reading:

To contribute the sum of $12,000,—

It would read as follows:—

To contribute a sum not exceeding $12,000 for construction and maintenance.

That would, I think, bring the Bill into unison with the views of the local government. If the Bill is passed, in its present form, the local government may come forward, and say: We did not agree positively to pay $12,000; we only agreed to pay interest on the amount of money that would be required to build the traffic part of the bridge. I think the maintenance of the bridge might be undertaken by the Government of Canada in lieu of the 15 per cent which the Government contribute to bridges in all parts of the country. If that was done and the tolls—if any were imposed—were given to the provincial Government, there might not be any great reason to complain. I have here a list of bridges, which have been subsidized in the last few years. In 1897 the subsidies were granted as follows:

To the Grand Trunk Railway Company, for the rebuilding and enlargement of Victoria Bridge at Montreal, 15 per cent of the amount expended thereon, not exceeding $300,000.

The Great Northern Railway Company, towards the construction of a railway bridge over the Ottawa River, at Hawkesbury, 15 per cent upon the amount expended thereon, not exceeding $52,400.

Then, they had a railway and traffic bridge over the Ottawa River at Nepean Point, between Ottawa and Hull, 15 per cent, not exceeding $112,000, that was voted in 1897. Then, there was voted this year $1,000,000 for the Quebec bridge, $50,000 for the Yamaska bridge, $35,000 for the Richelieu River bridge, $50,000 for the St. Francis River bridge, $15,000 for the Nicolet bridge, $33,700 for the Shubenacadie bridge, $16,425 for the St. Maurice River bridge, $15,000 for the Rivière du Loup bridge, and $15,000 for the Maskinonge bridge; total,

Mr. MARTIN.

$1,235,125 this year, and total for two years to bridges $1,692,625. I do not think I will be making a very heavy claim on the Minister if I ask him to insert on the 17th line, after the words:

Prince Edward Island shall undertake to contribute the sum of $12,000.

I say I do not think I shall be asking too much of the Government if they will make this part of the section read as follows:—

Prince Edward Island shall agree to contribute a sum not exceeding $12,000 per annum as its share of the cost of construction and maintenance of such bridge, which contribution shall be deducted half-yearly from the sums allowable and payable to the said province, &c.

I think the Government will agree with me that this proposal is only a fair one. The Bill of the local legislature reads in this way:

Shall pay annually to the Government of Canada towards the interest of the money required to build that part of said bridge which will be used for general traffic of all kinds other than for railway purposes.

The intention of the local government is not to aid the Federal Government to build any part of the railway bridge, but their contribution is for the general traffic part of it only. Even in that case, I think the province might fairly ask from the Dominion 15 per cent of a reduction, the same as the Dominion is granting to other bridges. But in lieu of that if the Government would insert in this Bill that this contribution from the province was for "both construction and maintenance," and add the other condition I have named, I think it would be fair both to the province and the Dominion at large. I am afraid that if you pass this Bill as it stands at present, you will find it impossible to make an arrangement with the local legislature, because they will contend that the Bill is in conflict with the Act that they themselves passed. Now is the time to remove all difficulties in the way of a friendly arrangement of this matter, and I hope the Government will do so.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). My hon. friend (Mr. Martin) has, no doubt, the very best intentions in the world, but he will see, on reflection, that there is no necessity for an amendment to the Bill. The local Act is a proposal which the Island Government made to this Government, and the limit of their liability they place in distinct terms not to exceed $12,000. By the amended Bill of last session, it was agreed that the two governments would enter into an agreement before the contract was let, and this Bill of ours now simply proposes that the Minister of Railways may enter into an agreement with them for the construction of a bridge, they paying the sum of $12,000 annually, which is equivalent to 3 per cent on $400,000, and they may make such further agreement for the regulation and control of the bridge and the highway traffic thereon as to the parties seem just and reasonable. That provision, I think, covers everything the hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) wants. I would deprecate hampering the actions of the Government here with any provisions which might tend to prevent the scheme from coming into operation at all. As matters now stand and taking the Bill of the local legislature and this Bill together, I see every hope for an agreement being come to between the parties. The terms on which the $12,000 a year is to be paid are a matter for agreement between the two governments, and I am in hopes that my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) may see his way clear to deal not only liberally but generously with the province when he comes to make the agreement. What the hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) desires is to be found within the four corners of the Bill as it stands, and can be made part of the agreement when the parties come together. I have no doubt that when the Minister (Mr. Blair) comes to make the arrangement he will make it in a manner which will be thoroughly satisfactory.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the cost of the bridge?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The bridge was estimated to cost between $800,000 and $900,000. If we were to leave this question open in our legislation, to the extent to which it seems to have been left open in the Prince Edward Island Bill, there would be room for a very great deal of misunderstanding and trouble. My hon. colleague (Sir Louis Davies) is correct in stating that the Prince Edward Island Act is in the nature of a proposal to us, and we cannot accept it legislatively in any other way than we have done under this Bill. It is not capable of being determined with absolute or even approximate accuracy what the proportionate cost of a bridge which is both a railway and a highway bridge in respect of its highway and its railway portion. You have practically to have the same superstructure for the one as the other; it might possibly have to be a little stronger, if built for both purposes; but you cannot adjust the proportions between the two. We have said to the province of Prince Edward Island: Upon the basis of a cost of, say, $800,000, you pay half and we will pay the other half. Their contribution is fixed and limited, but if the bridge costs more than $800,000, we will have to take the whole burden of the extra cost, and give them a bridge with all necessary facilities for highway purposes. I do not think anything could be fairer than that, and that will settle the question. There will be no room for further dispute or controversy, as they are willing to pay that. Therefore, as my hon. friend has suggested, there is no reason why we should not be able to come to a satisfactory agreement with the Government by the Bill.

Mr. HAGGART. Is the Government of Prince Edward Island allowed to charge tolls?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, that is the idea—that it shall be allowed, under proper regulations with the Department of Railways, to charge tolls. The bridge is a highway bridge.

Mr. BELL (P.E.I.) As I understand it, the legislature of Prince Edward Island has given power to the Lieutenant-Governor in Council to make a certain agreement with the Government of Canada. It is clear that the Lieutenant-Governor in Council cannot make any other agreement with this Government than that which is authorized by the local legislature. The power is given and restricted by legislation. That is beyond question. If this Parliament chooses to authorize the Governor General in Council to make another proposition, then it is clear that the minds of the two Governments will not and cannot agree. It is also clear to my mind that there is no authorization on the part of the Government of Prince Edward Island to accept the proposition involved in this Bill. It is as if one man makes an offer to perform a contract. If the other does not accept the offer in the terms in which it is made, there is no contract or agreement; there is no consensus of minds. It seems to me that what we ought to do by our legislation, unless there is a material objection, is to accept the offer of the legislature of Prince Edward Island in the terms in which it is made, because if we do not do that, the result will be that no progress can be made until the Prince Edward Island legislature can meet again and accept your offer to them. Let us look at the offer of the Government of Prince Edward Island, and see what it is.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Do I understand that the hon. gentleman takes exception to the Bill before the committee?

Mr. BELL (P.E.I.) What I am trying to point out is that the legislature of Prince Edward Island has made a certain specific offer for our acceptance.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. And it has been practically accepted here.

Mr. BELL (P.E.I.) If I could see that, I would raise no objection; but I want to point out to my hon. friend that there is a divergence between the Bill now before the House and the Act of the legislature of Prince Edward Island.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. In what respect?

Mr. BELL (P.E.I.) In the first place, the proposition of the legislature of Prince Edward Island is to pay a fair contribution towards the interest on the cost of construction, not exceeding $12,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The local government has power to do that, has it not?

Mr. BELL (P.E.I.) The local government has the power to enter into an arrangement with the Government of Canada to pay a sum to be agreed on towards the interest on the cost of construction not exceeding $12,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. And may they not agree with the Government of Canada fixing $400,000 as their share of the cost?

Mr. BELL (P.E.I.) No; I do not see that there is any proposition of that kind involved in their offer or authorized by their legislation.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How are you going to settle the cost?

Mr. BELL (P.E.I.) That, I think, is not intended to be settled by legislation, but is intended to be left in the discretion and adjustment of the Government of Prince Edward Island and the Government of Canada.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Does not the proposition of the Government of Prince Edward Island enable them to agree to pay a sum equal to $12,000 a year towards the cost of the construction of that bridge?

Mr. BELL (P.E.I.) No, that is not the way it is put.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is put as interest on the cost. What difference does it make how you phrase it? The amount they have to pay is so much per year; the amount we agree to accept is $12,000 per year, and if we both agree to $12,000, it is only splitting hairs about nothing—

Mr. BELL (P.E.I.) I do not look on it as splitting hairs. The question is how much interest should the Government of Prince Edward Island pay towards the cost of construction? Interest is a matter which changes from year to year. The amount of interest payable now depends on what amount is agreed on as our fair share of the cost of construction, also on what is now considered as a fair rate of interest. I happen to know a little of the sentiment of the Government of Prince Edward Island, and they do not regard $12,000 as the settled amount, but they say that is the limit beyond which they are not to pass.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The legislature have given them authority to go up to that amount.

Mr. BELL (P.E.I.) This Parliament is taking the discretion and the adjustment out of the hands of both Governments and making the payment of the $12,000 absolute.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Let me ask the hon. gentleman, is there anything in their Bill or in this one which compels the Government of Prince Edward Island to agree to pay the $12,000 unless they are so disposed? Cannot they refuse to go into the agreement altogether?

Mr. MARTIN. Would the Minister allow me to ask him a question? Can the Government of Canada accept less?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, we cannot accept less, because we know that it is impossible to fix the amount in any way except by agreement between the two governments, and we have made up our minds as to what would be a fair sum at which to estimate the value of that bridge for highway purposes, and we have fixed it at $400,000. If the amount cannot be settled by us, it cannot be settled at all.

Mr. BELL (P.E.I.) May I ask the hon. gentleman this question: Is it understood now that the sum of $400,000 is the portion which the Government of Prince Edward Island is to pay towards the cost of construction?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They may not know, perhaps, at this moment, or until advised by us, accurately what the cost of the bridge will be.

Mr. BELL (P.E.I.) That is the very point. I am advised that they have not agreed to pay one-half the cost.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Nobody said they did.

Mr. BELL (P.E.I.) $400,000 represents the half, or about the half.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, it does not do anything of the kind.

Mr. BELL (P.E.I.) This debate has been evidently proceeding on that idea, but the Government of Prince Edward Island have certainly not agreed to pay half the cost. They only expect to pay the difference between the cost of a railway bridge and a highway bridge.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Nobody says they did, but they agreed some time ago to contribute $10,000 a year, and they were told that that was not deemed sufficient. They asked what was sufficient, and they were told by this Government that what this Government deemed sufficient would be $12,000. Then they took power from the legislature to make the limit up to that sum. They did not bind themselves to give it, but took the power to give it. The hon. Minister of Railways said he could not go below that sum and the way this section is drafted, the Government of Prince Edward Island can agree to the $12,000 and so can we. There is no dispute, and I do not know what the hon. gentleman is objecting to, except to the fixing of an arbitrary sum, and not leaving it open to agreement.

Mr. BELL (P.E.I.) That is the principal element of my objection. Of course, the Government of Prince Edward Island may accept the offer of this Parliament and pay the $12,000 absolutely, but I do not consider that they have yet arrived at that conclusion. If the hon. Minister says that he cannot do better, I may as well drop further discussion.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have given the subject the fullest possible consideration, and I do not see the possibility of reducing the amount below the $12,000. The cost of the bridge, at the lowest estimate, will be more than $800,000, and we have to face the fact that, under the existing conditions, the cost of the steel superstructure will exceed our estimate, by reason of the recent increase in the prices of steel and iron.

Mr. BELL (P.E.I.) If the hon. gentleman says he cannot do better than $12,000, I do not propose to argue the question further than to say that I think the Government of Canada is making a very hard bargain with the island, under the circumstances. I am bound to say that in view of the arguments used in a former debate, and which I do not now propose to repeat, Prince Edward Island would be entitled, as its proper share of moneys coming from the Dominion, to the total cost of the construction of that bridge, though the whole may cost $1,400,000. The amount of money which the Dominion Government ought to pay to Prince Edward Island as its fair share, by reason of the excess of expenditure on canals and railways in other provinces, over and above the amount authorized and agreed upon at confederation, and by reason of what this Parliament has expended on local railways, is something over two millions of dollars. That $1,400,000 would be only a payment on account, even though the Government of Canada were to build the whole of that bridge and railway, and fit up the bridge for highway purposes. If the Government has made up its mind that it cannot do better than $12,000, it ought then to consider further the proposition that instead of $12,000 being considered as contribution towards the construction of the bridge, it ought to be considered as the utmost limit we would be expected to pay, not only for its construction but for its maintenance and repair for the time to come.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Nobody has raised that difficulty and why should the hon. gentleman?

Mr. HAGGART. Before the clause is adopted, I would remind the hon. gentleman that the money which the Government of Prince Edward Island expends on the bridge it gets the full benefit of. The whole of the tolls collected are to be paid into the treasury of the island. The hon. gentleman has just raised a point which did not escape my attention. After giving all the tolls and virtually owning the bridge and getting the user of it, they pay nothing towards the maintenance. The Bill provides:

The Minister of Railways and Canals may enter into an agreement with the Government of Prince Edward Island providing that the bridge to be constructed over the Hillsborough River shall be so constructed as to be adapted and suitable as well for the purposes of a public highway as for the purposes of a railway; and before entering—

It makes no provision as to what the agreement with the Government of Prince Edward Island is.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is for a bridge to be constructed suitable for the purposes of a public highway and the railway.

Mr. HAGGART. The word used is "providing." It seems to me that that word is not the proper one to use, but that the word "undertaking" should be substituted.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It means that we make provision for.

Mr. HAGGART. That is not the ordinary meaning.

Mr. FOSTER. Substitute "which shall provide."

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. You could not have a better form of phraseology.

Mr. HAGGART. It is a very uncertain phraseology.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time and passed.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 190) to authorize the granting of subsidies in aid of the construction of the lines of railway therein mentioned.

Mr. CLANCY. This Bill is only printed in the one language.

The PRIME MINISTER. I hope my hon. friend will not insist on his objection.

Mr. CLANCY. I may be permitted at this stage to say this. It is a very important measure, and we should not undertake its discussion before it is printed in both languages.

The PRIME MINISTER. I hope my hon. friend will not make that objection. If we want to finish the business, surely he ought not to insist on this point. I do not think it would assist him very much if he read it in another language.

Mr. CLANCY. The right hon. gentleman is not holding out much encouragement. There are some clauses that are so vexatious that I thought it my duty to assert the rights of those I represent by at least compelling the Government to follow the proper procedure. I think that the right hon. gentleman, as a matter of right to me, in a certain matter that I have not the right to discuss just now, is prepared to consider the matter. I shall understand by his acquiescence that he will concede what I am sure is only fair and I shall have no objection to the Bill going on.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) is within his right in pressing any objection to the Bill, but surely he will not take advantage of any views which he may have and which he may want to press upon the Government to have the discussion of the Bill stopped for the time. Let us proceed with this Bill and we shall be happy to give to the views of my hon. friend every consideration. But the point raised is a point of order, and the question is whether we shall proceed with the Bill or not. I submit that we ought not at this moment to delay the Bill upon a mere question of procedure.

Mr. CLANCY. I am going now to cast myself on the generosity and fairness of my right hon. friend and help him with the Bill.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am much obliged to my hon. friend (Mr. Clancy).

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and the House resolved itself in committee on the Bill.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. CLANCY. There are many clauses of this Bill that seem to be fairly open to criticism upon the ground of their relation to other clauses, though on the general grounds there might be no objection to them. I am going to state my position on the matter to save time. I probably should be out of order in discussing any clause of this Bill until we reach it, but I may refer to section 49 for the purpose of discussing the general provisions of the Bill. I do not want to leave that discussion until we have passed over every clause that might directly or indirectly be affected by it. So, as we reach these clauses, I propose taking up each of them to show their effect in relation to clause 49.

Mr. CLANCY.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That will come up on the second section of the Bill.

Mr. CLANCY. It arises under several sections, as my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) will see, and I propose discussing it on each to save time.

Mr. MACLEAN. I wish to direct attention to certain statements of the Prime Minister when speaking of this Bill. He laid down his position as follows, speaking of certain members of the House :

They want the Government to build this railway. This is a new policy—that the Government should go into the building and ownership of railways. So far as I am concerned, I have only this to say—I am not in favour of the Government building and owning railways. We have one railway, and that is enough at the present time.

And the Minister of Railways and Canals, later on, speaking on the same question, said :

I understood the hon. gentleman to say that it was a plank in the platform of the Conservative party in Manitoba that the Government should own all the railways. Well, that is a stupendous question, a question of enormous magnitude. It is a question which makes a man dizzy, when he thinks about it. I am sure that my hon. friend for East York has not thought about it.

So we have two members of the Government laying it down as the position of their party that they do not believe in national railways, and we have had enough of them—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I hope the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) is not quoting me ?

Mr. MACLEAN. I say two prominent members of the Government. We have the leader of the Government, at any rate, saying that we have gone far enough in the construction of national railways—

The PRIME MINISTER. At the present time.

Mr. MACLEAN. And this notwithstanding that one of the Bills before the House provides for an expenditure of a million and a half for the extension of the present national railway. I am in favour of Government railways. I do not take the position that we ought to nationalize all the railways now, but I say that the only way to relieve the country in relation to the question of transportation is to have confidence in our national system of railways, and to extend it. My contention all along has been, not to nationalize all our railways, nor, I believe, is the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) in favour of that course, but we are in favour of extending the present national railway so as to afford a means of regulating all the other railways of the country. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals told the House that we had only begun an era of railway building in this country, that we would require a very large mileage and that we might require two or three transcontinental lines. I believe that. But we ought to have a national line, one controlled by the Government of this country. As for the Intercolonial Railway, I am not one who is ashamed of that railway; I am not here as an apologist for it. It is the best work in the way of railways ever done in this country. The Conservative party have it to their credit that they started it, and hon. gentlemen opposite ought to take credit to themselves for having improved it; and this House and this country ought to be disposed to extend it, to carry it through to the west, and, by that means to take the most effective way to regulate the other great railways of the country. I think I speak for a large section of the people of this country when I say they are not ashamed of the national railway, but that they believe in extending it; and, when we are voting large sums of money for railways, some portion of that money should be spent in such a way that it will allow an extension of the Government system of railways. That is a reasonable position, and one that is growing in favour in this country. So far as I am concerned, I take the opportunity of reaffirming the idea and declaring that I do not go with the Prime Minister, who was ashamed that we had a national railway and does not propose to extend it, or with the Minister of Railways and Canals, who regards those who are in favour of extending it as visionary.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals to one point. In the resolution that I moved as an amendment to one clause the other evening, the following new clause occurred:

That the rates, both passenger and freight, shall at all times be subject to revision and control by the Governor General in Council, provided that whenever such rates produce a net earning of more than 6 per cent on the actual cost of the road and equipment, less the amount of subsidies received from any source, the rates shall be reduced to such point as shall only produce 6 per cent on such net cost.

The Minister objected that 6 per cent was too low, and that such a rate would not be fair to the company. I am not wedded particularly to 6 per cent; any reasonable rate would do me. The point I want to bring out is that the rates on the road should be based not on the enhanced cost or any cost that might be reported, but on the actual cost to the promoters, less all public subsidies which are granted; and if the hon. Minister would say that in exercising control of rates which he may be called upon to exercise, he would see to it that the rates are based on the cost of the road, less the subsidies. I am sure it would be a great satisfaction to the people of the west and it would be to me. I did not move that as a motion; I merely read it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think, so far as I had any power to express an opinion on the subject, I expressed it the other evening, and it was to the effect—not as reported, but just the reverse—that I thought, in making an estimate, whoever might have to deal with the question of fixing rates hereafter in respect to any of these roads, was entitled to deduct from the actual cost the amount which had been contributed in the way of subsidies by the Government; and I would still adhere to that view.

Mr. SPROULE. That was in striking the freight rate.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, considering whether the rate proposed by the company would be a reasonable rate. Having the information before them as to what the road cost, as to what its earnings were, they would be entitled to take into account only the cost of the railway outside the subsidy.

Mr. WALLACE. I do not wish to detain the House at any length, but I must again put myself on record and enter my protest against the whole of the subsidies in this Bill. The Government propose to vote away not less than $6,500,000 for the promotion of railways. Now, there are two considerations with reference to this amount. The first is, that in nearly every case, if the road expends $15,000 or $21,400 per mile, it will be entitled not only to $3,200, but to double that amount, $6,400, per mile. We asked the Minister of Railways and Canals how he would ascertain that, and he said they would inspect it; they would look at the books, and send their engineer. These were the two ways in which he would ascertain that expenditure. But, Mr. Chairman, has not our knowledge of railway matters taught us that the Government, so far as inspecting books is concerned, will be totally at a loss? The railway company makes a contract; they may make a contract with their own friends at any figure they please. The road may cost $21,000, $22,000, $24,000 per mile, including the cost of bridges up to $25,000 per bridge. In that way they can show that the road has cost more than $21,400, and that, therefore, they are entitled to the Government subsidy. Well, then, the Government say: We can go on, and send our inspectors. I would like to know machinery the Government has effectively to do this work? They sent their inspector down to investigate the Drummond County Railway, and, as a matter of fact, he never got below Montreal; he never inspected the road. The facilities for inspecting and valuing a road after it is built are of the most unsatisfactory description. So, here we are voting $6,500,000 on the supposition, in many cases, that the subsidy is $3,200 per mile. In the case of the Rainy River road and some others, there are $6,400 voted; if we add, as a rough estimate, 50 per cent to the $6,500,000, we have $10,000,000 voted away at this session of Parliament. But there is a further consideration. We are giving a subsidy for 40, 50, 80 or 100 miles of road that is the beginning of a railroad. So that, when they are building the next 50 miles, or the next 100 miles, the Government give them a similar subsidy for a further extension and completion of that road, no matter if it is three or four times the amount we are voting here to-day. So that, in voting this $6,500,000 directly, we may be voting $10,000,000 by the increased subsidies we will have to pay, and so, we will be committing the country to the payment of further sums of an unlimited amount for the future. I think that kind of legislation is all wrong. We are going into railroad building throughout the country. In many cases they build parallel lines, for instance, between Montreal and Quebec. In order to give the North Shore line, or the Canadian Pacific Railway, greater facilities, we are building a bridge across the St. Lawrence near the city of Quebec, and we are giving the Canadian Pacific Railway greater facilities to do business on the North Shore. The Grand Trunk Railway is connecting these two cities, and there is the Drummond County Railway, in which we have invested $7,000,000 in order to have a third road. To-day we are voting large subsidies to the South Shore Railway and to a bridge on that railway, so as to make a fourth line between these two cities. Of course, they say, it is not only the trade between the two cities that you have, but you have the local traffic as well. In the Drummond County Railway that local traffic will amount to very little indeed. The South Shore road is the one that has the most to recommend it on account of local traffic, because it goes through a settled, and populous, and, I am told, a wealthy and prosperous community. So, we have these four lines of railroad. In the case of the Grand Trunk Railway, that is an old road, and the Government has assisted it in the past. In the construction of the others Canada has poured out its money liberally. Now, time and again the attention of the House has been called to the fact that these are parallel lines, and you are now subsidizing other parallel lines. In the case of the Lake Erie road, and of numerous others that we will come to, the Government are subsidizing parallel lines; they are subsidizing railroads in the most populous and wealthy portions of the various provinces, where they have very ample railroad facilities. They say: Here is a village which is seven miles from a railroad; that is a thing that cannot be tolerated, and we must vote them a subsidy to build a road in there. You cannot hope to reach within five miles of every man's farm in the country with a railway. In the province of Ontario there is a perfect network of railways to-day, and the same can be said of portions of Quebec. I have been told, and it seems to me an extraordinary thing, that railways have been built in the province of Quebec with public moneys which are not now in operation. The hon. member for Missisquoi (Mr. Meigs) gave one case the other day. I am told that there are railways in New Brunswick that do not run more than one or two trains a week. This shows that we have gone beyond the necessities of the country in many places in railway building. There are places and enterprises that are deserving of public consideration, but these are exceptional ones, and they should be treated exceptionally. I object to the policy of the Government as announced by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, and in this practical way by the resolutions now before the House, because I think we are going beyond our length. We are going beyond the necessities or the requirements; we are going beyond what we are called upon to do, and I think that we might fairly profit by the experience of our neighbours to the south in this regard, because I am told that they do not now bonus railways. They have ceased bonusing railways, which in that country, are treated as commercial enterprises to be considered on their merits as such, just as we should treat them here. Men will put their money into them with a reasonable prospect of return. Canada has done a great deal of railway building in the past, and the Conservative party are responsible for a large amount of it. It was recognized, I think, by both parties, at any rate it was recognized by the Conservative party that the railway was necessary for the maintenance of our Dominion and for the consolidation and binding together of the different provinces. We have built a railway through the inhospitable regions north of Lake Superior, through what were considered at that time the inhospitable plains of the North-west Territories and through the mountains of British Columbia. Canadians recognized the necessity of building this great railway notwithstanding all the difficulties that had to be encountered, notwithstanding the violent opposition of the Liberal party at every step, from the inception to the completion of the undertaking, and who predicted all sorts of disasters and failures, which predictions have been falsified by the event. Notwithstanding all these things, the Conservative party, believing that great enterprise to be necessary to the integrity of the Dominion, to its consolidation and prosperity, believing it to be necessary to open up that great country, never flinched in their duty to their country, in the face of all the predictions of failure made by the Liberal party, all of which predictions were falsified by the events. The course taken by the Conservative party has been amply justified by the event, by the success which has crowned the efforts of that party and by the great prosperity which the country has enjoyed in consequence of their patriotism and courage in going on with the construction of this great road. But now we have entered upon a new era ; we have entered upon a period when the Government should treat these matters as commercial enterprises and should not be enticing men into the building of railways by the enormous bonuses given by the Dominion of Canada, by the local legislatures, and in some cases, by the municipalities as well. In the case of the Rainy River Railway, I think, the bonus which is proposed, is wholly unjustifiable. We are told that $4,000 a mile has been given by the province of Ontario for that portion of the road within the boundary of Ontario ; we have $6,400 a mile given by this Government, which makes $10,400 a mile as the contribution of the Government of Ontario and the Government of the Dominion. For that portion of the road which is in Manitoba, and which is called, I think, the South-eastern Railway, they have a still larger subsidy. They have a land subsidy and they have a money subsidy from this Government of $6,400 a mile and from the local government a subsidy, both in land and money, I am told, more than is sufficient to build the road. Then they have bonding powers. With such splendid subsidies they can go to the money market and they will have no difficulty in raising a large amount of money on their bonds so that the road will be constructed without costing a dollar to themselves. Moreover, in this case, there is no proper Government control. If it is necessary for the Government to build the railway the Government should own it because the only justification for building it would be that it would be an entrance to the whole of the North-west, and it is a matter of vital importance that the Government should have control of one of the entrances at least. But they have not kept control of the road. The Rainy River Railway Company may be the Canadian Pacific Railway, or they may be hostile to the Canadian Pacific Railway. We do not know, and we do not care, but we do know that the Government have no control. It is said that the Government have power to fix the rates. The Government have that power with all the railways of Canada to-day, except the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and I would like to ask this Government, or the last Government when they have exercised that power in order to regulate rates. Any railway company in this country can come to Ottawa and make out a plausible case to the Government. The Government apparently have yielded to all their representations, because we never knew of a Government, at any time, having said to a railway company : Your rates are too high ; you are charging the people too much for the service you are performing, and, therefore, these rates must be reduced. Demands have been made for many years, but without result. I remember the late Mr. Dalton McCarthy, twelve or fourteen years ago, introduced a Bill providing for the appointment of a commission that would regulate rates, and settle disputes. The object was that that commission should control and regulate rates so that every portion of the community would be treated on fair and equitable terms. That Bill was defeated. I remember that at that time the railway companies filled this Chamber with representatives from every part of this Dominion to oppose Dalton McCarthy's Bill for a railway commission.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Was there a vote upon it ?

Mr. WALLACE. I think there was.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I was under the impression that there was not.

Mr. WALLACE. There was a vote in some place ; I do not remember whether it was in this House or the Railway Committee. I voted in favour of the commission, because I was strongly in favour of it then as I am to-day.

The PRIME MINISTER. More to-day than then.

Mr. WALLACE. No, not any more. I had no reason to be less in favour of it then than I am in favour of it to-day. We have this expenditure of six and a half million dollars and a further liability immediately before us of 50 per cent more, amounting in all to $10,000,000. In addition, there is the contingent liability which this Government have lightly assumed, to vote further bonuses for the extension of these roads, and that liability is almost unlimited. These considerations compel me to put my opposition on record in the most positive manner. This bonusing legislation is inimicable to the best interests of the country, it is creating railways where the circumstances do not justify them, and it then places them beyond our control. We have voted the Rainy River people altogether $1,700,000. We are practically giving sufficient subsidies to some companies to build the roads without costing them a cent. This Government is squandering the resources of the people and running the country unnecessarily into debt. They are violating every pledge they made to the people. At a time when the giving of subsidies was justifiable they opposed subsidies, and now when the time for subsidizing railways has passed, they are increasing subsidies to an unprecedented extent. I say that the Government are proposing a course ruinous to the country. They justify themselves by saying the country is prosperous, but I can tell them, and every one who has studied the subject knows it, that the present prosperity of Canada arises from the well-considered policy of the Conservative party in the past, and the courageous carrying out of that policy in spite of gentlemen opposite. I enter my emphatic protest against this measure.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) came into this House about the same time that I did.

Mr. WALLACE. Excuse me. I was here four years before you, and it is just as well to state that in order that you may be accurate.

Mr. McMULLEN. Well, during the time that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) has sat in this House supporting the Conservative Government, he voted bonuses to railways to the amount of $42,145.76. That was in four Parliaments, or a little over $10,000,000 a Parliament. Out of that sum there were $41,890,887 paid. There never was a railway bonus scheme brought into Parliament that my hon. friend (Mr. Wallace) did not enthusiastically vote for. Now he is finding fault with anything and everything.

Mr. HENDERSON. You are just the reverse. You found fault with everything when in Opposition, and now you swallow everything.

Mr. HAGGART. Let me correct the figures given by the hon. member (Mr. McMullen). The Subsidy Act came into force in 1882, and we administered it until our exit in 1896. The amount paid on subsidies up to that time was about $15,000,000, or a little more than $1,000,000 a year. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) is altogether wrong. I have the Public Accounts here to prove that I am correct.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) spoke of the subsidies voted.

Mr. HAGGART. He said subsidies paid, and anyway there was not anything like that amount voted.

Mr. McMULLEN. I took my figures from the Public Accounts, and I had them checked by an accountaant, so as to be sure they were correct. I repeat that the entire amount voted towards the construction of railways from the inception of the bonus system down to the close of 1897, for which the Conservatives are responsible, was $42,945,176, and the amount paid was $41,890,887.

Mr. HAGGART. That includes the Canadian Pacific Railway as the hon. gentleman knows.

Mr. McMULLEN. Well, what does that matter?

Mr. HAGGART. It matters a great deal. I now read from the Public Accounts the

Mr. WALLACE.

sums paid for subsidies to railways, and they are as follows:—

1884	.....	$ 208,000
1885	.....	403,245
1886	.....	2,701,249
1887	.....	1,406,533
1888	.....	1,027,041
1889	.....	846,721
1890	.....	1,678,195
1891	.....	1,255,705
1892	.....	1,248,000
1893	.....	811,000
1894	.....	1,229,000
1895	.....	1,310,000

In the year 1896, the sum voted was $3,228,745, but before that date they averaged about $1,000,000 for about fourteen years. The Minister of Finance transferred the amount of the expenditure from 1885, which was paid towards the Canadian Pacific Railway branches in Quebec, and he altered the accounts and he added it to those of 1896, namely, $2,039,000.

Mr. MACLEAN. How much are you spending this year?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is not the point.

Mr. MACLEAN. It is the point. You are spending six and a half millions under this Bill, and one and a half under a previous Bill, which makes $8,000,000.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) read out $208,000 in 1884, and $403,000 in 1885. That was a heavy year, when there were voted between eight and nine million dollars.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman must know that I disputed that with the leader of the Government. The leader of the Government said that $9,500,000 was voted in 1884. I denied that it was for subsidies. I might have brought the Public Accounts to prove that, and to prove that the only amount expended was $404,000. Then, the Finance Minister, when he comes into power in 1896, says that the amounts charged for subsidies in the Public Accounts were wrong—that there was $2,000,000 more paid in 1884 than the Public Accounts show, and he adds the amount to the Public Accounts of 1896.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What difference does it make in the total, whether it is brought out in one year or in another?

Mr. HAGGART. I will tell you why—because I deny that the amount expended in 1884-85 was for subsidies at all.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. But does not the hon. gentleman acknowledge that, in the Act of Parliament which granted the amounts, they were distinctly declared to be subsidies?

Mr. HAGGART. And does not the Minister of Railways know that the two last items we had to acknowledge were not subsidies, but additions to the Intercolonial Railway, although the Act of Parliament called them subsidies ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Nothing of the kind. The two last items were declared to be subsidies under the Act.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Why quarrel about the word "subsidies" ? The Act of 1884 provided for aid to railways to the amount of $9,500,000.

Mr. HAGGART. The Minister of Railways argues that because the Act was to authorize certain subsidies and grants for the respective lines of railway therein mentioned, therefore the whole of the money voted was for subsidies ; but, when he came to the grant for the branch of the Intercolonial Railway from Metapedia to Paspebiac, and the branch from Derby Station to Indian Town, although they were classified the same as the preceding clauses, the hon. gentleman had to admit that they were not subsidies.

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman knows that they were subsidies. Those railways were not built as parts of the Intercolonial, but by companies.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not think this discussion would be complete without adding that, in addition to the enormous bonuses in cash given by the late Government towards the construction of railways, they gave 40,000,000 acres of land, the value of which, if put at $3 an acre, would amount to $120,000,000.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

(In the Committee.)

On section 3,

Mr. WALLACE. We are not through with clause 2.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Clause 2 is carried.

Mr. CLANCY. It is hardly fair to rush this like a house afire. This is an important Bill. Clause 2, as it is printed in the Bill, includes all the subsections down to No. 51.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I presume the hon. gentleman would not desire all these clauses to be read. They are precisely the same as those that were dealt with by the committee. If there are any matters in the clause to which the hon. gentleman wishes to draw attention—

Mr. CLANCY. That is the reason. Clause 2 contains all the important items.

Mr. FOSTER. Take them up item by item.

Mr. WALLACE. Do I understand that the 52 are in the one clause ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Yes, they are in the one clause, and the discussion is on the clause.

Mr. FOSTER. Technically, the Chairman is correct ; but we always take these by the items. That is much more convenient, and it will not cause any loss of time.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is only the one motion for the whole clause ; but, if any gentleman wishes to call attention to anything in the clause, there would be no objection to have any discussion he desires.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope my hon. friend will make no objection to taking them up item by item.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It would take a great deal of unnecessary time.

Mr. FOSTER. The easier and quicker way to get through is to take them item by item.

To the Central Ontario Railway Company, for an extension of their railway from, or from near, either Coe Hill or Rathbun Station on the company's railway to or near to Bancroft, not exceeding 21 miles, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chap. 2 of 1892.

Mr. WALLACE. What was the subsidy by chapter 2 of 1892 ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will have to send for the statutes of 1892. I presumed the discussion would be on the general principle, and not on the details, as these were all discussed in the committee the other day. Consequently, I have not my papers or memoranda here.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. Minister knew perfectly well that the discussion was not going through, and now he pretends he has not got his papers.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman quite misapprehends me. I was not referring to the discussion which took place to-day, but to the discussion in committee the other day, and I did not anticipate that we were going over the same particulars that we went through the other night.

Mr. FOSTER. Better let the item stand until the hon. Minister gets his papers.

To the Great Northern Railway Company, for a railway between Montcalm and St. Tite Junction, on the Lower Laurentian Railway, Que., not exceeding 53½ miles ; and for a branch from their main line to Shawenegan Falls, Que., not exceeding 6½ miles.

Mr. BERGERON. Is this the company which is to amalgamate with the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway?

The PRIME MINISTER. This is a continuation of the Canada Atlantic.

Mr. BERGERON. Where?

The PRIME MINISTER. It connects with the Canada Atlantic Railway at Hawkesbury, where there is to be a bridge over the River Ottawa. This continues to St. Jerome, Montcalm, St. Tite and the Lake St. John Railway, and it has the right of way over that railway to the harbour of Quebec.

Mr. BERGERON. It is a part of the same concern as is known as the Great Northern.

The PRIME MINISTER. That may be.

Mr. BERGERON. Now, let me ask, as a matter of information, that is a line of which the hon. gentleman spoke, I imagine, when he spoke of the projected elevator to be built in Quebec?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

To the Strathroy and Western Counties Railway, for a line from Strathroy, Ont., via Adelaide and Arkona, to either Forest, Tedford or Park Hill, not exceeding 24 miles, in lieu of subsidy granted by 57-58 Victoria, chap. 4. (Partly revote.)

Mr. FOSTER. Why is that not granted to one railway company?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It may be proper to do so, but this is a subsidy merely to the railway.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, but you are granting it to an entity of some kind.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It may be so taken, but it does not necessarily follow, though the Strathroy and Western Railway Company is the one to which it would go.

Mr. WALLACE. I object to the phrase, "in lieu of subsidy granted by 57-58 Vic., chap. 4," in this grant. The subsidy granted in 1894 was from St. Thomas, not from Strathroy. This cannot take the place of that subsidy.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, it takes the place of it.

Mr. WALLACE. If I get a charter from Ottawa and afterwards wish to build from Toronto to Kingston, it could hardly be said that my railway was "in lieu of the one first projected."

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The original subsidy was to Forest Station or to Parkhill, 25 miles. This is 24 miles, and, while the original was from St. Thomas, this is from Strathroy to the same point—so it is in lieu of it. There is nothing incorrect in stating that. I would move to insert the word "company."

Mr. FOSTER.

Amendment agreed to.

To the St. John Valley and Rivière du Loup Railway Company, for a line of railway from Fredericton, in the county of York, N.B., to Woodstock, in the county of Carleton, not exceeding 59 miles. (Revote.)

Mr. FOSTER. What are the prospects of this road being gone on with? This is an old subsidy and revote. Is there any greater prospect of it being built now than there was eight years ago?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is represented that there is a good prospect of it being built. I believe that there are some New York capitalists now connected with the company who, I understand, are going to take the matter up. Of course, I cannot give the House any positive assurance that the road will be built.

For a railway from Port Hawkesbury, on the Strait of Canso, N.S., to St. Peter's, not exceeding 30 miles. (Revote.)

Mr. BERGERON. There is no company's name mentioned in this case.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, this is just for the line.

Mr. BERGERON. So that subsidy may be granted to any company which will build the road?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, on the Government being satisfied that the company would carry out the work, a contract would be made.

Mr. BERGERON. Has any charter been granted?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think there are two.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I believe there is some question as to the parties who hold the charter. Two or three separate people are professing to have the authority to build the road.

Mr. FOSTER. Under Dominion charters?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, I think, provincial.

For a railway from Windsor, N.S., to Truro, via township of Clifton, not exceeding 58 miles, in lieu of subsidy granted by 57-58 Victoria, chap. 4. (Revote.)

Mr. FOSTER. Is not this being built?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. By what company?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Midland.

Mr. FOSTER. Why not make it so in the Bill?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is no question that it means the Midland Company.

Mr. FOSTER. It is under contract with them?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

For a railway from the village of St. Rémi to Stottsville or some point on the Delaware and Hudson Railway (Grand Trunk) in the parish of St. Paul de l'Isle aux Noix, not exceeding 19 miles, of which 12 miles is a revote.

Mr. BERGERON. Has there ever been any work done upon this piece of road? I think this charter was granted many years ago. What is the present condition of the work, and what is hoped to be gained by this subsidy?

The PRIME MINISTER. There has been a grant made for a railway from St. Rémi to Napierville. Ten miles of the road has been graded; but, ending at Napierville, the railway ends nowhere, there is no connection with any other railway. The object now is to extend the railway from Napierville to Stottsville.

Mr. BERGERON. What distance?

The PRIME MINISTER. About eight miles. The road will be twenty miles.

Mr. BERGERON. This subsidy, if I understand aright, will cover the whole line, the part that is already graded and that which is to be finished?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Then this line will be between that point on the Delaware and Hudson and St. Rémi.

The PRIME MINISTER. That point will be between the Grand Trunk Railway at St. Rémi and the Delaware and Hudson at Stottsville.

To the United Counties Railway Company, for a railway from St. Robert Junction to Sorel, 6½ miles, and from Mount Johnson to St. Grégoire Station, 1 mile, not exceeding 7½ miles. (Revote.)

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. When this vote was in the committee the other day we added to it the following amendment:—

This subsidy to be payable only in the event of running rights over the South-eastern Railway between the two points above mentioned not being granted to the first mentioned company on terms to be approved by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council.

This amendment was added because it was suggested that we were subsidizing a line parallel to an existing railway some few miles away. It was suggested that this might be added so that if running rights could be acquired from the other road to answer the purpose, the subsidy would not be paid.

Mr. CLANCY. Has the South-eastern Railway been subsidized by the Government of Canada?

The PRIME MINISTER. No, the South-eastern Railway was built between 1871 and 1875. It received no subsidy from the Dominion of Canada, but it was subsidized by the provincial government.

Mr. CLANCY. It occurred to me that the right hon. gentleman, in making this amendment, was attempting to make a parallel case in order to sidetrack the case of the Lake Erie and Detroit River Railway. The hon. gentleman made a declaration then that that was not his purpose. But if we are to be guided by the trend of the debate, his purpose appears to be that wherever the Government of Canada or the provincial government have subsidized lines of railway, in such cases it is not the policy of this Government to subsidize parallel lines. Is that the purpose of the hon. gentleman?

The PRIME MINISTER. I will explain to the hon. gentleman our motive in accepting this amendment.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman will permit to refer to another case for the purpose of elucidating this. I think it was the South Shore road. This is what was said in the debate:

Mr. BERGERON. I am not opposing this, but I want the thing to be understood. We will have, for a distance of about 30 miles, five or six railways running in nearly the same direction.

The PRIME MINISTER. There will only be three parallel lines.

Mr. BERGERON. The Drummond County, the Grand Trunk Railway, the South Shore, the Atlantic and Lake Superior—

The PRIME MINISTER. The Atlantic and Lake Superior will never be built in that direction, because it will never have a subsidy. My hon. friend does not suppose that this Parliament is going to subsidize two parallel lines.

Now, I want to ask the right hon. gentleman if the policy of the Government is in no case to subsidize a parallel line, or if the policy of the Government is not to subsidize parallel lines where they have already received aid from either the Dominion or the provincial governments. There are two distinct cases, and I am anxious to know what is the guiding policy of the Government in these two cases.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have no objection to explain to the hon. gentleman that in so far as the railway to which he especially alludes, personally I agree with him. But I must explain that in regard to the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway and the South Shore Railway, there is no parallel at all with the case he has in his own mind, neither is there any parallel with the South-eastern Railway and the United Counties Railway. In the case of the Atlantic and Lake Superior and South Shore Railways, the Parliament of Canada has granted two charters to two different companies to cover exactly the same ground. If these two railways were to be constructed, there would not be, perhaps, ten yards of distance between them at certain places. It is the policy of the Government so far as these two railways are concerned, to give the subsidy to the South Shore and not to the Atlantic and Lake Superior.

Mr. CLANCY. What about the Drummond County Railway?

The PRIME MINISTER. Well, the Drummond County Railway is some 20 miles distant.

Mr. CLANCY. That is a parallel line.

The PRIME MINISTER. No, it is not a parallel line: it does not cover the same ground at all. The South Shore Railway covers one set of parishes and the Drummond County Railway covers another set of parishes. The South Shore would cover the parishes situated on the main shore of the St. Lawrence, that is, the parishes of Sorel, St. François du Lac, Pierreville, St. Zéphirin, La Bale du Febvre, Nicolet, St. Grégoire, and Becancour. All these parishes are on the St. Lawrence. The parishes which are to be served by the Drummond County Railway are Gentilly, St. Pierre les Becquets, St. Jean des Chaillons and Lotbinière. There is no connection between the two sets of parishes. The people could not take their produce from one place to another place, because there is no connection between those two sets of parishes. Now I come to the other two railways. At the present time, the United Counties Railway enters the town of Sorel over seven miles or thereabouts of South-eastern Railway. At present they have no line for seven miles to the south of Sorel. We say that there is no necessity then for another railway, there is no demand for it. But it appears that the United Counties Railway have some difficulty, they fear they will not be able to keep the right of way over the United Counties Railway. When we were discussing these subsidies the first night, the member for York asked: What is the objection to building a second road over this seven miles? I must say to the hon. gentleman that if the United Counties were to build a railway to enter the town of Sorel, not only would it be parallel to the South-eastern, but probably there would not be one mile distance between the two. There is no occasion for it at all. We have told the company that we shall give the subsidy only in case they cannot retain their present right of way over the South-eastern. But if it is possible to retain that right of way, as they give us to understand, there will be no necessity whatever for duplicating that railway. Now I come to the case the hon. member refers to, that of the Lake Erie and Detroit River Railway. From Ridgeway up to St. Thomas all the local-

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

ties to be served by this railway have given bonuses for its construction. They passed by-laws and voted money. That is altogether putting a new complexion on it, and, so far as I am concerned, I think it is a good reason for subsidizing a railway of this kind.

Mr. CLANCY. I am glad to hear the right hon. gentleman make it clear that he has not made this a parallel case. It is only a small line, six miles long, and it is perfectly satisfactory, as it has no relation to the railway I have in my mind.

Mr. FOSTER. The Railway Committee of the Privy Council has power to give running rights, on application.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, if the road has received a subsidy from the Government of Canada, but I think not, if it has not received a subsidy.

Mr. FOSTER. Is not this a road for the general advantage of Canada?

The PRIME MINISTER. I think the general clause which applies to all railways intersecting the Canadian Pacific Railway or Grand Trunk Railway, would apply.

Mr. BERGERON. I think that the South-Eastern was operated by the Canadian Pacific Railway for a while.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is much doubt whether the general clause classifies railways as being for the general advantage of Canada simply because they intersect either the Grand Trunk or the Canadian Pacific. They have to be specifically mentioned.

Mr. FOSTER. Not specifically mentioned, surely.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Specifically mentioned. I think the decision the courts arrived at was, that the general clause did not have the effect and operation which has been contended for, and as it had been adjudged by some of the courts of the provinces. The opinion was expressed in a case by the judges of the Supreme Court to that effect. This statement of the law by the Supreme Court will bind the provincial courts, and it will be held, I believe, as correct that the general clause is not operative to the extent which has been supposed.

Mr. FOSTER. I asked that, because this provision seems to leave the whole thing entirely to the South-eastern Railway. My view was, that, on application of the United Counties Railway Company to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council for running rights, those running rights could be given absolutely by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council on such terms as they thought reasonable and fit.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think so, in the case of a railway that has not received a subsidy from the Government of Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not know that that was a condition precedent to all these railways being considered to be for the general advantage of Canada, and I think it is not so under the general law. However, the right hon. Prime Minister is looking it up, and we will go to the next item in the meantime.

For a railway from a point on the Central Railway in the county of Lunenburg, N.S., to the town of Liverpool via the village of Caledonia, or to the village of Caledonia, via Liverpool, or for any part thereof, the whole distance not exceeding 62 miles. (Revote.)

Mr. MILLS. Is this subsidy for a road that is building now?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I apprehend that if there is a company incorporated to build in that direction, they will be likely to receive the subsidy mentioned in this Bill.

Mr. MILLS. The reason why I ask is, that there are alternative routes provided for:

For a railway from a point on the Central Railway in the county of Lunenburg, N.S., to Liverpool via the village of Caledonia—

I suppose that means Caledonia Corners?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. MILLS (reading):

—or to the village of Caledonia via Liverpool, or for any part thereof, the whole distance not exceeding 62 miles.

Is it not a fact that a road has been surveyed and is in the process of construction there now? As the hon. Minister of Finance is here, and as he is particularly interested in that portion of the country, I would like to call his attention to the fact that my information, in reference to the wishes of the people of Liverpool and Caledonia, is, that they desire a railway from Liverpool to Annapolis, and that the alternative route rather has a tendency to leave Caledonia, which is my hon. friend's constituency, out in the cold. I may just here say that, since this Government came into power, the country between Caledonia and Annapolis has been sadly neglected in the way of communication with the outside world. It is a fact that for nearly half a century they have had a daily stage-coach, at least, from Annapolis to Liverpool, and it is a fact, further, that if one desires to send a letter now from Annapolis to Maitland, in the southern portion of Annapolis County, it has to go via Middleton, down to Chesley's Corners by the Central Road, cross over to Caledonia, and thence up to Maitland, leaving a portion of about 13 miles, between Maitland and Milford, which has no communication whatever. I want to call the attention of the Government, and of the hon. Minister of Finance particularly, to this condition of affairs, and to let them know that the people think they have been very badly used in that respect. But if the Government sees fit to subsidize the railway to assist the old projected road from Liverpool to Annapolis, which the people of Liverpool, Caledonia, and Kempt have long been agitating for, and have long desired, their grievance in that regard would be removed, and, instead of being relegated back to the condition of half a century ago, they will be foremost in the modern walks of life. Now they have a miserable one-horse chaise, whereas before they had a spanking four-horse team going daily to and fro between Liverpool and Annapolis. Now they are in the cool shades, as it were. I am not complaining so much as regards the county of Annapolis as I am on behalf of the northern portion of the county of Queen's. The people of Kempt and Northern Queen's complain as much about this matter as the people of Annapolis. I call this directly to the attention of the Government and the hon. Minister of Finance, with the view of having the wishes of the people carried out.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Mills) has spoken of two questions, one in reference to the present mail arrangement with North Queen's, and the other relating to a railway subsidy. I may say that it is quite news for me to learn that there is any considerable dissatisfaction in North Queen's regarding the present mail arrangement. Some years ago, Annapolis was the nearest point on the line of railway to Queen's County, and the regular line of communication was from Annapolis by way of the northern district of Queen's down to Liverpool. That was the old mail route, but after the lapse of some years another railway was built in the county of Lunenburg which brought New Germany nearer to the northern district of Queen's than Annapolis; and adapting ourselves to the new condition, the mail route was laid out from New Germany through the northern district of Queen's and down to Liverpool instead of from Annapolis. The Annapolis end of the district no longer enjoyed the through mail route, but local mail arrangements were immediately made under such liberal terms that so far as I know the people along the line are apparently well satisfied. Of course, they suffer the disadvantage that they are no longer on the through line of communication.

With regard to the subsidy to the railway. Some years ago it was assumed that railway communication to open up that section of the country would have to be from Annapolis to Liverpool. In the progress of time that scheme was practically abandoned, and for several years no company has approached, so far as I know, either the Dominion or the provincial governments with a proposal to build a railway from Annapolis to Liverpool. The railway line, like the mail route, adapted itself to the new conditions, and all recent agitation has been for a railway, either from New Germany down to Liverpool, or from Bridgewater by way of the shore down to Liverpool. I think I am correct in stating that for some years past the project of a railway from Annapolis to Liverpool has not been very seriously discussed, either in this House or the local legislature. Of course, I can understand the desire of my hon. friend (Mr. Mills) representing Annapolis, to have the line go in the way originally projected.

Mr. MILLS. I did not rise with the expectation of succeeding in making any alteration in the route; I am not so ambitious as that. I rose only to call the attention of the Government, and the Minister of Finance in particular, to the state of affairs as I view it in the northern portion of his constituency and in mine. The alternative routes looked rather peculiar without explanation. I do not understand how there can possibly be two roads there. I do not suppose that the Government intend to subsidize more than one: Either one from a point on the Central Railway to Liverpool via Caledonia, which almost turns the corner of a right angle; or to the village of Caledonia via Liverpool, which is almost turning another corner of a right angle in another direction. I suppose the Minister of Railways is thoroughly acquainted with what is being done with reference to what is called the Hervey route and the Robertson route. Which route does this subsidy intend to encourage?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The people of that section of the country became so discouraged at the fights of the rival roads that they reached the conclusion, I believe, that they would be very glad to have either one of these routes.

Mr. MILLS. Rather than none.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes; and several years ago the location of the route was expressed in these words in order that the Government might be free to grant a subsidy to either of these roads, whenever a company should come forward in good faith to do the work. The question of the rival routes remains up to the present moment, except that I understand that recently one of the companies has made a more vigorous effort. I have reason to believe that the company which is working in Lunenburg County near New Germany, with a view of building through to Caledonia and on to Liverpool, has hardly a legal status at the present moment, owing to some difficulty about its charter. It, however, anticipates making such arrangements with the local government as will enable it to obtain its charter rights, and then it will be in a very good position to seek this subsidy. At the present moment, while I am glad to know that both companies are showing signs of activity, I would not care to commit myself as to which of these roads would be built. I have strong hopes before long that the Government will be in a position to make a contract with one or the other. As representing the county, my desire is so strong to get a railway, that I am decidedly inclined to recommend the giving of the subsidy to the first bona fide company that comes along.

Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. MILLS. I agree very much with what the Minister of Finance has said respecting the desire of the people to get a railway. They have been beyond the pale of civilization in that respect longer than they should have been, and I am pleased to know that they are becoming more modernized in that respect.

For a railway from Indian Gardens, Queen's County, Nova Scotia, to Shelburne, in the said province, a distance of 35 miles.

Mr. MILLS. This subsidy is for part of the same scheme as the last subsidy, and might I ask why it is you divide them?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the shore road were built, as was contemplated at one time, and as some people still contemplate, that section from Indian Gardens to Shelburne would not be built. It forms part of the Nova Scotia Southern Railway scheme, called the Hervey route, Mr. Hervey being president. If that scheme goes on the Indian Gardens portion would be a necessary part of it; but the Indian Gardens line is not necessary for the other project.

The subsidy which the Ontario and Rainy River Railway Company is entitled to receive under chap. 4 of 1897, shall be $6,400 per mile for the 80 miles mentioned in the said Act

Mr. FOSTER. There is no uncertainty as to the amount of this subsidy, and the $512,000 provided for should be carried out.

Mr. WALLACE. It would be more satisfactory if it were struck out.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not see how it can exceed the $512,000.

Mr. BERGERON. It has always been usual to carry out the figures if we give a lump sum. I move that these words be added:

Not exceeding in the whole $512,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is no objection to that.

Amendment agreed to.

To the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company, for 12 miles of their railway from end of their line at deep water on the Chicoutimi branch of their railway to Ha! Ha! Bay, in lieu of the subsidy for the 12 miles granted by chap. 4 of 1894. (Revote.)

Mr. BERGERON. I called the attention of the committee before to the fact that by a Bill passed this session, the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company is called the Great Northern; and why not call this by the latter name, instead of having the two names, which will be likely to create confusion?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. They have legislation empowering them to carry out the amalgamation, but it has not taken place yet legally.

Mr. BERGERON. As a matter of fact, the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company to-day belongs to the Great Northern Company.

The PRIME MINISTER. As I understand it, legislation has been granted authorizing the two companies to amalgamate; but that legislation must be ratified by the shareholders of the two companies before they will become the Great Northern Railway Company. At present it is not yet law.

Mr. BERGERON. It has gone further than that. The parties most interested in the passing of the Act to change the name, were the Quebec and Lake St. John people. It only requires the signature of the Governor General to be a fait accompli.

The PRIME MINISTER. It requires the assent of the two companies.

Mr. BERGERON. All that has been done, and they only wanted the Act of Parliament to accomplish the thing.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; there is only an understanding. The amalgamation has not been completed yet.

For a railway from Port Hawkesbury, on the Strait of Canso, to Caribou Cove, N.S., a distance of 10 miles.

Mr. BERGERON. There is no mention of any company here. Do I understand that this is to be given to any company which will propose to build the road, and which will be acceptable to the Governor in Council?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

For a railway from Port Clyde to Lockeport, in the province of Nova Scotia, not exceeding 20 miles.

Mr. MILLS. Is this part of the Robertson road?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. MILLS. How far is that Robertson road built now?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is in operation from Yarmouth to Pubnico, a distance of 31 miles; but they are working a considerable distance ahead.

Mr. MILLS. This is a continuation?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is a continuation. The subsidy has been voted from time to time, in pieces.

For a railway from a point of the Intercolonial Railway at or near Halifax, to a point on the Central Railway in the county of Lunenburg, not exceeding 20 miles.

Mr. MILLS. What is the object of that?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is the first step towards the construction of a road from Halifax, by the shore, through the western section of the province. The western portion of the line has been subsidized in various pieces, but there is a link of about 70 miles from Halifax to the Central Railway for which a vote has never been taken. This is a vote for 20 miles of this link. If a company is willing to come forward and construct it, no doubt further grants will be made.

Mr. MILLS. Then, we are to understand that this has nothing to do with the Victoria Beach Railway?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Nothing whatever.

For a railway from Owen Sound, in the province of Ontario, to Meaford, not exceeding 21 miles.

Mr. WALLACE. I did not have the good fortune to be present when this item went through committee, and I did not hear whether an explanation was given of it. Perhaps the Minister of Customs can explain it.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. This is for a railway from Owen Sound to Meaford, a distance of about 21 miles. The hon. gentleman, I fancy, knows the position of affairs there. The Canadian Pacific Railway runs to Owen Sound, and the Grand Trunk runs from Toronto to Barrie, and then on to Collingwood and Meaford, and stops there.

Mr. WALLACE. Is it decided what company is to have the subsidy?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No.

Mr. WALLACE. It is left open either to the Grand Trunk or the Canadian Pacific Railway?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. To any company that has authority under the law to build it.

Mr. MACLEAN. I understand it is to get competition with the Canadian Pacific Railway.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That will be considered, of course.

Mr. BERGERON. Is there a charter for that line?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I do not know.

Mr. WALLACE. Has the Canadian Pacific Railway or Grand Trunk Railway a charter to build a road there?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am not sure. I think there was a charter at one time, but whether it has lapsed or not, I could not positively say.

Mr. WALLACE. Who is asking for the subsidy?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The President of the Board of Trade of Owen Sound.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there no company that has a charter over that line?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am not sure that there is.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the use then of voting this money? No charter can be got from this House before prorogation, and one can be got from the provincial legislature.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The people of that town are exceedingly anxious to have the road built, and made application to the Government to offer some assistance and thereby stimulate its construction, by putting them in the position of being able to offer some inducement to a company incorporated, or if one is not incorporated, to people to apply to be incorporated to build the road.

Mr. BERGERON. If there is no charter to any company, there will be plenty time to give the subsidy when the company is incorporated, and let the right hon. gentleman use the money in constructing a bridge for the people of Assomption and Joliette.

Mr. WALLACE. This is simply humbugging the people. There is no charter.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think there is a charter.

Mr. WALLACE. Who has it? There is no charter to construct a road from Owen Sound to Meaford. There could not be one dollar of this money expended until a charter is obtained from either the Dominion Parliament or the local legislature; it could not be obtained from the local legislature, either by the Grand Trunk Railway or Canadian Pacific Railway, because those are federal roads, and the road would only be constructed by one of these companies, presumably the Canadian Pacific Railway, because it would be absurd for a little one-horse local line to attempt to do business there. We are asked to vote the money now, so that the supporters of the Government can say: See what a fine representative the constituency of North Grey has; he can procure a subsidy for an impossible road. But I am afraid that the people will not reelect him notwithstanding the subsidy.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You are afraid they will.

Mr. PATERSON.

Mr. WALLACE. It looks as if he was going to try his hand there. My hon. friend's county was cut into two by the Redistribution Bill to give him a chance to get back for that county, but that little game was spoilt, and so he will have to seek re-election in North Grey. The machine gave him 200 of a majority last time, but I am afraid they will not dare to bring that machine into North Grey again. The old fashion used to be for all the neighbours to gather in and assist at the threshing, but under the new plan the outfit travels around with the machine, and the neighbours are not called on at all. A similar revolution has taken place in political matters, and instead of the neighbours doing their own canvassing work and their own political fights, which was quite right, the machine travels around and gets in its fine work. While I do not know that the Minister of Customs himself took an active part in the operations of the threshing machine, he certainly got the benefit of them, and we all know that the hon. Postmaster General spent many anxious days and many jolly nights—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman must confine himself to the subject.

Mr. WALLACE. I am sojourning at Owen Sound, and that is the terminus of this road, and I am recounting historical events which occurred at Owen Sound on the site of this proposed line. When it gets to Meaford, it gets into the constituency of North Grey, and as there is no charter, they can go anywhere and the subsidy can be applied either on land or sea. I would appeal to you, Mr. Chairman, to represent matters as they undoubtedly are to those gentlemen, and see if you cannot exert your moral influence to get them to withdraw this proposal. We are voting money that cannot be used, to enable the hon. Minister of Customs to go into Meaford and parade around the fact that he procured a subsidy of $132,800 for that constituency. I think we ought to cut out this subsidy because it swells up the total of $6,570,000, which will reduce the amount, to be strictly accurate, to $6,400,000. Whether it is a good scheme or a bad one, we should have the particulars which are supposed to justify this application. The Minister of Railways and Canals tells us that representations have been made to him through the Minister of Customs, and I think I heard a gentleman over there say that the President of the Board of Trade, presumably of Owen Sound, had made application for this subsidy. Is that correct?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The whole town wants it—both towns, I believe.

Mr. WALLACE. No doubt the whole town wants it. But I would like to see the application made for it so that I may know the grounds for asking this subsidy. That both towns want it goes without saying. Every town wants another railway.

Mr. SPROULE. Do I understand that the intention is to extend the Northern Railway down to the dock at Meaford? As those who have been there will know, the railway passes outside the town up on the hill, but it might be run down by the lake to the dock. And would the subsidy be available for that purpose? And if the road goes to Owen Sound, would it go alongside the lake?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am not in a position to answer that. Of course, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) has a right to object to this, and may move to strike it out if he does not approve of it—that is his privilege. But that would be making a distinction between this and other votes. The road is very greatly in the interest of the section of country through which it passes, and, I have no doubt, that it will be built if the vote is given. The road from Meaford to the city of Toronto is within 21 miles of the thriving town of Owen Sound, a place of 8,000 or 10,000 people and a large shipping port. The hon. member for West York counts this a bonus of $6,400 a mile instead of $3,200 a mile, which is all, so far as I can see, that the road has asked for. I do not know of any bonus on this paper that is based on better reasons than this one, and I cannot understand objection to its being passed.

Mr. WALLACE. On what ground does the hon. Minister say that this is a vote for $3,200 a mile?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Unless it exceeds—

Mr. WALLACE. But that is not what the hon. Minister said—he said only $3,200 a mile was asked for.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. What is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) quibbling about? He figures the subsidy at $6,400 a mile. I say that unless the road costs over $15,000 a mile, which I am not in a position to say, but I do not suppose it will, the subsidy will not be over $3,200 a mile. And the hon. gentleman is not in a position to say that it will cost so much as to make the subsidy $6,400 a mile.

Mr. WALLACE. The Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) quite readily shifts his ground. When I said the subsidy voted was $6,400 a mile, he said that all that was asked was $3,200 a mile.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I say that is what is here.

Mr. WALLACE. I say it is not what is here, and the Minister of Customs either has not read the resolutions or else is not stating them correctly. He should know that clause 2 provides that if the road costs above $15,000 per mile the subsidy will be more than $3,200, and if the road costs $21,400 a mile, then the subsidy will be $6,400 a mile. I do not know what the road will cost, nor does the Minister of Railways and Canals know. But the $6,400 a mile will be available, and that is what we are voting, and when the Minister of Customs says we are voting half that, he is stating what is not correct. Now, there is no company that we know of that has a charter for this road. There is no survey and we have no knowledge what grounds have been presented for this subsidy. We asked for a copy of the request of the board of trade or the president of the board of trade, which, I understand, was presented. We asked for any reports that would show the grounds on which the Government was urged to give this subsidy. I think we are entitled to that.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to know what the inner feelings of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) might be under this development of the subsidy mania by the Minister of Railways and Canals and his other colleagues. I do not suppose there ever was a more patent case of what my hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright) used to call the abuse of the railway subsidy system, and I wish to quietly call his attention and the attention of the Government to it. Here is a subsidy for a railway to be built in a section of country where no company has charter powers to build.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What is the evidence of that?

Mr. FOSTER. The complete evidence that neither the Minister of Railways and Canals, the Minister of Customs, or any other member can point out the charter. The question was asked, and it is the duty of the Minister of Railways and Canals to say what company had the charter. But no answer has been given, and we can only assume that there is none. There is no company chartered, and it is impossible for any company to be chartered between this and next session of Parliament. When we ask for any information with reference to the necessities for this road, the only information we get is, that there is one town at one end, and another town at the other end, and both these towns would like to have the road. Both these towns, I believe, are on lines of railway, and on lines of water communication. Owen Sound seems to be a town that is pretty well off for railway and transport accommodation; it has the two great lines now. Meaford is also supplied with railway accommodation. There is not a word given as to the country lying between; but simply because both are as large and important towns as some others to which the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) said subsidies had been granted, therefore, these should have subsidies granted to them. I think this is a signal instance of the subsidy mania developed by hon. gentlemen opposite. Not a single commercial or other purpose has been laid before this House to-night upon which anybody could submit a claim to the people's representatives to make a vote of from $65,000 to $120,000. This is the people's money; it is simply being flung, without rhyme or reason, right and left. For what purpose? No object at all can be served by it, no single purpose can be thought of, except simply to dangle something before the eyes of the electors in order to make them well disposed to the party. We are told that the board of trade had asked for this railway, and that both towns wanted it, therefore, it ought to be granted. I submit, this is carrying the thing to an extreme length, and it is one of the things which is driving the people of this country to the conclusion that this system of subsidies ought to stop, that it is being run to the ground, that it is being used, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) used to assert so often, simply as a piece of political enginery, and nothing else. Here is a signal instance of it. Owen Sound is pretty well provided for with the two great trunk lines, without the people of this country being asked to contribute $127,000 to build another road. Surely, Meaford is pretty well situated with regard to commercial and traffic communication and transport facilities, and can lay no claim to this grant.

Mr. SPROULE. As to the section of country through which this road is to run, there is no finer section to be found. I may say, with regard to this road, that I think they will be able to claim the $6,400 per mile, because there is a section that it will be pretty heavy to build; there is the Big Head River to cross, which will entail considerable expense. I am satisfied that the Owen Sound people, and the people between the two towns, will be well pleased, if the railway is built, and they get the money spent there. I am sorry to say that there is not a charter in existence, or we might be able to avail ourselves of the subsidy sooner. But I shall not take that by any means as an insuperable objection, because, as long as the money is available, it is an easy matter to get a charter. There was a railway charter, but it expired some two years ago. The people of Meaford are making a strong effort to extend the Northern Railway down to the wharf in Meaford, and if it is extended to Owen Sound, that is, in all probability, the way it would go. If this bonus is available for the purpose of extending it that far on the way, I am sure the people will be generally pleased to have it done, because there was a deputation down here not long ago endeavouring to get the Grand Trunk Railway to assist them to build it, and I think they have some offer of assistance from the Grand Trunk Railway, and the town has offered assistance as well. It is going through an excellent section of country, where a portion of the railway will be a little hard to build, but not unusually so. I think it will take the $21,000 easily enough to build it, but after it is built, it will serve a large number of people.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the railway now in question is to get $21,400 per mile, you can see that the company undertaking its construction will require to furnish $15,000 per mile in order to get the maximum subsidy which they are entitled to under this Act; and if people are going to put their hands into their pockets and furnish $15,000 per mile to build that railway in addition to the subsidy they may get from the Dominion, I think that will afford pretty substantial evidence that the undertaking is regarded by the people who put into their means, as meritorious. I do not think you can have any more satisfactory evidence than that.

Mr. WALLACE. They might get a bonus from the local government.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If a subsidy is given by the local government, it is not costing the treasury of Canada anything at all events, and it must be because they think the undertaking is a meritorious one. I know some provinces where they have laws upon the statute-books which are in general terms, and which generally authorize the aiding of railways for which any company is incorporated, to the extent of $3,200 per mile, on the completion of their line. This is a rule which has been adopted in some of the provinces at all events, and adopted upon the principle that railways in this country, if they can be built on receipt of aid to the extent of $3,200, it will be a great benefit to the country. The hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) draws the conclusion that because this grant is not made specifically to a company, and because there may not be any company actually incorporated for the purpose of building this line, that, therefore, it is an undertaking which ought not to be aided by this Parliament.

Mr. SPROULE. There was a company, and the charter has run out.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Whether there was a company incorporated for that purpose or not does not appear to be any objection to making this grant. If what the hon. member for East Grey has stated is true, and it is no doubt true, as he has a local knowledge of the country, the undertaking is one which may properly be assisted in this way. If it be an objection to a grant of this kind being given in this form, not to a particular company, but for a particular railway, and if it strikes the hon. gentleman so strongly now as being open to objection, it is somewhat singular that this form of making grants in aid to railways was a form that was adopted in numberless cases in times past and ever since the subsidy system was introduced. If the hon. gentleman will look back over the list since 1882, down to the last Act, he will find that many railways have been subsidized without the name being mentioned of the grantee of the subsidy. I hastily glanced at the list in 1894, and I find that no less than 20 subsidies were voted not to any particular company at all, but for a line of railway between certain points. Naturally, I assume that there were no companies incorporated, or that there were rival companies as to which the Government had not come to any conclusion and had not determined the subsidy would be paid. In the Act of 1894, there were no less than 20 lines of railway receiving subsidies totalling $1,300,000 or over a million and a quarter, in regard to which the companies were either not incorporated or, at all events, in which the companies were not named.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend has not proved anything. There was no question between the hon. gentleman and myself as to whether you should or should not grant a subsidy to a particular railway and name it, or whether you should not name it. That was not the question. As I have said before, the hon. gentleman has put up a man of straw and knocked it down to his own satisfaction. My contention was that this was a grant of a sum of money which might amount to $130,000 to no company, and that it was an impossibility in the way of being utilized during the present year.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You have a million and a quarter dollars granted by your last subsidy Bill to no company at all.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman is making a statement that he cannot substantiate. The only pertinency there would be to a statement of that kind would be if he should say that, in those grants there was no chartered company which could avail itself of the vote which was given. He has not done that because he cannot.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think I could if I took the time.

Mr. FOSTER. But he does not take the time; he has not done it, and therefore there is nothing in his statement. Now, he says, he has given a most satisfactory reason why this vote should be given between Meaford and Owen Sound. He says that if you find people who will put $15,000 per mile into that road, which is going to cost $21,700 per mile, it will be the best of evidence that that road ought to be built.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If they do not the subsidy will not be drawn.

Mr. FOSTER. But the hon. gentleman was going to give us evidence upon which to found his claim for this grant. The evidence was that there were people who were willing to put $15,000 a mile of their own money into the road. The hon. gentleman has not given us evidence of the fact.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) argues as if what is done were absolutely unprecedented, as if it were a wholly new departure in the history of railway grants, and as if subsidies had not been given as they are given to-day in general terms, without the companies being specifically named.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish again to set the right hon. gentleman right. That is not the question. I am arguing against giving a subsidy for a line of proposed road in reference to which no company is chartered that possibly might build it.

The PRIME MINISTER. Then, I will accept the proposition of the hon. gentleman as he modifies it. I say there is no new departure in that. Again and again he, himself, has given subsidies which were not specifically voted to any chartered company. I can show votes for railways to be given to companies which were not chartered. And I can show cases in which the Governor in Council took power to organize and charter companies.

Mr. MILLS. Hon. gentlemen always held that that was wrong.

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) says that when they did it there was nothing wrong, but when we do it there is something wrong. The proposition before the committee is to give a subsidy for a line of railway between Owen Sound and Meaford. Here is the statute of 1884:

For a line of railway and bridge between the Jacques Cartier Union Railway Junction with the Canadian Pacific Railway and St. Martin's Junction, connecting the Jacques Cartier Union Railway with the North Railway proper, a subsidy not exceeding in the whole .....	$200,000
For a line of railway from Richibucto to St. Louis, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole .....	22,400
For a line of railway from Hopewell to Alma, in the province of New Brunswick, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole .....	51,200
For a line of railway from St. Andrew's to Lachute, in the county of Argenteuil, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole .....	22,400

For a line of railway from Grand Piles, on the River St. Maurice, to Lake Edward, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole.. $217,000
 For a line of railway from Annapolis to Digby, in the province of Nova Scotia, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole..... 64,000

There are several like that. This is the provision which follows:—

The subsidies hereinbefore mentioned as to be granted to the companies named for that purpose, shall be granted to such companies, respectively: the other subsidies shall be granted to such companies as shall be approved by the Governor in Council as having established, to his satisfaction, their ability to construct and complete the said railways, respectively.

What was the policy objected to by my hon. friend a moment ago. It was that the Government had kept something back for political purposes, that the Government had reserved this power to themselves. But that is not all. Here is another section of the Railway Act of 1884:—

And whereas it may become necessary for the construction of a railway in conformity with the intention and purpose of the subsidy for the extension of the Canadian Pacific Railway, from its terminus at St. Martin's Junction, or some other point on the said railway to the harbour of Quebec, that a company should be incorporated with the powers requisite for such construction, and for making financial arrangements for the purposes thereof: Therefore it is hereby further enacted as follows:—

For the purpose of incorporating the persons undertaking the construction of the said railway, and those who shall be associated with them in the undertaking, and so soon as a contract shall be made with them by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for such construction, the Governor may grant to them, under such corporate name as he shall deem expedient, a charter conferring upon them the franchises, privileges and powers requisite for the said purposes, which shall be similar to such of the franchises, &c.

In this there is power given to the Governor in Council to organize a charter and create a corporation. If my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) wants to find fault let him attack the policy generally, but let him not attack the policy of following a precedent established by our predecessors. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) must admit that we are not introducing a new system at all. Nobody questions the propriety of building this road. There was a charter which appears to have lapsed; we will suppose that it has, and here is an inducement for the revival of the charter and the building of the railway. Surely the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) does not find fault with that. If he condemns the practice he condemns his own course.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has not proved his case.

The PRIME MINISTER. Not to your satisfaction, no doubt.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Mr. FOSTER. Nor to your own, as I can show. The right hon. gentleman has read half a dozen appropriations for a line of railway between such and such points. My contention was against granting it for a line of railway between points with reference to which there was no company under charter, or possible to be chartered. My right hon. friend has not supplied that link in the chain.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Why is it not possible within nine months?

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman has been told that half a dozen of times, and there is no necessity for repeating it. Is it quite possible to make a vote for a line of railway between certain points, not to name the company at all or the railway, and yet you may have three or four companies who have power and charters to build that. You have not decided as to which company, and so you do not say to which you give it—just the same as you, in this list, give subsidies where there are more than one company, and you have not decided which company you give it to. You keep that for the Governor in Council to make the best arrangement you can. My right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) sees there is one very weak link in his chain of argument.

Mr. McMULLEN. When the Conservatives granted a subsidy for the short line from Montreal to St. John, was there a company in existence at the time?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly there was.

Mr. McMULLEN. Not at all.

Mr. DAVIN. I rather think the country will be somewhat impatient of the kind of excuse which is given for this and somewhat similar votes, and which is: That something like it was done by a previous Government fifteen years ago. Is that a justification? Not at all. The Minister of Trade and Commerce was appealed to from this side of the House, but the Minister (Sir Richard Cartwright) remains discreetly silent. I will take this opportunity of reading to him what he wrote not fifteen years ago, but in 1894, just five years ago. On October 1st, 1894, Sir Richard Cartwright wrote to a gentleman connected with the "Farmers' Sun," a very eloquent and exhaustive letter, in which he said:

What are the other planks of the Patron platform affecting Dominion politics? They are these: Economy of administration, purity and independence of Parliament, tariff for revenue only, reciprocal trade, protection of labour from monopoly, no railway bonuses,

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. DAVIN. He goes on:

There is simply no single one of all these objects which the Liberal party have not been fighting for, moving resolutions for, and doing their best to obtain any time during the last twenty years,

And then, Sir, with a railway subsidy which is to be hung up for electioneering purposes only, looking forward to the possibility of another election; the moment it is pointed out that this policy is vicious, the First Minister gets up and says: What are you talking about? Why, something like that was done fifteen years ago.

Mr. FOSTER. And then failed to prove it was done.

Mr. DAVIN. Yes, and even suppose there was something like it done, these are the gentlemen opposite who made night hideous year after year denouncing in this House the misconduct of the Government which voted bonuses. Their chief defence to-day is to say: We have not a new idea, we have not the moral or intellectual courage to make a new departure, but we are the very humble imitators of the men that for eighteen years we denounced. If these hon. gentlemen opposite think that the Liberal party throughout this country is going to be dragged in the mire behind their imitative wheels they will find they are greatly mistaken. Probably the best thing that could happen this country is to have the outrageous spectacle of these estimates piled on to $52,000,000 expenditure, piled on again another item bringing it up to $60,000,000—the best thing that could happen is that these gentlemen opposite shall pile up misdoing after misdoing in order to wake the country to the kind of government we have now in Canada. If these hon. gentlemen think they are going to drag respectable Liberalism into the mire after them they make a great mistake. I have here the "Canadian Gleaner," which deals with this very question.

Mr. MACLEAN. Where is it published?

Mr. DAVIN. In Huntingdon. On August 3rd, the "Gleaner" published this article, which will show the people in other parts of Canada how a Canadian Liberal is thinking on a subject like this. He says:

The resolutions providing for bonuses to railways have been laid before the House, and in their nature and amount blast the hopes entertained that Sir Wilfrid Laurier in his policy in that regard was going to turn over a new leaf.

Turn over a new leaf! Why, the whole defence of the right hon. gentleman is that it was done by somebody else fifteen years ago, and that he and his Government are mere paltry imitators.

The sound doctrine advocated by the Liberals when they were in opposition was that if aid was given at all to railways, it ought to be only to those that are national in their character, which link province to province; that local roads are provincial in their character, and to be left with the municipalities and local legislatures.

Of course, that is sound doctrine. If this little bit of a railway is desirable and needed, and as we are told on the high authority of the conscientious—of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair); and on the high authority of the equally conscientious Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson); why should not the province subsidize it? Why should it be subsidized by the Dominion, when it is a purely provincial, nay, a purely county matter? It is all in one county; and, by the way things are going, we shall have railways from one doorstep to another, and we shall have the Minister of Railways coming and saying: What obstructionists you are, thus to criticise our railway policy in building a railway to every man's doorstep.

In the resolutions now before the House, federal aid is given to the most petty of railways—roads connecting not province with province, city with city, or even town with town, but village with village, and even hotels with railway stations. Can a railway from Hawkesbury to South Indian be classed as a federal work, or one from St. Rémi to Stottsville, or from Mount Johnson to St. Grégoire? Why should a quarry company get a railway built to a wharf at the expense of the Dominion, or the ratepayers of Parry Sound be presented with $16,000 to connect their village with the railway station?

Why, this gentleman seems to have forgotten that we have some 91 items in the Estimates for wharfs, in some places where there is no water. The next thing we shall have will be the Minister of Finance bringing in a Bill, if he has a chance, to build Corinthian porticos to the outhouses of his principal supporters.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Their tastes are classical.

Mr. DAVIN. Of course, they would be, if they were constituents of my hon. friend.

All the abuses complained of under the system introduced by Sir John Macdonald, of bribing constituencies by using federal money to do local work, are illustrated in these resolutions submitted by a Liberal Administration. And, then, look at the large amount so asked—over six and a half million dollars. It is being said, all that will not be paid, that many of the projects to which assistance is promised will not be carried out, but the resolutions themselves refute that, for they include revotes of $1,597,000 to railways which in the past failed to earn them. They are given another chance, and so will the new companies to whom aid is voted, and beyond all doubt, the country in time will be called on to pay nearly every dollar promised. The pretense that these bonuses are given on conditions different from those under the Conservatives, and therefore are on another footing, will not bear examination.

You see, some excuse has been thrown out to this gentleman, that there is some difference; but there is no such excuse given here to-day.

The companies are liable to pay 3 per cent a year on the subsidies granted them. If the 3 per cent was to be paid in cash the bonuses will be in the nature of a loan, but the interest is not to be paid in cash. The railways are to be allowed to trade it out in carrying the mails—and volunteers to camp! How, by such petty services, can these companies pay 3 per cent on their subsidies? The plain truth is, these companies are to get from $3,200 to $6,400 a mile as a free gift, and when to that amount is added what the provinces and municipalities give, it will be found, in not a few instances, that they are to get enough to pay the actual cost of their roads.

This was proved here by careful calculation in the case of one road at any rate.

Take, as proof of this, the Rainy River road, 140 miles long. The Ontario Government has voted it $1,120,000. Manitoba has also voted aid, and the Dominion Government proposes to add $856,000. In the hands of such thrifty contractors as Mackenzie & Mann the bonuses will be sufficient to build the road; the country pays for it, and they will own it—a repetition on a small scale of the history of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

To the six and a half million dollars asked to bonus railways, add the $52,000,000 of Estimates and the $1,600,000 for the Drummond County Railway, and the expenditure of public money provided for during the present session of Parliament is seen to be over $60,000,000. Allowing the population of the Dominion to be 6,000,000, the call is for $10 a head from every man, woman and child. It is $1,200,000 a week, it is $165,000 a day. This is for the Dominion alone. Add to it the expenditure of the provincial legislatures and of the municipalities, and ask: Are the people able to bear such a burden of taxation? Practically it will fall on the farming population,—

I ask the attention of every man here.

—for all our manufactures, mines, forests and fisheries contribute to the national earnings is small compared with what comes from the cultivation of the soil. Fully two-thirds of the money demanded will have to be paid for in cheese and butter, grain and live stock. Are our farmers in circumstances able to bear such a drain upon them? Are they making such profits out of their land that they can afford to pay in taxes—to the Dominion alone—$10 a year for each member of their families? No man knows the condition of the farmers, knows how small the prices are they receive for what they are to sell, knows how small are the daily wages the land pays them for the labour of themselves, their wives, their sons and daughters, can say otherwise than that they are not able to pay the taxes which the expenditure imposed by the Laurier Government will require, and that if the amount voted by Parliament was made to correspond with the earnings of the farmer it would be thirty instead of sixty millions that would have been authorized. If it be said, it is not fair to represent that all the $60,000,000 will be collected next year, the answer of the farmer is to hand. The part of the sixty millions that will be borrowed in England will rest as mortgage on his land, and the part of the railway bonuses unearned in the coming year will lie over as a future liability which he will have to meet. In considering the public expenditure, the ability of those who have to pay for it is not taken into account by the Government, but money is voted at the demand of party supporters, of contractors, of speculators in mines and lands, and, like the $1,000,000 to build a bridge at Quebec or the $320,000 voted to the South Shore road, to secure constituencies at the coming election.

Mr. DAVIN.

Here is a Liberal writer who declares, as I have declared here, that it is palpable, on the face of these subsidies, just as it is on the face of the supplementary Estimates, that they are electioneering subsidies, just as the Estimates are electioneering Estimates.

The conduct of the Government places Liberals in a difficult position. The Liberal party won the elections in 1896 on the assurance that they would end the reign of extravagance and establish economy at Ottawa. That was the promise; the performance has been an increase of expenditure.

Are the rank and file of the Liberal party going to follow the men who have broken their pledges, or are they going to repudiate them and endeavour to replace them? It is an exceedingly awkward position. To come out in opposition to Laurier and his colleagues is to abandon the leaders of the party, and, on the other hand, to continue to support them is to confess that the professions of the Liberal party that, if given a chance, they would bring the expenditure within the income, and stop the increase of public debt, were false, and a mere ruse to blind the electors to get into office. If our leaders have done wrong, are we to stand by them? If they seek to lead us into paths we have been condemning for a generation, are we to follow them? The Ministers cannot say they have not been fully warned, apart from the warnings of the press. Sir Wilfrid Laurier was waited upon by a deputation that fairly represented the farmers of this province, was told frankly and plainly by farmer after farmer, in earnest speech, of their difficulty in making ends meet, and their desire that he do nothing more to add a single dollar to the public debt. His answer is six and a half million dollars more of bonuses to railways, the largest Estimates ever asked, and a prospective increase of the debt of several millions in the coming year. Are Liberals going to stand by what they asked and believe to be right, or are they going to follow the leaders who have made fools of them? Let the reader come down to hard-pan at once on this subject. If he believes the expenditure imposed by the Laurier Administration beyond his ability and that of his neighbours, is he, for the sake of party, going to hold silence and pay his share? That would be carrying party feeling beyond common sense. Self-interest and the welfare of the country require that a stand be made, and that the men at Ottawa be given to understand that because they bear the name of Liberal they are not going to receive the support of the great body of Liberal electors when they fail to do what is right. It was the Liberals who stayed at home on polling-day who defeated Mercier, and a like fate shadows Laurier. We want a Government at Ottawa that will not be the purveyor of railway, mining or manufacturing companies, that asks for millions in order that its partisans may get big salaries or contracts, but one that will hold steadily in view the average man of the Dominion—and he is the man who earns his bread by the labour of his hands—and having regard for him and his necessities will suit the country's expenditure to his ability to pay his share of taxation.

I see, Sir, that the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) has fled. What wonder! What must be his feelings, in the secrecy of his sanctum, with these eloquent words of an indignant Liberal ringing in his ears—the ears of one who used similar language a few years ago? My hon. friend beside me asked me where is the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen). Well, we know where he is, but it would be interesting to hear from the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, and I must say that one has some respect for him. It is more creditable for him to slip out of this Chamber and go to his private room, there probably to shed penitential tears, than to have the brazen effrontery of standing in his place here and defending this Government for a policy which he denounced Conservative Government after Conservative Government for having adopted and followed. I do not care whether Sir John Macdonald proposed this policy or not, I say that this policy of subsidizing little railways is a vicious system, and it is more creditable for the Minister of Trade and Commerce to hide himself in shame in his room than to stand up here in brazen effrontery and say: It is true we are doing this, but the same thing was done in 1884, the same thing was done by Sir John Macdonald and those other men whom we denounced. Is that what the country expected? Is not this the most glaring instance of what we have had again and again to call attention to—the utter treason to their past on the part of hon. gentlemen who now occupy the Treasury benches—the people bamboozled and the party betrayed.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It has been suggested that this subsidy is not required in the interests of the locality in question, but is proposed for some other object. I would just state to the committee, for their information, that whilst it has been alleged that there are two railways uniting at Owen Sound, that does not in itself state the whole case. It will be well to bear in mind that Owen Sound is a very thriving town, having almost attained the proportions of a city, on Georgian Bay. It has a magnificent harbour. There are fleets of vessels plying between it and the ports on the north, and it has a great future before it. Without wishing to discredit other towns on the Georgian Bay, I think I may say that Owen Sound promises to become a very important city. At present its trade is principally with the city of Toronto on the south, and with the lakes and the northern territory in the north. How to-day has it railway communication with the city of Toronto? The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) is familiar with the situation, and no one is better able to correct me, and if I should make any misstatement, I hope he will be good enough to do so. Although Owen Sound has two railways between it and Toronto, it is not correct to suppose that these railways are both over a route that is reasonably available for trade with Toronto. It is true that the road formerly known as the Toronto, Grey and Bruce runs in a comparatively direct course from Toronto to Owen Sound, but those who have travelled over that road know that it has to ascend great acclivities. It has to climb the Caledon hills, where the grades are so heavy that these hills can only be ascended by a road in the shape of a horseshoe, and the railway is built in that shape a long distance. That I presume in itself makes railway communication by the shorter route between Toronto and Owen Sound extremely expensive for the purposes of traffic. Then, the other railway that is said to connect with Owen Sound is a branch of the western system of the Grand Trunk Railway, from a place called Park Head which is in a north-westerly direction from Owen Sound. Instead of the Grand Trunk route being a direct one between Owen Sound and Toronto, it is a roundabout route, nearly 40 miles longer than the Toronto, Grey and Bruce, so that practically there is no opportunity for competition.

Mr. WALLACE. Which is 40 miles longer?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The road from Owen Sound to Park Head and thence to Toronto in that direction is between 30 and 40 miles longer than the road connecting Owen Sound with Meaford and thence by the old Northern Railway system to Toronto. What is the distance by that road?

Mr. SPROULE. About 135 miles?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Say a little over 130 miles. I believe that when this link is put in between Owen Sound and Meaford, you will have established an excellent line and as direct a one as there is—taking grades into consideration—between Owen Sound and Toronto, at a distance of a little over 130 miles.

Mr. WALLACE. It is 136 miles.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Call it what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) wishes. It is a great many miles shorter than the other route, where you have to go in a north-westerly direction to connect with the Grand Trunk system and get down to the road that terminates at Wlarton, and find your way south-easterly into Toronto.

Mr. WALLACE. And what is the mileage of the Canadian Pacific Railway from Owen Sound to Toronto?

Mr. SPROULE. It is 128 miles.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) surely does not suppose that I am not familiar with the geography of that country. I stated before he came in that, while the Toronto, Grey and Bruce had, geographically, a direct line, there were physical difficulties in the way on account of the steepness of the grades in overcoming the Caledon Hills.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). How steep ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. So steep that you can only ascend by a road going in the shape of a horseshoe. That is familiar to all who travel over that road.

Mr. WALLACE. I think there are—

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) permit me to finish my remarks, and then I will answer his questions. So, in view of the roundabout character of the Grand Trunk connection, it may be said that Owen Sound has no outlet except the direct one by the Toronto, Grey and Bruce. Instead of the route between Owen Sound and Meaford producing the comparatively meager return in the form of mail service stated by the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin)—the hon. gentleman did not endorse it, but it was in the article read by him—my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) will bear me out in saying that this road would go through a very fertile and well-settled district. The line would connect the thriving town of Meaford, with a population of between 2,000 and 3,000, and the almost city of Owen Sound. There will be a train service several times a day, no doubt, and mails will have to be placed on those trains, and there will be a substantial return for this subsidy in the form of valuable services. If there was no such provision in the Bill as there is, the Government would have to pay cash year by year for the mail service on this branch. So this will be a useful public work. It will be of great service to the trade of Owen Sound, it will be of great service to the trade of Meaford, it will be of great service to the farming community between these towns, and it will bring back a return to the treasury in the shape of indemnity from having to pay for public services over that road. This is in every respect, in my judgment, a worthy enterprise, a useful enterprise, and one not open to fair criticism. It will stand criticism, and I am perfectly certain that my hon. friend from East Grey, having heard what I have said will not take upon himself to challenge the correctness of one statement that I have made.

Mr. WALLACE. Considering the violent speech of the Postmaster General, perhaps we should not be surprised at the extraordinary character of his statements, one of which is that Owen Sound has no outlet. It has an outlet to many places in summer by water ; it has an outlet by the Grand Trunk Railway all the year around to the whole of that great system ; and it has an outlet by the Canadian Pacific Railway by a direct line of 122 miles to Toronto. The line which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) says will be built as a result of this subsidy and which he says is a short line, is 136 miles long, or 14 miles longer than the existing road. He says : Look how much shorter a line would be than going around by Warton or some such place. I did not catch how many miles he said this line would be to Toronto.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think it is between 170 and 180 miles.

Mr. McMULLEN. About 170 miles.

Mr. WALLACE. I would be glad of some definite information. Well, whether it is 170 or 270 miles the object of that line is to reach all the towns in western Ontario. When you reach Palmerston you find branch lines running in all directions, which brings Owen Sound in direct touch with all that part of the country if not with Toronto. And, then, by the Canadian Pacific Railway Owen Sound has a direct connection, at a distance of 122 miles with Toronto, while this so-called short line of the Postmaster General it would be 14 miles longer. That is a specimen of the arithmetic of the Postmaster General. He says that between Owen Sound and Meaford is fertile country. Nobody is going to dispute that ; but what has that to do with the question of the routes to these places ? Owen Sound, no doubt, is anxious to tap the trade of Meaford. But Meaford is not so anxious to have the road go in there, for the reasons that the larger places generally gobble the smaller ones, or do business to the disadvantage of the smaller ones ; and when the Postmaster General tells us that the people of Meaford are breaking their necks or their hearts to get into Owen Sound, I think if he went up and ascertained the truth of the matter, he would find that the very opposite was the case. Now, he says that this scheme is worthy and useful and commendable and proper and desirable—and all the other adjectives he can think of. But the naked fact remains that they are proposing a vote to a railroad which has no existence and which has not been chartered. It is a matter of such supreme indifference to the whole community both in Owen Sound and Meaford, and to all the country lying between those places, and to the two great railway companies, that nobody ever thought it worth while to ask for a charter from the Parliament of Canada or from the local legislature to construct a road between those points. We were told that the president of the Board of Trade of Owen Sound had written. We want that letter of his placed on the Table of the House. We want some information from somebody that somebody wants this railroad built, and we are unable to procure a scrap. But the Minister of Customs, not having a vacancy made for him in the county of Brant, is compelled to look out for another constituency, and expects to buy up North Grey by a bonus of $134,000 for this road. I do not believe he can do it. The people of North Grey, though it is said that many of them were bulldozed, were humbugged, and bought up by the influence of this machine to which reference has been so often and so properly made—

Mr. MCGREGOR. We have heard of that before.

Mr. WALLACE. If the member for Essex has heard it before, it has not done him any good as yet, and he is anxious to have the threshing machine in Essex when the elections come on.

Mr. MCGREGOR. Essex is all right.

Mr. WALLACE. The threshing machine can go to some other town then.

Mr. MCGREGOR. It can go down to York.

Mr. WALLACE. Yes, I have no doubt it will be in York. They will bring the threshing machine down to North York, and, perhaps, they will take it across the line to West York. But I do not believe the threshing machine will be so profitable as it was before. You know there are some lines of business you can run profitably for a little while, and then the people catch on to it, and after that it is not so profitable. I think this threshing machine, with its outfit, with its organizers, with those who have been manipulating it so much to their own satisfaction in the past, with the chaps here in Ottawa who are telegraphing to keep Farr out of the road—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. I think the hon. gentleman should confine himself to the discussion of the railway subsidies, which is the question before the Chair.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Chairman, I am discussing the railway subsidies.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman wandered from the railway subsidies to discuss something entirely outside of the question.

Mr. FLINT. He was also saying something that was absolutely incorrect when he stated that the election committee were telegraphing to Toronto to keep Farr out of the way.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. That question is not before the Chair.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. member for Yarmouth said something that is incorrect.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I call hon. gentlemen to order. I invite the members of the committee to discuss the question which is now before the Chair, that is, the railway subsidies.

Mr. WALLACE. But in discussing that question, I called attention to the fact that we were voting bonuses, not for the purpose of building railroads, because this bonus from Owen Sound to Meaford cannot build one foot of railroad, this $134,000, or whatever the sum may be, not a dollar of it can be used for the purpose of building a railroad. Then, I would ask you to inform this House what this money can be used for. What is the object of this money, which is ostensibly voted to build a railroad, but not one cent of which can be applied for that purpose? There is no charter for a railroad between those two points. Will you tell me what is to be done with this money? You cannot tell me. But I can tell you, Sir, and I shall tell you that if it is for any purpose it is for a corrupt purpose and no other.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. This is not the proper way of conducting debate, to put questions directly to the Chair.

Mr. WALLACE. Yes, that is the proper way.

The PRIME MINISTER. Order.

Mr. WALLACE. I say, Mr. Chairman, that I am not going to take any advice, even from the Chairman, as to how I shall discuss the question, so long as I keep within the rules of the House.

The PRIME MINISTER. Order.

Mr. WALLACE. I am not going to submit.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order, order.

Mr. WALLACE. Order yourself. You are not going to interfere with my liberty while I am discussing questions properly.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman must know that he is out of order, when the chairman of a committee calls a member to order that member must sit down while the order is stated. I said the hon. gentleman was not conducting the debate properly when he put his questions to the Chairman instead of through the Chairman to the committee.

Mr. WALLACE. I shall not ask the Chairman any further questions. When I ask a question I am asking it from hon. gentlemen opposite and through the Chair. If the Chairman says we are not to ask questions from him, I shall not ask these questions. I have always kept within the rules of the House and I always intend to. I always intend to have that freedom of debate which is the right of every member of Parliament, and I shall permit neither the Chairman nor anybody else to interfere with my rights and liberties as a member of Parliament.

Mr. FLINT. That is a noble sentiment.

Mr. WALLACE. Well, Sir, I am glad the member for Yarmouth has even that much appreciation of what a proper and noble sentiment is; I had not given him credit up to this time for a proper appreciation of those matters. He also stated that I had made a statement in this House that a member of the committee had sent improper telegrams to Toronto. I made no such statement.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. I have already ruled this has nothing to do with the question before the Chair. I invite the members of the committee, in order to expedite business, to confine the discussion to the question before the Chair. I know that some interruptions have been made, and I have called to order those hon. members making the interruptions.

Mr. SPROULE. I rise to a point of order. If an incorrect statement is made by an hon. member regarding another, has that member against whom it is made, not a right to get up and deny it?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. SPROULE. If that be the case, and the member for Yarmouth made a statement with regard to the member for West York (Mr. Wallace), I ask if the member for West York, knowing that the statement is not a fact, has not the right to deny it?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. WALLACE. Then, according to your ruling I am within my right in referring to the statement made by the member for Yarmouth?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I understand that this question has been disposed of. A statement was made which I declared was out of order, that it was not within the limits of discussion. I now invite the members of the committee to discuss exclusively the questions which are before the Chair.

Mr. WALLACE. You have ruled in answer to the member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) that if the member for Yarmouth made a statement against me which was incorrect and untrue, I was to have the privilege of denying it. You have ruled, Mr. Chairman, in reference to the question brought up by the hon. member for East Grey, that when the hon. member for Yarmouth made a statement about me that was incorrect and untrue, I should have the privilege of denying it. It was a self-evident proposition; I do deny it in the most positive terms that I made any such statement.

Mr. FLINT. If I made a remark that is out of order, I certainly withdraw it.

Mr. WALLACE. That ends the matter, and it shows that sometimes the Speaker himself may err as well as others.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. WALLACE. We will return to the question under debate.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. WALLACE. I was in order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. WALLACE.

Mr. WALLACE. I do not think we will advance the business of the House if the Chairman is going to occupy the whole of the time.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I trust the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) will withdraw the statement that the Chairman has erred in his decision.

Mr. WALLACE. The Deputy Speaker prevented me from doing that which, when the point of order was raised by the hon. member for East Grey, he could not deny was right for me to do, and I said that the Speaker had erred in that matter, as we are all liable to err. I am not saying that the Speaker should be infallible, but we all expect him, as we expect ourselves, to pay due regard to the rules of the House. That question is settled, and we will now proceed to the business, and if there are no interruptions we will be able to go on with the discussion of this matter. The hon. Postmaster General has utterly failed to make out his case; the hon. Minister of Customs has utterly failed to make out his case; the hon. member for Yarmouth has acknowledged his own inability in the matter, and so there remains nothing but for the hon. Minister of Railways to give us all the information which he indicated he would give in regard to this road. The hon. Minister said he was chock full of information when the resolutions, providing for the railway subsidies, were before the House and that he was anxious to pour out the information. That is very good as a fable, but, of course, with those hon. members of the House who were here then it will hardly pass muster. I would like the hon. Minister to give us the resolution of the Board of Trade, the letter from the President of the Board of Trade, or some solitary scrap of information, some particle of evidence to show why they are so anxious to have this road built, or some evidence to shew why they are asking the hon. Minister of Railways and the hon. Minister of Customs to make that present of $134,000 for building this railway through a country which is rich, prosperous and happy, but where a railway is not necessary. If it is not necessary they should be able to tell us why the people of Canada ought to put their hands in their pockets and mortgage their farms to give them $134,000 in order to secure a seat for the hon. Minister of Customs.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take up the time of the House by making any extended remarks, but I want to resent the insult that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) has placed upon the business men, the Board of Trade, the city council, and upon every inhabitant of the town of Owen Sound. He has deliberately said that this vote is put there for the express purpose of corrupting the electors and buying up the people. I have only to tell him that the business men of Owen Sound will resent any such imputation and will resent any party that acknowledges the leadership, or the partial leadership, of any man who will so wantonly rise up in his place and do what he has done. He will find out from the people of Owen Sound whether this is a corrupt vote or not, whether they have asked for this or not and the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) will find, if he does not get up and repudiate these statements, that the men of Meaford will have something to say in reference to this matter. It is past bearing that respectable men, leading business men, can be told in this House, that a proposition that they are in favour of and that they desire to have carried out, is corrupt, and that they are actuated in regard to it by corrupt motives. I do not wish to take up the time of the committee, but I will refer these gentlemen to the full statement in the "Hansard" where they can read what this would-be leader of the Conservative party in this House has to say in reference to them.

Mr. WALLACE. It has been suggested that I move for a medical condition to examine the hon. Minister of Customs as to this outburst.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. You need one first.

Mr. WALLACE. As usual the hon. Minister of Customs violates the rules of debate, I am sorry to say, without correction from the Chair.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) is mistaken. I said "order."

Mr. WALLACE. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon; I did not hear him. In his fanfaronade the hon. Minister of Customs said that I had insulted the council and the Board of Trade and the citizens of Owen Sound. I had not the slightest intention of insulting any one of these gentlemen. I demanded, I asked, I implored the hon. Minister of Customs and the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals to give us one scrap of paper, one piece of information, one letter from the President of the Board of Trade, from the mayor of Owen Sound, from the citizens of Owen Sound asking that this money be voted and to give the reasons why they were justified in asking the Parliament of Canada to appropriate $134,000 for building this road. I only asked for information, and yet, in the face of that the hon. Minister of Customs, who gets out of this House before I rise to speak—

Mr. DAVIS. He has come back again.

Mr. WALLACE. I see he has come back again—accuses me of having insulted these people who, he says, have written and petitioned and asked for this railway. If they have I want to see the documents put on the Table of the House. I want to see the reasons that these gentlemen have given for asking for $134,000 for the construction of 21 miles of railway. I ask the hon. Minister of Railways and the hon. Minister of Customs who has not exhibited that serenity of temper that is so desirable, and which is so commendable, why they do not give us some of this information. I heard it stated from the other side of the House that the President of the Board of Trade wanted it. I want the letter of the President of the Board of Trade, and I want the information. Is it unreasonable to ask for that information? I do not think it is. I think it is reasonable and proper that we should be furnished with this information, and yet, day after day, while we are asking for this information we see hon. gentlemen sitting reading their newspapers, or sleeping contentedly in their seats, or, as in the case of our usually amiable hon. Minister of Customs, losing his temper and indulging in a scene.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question, question.

Mr. WALLACE. I am talking to the question. We want the information. It will not do to give us the information as the hon. Postmaster General has given it to us by saying that that is 34 miles shorter than the Grand Trunk and other lines to Toronto. It does not go to Toronto at all except incidentally, and the Canadian Pacific Railway is 14 miles shorter than this short route of theirs. The other line of the Grand Trunk spreads out in all directions at Palmerston, as the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) very well knows. They are pretty well supplied with railway facilities already, and no reasons have been given why this subsidy should be granted to that road. The Minister of Customs told us that we would have to justify ourselves before the citizens of Owen Sound, but I can tell him that the citizens of Owen Sound are too intelligent to be led away by such clap-trap, although some one was led away by the human devices of the threshing machine and the company connected with it.

Mr. McMULLEN. When the branch was built from Parkhill to Owen Sound on the western side of the harbour, Judge Masson was then the Conservative member and he secured the bonus from this House. No one charged him with corruption then, as the hon. member (Mr. Wallace) charges corruption to-day.

Mr. WALLACE. There was a charter for that road.

Mr. McMULLEN. And there was a charter for this road, although it may have expired.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) says it has.

Mr. McMULLEN. Well, I presume he is correct. Now, the west side of the harbour requires connection for the reason that if a man in Owen Sound wants to go to Meaford in winter he would have to travel from Owen Sound to Cardwell Junction on the Canadian Pacific Railway and then travel over the Grand Trunk Railway to Collingwood and thence to Meaford. Unless he drove he would have to travel 150 miles.

Mr. WALLACE. I have driven it.

Mr. McMULLEN. So have I, but it would be far more convenient to have a railway. Owen Sound is becoming a very important town, and this link of railway should certainly be constructed. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) knows that the wheat centre there is Owen Sound, and if he were a miller the only way he could bring wheat to Barrie or Orillia would be to carry it away down to Cardwell Junction on the Canadian Pacific Railway and change it there and bring it up on the Grand Trunk Railway. All this proves that that link would be a decided advantage to the people of Owen Sound and the people of Meaford. Owen Sound is growing, the Canadian Pacific Railway are putting in elevators there, and this would be a very desirable connection. If a man now wants to go from Owen Sound up the line to Caledon, towards the north shore of Lake Superior, to connect with the Canadian Pacific Railway for Winnipeg, he would have to go in winter from Owen Sound to Cardwell Junction and then take the train back up to Barrie, and then strike out from Barrie in another direction. This link will enable him to take a much shorter route.

Mr. WALLACE. How much shorter?

Mr. McMULLEN. One hundred miles shorter.

Mr. WALLACE. Not half of that.

Mr. McMULLEN. It will be 75 or 100 miles shorter, as the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) knows.

Mr. WALLACE. Not half of that.

Mr. McMULLEN. It will be considerably shorter, and if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) understood the topography of the country, he would not offer opposition to this line.

Mr. SPROULE. The Minister of Customs worked up some righteous indignation because the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) did not commend the item, although I had already given what, to my mind, was a reasonable defence for it.

Mr. WALLACE. You gave the only defence that was given for it.

Mr. SPROULE. The Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) was excited and out of temper, and he jumped up without waiting for any one to give it a defence. I can tell him that his tempest in a teapot will not amount to much. I can assure him that I will not ask his assistance to defend my conduct either in this House or elsewhere, nor will it be necessary to have his assistance in defending my conduct before the people of Meaford or before the people of Owen Sound. Such an exhibition on the part of the Minister (Mr. Paterson), to my mind, as a medical man, would indicate something else than righteous indignation, when he spoke of an insult being offered to the board of trade of either Owen Sound or Meaford. If I were asked as a professional man what I thought such conduct indicated, I would say that it looked more like senile softening of the brain than anything else.

Mr. WALLACE.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. But have you any medical knowledge?

Mr. SPROULE. It may be I have not, but after an experience of thirty years I would give that as my judgment. The hon. member for York (Mr. Wallace) asked for the memorial sent by the board of trade, and although it would be unnecessary for me to ask for that, as I know the locality well, it was not out of the way that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) should make such a request. I repeat what I have already stated, that this link of railway will connect the western and eastern systems, and that is one of the most desirable needs of the situation. It will also serve with a railway as fine a section of agricultural country as can be found in our part of northern Ontario. I have said that before and I repeat it now. As for the people of Owen Sound, I know, by personal acquaintance with them, that they are anxious to get this railway; but I would like to draw the attention of the Minister of Customs to the fact that the most desirable portion of the railway to Meaford is that which would connect the Northern Railway with the harbour, which they would like to have immediately. I asked the hon. gentleman if any portion of this bonus was available for that purpose, and he was good enough to tell me that he did not know. If this is an honest intention to serve the needs of the people, I would imagine that the hon. Minister of Customs would be able to tell me at once whether a portion of this subsidy would be available for that line; but he did not say so, but rather left the impression on my mind that it would not be available for that. If this be the case, the very natural inference would be, that there is some ulterior object to be served by this bonus. I can only say that if the railway is built—and I hope it will be—it will serve a large number of persons. It is a very desirable link, connecting the eastern and western sections of the country, and will enable people to go from Owen Sound, by Collingwood, to the Canadian Pacific Railway, instead of by Cardwell Junction. The distance would be about 34 miles shorter from Owen Sound. Apart from that, it is a very desirable link of railway, and it will serve an agricultural district which, I believe, has no superior in Ontario. The people will be glad to have it built, especially the people of Owen Sound and those living between Owen Sound and Meaford. The people of Meaford are somewhat divided on the subject; but they would be glad to have a portion of this subsidy applied to extending the Northern Railway to the harbour.

To the Ottawa and Gatineau Railway Company, for their line of railway in and through the city of Hull, Que., not exceeding 4 miles.

Mr. WALLACE. I would like to know about this?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is to complete and continue the line of railway through to Nepean Point.

Mr. WALLACE. Is that the line coming to the new bridge?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

To the Edmonton, Yukon and Pacific Railway Company, for a railway from the town of South Edmonton, N.W.T., to North Edmonton, and thence westerly towards the Yellow Head Pass, a distance not exceeding 50 miles.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the Minister if he is prepared now to give any information as to who are the directors of this road?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not beyond what I gave before.

Mr. FOSTER. We are asked to give a large subsidy to this company for one of the most important lines of railway ever projected in this country, and I think that before we give the Government power to make a contract with this company for this important line, with a charter privilege, such as they have, we have a perfect right to know who the leading men in the company are.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have no further information in regard to the constitution of the company than I had the other day, when I told the hon. gentleman that Mr. McAvity was the president and Mr. Pearson the secretary. If the hon. gentleman would desire me to strike out the words "to the Edmonton, Yukon and Pacific Railway Company," and simply put in "for a railway from the town of South Edmonton," and so on, I am perfectly willing to leave it that way.

Mr. FOSTER. What does the hon. gentleman suppose there would be gained by that?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know. I am simply suggesting that.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to appeal to the First Minister whether he thinks that, as representatives of the people, we have a right to that information?

The PRIME MINISTER. Does my hon. friend think any purpose would be served by it?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, I do.

The PRIME MINISTER. Well, I do not know that any purpose would be served. My hon. friend says he has no further information than he has given, and it seems to me that the object of my hon. friend is accomplished by that. What is the object of my hon. friend? It is to assure himself that this company is able to carry on the undertaking. When a man of the position of Mr. George McAvity comes before the Government, and, in the face of Parliament, says that he is able to carry out a scheme for which he asks the aid of Parliament, for my part, I am satisfied that we have all the guarantee of respectability and ability that we can possibly have.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend cannot even say that. Mr. George McAvity never appeared before this House as the signer of any petition which declared that he was able and willing, and ready to build this road towards the Yellow Head Pass. There was a petition that came before this House. After a long struggle, we got it read. It was signed by Mr. George McAvity and Mr. Pearson, and it asked for three things. It declared that they had capital and were willing to proceed to build on these three lines: One was 4½ miles from the south of the river to North Edmonton; the other was from North Edmonton north to Fort Assiniboine, and the other was north-east towards Fort Saskatchewan.

These were the lines of road that Mr. Geo. McAvity and Mr. Pearson, the president and secretary of that company, asked that the subsidy be given for, and these were the lines which, over Mr. Geo. McAvity's name, they were prepared to go on and build. What has happened? There is no subsidy given them for any one of these, with the exception of a short line between South and North Edmonton, but two or three months after the petition by Mr. Geo. McAvity and Mr. Pearson came in, based on the ground I have stated, a petition is forwarded for the company by Mr. Pearson, asking that a subsidy be given for a road towards the Yellow Head Pass and another subsidy, amounting to a guarantee of $80,000 for a certain length of time, to another road in a north-easterly direction. There was in that petition no assertion that they were ready or wished to build the Yellow Head Pass road. There was not one circumstance or fact or documentary evidence of any kind with reference to the engineering difficulties or anything else of the road, there was no commercial reason given why their petition should be granted. I am willing to take Mr. Geo. McAvity for just what he is worth, and in some respects he is worth a great deal, but he is not a railway builder and never has been. My solemn belief is that the gentlemen who have this in charge, are neither railway builders nor do they propose to be railway builders. My solemn belief is that they are vendors of railway franchises, and that is what they intend to be and all they intend to be. Mr. William Pugsley's name has been spoken of as being a guarantee for great capital to build great railways. That is simply nonsense. He never was and is not to-day a builder of railways. He is a promoter of railways, he is a solicitor for railways, he has a perfect right to be both, but to talk about him as a guarantee that a great public work will be built is simply nonsense, and everybody who knows the circumstances will agree with me. What are you doing? There is a suspicious circumstance in this sudden change of front. The Edmonton people got a charter for what? Not to build the Yellow Head Pass road. They got a charter to do certain things for themselves—to join the south and the north and then run on to East Assiniboia and also to join Athabasca Landing and then run up in a north-easterly direction to Fort Saskatchewan. That is what Mr. Pugsley bought, and from that time there is nothing which would show who are the parties for whom Mr. Pugsley acted and in whose behalf he purchased.

According to the first petition from Geo. McAvity and Mr. Pearson, these designs of the Edmonton people, granted to them in their charter, were to be carried out, in this present instance, the designs to be accomplished by that charter are not to be carried out, with the single exception of 4½ miles between South and North Edmonton. Instead of the road going north-east, instead of its going north towards Fort Assiniboine, the road from North Edmonton points directly west to the Yellow Head Pass. Since the time of the purchase of that charter, Mr. Pugsley, who purchased for these gentlemen—whoever they are and of whom we know but two, the president and the secretary—has got an important, priceless franchise from this Parliament, without the cost, comparatively speaking, of one dollar. What are they? He has got the franchise for the Yellow Head Pass and the Peace River country, and he stands there with those important franchises, on the very gateway of the transcontinental road, which according to the Toronto "Globe," is now projected, and which, by votes in this House this year, is subsidized to the extent of 500 or 600 miles in different places. He stands there with a franchise which must be bought out or utilized by this transcontinental road before it can build through the pass and get to British Columbia. There is reason and sense when you take men who are railway builders and contractors and of great worth, such as Mackenzie & Mann, and grant them franchises for portions of that road and subsidies, because you know you are granting it, not to men who are promoting charters, but to the builders and operators of roads. But the moment that great project gets to Edmonton and seeks to get through the Yellow Head Pass or the Peace River country to the ocean, it is met by the holders of this franchise, the only persons of whom we know are Mr. Pugsley, who is the solicitor, and Mr. McAvity, whose name cannot be found as an applicant for this subsidy, and Mr. Pearson who asked for it, as the secretary of the company, without giving any reason why the change should be made.

Starting with the belief, as I do, that these gentlemen are there for the purpose, not of building the road, but of profiting by the sale of the franchises which this House has given to them, I say that it behooves the Minister of Railways and the First Minister to give the information as to who are behind these gentlemen. I cannot find it. I have heard of gentlemen that are behind it. I have heard that there are members in this House who are interested in it and are voting this subsidy for these franchises behind the Minister of Railways and Canals. Is it true? I have heard that a son of the Minister is one of the promoters. Is that true? I know that Mr. Pugsley is a solicitor, and wherever for the last twenty years you have found Mr. Pugsley, you have found the Minister of Railways, and wherever you have found the Minister of Railways, you have found Mr. Pugsley. I say that it is a very serious thing when this Parliament gives into the hands of such gentlemen a priceless franchise, worth hundreds upon hundreds of thousands of dollars, if they simply mean to stand there in the gap and sell that franchise at a profit for themselves. I believe, as I have said, honestly that these gentlemen are not builders of roads but sellers of franchises, and are into this thing for what they can make out of the transfer or sale of their franchise, without building a transcontinental road. Such a road cannot be built and owned and run by different owners. It must be under the directing power of some one great hand, and that hand is, I believe, the gentlemen who are building the larger portion of that and who are heavily subsidized this year. These are the reasons why I think Parliament ought to have the information. It is whispered about the streets of this city, and the whisper has come to me, that there are gentlemen who are in this House, who believe that the discussion which took place the day before yesterday, was worth $200,000 to their pockets. Why? Simply because they are going to build a transcontinental railway? Not at all, they are not going to do that any more than they are going to build a railway to the moon, but because this has now taken the aspect of a transcontinental road and consequently their franchises are very valuable.

Now, Sir, I take the responsibility of making these statements; and I believe that what I have stated is just about what will be proved to be the facts of the case. I say that in a case of that kind and with such an important position taken as is taken by the holders of this franchise, there is no reason why this information should not be given to the House. It is the people's money. It is not the money of the Government and the money of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and when the Minister of Railways and Canals and the Government ask for that sum of money they ask it from the people's representatives, and the people's representatives surely should know to whom it is to be entrusted. These are the reasons why I believe I ought to have that information and why the House ought to have it.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). There is really no reason for any expression of heat in the matter—

Mr. FOSTER. It is not heat, but earnestness.

The PRIME MINISTER. Heat and earnestness, if my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) puts it that way; and, if he permits me to say so, perhaps behind the earnestness we may see something which is not altogether in accord with earnestness, and perhaps a good deal of acting as well. My hon. friend has changed his ground entirely between the question he first asked and the speech he has just made. In the first place, he asked who were the incorporators of this company, who represented it or who were its directors. The information we gave him was that we know the president and secretary, and if the object he has in view is to be assured of the respectability and ability of the company to carry out the undertaking which we entrust to their hands, that object is fully served. The hon. gentleman does not dispute the weight of Mr. McAvity's name. He said Mr. McAvity is a very good man, but that he has not always been a railway builder. Granted. But is it reasonable to suppose that the men to build railways must have been railway builders all their lives? I remember the day when the Parliament of Canada gave $25,000,000 and 25,000,000 acres of land to men who had not built railways up to that time—Mr. Duncan McIntyre, a dry goods merchant; Mr. Robert Angus, president of a bank; Mr. Donald Smith, as he was at that time, who had been connected with the Hudson Bay Company; and Mr. George Stephen, as he was at that time, a dry goods merchant. These were able business men, who had made pretty large fortunes in their several lines of business, and gone into railway building. If, following in their footsteps, Mr. McAvity, the successful business man of St. John, goes into railway building, what objection is there to that? And why should it be considered to be a detriment to Mr. McAvity that he has not been in the railway business up to this time? Is it a reasonable objection why this vote should not be granted, that Mr. McAvity now steps out from the business he has pursued and goes into other business? He may carry on both. There is nothing in this objection, and my hon. friend himself must admit it. He says that we have not got it over the signature of Mr. McAvity that he is willing to accept this subsidy. He grants that we have a petition signed by Mr. McAvity, as president of the company and by Mr. Thompson, as secretary. But what Mr. McAvity asked was a subsidy from South Edmonton to North Edmonton and northwards. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), who knows that there has been an amended application signed by Mr. Thompson on behalf of the company. It is true that that application has not been signed by Mr. McAvity. But does my hon. friend say that where the secretary of a respectable company makes application on behalf of his company, it would not have the same force as if signed by the president? Are we to attach no weight to the amended application because it bears only the signature of the secretary? Surely my hon. friend is not serious in that. The application is just as official, if it has the seal of the company and the signature of the secretary, as if it had the signature of all the board of directors.

What is my hon. friend's objection? He says he sees something serious in this matter—there are charter-mongers. He sees the hand of William Pugsley, who has obtained valuable franchises, and who has obtained a charter to build a railway towards the Yellow Head. True, Mr. Pugsley is one of the incorporators of a company to build a railway towards the Yellow Head. And by whose hand was that charter granted? By the hand of my hon. friend (Mr. Foster). Did he object to Mr. Pugsley getting a charter? Did he raise the objection that Mr. Pugsley was a charter-monger? If not, what objections can he raise now? And because there is a company with a charter further east, is that any reason why this railway should not be built from Edmonton towards the Yellow Head Pass for a distance of fifty miles? At present it is only a local railway. It may be a transcontinental railway in course of time; I hope it may be. But that is in the future. I ask my hon. friend, does he seriously say that because there have been charters granted towards the Yellow Head Pass with which this company may have to amalgamate or to deal later on in order to extend its railway, that that is any objection to this grant? And will he ask this House to refuse this grant because Mr. Pugsley, or anybody else, may have a charter covering ground further on? He cannot be serious in these things. He says: I have heard whispers and rumours in the streets. Have we come to this, that the Parliament of Canada is to be guided by street rumours? Rumours and whispers cannot affect this Parliament. We are here to give a railway to the people of Edmonton who want to extend a railway westward into a fertile part of the country, and from this railway they expect great advantage locally. This, it seems to me is quite a sufficient reason for what is here proposed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I wish to make one or two remarks in answer to what was said by the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster). He appears to have spoken with the idea that he could repeat the rumours that he had heard or suggest that rumours of a certain kind had reached him, and, perhaps, by including the names of friends or connections of my own, he might thereby succeed in creating suspicion in the minds of members of the committee or of others outside, that I had some connection with this enterprise. What other object can the hon. gentleman have in making the statement? If that be his object, I wish to say here, in the most emphatic manner, that I have no connection, directly or indirectly, for myself or anybody else, in any shape or form, with this enterprise. I do not know who are the people who are promoting it further than I have stated in this committee. The hon. gentleman states that he hears that my son is connected with it. My son is of age and is doing business for himself, and is entirely free to engage in any business enterprises that may offer. If he is in the slightest degree connected with this enterprise, it is not on my behalf or with my knowledge; and, let me add, that I do not believe he is. I believe there is sufficient confidence between him and myself that he would have intimated it to me if he had any such connection. Therefore, I am free to say that I do not believe he has the remotest connection with this as a business enterprise, except that possibly he may have done some professional work for Mr. McAvity in the matter. That is the most, I believe, that his connection would amount to in the matter. So far as Mr. Pugsley is concerned, the hon. gentleman says that wherever I have been Mr. Pugsley has been, and wherever Mr. Pugsley has appeared I have appeared. I give the hon. gentleman the most emphatic contradiction to any such statement. I had no business connection with Mr. Pugsley, not that I would not be very glad to have, because I have known Mr. Pugsley for many years. I have been professionally engaged against him in case after case, very seldom have we had even professional connection. Knowing him so well, I can say that I know nothing to Mr. Pugsley's discredit. I know him to be an honourable man, and I form that opinion from personal experience and observation in my business transactions with him. If Mr.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Pugsley happens to have some interest in this enterprise, is that not his right as much as of any uncle, or brother, or cousin of the hon. gentleman would have? Just as much. I do not think that there is any embargo laid upon Mr. Pugsley because he and I are friends, or happen to live in the same province, or happen to have resided a number of years in the same town. I think it is childish, puerile, it is even worse, for the hon. gentleman to think that by connecting the names of these gentlemen with my own he can therefore cast suspicion upon me. I have been a good many years in public life, a good many assaults have been made upon me by persons who have been inspired with the same feeling as moves the hon. gentleman, and in every instance they have absolutely failed by any means they could resort to establish any improper act on my part in connection with public affairs. I know my duty in these matters, and I intend to adhere strictly to it, and carefully to avoid any connection with this or any other matter which is not proper and defensible. Now, coming to this particular vote, I cannot see why the hon. gentleman should be so opposed to it. He says he has heard on the street that by reason of this discussion the company are going to make two or three hundred thousand dollars. Is the hon. gentleman envious because he is not going to participate in their two or three hundred thousand dollars? If these gentlemen are able to carry on this enterprise successfully, if they had foresight enough to get power to build a railway, why should they not benefit by it? No other person sought it, Parliament did not refuse anybody else. They came here and got this charter, and got it re-affirmed. I think it has been two or three times before this Parliament. If these gentlemen had business foresight enough to see that there was likely to be a good field for railway enterprise in that direction, and if they got a charter for the purpose, why should they not get any benefits that may accrue from it? Why should it be said that because this might be in a distant future part of a general transcontinental railway, therefore we ought to refuse to encourage the construction of any part of that line as a local line? I cannot at all see any reason in any such proposition. Parliament at this session has freely given them what legislation they asked, and if there is the slightest objection to the Bill in its present form, I would readily consent that, in the event of the Edmonton and Yukon Pacific Railway Company not having sufficient financial strength to carry this work forward within the time authorized by the Act, the clause could be changed so as to strike out the Edmonton and Yukon Pacific Railway Company altogether, and let it stand as a vote for a railway; so that whatever company may take power to carry it forward may be entitled to ask for the bonus. That change might properly be suggested from the stand-point of anybody who thought that these gentlemen, whoever they are, who are behind Messrs. McAvity and Pearson, whoever constitutes the company of which they are officers, might not be able to carry the work; in that case, some such amendment might be in order.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the Minister give any reason why the subsidy direction was changed from the prayer of the first petition to the second? because the petitioner gives no reason at all. In the first petition there is a very extended reason given, the engineering capabilities of the company are gone into, the ability of the company to construct, what they expect it will cost—all that is gone into as if that was the direction in which they had set their mind. There has been a divergence from this, and while made on the request of a company signed by the secretary, no reason is given. What is the reason that they changed their minds? What is the reason that caused them to carry out the latter rather than the preceding plan, more especially when the preceding one was in line of what the city of Edmonton had wished to have carried out?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I understood from Mr. Pearson when he was here and made his application, that he had applied to the Railway Committee and to Parliament to allow his company to construct their line in the direction of the Yellow Head Pass, and that having that authority, they had concluded to follow that route. So far as the cost of the construction of the line is concerned, Mr. Pearson stated that he did not imagine from what information they had that there would be any greater difficulty surrounding the building of a line in the direction of the Yellow Head Pass than there would be by taking the first proposed route. The class of country through which the road passed would be practically of the same description, and would involve no heavier outlay for railway construction. The company authorized the secretary to state to us that he had authority to make this request, and Parliament having authorized the change in the route, adopted this as one of the alternative routes, and the company desiring a subsidy by this route, we did not see that there was any reason why it ought to be withheld, particularly since, as a local road, it goes through a section which is equally fertile, equally good, equally desirable for settlement as if it had gone in a direct northern course. That is the information we had, and which will be sustained by the member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver), who, I think, has made a statement to the same effect.

For a railway in extension of the St. Francis Branch of the Temiscouata Railway to the mouth of the St. Francis River, a distance not exceeding 3 miles.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is to build that?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That will, no doubt, be built by the Temiscouata Railway, that is the expectation. It is the extension of their road, and is likely to be a very valuable piece of road.

For a line of railway from Paspébiac, Que., to Gaspé in the said province, a distance not exceeding 82 miles.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is to get the subsidy to build that road?

The PRIME MINISTER. There is a charter in existence for the Atlantic and Lake Superior Company, but we have not given the subsidy nominally to that company, because we have to consider whether they have the financial ability to build that road. That is the only reason.

Mr. FOSTER. Do you think it is necessary to look into that matter?

The PRIME MINISTER. Perhaps so. Of course, the company has been unlucky in many ways, and, without going deeply into that, I may say it would be advisable, before we give a subsidy to any company, to be quite satisfied that they are able to carry it out.

Mr. BERGERON. The Atlantic and Lake Superior are the only company having a charter there, and I see that their engineers are at work on the line. I do not see how you can give it to any other company, and I do not know why their name is not mentioned here.

The PRIME MINISTER. I will be very glad, if that company can satisfy the Government as to their financial standing.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is the president of that company?

The PRIME MINISTER. I think, Mr. Préfontaine, but I am not sure.

Mr. BERGERON. I think it is Senator Thibaudeau.

The PRIME MINISTER. Perhaps so.

Mr. FOSTER. Does not my right hon. friend think that Mr. Préfontaine's name as president would be quite good enough guarantee that we should vote the subsidy for that company?

The PRIME MINISTER. If Mr. Préfontaine could give his whole time to it, his name would be quite sufficient. But Mr. Préfontaine is mayor of the city of Montreal, and he cannot devote his time to this enterprise. If Mr. Préfontaine would take it up himself, I am sure he would carry it through.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. McAvity is a wholesale merchant, and he doubtless cannot give his whole time to that railway so far away.

The PRIME MINISTER. Mr. McAvity is a wealthy merchant and a business man, while Mr. Préfontaine is a lawyer, which is quite different.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh.

To the Lake Erie and Detroit River Railway Company, for a line of railway from Ridgetown, Ont., to St. Thomas, in the said province, a distance not exceeding 44 miles; this subsidy to be payable only in the event of adequate running rights over the Canada Southern Railway between the two points above mentioned not being granted to the first mentioned company on terms to be approved by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council.

Mr. CLANCY. I wish to make a short statement with regard to this, and I will have to repeat much of what I said on a former occasion. In the western peninsula of Ontario there are three trunk lines: the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canada Southern. There was a railway built from the town of Sarnia, on Lake Huron, following the river St. Clair by Wallaceburg, Dresden to Rondeau, on Lake Erie. Following that, there was a railway built, known as the Lake Erie and Detroit River Railway, from the town of Walkerville, following to the south very closely the Lake Erie shore, until it reached Ridgetown. These two roads have been amalgamated, and are now under one system, the objective point being the city of St. Thomas, which would connect the traffic of these two roads with the London and Port Stanley Railway, that has been leased by the railway company now owning the Lake Erie and Detroit River, and the Erie and Huron Railway, which are under one charter, covering the ground between Ridgetown and St. Thomas. I shall leave out the aid received from the Dominion and provincial governments, and I will state that for the Erie and Huron Railway, a local road, running at right angles with the Canada Southern, no less than $257,000 have been voted by the municipalities to that road, exclusive of the sum voted to continue the road from Ridgetown to St. Thomas. There has been $37,500 voted for the Lake Erie and Detroit River Railway between Walkerville and Ridgetown, making in all municipal bonuses of not less than $344,000. That shows the desire of the people of the municipalities for that road. It is perfectly clear the primary object now is to connect the system that is owned by that company with the road they have already leased. As the Prime Minister has said, we cannot ignore local conditions, and, considering that, this is certainly not a paralleling road, for the simple reason that all these roads must run close together on that narrow strip close to the lake shore. There is only from six to eight miles distance in that whole strip of land between the Canada Southern Railway and Lake Erie to reach St. Thomas. This is not a competing line. It is simply an outlet for these two roads and to connect that system with the London and Port Stanley road. Now, I am going to ask what seems to me a pertinent question: What can be the object of any railway company objecting to that road being built from Ridgetown to St. Thomas? I am not going into the details, but I am going to put this case. Can there be any reason suggested why this Parliament should listen for one moment, to a proposition that that road shall not be bonused except upon the condition that they should go to the Canada Southern Railway Company and ask running powers over their line, and that only, if such powers cannot be agreed upon, this subsidy may be paid over? The people have taxed themselves to an enormous extent with the object of providing themselves with a local road, because the trunk lines, and especially the Canada Southern pay no attention to local traffic. What the people want and what they are willing to pay for is an independent outlet by giving them a connection with the system west, and with the Port Stanley road on the east. I appeal to the right hon. gentleman and I do not desire to enter into a heated discussion, if it is a fair proposition to tie these people up to the Canada Southern Railway Company. It is not a fair thing to the people who have taxed themselves, and who are willing to tax themselves further, to say that no railway company should give them an outlet when Parliament has granted that railway company a charter, and especially in view of the grants which have been passed, among which is this one to build 21 miles of road between Owen Sound and Meaford where there is no charter granted. I am not going to condemn that, but that grant is not tied up in the way this one is. The line between Owen Sound and Meaford is not a paralleling line, and the same may be said of this, because this is not a paralleling line for any purposes of competition. It is not fair to these people to deprive them of the right to build that line with their own money and of carrying through the scheme of extending the Lake Erie and Detroit River Railway, with its two branches, one leaving Walkerville and following the lake shore, and the other leaving Sarnia and running across the country, carrying them on to St. Thomas and thence to London. It seems to me to be the baldest proposition that I ever listened to for a railway company to object to a charter being granted, and in the next place to insist that these people should be tied up to the condition that this subsidy shall only be paid if these running rights should not be obtained in accordance with whatever rule the Railway Committee of the Privy Council think best to lay down. The proposition is unjust and unfair, and there is no parallel case to it in the large sums of money which we are voting in these subsidy resolutions. There is absolutely not the shadow of a parallel case to a proposition of this kind. I will ask the right hon. gentleman if he thinks it is possible that these people can have running powers that would be as satisfactory as an independent line. The proposition is impossible, and the most unreasonable one I ever listened to. It is an unfair one, and I appeal to the fairness of the right hon. gentleman not to tie these people up and to prevent them, who have paid out of their own pockets nearly half a million dollars for railway facilities, from getting the outlet that they desire. I think that I will not appeal in vain to the right hon. gentleman's fairness, because, as I have stated before, I do not think there is a parallel to this case. I hope that he will be able to accede to my request, and that the subsidy will be granted without having such conditions attached to it.

The PRIME MINISTER. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) to explain why running powers over the Canada Southern would not be sufficient to give the people all the railway facilities they require?

Mr. CLANCY. I will tell the right hon. gentleman, and I think, if he will be perfectly frank, he would say that he knows himself. Running powers are always contingent upon the circumstances that may arise. Any independent line can run their trains as they like, and to suit themselves; and for that reason we think that we ought to be placed in the same position as all other roads. I reiterate the statement that it is not a fair question to put. I take the ground that there is no reason why we should be obliged to depend upon any running powers whatever. It is an unfair thing to put us in a position of depending upon running powers; it is an unfair thing to that section of the country that they should be asked to consider such a proposition, which is only laid down in regard to that single road. I have not entered upon the phase of the question in respect to the fact that the Michigan Central Railway is a part of the great Vanderbilt system. This is a road which has never been subsidized, and the Government are not subsidizing a parallel line in granting this subsidy. None of the people are making a demand that this condition shall be imposed. The request comes simply from the Michigan Central Railway, the authorities of which come into Canadian territory and demand that you must give them what they ask, and lay down the conditions upon which Canada is to spend its own money. I think this is an impossible proposition; the people are not asking it; it is simply this railway corporation that is asking it. I hope my right hon. friend will not say that there is any other person making this demand, and of all persons in the world the Michigan Central Railway Company have the least reason to make it. As I said before, this is not a competing line, but it is only to make a complete connection of these two lines of road. I think this is an unheard of proposition; it is one that has no parallel in the railway history of Canada, and I am sure that it is not a proposition that we should lay down here.

The PRIME MINISTER. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that the last body to be considered is the Canada Southern Railway Company. If the interest of the Canada Southern Railway Company comes into conflict with the interest of the people, who want to be served by a railway in that locality, the interest of the people must be considered first. Let us keep that in mind. Now, my hon. friend will agree with me that it is not desirable to have two lines of railway where one will suit the purpose.

Mr. CLANCY. It is absolutely out of the question to say that one will serve the purpose. Everybody knows that one will not serve the purpose.

The PRIME MINISTER. That is a question. It is not a healthy condition of things to have two lines of railway where one will serve the purpose. It is not a healthy condition of things to go to the expense of building a railway, if you can provide for the same traffic upon one line. That is a proposition so plain that I think nobody will dispute it. I understand my hon. friend to mean that a second line of railway is necessary in that locality. That second line of railway would be built not more than two miles from the other line of railway that now exists. What reason can there be for that? I understand that there is only one reason, that the people between the town of Ridgetown and St. Thomas, who are petitioning for this railway, would never have thought of having a second line constructed, if they could have their business done by the Canada Southern.

Mr. CLANCY. It is not those people alone.

The PRIME MINISTER. There is no difference between my hon. friend and myself. If a second line is desired there, it is because the Canada Southern has so much to do that it cannot accommodate the public. On the New York Central there are four tracks at the present time from New York to Albany, and perhaps to Buffalo. I understand that the traffic of the locality which is represented by my hon. friend is so heavy that the one line of railway will not accommodate both the through traffic and the local traffic. That fact is the basis of this proposition.

Mr. CLANCY. The right hon. gentleman is not quite stating the case fairly. That is the case between Ridgetown and St. Thomas; but that is only a part, and a small part, of the great evil. The people all along the line of both of these roads want this line as an independent outlet.

The PRIME MINISTER. Why, as an independent outlet? Because they are not properly served by the existing line.

Mr. CLANCY. True, but they want an independent line, and not to be dependent for running powers upon the Canada Southern. They want a purely local road rather than to be dependent on any of the trunk lines for the purpose of an outlet.

The PRIME MINISTER. After all, there is not much difference between my hon. friend and myself. It simply amounts to this, that in the opinion of the people my hon. friend represents, two lines have become necessary. If that be the case, the necessity will be met by the very language of the resolution, and an additional line would be justified. For my part, I am very strongly with my hon. friend. I have told him that privately and publicly, and I tell him so again. I believe the second line ought to be constructed, but the hon. gentleman knows that it is a very serious undertaking to subsidize 44 miles of railway within a few feet of an existing railway. I believe the conditions exist why a second line should be built. The information which I have on the subject justifies the statement which has been made to me, and which I now repeat, that the existing line is not sufficient to accommodate the traffic in that locality. The through traffic of the Canada Southern is so enormous that it puts aside the accommodation of the public between Ridgetown and St. Thomas. Under the circumstances, I think the Government must come to the conclusion that no adequate running rights could be given to the public over that line, and that a second line should be built. I think my hon. friend should not press the matter more at present. He will have all the guarantee, from the facts he has presented, that a second line ought to be built.

Mr. CLANCY. It seems to me that the Government should not hesitate a moment, after the statement the right hon. gentleman has made, to at once remove that prohibition. If there are only two or three miles between these railways, it is not the fault of the people of that locality, who are asking for an outlet. It is because the Michigan Central has a trunk line through that country, over which the people have no control. They would not care, if the Michigan Central were not there at all. So far as the local traffic is concerned the Michigan Central Company comes to this House and demands that there shall be no railway subsidy given for a line that is already chartered, simply because they have a line there. It is an unfair demand. It is simply a question whether the Michigan Central or the people will rule in this case. I have nothing to say against the Michigan Central Company, beyond this, that they are making an unfair demand; and, as the right hon. gentleman knows, under other circumstances the Government would not hesitate a moment about removing that prohibition. The right hon. gentleman thinks that I shall serve the case just as well by not urging it. I quite understand that the Government is all-powerful, and that no words that I use will have the slightest effect in the matter. But I have presented the case in its true light, and I think, on its bare merits it is as strong as any words of mine can make it. I venture to say that you cannot find a similar condition of affairs in Canada. Why should we be singled out without reason for this kind of treatment? I am puzzled beyond all imagination that a through line, which has failed to serve the people, should come here and say: We will undertake to serve the people in the future, if you will run over our line and do not let another road be built. We did not serve the people in the past, but now that the Government of Canada have given a charter for a line, and have thought it wise and in the interest of the people to grant a subsidy, we say: Do not give them a subsidy, but just see what kind of an arrangement you can make with us. There never could be conceived a more preposterous proposition than that made by the Michigan Central Railway. Every condition that would entitle that railway company to make a demand, is absolutely against it. The Government is strong enough to do justice; I believe the right hon. gentleman is strong enough to do justice, and yield to his own impulse to do what is right, by removing this condition at once. The proposition has not a single recommendation behind it.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have no doubt that if the Government were to yield to the entreaties of my hon. friend he would be satisfied, and perhaps the people of the locality he represents would be satisfied as well. But he knows that we are attacked to-day on account of the magnitude of these subsidies. He knows that we are attacked in the House and in the press for paralleling railways, the very thing my hon. friend asks us to do. It may seem very odd at the first glance that the Government should undertake to give a subsidy to a railway paralleling another, but there are circumstances which warrant us in doing so. I maintain the position that I have taken all along, that the Government must give railway accommodation to the people; and if two or three or four railways are necessary, the Government should aid their construction in order to give every citizen the railway accommodation to which he is entitled. But my hon. friend will not find any fault with us in not rushing forward to invite those criticisms and in taking precautions to guard against them, and put itself in a position to show that if, at any particular time, we should give the subsidy, as I think it ought to be given, we did not decide to do so until we had ample reason.

Mr. CLANCY. The only criticism which the right hon. gentleman would receive, if he were to accede to my request, would be from the Michigan Central Railway, and in refusing to accede to it, he lays himself open to the criticism that this railway subsidy should be tied up at the instance of a great railway corporation. The charge that this will be subsidizing a parallel line does not lie in this case, because the local conditions are such that to insist on any such charge would be manifestly unfair, and I am confident none would come from any members on either side of the House.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman desires that a portion of this 49th clause should be struck out, and that a direct subsidy be given to the Lake Erie and Detroit Railway Company, without any condition attached to it at all. To that request the hon. gentleman has had his answer from the right hon. First Minister, which, I think, will be accepted as the final definite answer which the Government has to give.

Mr. CLANCY. No doubt.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend is no doubt a very enthusiastic advocate for a subsidy direct to this company, but he looks at this question solely from one point of view. He does not regard it at all in the light in which it would be regarded by the public generally. If the statement can be made that this Government have given a subsidy to a local road, running for 44 miles and which parallels, within a mile or two, an existing railway, without proper inquiry being made, without being convinced of the necessity of doing it, that would be very much to the prejudice of the Government, as my hon. friend knows. What is the duty of the Government under such circumstances? Is it not to satisfy itself thoroughly before it lays itself open to such criticism, that there was no other course it would properly take in the public interest. My hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) is not willing to allow the Government to make that proper inquiry and to satisfy itself whether or not this is a case in which the duplication of a line of railway for 44 miles would be warranted.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the hon. Minister permit me to ask: Is he laying down a fair proposition?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am laying down a general proposition.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the hon. Minister say he has fulfilled the general proposition in all these railways? Will he say that the Government have been so definite and perfectly satisfied of all other schemes? I am not complaining of the position he took in other cases, but what I am complaining of is his applying a rule to this case he has not applied and cannot apply to others.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am laying down a general proposition which, I think, the hon. gentleman will fail to show the Government has departed from in any of the cases in this Bill. It is a principle, I am sure, which it is the duty of the Government to follow. The mere fact that it is proposed to put a railway for 44 miles right alongside an existing railway is a proposition which, prima facie, ought not to receive favourable consideration.

Mr. CLANCY. Is the hon. gentleman frightened of the criticism of the Michigan Central or of the people?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I want to tell my hon. friend that he is wholly mistaken when he says we have incorporated this clause under any pressure from the Canada Southern Railway. I beg to assure him that we have incorporated it under no such pressure.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the hon. gentleman say that they did not oppose the granting of a charter over this same territory?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not saying that they did or did not. If the hon. gentleman says they did, I accept his statement and do not cast any doubt upon its accuracy. But I have never heard of it until to-night. When this proposition first came before the Government and we were asked to entertain it, a year or two ago, I stated, and the hon. member for North Essex (Mr. McGregor) will bear me out—I stated to a delegation that waited upon me: Is not this an unreasonable proposition? Is it not unreasonable that we should ask Parliament to subsidize a railway running a distance of 44 miles alongside of and within two miles of an existing road? I said: I think you ought to ascertain whether or not you could acquire running rights on reasonable terms from the other company before you ask Parliament to vote so much money for such a purpose. With that intimation, they went away. I did not make that suggestion at the instance of the Canada Southern Railway, but because it struck my own mind, as it would any person's who was trying to do what was proper in the circumstances. They went away to make inquiries, I believe, and to come to a proper understanding on the subject. Perhaps, no special effort was made to arrive at an understanding. I do not know. But it is none the less the duty of the Government to put itself in a position where it can defend itself, and where, if a subsidy is to be granted, we can feel that we have exhausted every reasonable effort before we give a bonus to any line of railway under the circumstances. Now, that is not just what the people of that locality call for. But the people of the locality are not the only ones to be listened to. The Government is bound to consider what the people of the locality have to present and give it due weight, but there is a larger interest—the public interest.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the hon. gentleman say what is that public interest in this case?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will state what it is. The general public interest is that we shall not take the public money for the purpose of granting the demands of a particular locality, unless there are general public interests that would justify our doing so. If we find, on a proper investigation, that the Lake Erie and Detroit Railway Company can secure from the Canada Southern adequate and sufficient running rights to answer all reasonable purposes of the business of the locality and of the Lake Erie and Detroit Railway Company, we have only one duty to discharge and that is to see, if we can, that these rights are secured. We should then say to the Lake Erie and Detroit Railway Company: Your business and duty is to use the rights the Canada Southern people are willing to give you. That is not so convenient or desirable from the stand-point of the Lake Erie and Detroit Railway Company. I quite acknowledge to the hon. gentleman that it would be preferable from their point of view exclusively that they should have an independent road. No matter what steps may be taken in the matter, and no matter how willing railway companies may be to have their tracks used by other companies, there are always difficulties in the working out of the arrangement, and some friction and even unpleasantness may arise. But, at the same time, I do not think we are in duty bound to subsidize a railway parallel to an existing railway, unless we find that adequate running rights cannot be secured for those who desire them. I am prepared to say further, that since the interview that took place one or two years ago, a partial hearing has taken place.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is not completed yet.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, a partial hearing has taken place before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, practically on this question and at that hearing the Canada Southern Company averred their willingness to give to the Lake Erie and Detroit Railway Company running rights over their line upon such terms as the Railway Committee of the Privy Council would adjudge. The Railway Committee of the Privy Council would be without jurisdiction unless the Canada Southern Company would be willing to submit that jurisdiction. The inquiry is now in progress. I do not know what the result may be. Having heard the evidence so far adduced I am not prepared to say that adequate rights cannot be secured; I am not prepared to say that they can. The matter is yet undetermined, and until we can make such investigation of the conditions and circumstances as to enable us to make up our minds on that question, we will be in no shape, I think, to strike out this clause. In fairness to the parties concerned, and to the general public, who must be finally considered, it is our duty to retain this clause until we are in a position to decide the question one way or the other. I sympathize with the hon. gentleman—

Mr. CLANCY. I do not want that; I want the prohibition removed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman does not value the sympathy. I do not think we can reasonably expect that the prohibition can be removed until they have so far progressed with the necessary investigation as to ascertain whether proper and sufficient rights can be found in the Canada Southern.

Mr. CLANCY. I deny the right of the Government to demand from Parliament any such conditions as the hon. gentleman is now exacting. It is a mere pretense to say that the public interest is involved. He is laying down one rule for western Ontario and another rule for the province of Quebec. I tell the hon. gentleman that he is taking into his hands to distribute and dispose of, as he thinks proper, a railway subsidy for 44 miles, that is the plain English of it. I propose now to move that all the words after the word "miles" in subsection 49 of section 2, be struck out.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Since the beginning of the discussion on railway subsidies generally, and having ascertained the name of the company in whose interest this subsidy was proposed, I want to say that my sympathies went toward the granting of this subsidy. I differ with the last speaker on two very important points. I must say that in my long experience I never heard a Premier go further in a courteous way to meet the request of any member of the House than he has gone to-night to meet the wishes of the hon. member who last addressed him.

Mr. CLANCY. In what way?

Mr. COSTIGAN. In giving strong assurances of being able to find a justification to meet his wishes, and without the justification, he would be dishonest if he promised it. I differ with the hon. gentleman also when he stated so positively that it was an unjustifiable thing for a railway corporation to come here to be heard in regard to the building of another line. He says there is no precedent for it. There are precedents for it. It is perfectly right
